But the aspect which I find most revolting in the sale of Teleglobe is the price that was asked. To anyone prepared to listen the Government said that the company sold for $608 million, and that is what the newspapers have been reporting. But they have been somewhat more honest than the Government and delved for facts. This is how we learned that the Government is not going to recoup anywhere near $600 million from this sale. I will try to show that it is more like $300 million.

To begin with, consider the fact that Teleglobe cash assets now amount to $102 million. Of course we have been told that Teleglobe will give that money to the Government. Good gracious, how could it be otherwise? These $102 million belong to the taxpayers. So it seems normal to me that the Government would keep this money before the company is turned over to Memotec, the buyer. But no, Sir, this is not what they are going to do. They will hand over the $102 million to Memotec and then tell them: Give it back. This leaves under the impression that the government has obtained $102 million more, which is not the case. Moreover, Memotec will also have to return to the government $18 million in dividends. This means that the stated price of $608 million is now reduced to $488 million. That is not all. Teleglobe was indebted to the government to the tune of some $145 million. If that amount is deducted, we realize that the government will only collect $343 million for that sale. It is far from the $608 million announced. The government should refrain from boasting that it is a very good deal.

• (1220)

[English]

That is not a very good deal for Canadians. It is not a very good deal, it is a fire sale.

[Translation]

In addition, we should not only consider the selling price of $343 million which makes its a fire sale, we should also consider the benefits made by Teleglobe for the Government, hence the Canadian taxpayers. In 1985, Teleglobe paid dividends of $108,100,000 to the Government. In 1986, Teleglobe paid $80 million. This means that the corporation made handsome profits for the Government. It is easy to see that by letting it go for $343 million, we are deprived of returns of almost $100 million per year. With its anticipated profits the successful company, Memotec, must surely be laughing since—

Mr. Boudria: —all the way to the bank!

[English]

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): It must be laughing all the way to the bank. It is paying only $340 million for a corporation that has given to the Government $108 million in dividends in 1985 and $80 million in 1986. I am sure that Memotec already has an application in for the purchase of the next Crown corporation that will be put up for sale. In my opinion it is a repetition of the great de Havilland give-away to Boeing. We see—

I also want to deal with the fact that the Minister promised to the Canadian people that one of the major benefits flowing from the privatization of Teleglobe was that rates were to be reduced by 13 percent, she said, as of January 1, 1988. That is some interesting news for the Canadian public. However, the Minister must at least not take credit for announcing that news because we already knew it. As soon as November 1986, Mr. Jean-Claude Delorme, Chairman of Teleglobe, submitted his corporate plan to a committee of this House. It was already provided that in early 1988, rates would be reduced by 10 percent in view of the profitability of the company. Therefore the Minister cannot ask us to believe that the sale of Teleglobe to Memotec will suddenly bring about a rate decrease for Canadians. It was already provided for in Teleglobe's corporate plan. That is easy to understand since it is a company that has been very profitable for a few years.

I stated earlier the huge dividends which it paid to the Government. It was therefore decided in the corporate plan to pay some of those dividends to the consumers through a decrease in rates. So much for the nice present that the Minister was announcing!

[English]

This attempt by the Minister to make us believe that this so-called generous rate reduction is coming out of the privatization is false. It had to come about in any event. This was said previously in committee in November of 1986 by Teleglobe. It is another weak attempt by the Government which has a chronic habit of embellishing things, a weak attempt to make a bad deal look good.

What about the response to that sale? Let us see what those people who are the closest to the company, that is workers who go there every day, who earn their living in that company, think about the sale. I quote from the newspaper La Presse of February 12, 1987:

> The communication employees union of Teleglobe, which represents 275 white collars of the firm, critized the sale of the company. The president of the national organization, Mr. Fred Pomeroy, said that the Conservative Government has sold out a profitable company—

Those are no gentle words from the very people who work within the company. I quote again:

> —that the sale is not in the taxpayers' interest.

Of course the employees are right there, they are familiar with the operations of the company, and they know what they are talking about. They are against the sale. They are against it and say that it does not serve the interests of taxpayers. I will go further by adding that it does not serve the interests of the employees, who have now been guaranteed a workplace for the next five years. However they wonder what will become of their job security after those five years, the regulation period provided under the Bill. And this is not the beginning of difficulties experienced by the unionized workers of this company, considering that for some time already the Government has been playing with the emotions of Teleglobe employees—up and down like a roller coaster. As early as 1984 there were rumours that the company would be up for sale, and this worried the employees who were wondering about their job security.

Since we are talking about past events, I might recall that when a Conservative Government was briefly in office for nine months in 1979 the Conservatives at the time were already toying with the idea of getting rid of Teleglobe. Ever since the employees have been asking themselves whether or not their heads were on the block as well.

[English]

I am saying that it is immoral to play with the emotions of the workers of a Crown corporation and to bring them up and down in a roller-coaster fashion. That is what has happened since 1979 in the case of Teleglobe.

Another item worth mentioning is the lack of involvement by the telecommunications carriers in this sale. They were not involved. In order to try to be involved they bid on the company. In fact, they bid twice. The Minister can correct me if I am wrong, but I believe the first bid did not qualify with the 40 per cent bench-mark that had been established. The second did not qualify either. The involvement of the telecommunications carriers would represent a protection to the consumer, that is, a protection against a possible by-pass of international communications. By by-pass I mean that someone can call the United States and then have that call routed overseas through a communications agency located in the United States, in other words, by the American version of Teleglobe. Some 70 per cent of communications traffic in Canada could not be routed in this fashion. I refer to the traffic of Bell Canada and B.C. Tel which are federally-regulated companies and which cannot do that. What about the rest of the traffic, the 30 per cent that could be by-passed through the United States?

[Translation]

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I want to refer to another aspect, namely the leaks which occurred before the official announcement that Memotec was the successful bidder, before the news was made public. We all know the story, and I am not going to repeat all the details before the House. During the week before the announcement was made, the value of the shares suddenly started to rise. We know that the Toronto Stock Exchange and the Montreal Stock Exchange are investigating, and, I wonder whether the Minister is doing so as well and what is taking her so long to report to the House. Obviously, the name of the lucky bidder was known only in Government circles. Memotec didn't know, and neither did the TSE or the MSE. Only a small circle of Ministers and senior officials knew the decision had been made. I am not accusing anyone, but it is pretty clear the information had to come from that direction. Only the people who had the information could leak it. I therefore want to ask the Minister, if she intends to speak again in this debate, to report on the progress of her own investigation, so we will know where the leaks came from and who had an interest in taking advantage—

Mr. Charest: If there were any leaks!

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): —of privileged information, and finally, how it happened.

Mr. Charest: Has that been proven?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): On the other side of the House they are asking whether there were any leaks. I say there were leaks.

Mr. Charest: No, I asked whether it had been proven?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Whether it was proven?

Mr. Charest: Yes, whether it was proven, that is what we are asking!

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): You will have a chance to ask questions later on, but here is part of the answer. When shares start rising all of a sudden on the stock exchange, and then people tell us there were no leaks, well I say the onus is on these people to prove there were none.

Mr. Charest: That's a new wrinkle! The whole system of justice in Canada has changed. The whole principle of the burden of proof is no more!

• (1230)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. In two minutes there will be an opportunity to ask the Hon. Member questions or comments. I would like the Hon. Member to be able to finish his debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for cutting off the junior mini-minister who is trying to get involved in my speech.

[English]

This company has been sold cheaply, at a give-away, fire sale price for a public utility that should not have been sold in the first place. To summarize, unfortunately Teleglobe has been sacrificed on the altar of privatization.

Mr. Charest: Mr. Speaker, I had not planned to speak following the speech of my hon. colleague from Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) this morning, but since I have been irresistibly invited to do so, I shall now say a few words. First, I imagine that, now that he can sit down for a few moments and reflect on what he said, he is probably regretting having called me the junior mini-minister from Sherbrooke. Such behaviour is clearly unusual on the part of the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques, whom I respect deeply. I am sure that, now that he is sitting down, he will be thinking that he should not have made such a comment, that he does not usually lower himself to petty personal attacks, especially against people with whom he usually has good relations, and that people who behave in this way or use such arguments are running out of things to say and are scraping the bottom of the barrel.

I would like to say one thing about another of his comment, and I am certain that he will want to correct what he said. He insinuated, and such insinuations are common practice for the present opposition, that there might have been suspicious activities in the sale of shares. This is a possibility which no one is denying. It is why there is an investigation. However, you overstepped what any Canadian would find acceptable as well as the democratic principles of our society when you said that, because the price of shares had increased, the onus of proof was on those who had purchased these shares or on someone else to prove that there had been no illegality, immorality or irregularity in this sale. This is completely wrong and you know it. Even to question the application of this principle in Canadian society would go against all the democratic principles this House stands for. I am certain that my colleague for Saint-Jacques will want to use this opportunity, at least to tell us exactly what he thinks about this matter.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would like first to return to the comments of the mini-minister. He is asking that I regret calling him a mini-minister. I am quite ready to do that. I think he is right. We should refrain from personal attacks. By the same token, I imagine he will regret having interjected on top of his voice from across the House, which led me to label him in a way he did not appreciate. As a matter of fact, I was not attacking, I as the assailed was simply using defence.

Coming back to the issue of possible leaks, in answer to the Minister's question I would not take a legalisitic view of the matter as he does.

Actually, the Government is not before the courts fighting a charge of having caused leaks. It is rather that the media and Canadians across the land believe there has been a leak. It is in that sense I am suggesting the Government should clear the air. It is not my business, I am not part of that Government. But if I were on that side of the House, and rumours were circulating there had been leaks, I would feel the onus was on me to defend myself. I do not mean that in the legal sense, Mr. Speaker, but in terms of perception. So much so that we have been paddling about for some months in an atmosphere that does not reflect favourably on the Government in terms of perception, integrity and those matters, on which I have no intention of dwelling, because it is not the subject at hand.

That is why I say that, as reported in various newspapers, some Canadians believe that there must have been leaks for the shares to appreciate so quickly. The Government should feel the need to dispel any doubt concerning this matter.

While the Minister was shouting from his seat in the House, he asked me a question: Are you saying that there has been a leak? I could not certify that there has been one. But I hear everywhere that there could have been a leak. And I am quite concerned that there could have been a leak of this type from the Government. I did say there could have been— We have not reached the point where we know for sure that there had been a leak, but just the fact that the Canadian public may think that privilege information such as this may have seeped through the Government process is quite unacceptable. And especially in the interest of the governing party. This is why I tell Conservative Members to please disperse this cloud of suspicion for your reputation is at stake.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Since there are no more questions, on debate, the Hon. Member for Sarnia—Lambton (Mr. James).

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to again address the House on this Bill. The Bill before us today is very important, and I am delighted to have the opportunity to clarify some of the points that have been made.

First, I wish to make mention of a point about no guarantees for employment, which was made by the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) in an earlier statement or speech in the House.

• (1240)

I should like to bring to the Hon. Member's attention a press conference held on February 11 and attended by representatives of the company and members of the media. Mr. McKenzie, an official of the company, was asked the following question:

—will there be management changes at Teleglobe or any staff lay-offs, anything like that? Any surplus people?

Mr. McKenzie answered as follows:

I am glad you asked that question. Absolutely not. The Teleglobe, as we all know and as the Minister already indicated, is a very well run company . . . and his people are very, very good managers. One of the key points of our bid is that management is to be retained and all of the employees are to be retained. In fact, you know, that is the strength of Memotec—

He want on to say:

And we need the support of those people, the help of those people. We need those people to be motivated and enthusiastic towards what we are all trying to do. There will be absolutely no changes. In fact, we hope to create more employment through the synergies of the two groups. And that is the point we are trying to make, that we will create new employment opportunities, not decrease employment opportunities. I think this is a very positive story.

I think that answers the point raised by the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor in which he attempted to cast suspicion.

The sale of Teleglobe is a good deal for the Government of Canada, for the employees of Teleglobe and, indeed, for all Canadians. The delaying tactics of my colleagues, especially those in the New Democratic Party, are not only unwarranted but unjustified. It is true that there is an ongoing investigation, as a previous speaker mentioned, but it is not an unusual occurrence. The Toronto Stock Exchange routinely investigates increased activity in any stock. The Minister is assisting in this investigation and is working very closely with the TSE to have the issue investigated. She is in constant contact with the Exchange and has requested her Deputy Minister to provide whatever details and assistance is necessary.

I am confident that the questions in the minds of the Opposition will be answered very satisfactorily and very directly. Surely the Opposition is not suggesting or accusing Memotec of any wrongdoing. It is necessary for us to allow the investigation to go forward, even as we move forward with the speedy delivery of the legislation to the appropriate legislative committee.

Once again I will go over the details of the bidding process and the sale to Memotec just to clarify some points. On November 19, 1986 the Minister announced that proposals would be received for the sale of Teleglobe based upon the comprehensive policy positions and the conditions of sale provided by the Government.

On January 9, 1987 CDIC received seven bids for the purchase of Teleglobe. A series of meetings between CDIC and the seven bidders were held to clarify points on the bids. Of course, these clarifications were needed by CDIC.

On January 27, 1987 the CDIC board met and considered the bids, including in its considerations a meeting with each of the seven bidders. At the conclusion of that meeting the management of CDIC was instructed to correspond with each bidder to allow them to consider their bids in light of the technical amendments to the draft agreement and the purchase of sale. In light of those changes, as per normal business practice, bidders were invited to refine, if they so chose, their proposed price for the purchase of Teleglobe.

On February 5, 1987 the CDIC board again met to consider the revised bids and determine its recommendations to the Government.

The next step is the crucial one, so I invite all Hon. Members of the Opposition to listen closely. The decision of CDIC was hand delivered by Mr. Paul Marshall to the Minister of State for Privatization (Mrs. McDougall) on February 8. The CDIC recommendations were taken to cabinet committee by the Minister on February 9 and a final decision was made by Cabinet at 5 p.m. on February 10, and the Toronto Stock Exchange was notified immediately.

These are the accurate details of the process. There were no difficulties with the bidding process and the utmost of secrecy was maintained until the date Cabinet made its decision.

It is important to remember that any of the six bidders could have closed the deal and had the financial backing to support the acquisition. The hue and cry from the Opposition about it being a leverage buy-out obscures one very important business point. To acquire a large and viable company such as Teleglobe, there are few companies in the country which could have done so without loans, and we were determined to keep Teleglobe in Canada.

I despair at the disparaging remarks the Opposition is making about the integrity and viability of Memotec. For the past few days in the House we have heard over and over again about the minnow that swallowed the whale. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, what is wrong with that? Would the entire sale have been more digestible if we had sold Teleglobe to a major conglomerate? No, Mr. Speaker, I do not think so, because the Opposition would then have railed at the notion of too many assets in the hands of too few companies.

The second point I wish to make is to put an end to the Opposition's scare tactic that our Government is bent and determined, not only to privatize all Crown corporations, but additionally somewhere along the line—opposition members have this mistaken notion—we are to move into the privatization of social programs. I cannot understand from where this would even come. It guess it is just rhetoric, something to say to fill in their 20 minutes.

Just to keep a balance on things, I want to take a moment to quote from the Minister's statement last Friday when she said:

> Our policy is to better manage all Crown corporations, to wind down those entities which are no longer required, and to privatize on a case by case basis those Crown corporations where the public interest can be better served through private ownership with public regulation as and when required.

This point by the Minister must be remembered and addressed. It is our policy—and indeed it is sound policy—to examine individual cases. I can without hesitation assure the House that we will never move to privatize arbitrarily every Crown corporation, nor will we turn over to the private sector our existing social programs.

Let us take a minute to examine the Minister's statement in respect of private ownership and public regulation. Once again the Opposition has seen fit to muddy the waters. The new Teleglobe, unlike the old Teleglobe, will be subject to CRTC regulations for as long as the legislation remains in place. The five-year reassessment proposed in the legislation applies only to the monopoly situation, not to the CRTC regulations. This point has been mistakenly raised by the Opposition. It must be made very clear that rates offered by Teleglobe will be subject to CRTC scrutiny for many years to come.

Consumers will benefit from an average rate reduction on overseas telephone calls and from CRTC regulations in connection with the sale. Employees of Teleglobe Canada will benefit from a pension plan which is comparable to the current government plan. Additionally, they will have an opportunity to purchase equity in the new firm on extremely favourable financial terms.

Lastly, Teleglobe Canada will benefit by being able to pursue new opportunities, expand and grow under skilled private sector management. I would like to quote from a statement made by former Liberal Minister of National Revenue as reported in Hansard for May 28, 1984 while this House was debating second reading of then Bill C-25. He said:

> The fifth part of the Bill—concerns CDIC's subsidiaries: Canadair Limited, The de Havilland Aircraft of Canada Ltd., Eldorado Nuclear Limited, Teleglobe Canada and, in the near future, Pêcheries Cartier Inc. and Fishery Products International Ltd., . . . The clause deals with the relationship between the CDIC and its subsidiaries, and the aim to change the status of those subsidiaries to private sector corporations.

Obviously the Official Opposition has changed its stand somewhat from that of 1984.

Similarly I quote the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) during the debate on second reading of the Canadair Bill. On December 1, 1986, he said:

> We in the NDP are not necessarily against privatization. We are not saying in every case we should not privatize; we are saying you have to have sound economic reasons for it.

I have sat in this House and listened for the past few days to the Opposition's rhetoric and waffling. It seems the minds and opinions change to fit the issue of the day. I am reminded of Prime Minister Mackenzie King who also had a gift for speaking his mind clearly. He said:

> Conscription if necessary, but not necessarily conscription.

I believe that in this case the sale of Teleglobe is not only a good deal but a great deal, and I believe the facts speak for themselves.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I was interested in hearing the Hon. Member for Sarnia—Lambton (Mr. James) describe how great is this Teleglobe deal. He notes particularly the observation of my friend from Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) about the possibility that the sale of some Crown corporations might be appropriate if there were sound economic reasons. Does the Hon. Member think that the reasoning here is sound?

To put it in the context of the Government's actions in the matter of regulation of various services in the federal area, which communications obviously is, what we see the Government doing is reducing the amount of regulation that has been applied in the past. What the Government is doing with Teleglobe is putting it into private area responsibility. The Government is taking out an international communications monopoly in Canada and turning it over to a private interest which, of necessity in the private sector, has other concerns than the public interest. First, it is obsessed with its own profitability. Every member of the Government would insist on that. Recognizing that that is the preoccupation of the privatized Teleglobe and the only control over the situation is staff regulation, what kind of assurance do we really have that a privatized Teleglobe will serve the public interest as it should?

We have a company which is, in the fullest sense, a utility in the communications area. Utilities tend to be monopolies. What has been recognized for 100 years by every economist, no matter how deep his or her dedication is to competition, is that monopolies need to be regulated. A Government that has no vision for creative regulation but wants to get out of it will take a utility and put it into the hands of private interests obsessed with their own profitability rather than serving the public interest. What kind of sound economic reasoning can one put forward for taking this vital communications utility and putting it into private hands, as the Government has done?

Mr. James: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased my hon. friend has asked that question. This sale gives a lot of opportunity for providing jobs. I know the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) is very concerned about that, I say that sincerely, and I think that is very important. The employees are pleased with the transaction and I would think the Hon. Member would be very positive about that. I cannot recall seeing any statements that they were unhappy.

It has been said, and I think the Hon. Member heard me read a statement made by Mr. McKenzie at a press conference on the situation and his belief about how important the employees will be to Memotec. I think the Hon. Member would have to agree that it has been written extensively in Canada, and I tend to believe it, that when employees have the opportunity to purchase shares in the company for which they work, have the opportunity to buy those shares at less than market price with interest-free money loaned by the company, it goes to excellent working conditions.

The rationale for divestiture of Crown corporations is to see them expand, grow and get into other areas not encumbered by the bureaucracy and the Government which really are not the best at being in business. The Hon. Member has a little trouble agreeing with me on that because the philosophy of the New Democratic Party is that the state runs everything.

In the May, 1986 Budget is this statement:

> We expect the results of returning federal Crown holdings to the private sector, that privatization will reduce the size of the Government and leave room for more private sector initiative which will promote market competition and more efficient allocation of resources. It will improve company efficiency.

We can talk about a lot of things that are of value in this sale. It is important that we are doing good things for the people who work for Teleglobe and for those who will be able to work for the new important company with its new jobs and new opportunities.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, with respect to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Sarnia—Lambton, he has completely refused to answer the questions. There was not the slightest recognition of the fundamental difficulty that I put to him, namely, that the Government is backing away from regulation and making it easier for companies, whatever industry they may be in, to pursue their own ends rather than serve the public interest. Here we have a monopoly being put into private hands. What kind of protection is there for the public interest? The Hon. Member has not provided any of that. He has talked about other things. Let me challenge him again to respond. He said in passing that enhancement of competition was the goal of privatization. That is completely missing the point I was making. More particularly, the Hon. Member began by praising the increase in employment that will result from this sale. The Hon. Member will have to concede, surely, that there are no guarantees in the sale at all? The Hon. Member was forced to read a press conference and the statement by a principal of the new owner to defend of that. But there are no assurances. This is another of those cases of putting all sorts of things forward before the Canadian public without any assurance. That is the form of Government action far too often these days.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Perhaps the Hon. Member might want to answer that question when Orders of the Day are called after Question Period today.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock later this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 21

MARINE TRANSPORTATION

EFFECT OF TAX SYSTEM ON CANADIAN REGISTERED SHIPPING

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, Canada conducts over $50 billion worth of trade annually with countries other than the United States. This represents transportation fees of about $5 billion per year. Of that amount, less than 1 per cent is carried on Canadian ships. Twelve billion dollars of this trade is conducted with countries which have enacted legislation which will only allow cargo to be carried on ships of their national registry. Canada is the only country, to my knowledge, which does not allow tax exemptions of some sort or another on earnings from carriage of deep-sea cargoes. Even the United States and the United Kingdom allow companies to defer taxes indefinitely.

There are currently 120 ships owned by Canadian companies registered abroad which do not hire Canadians. These companies have expressed a desire to be able to operate out of Canada but state that their greatest hindrance is the present tax regime of the federal Government. In light of the fact that over 50 per cent of Canadian merchant seamen are currently unemployed and the fact that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is bringing down his Budget Wednesday night, I would ask the Minister to make the necessary changes in the tax system so that these merchant seamen can be put back to work.

IMMIGRATION

PASSENGERS DESTROYING PASSPORTS ON BOARD AIRCRAFT—SUGGESTED DEPORTATION TO POINTS OF DEPARTURE

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, on KLM Royal Dutch Airline flights 691 and 677 from Amsterdam to Toronto, a total of 22 illegal immigrants were apprehended by immigration officials last week. These individuals deliberately tore up their passports and other identification, thus committing an illegal act. If these individuals were legitimate refugees, there would be no need for them to destroy their documentation.

Under these circumstances we are not compelled by international law to admit such law-breakers into Canada. I strongly urge the Government not to give these individuals the right to land in Canada and to return them immediately back to their points of departure where they presumably had the legal right to be present since they boarded these flights. There is no need to have such abusers stay in Canada at great cost to the Canadian taxpayer.

Canada must send out a clear message that those who cheat and lie will never be welcome in Canada. Moreover, the airlines are willing to co-operate as well.

PENSIONS

REQUEST THAT CORRECTIONAL SERVICES CANADA EMPLOYEES HAVE RETIREMENT ELIGIBILITY AFTER 25 YEAR'S SERVICE

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, for almost fifteen years now the employees of the Correctional Service of Canada, more specifically correctional officers, have been seeking the right to retire after 25 instead of 35 years of service, as is the case for most public employees, with the exception of air controllers, the RCMP and the Armed Forces who may choose to retire after 20 to 25 years of service.

The federal Government must take into consideration the risks, dangers and stress associated with the duties of correctional officers. The extremely difficult working conditions of our correctional officers fully justifies retirement after 25 years of service.

Again recently the Minister said he had the intention of taking action on this matter. It is now more than time to do something and, hopefully, tomorrow's Budget should cover this measure of fairness with respect to our correctional officers.

SHIPBUILDING

SHIPYARDS IN NEED OF CONTRACTS

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, six years ago some 14,000 people were employed across Canada in the shipbuilding and ship repair industry. Today that number has been reduced to about 5,000. We know that there is no free market in shipbuilding today but still we do not have a rational shipbuilding policy.

It is in the interest of all of us to maintain a healthy, modern shipbuilding industry to meet defence and commercial requirements. Canada is a maritime nation, heavily dependent upon trade, and we must not permit our marine industrial base to wither and fall. One preventive step is to impose a tariff on ships purchased offshore to work or to fish in Canadian waters. Another is an acceleration of the naval, Coast Guard, and government vessel procurement programs. Given fair competition, Canadian shipyards can do much to provide Canadians with wide employment in shipyards and in hundreds of related industries. They need help and they need it now.

TARIFFS

REPEAL OF TARIFF ON BOOK IMPORTS URGED

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the Great Depression, two World Wars, a small and spread out population, recessions, inflation, and overwhelming intrusion and competition from the United States—none of these could kill Canada's book-publishing industry. However, collecting $36 million for the Budget through the Government's current imposition of the 10 per cent retaliatory tariff on books can. Not only is the tariff a tax on reading and a disguised form of censorship but it discriminates only against English-language books, and it has seriously harmed individual unit sales in the Canadian book industry. Publishers alone estimate they will lose $15 million by absorbing the tariff duty this year.

Some Canadian publishing houses are incurring losses as high as $30,000 a week in a gallant effort to hold on to their customers. They cannot continue much longer. With this loss of income, they have less cash available to publish Canadian works. I ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to take the opportunity to remove this regressive countervail tax on reading in his Budget tomorrow so that the Canadian book industry can once again flourish in Canada. As well, this was a poor policy response to the shakes and shingles countervail in the first place.

RAILWAYS

WINNIPEG—STREET CROSSING PROJECT PRIORITIES

Mr. George Minaker (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, on February 10, 1987, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) made a statement in this House concerning the proposed Waverley Street grade separation. This statement requires clarification. The Hon. Member suggested that a tragic accident might not have occurred had the federal Government followed through on a commitment made by his Government in 1984 to build an underpass at that location. This implication is false.

• (1405)

On March 27, 1985, the City of Winnipeg requested that government funding be reallocated from the Waverley Street grade separation to Keewatin Street which has a higher safety risk. Based on those facts the City of Winnipeg set the Keewatin Street crossing as top priority. A new application was submitted to the Canadian Transport Commission on November 27, 1986, by the City of Winnipeg, and is now being considered. The promised funding is available and will be allocated based on the CTC's recommendation. In future the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry may wish to get his facts straight before condemning this Government's policy.

REFUGEES

FORT ERIE—LEAFLET DISTRIBUTED TO SALVADORAN AND GUATEMALAN REFUGEE CLAIMANTS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am reading excerpts from an informal translation of a leaflet given to Salvadoran and Guatemalan refugee claimants entering Canada from the United States at Fort Erie, Ontario. It says:

FOR THOSE THOSE WHO BELIEVE THEY ARE REFUGEES FROM EL SALVADOR AND GUATEMALA

1. The Immigration Officer has written a report that reads: you violated Canadian Law because you came across the border without bringing a passport and/or without bringing an immigrant visa.

9. The Minister's Permit is described in Section 37 of the Canadian Immigration Act. This section says that this permit can be annulled at any time by written order if you violate other Canadian laws or if the government decides you are not a refugee.

11. For example, if you prefer robbery to work, you would spend time in jail, the government would revoke your permit, and would deport you to the United States.

This leaflet not only denies Canada's regulations which protect Salvadorans and Guatemalans, but it also suggests they are likely to be criminals. I call on the Government to revoke this letter and apologize for this racist slur.

MERCURY AWARDS

EIGHTH MERCURY AWARDS—SUCCESS OF ARGENTEUIL—PAPINEAU RESIDENTS

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my constituents of Argenteuil—Papineau and more particularly the residents of Lachute have had one more reason to be proud because, last Saturday when prizes were given at the Eight Mercury Awards organized by the Chamber of Commerce of Quebec, a young Lachute firm, Mobilier Form-D, received the Mercury Award given to a new business.

Mr. Speaker, Mobilier Form-D management have succeeded in making a name for themselves as a result of their quality products and avant-garde design in an extremely competitive sector. Congratulations to the shareholders and employees who can righfully be proud of this prestigious award which proves they had every reason to have faith in their own aspirations.

I also want to commend Mirabel's Nationair airlines for being nominated for the second consecutive year, IBM Canada for deserving the 1987 Mercury Award, and the 71 Quebec firms which took part in this event.

To Quebec firms the Mercury Awards are what the Gémeaux awards are to artists, craftsmen and producers of the artistic and cultural community. Mr. Speaker, we must encourage and support this initiative taken by Quebec's Chamber of Commerce, and congratulate the many people responsible for the success of these Mercury Awards.

An Hon. Member: Very well said.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

RAPE IN SHERBROOKE—REQUEST THAT AGGRESSORS BE IMPRISONED

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, last May 26, a 26 year old woman was raped by three aggressors in Sherbrooke. There was so much violence used during this sexual assault that the victim has not been able to go back to work since. Last December 3, a jury unanimously found the three aggressors guilty and each one was sentenced last January 27 to five years in prison. However, the very next day, their case was appealed and they were set free. The reasons given were that the rapists had no criminal record, that they are young and that they are successful at school and in sports.

Mr. Speaker, the fact that her aggressors are out means that the victim, Dominique, has to be very careful about what she does and to try not to attract any attention. Her assaulters have been freed, they live in the same city as she does, Sherbrooke, which is not New York, and she is afraid of reprisals. If anyone should be hiding out of fear and shamed, it should be the aggressors, not the victim.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Minister of Justice review this case and that the appeal be heard as quickly as possible, and also that the aggressors be put in jail. If they are in prison, justice will perhaps be done more quickly in the case of this odious and serious crime.

SMALL BUSINESS

CONGRATULATIONS EXTENDED TO SOLIDARITY FUND OF QUEBEC FEDERATION OF LABOUR

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Solidarity Fund of the Quebec Federation of Labour for investing a few weeks ago over $200,000 in a high technology company located in Sainte-Foy, in my constituency, thus protecting and creating jobs. In addition, the Fund will invest $2 million in an office tower to be built in the Hull region at the end of the month.

It is the first time in North America that a union creates a fund whose major objective is to protect and create jobs by investing in the Quebec small business sector.

Once more, I congratulate the Solidarity Fund of the Quebec Federation of Labour and its president, Mr. Claude Blanchette!

HUMAN RIGHTS

U.S.S.R.—RELEASE OF JEWISH DISSIDENT WELCOMED

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I know all Members of Parliament will want to join in welcoming the announcement of the release of Iosif Begun, a leading Jewish dissident in the U.S.S.R. who had been imprisoned for supposed anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda. It is heartening that his release comes after the release of another 150 prisoners this month. We know that there are still several thousand prisoners of conscience incarcerated in the Soviet Union. We hope the Soviet Union will release many of them and that many of the Jewish dissidents will again find it possible to leave the Soviet Union.

We note and regret the fact that beatings and repression are still used against those from the Soviet Union who wish to demonstrate that such treatment of dissidents is the denial of human rights. Such incidents are sharp reminders that there is a great disparity in what is said about human rights by the Soviet Union and what actually happens to dissidents in that country.

THE ECONOMY

NATIONAL ACCOUNTS OPERATING SURPLUS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the national finances we have turned the corner and can now see the light at the end of the tunnel. For the first time in many years the national accounts show an operating surplus. The third quarter results are now in for 1986 and reveal a small surplus, about $1 billion, over the preceding 12-month period.

Huge public debt service charges, the legacy of years of mismanagement by former Liberal Governments, still result in large over-all deficits, but the trend toward reduction has definitely been established. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is to be congratulated on his exemplary performance to date and urged to stay the course.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

JAPANESE CANADIANS INTERNED DURING WORLD WAR II—CALL FOR GOVERNMENT TO HONOUR COMMITMENT

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, it has become painfully obvious that the Government has placed the Japanese Canadian redress issue on the political back-burner. When the current Minister responsible for multiculturalism, the Government's third, assumed his responsibilities, there was great fanfare that the Tories had finally found the ideal individual to address this most sensitive national matter. However, we have heard precious little since.

The Japanese Canadian community was promised before, during, and after the election campaign that the Conservative Government would conduct negotiations on redress and that a settlement would be worked out with the National Association of Japanese Canadians. Regrettably, both previous Tory Ministers ignored these two principles. Now we have the current Minister who is still occupied with obtaining cabinet approval on the process to follow.

This kind of action is simply an offensive response to what were clear promises made to a very important segment of Canadian society. It is about time that the Government finds its morality in dealing with Canadians. It should begin to honour its commitments, fulfil expectations which it created, and re-establish the people's confidence in their national Government and national institutions.

Otherwise, the Government should do everyone a favour and step aside so that Canadians can receive the kind of representation which they demand, rightfully deserve, and have not had for the last two and a half years.

CANADIAN INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT AGENCY

PURCHASE OF AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES FOR DEVELOPING COUNTRIES

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian International Development Agency was formed back in the 1960s to administer the major portion of Canada's official assistance to developing nations. New projects to be funded by CIDA include $310 million to the World Food Program for the next two years, $89 million worth of canola oil and technical assistance to India, $13 million worth of canola oil as food aid to Pakistan, and $40 million for the next three years to the Canadian Food Grain Bank which is primarily a humanitarian relief agency.

These development and assistance programs will involve more than $450 million worth of agricultural commodities, many of which originate in western Canada. These projects are good news for they not only provide help for the developing countries, but also for our own farmers whose commodities form the basis for the assistance. The Government should be commended for its continuing support of these initiatives.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

HUNGER STRIKE LAUNCHED BY NON-STATUS INDIAN

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, six days ago Kevin Daniels started a hunger strike on the steps of the Saskatchewan Legislature. Mr. Daniels, a non-status Indian, has taken this extreme form of protest in order to draw attention to the plight of the indigenous people of Canada.

He hopes that his action will spur federal and provincial Governments to include land claims and self-government in the Constitution.

In a conversation I had with Mr. Daniels yesterday, he told me that the suicide of a close friend was the final reason that led him to go on a hunger strike. While I do not encourage anyone to undertake a hunger strike, it is a sad commentary on our society that somebody feels compelled to use this extreme form of protest.

The aboriginal people of Canada want to take control of their destinies. They are tired of welfare dependency, unemployment and high suicide, crime and alcoholism rates. They must be given the resources that were promised them so many years ago. They are tired of waiting.

SUPERMAILBOXES BURIED IN SNOW

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, several months ago Canada Post introduced its latest contraption under the name supermailbox. This supermailbox could do almost anything and could guarantee mail delivery—should I say mail pick up—24 hours a day, seven days a week. That did not quite happen.

First, everyone and his cousin could break into the supermailbox with their bare hands. Then one's key could open personal mailboxes everywhere. Of course, this was part of the safety feature of the new supermailbox. Now people cannot break into these supermailboxes any more and there is no need to worry about the keys. The latest feature of the supermailbox is inaccessibility.

For four days last week my constituents in the Orleans area had no access to their supermailboxes because it snowed in Orleans and Canada Post could not keep up with the snow removal. Canada Post should install these supermailboxes where they really belong, in the junkyard.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

EXTENT OF FEDERAL RESPONSIBILITY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Since the federal Government cannot reach a decision on its refugee policy and is depending on Quebec to pay the several million dollars in costs incurred while coping with the recent influx of thousands of people claiming refugee status, and since the Minister, aware that more than 80 per cent of these people arrived in Montreal, nevertheless expects the provincial Government and charitable organizations to pay the cost of dealing with a problem that is after all a federal responsibility, why, after taking the credit for a humanitarian act, is the federal Government refusing to pay the bill and live up to its responsibilities as the Government of this country?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think the last part of the statement the Leader of the Opposition just made is particularly false. The federal Government is paying 50 per cent of all costs connected with the Canada Assistance Plan, under which program the Government of Quebec is providing many of the services being given to the people who have applied for refugee status. The Government of Quebec has made a specific request, considering the considerable influx of people in Quebec at this time. I said yesterday that the federal Government did not have the funds in its Budget to meet a specific request by one province, and would in any case have to ensure that if the same situation were to occur in another province, it could take the same kind of action. In the present situation, as far as cost sharing by the provinces and the federal Government is concerned, both parties, and it has always been that way, pay 50 per cent of the costs incurred by the influx of refugees.

REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL FUNDS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows perfectly well that every week over 1,000 people are applying for refugee status, and most of them are now in Montreal. Quebec does not have the necessary funds to pay for their food and board. Why won't the Minister provide the funds to deal with a problem that, after all, is a federal responsibility and arises from the lack of clear-cut policy in this area? Why won't he meet Quebec's request for funds?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): This is exactly the same question, and the same answer applies. Again, the Government of Canada has spent a lot of money on the refugee issue. I agree we are experiencing an exceptional influx of refugees in this country. I said yesterday and I say it again today that we are going to take specific action with respect to refugees, and we will soon be introducing a Bill to deal with the substantial increase in refugees. Now as far as the respective jurisdictions of Quebec and Ottawa are concerned, we are each doing what our respective Governments have an obligation to do.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONSULTATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the whole issue of dealing in a humanitarian way with refugees coming to Canada has been handled very poorly. The Province of Quebec claims that there has been absolutely no consultation on the new law that the Minister describes. Will the Minister give an undertaking to consult in detail with Quebec and the other provinces about the new refugee project? Or is he really admitting that this is another sad case of failure in federal-provincial relations?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I don't think I have anything to learn about federal-provincial relations from the Liberal Party.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Speaker, two weeks ago I had a three-hour meeting with the Quebec Minister of Immigration. My hon. colleague, the Minister of State (Immigration) did as well. My predecessor, the Hon. Member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean) also had a meeting with Quebec last May, when changes were proposed to the provisions for the recognition of refugee status in the Immigration Act. I have never refused to attend a meeting, and there will be more meetings if necessary.

I think there is sufficient evidence that in all our Departments, there has been a continuing emphasis on regular meetings with the Government of Quebec.

THE ADMINISTRATION

STATUS OF MINISTER OF STATE

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Last Friday the thirteenth the Minister of State and Hon. Member for Joliette was interviewed on The Journal. He was asked whether he had discussed with the Prime Minister his involvement in the $5,000-a-piece reception. He answered as follows:

No, never . . . I did not speak with the Premier on the subject. I think I can take my responsibility on this matter.

How can the Prime Minister explain that as of last Friday some 13 months elapsed since the facts were brought to his attention in January of 1986 and that he has not yet discussed the Minister's involvement?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I answered that and all questions related thereto completely last Friday.

INQUIRY WHEN PRIME MINISTER WILL MEET WITH MINISTER

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, it is inconceivable that, in the last 13 months, the Prime Minister did not find it necessary to meet with his minister to discuss his role in these receptions where it cost $5,000 per person to get on board the train to "Contractland".

I would like to ask the Prime Minister when he will accept his responsibilities and meet with his minister to discuss his future in Cabinet.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it seems to be impossible for the Hon. Member to ask a question about the behaviour of another Member of Parliament without making any calomny or discriminatory comment. I think that this shows the state of mind on the other side of the House. They are not looking for answers to their questions, they simply want to destroy reputations and drag people through the mud. I answered your questions last Friday, including the most foolish and the most small-minded. I answered them fully!

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries. In the discussion of the possibility of a new agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of France pertaining to the fishery off the coast of Newfoundland the Minister said the following in the House on January 28:

Our commitment to the people of Newfoundland and Labrador is that any price which is too high for Newfoundland and Labrador is too high for Canada.

The next day he went further and stated:

If, in negotiating—the conditions required by France are unsatisfactory to the fishermen of Newfoundland and Labrador—there will indeed be no agreement.

• (1425)

I wish to ask the Minister if he stands by those two commitments now?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, those comments, and many that have been added since, including references to the possible outcome of a series of negotiations which will unfold over the coming 11 months, all indicate the objective of the Government in reaching a satisfactory referral to international arbitration of the long unresolved boundary question and the question of interim fishing arrangements beyond the present fishing year. Those agreements will only be concluded in accordance with full consultation with our colleagues from Atlantic Canada, Newfoundland, and in particular the Minister of Transport, to the satisfaction of the fishermen and the people of Atlantic Canada.

MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I remind the Minister on this very important matter, and he will recall, that the people of Newfoundland, as well as the Government of Newfoundland, felt betrayed by the Government by the process undertaken about a month ago. What the Minister stated in the House on January 28 and 29, which I have just quoted to him, was not that they would simply be consulted, but that there was a commitment by the Government that if the deal was unsatisfactory to the fishermen of Newfoundland and Labrador, and to the Government, that there would be no deal. Does the Minister stand by that today, or are we witnessing another betrayal of a commitment to the Government of Newfoundland?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, as is so typical of the Opposition in these very difficult matters, they would prefer to have us quit before we get going.

In fact there is an agreement setting out a timetable to negotiate two very important agreements which will bring untold benefit to the fishermen of Atlantic Canada. I am pleased to report that in my discussions with the Atlantic Council of Fisheries Ministers yesterday in Moncton, all five Fisheries Ministers who represent the five Atlantic provinces have agreed to continue to participate in negotiations and consultations according to the format set out, and that four of those provinces appear to agree entirely with the course of action the Government has followed.

ACCESS TO NORTHERN COD STOCK

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I remind the Minister that we are talking about a commitment. The Government of Newfoundland has made clear that it recognizes the constitutional right of the federal Government to sign an international agreement, and it is not challenging that, but it also said that there is one matter that it regards to be fundamental and ought not to be put on the negotiating platter, namely, access to the northern cod. Will the Minister now live up to his commitment to the people of Newfoundland, and not put northern cod on the platter?

Mr. Crosbie: The 1972 treaty puts it there.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): The Government of Canada has agreed with France to a process wherein a long-standing border boundary grievance will be resolved to the benefit of the fishing industry and the fishermen of Atlantic Canada, including Newfoundland and Labrador. Rather than pre-empting the process and writing it off, as the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party would prefer, we intend to proceed with the support of Atlantic provinces, as I have indicated, and in accordance with the commitment that the Prime Minister made to the Minister of Transport last week, and I quote what the Prime Minister wrote in his letter:

> At the conclusion of the negotiation, the Government of Canada will determine, considering all advice received, whether any proposed agreement is in the long-term interests of Canada and Newfoundland.

The letter further states:

> The outcome must be in the best interests of the people of Newfoundland and Atlantic Canada or there will be no deal.

CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister on the same topic. In the letter that was just quoted from the Prime Minister to the Minister of Transport, who at that time claimed that he was the lead Minister in the fish deal with the French, it was stated:

> The outcome must be in the best interests of the people of Newfoundland and Atlantic Canada or there will be no deal.

However, this morning, when the Minister of Fisheries was asked who Ottawa would side with if no compromise was reached, he said: "It would be unwise to take an arbitrary position now that might jeopardize the process." He refused to repeat the commitment of the Prime Minister to the people of Newfoundland. Why is there a clear and unmistakable difference between what the Prime Minister wrote and what the Minister of Fisheries said this morning on the CBC? Who speaks for Canada? Why is there this discrepancy? And why is the Government selling out the rights of Newfoundland fishermen?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is no disparity. I note the Leader of the Opposition seems to find amusing that one of his members would ask: "Who speaks for Canada?" Clearly the Liberal Party is always speaking in favour of anyone who is at variance with the federal Government. The Government of Canada and the Parliament of Canada alone will speak for Canada in all matters under our jurisdiction. We will seek to do so at all times in harmony and consistent with the interests of the provinces, but the interests of Canada must prevail.

GOVERNMENT COMMITMENT

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Mr. Speaker, I simply want to ask the Prime Minister, on this very serious question which he committed in writing, why he and the Government of Canada are now backing down on the commitment that in the deal the rights of Newfoundland and Labrador fishermen must be paramount. Why is he backing down on that commitment?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are not backing down. Every—

Mr. Rompkey: That is what the Minister of Fisheries said this morning.

Mr. Mulroney: The Minister of Fisheries said nothing—

Mr. Rompkey: He would take no position this morning.

An Hon. Member: Does he ever say anything?

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. Mulroney: I invite my hon. friend to reflect upon what the Minister said. It is completely consistent with the position the Government has adopted and I have set out. Surely as a member of the federal Parliament of Canada, as a former Minister of the Crown, he is not suggesting that Parliament abdicate its responsibility in regard to treaty making, or the representation of Canada, and our capacity, our right and obligation to conclude treaties in the national interest. If that is the position of the Liberal Party, let the Liberal Party state it clearly, because this Parliament speaks for all Canadians.

COMMITMENT TO NEWFOUNDLAND AND LABRADOR

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. When the Prime Minister was away in Africa, in the special debate on January 28 the Minister made a clear and unambiguous commitment that everybody in Canada, particularly everybody in Newfoundland, could understand. He said:

> Our commitment to the people of Newfoundland and Labrador is that any price which is too high for Newfoundland and Labrador is too high for Canada.

Why is the Minister now backing away from that, hedging, and qualifying it in a thousand different ways? Does he stand by the commitment as he stated it on January 28, or not?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I absolutely stand by those words. If the Hon. Member would reflect upon the quote I just read from the Prime Minister's words, he would find that those two positions are absolutely consistent. The Hon. Member is referring to a phrase taken out of context in something I said yesterday in Moncton, when asked point blank whether we would accept Newfoundland's demand to remove the reference to 2J3KL from the agreement which had been signed with France. I said: "We will not accede to that demand at this point. We will cross that bridge when we come to it", and that is all.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO NEWFOUNDLAND MINISTER OF FISHERIES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the statement which the Minister made on January 28 and the statement in the Prime Minister's letter are not exactly the same. I would like to ask him about a statement which was made by the Minister of Fisheries for Newfoundland who said that he was dumbfounded and confounded that there were not some explorations of other options instead of just trying to bribe France to the negotiating table. Why was the stick not used instead of just the carrot?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, what is so peculiar is that the Hon. Member and other members of the Opposition who say that these statements are well known have not yet come to accept these statements and commitments by the Government of Canada. I repeat, in the words of the Prime Minister, that the outcome will be in the best interests of the people of Newfoundland and Atlantic Canada or there will be no deal. Why does the Opposition refuse to accept that the Government is acting in the best interests of the fishermen, the people, and the provinces of Atlantic Canada?

EAST TIMOR—INVASION BY INDONESIAN TROOPS

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs knows that Canada has allotted $300 million in aid through CIDA to Indonesia over a five-year period. In fact, that represents the fourth largest Canadian aid program in all of Asia. How can the Government continue to ignore the fact that Indonesia has invaded East Timor with 40,000 troops and is conducting "Operation Extinction", which is tantamount to genocide? What kind of representations will the Secretary of State for External Affairs make to the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Indonesia, Dr. Mochtar, who is in Ottawa at the present time?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I trust that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is embarrassed by this kind of grandstanding.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Not at all.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): He says that he is not, which speaks volumes for his judgment.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The Hon. Member is considerably out of date with his accusations with regard to East Timor. I have in fact discussed the matter with Dr. Mochtar during my visit to Indonesia in 1985. At our suggestion, the Canadian Ambassador in Indonesia was invited to visit East Timor to see conditions for himself. He believes the arguments which have been made by various groups are exaggerated. I am sure that I speak for the Government of Indonesia in indicating that they would be prepared—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —to welcome the Hon. Member to come and see for himself. It would be a change in the basis of his representations in the House, if they were based on fact.

REQUEST FOR REPRESENTATIONS TO UNITED NATIONS

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, in view of the incontrovertible evidence which has been put before the Government by the Roman Catholic Church, by the Red Cross, by all kinds of non-governmental organizations, and most recently by an editorial in The Globe and Mail in January of this year—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. de Corneille: In view of the representations made by non-governmental organizations, about which he pretends to be so concerned and whose advice he pretends to care about, what will the Minister do in terms of making representations before the United Nations Human Rights Commission, which is now in session in Geneva, to bring the dreadful situation that is presently taking place to the attention of that body and to see that this massacre is ended?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member shares the view of the publisher of The Globe and Mail with regard to advertisements respecting South Africa. I repeat the point that I have just made in the House. There have been representations made by Canada to the Government of Indonesia. I have made them myself. There have been visits to East Timor by representatives of the Government of Canada. I would invite the Hon. Member, rather than relying upon the editorial opinion of The Globe and Mail, to learn the facts for himself and to avoid making accusations which he cannot support with facts.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and it is on the same subject.

Mr. Crosbie: Rambo Jewett.

Mr. Nystrom: There is "Codfather" Crosbie.

Ms. Jewett: Yes, the "Codfather". Is the Minister saying that he has received from the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Indonesia, from our Ambassador in Indonesia, and from other sources, sufficient evidence that the military occupation of East Timor has come to an end and that the massive human rights violations have also come to an end?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): In a word, Mr. Speaker, yes.

EXPORT OF MILITARY GOODS TO INDONESIA

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, that is not the evidence, as the Minister knows, that we have received from Amnesty International which is a body upon which we usually rely. May I ask specifically in my second question about Canadian arms exports to Indonesia which have been going on during the period of the military occupation of East Timor, to the tune of $2 million worth of military goods? Next month, High Tech 87 is encouraging further military exports to Indonesia. Will the Minister seriously look at the continuation of such exports in light of the reports that we have received from very reliable sources?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member takes these matters seriously and would not want to engage in representations that would be misleading. She made reference to the export of military equipment. The military equipment in question is not arms. She made reference to the question of massive violations of human rights and asked if I was satisfied that those were not occurring. I am satisfied that there are not massive violations of human rights.

There was very legitimate room for concern for a period of time with regard to this situation in East Timor. It is our information that that cause for concern has diminished considerably in recent years. I would welcome the Member to acquaint herself with the current facts in East Timor.

Ms. Jewett: I have.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES LUMBER AGREEMENT—REMANUFACTURING COMPANIES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister for International Trade. The Minister will know that the delegation sent to Washington on Friday to renegotiate the lumber agreement on behalf of the secondary lumber manufacturers failed to get any agreement from the United States Government to reopen Appendix B. Considering this now presents a threat to close to 80 to 100 companies across Canada, would the Minister tell us what specific concrete actions the Government will take to assist that industry at a time when it is faced with total relocation or total dissolution?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's information is at variance with my own. I have been advised by my officials that they tabled their arguments with the U.S. officials. I have already told the House, I believe, that I met with Under-Secretary Bruce Smart in Switzerland who agreed that the remanufacturers should not be paying tax on the value added, as is enshrined in the agreement. The U.S. officials undertook to take the list, to consult with higher officials, and get back to us.

REQUEST FOR RENEGOTIATION OF APPENDIX B

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, by way of supplementary I would say to the Minister that, based upon the committee hearings of last week, she will know that it will be a matter of a week or two before these industries are forced to take drastic action, either to move across the border or shut down.

Considering that the External Affairs officials have already called industry people to say that the meetings were not successful, will the Minister personally intervene with the Secretary of Commerce and ask right now for a proper renegotiation of Appendix B before these industries are put out of business?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I have just told the House that I have already done that, at least in the person of the Under-Secretary of Commerce in Switzerland. The officials when they met Friday, as I said, tabled the changes to the Appendix B list, about which the industry was carefully consulted. I think the Hon. Member is aware that the original Appendix B list was an industry list—

Mr. Axworthy: No.

Miss Carney: —that was supplied to the U.S. negotiators. It was an industry list supplied by the remanufacturers which was not complete.

Mr. Axworthy: And you cut it back. You reduced it.

Miss Carney: We are making every effort to address this matter and I am glad I have the Hon. Member's support for it.

TARIFFS

IMPORT DUTY ON SKI-BOOTS AND BINDINGS

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. As the Minister is aware, a three-year duty remission on imports of downhill ski-boots and bindings expired last month resulting in a very hefty increase in the import duty on these products. As no ski-boot or binding manufacturing industry exists in Canada, this duty places an unfair and unnecessary burden on the shoulders of Canadian skiers, ski equipment retailers, and the Canadian winter tourism industry. Will the Minister tell the House why this duty remission was allowed to expire and when relief will be given to those negatively affected by this punitive tax measure?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, with regard to this matter, the original decision to reduce the tariff was in fulfillment of an obligation we had as a result of the quotas we brought in on footwear. Those quotas are expiring and, therefore, the tariff relief will be finished ordinarily.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, in this country we do not have that many manufacturers of ski equipment. We want to encourage that industry to develop, and the Tariff Act is really in place to try to develop this climate. Let me also tell the Hon. Member that we are trying to find a way to get reciprocal relations with foreign countries, not only with regard to this sector but other sectors. Therefore, the Hon. Member's representations affect all trade policy and we will take them into account.

SELF-SUFFICIENCY—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. At the Premiers' conference in Edmonton in August, the Premiers stated that self-sufficiency was a natural advantage in energy that this country could not afford to lose. The Prime Minister has always endorsed the principle of self-sufficiency, yet his Minister of Energy has denounced it. What is the Government's policy on this very important question? Is the Government in favour of self-sufficiency or not? What is the Government going to do to bring on these very important energy projects that we need in Canada, such as Hibernia and the upgrading of heavy oil?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is certainly aware that the first federal-provincial conference on energy matters in nearly eight years was held about ten days ago. All the provinces and the federal Government agreed unanimously to sign a press release recognizing the importance of energy matters in Canada and creating task forces to ensure security of supply, which includes self-sufficiency for oil and gas. This must be taken into account. There is therefore a task force and a time-table. For the first time in at least two generations, the provinces and the Canadian Government have agreed unanimously on what should be done in the field of energy.

REQUEST FOR NEW POLICIES

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I think consultation is wonderful, but the Minister of Energy has taken this too far. He has gone beyond consultation. He is abandoning his role as Minister of Energy and leaving it for whomever wants to pick up the pieces. You cannot continue to allow this to drift, Mr. Speaker. When is something going to be done for the energy sector? When are we going to have the federal Government interested enough to provide some policies to generate oil and gas activity in Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, unlike the previous Government, we recognize that, in the field of energy, we are dealing with a natural resource and that constitutional jurisdiction is shared by the provinces and the Canadian Government. The provinces own the natural resources in this country. The Government recognizes that fact. It is in this context that we want to develop joint policies to ensure security of energy supplies for Canadians, and this must not be done on the backs of the provinces because they have a major and basic role to play in the field of energy.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

REPORTED PROPOSAL TO OPEN WESTERN INITIATIVE OFFICES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister who, I am sure, will recall the Liberals' phantom Western Development Fund of a few years ago that was so roundly and rightfully criticized by western Canadians, including Conservatives. Can the Minister confirm that this Government is soon to announce the opening of four western initiative offices from Winnipeg to Vancouver? More important, can he confirm that there will be no new money for these offices, that they will use the same pencils, papers, the same computers, and the same people who already work in the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion in western Canada? Is this a serious initiative, or is it just smoke and mirrors?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is very interesting to hear the Hon. Member criticize the Liberal Party when his Party supported that Party so loyally over the last number of years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: You better watch it. You've got two years to go, fellow.

Mr. Axworthy: Are you guys fighting over third place again?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Mazankowski: Yes, I am indeed aware of the Liberal phantom fund. It never really got off the ground. In so far as the Hon. Member's reference to the western initiative offices goes, perhaps he could give me his briefing document and I would check it out to see whether there is any validity to it.

Mr. Nystrom: He is sounding more like a Liberal every day, Mr. Speaker.

POSSIBLE PUBLIC RELATIONS CAMPAIGN

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, before I have a chance to brief the Minister, I wonder if he can also confirm that his Government now has plans for a slick audio-visual presentation to kick off this four-city announcement and if he will confirm that this is just a public relations gimmick when there is no more involved than moving a shingle from one door, renaming the shingle and putting it on another door within the same Department. Can the Minister confirm that?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, of course I would be very interested in that. Ian Deans always told us that we needed to improve our public relations and I suppose he has gotten to the Hon. Member.

TELEVISION

BROADCASTING OF AMERIKA MINI-SERIES

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. During this week the only thing to get more bad press than the Conservative Government is the mini-series that is being run on television, Amerika, a disgusting program purveying propaganda from the American point of view. Could the Prime Minister explain to the House why federal government tax dollars are being spent on such a propaganda apparatus?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is out of the House today on business. I will take the Hon. Member's question under advisement and will so advise the Minister.

EXPENDITURE INQUIRY

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Since the Government will continue to spend funds on this particular program, could the Prime Minister give us his assurance that no more federal money will be spent on it throughout the balance of the week?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I want to know what the Hon. Member of the NDP is doing watching such American programs while there are excellent Canadian programs to watch. Stop wasting our time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—GOVERNMENT POLICIES TOWARD UNITED STATES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and has to do with acid rain. At the present time the Government of Canada is pursuing two acid rain policies with the United States of America. One policy agreed upon by the Prime Minister at the 1986 summit, and pursued in January with Vice-President Bush, is for the Government to have the U.S. live up to the envoys' agreement which calls for further research and demonstration projects for the next five years. The other policy pursued in recent weeks by the Minister of the Environment is to demand a cut of two million tonnes of sulphur dioxide pollution on the part of the U.S. Which of the two is the official policy of the Government of Canada? Which of the two will the Prime Minister pursue at the next summit?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, because the Hon. Member was responsible for a while for the acid rain policy of the Government of Canada, he will well know that this Government, particularly at the initiative of the Prime Minister, has put acid rain at the top of Canada's priorities in discussions with the United States. It is not easy to convince the Americans of our position on that question. We hope to make progress and we would look forward to support from members of the Opposition toward that end.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Secretary of State for External Affairs for his non-answer. In his position he will realize that he has also to make up his mind and help the Prime Minister decide which of the two policies is Canada's foreign affairs policy with the U.S. on SO2 emissions. The question is very simple. Even the Secretary of State can understand it. Are we pursuing a policy of further research and demonstration projects, which is the policy adhered to by the Prime Minister at the 1986 summit, or are we changing tactics as the Minister of the Environment has in the last few weeks to demand SO2 emission cuts that are meaningful for Canada at the next summit? This is the policy question.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we are seeking to have the President of the United States maintain and honour his commitment to Canada with regard to action on the Envoy's Report and action to control acid rain.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

ELIMINATION OF 9 PER CENT TARIFF ON AUTOMOBILE TRADE BETWEEN CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Yesterday, the Minister of External Trade stated the Government was ready to discuss the automobile trade in general with the Americans. Is he ready to eliminate the 9 per cent tariff on automobile trade between Canada and the United States?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I feel that in the absence of the Minister for External Trade, I can answer the Hon. Member's question. He appears to be suggesting that Auto Pact matters are still being discussed in the Canada-U.S. negotiations. I know it is the New Democratic Party's position that the Auto Pact should be discussed but it is not ours.

REQUEST FOR MAINTENANCE OF TARIFF DIFFERENTIAL

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, does the Government realize that the elimination of the 9 per cent tariff, if it takes place, would make the Auto Pact safeguards a dead letter, something that would be completely inoperative? Will he therefore commit himself to maintaining that 9 per cent tariff differential between ourselves and the United States?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister for International Trade made clear yesterday, the only people in Canada who insist on putting the Auto Pact on the negotiating table between Canada and the United States are members of the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party.

CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT—STATUS OF NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries. The Minister should know that the people and the Government of the Province of Newfoundland believe that Newfoundland has in effect a veto power to be exercised at the conclusion of negotiations with France on the East Coast fishery, and they believe that because of the Prime Minister's letter to the Minister of Transport and indeed because of statements made by the Minister of Transport himself. My question is quite simple. Will the real Minister of Fisheries stand up to tell us whether or not this veto power in fact exists?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, indeed the real Minister of Fisheries will stand up. In response to the Hon. Member's question, I would like to suggest that what seems to rankle members of his Party and particularly those from Newfoundland and Labrador is that we have, for the first time in history, an opportunity to resolve a long-festering problem to the benefit of the fishermen of Newfoundland, Labrador and indeed all of Atlantic Canada. He further knows, or should know, that France has been fishing in the precious 2J3KL cod stocks area for decades if not for centuries, and that this year French fishing in those waters and indeed in all of Canadian waters is at a level of at least one-quarter what it was during the 1970s while the Government of which he was a part had the power to do something about it.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the Hon. Minister that I am no more and no less rankled than the fishermen of Newfoundland about the job he is doing, and I hope the Prime Minister keeps him there for another two years.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct my supplementary question to the Prime Minister in an attempt to set the record straight. While there are two Ministers of Fisheries there is only one Prime Minister. Will he tell the House, as indeed Premier Peckford understands because of his letter, whether he has given the Province of Newfoundland a veto in effect over the final conclusion of negotiations with France? That is a question only the Prime Minister can answer.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can tell my hon. friend the answer to that is a flat no. He is signifying his approval. Is that approval on behalf of the Liberal Opposition or will it be withdrawn tomorrow after the Liberals consult some of their friends in Newfoundland and Labrador, or perhaps elsewhere?

Newfoundlanders are Canadians. The people of Canada want this Parliament to speak for all Canadians on matters of national and international import. That is what we have done and that is what we will do. As to whether we will keep the Minister there for two years, I can give my hon. friend that assurance. I can also assure him that I am going to keep him where he is for 22 years.

ACCESS TO NORTHERN COD STOCK

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. No federal Party would dispute the constitutional position which the Prime Minister has just taken—

Mr. Crosbie: Then why are you up?

Mr. Broadbent: —about the federal Government having the ultimate right to make this decision. Newfoundland is on the record as agreeing with the Prime Minister that the Government of Newfoundland does not have a veto right under the Constitution. However, we have the Prime Minister's commitment and the very specific commitments of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans with respect to part of the deal that the fishermen and the Government of Newfoundland would have to agree to. Since they have only singled out the northern cod as being unacceptable, will the Prime Minister agree that the French should not be given access to new fish in the northern cod area?

Mr. Crosbie: What area is that?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Leader of the NDP were ever to enjoy the awesome responsibility of being part of a Government—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Merrithew: Heaven forbid!

Mr. Siddon: —he would know better than to ask questions which relate to constitutional reality. More important, I think it time opposition Members understood the nature of the harmonious discussions I have held with all Atlantic Fisheries Ministers.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Siddon: They have concurred in this process and agreed to give the process time to work.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

REFUGEES

FORT ERIE—SALVADORAN AND GUATEMALAN REFUGEE STATUS CLAIMANTS—SIGNING OF AGREEMENT FORMS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. As he must know, the immigration office in Fort Erie requires refugee claimants coming from the U.S., including Salvadorans and Guatemalans, to sign an agreement that they will return to the U.S. if Canada rejects their refugee claim. This is contrary to our regulations. The U.S. has been deporting these people, some of them to their death, and Canada, by deporting them to the U.S., is really deporting them to El Salvador and Guatemala. Therefore will the Minister assure this House he will not do that?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have indeed been informed that what transpired in Fort Erie was of course a personal initiative by one individual, and I can assure the Hon. Member this will not happen again. As to the matter of deportation to the United States—I think we will very soon be in a position, as I said earlier to the Leader of the Opposition— to announce steps that will enable us to control the problem referred to by the Hon. Member.

TELEGLOBE CANADA REORGANIZATION AND DIVESTITURE ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-38, an Act respecting the reorganization and divestiture of Teleglobe Canada, be now read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Ms. McDonald (p. 3435).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When the House rose at one o'clock there were two minutes remaining in the question and comment period. I believe the Hon. Member for Sarnia—Lambton (Mr. James) was just about ready to answer the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp).

Mr. James: Mr. Speaker, I believe the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon asked me why we are selling Teleglobe and why we want to have it privatized. I have in my hands an article from the Financial Times dated February 16, 1987.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. Hon. Members will know that this is Orders of the Day and I hope they will let the Hon. Member respond. If there are any further conversations could you please have them behind the curtain?

Mr. James: The article has some interesting things to say about the sale, including this:

> But the most amusing comment on the sale was from Ian Waddell of the New Democratic Party. "I think they're selling it for ideological reasons," he said.
> Barbara McDougall, the Minister of State for Privatization, said the sale was in line with the Conservative government's commitment to reduce the size of the public sector and to avoid having Crown corporations competing with private business.
> She said the public interest would be better served if "there is a more dynamic economic future for the company and its employees and government can get on with managing things that government is supposed to do."

The article went on to say, referring to the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway:

> His party once advocated public ownership of the means of production. In more modern times it has said public ownership is no panacea but is one of the means by which "social" ends are pursued. It is put forward as a way of "limiting the power of giant corporations" and assisting social planning by the state.
> These are the roots of the ideology that has got us into the mess we're in. It puts a lot of stress on action by the state, as though this meant action by some collection of benevolent and all-wise archangels.
> In practice it means control by bureaucrats instead of by the free play of market forces which reflect the buying pattern of all of us.
> This ideology had a great vogue in the 1970s, when present patterns for budget deficits were set. Governments, including the federal government of Canada, got into all kinds of businesses, dispensing the hard-won money of the taxpayers with a lavish hand.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate. The Hon. Member rises on a point of order?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): I had understood the Hon. Member was responding to questions. He did not answer the questions I put to him. Instead he wasted his time reading an editorial into the record.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret he did not answer the Hon. Member's question but perhaps the Hon. Member would like to debate the point when he is recognized.

Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to spend a few minutes on the matter of the divestiture of Teleglobe. We must make clear to the House and the country that this is not a planned development of the economy. It is not a long-term decision by the Government that we must do these things in order that in five or ten years our economy will work well for the benefit of the citizens of Canada. Rather, this is a decision by the Government to divest itself of one of the central requirements of any country in relationships with the rest of the world. The Government's decision has been a matter of Conservative ideology. Instead of building a structure for the benefit of Canada, this is a general rejection of the notion that public enterprise should be used to achieve public policy.

The tradition in this country has always been for Crown corporations to be used for the needs of the country. Instead, we have the rejection of a traditional position taken by Canadian Governments, not only New Democratic or Liberal Governments, but Conservative Governments for many years. The history of Crown corporations in Canada shows that a good number of the Crown corporations which served Canada well were put in place by Conservative governments.

The Government holds the belief that Government should not be involved in any enterprise which can be carried out by the private sector, even if in the process it eliminates some of the public interests and policies which have been put in place. Instead of doing something to increase the economic development of the country, the Government is eliminating that possibility.

Let us look for a moment at the apparent reasons for what the Government is doing, besides the rejection of the fact that Crown corporations can be used to develop public policy, and besides the ideological basis for saying that the private sector should have the right to take as much profit as it possibly can from the country instead of allowing it to accrue to the people as a whole. The Government says it is doing this because it thinks the private sector will do a better job, or it needs to be done by the private sector. The Government seems to forget that we now have a company owned by the citizens of Canada which is being taken away from all of the citizens of Canada and given to one small group. It is said that that is the market system, that it is now within the market. I fail to see the logic of that.

The Government keeps saying that this is one method of reducing the deficit. Although it may put $100 million or so into the coffers right now, over the long term it will increase the deficit because we will not have this well developed, profitable organization continuing to earn profits for Canada on overseas developments.

You must realize that this company has a certain amount of responsibility in the world as a representative of Canada. The Government should realize what it is doing. It is making into a private corporation an organization which has represented Canada in international communication affairs many times in the past and will apparently continue to do so. That was one of the responsibilities which Teleglobe fulfilled as a Crown corporation. It was Canada's representative on many international organizations, such as the Commonwealth Communications Committee which made decisions on our place in the world of communications. Will that mandate be fulfilled in the future by a private corporation, the aim of which is not necessarily to serve the best interests of Canada, but to serve its own best interests by earning as much profit as possible from its operations?

First, we must question the basis upon which the decision was made. We must question the plausibility of the reasons given for this decision being fulfilled by selling the assets of Canada in this way. This is exactly what has been done in Saskatchewan recently by the Government's friends there. The assets of that province have been reduced. The rating given to Saskatchewan by the financial institutions of the world has dropped from a triple A to a single A because the assets which were considered to be the base of the province were sold. Crown corporations are no longer provincial property and are not recognized as assets by the financial institutions of the world.

There are questions which will be asked when this Bill goes to committee. Those questions will deal with the authority and activities which Teleglobe will fulfil. We will ask who will fulfil these authorities when Teleglobe becomes a private institution.

Teleglobe Canada was created under the Teleglobe Canada Act and was mandated to establish, maintain and operate Canada's international telecommunications service and coordinate these services with those of other countries. Apparently the Government has decided to put the control that was ordinarily vested in the Government into the hands of a private, profit-oriented corporation.

The privatization of Teleglobe means that the Government is also relinquishing its control over our ability to contact other countries via telecommunications. The United States is the only other country in the world that depends upon the private sector for such communications. Apparently, the Americans have a parallel communication network through their defence system. Since our defence communication system is not worldwide, and there will not be government control over these communications system, we may be unable to communicate with the world. Other countries such as Australia, New Zealand and Japan have government control over their international communications systems.

The Government has designated Teleglobe Canada as the Canadian signatory to the International Telecommunications Satellite Organization. Periodically, each of the signatory's ownership share is adjusted to conform with the percentage of their total use of the system and any other percentage that they elect to have within the agreement. If Teleglobe Canada is privatized and its purpose is not to serve Canadians but to make a profit from its operation, how can it fulfil its responsibility to Canadians within this agreement?

That percentage of ownership share in the telecommunications satellite organization is part of Teleglobe's asset. Therefore, one must assume that this share of satellite operation has been sold to a private corporation and the Government no longer has the ability to make use of those satellites for national purposes.

The corporation is also designated as the Canadian participant in the Commonwealth Telecommunication Organization, the purpose of which is to develop efficient operations of a Commonwealth communication structure. The operation of this global system is also apportioned to those in the Commonwealth who have taken part in the development of a global telecommunication system. The Government, through this Bill, is selling our interest in that telecommunications system. Yet, I wonder if the other nations of the Commonwealth who are involved in this organization were asked if they wanted as a partner a private corporation whose aim is profit rather than service to the Commonwealth or the country which it possibly represents?

Teleglobe Canada primarily functioned on behalf of the Government. We are told that it will continue to have this monopoly for five years and there is a commitment to reduce the price. When we consider the Government's previous policies in these areas, there is no assurance that the Government will not increase its subsidy to Teleglobe in the next five to ten years to keep it afloat. We know that the Government's mandate and responsibility is to assist in the development of a corporation.

We are told that the pension plan of the employees involved in this takeover has been settled. However, I was the member of our Party responsible for dealing with the Bill privatizing Canadian Arsenals. When I contacted employees of that organization I discovered that, although the Government thought it had settled that issue, the employees had quite a different opinion. In fact, that Bill was held up in committee for several days because the employees were dissatisfied with the proposal.

There is a retirement benefit equivalent to one-half the accumulated unused sick leave days up to March 31, 1981, with additional credits of five days per year of service after that date, calculated at the salary level in effect at the time of retirement. This is a commitment to people who are presently working for Teleglobe Canada. While government documents on this divestiture indicate that there has been some discussion on this question, there is no guarantee that this kind of commitment from the Government to the employees is safeguarded. While this may have been discussed, the unions and the employees should beware, because we know from other divestitures of Crown corporations that employees may lose in the long run unless they are very careful.

This divestiture also raises a question about the relationship of Teleglobe with the Department of Transport. The Department of Transport has supplied the use of cable ship ice-breakers such as the John Cabot and others to Teleglobe on a reimbursement basis. This amounted to a cost of some $6.8 million a year. Will the Government be required to continue to give this kind of service to Teleglobe when it becomes a private corporation? Will we put at the service of Teleglobe, a private corporation, ice-breakers and cable ships, something which will cost and has cost the Canadian Government in the past as much as $7 million a year? Will the Canadian Government be reimbursed for the provision of these services? Or will they just be services to Teleglobe as have been delivered in the past to some extent?

These are the questions which have to be asked. Not only must we ask why we are selling it, we must ask how we will replace the services which Teleglobe has put in place for Canada, how much it has cost us and how much it will cost us in the future.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, I draw to the attention of the House one of the points made by the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo), namely, the contrast he made between profit and service. His assumption is that if a utility is purchased by a private enterprise organization it is suddenly no longer a service corporation. I draw to the Hon. Member's attention the number of corporations in the country which have become known not only throughout Canada but throughout the world for the services which they render. I refer to Bell Canada, Consumers' Gas, Interprovincial Pipe Line and TransCanada Pipelines. Do members of the NDP not realize that if one wants to make a profit in private enterprise then one has to provide a service? If there is no service then there is no business and thus no profit. It simply does not follow, as the Hon. Member assumes, that once something is operated for profit, ergo a service is no longer being provided. It is quite the opposite.

We cannot believe more confidently on this side of the House that the transition of this enterprise into private hands will actually increase the possibilities of rendering service to the public. The difference here lies not in the picayune points that have been brought by way of criticism of this deal, for one can believe that members of the NDP would criticize it no matter what were the details of it, but in the ideological-philosophical aspects. They are opposed to anything but state-owned enterprises. They are opposed to private enterprises. That is what they have been saying to the country in this debate while the Government is carrying forward another message to the people of Canada. It is one that we can be confident will be supported by the majority, that is, most business should be in private hands, one Canadian or a group of Canadians serving others.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, the alternative to one Canadian serving all Canadians is all Canadians serving all Canadians. That is what we believe. The ownership of Teleglobe by the citizens of Canada operating for the benefit of the citizens of Canada is what we would like to see. That is not happening in this situation. We have no guarantee that it will happen.

If a Crown corporation serves no useful national interest or any commercial purpose and cannot be brought to do so, then I have no concern about getting rid of it. It simply clutters up commercial operations around the country. However, if we have an organization which is owned by all Canadians which is providing services not only to Canada but to others, then why give that organization to one Canadian and allow him to provide those services instead? What the Government is doing is taking this away from all Canadians and giving it to one or two people. That does not make sense. It does not create a structure which will allow Canada to develop.

We know what happens to corporations which use tremendous amounts of money in terms of grants given them by the public to provide a service which they now operate for their own benefit such as the CPR. If one were to look at the structure of that organization one would find that all of the money that went into it in terms of lands and grants has been used to increase the wealth of a very small group of people.

Let us consider Ma Bell in this respect. This is a company which provides service. That service has been developed over time and the profits used to develop a corporation which now has nothing to do with service. What has happened is that the exploitation of the need for communications has been used to develop exploits in other areas. The CPR and Bell Canada are probably the two worst examples of the use of taxpayer funds to develop corporations which then go on to exploit the people in other ways.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, my colleagues are in a hurry for this legislation to move forward. However, I am sure they will understand that I have a question to ask my colleague. It is the following. Can a publicly-owned Teleglobe which provides service to Canadians in the area of telecommunications provide the same type of service that will be provided by a privately-held Teleglobe which will be out to make a profit and whose bottom line will be profit? A publicly-held Teleglobe can be directed by the Government to put in place a policy framework with regard to international telecommunications policy. Moving this company into the private sector will cause the company to respond on a profit basis. Will we lose the opportunity to direct our policy internationally as a result of this privatization?

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, as I pointed out before, Teleglobe has been used by the Government of Canada as an agency responsible for telecommunications development and the relationships involved in telecommunications development around the world. As far as I can see, in terms of this divestiture structure there is no indication that the responsibilities taken by Teleglobe in the past will be left to the new Teleglobe. The new company's basic reason for being will be profit. We will have to put in place a new structure within our communications field which will do what Teleglobe Canada has been doing in the past with other countries around the world, particularly Commonwealth countries.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time allotted for questions and comments has terminated. The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) on debate.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words on the privatization of Teleglobe Canada. First, as Members of the House are aware, Teleglobe is a Crown corporation that has the responsibility for all overseas telecommunications that enter and leave Canada. It is an important Crown corporation. These telecommunications include, of course, overseas telephone calls, telegraph transactions, cable and telex communications. Teleglobe Canada is a joint owner of submarine ocean cables and a telecommunications satellite system. This particular corporation has an effective monopoly in Canada on all overseas telecommunications. Overseas telephone calls account for some 85 per cent of its revenue. The primary source of revenue is from overseas telephone calls.

What puzzles me about the move of the Government to privatize Teleglobe is that this has been the jewel of Crown corporations in terms of making money. It has been a consistent profit maker for the Government. It seems to me to be sound Conservative business practice that if a company makes money, it is kept, or if it is a good investment, it is kept for the people of Canada. Sometimes you sell it, comes the answer from the Conservatives across the way. I think that they like to sell anything that is profit making. If it makes money, I would keep it.

In my Province of Saskatchewan even the Devine Conservatives would not sell some of the more profitable Crown corporations because they make money for the people of Saskatchewan. These companies help make sure that our massive deficit is not even more massive in the Province of Saskatchewan. There are some Conservatives who believe in public ownership. Our present Minister of Finance (Mr.

Wilson), in a different incarnation before he came to this place, was one of the people responsible for securing funding in the United States for the creation of a Potash Corporation of Saskatchewan. The Potash Corporation of Saskatchewan is the largest potash company in the world. It produces and mines more potash in the world than anywhere else except the Soviet Union.

Why is the Conservative Party so insistent on selling a profitable Crown corporation like Teleglobe Canada? As I have stated, it has been a consistent money maker. In 1985, it recorded profits of $53.2 million. Its profit picture for the last 10 years has been very good. In 1985, the revenues of the company were some $678 million with a profit of $53.2 million.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it is a public sector company which has made handsome profits for the people of Canada, it is a sound investment for all Canadians. I wonder why the Government of Canada and Members like the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) want to sell this company which has made a lot of money and a lot of profits for Quebecers and other Canadians, men and women alike. Why did you do that, Mr. Minister? It was a good thing for Canada. It was a source of considerable profits for Canada.

Mr. La Salle: And so it will continue.

Mr. Nystrom: He says he will continue to sell good companies which make good profits. This is why the Progressive Conservative Party has become so unpopular throughout Canada. This is why the Progressive Conservative Party now ranks third in Canada, according to the polls, with 23 per cent of the votes, with 17 per cent of the votes in Quebec.

Mr. La Salle: That is not the reason.

An Hon. Member: After the elections—

Mr. Nystrom: After the elections the Progressive Conservative Party will be the third Party in Canada and here in the House. And it is strange, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. La Salle: We will see.

An Hon. Member: You are third in Ontario.

Mr. Nystrom: We are third in Ontario, true enough, Mr. Speaker. Now, only for now, but with the help of the Prime Minister and some of his Cabinet colleagues we will soon be second in Ontario.

An Hon. Member: First!

Mr. Nystrom: First in Ontario.

Mr. Keeper: We like Brian, our friend.

Mr. Nystrom: But it is strange, Mr. Speaker. Every time the Progressive Conservative Party gets a huge majority it is finished for 20 years.

Mr. La Salle: What a bad forecast!

Mr. Nystrom: I remember very well . . . Before I was born, Canada had the Government of Mr. Bennett, during the 30s—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry to interrupt my colleague, but there is such a thing as relevancy in the House. I would hope that the Hon. Member, who has been here for 18 years, would know exactly what I mean.

Mr. Nystrom: I am a non-paid consultant advising the Conservative Party on how to regain its popularity, Mr. Speaker. It is things like this that make the Conservative Government very unpopular. It is Bills like this that make the people of Canada turn away from the Conservative Party. I got carried away on trying to advise some of my friends. For example, the Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) is a good friend of mine. I would not like to see him lose his seat to a Liberal—for him to lose it to a New Democratic Member is a different thing. The way things are going in Assiniboia he is running third, and he is the most popular Conservative in Saskatchewan. I am sorry, I got carried away, but he is a good friend of mine. I know that he is a good friend of Joe Frazier, the old former heavyweight champion of the world. I think that Joe Frazier could teach him a thing or two, but that is another story.

The sale of Teleglobe Canada is something that I do not think is in the interest of the people of Canada. A Conservative Government has sold this company to a small Montreal based data processing and data communications company. The Government claims to have sold Teleglobe for $608.3 million. However, in analysing the sale more carefully, it is found that the company that is buying Teleglobe is paying at most only $488.3 million for the company. If it is paying $488.3 million for the company that made a profit last year of some $53 million, it is getting a pretty good deal. In essence, we are seeing the giveaway by the Government of a very profitable part of what Canadians already own. I cannot support that type of giveaway.

Privatization seems to be a trend in the Government. This is not the first company that has been privatized, and it probably will not be the last company that is privatized.

Mr. Jepson: You betcha.

Mr. Nystrom: My very conservative Conservative friend from London says "you betcha". That is what I am afraid of. The Conservative Party in the last few years has changed radically. It used to be a progressive Party. It used to be the Party of Sir John A. Macdonald and of John Diefenbaker. It was the Party that brought in the CBC and the Canadian Wheat Board, the Party that at one time had a national Canadian dream.

Mr. McCurdy: Those are mutations.

Mr. Nystrom: Mutations, perhaps. But every once in a while it did a progressive thing. For example, the Wheat Board was very popular in western Canada, and it has been very good for Canada. Now the Conservative Party has a Prime Minister that believes in branch plant Canada, that is, importing Reaganism and American republicanism. Pretty soon he will probably privatize the Canadian Wheat Board in the free trade negotiations.

An Hon. Member: Go for it.

Mr. Nystrom: "Go for it" says my friend from Calgary, privatize the Canadian Wheat Board. There we have one member of the Conservative Party who wishes to privatize the Canadian Wheat Board. Do we have another bidder? Is there another one out there who will do the same thing? The Hon. Member from Ontario says it is losing money, it is a bad time for the Wheat Board. We will privatize the Wheat Board. There is an Ontarian and a Calgary oil baron who wish to privatize the Canadian Wheat Board.

An Hon. Member: Sell it while it is making money.

Mr. Nystrom: "Sell it while it is making money", he says. So we have the Whip of the Conservative Party from Ontario who wants to privatize the Canadian Wheat Board and sell it. Maybe it is because he is from Ontario that he does not understand what the Canadian Wheat Board means. I think that the Member for Assiniboia should take him out behind the barn and give him a lesson or two about the Canadian Wheat Board, and how the farmers of Canada fought for the Canadian Wheat Board. They fought against the Winnipeg Grain Exchange and those old Liberal corporations at the top that screwed the farmer year in and year out. Now we have these Conservatives from Ontario and from Calgary who want to sell the Wheat Board. They are in bed with the Richardson family in the private grain exchange. That is what is happening to the Conservative Party, a Party that used to be a little bit conservative.

Mr. Jepson: What is your position?

Mr. Nystrom: The position of the NDP is well known in regard to the Canadian Wheat Board. We believe in a strong Canadian Wheat Board. We believe that the Wheat Board should be expanded to include, not just the grains that it handles now, but all the Canadian grains. That is the position of the NDP. It was the position of the CCF, the farmers' union, the wheat pools, and as well the Member for Assiniboia. If the farmers of western Canada were consulted, they would agree with me and not with the Member from Calgary or the Whip of the Conservative Party from Ontario. Those are the fears that we have.

As I said before, it is because of these types of policies that the Conservative Party is defeated whenever they take office. I was making reference to the fact that when R. B. Bennett was Prime Minister, it took him five or six years before he destroyed the Conservative Party for 20 years in this country. In 1957-58, John Diefenbaker came along and he was Prime Minister for five years. Dalton Camp and the Bay Street boys got into the Conservative Party, and again it was destroyed for 20 years. Now we have a new Prime Minister. This time he might not destroy the Party for 20 years; perhaps he will relegate it to third place forever. That would be a useful contribution from the boy from Baie Comeau.

Those are the reasons that I oppose the Bill before us today. It is not Canadian. It is not in sync with what Canadians stand for. It is not in sync with what the Conservative Party has stood for historically. It is not what Peter Lougheed stood for in Alberta.

Mrs. Sparrow: Privatization, you bet.

Mr. Nystrom: He did not stand for privatization in Alberta, with the creation of Pacific Western Airways with some of the moneys from the Heritage Fund. I remember a Conservative Member of Parliament standing in the House and calling Peter Lougheed "Peter the Red".

Mrs. Sparrow: No, no. "Peter the Blue".

Mr. Nystrom: It was "Peter the Red". I also remember Bill Davis in Ontario and the takeover of Suncor.

Mr. Fraleigh: The biggest disaster in Ontario.

Mr. Nystrom: Now I hear an Ontario Tory saying that Bill Davis was the biggest disaster in Ontario, and he is being cheered by the Member from London. I agree with that.

They were Conservative Premiers who believed in public ownership and did some things in the field of public ownership such as those the Conservative Party originally did with the CBC, Radio Canada, and the Canadian Wheat Board. What we are seeing today is a fundamental change in the Conservative Party of Canada.

When the next election comes, I am sure Canadians will say no to the privatization of Teleglobe, to free trade, to deregulation, and to privatization, just as they are saying no now to the incompetence and scandals which plague the Government, the Prime Minister's Office and many cabinet offices.

I could mention many other things about Teleglobe, but many of my colleagues, such as the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy), are anxious to speak. However, I will conclude with one final appeal to the backbenchers of the Conservative Party to think back to their roots, to their heritage, and to the reason their Party was formed in the first place.

What I heard today from a Conservative Member from Calgary and from the Whip of the Conservative Party, who is extremely influential in the Prime Minister's Office, is that they would like to privatize the Canadian Wheat Board. That really concerns me. I hope farmers across western Canada will take note of what the very powerful Whip of the Conservative Party wants to do—privatize the Canadian Wheat Board.

I hope we can join forces with the Hon. Member for Assiniboia and other progressive elements of the Conservative Party to put a stop to the notion of privatizing the Canadian Wheat Board and putting marketing boards on the free trade negotiating table. I hope we can stand up for western Canada and for a strong country from coast to coast.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I have a few comments, because the Hon. Member, whom I have known for years, just asked me: Why privatize? So I shall, if I may, remind the Hon. Member that of course there can be no agreement between the philosophy of the Members of the New Democratic Party and our own. That being understood, we were not counting on the support of the Members opposite for this transaction. And I also think all Canadians should be aware of the importance of this decision which is one more instance of this Government's meeting a fundamental commitment that was made by the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) and supported by his colleagues during the last election campaign. I am referring to the commitment that we would give the private sector the place it deserved. We have now proved, and it is important that people realize this, that we trust Canadians and Canadian know-how, and that we also encourage private sector initiative and are doing so through various companies. Today I am delighted, and Montreal is too, to see there will be a share purchase plan for employees. I am also delighted with the potential of this company which will enhance Canada's reputation and reflect the sound and solid policies of a Government that has respect for the private sector and believes the private sector can take an active part in this country's economic renewal. Only two years ago, our economy was an embarrassment, but today, we can be proud as Canadians of our extraordinary economic performance, reflected in the creation of thousands of jobs, lower unemployment rates, and an economic climate that is far more accessible and favourable than it was two years ago. So that of course is the result of this Government's policies, and it has been this Government's response to the private sector which had asked for this chance to develop and expand.

Mr. Speaker, I say to my hon. friends that this legislation is a perfect response to those needs and to the hopes of Canadians who wanted this opportunity to help their country through personal initiative. We have confidence in the ability of Canadian men and women. We have confidence in the private sector, and of course we are not counting on the NDP's support, but we don't need it, because we know that the Prime Minister's vision is fair and equitable and reflects the will of the people of Canada.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, the Minister referred to the Prime Minister's vision. He said that the Prime Minister's vision was the same as the vision of the Canadian people. If that is the case, why is the Conservative Party down to 23 per cent in the polls? There is a big difference between the vision of the Canadian people and the Prime Minister's vision. The Prime Minister has been talking about free trade and privatization and deregulation. Mr. Speaker, the Canadian people have massively rejected the projects, programs and policies of the Conservative party.

Another thing, Mr. Speaker. I said that Teleglobe grossed $53 million last year. And by the way, we are not the only country in the world with a government-owned telecommunications corporation. Many countries have public corporations like Teleglobe. I could mention Australia, New Zealand, France, West Germany, Italy and Sweden. All these countries have corporations controlled by the national government. Great Britain, under Mrs. Thatcher's Conservative Government, only privatized part of British Telecom. Even under Margaret Thatcher, the Government retained 50 per cent of the shares in British Telecom. Nearly 50 per cent of those shares were kept by Mrs. Thatcher's Conservative Government in Great Britain. Even Margaret Thatcher is less Conservative than the boy from Baie Comeau, Mr. Speaker. And that is why the Conservative Party has been massively rejected by the Canadian people. That is why the Conservative Party is now third in this country and why it will be third after the next federal election.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—Employment—Winnipeg Canada Packers plant layoffs—retraining of workers. (b) Request that Deputy Prime Minister help situation in Winnipeg; the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson)—Fisheries—Marketing of freshwater fish—Senate Committee report; the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway)—North Atlantic Treaty Organization—Liberal Party Convention resolutions.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

TELEGLOBE CANADA REORGANIZATION AND DIVESTITURE ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-38, an Act respecting the reorganization and divestiture of Teleglobe Canada, be now read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendment of Ms. McDonald (p. 3435).

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on Bill C-38, an Act respecting the reorganization and divestiture of Teleglobe Canada.

Many Canadians are distressed at the decision of the Government of Canada to begin a process of wholesale privatization of Crown corporations for no other reason than the fact that the current governing Party is really a slave to a doctrinaire philosophy, that always and in every circumstance where it is possible the private sector should have ownership of the assets and resources of our country.

I belong to a political Party that believes fundamentally in the free enterprise system which will generate the most wealth for this nation that will ultimately serve all of its citizens. But we taper that belief in free enterprise with a concern that it is a legitimate role for Government to intervene to ensure that the distribution of wealth generated by a free enterprise system is fair and equitable. We taper that belief in free enterprise with the certain conviction that when it comes to providing goods and services to Canadians in equal measure, no matter where they live in this country, from time to time it is appropriate for Government to intervene to ensure that services are provided.

There are some very notable examples of this, such as the decision to establish what is now Air Canada. This was an example of a Government intervening to ensure that airline service would be available in equal measure, at a reasonable level, everywhere in Canada. That was a decision at a point in time when the private sector was not prepared to take it and, I would submit, is not prepared to take it today. There was a decision by a very famous Conservative Prime Minister, John A. Macdonald, to build a railroad from sea to shining sea because that act of Government intervention to ensure the railroad was built was part of the policy of the Government of the day to use the railroad, to use transportation, as a means of national unity. There are many examples, Mr. Speaker. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation was established, not because the private sector could not give us a broadcasting service in Canada, but because the Parliament of Canada believed instead that there was a requirement on the part of the Government to ensure that Canadians, no matter where they lived, would at least have a minimal level of service in both radio and television. So too was it part of the service, part of the needs of the nation, that Teleglobe Canada was put together to provide this country with a trans-Atlantic telephone service and to provide us as well with telex services.

What we have in this Bill is not an argument, there is not one shred of evidence that placing Teleglobe in private hands is going to give the people of Canada—because that is what counts in the final analysis—a better service or a cheaper service than is currently the case. What we have instead wrapped up in this Bill is an expression of a particular political Party's ideology that in all cases, at all times, the private sector must provide goods and services in this nation.

I, for one, find it more than passing strange that the Government of Canada is seizing upon the assets of the people of Canada, profitable assets that belong to every man, woman, and child in this country that are returning an investment on behalf of the people to the Treasury of this country, and is privatizing those assets. Teleglobe Canada, a company until we pass this Bill, or until the Government majority passes this Bill, paid to its shareholders, and the shareholders are 25 million Canadians, $108 million last year and a similar amount the year before. In two years that company paid Canadians, the shareholders, nearly $200 million, yet the Government is going to sell off that Crown corporation to a private sector company, I am sure a reputable company and an able company, I am sure a well meaning company—I do not dispute that—for $500 million.

Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, that within five years at the current rate of profits this company will have a 100 per cent return on its investment? In five years, the company will have paid lock, stock and barrel for this Crown corporation and paid it off and, in five years, it will be seeing a profit in today's dollars in the range of $100 million a year, an amount of money currently being paid into the Treasury, to the shareholders, the people of Canada. Why is this being done? Because the Party is locked into a stringent doctrinaire philosophy that says, "But the Crown cannot own assets, it cannot own resources". It is being done because the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is desperately trying to find ways to meet his budget projections tomorrow of how much his deficit will be.

If in the short term we have to give away this Crown corporation, which pays us a substantial amount of money, for $500 million, if in the short term that half a billion dollars, coupled with the sale of Fisheries Products International Newfoundland, another $100 million giveaway, gives us the dollars to be able to say tomorrow to the people of Canada that the Minister has kept his deficit projection in line because he sold off half the shop to do it, well, then, Mr. Speaker, the Government says that is good enough.

The tragic reality is that in the long term this sale of Teleglobe Canada will be paid for by our children and our children's children. The simple fact of the matter is that this sale of Teleglobe Canada in the long term will increase the deficit. For the moment, this facility, Teleglobe Canada, is paying into the federal Treasury, the federal coffers. It was paid and built by the taxpayers of Canada and it is finally showing a return, a very substantial one.

Over the next 10 years it would be worth $1 billion in current moneys to Canadians, over the next 20 years in current dollars it would be worth $2 billion, and over the next 30 years it would be worth at least $3 billion in current dollars. If the activity of the company continues to expand as satellite telecommunications mature, one could surmise that the return to the people of Canada would be that much dramatically higher. What have we done? We have sold the company at an incredible price. The average Canadian in buying a home expects to pay for it over 15, 20 or 25 years. The average Canadian buying a car expects to pay for that over 3, 4, or 5 years. But the Government of Canada has taken a facility worth $100 million in profit a year and sold it to a company that can pay it off within five years based on the return that has been given to the company on the sale.

That kind of short-term fixing of the books, that kind of short-term effort to save face on the part of the Minister of Finance by selling off the assets of Canadians has got to come to a stop, Mr. Speaker. What I find frightening is that in the atmosphere in which we currently live where the front pages every day are dominated by new, interesting and exciting revelations, in that atmosphere when most people are preoccupied with what the great late Don Jamieson would call the froth of political life versus the substance of parliamentary procedure, we find that the public is not aware of it all. Canadians are consumed by the froth, the sensational front page headlines, and by and large they are not aware that many of the treasured assets of the country are on the chopping block being sold off. It is much too late to say, put a halt to it, stop, what are we doing, let us have a public debate when those assets have disappeared.

Why is it that the sale of Teleglobe Canada proceeded in advance of the presentation to the House by the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) of a national telecommunications policy for Canada? That kind of initiative is one about which we have spoken for the last four or five years. Before we start taking bits and pieces of the telecommunications machine and privatizing them or transferring their ownership, we ought at least to know the national telecommunications policy for Canada. Members on this side of the House and, I believe, Members on the other side of the House have been waiting to hear from the Minister. What indeed is Canada's policy? We have had nothing but a rushed attempt in the name of a quick Budget fix to sell Teleglobe Canada.

There was a rushed attempt to sell Fisheries Products International for exactly the same reasons. That is a sale that will get the Government of Canada a quick fix. Like a junkie on Saturday morning, the Government is looking for another quick $100 million to get the deficit figures in line. The sale of FPI was made with absolutely no provisions guaranteeing jobs for the people associated with the inshore fishery of Atlantic Canada, and particularly Newfoundland. There was not a single provision to ensure the livelihood of fish plants that only two years ago were bailed out at a cost of nearly $300 million. That bail-out was approved by all three Parties in Parliament. I was the Parliamentary Secretary who put that Bill through the House. All three Parties felt that it was a non-partisan issue, that the inshore fishery was essential to the life-blood of Atlantic Canada and that it must be bailed out, restructured and modernized. We felt that we must guarantee jobs and the way of life in Atlantic Canada. We all got together and approved that Bill. Yet two years later, a new Government with a new philosophy, bound and chained like a slave to a doctrinaire philosophy no longer relevant in 1987, suddenly picked it up, lock, stock and barrel and, for $100 million, passed it back to the private sector with no guarantees to prevent a recurrence of the kind of problems with which we had to deal at a cost of $300 million a scant two or three years ago. That is what is frightening about the Government.

We are hearing about the sale of Air Canada. We ask why. The Government intelligently tells us: "Because". We ask: "Because why?". "Because the private sector should do it, of course". We are hearing about the sale of CN and we ask: "Why?". The Government says: "Because. Because the private sector should do it".

We do not have a national transportation policy any longer. We used to function on the notion that we would regulate services on the basis of public convenience and necessity. Now we have a new philosophy of fit, willing and able. If you have some dollars, Mr. Speaker, and the initiative, and you want to provide or eliminate a service, go right ahead. That is the philosophy of the Conservative Party.

The Government has said that the purpose of privatization is to put Teleglobe into the hands of the private sector. The Government has said that the company might benefit from private sector management. In announcing the Bill, the private sector is so confident of its ability to benefit this company that it has demanded that it remain in a monopoly position. It is the private sector if necessary but not necessarily the private sector. The scenario is that this company will function like a Crown corporation with a monopoly, with guarantees and with guaranteed profits, but the profits will go into the hands of the private shareholders, not the people of Canada who built the company. The profits will go into the hands of private individuals who will operate with public guarantees and with a government-sanctioned monopoly.

The Government has said that the purpose of privatization is to increase competition. For the next five years, during a time of growth and development in this particular field, again this company will have a government-guaranteed monopoly. One cannot be a half-way private-sector player. One cannot on the one hand talk about the virtues of the private sector, talk about freeing the entrepreneurial spirit, make the appeal to private initiative and competition, while on the other hand wrapping all that around a set of government regulations and monopolies and expect the people of Canada to swallow that line. I know the Speaker knows that. I know that if he were not constrained by the requirements of the Chair, the Speaker would be on his feet with his fists balled up demanding that this terrible piece of legislation be chucked through the door.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would hope that the Hon. Member would not get me into this argument. Perhaps he could hold on to it and use his own rhetoric for his own debate.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, of course I should not comment on what I know—or what I think the Speaker would be doing, but I know that for you it is from time to time a frustrating experience to be sitting there.

The Government has said that the purpose of privatization is to minimize regulatory burden. How is the Government minimizing regulatory burden? For the first time, Teleglobe will be accountable to the CRTC. A new layer of regulations will be added. That goes along with the monopoly that has been given to the so-called private players. The people of Canada will not swallow that excuse for the Government's initiative.

The simple reality is that for the taxpayers of Canada, Teleglobe has become one of the few cash cows in the government arsenals, one of the few companies to which we could look to give us a return on our investment. It is a company that, on the one hand, manages a service that is essential for Canada, a service that ought to be developed, owned and controlled on behalf of all the people of Canada, while on the other hand it gives us a return on our investment. It is beyond my imagination to understand why the Government needs to sell off this company now.

The Government has suggested that Teleglobe's tariffs are too high and that this is another reason for privatization. In August, 1986, only a scant few months ago, in a brief presented to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) by the Teleglobe Technical Services Association, Local 1653, and the Canadian Overseas Telecommunications Union, quite the opposite was revealed. The brief stated that the company's tariffs were a matter of bilateral international agreements and that the company must often acquiesce to traffic structures of the overseas partners, the foreign administrators. It went on to indicate that even though Teleglobe is capable of operating profitably with lower rates in the case of telephone traffic, Telecom Canada receives an average of 50 cents on the dollar per conversation per minute, and that these and other problems can easily be resolved by making Teleglobe subject to CRTC regulations.

Is it necessary to privatize the company in order to make it subject to CRTC regulations? Could the company, as a Crown corporation, not have been subject to the CRTC? Of course it could have been and there could have been a reduction in the rate structure.

Jean-Claude Delorme, the President of Teleglobe Canada, appeared before the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture. The corporation was considering a plan which consisted of a number of phases. It was considering a rate reduction in the order of 10 per cent in 1986. This Crown corporation was planning a rate reduction in any case. It was not necessary to privatize a company which has paid $100 million in profit to the people of Canada.

The Government has insisted on using its blind majority, its at times mindless majority, its always doctrinaire majority, its philosophy enslaved majority, to inflict upon minority Members of this House and the majority of Canadians across this land a decision we find unacceptable. We warn the Government that a continuation of that kind of policy will meet with ever-increasing resistance in this place and in this land.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, what is very obvious in this divestiture is that the Government, which professes to prefer private enterprise, has done so theoretically and then imposed upon the overseas telecommunications industry a monopoly. That goes against the philosophy which is supposed to be the basis for the initial action. Would the Hon. Member comment on that contradiction in government policy?

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is absolutely right. There is a clear contradiction in terms here. The Government has not really transferred Teleglobe to the private sector. In sustaining the monopoly and placing the company under CRTC regulation, it has simply transferred the company's profits from the Government of Canada to the shareholders of a private company. This company will operate for at least five years, if not longer, in exactly the same manner as a Crown corporation with a guaranteed monopoly, rate structures set by the Government, and the profits will simply be funnelled out of the Treasury and into the pockets of private individuals. That is all that has happened here. That is another philosophy which the Government pursues, one we will not talk about in this particular debate.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is an erudite and experienced Member of the House. I am sure that on the basis of his observation of the Conservative Party he can explain something that puzzles me a great deal. I cannot really believe that this is simply the gratuitous application of empty-headed ideology. Perhaps he can enlighten me by explaining the justification that Conservatives use for privatization, the economic principles involved, and where the privatization of Teleglobe fits in among those economic principles.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for ascribing to me an ability I think no rational Member of this House has, that is, an ability to explain the policy decisions of the Party opposite. I claim to be a gentleman who is able to find words and means on occasion to put my feelings in everyday language. However, the problem here is not in finding the language to describe Members opposite or what motivates the Government in taking this decision. The problem is that it is simply impossible for any rational person to understand why this particular sale was made, whether it be from the point of view of sound financial planning and management or even from the point of view of the Government's own philosophy.

All I can say is that in the final analysis nothing has happened in this sale or will happen through this legislation other than the fact that an entity generating substantial profits for the Government will now transfer those profits to the hands of private individuals. Whether we talk about service to Canadians, cost to Canadians, or development of Teleglobe for Canadians, we see absolutely nothing in this Bill that would impact any differently on the company now than would have been the case had it stayed in public hands.

This is the only rational explanation I can give you. A junkie on Saturday morning will go to deep and desperate ends to get a fix. We have a Minister of Finance who is in deep and desperate trouble trying to meet his deficit projections. Teleglobe Canada and FPI and other Crown corporations then become the victim of a scam by a cornerstore burglar looking for the dollars to support his fix. In this case the fix is fixing the deficit so it is believable. The cost, of course, is some very valuable assets belonging to the people of Canada which are projected to contribute long into the future to the pocket-books of ordinary men, women and children of this country. I find the whole process not only shocking but regrettable.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I recognize the problem the Hon. Member has in explaining what is happening. However, I ask him to explain one more thing, if he will. Even though the Conservatives got about 50 per cent of the vote, how can they believe they have a mandate to do what they are doing given the situation in which they find themselves across the country these days? They had originally about 50 per cent of the vote, and a lot of that I suppose was a temporary protest vote.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, it is said that when a Party finds itself down in popular esteem one of the ways of finding out which way you should go by way of policy is to consult the next largest Party. The Government consulted the undecided, flipped a coin and decided to sell Teleglobe. I really wish I could provide a rational answer to a rational question, but the subject matter is so irrational it escapes even the capacity of a simple Newfoundlander to put forward—

Mrs. Sparrow: That is not hard.

Mr. Tobin: The Hon. Member from Alberta says that it is not hard. I know that people from Newfoundland are rather timid and inarticulate and have great difficulty in expressing emotions. However, as simple, quiet, shy and withdrawn as we are, we nevertheless stand up in this place and state our views. We find the backbone to get to our feet, unlike some Members in some Parties who, quietly, would rather see the Government steal away like a thief in the night with Teleglobe, an asset belonging to the people of Canada. At least we register a note of protest. For that I make no apology.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in this debate.

Mr. Nystrom: Why?

Mr. Keeper: My hon. friend here asks why. It is because so far, the Government has put this debate within an ideological context. It says their reasons for selling Teleglobe Canada were that the private sector was more efficient than the public sector. It says that for the New Democratic Party it is only natural to demand that a corporation remain in the public sector. The Government has put all this into an ideological context.

• (1630)

Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal with the matter a little more objectively. I would like to examine the sale of this company from a number of different angles. For instance, I would like to look at public policy reasons for maintaining Teleglobe Canada as a Crown corporation and for selling it to the private sector. That is one of the aspects.

Another aspect we should examine is the nature of this business. It happens to be a monopoly. How does one regulate a monopoly? How can one manage a monopoly in such a way that it serves the public interest? What is the best way to do it?

Another aspect of this matter is concerned with the profits and revenue of this company. Does the company have any financial problems? Who will benefit from its income?

Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to examine the sale of this company and the various aspects of that sale, because I think we should realize there are some questions. If the Government is so sure the company should be sold, it may be right. But can we ask a few questions, find out why the Government sold the company? If indeed we can ask questions, I suggest the Government must reconsider its approach. The Government will have to say: Yes, the company is now in the public sector and running smoothly. Why change anything if things are going well? Why fix something that does not need fixing?

Mr. Speaker, my first question was: Are there public political reasons why Teleglobe Canada should remain in the public sector rather than be sold to private interests? Are there such reasons, or are the Progressive Conservatives right when they say there is no need for this company to be in the public sector and that a private company can just as well serve the interests of Canadians?

What I want to point out, Mr. Speaker, is that Teleglobe Canada is our lever to implement the communications policy. It attests to our presence on the international scene. Mr. Speaker, there is a big world out there and we want to communicate with everybody. With Teleglobe Canada we can help Canadians keep in touch with the rest of the world. Such is the situation at this time.

But if we were to do what the Government is doing and ask that the company be sold, then it will become a private company and will want to make a profit. The company will have to be attuned to the requirements of the market, and there may be parts of the world with which Canadians may not find it profitable to communicate. So there will be pressure to do away with one aspect of our international communications.

As I see it, Mr. Speaker, if Canada is to remain open to the world and if Canadians are to be able to communicate with everybody, then it would be better if the company were to remain in the public sector because we can use it as an instrument to achieve public objectives and stay in touch with the rest of the world, not only with those countries where reciprocal communications may spell profit.

That, Mr. Speaker, is one public political reason why this company ought to remain in the public sector.

Another aspect to this question of public policy, Mr. Speaker, is that Teleglobe Canada speaks for Canadians on international organizations. Should Teleglobe Canada ever become a private company subject to the conditions of the private market, then it will speak for itself and defend the interests of its owner.

Well, Mr. Speaker, if it is to belong to international organizations then I think there is a possibility of conflict of interests—the interests of the Government of Canada and of the people of Canada, and the interests of a private company working to make a profit and represent the interests of its owner.

In that case, Mr. Speaker, I think we will have to express serious reservations about the sale of Teleglobe Canada. Indeed, the way things are now, the company operates as an instrument which can represent all Canadians on international organizations, but once it has been sold we will have to find some other way to be represented on those organizations. We will also have to find a way to gather information on the international telecommunications industry to be able to represent our own national interest, our interest in international organizations.

I will give you an example. For years, the oil industry in this country belonged to the private sector and was in fact dominated by private companies. These companies gave the federal regulator information on Canada's oil reserves. For years they said we had plenty of oil and we could sell the oil we had. We were dependent for that information on those companies. After a while, in a matter of years, the companies changed their minds. They said: Watch out, the oil is running out. And we had the oil crisis. Mr. Speaker, in that situation we depended on the private sector for information that was essential to the interests of this country.

I think the same situation could apply in the telecommunications industry. When we depend on a private company for our knowledge of the industry, we may not get the information we need to understand the industry and safeguard our interests.

Mr. Speaker, the second aspect of this question I want to look at is the nature of the telecommunications industry. This corporation is a monopoly and it dominates the industry, of course, and my question is as follows: Is it more efficient to regulate a monopoly through ownership or through regulation? I think there are two ways of managing a monopolistic industry. One way is to have a regulatory agent who can look at the company and say: O.K., do this or do that, take this or that direction. That is one way. The other way is to buy the company or go along with the company in the public sector, and simply be able to tell its managers: This is Canadian policy, and we want you to respect that policy and to follow it, because you are the owners of this company and you can do that under our economic system.

Mr. Speaker, today we can control this industry because we own it. However, the Government is going to change the situation and put us into another where we will have to depend on a regulatory system. Mr. Speaker, the trouble with a regulatory system is that sometimes the regulators get too cozy with the industry they are supposed to regulate. It is like policemen on the beat. They're supposed to be there to control crime, for instance, the sale of drugs. Policemen patrol the streets to get rid of this kind of activity. Sometimes, however, they may accept bribes and forget their responsibility to the public. They become friends with the people selling the drugs. They are no longer regulating the situation, they are part of it. I think this could happen in industry. Instead of regulating the industry, the regulatory agent starts representing the interests of that industry.

Mr. Speaker, we now have a good system for managing the telecommunications industry in our country, which is a monopolistic industry, and why should we change it? If the system works, why change the system?

The third point I want to look at is the matter of profits and income generated by Teleglobe Canada. Mr. Speaker, it is common knowledge that Teleglobe is a profitable operation that is earning income every year. So why sell the corporation and transfer it from the public to the private sector when it is making a profit? The Government has said it will use the profits of this sale to reduce the deficit. But, Mr. Speaker, if we continue to own Teleglobe Canada we can expect to make a profit every year. The company can contribute to put money in the public treasury for years to come. It is difficult to understand why the Government would want to sell a successful company. I have the impression that this Government is a little bit ashamed that a public sector company should be so profitable. The philosophy of this Government is that the private market is the most efficient vehicle to do just about everything, and it has very little respect for Crown corporations. They often say that a Crown corporation simply cannot operate the way a private company does.

Mr. Speaker, I am forced to conclude that a successful Crown corporation is an embarrassment to this Government. It would rather not have Canadians look at this example as evidence that indeed it is possible to have public sector companies which are doing well. It is a dangerous notion because the Conservative Party has made an about turn. Traditionally the Conservative Party had always been oriented towards a mixed economy. Many of our public sector companies were set up by the Conservative Party, CPR for instance, and I think that the CBC was also created by a Conservative Government. In the past, Conservative Governments have used public instruments, public companies that is, to implement public policies. But now, today, this Government wants to abandon the Conservative Party tradition. It wants to follow a new strategy, it wants to imitate, it wants to be like the Republican Party of the United States.

The Prime Minister seems to have been unduly impressed by the President of the United States. He seems to look up to Mr. Reagan as a brother, as a big brother.

Mr. McCurdy: A father.

Mr. Keeper: As a father. My friend is saying that our Prime Minister sees the President of the United States as a father, somebody who points to the right direction. But the new direction of the Conservative Party is the American direction. It is a republican direction, a direction which indicates that only the private market can be efficient, only the private market can guarantee economic development. They are abandoning the true tradition of the Conservative Party in this country. Sir John A. Macdonald would not endorse such a policy. John Diefenbaker would not endorse such a policy. A pity, because there is room in this country for a genuine Conservative Party, for an authentic conservative policy. But I think the present Government has given up on that approach.

In short, Mr. Speaker, all I am saying is that the sale of Teleglobe Canada is debatable, it is not a good decision. There are at least three reasons why this is not a good decision. First of all, we have a public interest in telecommunications which we want to maintain. There are public policy reasons for maintaining Teleglobe as a public corporation. The second reason is simply that the best way to manage a monopolistic industry is to own it instead of using a regulatory mechanism. Finally, why sell a Crown corporation that is a success? Why not maintain our commitment to a mixed economy in this country? Why adopt the American approach, the Reaganomics approach? Why abandon this country's tradition, and why has the Progressive Conservative Party abandoned its own traditions?

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, I would like to start with some comments and a question for my hon. friend. First, my comments.

In 1985, Teleglobe paid $108 million in dividends to the Canadian Government and another $80 million in 1986. Under the terms of sale, the Canadian Government will receive another $102 million. In addition, at the end of this year it will receive another $18 million, totalling $308 million over these three years.

Mr. Speaker, the new owner, Memotec, will have a monopoly during the next five years. This means that a company that has been paying $308 million worth of dividends during three years . . . they pay $488 million, they get a five-year monopoly which means ample time to get back their investment plus dividends, and, Mr. Speaker, I wonder, and that is what I would like to ask my hon. friend, how—I can't understand it. I cannot understand this from a Conservative Government that in 1984 said it was going to manage this country like the responsible head of a family, like a businessman. A businessman does not sell a profitable enterprise. And if he does decide to sell, he makes sure the price is right. In this case, if we average $488 million over a five-year period as a monopoly, we are talking about a fire sale.

I would like to ask my hon. friend whether he would care to comment, and whether he has found the real reason why the Conservative Government sold a corporation that is so profitable and could have helped reduce the deficit and the national debt on an annual basis.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, it is hard to explain why the Government is selling Teleglobe Canada. Today, the corporation is making a profit for Canadians. Why does the Government want to give up a corporation that is functioning and making a profit? Is he giving a present to someone in the private sector? Why sell this corporation at such a low price? Why, after selling the corporation at a low price, were they given the additional advantage of a five-year monopoly?

It is really hard to understand why the Government wants to sell Teleglobe Canada today.

Today, all Canadians, all 25 million of them, benefit from the services of Teleglobe, and not just the services but also the income generated by this corporation. This is a time when Canadians need this income because they don't want rate increases. But why did the Government decide to sell this company and give it to private interests, to a small group of people? Why make a decision which will benefit only a small group of people, at a time when everybody benefits from it? It is difficult to understand, Mr. Speaker. I would not dare suggest that the Governement simply wants this deal to benefit its friends. I realize that people have the impression that this is the way the Government operates, that it puts the interests of its friends ahead of those of the Canadien public.

Mr. McCurdy: I am not sure that my colleague has mentioned Canada's international responsibilities in connection with international communications issues, INTELSAT, and the conflict of interest for the new Teleglobe when there is an American international service which ignores the cross-subsidization system. Comments, please?

Mr. Keeper: In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, as a private company Teleglobe Canada will indeed have conflicting interests—its own interests as a company which is profit-oriented, and then the policies of the Canadian Government or the needs of the Canadian public, particulary so in a situation where it should compete with an American company which cannot be expected to promote public policy since its only concern is to follow the dictates of the market and show a profit.

Mr. Speaker, I think it will be very difficult for Teleglobe Canada to represent Canadian public interests and maintain world-wide communications when pressure will be brought to bear on the company to serve only those sectors where it stands to make the greatest profits. I think there will be a conflict of interests between the need to provide services and the need to make a profit.

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell).

Mr. Attewell: Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 9(4)(a) I wish to state that the House continue to sit beyond the ordinary hour of daily adjournment for the purpose of considering second reading stage of Bill C-38—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I wish to advise the Hon. Member that he cannot move such a motion during the time allotted for questions and comments. There is still a minute-and-a-half left in that time.

The Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) on a question or comment.

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the question I was asking my colleague, he too cannot imagine why the Government would want to sell Teleglobe, such a profitable company. I too was trying to find a reason.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would remind the Hon. Member that he has one minute left on questions and comments when the Orders of the Day are resumed.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

THE JUDICIARY

ADVISABILITY OF ESTABLISHING PROCESS FOR SCRUTINY OF FEDERAL JUDICIAL APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East) moved:

The Judiciary

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of undertaking negotiations with the provincial Governments to establish a process for the parliamentary scrutiny of federal judicial appointments made under Section 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867, in order to ensure that in making these appointments, the Government is guided by the highest standards of conduct.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to move the motion with a view to establishing a system and process of parliamentary scrutiny for all federal judicial appointments. The purpose of that is to reinforce public trust that all judicial appointments are of the highest calibre, and that in making those appointments, the Government is guided by the highest standards of conduct.

During the 1984 election campaign, the appointment of lawyers to the bench was a major issue. In particular, the former Prime Minister Trudeau, before he handed over power, entered into an agreement with the then Prime Minister, Mr. Turner, which called for a number of people to be appointed to various positions, including a number of people who were to be appointed to the bench. At that time, the then Prime Minister, Mr. Turner, who is now the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra, made those judicial appointments. In doing so, he touched off a controversy that is still going on.

I draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, as recently as last month the appointment to the Court of Appeal of the Province of Manitoba made in the person of the former Premier of the Province of Manitoba, Sterling Lyons. There was a controversy around that appointment and the method of that appointment. The law union of Ontario had some comments on that, and I will be referring to those comments later in my remarks.

As a result of the concerns that were raised during the election campaign, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made a statement in the House on September 5, 1985. In that statement he dealt with a package of reforms that included an experimental program for the parliamentary scrutiny of Governor in Council appointments. At that time the question of judicial appointments was excluded from that parliamentary scrutiny. At that time the Prime Minister indicated that the Minister of Justice had the question of judicial appointments under active review. Unfortunately, that review is apparently still going on, and as yet we have not heard the results.

The motion that I put before the House today is in the hope that the Government will move on this, complete the review, and take some action here.

I do not wish to leave the impression that I am in any way questioning the competence of our judiciary or the high calibre of our judges. I do believe that we have a judiciary of a very high calibre in this country and that we are well served. At the same time, I share the concerns that were expressed in 1984 by the Chief Justice when he said that the public is entitled to be reassured that our judges are appointed on the basis of merit and legal excellence alone.

I also share the concerns expressed by the Canadian Bar Association about the independence of the judiciary in their report of August, 1985, where they indicated that the existence of political influence in judicial appointments could undermine public confidence in the judicial system. That is what I am trying to accomplish with this motion. I am trying to make sure that public confidence in the judicial system is not undermined, but is in fact bolstered by a new system of appointments.

You are aware, Mr. Speaker, as are Members of the House, that the Government has a number of different ways of making federal judicial appointments. There are five different statutory federal courts: the Federal Court, the Northwest Territories Court, the Yukon Court, the Tax Court, and the Supreme Court of Canada. In addition to that there are appointments made under Section 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867. Those are appointments that are made by the Governor General to the superior, district, and county courts in each province, except the courts of probate in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. As I indicated, those appointments are made under Section 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867.

In practice the process that is followed at the present time calls for the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) to recommend to the Governor in Council via the Cabinet persons who are to be considered for judicial appointments. Of course, the appointment of a Chief Justice rests with the Prime Minister. In practice, in following that process, the Minister of Justice does not appoint someone off the top of his head. There are people in his Department, in fact in the office of the special adviser to the Minister of Justice, who gather suggestions from across the country on these judicial appointments. The suggestions may come from you, Mr. Speaker, they may come from me, or from anyone in Canada or abroad, for that matter, as to who might be appointed as a judge by the Governor in Council.

After those suggestions have been vetted and a tentative choice has been made, the candidate's name is normally submitted to the National Committee of the Judiciary of the Canadian Bar Association to receive their opinion and evaluation. Normally, that committee comes back with an opinion that the suggested candidate is either well qualified, or not sufficiently qualified.

During the last federal election campaign there were two or three appointments made to the bench, the ones that touched off the controversy, where there was no request made to the Canadian Bar Association for its input. That is what put the fat in the fire and caused the public concern to be raised about whether the process was one which ensured that the best individuals were appointed to the bench, or whether the process in place is one that is being manipulated in some way.

Over the years there have been a number of different proposals for reform. There was one made by the Tremblay Commission in 1956. There was another made at the Constitutional Conference in 1971. There were further proposals made in 1978 and 1979. The Canadian Bar Association made recommendations in 1985. Quebec made some changes to their procedure in 1978.

However, the Americans have a process which is most interesting, that is, a process whereby a committee of the Senate vets the recommendations made by the President of the United States. In scrutinizing the suggested appointments, that committee can recommend for or against the appointment, or it can delay the matter. It is this type of review that I am suggesting we should be undertaking in this country. That review would be open to all Members of Parliament and all members of the public, but it is not the kind of review the Department of Justice, or probably the Minister of Justice, would like to see. I think we will hear from some government supporters today who will oppose this idea because they do not think it is the way to go.

As well, it is not the kind of procedure the Bar Association would like to see established, but it is a procedure which would be open to the public and would give us a solution, at long last, to one of the major concerns of Canadians in the last election campaign. It would reinforce public trust that all judicial appointments are of the highest calibre and that in making those appointments the Government is guided by the highest standard of conduct.

For those reasons I urge the House to adopt the motion and to put in place a process for a new method of parliamentary scrutiny of judicial appointments.

[Translation]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this afternoon's debate on motion M-43 introduced in the House by the Hon. Member for Scarborough East.

[English]

I listened with great attention to the Hon. Member for Scarborough West—

Mr. Redway: I am the Hon. Member for York East.

Mr. Boudria: I apologize to the Hon. Member for mixing up the ridings. As Mr. Speaker knows, some Members mix up the name of my riding as well, particularly when they forget one of its three names. I am sure that you have heard it before, Mr. Speaker.

Nevertheless, the Hon. Member brings before the House a motion which I certainly support and have advocated in the past. I am not sure whether I agreed entirely with him when he referred to the cause of the controversy in the last election campaign. Some of the controversy over Order in Council appointments in the last election was caused by a certain gentleman who now represents the riding of Manicouagan. On May 24, 1983, the particular fellow was quoted in The Globe and Mail of Toronto as saying the following:

> There'll be jobs for Liberals and NDPs too, after I've been Prime Minister for 15 years and I can't find a living breathing Tory in the country.

On June 25, 1984, as reported in The Ottawa Citizen, the Leader of the Conservative Party said that his Government will be determined to reduce the partisan political appointments that have characterized the previous administration.

On July 9, 1984, the same fellow said:

I commit myself to set up criteria for quality which will impress the Canadian people. I think what took place is completely unacceptable in an open democratic society. We are going to reform this instrument in our national life.

Those were the comments of the Leader of the Conservative Party at a press conference on July 9, 1984.

On July 16, 1984, the same fellow said that the Liberal appointments were "a fraud, a deceit and a sham", according to Canadian Press. Again on July 16 he said that Conservative appointments would represent the highest quality of people. Also on the same date he said:

The method of making appointments could be corrected by dramatic measures . . . We are going to bring in a brand new dimension to them of objectivity and representation and fairness for all Canadians.

Those were his comments, again according to the Canadian Press. During the same month he made comments concerning the appointment of Mr. Mackasey. I am not sure it would be parliamentary for me to raise them on the floor of the House, so I shall not.

On July 19, 1984 he promised that if he became Prime Minister he would "never resort to this kind of attitude". He spoke a lot about the issue, and on July 20 he said that the "overriding criteria will be competence and a willingness to serve Canada".

Need I remind the House of his July 25 statement on nation-wide television. He pointed his finger and said:

The least you should do is apologize for having made these horrible appointments.

Those were comments of the Conservative Leader.

I have in my possession a document entitled "The Black Paper on Tory Patronage". It lists no less than 1,200 political appointments of all varieties during the first eight months or so that the Government was in office.

As much as I agree with the Hon. Member for York—East that there is certainly a need to change the system, the reason we must change it is a very clear one. It is that the Leader of the Conservative Party made it such an issue in the last election campaign and was incapable of living with the solemn promise he made to the people of Canada on many occasions.

Referring to the Order in Council review process as proposed by the Hon. Member for York—East, he is suggesting that we have a system which would resemble the present system of reviewing other Order in Council appointments. By and large I think the system has worked well over the last year or so. It has provided Members of Parliament with an opportunity to air a grievance when there is a controversial Order in Council appointment. Most appointments are completely overlooked by Members. They look at the names and the names do not mean anything to them, or they inquire in various areas and find out that the individual is qualified, and they do not proceed any further.

On the other hand, there are the "Dalton Camp" variety of appointments which lead to controversy and to some questioning in committee. That is healthy as well because it at least gives parliamentarians on all sides of the House an opportunity to raise the grievance at committee. That is good for two reasons—first, it is good accountability, second, it gives the Government an opportunity for second thought. Whereas the Government may proceed with a controversial appointment, if it knows just before doing so that it will be subject to scrutiny by the Order in Council appointment process, perhaps it would have a second look at it and say, "We had better not bring this before the parliamentary committee because it will raise a considerable amount of attention; let us not appoint this controversial individual" or "this less than totally qualified individual", as the case may be.

For that reason alone I believe the quality of Order in Council appointments is bound to improve. I think it has improved over the last year in which the Order in Council process has existed. As the Hon. Member for York—East said, it does not exist for the judiciary and for other areas as well.

In closing I should like to make a few comments about veto power for the parliamentary committee. I do not think the committee needs veto power in the case of judiciary appointments. I suppose it could be tried for some processes, but I do not think this would be a good place in which to try it. The fact that Parliament would have a method of raising a grievance would be good. However, there are some 60 or 64 Order in Council appointments which deal directly with the House where a parliamentary committee should have veto power. Those concern the appointment of the Chief Electoral Officer, the Clerk of the House of Commons, the Official Languages Commissioner, and so on. The report of the McGrath Commission recommended that there be a veto process for those individuals. I believe that would be healthy. We could start there. Depending on how it works—and presumably it would be less partisan because we are dealing with officers who report to the Speaker of the House—we could decide later about expanding it elsewhere if it were necessary and desirable. However, it would be premature to say that it would be necessary at this point in the case of judicial appointments.

Having said that, however, I whole-heartedly agree with the motion of the Hon. Member for York—East. Indeed it is a valid concern to be raised. As the Hon. Member will know, I have raised the issue, not particularly as it relates to the appointment of judges but with regard to appointments generally, in the House of Commons on several occasions.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the subject raised today by the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) has been broached a number of times before in the House. Clearly, the Prime Minister of Canada made some promises to the Canadian people, and if the House were to adopt the motion as presented by the Hon. Member for York East, the Government would perhaps have a chance to make good on one of those promises. I need hardly add there are still a number of other promises on which the Government has yet to deliver the goods, but we could perhaps discuss that at some other time. For the time being, I would like to say that as far as I am concerned, the motion by the Hon. Member for York East is one that deserves the support of the whole House.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the motion proposed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway), and to commend him for bringing this important issue before the House. I hope that, at the conclusion of the hour which is allotted to these proceedings today, Members of this House will see fit to adopt the motion in question. I am not holding my breath, but I believe this is a motion which is reasonable and worthy of support by the House.

I note as well that the Hon. Member for York East is merely suggesting in that time-worn manner which is so appropriate that the Government should consider the advisability of undertaking negotiations. This does not bind the Government in any way. It just urges the Government to look seriously at this suggestion which I believe is entirely appropriate.

I must say as well that I was rather amused to hear the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) attack the Tory Government for its excesses of patronage. I would suggest that Liberals have no lessons to give in this Parliament or to the people of Canada when it comes to patronage, absolutely no lessons whatever. I recall very well the time about two months before the last election when the now Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) engaged in a great orgy of patronage when every living, breathing Liberal Member of Parliament who was not seeking re-election was appointed to some hog-marketing board, the Canadian Wheat Tribunal or the Immigration Appeal Board. There was an appointment for everybody. Jobs for the boys and girls, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Boudria: What about Ian Deans?

Mr. Robinson: It was absolutely shameless. When the Liberal Member stands up and lambastes the Conservatives for their excesses of patronage, I would very gently remind him that one of the reasons his Government was turfed out of office was that Canadians got sick and tired of the Liberals' excesses of patronage.

With respect to the proposal before the House, I can think of no body which is more important and essential in terms of the shaping of many of the most fundamental values and aspirations of our country then the highest courts of the land, the courts of appeal and the Supreme Court of Canada. We have as a Parliament adopted a Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The final word with respect to the interpretation of that fundamental document rests not in our hands as elected Members, but rather in the hands of those men and women who are appointed under Section 96 of the Constitution Act to federal judicial appointments. It is up to those men and women to determine, for example, what is or is not demonstrably justifiable in a free and democratic society under Section 1 of the Charter.

What are the limits that we as a society are prepared to accept on fundamental rights and freedoms? At the present time these judicial appointments, these appointments to the highest courts of the land, are made solely by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in the case of the Supreme Court of Canada and solely by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) in the case of others. In some cases, these appointments are made following consultations with the Attorney General of the province in question. In other cases, even the minimal courtesy of consultation with the Attorney General of the day is ignored. I would remind you, Mr. Speaker, of the recent appointment of Sterling Rufus Lyon, former Premier of the Province of Manitoba, to the Manitoba Court of Appeal. Mr. Lyon was appointed to that very important position in the federal judiciary without any consultation whatever by the federal Minister of Justice with his provincial counterpart, the Attorney General of the Province of Manitoba. That kind of arrogance and insensitivity in an area as fundamental as this is surely unacceptable. That total lack of consultation, that appointment of a Tory crony, would not be possible if the motion of the Hon. Member for York East were adopted.

We have had some experience in this Parliament with the parliamentary review process into federal appointments. As a member of the Standing Committee on Human Rights I participated in a process, which admittedly was a flawed process, an engineered process, but nevertheless gave us the opportunity to ask a few questions of appointees who appeared to have been appointed solely on the basis of partisan political connections to the Government of the day. What is interesting is that one individual knew that he would have to undergo this kind of scrutiny and it was sufficient to cause him to withdraw his name as a member of that tribunal. That is of considerable significance and another reason for supporting the motion of the Member for York East.

I am reminded of the attempts of former President Richard Nixon in the United States to appoint to the highest court of the land in the U.S., the United States Supreme Court, individuals who were clearly unqualified. Had it not been for the fact that the Senate of the United States in its judiciary committee said no to the appointments, those individuals would be sitting on that court possibly still today, patently unqualified.

I mention the Supreme Court of Canada and the vital importance of an opportunity for parliamentary review of appointees to this highest court in the land. I do this in view of the fact that there is a vacancy at the Supreme Court of Canada level due to the tragic death of former Justice Julien Chouinard, and I urge the Government to appoint a woman. There are a number of qualified outstanding jurists who would fill this vacancy at the Supreme Court of Canada with distinction. I think of people such as Madam Justice Claire L'Heureux-Dubé of the Quebec Court of Appeal. There are a number of others. We must send out a message that equality in Canada is a reality at all levels, including the highest court in the land.

Because I know that some of my colleagues wish to comment and support this resolution as well, I want to close by commending the Hon. Member for York East for bringing this important question before the House of Commons today and to urge all Members to support it, particularly in recognition of the fact that it merely calls upon the Government to consider the advisability of undertaking negotiations. These judges are making decisions that will shape the future of this land for decades to come. It is essential that we as Members of Parliament, in the highest court of the land play a role in ensuring that we know just who the men and women are who are occupying these vital positions.

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, like those who have spoken previously, I want to say a few words on behalf of this motion which, I believe, is not only in the best interests of the people but is an extension of a principle of accountability that has already been established in this Parliament under the leadership of this Government. We have had our first experience of parliamentary review of major appointments. This has been the first Parliament with a Government prepared to risk a public review of its nominations and appointments. There is more accountability under this Government than the people of Canada have ever known before.

The motion before us recommends to the Government and the House that we take a major step forward. I certainly commend the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) for the leadership that he has characteristically shown in putting before us this initiative, which I hope will receive the support of the House and will lead to the action the Hon. Member anticipates.

I support the motion because of the authority and scope the judiciary has come to gain in recent times. Members of the judiciary have always enjoyed great authority and power, but because of the very nature and development of the law, they are now in a position which is unparalleled and unprecedented. They are now not only interpreting and applying laws but, at various levels, they are making laws because their interpretations are the binding authority by which laws will be implemented in, and applied to, society. It is surely reasonable and essential that appointments to positions of that magnitude have the approval and support of the elected representatives of the people of Canada.

The quality of our judiciary has certainly come a long way. I can recall beginning my working life as a newspaper reporter who spent part of his time covering police court hearings, as they were then called. I remember one magistrate whose sole professional qualification for being on the Bench was his years as a retail merchant. It was a patronage appointment made by a previous Liberal Government in Ontario. However, the partisan nature of the appointment is not the crucial thing, however much we may want to dwell on partisanship from one point of view or another. The important thing was that it was then possible for a person to occupy a position on the Bench without professional qualifications.

I doubt that is possible today, and rightly so. However, we want to see that not only professional qualifications are demanded but that we be satisfied as a Parliament that the person receiving a judicial appointment, certainly at the highest levels, will be one whose professional qualifications are superior, who has views on society compatible with those of the majority of Canadians, and who can interpret the law in a way appropriate to the traditions of Canada and the thinking of the majority of Canadians today.

I do not want to take up the full time allotted to me because I know there are other Hon. Members who wish to have a say on this important and significant motion. However, I would point out very briefly that an argument could be made against this motion that, contrary to the intention of the mover, it would discourage some people from being willing to assume high judicial office because they would then have to face, terror of terrors, Members of Parliament.

I find it extraordinary to think that any other official appointed to any other post of authority under this Government would be subject to parliamentary scrutiny except one kind of official, namely, a member of the judiciary. This, I submit, without any slight to members of the judiciary, is surely to build an unnatural and indefensible wall around the judiciary. If it was justified at any time in the past, it is not so now because of the very nature of our society as an increasingly open society and because of the very nature and scope of the law today applied to more and more instances and experiences of life. It is therefore mandatory that the people who are prepared to take this office are also prepared to be examined for it, to explain themselves and to justify their views. I think that would be far better than having persons appointed to the Bench now and then having their reputations impugned by Members of Parliament in certain situations without their having the opportunity to reply to charges or insinuations that Hon. Members might make.

I believe that rather than discouraging persons who would be qualified and suitable and indeed eminent members of the Bench, this motion will assert that anyone who is prepared to mount the Bench, to interpret the law and to apply the law to society is one who is prepared to face the representatives of the people over whom the judge will preside as a member of the judiciary. That person will put his or her views to the test and will be all the more effective a judge as a result.

I am very glad the Hon. Member for York East has brought this motion to the House. I along with other Hon. Members certainly hope that it will come to a vote and that it will be an affirmative one.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak to the subject of this motion. I am sorry, and it is probably my own fault, that I had only a few moments to think about it. However, I had no trouble reaching a decision. I can say that I am definitely opposed to the motion and that my objections concern two major aspects.

[English]

As I indicated, there are two features of this resolution, one which is at the heart of it and one which is peripheral, that are objectionable to me. I think I ought to talk about each of them briefly.

First, I would like to deal with the feature in the preamble of consulting with provincial Governments, that is to say, that in every federal judicial appointment, there should be some consultation with the provincial Governments. I do not think it is a bad idea—

Mr. Redway: You have to be careful to understand it. A constitutional amendment is required to Section 96 of the Act. It is not a question of consulting about the appointments; it is a question of consulting about a change of law to change the procedure.

Mr. Kaplan: I am glad to have heard that interjection. The mover of the motion is reminding me that the implementation of this resolution would call for some constitutional machinery. That is not why I object to it. I do not object to the idea of constitutional machinery. I do wonder why a one-way street should be established from provincial capitals to the national capital.

Provinces appoint a number of people to judicial offices within each province. If the responsibility for the system of justice in Canada is shared in that way, why is it that there are people who sit in the federal Parliament who feel that provincial Governments should have some input into the federal appointment process while being silent on the idea that the federal Government should have some—

Mr. Redway: Read the rest of the resolution, Bob.

Mr. Kaplan: I think I would like to finish and then perhaps the Hon. Member will be able to write a letter to the editor about my remarks.

If provincial Governments are to be involved in the process of federal appointments, I would argue that an equal claim could be made that there ought to be some federal consultation in relation to the appointment of provincial judges. I appreciate the point made by the Hon. Member. He wants to establish a procedure for the review of federal appointments, and I would like to make the point that if provincial consultation is necessary to establish it and the provinces in that eventuality—

Mr. Redway: Part of it created by your Government.

• (1740)

Mr. Kaplan: Could I have the opportunity to make my remarks without interruption?

Mr. Keeper: No.

Mr. Kaplan: I would object to the provinces finding their way into the appointment process unless there was some reciprocity.

Let me turn to the central point, that there ought to be parliamentary scrutiny of federal judicial appointments made under Section 93 of the Constitution Act. I want to found my remarks on the report of the Canadian Bar Association committee on the appointment of judges in Canada issued on August 20, 1985, and very well received. The report deals with the question of parliamentary scrutiny and rejects it, as the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) may know. The report says that Parliament should not play a role in the selection or appointment of federal judges. It is neither necessary nor desirable for the legislative branch to be involved. It is contrary to the Canadian tradition for the appointment of judges to be subjected to a congressional-type process of public examination and review.

Those who have spoken before me in this debate have referred to the American experience. However, the American Constitution is fundamentally different from ours. The executive in this country derives its legitimacy from the support of the House of Commons. The executive in the U.S. derives its legitimacy from the fact it is directly elected by the people. The same applies to the U.S. Congress. In that sense Congress can claim an independent responsibility for the judiciary. The executive nominates, but in a system of checks and balances Congress has some role to play in the appointment of judges. In our system the executive controls the House of Commons. If it did not, it would not be able to hold on to power and make appointments. Therefore the idea that the American experience is somehow irrelevant to us is totally inappropriate. It is a different kind of system.

I would also assert that nothing that has happened in the appointment of Canadian judges, over recent history in any event, justifies parliamentary scrutiny. People can make the point, as some have done, that a bad Government might make bad appointments and the House of Commons might be able to find enough gumption or independence to do something about it despite the fact that the majority is controlled by Cabinet. However, I do not think it is the nature of the Opposition in this House to play a constructive role, nor does it have a constitutional responsibility for the appointment of judges, a system which, according to the Canadian Bar Association and I think according to most Canadians, has been working quite well and serving the national interest quite well. In saying that I do not want to be taken as having said that the system for appointing judges is perfect. I just have to look at the Canadian Bar Association report, because it does not just endorse what we do now, it recommends a number of changes designed to enhance the appearance of independence, the process, and the amount of public involvement in the process.

I want to deal now with one of the recommendations in this report with which I do not agree. I want to return to the point made from the floor by the Hon. Member for York East. I do not know if I have his ear, but in this report a recommendation is made that provincial attorneys-general ought to be consulted in the federal appointment process. I took it from the first few lines of the resolution that provincial Governments would participate. My friend is making the point that the role of provincial Governments in his resolution is only to change the Constitution and not deal with the appointment of judges. However, this report recommends that attorneys-general be given a role in the process of appointing federal judges.

I want to ask the same question in that context that I asked in connection with his resolution. If provincial attorneys-general are to be given a role in the federal appointment process, and I oppose that, then the federal Government should be given a role in the provincial appointment process. After all, the justice field is shared between the federal and provincial Governments and this one-way street suggestion made by the CBA overlooks the fact that the federal Government has a great interest in the competence and qualifications of all judges in the system. The federal Government relies on provincial Governments because that is the way the Constitution is designed. The provincial Governments, for their part, have to rely on the federal Government for the way in which federal appointments are made and the quality of the people appointed. If I were to be engaged in a change which would bring a provincial perspective to the federal appointment process I would want to see it move the other way as well. However, as I say, I have reservations about both of them.

On the whole I do not think the history of federal appointments has shown any justification for scrutiny by Parliament. If parliamentary scrutiny is to be applied to judicial appointments it will have the effect of politicizing them in a way they have not been to date because of the role the Opposition plays in this House. That role, I would argue, unlike the U.S. system, is to politicize and object. It is not similar to the role of the U.S. Congress in making the American system work.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate this evening on Motion No. 43 presented by the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway), which concerns the appointment of judges. Mr. Speaker, to help Canadians understand what the debate is about this evening, perhaps I may explain that the Hon. Member for York East would like us to start negotiations with the provincial Governments in order to establish a process for the parliamentary scrutiny of federal judicial appointments.

Mr. Speaker, although I agree with the substance of the motion, I must object to it, unfortunately, and I have two specific reasons for doing so.

First of all, the Hon. Member is suggesting that we relinquish federal authority to appoint judges to the provincial governments. This may be going a little too far, because today, when such appointments are made, there is already a certain amount of consultation that goes on with the provinces, but I think we should be very careful how we consider any proposal to undertake negotiations with the provincial governments with respect to appointments.

My second point, Mr. Speaker, which may be rather interesting, is the question of parliamentary committees. I may remind my hon. friend that not long ago at the caucus meeting in Laval about two weeks ago, Quebec Members made a proposal in this respect which I think deserves our attention and which is substantially similar to what is being suggested by the Hon. Member for York East who would like to see something different in the procedure for judicial appointments.

Mr. Speaker, since we are talking about the appointment of judges, why could we not study the proposition of the Quebec caucus to the effect that a selection process be put in place, a kind of board for these appointments which could examine the qualifications of people likely to be appointed to the bench? For example, Mr. Speaker, this board could be made up of people like the chief justice of the court involved, where the new judge is to be appointed, a Bar representative, an official designated by the Government, and probably somebody to represent the government of the province where the whole thing is taking place. The board could hold hearings for all individuals duly qualified for and interested in an appointment, then it would prepare a list of applicants with the required qualifications to be appointed to the bench and present this list to the Government which would select the appointee.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to remind you that this process—exactly as I just described it—this process of a committee or a group including the various categories of people mentioned has now been in existence in Quebec for about ten years, and every time an appointment has been announced there have been negative comments concerning the individual appointed to the bench.

I think that my colleague and I agree on the principle, we differ only on the way to go about it. I doubt whether a parliamentary committee would really be the best way to make these appointments to the bench. I believe that individuals who are already in this field—Bar members would qualify for this, I think—would be in an ideal position to assess the qualifications of people applying for judgeship, just as much as the chief justice of the court involved, and the federal or provincial governments could appoint a representative who would sit on this appointment board.

Mr. Speaker, this is the position that I wanted to outline in this House, but I still want to congratulate the Hon. Member for his interest in the issue of judiciary appointments and add that I also believe that we should find another method for making these appointments.

[English]

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, my friend, the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway), moved:

That the Government should consider the advisability of undertaking negotiations with the provincial Governments to establish a process for the parliamentary scrutiny of federal judicial appointments made under section 96 of the Constitution Act, 1987, in order to ensure that in making these appointments, the Government is guided by the highest standards of conduct.

No one can disagree with the view that, in order to maintain the public trust with respect to judicial appointments, those appointments must be of the highest calibre. There also is no disagreement that in making those appointments the Government must be guided by the highest standards of conduct. No previous Government has taken as many steps as the present one to improve the practice of consultation with the provinces, the Bench and the Bar. Furthermore, as the Hon. Member knows, the constitutional negotiations currently under way by the Province of Quebec include the question of that province's role in the appointment of the three judges from Quebec who were required to serve on the Supreme Court of Canada.

Referring specifically to the motion presently before the House, it is my belief that it would have exactly the opposite effect to that intended by the Hon. Member for York East. By subjecting prospective judicial appointees to the scrutiny of the parliamentary committee comprised of political partisans, the public trust in the calibre of appointments could conceivably diminish. While it cannot be predicted with any certainty in advance, review by a parliamentary committee may well reduce the quality of candidates willing to accept an appointment. Furthermore, there is a risk that anything a prospective appointee says before that committee will be interpreted by some group or another as raising a reasonable apprehension of bias with respect to the judicial proceedings over which that appointee subsequently presides.

Another shortcoming of this motion is that it would send the wrong signal to the provinces with respect to their own appointment process involving provincial court judges. The federal Government is, quite appropriately in my view, looked upon for leadership in matters of this nature. By adopting this Bill we would be telling the provinces that they, too, should screen prospective judicial appointees in this manner. I do not think we should do that. To date not one province or provincial official has advocated vetting judicial candidates through a parliamentary committee. Nor, for that matter, has any leading member of the Bar advocated such an approach. In fact, it was expressly rejected in 1985 by the report of the Canadian Bar Association committee on the appointment of judges in Canada and, subsequently, by the Canadian Association of Law Teachers.

I really do commend my colleague from York East for his consideration and his upholding of the way the Government and any Government makes appointments, be they judicial or otherwise. I feel very strongly that because the report of the Canadian Bar Association on the appointment of judges in Canada rejected such a recommendation, we must take a very long look at this.

This motion complements my friend's Private Member's Bill, Bill C-259, which he tabled about one year ago which failed to win the support of this House. That Bill called for the parliamentary scrutiny of judges appointed to the so-called Section 101 courts. I did not support Bill C-259 when it was tabled, and my views with respect to parliamentary screening of judges have not changed. I feel very strongly that competence comes first. Competence must always come first in appointments, and the public must have trust in the Government with respect to judicial appointments which must be of the highest calibre.

There is no disagreement that, in making those appointments, the Government must be guided by the highest standards of conduct. Our courts and the people appointed to the judicial boards must be of the highest standard possible. I know that the people of the Government, as well as all the people of Canada, would certainly demand and expect to have competence come first. In that regard, Mr. Speaker, I did not support Bill C-259 when it was tabled and, with respect to parliamentary screening of judges, I have not changed my views.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

EMPLOYMENT—WINNIPEG CANADA PACKERS PLANT LAY-OFFS—RETRAINING OF WORKERS. (B) REQUEST THAT DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER HELP SITUATION IN WINNIPEG.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the packing industry for the killing and processing of meat products has played an important role in the economic well-being of the City of Winnipeg and the Province of Manitoba for many years. It is not surprising that I asked a question about the possible demise of the Canada Packers plant and the very serious effects that this would have on the City of Winnipeg and the Province of Manitoba.

Some years ago, Swift Canadian, which had employed hundreds of workers in their packing plant in Winnipeg, closed down and left workers unemployed. Now we are facing the lay-off of 450 workers, many of whom have worked for Canada Packers for many years. This lay-off will take place in April of this year.

There is a distinct possibility that another 550 workers employed by Canada Packers will lose their jobs, as the company is considering very seriously the closing of its whole packing plant in the City of Winnipeg.

How did this happen? In 1986, the federal Government made an initial grant of $865,000 to facilitate the establishment of a hog killing and processing plant in Neepawa. That plant opened in September. When the Government made the announcement that it would make this grant available so that a plant which could kill and process hogs could be established in Neepawa, the union representing workers in Winnipeg warned the Government of the dire consequences of that action. They pointed out that there was very little increase in the number of hogs that are processed in the Province of Manitoba and predicted that if the plant opened in Neepawa it would have very serious adverse effects on the Canada Packers plant in Winnipeg.

In December, 1986, unfortunately the warnings of the union were proven correct. Canada Packers announced the closure of its beef kill and processing operation at its Winnipeg plant. As I already mentioned, 450 workers will lose their jobs in April.

The existing plant in Winnipeg is about 50 years old. The company also announced the real possibility of closing its entire Winnipeg plant in 1988, unless it decides to build a new modern processing plant. The company made it clear that it would not proceed with the building of a new plant without financial assistance from the federal and provincial Governments.

Most of the workers who will be laid off in April, and the rest of the 1000 workers who would lose their jobs if the whole plant closes, have worked for that company for many years. It will be very difficult for many of them to find other work.

I call on the federal Government to act in co-operation with the company and the provincial Government to assist in financing the building of a new Canada Packers plant in Winnipeg.

Discussions are also taking place about expanding the Burns plant in Winnipeg, which would give work to 200 more workers. If the Government is considering financial assistance to that plant, I urge it to require the Burns company plant to give first opportunity for employment in the expanded plant to workers who have been or may be laid off by Canada Packers, as one of the conditions for receiving the grant.

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) I would like to elaborate on the action being taken to help the workers who are to be laid off from the Canada Packers plant in Winnipeg.

First, the Minister wants to underline that he shares the concerns of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) with respect to the future of these workers. Like him, the Minister believes that every effort must be made to help these workers through the difficult adjustment they face. The Minister also agrees that the best results will be achieved if the company, the employees, the federal Government and the provincial Government work together to put in place the assistance the workers need.

To this end, intensive discussions took place throughout January between Employment and Immigration Commission officials, company and union representatives, as well as with senior officials of both the provincial Department of Labour and the Department of Employment Services and Economic Security.

On behalf of the Minister I am pleased to be able to report that agreement has just been reached with all parties to begin work immediately on a joint adjustment action plan. The federal Government will participate through the Commission's Industrial Adjustment Service, and the Province of Manitoba will do so through its Employment Adjustment and Technological Change Program, a Manitoba jobs fund initiative.

Activity will be carried out by two committees. One, composed of company and union representatives, will address the needs of the 400 hourly-rated workers; the other, composed of company and non-union employees, will address the needs of the 75 salaried workers.

Committee costs will be shared equally by the company, the province and the federal Government. Both committees will be chaired by the same independent chairperson to be chosen by the committee members themselves. The Commission and the Province of Manitoba have each identified representatives to assist and advise the committees. The types of assistance which the committees can consider recommending are many and varied. They can range from retraining, sessions on résumé writing or job search techniques, to job counselling, vocational testing or financial counselling.

This is an urgent situation and one in which none of the parties intend to let the grass grow under their feet. It is also an excellent example of federal, provincial and private sector co-operation.

Although the circumstances are difficult, the Minister is confident that through the joint efforts of Canada Packers, the United Food and Commercial Workers International Union and both levels of Government every possible resource will be tapped and organized to help the workers prepare for, and find, new jobs.

FISHERIES—MARKETING OF FRESHWATER FISH—SENATE COMMITTEE REPORT

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the question I asked of the Minister of Fisheries and Ocean (Mr. Siddon) was on October 30. Thus some time has passed since the questioning took place. However, it does not really matter since the question was about the marketing of freshwater fish, which problem has been with us for many, many years. In fact, it has been with us since the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation was established. I am afraid it will be with us for some time to come unless action is taken quickly by the Minister of Fisheries. I realize that cod and tuna are in the limelight; but I think that white fish and trout should also have their day in court.

The problem with FFMC is that it has a monopoly. The fishermen are not allowed to sell fish to any other body than the FFMC. No competition in the industry is allowed. It is forbidden to Canadian citizens to become buyers, sellers or dealers of freshwater fish in the parts of the country to which the FFM Act applies. New marketing ideas cannot be tried because of the FFMC. Fishermen in my part of the country, in the Northwest Territories, feel that they have been neglected by FFMC, which tends to concentrate on the Lake Winnipeg area.

We produce a premium product that ought to be sold for premium prices. But we fear that our top quality fish has been used in some way to subsidize the lower quality Manitoba production. That may or may not be true. But unless there is competition, and people are allowed to try new marketing ideas, we will never know for sure.

I can assure you that the state of the NWT fishing industry is desperate. It depends on continued subsidies to keep it going, about $.5 million a year from the territorial Government alone. That was not the case when private enterprise was in the business of selling fish. Now there is bureaucratic regulation rather than an open market system.

The Senate report was a very thorough study. Under the Hon. Jack Marshall, the Senate committee travelled widely throughout the freshwater country. They went to Hay River in the Northwest Territories, received the advice of territorial government fishermen's organizations and a wide variety of the general public. The local press contained a number of articles, and the report was favourably received. This was an illustration of the Senate doing its job. There was excellent work done by this conscientious Senate committee. The committee came up with a series of good recommendations. In my opinion, they pulled the punches a little bit. They could have been more straightforward, but they did a good job.

The committee's recommendation 13(b) was probably the most important in that report. That recommendation recommended the licensing of private fish dealers, and the return of private enterprise to the fish business. People are out there who are ready and willing to do this once the authorization has been given. Not long ago I was talking to some Chinese friends who told me that white fish that are salted in a special way command a price in Hong Kong of about $8 a pound. They would like to get into the business of specially salting this fish. Presently the fishermen receive a few cents a pound for the product, so there is a new market that needs to be tapped.

We need authorization by the Minister so that this licensing can take place, and private enterprise can be brought back into the business. It is my considered opinion that unless private enterprise and competition is not brought back into the northern fishery, that fishery will perish. Of that there is no doubt.

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) has asked for the Government's response to the interim report on the freshwater fisheries that was prepared by the Senate Committee on Fisheries. I applaud the concern shown by the Hon. Member for his constituents and for freshwater fishermen throughout the West. His knowledge in this field is unquestioned in the House, and the Minister thanks him for his input on issues of this nature.

To date that committee has published only the first of a series of interim reports entitled The Marketing of Fish in Canada. Although the report is entitled marketing of fish, it contains some 20 wide ranging recommendations. They deal with such issues as resource management, federal, provincial and territorial matters, the mandate of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation, and, of course, marketing.

The Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation was established in 1969 at the request of provincial Governments for the purpose of bringing order to the marketing of freshwater fish products, and increasing returns to the approximately 3,500 fishermen involved in these fisheries.

Since 1969, the Corporation has been successful in meeting the objectives of its mandate, as indicated in the annual reports of the Corporation which have been tabled in the House each year.

The Corporation continues to enjoy the support of the participating Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, Ontario, and the Northwest Territories. It also enjoys the support of the vast majority of the fishermen in the Corporation's territory. Officials in the Department of Fisheries and Oceans have examined the recommendations with great care.

• (1815)

The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) has written to the distinguished Senate committee Chairman giving his views on the report. The Department is currently in the process of implementing many of the recommendations contained in the report. Subsequent reports dealing with the Atlantic and Pacific fisheries will receive the same attention and scrutiny, so that, as the Hon. Member mentioned, we can consider cod, salmon, white fish and trout.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION—LIBERAL PARTY CONVENTION RESOLUTIONS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, as you are well aware, the present Progressive Conservative Government is firmly committed to peace and to nuclear disarmament. That is not a unilateral nuclear disarmament but a multilateral verifiable nuclear disarmament. It is only a multilateral verifiable nuclear disarmament which will ensure that we can continue to maintain our Canadian democratic values and institutions, to maintain the rule of law, to control our own country, to prevent war, to deter aggression, and to settle disputes peacefully.

This is why we in Government have in the past and will continue in the future to support NATO and co-operate with the United States in the defence of North America.

The Canadian Ambassador to NATO, Mr. Gordon Smith, told me last week that our commitment to NATO is the reason Canada is consulted by the United States in all negotiations which take place with a view to bringing about nuclear disarmament. The United States consults all its NATO allies. It consults Japan, it consults Australia, but it does not consult Switzerland or Sweden. It no longer consults New Zealand, since New Zealand decided to ban American ships from its ports on the basis that they might be carrying nuclear weapons or might have some sort of nuclear power. It is the basis of the right to be consulted and the fact that we are consulted which rests on our commitment to NATO.

While we may not have the ability to negotiate or the influence to change everything we would like to change in the way of the nuclear problems of the world, we have the power to be consulted, and we are consulted because of the commitment to NATO. Perhaps, because of that, we can shift the approach taken to negotiations for nuclear disarmament.

If we decided to leave NATO or, for that matter, unilaterally declared Canada to be a nuclear free zone, we would be forfeiting the ability to influence in some way the negotiations for nuclear disarmament or for other kinds of conventional disarmament, perhaps the consultations on the first use of nuclear weapons in Europe, or the decision to use nuclear weapons first, before anyone else does. We would be forfeiting the right to consultation. It makes no sense for us to forfeit that right or to get out of NATO, nor does it make any sense for us unilaterally to declare Canada a nuclear free zone. Whatever happens in a nuclear exchange between the United States and the Soviet Union, whether or not we are a nuclear free zone will not save our hides.

Because of that it is disturbing to hear that the Liberal Party of Canada, in its most recent convention, adopted a resolution which called upon Canada to become a nuclear free zone. It was distressing to hear members of the Liberal Party saying that it was now official policy of the Liberal Party that Canada be a nuclear free zone.

It is interesting that the former defence critic for the Liberal Party indicated that if that happened no longer could American warships call in Canadian ports, and that we would virtually be in the same position as New Zealand. It is interesting to note that the Liberal Member who said that is no longer the defence critic for the Liberal Party.

It is disturbing as well to hear one Member of the Liberal Party, the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata), say that world peace is more important than membership in NATO. You and I know, Mr. Speaker, that NATO is synonymous with world peace. In fact, it has guaranteed peace in Europe and peace, as far as we are concerned in Canada, for the last 38 years. Of course it is not surprising when members of the New Democratic Party advocate that we get out of NATO or advocate a unilateral declaration of a nuclear free zone in Canada because that has been part of the NDP policy since 1969. It is not surprising when we hear New Democrats talking about it. But it is surprising and disturbing when we hear the Liberal Party talk about this same thing, particularly when Liberals have been such strong supporters of NATO and a multilateral and verifiable nuclear disarmament all these years yet now suddenly they are changing.

When it is time for the next election and the New Democrats and Liberals are asking for your support, Mr. Speaker, I hope that you will consider very carefully the things they have been saying in the last few weeks and months about this issue of nuclear disarmament, NATO and about their commitments to NATO. As you well know, if we elect a Government which is not supportive of NATO, is not supportive of multilateral and verifiable disarmament, we are going to take ourselves out of the game of playing a role in the disarmament negotiations and risking at the same time Canadian democracy, values and institutions under the rule of law. That, I hope, you will bear in mind at the time of the next election, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, this is the fifth time in the last five days that I have had the honour to stand and address you in my place. I only wish the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) could have been present. She alluded a short time ago in my constituency to the fact that she never sees me in the House and never hears me speak. This would have been a good opportunity for her.

I recall too clearly the confusion surrounding the resolutions regarding NATO that came out of the Liberal Party Convention in Ottawa in late November. Of course, I share my hon. colleague's concern about the kind of signal this sent to our allies. However, rather than dwell on what the Liberal Party stands for, let me repeat what the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) said in this House on December 1, 1986. He said:

> —anything which substantially weakens Canada's commitment to NATO would indeed weaken the western alliance and not contribute to the fulfillment of peace.

This statement, Mr. Speaker, parallels what the now Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) said when he was Prime Minister, that if we are going to have any influence in working toward world peace we must first of all fulfil our commitments to our NATO allies.

This Liberal resolution on NATO was raised at a Standing Committee on National Defence meeting on December 2 last where the Associate Minister was asked what the Government's reaction was. I think the Associate Minister's answer bears repeating. He said that the present Party in power which forms the Government of today supports NATO completely and absolutely.

Finally, let me say that Canada as a founding member of NATO has a long history within this important organization, and we see no reason to alter our strong support and commitment to it now.

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

PROCEEDINGS IN COMMITTEE STUDYING PATENT LAW AMENDING BILL

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the Government is attempting to cover up the true facts about Bill C-22 and its impact on the cost of drugs in Canada.

On three separate occasions in the House the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) alluded to the fact that they would produce for members of the legislative committee studying Bill C-22 the cost implication studies which were carried out by Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

In a motion recently put before the legislative committee, Conservative Members voted down the request to have the Minister of National Health and Welfare or the Minister or Consumer and Corporate Affairs provide the information to the committee so that all members would have an opportunity to view first-hand the cost implications of Bill C-22.

It is a further example of the Conservative majority on that committee, the Conservative majority in the House, trying to hoodwink Canadians into believing that the amendments in Bill C-22 will have a positive effect upon senior citizens and disabled people in Canada.

I call upon the Government to provide the necessary information so that Canadians can judge the ruthless type of action the Government is taking.

NON-DELIVERY OF REGISTERED MAIL SENT TO ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, recently I received a letter from a constituent of mine in Sardis, British Columbia, who has a very legitimate concern about delivery of a registered letter.

My constituent sent a registered letter to the RCMP in Vancouver after receiving what he assumed was the correct address from the local RCMP detachment. Four days later he was notified by a card that he had a registered letter awaiting him at the Sardis Post Office. He was more than a little surprised to find that his registered mail was actually the letter he had sent to the Vancouver RCMP. Marked on it were the words: "Moved, address unknown".

The registration fee of $2.46 was not refunded to my constituent even though the letter was never delivered to the RCMP office. I am sure it would have been extremely easy for the letter to be routed to the proper address when it arrived in Vancouver. After all, the RCMP are a highly visible group.

I wonder what would happen if Canada Post adopted and practised a familiar slogan—"satisfaction guaranteed or your money refunded".

EFFECT OF EXPORT TAX ON SOFTWOOD LUMBER SUPPLIER

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, yesterday a lumber supplier called to tell me that he was going out of business because of the Government's softwood lumber export tax. This particular supplier created jobs by selling Canadian lumber in the United States. He bought most of the lumber from mills in New Brunswick which are supposed to be exempt from the tax. However, because he brought that lumber through his yard in Ontario, the Government hit him with its export tax.

He called Revenue Canada to ask for an exemption. He sent invoices and bills of lading to show the origin and destination of each load of lumber. However, the Government would not listen.

He could avoid the tax by telling the mill in New Brunswick to ship lumber directly to his customers in the United States, but the mill would only take those customers for its own wholesale business. His orders are being cancelled as his customers find out that his price is rising 15 per cent. He must either move his business to the United States or shut his doors. Either way, the softwood lumber export tax has killed a small business in my riding and put Canadians out of work.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

ABITIBI-TÉMISCAMINGUE—REQUEST FOR MORATORIUM ON LAY-OFFS IN ORDER TO OBTAIN BETTER SERVICE

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): For several months, Mr. Speaker, the residents of Abitibi-Témiscamingue, Chapais and Chibougamau, strongly supported by various local interest groups such as mayors, chambers of commerce presidents, businessmen, CN employees and other people, have been urging the CN to impose a moratorium on lay-offs and provide better service.

Here are a few examples of bad service: On January 24, 26 and 27, 1987, Senneterre-Garneau train No. 830 was cancelled because no locomotive was available. That is the kind of service we get back home. We have asked CN management to impose a four-month moratorium on lay-offs, long enough to study the problems experienced by the railway company.

The CN's February 13, 1987 answer to our request is unacceptable.

Surprisingly enough, Mr. Speaker, yesterday, February 17, President and Chief Executive Officer Ron Lawless announced the beginning of a comprehensive study on the company's administrative structure. The memorandum reads as follows: The study is being made by a select group of senior officials assisted by the Booz-Allen and Hamilton consulting firm. Over the coming weeks agents of the consulting firm, accompanied by representatives of the services involved, will visit network facilities to observe and define the CN administrative process.

Hopes are now being dampened by some CN heads, but when reservations are expressed about the Abitibi-Témiscamingue region, I stand up and fight back.

SOCIAL SECURITY

THE BUDGET—EXPECTATIONS OF CERTAIN CATEGORIES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, in a few hours the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) will make his third Budget presentation. We should say his third and a half Budget.

Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that elderly Canadians have every right to expect the Government to redress some of its injustices towards them ever since the Conservative Government was elected in 1984. Naturally, I am referring to making all persons living alone, and all others who are single, separated or divorced eligible for the spouse's allowance; second, reimbursing immediately the 35,000 early retiress who have been deprived of their unemployment insurance benefits; third, continuing a real reform concerning retirement policies, the indexation of private pension plans, and increasing public assistance benefits; fourth, as promised by the Government in 1984, making sure that the three million homemakers will be covered under the Quebec and Canada Pension Plans; and fifth, with respect to family policies, restoring the full indexation of family allowances.

Mr. Speaker, I conclude by expressing the hope that at 4.30 this afternoon the elderly and families in Canada will hear good news.

CANADA WINTER GAMES

SUCCESSFUL OPENING—TRIBUTE TO WORK OF LOCAL VOLUNTARY ORGANIZERS

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, on Friday I predicted that Sunday's official opening of the 1987 Canada Winter Games would be the best ever, and it was. We were honoured by the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) presence and that of his wife. Cape Breton has warmly welcomed our Prime Minister and looks forward to his return.

Yesterday the very competent, capable, and athletic Minister of State for Sport (Mr. Jelinek) officially opened the ski venue at Cape Smokey, Victoria County. Hundreds of volunteers from Victoria County are working to ensure that the ski events go well, and they are, Mr. Speaker.

The people of Cape Breton have reason to be proud. More than 6,000 volunteers are participating in the operation of the Games. As part of the celebrations a cultural festival is also being held. The talent of our region is being put on national display. I want to congratulate my constituents and all Cape Bretoners for this great start. I am proud to say that I represent Cape Breton.

PESTICIDES

FARMERS' COMPLAINTS AGAINST CHEMICAL COMPANIES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, Members know that farmers do not have the time or the money to fight the farm chemical manufacturers in court when pesticides do not do the job. Many farmers have written to me about this problem expressing their frustration. One farmer writes:

I believe you're right when you say the problem is widespread, only we seem to have no recourse.

Another farmer didn't bother to fight back. He said:

I felt I would be at great odds to do so.

Yet another farmer said the following:

We had very poor results . . . Their representative acknowledged the poorness of the results, but only offered us three pails (of chemicals) to compensate for the poor results . . . We told him where to put the three pails.

It is a widespread problem, Mr. Speaker. I call upon the Government to set up a tribunal if the farm chemical manufacturers will not set up a voluntary complaint mechanism themselves that puts farmers on an equal footing with the companies. The industry needs to have a code of conduct for dealing with complaints from farmers who are the consumers. Farmers have been pushed around for far too long by the large multinational chemical companies in Canada.

WINNIPEG—SALE OF VERSATILE FARM EQUIPMENT TO FORD NEW HOLLAND

Mr. Brian White (Dauphin—Swan River): Mr. Speaker, the announcement in Winnipeg yesterday of the sale of Versatile Farm Equipment to Ford New Holland is of major national significance. The decision reached by Versatile, and announced by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté), ensures the long-term use of the Winnipeg plant for design and manufacture of the four-wheel drive tractor, and grain swathers, and creates a world mandate for these products. The federal Government is contributing with a repayable loan of $45.5 million.

Ford New Holland will maintain the Versatile name, identity, colours, and the dealer network. Spare parts will continue to be available and warranties will be honoured. Nine hundred and fifteen people will be at work by the end of 1987, and 1,233 by 1991. Farmers will benefit from the continued competitiveness of the market.

The federal Government was applauded by management and labour for its integral role in the negotiations and, it was acknowledged that without federal government participation the sale would not have taken place.

This announcement proves what can be accomplished when management, labour, and the federal Government work together in the interests of Canada.

TOURISM

INCREASED FEDERAL TAXES ON GASOLINE—EFFECT ON VISITORS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, last Tuesday I said in the House that since the Conservatives came to power, taxes on gas had increased 10 per cent. Mr. Speaker, I'm afraid that is not correct, although it was not my intention to mislead the House.

In fact, federal excise tax has gone up from 1.5 cents per litre to 4.5 cents per litre, an increase of 300 per cent, and federal sales tax, which also affects the price of gas, has gone up from 9 per cent to 12 per cent, an increase of 33 per cent.

This means that federal taxes on gas have increased almost 100 per cent, rising from 4.1 cents per litre to 8.0 cents per litre. It means that Canadians and tourists visiting Canada by car are paying 10 per cent more for gas as a result of the taxes imposed by this Government.

HISTORIC EVENTS

ANNIVERSARY OF ARMENIAN REVOLT IN 1921

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, just three years after the genocide of 1915, surviving Armenians defeated the Turkish army and set up an independent state on May 28, 1918. In 1920 the Treaty of Sevres signed by Turkey and the Allies enlarged the independent Armenia to include most of its historical territory. The treaty, however, was never ratified.

Armenia was independent until December 2, 1920, when Turkey and the Soviet Union invaded and crushed the infant republic and shattered the dream of the Armenians to be a freedom-loving democracy. Sixty-six years ago today, on February 18, 1921, their dream was revived when the Armenians revolted against the communist invaders. Sadly, the revolt lasted only 90 days, but the dream of the Armenians to have the genocide of 1915 recognized and to have an independent Armenian state established will never be crushed.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EXPORTS OF MILITARY GOODS—CALL FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, we in the New Democratic Party have often raised questions in this House about the export of Canadian arms and military related goods. We are especially concerned about Canadian exports to military regimes with records of gross human rights violations, and about the role of Canadians in supplying military goods to groups such as the Contras and to countries at war. We are equally concerned about the federal Government's promotion of sales of Canadian military goods to Third World countries which also receive official development assistance.

Yesterday I wrote the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) in response to his request for New Democratic Party assistance, urging him to initiate a full public inquiry into such Canadian exports. I have suggested specific areas for careful study and government action. The matter is urgent. I trust the Minister will respond favourably to my suggestions.

PORNOGRAPHY

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO PROSPECTIVE LIBERAL PARTY CANDIDATE

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, according to an article in the February 17 edition of the Kitchener-Waterloo Record, Ms. Maud Barlow, who is seeking the Liberal nomination for Ottawa Centre, told an audience of 500 high school teachers that she is "dead against free trade" because, she alleges, it will open Canada's borders to pornography and sexual violence from the United States. I welcome and share Ms. Barlow's concerns with respect to pornography and sexual violence, as does the Government. However, I take strong exception to Ms. Barlow's unwarranted linking of pornography and the Canada-U.S. trade talks. There is absolutely no connection whatsoever.

The Criminal Code is not up for negotiation, nor will it ever be. Furthermore, Article 20 of the GATT permits every sovereign state to restrict any trade which affects public morality and safety. If the Liberals want to discuss free trade, then let them do so in an intelligent and constructive fashion without resorting to this pathetic example of unacceptable fear-mongering and blatant electioneering.

YOUTH

CALL FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, it has now been seven months since the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest) was appointed to his job. His only accomplishment in that time has been a glossy booklet cataloguing existing youth programs, most of which were introduced by Liberal Governments. While such a booklet has some value, it is no substitute for policies and action to deal with the real problems of youth. Once again Conservatives are relying on rhetoric and public relations.

The rate of unemployment for youth is now at 14.4 per cent. Since 1984 the Tories have cut over $200 million from youth programs. This is no time for complacency and smugness as demonstrated by the Minister of State for Youth on Monday. Let us have some action from this Minister or discard him through the revolving door well known to 10 other Conservative Ministers.

CONSTITUTIONAL JURISDICTION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday in this House, when referring to the fishing treaty between Canada and France, the Prime Minister said, and I am quoting from page 3521 of Hansard:

> The Government of Canada and the Parliament of Canada alone will speak for Canada in all matters under our jurisdiction.

That was quite clear. Last night, on his private Newfoundland cable outlet, the Minister of Transport is reported to have said: "The issue will be up for discussion in the next round of constitutional talks." Here are his words: "I think there is a strong argument for shared jurisdiction. There are difficulties but we are certainly prepared to discuss them when there is another round of constitutional negotiations."

Was the Minister of Transport distracted yesterday when the Prime Minister slammed his desk while staking out the rights of the Parliament and Government of Canada? Is it a matter for Parliament alone or is it going to be, as the Minister of Transport indicated, a matter for shared jurisdiction?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition did his homework he would know about the meetings which took place at the annual Premiers' Conference in Edmonton from August 10 to August 12. The communiqué said: "There was consensus among the Premiers that they will pursue further constitutional discussions on matters raised by some provinces which will include, amongst other issues, Senate reform, fisheries, property rights," et cetera.

Mr. Crosbie: Wake up, John.

Mr. Mazankowski: Furthermore, on November 21 the communiqué issued at the annual First Ministers' Conference in Vancouver, British Columbia, indicated that: "There was agreement to undertake later another stage in constitutional reform on matters that will include, amongst other things, Senate reform, fisheries, property rights," et cetera.

Mr. Crosbie: Wake up, John.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister of Transport says "Wake up, John". Why don't you go back to sleep, John?

OVERFISHING BY FRENCH VESSELS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, what was the Prime Minister saying when he said in this House it is a matter for Parliament and Parliament alone? In this bizarre personal letter—

Mr. Crosbie: Rip Van Winkle! You have been asleep for 12 years.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —that the Prime Minister wrote to the Minister of Transport regarding the fishing agreement with France, he said the negotiations with France will address "overfishing in the disputed zone".

Mr. Crosbie: Absolutely.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Even the Minister of Transport knows that the disputed zone is the 200-mile zone disputed by France and Canada around St. Pierre and Miquelon. Is that statement true and, if so, on what clause of the agreement with France was the Prime Minister basing that statement?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister was very clear and there is no question about that. This Government has always worked together with the provinces on issues such as energy, fisheries, forestry, and things of that nature.

With respect to the second part of the question and overfishing, perhaps I might enlighten the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and quote from the letter that the Prime Minister sent to the Minister of Transport. It says as follows: "Any further agreement to allot cod to France in the Canadian fishing zone will be dependent upon, (a), France agreeing to binding arbitration on the boundary in the disputed zone and, (b), joint agreement on a total allowable catch for the fishermen in the disputed zone during the period of arbitration in order to solve the problem of overfishing."

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the problem with that is that it does not accord with the agreement between France and Canada. The agreement says "the parties will meet in order to initiate negotiations establishing the annual fishing quotas for French vessels in Canadian waters"—not "disputed waters" but "Canadian waters".

Mr. Crosbie: We say they are Canadian.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Deputy Prime Minister seems to be sadly ill-informed on this issue.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I ask him, has Canada not waived its rights to contest French overfishing in disputed waters, that 200-mile limit around St. Pierre and Miquelon, by the very wording of the treaty with France?

Mr. Mazankowski: Not at all.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Is that not the case? If it is, it is a lousy agreement.

Mr. Mazankowski: Not at all.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, of course that is certainly not the case. If one reads what the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition quotes from we see that it says, "a procès-verbal establishing the annual fishing quotas for French vessels in Canadian waters for the period 1988-1991 inclusive" shall be the subject of the interim agreement.

• (1425)

Canadian waters are those waters which we claim in the area 3PS. If it were not for his old friend, the mischief maker in the other place who set him up for this question, who, along with the Hon. Member, was an architect of this infamous 1972 treaty, we would not have a problem today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Read your agreement.

ALLOCATION OF FISH QUOTA TO FRANCE

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, how much more confusion can the Government heap on an already confusing situation? Cabinet Ministers have stood in this House, as all Members know, and said that not one more fish will be given to France unless Newfoundland agrees. The Prime Minister stood in the House yesterday and made a 180 degree turn to the right, to the starboard, and said that Newfoundland has no veto.

Is the Deputy Prime Minister aware that the Minister of Transport said that no fish will be given to France unless Newfoundland agrees? He said it must be in the best interests of the people of Newfoundland "'or there will be no deal'. Eat your heart out!" Are the Deputy Prime Minister and the Prime Minister now saying to the Minister of Transport, "Eat your own words"?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Get back to wheat.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition suggests that I should get back to wheat. I know a hell of a lot more about wheat than he does, and I know more about fish than he does.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: For several days Members have been using the word "hell". I ask all Hon. Members to keep in mind that that may well be offensive to others and to the public which is watching, no matter what the public may sometimes think of this place.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, to answer the Hon. Member's question I will again quote the Prime Minister's letter as follows: "What are our objectives? First and foremost to reach agreements that will defend in advance the interests of the Canadian fishing industry in Newfoundland and throughout Atlantic Canada".

SHARED JURISDICTION INQUIRY

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the only significant achievement of the Government in this French fishing fiasco is that today it has apparently convinced the Premier of Newfoundland to stop barking at Ottawa. The Premier of Newfoundland now agrees with the Minister of Transport. The Minister of Transport agrees with the Premier of Newfoundland.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That's a great accomplishment.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, on this issue two Tories don't make a right.

I will direct my question to the Minister of Transport who has been assigned by the Prime Minister to answer for Newfoundland on this issue. What is meant by "shared jurisdiction"? What line did this Minister feed the Premier of Newfoundland to stop him from barking?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is as angry as a dogfish at the fact that the Premier of Newfoundland and I are heart-to-heart and mind-to-mind on this issue now.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Murphy: Cheek-to-cheek.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Cheek-to-cheek and jowl-to-jowl.

Mr. Crosbie: I assume that the Hon. Member is delighted that we are prepared to do what the Premiers requested some months ago after the First Ministers' meeting, that is, to discuss the fisheries question when the next major round of constitutional negotiations begins. That is our commitment. We know that the Liberal administration in the past would not do it. I doubt whether the next ones in the 21st century will.

• (1430)

CANADA-FRANCE ECONOMIC AGREEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the Minister that he better check with the Premier of Newfoundland. He no more likes the substance of this agreement than do other Newfoundlanders, except the Minister. He joins the Opposition in condemning it outright.

Mr. Crosbie: We will see you in the by-election.

Mr. Broadbent: My question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I have a copy of a document that was produced recently by External Affairs and which perhaps goes a long way to explaining the sell-out of the Newfoundland fishery. It refers to a historic agreement that was negotiated between the Government of Canada and the Government of France last month as: "The most important economic agreement signed by Canada and France in recent years". This External Affairs document refers not to the cod agreement but to another agreement on trade with France being negotiated at the same time. Will the Minister confirm to the House that the reason the Government sold out our cod interest in Newfoundland was to get this agreement on other matters?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, both accusations of the Hon. Member are false, as usual.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, we see how the Minister deals with a document produced by his own Department. According to his Department, this is a historic document on a trade agreement between Canada and France designed to promote joint ventures, investment activities, and the transfer of technology. Will the Minister confirm that in order to get an agreement on all these matters, the Government of Canada was quite prepared to sell out to France with what they wanted on the cod deal?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the document issued by External Affairs is quite correct. What is false is the statement of the Leader of the NDP. What is reprehensible is that he should try to insinuate this kind of accusation into this debate. He should be above that kind of thing.

Mr. Broadbent: That is really touching.

NEWFOUNDLAND PREMIER'S LETTER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, will the Secretary of State for External Affairs confirm that the Prime Minister received a letter from Premier Peckford in December urging the Government of Canada not to make concessions in the cod area in order to obtain this kind of agreement? Will he confirm that the Government of Newfoundland was deeply concerned and expressed its concern in advance that its interests as a maritime province would be sold out by the Government in order to get this agreement? Is that not the concern Mr. Peckford expressed? Is that not the concern which the Government deliberately ignored?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, for the third time the Hon. Member is peddling a falsehood.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: That is close.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: I think the Hon. Minister has indicated that he is not in agreement with what the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party said. One might say that he is getting very close to suggesting that the Hon. Leader of the NDP is a peddler in falsehood, but I think the intention was that the Minister did not agree with the suggestion being made. However, it is an indication of the difficulty in which it puts the Chair and I am sure the Hon. Minister would want to indicate to the House that he did not intend that the Leader of the New Democratic Party was intentionally misleading the House.

An Hon. Member: Take the high road, Joe.

Mr. Broadbent: Be a statesman, Joe.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the New Democratic Party was exercising a terminological inexactitude.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nunziata: You are no longer a wimp, Joe. You are in the big leagues now.

An Hon. Member: Joe for Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I know Hon. Members are waiting in expectation for the next exchange.

THE CABINET

FUTURE OF MINISTER OF STATE—REQUEST FOR OFFICIAL ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, when I was asking the Prime Minister wheher he had made a decision with respect to his Minister of State, the Hon. Member for Joliette, I believe it would not be exaggerating to say that the Prime Minister lost his temper when he said that I was indulging in calumny and character assassination.

Today, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Considering reports that the Minister of State handed in his resignation to the Prime Minister, doesn't the Deputy Prime Minister feel the Canadian public has a right to expect the Government to react quickly in this respect and inform the House as soon as possible whether the Minister will or will not remain in Cabinet?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member, and I am sure other Hon. Members, would agree that whatever discussions, if any, that may be taking place between the Prime Minister and the Minister of State are a matter between them. The Prime Minister clearly has prerogative in this particular area. If any decisions are to be taken, I am sure they will be taken in due course.

REQUEST FOR DECISION BY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, what is troubling is that the Minister of State is also reported as saying that there will be no decision in his case until the end of the month when he will meet again with the Prime Minister. Does the Deputy Prime Minister not think that it is about time that his Prime Minister showed some leadership instead of indecisiveness in this case, and that he help to clear the air quickly and let Canadians know whether or not the Minister will stay in cabinet?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to the Hon. Member, I think it is about time that he stopped relying on newspaper reports as his research facility. It is my understanding that again we have had a series of allegations levelled at the Minister of State which have been refuted. As a matter of fact, it is my understanding that reporters from the Canadian Press have phoned his office this morning and apologized for the fact that some of the statements are inaccurate and could not be confirmed.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and also refers to the Hon. Member for Joliette. There are some questions surrounding the handling of this issue. Once certain allegations regarding the Minister of State for Transport were brought to the Prime Minister's attention he ordered an immediate investigation by the RCMP and took action by asking for his resignation. We all agree that that was the appropriate step to take. When the matter regarding the $5,000-a-plate dinner was brought to the Prime Minister's attention he also ordered an RCMP investigation, yet did not ask for the Minister's resignation. Will the Deputy Prime Minister explain the difference in the two cases? Why did he act with haste in asking for the resignation of the Minister in one case but did not and still does not in the other case?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I find it incredible that the Hon. Member opposite keeps asking the same question. That question has been asked three, four or five times, and has been answered each and every time by the Prime Minister. I invite him to go back and read the answers.

Mr. Riis: I have read each of those responses and at this point I do not recognize the difference in the two cases.

Mr. Andre: Keep throwing mud.

DECISIONS CONCERNING MINISTERS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, if it is clear, will the Deputy Prime Minister please explain succinctly and clearly the difference in the two cases?

• (1440)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure, but I think there is a rule in this House which says that questions which are repetitious or out of order—

Mr. Broadbent: No.

Mr. Mazankowski: This is exactly the same question as the first question.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Mazankowski: It is exactly the same question which was asked in the House on several occasions and exactly the same question the Prime Minister answered.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to bring to the attention of Hon. Members that it has often been suggested in past practice that the same question ought not to be repeatedly asked. In the event the same question is asked, the Minister is under no obligation to answer. The difficulty, of course, is that there will be an argument, or often is, between the Minister and the Member asking it as to whether or not it is the same question.

However, a Minister, who is in the position of believing the question has been asked before, is under no obligation to answer it, and that is the rule.

CANADA LANDS COMPANY JOBS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the administration of the Government. Newspaper reports today suggest that the cousin of the former Minister of Public Works, the Hon. Member for Joliette, was appointed to run the Canada Lands Company; the Minister's former chauffeur got a job as an officer manager with the corporation, and another friend of the Minister, who was convicted of fraud, was also rewarded at the Canada Lands Company. Besides asking the Deputy Prime Minister what qualifications these people have, I ask specifically, was he or the Prime Minister aware of these facts? And what steps, if any, were taken to correct this outrageous situation?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have the opportunity to clear up some of the inaccuracies and false statements made in this Canadian Press story. It seems it is becoming its practice.

By the way, 71 per cent of the people of that district voted for the Hon. Minister of State without portfolio. Is it any wonder that some appointments down there are people who supported him? What false reasoning and slanderous kinds of accusations to make!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: With respect to this matter, it is the municipality at Joliette which made a decision on what consulting firm to hire to do a certain feasibility study. The site of the land which was decided upon as being the best land is owned by Air Joliette Incorporated, not by Pierre Perrault. There is a whole series of other inaccuracies all strung together to make matters look bad for the Minister of State without Portfolio. It is scandalous for the Hon. Member not to do any checking, then to use false statements made in the Canadian Press story and repeat them in this House, hoping they will get more circulation as a result.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: More, more!

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, it was to be expected that this particular Minister would stand up and defend patronage in this House, for obvious reasons. I repeat to this Minister and to the Government that they have not denied the allegations I made concerning the Canada Lands Company.

GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Does the Government still stand by the solemn commitment made by the Leader of the Conservative Party on July 16, 1984 when he said about patronage: "We are going to bring in a brand new dimension to them of objectivity and representation and fairness for all Canadians"? Do those appointments qualify under that definition or don't they? If they don't, what is the Minister going to do to correct it?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in my 19 years in this House I have never seen such shameful conduct—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I ask the Hon. Minister to deal as exactly as the Minister can with the question which was asked, give a reply, and perhaps we can diminish the noise level in the Chamber just a little bit.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows very well that there is a process which has been set up through the process of parliamentary reform to scrutinize all government Order in Council appointments. If the Hon. Member has something to raise about this or any other appointment made by this Government, that is the place to do it, not the way he does it here under the screen of allegations, innuendoes, and smear.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ACID RAIN—UNITED STATES OFFICIALS' STATEMENTS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question on another subject altogether, if I might be so bold. It concerns something far more important, the survival of the Canadian environment. My question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and has to do with remarks made by the American Interior Secretary, Mr. Hodel, now complemented by remarks by Congressmen John Dingell, having to do with the fact that Canada's concern for acid rain abatement in the United States can be reduced to a conspiracy on our part to sell more hydro power to the United States. Would the Secretary of State for External Affairs say in this House, here and now, on behalf of all Canadians, and clearly to our American neighbours, that that is a lie?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that would be unparliamentary.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): But it is certainly false.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, as far as I know the rules do not prohibit the Secretary of State for External Affairs from saying things about people outside this House.

Mr. Speaker: One can take judicial notice in this Chamber of the very intense feelings of Canadians with respect to the acid rain problem. There is, of course, a rule that certain things ought not to be said about representatives of a friendly country and I would ask the Hon. Member to keep that in mind.

Mr. Blaikie: Well, you have to wonder who your friends are when they continue to poison your environment the way the Americans are poisoning ours.

CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, given the fact that we have tens of thousands of lakes which are already dead or dying, that our water-fowl are dying, and that our forest growth has been reduced by 66 per cent, what other avenues does the Government have in mind, litigatious or otherwise? We know the Americans were able to reach a deal with Mexico on the basis of a court case brought by six asthmatic Americans. Is the Government considering any new action in this regard which might bring the Americans to the table, admit we have a problem, and get down to serious acid rain abatement on the other side of the 49th parallel?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the short answer is that the Americans are already at the table. The Prime Minister of Canada will be raising at the forthcoming summit in Ottawa with the President of the United States, just as he has done so at the two previous summits, Canadians' grave concern about the pollution of the environment by American sources of acid rain-causing emissions.

May I say while I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, that though I share the Hon. Member's concern and, indeed, outrage, at the utterances of people like Mr. Hodel, I think it is inaccurate to draw a parallel between the all-encompasing agreement we are seeking with our American neighbours, on the one hand, and that which the Americans have reached with the Mexicans. All the requirements in connection with the U.S.-Mexico agreement are imposed on Mexico, not on the United States. That is exactly the opposite of what we are seeking.

NATIONAL PAROLE BOARD

PAROLE GRANTED TO DOMINIC MUSITANO

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, the entire region of Hamilton—Wentworth and I have given notice of the following question which is directed to the Solicitor General.

In view of the parole of Dominic Musitano two years after a court sentenced him to six years' imprisonment as an accessory after the fact of an organized crime murder, and since Musitano was granted parole despite warnings by the Hamilton Police Department that "He represents a threat to the citizens of this region", and despite the objections of the area manager of the Parole Division of Correctional Services that "We do not believe he is a candidate for early release", and despite community concerns that such a release jeopardizes the safety of law-abiding Canadians, why has this man been paroled?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can advise the Hon. Member that under the law Mr. Musitano was in fact eligible for parole. It was a decision of the National Parole Board which has exclusive jurisdiction in these matters. I cannot in any way overturn, overrule, or amend its decisions. I have asked for a copy of the decision, and hopefully I will be able to give the Hon. Member further information once I have had an opportunity to review it.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

TERMINATION OF JOBS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. In early February I wrote to the Minister and asked him to exercise his ministerial authority to intervene and prohibit the termination of 480 jobs at the Cape Breton Development Corporation. I wish to ask the Minister what actions he is planning to take, or has taken, with regard to protecting 480 jobs in a sector of the Nova Scotia economy that needs those jobs?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, since my hon. friend is from that region, he is well acquainted with the coal industry. He is also aware that at the present time, the industry has considerable excess capacity, which has of course led to a drop in prices. As a result, the industry has new problems to cope with, and this is a fact of life in a competitive market. It must proceed with certain adjustments.

Consequently, the company made a very generous offer to its workers, an offer that was initially rejected, but if I am not mistaken, the conciliator appointed by the Department of Labour is still trying to arrange meetings and arriving at a conciliation decision. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I think it would be inappropriate to discuss the matter further at this time.

REQUEST THAT LAY-OFFS BE HALTED

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. There is not an excess capacity. In fact what is needed is more jobs in the coal industry in order to perform the work which is required.

I wish to ask the Minister if he will not give a directive to the Cape Breton Development Corporation under the auspices of Section 99 of the Financial Administration Act to order management to halt these job terminations, because these job terminations will affect not only the local mining communities in that area, but as announced by the Premier, will negatively affect the entire economy of Nova Scotia. Will the Minister not do that?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, it is certainly no secret, as I have said before, that the Government is concerned about this problem. We are following developments very carefully on a daily basis, but I also want to give the Hon. Member the assurance that for some time, the Government has been very much aware of the situation of workers in the Maritimes, and especially those from Cape Breton. We will do everything we can to create opportunities for easier access to new jobs.

STATUS OF WOMEN

ALBERTA FEDERATION OF WOMEN UNITED FOR THE FAMILY

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. Why did the Minister bow to political pressure to retroactively fund the Alberta Federation of Women United for the Family under Secretary of State women's program funding when this group had already financed their conference, when it is doubtful that they qualified as a "Status of Women" group, and when they now intend to use the $8,000 for an anti-abortion campaign? Why did the Minister do this?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the grant that I think the Hon. Member is talking about was clearly within the guidelines laid out by the program.

AWARDING OF GRANT

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): I wonder if the Minister has listened to his own Deputy who came to the Secretary of State Committee and told us that under no circumstances are any issues related to abortion fundable under the Secretary of State Women's Program criteria? What does the Minister intend to do about this misuse of Secretary of State funds?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, if it is the grant that I think the Hon. Member is talking about, it is a grant within the program. It would be absolutely wrong for me, or for any other Minister, not to treat everybody fairly when they come forward with a request for a grant.

CLOSURE OF MAJORITY OF POST OFFICES ACROSS CANADA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post. In a letter dated February 11, André Villeneuve, Vice-President for Corporate Communications at Canada Post said and I quote: "Over the next 10 years, we will be shifting most of our retail services to the private sector". Does the Minister agree with Canada Post's plan to close the majority of the post offices across this country?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I think that was a non sequitur, Mr. Speaker. I do not see how privatizing certain activities has anything to do with closing or not closing post offices. They are two separate questions.

It has been agreed by everybody who has looked at the Post Office that there can be genuine improvements in services to the public while saving money through the contracting out of some of the activities of the Post Office. That policy will continue.

CORPORATION'S INTENTIONS

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, if there is no intention of closing post offices, then why did Mr. Villeneuve inform me in the same letter that Canada Post will consult the residents to establish what type of a service they prefer to receive in replacement of the existing post offices? Why does the Government wish to close post offices that are giving good service, especially in rural Canada? Why does the Government wish to close that service?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could give an example to the Hon. Member. On Monday this week on the Ottawa River at Dunrobin two post offices were merged together with the enthusiastic approval of all the people concerned because it resulted in improved service to the people affected. Why in heaven's name would the Hon. Member suggest that the Post Office should not go through that type of rationalization and merging two smaller, less efficient operations into one more efficient operation which improves service? Why does the Hon. Member keep asking that we not allow that type of thing to happen?

FUTURE OF RURAL POST OFFICES

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question with regard to the closure of rural post offices. Yesterday at the Government Operations Committee the Chairman of the Committee and member of the government Party said, "I have it on pretty good authority that Canada Post will resubmit its plan to Committee to back off on its amalgamation formula". Is the Minister now ready to say that the Government is ready to back off on its plans to close hundreds of rural post offices? Will the Minister clear up the confusion in this area?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, one of the causes of the confusion is activities like those that occurred in Devon last weekend where the Hon. Member attended with some people who have other objectives in mind, and who were making outrageous statements about the closures of post offices in Devon, Calmar, and other places, which was unnecessarily enraging and causing concern to the people affected, when the Hon. Member knows that there are no such plans in mind.

AMALGAMATION PLANS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question to the Minister is this. The President of Canada Post has admitted before the Government Operations Committee that it has plans to close hundreds of rural post offices under the amalgamation plans which are in the Post Office plan. Is the Minister now ready to say that he will abandon those plans, and that the Government will bring in a new plan for the Post Office? Will the Minister be frank with Canadians?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, what I am prepared to be frank about is the Hon. Member and his objectives of trying to raise fear and anxiety with his distortion of facts and distortion of intent, and he is not contributing at all to what we should collectively share as our responsibility to the people who elected us to see that the Post Office does the best job possible.

As I indicated, the kind of assurance he just asked for would have in fact made it impossible to have the merger of two post offices near Ottawa, which was announced on Monday and was greeted positively by the people affected. For goodness sake, I would ask the Hon. Member to be reasonable in making those kinds of suggestions and demands.

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES CANADA

LOCATION OF PAROLE SUPERVISION FACILITY IN TORONTO

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. It concerns the decision to fund and locate the Exodus Link parole supervision facility in Parkdale in Toronto without regard to its impact on the community. The Minister knows that the decision was taken in a sneaky, surreptitious fashion, with absolutely no consultation with the local community. In view of the concerns expressed by the community, will the Minister reconsider the decision to fund that particular operation, and will he refer the issue to the Justice Committee for further consideration to allow interested parties an opportunity to express their points of view?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows full well, I am sure, the contract was for services only. It was the responsibility of the applicant to locate the site somewhere within the city of Toronto. That in fact was determined in accordance with the by-laws of the City of Toronto. If there is a concern, one should have resort to the City of Toronto zoning by-laws. We did not select the site. In any event, as a result of representations made by the Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park, I listened to the representations of the residents of the area and I reduced the number of people to attend that particular facility by 40 per cent.

PRIVATIZATION OF PAROLE SERVICES—REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, the Minister's own colleague, the Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park, complained to him with regard to the lack of consultation with him, as the Member for the area, and with the community generally. The Minister knows that the privatization of parole services is a major departure from present government policy. In view of that fact, does the Minister not consider it appropriate for him to refer the whole issue of the privatization of parole services to the Justice Committee in order for that committee to consider the whole question?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat concerned here. I would like to know whether or not the Hon. Member is against the establishment of half-way houses so that parolees can in fact be rehabilitated, get back into the community, and reduce the rate of recidivism.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PROPOSED SAGUENAY SHOOTING RANGE—REQUEST FOR PUBLIC HEARINGS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence and concerns the proposed F-18 firing range in the Saguenay.

The Minister is aware that the Quebec Ministers of Intergovernmental Affairs and Environmental Affairs have proposed public hearings and a joint assessment of the project's impact.

Is the Minister prepared to co-operate with this important proposal for public hearings on the proposed firing range for the region and to consider joint public hearings with the Quebec Government? Will he conduct those hearings?

[English]

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, we are currently having discussions with regard to this matter. As soon as we have anything to announce, I will inform the Hon. Member.

AWARDING OF POLAR 8 ICE-BREAKER CONTRACT

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. With the sale of Versatile Farm Equipment yesterday in Manitoba to Ford New Holland, and with the ongoing financial restructuring of Versatile Pacific Shipyards in Vancouver and Victoria, can the Government of Canada now announce the awarding of the Polar 8 ice-breaker contract to British Columbia shipyards? As the people of Newfoundland would say, we in British Columbia want to know: "Who is the b'y who is going to build the boat?"

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman knows, over the past several months the Minister for DRIE has performed miracles. He has straightened out the matter of Versatile's operations in Quebec. They have now straightened out the farm equipment situation in Winnipeg. We are advancing westward, and within a period of days we will be straightening out the matter of the Polar 8 in Vancouver, and I dare say we won't leave unless there is an ice-breaker left behind us.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED LAY-OFF OF JOHN QUIGLEY—SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: I want to draw the attention of Hon. Members to a question of privilege which was raised a few days ago by the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais).

[Translation]

On February 11, 1987, the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) raised a question of privilege with respect to the dismissal of an official at the Department of Employment and Immigration. The Hon. Member alleged that the privileges of all Members of this House were affected by the decision and by the action taken by the Deputy Minister of the Department in question.

[English]

The Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), in his submission to the Chair, suggested that the Deputy Minister's action could lead to the withholding of information that is valuable and necessary for the Canadian public and as a consequence the very essence of why Members are elected to the House is thereby affected. The Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) argued that the public servant in question had conversed with members of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration and was only making relevant information available to members of the committee.

[Translation]

The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) maintained that Hon. Members should see this as an infringement of their rights and privileges. He stated that nothing should prevent Hon. Members from putting questions in the House and that Members should not have to be afraid that if they do, people who provided them with information might be fired.

[English]

At the time the Chair took the matter under advisement, and I am now ready to report to the House. I should say that this matter has given the Chair a great deal of concern.

At page 72 of the Twentieth Edition of Erskine May, the following citation is found:

> Certain rights and immunities, such as freedom from arrest or freedom of speech, belong primarily to the individual members of each House and only secondarily and indirectly to the House itself; but there are other rights and immunities, such as the power to punish for contempt and the power to regulate its own constitution, which, being rather directed to the maintenance of its own collective authority than to the security of the individual members, may be said to belong primarily to each House as a collective body. This is a useful distinction, but fundamentally it is only as a means to the effective discharge of the functions of the House that individual privileges are enjoyed by its Members. The Commons, in their reasons offered at a conference with the Lords in the controversy arising from the case of Shirley vs Fagg,—

It is an old case referred to in the book from which I am quoting.

> —in asserting that privilege of Parliament belongs to every Member of the House of Commons, declared "that the reason of that Privilege is, that the Members of the House of Commons may freely attend the public affairs of that House, without disturbance or interruption".

I think I will come down on what has to be the legal side of the issue, but I should say that part of the complaint of Hon. Members who raised the matter was that they felt that under the circumstances they would not be able to—and again I quote from Erskine May as I previously quoted—"freely attend the public affairs of that House, without disturbance or interruption". That is why this case is difficult. It is also why the Chair must be careful to define the issue and to make a ruling which stays within bounds.

I must underline to the House that the ancient privileges enjoyed by Members, separately and collectively, are privileges enjoyed by Members of Parliament only. Such privileges do not apply to public servants or persons outside the House, and there is no osmosis of privilege because someone transacts or converses with a Member of the House.

I have reviewed the elements of the matter raised by the Hon. Member for La Prairie, and I have found considerable difficulty in establishing evidence of a prima facie case of a breach of privilege; that is not to say that the matter is not a very grave concern.

The conversations referred to have taken place outside the House and outside the proceedings of the standing committee. The public servant was acting on his own initiative and not at the request of the committee.

The Deputy Minister appears to have acted within the authority conferred upon him by law, and in exercising that authority, in the opinion of the Chair, has not breached privilege nor impeded members in any way.

The Hon. Member for La Prairie has asked the Chair to consider and rule upon the narrow question of whether or not parliamentary privilege has been infringed in this case. On the narrow grounds upon which I must decide, I cannot find that a valid question of privilege exists.

Having said that, the broader question raised by the Hon. Member as to whether or not an injustice has occurred still remains to be answered. On that question, however at least at the moment and on the facts in front of me, I do not believe I have any authority to pronounce.

[Translation]

The Hon. Member may, if he so wishes, bring this matter to the attention of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration. However, I must advise him that he does not have a well-founded question of privilege.

[English]

I repeat, the issue raised in this matter is a serious one. In these circumstances, and on the facts, I have had to decide that it falls short of a question of privilege. But there is a fundamental question that, at the moment at least, I do not feel I can answer, namely, the question which is always with us in a democratic institution of when and under what circumstances is it appropriate for a public servant to give information to Members of Parliament or others. As the Chair understands, there is a process still going on in which it will be left for others perhaps to decide. As I have said, this is a matter that can be taken by Hon. Members to the committee.

I want to thank all Hon. Members for their interventions. I want to say again that I felt the intervention was well taken and that under the circumstances I have had to decide on the narrow point, and I have done so. The decision takes nothing away from the importance of the question and this decision in no way precludes members from taking the matter further in another place. It is not to rule one way or the other on whether under the circumstances the particular public servant is receiving, as I said earlier in the ruling, justice in the ordinary sense of that word. Again, I thank Hon. Members.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same question of privilege. I thank you for your ruling in the matter, which is quite clear. I would ask whether you can give guidance to Members of Parliament, perhaps including at least the members of the committee that you mentioned, as to whether there are considerations that we ought to observe in the event, for example, that that civil servant may be called before our committee. Are there limits that either he or we must observe in this matter as to his freedom to give information? Can we find out whether there are such limits and what they are?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) has raised a question directed at the Chair perhaps for guidance. At this time the Chair would be very reluctant to make suggestions on what is still a hypothetical situation. The Chair is very consciously aware that this concern comes from all three Parties represented in this House. I think the appropriate course is to take the matter to the committee. It is there that the committee, which is the master of its own procedure, will want to work out how it wishes to deal with the matter.

Committees, of course, are trying to find ways to cover new responsibilities, and this situation seems to be one of those with which the committee itself, at least in the initial stages, will have to deal, on the assumption that Hon. Members take the matter to the committee.

However, I am mindful of the reason the Hon. Member for Spadina has raised this question and the Chair is always ready to discuss difficult matters with Hon. Members at any time, at their invitation to do so.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from some residents in my riding in Winnipeg who indicate that the federal Government's proposals to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and will severely restrict the ability of the average Canadian to buy necessary prescription drugs. They conclude by indicating that Parliament should reject these proposals immediately.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure and honour to present a petition under Standing Order 106 from residents of Langley, B.C., Aldergrove, B.C., Surrey, B.C., Delta, B.C., from the City of Toronto, from Saskatoon, and Albreda, Saskatchewan. The petition simply points out that changes to the Patent Act, which the Government is presently considering, would result in a significant increase in the price of prescription drugs and therefore would severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. Therefore, they are asking the Government to reject the present proposals regarding changes to the Patent Act so as to enable average Canadians to continue to receive reasonably priced prescription drugs.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present another petition from senior citizens called Senior Power from the City of Regina and from Regina Beach—I bet you did not know we had a Regina Beach, Mr. Speaker—in which they petition this House, believe and have humbly shown that the proposal to amend the Patent Act will increase drug prices and that this will result in higher costs to provincial Government drug plans. Therefore, they petition this House to reject these proposals which they believe will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

TRANSPORTATION—ECONOMIC REGULATORY REFORM

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have a further petition from other great parts of the country including Halifax, Dartmouth, Moncton, Waverley, New Bedford and many other places in the Atlantic provinces. The petitioners say that in their opinion transportation is a natural monopoly without economic regulation and the economic regulatory reform or deregulation proposed in the Government's Bill C-18 will create unnecessary chaos in the transportation industry leading to unacceptable reductions in safety standards as well as a deterioration in the quality, type and frequency of service. Therefore, they request that this House have the Government withdraw Bill C-18 or, alternatively, reject its proposals entirely.

OPPOSITION TO CANADA POST CORPORATE PLAN

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure and the honour to present petitions signed by Canadians from coast to coast concerning the new Canada Post corporate plan to create two classes of citizens with the installation of postal superboxes.

Wherefore, Mr. Speaker, your petitioners humbly call upon Parliament to reject the Canada Post plan and establish the same postal service for all Canadians throughout this country.

REQUEST TO WITHDRAW TARIFF ON ENGLISH LANGUAGE BOOKS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty as well to present a few petitions from British Columbia residents, namely from Summerland, Gibsons (North Vanvouver), and Penticton. These petitions relate to the tariff on imported English language books and humbly call upon Parliament to withdraw this tariff.

REQUEST TO WITHDRAW TARIFF ON CHRISTMAS TREES

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would urge you to see to it that the tariff on Christmas trees be withdrawn as well, for it might be very harmful to our industry.

OPPOSITION TO CANADA POST CORPORATE PLAN

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): I have a few more petitions, Mr. Speaker, concerning the Canada Post planned closure of a number of post offices in rural regions and elsewhere in Canada. Your petitioners are Ontarians from Tiverton, Fort Elgin, Windsor, and Belle River. They simply ask Parliament to shelve this project aimed at closing rural and urban post offices.

REQUEST TO WITHDRAW TARIFF ON ENGLISH LANGUAGE BOOKS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I hope this is the last time I rise in the House on the subject of the duty on books. Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of presenting a few more petitions regarding this question.

[English]

The petitioners say that the Government of Canada has imposed a retaliatory tariff on imported books in the English language which has limited the access of Canadians to literature and information and the tariff has little negative effect on the publishing industry of the United States yet penalizes Canada's consumers, book publishers, booksellers, distributors and Canada's culture, and with rising book prices has placed a strain on the book acquisition programs and policies of our nation's public and specialized libraries. The undersigned petitioners——humbly pray and call upon Parliament to drop this duty which may cause irreparable harm to the Canadian publishing industry and compromise the survival of the federal policy on cultural industries in the free trade talks with the United States.

I may draw your attention as well to the duty on Christmas trees which should also be dropped.

[English]

These petitions come from Waterloo, Kitchener, Toronto, Burlington, Georgetown, Etobicoke, Vancouver, Harrison Hot Springs, Kamloops, Penticton and Kelowna, to name just a few places. With that, I will table these petitions for your serious attention, Mr. Speaker, and particularly for the attention of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

CANADA POST—POSTAL SERVICES

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I also bring to your attention concerns surrounding Canada Post. I bring the following petition to your attention: whereas the Canada Post Corporation's plan to adopt supermailbox service creates two classes of Canadian citizens in urban as well as rural regions, whereas the closure of rural post offices will eliminate the federal presence in numerous communities and will impede the effectiveness of the postal service which is vital in rural areas, whereas the increased postal rates, particularly on second-class mail, will imperil the distribution of numerous magazines, periodicals and regional newspapers as well as religious publications, the undersigned your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject the corporate plan proposed by Canada Post Corporation and instruct the corporation to proceed with mail delivery to all Canadian taxpayers without discrimination.

They declare that this plan is not fair, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

These come from people from Port Hope, Oshawa, Bowmanville, Hull, Kanata, Manotick, Ottawa and Windsor.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I would like to present a petition from residents of Saskatchewan including the cities of Regina and Saskatoon and other communities in that great province, calling upon the Government and Parliament to reject the corporate plan proposed by Canada Post Corporation and instruct the corporation to proceed with mail delivery to all Canadian taxpayers without discrimination.

[Translation]

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I also have some petitions and these are from the Ottawa—Hull area, including Gloucester, Nepean, Aylmer and Vanier. I also have some petitions from Hull and from the riding of Trois-Rivières, and all these petitioners respectfully state that the new corporate plan for Canada Post creates two classes of citizens by permanently installing the superboxes in both urban and rural areas; wherefore your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject Canada Post's plan and urge the Corporation to deliver the mail to all Canadian taxpayers, without exception.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition duly approved by the Clerk of Petitions from Canadians living in Vancouver, Nepean, Ottawa, Belmont and other parts of Canada who are concerned that the Government's proposal to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers, will restrict the ability of ordinary Canadians with ordinary incomes to buy needed prescription drugs, will increase the cost of provincial government drug plans and will be an unnecessary concession to the United States in the matter of free trade. Therefore, they request that Parliament reject the proposals of the Government on the ground that they will harm the majority of Canadians.

Order Paper Questions

LOW-LEVEL FLIGHTS AT ARMED FORCES BASE AT GOOSE BAY

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition from a number of Canadians living in Surrey, White Rock, Delta and Vancouver, British Columbia, as well as Toronto, concerning the low-level flight training conducted at the Goose Bay, Labrador, Canadian Forces Base on behalf of a number of NATO air forces. They are concerned that it disrupts the life of the native people there and damages the environment and is in fact not defensive but a provocative and aggressive war fighting action tending to endanger world peace. Therefore, they request that Parliament ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to ensure that he will end all low-level flight training at Goose Bay and cease negotiating with NATO for the establishment of a larger base there.

[Translation]

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by citizens of Toronto who are concerned, not just for themselves but for all Canadians.

• (1530)

These petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) end all low-level flight training at the Canadian Forces Base in Goose Bay and cease negotiations with NATO for the establishment of a larger base there.

Mr. Clinch: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have a little problem with a petition sent to me by 11,500 of my constituents. This petition is addressed to the Government of Canada and not to the Parliament of Canada. The petitioners are asking for a study by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) and they make requests concerning the military camp at Tracadie. I seek the unanimous consent of the House to table this petition, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

REQUEST FOR BENEFITS—CAMP TRACADIE

Mr. Roger Clinch (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of External Relations): I thank you, Mr. Speaker, as well as all other Members of the House.

I am pleased to table a petition signed by 11,500 citizens of the Tracadie area who are asking the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) to review all steps towards the expansion of the military camp in Tracadie and seeking increased security for the citizens living in the vicinity of the military camp. They wish to obtain improved and more frequent access to the camp as well as major economic spin-offs for the region.

OPPOSITION TO CLOSURE OF POST OFFICES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table today in the House petitions signed by 1,980 residents of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, in addition to the more than 1,400 petitions which I tabled in the House the day before yesterday who also from the people of my riding who strongly oppose the possible closure of rural post offices in my riding.

Mr. Speaker, these petititions are signed by residents of communities such as Applehill, Dalkeith, Hammond, Sarsfield, which is my native village, as you probably know, Mr. Speaker, Casselman, Bourget, Saint-Eugène, Hawkesbury, Bainsville, Lancaster, Orléans, Alfred, Plantagenet, Limoges, Vars and others in the Glengarry—Prescott—Russell constituency, as well as by residents of the Stormont—Dundas constituency who have sent me their representations, especially those in Williamstown who are very angry about the plan of the Conservative Government to close rural post offices.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I shall naturally give my agreement, but I would like to point out once more that one question has been on the Order Paper for two months already, in violation of Standing Order 63, I believe, which states that the Government must reply within 45 days. I am willing to wait a bit longer since I have had the assurance of the Government that I will get an answer in the very near future. I hope that this will indeed be the case.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall all questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I request that all motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall all motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

TELEGLOBE CANADA REORGANIZATION AND DIVESTITURE ACT

The House resumed from Tuesday, February 17, consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-35, an Act respecting the reorganization and divestiture of Teleglobe Canada, be now read a second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Ms. McDonald (p. 3435).

Mr. Waddell: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the Chair might help us out. My understanding is that when we left debate on this Bill we had one minute left for the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) and then we were going into 10-minute speeches?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member is correct. We are in the question and comment period following the speech of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper). The Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) had a question or comment?

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) with respect to his comments the other day. Considering that the overwhelming preoccupation of the Canadian people lies with the tremendously high rate of unemployment in most parts of this country, can he give us his evaluation of this legislation in that context? Action by the Government to produce jobs should be the highest priority, so how does this divestiture signal the Government's efforts to improve the employment picture?

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to make a comment. The Government is doing what has been done in the private sector for some time now. It is a game involving taking over companies and it produces no employment. When the Government sells Teleglobe to Memotec it is just another game which will not mean an increase in employment for Canadians.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments is terminated. Debate.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, once again I rise with great concern that in debates such as this there is generally not much of an audience. I hope the Canadian people are watching this debate and learning a lesson about the priorities of their Government, as well as the rather low level of attention given to the major issues affecting them which I referred to in the question I put to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper).

It has always been offensive to me to hit anyone while they are down, but I am afraid the Government needs to be hit while it is down, as it has paid so little attention to the primary concerns of the Canadian people. One would think, given the circumstances of the last few weeks, they would be hastening to try and find some legislative route to gain the support and approval of the Canadian people. If the Government were attentive to the mandate given it by the Canadian people, its emphasis would surely have been on measures which would create jobs. This legislation in no way makes that effort. It offends me that we should be playing ideological games, as we are with this legislation, rather than paying attention, as we ought to, to the concerns of the Canadian people. I know that the Government can look at rather improved employment statistics and find that the unemployment rate is down significantly over-all, but one will find that in seven provinces the unemployment rate is high. Meanwhile, we are here discussing the divestiture of Teleglobe, for what purpose and profit it is difficult to say.

At the moment we are debating a motion for a three-month hoist. The reason the motion for a hoist was introduced is paraphrased quite well in the following headline found in The Financial Post: "The Memotec Teleglobe buy raises serious questions". There are several reasons why it raises serious questions. One of course is that the performance of the stock on the stock market indicated that inside information was available. On the day that it became known that Memotec was to purchase Teleglobe the stock rose from $12.60 to $15.00. I believe that raises serious questions and would suggest a reasonable basis upon which to delay this legislation in order to make the appropriate inquiry to determine whether there was any hanky-panky.

It is interesting to see what the financial community is saying. This article from The Financial Post says that the information that Memotec, which until then was a mysterious company in Montreal, was going to buy Teleglobe is known to have been leaked to the private sector on February 6, "although many greeted it with incredulity". It is also worth noting that another financial expert said "but in terms of Teleglobe's long-term financial viability, it boggles the mind".

Let us examine what has occurred here. Teleglobe is certainly to be regarded as one of the more successful Crown corporations. It had sales of $688 million in 1985 with profits of $53.2 million. It provided approximately $250 million in dividends to its owner, the Canadian Government. It is being purchased by a company which, in the same year, had profits in the order of $17 million and is worth between $40 and $83 million. If ever there was an example of a mouse swallowing an elephant, this surely must be it. This has raised questions of the long-term viability of Teleglobe in these circumstances.

The far more important question is what could have justified this. I have thought long and hard about the Government's commitment to privatization. We understand that the three pillars of Tory Government policy are free trade, deregulation, and privatization. I previously said that if you take these three pillars together they represent Americanization. Of course, it is true that many Americans who have commented on what they expect to achieve through free trade have pointed out, among other things, that they want the Canadian economy to mimic the fundamentals of the American economy. There is considerable objection to the mere existence of Crown corporations. They consider it a condition of reasonable trade and economic relationships with Canada that privatization of Crown corporations be accomplished as soon as possible. I am sure that is of considerable importance to the Government as it so wantonly searches for a free trade arrangement with the Americans.

Beyond that, one must consider that perhaps there are, within the Government's mind, certain purposes to be accomplished by privatization. It may occur to one that the Government might want to sell those Crown corporations which are losing money. As I indicated previously, Teleglobe is certainly not a money-losing Crown corporation so that obviously cannot be the reason for selling it. One may be interested in enhancing the level of competition within the communications industry. However, it is obvious, given the conditions of the sale which provide a protective monopoly situation with certain aspects of regulation, that that is not the intention. Nor is there a likelihood that competition will be enhanced by the sale of Teleglobe.

One can examine this very thoroughly, but one is left with only one conclusion, that is, that it is just empty-headed ideology which commits the Government to such a course of action. This does not create new jobs. Of course, the Government has never said that privatization was for the purpose of creating new jobs. As a matter of fact, there are no assurances that the level of employment presently existing with Teleglobe will be enhanced. We do not even have a commitment to maintain the level of employment which Teleglobe presently provides.

Canada, as well as most of the other industrialized nations, with the exception of the United States, are signatories to an international arrangement with respect to Intelsat. That arrangement was to provide, through cross-subsidization, equivalent rates for the use of international telecommunication means. The new privatized Teleglobe may find itself in a conflict of interest in seeking to find the lowest rates. Will it be inclined to compromise Canada's commitment to an arrangement which will benefit the third world?

It is impossible to find any logical, reasonable basis for the legislation before us. It requires further examination. A three-month hoist will do, but if the legislation were forgotten about altogether it would benefit all of Canada.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, we are into the 10 minute question session so one will have to keep one's remarks extremely limited. I must reflect on some of the points made by my hon. colleague, the Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy). He asked the general question which I suspect most Canadians are now asking, that is, at a time when unemployment in seven provinces has risen from the level which it was at in 1981—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We are now on 10 minute speeches. I am sorry to interrupt the Member, but I thought he was asking a question of the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville.

Mr. Riis: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: My mistake.

Mr. Riis: It was probably not your mistake, Mr. Speaker. It was probably the way in which I began my speech. I accept full responsibility for that confusion.

• (1550)

Compared to 1981, unemployment has increased in seven provinces. The situation in most of Canada is not any better after the last two years as a result of the new Government. Rather than consider the privatization of Teleglobe, the Government should address these questions and how to encourage economic development in regions of Canada such as northern Ontario and Quebec in order to get the million or more Canadians back to work in meaningful jobs.

On I travelling throughout my constituency of Kamloops—Shuswap, or when making speeches in various cities and towns in Canada, I have not met one citizen who asked me if there was any possibility that the House of Commons could privatize Teleglobe as quickly as possible because that person lays awake at night worrying about the privatization of this Crown corporation. No one has ever mentioned the need to privatize selected Crown corporations. I regret that we are spending so much time, not only in the House now, but that we will spend days in the committee to debate this question before it comes back to the House for further debate. What will it accomplish other than to satisfy a few back-benchers on the government side who feel, for some burning reason, that this issue should take up valuable time in the House of Commons? I find it extremely frustrating to spend time debating an issue about which no one is concerned, other than a handful of Conservative back-benchers.

Mr. Jepson: Then sit down.

Mr. Riis: I hope that is not one of the back-benchers to whom I referred asking why I do not sit down and not say anything. I will not sit down and be muzzled in this debate, because when I see the facts it is clear that the sale of Teleglobe is an absolute give away to a firm called Memotec which is getting one of the best deals ever. Teleglobe is an extremely profitable Crown corporation, with profits in excess of $53 million in 1985. This Crown corporation has become more profitable every year since 1975. It is a well run corporation that is making money for the Government in a critical area of the economy.

Second, let us consider similar corporations in other countries. Teleglobe is a Crown corporation with responsibility for all overseas telecommunications entering and leaving Canada. These telecommunications include telephone, telegraph, cable, and telecommunications. Teleglobe is also a joint owner of a submarine ocean cable and telecommunications satellite system and has an effective monopoly in Canada in overseas telecommunications. It is very critical to our ability to communicate with people around the world in this shrinking global village.

Countries like Australia, New Zealand, France, West Germany, Italy, Norway, Sweden and others have government controlled Crown corporations operating overseas telecommunications system. The United Kingdom has gone through a similar privatization process in which the British Government has conducted a major privatization of British Telecom. Yet it has retained slightly under 50 per cent ownership, with a controlling interest. Even the United Kingdom, under Margaret Thatcher, recognizes that it is necessary to have a controlling interest in this critical Crown corporation that deals with international communication.

Not only is the Government of Canada privatizing Teleglobe, it is giving it away carte blanche at the same time. Not only is it being given away at a fire sale price, there is a myth that it is being privatized so that the Crown corporation may operate in the market-place. However, the fact is that it is a Crown corporation that will be turned over to a private firm that will have a monopoly in which to operate. What kind of private sector free enterprise system is that? Presumably privatization means that a Crown corporation will operate in the independent market-place. However, that is not the case with the transfer of ownership of Teleglobe.

The initial reaction to this sale was one of surprise. The Toronto Star reported on the day of the announcement of this sale: "There were exclamations of surprise and curiosity from the business community yesterday as Memotec Data Inc. of Montreal, the smallest of six bidders vying for Teleglobe Canada, emerged the winner". The Financial Post, which presumably is in touch with the financial and investment community, stated: "the privatization stunned the business community". Presumably this means that the business community was not impressed with this transaction.

Mrs. Mailly: Not necessarily.

Mr. Riis: One could go on to cite other exclamations of surprise, curiousness or incredulity about this action by the federal Government.

Teleglobe has been known as the jewel of the Crown corporate family. In 1985 it recorded profits of $53.2 million and its profit picture for the last ten years is set out in millions of dollars. In 1985, Teleglobe's revenues totalled $678 million.

It is interesting to note that a few months ago British Telecom was interested in this purchase and made a bid of $750 million through the Minister responsible at that time. When one analyses the figures provided to us by the Minister of State for Privatization (Mrs. McDougall), it is clear that the Government will only receive $345 million for Teleglobe when its book value is between $300 million and $450 million. The Government is selling it for significantly less to a minnow in the sea of the corporate sector when it could have sold it for $700 million a few months ago.

Since I only have 10 minutes for debate I will not have an opportunity to talk about the remarkable action on the stock exchange. Obviously some insider information leaked and people began to make small fortunes. In light of the problem with the shares of the corporation that is purchasing Teleglobe, we suggest that this matter be set aside for perhaps three months to provide for an investigation. We could then come back to debate the whole matter again.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise as privatization critic for my Party to take part in the debate on this motion to adjourn consideration of this Bill. Usually such motions ask for a six-month hoist, but in this case we do not want to delay the Bill unduly and have asked for a three-month hoist. I have already spoken on the main motion. I refer Hon. Members to my 40-minute speech on that motion and they can read it when they want to learn something or when they want to fall asleep at night.

I would like to speak briefly on the hoist motion and tell Hon. Members why we have proposed such a motion. I would like to refer to an article by David Hatter which appeared in The Financial Post this week. He is a very serious and good journalist. The headline of the article reads: "Memotec-Teleglobe buy raises serious questions".

We have referred to this company in the House as "Minnow-tec" because this little minnow of a company swallowed this large whale of a Crown jewel, the Crown corporation Teleglobe. That was surprising not only to Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party but to the business community and to those out in the financial world.

Mr. Hatter states in his article:

> On February 5—the very day Canada Development Investment Corp. recommended to McDougall—

That is the Minister of State for Privatization.

> —that Memotec's bid be accepted—trading in the stock was suspended because of a $2.38 price run-up (to $13).

The price went up from about $10 to $13.

> The company then publicly announced its interest in Teleglobe.
> Memotec said late last week it believes it has complied with all disclosure requirements.

There is now an investigation by the Toronto Stock Exchange with regard to the unusually heavy trading in Memotec shares in the days preceding the Government's announcement.

Mr. Hatter goes on to say:

Sources in Ottawa indicate high-level meetings discussing the Teleglobe sale were held on both Feb. 5 (involving senior officials from departments involved) and on Feb. 6, (with chiefs of staff of the departments).

Memotec is said to have been clearly indicated by participants in the meetings as the leading contender. This information is known to have been leaked into the private sector on Feb. 6, although many greeted it with incredu—

An Hon. Member: Incredulity.

Mr. Waddell: Incredulity. I appreciate the help of the Hon. Member. I should be able to say the word because when one finds one has just lost one's seat, it does incredible things to concentrate the mind. It is like when one is going to be hanged in a few days.

Ms. Jewett: As Dr. Johnson said.

Mr. Waddell: The Hon. Member is right, as Dr. Johnson said.

This is not a ridiculous motion or a delaying motion, it is simply a motion so that we can have the report of the Toronto Stock Exchange in hand before we pass this Bill in principle. That seems to me to be reasonable. I am sure Hon. Members opposite would agree with me that it is a reasonable proposition and that is why I think they would agree and vote with the New Democratic Party, and the other opposition Party, I hope, on our motion. We would like to have the report. We are not alleging any hanky-panky but would just like to see why the stock acted in such an unusual way.

This is not NDP ideology or rhetoric. There is an investigation going on by the Toronto Stock Exchange and Mr. Hatter points out, and I think this is the other thing we would like to get cleared up, that there is some discrepancy in the price paid for this corporation. The Government tells us it is receiving $600 million, when the actual price is $328 million. So there is a great discrepancy. For those two reasons, the discrepancy in price, about which we would like information, and the matter of the insider trading, we proposed this motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on the motion of Ms. McDonald. Ms. McDonald moved:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-38, An Act respecting the reorganization and divestiture of Teleglobe Canada, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day three months hence".

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

• (1620)

And the division bells having rung:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 13(4)(a), I have been requested by the Chief Government Whip to defer the division to a later time.

Accordingly, the division on the question now before the House stands deferred until tomorrow at 6 p.m., at which time the bells to call in the members will be sounded for 15 minutes.

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance) moved:

That this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

He said:

Canadians have good reason to be encouraged by the nation's economic progress during the past year. Despite some difficult problems, our economy performed well in a challenging world environment.

Today I want to review with this House and with Canadians the substantial progress we have been making on our program of action to renew Canada's economy.

Last year, our rates of economic growth and job creation exceeded those of all the major industrial countries.

We achieved these results in a world economy that has become not only more competitive, but also more uncertain and volatile. The world economy will continue to be challenged:

by serious imbalances in trade positions among industrial countries;

by the persistent, large U.S. budget deficit;

by the external debt problems of developing countries; and by the rising tide of global protectionism.

These challenges underline the need for the Government to work more closely than ever with our trading partners to promote balanced and healthy world growth.

[English]

Events outside Canada have affected the nation's economic performance in 1986. Low world grain and oil prices have had a serious impact, particularly in Western Canada. The benefits of steady growth and job creation have been substantial, but they have not been fully shared in all regions.

The Government has responded to regional needs through a number of measures that have cushioned the impact of international events. We have been able to respond because of the progress that the national economy has been making.

Without our success in achieving lower interest rates and lower inflation, the regional problems facing us would have been even more serious.

[Translation]

Let there be no doubt that our future ability to contribute to the economic development of all the regions of this country will continue to depend on our ability as a nation to compete against the best from around the world.

[English]

PROGRESS ON OUR AGENDA

Before this Government came to office, the confidence of Canadians had been badly eroded by a severe recession. The severity of the recession and the decline in confidence were symptoms of disturbing trends that posed a threat to our goals of sustained growth, permanent jobs and greater opportunities for Canadians.

The deficit was more than $38 billion and rising.

The national debt had doubled in only three years.

The Government was consuming more and more of the country's resources.

[Translation]

Private initiative was increasingly stifled by excessive regulation.

Growing industrial subsidies were inhibiting change.

Undisciplined spending was leading to waste, excessive bureaucracy and unproductive activity.

[English]

Government was very much part of the problem.

A nation overburdened by deficits and debt is a nation made more vulnerable to economic shocks. But what government does, and how it does it, are as important as how much of the nation's resources it borrows.

That is why, in November 1984, we placed before Canadians a comprehensive economic renewal agenda.

[Translation]

That is why, steadily and consistently, we have acted to make government more efficient; to restore prudent financial management; and to provide an economic environment that encourages private initiative and risk-taking and that rewards success.

[English]

Without decisive action to restore the health of the nation's finances, the spiral of deficits and debt would have quickened; confidence would have sagged even further. We had to act. And we did.

We reduced the deficit to $34.4 billion in our first full year in office.

This year we will further reduce the deficit to $32 billion. And we will hold our program spending to $89.4 billion, the target I set out in my Budget one year ago.

I am also announcing today that, in our third year, we will get the deficit down to $29.3 billion.

Let me emphasize the full measure of our efforts. When we came to office, the federal deficit relative to the size of the economy was more than one and a half times the size of the United States deficit, using equivalent measures of comparison. As a share of the economy, our deficit has been brought down to the point where it is now identical to the deficit of the United States.

This progress has not come easily. It has required tough decisions and it has required firm, disciplined management. These actions have been taken as part of our comprehensive program to achieve our central objective of improving Canada's international competitiveness. For it is improved competitiveness that will create sustained growth and permanent jobs.

Our program also includes action:

to deregulate key sectors of the economy;

to support science and technology;

to assist small business;

to privatize Crown corporations that can perform better in the private sector; to modernize financial services regulation;

to pursue trade policy initiatives to secure markets for Canada into the next century.

Our trade initiatives are of central importance. They will ensure that our improved competitiveness is translated into more jobs. We remain committed to seeking an agreement with our largest trading partner, the United States an agreement that must clearly benefit Canada. We are also playing a leading role in the new round of multilateral trade negotiations under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. These negotiations will deal with a number of issues of vital importance to Canada, including agricultural trade. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has made clear, the Government will spare no effort in seeking an international resolution to agricultural trade conflicts and an end to the damage they cause in Canada and around the world.

Another major initiative on our economic agenda is tax reform. I cannot emphasize strongly enough the importance of developing a tax system that is more fair, less complex and that encourages productive economic activity. I will return to tax reform later in my remarks.

In this Budget I am presenting our economic prospects and fiscal plan for 1987-88. I will propose a number of management initiatives and revenue measures that will ensure further substantial reductions in the deficit and borrowing requirements. I remain committed to medium-term economic and fiscal planning. The fiscal plan for the coming year is an additional step in our commitment to ensure continuing deficit reductions in the years ahead. Our medium-term economic and fiscal prospects will be significantly affected by tax reform. When my proposal for tax reform is released, I will set out clearly Canada's medium-term economic and fiscal prospects.

This Budget consolidates and extends the fiscal progress we have made. In the Speech from the Throne, the Government established clearly the priorities it would pursue. These priorities have been chosen for action within the limits of our fiscal plan. We have demonstrated our ability to set priorities and to responsibly allocate resources to achieve our goals. The Government will, in due course, be announcing programs to give effect to the priorities and policies identified in the Speech from the Throne.

I want to emphasize that the actions we have taken and will continue to take to pursue our program for economic renewal are not unrelated. They are part of a co-ordinated, cohesive program to strengthen Canada's competitive position.

[English]

I am tabling with this Budget a report on the substantial progress that we have made in implementing many of the elements of our Agenda for Economic Renewal. I commend this report to the attention of Honourable Members and all Canadians. It sets out what we have achieved together and the principles that will guide us as we continue to implement that agenda.

THE ECONOMIC RECORD

Our actions have contributed to strong economic performance over the last two and a half years. This performance is graphic proof that Canadians are responding positively to the opportunities flowing from our progress in implementing our program of action. Since September 1984:

> the real growth of Canada's economy has averaged about 3.5 per cent per year, second only to Japan and much stronger than the United States;
> consumer confidence has risen to a very high level and spending by consumers has provided a major impetus to growth;

> the improving Canadian economy has created 675,000 new jobs; > employment growth in Canada has been stronger than in any major industrial country; > the unemployment rate has dropped by two percentage points;

> short-term interest rates are at their lowest levels in nearly a decade;
> five-year mortgage rates have fallen by more than three percentage points equivalent to a reduction in interest costs of $1,360 a year on a $50,000 mortgage amortized over 25 years; and that, Mr. Speaker, is more than $113 a month; > with home ownership now more accessible to Canadians, housing starts are at an eight-year high and without the artificial boost of government subsidies.

For 1986 I estimate that our economy grew by 3.3 per cent, a growth rate which outpaced all other major industrial countries. This performance was achieved despite the severe domestic impacts of lower world grain and oil prices.

[Translation]

If I had to choose just one message for Canadians today, it would be this: Our economic renewal program is working. It is delivering more growth, more jobs and more opportunities now. It is building new confidence at home. By changing our image abroad, it is helping to attract the investment that Canada needs.

[English]

The benefits of our strong economic performance have not been evenly shared across the country. Some regions are hurting. We have helped provide support over the past year and we are working with provincial Governments and industry to find ways of developing a sound base for improved, sustained growth in all regions.

Better economic performance is the key to providing more help for disadvantaged Canadians wherever they live. As a result of this better performance, the Government has been able to direct more resources in a variety of ways to individuals most in need of assistance. We have improved social benefits. We will continue to work to increase assistance to those in need.

We intend to ensure that our program of economic renewal works for all Canadians. It is the key to future prosperity.

THE ECONOMIC OUTLOOK

This year will mark the fifth consecutive year of expansion. This economic upturn is the second longest of the postwar period. Prospects are excellent that it will continue.

Consumer confidence is strong. Interest rates are expected to remain relatively stable this year. Housing starts will continue at high levels and business investment will recover and grow modestly this year. Inflation will average less than 4 per cent in 1987 and decline through the year, leaving Canadians with more spending power. I am projecting real output growth of 2.8 per cent in 1987.

Our rate of job creation this year is expected once again to exceed that of any other major industrial country. Strong employment growth will be accompanied by large numbers of new entrants to the labour force, a sign that many once again are seeking work as a result of greater confidence about our economic prospects. I expect unemployment to decline through the year and the unemployment rate to fall to 9 per cent by year-end.

[Translation]

Our stronger competitive position leaves Canada well placed to benefit from expected improvements in international economic activity. Recent interest rate declines, exchange rate realignments and some firming of commodity prices will help increase Canadian sales in foreign markets.

[English]

CONTINUING FISCAL PROGRESS

Continued progress in improving our economic outlook, next year and beyond, depends on keeping to a fiscally responsible course.

We want our children and grandchildren to enjoy the opportunities they deserve by right. We must not burden them with a legacy of intolerable debt that robs their future of opportunity.

We want to improve our social programs and provide more help for those in need. We must restrain government debt that diverts tax dollars from human needs to interest payments.

We want Canada to retain the fullest flexibility to set its own course in a world of international change and competition. We must not allow ourselves to be constrained by a straitjacket of debt.

Dealing positively with deficits and the debt is, ultimately, about improving the well-being of Canadians. That is why we have made it clear from the beginning of our mandate that we are committed to fiscal responsibility.

• (1650)

THE FISCAL PRINCIPLES

Last September, I set out clearly the four fundamental principles that have guided our fiscal policy. We committed ourselves to these principles in 1984 and reaffirmed our commitment last September. We are acting to fulfill these commitments.

Our first principle is to reduce the growth of the national debt to less than that of the economy by the end of this decade.

When we took office, the public debt had been growing in the previous four years at an average annual rate of more than 23 per cent. The growth rate will be cut to 11 per cent in 1987-88 still too high, but a substantial improvement in a short time.

Our second principle is to achieve continuing, sizeable year-over-year reductions in the deficit.

When we took office, the deficit was more than $38 billion. We will meet the 1986-87 deficit target of $32 billion that I set out on September 18. By the end of 1987-88, in just three years, we will have reduced the deficit by almost 24 per cent.

Our third principle is to ensure substantial year-over-year reductions in the government's financial requirements.

When we took office, financial requirements, excluding foreign exchange requirements, were $29.8 billion. In the current fiscal year, financial requirements will fall by $5.8 billion to $24 billion. This will be cut further to $21.3 billion in 1987-88 a drop of 28.5 per cent in three years.

Our fourth principle is to ensure that the greater part of the progress is through expenditure restraint and disciplined management.

When we took office, government spending on all programs was growing by almost 14 per cent a year and had done so since the start of the decade. Since then, program spending has grown on average by only 2.8 per cent a year, well below the rate of inflation. Spending on government programs is being reduced in real terms and relative to the economy. About 63 per cent of the decline in the deficit relative to the size of the economy will have been achieved by reductions in spending.

The progress we have made in applying these principles is substantial. We are determined to continue until the job is done.

MAINTAINING FISCAL FLEXIBILITY

Last September, in recognition of the difficulties facing hard-hit regions and sectors of the economy, I set out a revised deficit target of $32 billion for 1986-87.

This decision to accept a slower decline in the deficit was taken consciously and positively to cushion the blow that lower world oil and grain prices have dealt to some parts of Canada. Even with this decision, the revised deficit target still represents a sizeable decline from the previous year, and is consistent with our fiscal principles.

But I also said in September that we would hold our program spending to the target of $89.4 billion that I set out last February. We will do so. We have responded to unforeseen developments in a fiscally responsible way. Where necessary, we have reallocated resources, reassessed priorities, made mid-course adjustments and acted to achieve our targets.

We will continue to set realistic and responsible expenditure targets and manage so that we can meet them.

[English]

Our fiscal situation in 1987-88 will continue to be affected by low prices for oil and grain. For example, additional support to grain farmers through ongoing federal programs will be $1.5 billion higher than I anticipated in my February 1986 budget. Similarly, corporate income tax revenues will be substantially lower than forecast a year ago.

Government actions to provide additional assistance to farmers and to the oil and gas industry will also affect expenditures and revenues in 1987-88. In October of last year we eliminated the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax, thereby providing additional cash flow to the petroleum industry. We enhanced the fuel tax rebate for all farmers, effectively removing the tax on their farm fuel. And to further ease the current financial problems of Canadian grain farmers, we are providing a $1 million Special Canadian Grains Program.

Some Hon. Members: Billion.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): One billion dollars. John Wise almost got me there!

In these changed economic circumstances, the prospective deficit for 1987-88 would have been higher than appropriate to maintain an acceptable rate of progress toward our medium-term goals. I am therefore proposing a combination of management initiatives and revenue increases to keep us on course. These measures will enable us to get the deficit down to $29.3 billion in 1987-88.

MANAGEMENT INITIATIVES

Better management of government operations and public resources has played an important part in our renewal program. We have cut back overhead costs and operating and maintenance expenditures. We have increased cost recovery and asset sales. All of these initiatives will have ongoing fiscal impacts.

[English]

ACCELERATED REMITTANCE OF SOURCE DEDUCTIONS

We are actively pursuing areas where further cash management improvements can be made. One of these is the regularity with which employers remit to the government deductions they make for their employees on account of personal income taxes, and contributions to the Unemployment Insurance Fund and the Canada Pension Plan. These deductions are now remitted monthly.

For larger employers, I am proposing to move to twice-monthly remittances, effective January 1, 1988. This will not increase taxes paid by individuals.

Smaller businesses, those with average monthly remittances of less than $15,000, will be excluded from this requirement.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

Over the last three years, we have allocated substantial resources to defence even while we have had to control overall expenditures. To help meet our fiscal objectives in the coming year, the Government will defer $200 million from 1987-88 defence spending levels and restore this amount in 1988-89. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) has confirmed that this action will not affect the rebuilding of our defence capability that is now under way. Annual defence spending in 1987-88 will be $1.4 billion higher than when we took office. As a share of program expenditures, defence spending will have risen from 10.1 per cent in 1984-85 to 10.8 per cent in 1987-88.

This year the Government will release a White Paper which will provide Canadians with our view of the appropriate direction for defence policy to the end of the century. This White Paper will deal with program priorities and resource implications.

OFFICIAL DEVELOPMENT ASSISTANCE

Since taking office, this government has given strong support to developing countries. Canada's foreign aid expenditures next year will be $450 million higher than in 1984-85, an increase of 21.8 per cent. We have also been acting to improve the quality of our aid and to manage these growing expenditures more effectively. For example, we are now providing all financial assistance in the form of grants rather than loans. We have taken measures in other areas too, such as in providing duty-free access to our market for a range of goods from Commonwealth Caribbean countries.

• (1700)

The Government is committed to achieving the objective of 0.5 per cent of GNP for official development assistance. We expect that through adjustments in cash management and in our international reporting practices we will be able to meet this commitment while contributing to fiscal restraint. This will result in cash savings of $150 million in 1987-88.

AIR TRANSPORTATION COST RECOVERY

The air transportation tax recovers part of the cost of providing air transport facilities and services. In order to recover a greater proportion of these costs from those who benefit from the services, and to help provide enhanced levels of security at airports, I am proposing to increase this tax. Accordingly, on the recommendation of my colleague, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), I am announcing that the air transportation tax will be increased by $4 per ticket effective May 1, 1987 for tickets purchased in Canada and August 1 for tickets purchased abroad. The existing $50 ceiling on the tax will continue to apply.

REVENUE MEASURES

I am announcing today a limited number of tax increases.

The excise tax on motor gasoline and diesel fuel will be increased by one cent per litre effective tonight. The rebate to farm producers will be increased accordingly, so that farmers will continue to be relieved of effectively all tax on their fuels for farm use.

[Translation]

I am also acting to equalize the federal sales and excise tax burden on leaded and unleaded gasoline. This action will support the efforts of my colleague, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), who has announced a program in co-operation with the petroleum and automobile industries to eliminate lead emissions from gasoline by the end of 1992.

[English]

Effective tonight I am increasing the excise tax on cigarettes and other tobacco products by 4 per cent.

As of July 1, 1987, I am extending the federal sales tax to a limited range of snack foods that compete with similar products that are currently taxed.

The rules introduced in 1982 with respect to the taxation of accrued interest on investments are very complex. I am continuing to examine ways to simplify these rules. As an interim step I am proposing to expand eligibility for prescribed annuities to include persons of all ages. I am also proposing, for the 1987 taxation year, to provide relief for holders of pre-1982 compound interest bonds, including over one million holders of Canada Savings Bonds.

To complement the major reforms that my colleague, the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin), has announced, I intend to propose amendments to the Income Tax Act to allow investment dealers to offer self-administered RRSPs directly to their clients. I will be consulting with the securities industry before proposing these amendments.

I am also announcing that the Indian Remission Order will be extended for 1987. My colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight), and I are developing proposals to rationalize the treatment of employment income of Indians on reserves, in order to eliminate the need for the Remission Order. We will consult further with Indian representatives and other interested parties when the proposals are made public.

TRADE AND TARIFFS

The government has been working to make Canada a more effective world trader. In today's rigorously competitive world, we will not always see eye to eye with our trading partners. We must act to resolve our differences in a manner that is fair but that does not compromise Canada's interests.

The government acted last June when the United States moved to impose a 35-per-cent tariff on Canadian exports of red cedar shakes and shingles. We needed to send a strong expression of concern to the United States about their protectionist action. We had to guard against a loss of Canadian jobs.

Our response was two-fold: We took measures to increase tariff rates on a number of goods imported principally from the U.S. We also tightened controls on the export to the United States of cedar logs and bolts.

As a result, the U.S. tariff has not enhanced the competitiveness of the American shakes and shingles industry. Its main impact has been to increase costs to American consumers.

The export controls have protected the competitive position of the Canadian industry, which has been able to return to almost normal production levels. Having achieved our purpose, we can maintain the strength of our response by confining it to the restrictions on the export of cedar logs and bolts.

Accordingly, I am announcing that for all products affected by the tariff measures the rates of duty are being reduced, effective tomorrow, to those rates in effect immediately prior to June 6, 1986. This will reinstate duty-free entry for books, computer parts and Christmas trees.

The export restrictions on cedar logs and bolts which have proved essential in safeguarding the Canadian shakes and shingles industry in the face of the American tariff will remain in place as long as necessary.

Canada's steel industry faces serious competitive problems due to the world-wide excess in steel-making capacity. To help our industry deal with these circumstances, the Government has decided, effective tomorrow, to withdraw the General Preferential Tariff on imports of most specialty and carbon steel mill products.

I am also proposing a number of miscellaneous tariff changes, primarily in response to requests from Canadian industry for changes in tariff rates and to fulfill obligations undertaken in the Tokyo Round of GATT negotiations. One of these measures is the elimination of the tariff on mobile veterinary clinics, a move which many Members of this House have advocated.

TAX AVOIDANCE

I am concerned that abusive tax-avoidance transactions are a significant factor in eroding corporate tax revenues. They also undermine respect for the integrity of our tax system. Such schemes permit some corporations often large and profitable to avoid paying income tax.

[English]

The Government has acted repeatedly to curb these and other such abuses with a series of specific rules. Where required, the Government will continue this practice. In addition, to ensure a fairer and more stable income tax system, I intend to propose improved general anti-avoidance rules as part of tax reform.

Recent court decisions have called into question the fair price provisions of the Excise Tax Act. These judgments have raised the possibility of substantial erosion of the sales tax base. In the light of the jurisprudence, I am examining ways to rectify the law to prevent this erosion.

To further address this concern, I am moving the point at which sales tax is applied on a number of specific commodities from the manufacturer's level to the wholesale level. The goods affected include microwave ovens, televisions, video recorders, snack foods, candy and confectionery, and pet foods. These changes will ensure a fairer application of the sales tax to both domestic and foreign products and thus reduce the bias favouring imports under the current system.

These actions are in line with our commitment to bring greater equity to the federal tax system.

TAX REFORM

Comprehensive tax reform presents one of the most promising opportunities we have to strengthen our economy and improve the quality of our society.

A fairer and more effective tax system will complement and reinforce economic opportunities for individual Canadians. Tax reform will inaugurate a new era of tax fairness, permitting us to rely less on personal income taxes and provide improved benefits for low-income Canadians. It will play a crucial role in stimulating investment, encouraging dynamic business activity, job creation and economic growth. It will give Canadians greater assurance that revenue goals will be met, and met fairly.

Last October I set out the Government's guidelines for reforming the tax system. I am developing an integrated proposal for tax reform in all three areas of our tax system personal, corporate and federal sales tax. I have benefited greatly from the views I have received from individuals and corporations, from labour unions and business associations, from women's groups, from the voluntary sector, from provincial governments and Members of Parliament.

[Translation]

The central objective of tax reform is to reduce tax rates. There can be no better incentive for growth, investment, savings and job creation. Lower income tax rates will allow all Canadians to keep more of each additional dollar they earn to spend, save or invest as they choose.

[English]

To get tax rates down, we must reduce tax preferences and broaden the tax base. A wide range of specific tax preferences, of primary benefit to corporations and upper-income earners, would be eliminated, reduced or modified right across the system.

What tax reform would mean for taxpayers is that those who have been making extensive use of tax preferences will pay more tax. Those who have been making little use of preferences will pay less tax. The large majority of individual taxpayers will pay less tax in total.

PERSONAL INCOME TAX

I aim to achieve substantially lower personal income tax rates and significantly fewer tax brackets.

[English]

I am also considering the conversion of personal exemptions and some deductions to tax credits. Exemptions favour those in higher income brackets. A tax credit, on the other hand, provides the same dollar benefit to taxpayers regardless of their income level. With a system of tax credits, lower-income taxpayers would receive greater benefit than they do now, while those at higher income levels would receive less.

In my last Budget, I announced the Government's intention to propose further measures to reform our system of social transfers and related tax provisions. Converting exemptions into appropriate credits would represent a major step toward fulfilling this commitment. It would also reduce the number of low-income individuals who now pay personal income tax.

I am also examining ways in which I can build on the existing refundable sales tax credit that I introduced in my last Budget. By increasing the credit and paying it more frequently we can make our personal tax system more progressive.

CORPORATE INCOME TAX

Our fundamental strategy in reviewing the corporate income tax is to ensure that profitable corporations pay their fair share.

[English]

I have been seriously concerned about tax loss trading. It has made our corporate tax revenues uncertain. It has led to profitable corporations not paying tax. To preserve respect for the tax system, we must further reduce the source of the problem by cutting back special corporate tax write-offs. This is the direction I set out in May 1985 and acted on last February.

Cutting back corporate preferences would balance the reduction of corporate tax rates to levels competitive with those in other countries, while providing increased and more stable corporate tax revenues.

FEDERAL SALES TAX

The federal sales tax is unfair and inefficient. It is a silent killer of jobs. It levies a higher tax on average, one-third higher on domestic manufacturers than on competing imports. This leads to plant closures and lost Canadian jobs. The base is narrow and similar goods can have very different burdens of tax. The sales tax is coming under increasing pressure and reform is increasingly urgent.

We will aim to broaden the base and lower the rates, and ensure equal treatment of imports and domestic goods. Building on the existing sales tax credit would improve the fairness of our system.

Over all, the major thrust of tax reform will be to simplify the tax system, to limit special preferences and provide incentives through lower tax rates. To achieve these goals, we must deal with the three elements of our tax system together, as an integrated package.

[Translation]

Our proposal for tax reform will make our tax system more fair, less complex and more understandable. It will reflect our commitment to economic progress and social justice.

[English]

I am tabling the document I referred to earlier, as well as supplementary information, and Notices of Ways and Means Motions covering tax and tariff measures. I will also, pursuant to a motion of this House, introduce today a borrowing authority Bill. In light of the increase in Canada's foreign exchange reserves, I will be seeking supplementary authority for this fiscal year. I will also be seeking borrowing authority for 1987-88.

I hope that this bill will be dealt with expeditiously.

CONCLUSION

This Government has acted on initiatives of fundamental importance to the Canadian economy. This reflects the scope of the challenge that we inherited, and our determination to meet that challenge. We will continue moving forward with our program for economic renewal in a carefully managed, consistent way.

From the standpoint of new initiatives, this Budget represents a breathing space prior to the presentation of major proposals for tax reform. But I have also made clear in this Budget that while great progress has been made on the nation's deficit problems, there can be no holiday from fiscal responsibility.

The challenge is to maintain sound, steady management of both the fiscal and economic situation. We are meeting that challenge. We will continue to do so.

I have talked with and heard from thousands of Canadians these past two and a half years. I can say with confidence that Canadians from coast to coast will not be daunted by the challenges ahead.

[English]

Economic renewal is not just a test of government. It is a test of all of us and our ability to share in the effort to build a stronger economy. And the most important test of our success is the economy's progress, the progress of all Canadians who, individually and collectively, make the economy what it is.

• (1720)

Our progress is measured in growth, jobs and new opportunities and in a stronger economy better able to meet the challenge of rapid economic change and increasing international competition.

The results tell the story. We are on the right track. Our program of economic renewal is working. And we have only begun to see the results that we as a nation can achieve if we stay the course. We must continue to build a stronger, more dynamic and more flexible economy that works for the benefit of all Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-40, an Act to provide borrowing authority.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, in concluding his Budget Speech, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) observed with great satisfaction that his Government was, as he said, on the right track. I want to ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) how he could possibly reach that conclusion in his speech today, when in seven or eight out of ten provinces in this country, the unemployment rate is higher now, after nearly three years of Conservative Government, than it was during the 1982 economic recession.

Mr. Speaker, the statement the Minister of Finance just made, and I say statement because I can hardly call this a Budget, is a statement without vision. It is a statement that totally ignores the realities of this country.

[English]

This is a Budget without vision. This is a Budget which does not address any of the real problems which Canadians have to face. Fifteen days ago when the Minister of Finance announced that with this Budget there would be no tax reform, I said that the Budget would be a go-nowhere-and-do-nothing Budget.

An Hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Garneau: I do not think, as my colleague has just said, that I was right on. I made a mistake. It is worse than I thought it was going to be. Not only did the Minister increase taxes for the third year in a row, but he did not announce any program, any budgetary measure, to try to solve the problem which exists between the rich and the poor of this country. He did not try to solve the problem of the regions of this country where the rate of unemployment is higher today than it was during the height of the world recession which we suffered in 1982.

This is not a Budget. It is a disgrace to call this paper a Budget. I would like to ask the Minister why he put us through this charade. He could have issued, as he has done on many occasions, a press release to announce an increase in taxes for people who buy gasoline, another cent a litre increase, after the three cent increase he announced in his last Budget. This could have been announced through a press release, and a Ways and Means Motion could have been tabled in the House.

I think it is a real disgrace that the Government did not use the opportunity to table a real Budget, a Budget with a vision, one which will take into consideration the problems which Canadians face, particularly in our regions. I think the Minister missed a very good opportunity. This exercise is not worth the time we have spent this afternoon. I think the Minister should have stayed home and issued a press release.

We have these documents with the Budget, and I see no projection of revenue, no projection of the rate of interest, and no projection of employment. We have only the figures for the fiscal year 1987-88. I am sure all Hon. Members, particularly those who have been Members of Parliament for a number of years, have heard the Tories asking the former Government to table a five-year plan. I recall the former Minister of Finance, the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), when he was in the Opposition, asking the Government to table a five-year plan. This is what the Liberal Government decided to do. This Minister of Finance did not bother to give this information. We do not even know what he thinks the price of oil will be in 1988. He only gave us the price of oil for 1987.

What we have is not a Budget. I was expecting that at least the Minister would keep the promises he made last year. Last year the Minister made three promises: first, that we would have tax reform this year; second, that we would have a reform in our social programs; and, third, that he would bring the deficit under $30 billion. The Minister today is telling us that the deficit will be $32 billion for 1986-87. If the Minister had not sold Teleglobe, the deficit would have been higher this year than it was for the last complete year of the Liberal administration, even after four years of economic recovery, and after a tax increase of $6 billion last year. And there will be more increases this year. The deficit of the Tory Government for the year 1986-87 would have been higher than the deficit of 1983-84, which was the last complete year of the Liberal administration. That is a real shame. The Minister is not delivering on his target of reducing the deficit.

The Minister of Finance has failed to live up to his commitment because the deficit would be higher, almost at the same level this year as it was for the last full year of the Liberal administration. There is no program, no improvement in social programs as he had promised last year.

And the tax reform, Mr. Speaker, now I really thought the Minister of Finance was a serious and responsible man. But he is juggling with facts. He is deceiving himself and, worse still, he is trying to make Canadians believe that this Government is serious.

What is the Government strategy, Mr. Speaker? Very simple. Taxes increased by several billion dollars in 1985 and again in 1986. Automatic tax increases have been incorporated in the tax laws so that this year Canadian taxpayers have paid, will pay during the next fiscal year when the Budget stands at $43 billion, 48 per cent more, in personal income taxes than the last year under a Liberal administration. Yes 48 per cent.

Taxes went up by $6 billion last year, 90 per cent paid by individuals, less than 10 per cent by corporations. The Minister of Finance is talking about tax reform. What is he going to do? First he raised taxes, then he will tell us that the reform will correct his own mistakes. I think the whole thing is a joke.

Mr. Speaker, there is nothing in this Budget for the farmers or for western wheat producers. There is nothing for the fishermen who are now faced with the consequences of the agreement that was signed with France. Nothing has been done to deal with our energy problems. Just imagine, Mr. Speaker: The price of gas will have gone up 4 cents a litre since this Government came to power, and we don't even have a national energy policy. These are the same people who criticized the previous administration for increasing the price of gas to help create a fund that would help the energy industry. They kept the tax and increased it four times, but they have nothing for the energy industry.

Mr. Speaker, there is nothing either to implement the formal commitment made by the Prime Minister (Mr.

Mulroney) in Vancouver. I was there as representative of my political Party. His was a very firm commitment to set up a day care system and provide the necessary funding. Nothing about that in the Budget.

Mr. Speaker, I think—

• (1730)

[English]

There is nothing for day care. There is nothing for fishermen. There is nothing for farmers. The tourist industry will be badly hurt by another increase in the price of gasoline. The tax of $4 more on an air ticket is a real Crosbie tax.

I think that the Government and the Minister of Finance should be ashamed. I will have much more to say, but for the time being I move:

That the debate be now adjourned.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

On motion of Mr. Garneau, debated adjourned.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to order made Friday, January 30, 1987, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 5.33 p.m.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 106, it is my honour and pleasure to present a petition which calls upon the Government to reconsider its decision to proceed with the changes to the Patent Act.

The petitioners believe that these changes would result in the cost of prescription drugs being significantly increased, thereby making it very difficult for average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition which has been signed by a number of residents in my riding from the communities of Flin Flon, Leaf Rapids, Gillam, Thompson, and The Pas.

In their petition the undersigned express their concern with the federal Government's intention to go ahead with Bill C-22. They urge the Parliament of Canada to reject the changes to the Patent Act. They believe that they will increase the prices of prescription drugs for the average Canadian consumer and will severely restrict their ability to buy necessary prescription drugs. They also believe that Bill C-22 will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health care needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and privilege to present a petition from residents of the communities of Sudbury, Hanmer, Val Caron, Lively, Levack, Capreol, and Dowling in the riding of Nickel Belt.

The petitioners call upon Parliament to withdraw Bill C-22, because they believe that the changes to the Patent Act would result in much higher prices for prescription drugs than they are at present.

They indicate that in fact it is another example of the Canadian Government's concession to the United States at the expense of average Canadians in the free trade negotiations. They humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals and to withdraw Bill C-22.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING PROMOTIONAL COUPONS AND SAVINGS STAMPS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-248, an Act to amend the Combines Investigation Act (promotional coupons and savings stamps).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

• (1110)

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to prevent a person or corporation from offering food items on a basis of coupons for reduced prices. It is to prevent this nation from becoming a nation of coupon clippers where food is concerned. The Bill clearly states that any discount on food should be direct, clear and above board and should not depend on whether or not you have clipped the coupon.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

BANKRUPTCY ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING PRIORITY OF CLAIMS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-249, an Act to amend the Bankruptcy Act (priority of claims).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to change the priority of payment of claims in case of bankruptcy. It would place the salaries and pension plan contributions of an employee at the top of the list when a bankruptcy takes place.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Committee Reports

CANADA PENSION PLAN

AMENDMENT RESPECTING SURVIVOR'S PENSION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-250, an Act to amend the Canada Pension Plan (survivor's pension).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to amend the Canada Pension Plan Act to remove the discrimination on the basis of age which presently exists with respect to survivors. If the survivor is under the age of 35, he or she is ineligible to collect the survivor's benefits under the Canada Pension Plan Act. This Bill of mine would remove that discriminatory provision.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

LOBBYISTS REGISTRATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-251, an Act to register lobbyists.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, this Bill is to provide for the registration of lobbyists. The Bill clearly states that the people of Canada are entitled to know who is doing what to whom and for how much. It is most apropos at this particular time in our political history.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: It has been brought to the attention of the Chair that there is a committee report to be introduced this morning and, with the consent of the Chamber, I would like to recognize the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan).

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

PRESENTATION OF THIRD REPORT OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): I thank you and my colleagues for the consent, Mr. Speaker.

I have the honour to present the third report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments in both official languages. This report contains a proposed motion pursuant to Standing Order 44 to revoke the fruit, vegetables and honey regulations, Chapter 875 of the Consolidated Regulations of Canada, a copy of which is attached.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Wednesday, February 18, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, in the few minutes following the financial statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), I was able to make some initial comments which I may recall for the benefit of the Members of this House.

First of all, I felt this was a statement without vision, a Budget that failed to address any of the real problems which Canadians have to face, especially in our various regions, and that contained no forecasts and no plan of action. The Budget brought down yesterday did not tell us how the Department of Finance, the Minister of Finace and the Government expects the Government's expenditures and revenues to evolve in the years to come. I also said that because of this, yesterday's exercise was an exercise in futility and that the Minister should have issued a press release and tabled some Ways and Means motions instead of putting us through the process of the lock-up, with the press, and putting the CBC and other television stations to a lot of expense for nothing.

In any case, Mr. Speaker, before I start my speech, and since I realize that any criticism we make will be branded as partisan, the Opposition always being against the Government, I would like to offer three samples of reactions reported in the press this morning. First, from the business world, and if I may, I will read to you from this morning's La Presse, which said the following:

The business world gives Michael Wilson a "D", D as in disappointment.

The President of the Canadian Federation of Independent Businesses calls the Wilson Budget dull and insignificant. "It is soporific and lacks sex appeal", added the Director General of the Federation in Quebec, Pierre Lauzier.

That is what business had to say.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer to comments by a well-known columnist, Don McGillivray, whose column, which is popular in financial circles, appeared in the Ottawa Citizen under the following headline:

• (1120)

—"This fiscal trickery shames Wilson". The column reads in part:

Michael Wilson's junk food budget won't do much to nourish Tory hopes for a political turnaround—

One trick is getting employers to send income tax twice a month instead of once a month. This allows Wilson to borrow $1.2 billion from the 1988-89 fiscal year. But for this, the deficit would have been $30.5 billion.

The old Mike Wilson, the straight arrow who ran a clumsy but honest campaign for the Tory leadership in 1983, would have scorned such a trick.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, after comments from the business world and from a political observer, with emphasis on the Budget's financial orientation, I would now like to quote what was said by the Quebec Minister of Finance. I think this is the first time a Minister of Finance has threatened to sue the Canadian Government. I read the following in this morning's Gazette:

[English]

Quebec Finance Minister Gérard-D. Levesque said yesterday he's considering suing the federal Government because its budget ignores the problems of transfer payments to the provinces.

Ottawa should live up to its "legal, moral and constitutional obligation"—

"I was expecting—I was hoping that somewhere in the budget, there would be an indication of fairer intentions with regard to Quebec," Levesque said.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, three comments from three different groups indicate how, through the eyes of responsible people, Canadians perceived the Budget that was brought down yesterday.

Mr. Speaker, in his Budget Speech yesterday the Minister of Finance mentioned that the economic situation in Canada was, to borrow his expression, sound, and in many ways enviable.

However, if we look at the situation in the regions, and we see the growing gap between rich and poor, between the Maritimes, the West and Central Canada, we must conclude that as far as our economic policy is concerned, the Conservatives have failed miserably. The situation is certainly not as rosy as the Minister would have us believe, and that is what I intend to demonstrate in my speech today.

First of all, I will discuss regional disparity. I will talk about the growing gap between rich and poor. I will analyse the tax increases contained in this Budget as well as the hidden increases resulting from previous Budgets. I will deal with tax reform and I will make a number of suggestions to the Minister in this very important respect. I will comment on federal-provincial relations and subsequently give an analysis of our trade policy, especially as it concerns the United States, and in concluding, I intend to move a motion condemning the Government.

[English]

As Charles Dickens wrote in A Tale of Two Cities, "It was the best of times, it was the worst of times". I would respectfully suggest that these words, which have echoed through the centuries, have a special significance to many Canadians today. The election of this Government on September 4, 1984, was to be the dawning of a new golden age. However, it has become in reality a time of shattered dreams and broken promises. It has become a time when the Government chose to give to the privileged few, and take from the many.

History will record that this Government turned its back not only on the regions, but also on the most disadvantaged in our land. In short, this Government's economic policy, and more particularly the last three Budgets, including yesterday's, are the Tory tale of two Canadas, one Canada composed of the haves and one Canada composed of the have-nots.

Let us look first at unemployment in Canada. At the height of the world recession of 1982, the worst one since the Second World War, the unemployment rate in Canada was 11 per cent. In January, 1987, last month, it was 9.7 per cent, a decrease of 1.3 per cent. Is it from this figure that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) draws his pride?

After four years of world-wide economic recovery, Canada is still far from the 7.5 per cent pre-recession unemployment rate. From January 1986 to January 1987, Canada has produced a net increase of only 115,000 new jobs. However, a closer examination of even this low number would show an extremely alarming trend. Last year in Ontario, 127,000 new jobs were created. This means that in the rest of Canada, there was an over-all net loss of 12,000 jobs. I would repeat that there was a net loss of 12,000 jobs in all of the provinces outside the Province of Ontario and, I should say, outside the Golden Horseshoe.

You may well ask, Mr. Speaker, why we have created so few new jobs in relative terms. The answer is simple. It is largely due to the Government's misguided economic policies. The Canadian economy is now suffering from the effects of the Tories' huge tax increases which, as predicted, have put the brakes on a nation-wide economic recovery, which was well under way when this Government took office in September, 1984. We on this side of the House warned the Minister of this. I made a speech telling the Minister that the huge increases in taxes would have an effect in 12 or 18 months, and this is what we are now experiencing. The huge tax increases have taken money away from the consumers' pockets. Now they have less money to spend and we see the effects of this on the economy and particularly on job creation.

Let me be more specific. Looking at Canada's regions, the unemployment rate in Newfoundland at the height of the 1982 recession was 16.8 per cent, and it is now, as of January, 1987, 19.2 per cent. This is a significant increase in unemployment, not a decrease as the Government would have us believe.

If we look closely, we see this pattern repeated in many regions right across Canada. In Prince Edward Island, unemployment has risen from 12.9 per cent in 1982 to 14.6 per cent in January, 1987. That is not a decrease, it is an increase. In Nova Scotia, the unemployment rate went from 13.2 per cent to 14.3 per cent in the same period of time. In Alberta, it went from 7.7 per cent to 10.8 per cent. In British Columbia, as I am sure my Leader knows very well, unemployment has risen from 12.1 per cent, at the time of the economic crisis of 1982, to 13.6 per cent. In other words, unemployment in both the East and the West is worse today than it was in 1982 during the height of the world-wide recession.

Let us be honest. Canadians living in St. John's, Charlottetown, Halifax, Quebec City, Calgary and Vancouver know that the regions of Canada are today experiencing a recession which is as bad as the one Canada and the world faced in 1982. The Minister told us in his Budget that everything was fine because one area of Canada, the Golden Horseshoe, is doing well. Is this the Tories' version of "what is good for General Motors is good for the United States"? The situation calls for action, not for more empty promises.

It is imperative that the Government address in a much more serious manner the problems facing our regions, things such as the plight of our hard pressed farmers, fishermen, sawmills and our energy industry. We Liberals believe in equality of opportunity, wherever you may live in this great land. We believe that Canada is only as strong as its most disadvantaged region, and thus we believe that Canadians expect the Government to do much more.

Let me examine the disastrous record of the Government in the crucial area of regional development. The first thing the Prime Minister's Government did when it came to power, after conveniently forgetting most of its election promises, was to cut the budget for regional development. First action. In 1984-85, funds allocated to the economic and regional development spending envelope totalled $14.9 billion. This year the spending envelope would have been as low as $9.1 billion if it were not for the inclusion of the grain subsidy program which the Government had already announced. Nevertheless, the total economic and regional development spending envelope, including this, has been slashed from $14.9 billion to $12 billion. That is a drop of nearly $3 billion in less than three years of Conservative Government. Considering the desperate needs of the regions, the Government has a lot to answer for to all Canadians.

That is not the only thing the Government has done to help cripple the regions. You probably remember that in his previous Budget the Minister of Finance phased out the incentives provided by way of investment tax credits to the regions, with the one exception of the Maritimes. In other words, the Government, without prior consultation or full public debate, has dismantled both major components of Canada's regional development strategy which were put in place by previous Liberal Governments. Has the Government replaced those with another and better strategy? No, the regions have been left out in the cold. This lack of government strategy for regional development can be summarized in two cold words: laissez-faire.

The Government trusts that market forces will overcome all regional disadvantages. Let us look at the result of that policy as it affects investment in the private sector. According to a survey conducted by the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion which was published on January 12, 1987, the investment intentions of Canadian businesses will barely increase in 1987 after declining in 1986. It is clear that we have not even recovered to the 1985 business investment level. It is thus difficult to understand how market forces are going to redress regional economic imbalances.

I would like to examine the regional picture for business investment intentions more closely, as they are even more disturbing. In Newfoundland, businesses expect to reduce their investment by 23 per cent, having already reduced it by 20 per cent in 1986. In Nova Scotia, businesses expect to reduce their investment by 16 per cent, having reduced it by 15 per cent last year. The outlook for the Northwest Territories is dismal. After spending $388 million in 1985, major businesses will invest only $59 million in 1987. This is certainly not a rosy outlook, and it means the regional economies will have to muddle through again this year without gaining much help from the Government.

What about the energy sector? The Government shamelessly increased taxes on gasoline by another cent a litre. Yet there is no program to support our energy producers. It is clear to me, as it is to my colleagues and all Canadians, that this laissez-faire policy of the Government is not working, in that it is only a pretext for inaction by a dogmatic and heartless Conservative Government.

Mr. Speaker, poverty is another problem which worries a good many Canadians. Bread lines have become a common occurrence under this Government and it does not seem to realize the impact it has on society, particularly in urban centres. According to the National Council on Welfare, 3,916,000 Canadians were living under the threshold of poverty—almost 15 per cent of the entire population.

These people were living below the level of poverty, Mr. Speaker, so what did the Government do? It had the bright idea of taxing people whose family income was as much as $8,000 and $9,000 lower than what is called the poverty level, people earning $10,500 who now have to pay taxes as a result of the Budget of Conservative Governments.

Mr. Speaker, I emphasize that, according to figures released by the National Council on Welfare, one out of five children lives in poverty. This is quite unacceptable and I fail to understand why the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), confronted with such a situation, did not honour the commitment he made in his February 26 Budget speech last year to revamp social programs so as to correct this situation.

Mr. Speaker, the same figures reveal that 51 per cent of Canadian families now need the incomes of both father and mother to be able to live above the poverty level. Canadians were hopeful that the 1987 Budget would include concrete measures to relieve needy families. The Minister of Finance himself made that promise last year when he stated, and I quote his own words:

> In my next Budget, I intend to propose further measures to reform our system of social expenditures and related tax provisions.

Mr. Speaker, we have reached the point where the contents of the Budget speech barely mirrors the commitments made by a politician during an election campaign. We can understand that an electoral program may very well be implemented over four or five years. Sometimes a man may get carried away by enthusiasm. All politicians have been known to resort to fancy rhetoric now and again, but as a rule a Budget speech reflects Government policy and gives Canadians an idea of what the Government intends to do with respect to various programs.

The Minister of Finance has failed to keep any one of the three promises he made in his Budget last year.

So what does the Government now propose in what is pompously called a Budget speech which, as far as I am concerned, the Minister would have been better advised to deliver before his Etobicoke Conservative association? With respect to the reform of social programs, nothing, absolutely nothing, Mr. Speaker. Once again the Conservatives have blatantly ignored their own commitments. Does the inaction of the Minister of Finance stem from the fact that the Conservatives or most of them—I believe the Minister is somewhat more sensitive than many of his colleagues, and I would have hoped he would have shown evidence of his moral authority in this case—but I must conclude that the inaction of the Minister can only be traced back to the fact that most Conservatives consider social programs as shackles or a burden the State must carry around year in and year out. Are these Conservatives still dreaming about putting the axe to these social programs? If that is the approach of the Conservatives I will tell you right now, Mr. Speaker, that it is not my approach nor that of my colleagues on this side of the House.

Indeed, the social programs established by our Party over the past twenty years may and must be reviewed if only to make them more attuned to new conditions. I am not afraid to say openly that time has come—and then some—to set up a guaranteed annual income system.

In fact, the Liberal Party passed a resolution to this effect at its convention last November. We believe that an annual income formula can be developed and coordinated with the provinces in the interest of sound financial management. We also maintain that a guaranteed annual income formula would be more satisfactory as it would be more effective in encouraging people to remain and get back in the labour market. It is time to guarantee an adequate annual income to Canadians because the cumulative effect of the recent Conservative Budgets has been to widen the gap between the rich and the poor.

Mr. Speaker, when we speak of the gap between the rich and the poor in Canada caused by the three Conservative Budgets, we also have to consider the position of our young people. There is absolutely nothing in the Budget to meet the needs of the young unemployed. Nothing is said about meeting the commitment made by the Prime Minister of Canada in Vancouver last fall at the First Minister's Conference when he promised to implement a child care program.

• (1140)

—child care program.

As a result of the budget speech yesterday the Government gave the impression that taxpayers may breathe easier for a while. The Minister of Finance gave the impression yesterday that there would be no new personal income tax increases this year. I strongly disagree with that. Let us look at the true tax picture for Canadians. In the previous two Budgets, the Government literally built hidden tax hikes into the system in such a way that taxes will go up each year without any new public announcements and with no debate. The end result is that taxpayers are paying much higher taxes in each successive year, long after the initial legislative changes were made and forgotten.

The most important of these hidden built-in tax increases are the partial deindexing of the old tax system, the deindexing of the complete child benefit family package and, in 1987, the 3 per cent surtax which was only in effect for six months last year. Because of these and other measures, a married couple both of whom work and earn a total of $30,000 and have two children will pay close to $1,000 more in taxes in 1987. This is an increase of $376 over last year and is due to the built-in hidden tax increases and the new taxes introduced by the Conservative Government yesterday.

I do not know whether any other Minister of Finance in Canada has imposed close to the $1,000 of new taxes which the present Government imposed on families earning $30,000 in the last three Budgets. I suggest that these are indeed new tax increases, and the assurances of the Minister of Finance yesterday that there are no new tax hikes this year are simply false. Instead of increasing taxes openly, he crept in the back door when he hoped Canadians were asleep. I have news for the Minister. Canadians were not asleep and they know exactly what he is up to.

Mr. Speaker, if we add the new direct and indirect taxes introduced to this date by the Government and then subtract the amounts redistributed to taxpayers, more particularly the better-off in view of the $500,000 capital gains tax exemption, we realize that Canadians will be paying $7.6 billion more in taxes in 1987. Mr. Speaker, this means about $250 for each man, woman, child and senior citizen in Canada. For a family of four, it means an average of $1,000. It is a fair question to ask whether these tax increases have been equitably distributed among taxpayers. Have corporations paid their fair share? Have the rich paid more than the poor? The answer to these questions is no, Mr. Speaker, as I shall attempt to demonstrate.

According to the figures tabled by the Minister of Finance himself, in 1986, over 90 percent of new taxes have applied to individuals and something under 10 percent to corporations. Is such a distribution of the tax burden between individual taxpayers and corporations fair? This is what happened last year. Under the new Budget, in 1987-88, because of the removal of the oil and gas revenue tax, corporations will pay $2.1 billion less in taxes than in 1984-85. This represents an 18 per cent decrease in the total amounts paid by corporations over a three-year period. What about individual taxpayers? If we add personal income tax increases and sales taxes paid by individual consumers, we get a $22.8 billion increase for the same period, which means a 53 per cent increase for individuals compared with an 18 per cent decrease for corporations. Is this fair?

The Conservative Government has used its first two years in power to increase the sales tax three times. A first increase of 1 per cent came into effect on October 1, 1984, a second 1 per cent increase on January 1, 1986, and a third increase on April 1, 1986. This Budget will extend the sales tax to all sorts of snacks. Have you ever eaten snacks, Mr. Speaker? The Budget states that snacks will now be taxed. As the newspapers have said, even children are being taxed to help the Government make ends meet.

The tax on gasoline has also increased. It went up a first time by 2 cents a litre on September 3, 1985, a second time by 1 cent a litre on January 1, 1987, and, with this Budget, by 1 cent more a litre beginning last night. Within three years, the federal tax on gasoline will have increased by 4 cents a litre, from 1.5 cents a litre to 5 cents a litre. Mr. Speaker, 4 cents a litre means 18 cents a gallon. Those who were in this House in 1978 and 1979 will remember this figure of 4 cents a litre or 18 cents a gallon. This was the amount of the tax that the former Conservative Minister of Finance, the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) wanted to impose in 1979. The Conservatives are certainly consistent in their attack on motorists. It took them seven years, but they have succeeded in imposing their tax of 18 cents.

Mr. Speaker, we heard reactions to this Budget this morning. The Trucking Association is asking who will pay their cost increase. For them, costs are not going up by 1 cent, but rather by 4 cents in a very short period. And the Trucking Association stated that it takes between 15 days and one and a half months to get provincial jurisdiction authority to increase their user rates. Who is going to pay for the Minister's tax increase during that period? Truckers, who are already hit by the deregulation bill and will be losing on the value of their licences, in which they invested up to tens of thousands of dollars. What about municipalities? They were hoping for and expecting this government's assistance to renovate their infrastructures—not only has nothing been done for municipalities, but the tax has been increased. And on top of that, the Minister of Finance, according to Mr. McGillivray's statement I read earlier, played a little trick in his Budget. He borrowed $1.2 billion from next year, by forcing businesses to make remittals twice a month. This does not include large corporations only. Any construction employer with 20 employees will have to fill all those forms twice a month. So will municipalities. Municipalities are hit by the fuel tax increase. They are losing interest on their cash flow, because the Minister will get income tax payroll deductions on the first and the fifteenth of each month, and they will be left with a still more acute financial problem.

The conclusion is, Mr. Speaker, that this Government raised taxes at the beginning of its mandate, in 1985 and in 1986, and it has incorporated in the fiscal system automatic, hidden tax increases; it has pushed individual income taxes much higher, while lowering corporate ones; it has increased the tax burden of middle-income earners to a much higher degree than those of high-income earners; and to loop the loop, it has substantially raised indirect taxes that are hidden and more regressive than direct taxes. Such is this Government's record. And after that, Mr. Speaker, they have the gall to suggest they are considering some kind of tax reform that will remove inequity from the system, the same inequity the Minister himself created in his three budgets.

[English]

These tax increases must be put into context. During the last election campaign and immediately following the September, 1984 election, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance promised not to increase personal income taxes in order to reduce the deficit. The Minister said in the House on March 6, 1984, as reported at page 1827 of Hansard:

> We would cut spending. We would not raise taxes. Tax levels in Canada are already too high.

Later in the same speech he said:

If we raise taxes, we provide more funds for politicians and bureaucrats to spend.

After the election and his appointment as Minister of Finance, he increased personal income tax and all personal taxes by $22.7 billion. Can there be a more clear case of irresponsible promises, and promises on which the Government has not delivered? They were promises only to please the electorate. Is it any wonder that people now view the Prime Minister's Government so cynically?

Let us remember that when the Conservatives took power they claimed that the most urgent economic problem was the federal national debt. In his November 1984 Economic Statement, the Minister of Finance said:

Our immediate goal is to reduce the deficit through expenditure reductions and not through major tax increases.

I have cited two quotations from the Minister, one before the election and one after the election. The Minister did not deliver on either of his promises.

Not only does this constitute a broken promise, the deficit has barely been reduced and the debt is still rising. Let us consider the facts. The deficit for the last full year of Liberal administration was $32.4 billion. Four years later, in fiscal year 1986-87, after four years of economic recovery, the deficit will be $32 billion, despite the Government's having increased taxes by $6 billion, and despite its sale of Teleglobe in great haste in order to reduce artificially the budget deficit that otherwise would have been higher than in 1983-84. Although there has been $6 billion in new taxes, the deficit is at the same level as it was in 1983-84.

Where has all the money gone? What happened to the $6 billion of new taxes introduced by the Government in 1986? Did it go to uninsured depositors? Did it go to the prison in the Prime Minister's riding, or to large corporations as a $1 billion tax write-off? Did it go to pay for the $500,000 lifetime capital gains exemption for the privileged few? Was it for extravagant foreign trips by the Prime Minister? The list keeps growing.

Let us consider the debt. On July 9, 1984, a few months before the last election, the Prime Minister said: "(The Liberals) must answer for four years of financial management that has tripled the annual deficit and raised the net government debt to $180 billion, an amount that equals $16,500 owed by every taxpayer". What are the numbers today? According to the Minister of Finance's forecasts, the public debt at the end of fiscal year 1987-88 will be close to $300 billion. That is equivalent to approximately $26,700 owed by every taxpayer. In two years the Tories will have added approximately $10,000 in additional debt on the shoulders of every Canadian taxpayer.

Since mid-September, 1984, the date the Tories took power, the public debt has grown by approximately $125 billion. The public debt has increased by 67 per cent in the two and a half years since they took office. That increase is greater than any experienced during the term of any previous Minister of Finance.

It is not surprising that the discontent of Canadians toward the Government's administration is so clear.

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to turn to federal-provincial relations. In a Budget Speech that states Government policy, it is difficult to understand why there was no reference to financial agreements between the national government and provinces, because those five-year agreements terminate on March 31, 1987.

Mr. Speaker, unhappiness with the Federal Government is also reflected in federal-provincial relations because on a few occasions, the Minister of Finance succeeded in dumping part of his deficit into the provinces' laps. Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) boasts of having improved the federal-provincial climate. The honeymoon—the love-in as they called it at the time—is definitely over. Witness the announcement in this morning's papers by a provincial minister of Finance that he is sueing the Federal Government for not paying its dues. Mr. Speaker, we only have to look at the recent agreement on French fishing in Canadian waters, which was reached without previous participation by Newfoundland, to realise that the Atlantic provinces, like all other Canadians, are questioning this Tory Government's judgement and good faith in the area of federal-provincial relations. But there is another area on which federal-provincial relations are at daggers drawn—transfer payments from the Federal Government to provinces.

As you no doubt remember, Mr. Speaker, the previous Liberal Government enshrined in the Canadian Constitution the very principle of equalization payments. That principle that is now sacred is one of the cornerstones of national unity. By unilaterally reducing the growth of payments to provinces, this Tory Government is threatening the very integrity of the system. It is not by bluntly transferring its deficit to provinces that the Tory Government will improve the relations climate. Those cuts are happening at a time when provinces have taken often radical steps to contain their own deficits.

Let us look at the facts. Unilaterally, one year before fiscal agreements with provinces were to end, the Tory Government reduced the growth rate of its health and post-secondary education payments to provinces. This means provinces will be getting $8 billion less than expected from the central government over the next six years. And this at a time when needs are increasingly glaring as a result of ageing population, development of medical technology and increasing training needs for our young people. Yet, before the election, the Minister of Finance made a statement as recorded in Hansard of March 6, 1984. Some of my colleagues who were then sitting in the House of Commons may remember that speech made by the Minister of Finance. This is what he said in March 1984:

We made it quite clear that we will not cut spending on medicare. In fact, my colleagues have said that we would increase the commitment that we have made to medicare. Referring to education, as I indicated in my remarks earlier, upgrading of our human resources, education, training and retraining are key priorities, so no, there would be no cuts there.

That was in March 1984. You will remember that Mr. Wilson did not keep his own word and refused to hand over to Quebec $66 million as provisional equalization payment. Yet the Minister of State (Finance) (Mrs. McDougall) had stated in the House on April 18, 1985:

What the government is doing in this Bill is giving Manitoba, Quebec and Nova Scotia the benefit of this 95 per cent floor—

Quebec is the only province which did not benefit from such commitment that the Minister of State (Finance) (Mrs. McDougall) had officially reiterated in the House. Why the double standard? The shortfall for Quebec, if it was granted the 95 per cent floor promised by the Minister of State (Finance) in this House . . . those $66 million should be paid. The federal governement refuses. This is no doubt why the Quebec Minister of Finance is prosecuting the federal Minister of Finance to obtain what is due to his province.

You will also remember that more recently, the Minister of Finance decided to spread over a 2-year period the $175 million of supplementary assistance which he had promised to provide in a single payment to the five provinces most seriously affected by the changes; contrary to his promises, he is spreading the payment over two years. And we know that the agreement on equalization will be renegotiated this year. I do not know what surprise the Minister is saving up for the provinces, but I hope that past events will not be repeated because the provinces will end up with a still higher deficit and this on account of the Mulroney government. In his negotiations with the provinces, the federal governement must recognize a fact: the federal deficit is not caused by transfers to provinces. The size of those transfers as a percentage of the GNP has remained relatively and strikingly constant.

I urge the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to be fairer and to refrain from piling up his deficit on the back of the provinces.

I would also like to draw to your attention at this particular time, Mr. Speaker, the Government's shocking record with respect to the crucial area of adequate funding for research and development. In the Budget Speech of May, 1985, the Minister of Finance stated: "It is an ongoing priority of this Government to encourage a much improved research and development performance in Canada". That was the promise. Let us review the action. Since coming to power, the Conservatives have cut the budget of the National Research Council from $520 million in 1984 to $398 million in 1986. As announced in October, a further $20 million in cuts will be taken from the National Research Council budget next year. So much for Tory priorities and promises.

Canadians know that a healthy Canadian economy in the next century will depend on a strong research and technological base, and thus we are calling upon the Government to reverse its short-sighted research and development policies. Surely we owe at least this much to future generations of Canadians.

I would like now to address another issue which is a very crucial one for all Canadians, that is, tax reform. In his Budget Speech of February 26, 1986, the Minister of Finance gave a clear indication that he would table at an early date a concrete proposal on tax reform, more precisely, on the concept of a business transfer tax. A year has gone by and we are still waiting for the White Paper on the business transfer tax. On October 23, 1986, the Minister made another promise to the House, and I quote:

As the next step in the tax reform process, I intend to issue specific directions for change at the time of my Budget.

The Minister's time is up. The Budget has been brought down. But all we were given on January 30, 1987, and repeated yesterday, was yet another postponement to a vague date later in the spring. However, if people believe that the tax reform will take effect this spring, it is a false hope because the Minister said there would be a long consultation process. How are we to take seriously today's proposals, if yesterday's promises are broken?

By again postponing comprehensive tax reform, the Minister has made a mockery of his budget commitment. It makes nonsense of detailed and prudent planning if taxes, and therefore incomes and expenditures, cannot be accurately predicted, not only for every Canadian in business but also for the operations of the Government of Canada. Worse, it creates a climate of uncertainty. The Minister has excused his waiting game by talking about consultation. Consultation on what, thin air? How can groups and companies offer intelligent opinions if they have no tax reform proposals to which to refer? How can they plan ahead if the Government cannot surmount the political courage to table concrete proposals? Instead of constructive consultation, we have confusion, which is certainly not contributing to a stable economic environment.

Let me outline some of my thoughts on tax reform. First, I believe that tax reform must, at the outset, be revenue neutral in its effect in such a way that taxpayers know their Government is not trying out another gimmick just to squeeze still more tax money out of them. The primary objective of any tax reform must be to design a fairer and more equitable tax system.

Second, tax reform must do away with the greatest possible number of tax shelters. This is not to say that all tax shelters are wrong. On the contrary, some are necessary to stimulate growth in those areas and sectors of the economy which most need it. For example, with respect to the mining industry, the flow-through share is a type of tax measure which can be implemented by a Government which wants to help the mining industry in some regions of Canada. That is why I would strongly support that this be kept in the tax reform, even though the Minister and the Government might think, after seeing some exaggerations, that they must close some gap, or put in some regulations to ensure better control than the way this tax scheme is currently implemented.

Third, a logical and balanced tax reform proposal must reconsider all deductions and exemptions to see whether it would not be fairer that these be replaced by appropriate tax credits. I agree with what the Minister of Finance said yesterday in his Budget Speech. I made the same proposal on many occasions at the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs over the last few months. When I was Minister of Finance for Quebec, I moved in the same direction.

Fourth, a balanced proposal for tax reform must also consider the way in which individuals contribute to pension funds. If the Government's proposals on pension reform are enacted, the richer one is the more one will benefit from registered retirement savings plans. I suggest that the Government re-examine carefully the proposed changes to the RRSPs so as to bring as much fairness as possible into their implementation.

Fifth, tax reform will have to end the current $500,000 lifetime capital gains exemption. If the ultra-conservative Reagan administration has found the courage to tax fully practically all capital gains, then Canada, with a $32 billion deficit, should close that Tory tax loophole immediately.

Sixth, it strikes me that any tax reform proposal will have to deal seriously with the question of corporate taxes. Whilst we all recognize the need for a strong and profitable corporate sector, we must also be concerned with the many stories in recent years of corporations which, through tax loopholes, are not paying their fair share of taxes. Among other things, the Minister of Finance must look carefully at the way that the dividends earned and paid on term preferred shares are treated fiscally. Most of the time the actual system has been used by corporations not only to avoid paying taxes, but also to concentrate power in fewer hands.

Seventh, the Government has proposed on a number of occasions replacing the federal sales tax with a business transfer tax or a value added tax. Since the mechanism of such a tax is very complex, and no specific information has been forthcoming, I urge the Government to table its business transfer tax proposal, or a White Paper, forthwith, so that taxpayers will be able to understand clearly what the Government has in mind.

It is only reasonable that Canadians withhold their comments until they see more of the Government's proposal, particularly in view of the administrative headaches and costs that would be created for small businesses, farmers, home owners and the service industries. Let me state here and now that if the Government implements such a business transfer tax, then the sales tax credits introduced last year would have to be substantially increased so that lower income Canadians will not be further penalized by the Government. By its regressive nature, the business transfer tax hits hardest at those on small fixed incomes, those with the least ability to pay.

Finally, tax reform should maintain the over-all progressiveness of the tax system. The United States now has a personal tax system with only two rates. I feel that this is insufficient. A progressive system, in which the rich pay relatively more as a proportion of their income than the poor, is the key to a fairer system.

To summarize, let us have an approach to tax reform which is open, all-encompassing, and which has as its objective the lowering of marginal rates which will eliminate the lowest income Canadians from the tax rolls, and which will reduce the ever-increasing tax burden on middle-income Canadians. Let us have tax reform which is equitable and just, and which re-establishes equity between the rich and the poor. Up until now the net result of the last three Budgets has been to widen the gap between those who have and those who have not. This is not the Canadian way. We also need a better tax balance between the individual taxpayer and the corporate taxpayer. Full tax reform is essential to ensure that every partner in the Canadian economy—each and every taxpayer—knows that his or her tax dollar is being levied and spent in the fairest and most efficient way possible.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal now with the issue of our trade relations with the United States. The Budget Speech provides all Parliamentarians with a unique opportunity to examine some aspects, in fact all aspects of the Government's economic policy.

Under the present circumstances, how can we not raise the important issue of international trade with a special emphasis on our trade relations with GATT member countries generally, but more specifically our current negotiations with the United States to achieve global free trade?

Ever since this Conservative Government has been in power, it seems to have favoured the ad-hoc approach in the area of trade policies. It is a government without a sense of direction. A government which is more concerned about individual trees than about the whole forest.

Mr. Speaker, it is imperative that a government's action should be determined by its vision of the country. Its policies should be coordinated within the framework of a global strategy. This Conservative Government under Mr. Mulroney seems to have no plan of operation. Trying to do too many different things at once, it behaves as though all of Canada's ills and remedies originate in the United States.

From that premise, this Conservative Government has made a series of serious mistakes, but the most serious by far has been to assume that if Canada did not insist quite so much on the United States respecting its political sovereignty, economic benefits would ensue from that which in turn would make it possible for us in the end, so they say, to recover our full political integrity.

Mr. Speaker, this mistake has resulted in the following compromises: The United States could operate their Polar Sea ice-breaker in our waters without our permission or even disapproval.

Also, the Conservatives have abolished the Foreign Investment Review Board.

The Conservative Government has adopted a very conciliatory attitude in connection with Canada's participation in setting up Star Wars technology.

Under pressure mainly from the United States, the Conservative Government has dismantled the National Energy Policy.

Following his Shamrock Summit with President Reagan in Quebec City, the Prime Minister, without previous consultation, without Parliamentary debate, and without consultation with the provinces, has involved Canada in global free trade negotiations with the United States.

Finally, unable to deal with the stubborn attitude of the Americans over the lumber issue the Government backed down. Instead of appealing its case to the GATT tribunal, it has decided to impose an additional 15 per cent tax on all our lumber exports to the United States. It is as though the Mulroney Government had chosen to beat up on the Canadian lumber industry instead of letting Washington do it.

This compromise of our political sovereignty has led to all sorts of consequences.

First, to meet the United States expectations, our country must review its regional development policy for fear of being accused of disloyal competition.

Second, to meet the demands of global free trade, it is compelled to deregulate transportation and trucking industries, to open our regions to American companies and accept de facto the principle of increased concentration of our transport industries in the hands of major American corporations.

Third, because of this compromise, Ontario and Quebec have felt the need to review their financial institutions regulations.

Fourth, the Federal Government, leading the way, has announced its own deregulation in this area, so that within the next few years, our brokers are likely to be controlled by the American giants or by some Canadian giant banking institutions.

If we deregulate the industry, if we deregulate banks and financial institutions, if we deregulate transport companies, in short if we let market forces be the sole determinants of our developement, do we not run the risk of bringing about considerable change in the pattern of economic activity in Canada? Little by little, will not our pattern of development necessarily adopt a North to South axis? What will become of East-West economic flows? In the conservative perspective of laisser faire, what will remain of Canada tomorrow as a political entity? What political bond will be strong enough to withstand the economic pressures of market forces favoring North-South flows? Will deregulation result in the American giants controlling an ever increasing part of our economy?

Canadians who live in Quebec and who have fought for Canadian unity are wondering whether they have fought that battle only to see the Conservatives put forward an economic policy whereby the regions of Canada shall see their future as being almost exclusively in the South.

The policy of the Conservative Government is harmful not only in terms of its vision of our relationships with the outside world, but also in terms of fiscal and social policies and in the area of culture. That is because, sooner or later, the conservative postulate which I have mentioned will do away with the most fundamental elements ot the Canadian mosaic and the Canadian way of life.

The conservative postulate whereby any and all problems and solutions find their source south of the border has vast repercussions.

What is most distressing is that while the government has set the wheels in motion, inadvertantly perhaps, it has no overall plan of action, it has not analysed the consequences and it has not sought from the Canadian people a consensus to move in that direction.

I say to this Government that it had better measure the consequences of its policies before it is too late. I ask this government what kind of Canada it wants to build for the future. Does this government know?

Mr. Speaker, I am not anti-American, anti-French, anti-English or anti anything, I am pro-Canadian, and in raising this problem I am only carrying out my duty as a Member of Parliament who has pledged to defend Canada's interests. If the objective of political integrity for our country is an important value, if being free and independent Canadians means anything, everything else, our policies as well as our attitudes, must follow.

Mr. Speaker, I do not underestimate the extent and the difficulty of the option I put forward. It has great and important implications and involves sacrifices.

However, I am convinced it is an option Canadians have always been aware of and have always accepted as a reasonable price they had to pay to be and remain free and independent citizens. The Liberal approach invites Canadians to meet the North American challenge in a way that differs considerably from what the Conservatives suggest.

For Liberals, the integrity of political sovereignty is a fundamental, unquestionable and non-negotiable value. Because our major premise differs from that of the Conservatives, inevitably our policies and approaches also differ. Hence our cautious approach on free-trade negociations with the United States. Hence the importance for us of east-west economic links, as well as national policies supported by regional development programs. Hence the importance also for Liberals of preserving our cultural industries. Hence the importance for us, the Official Opposition, to secure the protection of our environment, our lakes, our rivers, our forests and our parkland. Hence, the importance for us of a viable agricultural industry which will require, in order to survive, the marketing mecanisms developed over the years. Hence, finally, the importance for us Liberals of protecting our social programs, that is medicare, hospital insurance, social welfare, and so on.

Our approach, Mr. Speaker, is not negative. Liberals do not refuse all form of bilateral negotiation with the United States. On the contrary! However, we say that such talks should be held under the umbrella of more comprehensive rules, negotiated at the international level. That is the process Canada has always used and it served us well up to now.

Mr. Speaker, a Liberal is, in principle, in favor of dismantling tariff and non-tariff barriers, because a Liberal believes in individual and trade freedom as well as in the free movement of goods and people. However, a Liberal also believes that a country has the right, and indeed the duty, to protect and enhance national sovereignty.

Mr. Speaker, what I have just said is not new. I said it in an article published in the magazine De Novo, more than a year ago. I would like to repeat the main points I developped in that article.

The real challenge in Canada today is to protect our competitive capability, but that challenge must be met by all Canadians, male and female. It is them who will have to make, by themselves and for themselves, the necessary democratic decisions.

If we want to maintain a competitive economy, our companies must have, among other things, sufficient profits to finance their own research and development. This means that those companies which are not at the present time viable, will have to adapt, modernize or disappear. It also means a greater reliance on automation of production lines. The salary levels of some groups of individuals might be adversely affected by such changes, and that is why we, in the Liberal Party, are advocating the creation of special programs of employment support and regional development, to act as buffers between the old economy and the new one.

Canada must meet the challenge of international competition, and I am convinced it can do it, but it will require a lot of change. If we enter a global free trade agreement with the United States, the pressure of U.S. markets, of Washington, will force us to adjust. If we want to compete with Japanese, Korean or European products and services, the pressure from these markets will force us to adjust. Adjustments will be necessary if we are to keep our markets in Europe, in the Pacific Rim countries or in the United States.

I think the present Government is wrong when it tries to put all our eggs in the U.S. basket. He should not have acted in the dark, without any preparation, without any comprehensive plan and without having received a clear mandate from Canadian men and women, not only a mandate on the substance of this initiative but a mandate on the way to take this step.

Instead of proposing Canadians to increase our competitiveness, instead of proposing readjustment programs developed here in Canada for Canadians, the Mulroney Government decided to ask Washington to discipline us. Unlike the Conservative postulate, the Liberal strategy is similar to the one contained in the interim report of the Joint Committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons tabled in September 1985.

Canada must exert pressures on its European, Japanese and American trade partners if multilateral negotiations are to be successfull. In its negotiations, Canada must consider not only the matter of tariffs barriers but also the question of non tariff barriers. It is in multilateral talks that the independence of Canada is least threatened.

Successful negotiations at that level would allow a better integration of the Canadian economy into the world economy without affecting our political sovereignty. Those negotiations which will last for a few years will give Canada and the provinces, in conjunction with the industry and unions, time to implement necessary and appropriate programs to make the transition between the old and the new economy easier.

Mr. Speaker, trade, taxation, tax policies, regional development policies are all but tools that a country uses to achieve more comprehensive goals about which a consensus has developed with time through the democratic process. That is a prerequisite to all talks with our neighbours to the south. I feel that for a lack of concern, inadvertently or by ignorance, the Conservatives have departed from the national consensus and Canadians are aware of it as shown in the polls.

Of course, outrageous patronage partly explains why the Conservatives have lost public support but that dramatic fall in popularity of the Government must be considered in a broader context. Surely the Canadian people reject so strongly the Conservatives today (we were told this morning that only 22 percent of Canadians support the Conservative Party) because they feel that they are breaking up the national consensus which has developed for the last forty years. I also feel that Canadians realize that the Mulroney Government has no action plan that has been well thought-out and democratically decided upon. Everything that is on the table is an impossible puzzle. We move pieces around, we put them here and there, without any notion of the final picture.

The Minister of External Affairs (Mr. Clark) travels around the world like a pilgrim looking for his luggage, but what Canadian message is he delivering? What policy is he conveying?

The Minister of International Trade (Miss Carney), for her part, is carrying along in her briefcase an all-purpose mandate from the Prime Minister which allows her to negotiate, to be tough at times but to give in whenever the pressure gets too hard.

As for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), he must follow a bad score and improvise in turn a budget policy, and a tax reform which he has delayed time and time again.

Mr. Speaker, each minister has a few pieces of the puzzle in hand, and takes care of his own business but there is no conductor to really give the tempo, to coordinate initiatives and indicate to the Canadian people the direction of Government action.

• (1220)

[English]

I would like to conclude by returning to the underlying economic approach of this Government and this Budget.

Everything is not okay, far from it. Canadians do not believe in the concept that "I'm all right Jack". They care about the hardships facing their neighbours and the regions of Canada.

We expect the Government to show much more leadership in attacking the growing gap between the rich and the poor and between the have and have not regions of the country. It is simply not good enough to leave Canada's future only in the hands of market forces.

This country had a national dream, a dream of equality of opportunity no matter where one lives. We Liberals will not let this dream die.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Garneau: Canadians expect nothing more, and they will accept nothing less.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I now wish to move:

That the motion of the Minister of Finance be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and by substituting the following:

—This House condemns the government for:

-presenting a budget that increases taxes on individual Canadians for the third year in a row, totalling billions and billions of dollars;

-widening the gap between the rich and the poor by their ill-advised and heartless fiscal policy;

-cutting the crucial Regional Economic Development Budget, for the third year in a row;

-once again delaying the long promised essential Tax Reform program thereby postponing any attempt to create more fairness to our tax system which is being eroded under the present conservative administration.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We shall resume debate on the amendment with the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). But first, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), on a point of order.

• (1230)

[English]

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been discussions among the Parties. I think you will find, as is the usual tradition, that there is unanimous agreement to permit the first speaker for the New Democratic Party to have, if necessary, the same time as the first speaker for the Official Opposition.

May I suggest that, since the hour is getting on, the Hon. Member's speech be heard and the question and answer period be held until perhaps after three o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: What the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) has just said is, in fact, a tradition of the House. Is there unanimous consent to that effect?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have had 20 years of experience in watching Budgets both as a journalist and as a politician in both this Chamber and in the Ontario Legislature. I venture to say that this is the emptiest and the most insignificant Budget that I have seen in all those 20 years of experience.

Since the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) decided to defer the tax reform to be fair to all Canadians, there was a challenge in the Budget that he be frank with Canadians in recognizing the situation that many Canadians face. There was a challenge that the Minister of Finance provide real leadership in managing the economy in ways which every Canadian would benefit from. Unfortunately, the Minister was not fair. He was not frank and he has failed to provide the leadership we need. This was a Budget of lost opportunities from a Minister of Finance who has demonstrated that he fails to understand how most Canadians perceive how the economy is progressing and how the actions and economic policies of the Government affect them.

The Minister was so busy patting himself on the back yesterday that I thought his arm was going to fall off on several occasions. There is something seriously wrong with his perceptions because the Minister and his Government speak of Canada having a strong economic performance, yet the recent Gallup poll, not this morning's but the one of a month ago, indicates that more than 60 per cent of Canadians think otherwise. They think that the Government's record in economic management is weak. Are 15 million Canadians wrong, Mr. Speaker? Or is the view that the Minister of Finance has acquired, either from the top floor of the Ministry of Finance or from the riding of Etobicoke, somehow different from what most Canadians are experiencing?

Let me quote the Minister. He said the following both in French and in English:

If I had to choose just one message for Canadians today, it would be this: Our economic renewal program is working. It is delivering more growth, more jobs and more opportunities now. It is building new confidence at home. By changing our image abroad, it is helping to attract the investment that Canada needs.

Those were the words of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Jelinek: Those are the facts.

Mr. Cassidy: That is not what 60 per cent of Canadians perceive. If you judge from today's Gallup poll, Mr. Speaker, I would venture to say that that is not what 78 per cent of Canadians see. We are seeing a situation where the ratings of the Conservative Party's popular support are running across the unemployment figures in the Province of Newfoundland.

When I look at how things are now, I find that 15 million Canadians are right, and it is the Government and the Minister of Finance that are out of touch with what is happening to average Canadians and their families today, five years after the recession of 1981-82 is meant to be over. If those Canadians had one message for the Minister of Finance it would be this:

[Translation]

The Minister's agenda for economic renewal is not working yet for us. It is not providing the growth and the jobs our region needs. Our confidence is starting to wane. We don't know about our image outside the country, but we think it is time jobs were created for us, for our neighbours and our children. And now is the time to start.

[English]

That is the message, Mr. Speaker, that many Canadians will be giving to the Minister of Finance, not just today but in the coming weeks.

I spoke to my friend, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), last night. I asked him what the reaction was in Kamloops—Shuswap. As he will say in the debate later today, the reaction from the interior of British Columbia is one of shock that the Minister of Finance could have done so little when the Budget is a once a year opportunity to set an economic direction for the country.

It is the same in the Chicoutimi area. There is nothing for people in the Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean area, nothing at all, except for assurances by the Minister of Finance that all is well if you happen to be within a certain radius of the CN Tower, in Toronto.

In Etobicoke, the Minister's riding, the unemployment rate is about 5 per cent. This points to a good rate of growth for people in the Toronto area. It does not reflect the situation in the rest of the country. It certainly does not reflect the situation in the riding of the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), where the unemployment rate is 15 per cent, compared with 5 per cent in the riding of the Minister of Finance.

[English]

What do we do about two economies in the country where people within view of the CN Tower in Toronto are experiencing some growth, some economic revival, which is good for that part of the country, even though there are still people homeless and standing in lines at soup kitchens in Metropolitan Toronto? Some progress is being made there, but here in Ottawa the unemployment rate has been around 9 per cent, in Windsor it is around 9 per cent, and in most parts of the rest of the country the unemployment rate is much higher than that. The message, Mr. Speaker, is that the economic renewal program is just not working.

The Finance Minister said, and I quote:

> And we have only begun to see the results that we as a nation can achieve if we stay the course.

Given the fact that unemployment today in certain provinces is higher than it was at the height of the recession in 1981-82, I am not really sure what the Minister of Finance means. Does he mean that, given some more time, he can raise the unemployment rate more in certain parts of the country? Is that the program of the Minister of Finance? Surely not. Yet we have to judge a Government not just on the basis of its words but also on the basis of its deeds. I suggest that it is time for the Government of Canada to show the leadership Canadians want and need. We got very little in this Budget.

What we got in the Budget was a new target for the deficit, a bit of flim-flam in order to bring the deficit down below $30 billion. We got some deferral on defence, and a very unfortunate decision to defer $150 million in expenditures on Canada's program of aid to the Third World. We got an acceleration of tax payments by larger employers, which will affect the cash flow of the private sector to the benefit of the cash flow of the public sector. We got the withdrawal of the retaliatory tariff on Christmas trees, American books and on computer parts, tariffs which should never have been put in place. On top of that, we got a $650 million further tax increase on ordinary Canadians. However, that is all.

As I said last night, I wonder for what on earth we all came together. I am worried about the trend this Budget is setting because of my constituents in Ottawa Centre. Traditionally, year after year, they provide hotel services, restaurants and taxis for the army of analysts, stock brokers, lobbyists, journalists, pundits and observers who flock to Ottawa in order to participate in the annual ritual of the Budget. Between the marvellous amount of telecommunications and the emptiness of the Budget the Minister of Finance gave us, those people will not come to Ottawa every year just after Winterlude. There will be an economic slump in my riding because the Budget contains nothing at all.

The Minister had a unique opportunity, but it is an opportunity which he has in fact blown. He could, and I think he should, have looked across Canada in the mid-term of this Government to set a direction for Canada for the 1980s and 1990s. Everyone who observes politics knows the degree to which the Conservatives have fallen in public esteem. It is not just the scandals which have led people to that conclusion, although that has been the icing on the cake. There has been a basic feeling that there is a lack of competence, a lack of vision, no sense of direction and a lack of leadership on the part of the Conservative Government, beginning at the level of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and going right down through the Cabinet and the whole Party. That is bad for Canadians. As one Member of Parliament and as one citizen of Canada, I regret to see a Government that is behaving now as though it has been in power for 10 or 15 years and has totally run out of ideas. The difference is that this gang ran out of ideas before its first term had even come to an end.

A number of thoughtful commentators have been saying, I think justifiably, that if the Conservative Party intends and wishes to stay in power after 1988 or 1989, it will have to mend its ways in a very serious way. Conservative Members will have to take steps really to understand what is happening in Canada and to show Canadians they care about the situation, not just in downtown Toronto, not just in the Golden Horseshoe but in the interior of British Columbia. They must show that they care about what is happening to lumber producers in northern Quebec, to fishermen and women in the Maritimes and the Atlantic provinces, and about the fact that the oil industry has collapsed in much of Alberta and very little has been put in its place. That is the kind of caring we will have to see from the Government, and that is why this Budget is such a lost opportunity.

People in the Ministry of Finance maintain that the reason the tax reform has been deferred relates to the technical problems involved in putting it all together. I do not know whether or not that is true, although again I believe the Minister must be accountable for the fact that once again we have promises in tax reform but not performance. Tax reform has been delayed once again. With tax reform as the centrepiece of this Budget out of the way, there was the opportunity for some thoughtful reflection on Canada's direction and on what the Government intended to do about it. It was a time to reflect on the situation faced by average Canadians.

Over the past two years, middle and low-income Canadians have faced growing financial strains. The average family has borne tax increases under this Government of $1,350 per annum, and will face another $65 to $100 increase with this week's Budget. The vast bulk of Conservative tax increases have been borne by average families, whereas the burden of corporate taxes has continued to fall. This is an aspect of the situation we face which people are telling the Government they believe is unjustified.

Let me be more specific. According to the figures in the Budget Papers, taxes on individuals will have risen by 52 per cent between the year the Conservatives took office in 1984-85 and 1987-88. That is an extremely heavy burden at a time when people are struggling to get out from under after bearing the consequences of the recession. What is happening on the corporate side? In that same period, corporate taxes have dropped by 18 per cent. What kind of justice is that? The Government has promised tax reform, but it has raised taxes on individuals by 52 per cent and cut the tax take from corporations by 18 per cent in that period of time.

Perhaps I can put it in another graphic way. The Minister of Finance has said that tomorrow, the day after or sometime in the future, he will increase taxes on corporations. Since his Party took power, the share of federal government revenues coming from corporate tax has dropped from 13.2 per cent of total revenues to 10.5 per cent of total revenues in 1987-88. At the same time, personal income tax revenues have risen from 41.5 per cent of government revenues to 46.4 per cent of government revenues. Not that long ago, about a generation ago, personal and corporate taxes provided an equal share of federal government revenues. It has now got to the point where four and a half times the revenues come from the personal sector. The Minister of Finance has tolerated a $2.5 billion shortfall in corporate tax revenues in 1987-88 over what he was forecasting just a few months ago.

The Tory rhetoric about tax reform touches all the right bases, but their practice shows what the Government really believes. When we go to the hustings in 1988 or 1989, we will judge this Government not just on the basis of its rhetoric but on what it will actually have achieved. I suggest that all the evidence shows it will have achieved damned little for ordinary Canadians in the way of tax fairness, and for that I think we are all the sorrier because there was some real promise. The Minister of Finance takes pride in inching the deficit down below $30 billion this year, a target he missed in 1986-87. I predict he will probably miss that target again in the forthcoming fiscal year. We are asked to share his pride in the reduction of interest rates, although they are still two points above those of the United States. We are asked to share his pride in the steadiness of the inflation rate, although it is two points above that of the United States. We are asked to share his pride in the fact that unemployment rates have on average come down from their peak and fell by almost 1 per cent between 1985 and 1986. Sure, I am glad that occurred, but in 1987, while Canada may be doing better than most of the rest of the industrialized world, we are being told that our unemployment rates will stay above 9 per cent nationally.

According to Finance Department officials to whom we talked in the lock-up yesterday, the average unemployment rate in 1987-88, up to March 1988, will be 9.2 per cent. That is a reduction of less than half a percentage point from the average rate that prevailed in 1986-87. That is a measure of how much the Government has given up on its target of jobs, jobs, jobs which propelled the Prime Minister and his Party to office in September 1984.

I grant that Canada is doing better than other countries in terms of job creation and those things, but we must do that because the demographics of Canada are far different from those of West Germany, The United Kingdom or most other OECD countries. We have to run very fast in order to stay ahead. What the Government is doing now is essentially treading water rather than getting us ahead and coming to grips with the unemployment problem and the problems of unfair regional disparities that continue to persist in Canada.

The Minister of Finance is the Dr. Pangloss of Canadian politics. Everything is for the best and the best of all possible worlds. There is barely a cloud to be seen in the sky. If any poverty still exists in Canada, one would hardly know it from the Budget Speech. In fact, the word "poverty" is not even mentioned. There is no reference to the situation experienced by four million of our fellow Canadians, men, women and children, I regret to say, who live in poverty. That must have come from orders from above because during the Throne Speech, which I presume was authored by the Prime Minister, poverty was not mentioned either. Somehow the Government is blind to the plight of 20 per cent of our fellow Canadians.

If the free trade talks are stalled and our economic relations with Washington are getting increasingly obstreperous, the Minister did not appear to have noticed. In fact, he seems to have forgotten those golden words, "free trade", because they do not appear in the speech either. The cod war with France which has the Atlantic provinces aflame rates barely a mention. Canada has quietly withdrawn the tariffs on books, computer parts and, thank goodness, Christmas trees, with which we fought our little trade war with the U.S. over shakes and shingles. We have found other ways to make our point, and U.S. consumers wound up paying the extra cost of the 35 per cent tariff. That is mentioned in the speech but as someone—who is concerned about the situation, especially in Quebec and in my own province of Ontario, I find it strange that there is no reference to the 15 per cent tax on softwood lumber that will have a devastating effect on the future of the lumber industry in the province of Quebec, in the Atlantic provinces and the province of Ontario. Mr. Speaker, there is no reference to a tax that will have a very serious impact on employment in many regions in these two provinces. The Minister of Finance mentioned the good news but ignored the bad news which is the situation in which most Canadians in our regions find themselves.

So if you are practically blind to the situation or the problem, then you can only perceive the situation in Canada in a rosy context which, unfortunately, does not depict reality.

Indeed we now have two economies in Canada—one as the Minister of Finance sees it the other which most Canadians know through personal experience. There are two kinds of people in Canada, Mr. Speaker, the rich and the poor. Prosperity can be seen mostly in a small region of the country, around the riding of the Minister of Finance, in southern Ontario. You need only travel to the extremities of Ontario and Canada to get a totally different picture.

Before coming to the House today I had a look at the most recent unemployment figures, and I found the situation appalling, Mr. Speaker. From January 1986 to January 1987, 137,000 new jobs were created in Canada, a net increase of 137,000 jobs. Now if we look where these jobs are we find that 132,000 of them are in Ontario, mostly in southern Ontario, and the others throughout the rest of Canada. In other words, from January 1986 to January 1987 only 5,000 new jobs were created in the rest the country, which means Quebec, western Canada, the Atlantic Provinces and the territories.

That, Mr. Speaker, is what is going on in our country. The greatest part of Canada is still living in a state of recession and depression, yet the Minister of Finance does not have any answer to offer. The unemployment rate in seven of our provinces is now higher than at any time since the 1981-82 recession. And even though average economic indicators have improved, most Canadians have yet to pull out of the recession.

I listened to my friend, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), as he went through a number of unemployment figures which I will mention as well because they are important and telling. However, I want to remind my hon. friend, a former provincial Minister of Finance, that when he cites the high levels of unemployment prevailing in most parts of Canada today, let him and his Party not forget that those rates came about when the Liberals were in power. The economic crisis we face in Canada today began when the Liberal Government was in power. The tax concessions to, and tax expenditures for, corporations, which have cost Canadians so much and contributed so heavily to our $29.5 billion deficit, began when the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) was the Minister of Finance in the early 1970s. He began a trend which has cost Canadians billions of dollars in increased taxes to pay for those gifts to corporations. The Liberal Party of Canada may sound progressive when in opposition, it may decide to take on a number of the points and policies advocated consistently over the years by the NDP, but let us be clear about one thing: Liberals are progressive in opposition but they behave exactly like Conservatives when they are in power. We have 20 years of experience to prove it.

Let me read into the record just how hard people are still being hit by unemployment. Last year in Newfoundland unemployment averaged 20 per cent. It had reached 16.8 per cent at its peak in 1982. Unemployment in Prince Edward Island climbed to 13 per cent in 1982. Last year the average was 13.6 per cent. Somehow these facts seem to have escaped the Minister of Finance. In Nova Scotia the unemployment rate was 13 per cent. Last year, after two years of Conservative economic stimulation and renewal, the average rate was 13.5 per cent. In New Brunswick, it averaged 14.6 per cent last year, one-half per cent higher than in 1982. In Saskatchewan, the 1986 unemployment rate was 7.7 per cent, 1.5 per cent higher than during the recession. Unemployment in Alberta last year averaged 9.8 per cent, 2 per cent higher than 1982. Unemployment in B.C. last year averaged 12.6 per cent and has climbed to 14.6 per cent since the end of Expo. In 1982, it was 12.1 per cent.

Let me put it in another way. The Government told us in the Throne Speech last year, with some pride, that the average income of Canadian families rose in real terms in 1985 for the first time in five years. Good for us. The averages are encouraging. However, I am reminded of the economist who drowned in a pond the average depth of which was 7.5 inches. That is the situation for an awful lot of Canadian families. Averages made by people who tool around the streets of Etobicoke in BMWs and Jaguars do not put bread on the table for a lot of average Canadians. In 1985, the average family income in Ontario was $41,765. That was 40 per cent higher than the average in Newfoundland and most other Atlantic provinces. In other words, we have the contrast between the rich and the poor in this country and the Government does not feel it is worth looking at.

The Government has to deal with regional disparities. If the Throne Speech is any indication, the Government is aware of the problem. I remember responding positively when I heard the Governor General read the Government's words in the Throne Speech, and I quote, "that regional disparity remains an unacceptable reality of Canadian life." Somehow it seems that the Government's position is the same; it is unacceptable but it is not going to do anything about it. It is not just the fact that unemployment rates are intolerably high in seven or eight of our provinces, it is the fact that the Government has done so little to try to correct those disparities and to provide leadership and a sense of hope in many parts of our country.

Between the year the Government came to power and this year, far from increasing its commitment to combating regional disparity the Government retreated in the face of regional disparities, and between 1984-85 and the forthcoming fiscal year it is cutting $3 billion or something like 25 per cent from the budget of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion and other regional and economic development programs. That is a tribute to Tory economic policies. The Government says regional disparity is an unacceptable reality, but its actions perpetuate those regional disparities. The Prime Minister told his constituents in Sept-Îles last weekend that the Budget was going to be thin on measures for regional development. We know he is often prone to hyperbole and I accuse him of that in this case. This Budget was not thin in what it did for regional economic development, it was non-existent.

You cannot maintain that any kind of meaningful economic recovery is taking place outside of Manitoba under an NDP Government, in southern Ontario where the NDP have also had a substantial influence, and in the region around Montreal. How quickly is that situation going to end? What is the Government going to do about it? What did it mean when it said that regional disparity was unacceptable? When I talked to Department of Finance officials, they said, "we are not going to do anything much because unemployment is going to stay at 9.2 per cent. In January of this year—you are motioning, Mr. Speaker, concerning extending the hour?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) asked that the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) be given time equal to that given to the member of the Official Opposition. That was granted by the House. We also agreed to proceed with the question and comment period after Question Period. However, does the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre wish to obtain unanimous consent to continue his speech at this time?

Mr. Cassidy: I would hope to have consent to continue at this time, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Very well. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: Thank you for giving me the opportunity to resume what I was saying. I will give a final statistic. There is a danger of going too heavily into statistics, but this one is telling. In January, 1987, there were 1,342,000 unemployed across Canada. That was a reduction of 5,000 from January, 1986. If every year we manage to eliminate 5,000 people from the unemployment rolls, were the Government given the time, which it will not be, in a mere 270 years we will succeed in wiping out unemployment in Canada. That is not in our lifetime, and it is certainly not good enough for average Canadians. Canadians want and deserve more than that. We cannot stay the course for 270 years, and no one wants to stay a course like that.

In vast areas of Canada in the future, more than 10 per cent of our workforce will be unemployed at any one time. Fifteen to 20 per cent of our young people are out of a job. I recognize that perhaps 10 per cent of the people unemployed today will be unemployed in a year's time. However, one family in four will have someone unemployed during the next 12 months. Half of us will likely have a close friend, a close relative or a neighbour who will be unemployed. Unemployment is becoming a pervasive fact of life which touches almost every Canadian home. It influences almost every decision. It undermines people's confidence, dignity, sense of worth, sense of purpose and ability to get on with their lives which, after all, is what the economy is all about.

Canadians say they want fairness. They say that it is not fair that corporations and rich Canadians get tax breaks while taxes keep increasing for the average family. They know it is not fair when Finance Ministers wring their hands but do nothing while chronic unemployment continues to blight the lives of 1.25 million Canadians. That is how many Canadians will be unemployed well into the 1990s with the economic policies of the Government.

Canadians do not accept the excuse that it is all right to have high unemployment because sometime in the future we will start to do better. That is very clear from the polls today which put the Government a the lowest level of any Government in power in Canada during the last 40 years. The Government has fallen to these unprecedented levels of popular support, not only because of a web of scandal, but because of its failure to manage the economy effectively.

I will return for a moment to the question of poverty, which was not even mentioned in the Budget Speech. The Economic Council's annual review last year had this to say about poverty in Canada: "Fifty years after the great depression the sight of line-ups at soup kitchens and voluntary food depots cannot but raise feelings of outrage at the senseless intimidation of human dignity and ability among despairing men and women who would prefer to be productively employed".

Those soup kitchens are to be found not only in the Maritimes or western Canada. I have them in my constituency. People working in my riding office are helping in the Dalhousie food bank because people whom I represent as a Member of Parliament cannot get enough food, they do not have enough income in order to make ends meet. Four million Canadian citizens are living in poverty. Is there any sense of outrage from the Government? Does the Minister of Finance feel that there is something wrong with that situation? I guess he does not, Mr. Speaker. He does not want to talk about that at all.

I suggest that it is time we had a Government which is outraged about poverty. It is about time we had a Government which is outraged and concerned about the need for child care which is acceptable to all Canadians. It is about time we had a Government which was more honest in recognizing the situation faced by our farmers and other ordinary Canadians from coast to coast rather than selectively editing the record in order to come up with good news and no bad news at all. It is about time we had a Government which will come clean about what will happen as a result of the equalization Bill, which I understand will come before us in a week or two and will probably once again victimize the provinces, particularly the Province of Manitoba.

I think it is time that we had initiatives and leadership from the Government to combat the very high rates of unemployment among young workers. Rather than boasting about the science-based industries which we have in Canada, it is time the Government decided to admit its failures in terms of supporting research and development and the need for real action on the part of Canada to put the country back in the forefront with research and development entering into the industrial policy in a very major way. It is time that we have a Government which will begin now to bring back fairness in terms of tax policies.

Canadians want a fair fiscal policy, but it is not what they see in this Budget. Last January, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) informed us that his tax reform would again be delayed. It is now expected to begin in April or May, after which there will be discussions at the Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, a bill in the fall, and finally perhaps a piece of legislation which will not come into effect before 1988 or maybe 1989.

We have had promises instead of action as concerns tax reform. Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, the Government should have given some indication that it is firmly committed to an effective tax reform.

Unfortunately, we have had another series of announcements and promises, but without any substance, and while taxes are increasing for ordinary Canadians, the wealthy are getting more concessions, such as the privilege of arranging for an RRSP with an investment broker instead of a trust company.

This means that people will be able to manage their RRSP's as though they were dealing with their own investments.

Mr. Speaker, the financial policy of this Government has been given a dramatic direction, but it has also been reactionary and regressive instead of progressive. Between 1986 and the new taxation year, taxes paid by individuals will increase by 13 per cent while corporate taxes will decrease by one-tenth of 1 percent. Is this based on the capacity to pay? Certainly not, Mr. Speaker, since corporate profits will increase by 20 percent and corporate taxes decrease, while individual incomes will increase by 4 or 5 percent and individual taxes by a higher percentage.

We estimate that, by 1990, the Conservatives will have increased individual taxes by up to $35 million while corporate taxes will have increased by under 1 percent of this amount. In each of their Budgets, the Conservatives have penalized average Canadians and omitted to impose real taxes on corporations. Where is the justice in this? Where is the credibility of the tax reform project of the Government? The answer is that there is no justice or credibility.

[English]

Effectively it promises jam tomorrow but never jam today, tax reductions tomorrow but never tax reductions today. Canadians will pay a cent a litre at the gas pumps to compensate for the removal of the PGRT. The average family will pay $65 to $100 on top of the $1,350 in tax increases they have already received in two previous Budgets from the Government. The average family will pay the 3 per cent surtax which was applied in the middle of last year to all Canadians. Meanwhile, on July 1 the tax rate of corporations will come down.

We were looking for the Government to send a signal to the average taxpayer that it is ready to eliminate the worst excesses of the tax system. We were looking for a signal as well that the Government will now start to collect the revenues which are available from tax reform both to create jobs and to start reducing the deficit. An important example of that kind of tax change would start with the totally unjustified exemption on capital gains, which was a giveaway in the 1985

Budget. That $500,000 capital gains exemption will cost $850 million because the Tories wanted to pay off their friends. Is it creating new jobs? Perhaps it is creating jobs in Florida, but the evidence is that in most regions of Canada it is not creating jobs at all. It is embedding unfairness in the tax system. There have been lots of rumours that there were going to be changes, but no action was taken.

The New Democratic Party tax probe pointed out a year ago that there were some 80,000 profitable Canadian companies which pay no tax at all. That figure is remarkably consistent year after year. It averages 75,000, 79,000, 80,000 companies per year, which means more than 25 per cent of companies do not pay tax. But did the Government move to make sure they will pay taxes this year? No, it did not. Did it indicate it even intends to do so? No, it did not. Again, there was no signal given.

We suggested that measures could have been taken which would have closed up the RRSP loopholes through the topping up which was brought in last year. The Government could have brought in revenues by closing off or by capping the tax exemption on capital gains. It could have begun to close the corporate tax loopholes not next year, but now. Was it done? No, not at all. That step was not taken. Instead, we are told that in 1987, we are going to lose $2.3 billion in revenues from corporations because of loss-carried-forwards and other fancy dodges which have enabled the corporations once again to pay less than their fair share of tax revenues.

I would now like to speak about the question of leadership. Leadership is what we looked for in a very real sense in this Budget. However, what we received from the Government this week has rightly been called a "do nothing" Budget. The economic and social challenges we face do not allow us the luxury of caretaker budget-making. Canadians have traditionally looked to their federal Government when there were major national problems to overcome, and that certainly applies now. That will not change. This country would not exist if it were not for the leadership of Sir John A. Macdonald in seeing that the Canadian Pacific Railway was built in order to link us from coast to coast.

The leadership of Conservative Governments, for example, has given us Air Canada, the Bank of Canada, and the Canadian National Railways. Many of these things came when Conservative Governments were in power. However, the neo-conservative doctrines from south of the border seem to have taken hold, and the need for that kind of leadership seems to have escaped the present Minister of Finance. I indicated the kind of leadership that we hoped to see in the area of tax fairness, but I think we need some other signals as well.

The Government should have given us a clear signal that it is committed to a real program of national child care with the federal Government helping to provide the resources with which this important program could be launched. My New Democratic colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell), has been working hard for the last year in order to ensure that the Special Committee on Child Care does in fact recommend what we New Democrats have been calling for for a long time, which is that Ottawa initiate a national program of affordable and accessible child care. It will cost about $320 million to launch that program. I suggest that that program and those expenditures are long overdue. We are concerned about job creation and we estimate that that program could create 50,000 jobs across the country in very short order. We certainly have a slack in terms of unemployed Canadians to meet those needs for workers, and I suggest that in terms of social justice, justice for families, for women, for both sexes, this is a program which is long overdue.

The kind of leadership we do not need is what my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom), referred to the other day when he exposed the shabby plans of the Government to bring in a western initiatives program, trying to dress it up as something new. As my colleague pointed out, the sum total of this new regional initiative for the West appears to be the money it will cost to change the shingles on the offices of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion in Saskatoon, Edmonton and Vancouver, as well as moving a few DRIE employees to a new office in Winnipeg. This kind of thing used to occur when the Liberals were in power. I do not know why the Conservatives have to copy-cat everything that was done by the Liberals when they were in power. When people talk about open Government, they are looking for something a lot more honest and substantial than that.

I want to talk now about the farmers who are concerned, and rightly so, about this Budget. In 1987-88, we will have a payment to farmers of $700 million, with the $1 billion payment, to compensate them for the disastrous economic situation into which they were plunged by the grain wars between the EEC and the United States in the 1986 crop year. What will happen with respect to that is that we have an ad hoc program for one year and no guarantee of consistency or continuation. Effectively, those farmers are not guaranteed in any way that they can pull through with the 1987 crop year. We need some openness and anticipation on that front.

I will come in a moment to a few specific proposals for economic development in our regions, but I suggest it is now time to make a fundamental change in our economic policy and in how we define our economic objectives. It is time for the Government to adopt a policy of full employment and to make the policy of full employment a centre-piece of economic strategy for the Government of Canada, not just in 1987 but in 1988, in 1989, and for the next decade, or whatever time it takes us to get there. I suggest in fact that within four or five years, we should be able to get to full employment, not just the 6 per cent the economists tell us is now the non-accelerating inflation rate of unemployment. We should be down to the unemployment rates which are experienced now in countries like Sweden and Austria and that we in this country experienced back in the 1950s and early 1960s. It should be possible to aim for rates of unemployment as low as 3 per cent or 4 per cent in Canada. I believe it is is possible and realistic to talk about reducing our unemployment rate by 2 per cent per annum, that is, by reducing the number of our unemployed Canadians by 250,000 per annum year after year until we get down to a level of unemployment which is in fact tolerable and acceptable to all Canadians, not just to the financiers and investment analysts on Bay Street who seem to provide the Minister of Finance with most of his advice.

The facts about unemployment in Canada are very clear. All the projections tell us we will continue to have 1.25 million unemployed Canadians for the foreseeable future. Through no fault of their own, they will live in idleness wondering what they did wrong in order that the economic system can continue to function and so employees are assured of a docile labour force which will not make too many waves.

Mr. Speaker, when opinion polls are taken, Canadians say that unemployment remain their most important concern. As the Youth Commissioner in Ontario, Mr. Ken Dryden, the former goal tender for the Montreal Canadiens, recently stated in his report: Canadians believe that unemployment is the main problem but the government does not respond. Governments act as they please and do what is possible but unemployment remains at an unacceptable level. If unemployment remains at an unacceptable level, it is too bad for the government. Mr. Speaker, in spite of the social cost of unemployment, in spite of the impact of unemployment on workers who find their life senseless and feel that they are being edged out of society, we are still tolerating an excessive unemployment rate.

Mr. Speaker, apparently social consensus to reduce unemployment is inexistent but it would be advisable to have one. And this is what I am advocating for the New Democratic Party. It is high time for us Canadians to start thinking seriously about our future and follow the lead of countries such as Norway, Sweden, Austria and, up to the 70, West Germany, who decided that a full employment policy is as important as any other objective in terms of political economy.

[English]

That is what I am suggesting we should be doing now. Like other countries, we should go beyond the prevailing situation where unemployment is systemic in Canada and somehow accepted as part of the system. We must change the system and plan for progressive reduction of unemployment to levels that are acceptable and tolerable. I suggest that 9 per cent unemployment across Canada is intolerable, with 13 per cent unemployment in many of our provinces and 19 per cent unemployment in Newfoundland. That is intolerable and the Government must make a commitment now to change that.

I suggest to the Minister of Finance that we are not only talking in abstracts. That may be the way his officials and advisers on Bay Street advise him, but the 1.25 million unemployed are real people.

Anyone who has visited a region of high unemployment knows that the whole community is affected. There is a sense of loss of opportunity, loss of mobility, and loss of dreams. There is no question that the high pool of unemployment that exists today helps to strengthen employers over employees, which can lead to unhealthy situations, to put it mildly, and can also adversely affect our productivity.

There is an intense sense of loss for the unemployed person because our society does not appreciate someone who is unemployed. Work is a major element in most people's lives because it gives them dignity, meaning, income, security, success, and self-esteem. In many ways, it is a major way for them to structure their time and provides a source of friends and social activities. It is difficult to hold up one's head when one does not have a job or know what to do, regardless of whether being unemployed is helping the over-all economic situation in the abstract.

I am sure most Members of Parliament from all Parties have shared my experience of being visited by unemployed people who have told how they feel depressed by that experience. For example, I advertised a job in my riding office a few months ago, for which 180 people applied. That is not an unusual number, and I believe that half of the people who applied were qualified and would have done a good job in the riding office for me and my constituents.

Often, employers do not answer letters from unemployed people. They feel harassed by a requirement in the unemployment insurance regulations by which they must go to a dozen job interviews every week in a depressed region, when they and the unemployment insurance officials know that there are barely a dozen employers in that area and there is no point in continually knocking on the doors if there are no jobs available.

While more humane treatment may help, it is not the answer. The real answer is to have fewer unemployed in our country. We should make the commitment now to lower our unemployment rate to levels that prevail in Europe. I admit that it will not be easy. I also grant that the New Democratic Party will come under close scrutiny for our economic policies in the coming months because of our position in the polls and that we will be contending as a major party in the forthcoming federal election. I will put before the people of Canada our commitment to full employment next to the commitment of the Minister of Finance to reduce the deficit. I believe Canadians will say that if they have a choice, they will choose full employment over whether the deficit is $28 billion, $29 billion, or $30 billion. The experience in countries like Sweden is that the measures that are used to achieve full employment are a good deal less traumatic than the initial commitment to achieve that.

I say honestly that I do not believe that a New Democratic Government can guarantee that every person who is employed will have a job working on a bank of computer terminals with which they control world-wide communications for some multinationals, or that they will have a job devising some new technique by which psychiatric care is brought to people who are previously helpless. While I hope that occurs, many of the jobs will be just that, a job. However, many people who are unemployed would choose that over their current situation.

Many people, particularly young people, begin their careers with jobs that may not be outstanding but that provide experience on which they can progress. That essential growing experience is being denied them now. That very important commitment to full employment must come first. That will not be achieved without the Government's commitment to work with the provinces and municipalities, big and small businesses, the voluntary sector, and the labour movement in Canada. This will require a change of attitude that will influence all of our policies. It may require a review of tax policies that favour capital investment, which can cost jobs, and a consideration of tax policies that may help to create jobs rather than destroy them.

We must develop a co-operative approach in which all elements of society work together to achieve the goal of full unemployment, both at a national level and in every region and corner of Canada.

We need a sense of greater openness from employers in this country. I suggest that there are employers in Canada who still operate in the days of the great trusts of the 19th century in terms of their understanding of labour-management relations. They should open their books and reveal the situation to their employees. They should enlist their support, but make sure they benefit along with their sisters and brothers, their children and communities. I would like to see employers work together to create jobs rather than destroy them. I believe that men and women workers across the country will respond to that kind of challenge. The leadership for such an approach could and should come from the Government.

It is time to begin our journey on that long road toward full employment.

When I travel in Quebec, I am sometimes amazed by the steps taken by the former PQ Government which was quite progressive in several of its economic policies. For instance, for the various targetted regions and industries in the province of Quebec, there exist consultation panels made up of representatives from the various municipalities, regions, companies, unions, labours, volonteers who work together looking for means to reinforce the industries which may be threatened by Government policy changes or competition changes.

As recently as last year, I took part in Montreal in a conference which was really a huge consultation panel to try and develop a strategy for the futur of the city and region of Montreal for the next twenty years. Everybody was around the table. The participants had spent months preparing for that meeting. Mr. Speaker, you are well aware of this effort and how it was constructive in terms of planning, strategy, consensus as to what had to be done.

Mr. Speaker, if this approach has worked effectively in Quebec, it could also work effectively elsewhere in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I feel this is good and should be copied.

[English]

Let me give an example of exactly how that approach is working effectively with an NDP Government in another corner of Canada. In Yukon, which my friends there call the top left corner of Canada, the New Democratic Party has been in government for approximately one and a half years, with a majority government in the last few weeks. When they came to power, the unemployment rate in Yukon was approximately 16 per cent to 19 per cent. Today, that rate has been cut to 9 per cent, below the national average, and is still decreasing. That Government has functioned with policies which my friends describe as a combination of John Maynard Keynes and Fritz Schumacher. There has been a careful analysis of where Yukon was losing jobs and how jobs could be created by import subsidies and other measures, while working very constructively to gain a consensus from all elements of Yukon society. One of the most exciting things occurring in the Yukon is a program called Yukon 2000. It is a program of co-operative planning for the future of the Yukon up to the year 2000.

In just over one year the Yukon has used far more local wood and timber for the construction of government buildings than it did before. That wood creates jobs locally; the steel that was imported did not. The people of the Yukon will be burning wood waste in a central heating plant to be built in downtown Whitehorse. This means that they will be using local resources and creating local jobs rather than having to pay in exports of products from the Yukon for imported oil that comes from southern Canada.

There are many other examples of what the Government of the Yukon has been doing in a few short months, which suggests to me what we could be doing nationally. The Yukon is not Canada. The population there is less than 25,000. If the lessons there were to be applied to the rest of the country, I suggest that if every region and municipality, be they populated by 25,000, 100,000 or 250,000 people, were to get together and plan in the same way perhaps we could see some of those results as well. But that would require leadership on the part of the Government.

I wish to make a few specific suggestions in terms of helping to resolve the injustices of regional disparity in our country and provide the leadership that we lack in the Budget. We have been told by the Finance Minister that these initiatives should no longer be taken in Budgets. For God's sake, when will it all come together? I do not know the answer to that question. I do know that the forthcoming tax reform will not in itself have economic impacts that can be relied upon in terms of getting the economy back to work. That was the experience in the United States, and it will be the experience here.

We need action that is now, action that is dedicated to moving Canada to full employment and bringing down the rate of unemployment among younger Canadians. I wish to make a number of suggestions in that area. First, the Government of Canada should be co-operating with the provinces in which lumber is an important industry to ensure that there is a major program of reforestation in all those provinces. I regret the circumstances and the decision of the Government to impose the lumber export tax, and my Party has made our position clear on that particular question. Those tax revenues, if they are coming in now, should be used to protect and enhance a major resource so that we can leave it to our children and our grandchildren, as opposed to destroying it in this generation. That would be a major source of employment in one-industry towns in rural regions of Canada. We need programs for agriculture that will ensure government participation on more than an ad hoc basis to maintain the agricultural economic base in western Canada in light of what has been happening with the suicidal grain wars between the European Economic Community and the United States.

It is time that the Government of Canada, and it could have done it in this Budget, announced that it will definitely award the contract for the Polar-8 ice-breaker to shipyards in British Columbia where Versatile has, I believe, won the bidding, and that that be undertaken now as a job-creating initiative. It would be a sovereignty-defending initiative for all Canadians. I suggest that the design for the project be carried out using the Canadian experience and technology that was gained in the Beaufort Sea. I suggest that the Government should not thoughtlessly put to one side the experience that was gained in the Beaufort by Alberta companies by allowing a foreign shipbuilder to design the Polar-8 at costs which I understand will be much higher.

In terms of agriculture I say, on behalf of my friends from western Canada, is it not time we got Canagrex back in operation in order to ensure that we can effectively market Canadian agricultural products around the world? It should be reinstituted not just for our grain products but for our meat products as well. Is that not something that is a priority? I think that it should be. The child care proposals which I just put forward would create an estimated 50,000 jobs. In British Columbia and in the Atlantic much more can and should be done in the area of fisheries enhancement and experiments with fish farming to make that resource into a permanent source of revenue and of jobs.

During 1985 my colleagues and I travelled across the country conducting a task force on jobs. We found that the potential for job creation and economic development at the local level was far greater than many people in Ottawa in the federal Government's advisory forces comprehend. We concluded that Governments at all levels should be initiating programs of community-based economic development. This would involve municipalities and regional bodies, small businesses, co-operatives, trade unions and caisses populaires, not just grants to big business.

The Government of Canada should be engaging in long range economic policy planning with different regions and different municipalities. We need and should have an economic diversification fund for single-industry towns. We need advance notice of plant closures as a matter of legislation so that communities, in conjunction with the federal and local Governments, can plan for plant closures by trying to avoid them or by trying to redeploy resources in other forms of employment before those jobs are lost.

I suggest it is time to put into place a program for social housing that will increase social housing units to 50,000 per year. Too many Canadians just cannot afford the houses that are now being built. This measure would create tens of thousands of jobs at an expense which is affordable to the Treasury.

Because we have in mind the problems of the deficit and so on I also suggest that at the national and regional level many of the approaches to full employment need not necessarily be costly. I will give one specific suggestion. The Economic Council of Canada has been making some suggestions about people being able to bank a certain amount of their income in order to take it out at other times, enabling them to manage their incomes over time a bit better. I suggest there are many Canadians who would like to take a course, take a trip, spend a year with a young child who has just come into the world, or for some other reason they would like to take some time out of the workforce without losing their attachment to a job. I suggest that legislation to permit that should be seriously considered as a part of the Canada Labour Code. I also suggest that people who wish to do that should be able to put aside and shelter from taxation a certain amount of their income for perhaps two or three years in order that they can draw the income out and maintain an income stream when they have taken time off for their sabbatical year, their trip, to paint that painting or to take that course or whatever it is they plan to do.

We need to look at labour market policies in general in order to see whether there are means by which work can be shared more effectively or the obstacles to work-sharing can at least be re-examined to ensure that they are not unrealistic and do not force people to choose either to work full-time or not to work at all. The latter means that they must work full-time rather than lose their attachment to the labour market.

Canada's municipalities have been pressing for federal co-operation in terms of getting their economies moving and in terms of renewing the infrastructure of roads, hospitals, water and sewage works and other municipal services. That is a demand which would help to create 50,000 jobs if answered. I suggest that that, too, is something which should be responded to positively by the Government.

Finally, it is time that the Government of Canada, in conjunction with the provinces, acted vigorously in showing initiative with respect to the problems of youth.

I just quoted from the report of the Ontario Commissioner of Youth, Mr. Ken Dryden, who recommended a program of initiatives that would allow young people to start their lives at work or to get the training courses they need to enter the labour market. But indeed, Mr. Speaker, that report has been ignored.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) proposed the same kind of initiative with Opportunities for Youth, that could provide young people between 18 and 22 with two years of experience in the form of training, in the form of a grant to become entrepreneurs, in the form of life experience or in the form of a grant for post-secondary education.

It is a tragedy, Mr. Speaker, we have half a million of our young people who are now unemployed, and certainly the canadian Government should act, to ensure that all young people in this country can enter the labour market.

[English]

These are just a few ideas that I wanted to put before the Government. It seems that it has run out of ideas, which is why I will come in a moment to our amendment to the amendment to the motion of the Minister of Finance.

I am urging that we reorient our economic priorities. We cannot afford a "do-nothing" Budget. A Budget is not just an exercise at which to yawn; it is an exercise to give a sense of leadership, frankness, and fairness to all Canadians.

We acknowledge that there are problems with the Government's fiscal position. We are in a precarious state if the American economy, which has brought us up, turns downward. However, full employment policies do not only cost money. They bring in returns in terms of lower payments on unemployment insurance, lower payments on welfare, higher tax returns from corporations, higher tax returns from individuals who are back on the job, as well as higher returns in well-being and social cohesion in the common purpose of resolving our difficult problems.

This is why I believe we can face the scrutiny to which we will be put over the course of the coming months, now that the New Democratic Party has entered new grounds in terms of public support and is in fact a Party which will be vying for government at the time of the next federal election.

It is time that we made these commitments now. The Government must stand scrutiny for the fact that it has ignored the plight of most of Canada and has kept its vision blinkered. It has looked at the two economies and has seen only one, that is, the one of the rich, the one of the people around Bay Street and around southern Ontario, not the one of average Canadians across the country.

That is why I would like to move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy):

That the amendment to the motion of the Minister of Finance be amended by adding immediately thereafter the following words:

"and this House further condemn the Government for introducing a budget that tolerates the existence of 1,250,000 unemployed Canadians and fails to show fairness to the average Canadian family and regions that continue to feel the burden of economic recession with respect to employment and income; for failing to introduce a system of universal child care that would assist families and create jobs; for failing to demonstrate to the average Canadian taxpayer a genuine commitment to tax reform by eliminating in this budget some of the worst excesses in the tax system, such as the erosion of the corporate tax base begun by the Liberals in 1983;

for failing to even give mention in the Budget to the tragedy of four million Canadians living in poverty; and for failing to make full employment the first priority of the federal government.

That is our amendment. I hope it has the support of all Members of the House. I know, not just from the Gallup poll but from all other indications, that it has the support of far more Canadians than those who support the economic policies of the Government and of the Minister of Finance as announced yesterday.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will proceed with the period for questions and comments after Oral Question Period. It being 1.47 p.m., I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At 1.47 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

TOURISM

IMPACT OF BUDGET MEASURES

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, the Budget speech delivered in the House yesterday has hit the tourism industry head on. Once again the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has decided to boost the price of gasoline, the excise tax has gone up one cent a litre, and this adds up to a 350 per cent excise tax increase since this Government came to power. The Minister has also raised the air transportation tax by $4 per ticket.

Why did the Minister choose to trip the tourism industry, an industry which employs 600,000 people and could indeed create quite a number of new jobs?

Mr. Speaker, this Budget proves that the Government has no consideration whatsoever for the tourism industry, nor for all those Canadians who must drive their car to work.

CHARTER OF RIGHTS

EXTENSION OF PROTECTION TO UNBORN CHILDREN URGED

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, in 1981 I spoke during the Constitution debate and urged that the rights of the unborn child be included in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I still believe that an unborn child must be accorded every right to protection as accorded those who can speak in their own defence.

Undoubtedly there are instances where the life of the mother is at risk, and I believe that her right to life must be given priority. However, the killing of an unborn child as a method of birth control is unacceptable to me and to a great number of Canadians. I urge the Government to take the appropriate action to include the rights of an unborn child in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

POLITICAL PARTIES

LIBERAL AND NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTIES—EYEING EXERCISE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the Liberals have now had their first meeting of the Committee to Look at the New Democratic Party. It is called the first meeting and, therefore, presumably there will be others, despite the denials of the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) that NDP watching is now going to be one of her favourite pastimes.

We in the NDP are considering striking a Committee to Look at the Liberals, but we would hold such meetings in public where both the public and certain prominent Liberals would be invited to appear. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) this morning on Canada AM said he knows where the tax loopholes are. He could explain that he knows because he created many of them when he was Finance Minister. Judy Erola, the new paid spokesperson for the drug multinationals, could be invited to explain the real Liberal policy on generic drugs. Or the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) and the Hon. Member for St. Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston) could be invited to explain the Liberal view of free trade. Referees would be invited to this meeting.

Actually, Mr. Speaker, there was a committee that looked at the Liberals. A committee of the whole country looked at the Liberals in 1984 and threw them out of office. That same committee is now getting ready to throw out the Tories and, instead of going back to the Liberals, is looking to the NDP as the only genuine choice for a hopeful political future. That is why the Liberals are meeting, Mr. Speaker, but no amount of meetings will make the choice between Tweedledum and Tweedledee any less unattractive than it already is.

ALBERTA FEDERATION OF WOMEN UNITED FOR THE FAMILY

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in this House a Member of the New Democratic Party criticized the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) for giving a grant to the Alberta Federation of Women United for the Family. I was disgusted, astonished, mystified, angry, horrified, shocked, alarmed, terrified, and almost mortified when I heard the remarks of the NDP Member.

• (1405)

The Alberta Federation of Women United for the Family is an organization urging and supporting high principles of life, working to keep families together and to avoid divorce, promoting the family and the equality of women in their family circle, stressing the extraordinary importance of child care and the need to look after the elderly in a dignified way, and fighting to give every unborn child created by God a chance to be born and to live. They deplore abortion on demand, something which murders thousands of unborn babies every year in Canada.

To this splendid group of women, the NDP would deny a grant. I say to this Federation: "Keep up the good work. You are upholding the principles that made this country great".

The Secretary of State of Canada should be thanked, complimented, honoured, praised, congratulated, admired, acclaimed, extolled and lauded for making this grant to such a splendid group of women.

GENERAL IMPACT

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government is now going to take it out on children. Yesterday afternoon the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced that, as of July 1, 1987, granola bars, ice cream and so many other candies and snack foods which children like so much will be taxable.

In this document which does not deserve to be described as a Budget, there is nothing for families, the elderly, and young people.

As of today, however, car drivers pay one cent more for a litre of gas, a total increase of four cents. Ever since the Conservatives and the Mulroney-Wilson tandem took over, all Canadians have been held hostages through these tax increases on fuel and the lack of energy policy of the Government.

Smokers have again been the victims of this Government which taxes, taxes, and taxes again.

Canada's tourism industry has also been hard hit by the Government. Air travel is becoming ever more popular, so the Minister raises the federal tax on this means of transportation to the tune of $4 a ticket.

In a previous Budget the Minister of Finance had promised less red tape for businesses. Today he announces that, twice instead of once a month, employers will be expected to remit source deductions on wages, thus making the administrative load that much heavier. This measure will seriously affect certain sectors of small- and medium-size businesses.

RESPONSIBILITY OF QUEBEC MINISTER OF ENVIRONMENT TO APPEAR BEFORE COMMITTEE

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, as a Member of the Special Committee on Acid Rains, I deeply regret the attitude of the Quebec Minister of Environment who, on January 28, 1987, refused to appear before our committee.

Since February 5, the Environment Ministers of Manitoba, Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick or their representatives, have appeared before our committee. The Ontario Minister of Environment did as recently as this morning.

Mr. Speaker, knowing that the second worst polluter in North America is found in Rouyn-Noranda, and knowing also the polluted state of our lakes, forests, and maple groves in Quebec, I feel that the Quebec Minister of Environment should have agreed to come before our committee to discuss this situation and seek appropriate remedies.

Mr. Speaker, I therefore urge the Quebec Minister of Environment to reconsider and to decide to appear before our committee.

ESTONIA—ANNIVERSARY OF PROCLAMATION OF INDEPENDENCE

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, each year Canadians of Estonian origin gather to mark the anniversary of February 24, 1918, the day Estonia proclaimed its independence as a free and democratic republic. For this small nation whose people have survived adversity and oppression without ever losing their desire for freedom, the hard-won period of independence was all too short. It ended in 1940 when the Soviet Union forcibly and illegally annexed the three Baltic States of Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania.

At this time when the Baltic States commemorate their days of freedom, it is appropriate to reflect on the precious gifts of democracy and freedom which Canadians are privileged to enjoy but which are denied to citizens of other countries. I know all Hon. Members will join me in reaffirming the hope we all share that our efforts will one day bring about the restoration of freedom and basic human rights in Estonia.

EXTERNAL AID

EFFECT OF BUDGET PROVISIONS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, two days ago, Stephen Lewis, Canada's Ambassador to the United Nations, said that Africa will be in a state of endless poverty unless the international community increases its financial assistance. Lewis criticized the United States and the Soviet Union for cutting aid budgets and said that there has been a retreat from good faith on the part of several western countries.

Yesterday Canada's Finance Minister (Mr. Wilson) gave the developing world a bad-faith Budget. He juggled figures to save $150 million in cash payments, and still pretends to contribute .5 per cent of our GNP to development. It does not work. When the juggling is over and the balls have fallen to the ground there will be $92 million less for development. That money is urgently needed in the developing world. Once again the Government has welshed on the needs of the Third World.

TARIFFS

LIFTING OF TARIFF ON CHRISTMAS TREE IMPORTS FROM UNITED STATES

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) outlined the outstanding economic accomplishments of the Government. Lower interest rates and a growing national economy are the most important ingredients of regional development. Grants alone do not work. My riding is benefiting like never before because of this progress.

The Minister also lifted the tariff on Christmas trees entering Canada from the U.S. The tariff served the purpose for which it was imposed and brought home to the U.S. Congress that trade barriers can be imposed by the Government of Canada as well. Because it has been lifted, the Christmas tree growers of Nova Scotia will be relieved. They were concerned about possible U.S. retaliation.

This is one clear example of why we need a stable and secure trading relationship with the U.S. It is shameful that the Opposition are opposed to securing that kind of a stable and secure trading environment with the U.S. Our Government's record is clear. It means better times for all Canadians in all regions. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is showing what can be accomplished with strong leadership and sound management. All Canadians will continue to benefit.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

RESPECT FOR EMPLOYMENT EQUITY REGULATIONS

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): As a woman, Mr. Speaker, I certainly want to congratulate the Minister of Supply and Services (Mrs. Véniza) on her recent decision to cancel a call for tenders because the bidders had failed to respect employment equity regulations. This demonstrates our Government's firm determination to do everything in its power to ensure a better integration of Canadian women in the labour market. This is another promise we had made during the last election campaign and which has been kept.

On behalf of all Canadian women, I congratulate the Hon. Minister on this wise decision.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

JAPANESE AND KOREAN ASSEMBLY PLANTS—CANADIAN CONTENT REQUIREMENT ADVOCATED

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, earlier this week the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté) said he and his Conservative Government would not compel the new Japanese and Korean assembly plants in Canada to meet Auto Pact content requirements because to do so would discourage Japanese and Koreans from investing here. He also said he doubted that Canadian parts manufacturers could produce parts of the quality required by these new plants. Those statements shocked and dismayed Canadians because of what they showed about the lack of knowledge and support for this key Canadian industry by the Government.

We must insist that the Government immediately adopt a policy requiring all those who wish to sell cars in the Canadian market to play by the same rules and meet the Canadian content requirements. To do otherwise would put at risk tens of thousands of jobs. That may be the intention of the Government but that is not what Canadians want. We must insist that the Government understand and support the cornerstone of the Canadian economy, the Canadian auto industry, and the hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs connected with it.

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, on February 24, 1918, Estonia was proclaimed an independent democratic Republic. The country worked hard to establish itself under the harshest of post-World War I conditions. However, its freedom was short-lived. In June, 1940, the Soviet Union invaded that young country and shattered the dreams of a freedom-loving nation. Last December the Soviets had the gall to state that the people of Estonia joined voluntarily. That is nothing more than a deception. The democratic nation of Estonia was forced to give up its hard-earned independence and become a Soviet satellite.

Many people had to flee their homes and settle in other countries, including Canada. Every February 24 Canadians of Estonian origin remember their brief freedom as an independent nation. Let us join with them in commemoration of the anniversary and reflect on the importance of individual rights. We must never forget how precious freedom can be, and we must strive to ensure that democracy continues as our way of life.

EFFECT ON ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, yesterday was a dark day for Atlantic Canadians. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) once again totally ignored them in his Budget. He ignored the plight of the unemployed, farmers, fishermen, and stopped the growth of our tourism industry dead in its tracks by adding another 4 1/2 cent-a-gallon tax on gasoline and diesel fuel.

• (1415)

Why is the Government treating Canadians in the poorer regions of the country this way? Is it because the Minister of Finance does not understand Canada? If so, what are Conservative MPs who also represent constituencies in Atlantic Canada doing? Why are they not speaking up in their caucus? Why are they not informing the Minister of Finance that Canada's financial house contains 12 rooms: 10 provinces plus the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, and that every room in the house needs some economic repair, not just the plush recreational room which houses the rich?

If the Conservative back-benchers are not delivering the message to the Minister of Finance, they are derelict in their duties as MPs. It is no wonder that they and the Government have lost the confidence of the Canadian people.

TREATMENT OF CONVICT DURING COURT PROCEEDINGS

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, it is becoming clear that our criminal justice system is on the verge of disaster. Last week in Toronto a convicted criminal who is serving a four-year penitentiary sentence for bombing his own disco was back in court to face additional federal charges of fraud. While he waited for his preliminary hearing he was allowed to roam freely because of a court order which allowed him to pay the cost of being driven by sheriff's officers each day between Beaver Creek and Toronto.

Does this mean that we have two classes of criminals, that those who can afford to pay can buy special treatment? All prisoners in his predicament are confined to the Don Jail for the duration of preliminary hearings. If the individual feared for his life, protective custody should have been implemented.

One cannot help but be amazed that this individual, a convicted bomber, was within three months transferred from Millhaven, a maximum security penitentiary, to Beaver Creek, which is known as the Muskoka Hilton. I urge the Government and the judiciary to extend no special treatment to those who break society's rules by committing criminal acts.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT STATISTICS IN VARIOUS REGIONS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, yesterday's do-nothing Budget was a cold, cynical betrayal of the hundreds of thousands of Canadians who are unemployed and under-employed.

Wake up, Mr. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), and recognize the tragedy existing on Vancouver Island with 15 per cent unemployed, in the B.C. interior with 16 per cent unemployed, southern British Columbia with 20 per cent unemployed, the Kootenay region of B.C. with 17 per cent unemployed, northern B.C. with 13 per cent unemployed, western Alberta with 13 per cent unemployed, northern Alberta with 13 per cent unemployed, northern Ontario with 15 per cent unemployed, northern Quebec with 15 per cent unemployed, southeast Quebec with 15 per cent unemployed, the Gaspé with 23 per cent unemployed, Labrador with 27 per cent unemployed, Cape Breton with 23 per cent unemployed, New Brunswick with 14 per cent unemployed, Nova Scotia with 15 per cent unemployed, Prince Edward Island with 17 per cent unemployed, western Newfoundland with 27 per cent unemployed, northern Newfoundland with 26 per cent unemployed, southern Newfoundland with 25 per cent unemployed, the south shore of Quebec with 15 per cent unemployed, the north shore of Quebec with 14 per cent unemployed, northern Nova Scotia with 20 per cent unemployed, southern Nova Scotia with 16 per cent unemployed, and Brant County with 10 per cent unemployed, et cetera, et cetera.

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, the Quebec Government, through its Minister of Finance, Mr. Gérard D. Mr. Speaker, I would urge all Members of this House and especially the Conservative Members from Quebec to put pressure on the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister, in order to ensure that the province of Quebec is given a fair deal in the equalization dossier and that the federal Government refunds as soon as possible the amounts being claimed by the Quebec Minister of Finance.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

CALL FOR CHANGE IN ECONOMIC POLICIES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, Canadians in this region are both disappointed and outraged at the failure of the Government to take concrete and specific actions with regard to rectifying the regional inequalities in the country. "Wealth not evenly spread" says Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney); "Programs to reflect regional need", said the Prime Minister in August; and "East Coast, West to get special aid" said the Prime Minister. Then in his great Throne Speech, the Prime Minister says: "regional disparity remains an unacceptable reality of Canadian life".

• (1420)

I call upon the Government to stop talking through both sides of its mouth and to provide some economic aid to those poor regions of this country. You have $5.8 billion from the regional economic development envelope. You have added $5 billion in excess taxes to Canadians. I call upon the Prime Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I want to remind all Hon. Members that in this Chamber we do not say "you" when addressing questions to the Government or when the Government is responding. I know the Hon. Member will be very careful not to do that.

Mr. Dingwall: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I call upon the Right Hon. Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to change their economic policies and address those economic disparities in this country. The Minister of Finance ought to know that unemployment in the regions of the country is unacceptably high. He has failed to address those very needs in the Budget. I wish the Government would exercise some political will and try to address the situation in order to provide economic stability to regions of our country.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

TREATMENT OF THE POOR AND OTHER CLASSES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I think it is tragic that I have to remind him that there are hundreds of thousands of poor people in Canada. Why were the unemployed young people of our country forgotten in his Budget? Why were those who must line up publicly at soup kitchens and food banks forgotten in his Budget? Why were single mothers forgotten in his Budget? Why were the people of Atlantic Canada, the west and the northern part of our country forgotten in his Budget? Why were so many Canadians forgotten?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has it all wrong. They were not forgotten. I made specific reference to the problems that have existed in the regions of our country for some time now. For example, in western Canada we have addressed the problems in the oil and gas industry. We have addressed the problems with the farmers. We still must address those problems.

In Atlantic Canada there is the Atlantic Enterprise Program, the Atlantic Opportunities Program, and the Cape Breton Special Investment Tax Credit. We have maintained the regional investment tax credit. We have addressed these problems in many ways and we are seeing specific results.

The Hon. Member just referred to youth unemployment. When we came into office youth unemployment was 18.3 per cent. In January, 1987, it is 14.4 per cent. That is real progress.

TAX INCREASES—NATURE OF FISCAL REGIME

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have another question for the Minister of Finance. Why should a single-parent family with an annual income of $15,000 pay $321 more than it did in 1984 when the present Government came to power? And why should a couple with two children and an income of $30,000 pay $1,020 more than in 1984? Why should Canadians trust this Government when the Minister of Finance himself has given them a tax system that is unfair and inequitable?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not like to remind the Hon. Member of how this began. We got started on this because we had to deal with a $38.3 billion deficit. That deficit began in 1972 when he was the Minister of Finance. Spending began to get out of control. During his time in office as Minister of Finance spending rose at an annual rate of 23 per cent and in the final year it was 29.8 per cent. That's a fact.

• (1425)

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I want to remind this Minister of Finance, just for the record, that when I left the high office he now holds, the public debt of this country was $25 billion. Next year he is going to leave it at $300 billion. I am also going to remind him that the last two surpluses in Canadian history were brought down when I was Minister of Finance.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That also happens to be a fact.

FUNDING OF REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I would like to remind the Minister of Finance that this country stretches from the Atlantic to the Pacific, up to the Arctic, and that a Budget ought to be a Budget for all Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I am going to put the question. Unemployment in Newfoundland, in Prince Edward Island, in Nova Scotia, in Alberta and in British Columbia is higher now than it was in the depth of the recession in 1982. I therefore ask the Minister why is it since his Government came to power it has slashed over $3 billion from the regional development programs of the country?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this Government came into office determined to deal with the problems. We are dealing with the problems. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition mentions the economic and regional development envelope. That was because there was $3.1 billion worth of spending because of the National Energy Program which has been removed. Is the Hon. Member, who is speaking out of both sides of his mouth on this one, saying we should go back to the National Energy Program or is he saying we should—well, he is shaking his head. He does not know which way he stands on that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, just what we have done to deal with the problems of people who are in low income brackets. We have introduced employment initiatives to help those people get a job, to get the training. There has been $100 million devoted to that. We have a program for older workers to help them get back into the labour force. We have a refundable sales tax credit for those in low income brackets. We have the increase in the child tax credit and the acceleration of the payment of the child tax credit. These are all things which have been done to help those people and there is—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think we might observe that there are going to be some days of debate on the Budget and there is probably a more appropriate place to exchange all of these statistics.

TRUE SIZE OF DEFICIT

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and concerns the sleight of hand we witnessed in yesterday's Budget. Yesterday, the Minister of Finance said that next year the deficit would be $29.3 billion.

If the Minister had not resorted to the subterfuge of making businesses increase their paperwork and submit their source deductions twice a month, the real deficit for 1987-88 would be $30.5 billion.

My question is as follows: Why is the Minister trying to cover up the real situation, and when is he going to admit that the actual deficit is still above $30 billion?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the record which was set out in the Budget stands on its own, and I think it is a record which is well appreciated by people who are students of this and who compare it to the record which the Leader of the Opposition presided over when he saw a $481 million surplus turn into a $4 billion deficit in three and a half years. Spending rose by 23 per cent per annum. The national debt grew by 50 per cent. The debt service cost grew by 85 per cent. These are matters that can be labelled on the man who sits beside the Hon. Member. The inflation rate doubled during that period of time. Unemployment increased by 164,000—

• (1430)

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —and the bank rate doubled.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PERSONAL AND CORPORATE TAXES

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Party was defeated and a new Government was elected in 1984—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Garneau: —with promises. The Government came to power promising to solve the problems of the deficit. After three years of economic recovery the deficit is at the same level that it was in the last complete year of the Liberal Government.

Why are the Minister of Finance and his Government trying deliberately to hide from the public the fact that individual Canadians will be paying more than $7.6 billion extra in taxes for 1987-88 while at the same time corporations will be paying $30 million less? Does the Minister think that is fair?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think I addressed that very clearly last night. We have recognized that there is a problem in the corporate tax system. That is one of the reasons for tax reform. We have acted regularly, starting in October of 1984, when we stopped the scientific research tax credit abuses and when we changed the rules on the use of limited partnerships. We stopped carve-outs, as well as the O&Y use of the tax system, something which the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition brought in when he was the Minister of Finance. We have stopped all of these things.

We have also said that it is important to develop a general tax avoidance rule. These measures are designed to address the problem of the tax system. We are acting. We are not just talking about problems; we are acting on them.

CORPORATE TAX REFORM

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Yesterday afternoon the Minister presented a Budget which increased taxes on the average family once again, making the cumulative increase for individuals in Canada some $1,500 since the Government came to power. The Minister then went on television last night and said two things. First, he said that there are many corporations out there that are profitable but which are not paying taxes. Second, he said that it is too soon for corporate tax reform. My question is simply this. Why is it too soon for corporate tax reform but not too soon for the Government to soak the average family when it comes to taxes?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I could repeat the answer to the question I just answered. We are acting on this. We have acted in a number of ways over the last two-and-a-half years to deal with these instances as they come up. We will do it further in a tax reform discussion paper which will be brought forward this spring. I hope this will gain the support of the Hon. Member and his Party.

Let me comment on the effects on individuals. The unemployment rate is down. Some 677,000 more Canadians have jobs. Short-term interest rates are down. People who are buying homes today will find that it will cost them on a $50,000—

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I know that the good news hurts over there.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the news is that since this Government has come in corporate taxes have gone down 18 per cent, individual taxes have gone up 52 per cent, and unemployment in seven of the ten provinces is as bad or worse than when the Government was elected. That is the reality.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REDUCTION OF FUNDS FOR EQUALIZATION PAYMENTS AND REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, today the unemployment rate in seven out of ten provinces is as bad as it was five years ago. Considering this fact, why does the Minister want to cut funds for equalization and regional development in this Budget?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, both the Leader of the Opposition and his cell-mate have been using this statistic on the unemployment figures. In Newfoundland in September, 1984, the unemployment rate was 23.8 per cent, while in January, 1987, it was 19.2 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): In New Brunswick the unemployment rate was 16.2 per cent in September of 1984; it is currently 13.9 per cent. In Quebec the figure was 12.9 per cent in 1984; it is 10.8 per cent at present. In Ontario in September of 1984 the rate was 9.4 per cent; at present it is 6.6 per cent. The figure for Manitoba was 9 per cent in 1984; it is currently 7.9 per cent. In Saskatchewan it was 8.7 per cent in 1984; it is currently 7.3 per cent. In Alberta it was 12.1 per cent; it is now 10.8 per cent. In British Columbia it was 15.1 per cent; it is currently 13.6 per cent. Those are the facts from Statistics Canada. There are only two provinces in which the unemployment rate is higher, and it is just by a very small amount.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR CORPORATE TAX REFORM IN ORDER TO HELP REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the reality is with respect to the comparisons between the depth of the depression and now. I can tell the Minister that he can go to most regions of the country and find that Canadians will tell him that unemployment is at a totally unacceptable level. That is what he will discover.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister this, and I hope instead of rattling off statistics he will give us—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Poor guy doesn't like the truth.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member will complete his question.

Mr. Broadbent: The third Party over there is having a little difficulty today.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: The fourth Party.

Mr. Broadbent: That is right; they are behind the undecideds.

I wish to ask the Minister this. Since the Minister pointed out last night that there are many profitable corporations which are not paying taxes and since he knows that there are many regions in Canada in which the unemployment level is unexceptionally high—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Unexceptionally?

Mr. Broadbent: —unacceptably high, why did he not bring in corporate tax reform now and use the money from that for regional development in those parts of Canada that need it?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as a casual observer of the political scene I might say that the Hon. Member is not wearing his fleeting success very well.

Mr. Broadbent: That's really witty, Michael.

Mr. Rodriguez: Strike one!

Mr. Keeper: You know what you're talking about.

Mr. Nystrom: Bring back Crosbie.

Mr. Speaker: I ask Hon. Members to put their questions succinctly. Ministers, when questions are put succinctly, will deal with them in a succinct way. The Hon. Minister.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has raised the question of regional disparities. This is a question that I very clearly addressed in the budget statement in two instances. We have been acting on this, as I indicated in response to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, and there are further steps to be taken.

The Prime Minister has asked for a report on regional problems in Atlantic Canada which will be forthcoming shortly. The Deputy Prime Minister has a working group under way within the Government to deal with the problems of western diversification. There are other measures being taken in relation to problems in northern Ontario and northern Quebec.

As I indicated in the Budget, decisions will be made and announcements will be made at the appropriate time. But there is clearly a record of achievement by the Government. There is clearly a sense of direction as to how we will address this problem and see some real solutions.

SALES TAX EXTENSION

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance who, in his budget speech yesterday, denounced sales taxes as unfair, inefficient, and silent job killers, while at the same time he added yet more sales taxes, for a total increase of $8.7 billion in the sales and excise tax loads since the Government took power. Will the Minister tell the House why he continues to depend so heavily on a form of taxation which hurts people and which he himself claims to find distasteful?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has quite rightly pointed to problems in the sales tax system about which I have been talking for some while now. The sales tax system is a silent killer of jobs. We have evidence in recent months where companies have closed down and moved to the United States, in part because of the impact of the sales tax system. I would hope, as we progress into sales tax reform, that she will understand and recognize that this is a problem and will look objectively and supportively at the reforms we will be proposing.

TREATMENT OF POOR AND UNEMPLOYED

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the Minister's rhetoric is good, but the fact remains that the Government is now stooping to wring nickels and dimes out of individual taxpayers who will be paying $7.6 billion in sales tax and income tax this year. What concrete assurance can the Minister offer today to the poor and unemployed who were left out of his Budget yesterday?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the poor and the unemployed have been well treated by the Government in the sense that 675,000 jobs have been created, which is the best way I know of getting people out of poverty, off the soup lines, and into the workforce where they have jobs. We have also addressed very clearly—and we have addressed it in all parts of the country—the problems of low-income Canadians, with the refundable sales tax credit. I see an Hon. Member across the way laughing at the refundable sales tax credit. I do not think that the people in her riding are laughing at that. I think they are quite appreciative that the Government is addressing a problem with action, not the rhetoric that she comes out with.

FINANCE

INEQUALITY BETWEEN PERSONAL AND CORPORATE TAXES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. There is a credibility problem. We have heard all sorts of promises about tax reform and about what the Minister will do next year. I want to ask him if there is any justice in the fact that, since his Government has come to power, taxes on individuals have increased by $23 billion while corporate taxes have gone down by $2 billion Is this fair?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, Governments are here to deal with problems. We are dealing with this problem. I have said clearly that the problems which the Hon. Member has raised in relation to the corporate tax system are valid concerns. We are dealing with those concerns. We have shut down a number of the tax loopholes which corporations had been using regularly, during the 2.5 years we have been in office.

I announced last night that there would be a general tax avoidance rule which, again, is supposed to deal with corporations that are making excessive use of these tax avoidance schemes and to get profitable corporations paying tax. We have also said that in tax reform there will be a reduction of tax preferences which corporations can use. All these things are designed to deal with that problem. As I have said before, I hope the Hon. Member will support us when we get to that element of tax reform.

CORPORATE TAX REVENUE

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, the latest unemployment figures show that, outside of Ontario, in the last year only 5,000 new jobs have been created since January, 1986. The Minister's own figures show that corporations are paying $2 billion less in taxes in 1987-88 than they were paying at the time the Government came into power. Why don't you take that $2 billion from corporations, which they should be paying, and get some jobs across the rest of the country?

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There has been a little slippage lately on the use of the word "you". Hon. Members know that that leads to disorder in the Chamber. I would ask Hon. Members to co-operate. The Hon. Member has put his question. It has been heard. We will hear the Minister.

Mr. Cassidy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I apologize—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member had completed his question. I ask Hon. Members to stay within the rules. The Hon. Minister will reply.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think Hon. Members of the House are quite used to the statistics which the New Democratic Party has used. Back in May, 1985, the Leader of the NDP said: "The effect of this is a net loss of 50,000 jobs this year and an additional 100,000 jobs next year". That is a very clear statement from Hansard. Since May, 1985, we have created 9,000 jobs in Newfoundland, 18,000 jobs in New Brunswick, 86,000 in Quebec, 222,000 jobs in Ontario, 25,000 jobs in Manitoba—

Some Hon. Members: More, more!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe.

PLIGHT OF UNEMPLOYED

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Yesterday the Minister of Finance brought down a Budget, and today every youngster in the country is down in the basement looking for a secret place to stash their piggy banks in an attempt to keep their pennies from a Minister of Finance who wants to tax their granola bars, cream puffs, and other snacks. If the Minister were living in the real world, he would know that 1.25 million Canadians are unemployed, including 150,000 in Atlantic Canada, and that a kiddy tax is not the answer. Why were there no measures in the Budget to help the unemployed mothers and fathers, brothers and sisters of the nation?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, what is the answer is lower interest rates. Interest rates have come down 3.5 percentage points from the time we took office. They had another drop again today, and we will probably see that trend continue because of the strong confidence in the Government and the way—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): In specific answer to what we have done to address the problems of regional disparities in Atlantic Canada, I remind the Hon. Member that we have the Atlantic Opportunities Program—$600 million of federal purchasing will be directed toward Atlantic Canada. We have the Cape Breton investment tax credit. We have the special investment tax credit which is special for all Atlantic Canada. We have the Atlantic Enterprise Program. We have had ERDA agreements with each of the provinces. All of these are designed to address the problems of regional disparities and unemployment in Atlantic Canada. Things are starting to work.

CAPITAL GAINS TAX EXEMPTION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the only way in which Atlantic Canadians were special in the Minister's Budget is that we were especially ignored. Not since Marie Antoinette said "Let them eat cake" has such an uncaring answer been given by a Minister to the poor and unemployed. How can the Minister continue to fatten the privileged few with a capital gains tax exemption worth $800 million this year, at a time when so many Canadians are doing without a job or a decent meal?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member has forgotten why the capital gains tax exemption was brought in. It was to help farmers. It was to help small businesses. It was to help give people the incentive to take money out of Canada Savings Bonds and put it into a new business which would create jobs. That is the reason we did it. I believe 475,000 jobs have been created since May 23, 1985, when that measure was brought in. That is the reason we brought in the capital gains tax exemption.

EQUALIZATION PAYMENTS—QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The have-not regions lost more ground yesterday as regional development expenditures have increased only by 1.7 percent, which is very little, and the Budget says nothing about equalization in spite of the fact that the changes made to the equalization program have resulted in a loss of about $100 million for Quebec.

My question is this: Can the Minister of Finance tell this House whether he plans to correct this unfair treatment for Quebec as soon as possible?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, Quebec is not being treated unfairly, anymore than any other province. We have implemented a program to increase federal-provincial transfers and we have had a 5 percent rate of increase for equalization payments and a 5.3 percent rate of increase for education and health, I believe, and over the next five years, transfers to the provinces will increase from $65 billion to $90 billion. This is a major increase.

QUEBEC'S INTENTION TO SUE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, this is not the opinion of the Quebec Finance Minister, since he is considering taking legal action against Ottawa to obtain justice in this matter.

Mr. Speaker, are court actions the only way for Quebec to obtain justice and to urge this Government to act?

• (1450)

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance in the Province of Quebec is free to hold his own opinions. I believe that increasing the rates of equalization by more than 5 per cent per annum last year, this year and next year, is the right way to go. We are fully in accord with our responsibilities under the Constitution. We have said we are going to increase the equalization next year and the year after under technical changes in the equalization formula, and I think that this indicates clearly the commitment of the Government toward assisting the provinces that are less well off.

REAL WOMEN—INVITATION NOT ISSUED TO ATTEND CONFERENCE ON THE FAMILY

Mr. Sid Fraleigh (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Status of Women. The Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women is sponsoring a conference on the family, and for that I commend them. Once again, however, we see discrimination rearing its ugly head. REAL Women, who are perhaps one of the strongest advocates of the family, have been refused an invitation. The flimsy excuse being used is that they were invited last year and, due to the lack of space—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is using a lengthy preamble to set the tone for his question. I think that the preamble has set the necessary requisites and I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question.

Mr. Fraleigh: Can the Minister offer an explanation for this apparent discrimination?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, let me say that I am very much looking forward to this conference which is being sponsored by the Advisory Council on the Status of Women. Seventy-five groups will attend from all across Canada, with regional and cultural diversity. There are over 1,000 groups from which they pick the 75, and some 30 per cent of those are turned over every year.

I might point out to the Hon. Member that among those attending are the Canadian Federation of University Women, the Canadian Nurses Association, Féderation des Femmes du Québec, the Federation of Junior Leagues of Canada. It will be a very fine conference in which there is no discrimination.

DAY CARE SERVICES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance.

After insisting on several occasions on the importance of the family, of employment equity, on the urgency and priority of child care, last night in its Budget the Government totally ignored these matters.

I should like the Minister of Finance to indicate to us what funds we allocated in last night's Budget for child care services? Why is there no funding provided in the Budget, contrary to what the Government had promised?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is well aware of the process set in train in Vancouver last November at the First Minister's Conference where the Prime Minister asked the provinces to work with the federal Government in trying to develop the standards for a national child care program. That is under way right now. There will be reports coming back to the First Ministers whereby we can co-operate with the provinces in dealing with this important initiative. At that time we will be able to take decisions on how we can proceed with the funding.

In the budget speech I have said that processes such as this must continue, and at the appropriate time we will be taking the right decisions. There is opportunity to do so within the fiscal framework.

ADHERENCE TO COMMITMENTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): My supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, at this Federal Provincial Conference which was held in Vancouver, the Prime Minister promised that there would be new money in the Budget for child care services. I should like the Prime Minister to tell us if he agrees with his Minister of Finance that there should be no funding in the Budget for child care services. Has the Prime Minister decided that child care services are no longer a priority for his Government? You made a commitment, Mr. Prime Minister. You stated publicly that funding would be provided for child care!

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): That is not the case, Mr. Speaker. I believe that I have responded to that question on the part of the Government. I have said very clearly that there is a process under way. When the recommendations are in from the consultation going on right now—

Mrs. Pépin: There was a promise.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I think that the Hon. Member should give me the courtesy of listening to my answer. I listened very carefully to her question.

Ms. Copps: The Prime Minister made a promise.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The process is under way right now. We are going to be able to make those decisions and provide funding within the context of the fiscal framework when those recommendations come forward.

Mrs. Pépin: The Prime Minister said there would be money in the Budget.

CHILD CARE FUNDING

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is also on the subject of lack of any support for child care and families in the Budget. Canadian families with young children do not need a breathing-space kind of Budget. What they need is assistance right now. We have had this confirmed over and over again. We have a crisis.

Can the Minister of Finance tell us why the Government is stalling on child care promises? We have it documented that a promise was made by the Prime Minister of substantial support. Is the Government stalling to wait for the provinces because the Government has a cop-out? Is that what the Government is trying to do? The Government wants to cop-out on this altogether. Why aren't you—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Minister has heard the question and can deal with it in his answer.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Nobody is copping out, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister gave a very clear commitment from the Government of Canada, in Vancouver.

Mr. Benjamin: He is hiding.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): He is not hiding. None of us is hiding. Maybe you should hide behind your ignorance.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure that if there is ignorance here, the Hon. Minister would wish to enlighten us all. The Hon. Minister.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, the Ministers of Health, the Ministers of Social Services along with the Minister responsible for the Status of Women very clearly—

Mr. Garneau: The Minister of Finance?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): The Minister of Finance is totally in agreement with it. The Prime Minister has given a direction. The Hon. Member is a member of a parliamentary committee and she doesn't have the report. She keeps talking here day after day. I ask that she give me the recommendations and then we will have the program complete so that by the end of the first half of this year the program can be pronounced by the Prime Minister at that time.

REQUEST FOR FUNDING

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Of course, the Finance Minister agrees, Mr. Speaker, because he does not want to spend any money on child care. This Party has presented recommendations to the Finance Minister—

• (1500)

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to put the question. This has been a very active Question Period and we are starting to run out of time. I am sure the Hon. Member can put her question directly.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, if the Minister of Finance received the letter outlining our position on emergency funds for child care, and he did, why will he not take a leadership role and provide funds now? Will he reconsider at all?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is putting forward a plan which was only accepted or put forward by Manitoba. None of the other provinces wanted to go that route. I wish the Hon. Member would start to understand that approximately 8 per cent of Canadians accept that route. Surely we must have an option and surely we must have different plans for different Canadian families. I wish the Hon. Member would move away from her approach which is that only she knows while the rest of us do not know anything about families and the needs of children.

GASOLINE TAX INCREASE

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Government has been trying to decide how to finance assistance to the energy sector, whether it be through tax increases, the Consolidated Revenue Fund or perhaps depletion allowances. It has come down to the one-cent-per-litre increase on gasoline taxes and the equalling of the taxes on leaded and unleaded gasoline. However, the Government has forgotten one thing. It has forgotten to give assistance to the energy sector. Without any assistance to the energy sector, why is there this tax grab against Canadian motorists?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think I said two or three times in the Budget Speech that we have acknowledged that the energy industry is going through some difficult times today. We have also acknowledged that one of the ways we can address this problem is through tax reform. We can address the problem in the energy industry in a more permanent way through tax reform. We have also said that as projects come forward in which there could be a role for the federal Government, we want to discuss them very carefully with the provinces and the elements of the industry involved to see if there is a role for the Government to play. These are things we want to do, and we will continue addressing these matters on an ongoing basis.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, honourable mention in the Minister's Budget will not help the energy sector. Why is the Minister using lower world oil prices to gouge Canadian motorists constantly?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to embarrass the Hon. Member by reminding him of what happened to gasoline prices during the period between 1980 and 1984. They went up quite significantly, and today they are down below the level of September, 1984. The Hon. Member should be quite aware of the record of the Government with which he was involved and of our record today as a Government.

SMALL OIL INDUSTRY COMPANIES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I wish to follow that up with the Minister of Finance. This morning I spoke to some representatives of the small petroleum exploration service companies in Alberta. They told me that they are simply dying and that the removal of the PGRT helped the big boys but did not help them at all. You raised $450 million by hosing the consumer again for one cent a litre—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Let us try to concentrate.

Mr. Waddell: You are absolutely right, Mr. Speaker. I am sorry. I am losing my riding so that should concentrate my mind a bit.

The one-cent-per-litre increase means $450 million. Why does the Minister not put that into a special fund and earmark it for aid to small Canadian producers in western Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think we have indicated quite clearly by our actions last year, when we quadrupled the small producer tax credit and made changes retroactively to help those people who were providing funding through royalty income to the small producers, that we have responded clearly to those concerns. As I just said in response to a previous question, there is still more that might be done. We want to address this clearly and on a permanent basis through tax reform. I would appreciate the support and recommendations of the Hon. Member as we get closer to that date.

Mr. Speaker: I will try to recognize a few more Hon. Members but——but I would ask Hon. Members to limit themselves to only one question. The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) has the floor.

PROVISIONS CONCERNING THE NEEDY

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The Minister is aware that in 1985 there were in Canada some four million men and women living below the poverty line. He is also aware that in every town and village in Canada, non profit organizations have to set up clothing and food banks, better known in Montreal as "La soupe". He will know also that the lineups in front of these food banks are getting longer every day.

Could the Minister indicate to Hon. Members as well as these four million people on what page of his Budget they are likely to find a way out of their poverty?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think that for Canadians the best way out of poverty is through employment. We have created 675,000 jobs. In the province of Quebec, we have created eight times more jobs than the previous Government.

[English]

In addition to that, I have outlined clearly with the refundable sales tax credit, with the acceleration of the child tax credit and with the increase in the child tax credit, that all these are designed to help those below the low-income cut-off line. The results show that 263,000 fewer Canadian families are below the low-income cut-off line. That is progress.

INCREASED DISABILITY PAYMENTS—RESULT OF ACTIONS TAKEN BY PROVINCES

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In January the Government increased disability payments under the Canada Pension Plan by $150 per month. This benefited over 150,000 Canadians. However, 20,000 of the poorest disabled Canadians have found that this increase has been erased by a reduction in provincial welfare payments. In light of the fact that these federal increases were designed to help precisely those disabled Canadians in the poorest category, what action will the Minister take to ensure that increases in federal disability payments are not effectively cancelled by provincial government reductions?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the change in the Canada Pension Plan disability benefits of a maximum increase of $150 per month is something we were hoping we could pass right through to those who are disabled. A number of provinces have decided, either through municipal welfare programs or provincial welfare programs, not to pass through the full amount or to retain some of the amount. Prior to the effective date of the legislation, I had written that it would be my hope that the pass-through would take place and would include drug cards and that type of thing.

There is a problem in the Canada Assistance Plan and I believe we have to address that, but I want to see those benefits passed through. I should say that when I have talked to companies about every case that has come to my attention, I found that companies have passed through the entire amount this Parliament gave in increases through the CPP.

Mr. Speaker: It is with regret that I must advise the House that the Oral Question Period is now over. The Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin) rises on a question of privilege.

PRIVILEGE

APPLICATION OF OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT TO PARLIAMENT

Mr. Charles Hamelin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a question of privilege concerning my rights as a francophone Member of Parliament and the rights of anglophone Members in this House. Mr. Speaker, as I pointed out to you, when some doubt arose as to whether the Official Languages Act of this country applied to Parliament, the law clerks of the House of Commons and the Senate were asked for a legal opinion. In fact, since 1981—

Mr. Speaker: I'm sure all Members are very much aware of the subject the Hon. Member is raising. It is a difficult and very important matter, and for that reason, I would ask all Members to listen with some—

• (1510)

[English]

I would ask all Hon. Members to quieten their discussions because the point the Hon. Member is making is an important and difficult one and deserves the attention of the Chamber.

[Translation]

Mr. Hamelin: Mr. Speaker, this question is indeed very important because, as I said before, four legal opinions have been drafted since 1981: on June 5, 1981, by the Law Clerk of the House of Commons, Mr. Maingot; in November 1981 by the Law Clerk of the Senate, Mr. Raymond L. du Plessis; on June 4, 1986 by the Law Clerk of the House of Commons, Mr. Marcel L. Pelletier; and recently, on February 16, by the Law Clerk of the Senate, Mr. du Plessis. These legal opinions all concluded that the Official Languages Act of Canada, adopted nearly twenty years ago, does not apply to this Parliament.

An Hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Hamelin: Imagine, Mr. Speaker, this fundamental legislation does not apply to the Senate, to Parliament or its components. This conclusion is justified on the basis of the terms used in Section 2 of the Official Languages Act, namely: "all the institutions of the Parliament and Government of Canada". In fact, Parliament is governed only by the Constitution of this country and cannot be subject to the jurisdiction of the courts unless it specifically so decides in the Constitution. And that apparently is not the case. Furthermore, the terms "institutions of the Parliament of Canada" are not specific enough to mean Parliament itself, since there is a distinction between the institutions of Parliament and its constituent parts, the institutions being those created by Parliament, including the Library of Parliament and the parliamentary committees, while under Section 17 of the Constitution Act, 1867, Parliament consists of three components, namely the Queen, the House of Commons and the Senate. This distinction between the institutions and the constituent parts of Parliament is sufficient reason to conclude there was no specific intention on the part of Parliament to be bound by Section 2 of the Official Languages Act.

The conclusions of all three law clerks are quite clear in this respect, and to quote Joseph Maingot: "The Official Languages Act is so unspecific with respect to the House of Commons that I can say that in law, one cannot give it that interpretation". I would now like to quote Mr. Pelletier, Law Clerk of the House of Commons: "In concluding, I may repeat with even greater emphasis than the previous Law Clerk that the Official Languages Act does not apply to the House of Commons nor to its officials in the performance of their duties". And now, Mr. du Plessis:

[English]

"Therefore, because of the imprecise nature of the language as used in the Official Languages Act when it refers to Parliament, the Act cannot be held to apply to the administrative offices and staff of Parliament."

Finally, as concerns the status, rights and privileges of Canada's official languages under Subsection 16(1) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, they are enounced nearly word for word in the same terms as in Section 2 of the Official Languages Act, including the words "in all institutions of the Parliament and government of Canada". The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms adds nothing to the status, rights and privileges of English and French in Parliament itself, or its constituent bodies. This explains the following comment of the House of Commons law clerk, Mr. Pelletier: In my opinion, the Charter says nothing about the language in which the Houses of Parliament must serve the public and the working language of their employees.

I could continue, Mr. Speaker, but I shall stop here. I have given you a document on this matter. However, I find it rather uncomfortable, and that is an understatement as I could say ridiculous or even crazy, for this Parliament to have established a Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages in Canada and for Parliament itself to be exempt from the law.

We, the members of the committee, which includes representatives from the Senate, the opposition and the Government, must remonstrate with federal institutions, agencies and departments, while we ourselves are above the law.

I find this completely ridiculous. As co-chairman of this committee, I look silly remonstrating with parliamentary institutions, departments or agencies when my own House of Commons and the Senate seem to be above the law. I find this completely ludicrous. I am ashamed of the fact that the law still fails to recognize the basic right to linguistic duality in Canada. Does the sovereignty of this Parliament put it above the law? I do not think so, Mr. Speaker. I hope, and this is my appeal to the Government, that the Official Languages Act, which is to be amended in the near future, will contain specific provisions saying that Parliament, its constituent bodies and its institutions are directly and necessarily bound, as they should always have been, by the Act as amended.

Mr. Speaker, in view of what you said earlier in my intervention, I rely on you to guarantee my rights as a French-speaking parliamentarian so that, with you and within these walls, I may truly live the linguistic duality of this country.

I would like to add, Mr. Speaker, and I shall close on this point, that, under the law, our translators could leave and we could have our the debates in English only. I repeat that, under the law—

An Hon. Member: The debates in French!

Mr. Hamelin: —or the debates could be in French only. Imagine in what a ridiculous situation this place us.

Mr. Speaker, I am relying on you and on the Government to see to it that this montrous anomaly is corrected as soon as possible.

Thank you for your attention, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment my colleague on his argument and the effort he has made to research it. I have not had an awful lot of time to try to put my thoughts together on the matter, so in trying to address the question of whether or not the language of Parliament was either English or French I took for my instruction the Constitution Act and referred to the same section my hon. colleague referred to in which it says:

> 16. (1) English and French are the official languages of Canada and have equality of status and equal rights and privileges as to their use in all institutions of the Parliament and government of Canada.

My hon. colleague argues that since the Official Languages Act was passed some 20 years ago and does not specifically refer to Parliament, that leaves us in sort of a conundrum. It seems to me that the Constitution Act takes care of that matter in Section 16 and makes French and English, on an equal basis, as it obviously should be, the working language of Parliament. We see every day in the institutions of Parliament, that is the buildings, the committees, and the various ways in which we function, that both languages have official status and can be used interchangeably. I listened to my colleague's comments on the legal opinions of persons probably more learned than I in constitutional law. However, I still refer to Section 16.

While this is an interesting point, I am not sure that it is a question of privilege because the right of my colleague to use either French or English—and he uses both very well in this House—is enshrined in Section 16 of the Constitution. In my opinion, in no way is my hon. colleague or anyone in this House restricted in the use of either language. Translation is provided in the House of Commons thanks to the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker who instituted it and thanks to all of us who make sure that translation services are available at every committee meeting. I believe that the House of Commons, the Senate, and the other institutions which together form the Government of Canada, are in fact living Section 16 of the Constitution every day.

I submit, first, that the use of both languages is provided for in the Constitution. Second, I submit, not to diminish the point which my hon. colleague makes, that it is not a question of privilege because his right to use either language is protected in this House and all the institutions of Parliament.

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask you to give serious consideration to the request of the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin). As assistant critic in the field of the official languages I know that the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), who is responsible for this question, would want to express strong support for the request made by the Hon. Member for Charlevoix. I think it is very important to give careful consideration to this request.

I also have another favour to ask you. When you study the request concerning the official languages, I would like you to consider the feminization of words, for every time we ask that a report be written in French we are invariably told that there can be no question of feminizing words because this is not covered by the Standing Orders of the House and, as it happens, it is up to the Committee on Official Languages to enforce it. Since we now seem to be experiencing some difficulty with respect to the official languages in the House, the time might be appropriate to consider this other issue as well. I should think that it has now become common to use feminine words when referring to Canadian women and, in my opinion, the House of Commons should be up to date in the presentation of its reports and documents.

So I would urge you to give serious consideration to the request of the Hon. Member for Charlevoix with respect to the official languages, but to consider as well the feminization of words in all House of Commons reports.

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would like also to make a few submissions in order to assist you in dealing with the matter at hand, the question of privilege, since you will have to determine later on whether the privileges of the Hon. Member for Charleboix have been breached, as he has submitted.

The matter he is raising, that the Official Languages Act may not apply to Parliament, is not new. It has been raised on a number of occasions in this House, for instance by the Hon. Member who usually sits next to me, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier.

I also had an opportunity to read legal opinions submitted by Mr. Maingot, Mr. Pelletier and others.

However, I would remind Your Honour that they are just that, legal opinions, and indeed only the courts could rule whether the Official Languages Act applies to Parliament, the House of Commons and the Senate. It is ironic that the application of the Official Languages Act to the House of Commons is being debated, because certainly this is the most bilingual of all federal institutions. All documents here are published in both languages. All debates here can be held in both languages. We have here simultaneous translation, both in the House, in Commitee of the Whole and in our standing committees. However, this is the point the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin) chose to rise just the same.

I respectfully submit, Mr. Speaker, with the purpose of assisting you in reaching a decision, that the Hon. Member's privileges have not been breached, because this would have required something to have happened here in this House, within this Chamber, or in one of our committees or in one of our offices, through which the Hon. Member would not have been served in his own language, or would have been deprived of the right to use the language of his choice—something like the absence of simultaneous translation that would have prevented the Hon. Member or some of us from understanding in their own language. But this has not happened to my knowledge.

I think what the Hon. Member is attempting to do is indicate he is not satisfied with the fact that in his view the Official Languages Act does not apply to Parliament. Therefore, this is rather a point of debate as to the interpretation of the Act that he is rising, and in my view he cannot content, as far as the Standing Orders are concerned, Mr. Speaker, that the privileges of a Member have been breached, since Members can speak in the language of their choice, and receive all the documents in both official languages.

In order to pursue his worthwhile goals, and I commend him for that, the goal is to ensure, and I also agree with that, that the Official Languages Act apply to Parliament, the House of Commons and the Senate. At that point, what should be done is this—an amendment should be introduced here, to clarify whether the Act applies to Parliament. The Hon. Member did not do that. Rather, he chose to raise a question of privilege, and I submit that in so doing he erred.

I feel that the Official Languages Act should be amended. I would invite the Hon. Member to do so. If he does not intend to do it, I myself will introduce an amendment in this House, because it should be clear that Parliament must be subject to bilingualism. Even if in effect Parliament has always respected both official languages, it is clear to me that the Official Languages Act should apply here beyond a reasonable doubt. But as far as privilege is concerned, it is my view that Your Honour should not rule there is a prima facie case, because there is none.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin) on the same issue.

Mr. Hamelin: Mr. Speaker, I have listened carefully to the argument of my hon. colleagues. However, I wish to explain that for me, it is not a matter of customs, or a matter of services which are effectively . . . Just now, in the House of Commons, we are quite properly provided with services in both official languages. I feel it is a matter of right. I am not asking for a handout as a parliamentarian; it is a matter of right which is not based on customs. Does this Parliament, the Senate and its components recognize bilingualism as a right the Canadian reality of this linguistic duality which is essential to this country? I feel as a parliamentarian that my right has been denied.

Mr. Prud'homme: If I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal for a few moments with this basic issue raised by the Hon. Member for Charlevoix.

You will remember Mr. Speaker, and so will Hon. Members who were here before 1984, the determination and dedication with which the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) pursued this matter. He showed tremendous courage at the time because a great many people were wondering what he was talking about whenever he raised the issue of bilingualism in Canada. Perhaps the Hon. Member wants to refer to the imprecise nature of the language used in the Official Languages Act. The Hon. Co-Chairman of the Committee on Official Languages is aware of it, because he co-chairs the committee with the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier whom he has known since he was elected in 1984. I congratulate him for his dedication to this important cause. We are not asking for favours but, for what I consider our basic rights. The Hon. Member for Charlevoix knows full well that, after his election, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier recognizing his interest in this issue, joined forces with him and they became friends of sort.

Before you reach any decision today, I submit, Mr. Speaker, that because this is a basic and non-partisan issue— The Hon. Member for Charlevoix has proved it. The Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin) has brought in new elements. My colleague and Acting Leader in the House, the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) commented on the matter. But it is the whole matter which has always been questioned. One day, we will have to reach a conclusion: Does the Official Languages Act apply to the House of Commons and the Senate, yes or no? We believe that it does. But others say no. This is a legal matter. I know that the Government is about to introduce major amendments to the Official Languages Act. It is a golden opportunity. Before Your Honour deals with this issue any further, he might want to get in touch with my colleague the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier who, for the first time since 1984—it is rather exceptional, a coincidence, I am sure, but is away today on official business. You are well aware, Mr. Speaker, of how attentively he has approached this question in the past, as I mentioned earlier, and before the Chair takes this matter under advisement over the next two weeks I am sure that the Chair might be interested in convening jointly the Hon. Member for Charlevoix and the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier since this is in fact an issue which goes beyond party politics.

If I may at the same time, as your president for Members' Services, avail myself of the opportunity—and a golden one it is for me—which the Hon. Member for Charlevoix has given us, I would like to raise the whole question of bilingual services for Members. I am here as a Francophone. First and foremost, I am here as a Canadian.

Mr. Prud'homme: I am here as a Canadian first. I have always said that, in both languages.

But I am a Quebecer and French is the primary language I have been using for the last 23 years. However, for reasons that have to do with the reality of Montreal, with the makeup of my own riding and with the membership of all committees, I am obligated to function in both languages, along with a minority of Members.

[English]

Some of us must face that daily. I have always asked Members, who I believe are reasonable and may use only one language, to understand, if they have difficulty functioning in one language and are recognized as first class Members of Parliament, how difficult it is for those of us who must function in both languages daily. I believe I am one of those Members. The law requires that I serve my electors in both languages and I like to attend every committee where both languages are used. While there is not a great percentage of Members who must do so, I feel that we are at a real disadvantage when we offer these services because we have the same staff and same background.

Your Honour and your predecessor were kind enough to acknowledge that there was a certain class in the House for services. I was pleased to recommend to you and your predecessor, Mr. Speaker, that we have certain services under the heading "territorial". My district is small, but I must use every language in the world. The Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Crombie) knows that every language is used in my district. However, we came to an agreement that some Members should receive supplementary services under the heading "territorial". Some Members have many more electors than others. In Toronto, for example, those Members may have two to three times as many electors as I. The committee would decide that since I can walk in my constituency, in which I have the average number of electors, I would receive a certain amount of money and not be a candidate for supplementary services. However, I have the additional difficulty of the fundamental requirement for bilingualism. In this respect, some Members are at a real disadvantage.

I am sure the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin) will not press you for an immediate answer. While Your Honour is reflecting on this question, may I humbly submit that you should also consider the fact I have just brought to your attention publicly. I was going to do so privately, but since this is a non-partisan issue, I can raise it in public as well.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I want to take a few minutes to speak on this very important issue. First, we all recognize that the topic raised today has been brought to the attention of the House on several occasions as a result of interventions by the Hon.

Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) who has often stated in the House that in his opinion, and in the opinion of others, a law appears to be deficient in terms of its application to the House of Commons.

I believe there are two necessary elements required when one raises a question of privilege. First, we must be speaking of the privileges of the House itself, and second, there must be at least an allegation that the privileges have been breached. I do not believe that inquiring as to whether a statute of the Parliament of Canada is binding on the House of Commons is a question of privilege in itself.

[Translation]

However, I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, having expressed the opinion that this is not a question of privilege, that it might be appropriate to enquire as to whether this legislation supports the Standing Orders of this House, not necessarily the privileges of this House but the Standing Orders.

[English]

In other words, while there may not be a question of privilege, an interesting question could be raised on a point of order if one of the services that is customarily available, according to the Standing Orders of the House, was suddenly not available to a Member of Parliament. The Member could then make a case that there would be a point of order.

Let me explain, Mr. Speaker, that according to the Index of our Standing Orders, Standing Orders 59, 70, 77, 96, 77(2), 110 and 135 specify what procedure is to be followed or what rule concerning official languages in this House is to be enforced.

Therefore, I think that if at a given time the Hon. Member for Charlevoix found out that some services available or which should be available to the members of this House under our Standing Orders are unavailable to him, he could then rise on a point of order rather than on a question of privilege.

This is why I would like to make a distinction, because as I said earlier, inquiry about our Standing Orders or about whether an Act of Parliament applies to this House would not be a question of privilege per se. On the other hand, as far as services available to this House are concerned, under the Standing Orders, this would be, in my humble opinion, a point of order rather than a question of privilege affecting this House.

[English]

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, what you have to decide is whether, in fact, according to the narrower rules of the House, a prima facie case of privilege exists. You are not called upon to find whether it is good, bad or indifferent that the Official Languages Act may or may not apply to the Parliament of Canada. I would suggest that if the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin) feels strongly that that Act should apply then, of course, he is quite free to pursue that through the normal channels, to try to effect the necessary, in his opinion, change to that particular statute.

I would point out, Your Honour, that there are several other statutes of otherwise general application which exempt Parliament from the full force of that particular statute or part thereof. One which immediately comes to mind is, of course, the Canada Labour Code. I would suggest that it is incumbent upon the Hon. Member to demonstrate that some actual and not some hypothetical breach of privilege has actually occurred.

Even if the Hon. Member was able to demonstrate that in some way his ability to act as an Hon. Member of this House has been taken away from him because, like myself, he is only able to properly function in one of the official languages, the remedy for that might be through the normal rules and practices of this House rather than by a change or amendment to the Official Languages Act. Therefore, as much sympathy as I might have for the point made by the Hon. Member, I would suggest that no actual breach of privilege has been demonstrated and, therefore, there is no prima facie case.

Mr. Prud'homme: Your Honour, I thought we could leave that to you, but if the Hon. Member brings in new argument, of course, I think I am bound to answer some of his argument. I did not expect it, I must admit. I would prefer though, not to open up debate yet on the Official Languages Act, but Your Honour may find—and I do not want to go that way—that there is indeed a prima facie case of privilege. Perhaps Your Honour will look into it and be of the opinion that the Hon. Member for Charlevoix is right. That may present an anomaly.

Your Honour may say that indeed you have discovered, to your surprise, that to the best of all legal advice the Official Languages Act does not apply technically or legally to the House of Commons. The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) year after year wanted to present a special Bill on this question. Your Honour may come to the conclusion that indeed the Official Languages Act does not apply to the House of Commons so, therefore, the Hon. Member was right to raise the question. The Hon. Member would be then satisfied that Your Honour has said, no, it does not apply. Then the Hon. Member will know which other course he would have to follow.

Therefore, I would prefer to leave this for the reflection of the Speaker. If the Chair says there is no prima facie case of privilege, well, then we can find arguments not to contradict, but so that we may not leave the Chair on the one track we would not like it to take.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I think perhaps the Chair should consider the comments made by each Member. The Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin) had some very interesting things to say, and I agree this is indeed a serious matter. Now, it may or may not be a question of privilege.

I think I will need time to consider all the points made by Hon. Members, but in any event, this may be an anomaly, and it certainly is a rather extraordinary and even bizarre situation, because in practice, at the House of Commons we provide every opportunity for every Member, anglophone and francophone, to speak and work in both languages. Obviously this is not the exception but an ongoing and normal practice in this House as it is in the committees and everywhere else on the Hill. Apparently, however, we have a legal opinion, a very intelligent and enlightened opinion, that has concluded that for a variety of reasons, the Official Languages Act does not apply to the House. If this opinion is correct, we have a situation that is quite extraordinary.

For the time being, I intend to defer my ruling, but I am most grateful to the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin) and to the other Members, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), the Parliamentary Secretary, the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) and the Hon. Members for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) and Outremont (Mrs. Pépin). And I think it would also be appropriate for me to recall the views held by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), who unfortunately is engaged elsewhere today. This is a subject that is very important to the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier as well. In any case, the Chair feels that the best thing would be to adjourn debate so that we will have a chance to consider all the arguments and comments we have heard. Consequently, I shall defer my ruling. I want to thank all Members for their comments. The Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin).

Mr. Hamelin: Mr. Speaker, I just want to thank you—

Mr. Speaker: I hope this is not on the same question.

Mr. Hamelin: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to say that I greatly appreciate your very receptive attitude to this subject and I want to thank you on behalf of the Francophones of Canada.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I merely want to ask the Deputy Government House Leader (Mr. Lewis) the traditional business question of the House as is customary on this day every week.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties and this evening at six o'clock when the vote on the amendment of the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) is taken, we would immediately thereafter call the vote at second reading. That would mean that tomorrow we would call the Budget for the second day.

• (1550)

On March 2, when the House reconvenes after one week's recess, we will be tabling the 1987-88 Main Estimates. We will then move to consideration of Bill C-6, legislation concerning the Atlantic Accord, followed by Bill C-39, the Canada Shipping Act. That will be followed by Bill C-12, the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, indeed, there has been consultation among the Parties in the House and there is agreement to proceed with both votes at six o'clock, as I understand it from my House Leader.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government, and the amendment of Mr. Garneau (p. 3594) and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Cassidy.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It was understood this morning that we would now proceed to the question and comment period on the speech of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I have a short question for the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). Regarding the whole matter of tax reform the Hon. Member clearly indicated that he had some questions with respect to whether or not the intent of the Government to introduce serious tax reform in fact reflected justice, fairness and equity in our tax system. He went on to make the point that the Government had the opportunity in its most recent Budget to eliminate the open-ended capital gains tax exemption, while recognizing that it is an appropriate exemption for family farms, small businesses and family homes. To have it apply widely to capital gains obtained in Canada from any and all sources is one thing, but to have it apply to capital gains obtained from sources outside Canada, sources in Florida, Hawaii or the Caribbean is another matter.

The fact that income derived from capital gains obtained in those foreign jurisdictions is not subject to any tax in Canada is something I do not think one would find in any country of the world. Even Mr. Reagan, the President of the United States, as part of his tax reform realized that not to tax capital gains was unjust, inappropriate and unacceptable to his administration. Yet the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), when he had the opportunity in his most recent Budget to close off what has to be the most obvious tax loophole in our system, did not do it.

The fact is that the Minister of Finance failed to act on this obvious and major loophole which every tax expert in the country has identified as being just that, as well as being unfair and unjust. Does that not jeopardize the whole approach to the Government when it says that it is interested in tax reform? Can one really have faith that the Government means business and is serious about a just and fair tax system when it fails to take advantage at such an appropriate time to close off this loophole?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend for his question. I want to comment very briefly on it. Yes, it does jeopardize the integrity of the tax reform process. Since the Conservatives came to power in 1984 the increase in taxes on persons has been about 50 per cent while at the same time the decrease in taxes on corporations has been about 18 per cent. What we are being told is that despite that the Government will mend its ways and that, in fact, we will see a reduction in personal taxes and an increase in the corporate tax load on profitable corporations. What I think will happen is that the people, having had their heads bashed against a brick wall for two-and-one-half years, will find that there may be some modest decrease in personal taxes but nothing close enough to compensate for the increases in taxes that have taken place under the Government since September of 1984.

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) that I listened carefully to what he said this morning. I would like to ask him a few questions. First, can the Hon. Member remember back to November 9, 1984, when his colleague, the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom), predicted that when the Government decided to cut $4 billion from the deficit—he said that he had been told this by economists—as many as 100,000 people could lose their jobs because of these cutbacks. Does the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre stand by his colleague's prediction, given that 675,000 jobs have been created instead of 100,000 being lost?

I also want to ask the Hon. Member what his approach is to corporate tax reform in the context of other jurisdictions which have lower corporate tax rates. He argued for more revenues from the corporate sector. Is he also arguing for higher marginal rates? I want to get this clear. If he is, then how would he handle the relationships with other jurisdictions if they had lower rates?

In listening to the Hon. Member's remarks I tried to keep a list of the many things that he promised his Party would do if it formed the Government. Although a number of these measures will be announced in different ways in due course during this fiscal year by the appropriate Ministers, has the Hon. Member added up what his programs would cost and what the deficit would be if he were Minister of Finance?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) might have mentioned that the growth rate in the economy has declined year after year since his Government came to power. One of the reasons for that has been the very heavy burden of taxation which now amounts to about $1,400 to $1,500 on the average family. That has oppressed the ability of people to spend. It is also having an effect in terms of the reduction in the personal savings rate as people dig into their savings in order to try to maintain their standard of living.

If the growth rate in terms of the economy declines, what that means is that, yes, we are losing jobs that could have been, and would have been, otherwise created. The Government insists on the figure of 675,000 jobs having been created. As I pointed out this morning, from January of 1986 to January of 1987 the total increase has been 137,000 jobs. That is an annual rate much less than what we had before. Only 5,000 of those new jobs were to be found outside of Ontario; the rest were to be found in the Province of Ontario. That is good for Ontario. It is my province and I am glad to see that happening now in the Golden Horseshoe. However, that renewal is not making itself felt elsewhere in the country.

If the Minister had been listening he would have noted that I said we need to make full employment a key priority of the Government. If one does that then there will be benefits in terms of the deficit, as well as in terms of costs. I think the Minister is aware of that. There would be benefits in terms of lower rates on UI and lower expenditures on the Canada Assistance Program and higher tax revenues that come both from individuals and from the corporate sector, if corporate taxation is fair.

With respect to the question of corporate tax reform, the Minister should realize, and I am sure he knows this and would not have asked the question if he did not know the answer, that in the United States there has been a transfer of about $110 billion of tax burden from individuals to corporations as part of the tax reform package that has taken place in that country. As my friend from Kamloops—Shuswap noted, it is significant that in the United States there are now no concessions provided for capital gains. When we suggest that apart from the farming sector and small business sector we should close up that loophole on capital gains, we are being consistent with what is happening in the United States.

I suggest that the concept of broadening the base and lowering the rates is one that is effective, but that the problem in Canada has been that the share of revenues coming from the corporate sector, far from increasing as it has in the United States, has been systematically decreasing. It has gone down from 14.5 points to 10.5 points of total federal revenues just in the last three years.

• (1600)

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I think the Hon. Member is agreeing with two of my three premises. He agreed that 100,000 jobs were not lost, as was predicted by his Party in 1985, in that he acknowledged that 675,000 jobs were created. In his third last sentence he agreed with the notion of lowering corporate rates and broadening the base, which is very close to what the Minister of Finance is saying.

Perhaps he would like to answer the question concerning what happens when neighbouring jurisdictions have lower marginal corporate rates than us. Is this something which concerns him?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Minister for his question. I have no problems in terms of talking about corporate tax reform which at the same time plugs up loopholes, brings in more revenues, broadens the base, and brings in lower marginal rates. All those things are possible. That is in fact what has occurred in the United States.

What I fear is the record of the Government. Since 1984 it actually allowed corporate tax revenues to decrease by some $2 billion. It then turned around and complained about the fact that it could not get the deficit down to the level which it believed would be comfortable. The Government must turn to its own friends in the corporate sector and point out to them that one of the reasons the deficit is not down to the targets it set is precisely because of the favours which are being given to the corporate sector.

In respect of tax comparisons between the two countries, the Hon. Minister knows that over many years Canada has had nominal rates which from time to time have been higher than those in the United States. One must look at the whole package of depreciation and at other treatments of investment and other matters affecting the net rates of corporations, not just take the marginal rate. I, for one, refuse to be stampeded by suggestions that we must have exactly the same rates as those in the United States.

On the personal side, for example, there are enormous expenditures on social security and on private medicare plans which average Americans have to pay, which are essentially not matched in this country, and which far more than account for a difference in marginal rates.

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montréal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, it is with a bit of sadness that I rise today in the debate on the Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). This is his third Budget. There is a simple way to sum up the three Budgets of this Conservative Government and of this Minister: taxes, taxes and more taxes; tax increases, tax increases and more tax increases; de-indexation, de-indexation and more de-indexation! The impact of the three Budgets of the Conservative Government clearly shows the position of that Party. The position of that Party is to favour the rich, make the poor even poorer, and attack the middle class to make sure that it too will become poorer.

Let us consider the consequences of these three Budgets on elderly Canadians. For openers, the Government has yet to take action to eliminate its own discrimination concerning older people who are single, separated or divorced, people aged 60 to 64. As you may recall, we expressed our agreement when the Minister of Finance announced that widows and widowers would be eligible for the spouse's allowance, but we wanted the Government to make it possible for single, separated or divorced people who are in the same financial situation to benefit as well from the spouse's allowance, a program of the old age security pension.

At the time, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance had told us that, according to the estimates, roughly 85,000 individuals might benefit as widows and widowers, and that it would cost $325 million. In fact, 50,000 people are involved and the cost would be $200 million. In other words, there is a $125 million surplus in the departmental estimates and it has not been used. If we take into account the amounts saved in welfare payments by the Government, we can say that there was a surplus of about $150 million in the allocation for senior citizens. The public expected the Conservative Government and the Minister of Finance, who simply represents high finance, to announce yesterday to Canadian senior citizens that all those who are single, separated or divorced would be eligible to the spouses allowance. Instead, Mr. Speaker, this Government and this Minister of Finance decided to maintain the capital gains tax exemption which benefits the wealthiest and which cost $1.2 billion in the last two years, 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Speaker, I am concerned about another group besides our senior citizens. Older workers were expecting something, especially the 35,000 early retirees who had been eligible to unemployment insurance in 1985 and who had received benefits before the Conservative Government decided, the night before Christmas, as a Christmas and New Year's gift, that, beginning January 5, 1986, all amounts received as pension income with employer and employee participation would be taken into account and considered income, which would automatically result in reductions of unemployment insurance benefits. Mr. Speaker, 35,000 people in Canada, including 13,000 in Quebec, are waiting to be reimbursed for these amounts, which have been estimated at about $10,000 per person. This money belongs to these people, but the Minister of Finance did not announce anything for them.

As far as pension reform is concerned, we could have expected some kind of indexation for private pension plans, as well as improvements and increases in the benefits received under the Quebec and Canada Pension Plans to ensure that men and women will have adequate pensions to live comfortably after retirement. As concerns women, Mr. Speaker, on July 26, 1984, in Sherbrooke, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Government made a commitment to find a way to allow the 3 million homemakers in Canada to contribute to the Canada and Quebec Pension Plans. Still more promises, Mr. Speaker! All that we have are more and more taxes to pay, and there is nothing for ordinary Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, it is the same Government which had said it would never touch senior citizens' pensions. Hon. Members, especially those of the Progressive Conservative Party, will certainly remember the proposed de-indexation of Old Age Security Pensions. Without their vigilance and action, senior citizens would have been penalized again. But thanks to their pressure and to Mrs. Solange Denis who had said of the Prime Minister what the Canadian people generally think of him now—"Charlie Brown, that is not worth much!"—the Government had to back down.

But in spite of all that, thanks to the New Horizons Program which makes it possible to organize in every municipality, village, parish or riding, clubs for the Golden Age, senior citizens can choose a board of directors and organize cultural, sport and social activities, and thus continue to play an important role in society.

Mr. Speaker, this Government has even made cuts in the New Horizons Program, intented for senior citizens, reducing its budget by 27 per cent or nearly $3 million.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal now with the financial consequences of these cuts on our senior citizens. I am talking here in terms of income tax. A couple of senior citizens earning $15,000! This couple will have to pay $130 more in 1987. They paid $45 more in 1986.

Mr. Speaker, those people have made this land what it is. Honourable Members here are reaping the benefits of the work and dedication of that generation that laboured at a time when there were starvation wages, unacceptable conditions and exploitation by the rich because there were no labour unions. In return, the young generation here and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) keep on favouring the rich only, giving nothing to and showing no respect for those parents and the old generation.

Well, that population will remember. Already, today's survey indicated there is only 22 per cent support. And that was before the Budget, Mr. Speaker. I am convinced the trend will continue until there is nothing left of that group in society that is only here to favour the rich.

Let us look at the impact on families. Despite what we remember of the Throne Speech, that official document, that statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) with its commitments, Mr. Speaker. What is the impact on Canadian families of the three budgets put forward by this Government? First, everyone will remember the 3 per cent cut on family allowance indexing. And still today, the Minister of Finance prefers to maintain the so-called capital gains exemption for the rich, because it favours the rich, rather than reinstating full indexing of family allowance.

Mr. Comeau: You are speaking through your hat!

Mr. Malépart: I can appreciate that a Tory Member says I am speaking through my hat, because he only owes money to the rich, or again there is patronage or corruption. But the people who are watching know that very well. Mothers know very well that since this Government has been in power, family allowance does not increase as it should. And they know very well that the better off—the rich—are getting more money from this Tory Government.

This year, Mr. Speaker, the Government will be snatching away $135 million from mothers. Last year it was $40 million, and the year before $15 million. This will go on until 1991. The Government intends to save $1.21 billion on the backs of Canadian families. While in 1985-86 only, the rich people's capital gains exemption cost $1.2 billion. I understand that the Conservative Member who shouted earlier is rich, there is something for his pockets. It is the sole reason for his being here but, Mr. Speaker, let me tell that Member that Liberal Members did not come here to fill their pockets. They came here to accomplish something for all the Canadian people.

Let us remember, Mr. Speaker, that this same Government decided to tax people's health by introducing a sales tax on drugs. This Government successively increased the sales tax on appliances generally, and I recall that for the fourth time yesterday, the Minister hiked the sales tax on fuel, thus increasing it by 4 cents a litre or 18 cents a gallon over two years and a few months.

Such is the record of this Conservative government, Mr. Speaker. And what are the consequences of those three budgets for our low and middle income families? A two children family with the head of the family earning an income of $15,000 will have to pay $490 more in income and indirect taxes for 1987 because of this Conservative government budget. A two children family where both parents work and earn $15,000 each, a family with two kids and a $30,000 income, will have to pay $966 more in income tax for 1987 because of the decisions made by this Conservative government in its three budgets.

Let us see, Mr. Speaker, what the impact will be on housing. Everybody knows that in each district there are senior citizens who will become entitled to what is called social housing, whether it be housing co-operatives or low rent housing, but waiting lists are very long in every municipality. As we remember, the government made huge cutbacks. This program is no longer working, and now there is nothing in the budget to remedy those injustices.

To recap, Mr. Speaker, there is absolutely nothing in this budget for senior citizens; there is absolutely nothing for Canadian families; there is absolutely nothing for housing. But can anyone tell me where in this Budget can we find anything likely to give confidence to the youth of this country and prove to them that this Government cares about them? We know that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) is going to announce cuts in the employment programs included in the documents later on. Nothing for our youth, nothing to replace the Katimavik program that was abolished by this Government, nothing to replace any program; no action in favour of the farmers, the remote areas or anybody. But yes, there is something for the rich and the Tories, the only people with an opportunity to take advantage of the system and the generosity of this party.

Personally, I firmly believe that the Government could have taken some initiatives. While reducing the deficit, it could have first, instead of postponing the fiscal reform and the introduction of a monthly or annual guaranteed income, the government could have, as of today, with all the information already available, published documents at the same time for the purposes of consultation and review . What is being done? Contrary to the promise of the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister, nothing has been introduced. Nobody has answered. Are these delays scandal-related? Is it a dissension in Cabinet that delays the long-awaited fiscal reform to mitigate the injustice of the tax system for the average family in comparison with corporations? Everything has been delayed. Is there a dissension in Cabinet or in the caucus? Nobody has answered that question. Why does the Conservative Government not table immediatly all documents concerning an open, sincere and honest consultation on tax reform?

Here are the questions we should ask about tax reform: Should we, as the Government did, keep the capital gains exemption which, I repeat, benefits only the rich? And it was even said that capital gains made outside of the country mean an income tax decrease in Canada and thus, translate into a tax increase for the middle income earners. When is the Goverment going to stop bleeding them dry? Before they have splipped their pay cheque into their pocket, the Government has already taken it back. Before you have time to slip it into your pocket, the Government, that is Michael and Brian, cut it in half. You have not even got that time! In the good old days, you could put it in your pocket, get home, get it out and pay your income tax. But not anymore! These days, the working man is seen as no more than a thief. No sooner has the boss given him his pay cheque than some Conservative pops up saying: "Hang on. Half of that is mine, just the rest is yours."

Shame, Mr. Speaker. The middle class has had it with this. In short, they are fed up. The minister says: "Corporations, we cannot change that, we will give them the scare, so they do not pay income taxes. But we do not scare individual taxpayers. We just hit them with all we have got." I understand the minister of Finance. All his buddies are rich people. They are not like the people I know. His friends told him to save their money bags. What the people I know back home are saying is: Help us survive. Let us live. All we are asking for is our fair share. But the minister of Finance has buddies who want their money bags saved. So far he has done a lot to oblige his money toting buddies, his friends in Canada who are rich. No wonder you rate 22 percent. There are scandals and there are scandals but no fraud or trickery is worse than what you are doing to the middle class. Those people are wondering—at this very moment, the workers in the labour force who are in their forties are wondering what will happen when they retire, whether or not there will be any money left in the till for them.

The time was ripe for reform, for a real reform in the area of pensions. The time was ripe for making sure that private pension plans were indexed, to improve . . . Governments have already increased contributions to the Quebec Pension Plan and the Canada Pension Plan. But what people need are benefits.

Mr. Speaker, I see that my time has expired. One could talk for hours trying to bring this Government to understand and ponder but, after two and a half years, I have come to the conclusion, which is supported by public opinion, that it is no use, that they understand nothing, that all they care about is getting rich and catering to the rich.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Champagne (Champlain)) for a question or a comment.

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): No, Mr. Speaker, it is on debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any questions or comments on the speech of the Hon. Member for Montreal—Saint-Marie (Mr. Malépart)? If not, debate will continue with the Parliamentary Secretary—

[English]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to take part in this important debate and to support the budget of my colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

[English]

This is a Budget that consolidates and extends the progress we have made in restoring the health of the nation's finances. It is a Budget that reaffirms the Government's commitment to carry through with a comprehensive program of action to strengthen the job-creating capacity of the Canadian economy.

The constituents in my riding of London West, like all Canadians, are pleased and confident that the economy is being well managed. That is important in my riding and I know it is important in all ridings across the country. The people are very happy to see the progress the Government is making.

This Budget points the way to a further major step in our program. It is absolutely historic that what is being proposed is a comprehensive reform of the nation's tax system. Today we have heard many suggestions from Hon. Members opposite on how the tax system can be improved. That, of course, is the next chapter.

This is also a Budget that confirms the solid economic results of sticking to our agenda for action. It is a Budget guided by a clear sense of direction and backed up by a record of proven success in managing the nation's economic and fiscal situation. To fully appreciate the progress we have made, we should recall the prediction made by the Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) on November 9, 1984. At that time, he predicted that over 100,000 jobs would be lost as a result of the $4 billion cuts that were made in the first Budget. Not only did that not happen but 675,000 jobs were created.

To fully appreciate what this agenda has meant for women and youth, one need simply look at the number of jobs that have been created in those two categories. Youth unemployment is down significantly and jobs for women have been created at an unprecedented rate. To fully appreciate the progress we have made, it is useful to recall the situation that existed when this Government came into office.

Let us not forget that when this Government came into office, the economy was still feeling the after-effects of a severe recession that had ended almost two years earlier. Economic performance was very disappointing. Unemployment was still at almost 12 per cent. Interest rates were far too high and this was discouraging investment and consumer demand.

Two and a half years ago that was the situation. However, those were just symptoms of deeper, underlying problems faced by the economy. This Government felt that unless we began to deal with the deep-rooted causes of high unemployment and interest rates, the symptoms would only grow worse. One cannot fiddle with the thermometer, one must do something about the furnace. We moved from symptoms to causes and we did not have to look too far to find one of the most serious causes of Canada's economic problems; it was the Government itself.

Government involvement in the economy had become stifling. It was everywhere. It was unproductive and unhelpful. Layers of regulation were distorting investment decisions and business practices. All Parties could find parts of our regulatory system that had to be changed. All Parties could find things that had to be improved in order to free the economy to act with less government interference.

Fifteen straight years of Budget deficits had swollen the national debt to $200 billion. The rapid increase in the debt was harming Canada's economic future. We must remember, particularly since the Leader of the Opposition criticized the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), that, as the Minister of Finance made clear today, it was during the tenure of the Leader of the Opposition as Minister of Finance that we moved from a surplus to a huge deficit, and we also experienced an inflation rate that jumped from just about where it is now to 10.6 per cent. I suppose that is what it would be if the Liberals formed the Government. Economic growth had slowed considerably. The bank rate during that period when the Leader of the Opposition was Minister of Finance rose by four and a quarter percentage points. Spending doubled and the Public Service grew by 66,000 people in those years.

So that we do not forget, let me remind Hon. Members that, as a result of this, the Auditor General stated that Parliament had lost or was close to losing effective control of the public purse. That was the kind of fiscal leadership shown by the Leader of the Opposition when he was Minister of Finance.

The record of this Government in two and a half years with its fiscal management and the confidence it has built in the economy cannot be in greater contrast to the record of the two or three-year period from 1972 to 1974. The malaise that had begun then fed on itself, so that by the time this Government took over in 1984 it was absolutely necessary for us to intervene and to intervene vigorously. We found that the more the Government intervened in the economy in an effort to help, however, the more it aggravated the very problems it was trying to help. Rather than part of the solution, it became part of the problem. Subsidies led to more subsidies, as we all know. Regulation led to more regulation. Spending led to more spending. It was a continuing spiral that fed on itself, making industries inefficient and uncompetitive and driving down the prospects for economic prosperity. The Government of the day was bankrupt of ideas. It was caught in a spiral and did not look to the fundamental way out.

Earlier today the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) regretted the economic slump which he says might be caused by this quiet Budget of ours. Instead, he wants more subsidies, more regulation and more spending. He wants to get us back into the spiral that got us in trouble in the first place. He did not like this quiet Budget because he said it would hurt the economy of Ottawa Centre. People would not come to hear Budgets anymore because they would not be too interesting. I say that if we can deliver to this House every year a Budget with the kind of economic performance we have experienced, then we should not do a lot of fidgeting. We should not be putting on a spectacle just to attract people, which is what the Hon. Member wanted. We should be providing solid economic leadership and this Budget does that.

On taking office the Government was determined to call a halt to this destructive spiral. It set out its goals very clearly in the agenda for economic renewal in November, 1984. That document should be read again, because the extent to which this Government has fulfilled the promises in that document is impressive. We have made good progress toward all those goals. Economic performance is much improved because the economy is working better. The economy is working better because of the fundamental improvements which have come about through our economic renewal program. The Government has taken action to restore fiscal responsibility by reducing the deficit and slowing the growth of the national debt. We have done this mainly by expenditure restraint and good management. After 15 years of rising deficits we have brought about the first consecutive three-year decline in 30 years. That is remarkable and, let us not forget, unprecedented. When we talk about fiscal responsibility, that is what we are talking about; bringing the deficit down.

A number of Hon. Members opposite do not like to hear about fiscal responsibility. That reminds me of the comic strip from two Saturdays ago where a child received an allowance of $3 a week. She went to see her father and said, "I do not have any money, I want another $3 to get through the weekend". The father said, "We have given you a certain amount of money for the week, will you please show some fiscal responsibility and not ask for an extra $3"? The ten-year old child left the room and thought to herself, "I don't know what fiscal responsibility is but I sure don't like the sound of it".

Hon. Members opposite do not like the sound of fiscal responsibility but it has been responsible for the huge production of jobs and lowering of interest rates in Canada. It gave a tremendous burst to housing construction and has really meant the renaissance of our economy. Compare this economy with that of Australia which did not come to terms with its spending. Interest rates went up to 15 per cent or 16 per cent or higher, I do not know. The economy ground to a halt and that was inevitable. This Government, through fiscal responsibility, drove interest rates and the deficit down.

Look at the economic resurgence that followed. The deficit has fallen almost 24 per cent, from $38.3 billion in 1984-85, to a projected $29.3 billion in 1987-88. All of that was achieved primarily by controlling government spending. In real terms, program expenditures have fallen by an average of 1.1 per cent a year over the three-year period.

We have also taken measures to promote growth and job creation.

[English]

To foster entrepreneurship, risk-taking, promote innovation and a positive climate for new enterprise, the Government dedicated a number of programs to bring about all these changes in a fair and open way, and consistent with the sense of compassion characteristic of Canadian society. There has been substantial progress towards a new role for Government; not the same old role but a new role. The Government has brought forward a remarkable number and range of fundamentally important framework initiatives as part of its economic renewal agenda.

Public policy in any country is really two things. It is output, such as expenditures, or frameworks which set the context in which things are done. The framework side was often forgotten by previous Governments with their constant reliance on spend, spend, spend. We have moved towards a framework approach. Let me give you some examples.

Destructive program frameworks such as the National Energy Program have been abolished and replaced by market-oriented incentives. The regulatory framework has been revised in transportation and financial institution sectors. It takes just a second or two to name each of the major initiatives which are leading to a new framework for business activity, but Members of this House know just how much is involved in each of these areas. For example, it would take me the better part of my time just to outline the main features in the goal of financial institution reform. This policy has been very well-received. The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) complained it might lead to foreign takeovers in the financial sector. I commend the paper to him. He should read it again. It is silent on foreign participation except in the securities industry, and the whole program is designed to give our financial institutions, which are great job creators, world-class status, indeed a jump on our foreign competitors.

Privatization of Crown corporations is proceeding and the size of the Public Service has been reduced. What a contrast with what went on before. We have moved forward to remove obstacles to the growth of business and encourage investment. One of our first acts was to abolish the Foreign Investment Review Agency and replace it with Investment Canada. Instead of discouraging investment we began to encourage it. I am reminded that the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides called for more consultation as we go into freer trade with the U.S. and in the GATT negotiations. In fact the NEP and FIRA were brought in with virtually no consultation with anyone. We are consulting. There is an elaborate network to help us in our bilateral negotiations with the U.S. and our multilateral negotiations through GATT. The consultation process is deep, profound and goes on daily. That is in marked contrast to the way the previous Government approached matters of this sort.

A new competition policy has been implemented. We are actively encouraging research and development, and tax measures such as the lifetime capital gains exemption are already working to create jobs in the small business sector, the engine of growth in our economy. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre spoke disparagingly of the lifetime capital gains exemption but it is very important for farmers and small business. The Investment Dealers' Association of Canada traces billions of dollars in new, permanent, job-creating equity investment directly to that particular provision. At the same time we have substantially strengthened our social safety net. The refundable sales tax credit in effect for 1986 will help those on whom the burden of consumption taxes fall most heavily. We have enriched the child tax credit and put in place a new delivery system so those who need help the most will receive a prepayment in November of each year. I was very proud to introduce that Bill and it has been enormously well-received. All of us heard about it when we returned home at the Christmas break.

Comprehensive reform of pension arrangements will encourage savings for retirement while improving pensions for all Canadians. Part-time workers and women will benefit particularly from the change in pension standards. Previous Governments never did anything of any importance regarding pensions, but we have acted. Since December, 1984 our Government responded positively to two further challenges; first the challenge presented by growing competition and protectionism internationally.

The Member for Laval-des-Rapides was criticizing our initiative on bilateral trade with the United States. He said we are looking at the trees rather than the forest. In fact, that is what is wrong with his policy. The Liberal Policy on bilateral trade liberalization is to discuss individual irritants and hope the Americans will pay attention. They would like to discuss steel, potatoes, or whatever. In fact, that approach has not been working and will not work. The comprehensive trading umbrella under which we are talking to the Americans has them listening and will lead to the solution to the problems which we have been living with during the last 10 years. That is the comprehensive approach of addressing the forest rather than just the trees. It takes courage to do this and the Government is doing it.

There has been a challenge presented on regional disparity at home. We have taken action to deal with that. We have signed economic and regional agreements with most of the provinces. Let us not forget the abolition of the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax. It has provided a positive framework for energy development. To assist the Atlantic region we have signed the Atlantic Accord and the Nova Scotia Accords which were extremely well received. We have instituted the Atlantic Enterprise Program and are directing an additional $600 million in federal procurement to Atlantic Canada over a four-year period.

Western Canada is benefiting from the assistance given to farmers through the crop insurance program and the special drought assistance program. Our actions supporting grain transportation and the huge $1 billion special Canadian grains program announced in December are concrete actions taken to meet real needs. These things have been mandated by the Throne Speech and will be announced by Ministers at the proper time as the fiscal year unfolds.

Our tax system has become an obstacle to economic growth. It is too complex. The tax burden is very unjustly distributed among taxpayers. To improve the system is one of our priorities.

[English]

Much remains to be done to improve the tax system. The tax system has engaged the attention of most speakers today. I listened very carefully to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides. His principles for tax reform are very general but, quite frankly, they are very similar to ours. However, we are being more specific. We are moving toward the harder decisions. We are consulting regularly and when we bring forward our proposals in a few months they will be much more carefully thought through than the level of generality which I heard from the Hon. Member opposite.

On July 18 the Government announced that it would be developing a proposal for comprehensive tax reform designed to achieve those goals. Consultations have already been conducted on this by the Minister of Finance and myself with various groups. The work on this proposal is continuing with the benefit of advice and information which we are getting from Canadians in every region and every sector of the economy. We intend to bring forward a tax reform proposal which ensures that our tax system plays a positive role in the renewal of Canada's economy. Unlike the tax changes introduced in the MacEachen Budget, our consultations are thorough and careful in order to ensure that there are no rude surprises.

One of the most important issues of tax reform will be to strengthen Canada's economy and create new jobs and economic growth. That is why we want tax reform. The central objective is to reduce tax rates in all three elements of the tax system. We want to reduce personal and corporate rates and we want to change the federal sales tax system in order that it, too, will be lower but more broadly based. There can be no better incentive than lower tax rates for growth, investment, savings and job creation.

To get tax rates down we must reduce or eliminate a wide range of exemptions, deductions and tax credits which are now part of the system, having been put in by 10 or 20 years of previous Governments. So many of those exemptions and preferences are not useful and are not working. They have outlived their usefulness and resulted in very high costs to the Government. As the Minister of Finance said yesterday, tax reform would mean that those Canadians now making extensive use of tax preferences would pay more tax and those who have been making little use of tax preferences would pay less tax. With that approach we will be able to put forward a fundamental tax reform which will engage the interest and support of all Canadians.

Most Canadians want a fair tax system in addition to lower taxes. They want it to be less complex and more understandable. We are committed to that as well. We can achieve these goals by dealing with all three elements of the tax system together as an integrated package. We want a tax reform proposal which builds on the progress we have already made in improving our tax system.

In conclusion, our economic renewal agenda is working. More to the point, 675,000 more Canadians are at work today than in 1984. Inflation has fallen. Interest rates are down. This Budget and the action program it represents deserve the support of every Member of the House.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I have one brief question of the Minister. Just after I came into the House he told, I suppose, an apocryphal story about a little girl who went to her father after she had spent her $3 allowance and he told her to exercise fiscal responsibility. Had the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) been in that situation, on the basis of what we saw in this so-called Budget, he would have asked his father to lend him some money from his allowance for next week. The Minister of Finance has effectively brought $1.2 billion from 1988-89 back into 1987-88 simply to get his budget deficit under $30 billion.

Would the Minister not agree that the analogy is very apt indeed? On the Minister's advice the little girl who ran out of her $3 and needed more should have gone to her father and asked for $3 paid in advance from the next week's receipts. That is one approach. Also, would he not agree with me that this manipulation of cash flow does not do one thing to improve the fiscal position of the Government other than to put in the window a deficit number which is under $30 billion in hopes, perhaps, of fooling those who are ignorant of the manipulation which in fact is taking place?

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, the analogy which the Hon. Member is trying to make to the comic strip story which I told does not work. The analogy is really that if the little girl was selling lemonade she should try to collect the receipts at least twice a month rather than once a month. That is what we are bringing in. We are bringing in a policy which allows better cash management. Cash management is needed in a household and also in the Government. As a matter of fact, in the United States this is done much more quickly than we do it here in Canada.

We are putting in place a system which is natural for an industrialized country. This twice monthly payment will only affect 35,000 to 40,000 businesses of the one million businesses which exist in this country. It will apply to the larger ones. They have the computer facilities to accomplish that quite easily. I believe this is an important cash management initiative. The Government of Canada has brought forward others, by the way, in response to the Nielsen Task Force and other studies and consultations. Proper cash management is something about which the previous Government did nothing. Many payments were tardy and there were prepayments of government obligations that did not make any sense. We have addressed that, and this is a prime example. If my daughter was selling lemonade, I would tell her try to collect the proceeds at least twice a month rather than once a month.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, that is a very facile response to a serious question. Did the Nielsen Task Force Report recommend that there be an acceleration of employee withholdings so that, in other words, employees should be obliged to remit twice a month? If the Minister wants to carry his argument to its logical conclusion, surely there should be a remittance not twice a month but perhaps four times a month or even every day.

The fact is that it has been established in the law that it is quite appropriate that the remissions take place historically 14 days after the end of the month.

Furthermore, the Hon. Member's argument completely breaks down when we consider that in the year 1988-89 there is no better cash management because in the month of April that year the Government will only receive $1.2 billion from the previous March and, in the following April, it will only receive $1.2 billion, making exactly the $4.2 billion it would have received in April had it left the matter alone. That argument is ridiculous and the hon. gentleman for whom I have a great deal of respect does not present a worthy argument to defend the indefensible.

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, we are not denying that after the $1.2 million it is a one-time budgetary revenue increase. The Hon. Member forgets that by hastening these payments at the provincial as well as the federal level, the whole time period is being moved up 15 days. That leads to a significant interest rate saving that will continue in the future. Simply because the figure is not $1.2 billion every year does not mean this acceleration should not be done. While I do not have the figure, it is substantial. The Government should take action to bring in more revenue if it can find ways to do so without increasing taxes.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to see the transition of the Member from the Chairman of the Joint Parliamentary Committee of which I was a part into a Cabinet Minister which tends to lead to inaccuracies and overstatements of fact. I believe the Chairman of the Committee might have been more scathing about that in cross-examining witnesses.

Let me deal specifically with the comments that were made with respect to the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) and his suggestion that the $500,000 capital gains tax exemption was a worthy candidate for elimination in the Budget. First, while it may have been unconscious, the Minister has distorted the position that was taken by this Party which exempts those small farmers and small businessmen to whom he referred from any such change. We are talking about a change in a system which not only encourages, through tax exemption, speculative investment by large companies, but speculative investment by people entirely outside the country. That is surely a worthy target for immediate change.

If the Minister is so certain that this introduction of the $500,000 capital gains tax exemption has brought vast increases in investment to this country, why do the Budget Papers themselves for the year in which this was first introduced, 1986, state at page 8: "In fact, business, non-residential investment decreased in Canada by 1.2 per cent"?

I note that the increase for next year is a measly 1.5 per cent, and anyone who has studied some economics, as I know the Minister has, will recognize that those are most devastating figures for investment in this country and, in fact, account for a good deal of the difficult economic growth prospects which we see ahead of us.

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member and I come from a very fortunate part of Canada where unemployment is low and industrial production is at historic high levels. I can forgive the Hon. Member for overlooking the answer to his last question, that the oil and gas sector has collapsed. There may be some activity in our region near Petrolia, but the Hon. Member will realize the billions of dollars of investment that has dried up because of the collapse of the oil and gas market. If that is set aside, he will see that there has been an enormous increase in investment. The Investment Dealers' Association has its figures, but the macro figures will also show it, if the oil and gas sector is excluded. It has worked.

We will look at everything in tax reform. I am not saying that the $500,000 capital gains tax exemption must remain. It will also be considered. The comments by the Hon. Member and other Members on this question are important because it forms part of the analysis. There is frequent mention of people buying yachts in Florida and writing it off under this capital gains program. However, the fact is that this program has helped small business generally and farmers in particular. Of course, any anomalies in the program should be reviewed.

I believe we should take into consideration one's incentives to work hard. Sometimes a person's incentive to work hard is to buy a bicycle, a painting, or to go on a trip. Is the Hon. Member saying that only certain kinds of incentives are appropriate in the lexicon of the NDP? I believe the Government should allow as much freedom as is reasonable in terms of incentives for Canadians.

I also remind the Member that the facts are indisputable that long-term common equity investment in small business has increased over $1 billion in the last fiscal year, according to the Investment Dealers' Association. They do not trace it to the tax changes in Quebec, but to this particular provision.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, let me begin my facing the difficult task of labelling this Budget. The Government has labelled it as a good budget. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) himself has called it a "stay the course" Budget. One newspaper today called it a "breathing space Budget". I suggest that it is perhaps more indicative of a government that is out of breath, rather than one that is taking a breathing space. It could also be labelled as the "pie in the sky" Budget because the promises on tax reform are supposed to be the great highlight of the Budget. Yet there is absolutely nothing which indicates specifics with respect to such tax reform. I think as I look at the Budget that perhaps the headline in the Montreal Gazette this morning "The Popcorn Budget" is the best description I have seen. It is actually one I have to say I came up with before the Montreal Gazette. It is a Budget full of hot air. It has an awful lot of buttery syrup mixed up with it, but the major proposals within this Budget are all in the category of that famous tax levied on popcorn.

I feel that I should actually be complaining to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) about the false advertising in this Budget and suggesting that this Budget should be very strongly looked at by the authorities in the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs who look at false advertising, because it contains a great deal of nonsense which is not accurate and not reflective of the real state of the economy.

I would like to now look at some of the good news which is supposedly contained in this Budget. I could take, for instance, the growth rates which one might have thought would be the heart of a good news Budget. What do those growth rates say? In the four budgetary exercises for which the Conservative Government has been responsible, starting with 1984, each and every single year the rate of growth in this country has declined and declined significantly. In 1984 it declined 5.5 per cent; in 1985, 4.0 per cent; in 1986, 3.3 per cent, and projected for 1987 is not an increase, not good news, but a further decrease to 2.8 per cent in terms of growth rates.

One could look at the unemployment rates. It is fascinating to find, if one looks carefully through the documentation—there was not very much provided so it was relatively easy to look through—the growth rates as compared with the United States and various comparisons with European countries, but we could not find a comparison of the unemployment rate now in Canada with that of the United States. The reason, of course, is that it is not good news. It is very bad news.

We have in this country a 9.7 per cent unemployment rate. The United States has an unemployment rate of approximately 6.9 per cent. We work on the basis of very similar comparisons and there is no question whatsoever that we have seen the government increase the gap in unemployment rates between the United States and Canada to one of the largest levels which has existed since the Great Depression itself. There is an almost 3 percentage point difference between ourselves and the United States. We are simply being outperformed by our closest trading partner.

I could look at investment rates, which I have just done in my question to the Minister. On page 8 of the Budget Papers we see again figures which show that in this past year there were great decreases in investment in this country. A tremendous Conservative pro-business government has taken power. It is supposed to be a great friend of the corporate community, but it ends up giving us a significant decrease in investment levels by private business. We can take for example the 1.2 per cent for business non-residential investment. That is not just a lower growth rate, that is an actual decrease, an actual decline, which this tremendous friend of business has managed to create.

We could look further at the forecasts for corporate tax, which are always a rather interesting reflection of what the Government thinks is going to take place with respect to the buoyancy of the economy itself. When we look at those statistics, which are found on page 22 of the Budget Papers, we see that the actual receipts were over $2 billion below what was forecast for 1986-87. For 1987-88 the forecasts, compared to last February's Budget, are even below the expectations which were put before the Canadian people at that time. So it is a bad news Budget, not a good news Budget.

It is a bad news Budget even for those who have some sacred belief in reducing deficits. The deficit which is now projected for the end of this coming fiscal year is $29.3 billion. Anyone who has some historical memory can go back and ask what the projection was which was made by the great Minister of Finance a year ago in February. His projection was that the deficit we would be facing, not in a year, but now, would be $29.5 billion. But it is $32 billion because of mistakes and because of increased tax loads on Canadians which have decreased economic activity and have brought down, as a result, a much higher deficit than was forecast. This is exactly what some of us predicted last year.

It is frankly a Budget which the Government has blown. Yet it has a magic trick which somehow is going to make it look good. It is the magic trick of accelerating income from taxes. By accelerating it, it will make a once and for all gain of $1.2 billion. At the end of next year, as a result, it will look as if it is lucky to have a $29.3 billion deficit. But that will be achieved only through trickery, only through playing with the figures, only through what is in essence a manipulation of a system of receiving income from employers which, of course, will significantly hurt those employers.

That is the supposed good news which is contained in the Budget. More important than that is the tremendous unfairness which exists in the Budget. It is an unfairness which shows itself in there being no action taken on regional development concerns, despite high unemployment levels in regions across the country. I am not just talking about provinces, I am talking about areas within provinces. Frankly, the statistics are frightening. There are parts of British Columbia in which the unemployment rate as of January was 19.6 per cent. There are parts of Alberta, that great area of Tory prosperity in the past, in which unemployment rates in certain areas are 12.8 per cent. There are parts of Saskatchewan in which unemployment rates are 10.7 per cent. The only part of the country which does not have an area, a region, with an unemployment rate of over 10 per cent is Manitoba, which is governed by a NDP Government.

If we consider places such as Ontario we see that in northern Ontario there is an unemployment rate of 14.6 per cent. These figures are direct from Statistics Canada. Recently in this debate someone noted that, surely, we are not questioning figures from Statistics Canada. Even in southern Ontario, which is supposed to be the heartland of prosperity, the unemployment rate in Brant County is 10.2 per cent. In areas such as the area around Montreal the unemployment rate is 12.4 per cent. In other parts of Quebec the unemployment rate is 14.5 per cent and 15.2 per cent. In Labrador it is 26.5 per cent, as it is in parts of Newfoundland. In Cape Breton it is 23.1 per cent. In Prince Edward Island it is 17.8 per cent. In parts of New Brunswick it is 16.2 per cent.

There is nothing, absolutely nothing, in the Budget to deal with those types of regional inequalities which cause tremendous damage to people and which result from these vicious levels of unemployment. All of us know that in fact those official statistics are often under-estimated by significant margins. We are talking about human tragedy.

I wish to talk about some of those human tragedies. For instance, I wish to talk about a woman in my constituency, Mrs. Hahn, who is retired. As a result of measures such as the increase in the gas tax she will no longer be able to visit her family in Toronto. I wish to talk about auto workers, such as Marcel Lemieux, who were looking for action in the Budget to protect the auto industry and to give a fair balance between those who are meeting 60 per cent Canadian value added in the Big Four and those who are getting a free ride in the Korean and Japanese companies which do not have to meet those goals.

I wish to talk about farmers in my constituency, farmers such as Claude Giroux, who has not only faced tremendous squeezes in terms of prices that he is paid against his costs of production, but who is being hit for back taxes. In this case he tried to keep his family and farm together by working off the farm.

I wish to talk about people such as Gloria Seale, a woman in one of the low-income housing projects in my constituency who was offered a job. She felt a tremendous sense of satisfaction to finally have a job made available to her. She found that she could not take the job because day care was not available since the Government has refused to act despite promises in the Speech from the Throne, despite promises from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and despite promises from the Minister who deals with this subject. We have seen nothing in the Budget whatsoever with respect to day care, or anything else that might help the women of the country.

I also wish to talk about a friend of mine, Richard Kamau, who lives not in Canada but outside of Canada. He lives in Africa. As a result of the Budget and its attack on the weak he faces a cut, as we discovered this morning, because the money that CIDA will be able to spend on its projects has been cut by $92 million next year. We saw the details this morning, and they demonstrate that very clearly. What we have is a Budget that is hurting people, not just here in Canada but elsewhere in the world.

I recognize that it is a tough time economically, that we have difficult challenges in front of us. In fact, the previous speaker and I spent far too much time on the same committee. We came to complete agreement with respect to many of the problems that we face as a country. There is a need to rebuild our industry; a need to become competitive; a need to be much more dynamic and effective in our trade activity; and a need to push ahead in our resource sector. There is a need to build up from the bottom new community initiatives which will get people back to work and get the country moving again. The Budget does none of that.

I must say that the Minister boasted that there are no new initiatives in his Budget. Therefore, I say that it is a sick Budget from a sick Government, a Government which is staggering from scandal to scandal, a Budget in which inaction is made a virtue. It represents a sickness in the Conservative Government, and I deeply regret it.

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, in describing the Budget the Hon. Member referred to it as being pie in the sky, as popcorn, as hot air, or as something of no substance. Does he describe the following particular concrete achievements in the province in which we both live as pie in the sky or hot air? Some 356,000 jobs have been created in the Province of Ontario since September 1984; 62,000 jobs have been created in the Toronto area in the past 12 months; the value of building permits issued in 1985 was up 33.8 per cent or $2.1 billion compared with 1984; building permits in the first 10 months of 1986 were up 34.7 per cent; and, for the month of January 1987, there were 5,738 housing starts. The list goes on and on, and I have only referred to the Province of Ontario. Those achievements are not pie in the sky or hot air. They are reality. They have been created by the climate and physical responsibility put in place by the Government. Perhaps we are not supposed to talk with any pride about Ontario, but this is real and this is where we live. Does the Hon. Member call these things—and I could mention farm cash receipts increasing in 1986 by 7.2 per cent compared with 1985—pie in the sky or hot air?

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, perhaps if the Minister had been listening a little more carefully he would have heard me refer to the pie in the sky aspects of the Budget in respect of tax reform. I indicated quite clearly that it was a Budget which had within it pie in the sky being promised, just as the Salvation Army used to do in the past, suggesting that tax reform would be brought in and that that would give us fairness and growth. That was the pie in the sky to which I referred.

Let me refer quite directly to the mass of magnificent statistics which the Minister read to the House. In his speech the Minister said that the problem which his Government faced in coming into office was that there had been too much government action, that Government was stifling the people of the country. It seems to me that that has led to a reversal, a retrenchment, or a Government which has been in retreat, for the most part, so far as economic initiatives are concerned since 1984. Certainly in respect of the Budget there is no new initiative of any kind, except for more taxes which fall upon the ordinary person.

With regard to the pattern within the country, I think that a Minister with the insight of the Minister who has just spoken would want very much to say that the over-all picture is crucial and that that picture shows, as I indicated in my speech, that growth rates have fallen in each year since the election of the Conservative Government.

Also I think that the Minister would want to recognize that the auto industry in his part of the country and in my part of Ontario has been a major, possibly overwhelming factor in respect of the tremendous expansion that has occurred in many parts of Ontario. Yet, that auto industry is presently being put at risk in terms of the Auto Pact, duty remission schemes, and the whole set of issues which is being bargained about in the free trade arrangements.

Unfortunately the Minister has not proven his point. Instead, he has demonstrated my point, that across the country we have seen economic devastation in many respects. In our part of the country we have seen gains, and those gains have come out of an industry which the Government is putting directly at risk.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) remembers the election campaign of 1984. However, I wonder whether he remembers a particular document commonly referred to as "Pocket Politics, 1984". I have been told that the document was given to Conservative candidates. It was a 46-page policy manual authorized by the PC of Canada Fund, according to what is written on it, as registered agents for the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada.

In any case, one thing Tory candidates were supposed to say was that a Conservative Government would double research and development effort to 2.5 per cent of the GNP in the first four years in office. I know the Hon. Member comes from the academic world and is obviously very concerned, as am I and many other people, about the research and development efforts or lack thereof of the present Government. Does he think, as do I, that it is difficult to consider this particular campaign to have been fulfilled? The budget of the National Research Council was cut from $520 million in 1984 to $398 million in 1986? In addition, the Tory Government across the way cut a further $20 million on October 9, 1986. Does the Hon. Member agree that the Tories very badly breached this particular promise and failed to deliver in the popcorn Budget which was brought down yesterday?

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member. One is almost tempted to say "colleague" because we share the back-benches, but one must think of all with whom we share the back-benches, and it is a little questionable.

I think the point which he made was a crucial one for two reasons. First, there is no question that the economies of the future, the countries which will do well, the countries which will expand free trade, see accelerated growth rates, and keep their people at work, are the countries which invest in research and development, as we in Canada should be doing.

Second, I must say with regret that the failure to meet a promise when a Government is elected, especially a promise as direct and as concrete as the one to which the Hon. Member referred, leads to unfortunate cynicism about politics as a whole, to which the Government has contributed more than its share in recent weeks.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will recognize the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney) on a short question or comment, and then we will resume debate.

• (1730)

Mr. Daubney: Mr. Speaker, I listened with care to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) for whom I had, or at least until today, a certain amount of respect. Having heard his remarks I felt I should quote from the article which I have just read in this month's Saturday Night, the headline of which reads:

> Steven Langdon, the NDP critic on industry and free trade, knows everything about the economy except how to make it work.

That has a certain ring of accuracy to it. Let me quote a brief excerpt from the article which is written by Robert Fulford for Saturday Night, a journal which is not known to support the Conservative Party:

> The major problem of Langdon and his fellow New Democrats—is that their party's political culture remains profoundly anti-business. They live in a society whose wealth depends on business, yet they take no pleasure or satisfaction from the success of business.

The Budget we heard last night talked about the success of business and the success of the economic management which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has brought to this nation's affairs. Does the Hon. Member not realize that his constituents rely on that success, that the people in the Windsor area need the kind of economic leadership the Government is giving them? Does the Hon. Member not realize that he does not speak for the people of Essex—Windsor when he speaks in his kind of trivial, anti-intellectual and very disappointing way about the Budget. The Budget is an important document. It is an important record of a very successful two and a half years of economic management.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I take it that the hon. gentleman did not enjoy the speech. Let me say two things in response. First, this was a speech about the Budget which I fear—perhaps the Hon. Member has not had a chance to read it yet—not only has nothing in it but was boasted about by the Minister of Finance because it has nothing in it.

With respect to the second point and our supposed anti-business philosophy, I make only the point that what we have been saying about this Budget and its do-nothing character is precisely what my friends in the business community have been saying as well. When we chatted outside last night at the scrum we each looked for words which could be more perjorative with respect to a Budget which came in and did not, at a time of tremendous difficulty for the private sector as demonstrated by those decreased investment levels, do anything to try to pick up this country up, to put more money into the hands of the ordinary person and get Canada moving again, very much with the support of business, but very much with the leadership of Government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Champagne).

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At last, I could say. First of all, before getting into the gist of my remarks, I want to say that my hon. colleague from Ottawa-West (Mr. Daubney) is perfectly right when he says that our New Democrat colleague knows nothing about the economy, and that the Hon. Member next to him does not understand anything either. Anyway, I wonder to what extent a Member of the NDP can understand the Canadian economy because he has no idea of what it is to be in power. NDP members know nothing at all. The only think they can do—yes, it's true, Mr. Speaker, they are good at one thing: criticism, criticism, criticism. It is about the only word they know and I encourage them to keep on in that direction because then they will always be in the opposition.

Mr. Speaker, unlike my colleague from Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), I am very proud to rise today to take part in the debate on the budget that was tabled yesterday by out excellent Minister of Finance, the Hon. Michael Wilson. Mr. Speaker, this is first and foremost a budget that is one more step in the direction that the Progressive Conservative Government has taken since it came to power on September 4, 1984, a budget that essentially deals with the economic and social future of Canada through the creation of permanent jobs, lowering of interest rates, reduction of deficit, control of inflation and national reconciliation.

Mr. Speaker, since September 4, 1984, we are talking about these goals and we are achieving them. We are achieving them because our Government, under the enlighted direction of our Prime Minister, has been listening to the Canadian people, has given to our Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) a clear and specific mandate to put the Canadian economy back on its feet. If you look at statistics, they speak for themselves, and I do not think this is partisanship.

If you look at interest rates, they were at 12 percent in 1984 when our Party took power. They are down to about 7 percent today. That is moral responsibility shown a by Progressive Conservative Government.

As for inflation, we were able to keep it at about 4 per cent. This has increased the purchasing power of many Canadians and particularly the less privileged. Here again, our Government has shown political and moral responsability.

The people in my riding of Champlain know what mortgage rates mean. They suffered enough when these rates reached a level of 20 to 22 per cent in the 80's. Do you realize how disastrous these rates were for our economy and for hundreds of thousands of families who had to sell their houses, to give up their hopes to buy one or even stopped contributing positively to the Canadian economy because of a lack of financial means? This immoral situation was created by a Liberal Governement with an unrestrained arrogance towards Canadians in general, and taxpayers in particular. Mr. Speaker, they learned the hard way on September 4!

Mr. Speaker, this morning, I was very surprised to see, sitting side by side, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) who fatherered the Quebec deficit and the Leader of the Opposition, the Right Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner) who fathered the federal deficit. They were chatting about the Budget!

Mr. Hudon: An expanding vacuum!

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): Yes, an expanding vacuum, as my hon. colleague for Beauharnois—Salaberry (Mr. Hudon) says. The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides was saying almost word for word: This morning I picked at random a few editorials reflecting the harmful impact of the Conservative Budget. Then I realized to what extent Liberals were indulging in demagogy and had a very short memory. This is why I checked some papers and I shall quote, as did my colleague for Laval-des-Rapides, from an article published on February 16, 1984 in Le Droit, the day after the last Liberal Budget. It says: "Business and labour groups are disappointed with Mr. Lalonde's Budget. The President of the Saint-Jean-Baptiste Society, who made very harsh criticisms, considers that Budget as an electoral and partisan exercise of Liberal propaganda."

This afternoon, I heard the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) say that the Government had neglected the workers and the unemployed. Mr. Speaker, on February 16, 1984, the day following the last Liberal Budget, the Ottawa daily Le Droit was saying in large characters: "Lalonde ignores the unemployed. The federal budget presented last night in the Commons contains little to help the unemployment situation, and the rate is expected to remain at around 11 per cent next year."

Mr. Speaker, this came from an irresponsible Governement. It came from a Liberal Government. We have seen the results.

In La Presse of that same day, February 16, 1984, Mr. Speaker, the columnist Laurier Cloutier wrote: "Mr. Lalonde's Budget paves the way to a new recession. The budget presented by the federal Minister of Finance, Marc Lalonde, will cause a new increase in inflation and interest rates within a year, and a new recession at the end of next year. Several spokesmen for the business community, after a first evaluation of yesterday's budget, said they feared new economic problems in the short term . . . " That was all about the last Liberal budget.

Fortunately, Mr. Speaker, on September 4, 1984, the Canadians rejected the Liberals, otherwise, we would have had a recession in 1985. We would be going through an economic slump, because of an irresponsible Government which knew only how to spend, and not how to manage wisely the Canadian economy.

Mr. Speaker, I will mention again that 1984 Liberal Budget, because the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (M. Garneau) was saying this morning that the "opposition was disappointed and skeptical", but this time I will quote the leader of the New Democratic Party who said that "the unemployed will not profit from all the talk about recovery, as more than 80 per cent of the tax cuts contained in the Budget are targeted to people in higher income brackets."

Mr. Speaker, looking at the leader of the Opposition and the leader of the New Democratic Party, I realize one thing: since 1984, and even 1980 for the latter, the only thing they can say is that it is inequitable and unfair. Mr. Speaker, it is precisely then that we realize that two opposition parties are not able to renew themselves, to contribute actively and positively to the development of the Canadian economy, when we see them, particularly the New Democratic Party recently, sit in this House, prevent the normal course of the business of the House, keep us here until 3 o'clock a.m. on matters of paramount importance for the Canadian economy, that we see to what extent the sheer partisan attitude of those two opposition parties prevails over the rational pursuit of economic and social development for the well-being of Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, we heard about regional problems this morning. I heard my colleague the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) say that the federal Government had done nothing to help the regions. I would like to remind him of one thing: federal-provincial agreements have been signed, particularly with Quebec, and it should be stressed; we signed agreements on forestry. We signed federal-provincial agreements on mining, on agriculture this week, on economic and regional development under ERDA. We signed agreements which at last enable Quebec, with the help of the federal Government, jointly and constructively, to ensure that our economic development, our creation of permanent jobs, that the hope to give young people a good and stable future now materialize, because there are two responsible governments, one being the federal Government. It was a Progressive Conservative Government which was not afraid to sit down with the provinces and negotiate to see exactly what they wanted. Of course, under the Liberal Government, Mr. Speaker, this was not done because as we know . . . There are indeed some Liberal members who are gentlemen but I can say to you, Mr. Speaker, that the arrogance of the Liberal government was such that the Quebec premier was told that he was just a hot dog eater. I remember that there were 74 Quebec members in this House who after years of negotiations with Quebec were on the verge of signing a constitution which allowed us to be proud of our country; but they turned around and knifed them in the back and kept them apart from the rest of the country. Such was, Mr. Speaker, the Liberal government which the Canadian people defeated in September 1984.

Mr. Speaker, when we see a responsible government—

Mr. Prud'homme: Responsible?

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): I would ask my colleague from Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) to listen closely to what I am going to say. When we see a responsible government which decides to take control of the Canadien economy and to cut its expenditures, over 63 per cent of the deficit reduction being on account of cuts made within the management of the State and not necessarily distributed among taxpayers as a whole as demagogically stated by the New Demoractic Party and the Liberal Party. Mr. Speaker, we have said, and we have the figures to prove it, figures provided by Statistics Canada and the Conference Board, that our Minister of Finance was right to put the Canadian economy on a new course, to restrict Government spending, to sit down with the provinces and consult and co-operate, in order to offer Canadians effective programs at a lower cost than was the case under the Liberals during their last term.

Mr. Speaker, I realize that at this point we can hardly expect the Opposition to support us, because it would have to say that we are an efficient and a responsible Government.

Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I was listening to the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), supposedly an ardent defender of the rights of widows and orphans, who was saying that the Progressive Conservative Government had betrayed Canadians who were most in need. Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind him of a few points which I am sure will embarrass him. In 1980, Mr. Speaker, in their election literature, the Liberals promised an allowance for widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 64. It took a Progressive Conservative Government to make it all come true. The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie had nothing to do with it.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order! The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), on a point of order.

Mr. Malépart: My point is that the Hon. Member involuntarily misled the House by saying the Liberals promised to do this. That was not what the Liberals had promised. They had promised better things.

• (1740)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order. The Hon. Member will have an opportunity to ask a question or make a comment after the Hon. Member has finished his speech.

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, this is where I realize to what extent he had a poor memory because I took this word for word from the pamphlet of the former Liberal candidate in the riding of Champlain in 1980. It was written word for word. They should consult one another before making statements which mislead the House.

Mr. Speaker, this reminds me of something else, and I see my colleague from Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) who is sitting behind me. When the Montreal East refineries were closed down in 1981, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie did not even get out of his office. He did not rise a finger to help the Texaco and other refinery workers who lost their jobs, Mr. Speaker, and that is called political immorality. He thought he should stick with his Party instead of helping workers who were having a hard time.

Today, Mr. Speaker, I just cannot understand now he sits in the Opposition, how he can say something which totally contradicts what he used to say when he was sitting on the Government benches. It is as though Liberal Members generally, and the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) in particular, are more anxious to score political points than to protect the rights of workers.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mind your own business!

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I will reply to my colleague the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) that I am minding my own business, because the business of Canadians is my business. And to think that in 1979 and 1980, Mr. Speaker, the Liberals defeated our Government because we wanted to impose an 18 cents tax on a gallon of gas, while later on they had no qualms about increasing the tax by $1.15 a gallon! Mr. Speaker, when they did that in 1980, they showed a complete lack of political ethics. But they prefer to ignore it, Mr. Speaker.

Today, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) told us that a one cent increase in the price of gas was outrageous. I do not have words to express my feelings for the $1.15 increase which the Liberals themselves had imposed. There is no word to express that. I can only speak of total lack of political morality. That is the kind of things Liberals have shown us over the past four years.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to recall for the benefit of my colleague the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) that the retail price of gas in Montreal in 1984 was 60 cents a liter. Now, it is 50 cents a liter. Two and a half years after we came to power, the price is ten cents lower than what we had inherited from the Liberals. That, Mr. Speaker, is for me a sign that our Government and, above all, our Minister of Finance, is highly responsible towards every Canadian. I hope no Hon. Members opposite will cry over our shoulders, especially not NDP Members, claiming that one cent more will prevent a brother-in-law from visiting his sister-in-law. Those Members, Mr. Speaker, voted along side with the Liberals in 1980, when we were defeated over the 18 cents proposal. They share responsibility with the Liberals for what was done, for all the wrongdoing to the Canadian economy. They are hypocrits, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Boudria: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will recognize the Hon. Member from Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, respectful of the rules as we all are, I do not believe you would want Hon. Members to be accused, indeed not the Hon. Member from Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), in the way the Member from Champlain (Mr. Champagne) just did, knowing it is against the rules to accuse anyone of being a hypocrit, this being said, Mr. Speaker, again in all due respect towards you.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not think that the Hon. Member from Champlain (Mr. Champagne) was accusing the Hon. Member from Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart). No doubt his remarks were of a general nature.

Mr. Malépart: He is speaking of Conservative Members who are hypocrits.

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, it is too bad my colleague for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) rose to speak, because as the saying goes, one should rather remain silent and look stupid than open up and prove it. That proof he just gave, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, this morning and earlier today we heard the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) cry scandal. This is about the only thing which they can rely on right now, because as far as the economy is concerned, Mr. Speaker, everything goes well, very well indeed—676,000 jobs!

As far as social security is concerned, everything goes very well, Mr. Speaker. We maintained our social programs, we improved on them—widows' and widowers' pensions. And I know the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie, without being personal, agrees that we gave a supplement to Canadians widows and widowers aged 60 to 64.

Mr. Prud'homme: We are half-way there.

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): I know he supports that and applauded us. Of course, I also agree with him that more will have to be done. However, Mr. Speaker, we have only been here two and a half years, and we have done a couragous and remarkable job of straightening up the mess created by the Liberals over the years.

Mr. Speaker, they accused us this morning, I mean the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) said: I do not understand why the Minister of Finance did not table a five-year plan to tell us where we are going. He has a short memory, Mr. Speaker. Very short indeed. The Liberals never reveal their true intentions to the Canadian people. During the 1980 campaign, they did not talk about the Energy Program, they did not say that they would reduce the VIA Rail passenger services by 20 per cent, they did not say that they would review the Crow rate. In fact, Mr. Speaker, during the electoral campaign, the Leader of the Opposition told everyone willing to listen that he would keep his new program secret until the day when he made a Speech from the Throne. You can see how inconsistent the opposition party is. Everything is so clear that you cannot see where you are going.

Mr. Speaker, I was listening to the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria). I know that my allotted time is nearly over, but I would simply like to remind the Hon. Member that when he speaks about scandals—

Mr. Malépart: One year and a half to go!

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): —we recall certain juicy contracts given to businesses managed by former ministers. We remember that, when he was asked by a reporter about the trips made by his family on certain airplanes, the former minister Gerald Regan, pointed out that such information is classified. We also remember the purchase of Petro-Canada. Since my allotted is nearly over, I would like to remind the Hon. Member of one thing, namely that one of the close friends of the former Prime Minister obtained the contract for the Washington embassy even though he was not one of the four people on the list for this contract.

Members of the Opposition speak about scandals, but since they are much worse than we are, I think that they should be saying: Do as we say, not as we do. In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to add that a responsible government took over the reins of the economy on September 4, 1984, and is now doing a great job of putting the Canadian economy back on its feet and of giving back to all Canadians the prosperity they deserve.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) on a question or a comment.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, it is the swan song, the cry of a desperate and defeated man, a man who is becoming aware that his short career here in Ottawa, with a rating of 22 per cent at the national polls, and of 13 per cent in the province of Quebec—

An Hon. Member: What is his rating in Quebec?

Mr. Boudria: Did you say 13 per cent?

Mr. Hudon: The management of polls!

Mr. Malépart: —13 per cent in Quebec. And I am sure that in the Member's constituency, it is less than 10 per cent.

Mr. Boudria: There are more people who are undecided than there are Conservatives.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, this poor Member was really pathetic. The first year, people said it was because of inexperience; the second year, it was ignorance; but now it is incompetence. Mr. Speaker, as to his unfounded statement that the Liberals wanted to limit the spouse's allowance to widows and widowers, if he knows how to read—or if he does not know, instead of reading speeches prepared for him, he should ask his assistant—he can find that the Liberals were committed to giving the pension to all those in need, whether single, separated, divorced or even married, aged 64 to start with, and then progressively down to 60 years old.

Some Hon. Members: Why didn't you do it?

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is not on track, he can talk about VIA Rail, he does not know which way to go. I would like to ask a question to the Hon. Member, who is boasting about the glorious achievements of his Government, who is so proud that his Government kept the capital gain exemption for the rich but denied payment of unemployment benefits to retirees, who was telling people in his riding—and I know some who disagree with the policy of his Governement—in 1985, that he was with them, when he was actually saying the opposite in the House. Here is what I would like to ask the Hon. Member.

First, he approved of the deindexing of Old Age Security and was humiliated when the Prime Minister bowed to the pressure from older people and Opposition Members and backed down. The Hon. Member at that time rose in the House and tried to have us believe that older people agreed with the measure, which was not true.

Second, does the Hon. Member agree with the fact that the capital gain exemption for the rich is being maintained, whereas Family Allowances are deindexed? Third—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall (St. Paul's) that Bill C-38, an Act respecting the reorganization and divestiture of Teleglobe Canada, be now read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Ms. McDonald (p. 3435).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 6 o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 13(4)(a), the House will now proceed with the deferred division on the motion for second reading of Bill C-38, an Act respecting the reorganization and divestiture of Teleglobe Canada. Call in the Members.

The question is on the amendment of Ms. McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood).

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-38, An Act respecting the reorganization and divestiture of Teleglobe Canada, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day three months hence".

The House divided on the amendment (Ms. McDonald), which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, it was agreed to earlier today that the House would immediately proceed to the recorded division on the second reading motion. I think you would find a disposition in the House to apply the vote on the amendment, in reverse, of course, to the second reading motion, unless someone else has come into the House. The Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) would like to be added to our Party and the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) would like to be added to the Liberal Party.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Parliamentary Secretary if the all-Party agreement earlier was in writing or in blood?

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, my understanding, even though my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) is not here, is that there has been no all-Party agreement. In case there is not an agreement, we certainly want to debate this matter further. It is a very important issue.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure who is quarter-backing the New Democratic Party. I did discuss this matter with the House Leader and it was my understanding that there was an agreement. I did discuss it with the Hon. House Leader of the Liberal Party and he also agreed there was an agreement. I find this rather strange.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I simply want to say that it has been my understanding that there was an all-Party agreement that the vote would be counted on the motion for second reading, but in reverse. I am sorry the House Leader of the New Democratic Party is not here to clarify this matter. However, I just want to put on the record what my understanding is with respect to the arrangement between the three Parties.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, as I said, I have not had a chance to consult with my House Leader, but if there is an agreement we will certainly stick to it, and we will take the word of the Government House Leader and the Opposition House Leader on that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the representations from the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister to the effect that on the main motion the vote will be reversed, with the addition of the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) and the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault).

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The House divided on the motion (Mrs. McDougall) which was agreed to on the following division:

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—FORTHCOMING MEETING BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, it seems to us on this side of the House that it is time for the Government to come to its senses, to stop beating around the bush and to explain where it is going on acid rain with the United States.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) should be gracious enough to recognize that the envoys' report is not working in Canada's favour as he had originally hoped. Having done that, the Prime Minister should tell President Reagan when he comes to Ottawa on April 5 that Canada wants to see a substantial cut in American air pollution crossing over the border into Canada. At the very least the Prime Minister should try to secure from the President a commitment not to oppose the acid rain control legislation currently before Congress.

Emission reductions, not further research, are the message the Government of Canada should give to the United States. The first public opportunity to do so will emerge right here in Ottawa on April 5 when the Prime Minister and President Reagan will meet.

MEASURE TO STIMULATE PRODUCTION IN STEEL INDUSTRY

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, the Budget is great news to steel producers and steelworkers all across Canada. The withdrawal of the general preferential tariff on most specialty and carbon steel mill products will give our steel industry a much needed boost and will stimulate greater production levels and more jobs throughout the country.

The people in my constituency of Selkirk—Interlake are extremely pleased with this Budget. The Town of Selkirk is the steel capital of Manitoba. The people of Selkirk are pleased that the Government has seen fit to strengthen the steel industry further and that, as a result of the Budget, job security in Manitoba's steel industry is also strengthened. The Budget is good for Selkirk, it is good for Manitoba, and it is good for all of Canada.

EFFECT ON AVERAGE FAMILIES

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Government tabled its third Budget in the House of Commons. It is a Budget which has done nothing to improve fairness for average families, families who have been looking to the Government to provide honest and straightforward leadership.

Not only has the Budget failed to introduce tax reform to ease the burden of average families but it has actually raised their taxes for the third straight year. For the residents of northwestern Ontario, this Budget has not allocated one penny to relieve the region's official 9.7 unemployment rate, a figure that we know is fudged because it fails to include residents of Indian reserves. In fact the Conservatives have chosen to ignore even those regions less fortunate than my own.

The only exception to this has been the Government's constant desire to raise the price of gasoline. Once again it has hosed northern consumers at the pumps. It is about time the Government realized that northerners already face the highest gasoline prices in Canada and they must rely upon their trucks and cars to travel the vast distances between and sometimes within communities.

Next year or shortly after, the Canadian public will pass judgment on this and on previous Budgets. No more will there be Conservatives to put the boots to average taxpayers or the unemployed people of northern Canada.

AGREEMENT ON DEVELOPMENT OF FOOD PRODUCTION SIGNED AT QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT PARTICIPATION

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Last Tuesday, February 17, Mr. Speaker, a food production development agreement was signed in Quebec City.

The Ministers involved, particularly the Canadian Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), are to be commended for this timely initiative to grant $35 million for food production development in Quebec over the next five years.

These funds will be expended for research and development, technical innovations, new initiatives, as well as soil conservation and quality improvement.

Mr. Speaker, agriculture is one of the major economic sectors of my region, and I would urge all Abitibi-Témiscamingue agricultural institutions, organizations and businesses to take full advantage of this agreement. This is a unique opportunity for the Abitibi-Témiscamingue region to play a leading role in Quebec's food production development.

ENERGY

GASOLINE PRICE INCREASES ANNOUNCED BY PETROLEUM COMPANIES CONDEMNED—REQUEST FOR INQUIRY

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montréal—Sainte-Marie): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, Shell Canada followed the bad example of the Conservative Government which, for the fourth time, has increased the tax on gasoline by one cent a litre. Shell Canada has hiked gas prices by two cents a litre with the result that, in a single day, the price of a litre of gas went up from 49.7 cents to 52.7 cents.

As you may recall, Mr. Speaker, Ultramar led the way last November 4 with a two-cent-a-litre increase in the price of gas.

We are all aware of the Shell-Ultramar shady deals which highlighted the closure of the Montreal East Gulf refinery.

I would urge the Government to make an inquiry to find out whether these two companies might be colluding. One month Shell management announce their decision to boost gas prices, followed in turn by Ultramar the month after.

Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that all Members of the House bring pressure to bear on the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) to make sure that the oil multinationals are not using Canada's frigid climate as an excuse to increase heating oil prices.

PROPOSED NATIONAL SPACE AGENCY

CALL FOR ESTABLISHMENT IN NATIONAL CAPITAL REGION

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne announced the creation of a National Space Agency, an initiative I fully support because it will help bring Canada into the 21st century. I believe the agency should be established in the National Capital region. Some 80 per cent of the persons likely to be part of the agency are already located here. To move or replace them would be expensive, inefficient, and disruptive to the national space effort. Furthermore, any loss of this skilled resource could set our space program back three to ten years.

The agency will co-ordinate the space activities of government Departments, space laboratories, and test facilities, most of which are in Ottawa, and develop linkages with other international space organizations and Governments. It will also have a major contract awarding function. This is a national agency involving all parts of the Canadian infrastructure. The arguments in support of locating the agency in the National Capital region are substantive.

REVIEW OF FARM MACHINERY PURCHASE CONTRACTS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, Revenue Canada, with the Minister's approval, has decided that it knows farm machinery prices better than the farm machinery market and is attempting to rewrite contracts made in 1983 and 1984 in a way which will reduce the investment tax credit allowed, reduce the capital gain on the trade-in, and reduce the capital cost allowance to the farmer, by arbitrarily changing the contract and the value of the trade-in.

Why has the Minister decided to intervene by retroactively changing the values on contracts that were arrived at competitively and at market prices? We do not know and the Minister has not explained. Since the procedure being used by Revenue Canada was abandoned before, can the Minister tell us why he has decided to intervene and, in effect rewrite the contracts to suit the Department rather than reflect real life? More important, under what specific section of the Income Tax Act does he think he finds this authority to intervene retroactively? Surely taxpayers have a right to consistent, fair, and legal practices when the Minister and his Department decide to conduct a review.

EFFECT OF PROPOSED LEGISLATIVE AMENDMENTS ON LIBRARIES

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, on Monday, February 23, I am meeting with Morris Zbar, Chairman of the North York Public Library Board, and other members of the executive. They have expressed concern about the probable implications for libraries of some proposed amendments to the Copyright Act which, incidentally, has not been revised in over 50 years.

They request that the right to importation clause be retained. They want clarification of the role of public photocopiers in libraries. They also want the proposed exhibition right deleted. They support the Canadian Library Association's suggestion that all libraries be considered institutions entitled to claim educational exemptions. Lastly, they consider it essential to have library associations consulted and given further information before the final decisions are made.

POLLUTION OF WINDERMERE BASIN IN HAMILTON HARBOUR

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, once again we see the Conservative Government has completely forgotten the City of Hamilton in its Budget. Not a penny has been set aside for the environment there at a time when the Windermere Basin has been described by the International Joint Commission as one of the most polluted bodies of water in North America. Unfortunately it ranks up there with the St. Clair blob and the Niagara River, and seagulls are dying in the Windermere Basin because of PCBs which the federal Government refuses to help clean up.

• (1115)

We are asking for only $1.25 million from the federal Government. The provincial Liberal Government made its commitment last September. The City of Hamilton made its commitment last year. The regional municipality made its commitment last year. We are asking for $1.25 million to save the seagulls, the people of Hamilton, and the drinking water of nine million people around Lake Ontario. It is a critical situation. I call upon the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to take care of Hamilton's environment in this Budget.

EDITORIAL IN THE GLOBE AND MAIL

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, as I said before in the House, every morning, the Leader of the Opposition and Leader of the NDP are waiting to read the first edition of the Globe and Mail before they put questions to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his Cabinet. However, I always knew the editorial page was too serious for their kind of reading.

Today, I challenge the Leader of the Opposition and his NDP colleague, if he understands what it is all about, to comment on every single line of the editorial appearing in the Globe and Mail this morning on February 20, 1987. It says that our Government, notwithstanding international constraints has managed to adjust as best it could in the circumstances. It has managed to control spending, protect the neediest, and involve Canadian owners of small- and medium-sized businesses in the development of this country.

Mr. Speaker, it is really too bad that the Leaders of the two opposition Parties have nothing positive to say about this Budget. They are not fulfilling their opposition role. With the in power-hungry teams, they have become back-alley demagogues, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL PARKS

PROPOSED SOUTH MORESBY NATIONAL PARK—INCLUSION OF LYELL ISLAND

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) speaks for Canada on matters relating to national parks. He has made it clear that the Conservative Party and the Government support the total inclusion of Lyell Island in the proposed South Moresby National Park.

Conservative MPs from B.C. are, unfortunately, being two-faced about this issue. With some groups they claim to be fighting to include Lyell Island in the national park, and with other groups they claim to support the complete logging of the area. This kind of hypocrisy makes a lot of Canadians feel sick because it is fundamentally dishonest and sleazy. No cabinet Minister is on record in this House supporting further logging on Lyell Island. If they are, let them say so today.

B.C. is poised to allow the clear-cut logging of Windy Bay and much of Lyell Island. Yesterday Canada made clear that Lyell must be part of the park or there will be no park. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) must now show support for his Cabinet and pay B.C. for Lyell Island, because that is all that is holding it up. Mr. Speaker, I know you agree.

Oral Questions

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

MEASURES TO ASSIST WESTERN ECONOMY

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, in July of 1984 our Party held a major policy conference in Prince Albert, Saskatchewan. A review of our record shows that over two-thirds of the Prince Albert declarations have already been implemented. In addition, we have undertaken many other initiatives which support the west.

The Budget presented by the Finance Minister on February 18 reinforces that support. The Government has taken action to restore fiscal responsibility by reducing the deficit and slowing the growth of the national debt, mainly by expenditure restraint and good management. After 15 years of rising deficit we have brought about the first consecutive three-year decline in deficit in three decades.

Effective February 19 the excise tax on motor fuels will be increased by 1 cent per litre but will not apply to farmers. The tax applies to gasoline, diesel fuel, aviation gas and jet fuel, but the existing fuel rebate for off-highway fuel use by farmers will be increased by 1 cent per litre effective February 29, 1987.

Comments made by the President of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture as well as the President of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business indicate that this Budget was good news for all Canadians.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

AMNESTY INTERNATIONAL'S CAMPAIGN AGAINST DEATH PENALTY

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, Amnesty International recently initiated a world-wide campaign against capital punishment. To begin this campaign Amnesty produced a major report on capital punishment in the United States. The report says the death penalty in the United States has become "a horrifying lottery" in which politics, money, and race could decide whether a defendant is executed.

The Amnesty report also deplored the fact that several people executed or awaiting execution in the United States were mentally ill or were under the age of 18. Executing minors is a violation of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the American Convention on Human Rights, both signed by the United States in 1977. Since 1980, of eight confirmed juvenile executions, the United States is responsible for three, Pakistan two, and Bangladesh, Barbados, and Rwanda were responsible for one each. There have been unconfirmed reports of teenagers being executed in Iran.

Race also plays an important role in determining who gets executed in the United States. Nearly 90 per cent of the prisoners executed between 1977 and 1986 were blacks convicted of killing whites.

With a debate on capital punishment soon to take place in the House, I would urge every Member to take the opportunity to read the Amnesty report.

CHILD CARE FUNDING INQUIRY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, four million Canadians are living below the poverty line. Those Canadians and millions of other middle-income Canadians in the country are waiting for the Prime Minister to fulfil his commitment to child care funding. Quality child care should not be the privilege of a few but should be available to all who need it. Why was there not a single new dollar for child care funding in his Budget?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition refers to those who are living below the poverty line. He knows full well that 263,000 fewer families are living below the poverty line as a result of action taken by this Government and the changes in those statistics that were announced at the end of last year.

With respect to child care, the Leader of the Opposition knows that we are now proceeding with consultations with the provinces which have a very major responsibility in the provision of this particular service. He also knows that a parliamentary committee will complete its work shortly and will be making recommendations. I am sure he would not want us to prejudge the results of both areas of consultation because he has expressed his own concern many times that the Government should continue the very good work it has been doing in consulting with interested parties throughout the country.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Canadians feel that no further consultation is needed on this subject. This issue of child care has been consulted to death and Canadians want the Prime Minister to fulfil that commitment.

REASON FOR BUDGET PROVISIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that there is a chorus of protest about his Budget coming in a non-partisan sense from all regions of the country. His Budget has been unanimously condemned in the regions of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Mailly: That is not true.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I want the Minister to recognize that the cries coming from the regions of Canada are non-partisan in nature. They represent the voices of Canadians who feel neglected by an uncaring Government. Why did the Minister of Finance not bring in a Budget for all Canadians?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has it wrong yet again. I have to remind him, because his memory or his attention span is very short, that we have introduced the Atlantic Enterprise Program, the Atlantic Opportunities Program which is generating $600 million worth of new purchasing from the Government of Canada into Atlantic Canada, and the Cape Breton Special Investment Tax Credit. The regional investment tax credit has been maintained. We have the ERDA agreements with all the provinces of Canada.

I encourage him to read The Globe and Mail editorial today which talks about the extensive support that the Government has given to the Western Grain Stabilization Program, to the Wheat Board through the Farm Fuel Tax Credit, and through the changes in the measures that we have made to support the energy industry. The last paragraph states:

—the present Government does not have a failing grade.

It would be nice to see some fair recognition of the facts.

In the interests of fairness, surely the Hon. Leader of the Opposition can recognize that.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I want to tell the Minister of Finance that he not only tested my attention span, but the whole country's during his budget speech.

COMMENTS MADE BY PROVINCIAL REPRESENTATIVES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): May I cite Premier Brian Peckford: "We don't see anything here which encourages us to look at 1987 in a positive way"? How about the Hon. Dick Johnston, the Treasurer of Alberta: "In Alberta we are extremely disappointed with the reaction of this Budget"? How about the Hon. Yvon Poitras of New Brunswick: "It does not address regional disparity"? That is the kind of opinion we are receiving.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): The Hon. Leader of the Opposition is very much aware of the processes which are now under way. The Prime Minister has a report coming to him to review the various regional development programs in Atlantic Canada with a view to establishing an agency which will be located in Atlantic Canada to deal directly with those problems, and we are discussing them with the New Brunswick Government as well as with the other Governments in the Atlantic Provinces.

The Deputy Prime Minister has work under way dealing with the problem of western industrial diversification to ensure that we can make changes which address the problems which are faced by western Canada on a permanent basis.

We have decided it was not appropriate to rush these reports just to get them in in time for a budget. Those decisions will be taken within the context of the fiscal plan to deal directly with the problems to which the Hon. Member has referred.

IMPACT OF GASOLINE TAX INCREASES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, last Wednesday the Minister added another cent to the tax on gas, which means a total increase of four cents since this Government came to power, the equivalent of 18 cents per gallon. Yesterday, Shell announced its decision to increase the price of a litre of gas by two cents.

My question to the Minister is as follows: Does the Minister believe that the Canadian economy and Canadian consumers can absorb a three-cent increase in the price of a litre of gas in just one week? And does he believe that our regions, that the neediest regions will be able to absorb this kind of increase without a corresponding increase in unemployment?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member would agree that when we came into office the price of gasoline in his own province was 60 cents. I am advised now it is something in the order of 50 cents or 51 cents. That is quite a drop and is one of the reasons there has been good growth in the Quebec economy.

I have some quotes here, but I don't want to embarrass the Hon. Member.

Some Hon. Members: Go ahead!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): There are quotes here. All sorts of doom and gloom have been rained down upon us every time we have come forward with an Economic Statement or a Budget, saying 50,000 jobs and 100,000 jobs and 150,000 jobs would be lost. The Leader of the New Democratic Party has made it up to 200,000 jobs in one of his predictions. In the face of that, 677,000 jobs have been created, and this growth is going to continue into the next year.

[Translation]

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, the impact of this Minister's economic policies has been such that over the last 12 months, 12,000 jobs have been lost outside Ontario, across this country. In other words, there has been a net loss outside Ontario.

Oral Questions

PLEA THAT MINISTER HELP MOTORISTS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, to get back to my question, I would like to ask the Minister once again: Does he or one of his Cabinet colleagues intend to stand up to the oil multinationals and protect the consumer, the drivers who will have to face a three-cent increase in the price of a litre of gas in just one week?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think that if the Hon. Member is keeping his ears open he will know there are some oil companies which have said three cents a litre. Other have said they want to increase gasoline by one cent a litre. I think the consumer has a lot of power in his hands here by just ignoring those companies which are raising gasoline by three cents a litre, proving through the marketplace that the consumer has a very strong voice and can teach them a lesson by going to the companies which have only increased their price by one cent.

CORPORATE TAX STRUCTURE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Yesterday I asked the Minister why it was too soon for the Government to have corporate tax reform but not too soon to increase taxes on the ordinary family. Also yesterday, in talking to some journalists outside the House, the Minister pointed out that as a result of the last Liberal Budget there is a hangover of some special corporate tax breaks that are in the value of a number of billions of dollars. Will the Minister now tell the House how much the Treasury is losing on an annual basis, how many millions or billions of dollars are we losing as a result of this special category of corporate tax breaks?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party has mixed and matched some of the things that I did say in my luncheon with journalists yesterday. What I said is that there is a loss overhang related to the capital cost allowances that were built up during the capital investment boom leading up to the 1981-82 recession. Those credits, in addition to the losses that were endured during the major recession in 1981-82, have resulted in this loss overhang.

The problem that I referred to, and that I refer to on many occasions in the House, is that people are trading these losses from a loss company to a profitable company so that the taxable income of the profitable company can be reduced. We found this offensive. We have made a number of changes, not the least of which have been changes that we made earlier this year to address this problem. I also said in the Budget that we will put in a general avoidance rule to address the problem, as well as deal with it on a more permanent basis in tax reform.

REQUEST FOR CORPORATE TAX REFORM

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, this Government will always deal with these issues at some point in the future. I would like to quote the words of the Minister from what he said not in the current Budget or in last year's Budget but in 1985 when he had this to say about the same category of break:

—the existence of the large banks of unused losses has been a continuing source of instability in the tax system. The possibility of large reductions in government revenues has led to frequent and complex change. These measures have a cost to taxpayers—

Since in the Minister's own words corporations continue to save millions—indeed billions—of dollars, and since other taxpayers have to make this up by paying too much, why can we not have the tax reform in the corporate sector now instead of down the road?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member said we are not acting. I do not know where he has been for the last two-and-one-half years. We have removed the scientific research tax credit which the Liberal Government brought in and which cost us about $2.5 billion. We changed the rules on limited partnerships. We changed the Little Egypt Bump about which the Hon. Member was quite interested. We changed the seeding that oil companies were using. We changed the carve-outs. We changed a number of provisions that were helping high-income Canadians finance hotels and yachts. We brought in a minimum tax.

We have been dealing with this problem on an ongoing basis. I said—and I repeat my answer of a minute ago—we are going to deal with it further in tax reform. I hope that the Hon. Member will get off his chair and give us some support for what we are trying to do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of giving support to a Government that increased taxes on individuals by 52 per cent but had a net reduction of corporate taxes by 18 per cent. That is what the Government has done.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

LARGE CORPORATIONS—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTRODUCE TAX REFORM NOW

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): My last question is as follows: Because of these loopholes in the corporate tax system, individuals have to pay more than their fair share. Why not introduce changes now to reform the corporate tax system?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have said several times in the House that we have been examining this problem since September 1984. We changed the rules on tax avoidance, and in our tax report, we intend to make changes on a permanent basis, changes that will reduce the tax burden on individuals and increase taxes for large corporations.

LEVEL OF PERSONAL INCOME TAX

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. It concerns his escalator taxes. Measures built in from previous Budgets go on increasing income tax invisibly so that this year a family with two wage-earners and two children with a total family income of $30,000 will be paying an additional $1,000 in income tax. Will the Minister not admit that he is the author of the problem of high personal income taxes which he now seeks to reform?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, what I can say the Government is the author of is a very substantial number of jobs that have been created during this whole period of fiscal management over which we have presided. We have seen interest rates drop four percentage points, the lowest level in about 10 years. With respect to mortgage rates I remind the Hon. Member that in the Budget I said that the cost of a $50,000 mortgage will save the average taxpayer something in the order of $1,500 a year in after-tax income. That has changed since September of 1984. Those are major, major changes which have resulted in major, major increases in the spending power of Canadians.

REQUEST FOR REDUCTION OF INCOME TAX

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the Minister did not answer my question. My supplementary question is the following. When the Minister has finished taking Canadians for a ride on his escalator will he return the income tax to the point where he started, or does his talk of reform mean something different, maybe half-way back?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, what tax reform will do is it will result in a fairer tax system, a less complex tax system, a tax system which will increase job capability. That will increase incentive in the economy and lead to a healthier economy, an economy that will create more jobs and be more competitive with the rest of the world. Those are the objectives that we want to achieve in tax reform. Those are our objectives that find a great deal of support right across the country.

IMMIGRATION

SALVADORANS AND GUATEMALANS—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF CANADA-UNITED STATES AGREEMENT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. He said there is an agreement with American immigration officials to the effect that they will not deport Salvadorans or Guatemalans waiting for their immigration inquiry to take place in Canada.

[English]

Can the Minister assure us that there is a firm and legally reliable agreement on this matter with the United States? Will he table that agreement in the House today?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I indicated during this morning's press conference that Canada—and this dates back to some time—has an agreement with the United States of America which provides, particularly in this case, that people who apply for refugee status in Canada and whom we are unable to process immediately will not be deported by the United States. As I said, these agreements are not recent, but we did reconfirm them. We are exchanging correspondence, but I see no point in tabling documents today. I repeat, nobody has been deported by the United States, and I have been assured that none will be.

• (1140)

PROCESSING OF REFUGEE STATUS APPLICATIONS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister knows, the agreements have been entirely informal and not binding.

My supplementary question to the Minister is this. Since he has refused to respond to the fair and quick system for deciding refugee status in Canada that was tabled in Parliament 15 months ago by the Standing Committee, and is now backed by the churches, the Canadian Bar Association, the Canadian Jewish Congress, and the New Democratic Party, why did he choose instead to overload the system of immigration inquiry, which is already jammed up with six-week delays, by adding hundreds more each week to its work-load by his order today?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): As I see it, Mr. Speaker, our first priority was to set up control measures to enable us to protect or admit genuine refugees. As the Hon. Member is suggesting, we simply had to do something to restrict the influx of people who are not bona fide refugees. All applicants will now go through the normal process, and we have resorted to stricter standards because we want to reduce the number of cases still pending.

I agree with him concerning the legislation and I can assure the Hon. Member that within a few weeks we will table a legislative measure which, among other things, will enable us to eliminate once and for all the cumbersome procedure which has always been followed and which has led to a huge backlog of applicants waiting for refugee status determination.

CHILD CARE

FUNDING INQUIRY

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Last year the Prime Minister thought the issue of child care was so important that at the First Ministers' Conference he made a promise that the federal Government would bring in substantial funding. Given the Prime Minister's word on this issue, why is there not a single penny in this Budget for what the Prime Minister claimed was a crisis in Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have answered this question on a number of occasions. If the Hon. Member would look carefully at the early part of the Budget, we said that there are a number of initiatives that are in train where discussions are taking place, in this case with the provinces, and with the private sector, that have not reached fruition yet because those discussions are still ongoing. We will be able to make announcements on these initiatives, and child care can be one of these, at the appropriate time. The funds are available within the fiscal plan to meet those obligations.

ACCESS TO DAY CARE SERVICES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, dare I say that there are many families in Canada who are reaching fruition and do not have time to wait for the Minister to come up with his funding proposals in the future.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Copps: The Minister did not wait to introduce an anti-family tax on family allowances.

[Translation]

He did not wait before launching an attack against family allowances, he did not wait for more studies. The day care issue affects all Canadian families, and they are entitled to ready access to nurseries. Why does he always want to wait? Why must Canadians be kept waiting for an answer to this very serious question?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Hon. Member has changed the comments that were attributed by her colleague yesterday to the Prime Minister. Yesterday her colleague had said that the Prime Minister when he was in Vancouver had said that it would be in this Budget. Today the Hon. Member used the correct term where the Prime Minister indicated that there would be substantial commitment from the Government of Canada in order to take that through. That is why I have had the obligation to meet with provincial counterparts, and other people interested in child care, as well as the parliamentary committee, for the purpose of putting forward a national plan which we have said very clearly we can announce outside the Budget. In fact, in the past there has been criticism that social policy was incorporated in the Budget and that it should stand alone. That is exactly what the Finance Minister has followed, and we intend to follow that up exactly as we have outlined to the provinces and to the country.

REFUNDABLE SALES TAX CREDIT—REQUEST FOR INCREASE

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. As the Minister knows, there are over four million Canadians living below the poverty line. The Budget Speech did not once mention the word "poverty". Instead, the Budget removed half of the sales tax credit from the very poor through new taxes. Why did the Government not increase the sales tax credit to compensate for this new round of taxes on snack food, granola bars, and a slew of other items? Why did the Government not increase the sales tax credit in this Budget?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is quite aware that we have been making progress. There are 263,000 fewer families—not individuals, families—that are now not below the poverty line as compared to when we came into office. The Hon. Member has asked why we have not increased the refundable sales tax credit. I have clearly indicated that that is an integral part of tax reform, and we will be clearly demonstrating to him at the time of the release of the discussion paper on tax reform how we wish to augment this very progressive initiative that we took at the time of last year's Budget as part of tax reform.

INCOME TAX RETURNS—INFORMATION SOUGHT FROM WELFARE RECIPIENTS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): My supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. The Minister did not wait to increase taxes on the poor, yet he is asking the poor to wait for his tax reform. Since the Government has come into power, it is now taxing people who have taxable incomes of $10. No Government has ever hit that low. The Government is now requiring poor people to report their welfare payments on their 1986 tax form. Why is the Government now requiring welfare recipients to report their welfare benefits on the tax form? When is the Government going to stop nickel and dimeing the very poor?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, on the one point that the Hon. Member makes, there have been discussions with Revenue Canada on that issue, and that is well in hand. For example, I wish to tell the Hon. Member that the Government has brought in employment initiatives, and $100 million for social assistance. This matter was first raised 13 years ago at a federal-provincial meeting, and this Government has delivered on that. There have been programs for older worker adjustments, employment equity, the refundable sales tax credit which the Minister of Finance has mentioned again—

Mr. de Jong: You took half of it away on Wednesday.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): —the increase of the child tax credit, the advancement of the child tax credit, the changes to the Canada Pension Plan. Would the Hon. Member ask the Manitoba NDP Government why it took away disability from the very poor when we passed it here in this Government?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIVACY

APPLICATION OF STATUTE TO PUBLIC SERVANTS

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the President of the Treasury Board my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday the Privacy Commissioner reported that the Privacy Act is currently being violated by Treasury Board requirements that public servants report on all outside activities and investments directly or indirectly related to their official responsibilities. The Commissioner also noted that public servants' privacy was endangered because supposedly confidential information required of them in compliance with conflict of interest regulations may be obtained by third parties under the Access to Information Act. What actions will the Government take to amend Treasury Board reporting requirements to ensure the confidentiality of personal information reported in good faith by public servants?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): In the absence of the President of the Treasury Board I will make a preliminary response to the question that the Hon. Member has just placed. The President of the Treasury Board has received this report from the Privacy Commissioner. It has always been the intention of the Government to respect the provisions of the Privacy Act. Once the President of the Treasury Board has had an opportunity to review the report with his officials, he will then be in a position to determine what modifications should be made in the reporting provisions and other elements that affect public servants as may be deemed fit.

EXTRA ADMINISTRATIVE BURDEN PLACED ON SMALL BUSINESSES

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. After slapping a tax on drugs for the sick, on dog food and on ice cream and candy for children, the Minister of Finance is going to reach into the pockets of small-business people with 20 employees. Does the Minister realize that by requiring small businesses to make payments every two weeks, he is adding to the paper burden and thus indirectly affecting their profits?

• (1150)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member has this one wrong. It will only affect larger companies. It will not affect companies that have 20 employees.

Mr. Gagliano: For the Minister's information, Mr. Speaker, I did a calculation on 20 employees in Quebec. But if we go across Canada where the federal Government collects provincial tax, it is more.

EFFECT OF BOOKKEEPING REQUIREMENTS

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The new paper burden is a paper-thin excuse to cover the Minister's missed deficit projections on the backs of small business. Will the Minister raise the ceiling to exclude small business from his sneaky bookkeeping methods?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think that the Hon. Member knows that we have been very supportive of the small business community. We have structured this particular provision so that I think it is something like 1.2 million businesses out of 1.3 million will not be affected by it.

FINANCE

CORPORATE TAX BREAKS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have another question for the Minister of Finance. It relates to the overhang of corporate tax breaks which, according to recent reports, may be over $30 billion. Can the Minister explain why no action has been taken in the Budget to curb the use of these tax breaks when his own figures indicate that there was a $1.2 billion short-fall of corporate tax revenues in 1985-86, a $2.3 billion short-fall this year, and he is anticipating another $2.3 billion short-fall in 1987-88? When are you going to stop this kind of short-fall of corporation tax revenues which is being paid by average Canadians?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not know where the Hon. Member has been. We have been taking action regularly from the time that we came into office and, most recently, just prior to this Budget. Some people have asked me why I took this action just prior to the Budget and not in the Budget. It was for a very good reason. If we had taken the action in the Budget there would have been great anticipation. A lot of these tax avoidance schemes would have been completed just prior to the Budget in anticipation of being shut off in the Budget, so we took action before that. We anticipated the action and saved the taxpayers some money.

We have taken action in this Budget. I responded to his Leader I believe on this question yesterday and today. That answer still stands.

INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT TOLERATES TRANSFER OF TAX RESPONSIBILITY FROM CORPORATIONS TO INDIVIDUALS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, a Minister of Finance should be judged by what he does and not just by what he intends to do.

Could the Minister explain why the projected revenue from corporate taxes for 1987-1988 dropped from $12 billion to less than $10 billion? This means an additional $2 billion that must be paid by the average taxpayer. Why does the Minister tolerate this transfer of corporate responsibility to the individual?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, one reason for that drop in revenues is that certain industries in Canada have been suffering quite severe drops in profits over the last year. The energy sector is obviously what I am thinking of. A substantial drop in revenues has been experienced in that sector. Therefore, the tax received will drop off.

I have acknowledged quite clearly that there have been quite a number of tax avoidance schemes of which corporations are taking advantage. We have stopped these on a regular basis as they are brought to our attention.

Mr. Cassidy: You are still losing revenues.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We have also indicated clearly in this Budget that we are going to bring in a general tax avoidance rule which is designed to get at this problem in a broader way. Finally, in tax reform, we are going to reduce a number of the preferences for corporations. The profitable corporations particularly, which are not paying taxes, will find that they will be paying taxes after tax reform.

GOVERNMENT MEASURES

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Immigration. My Party and all Canadians believe very strongly that false refugee claims should be clearly refused and eliminated. However, measures cannot be put in place whereby individuals feeling real torture and facing certain death would be jeopardized.

Given that the Minister removed a list of 19 non-deportable countries, meaning that a Ukrainian refugee can now be deported to the Soviet Union, is the Minister prepared to live with the fate facing such refugees in all parts of the world? Can he table an analysis from the External Affairs Department which justifies the Minister deporting individuals to parts of the world which, as of yesterday, were deemed to be dangerous, immoral, and inhuman?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member misread his documentation, as usual, because this morning I announced the abolition of list B-1, a list of 18 countries to which we do not deport people. People from those countries will continue to be assessed on a case-by-case basis. However, considering the specific example he mentioned, a number of countries, especially countries in Eastern Europe, are subject to a special policy for individuals seeking asylum, and this includes the Soviet Union. These individuals are given very special treatment. So I think that should reassure the Hon. Member. In fact, I wish he would join me in giving all Canadians, and especially those who came to Canada from Eastern Europe, the assurance that we shall continue to give these cases special treatment and that these people can expect to be as well received in Canada as they have been in the past.

REFUGEE DETERMINATION SYSTEM

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, before we would not deport anyone to the Soviet Union. Now if people are not deemed to be refugees by their applications, this Minister will put them on the first plane back to the Gulags.

Some Hon. Members: Not true.

Mr. Marchi: I remind the Minister that on August 19 the Prime Minister said "If we err, we will always err on the side of justice and on the side of compassion". The Minister has just changed the tune of the Prime Minister's song.

Given that the only solution to our refugee policy is a refugee determination system which is new and separate from our immigration structures, when will the Government, instead of governing by temporary trial balloons, issue refugee legislation which the Minister's three predecessors have been promising for the last three years? The evidence is in. Stop procrastinating.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will make an exercise for my friend. What does he call a country that receives over 120,000 immigrants every year and is ready to increase that level? What does the Member call a country that receives over 15,000 refugees from refugee camps across the world? What does he call a country that is ready to receive all genuine refugees who need the protection of Canada? Does the Member call Canada an unfair and a non-equitable country?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EMPLOYMENT

CANADIAN JOBS STRATEGY—EXPENDITURE LEVELS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. I have here some figures from the Canadian Jobs Strategy to be in the Main Estimates that the Government will be tabling in a few days or a few weeks' time. According to these figures, and in light of high regional unemployment, I want the Minister to explain to this House why spending under the major components of the Canadian Jobs Strategy will be about the same in Quebec next year as this year, about the same in Atlantic Canada next year as this year, and why will there be a cut-back in this program of some $2.8 million in western Canada where we have high regional unemployment? Can he explain why this insensitivity on the part of the federal Government toward regional unemployment will be in the Estimates in a few days' time?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has got to broaden his sphere of thinking. There are many ways that the problems of regional disparities can be addressed. One is in direct job creation, for instance, that part of the Canadian Jobs Strategy where we are trying to help Canadians get trained so that they can obtain permanent jobs. It is not the old make-work short-term dead-end job policies which the previous Government brought about.

• (1200)

In addition to that, the Deputy Prime Minister is heading up a task force within the Government to look at areas of western diversification. The Prime Minister has a study under way to look at ways of improving job possibilities through the various programs we have introduced in Atlantic Canada. I already enumerated these programs to the House during Question Period yesterday. If the Hon. Member wishes me to remind him of them, I would be happy to do so again.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT—GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, the Minister still has not said why there will be cut-backs in these major components of the Canadian Jobs Strategy in the Estimates the Government is about to table. Perhaps he could answer that question as well as tell us why the federal Government continued the $3 billion per year cut-back in regional development spending in the Budget. Three billion dollars per year, now in the third year, amounts to $9 billion across Canada. Why are those major cut-backs occurring? Why is the Minister so insensitive to regional unemployment in Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Hon. Member raised that particular question because I am happy to have the opportunity to talk about it. The reasons for the drop in actual spending in the economic and regional development envelope are the following: the $3.6 billion in energy was the result of the dismantling of the National Energy Program, the PIP grants, the COSP, the CHIP and all the various programs that were part of that. A number of capital spending projects have been completed since 1984-85 and that is another reason. A third reason is that $450 million of new equity has gone into Crown corporations since 1984-85. The sale of Canadair to de Havilland is an example of that. We have privatized those companies because we feel they are more effective in the private sector—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Minister obviously has a very long and detailed answer. Perhaps he could send his notes over to the Hon. Member.

FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister knows that the grain summit held in San Diego this week was a complete failure and that the price wars over grain in international trade will continue and will drive down prices by at least 25 per cent this year. We know that last year the Government only provided assistance to farmers because of the election in Saskatchewan. Why is there nothing in the Budget to assist farmers in the new crop year, farmers who are facing low grain prices? Is it because there is no election planned in Saskatchewan?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I know you wanted me to cut short my answer last time. There was more about which I wanted to talk that related specifically to the question the Hon. Member has just raised. Estimated spending on agriculture related programs in 1987-88 will be about $4 billion, and that will be more than double the spending in 1984-85 which was $1.9 billion. That is the answer to the Hon. Member's question.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the Minister should know that the farm debt crisis is much worse this year than it was last. Actually, FCC mortgages in arrears are up by 30 per cent. Fully 25 per cent of all mortgage accounts of the Farm Credit Corporation are in arrears, many of them for up to two years. Thousands of farmers face the loss of their farms. Why is it that there was no additional money in the Budget for the Farm Credit Corporation to keep young farmers on their farms?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there is a review under way of the financing capacity of the Farm Credit corporation. In addition, I am sure the Hon. Member would want me to remind the House that the Minister of State for the Wheat Board has initiated a number of discussions with his colleagues in the major grain exporting countries. The first meeting of these Ministers was held here in Canada. There was one such meeting held in San Diego quite recently, and there will be another one. The Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs and I have personally raised this matter on a number of occasions with the international community. Finally, I would draw to the Hon. Member's attention the fact that the balance of the $1 billion Special Grains Program will be spent in this current fiscal year—next year.

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for Canada Post. There is a mixed signal coming from Canada Post regarding the future of rural post offices. Will the Minister indicate to the House, to my constituents and to all Canadians the direction of the corporate plan and if there will be meaningful consultations with Members of Parliament and communities before any action is taken with a view to continuing to provide service to rural Canada?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like to assure the Hon. Member and the House that that is certainly my intention. There is a moratorium on the plans now. I am working with the Post Office to come up with a clear indication so that it is clear to the Hon. Member's constituents what the plans are and how reasonable they are. Equally important, we are doing this so that it is clear to members of the Opposition so that they will no longer have an incentive to run around the country scaring people unnecessarily with wildly exaggerated claims about what will happen.

REFERENCE TO POSSIBLE USE OF MILITARY IN CASE OF POSTAL STRIKE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. Talking about raising fear across the country, would the Minister take this opportunity to explain government policy with regard to using the military in the event of a postal strike? Most Canadians want to ensure that there is no postal strike. Will the Minister rise in the House to make a statement which will take effect away from the remarks of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine which only poisoned the climate of negotiations?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, like the Hon. Member, I certainly do not want to see a strike. As the Minister responsible for the Post Office, I want to do everything I can to ensure that the parties stay at the bargaining table and reach an agreement. I do not want to give them any cause to think there is an easy way out. As Acting Minister of National Defence, let me say that the military are fully occupied fulfilling our obligations to NATO, NORAD and UN peace-keeping forces.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. The Minister has initiated a series of investigations of farmers who purchased machinery in 1983-84. I wonder if he could tell the House in what section of the Income Tax Act he thinks he finds the power to, in effect, rewrite machinery trade-in values arrived at in the competitive market of those years, and to do so retroactively?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to assure my hon. friend opposite that this audit is not targeted at western farmers and is not pursuant to any particular special section in that regard. It is designed to investigate only those cases where there may be blatant abuses of the investment tax credit or capital cost allowance. It is extended right across the country in a phased way. As a matter of fact, when it comes to the farm community, out of approximately 250,000 farmers there are only approximately 1,000 farmers across Canada at whom we are looking seriously and then only in cases where we suspect that there are blatant abuses of the system.

CONSORTIA

PRICE OF GASOLINE—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT MAKE INQUIRY INTO INCREASES IMPLEMENTED BY SHELL AND ULTRAMAR

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montréal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, but in his absence, I will direct it to the Deputy Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance.

Yesterday, Shell followed the bad example set by the Conservative Government and decided to put a two-cent increase on the price of a litre of gas, after the Government had announced a one-cent increase, so that the price at the pump will now be 52.7 cents per litre. On November 4, Ultramar announced an increase of two cents per litre, and we may recall the complicity of these two companies in the shutting down of the Gulf refinery in Montreal East.

Could the Minister or the Deputy Prime Minister ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to enquire whether there was any complicity between the two companies, since after one company announced a price increase, the other company announced an increase a month later?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the question would be more effectively dealt with by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs but I—

Mr. Boudria: He was right there.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I appreciate that he was there but he is not there now. I will bring that question to his attention and he will get an answer back to the Hon. Member.

HEATING OIL PRICE INCREASE—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT INQUIRY

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montréal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. I spoke to the directors of Shell, and in addition to the increase in the price of gas, there will also be an increase in the price of heating oil, which the company has decided to increase by 1.5 cents. We know others will follow suit. Since January, this is the second increase in the price of heating oil we have had in Canada. Could the Minister also find out whether the oil multinationals are not taking advantage of the cold weather we are experiencing now to increase the price of heating oil, which will have a severe impact on thousands of Canadian families who are living in poverty?

Committee Reports

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

REACTION TO NEW DIRECTIONS FOR THE FINANCIAL SECTOR DOCUMENT

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. On December 18, 1986, the Minister tabled a document in the House of Commons entitled New Directions for the Financial Sector. The document was widely applauded especially by members of the life insurance and trust and loan industries which have been waiting decades for modern reforms. Since two months have now passed could the Minister summarize the type of feedback he has received, and when will he be bringing legislation to this House?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's question is most welcome. I am very happy to tell the House that the reaction to the framework we announced on December 18 has been very positive, not only from the industries he has mentioned but across the spectrum. Because of the constructive, thoughtful, and supportive advice I have been getting we are now in a position to move forward with legislation. We hope that when we return to Parliament after the break the supervisory section of the Bill will be tabled. That will be followed three or four weeks later by Bills C-8 and C-9. Then, before too long and into the spring, hopefully we can have the final part of the legislation brought before the House.

RESEARCH, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

PRESENTATION OF SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, as Chairman of the Standing Committee on Research, Science and Technology, I have the honour to present in both official languages its second report to the House, to which, pursuant to Standing Order 99(2), the committee requests a comprehensive response.

In accordance with its mandate under Standing Order 96(2), the Standing Committee on Research, Science and Technology conducted an examination of the Study Team Report to the Task Force on Program Review entitled Major Surveys. The committee invited witnesses, each with demonstrated expertise in one or more of the natural resources—environment surveys, to comment on the Major Surveys report. The committee framed its analysis of the report around the three principle issues identified by the study team: (a) The creation of a single federal ministry for surveys; (b) The separation of research from data collection; and (c) The possible savings to be achieved by the federal Government if all of the study team's recommendations are adopted.

Following the hearings and after consideration of the testimony the committee reached a number of conclusions and from them formulated recommendations to address each of the three principal issues. With regard to the question of the creation of a single federal ministry for surveys, the committee concluded that while the appointment of a senior Minister to head a department of surveys has symbolic value, a drastic restructuring of the major surveys system does not seem warranted. The committee therefore recommends that the federal Government not accept the study team's proposal to create a surveys ministry but instead create a national survey council with a five year mandate to examine Canada's national surveys in depth.

The committee has further concluded it would not be advisable to separate research from surveys since in many instances it is the research scientist who actually performs the survey or is an integral part of the activity. Concerning the possible savings engendered by the implementation of the study team's recommendations, the committee feels the study team had insufficient time to elicit the necessary details to substantiate the savings figures presented. The proposed national survey council should be charged with collecting the detailed information which is currently lacking, and this should be done before any changes to the present system are considered.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present petitions today signed by another 478 residents of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell. These are in addition to the 2,445 who have signed similar petitions in the past, for a grand total of 2,923. All of these constituents of mine want Canada Post to restore full postal service and not proceed with cut-backs and closure of 1700 post offices, and the privatization of 3,521 other post offices. They also want abandonment of the supermailbox plan. I am sure they do not want gun-toting mailmen either. These people are residents of Hawkesbury, Saint-Eugène, Ste. Anne de Prescott, Bainsville, Plantagenet, Alexandria, Dalkeith, Chute À Blondeau, Alfred, Sarsfield, Embrum, and St. Albert in the great constituency of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present two petitions concerning changes to the Patent Act. These changes will increase the price of drugs, increase the burden on provincial health care schemes, and be a real hardship for low income families across the country. The petitioners are from Massey, Ontario, areas along the north shore of Lake Huron, as well as a number of other communities throughout Manitoulin Island, including Mindemoy, Tehkummah and Kagawong.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS

SUBSTITUTION OF NON-VOTABLE MOTIONS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there are two motions which have been discussed among the Parties and I think you will find there is a disposition to put them to the House and have them passed. The first one is as follows:

• (1220)

That, notwithstanding the special order relating to Private Members' Business adopted on December 18, 1986, and pursuant to the third report of the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure presented to the House on February 12, 1987;

When a Member has given at least 24 hours written notice that he or she is unable to be present to move his or her motion under Private Members' Business on the date required by the order of precedence, and if that item of business is not one which has been designated "votable" by the Standing Committee on Private Members' Business, the Speaker, with the permission of the Members involved, may arrange for an exchange of positions in the order of precedence with a Member whose motion or Bill in the order of precedence has not been designated "votable";

That, in the event that the Speaker has been unable to arrange an exchange, the House shall continue with the business prior to Private Members' Hour pursuant to Standing Order 39(2), provided that there shall be no extension of the sitting pursuant to Standing Order 9(4), and any division on a debatable motion shall be deferred until 6 o'clock p.m. on the next sitting day.

For the purposes of this section, Standing Order 13(5) relating to deferred divisions on a Thursday shall apply; and

That this order shall expire Wednesday, April 15, 1987, at the ordinary hour of adjournment.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have the unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

AUTHORITY FOR STANDING COMMITTEE TO TRAVEL

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the second motion is as follows:

That, the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs be authorized to travel to Vancouver, British Columbia, from March 5 to 7, 1987, inclusive, in relation to its mandate under Standing Order 96(2) to hear witnesses on the subject of food irradiation and that the necessary staff do accompany the committee.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have the unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, we certainly do agree. I would like to take this opportunity to indicate my appreciation of my colleagues' assistance in the House of Commons yesterday in my absence. I appreciate the co-operation which Members showed yesterday.

Motion agreed to.

POINT OF ORDER

ALLEGED UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, in keeping with the Standing Orders I am taking this earliest opportunity to raise an issue arising from Question Period. It deals with the unparliamentary language of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). I would like to serve notice that I would like to raise this as a point of order. Since the Minister is not here, I would prefer to wait until he is in the House and has a chance to withdraw his remarks.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has heard the intervention of the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps). The Chair will take that as notice and it can be dealt with at an appropriate time.

[Text]

OFFICIAL RECEPTIONS

Question No. 54—Mr. Malépart:

1. Since September 4, 1984, did the Prime Minister and/or Mrs. Mulroney hold any official or private receptions paid for from public funds at (a) 24 Sussex Drive (b) Harrington Lake (c) any other location (i) in Canada (ii) outside Canada and, if so, in each case, what was the total number of receptions?

2. For each reception, what was the (a) date (b) number of guests and their names (c) total cost (d) proposed menu (e) total cost for food (f) cost of flowers (g) type of flowers (h) supplier of the flowers?

Mr. Len Gustafson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): 1. & 2. As Head of Government, it is a long-standing practice for a Prime Minister and/or his wife to give hospitality or to hold receptions in honour of diplomatic guests and distinguished Canadian citizens.

The specific details requested in this question and the costs associated with this practice are not readily available and in many cases not identified or recorded separately.

ATTENDANCE OF PRIME MINISTER AT AGRICULTURAL MEETING

Question No. 60—Mr. Boudria:

1. Did the Prime Minister travel to Alberta in September, 1986, at public expense, for the purpose of participating in the by-election in the constituency of Pembina and, if so (a) was there any other purpose to the trip (b) what was the total cost?

2. Was the entire trip paid from public funds and, if not, what portion was paid by the (a) Government (b) Conservative Party of Canada?

3. Was the Prime Minister accompained by any member of his staff and, if so, in each case, what was (a) his/her name (b) the mode of travel (c) the cost (d) the airline carrier involved (e) the hotel cost?

4. Were any automobiles or limousines hired and, if so (a) how many (b) in each case, what was the (i) cost (ii) name of the supplier?

Mr. Len Gustafson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): 1. The Prime Minister travelled to Edmonton on September 25-26, 1986 for the purpose of participating in an agricultural meeting and, at the same time made an appearance in the constituency of Pembina at no additional cost to the Government.

2., 3. & 4. In light of the above, there should be no need to answer these parts.

ANIMAL RESEARCH CENTRE, NEPEAN—CARLETON, ONT.

Question No. 68—Mr. Althouse:

Is the Government committed to the construction of the Animal Research Centre in Nepean—Carleton, Ontario and, if so (a) when will construction commence (b) what is the current target date for completion of this project?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): (a) The construction of the Animal Research Centre in Nepean—Carleton has been deferred pending a review of the animal productivity research program.

(b) This, together with resource restraints, make it unlikely that the project will go forward until 1990.

[Translation]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Thursday, February 19, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government, and the amendment of Mr. Garneau (p. 3594), and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Cassidy (p. 3604).

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the debate today there is a disposition in the House that the Chair recognize the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) followed by the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent). In the event that their remarks are not completed by one o'clock p.m., the House will be content that the Chair do not see the clock until they are finished.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, there have been consultations on this topic. Of course, our Party is quite agreeable to that.

Mr. Speaker: I take it that there is agreement. It is my pleasure to give the floor to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner).

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise on this very important occasion to debate the budgetary propositions of the Government. Parliament was created out of our British tradition to test the power of Governments in a free country to tax and to spend. At one time these occasions were high theatre. Due to the focus of an electronic age, we find the House as we do this morning. I can remember, too, when Prime Ministers were in the House to listen to the Leader of the Opposition and the Leader of the other recognized political party. I hope the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) can hear us from West Palm Beach this morning.

I can also recall when Prime Ministers participated in budgetary debates. When I had the honour of holding the high office which the current Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) now holds, my Prime Minister was present and did speak. Nothing is more important to a free people than to have the right to challenge a Government on how it taxes and how it spends. Therefore, it is the role of every Member of Parliament, led by the head of Government, to attend and participate.

I wish all Members of the House had been here yesterday to listen to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau). He gave the budget speech which the Minister of Finance should have given on Wednesday afternoon. The Minister is to be judged, not by what he did, but by what he did not do. With 1.25 million unemployed in Canada the Minister did not attempt to create a single job.

Instead of acknowledging the monumental mistakes it made in its first two Budgets and showing consideration for the urgent needs of millions of Canadians, the Government is trying to make them believe they will benefit by the measures announced Wednesday by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

[English]

This is another cynical attempt to manipulate public opinion, as if we did not already have enough cynicism in the country arising from recent events.

This third Budget represents phase three of an all-out attack on low and middle income Canadians. It widens the gap between the rich and poor and also between the have and have-not regions of the country. These three Budgets, with their economic approach to government, gave us the largest tax increases in modern Canadian history. They have gouged $22.8 billion more out of individual taxpayers. That is an average of $2,000 per taxpayer during the tenure of the present Government. Compared to that, over the same period of time corporations are taxed $2 billion less than they were when the Government took office.

Is that fair? Is that the type of justice the Minister of Finance was talking about? Is that the fairness which he has in mind? Is that the equitable style of taxation which he wishes to deliver to the country? Because of deindexation most of the increases have been not only massive, but automatic, cumulative, hidden and sneaky. As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) said so eloquently this morning, it put the Canadian taxpayer on an escalator. These taxes move forward without abatement.

• (1230)

The Minister was not frank with the House. He tried to give us and the country the impression that there were no new taxes of substance, certainly no new personal income taxes. However, those taxes are already built in, in the first two Budgets, and they carry forward with ever-increasing effect during this year and the next.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we are not going to thank the Minister, because for Canadians on low incomes, the tax increases and the surtax included in the first two Budgets continue to be in effect, since they are automatically extended in the present Budget, and they are just as unfair and just as sneaky as they were at the time they were introduced.

[English]

I believe the country deserves a little illustration so that my meaning can become clear. The cumulative effect of these three Budgets, including the one we are debating now, is that during the four-year term of the Government a family with two children earning $15,000 a year will have a cumulative tax increase of 53.1 per cent. A family earning $30,000 a year will have a cumulative tax increase over four years of 18.3 per cent, and those earning $100,000 a year will have a cumulative increase over four years of 6.9 per cent. That is $15,000 a year with a 53.1 per cent increase compared to $100,000 a year with a 6.9 per cent increase. We ask whether that is fair, just or credible to the people of Canada.

The Minister of Finance asks us to support him in controlling the public finances of this country. He will not be able to do that unless Canadians believe the burden is being imposed fairly and justly so that everyone is paying their fair share.

People who are filing their tax returns know that they are paying more. When we study the current guide published by Revenue Canada, we see how much more tax one owes. The guide used to have three columns, but now has four, the fourth of which we will call the "Wilson surtax column". Even if one's taxable income is as little as $550 per year, one is liable for a surtax.

People are receiving their T4 forms now and looking at their income. They are suddenly recognizing that they are paying much more to the Government in taxes. They are seeing an extra $100 or $200 tacked on by way of surtax, in addition to the higher sales taxes and higher tax rates. They are asking why. Where is the money going? Is it going to help pay off the deficit? Is it going to help the less advantaged areas of Canada? Will it help to feed the starving in the Third World, to whom we owe some help as human beings? The answer to all those questions is no. People might understand having to pay more in taxes if their money was going to those causes. But for what is the money being used? It is partially to offset a lifetime $500,000 capital gains tax exemption for the wealthy. It will help bring down tax rates on large corporations.

[Translation]

If we analyse the percentage paid by individuals in Canada and the taxes paid by companies and corporations, Canadian taxpayers are paying $22.8 billion more in income tax since the Conservative Government came to power. However, corporations have seen their taxes drop by $2 billion over the same period. In other words, the individual taxpayer is paying on average $2,000 more in income tax, while corporations are paying $2 billion less. Is that what the Minister calls fiscal fairness?

[English]

I do not believe that a single mother in Toronto who is trying desperately to raise her family, clothe and feed them while holding down a job, will thank the Minister for making her life harder. If she is in the $15,000 income range, the impact of the Minister's three Budgets is that she will be paying $321 more during this Government's tenure of office.

I do not believe the elderly widow in Vancouver Quadra, trying to live on $15,000 a year, will thank the Minister either for increasing her taxes by $423 with these three Budgets.

I don't think young couples in Montreal who are trying to save for their first home will thank the Minister for depriving them of money they could have saved for that purpose. If their annual income is about $30,000, they will pay $966 more in income tax.

[English]

What is really disgraceful is that those in the lowest income brackets who are earning poverty level wages are, for the first time, being hit by substantial tax hikes. As Ken Battle of the National Council of Welfare points out:

> The federal Government is dipping further and further below the poverty line to get taxes.

This is not acceptable.

What about high income earners? The special 5 per cent and 10 per cent surtax on their income ended on December 31, 1986. It was removed, and once again the wealthy and the rich get the tax breaks while all that the poor get are broken promises.

Commentators may say that the Minister was treading water with his Budget, but with the extra burden he has already placed on the Canadian taxpayer during his last two Budgets, thousands of Canadians are literally drowning in taxes. The Government simply does not care. The taxes brought in in the last two Budgets are automatically imposed every year. The country is on an escalator. Taxes will go up year after year without any public announcement, any public debate, or any parliamentary discussion.

[Translation]

For example, the indexation which protects all Canadians by guaranteeing that tax deductions and tax brackets are geared to the inflation rate has been limited just in case the annual inflation rate might exceed 3 per cent. Such underhand and clandestine de-indexation represents the most massive and heavy tax increase in Canada's history. It will cost Canadians billions of dollars.

[English]

Sneaky, hidden, silent and automatic. Rather than an up-front progressive approach, the Government chose to increase the sales tax also. On Wednesday the Minister said in the House, as reported at page 3578 of Hansard:

> The federal sales tax is unfair and inefficient. It is a silent killer of jobs.

Why did he increase that tax not once, twice, but three times since he came to office? When the Tory Government came to power the sales tax in this country was 9 per cent. It is now 12 per cent. Furthermore, the Government broadened the base of the tax, putting the burden on even more products. It is a regressive tax which hits hardest on those who can afford it the least; low and middle-income Canadians.

[Translation]

The sales tax is practically invisible. In his previous Budget statement the Minister had said that this Budget would be hard but fair. To him, it means being hard on low and middle income Canadians, and fair with well-to-do people.

In this Budget the Minister goes as far as raising the price of snack foods given to children.

The Government also increased the tax on gasoline, Mr. Speaker, and this after promising that it would never do such a thing. The gas tax went up 2 per cent a litre in 1985, one cent more in January this year, and yet another cent in this Budget. In other words, working people will have to spend more just to get to work.

• (1240)

These gas tax increases, since the Minister took office, work out, coincidentally, to 18 cents a gallon. The only person in this place who could be happy about that 18 cents a gallon is the Minister's predecessor in the Government of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), the now Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), "Mr. T." as he is known throughout the Atlantic Provinces. It took a long time to get back to that 18 cents but the Minister of Finance has done it for him. Boy, he must be feeling proud.

Again, those who can afford it least, get hit the hardest, making it more expensive for those fortunate enough to have a job to get to that job.

The Minister is talking about imposing a business transfer tax, which means he would extend this regressive tax to services, and making sure the Government would collect billions of dollars in additional revenues at the expense of people who can least afford to pay.

Ever since this Government took office, indirect taxes have risen by 25.2 per cent in 1985-86, by 25.6 per cent in 1986-87, and they will be up by another 8.6 per cent in 1987-88—all told 70.8 per cent in less than three years.

These are invisible taxes which consumers do not see, just pay. In 1986 Canada had the worst inflation record of all the G-7 countries except Italy. The reason for at least half that 4.2 per cent inflation rate was due to the sales tax and excise tax increases by this Government. Even more serious, the Government has gone out of its way to widen the gap between the rich and the poor. It is a gap which has been growing under this Government and which has resulted in the unparalleled growth of soup kitchens and food-banks. Men and women are forced to publicly stand in line in our major cities to get a package of food for themselves and their children. They face that humiliation and there was not a line, not a dollar, in this Budget either to promote joint funding with the provinces or to eliminate the need for food-banks in Canada. If it were not for our churches and volunteer agencies, thousands of Canadians would be starving in the large cities of Canada. This is a disgrace for the country, and the Government is responding inadequately and in a way which makes me ashamed to sit as an Hon. Member of this House.

I have illustrated the figures which show that the gap between the rich and the poor is being enlarged by the taxation policy of the Government, but there is also a widening gap between the have and have-not regions of Canada. Let us look at the impact the Government has had on the disadvantaged regions. That was another of the Prime Minister's "Holy Grails". Dare I say the words "sacred trust"? It was to be enshrined in stone that there would be equality of opportunity no matter where one lived in Canada. There would be equal treatment and equal opportunities. But what did the economically depressed regions of this country get in this Budget? How does the word "zero" sound to you, Mr. Speaker?

The recovery from the 1981-82 recession was slower in the regions than it was in central Canada. While the Minister boasts of recovery, the statistics are hollow because the recovery has been unevenly shared. Unemployment rates in Atlantic Canada, in rural Quebec, in northern Ontario, in Alberta, British Columbia and in the Territories, are unacceptably high. In fact, as my colleague, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides, pointed out yesterday, unemployment in the disadvantaged regions of Canada has risen since the worst year of the recession.

Here are the figures. In Newfoundland in 1982 the rate of unemployment was 16.8 per cent; in January of 1987, 19.2 per cent. In Prince Edward Island in 1982 it was 12.9 per cent; in January 1987, 14.6 per cent. In Nova Scotia in 1982 it was 13.2 per cent; in January 1987, 14.3 per cent. In Alberta in 1982 it was 7.7 per cent; January 1987, 10.8 per cent. In British Columbia in 1982 it was 12.1 per cent; January 1987, 13.6 per cent.

How does the Government react to this worsening crisis in the regions? Instead of helping them get through the crisis the Government makes the problem even worse. Funds earmarked for regional economic development went down from $14.9 billion in 1984-85 to $12 billion in 1987-88, a decrease of 20 per cent.

[English]

The rural areas of Canada are suffering. There was nothing for the farmer in this Budget. The Minister refers to other programs. I remember when a Budget was the time when the Government stood before Parliament and set out the programs for the farmers, fishermen, consumers and the disadvantaged. We have a crisis on the family farm which the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) has just outlined. Farmers are facing bankruptcy. We have the lowest prices for the next crop year since the depression, since the 1930s, of which you are well aware, Mr. Speaker. The International Grain Conference, where there was a hope we would receive some rationalization in the anarchy on international grain markets provoked primarily by the European- American confrontation in San Diego, was a shambles. It was a disaster. Yet the family farm gets nothing from this Minister.

The Tory message to Canadians living in the Atlantic Provinces, in western Canada and in northern Canada is, "If you don't like it. Tough. Move". I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that is not the Liberal view. We are not going to lead a country where we have to tell, or would dare tell, Canadians who cannot find a job in the Atlantic Provinces, in western Canada or in the northern parts of our country, "Move to Toronto; move to Montreal". No, sir, we believe in a country where there is equality of opportunity from one end of the nation to the other.

I suggested yesterday to the Minister that perhaps he did not understand how this country is put together, from the Atlantic to the Pacific to the Arctic, and that failure to understand, that attitude, displays a sad and dismal perception of the nature of Canada. It also portrays that this Government has no agenda, no plan and no projects to bring about some equality, some equilibrium in the economic advantages of the country. I have heard the Prime Minister, but regional equality is just rhetoric to this Government, and Canadians cannot serve their families rhetoric for dinner.

The Minister has a beautiful hedge here, tax reform; something that is not on the table before Parliament. "Wait until spring". That used to be a reverse advertisement in Canada. We could see the Minister's ears perk up last year when the Congress of the United States finally passed its tax reform. Sweet sounds came out of Washington, and a reduction of rates. The Minister of Finance could not resist the bandwagon. It was too good to be true. Who could argue? Lower taxes sound wonderful; but I am afraid the Minister jumped on the bandwagon without understanding the music. He said he had a plan. He said he had an agenda. He led us all to believe that he would be following the United States with major changes and major improvements in the tax structure.

Mr. Garneau: He said that?

It is true, he said so in July.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Apparently he said that, Mr. Speaker. Am I right?

Mr. Garneau: Quite so.

Mr. Kaplan: That is indeed what he said.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Indeed, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said last year that he would have specific tax reform propositions to make in his next Budget, that is in this Budget. Where are these propositions, Mr. Speaker? The Minister is asking us to wait until spring.

[English]

Although we will distance ourselves from it this morning I suspect we as Members of Parliament may be party to a massive fraud on the Canadian people, encouraged and perpetrated by the Minister of Finance of the Tory Government. Let me explain why. Fairness has not been the watchword or the overriding principle in this Government's approach to taxes in its previous Budgets. Why should Canadians trust the Minister now? Why should Canadians believe the Government now? Why should Canadians feel that the Government will be fair in tax reform? The record does not give us any encouragement.

What the Government is not talking about is the other side of the coin. What exemptions and deductions will be eliminated in order to allow those basic tax rates to come down? I think the Minister assumes that to be credible tax reform, it has to be fiscally neutral. Will the basic personal exemption be cut? Will the exemptions for senior citizens, for dependent children or RRSPs be cut? Only the Minister knows the answers to these questions, and he is not talking. He gives us a hint here and there. The press shared a sandwich with him yesterday and he threw out another little teaser. Maybe we will know more in the spring. Maybe that paper will not hit us until the summer.

Mr. Garneau: I wouldn't bet on that.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Maybe that paper will not hit us until the fall. Quite frankly, I do not believe that the Government has any commitment to making real hard and tough choices, to make any changes which will make an impact on those who are wealthy enough and well-organized enough to resist the changes that will really result in tax reform in the country.

[Translation]

Yesterday, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) clearly explained our position on tax reform. The Government is always expecting us to come up with options and alternatives. Well, the option was crystal-clear in my hon. friend's speech, and we feel that his proposals should be included along with tax reform and the strengthening of our social programs. Any changes in the tax system must be firmly grounded in the principles of justice, equity and effectiveness. There are a number of tax breaks and tax expenditures that no longer do the work they were intended to do. In my view, if the system is fair, many of these tax breaks will no longer be necessary.

[English]

It is the same cynical ploy. On issue after issue the Minister hints strongly at tax reduction but at the same time he is considering a business transfer tax to hammer the Canadian consumer. The Minister should at least have the courage to tell us what is the plan. He should have the courage to tell us what his intentions are rather than hiding behind delays and studies. There is continued confusion, confusion and instability over the direction in which the Government wants to take the Canadian economy. We do not know where tax reform is, and of course there is added confusion, and the Minister did not deal with it at all, except in one line in his Budget, as to the status of the free trade negotiations with the United States.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): One line?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Perhaps in one paragraph.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): A pretty strong paragraph. Read it again.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister re-endorsed the free trade negotiations.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): With punch!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I think it was the flabbiest punch that has been thrown since the latter days of Joe Walcott when he could hardly get into the ring.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Where do you stand on this? Do you agree with the statement or not?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I will tell the Minister. I am glad I have him as a captive audience. I appreciate his courtesy in hearing us out.

The Prime Minister announced the free trade negotiations with the United States at the great Shamrock Summit. So far the only winner on March 17 has been St. Patrick—Canadians certainly have not gotten much out of these negotiations. The decision of the Prime Minister could dramatically alter almost every aspect of our economy in the next few decades. It could have a profound effect on the way we live, on the way we do business, on our standard of living, on our independence and certainly on our national sovereignty. Yet it received only a passing reference in the Minister's Budget—an endorsement.

The issue of free trade would not be discussed in the House of Commons at all if it were not for the opposition Parties. We once got 15 minutes from the Prime Minister. In fact, we have only had three speeches from the Prime Minister since this Parliament began in November of 1984. We had one on each Speech from the Throne and 15 minutes on free trade.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), and I believe that the important debates of the country need the leadership of the Parties we have the honour to represent. We are here in the House of Commons despite an electronic age. This is the forum of the nation. This is where the Prime Minister ought to be.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We in the Liberal Party have always favoured, and we still favour, liberalization of world trade and Canadian trade. We favour lowering trade barriers. We favour dissipating and lowering protection. We prefer to do it on a world-wide basis. Canadians have always done better in negotiations with the United States within the GATT negotiations and within multilateral trading partner negotiations. We have always done better with the United States that way than we have on a head-on approach with our American friends.

The United States is our largest and most important customer. That is agreed. The United States is not our only customer or trading partner. I will have to take the Minister through this very carefully and quietly so that he will understand.

Mr. Dingwall: You'd better repeat it a couple of times.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I say that because he did not deal with the subject of the international scene in the depth he ought to have done in a major budget speech. As a matter of fact, that speech was so thin I have had gruel at one of these food banks that is thicker, and that is thin enough.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): You weren't in the House to listen to it.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I was here.

Mr. Mazankowski: You were out doing your interview.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We in this quarter of the House do not accept the initiative of the Prime Minister. We believe it has been ill-conceived. We believe it has been ill-managed and poorly negotiated. We believe it was ill-timed. The homework has not been done. The preparation was not done. There was no public debate. There was no mandate from the Canadian people. There has been no debate in Parliament. Not once have we had a debate in Parliament on this issue. The provinces have been inadequately consulted. Yesterday we heard the Premier of Quebec reasserting what he believes is his right to have a veto on these negotiations, or on the result. The Premier of Ontario has taken the same position. I must say that I do not know where the new Premier of British Columbia stands on this particular point.

For sure, the United States is our principal partner. We desperately need access to its markets in terms of competitive ability, market share and so on. But there is a rising protectionist sentiment in the United States. The newly-elected Democratic Congress, a Democratic Senate and a Democratic House of Representatives has accentuated that sentiment of protectionism. The Government was naive in thinking that the very fact of beginning negotiations with the United States would, by itself, dissipate that sentiment of protectionism in Canada's favour and would eliminate or exempt Canada from it. Of course that was naive, and of course it has not happened.

I believe we have to examine that naive assumption. I believe Members of the House must put a question to themselves. Is the United States really after free trade, or fair trade, or managed trade? Is the United States using the cover of these negotiations to extract a series of managed trade deals from Canada?

I do not know whether the Minister has had the opportunity to personally examine or be briefed on the new United States Trade Bill which was introduced in the United States Senate and supported by 52 or 53 Democrat and Republican Senators. That is not a free trade operation. That is a managed trade operation. That is not a fair trade operation. The Minister states that it is worse than that, and it is.

I am proud to sit in the House, but in terms of a legislative chamber the U.S. Senate is a pretty good deal. There are no administrative responsibilities, only debate and analysis. Those Senators love it, and it is a great club. They call it a level playing field. Fair trade is a level playing field. I love the expression "level playing field" because every time I have seen an American negotiate on that basis what he really means is "it is our field, it is our referee, we draw the lines, it is our goal posts, and it is our ball". Now we have the United States Trade Bill.

I believe that we should now reassess the negotiations with the United States. We should ask our American friends what are the real objectives. Is it free trade, or is it a managed trade arrangement? Are these negotiations being used by the United States to extract from us deal after deal. There was 15 per cent on the export of softwood lumber. What is next? Pulp and paper, steel, potash, oil or gas, hydro?

[Translation]

Recently, I had the honour of speaking with Premier Bourassa, and I said: Watch out, Mr. Premier, if it's 15 per cent today on softwood lumber exports, watch out for your pet James Bay project. Thanks to the pitiful negotiating by this federal Government, the Americans will be tempted to make us put a 15 per cent tax on our hydro exports as well. They see those guys in Ottawa as rank amateurs. The way we were set up by the United States on the softwood lumber issue will be repeated, and next time, it could be on just about anything.

[English]

When the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) telephones the Prime Minister this afternoon, ask him how the weather is, would you? Tell him that when he is down there to pick up the phone to his friend, the President of the United States. I know that the President is a little distracted and wondering what is in the computer bank. But in any event, call him and say, "Look, Mr. President, the boys, the Members, the girls—

Mr. Mazankowski: Which group, you or Axworthy?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Sheila will not like that, John.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): No, no, I was trying to find the right word. The persons, the Members, the people. Equality is so rampant in the Liberal Party that we no longer have distinctions.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Ask the President what are the real intentions of the Congress. We ought to know. We would like to have a statement from the Prime Minister, not the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney). We have seen her final offer after final offer after final offer. We wish a statement from the Prime Minister stating at what stage are these negotiations, where are we going, what is on the table, and what is not on the table. We must start to dissipate the uncertainty, and the business uncertainty in Canada in order to know where the country is going.

The Chief United States Negotiator, Peter Murphy, stated that everything is on the table. The former Speaker of the House of Representatives, Tip O'Neill, was up in Canada at $25,000 an hour and told us that he liked Canadians, but in these negotiations you have to give a little. I have not met Tip O'Neill for a long time. I did like him. When I next see him, I will say, "Tip, give a little? We have given already on FIRA, it is gone; the National Energy Program is gone."

Mr. Mazankowski: You were against it, too.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): "You have half of our book publishing industry. There is a drug Bill in Parliament, you do have our lumber. What is next? Tip, you ought to know what is going on, and perhaps you could tell us. What does the United States really have in mind, and what does the Congress and the Senate have in store for us?"

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): What do you really have in mind?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Well, I have told you. Let me be very specific for you.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I hope you will be.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister of Finance is a surprisingly good listener today.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Absolutely. I always listen.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): On a trade agreement with the United States, we have a Party view that has been expressed on several occasions, and it meets the consensus of every person in our caucus.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): My personal view is that I do not believe there will be a comprehensive free trade agreement with the United States. I will tell you why. I do not believe that any Canadian Government, and the Government has not been clear about it, can afford to dismantle our agricultural programs, can afford to put the Auto Pact on the table, can afford to sell off our cultural industries, and can afford to abandon our regional economic programs. I know that, my Party knows that. The Government has not come clean and told us what is on the table and what is not on the table.

I also say to Hon. Members sitting across the way, led by the estimable Deputy Prime Minister, that any Canadian Government that attempted to yield on the fronts that I have described and others would be politically dead. We are not talking about a comprehensive free trade agreement, we are talking about some type of agreement.

Deep in the psyche and consciousness of every Canadian there is a concern and a worry that the Government is a lousy negotiator.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Government is selling us out. The Government has not got the fibre to work out a good deal. There is a very deep underlying feeling in the country that whatever happens in these negotiations, we want to emerge from them as a country with independence, sovereignty, pride, uniqueness, and a distinctness. I wish to tell the Deputy Prime Minister that we admire our American friends, but we like it here. We are proud to be Canadians, and we are not going to be party to any agreement that in effect makes us the fifty-first state of the United States.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The United States Congress has given us a warning that they will not yield on countervail. They did not yield on countervail in the free trade agreement with Israel. I have said in the House and elsewhere that any agreement with the United States that did not have some meaningful restriction on countervail would not be worth the paper it is written on. What will we get? I wish to make a prediction. We will receive some type of dispute mechanism from these negotiations. We will receive a joint arbitration board. We will not receive any yielding on countervail. We will not receive any substantive measures. Whatever we get will be far short of the bravado and the blarney of the Shamrock Summit, and it will be far less than a comprehensive free trade agreement. It will be a limited agreement, probably with a dispute mechanism, and the Government will stagger away from the table and cry victory. That is my prediction. I am glad both Ministers are present to hear it.

What will we do in the future? I believe that we need a more focused approach to these negotiations with the United States. We need it within an international cover, and with a central focus. I do not think we are going to get—

• (1310)

Mr. Hockin: Look at the forest and not the trees.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is exactly what the Hon. Member said, although he said it in more elegant French than I can muster.

There has been tremendous uncertainty caused by these trade negotiations with the United States. Business capital expenditure projections are way down. The Minister will admit that. I think a good deal of the hesitation of business to commit to capital projects, plant or equipment arise from the fact that business does not know where these negotiations are going or what the result might be. Business does not know where to put the plant or when.

Talking about an international outlook, Mr. Speaker, I would have hoped the Minister might have given us his views on some of the risks that affect Canada. We do not have his view on the United States dollar and what it might mean for this country. I wonder, and I think many Canadians wonder, how low that dollar will go. U.S. Secretary of the Treasury, James Baker, has been talking it down. He has been trying to talk it down to make the United States more competitive with Europe, and Japan particularly, to try to work out the trade deficit. He is not succeeding either, because those other countries are lowering their prices or because the so-called J-curve and the delay in working those dollar prices through has not yet taken effect. In any event, we are now at a stage where we wonder how low that dollar will go and I believe we have a vulnerable situation.

The United States has been financing its trade deficit, now in the range of $130 billion to $150 billion, and its fiscal deficit in the range of $180 billion to $200 billion, by foreign money, primarily Japanese. As a matter of fact, you could say that Japan is virtually the banker of the United States at the moment. In three or four years from becoming the largest creditor nation in the world, the United States by the end of this President's term will be the largest debtor nation in the world at about $500 billion U.S. dollars. The United States is now vulnerable like the rest of us in currency movements. If the U.S. economy falters, or if world confidence is shaken in the American economy and that money is pulled out to finance both of those deficits, interest rates from the federal reserve will have to go up and we will have the beginning of a very serious world crisis. We have no views from the Minister of that. We have no views——concerning our international system of payments and banking operations, because I believe this situation as well is very precarious. Indeed the international debt amounts to $1 trillion, which is more than the total assets of western banks. Developing countries in Latin America and Eastern Europe do not have enough trade to meet the interest payments on their debts. The problem is made even worse by the current geopolitical situation in the Middle East and in other strife-torn countries. We would have liked the Minister to tell us where he stands with respect to these questions. What is Canada doing to help stabilize the exchange rates? What is Canada doing to encourage the reconciliation or reorganization of the international bank debt? We are not isolated, we are not immunized. These situations are contageous. But the Minister does not confide in us, he does not share his thoughts with us.

The Minister proudly states that our deficit is now proportionally identical to that of the United States.

[English]

That is a real big deal and a great target. In the words of the Minister, reducing the deficit is the priority; to quote him, it is "right on the top of the heap". But how come he is back to square one? The deficit is roughly at the same level it was when he took over in September 1984, and my colleague, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides, has explained that very carefully. How did the Minister keep the deficit where it was? Not by expenditure cuts, but by raising taxes on the middle class of this country, slashing regional development spending, dramatically cutting EPF transfers to the provinces, slashing funding for research and development—

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —firing our scientists, letting our best brains go to the United States and elsewhere.

While I have the Minister trapped here in the House of Commons, can I say one thing to him through you, Mr. Speaker? Try to get the accounting straight in this country. Investment in research is less a current expense than an investment. It is a capital expense in the future of our country. It is the best investment we can make. Treat it that way in the public accounts.

What has been the impact on the public debt of this Minister? I do not want to stop him burnishing his reputation with his friends, many of whom I know, by the way. But the total public debt has gone up since this Government took over. It will have gone up by an astounding 67 per cent to $294.8 billion by the end of the fiscal year 1987-88. The Minister inherited a public debt on September 17, 1984 of about $175 billion. He has run it up to $300 billion. Forty per cent of the total public debt of Canada has been incurred by a Conservative Government.

Mr. Mazankowski: Big deal.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Deputy Prime Minister says "big deal". Presiding over a Government like this, he knows what a big deal is.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: We know the big legacy you guys left us.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Deputy Prime Minister has been courteous to me and has been listening. Let me now give him a plain and simple fact. It comes from the Minister of Finance's own budget calculations. I want to give tribute to the Minister that this record of public debt is unequalled by any other Minister of Finance in the history of our country. I believe a fitting epitaph to be printed on the tombstone of this Government should be carved this way, "Here lies the Tory Government sunk by the weight of its own hypocrisy".

Despite all the rhetoric there has been very little substantial movement on the deficit and no progress at all getting at the expenditure side of the Government. In his last Budget we saw, "In every case we are spending smarter and making better use of scarce resources". I believe those were the Minister's words. That statement falls a little flat in the face of the facts. The $500,000 capital gains tax exemption will cost $800 million this year. The Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank fiascos cost another $1.6 billion. I am sorry that "billion-dollar Barbara" is not here to listen. The Gulf-Reichmann deal cost $1 billion. The Hong Kong takeover of the Bank of B.C. cost $200 million. Those are just some of what the Minister of Finance used to call the big ticket items.

Mr. Mazankowski: Are you against that?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We want to explore why that $200 million was necessary, but we are not against the sale. We would like that $200 million examined by the committee. I do not have time to explore the prison in Port Cartier, nor do I have time to explore the public relations campaign to sell free trade. I am not invited along on the Prime Minister's travels with the butler and the maid. What about the home movies and the shadow jets?

You have been patient and our friendship goes back a long time, Mr. Speaker. This Budget is part of the cynical self-serving approach of the Government. I will tell you why it is cynical and I will tell you why I believe it is a fraud. Here is the time-table. I will lay it out for the benefit of Canadians. When the Deputy Prime Minister is on the telephone to West Palm Beach this afternoon, this is what he ought to say.

Step one of the timetable was for huge tax hikes to be brought in with the first two Budgets in 1985-86. Over $16 billion more was taxed against individuals and 90 per cent of the taxes in the first two Budgets was on individuals while only 10 per cent of the taxes was on corporations. In the current Budget, the ratio is about 95 to five.

Here we are at step two in 1987. The Minister says, "Make a few minor adjustments but do not tell the people that those earlier massive tax increases are automatic, hidden, escalated, deindexed and working through the system". By the end of this year, $22 billion will be taxed against individual taxpayers, $22 billion that they otherwise would not have had to pay. We are now living through step two.

Step three is to wait until spring when there will be a White Paper on tax reform. It may be in the spring, it may be in the summer or it may be in the fall. Step four, 1988, will occur just before an election. The Government will bring in the good news Budget containing personal reductions on the side of tax reform and close a few loopholes. The Government will give what is due to our regions in some better measure than it has before. Step five is to call an election. Step six is to return after the election to oppose the biggest, most massive consumer business transfer tax designed to balance the books this country has ever seen.

I do not want to head the Minister off from the disaster course he has obviously set for himself, but there are two flaws to that schedule. The Minister should listen closely. The first flaw is that Canadians see through it, and the second is that the Minister will not be back after the election.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Canadians have seen the solemn commitments of the Tory Government broken so many times that it has gotten down to a question of trust. Canadians do not trust this Government. Canadians do not trust this Government in honouring its promises. Canadians do not trust this Government in negotiating the trade arrangement with the United States. Canadians do not trust this Government in the fish treaty with France. Canadians do not trust this Government in the style of public morality that it displays. Canadians do not trust this Government in the way it handles the provinces. Canadians do not trust this Government in protecting our sovereignty. And, Mr. Speaker, Canadians do not trust this smug, manipulative Budget.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We listened to a lot of inaccuracies in the speech—

Mr. Foster: Name one.

Mr. Mazankowski: As a matter of fact, I will. I am sure the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), who is a fair man, inadvertently misled the House when he suggested in his opening comments that when he was Minister of Finance his Leader not only spoke in the Budget debate but was present when the Leader of the Opposition participated. I have just had a chance to look at the record of the Budget of June 23, 1975. The Right Hon. Member's Leader did not speak and there is no evidence to suggest that he was present when the Leader of the Opposition spoke. As a matter of fact, when the Leader of the Opposition spoke on June 26, 1975 he led off by saying that he was sorry that the Minister of Finance was not in the House—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order, it is a point of debate.

Before I recognize the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), may I have unanimous consent to let the Hon. Member for Oshawa have the same amount of time to speak as did the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner)?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I would begin by expressing my appreciation to my Conservative and Liberal colleagues for their unanimous support to extend time to allow me to speak. It will probably be the last time we are all in agreement today.

I would like to get right to the Budget that the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) is exercising himself about, and I can well understand that because most Canadians are very exercised by this Budget indeed.

At a time when Canadian families have had a greater increase in taxes than in any other period in the post-war years, the Government has once again increased the tax burden on families. I would remind the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), who is present, that at a time when unemployment in seven of the 10 provinces is as bad or worse than it was in the depth of the recent recession of 1981-82, there is no improvement in regional development programs. At a time when, in the Minister's own words, Canadian corporations have not been paying their fair share of the tax burden, there is no change at all toward more equity in corporate taxes. Finally, at a time when, as the Minister of Finance has pointed out, sales taxes are very unfair and the most regressive kind of taxation, the Government has put additional taxes, not simply on gasoline but on peanuts, popcorn, popsicles and almost anything else one could mention. In short, whether we are thinking of families, of regions, of the corporate share of taxes or of children, at a time when Canadians were looking for more fairness from the Government at last, we got once again just the opposite. I say that enough is enough and it is time to get fair.

In my comments today I do not want to deal with a whole range of matters. The finance critic for the New Democratic Party did that very ably yesterday. In my comments I want to restrict myself to two concerns that, it would seem to me, a Budget in a modern society, whether in Canada or in any other democratic society, ought to have as its central focus. One is the question of the fairness of the tax burden between various elements in society and principally, in a modern industrialized world, the distribution of the tax burden between corporations and individuals. Then I wish to say something about regional development and regional inequities and how they are addressed, or, more correctly, how they are not addressed in this Budget.

I would first like to deal with the question of tax reform and tax fairness as it relates to individuals on the one hand and corporations on the other. What is the reality of the Government's record? I will not provide for the House a great many statistics. I have a pretty strong hunch that most Canadians know what they are by now. The next two or three statistics I will mention are perhaps the most revealing about the inequitable burden of taxation in Canada.

I would remind the people of Canada that one of the reasons this Government was elected in 1984 was that by 1984 Canadians had become sick and tired of the unfairness with which they had been treated, particularly in the last years of the Liberal Government, and they wanted a change. I see that the Minister of Finance has just stepped out for a moment. I know that he will be back.

When this Government first came to power I was one of those, although I happen to lead another Party, who felt that it was good to have a change in Government and that it was good for the democratic process for one Party not to remain in power for 20 odd years but to have a new team of men and women bringing a new set of concerns to the political agenda. I did say as well that I expected some improvement. I regret that when I, along with the rest of the people of this nation, look at what has happened in the last two and a half years, not only have we had no improvement, if anything, things have gotten worse.

I want to spell that out. With the three Budgets from that Minister of Finance taxes on individuals have gone up over 50 per cent. Quite apart from the increasing burden on the average family, the other thing that ought to concern us is that the burden is being increasingly shared by those who are well below the poverty line. Right now you can be only half way up the mark with respect to statistical calculation, with an income half way to the point of poverty, the break even point, where you are no longer deemed to be at the poverty level, and still you are going to be paying taxes. If there is one thing which ought to be at the top of our agenda, as it has been in Scandinavia and in many other places, it is that people at the poverty level ought not to be paying taxes.

Since 1984 some $14 billion in additional taxes have been placed on the families of this nation. That is what the Conservatives have done. On the one hand we have this increased burden by way of personal income taxes or a whole series of what the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) has correctly called sneaky indirect taxes. At the same time the share paid by that other major source of revenue, corporations, has gone down by about 18 per cent since the Conservatives were elected.

Then we see in the press today that the Minister of Finance sat down with some journalists over coffee. I do not know who was paying. He talked about, as he is wont to do every third or fourth day, corporate tax reform. He puts a new wrinkle on it each time he talks about it. In his chat yesterday he talked about Marc Lalonde's last Budget in 1983 when a special set of corporate tax exemptions were extended. He pointed out again, I am sure with great earnestness and seriousness, how this is really disturbing the fiscal flow of the federal Government and we really have to do something about it. We have to come to grips with it. I am sure he said to himself, "I have not done anything about corporate taxes in the Budget, in fact I have increased taxes on individuals, but if I talk to journalists now maybe all the newspapers tomorrow will say I am really concerned about corporate taxes and how we have to reform them". Sure enough, he got his stories across Canada that he, the great friend of the corporations, is once again expressing his deep concern that they are not paying their share.

It is one thing to be somewhat facetious and kid about this kind of thing, but apart from standing back and looking at it analytically, as the Minister of Finance is wont to do, the real meaning of this maldistribution of the tax burden ought to be understood. If it is the case that corporations are not paying their share, and I say to the Minister that corporations, like the rest of us, benefit from national highways, nationally financed research and development programs and a whole range of expenditures by the federal Government, that share is being paid by pensioners, farmers, people on unemployment insurance, indeed, by every other Canadian. I say to the Minister it is time to stop talking about corporate tax reform and start acting.

Why is he not doing this? As I understand the Minister, and I want to take his word for it now and give my own interpretation in a few seconds, he is working up to reform. It is a complicated situation. I must say to my friend, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, given the vast range of loopholes introduced by the Liberals I know it can take some time to get rid of them all. I know it presents some kind of challenge. Yet the Minister of Finance, if I remember correctly, first started talking about corporate tax reform late in the fall of 1984. In the Budget of 1985 he had some carefully documented reasons why we ought to be concerned about tax reform and the loss of revenue it means. In 1986 he wound up the corporate tax reform rhetoric once again just before Christmas. Then we see nothing in this Budget about tax reform, but there he is on The Journal after the Budget, and did he talk about the Budget? No, not at all. He talked about corporate tax reform.

Then he was asked a question by the journalists, and I hope he will clarify this. The poor journalists have a worse time with him than we do in trying to get the agenda. They were sort of saying to the Minister, "will you clarify this for us? Does this mean you are going to bring in a White Paper in the spring or maybe the fall, and does it definitively mean that by at least 1989 we will have corporate tax reform"? The Minister of Finance's definitive answer is,"well, no, I cannot guarantee it". He started in 1984, went through 1985, picked it up in 1986, gets on television on budget night in 1987 still talking about corporate tax reform. I say to the Minister that we are all getting sick and tired of it. Quit talking about it, do it, Mr. Minister of Finance.

The other matter which concerns Canadians throughout the country is fairness in regional development programs. Mr. Speaker, equal opportunities for all Canadian men and women is one of the basic principles of Confederation. Instead of preserving this principle, the Conservative Government is jeopardizing it by cutbacks to programs aimed at correcting regional disparities. This year, the Government will spend $3 billion less than in 1984 for regional economic development. This decrease has been aggravated by major cutbacks to programs in the areas of transport, fisheries and agriculture. Equalization is also essential to achieve equity among the regions. The Conservatives have continued the process of cutting back federal transfers to the provinces initiated by the Liberals in 1982.

The changes made by the Conservatives to the equalization formula have resulted in lower payments for six out of ten provinces this year. For instance, Mr. Speaker, in the case of Quebec, these changes will have cost $97 million last year and will have amounted to a cumulative loss of $2 billion when the financial arrangements expire in 1992.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is turning a deaf ear to the claims of Quebec in spite of threats to bring the matter of the federal cutbacks to equalization payments before the courts.

Is court action finally the only way to get some action out of Ottawa? That is not an acceptable solution and the New Democratic Party finds such results unacceptable.

Mr. Speaker, it is time for the Conservative Government to deal with the problems of families in regions where unemployment is still unacceptably high. It is time for the Government to listen to the grievances of the unemployed worker in eastern Montreal, of the jobless Kootenay miner, of the laid-off Fort McMurray clerk, of the virtually bankrupt Prairie farmer and of the Newfoundland fisherman.

Mr. Speaker, it is time to put an end to the cutbacks and to see to it once and for all that regional equity stops being a dream and becomes a reality. Instead of emphasizing regional disparities, instead of abdicating its responsibilities to the regions, the federal Government must show some leadership and demonstrate that it is possible to work together as a nation to correct regional disparities.

[English]

I would like to make a couple of concrete points in this vein. As the Minister of Finance very well knows, we now have a series of federal-provincial regional development programs negotiated between the federal Government and each of the provinces. Since the last Throne Speech we have established the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency for our eastern-most provinces. Third, although nothing has yet been done about it, there was a commitment originally made at the First Ministers' meeting, subsequently discussed at Finance Ministers' meetings, and referred to in the House, to establish a program which would bring greater economic diversification to western Canada. Therefore, we have an Atlantic agency, a commitment to diversification for the west, and very specific regional development agreements negotiated between the federal Government and the provinces.

As I said, the Government has done nothing about this at a time when unemployment in most of the regions of the country remains as bad as it was at the depths of the recent recession. We need some action. Unemployment is high in most areas of the country and the federal Government should be showing leadership to turn that around.

I would like to make a couple of concrete suggestions about what could be done if we had a Government which believed that there is an activist role for a Government to play. In all candor, one of our fundamental problems is that the Minister of Finance, albeit intellectually honest, is a man of the 1930s instead of the 1980s in his thinking. Through his own personal commitment to market mechanism he can stand back and watch almost all of the economic growth, as well as the resulting jobs, take place within 100 miles of the centre of Toronto, because that is where the continental market forces have led. The Minister well knows that that is where virtually all the growth has been. It has been mostly in the automotive sector, and most of that, although not exclusively, has been due to stimulation from the U.S. market. If you leave this country to the North American market mechanism, that is the type of thing which will happen.

If, in a different time, there is a great demand for our resources due to circumstances outside of our nation, we could have stimulation for the export of our resources, but zero impact in our manufacturing core, resulting in a downturn in the area around Toronto when we could have expansion elsewhere. If you believe, as this Minister does, that the task of government is just to sit back and watch things happen, that is what will happen.

In the reality of 1987 it is unacceptable to the New Democratic Party for the Government to use such phrases as the Minister of Finance used in his budget speech the other day. He said that we have to put our house in order. For us, the Canadian house has many rooms. Among those rooms are Atlantic Canada, western Canada, northern Ontario and parts of Quebec, not only the industrial core. A Government which is concerned about the whole house cannot just stand back and watch things happen. In the thinking of some people there may have been justification for that until the 1930s, but I thought we had learned something since then. We would like a commitment to an activist government.

I would like to make a couple of particular suggestions. With regard to corporate loopholes, it is obvious that a number of financial incentives for corporations are appropriate if they have the appropriate effects on research and development, job creation, and so on. We are talking about the useless kind to which the Minister himself has referred. We are talking about the kind to which the Auditor General has referred which simply cost the taxpayer money without having any spin-off effect for the nation. If the Minister had, in this Budget brought in the corporate tax reform which is necessary now, he could have taken tax revenues from corporations which are now making a profit and channeled that money into regional development funds to create jobs elsewhere in Canada. That is one approach which would be followed by a Government which believed in an activist role of government in the economy and had a solid commitment to ensure fair development in all the regions of Canada.

Regardless of which part of the country we are from, we all have deep concerns about the extraordinarily rapid decline in economic opportunities in the Province of Alberta and part of Saskatchewan associated with the petroleum industry. There has been a catastrophically quick decline related to circumstances over which the people of Alberta and Saskatchewan had no control and, ultimately, over which the Canadian Government had no control, namely, international prices of petroleum which are primarily established in the Middle East. There is a crisis in that part of Canada which requires action rather than a Government which says that it will deregulate the economy and hope for the best, as this Government has done. We have not seen the best, we have seen the worst. Our energy critic made a very sensible suggestion in his reply yesterday, which I will repeat. The Government has seen fit to increase taxes on gasoline by 1 cent a litre. That would increase our incoming cash flow by about $450 million. What better way to use that money than to recognize the need in the oil sector, to recognize that the benefit from the change in the PGRT has gone to big oil companies and that the people who are really suffering and could be providing jobs are the small Canadian producers? Why do we not use the $450 million which will be generated by all Canadians paying for an increase in the price of gasoline for job creation in Alberta where it will be effective now?

These are but two illustrations of the general point I want to make of my concern, as Leader of the New Democratic Party, about the unfairness in regional opportunities at this time. We built into the Constitution of Canada just a few years ago a commitment to the principle of equalization. As a social democrat, it was a commitment that I was very pleased to see supported in principle by all Parties at that time. It recognizes the principle that a young boy growing up in Cape Breton ought to have the same expectation of opportunities to do what he wants in life as a boy at Dundas and Yonge Streets, or a young girl in Saskatoon who wants to go to university. If she wants to receive an education she should have the same expectations for that as a young girl in Vancouver. There ought to be no difference in medical expenses from coast to coast. In short, equalization ought to be a fundamental concern of any national party. At a time when we see the great disparities in terms of employment opportunities in our regions, the federal Government ought to be putting more money rather than less into regional economic development.

I do not want to take more time of the House today. I have mentioned two aspects of budgetary policy in my speech. One is the notion of fairness in terms of tax burden between individuals and corporations. I have suggested that the Government has failed in this respect. It has failed in its basic commitment to fairness. I have talked about the importance of coming to grips with the growing inequalities between our regions. The Budget completely fails to deal with that issue.

In conclusion, Canadians voted for a change in 1984. They expected to get a little more frankness from the Government, and a little more fairness. I regret to say that they received neither. The Government now is at a low standing in the political polls. I will not be glib about that because all of us here have had enough experience in political life to know that there is considerable ebb and flow in party standings. The Hon. Member opposite knows that as well as anyone. However, I want to say that if the Government wants to regain some credibility and move back up to gain the respect of at least a substantial share of the population of Canada, it will have to come to grips with its own failure to deliver on fairness. If it begins to deliver on fairness it will deserve to get increased support. If it does not, it deserves to be booted right out of office.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been some informal discussions among the Parties. If you were to inquire, I believe you will find there is agreement in the House not to see the clock and continue debate through until 5 p.m.

Mr. Speaker: There being agreement to the suggestion, as indicated by all Parties, I recognize the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes).

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure to enter this debate following the gloom and doom twins, tweedledum and tweedledee. We remember how the doom and gloom boys stood in the House after the first Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and said that the Budget will cost the country 100,000 jobs, with 100,000 more people in poverty. However, they admit today that his Budgets have resulted in 675,000 more people working in Canada and fewer families living in poverty.

Now what do they do? They talk about equality and the fact that we should be concerned about growing inequality in the regions. The easiest thing in life to share equally, without argument, is nothing. Ten people or 100 people can have an equal share of nothing.

We all admit that there is some sense of growing inequality in the regions. I come from the west where people feel some sense of increasing inequality. However, I point out that every region is growing. That is the difference between what we inherited in 1984, when every region of the country was in decline. Two and one-half years later, jobs are growing and the economy is growing in every region.

Federal Budgets are designed to be tools to produce growth, create jobs, reduce poverty and provide a better standard of living for Canadians. I believe we would have difficulty in not recognizing that the Minister of Finance is an absolute genius with budgets. In 1979, I sat in this Chamber to hear the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) present his Budget. The country was in difficulty at that time; people were living in poverty and unemployment was growing. We presented a Budget to straighten out that situation and jobs began to be created in anticipation of that Budget. The Canadian Council of Welfare said that the Budget was the fairest in the decade of the 1970s. The Budget was designed to deliver money to the poor people who needed it, it would reduce their costs, increase shelter and create jobs at better than 30,000 a month.

The Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party, tweedledum and tweedledee, threw the Budget out during that crisis in our country. They stood in this Chamber to say they could not approve this Budget. They threw the Budget out because they were playing politics with the lives of Canadians. As a result, for four long years Canada was in great trouble. Canadians should not forget the 22 per cent and 23 per cent interest charges on their mortgages. Canadians should not forget that farmers were going bankrupt by the boatload and small businesses were going belly-up.

In my Province of Alberta in 1979 there were employment opportunities for young people from across the country. They came from Newfoundland, British Columbia and Yukon to get good solid jobs and a start in life in our province. However, through the budgetary policies of those Parties who are now in opposition, who get together to destroy the nation whenever there was a crisis, took that 4 per cent unemployment rate and increased it to 12 per cent. That unemployment increase was not a result of falling international prices but deliberate public policy. Those of us who were in the House during that period should never forget that. When one lives in a community where crime increased, family violence increased and suicides increased as a result of deliberate public policy, one should never forget it.

One should never trust the architects of that kind of public policy to be in charge of the financial affairs of this country ever again. I do not claim that the New Democratic Party was deliberate in supporting that kind of policy. I think the Liberal policies were deliberate. However, one cannot go on being a child bride all one's life. Sooner or later the NDP has to grow up and make its policy choices public. It cannot be on every side of the fence. It must recognize the consequences of what it supports.

Mr. Keeper: Is that the voice of experience?

Mr. Hawkes: That is the voice of years of experience in this Chamber. I have seen Budgets which do what Budgets are supposed to do, keep stability and confidence in the country, keep inflation and interest rates down and keep employment up. I have seen two Budgets which worked and two days ago I think I saw the third. In each and every case these Budgets came from the current Minister of Finance. The current Minister of Finance is the only one in my eight years as an Hon. Member who has had a chance to demonstrate what a good Budget can do. But we will not hear the Opposition stand up and say, maybe we will support this one, at least in part, because it is the first time in 30 years that a deficit has gone down for three years in a row and interest rates are the lowest they have been in a decade.

I heard the Leader of the New Democratic Party stand in this Chamber and bleed for the Province of Alberta. What a laugh. But I did not hear his voice in this Chamber bleeding for the Province of Alberta and the people who live there as our unemployment went from 4 per cent to 12 per cent. I did not hear one scintilla of evidence in what he said in this Chamber that he comprehends the province, the people in it or the current situation. There are 23,000 more people working full time in the Province of Alberta today than there were in September of 1984. We are hurting. We have a lot of unemployed people, we would like a lot more jobs, and we are working hard to provide them. However, by every economic criterion, in the face of low world oil prices and low world agricultural prices, the economic situation in Alberta today is better than it was when this Government was elected in September 1984. The failure of the Leader of the NDP to mention that, to even allude to it, and I suggest to the House, to be knowledgeable about it, tells us perhaps more clearly than anything else that he is playing politics. He does not care. He does not know. He is simply playing politics. Someone gives him a press clipping, someone deep in the bowels of his research organization gives him a line to read, so he reads it, but does he understand Alberta? Does he care? Is he the captive of the labour leaders of the big powerful unions? Or are they the captive of the Leader of the New Democratic Party?

We have a simple legislative committee looking at the issue of protection of intellectual property, some protection for the inventors of this country so they do not have to sneak across the United States Border in the dark of the night to patent their inventions, so they can actually patent them in Canada, so they can produce them in Canada, creating jobs and sharing in the wealth of Canada. That was fought by the New Democratic Party and the Liberals together, the child bride and the mature adult.

You should listen to the members of the New Democratic Party in committee, Mr. Speaker. You should listen to the phrasing of the questions they ask, the repetition of the questions, and then listen to the union witnesses they bring into committee. They use the same words, the same set of ideas, the same phraseology and the same emphasis. Which is which? Which is the political Party and which is the labour organization? It is getting increasingly confusing.

Powerful unions donate a lot of money to the NDP, but they should not really be surprised to occasionally see a conflict in an Hon. Member's mind and actions. Doing what is best for the big, powerful, rich union may not be the same action one should take if one is really trying to do one's best for Canada and Canadians. Why does the NDP always choose the big unions? What about the little unions which exist in my community and the communities of all the other Hon. Members? Why just the big unions with the special arrangements for severance pay and special arrangements for paid vacations? Does the really rich union movement run the NDP or does the NDP run the unions? All we can really tell is that the money comes from those rich unions to the NDP and the speeches of members of the NDP are the same as the union leaders, the same words, the same ideas, the same evidence time after time.

To vote NDP is a dream. Some people better start to look before they make a mistake. They had better start to look at who they are voting for and what they are voting for. Sometimes one can wake up in the morning and say last night I made a mistake, and that could be the voters if they were to sort of stay asleep and simply, because they do not know anything about the NDP, perhaps vote for that Party just to get a change. I will tell you, it would be a change, Mr. Speaker. Half the people with jobs today would not have them tomorrow. That would be a change. They would not like that change, I suggest. Who would be naming the people? What set of principles would we have for the selection of people who were to get the jobs? Would an NDP Government take over all the means of production and therefore control all the jobs? Would it be its friends with the best jobs?

I find it a bit alarming at the committee studying intellectual property protection. A Deputy Minister for Consumer and Corporate Affairs for the Province of Manitoba appeared before the committee the other night. He was going to tell us what was wrong with the legislation of the Parliament of Canada in the protection of intellectual property. One of the members of the committee asked, "I listened to your words. Are you sort of active in politics? Are you a politician or are you a civil servant drawing a pay cheque from the taxpayers of your province"? I am informed that with a great deal of pride, this so-called civil servant, in public testimony before a parliamentary committee said, "I am a socialist and proud of it". That is the crew which does not have a problem with conflict of interest. There is no conflict because those who are elected own all the money and can give it to whomever they please. If that is the view of the world, how can there be a conflict? The definition of a Conservative conflict would be a competition. That is a conflict. There would be three, four, five or six groups bidding and the best bid would get it. The other five would have been in a conflict that they lost—one was in a conflict and won. If one draws a political ideology, a way of thinking, which gives unit control over people's lives and the means of productions and on and on and on, then there cannot be a conflict because there can never be a contest. In that case there is never a winner, just a whole lot of losers.

As I said earlier, the country was in trouble when those of us who are still here came back after 1979. The NDP and the Liberals kicked out a Budget that would have gotten us out of trouble, and got us into four more years of trouble. We have had two-and-one-half years of less trouble since coming to power. We will have another couple of years of increasingly less trouble and more good news.

Mr. Keeper: And then good-bye!

Mr. Hawkes: We will then go to the people of the country and say, take a good look at the speeches that have been made in the House over the last four years. In those speeches you have been told not to worry about the deficit. Every time a member of the Opposition makes a speech in the House he or she tells you that we must spend more and cut taxes. You are told that taxes should not be increased on anything. Is there a Canadian, a single Canadian six years of age or older anywhere in the country who does not understand that when one borrows money one pays it back with interest? If one borrows enough money then every penny one has goes to pay the interest. If it goes to pay the interest then one cannot buy a chocolate bar, a popsicle or a package of potato chips because one has nothing left with which to pay.

When I arrived in the House in 1979, some 83 cents out of every tax dollar went to programs, programs which would help people. We had 17 cents with which to pay interest. By the time we took office in September of 1984 we had but 64 cents of every dollar to spend on new programs and 36 cents with which to pay interest. We had 83 cents in 1979. We went down to 64 cents, and the figure is dropping like a rock. Before too long it would have been 50, then 40, then 30, and then 20. And then what? There would be no more money for pensions. There would be no more money for policing or for national defence. There would be no money for science and research. There would be no money for health care or education. There would be no money for anything.

That was the path that we were on, led by Tweedledee and Tweedledum, the doom and gloom twins of the Liberal and NDP partnership. That is what that was all about. We see it every day during Question Period. We hear it every day in their speeches.

Those members of my Party who are a little concerned about the polls need but one simple strategy. It is this. We should arrange a 40-minute speech by the Leader of the New Democratic Party and the Leader of the Liberal Party of Canada every day in the House of Commons so that Canadians can really get to see them. In this way Canadians will really get to know them and understand what is on their minds. Our Budget will soon look better and better. We may even have to invent a new law to provide some type of Opposition after the next election because we may have every seat in the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great attention to what I was going to call the speech of the Hon. Member, but perhaps I should not call it that. Needless to say some of his statements were not totally, 100 per cent, accurate. I could describe them otherwise, but Your Honour would probably not allow me to do so.

I wish to ask the Hon. Member a question, he who has just spoken of so many things, particularly of the need to increase revenues for the Government. He said that in his view this would give the Government more to give out in terms of programs and so on. Does he feel that the ability of the Government to deliver on these programs is increased by giving out a $500,000 lifetime capital gains tax exemption to be used on such things as selling off one's horse in Kentucky or one's condominium in the Cayman Islands or other such investments? Perhaps I should wait until the young Minister, or is it the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest), finishes briefing him on his answer and then ask him the rest of my question. As much as I hate to interrupt the Hon. Member's tête-à-tête, which he is having with the Youth Minister, could he reply to my question?

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I wish my university professors had treated me so easily with their questions. It would have made school a lot more fun and a lot less anguish.

I think there is a basic human characteristic, that most of us like rewards. We like praise. We like achievement. We are born that way. It can be seen in an infant as it can be seen in an adult. It is the willingness to make an investment, to put one's money on the line, to risk winning and losing, to risk gaining that reward or to risk not gaining it that lies at the heart of job creation. In November of 1984 we said yes to the capital gains tax exemption. We believe that it will create more jobs. We believe that reward mechanisms are powerful. It did create jobs. The Liberals and the New Democrats said that it would not create jobs. They took it away and the jobs went with it. We put it back in place and the jobs came back. We will keep it in place since it creates jobs.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, it is amazing to listen to the normally careful and measured tones of the chairperson of a committee that has done quite interesting and useful work with respect to refugees suddenly come out with this bizarre diatribe which bears no relationship to the facts at all. Of course there are some good things in the Budget. There is the elimination of the stupid mistakes of the past, such as the tariff on books and Christmas trees which even Conservatives had to fight against.

I wish to ask the Hon. Member three questions. If this country is in such great shape, and if Alberta is in such great shape, then why is it that according to the latest statistics from Statistics Canada there are unemployment rates in different regions of Alberta well over 12 per cent? At the moment the seasonally adjusted unemployment rate in Alberta is 12.8 per cent. We are not talking about this being the result of the impact of Alberta's winter or anything like that. It is 12.8 per cent in different parts of Alberta. Why is that the case if Alberta is in such great shape?

Second, why should it be that the country's growth rates in every single year since the Conservatives took power have declined? Why should that be the case if the country is in such great shape? In 1984 the rates were 5.5 per cent. Each year since the Government has been in power they have gone down and they are projected for next year to be only 2.8 per cent. Why should that be the case?

Finally, I ask if the country is in such superb shape, and if the Government knows how to get along with the business community, and if it knows how to put our house in shape, why is it that the investment rates in the country—not for houses, not for co-operatives—but the investment rates for private business have been decreasing? They are not lower than they have been, but they are actually physically decreasing. According to the Budget Papers they decreased this fiscal year by 1.2 per cent. So much for the great success of Conservative economics. It is no wonder that the Member had a tough time in his university courses. In view of that, I wish he would be a little more careful and in the future stick to the subject of refugees and immigration.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I could not help thinking that Alberta receives 8 per cent of the job creation funds today. Under the previous Liberal-NDP alliance they received less than 1 per cent. That was in the middle of the recession. By the time that came about in September, 1984, when the Government was finally chucked out, the unemployment rate in Alberta was 12.1 per cent. Lately it has gone back. Last month it was at 10.8 per cent. It started at 12.1 and went back to 10.8. Is this an economic catastrophe for my province that our unemployment rate is 1.3 per cent lower?

Mr. Langdon: It hurts a lot of people.

Mr. Hawkes: Is it an economic catastrophe for the nation that unemployment today—

Ms. Mitchell: Why don't you ask your constituents that?

Mr. Hawkes: —unemployment today has been reduced 20 per cent?

Mr. Langdon: It is three points higher than the United States.

Ms. Mitchell: Not across the country it has not. It is 27 per cent in Vancouver.

Mr. Hawkes: It has decreased 20 per cent in two and a half years. Is that an economic catastrophe? Growth can be measured by aggregating dollars. If it is full of inflationary dollars at 15 per cent, and if there is 15 per cent growth, then we stand still and do not go anywhere. It is real growth that we are after. We wish real reduction of expenditure, and we have that. Taxpayers do not donate money to the federal Government. The Government has the legal power to rob them, and to steal the money out of their pockets. That is what a democracy is all about. That should not be entered into lightly, and that money should not be wasted. It should be targeted and well used. That is the responsibility that we accept when we come here.

It is difficult to sit in this Chamber and listen to the two opposition Parties, member after member say, spend, spend, spend. Create debt, create debt, create debt. Pay interest, pay interest, pay interest. Canadians do not have jobs, they do not work hard and create money for themselves to give it to Government to pay interest. There is $23,000 of federal debt owed for every household in this country. That is the legacy that we will correct. Give us two or three more Budgets and it will be going back the other way.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. On debate, the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson).

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, what the Government brought down this week was not a Budget. Canadians deserve better than what they got. It was a thin, insubstantial package of vacuous rhetoric, fancy bookkeeping, and mean-minded tax increases. There was no commitment, no initiative, no creativity, and no vision. Instead of calling it a Budget, the Minister might have issued a press release and tabled a Ways and Means motion.

We have a right to expect that in a budget we will see what goals the Government has set, what measures it proposes to reach those goals, and a forecast of how effective the proposed measures will be. This Budget has no projections at all. In this hollow, disappointing exercise that we were put through on February 18, which the Government is calling a budget, we had documents which are long in rhetoric and short in substance. There are no economic forecasts, nothing to indicate the future impact of the few proposals made in this Budget, which should more properly be called an Economic Statement. I question the need for going through this charade at this time. It is a Budget that offers so little to so few, while we are told to wait a little longer, the magic of tax reform is coming.

In November, 1986 the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) promised that tax reform would be the centre-piece of his next Budget. I believe it was his second promise that tax reform was coming soon. A few weeks ago he backed away from that. He postponed the introduction of his proposals for tax reform until some nebulous date in the spring. He offers the rather lame excuse of wanting to give careful consideration to the submissions that he has received on the subject. I think we can translate this as meaning his Cabinet cannot come to any agreement.

Canadians were offered this self-serving mockery of a Budget. Indeed, there is so much self-congratulation in it that one wonders why many of the papers were not published by the Conservative Party instead of by the Government of Canada.

Apart from the petty nickel and dime tax increases in this Budget, taxpayers may have breathed a sigh of relief not to have been the targets of yet another onslaught of new taxes and tax increases such as those imposed in the Government's first two Budgets. In fact, those tax increases, many of them hidden tax increases, are still very much intact and are only beginning to have the insidious cumulative effect for which they were designed.

As they prepare to file their tax returns, taxpayers are realizing how much of their income is being eroded by the individual surtax, the deindexation of tax brackets, family allowances, and personal tax exemptions. These changes have created built-in tax increases and will result in higher taxes year after year, quietly and automatically long after the initial changes were made. That is why I call these escalator taxes. It raises the question, as the Minister keeps promising tax reform, and promises lower personal income taxes after reform, lower than what? How far up will he take us on his escalator before he introduces reform? Will reform bring us back to where he started, or to some midway point?

Middle and low-income Canadians paid more tax in 1986 than in 1985 and will pay yet more in 1987. A married couple with one wage earner and two children paid $630 more in taxes in 1986. In 1987 the same family will pay $930 more than before these measures were introduced. Elderly couples with a joint income of only $15,000 a year paid $45 more in 1986 and will pay $130 more in 1987.

On the other hand, the family with two children and one wage earner earning $100,000 a year will have its tax burden lightened by nearly $500 in 1987. We must remember that a family at this income level is also in a position to take advantage of measures which low-income families cannot, such as RRSPs for tax deferral, and might also be able to avoid some tax by using the half a million dollar life-time capital gains exemption. This is a Government that talks about fairness yet its tax measures are increasing the gap between the haves and the have-nots.

Sales and excise taxes were raised dramatically in the first two years of the Government's mandate. These taxes are paid by everyone, regardless of ability to pay. Sales taxes were raised by 3 percentage points and the sales tax base was considerably broadened. Excise taxes on gasoline have now been increased by 4 cents a litre since the Government came to power. Our transportation companies complain that they are being put at a competitive disadvantage with American companies. Our tourist industry complains, but apparently the Government is unconcerned about the loss of Canadian jobs as a result of the tax measures.

Billions of dollars in tax revenue each year have been added to the Government treasury. Personal taxes are up $14 billion since the Conservatives came to power, $5.5 billion in this year alone. Sales and excise taxes are up $8.7 billion since the present Government took over, $2.2 billion of that in this year alone. Those figures are from the Budget Papers, the Government's own figures. These increases are targeted to individuals and families. More than 90 per cent of this additional tax burden is being carried by individuals as against a very small amount by corporations. Of the individuals bearing the brunt of this tax load, most are people of modest means. One could also add that the surtaxes of 5 per cent and 10 per cent on high income earners were temporary surtaxes which ended at the end of December last. But the 3 per cent surtax affecting everyone is still in effect with no end in sight. With all these new taxes and tax increases in place, eating away at the disposable income of the Canadian taxpayer, bringing in billions of dollars to the federal Treasury each year, one must ask why the deficit is still over $30 billion and why the Finance Minister had to resort to gimmickry and fancy bookkeeping to make the numbers look better than they really are.

We all remember that at the time of the 1986 Budget there was a lot of hype about a magic number, a lot of pressure on the Government from its business friends to come up with a deficit projection under the $30 billion mark, which the Finance Minister did. He projected a figure of $29.5 billion, only to reverse himself six months later and set a target of $32 billion. Now we are told that, in spite of all the belt-tightening imposed on those who can least afford it, by March, 1988 the Finance Minister expects to have come full circle to meet the goal he set last year. It is no wonder that 60 per cent of Canadians polled recently felt that the Government is doing a poor job of handling the economic situation. The 80 per cent who felt that tax increases would have little or no effect on reducing the deficit are quite correct in their assessment, as it turns out, because the Minister's projection of a $29.3 billion deficit which he has set for March, 1988, depends upon a couple of slick manoeuvres, which are unworthy of this particular Minister of Finance.

The Minister proposes to garner an extra $1.2 billion in fiscal year 1987-88 by requiring major employers to remit Government deductions, such as Canada Pension Plan and Unemployment Insurance, fortnightly rather than monthly as is now the case. The additional payment is a bookkeeping entry of $1.2 billion. Without that he would not have made his projection of $29.3 billion for the deficit, and he would be over his magic figure of $30 billion.

A second measure to help the appearance of next year's deficit figure is the Minister's proposed deferral of $200 million in defence spending. These funds will not be spent next year as scheduled, but in the following year. It is a gimmick. It is the shuffling of figures and paper and it shows, apart from all the other broken promises, that the Conservative Government is failing in the one goal it set for itself, and that is to bring down the deficit.

The deficit has barely been reduced and the public debt is continuing to rise. In the last full year of the previous Liberal Government, the deficit stood at $32.4 billion. Under the Conservatives four years later, in fiscal 1986-87—and let me stress those were four years of economic recovery—the deficit according to the Finance Minister is $32 billion. Despite raising taxes by $6 billion, despite cutting Government programs and services, despite the introduction of user fees, service charges and the like, the deficit has barely been reduced. The public debt is rising dramatically.

Just before the 1984 election the Conservatives expressed great shock and horror at the $180 billion Government debt which they calculated as a $16,500 debt owed by each taxpayer. Today, the figures put forward by the Minister of Finance himself in the Budget Papers show that by the end of the next fiscal year that debt will have grown to $26,700 per taxpayer. That is an increase of 67 per cent in two and a half years. So much for management of the economy.

We have seen how the Tories spend money. Millions of dollars on an inquiry concerning a Minister's alleged conflict of interest.

Mr. Charest: Who asked for that?

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): The Member opposite asks who asked for that inquiry. The Minister himself asked for it. We on this side asked for the matter to be referred to the Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure. We did not ask for millions of dollars to be spent on legal fees for the Minister, his secretary and heaven only knows who else.

Mr. Charest: As was done for previous Liberal Ministers in inquiries.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There will be an opportunity for questions and comments after the Hon. Member has finished her speech. The Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson).

• (1440)

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Planes follow planes when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) travels. He must have a separate plane to carry video equipment. Almost $2 billion has been wasted on failed banks as a result of poor judgment and a Government acting hastily without troubling to get the facts. The litany goes on and on. With this kind of management, with the kind of policy and tax punishment Canadians have received at the hands of the Government, we are certainly in need of tax reform, if only to restore the balance and equity that disappeared as a result of the three Budgets produced by the Government.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), spoke very eloquently yesterday on the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements which are not even mentioned in this Budget. The current arrangements are due for renegotiation at the end of March this year, and the Budget was as silent on that as it was silent on a host of other vitally important issues.

Where does the Government stand on nationhood? My colleague also pointed out that although the national figures for unemployment have improved somewhat, they have become worse in several areas of Canada. The Government is also cutting back on transfers to post-secondary education and health care, so in effect it is transferring the deficit from the federal level to the provinces.

Mr. Lewis: That's a good idea.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): The Hon. Member opposite said that is a good idea. Perhaps that is a statement of the intentions of the Government in the upcoming federal-provincial negotiations. If so, the Government should tell us. The Government is being very silent on its intentions for the provinces.

The list of government critics grows. I have quotes but I will not bother to put them on the record. It is sufficient to say that three provincial premiers, all Conservative, are all unhappy with the present arrangement.

What is the Government doing to make a better future for Canadians? This Budget offers no answers and proposes no solutions. It is a non-Budget. It helps no one. It merely increases taxes a little. At the height of the brutal world recession in 1982 Canada's unemployment rate was 11 per cent. In January 1987, after four years of economic recovery, it is 9.7 per cent. This is totally unacceptable in our circumstances. It is a far cry from pre-recession unemployment levels of 7.5 per cent with which none of us were completely satisfied. Yet this Budget offers no help, no hope. The Government is content to pass the buck to market forces.

The number of Canadians falling below the poverty line is increasing year by year. Almost four million Canadians are now living below the poverty line. The Government offers no help for them, but instead turns the screws a little by imposing a few more nickel and dime measures to wring a few more tax dollars from our poorest citizens.

If one were to look at this year's income tax form, one would see that those applying for tax credits are now instructed to report their estimated incomes from sources such as welfare and workers' compensation. This is not a new requirement, just a little fine tuning aimed directly at the poor to ensure that the Government can keep a tighter hold on and better control of its tax credits. The Government is making sure the poor do not receive anything to which they are not entitled, but we are not seeing similar vigilance directed at wealthy Canadians.

The Government also continues to make its major announcements outside of the Budget. We learned through an announcement made by the Minister responsible for youth that there will be much less money for summer jobs this year. Money for post-secondary education is being cut and the money to help young people get jobs is being cut. The screws are being turned on student loans. Government policies are making it difficult for young people to get an education or to get a job. What has happened to the Canadian concern with equality of opportunity? How can one have equality of opportunity without having access to higher education? Is higher education to be the preserve of those with wealthy parents? Is that the kind of country we are to anticipate?

Speaking of the young, we see nothing in this Budget for child care. In fact, the most disturbing omission in this so-called Budget is its lack of leadership. The Government seems to have abdicated completely and to have put the future of Canada into the hands of the so-called market forces rather than leading, governing and making decisions as it was elected to do. Canadians deserve better.

Mr. Charest: Mr. Speaker, first I would like to make one small, unpretentious, uneditorialized comment. I would like to go through the unemployment figures of September 1984 and compare them with those of today. That has been a matter of concern, brought up not only by the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) but also by her colleague, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau).

When we came into power in September 1984 the unemployment rate in Newfoundland was 23.8 per cent. It is now 19.2 per cent. In New Brunswick it was 16.2 per cent in September 1984 under the Liberal administration. Under our administration, it is down to 13.9 per cent. In Quebec, under a Liberal administration, it was 12.9 per cent in September 1984. Under our administration it is down to 10.8 per cent. Under a Liberal administration the level of unemployment in Ontario was 9.4 per cent, and under a Progressive Conservative administration it is down to 6.6 per cent. Under a Liberal administration the unemployment rate in Manitoba was 9 per cent. Under our administration it is down at this time to 7.9 per cent. Under a Liberal administration the unemployment rate in Saskatchewan was 8.7 per cent. Under a Progressive Conservative administration it has gone down to 7.3 per cent. In Alberta under a Liberal Government the unemployment rate in September 1984 was 12.1 per cent, but under a Progressive Conservative Government it went down to 10.8 per cent. In British Columbia, in September 1984, under a Liberal administration the unemployment rate was 15.1 per cent, and under this Government it has gone down to 13.6 per cent at this time. In Canada generally, under a Liberal administration in September 1984, the unemployment rate was 11.7 per cent. It has gone down under this Government to 9.7 per cent.

Does that mean that this Government is satisfied, contrary to the attitude developed under the previous administration? Of course not—never. Even with those numbers we are not satisfied. We think they are too high and that is why the projection for next year, according to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), is for a lower unemployment rate. Is it any surprise to the people of Canada? I suppose not. It may be a surprise for the Hon. Member for Trinity, for the Liberals and for the NDP because they are disappointed.

I would like to say to the Hon. Member for Trinity that I am very, very disappointed in the speech she made today. I personally felt a little hurt. I have heard the Hon. Member for Trinity speak on numerous occasions. She is obviously a very credible Member of the House, but today she was reading someone else's speech. I do not understand. I am sure the Hon. Member will want to take this opportunity to rise in her place and try to redeem herself a little, just a bit. In that way, before we leave this House today, we will have a little hope in our hearts that she is not completely lost among the group who jump on tables, yell things, and who are just very depressing over all.

The Hon. Member commented about inquiries and the fact that this Government paid some legal fees. I hope she will admit, in the spirit of justice and equity, and notwithstanding the stories, that her Government also did that when it ordered inquiries. Her Government paid fees for Liberal Ministers. I think she will admit that.

The other thing she could do to redeem herself a little and try and preserve some credibility, as well as helping us maintain the hope that she will remain a very respectable Member in our hearts, is to acknowledge that unemployment has gone down and that Canada generally is better off today under this Government than it was under a Liberal Government.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the difference between the Minister's figures and mine is that the Minister makes a comparison between figures from September 1984 and today. I am making the comparison between 1982, at the depth of the recession, and today when we are four years into recovery. Unfortunately the Government has frittered away much of the advantage it had because it came in at a point when recovery was under way. I believe the figures I gave are correct. In Prince Edward Island in 1982, at the depth of a particularly cruel world-wide recession, unemployment was 12.9 per cent. It is now 14.6 per cent. In Nova Scotia the 1982 figure was 13.2 per cent and today, four years into the recovery, it is 14.3 per cent. In Alberta it was 7.7 per cent in 1982 and it is 10.8 per cent today. In British Columbia it was 12.1 per cent in 1982 and 13.6 per cent today. The figures stand. After four years of recovery the result is poor.

The Minister talked about other Governments paying legal fees for Ministers. That may very well be so, but I know of no case in the 12 years I have been in this House where a Minister accused of a conflict of interest asked for and got a judicial inquiry paid by the Crown, rather than taking his chances with the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure. There may have been such a case but I do not remember it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have a number of questioners. I will recognize the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis), the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) and then the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon). I believe that will be just about it.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, my question will be very brief. It is my understanding that the Province of Ontario under a Liberal Government paid the legal fees of the Hon. Elinor Caplan, Treasurer of Ontario, when there was a conflict of interest inquiry concerning her. Would she care to compare the two situations?

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): I do not know what the arrangements were but, naturally, if the Parliamentary Secretary tells me that is the case I accept his word.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I have to congratulate the Hon. Member for the very fine speech she delivered. I do not know if she is going to be able to answer my questions, but perhaps she could inform the House and the Canadian people whether she is investigating the matter.

Under this Budget the Government of Canada is now going to tax potato chips. I think everyone is wondering whether there are any exemptions. Are barbeque, salt and vinegar or sour cream chips exempt? The Government is also going to tax corn and cheese based puffs. Does the Hon. Member know if that will include Cheezies? There is quite a difference between the puffs and the Cheezies, you see. The Government is also going to tax brittle pretzels under this Budget. What about the soggy ones? It is going to tax salted nuts for the first time. What about unsalted nuts? It is going to tax popcorn. Well, what about corn that is not popped? It says granola bars and frozen snacks packaged in single servings are going to be taxed. To my knowledge granola bars come in a large container in grocery stores, not by the single serving. The same thing applies to frozen snacks in grocery stores. The Budget says that popsicles and ice-cream bars are going to be taxed as well. Does that include polar bars and fudgesicles?

Mr. Holtmann: That is a difficult question.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Yes, it is a difficult question. However, I would just say to the Hon. Member that the Budget Papers show the Government is expecting to reap $60 million from this kiddy tax.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I want to move from the subject of popcorn and ask a serious question, if I could. The Hon. Member has suggested in her critique, and I agree with her, that the Conservative Government has dealt with the question of the deficit in this Budget in a manipulative way. Would she have preferred an increase in the deficit resulting from this Budget in order to achieve some of the economic and social goals which she and other members of her Party have talked about? Or, would she have, as seems to be the implication, accelerated the decrease in the deficit given the great deal of concern with which she addressed it in her speech.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, although I am quite prepared to do so, my comments did not deal with whether the deficit could or should be further reduced. My comments were directed to the fact that the issue was not clear. The only promise the Government made concerning management of the economy was to get the deficit below $30 billion. That will happen in March, 1988, through the devices I spoke of, those being the $1.2 billion which is derived from changing the timeframe in which companies can remit the compulsory payroll deductions, and by deferring certain other expenditures. My criticisms were directed at the fact that we had been told the deficit would be reduced. This was the only promise they made. In fact, the deficit has not been reduced in a straightforward way.

As for the rest, the policy of the Liberal Party for many years now has been to reduce the deficit incrementally as we came out of the recession, insofar as that could be done without cutting programs, choking off recovery or hurting people.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There will be two more questioners, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary and the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney). I hope they will be very succinct.

[Translation]

Mr. Della Noce: Mr. Speaker, I shall be brief, because my colleague the Hon. Member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Charest) has presented a very good summary. There are, however, a couple of points which I should like to make. My hon. colleague from Trinity (Miss Nicholson) was visibly delighted to be able to report that the price of gasoline had increased by 4 cents a gallon. She was right, but she overlooked the fact that it was over a three year period. Under the Liberals, with Mr. Lalonde's energy policy, there were increases every four months.

She forgot also to mention that there was a tax decrease when we got rid of the Canadian ownership charge of nearly one. That is when she really got me, for I had investigated the situation in 1986. When the price of gas went down 12 to 13 cents because of the world price following the removal of the National Energy Program, at a time when Mr. Lalonde expected a price of $85 for a barrel of oil which is now at $24 a barrel. It is a dream come true where I cannot follow her . . . I hope she didn't try to deliberately mislead the House, for what she said is very serious. She said that some transportation companies are hurting and will have to lay-off people. Where are those transportation companies which are increasing the price of their services because the higher cost of gasoline has increased? Now that it is 12 cents lower, none of them are charging less for their services. The buses which people—

[English]

Every time there was a little increase in gasoline, the tickets were printed during the night and the next day people had to pay the increase. This year alone there has been a 12-cent a litre decrease, which is equal to 65 cents a gallon. I have not noticed any decreases in bus fares. My child asked for $25 for his bus pass this month for which I usually pay $20. How can you say that these companies are in trouble? Where do we see the results of the 12-cent decrease they received? What the Hon. Member said is false.

Miss Nicholson: The figure which I gave for the increase in the excise tax on gasoline is accurate. My statement that transportation companies complained last year that the first increase would put them at a competitive disadvantage with American companies is also true. The letters and briefs which I received from transportation companies were sent to many Members of Parliament. I believe the member opposite must have seen them as well.

Mr. Daubney: Mr. Speaker, I have a great deal of respect for the Hon. Member and, therefore, like the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest), was somewhat disappointed in her remarks. She spoke of poor Canadians and suggested that we were essentially putting the screws to them. That is not the case at all. She will know that in the tax reform which has taken place thus far—and there is more to come—hundreds of thousands of low income Canadians have effectively been removed from the tax rolls.

I would like to ask the Member about the improvements to the Canada Pension Plan which the Government brought in effective January 1 of this year, particularly those with regard to disabled Canadians. We increased the benefits payable under that plan by $150 a month to benefit over 150,000 disabled Canadians. Yet, the Liberal provincial Government in Ontario, the Liberal provincial Government in Prince Edward Island, the Liberal provincial Government in Quebec and the NDP Government in Manitoba deducted that $150 from the income of those disabled Canadians in receipt of social assistance programs. I would like the Hon. Member to comment on that from her point of view of fairness and concern for low-income Canadians.

Miss Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member spoke about previous tax reforms which have relieved low income people of the need to pay taxes. I have not seen that. My understanding is that the Government is in fact reaching down lower and taking taxes from people who have not been required to pay them before. If my understanding is wrong, of course I am subject to correction.

The second matter which the Hon. Member raised is a long-standing problem. When the Government of Canada makes an improvement in one of its programs it requires careful negotiations to ensure that the provinces will respect or match it. If the Government failed to do its homework with the provinces, if it failed to give them advance notice to ensure that people would not lose at the provincial end what they were gaining at the federal end, that is too bad. I hope that will be corrected.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time for questions and comments has expired.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to take a few moments to say a few words to the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) who spoke before. In a question I put to her, I asked her to be a little more specific, because that would leave us with some glimmer of hope as to the attitude of the Opposition in the months to come. In answering my question the way she did, however partisan that may have been, she managed to leave us with some hope that from now on the Opposition Parties will be a little more reasonable.

[English]

Before I begin to debate specifically the Budget put forth by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), I would like to invite Members of this House and Canadians generally to reflect on the situation which existed when we came into power in September of 1984. We tend to forget that when we came to power in September of 1984, the finances of the country were completely out of control. The spending was out of control. The deficit was out of control. That is why, on September 4, 1984, Canadians from one end of the country to the other decided that they had had enough of that irresponsible administration of the country. Things had gone far enough and it was time to clean house and bring in people who would administer their taxes in a sane manner.

The Budget put forth by the Minister of Finance is the result of two and a half years of very serious administration by the Government. I will give only one example which is worth pointing out. The previous Government actually lost money running a lottery. I will repeat that. I know it is hard to believe and I will repeat it for the record because I am sure those looking at the "blues" will say there was an error. It is true. The previous Government lost money running a lottery. It could not run a bingo, but it was running the country. That is the type of mess we were called upon to repair. What is the situation two-and-a-half years later?

Let us begin from the time when we took over. In November, 1984, the Minister of Finance came into the House and told Canadians exactly how it would be done.

At the time, on November 8, 1984, I believe it was my colleague, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister responsible for Multiculturalism, the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce), who was there, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) informed Canadians that we were going to operate on the basis of four fundamental principles. Perhaps we could review those principles, Mr. Speaker.

Our first principle was to bring the increase in the national debt below the rate of our economic growth by 1990. It sounds simple. Well, Mr. Speaker, in 1987-88, the rate of increase of our national debt will be down to 11 per cent. This is less than it was, because I am sure that at this very moment you are thinking: Good heavens, 11 per cent is a lot! Well, just to give you an inkling of how disastrous the situation was in November 1984, it is less than half the rate posted when we took office, Mr. Speaker. I think it was around 24 per cent. Hard to believe, but a national debt growth rate of 24 per cent. Obviously the rate is still too high.

But to be frank, by any standards, anybody, any reasonable citizen who is listening to us now from whatever part of the country will tell you that this is significant progress. Canadians will admit that. We do not expect Members opposite to admit it, but Canadians will.

The second principle was to put a stop to the ever rising federal deficit and set it firmly on an ascending trajectory. You see, Mr. Speaker, in fact we have very little pretension. We did not want to make Canadians believe that we would do miracles or come up with easy answers. Very simple yet quite essential things.

When we took over the deficit had gone over the $38 billion mark and was still rising, but during our first year in office we managed to bring it down to $34.4 billion.

Last September the Minister of Finance said that the expected deficit for this year would be $32 billion and sure enough—as you know this is an uncommon occurrence at the federal level—we have reached our objective and, between now and the end of next year, 1987-88, the Government will have lowered the deficit to less than $30 billion, down to about $29.3 billion.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, and this is a major difference between the previous Government and this one, after fifteen years of an increasing deficit, our Government has been able, not only to arrest that trend, but also to reduce the deficit for three years in a row, and this for the first time—listen to this—and I should perhaps turn myself this way because this is hard to believe, for the first time in 30 years. However, according to what we have heard from the other side, we are close to the end of the world. That is not quite what the facts indicate.

The point is, Mr. Speaker, that we know where we are going. Our third objective was to reduce substantially each year the financial requirements and borrowings of the state. In September 1984, public requirements, excluding exchange requirements, amounted to $29.8 billion. We are now estimating financial requirements for the coming fiscal year at $21.3 billion, or 28.5 per cent less, and all this within three years.

Mr. Speaker, this means that the state will pay less interest on the money it needs to finance its activities, and the state includes everyone, in other words, all ordinary Canadians who go to work every morning and who see part of their pay cheque taken away from them every Thursday. It means that these people will have less to pay.

Mr. Speaker, our fourth and last objective was to accomplish the major part of our financial improvements through expenditure restrictions and a disciplined management of taxpayers' money. You will say that this is obvious and that it was needless to include such an objective in the management principles of our Government. However, Mr. Speaker, we had reached a point when this had to be said because Canadians were no longer used to hearing such things or at least to seeing this principle applied by their Government.

When we came to power, public expenditures were increasing by nearly 14 per cent a year since the early eighties. What exactly is different under our Government? Public expenditures have increased by an average of 2.8 per cent a year, which is lower than the rate of inflation. In other words, Mr. Speaker, program expenditures have decreased in real terms. The reduction of the deficit in relation to the economy represents over 60 per cent of the reduction in our own expenditures.

That is not all, Mr. Speaker. All this had to be accomplished in a difficult context. Our country is made up of regions and there was pressure from everywhere to satisfy the various groups and Canadians at all levels of society who are facing a number of problems. If we look at the general situation, what is the conclusion after two and a half years? What do we find? That is the most important consideration for us today.

[English]

I will not even try to enter into a partisan debate with members of the New Democratic Party or Liberal Party. I will simply try to give the facts and let them speak for themselves, because if there is one thing Canadians understand, it is the cold hard facts in this case. Since September, 1984, when we took control of matters, the real growth of Canada's economy has averaged some 3.5 per cent a year. We were only second to Japan in the industrialized world. Consumer confidence has risen to a very high level in Canada.

The improving Canadian economy has created 675,000 jobs. In comparison to the rest of the world, employment growth in Canada has been stronger than in any other major industrialized country. That has been our performance.

One may think that we cannot do much better than that and we might as well go home. If you were a judge, Mr. Speaker, and this was a court, you would say "case closed", because this is irrefutable evidence of our case.

However, the facts do not stop there. Short-term interest rates are at their lowest levels in nearly a decade. It does not even stop there. Five-year mortgage rates have fallen by more than three per centage points which, in real terms, is equivalent to a reduction in interest costs of $1,360 a year on a $50,000 mortgage. Housing starts are at their highest in eight years. That has been the performance of the Government. What must we do in the future? In that sense we realize that the prospects for the future are probably as good as the ones I have given you today.

[Translation]

In fact, Mr. Speaker, we have clearly made remarkable progress, but if we turn to the future, we realize there is much hope for Canadians. Canada should enjoy 2.8 per cent production growth in real terms, making this the second longest post-war economic recovery. Canada should again post the best employment growth of all industrialized nations. The unemployment rate, with some luck and co-operation, should keep on declining to 9 per cent towards year's end. Interest rates should remain stable, consumer confidence should keep on fueling growth, inflation should settle below 4 per cent on average, and international conditions should improve for Canadian exports thanks to the recent decline in interest rates, the foreign exchange market realignment and the firming up of commodity prices.

Mr. Speaker, such on the whole are Canada's future prospects—there is a big difference between a healthy, a genuine administration and a Government that found it difficult to balance the fund when it managed lotteries.

[English]

There has been a lot of talk from Hon. Members opposite on different subjects. The Minister of Finance gave a very unpretentious speech on Wednesday. He pointed to the fact that tax reform is on the way and there is going to be a major change for Canadians. He said that the tax reform would have as its objective to make the system fairer for the ordinary man and woman who pays taxes. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce), who is sitting next to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Nanaimo—Alberni (Mr. Schellenberg), who comes from a great part of British Columbia, says it is about fairness. Of course it is, because that is what governing is all about. That is why we are here, to be fair. Of course, those who sit in the Opposition cry: "Why do you not bring in tax reform right away? Do it now".

Mr. Riis: It was promised three years ago.

Mr. Charest: Perhaps that is the way it used to work under the other administration. If that administration wanted something, it did it right away. However, this Government does things right. When the Minister of Finance projects his deficit for the next year, he is bang on the number.

Mr. Riis: How about last year's projection?

Mr. Charest: I hear mumblings from the New Democratic Party saying that last year's figures were not right. To be fair, I think the Hon. House Leader for the New Democratic Party would acknowledge that I also said that in September the Minister of Finance revised his projections to $32 billion.

Mr. Riis: He will do it again this year, probably.

Mr. Charest: That was because of the situation of the oil industry and the situation in agriculture. I think all ordinary Canadians understand that. If the House Leader cannot, I suppose that is his problem. Let us take another figure.

Mr. Riis: Take unemployment.

Mr. Charest: Let us take the figure for expenditures. That is a good figure to play with because that is what we have in our pocket. That is the figure over which we have direct control.

Mr. Della Noce: Money.

Mr. Charest: The money we are going to spend. How much did we say we would spend? Was it $89.4 billion? How much did we spend? It was bang on that figure.

Mr. Riis: Tell the foreign banks how much you spent on them.

Mr. Charest: I know the member of the New Democratic Party has problems with that because it is very unusual. It is foreign to his own experience in this House that the Minister of Finance was right. That has never happened before, but it is starting to happen now. When the Minister of Finance rises in his place and says that tax reform is about fairness, it will happen. When members of the Opposition point to regional disparities, I hope they are not insinuating we should have higher interest rates, and that would help the regions.

Mr. Riis: You are absolutely right. I support you 100 per cent. We would not be saying that.

Mr. Charest: I hope the Opposition is not implying that, because I am sure it knows that this is not the case. When Hon. Members opposite say there is no interest in the disadvantaged, I presume it is because they have forgotten about the employment initiatives for social assistance recipients. They must have forgotten about the program for older worker adjustment. Did they forget about the refundable sales tax credit? Four million low income families and individuals are now receiving refundable sales tax credits of up to $50 per adult and $25 per child. Have they forgotten the prepayment of child tax credit? That must be the one they forgot. One million low income individuals in November of 1986 received $454 per child. I have it, they must have forgotten the increase in child tax credit. Over three years the child tax credit has increased by 36.5 per cent, or $140 per child, from $384 in 1985 to $524 in 1987. Perhaps that is not the one they forgot. It must have been the extension of spouses' allowance for 169,000 widows aged 60 to 64 years who are in need. They are eligible to receive the spouses' allowance in 1987-88. Maybe those Hon. Members forgot the extension of tax deduction for disability for 185,000 people. Perhaps the House Leader for the NDP can tell us whether it is the increase in value of tax deduction for disability that he forgot. Or was it the tax rebate discounting Act amendments? Perhaps it was the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) who forgot the veterans' benefits increase. That is, I suppose, because they are on the other side of the House. Members of the Opposition tell us we are not fair with respect to corporations and in the taxing of individuals. We keep telling them that that is what the tax reform is all about, that is where it is going to happen.

Mr. Riis: It is one-sided, though, is it not? It is a one-sided tax reform.

Mr. Charest: The Opposition says we have not done anything. Why wait until later? I guess it is because it forgot the action we took on the limited partnership at risk rules to prevent taxpayers from claiming tax benefits disproportionate to the amount put at risk. It must be that. Or it may be the phase-out of the 7 per cent and 10 per cent investment tax credits which primarily affects corporations. Perhaps we did not tell Hon. Members opposite about that often enough. Perhaps it is the elimination of the 3 per cent inventory allowance that the Opposition forgot. Perhaps it is the reduction of the dividend tax credit rate it forgot. Perhaps it is the deductibility of accrued but unpaid bonuses being restricted. That is what they forgot.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent for the Hon. Minister to carry on?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry, the Hon. Minister's time has expired. Questions or comments?

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister who represents youth. I asked the previous speaker somewhat the same question, but I would like to hear an answer from a member of the Cabinet. Perhaps he has not examined the Budget as well as he should have. I would really like to know why there was a tax put on potato chips and whether the tax on corn and cheese based puffs means that a tax is also put on Cheezies. Does the brittle pretzels tax apply to pretzels which are not brittle, the large packages of pretzels which are not brittle? There is the salted nuts tax. What about the unsalted nuts? There is the popped corn tax. What about the popcorn? Does it apply to popcorn? There is the tax on granola bars and frozen snacks packaged in single servings. What about those that are not packaged in single servings?

Could one not get away with this great tax evasion if one bought four or five in a box?

• (1530)

Finally, can the Minister explain whether or not, when popsicles and ice-cream bars are referred to, fudgesicles are also covered? Young people want to know the answers to these questions. These are new taxes imposed by the Government. There are a great many young people around who want to know the answers. Perhaps to some people these are the most important items in the Budget. Will the Minister tell us why the Government is picking on those items which we see young people going into stores to buy? Perhaps they are spending the only bit of money they have, their recess money, which will now go to pay federal tax for the first time on some of these items. Why is the Government of Canada picking on these items?

Mr. Riis: Make the kids pay.

Mr. Baker: The kids will pay for the great national debt that the Conservatives are talking about.

Mr. Riis: Let them eat unsalted nuts.

Mr. Charest: Mr. Speaker, I can see why my colleague from the Liberal Party objects to the Government taxing nuts. In the financial situation in which the Liberals find themselves it means that a lot fewer people will give them money. People who usually fund their Party will have less money in their pockets. That gives one an idea of where the Party stands, which was the last point I covered in my speech. Where does the opposition Party stand? That is the biggest unanswered question of the last two-and-a-half years.

I remember watching the Liberal Leader of the day on television. He was reconfirmed at at least five different conventions. When the Liberals get together they have to reconfirm him each time. At the time he was saying: "We will reduce the deficit in half in seven years". Since then we wonder where they stand. Every time they have a convention they come up with another policy on trade.

I am glad the Hon. Member brought up the recess aspect. The recess is over for the Liberal Party of Canada. It is time the Liberals started to stand up for something. The youth policy of the Liberal Party, as stated once by the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) who sits in front of the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker), was to reduce the entry age of the Senate because it was discriminatory toward young people. He got up in the House and said that. That was the Liberals' youth policy. It is on record. It is in the debates. Now the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate hits on the subject of food. There may be a connection between the Senate and food and youth. Some people will see a connection. We can take it from now that the youth policy of the Liberal Party of Canada is not to tax candy for young people since that does not help them. Maybe my colleague who sits behind me is right. He said spontaneously, to paraphrase Marie Antoinette: "Let them eat fruit".

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that I was not here to hear the entire speech of the Hon. Minister. I have a serious question which I would like to ask of him if he could concentrate on it for a moment, please.

In Vancouver East the unemployment rate for young people is 15 per cent. For young men it is 17.5 per cent. That is the official unemployment rate. It is not the unofficial rate, which means there are many others whose names are not in the computers who are also unemployed and who would like to be working and have some sort of future. I do not see anything in the Budget at all that will help these young men and women. As the Minister of State for Youth and as an advocate for these young people I want to ask him what he will do about this situation. What does he think should have been done about it in this Budget?

Mr. Charest: Mr. Speaker, that is a good question. It is a question which gives me the opportunity to point to the real, fundamental bottom line—

Ms. Mitchell: I am going to mail out your reply, so be careful.

Mr. Charest: I have had the opportunity of travelling around the country and talking to people in all walks of life who are concerned about the problem of youth unemployment and youth generally. I have told them that it is a little tough to put out any type of policy, whether it be for youth, older people or middle-class people, when interest rates are running at 18 per cent.

Mr. Riis: They're not 18 per cent now.

Ms. Mitchell: So you'll just write them off, will you?

Mr. Charest: There is a basic premise that if one wants to get things working one has to start at the beginning.

Ms. Mitchell: They will be senior citizens by the time you get finished.

Mr. Charest: That is exactly what the Government has done.

Ms. Mitchell: What? It's done nothing.

Mr. Charest: In Vancouver and in other places in Canada we are very sensitive to the fact that youth unemployment is too high.

Ms. Mitchell: What are you doing about it? What will you do about it?

Mr. Charest: It has gone down in the last two years—not enough, and we concede that. It has dropped by about four per centage points across Canada.

The other thing I wish to add is that members of the Opposition should get out of their folkloric way of thinking. These problems have not appeared overnight and they will not leave overnight. Their thinking is that this problem can be dealt with single-handedly by the Government. It will require a joint effort on behalf of the federal, provincial and municipal Governments, and it will require fundamental changes—

Ms. Mitchell: So you're writing young people off.

Mr. Charest: —which we are in the process of engaging in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. On debate with the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I must say at the outset that I was somewhat disappointed when the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest) had virtually nothing to say when the question was put to him with respect to the extremely high levels of youth unemployment in Vancouver, British Columbia, and right across the country. The fact is that when one looks at the Budget one notices that there is not a single mention of what the Government plans to do, or is even thinking of doing, to assist young people who are out of work. I assumed that when the Minister of State for Youth rose in his place to participate in this debate he would have outlined many of the programs he was planning to introduce. Having taken that opportunity one can only assume that he has no plans. We can assume that the Government is prepared to let young people hang out to dry, ignoring the plight which they face. I find that completely unacceptable. Quite frankly, I do not find many things in the Budget which are acceptable. I do not say that there is nothing good in it at all. I will come to the good parts in the last two or three seconds of my presentation.

I wish to comment on what I feel are the very serious shortcomings of the 1987 Budget. There is an old adage that says that if one cannot stand the heat then one must get out of the kitchen. I guess that is what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) felt when, the day after the Budget, he jumped into a plane and headed for West Palm Beach. He is getting out of the country. Just like the time when the heat came on with all the scandals and he slipped away out of the country.

He is not here during what has to be a critical debate. When he promised to stand in the House and make a statement on South Africa he has not made one. He has not made a statement on South Africa yet. I believe that he will not make a statement on South Africa. I ask Hon. Members to wait and see. Again, we have had promises and promises but when the heat comes on, out he goes out of the country.

I ask Hon. Members to cast their minds back to when the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) was negotiating what is probably the most important agreement that Canada will negotiate in this decade regarding the forest industry. She was holidaying on the beaches of Maui. She could not even be here for the final critical and crucial negotiations. That is the kind of Government we have. When Members of it cannot stand the heat then they get out of the kitchen. Not only do they get out of the kitchen, they get out of the house—they get out of the country. I suspect for a great many Canadians the polls indicate that they would just as soon that the Prime Minister stayed out of the country. I believe 22 per cent is the last official barometer reading with respect to the number of people in Canada who, when the question was put with respect to whether or not they would support the Government, said yes. The other 78 per cent said no. That is a pretty damaging comment when one considers that it comes just two-and-a-half years after the public gave the Government the largest mandate ever given a Government in Canadian history.

The Prime Minister explained why the people of Canada are feeling as they are. A few days ago on February 11, 1987, the Prime Minister said:

> These are difficult moments, obviously. We will be judged by the manner in which we responded.

That is exactly what is going on. The people of Canada are judging this Government on the way it is responding to some very critical economic problems that are facing Canada.

When I listened to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) delivering his Budget Speech, I was left deadened by the impact. There was nothing in it. As some people said, it was a "do nothing" Budget. We were expecting some leadership, direction and initiative by the Government during difficult economic times, and there is none of this in the Budget. The Minister of Finance could have issued a short press release, put it in the mail, and announced the two or three tax increases that will affect every Canadian, and that would be it.

However, in looking at the Budget, an appropriate term to call it would be a "fudge-it" Budget. There is a great deal of fudging going on today. For example, the Government states that unemployment is coming down. The Minister of Finance has said dozens of times in the last few hours that unemployment decreased last year. Technically that is true, because a year ago today the unemployment rate was 9.8 per cent. Now it is now 9.7 per cent. So over 12 months the unemployment rate has decreased one-tenth of 1 per cent. Surely to goodness that is nothing to brag about. As a matter of fact, I would expect the Minister of Finance to be embarrassed for suggesting that they have been successful as a Government and have brought down unemployment. I am certain there is no person in the House who would say that decreasing unemployment one-tenth of 1 per cent over 12 months is appropriate, and is at all acceptable. We are led to believe that unemployment is coming down. Well, it is, but by an infinitesimal amount.

When we listened to the Minister of Finance talk about economic growth, we heard him state that it is on course and on target. What course is it? What target is it that the Government is looking at? When I look at the figures put out by Statistics Canada, I find that the growth rate in 1984 was 5.5 per cent when the Government took over the administration. In 1985, it dropped to 4 per cent. In 1986, it dropped to 3.3 per cent. The Minister of Finance projects that in 1987 it will be 2.8 per cent. In other words, while the Conservative Government has been in power, the growth rate has been dropping year after year, and the Minister of Finance predicts it will drop again this year. He states that they are on target, that the growth rates are what they have been working towards. One assumes that they must be improving, but the facts are that the growth rates are declining year after year.

I could go on in terms of this "fudge-it" Budget. In the last Budget the Minister of Finance predicted that the deficit for last year would be $29.5 billion. In the Budget the other day the Minister of Finance said that it was not $29.5 billion, it was $32 billion. In other words, the Minister of Finance did not come close to what he projected 12 months ago. The assumption in the country is that the deficit is going down year after year. The Minister of Finance's projections were out by $2.5 billion.

If the Government is on course, its programs are on course and its strategy is on course, then it begs the question, on course for whom? Who is benefiting from this course that the Government is on? In looking at who is paying for what, it will be noticed that since the Conservative Government has taken power, corporations have actually paid $2 billion less. In other words, corporation taxes collectively have gone down. The corporate sector has done and is doing extremely well when it comes to taxes. But when you look at people and personal taxes, the situation is dramatically reversed. While corporations have had a $2 billion drop in taxes over the life of this administration, people have paid an extra $22.8 billion in increased personal taxes. That is a serious increase, which averages out to $2,000 for every man, woman and child in Canada. That is incredible. I do not expect that there is a time in Canadian history that over a two-and-a-half-year period the federal Government has managed to drop corporate taxes and increase personal taxes so much. It has been accomplished by the Government.

We heard earlier in today's debate that the slogan now will be, "Make the kids pay". Make the kids pay additional taxes. Widen the tax base to include the snack foods that young people tend to buy, and raise an extra $60 million year after year. On top of that, we have seen the sales tax increase once, twice, three times. When the Conservative Government took over power, the sales tax across Canada was 9 per cent. Today it is 12 per cent. That is an increase of 3 per cent in less than three years. It is not only an increase one, two, three times, but it is also a broadening of the tax base to include all types of things that hitherto had not been federally taxed. As a result of this most recent Budget we now include snack foods that young children tend to use.

In terms of the "fudge-it" Budget the assumption is that there is some equality in the Government's programs. But when you look at the facts as they are applied to our tax system and the taxes that have been levied by the Government, you find that they are extremely discriminatory against people and in favour of corporations. They favour upper income earners and are against low and middle income earners.

When the Prime Minister was speaking in Quebec before the Budget, he mentioned that money for regional economic development will be very thin. I am afraid that he was wrong. Money for regional economic development is non-existent and has been reduced. The question that must be asked is, have the Minister of Finance and the economic Ministers in the Government travelled around Canada? Have they been outside of Metropolitan Toronto?

Mr. Hockin: Yes.

Mr. Riis: Have they been out to northern Alberta?

Mr. Hockin: Yes.

Mr. Riis: Have they been out to British Columbia?

Mr. Hockin: Yes.

Mr. Riis: Have they been to Atlantic Canada, and visited parts of Newfoundland where the unemployment rates are 35 per cent? Have they visited central British Columbia where the unemployment rates are close to 25 per cent? If they have, why did they not do something about it? Why do they accept the human tragedy that is unfolding as a result of the extremely dramatic high levels of unemployment in the regions of Canada?

What I think has to be the most alarming, shocking, astounding figure that I have read in the last number of weeks is regarding the number of real jobs that were created in Canada in 1986. The net number of jobs created in Canada in 1986 was 137,000. To some people 137,000 new jobs is a reasonably impressive record. The critical point is that out of those 137,000 new jobs created in 1986, 132,000 were created in Ontario. In other words, 96 per cent of the new jobs created in this great country were created in one single province. They were not even equally spread out in that province. The lion's share of those jobs occurred in Metropolitan Toronto and the surrounding area. They were by and large tied to the automotive industry which the Government is now failing to support. That is an incredible statistic.

When the Government talks about the jobs that are being created, when it talks about its success at job creation, does it mention to the representatives from the Northwest Territories, western Canada, Atlantic Canada, northern Ontario, and Quebec where those jobs were created? Do they explain to Canadians that virtually all the jobs created last year were created in a very small portion of Canada, mainly in the greater Toronto area? Yet people talk about the initiatives that this Government is taking in regional economic development.

I think it is appropriate to read into the record some very important statistics that point out just how effective government policies have been. We all remember only too vividly the depths of the recession, and in many parts of Canada the depression-like conditions that existed in 1981-82. Then the unemployment rate in Newfoundland was 16.8 per cent. Today it is 19.2 per cent. Things have worsened in Newfoundland. In Prince Edward Island during the depths of the recession the unemployment level was 12.9 per cent. Today in P.E.I. it is 14.6 per cent. In Alberta, part of the world that you know well, Mr. Speaker, the unemployment levels in the depths of the depression and recession were 7.7 per cent, and today they are 10.8 per cent. In British Columbia, during the depths of the recession the unemployment rates were 12.1, and today they are 13.6 per cent. I have mentioned only four provinces. I could mention them all because the situation is virtually duplicated across Canada. In seven provinces today the unemployment levels are higher than they were during the deep recession of 1981-82.

For most Canadians the situation has actually worsened. There are 1,342,000 people who are officially recognized as being unemployed, men, women and young people in search of work. You and I know that this figure could be inflated significantly because these are the official statistics. The number is down by 5,000 from last year. We are very happy that some jobs were created across Canada meaning there were 5,000 fewer unemployed than in January, 1986. But that is only 5,000 out of 1.3 million. At this rate, if we were going to accept it as the approach to fighting unemployment, we would have to wait 270 years before we actually obtained full employment.

The unemployed and under-employed across Canada were certainly not impressed with this Budget. I cannot find a single thing in the Budget that will result in a single job being created anywhere in Canada. I can find a number of areas that will likely result in job loss. When you add more taxes on gasoline, diesel and aviation fuel, on airline travel, on food that people purchase on a weekly basis, on alcohol and tobacco, we have calculated that all this would amount to about $70 a family each year in additional taxes. And that results in job loss. It means that $60 million in the snack food list alone will not be there for circulation in the economy.

We are very concerned that the Minister of Finance did not see it appropriate to even mention the word poverty in his Budget Speech. There are four million people in poverty, which is a tragic figure—

Ms. Mitchell: One in every five children.

Mr. Riis: The Hon. Member for Vancouver indicates that one in every five children lives below the poverty line, not at the poverty line but below it. By our own statistics as a Parliament we find that four million people live below that line. While the Government spends days and days and weeks and weeks talking about banking centres, the food banks continue in the major cities and smaller communities across Canada. Thousands and thousands of men and women in 1987 have to line up to obtain a package of food to take home for their families.

With that situation occurring in Canada, how can the Government stand passively by and raise taxes and take no specific initiative? This is why some of us felt that we were betrayed as Canadians by the lack of action in this Budget. I have not mentioned the gas tax and the impact that this will have on the ability of our tourist sector. I did not mention the fact that the gas tax is discriminatory against the regions of Canada. After all, which regions use aviation, diesel fuel and gasoline more than others? The western, the eastern and the northern regions of Canada do so. The gas tax is a discriminatory tax.

In spite of repeated promises by the Prime Minister to improve child care across Canada and to provide adequate funding for the development of child care, no mention was made of it. I have not had a chance to say much about what I call the abandonment of the family farm and ranch. There were no provisions to ensure that long-term low-interest money was made available to the family farm and ranch across Canada. Again, I did not hear anything about any special western or eastern development fund. I remember hearing from the Liberals about the famous Western Development Corporation that never saw the light of day.

In summary, all the Minister of Finance has promised us, after promising it to us in 1984, 1985, 1986 and now in 1987, is that he will eventually get to tax reform in whatever form that might take. I do not hold my breath when that comes from the Minister of Finance who failed to close off the $500,000 capital gains exemption to all loophole, with the exception of farmers, homeowners and small businesses. We are the only country in the world that has exemption on that carte blanche basis.

In closing let me say that it is time we had a Government that put full employment at the top of its agenda as its goal and introduced strategies in the regions right across Canada to ensure that every man and woman would have an opportunity to be fully and meaningfully employed at a job that would contribute to the benefits of Canada, see Canada grow and ensure that our sons, daughters, grandsons and granddaughters will have the same opportunity.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I have a personal question for my friend opposite. It relates to the people standing in soup lines, something we all believe to be atrocious. Would the member support a Bill that would take away from himself and myself—making $75,000 a year while people are standing in soup lines—the family allowance? Is he prepared to give up the tremendous benefit of the personal deduction for himself, his spouse and his children in order that people in soup lines can get more?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that if we had a proper tax system in the country that reflected an honest, fair and just tax collection system we could have a universal program and those who did not need to have family allowance would have it taxed back.

Let me say to my hon. friend for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker) that year after year corporations such as Shell Oil, Hudson's Bay Company, the Bank of Montreal, the Royal Bank of Canada, Nova Corporation—I could go on and list 79,000 profitable corporations—have not paid a single penny in tax. If they were to be properly charged under the tax system, if they were not to pay excessively but just their fair share or, in some cases, if they were to pay anything, we would have more money than we would need to take care of those people in soup lines and at food banks. It is immoral for a country that is obviously the richest in the world to have food banks and soup kitchens in 1987.

To return to the Hon. Member's original question, if we had a decent tax system, his question would be irrelevant. He would know that once one reached a certain level of income, one would be properly taxed and we could maintain universal programs without having to hire legions of bureaucrats to monitor how people would shift incomes during the year or from one year to another to ensure that they would not be collecting family allowance if they did not actually deserve it.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief comment to make about soup kitchens. There must be something wrong with our social security safety net if those are necessary. Of course, each province has a different social security safety net. How much money one can actually get on which to stay alive depends upon which province one lives in. This is incredible. Certainly there is something wrong with having completely different systems right across the country. Yet the Government of Canada would move to pay off unsecured depositors of a bank, individuals who had more than $60,000 in the bank. These individuals got paid their $60,000 or more and the Government of Canada, through the taxpayers of Canada, decided to pay off the rest. Yet this Government is now taxing popcorn.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question which I have only asked twice in this Chamber. Hon. Members rose after I did and said they wanted to ask serious questions. This question on the Budget is perhaps the most serious one. It is a real question.

Can the Hon. Member understand why the Government of Canada decided to collect $50 million or $60 million on the backs of children who want to buy popcorn? Does the Hon. Member understand whether or not Cheezies are being taxed as well as cheese based puffs, and whether or not fudgesicles are being taxed as well as ice-cream bars? What does the Hon. Member think of children having to pay probably an extra 15 cents for recess?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, actually it is a serious question and I appreciate the seriousness of it. Rather than providing an answer directly, I will provide one indirectly. Last night, both of my two sons had a view on this matter. As a matter of fact, I think one of my sons shares a classroom with one of your daughters, Mr. Speaker. When I got home last night, they said to me: "Dad, how low can the Government go?"

Mr. Charest: Come on, now, don't bring your kids into this.

Mr. Riis: I suspect people do not believe that that is what happened. I will guarantee that that is what did happen. As a matter of fact, I have heard from a number of my colleagues from both sides of the House who have young children and some not so young who said: "Isn't this the living end?"

As my friend, the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker), has indicated, when international banks, including Wells Fargo, the Bank of Japan, the Bank of Hongkong, the Bank of Dubai and the Bank of Kuwait, had millions of dollars on deposit that were uninsured, the Government could come up with a thousand million dollars over a weekend to bail these uninsured depositors out. This is something which has never happened before in the history of banking, but we did it. To make up this difference, the Government has to dig up some more money, so it has gone to the children. It has imposed a tax on children. "Make the kids pay" is the new slogan of the Minister of Finance.

As a quick response to my friend I will say that, although I do not think it was appropriate, but perhaps what is most telling of all is that both of my sons, Jon and Nils, asked me how low the Government could go in terms of taxing the people of Canada.

Mr. Charest: Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity of rising after the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) made her speech on the Budget. At that time, I said that I was disappointed in her and I said that I did not think that she had read her own speech. She rose after that to give us a little hope. There was frankness in her answers and we appreciated and acknowledged that.

In the case of the Hon. House Leader of the New Democratic Party, we are not disappointed. His speech was everything we expected it to be. In fact, I think he re-read what he said during the Budget Speech of 1985 or of 1986, because it was just about the same thing. I am sure that if he re-read his 1985 speech, he could use it again today.

I am sure that in 1985, the Hon. Member said, as he did today, that thousands of jobs would be lost. Did he not do that? I think I heard him say that. In 1986, I think I heard him ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) how many thousands of jobs would be lost. Did he not do that? I think he did.

Mr. Daubney: Yes, I remember that.

Mr. Charest: Some other Hon. Members also think he did. Was he wrong? Yes, he was wrong. Will he admit that today? We do not expect him to do so. We do not expect him to admit he was wrong because we have heard from him before and we know that he would not reach that point. That is why he can give us the examples he gave.

The Hon. Member read statistics about the unemployment rates in Canada. I will do the same thing only I will draw a distinction between the unemployment rates when this Government took office and the unemployment rates now, and we will see what has happened.

Let us start with Newfoundland. In September, 1984, the unemployment rate was 23.8 per cent. That was under a Liberal Government. Under a Progressive Conservative Government, the unemployment rate is down to 19.2 per cent. In New Brunswick, under a Liberal Government in September, 1984, the unemployment rate was 16.2 per cent. It is now—

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am happy to listen to my friend, the Hon. Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest), but that is exactly the same document from which he read in his speech and when he was questioning a speaker from the Liberal Party. Do you think it is proper that he should repeat the same thing again for the third time this afternoon, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do not know if it is the same document or not. I would like to hear the Minister. I am sure the Hon. Minister will enlighten us.

Mr. Charest: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his compliment. For him to make an intervention in an attempt to stop me obviously says a lot about what is going on here. Now, to get back to business, where were we? I think we were in New Brunswick, were we not?

Mr. Benjamin: Where you were an hour ago.

Mr. Charest: Under a Liberal administration in September, 1984, the unemployment rate in New Brunswick was 16.2 per cent. Under a Progressive Conservative Government, it has gone down to 13.9 per cent. In the great Province of Quebec—

—Mr. Speaker, under a Liberal administration, the unemployment rate was 12.9 per cent on September 4, 1984. Under a Progressive Conservative Government, it has declined to the current 10.8 per cent rate as of January 1987.

[English]

In Ontario, the unemployment rate was 9.4 per cent in September, 1984. It has now gone down to 6.6 per cent under a Progressive Conservative Government. In Manitoba, under a Liberal administration, the unemployment rate was 9 per cent. Under a Progressive Conservative Government, it has gone down to 7.9 per cent. In September, 1984, under a Liberal administration, the unemployment rate in Saskatchewan was 8.7 per cent, but under a Progressive Conservative Government, the unemployment rate went down to 7.3 per cent. Would you guess, Mr. Speaker, that in your own Province of Alberta, under a Liberal administration in September, 1984, the unemployment rate was 12.1 per cent? Yet under a Progressive Conservative Government it is down to 10.8 per cent. In British Columbia, the home province of the NDP House Leader, it was 15.1 per cent under the Liberals in September of 1984. Under our Government it is down to 13.6 per cent. In Canada as a whole, the unemployment rate was 11.7 per cent in September, 1984—I think the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) fell asleep.

Mr. Baker: No.

Mr. Charest: Perhaps I could speak a little louder. It was 11.7 per cent under the Liberal Government in September, 1984. Under this Government it is down to 9.7 per cent.

I am going to add a caveat and tell the Hon. NDP Member that this does not mean we are satisfied. He knows that. We have to work harder. However, in no way can he get up in this House and say that there has not been progress under this Government.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I have to admit that the Hon. Member has a point.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: A very small point. The unemployment rate in 1984 was excessively high. The people of Canada saw it that way and decided there was a need for a change in government. They swept out the Liberals and replaced them with a new group. This new group says they are making gains, and the Minister of Finance says he plans to stay the course. He is not going to change anything. I have to admit there was a downward movement in unemployment statistically. However, people in British Columbia, more specifically in Kamloops—Shuswap, take cold comfort when he tells us things are improving. There is literally no recognition of that. There is no question that in some parts of Canada there has been improvement, mainly in downtown Toronto. To be fair, last year the unemployment rate in Canada was 9.8 per cent. This year, 12 months later, it is 9.7 per cent. When you add up all the jobs, there were actually 5,000 fewer people on the unemployment insurance rolls after one year of that Government in office. At that rate, as I reminded the Hon. Member, it will take 270 years to eliminate unemployment. The Hon. Member might feel he can stay the course with a reduction like that, but we do not accept it. The people of Canada did not accept it when the Liberals were in government, and the polls indicate they do not accept it now that the Conservatives are in government. The solution is obvious, people have to vote for the NDP at the first opportunity.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): One very short question and a short rebuttal, please.

Mr. Della Noce: Mr. Speaker, I want to stick to one particular point. The Hon. Member asked how low the Government can go. I ask him, how low can the NDP go?

They are saying that a one cent increase in the price of gasoline will hurt many people. Since February, 1986, we have had a drop of 12 cents a litre or 65 cents a gallon. Where are these guys who are crying that one cent will put them out of business? Where are these people who are increasing their prices and, for one reason, the price of gasoline. It was not always true but that is what they said to us. "The price of gasoline went up so the cost of our service is going up".

Did the Hon. Member check the price of oil today? It is $24 a barrel. Under Mr. Lalonde it would have been $85 a barrel. Thank God we were there to save this country. If Mr. Lalonde's National Energy Program were still in place, gasoline would be sold today for at least $1.20 a litre or about $5.40 a gallon. I must tell my hon. friend that today it is 44 cents a litre, and that is better than a $1.20. When I hear the Hon. Member say that one cent is the end of the world, I am wondering what the consumer would do at $5.40 a gallon. We would all be walking. There would be no cars left. I tell the Hon. Member that there has never been as much use of gasoline as there has been since we came into power. The price of gasoline went down, and I do not think he should say that one cent a litre is a disgrace.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Short rebuttal.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, not a rebuttal but a very short explanation of the situation for the Hon. Member. I do not recall anyone ever saying that a one cent a litre increase is going to wreak havoc on the Canadian economy. It is a very simple calculation to add up four cents a litre or 18 cents a gallon in three Budgets to find what it really means. It adds up to $1.8 billion in additional costs for the transportation sector. We live in the second largest country of the world where transportation of all kinds plays a critical role in our ability to compete economically. When you add that much to the cost of doing business, I say it has a very severe impact on the economy of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I think it is well understood that I am the last speaker in the debate before our recess next week. I want to speak to the many people across the country who are asking parliamentarians what is going on. I do not intend to get into this high school debate over numbers. It does not explain anything to them at all. I want to put down, in terms most of us can understand, what is going on, not only in our country but in many others as well.

There is no question that many countries of the world in the early 1970s proceeded on a course which we can only describe now as a mess. In Canada the mess started by 1972 and corresponded to the high increase in metal prices that year and oil prices in 1972 to 1973. Not only our country but all countries seemed to go mad trying to spend more money. Every time there was a problem, money was thrown at it. As a result, we have the situation we are in now. I do not see any way where people of intellectual honesty and integrity can see an end to it for at least 10 years. Even then there will still be remnants. If you think we are in serious trouble, take a look at the country to the south of us and the horrible mess they are in in Europe.

It is passing strange, is it not, given that all these industrialized countries were so strong a few years ago, that little Canada happens to be leading the slow race back towards recovery? That is because this Government, knowing it could not solve all problems, quickly stated its intentions in a statement in this House in November, 1984, of moving slowly to get at these problems, with consultation and all the rest of it. No one wants to pretend that we are racing ahead to a great future. All we are doing is clawing and scratching to stop the mess from continuing. From now on I hope it will turn slowly and will begin to go down.

This debate has been going on among the intellectuals of the world for the last 40 years, but it has not moved into the legislatures of the world. In the western world in the last 50 years we have believed in a religion known as the Keynesian consensus. That is the consensus that in order to get a country going you simply pour more money out. It is associated with a lot of other theories, including monetarism. I ask my colleagues in the House to put their minds, for the time that we are in our positions as Members of Parliament, to trying to improve on what we have been doing for the last 30 or 40 years through the lessons of the past.

I am going to take two or three facts and develop them a little bit. In 1961, a young President of the United States was facing a deficit in the Budget of the United States and was persuaded not to raise taxes, which was the orthodox way of balancing the Budget, but to reduce them on the things people needed. He took that advice in 1961, but we did not know the result until about 1963. His Budget reduced taxes by about $10 billion in the United States. That was a lot of money in those days. As a result, there was a surplus of $10 billion at the end of the two-year period. Kennedy did not live much longer than 1963, but the new President saw the evidence that by reducing taxes they got more money and were able to do all the things people wanted and to fight the war in Vietnam as well.

In the Reagan Budget of 1981, 20 years later, he too reduced taxes and got more money back in. As you know, the Americans went on spending. The Budget of 1979 in Canada, which we refer to as the Crosbie Budget, won world acclaim among thinkers, but was laughed and voted out of this House by the Liberal-NDP alliance. I know there were Members in both the Liberal and the New Democratic Parties who tried to stop that madness. They wanted to defeat the Government on this issue which they had laughed at, and the Liberal Party destroyed itself. When they went to the country they won the election and had to face their own mess. The Liberal-NDP alliance of that period, with its policy of spend, spend, spend, created the mess which we have in Canada today.

There are people who are trying to see their way through the mist. One different philosophy comes from a Canadian by the name of Mundell. I have mentioned this in the House before and will refer to it again. Long after the Crosbie Budget was defeated a magazine called The Public Interest described that Budget as the dissolution of the Keynesian consensus. The article was written by James W. Dean, another Canadian from British Columbia. He said:

> On December 13, 1979, the government of Canada fell. For just six months the Conservatives had governed with a parliamentary minority, and they were defeated on a vote of no confidence. The issue was their first budget—a budget that rejected Keynesian economic policies, replacing them with radically different recommendations. Unemployment and slow growth were to be fought not by increasing the federal deficit but by reducing it.

I think that is enough of the facts. There were people in 1979 and 1980 who saw through the mist that one government in the world had learned a little from the experiences of Kennedy and from what Mundell was preaching.

What is this theory? I am not going to go into it in great detail. I am going to quote one of the editorial writers for The Wall Street Journal in 1982. Judy Steed, a Canadian reporter, or pundit if you want to call her that, described Mundell in The Globe and Mail of Saturday, April 24, 1982. I hope you will listen to this rather exaggerated judgment. She said:

> The Mundellian thesis, according to Mr. Wanniski—

—he was the editor of The Wall Street Journal at that time—

> —is "truly revolutionary." It upsets the monetarist and Keynesian models that have vied for supremacy among economists for the past 40 years. In the world according to Keynes, government intervenes in the marketplace, spreading money around (through taxation and services) to make sure buyers can spend. Consumer demand is what counts.
> Mr. Mundell turns the demand model inside out. Supply creates demand, he argues. "A necessary condition for employment is that you have a sufficient number of employers. But if you tax employers excessively, you won't have much employment." Hence taxes must be cut to give producers sufficient incentives to create more supply.

That, in a paragraph, gives one part of the Mundell hypothesis. I repeat that this Budget is not out of harmony with what the Minister did in 1979. The only trouble was that we did not know he had done it. It is not out of harmony with the statement of 1984. I think that members of all Parties and Canadians who love their country should admire the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) for hanging firm and giving us a Budget which continues the tendency, gentle as it is, toward coping with the business of spending money as opposed to the idea of getting more employers out working and providing jobs. It is a slow route, but we have taken the first step in a long journey. I hope the people of Canada understand that. That is more important than all the childish prattle we hear about the per centage of employed and unemployed. The mere fact that there is unemployment is enough of a challenge.

Let me turn to interest rates, a subject that I am sure Members will understand is very dear to me. During the 1984 election campaign we pledged to bring down interest rates. That was the first priority of all the promises we made. This was addressed in the statement of November, 1984 and dealt with again in the 1985 Budget. Slowly, interest rates are beginning to stabilize, but I can still think of five major areas that need to be addressed. However, the fact is that interest rates have declined by some three points.

I will not be satisfied until interest rates are at their proper level. At best, the interest rate should be at 3 per cent, but that will never happen because of the inflationary factor.

All western countries have been guided by a group of experts who believe in the doctrine that all one's faith should be put in a single theory such as the spending theory of Keynes or the monetarist theory.

While there is truth in those theories, one should re-evaluate the progress of such a theory if it collapses. I hear Members from all Parties in the House call for expenditures on various items. While it is necessary to make some expenditures, we should remember that we can only make progress if we have a solid platform on which to proceed.

Let me give some examples. During the last 40 years, and particularly the last 20 years, we have been told that the way to stop inflation is to raise interest rates. That theory was forced on the Government when I was a Minister in 1958. Now I am in all the books as having been the stupid one who fought Coyne. However, 25 years later, the facts are out. We were told that interest rates should be kept high in order to stop consumers from buying too much, and that higher interest rates would maintain the dollar at a higher level.

Let us consider what has happened in the last two months. The United States, Canada and Europe have been dealing with interest rates, and when they declined, the dollar went up to 75 cents and is holding. How can those who preached that doctrine for 40 years continue to do so?

A committee of the House met on this subject in 1979. We asked the Governor of the Bank of Canada for the evidence behind his claim that interest rates must be raised to keep inflation down. He said that he did not have evidence but just believed it was the proper action because all the experts supported that. We asked for evidence to show that high interest rates would keep the dollar up, since it was declining during the entire time interest rates were being raised. As I said, in the last two months interest rates have gone down and the dollar has risen.

All of the charts, going back to the Dana-Porter report of 1961, I believe, show the same truth. However, when will the experts in the Department of Finance and the Bank of Canada read the charts and figures and see the reality?

We must face our responsibility, collect the evidence, of which there has been much in the last two months, and proceed on the basis of that evidence. We do not know any better theory; we only know what we see and that we should not proceed on the basis of something that does not work. We should let common sense prevail while we attempt to make the country run better.

I do not believe there is a complete answer to this question, nor does anyone pretend that there is. The economists confessed 30 years ago that they did not know where they were nor where they were going, but they still make a living and make the same predictions today. I have met most economists over the years and have had full and formal discussions with them.

While we all enjoy partisan discussions across the floor of the House of Commons, I believe the one thing we must have in common is the realization that none of us know the final answer. We should encourage the Government to keep moving forward slowly with small improvements in the hope that the economy will improve. If we attempt to correct the situation in a rush, by pouring money in to solve the problem, we will be faced with the same dilemma that the Keynesian conclusions forced upon Canada.

In 1985, an article in the local paper contained a headline, which perhaps would not have enticed many readers. However, it is very true. The headline reads: "Presto! The new economic molecule". In this article, in which the author talks about economists and the economy, he made the following conclusion:

Rigid orthodoxy is absolutely dead.

This is the final point I wish to leave with the House. We will all be dead if we only worship single doctrines. We cannot conduct our affairs by making rigid guidelines. With our rapidly increasing knowledge, it is not correct to place politics over facts. We must peer into the mist and try to move steadily toward a sensible goal. While there are many other problems, the interest rate problem is the greatest because it affects everything else. The theory about the molecule in this article is a reflection of what is happening.

Since there are many factors which affect these indicators, those who follow one doctrine will not succeed. While it is sometimes difficult to accept, it is much better to make slow and steady progress than to rush backward and forward.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) has many years of experience in the House. I want to seek his wisdom on this question of corporation tax. There are some who feel that corporation taxes should be increased dramatically because corporations are not paying their fair share. On the other hand, there are those who say that corporate taxes are essentially regressive because they are passed straight on to the consumer. Will he share his wisdom on this question of corporate tax?

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Speaker, I answered that question in general in my speech. When talking about corporations, politicians are simply using that title as a buzz word. We are working together to better appreciate corporations.

The corporation today, politically, is the flogging horse, but as one thinks through it, one finds that whether the corporation is large or small, whether it is a farmer or a householder, one has to have money before one can pay taxes. In other words, we have to have profit. And if we have to have profit, then we had better make certain that our tax level will allow us to make a profit. That is why the tax reforms in the United States which were announced a year ago, and the tax reforms I expect will be announced here, will show, I am sure, a rich decline for corporations, applying to all levels. I predict, from the experience of the Kennedy reductions and the Reagan reductions, and others I could mention, that if we can get the rate of taxes down, the amount of money will increase. Therefore, we should quit thinking of the corporation as a bogeyman that we have to clobber politically. We must think of a way of how to get that horse working. The only thing corporations have been able to do this last 20 or 30 years is to go into mergers to take advantage of the tax law, not producing any new goods at all. However, whether the corporation is large or small is not the point. The fact is that we have to give the producer some form of profit on his labour and work.

Mr. Attewell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for certainly one of the best speeches I have heard during this budget debate. He gave us a special type of perspective, and I want to thank him for that. It sure beats the hollow, rancorous kind of comments coming from the other side of this House, not just from the Liberal Party but from the New Democratic Party as well. I sometimes wonder if those Hon. Members have been on another planet during this last decade.

I would like to ask the Minister to comment on a couple of things. I do want to underscore how correct he was in stressing the importance of interest rates. I agree with the Hon. Member that if I could single out one factor which needed to be highlighted as far as getting our economy going again is concerned, it would have to be interest rates. That was done by this Government through a few different steps. We had to dismantle the national energy policy, which was a tragedy for the oil industry. FIRA was another negative approach as far as new investments were concerned. That has been replaced, not just in name but in the approach that we certainly welcome investment into this country. I think it was touched on earlier today that most Canadians would welcome the Budget of the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) of 1979 in which we had a relatively minor increase in gasoline tax. But thanks to the coalition on the other side, Canadians were plunged into another four years of record-setting deficits. Thanks to this particular Government and thanks to the leadership of the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) we have finally turned the corner.

My specific question concerns the Hon. Member's theory on deficits. No country can go on forever without having some deficits. What does the Hon. Member think about the fact that under the Liberal Government a record was set of 11 successive years of deficits? I think there might have been at least one or two good economic years in that period. Should the Liberal Government have been setting those deficits even in good times?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) has only one minute left for a succinct answer.

Mr. Hamilton: I can answer in one sentence. The answer is no. The deficit is simply a measuring device on how much one is behind at a particular time. It is not dangerous in itself but the accumulation of those things eventually ruin you.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret but the Hon. Member's time has expired. The period for questions or comments has terminated.

It being 4.45 p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 84(6) to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith the question necessary to dispose of the amendment to the amendment now before the House. Mr. Cassidy, seconded by Mr. Murphy, moved:

That the amendment to the motion of the Minister of Finance be amended by adding immediately thereafter the following words:

"and this House further condemns the Government for introducing a budget that tolerates the existence of 1,250,000 unemployed Canadians and fails to show fairness to the average Canadian family and regions that continue to feel the burden of economic recession with respect to employment and income;

for failing to introduce a system of universal child care that would assist families and create jobs;

for failing to demonstrate to the average Canadian taxpayer a genuine commitment to tax reform by eliminating in this budget some of the worst excesses in the tax system, such as the erosion of the corporate tax base begun by the Liberals in 1983;

for failing to even give mention in the budget to the tragedy of four million Canadians living in poverty; and for failing to make full employment the first priority of the federal government.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment to the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 13(5), the recorded division stands deferred until 6 p.m. on Monday, March 2, 1987.

It being 4.47 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 4, the House stands adjourned until Monday, March 2, 1987 at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

Have a nice break.

The House adjourned at 4.47 p.m.

MAIN ESTIMATES, 1987-88

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): A message from Her Excellency the Governor General transmitting Estimates for the financial year ending March 31, 1987 and, in accordance with Section 54 of the Constitution Act, 1867, recommending these Estimates to the House of Commons on February 27, 1987, was presented by the Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board) and read by Mr. Speaker to the House.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I also would like to table the Government Expenditure Plan, Part I.

Furthermore, on behalf of my Cabinet colleagues, I have laid upon the table Part III of the Estimates which includes the expenditure plans of 74 departments. These documents will be distributed to members of our standing committees who will be examining the spending authorities being sought in Part II of the Estimates, and since I have the floor, Mr. Speaker, here is another message from Her Excellency, the Governor General, bearing her signature.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A), 1987-88

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): A message from Her Excellency the Governor General transmitting Estimates for the financial year ending March 31, 1987 and, in accordance with Section 54 of the Constitution Act, 1867, recommending these Estimates to the House of Commons on February 27, 1987, was presented by the Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board) and read by Mr. Speaker to the House.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour of tabling, in both official languages, the Government's response to the following 40 petitions: 332-490, 332-519, 332-612, 332-619 to 332-622 inclusive, 332-626 to 332-642 inclusive, 332-790, 332-822 to 332-829 inclusive, 332-835 to 332-837 inclusive, 332-839, 332-841, 332-843 to 332-868 inclusive.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order or on a question of privilege, whichever is appropriate. I did not hear the bells ring this morning. I know our party's official critic who is supposed to reply to the Minister's statement very shortly is not in the House because he did not hear the bells either.

I wonder whether the Government could get things organized so that all Members could be notified.

The Minister is to make an important statement . . . There is our critic . . . Thank you, Mr. Speaker, my point of order no longer stands.

MAIN ESTIMATES, 1987-88

STATEMENT OF PRESIDENT OF THE TREASURY BOARD

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table today the Main Estimates for 1987-88, this being the third set of Estimates that I have presented on behalf of the government. These Main Estimates, which amount to $110.1 billion in budgetary spending, are yet another example of the success of our sustained efforts to curb uncontrolled growth in public spending.

I have also tabled today a special Supplementary Estimate for 1987-88 in the amount of $700 million, to provide for the balance of the payments committed to grain farmers under the special Canadian Grains Program. This item was specifically not included in these Main Estimates because the government has undertaken to disburse this money well before full supply will be available on these Main Estimates. The Supplementary Estimate will provide for appropriate parliamentary review as well as the voting of full supply on this item by the end of this month.

Mr. Speaker, the 1987-88 budgetary Main Estimates are 2.9 per cent higher than those tabled for 1986-87. However, you will recall that when I tabled the 1986-87 Main Estimates last year, I pointed out that a $500 million expenditure reduction, announced by the Minister of Finance the day before in his Budget, was not reflected in those Estimates. Thus, after making an adjustment for this item, as well as for the increase in the special Canadian Grains Programs, the year-over-year growth in these Main Estimates amounts to 3.8 per cent, slightly lower than last year, lower than the rate of inflation, and lower than it has been since 1962.

This marks the third year in succession that this Government has tabled a set of Main Estimates where the growth rate has declined. No Government has been able to make this claim in almost two decades. We can be justifiably proud of this record as it demonstrates clearly our sustained commitment to controlling spending and reducing the deficit.

The extent of this commitment is illustrated by an examination of major elements of these Main Estimates. Seventy-two billion, three hundred million dollars representing two-thirds of the total, will be spent on statutory programs; that is, spending governed by separate legislation. They include, for example, payments to the elderly by Health and Welfare Canada which will amount to some $14.6 billion in 1987-88, the largest single item in these Estimates next to the public debt charges. They also include family allowances, the Canada Assistance Plan, fiscal transfers to the provinces, municipal grants, and a variety of agricultural and transportation subsidies. Over all, statutory estimates are $2.8 billion, or 4 per cent, higher than last year. The remaining $37.8 billion, or one-third of total Main Estimates, represent expenditures which Parliament will be asked explicitly to authorize for the upcoming year.

The Government can in general exercise greater discretion over these latter voted expenditures. Indeed, it is this category of spending on which Government has focused many of its expenditure restraint measures. As a result, the annual increase in the voted portion of Main Estimates will be 3.4 per cent over last year. This is the third year in a row in which this growth rate has been less than inflation. Over the past three years the rate of growth has averaged only 1.3 per cent. This is the best performance since the three-year period at the beginning of the 1960s.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Cotret: Despite this continued commitment to expenditure restraint the Government has made provision in these Estimates for increases to such important priorities as programs for aboriginal peoples, veterans, defence, external affairs and foreign aid. Included in these Main Estimates is some $2 billion to fund programs for our aboriginal people in such areas as education, social development, capital facilities and community services. In addition, $700 million is to be transferred to the territorial Governments to assist them in providing services to residents of the North. Veterans' pensions and allowances and health services purchased on behalf of veterans amount to $1.4 billion in these Main Estimates. The increase in the Main Estimates allocations for these social programs total almost $300 million, an increase of over 7 per cent from a year ago. There is also significant growth in external affairs and aid expenditures, reflecting increases in bilateral development assistance, increases in payments to international financial institutions, and contributions towards the cost of development assistance undertakings by Canadian and international non-governmental organizations. Altogether the increase in voted estimates for these activities is $290 million, or 10.6 per cent.

The Main Estimates allocation for defence is $10.3 billion, 92 per cent of which is voted expenditures. This portion is fully one-quarter of the total voted estimates. Personnel costs represent about 44 per cent of defence spending, with another quarter of the defence budget earmarked for capital spending for such items as the CF-18 fighter aircraft, the Canadian patrol frigate, the North American air defence modernization, and the Tribal Class update and modernization programs. Over-all spending on defence, external affairs and aid increases by over $700 million in these Main Estimates, reflecting the priority assigned to international commitments in these areas. These increases in priority areas of spending have been achieved through internal reallocation which has allowed the Government to limit the growth rate in voted appropriations to 3.4 per cent for 1987-88.

As Hon. Members are aware, Mr. Speaker, prudent fiscal planning requires that a government set aside reserves within its overall fiscal plan to accommodate unanticipated requirements that may arise in the course of the year. To the extent these reserves are allocated, they will appear in the form of Supplementary Estimates items which are presented to Parliament for review and approval. As part of its restraint effort, the government has reduced and more rigorously controlled access to the reserves set aside for contingency purposes. The impact of this will be demonstrated later this week when I table the final Supplementary Estimates for 1986-87. At that time it will be noted that total Supplementary Estimates for the current year will amount to less than 2 per cent of 1986-87 Main Estimates—the lowest percentage since 1968-69.

Members will recall that from the very beginning this government has committed itself to the pursuit of productive management in the federal public sector. Disciplined management has been a consistent theme of the government's various restraint measures and Budget statements. Through the introduction of productive management policies and actions we have sought to create an environment and institutional momentum within the Public Service which stress efficiency, innovation and value for money in the delivery of federal programs and services.

The fruit of these efforts are reflected in the 1987-88 Main Estimates, Mr. Speaker. An examination of the payment distribution of these Estimates shows that the non-defence operating and capital spending is marginally lower in the 1987-88 Main Estimates than it was in 1984-85. Taking inflation into account, this is a reduction of just over 12 per cent over this period.

This is a significant achievement, Mr. Speaker, especially if one notes that spending on wages and salaries, the major portion of these costs, is in large part governed by collective agreements, and that the increased costs of negotiated wage settlements have averaged approximately 3.5 per cent per annum. I might also note that the open approach taken by this government to labour relations in the Public Service, including the introduction of Master Agreements and the negotiation of responsible and fair wage settlements, has greatly facilitated the government's efforts to contain expenditures while maintaining essential services to the public. These efforts have also meant that Public Service managers are being continually challenged to deliver government programs with fewer human and financial resources, and to accommodate and expanding clientele and rising workload through efficiency gains, productivity improvements and imaginative use of alternative production and delivery techniques.

[English]

I just mentioned that public service managers are employing fewer human resources in program operations. You will recall that in his May, 1985, Budget statement, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced the Government's intention to reduce the size of the public service by 15,000 person-years over five years beginning with the 1986-87 fiscal year. Consistent with this commitment, the 1986-87 Main Estimates tabled last year showed a reduction of some 5,500 person years compared to the previous year. The Main Estimates I tabled today show a further reduction of almost 3,100 person-years. I can therefore report that the Government is squarely on track in achieving its five-year target with more than half of the planned reductions already obtained.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Cotret: Indeed, measured on a comparable basis, the number of authorized person-years reported in these Main Estimates is the lowest since the 1980-81 Estimates. With the completion of this program in 1990-91 the number of person-years will be comparable to that of pre-1975 levels.

At the same time the Government's innovative work force adjustment policy, strengthened in 1985 in consultation with the public service unions, has been vigorously applied in a concerted effort to minimize the impact on individual employees affected by the person year reduction measures. In May, 1986, I announced that the Government was confident that the majority of affected employees could be redeployed within the public service. I also forecast that no more than 500 public service employees would be laid off as a result of the first year of the person-year reductions. With the fiscal year drawing to an end, I remain confident as to the accuracy of that forecast. I will be reporting more fully to Parliament when the final results are available in April. Hon. Members can be assured that the same strong effort to minimize layoffs will continue throughout 1987-88 and in future years.

I have referred in my remarks to the notable contribution made by public service managers to the Government's restraint efforts. When I tabled the 1986-87 Main Estimates last year I stated that a productivity bonus was being developed as a new feature of the Government's management compensation package. Such a feature would serve to reward managers for meeting or exceeding expenditure reduction targets while still achieving their other program and policy goals. A final decision on implementation of the productivity bonus had obviously to wait for an assessment of 1986-87 performance.

As the Minister of Finance reported in his Budget last month, the Government's record on expenditure management has been exceptional. The full $500 million expenditure reduction announced in the February, 1986, Budget has been identified and implemented. As I have already noted, person-year reduction goals have been fully achieved and, in some cases, are ahead of schedule. Steady progress has been made in other key government initiatives such as improved cash management, increased cost recovery, continued privatization of Crown corporations, and reduced overhead and administrative costs.

The Treasury Board has concluded that senior public service managers have been instrumental in the realization of these improvements and has approved a productivity bonus for its senior management of from 1 to 1.5 per cent of salary for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1987. The total estimated cost of this bonus is $4.5 million.

[Translation]

To further demonstrate its commitment to management excellence, the Treasury Board has also authorized an increase, to $10,000, of the maximum value of the Outstanding Achievement Award. This Award, which consists of a citation and a Canadian work of art, can be given annually to up to five senior level public servants who are selected by a six-member panel of Canadians appointed from outside the Public Service. The award was first introduced in 1966. The increase in this award is another clear signal of the importance the government attaches to fostering and rewarding exceptional performance by Public Service managers.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Main Estimates tabled today represent a further significant contribution to the government's record on expenditure management.

First, this is the third consecutive year that the growth rate in Main Estimates has declined. Second, the rate of growth in 1987-88 Main Estimates is the lowest increase in 20 years. Third, the size of the Public Service in 1987-88 will be at its lowest level since 1980-81.

[English]

In summary, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Main Estimates tabled today represent a further significant contribution to the Government's record on expenditure management. This is the third consecutive year that the growth rate in Main Estimates has declined. Second, the rate of growth in the 1987-88 Main Estimates is the lowest increase in a quarter century. Finally, the size of the public service in 1987-88 will be at its lowest level since 1980-81.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Cotret: This track record clearly reflects the Government's strong commitment to sound management and to the operation of an efficient and effective public service while maintaining and expanding programs which serve the real needs of all Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, let us start at the Minister's last point; that is, the bribery payments. Let us start with the new system which the Government has brought in, effective March 31, to pay $4.5 million to senior public servants. According to the Minister, it is for good management in cutting back person years and keeping expenditures down. What is the job of these senior public servants and why are they being paid, if not for good management? The definition of senior management is everyone from the Deputy Minister down. The Government says there is some $4.5 million and, presumably at the end of the month, it will issue cheques up to 1 per cent and 1.5 per cent of the levels. That means the top of the salary scale to which that manager is entitled.

• (1130)

Mr. Berger: What does that mean?

Mr. Baker: The Hon. Member asks what that means. I do not suppose anyone knows what it means, but the managers will know when they receive their hand delivered cheques. They will receive $1,000 or $1,500 for ensuring that person years are reduced, according to the Minister.

It is no wonder that the Government exceeded its predicted lay-offs of 2,500 this coming year. It is eliminating 3,100 person years. There are well paid employees in our society who are receiving cash bonuses for eliminating people in jobs on the lower end of the income scale.

The Government brags about the elimination of 3,100 people. If the Minister read the mail we are receiving concerning this matter he would know that people are being laid off throughout the country, with no job prospects in the private sector. People who have 25 years experience in the public service are being laid off with the stroke of a pen. Those people know as a result of this announcement that they are being laid off because a senior manager will receive a lump sum payment at the end of this month as a result of that lay-off.

This incredible system which the Government brags about affects engineers who are being laid off in Public Works, employees in the federal Department of Fisheries and Oceans, people who work in employment offices across the country and those at the scientific research group at the Bedford Institute which will be closed at the end of this month. Someone will receive a $1,000 cheque at the end of the month for accomplishing these lay-offs.

There will be an average payment of $1,000 to highly paid public servants, including Deputy Ministers, at the end of this month. This $4.5 million in bribe payments will result in some 6,000 cheques being issued. One wonders what country would follow such a plan. Obviously the Treasury Board had quite a problem devising the guidelines because it had no other country to use as a model. The system announced by the Minister today does not exist in any other democratic country. We believe these payments are being made for a job that the managers were supposed to do in the first place. We regard it simply as bribery cheques being paid to managers in the public service in this country.

The Minister's statement could be summed up by saying that he is trying to give Canadians the impression that government spending is down. Yet spending has risen considerably. When the Government took office it assumed a national debt of approximately $189 billion. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is predicting that national debt to be up to $300 billion this year. Governments of Canada built an accumulated debt of some $189 billion since Confederation, but this Government has increased that debt to $300 billion in some two years.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker: The truth hurts, Madam Speaker. The Minister of Finance said that while spending is up, revenues have also increased. Government revenues have increased to match the increases in the selective spending the Government has undertaken. Recently a Cabinet Minister stated: "—they were only within 10 per cent of the lowest bid and I directed the contract to go to them because they were from my province".

Not all of the information is contained in the Estimates tabled today. We learned that lesson last week when we discovered that a $1 million cheque was given to the County of Pictou in Nova Scotia to build a courthouse. That grant does not come under any federal government program.

Every tendering process includes a stipulation that the contract will not necessarily be given to the lowest bidder. The Government should come clean and delete the word "necessarily" so that the stipulation states that the contract will not be given to the lowest bidder. We have seen the Government awarding contracts not only to the second lowest bidder, but the third, fourth and so on.

People should not only concern themselves with the small contracts that are awarded throughout the country, because there are large government contracts being made available and we can see where the money is being spent.

It is true that revenues are up. Last Sunday on CTV's Question Period, the Minister of Finance was asked a question by Mr. John Ferguson in which he said:

I think that the figures from the Fraser Institute in Vancouver suggest that you have been the taxingest Finance Minister in history, that taxes have gone up more, personal income taxes have gone up more under your period of finance than in any other period.

The Minister responded:

What we have been doing here, John—

Referring to John Ferguson, the writer:

—is to bring the level of taxation back to where it had been in the middle 1970s. Previous Ministers of Finance had let go of the tax reins and the level of taxation as a per cent of income had gone down and down—

Who are these former Ministers of Finance whom the Minister said let go of the tax reins in the mid-1970s? The Minister says we must grab the tax reins and bring taxes to their levels before the mid-1970s and make people pay through their taxes. It is as if former Tory Finance Ministers from 20 or 30 years ago are saying: "To you we throw the reins of taxation. Be yours to hold them high". That is why revenues are up in this expenditure package, as well as expenditures.

How does the Minister take hold of those tax reins? He taxes potato chips, corn and cheese-based puffs, brittle pretzels, salted nuts, popcorn, granola bars, frozen snacks, popsicles and ice cream bars. That is what the Minister of Finance does to grab the reins of taxation, to rein in the taxes from the ordinary people of Canada. And who does he pick on? He picks on children. There never was such a tax prior to the 1970s. The Minister of Finance is reining in his taxes from the children.

My Party, the Official Opposition, and I find the Minister of Finance to be way off track in his priorities on taxation. The Minister who tabled the Estimates here today is just as much off track in offering a bonus to public servants and bragging about 3,100 people being laid off. We find it passing strange that Departments such as the Department of Fisheries and Oceans should have a continual decrease in funds since the Government took office. It is down to $551 million this year. Other Government Departments have followed the same route. We have seen, on the other hand, the Government toss money at the Prime Minister's Office to increase his number of staff, and to the Ministers of this Government so they can have all the staff they want to award contracts, not to the lowest bidder but to the second and third highest bidder, and to give special grants for their own pet projects in their own constituencies which do not come under any program.

Where were the increases in these Estimates today? They were very markedly in the Prime Minister's Office and the Office of the Privy Council. When we look at the percentages we wonder in what direction the Government is going. I am sure the general public will look at the Budget and these Estimates and see we have slight increases in the expenditures of Departments of the federal Government, but they will also see the 18.9 per cent increase in the Budget of the Department of External Affairs for last year and a 15.6 per cent increase this year, amounting to over $3 billion. They will also see family allowances under these Estimates held down to their expenditures and the cuts made to reduce it by three percentage points. They will ask where the equality is of having the budget of the Department of External Affairs 50 per cent higher than the entire budget for family allowances. They will wonder where the justice is behind these kinds of Estimates. The Government will not last its entire term after tabling Estimates such as these.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Madam Speaker, I would like to make a few comments on these Estimates. A year ago when the Estimates came down I said that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) and the Government had produced another set of spending Estimates which would suit Wall Street and Bay Street and, in the words of Ronald Reagan, "There you go again", because that is exactly what we have again this year. These Estimates indicate that the Government intends to continue pleasing the bond market, the financiers and the investment analysts, but it does not relate to the real situation Canadians face.

May I say in parenthesis, Madam Speaker, that I feel extremely distressed at suggestions just made by my hon. colleague from the Liberal Party that his Party is no longer committed to foreign aid. It is an important service and Canadians are prepared to share some of the wealth we have in our country in addition to giving justice to our own people. We can, I believe, do both.

I want to point out to the President of the Treasury Board, and to his colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), what we pointed out two weeks before the House rose for a week at the time of the Budget debate, that over the course of the past year, between January 1986 and January 1987, we have had an increase of 132,000 jobs in Ontario and an increase of only 5,000 jobs in the rest of the country. At the present moment there are 1.25 million Canadians out of work. It was clear from the Budget and clearer still from these Estimates that the Government has no strategy and no intention to do anything about that particular problem.

Regional Development spending is down by $3 billion from the year the Conservatives came to office. That has meant cuts in transportation, in the fisheries, in agriculture, apart from the special grains program, cuts in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and in the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. In fact there has been a further $1 billion taken out of DRIE in order to pay for the special grains project.

The Government is fighting the deficit this year on the backs of the unemployed and on the backs of the provinces. I remind the President of the Treasury Board and his colleagues that today there are seven provinces which have unemployment rates higher than at the time of the height of the recession in 1981-82. Yet the fact is that the moneys which are being transferred to the provinces are not going to the provinces with the greatest unemployment rates but to the Province of Ontario. Of the total amounts going to the provinces, in terms of tax payments and transfer payments, a total increase of $550 million is going to that poor suffering Province of Ontario. It is a good province which I represent. However, in southern Ontario there has been some economic recovery, and Ontario receives $550 million compared to the $600 million which will go to nine other provinces.

[Translation]

And in particular, Madam Speaker, I want to stress the fact that the Province of Quebec is especially hard hit by the Government cut-backs with respect to transfer payments and payments in terms of tax point transfers. Madam Speaker, we can see that despite the fact that the unemployment rate in Quebec is about 10.8 per cent, the increase in these equalization or transfer payments to Quebec amounts to only $7 million, up 0.1 per cent. By comparison, Ontario's unemployment rate is 6.6 per cent, yet the province will benefit from an increase in equalization and fiscal transfer payments of $50 million, up 7 per cent.

[English]

Where are the priorities of the Government which would permit that kind of situation and then turn around to the Province of Quebec and tell it, as it has as recently as the last couple of weeks, that the federal Government is not prepared to deal on the same basis with equalization with Quebec relative to other provinces which received certain forms of revenue guarantees.

Manitoba has an unemployment rate of 7.9 per cent. It will receive an increase of only $1 million or a 0.1 per cent increase in terms of payments for post-secondary education, hospital insurance, medicare and its general transfers which come from the Government of Canada. British Columbia, which has an unemployment rate of 13.8 per cent at the end of January, will see an increase of only 2 per cent in terms of the payments under the shared cost programs with respect to fiscal transfers from the Government.

I want to say that the priorities of the Government are reflected not just in these Estimates but in what is happening on the tax side. The Government has played around with a little here and a little less there in terms of spending estimates. At the same time since the Conservatives came to power they have increased personal and sales tax revenues from individuals by 52 per cent and have decreased corporate tax revenues by 18 per cent. That is despite a very sharp increase anticipated this coming year in terms of corporate profits. Those are the priorities of the Government.

Another point I want to emphasize, Madam Speaker, is that in these estimates the Government has decided to consolidate the unemployment insurance fund accounts. Indeed the Government sees this as a way to show that unemployment insurance benefits paid to Canada's unemployed come from all Canadians, while in fact it is an insurance fund from which Canadian men and women are entitled to draw benefits if they are out of work, if they suffer from the economic policies of this Government. But at the same time as it consolidates the unemployment insurance fund accounts, Madam Speaker, it is not doing anything to make sure that the estimates will cover payments for tax expenditures.

According to the Auditor General, tax expenditures are estimated at about $30 billion a year. But in spite of that we have no idea which companies will get these huge payments. Who will benefit from these payments? There is no indication whatsoever in the Government estimates.

• (1150)

[English]

On the one hand the unemployed are included in such a way that if the Conservatives were to stay in power—which is very unlikely—then they would begin to take away unemployment payments directly from the unemployed. That is the reason the Government has consolidated these accounts. On the other hand, the Conservatives refuse to put in any listing at all of the tax expenditures which are benefiting, in the main, large corporations and wealthy Canadians.

I note that the Government has left a substantial chunk of $2.4 billion for pre-election hand-outs to be made over the course of the fall and next spring.

In terms of priorities, the Government is decreasing corporate tax and increasing personal tax because of its priorities, while doing nothing about tax expenditures which are so costly to Canadians.

I represent a Public Service riding. Once again, public servants will be distressed over the news received in this year's Estimates. Some 3,000 jobs will be cut despite the assurances of the President of the Treasury Board. This means that individuals will be disrupted and forced to move from one community to another in order to save their jobs. They will be pressured out of the Public Service by means of various golden handshakes and other inducements which they will be given. Some of them will, as a number did last year, become too discouraged and will go down on the Treasury Board's lists as being no longer interested in government employment. They are no longer interested because of the nature of the employment they will be offered and because of the adjustments to which they will be compelled to adjust.

If the Government insists on achieving this down-sizing of Government it can and should be achieved without any individual public servant being forced to lose his or her job. If it were possible again to manage it to the point at which only a few hundred people will be fired, as happened last year, then the statement I made last year that no civil servant need ever lose his or her job could have been amply fulfilled for the expenditure of perhaps $4.5 million. That is the sum which is being given as a bonus to senior managers in the Public Service for their work in cutting and chopping heads in the departments for which they are responsible. I suggest that the President of the Treasury Board stand up now and undertake that not one single man or woman working for the people of Canada will be compelled to leave his or her job. That would be a change of heart for the Government which now has a heartless policy of wanting to show the people on St. James Street and Bay Street a few limp, wretched bodies of public servants who have been forced to walk the plank.

Once again this year I asked Treasury Board officials what proportion of the 3,000 people who are to be displaced will be women. I asked what measures will be taken to monitor the situation to ensure that women and minority groups are not further disadvantaged by these cuts. I raised this same question during the response to the Estimates last year and no response was given at that time. I have not received a response this year either. I have been told that they will try to get the figures to me later today. But they do not have the figures because there is no awareness of the fact that women employees are particularly vulnerable to these cuts. There is no awareness and no program to ensure that not just scientists and senior managers will receive extra training or placement in order to save their jobs, but that secretaries, clerks and people doing important support jobs for the Government will also have access to the same type of retraining opportunities. Then they too should be able to save their jobs. They should not be forced out of the Public Service by means of what the Government is doing right now.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, I should like to add a congratulatory note and point out the fact that, despite the 1985-86 cut-backs, the Government is still on the right track in terms of payments and budgetary estimates concerning funds available for foreign aid.

[English]

In terms of foreign aid, there has been a substantial increase this year. As a New Democrat, and I think Canadians will agree with me, I believe that Canada can and should be playing a very vigorous role in terms of providing aid to Latin America, Africa and Asia. We can do that and also do justice to people in depressed regions suffering from high unemployment. We can and should have a full employment policy. We are not doing justice to Canadians; but we should not seek to do justice to Canadians by doing injustice to people in the Third World.

I note the continued confusion of the Government with respect to Canada Post. I welcome the fact that it has drawn in its horns, to some extent. I deplore the fact that the Government has dithered now for a year and a half in terms of coming up with a clear policy. Canadians want to be assured of adequate postal services. That is a priority which comes before the need to reduce the postal deficit, if those are the choices which are to be put forward.

Once again the Government has cut funding for the Canadian Jobs Strategy at a time when we have 1.25 million unemployed. The Government has cut $154 million from its payment to the Jobs Strategy after having cut $100 million one year ago. I note a cut of over $100 million in payments for the loans and investments under Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. This is a sign that the Government lacks a real commitment in terms of adequate social housing.

Under regional expansion and investment the Government has cut $50 million from the Cape Breton Development Corporation, presumably because of its great success, a success about which the people of Cape Breton are certainly not aware. The Government's commitment in terms of economic development is so strong that, apart from the Defence Industry Productivity Program, it has cut the available funds through the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion.

The Government has come up with an increase of 2.5 per cent in funding for the National Research Council, which brings the total up to about $400 million, down by $100 million from two-and-one-half years ago. That is how the Government has so miserably fulfilled the promises it made at the time of the 1984 election. It promised then that Canada should be a world leader in terms of research and development and in terms of science and technology.

I conclude by pointing this out.

The unemployment rate in this country is nearly 10 per cent, and 1,250,000 Canadian men and women are unemployed. The Government's policy seems to be to go on tolerating an intolerable situation where the unemployment rate will remain above 9 per cent across this country and, in some provinces, will be even higher than during the 1981-82 recession.

That is the Conservative Government's economic policy. That is its spending policy. Obviously, Madam Speaker, that is why Canadians have decided to say no to this Government for the next election, since the polls showed the lowest rate of support ever enjoyed by a Government in this country.

PETITIONS

PUBLIC SERVICE PENSIONS

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Madam Speaker, I have the honour and the privilege of presenting, pursuant to Standing Order 106, a petition signed by 41 residents of Val-d'Or in the Abitibi area, who contribute to the Superannuation Plan of the Public Service of Canada and are employed by the Departement of Employment and Immigration.

In their petition they mention three further changes to the Public Service Superannuation Act as amended by Bill C-33. Their position is:

THAT public service pensions should continue to be fully indexed so that present and future public service pensioners will be protected against inflation.

THAT employees contributing to the Public Service Superannuation Plan should have the right to make decisions with respect to the way the Plan is managed.

THAT interest credited to the Public Service Superannuation Account be set at realistic levels to ensure sound management of the Plan.

They are therefore asking the Government for full indexation of pensions, participation by contributors in decisions and for realistic levels of interest to be credited to the fund.

CANADA POST—OPPOSITION TO CLOSURE OF RURAL POST OFFICES

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Madam Speaker, it is my duty to present to the House a few petitions from citizens of Bayfield, Cape Spear, Cape Tormentine, and Port Elgin. Most of these are small fishing villages along Northumberland Strait.

[Translation]

Your petitioners humbly state that Canada Post's new Corporate Plan is creating and will create two classes of citizens and that closing post offices in rural areas deprives Canadians of a unique federal presence and reduces vital postal service in rural areas. They humbly pray and ask Parliament to reject Canada Post's Corporate Plan.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I have the honour under Standing Order 106 to present a petition signed by residents of Pukatawagan, Pikwitonei, Thompson, Flin Flon, Wanless, and The Pas, Manitoba. The petitioners humbly call upon Parliament to reject the proposed changes to the Patent Act which they believe will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. The petitioners also believe that these measures proposed by the Government will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis. Furthermore, the petitioners express the opinion that this is another example of the Canadian Government making concessions to the United States at the expense of average Canadians as a result of the free trade negotiations.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present six petitions signed by constituents of Bruce Mines, Sault Ste. Maria, Goulais River, Massey, Elliot Lake, Mindemoya, and Manitoulin Island. The petitioners call upon the Government to rescind its legislation concerning the Patent Act which will increase the cost of drugs to ordinary Canadians, and put an unnecessary burden on our health care system while penalizing the poor, the weak, the unhealthy in our society. It is my honour to make this presentation.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Madam Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition under Standing Order 106 signed by residents of Whitehorse, Yukon, Kamloops in British Columbia, and Edmonton, Alberta who are indicating that the Government's proposal to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers, and it will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy the necessary prescription drugs. The petitioners are asking that the Government reconsider its plans to proceed with this legislation, and ask that it reject the legislation before it goes any further.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 67 and 69.

[Text]

CUTBACKS IN RESEARCH PROGRAMS

Question No. 67—Mr. Althouse:

For the fiscal years 1985-86 and 1986-87, were any program, funding and person-year cutbacks imposed on the vital in-house animal production and food safety research programs of Agriculture Canada and, if so, what were they?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): The animal productivity research and food research programs were cut back by means of funding and person-year reductions as follows:

	($000's) 1985-86	1986-87
Animal Productivity Research
Funding	1,011.3	4,744.1
Person-Years	—	13
Food Research
Funding	1,507.5	1,249.3
Person-Years	—	—

AGRICULTURE CANADA RESEARCH STATION, KENTVILLE, N.S.

Question No. 69—Mr. Althouse:

Is there a project to replace the poultry barn at the Kentville, Nova Scotia, Agriculture Canada Research Station and, if so (a) what is its present status (b) what amount was budgeted for it (c) at what time will it be completed?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): (a) Agriculture Canada does not have a project to replace the poultry barn at Kentville. Departmental officers are presently having consultations with the Province of Nova Scotia, the poultry industry and universities to determine the nature and scope of poultry research in the Atlantic provinces. The question of construction has not yet been decided.

(b) Unknown at this time.

(c) Unknown at this time.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. George Hees (for the Minister of Transport) moved that Bill C-39, an Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act and to amend the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, the Maritime Code Act and the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act in consequence thereof, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley—Hants): Madam Speaker, indeed it is a pleasure to speak on behalf of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), who is gainfully employed otherwise in parliamentary business on the West Coast today, on third reading stage of Bill C-39. As Your Honour said, this is an Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act and to amend the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, the Maritime Code Act, and the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act in consequence thereof.

The Canada Shipping Act is the principal legislation covering the shipping activities of foreign ships in Canadian waters and Canadian ships anywhere in the world. It is primarily concerned with safety of life at sea and protection of the marine environment.

Improved safety is a major objective of the Government. It is recognized, for the first time, in the new National Transportation Act which has just been referred to the Standing Committee on Transport. The Government has introduced many measures for the safety of the travelling public. To name a few, the Aeronautics Act was amended in 1985, and regulations on the transport of dangerous goods were implemented in the same year. A national safety code is included in the Motor Vehicle Transport Act, which is now before the House. As Hon. Members know, rail safety legislation is under development, and legislation for a multimodal accident investigation board is being seriously considered. The Bill respecting the Canada Shipping Act is another piece of the comprehensive plan for safety in the transportation system. Hon. Members will recall that the Bill was introduced in the House in the fall of 1985, and that debate on it was ongoing when the House recessed in June and subsequently prorogued in August last year. At that time the Bill was known as Bill C-75.

I believe the purpose of the Bill was supported by all Parties in the House, that is, safety at sea. However, the mechanism of cost recovery was not supported. The Bill before us now does not include the cost recovery clause.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: Bill C-75 was extensively discussed at second reading stage in the House of Commons and in the legislative committee. I compliment the then Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport, the Hon. Member for Dartmouth—Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), who really had the carriage of the Bill before the legislative committee. I also compliment several members of the Opposition, including primarily the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) and the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus), on their very active and constructive interventions at the time. They were very vigorous in their presentations before the legislative committee. It was very interesting to be a part of that process. I compliment that committee and of course its chairperson, the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn), who discharged his very challenging task with unexpected and imaginative decorum.

In this complimentary stage, I also compliment the House Leaders for agreeing to the present House order so that a Bill which had received many hours of debate at second reading and before the legislative committee did not die with the prorogation of Parliament. In effect there was an agreement to bring it back to the House, basically with the removal of Clause 4, so that we could give the Bill third reading and have it passed. I compliment the House Leaders for that agreement. As a result we have third reading stage today.

The matter has been extensively discussed. Over 60 witnesses representing 28 associations and organizations presented briefs to the legislative committee. More than 20 amendments were made to the Bill as originally introduced. As a result of the committee's work, I believe the Bill has been improved and will go a long way, in an era of advancing marine technology, to keeping Canada in the forefront of maritime and marine safety. Those amendments are an indication that the Government and government Members have listened to the constructive suggestions as reflected in the legislation now before the House.

I should now like to comment on some of the important features of the Bill relating to safety and the protection of the environment. During committee hearings the exclusion clause in respect of Canadian mobile offshore drilling units, also known as MODUs, was removed. The Bill now provides that regulations covering certain certification and training, design and construction, and accident prevention for MODUs, when submitted for Governor in Council approval, will be jointly recommended by the Minister of Transport and by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. There is precedent for the interesting innovation of a joint recommendation by two Ministers in Part IV of the Canada Labour Code. While it is an innovative procedure, it is an interim solution, as the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) is considering measures pertaining to mobile offshore drilling units. Hon. Members will recall the omnibus Bill respecting MODUs which was recommended by the royal commission investigation of the Ocean Ranger marine disaster.

Bill C-39 will permit the strengthening of Canadian participation within the international maritime organization and the international shipping community. It will allow Canada to accede to six international conventions and five codes dealing with the certification of masters and seamen, ship constructions, tonnage measurement, liability and compensation, and prevention and control of pollution from ships. The most important conventions are those relating to the standards of training, certification, and watch-keeping for seafarers; the convention for the prevention of pollution from ships, MARPOL; the associated conventions on civil liability for oil pollution damage and for the establishment of an international fund for compensation for oil pollution damage. The codes will also deal with construction and equipment for liquefied gas carriers, chemical carriers, mobile offshore drilling units, and the safety of dynamically supported craft. As you can see, Madam Speaker, the Bill is an omnibus Bill, covering all these areas which can potentially create many problems in the sea.

Penalties for oil pollution will be increased. Existing penalties of $100,000 will be increased to $200,000 and, for contravening the regulations prohibiting the discharge of pollutants, the penalty will be increased from $100,000 to $250,000. The present penalty for a master who does not give reasonable assistance to a pollution prevention officer will be increased to $10,000 from the present $5,000 in the old Bill.

The Bill also revises and improves the scheme for liability and compensation for oil pollution damage. It will allow small claimants, such as fishermen and small boat operators whose property is damaged by oil pollution, to claim directly against our own domestic ship source oil pollution fund without having first to claim against shipowners, as is now the case. This will help eliminate lengthy and costly legal proceedings which now face many small claimants.

I should like to talk about certification of pleasure craft operators for a moment. It appears that members of the boating public and various boating associations believe that certification would be introduced for all types of pleasure craft. I should like to stress that this is not the case, again as a result of the very vigorous debate of the issue in the legislative committee.

In order to reassure the boating public, and in response to concerns expressed by Members and the general public, the Bill has been amended to exempt pleasure yachts of less than 20 metres, and vessels, boats, and craft of any length which are propelled manually by oars or paddles. This gets away from the interesting original interpretation of the definition that one might require certification of a rowing shell. Certainly that was never the intent of the legislators, even though it may have fallen within the imagination of the interpreters. Our intention here to is to clarify the issue of operator licensing for small pleasure craft and at the same time to provide enabling legislation which would allow the Government to respond to future certification requirements because of the size and power of the yachts involved.

I should now like to discuss the most controversial item in the Bill. Clause 4 deals with charges relating to navigational services. As the Minister has mentioned several times, the desirability of putting in place the important safety provisions contained in the Bill have led the Minister to withdraw the cost-recovery clause and re-introduce this legislation. This does not mean, however, that the Government has abandoned its commitment to deficit reduction of which the cost-recovery provisions of the Bill were an integral part. We continue to believe that the users of the Department's facilities and services including those provided by the Coast Guard should pay for a fair share of those incurred costs.

The Minister has accordingly instructed his Departmental officials to consult all interested parties on the principles that should govern the cost-recovery process and on the ways in which these principles could be implemented. The results of this consultation will be reported to the Minister and will be used as the basis for a return to Cabinet for approval to proceed with new enabling legislation for the introduction of charges for services provided by the Coast Guard. It will have to return to the House at some time depending upon consultation and depending upon final agreement and/or the Cabinet's decision.

I think the Government has given proof of its willingness to listen to representations made by witnesses and by all committee members and to react to these representations in a most positive and constructive way. Members of all Parties will understand the importance of this legislation to the shipping community and to shipping activities in Canada. This Bill significantly improves and modernizes a 50-year-old Act that dates back to 1936.

I urge Hon. Members to consider the important safety features which are fundamental to the amendments to the Canada Shipping Act and to recognize the improvements that have been made in this legislation as a result of this Bill. Therefore, in the interests of marine safety, I ask in the name of the Minister that this House give expeditious passage to this legislation which has been long awaited both nationally and internationally.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to rise again to participate in the debate on this Bill. In fact, the last time I had the opportunity to participate in the debate on this Bill it was entitled Bill C-75. At the end of last June, as I recall, I was about seven hours into my speech and was just warming up on the measure called Clause 4, that Draconian clause, when the Speaker, not intentionally I am sure, rose to his feet to inform us that the House was rising for the summer. Unfortunately for the Government, fortunately for the marine industry of Canada, the result of the interruption by the Speaker of my speech, which I now hope to continue today, was that the Bill was lost and had to be re-introduced.

I enjoy hearing from the gentleman who has just spoken. He is a very able Chairman of the Transport Committee.

Mr. Gauthier: Should have been a Minister.

Mr. Tobin: He should have been a Minister of the Crown. The Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan) would have been an effective Minister of the Crown. He is an enjoyable man, a man who has the ability of convincing a person after he has gone through a time of rough waters in a small boat that he has really been on a short ride in a very pleasant craft. He has just described for the House the air of reasonableness surrounding this Bill. He has described the consideration, consultation, care and attention that has been exhibited by the Government with respect to this Bill. I cannot help but chuckle.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud), the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) and I moved numerous motions in many different ways designed to have Clause 4 withdrawn from Bill C-75, the former title of the current Bill. Each and every motion was defeated, though not by the Chairman, being the neutral person he is, the wise and able arbitrator of the Transport Committee. He did not speak, express himself or indicate where he stood. However, each and every attempt to withdraw Clause 4 was defeated by the Conservative majority. I know that if the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants had been an active participant rather than a neutral Chairman, this colossal mistake and delayed awakening to reality would never have occurred because he would have spoken as clearly, intelligently, persuasively and eloquently as he has today about—

Mr. Angus: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) was the Chairman of the legislative committee. The Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants was a member of that Conservative majority.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The point is well taken.

Mr. Tobin: Madam Speaker, I would simply point out that there is a generous side to my nature. There is a deep and abiding kindness in me that prevented me from pointing out that the Hon. Member was a voting member of that committee that defeated motions designed to do away with Clause 4. I thought that it was more of a reflection of the Hon. Member's other role as Chairman of the Transport Committee, so I was excusing him today, given that he has made such a fine introductory speech.

As it now stands, Bill C-39 is an excellent Bill. I agree with the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants on that. It is an excellent Bill in that it deals with reform of the Canada Shipping Act, reform which is long overdue. It makes regulations relevant to conditions today, and for today's shipping environment it is an excellent Bill. It does some rather intelligent things because of amendments, whether they be Liberal, NDP or Conservative amendments, that we were able to have passed as Members working together in a non-partisan way.

We were able to ensure the Gazetting of all new regulations so that those people affected by regulations would have a chance to comment on them and appeal them long before they became the law of the land. That is a very important change that democratizes the power of Cabinet to make changes by Order in Council without coming to the House. We were able to ensure that the many hundreds of thousands of Canada's pleasure craft were not caught up in bureaucratic red tape by exempting them where it was appropriate. Of course, there were dramatic increases in the pollution fines that had been in place in the old Bill.

It is important to note that while the introduction of this Bill without the dreaded Clause 4 would be a major recognition of the difficulty of the shipping industry in Canada, and particularly the St. Lawrence Seaway system, the committee has been responsible for providing for some very severe penalties to be imposed on those shippers who pollute, notwithstanding their ability to pay under the user-pay clause that was withdrawn in recognition of that difficulty. We increased dramatically and severely the fine for those shippers who would pollute the Canadian environment. There has been an increase from $100,000 to $250,000 for the discharge of pollutants. There will be fines of $200,000 for offences under pollution law committed by persons or ships. There will be fines of $10,000 for failing to comply with pollution officers. I think these are very important changes.

I said that the Bill was an excellent Bill insofar as it deals with the subject matter that exists in it. It is a great shame that this Bill does not deal with the recommendations of the Royal Commission on the Ocean Ranger disaster. Every Hon. Member will recall that horrific day when we woke up and heard the news that 84 men had lost their lives on the Ocean Ranger, that unsinkable oil rig which went down in the wild Atlantic waters off Newfoundland. Every Hon. Member will recall the painstaking work that was done, that $15 million exercise which took over nearly three years, by the Royal Commission on the Ocean Ranger disaster. That work was done to find ways to ensure that this kind of loss of life would never happen again to the extent that it was a result of human or mechanical failure.

One of the central recommendations of that Royal Commission, a fundamental pillar of that $15 million report, was that the operation of oil-drilling rigs should be covered under the Canada Shipping Act. It was ludicrous that that kind of activity was governed by the authority of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) when every other ship or vessel, including garbage scows, had to be regulated by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie). It was ludicrous that these rigs, examples of evolutionary technology operating in the most hazardous of conditions, were not covered by the Canada Shipping Act. The Royal Commission said, cover these rigs under that Act, ensure by law, not as a result of goodwill, that the masters on those vessels are properly certified and trained. We know many of the rigs operating off the East Coast have not had properly certified masters as determined by the Canada Shipping Act. Despite the fact we in this Party moved amendments, supported by the NDP, to achieve that inclusion under the Act, despite the fact that I know every member of the committee, even those of the Conservative Party, realized the wisdom of the Royal Commission recommendation, no such provision can be found in Bill C-39.

No one has ever given a rational explanation for that. The Hon. Member who spoke on behalf of the Government in introducing the Bill made reference to an interim measure. The Bill was debated for two years and all that could be found was an interim measure. Let every Member pray to the man above that there is not another disaster while we implement an interim measure.

We should have acted but what prevented us? Was it because we were not able to draft the appropriate regulations? Was it because the companies were opposed to being included under the Canada Shipping Act? Was it because the coastal provinces were opposed? Was it because the people who were going to sea and putting life and limb at risk were opposed to being included under the Act? They were not. Why was it? It was because we have this twisted mentality in Ottawa from time to time which says Ministers' Departments are empires. Every piece of regulatory machinery you can attach to your Department binds your empire and expands your status. The then Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, now the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney), refused to give up that power. It was a ministerial battle between the current Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) and the former Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who refused to give up that bit of authority because it was a reflection on her empire.

Why were we unable to ask ourselves about what was in the best interests of the men and women who work on those rigs?

Why were we unable to ask ourselves what was in the best interests of the industry? Why did ministerial ego prevent a very important amendment from being included in Bill C-39? I raise that today, not to be sour about what I think is an otherwise good Bill but because I want the Government to know, particularly those government Members who serve on the Standing Committee on Transport, that an interim measure is not good enough.

The drive to ensure the proper regulation and protection of workers in the offshore will not be forgotten with the passage of this Bill. The impetus will not be lost today because this Bill, flawed at least in that respect, has passed. Another ten years cannot go by before we provide rational and proper regulations and protection for those who work in one of the most dangerous environments in the world, the waters of the northeast Atlantic. There should not have to be another Ocean Ranger disaster with 84 lives lost. There should not have to be another $15 million story told about that disaster. Parliamentarians have to find the backbone to override the bullying caused by departmental empire building and see that a long overdue amendment to the Bill is passed.

As I said, the withdrawal of Clause 4 is a note of recognition by the Government that you cannot simply proceed with legislation which enables the Government to raise funds in a holus-bolus manner. You cannot ask for authority to impose fees on the basis that you will tell the people concerned later on what the fees are going to be. That is the equivalent of giving someone a rifle, a bullet, and they then load the gun and pull the trigger, without knowing who that person is going to shoot at. No one in his right mind does that. You do not pass a loaded weapon to someone unless you know what he intends to use it for. Here the Government was asking for a loaded weapon in the form of a blank cheque and it would tell the industry later how it was going to use it.

A subcommittee of the Standing Committee on Transport has been struck to look into the problems of the St. Lawrence Seaway. The at least temporary withdrawal of Clause 4 and user-fees will cause some comfort to those operators who are part and parcel of the St. Lawrence Seaway. However, that is not enough. The Seaway has two problems which the Government has to address soon, and separately from this Bill, and they need to be flagged in this debate. I read an article in The Toronto Star the other day which started off, "Canada's heartland, Ontario and Quebec, is fed by a thick vein of filth, the St. Lawrence River". That is an environmental reality we have to come to grips with. We have dealt with it in this Bill, to some extent. We have dramatically increased the fines for discharging pollutants from ships. However, we have to find a way to deal with the pollution being dumped in the river by companies who operate along its banks.

There is a second problem. Even as the Government announces it is withdrawing Clause 4 it has in the same breath said it is going to consult, and that we applaud, but it intends to come back as soon as possible with an amendment to impose user-fees. Traffic along the St. Lawrence Seaway has dropped dramatically, 40 per cent or more, over the last handful of years. At a time when Canada is pursuing a user-pay philosophy for services which have historically and traditionally been provided by the Canadian Coast Guard through navigational aids and so on, the U.S. Government is taking a different attitude. It is moving towards toll decreases. It recognizes that the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority is not just another Crown corporation which has to show a profit at the end of the year. It is really an intricate part of Canada's industrial heartland. You cannot, in a ledger or bottom-line style, impose user fees on a service that is in decline and not affect the industrial strategy of the country.

I, for one, eagerly await the report of the subcommittee of the Department of Transport on the St. Lawrence Seaway to see what recommendations it will come forward with. I hope the Government is eagerly awaiting it as well and will be prepared to act. Otherwise, the system which is now in decline is not likely to survive as a major transportation artery beyond the turn of the century. That is not at all an exaggeration. The pessimist would say that the death-knell has already been rung. I do not believe it. It is up to government and Parliamentarians to act.

It was worrisome for me to note in today's Estimates that the budget of Marine Atlantic has dropped by $70 million over last year. Marine Atlantic provides a service rather than a sightseeing route by the sea of Atlantic Canada. I am talking about the ferry service. It is not the pleasant way to go out and get some salt air and see some fine scenery in Atlantic Canada. It may be for tourists, and we welcome them in droves, but for the people of Atlantic Canada, Marine Atlantic and its ferry services is the primary and, in many cases, only means of transportation.

The $70 million cut announced today in the Estimates, accompanied by dramatic rate increases over the last two years, is another unpleasant signal to the regions. It is the kind of thing which causes a gentleman whom I do not accuse of always being the most rational in the world, Premier Peckford of Newfoundland, to make noises about separatist sentiment. I have no time for those who would seek to cure the ills of their particular region, be it in the West, in Atlantic Canada or in Quebec, by raising the spectre of separatism. I have no time for that kind of talk. However, when I hear it raised I assume there is a problem. This cut-back announced today is part of the problem.

The budget of the Canadian Coast Guard has been cut by $9 million. Under the proposed Clause 4 of Bill C-75 the fishermen of Atlantic Canada run the risk of receiving a bill if they thought they were in trouble, radioed the Coast Guard, and subsequently found that they were not in trouble. They run the risk of being billed for asking for emergency help. A man in a boat on the high seas who was not sure whether or not he was going down might hesitate to ask for help because he may have to pay for asking the Government of this great marine nation to come to his aid. Clause 4 is gone, but the cut-backs were announced today in the Estimates tabled not two hours ago by the Minister responsible for the Treasury Board. That will have a negative impact on our ability to help men in trouble.

I had a very unpleasant and difficult task to perform last month. I had to go to the small community of 125 people called Bar Harbour. I had to go into a house and sit at a table with four women, all widows, who had been married to four brothers who fished one boat. They were lost off the south coast of Newfoundland adjacent to the riding of my colleague, the Member for Burin—St. George's (Mr. Price).

I have been in this place for seven years. We sometimes get blinded by the glare of the chandeliers, the richness of the wood paneling and the lustre of the carpet. We tend to think about the the Coast Guard only in terms of numbers. We tend to think about service only in terms of political debate and, to be very frank, scoring political points. Sometimes it takes that kind of meeting to make us realize that $9 million is more than a number, more than an adjustment to the bottom line. A decrease of $9 million in the budget of the Canada Coast Guard represents the ability of the excellent men and women who work for Canada's Coast Guard to respond to those in distress. We have again today taken away a considerable measure of the Coast Guard's ability to respond and install the navigational aids which are necessary for safe shipping. I hope the Government will reconsider this. There are many other cuts that I could talk about, many of which are considerably larger than $9 million. However, I earmark this one and hope the Government will consider withdrawing such a cut in such an essential service.

With these remarks I conclude my comments on Bill C-39. I urge that the Bill be passed as agreed in discussions between all three Parties after my colleague, the transport critic, says a few words. I would like to join with the Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants in congratulating all Members, including my colleague, the Member for Westmoreland Kent, and my colleagues in the New Democratic and Conservative Parties who worked on this Bill. I believe that this is a good piece of work. However, at the first opportunity it must deal with the problems of the oil and gas industry.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Madam Speaker, today is a very significant day for back-benchers and opposition Members in this House. We have before us at third reading stage, by unanimous agreement, Bill C-39, which is the infamous Bill C-75 recycled. I say it is a good day for back-benchers because we, particularly on the opposition side, have been able to convince one of the largest Governments in the history of this country to change its approach to the very fundamental issue of cost recovery in the marine sector.

I would like to refer to the history of this Bill in a parallel action, which sets my Party apart from that of the Government on the issue of the marine sector. The Government made a conscious decision that it had to extract more money from the users of the marine service, particularly those operating within the St. Lawrence Seaway-Great Lakes waterway system. I, on the other hand, along with my colleagues, believed that we first had to examine the problems of the St. Lawrence Seaway and the marine sector to learn what was preventing them from making a buck, from keeping people employed, and from moving goods from east to west, or west to east.

To this end, as long ago as July 10, 1985 I wrote to the chairman of the Transport Committee who spoke on behalf of the Government today, requesting a full scale review of the Seaway. Later that month my colleague, the Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp), and I wrote to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) outlining major problems on the Seaway and asking for a comprehensive approach to be taken. The Government's response was the introduction on September 24, 1985 of Bill C-75, a Bill to amend the Canada Shipping Act, among others. That Bill contained one contentious clause. It was Clause 4 which provided the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) with the power to levy charges for Coast Guard services. Those charges could be up to 100 per cent of the actual cost of providing that service.

While those of us who deal with Bills that come before the House realize that it is not easy to receive a Bill the same day that it is tabled, I managed to get a copy of it before returning to Thunder Bay. Immediately upon reviewing the Bill, I knew that Clause 4 presented a severe threat to the viability of the Great Lakes and St. Lawrence Seaway. This included the viability of the Port of Thunder Bay, part of which I represent, as well as other ports along the system. It was a threat to coal miners in British Columbia, potash miners in Saskatchewan and grain farmers in the West. It was a threat to end users like Ontario Hydro, farmers who use potash products and container carriers who move part way through the St. Lawrence Seaway system. I wrote to the industry warning them about Clause 4 of the Bill. I asked them to review that clause and prepare for what might be a major battle to protect their interests.

Second reading debate of the Bill took place on October 15. The Minister of Transport began with the normal overview of the intentions of his legislation. The Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) spoke on behalf of the Liberal Party. He spoke entirely about the impact of increased shipping in the North, especially with respect to Lancaster Sound. In fact, his concluding words were, as reported at page 7623 of Hansard:

> Therefore, the Minister of Transport and his Government owe this House as well as the affected communities a thorough explanation as to what the long-term policy of this Government is in relation to year-round oil tanker traffic in Arctic waters. This is the basic policy direction which has to be understood on second reading of Bill C-75.

Clearly, the spokesman for the Liberal Party had not been briefed or did not fully understand the issue before us. Other Members who spoke later began to deal with the issue, and I appreciate their support in that campaign.

Let me return to the chronology of this Bill. The Legislative Committee, chaired very capably by the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) from my Party, had its first organizational meeting on October 22, 1985. It did not meet again until January 23, 1986, when we met the Minister of Transport.

In the meantime, the four members of the Transport Committee, including myself, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), the Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) and the Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid), wrote a letter to the Chairman of the Transport Committee asking for a review of the Seaway pursuant to Standing Order 72(b). That letter was distributed to the industry early in the new year. The Legislative Committee held eight public hearings between January 30 and February 13 where we heard 28 witnesses. Quite frankly, all but one of those witnesses strongly opposed Clause 4 and the cost recovery mandate.

I want to recall my speech in the House during second reading of this Bill because one reason for opposition to this clause was the matter of process. Opponents of this clause believe that no Minister should have the power to unilaterally charge any price and that there should be prior consultation. They wanted to know what this clause would mean to them as shippers, carriers or communities that depend on shipping for their livelihood.

Let me quote what I said during that debate on Tuesday, October 15, 1985, as reported at page 7628 of Hansard:

> What I would like to see happen is for the Minister to remove voluntarily Clause 4 from the Bill and refer it and all other user fees in the marine industry to the Standing Committee on Transport so that the philosophical aspect can be dealt with. In that way we can have hearings focusing on the impact of user fees on marine transportation.
> That would allow this Bill to go through in the expedient manner that he has asked for. In that way the positive aspects of the Bill can be put in place, as they most appropriately should be, with the controversial element removed from the Bill, thus giving us an opportunity to examine that issue with the industry, with the users, with the workers.

In that way we can take a good hard look at the whole question of the cost of using the Seaway system and the costs of using our ports. It also will allow us to work with the United States in doing these things in concert.

The Government finally accepted that recommendation some 16 months later. It had an opportunity at that time to remove Clause 4 from the Bill by accepting the words of caution from opposition Members, primarily myself, and allow the rest of what is basically good legislation to proceed. I guarantee that if the Government had done so, the Bill would have been passed in the House by April, 1986 at the latest. All of these important steps to upgrade Canada's maritime law, which has not been upgraded for 50 years, could be in place today.

Although this Bill will pass today, it still must receive Senate approval and Royal Assent. The regulations must be written and gazetted. These important changes will not be in place for some months to come. The Government made a grave strategic error by bootlegging in Clause 4, such a fundamental philosophical clause on cost recovery, to a Bill that was designed as a technical mechanism to bring Canada into the 21st century in terms of marine law. If there is any blame for the delay in improving this Bill, it lies with the Government. I regret that government Members on the Legislative Committee were not prepared to listen to representations made to them. Unfortunately, they did as they were told and retained Clause 4, which I sincerely believe they knew was wrong.

Since the decision to reintroduce this Bill without Clause 4, two members of that Legislative Committee have risen in the House to say the Bill ought to be brought back without Clause 4. While I applaud that gesture, they would not have done so had it not been for the coalition that developed. It was a diverse coalition of shippers, carriers, communities, labour and management.

During the last week of June, the sub-committee on the St. Lawrence Seaway held hearings in Thunder Bay. Although the hearings did not concern Bill C-75, everyone who made representations said that Clause 4 of the Bill had to go. These witnesses included the radicals, some New Democrats in Thunder Bay, the Chamber of Commerce, the Labour Council as well as two past Conservative federal candidates. They were members of City Council, they were Liberals and New Democrats. The community of Thunder Bay united in opposition to this particular clause. The community set aside philosophy and partisan politics because it realized it is so important to our survival and we have to fight against it. The community united just like other communities elsewhere along the system. Fishermen in Atlantic Canada and on the West Coast, shippers and carriers all pulled together and extraordinary lengths were gone to in order to convince the Government of the error of its ways. In fact, I do not know for sure but I have been told of individuals placing in the inside pocket of the Prime Minister letters directed to him. This was done by passing staff, aides and so on who were basically saying: "Smarten up. What you are doing is going to hurt us".

I am pleased today that we have reached the point of seeing good legislation brought in without Clause 4 tagging along. I know that people in the Great Lakes area and the St. Lawrence Seaway will be very pleased about this. However, they also know the battle is not over. We still have to go through the process of negotiatons with the Government on cost recovery in the marine sector, and these people are betting it is going to take a year and a half to two years and then what will happen is we will have another election. They know these folks are not going to be around so they do not have to worry about this kind of Bill being brought forward, at least by this Government.

There are two other areas in the Bill I would like to refer to briefly because they are important matters which I raised in committee. The amendments were not accepted by the Government members. One amendment was withdrawn because of a statement made by the counsel to the Department, which advice we have since found was erroneous. There are two areas to which I would encourage the Government to give consideration. I put it in that context because I realize on third reading I am not allowed to make amendments.

We heard from a group of aboriginal peoples who were concerned with the impact of travel through the Arctic by ship. They were concerned about the fact that these people who are guiding the ship, while they are very well qualified technically in terms of getting from point A to point B and doing so without endangering the lives of the passengers and crew or the vessel itself, did not understand the nuances of the Arctic. They did not understand migration patterns of the wild life which may in fact be severely interrupted by the passage of a vessel breaking through the ice, or the nomadic patterns of the hunters. What the aboriginal people recommended, and what I tried to put forward in an amendment in committee, was that provision be made for what I refer to as "special aboriginal guides" to be placed on those vessels which are travelling through the Arctic waters. I think the Government would be doing an excellent service to those peoples if it brought back a Bill at a later date which deals with that matter by itself.

There was one area where there was some contention within the committee dealing with the situation where orders go from the shore which supersede the orders of the captain or pilot. There was concern expressed by the Canadian Merchants Services Guild, which is one of the organizations which appeared before the committee, that there was some ambiguity in the wording of the legislation. We received just recently from Mr. Jacques Rousseau of the Law and Government Division, Research Branch of the Library of Parliament, who was assigned to the Senate Committee on Bill C-75. He reviewed the testimony before the legislative committee and offered the following:

Clause 70 of Bill C-75 was incorporated in the portion of the Bill dealing with vessel traffic service. This clause proposed to create offences in this area of the shipping legislation. It also proposed, with regard to some of those offences, that the following defence to a charge be provided for by proposed section 635.19(2) of the Bill:

It is a defence to a charge under subsection (1) of contravening a regulation made under paragraph 635.16(c), subsection 635.18(3) or a direction referred to in paragraph (1)(c) that the master, pilot or person in charge of the deck watch of the ship had reasonable grounds to believe that compliance would have imperilled life, the ship or any other ship or any property, and, in the case of contravening a direction referred to in paragraph (1)(c), notified the person who gave the direction as soon as possible of the contravention and of the reasons therefor.

The Canadian Merchant Services Guild wanted this proposed subsection to be amended so that the master, pilot or person in charge of the deck watch would be able to plead a defence of "due diligence".

Mr. Rousseau stated that the amendment I moved during the clause-by-clause study of Bill C-75 was designed to achieve that very purpose. At that point, Mr. Popp, the General Counsel of the Department of Transport, Admiralty and Maritime Law, made the following statement:

The only observation I would make is that we do not see how the wording of the proposed amendment is an improvement over the very precise language that you now have in proposed (subsection 635.19 (2)).

In other words, I am suggesting that the words in the motion seem to be more vague than the very precise language in the bill.

Mr. Rousseau continues:

The explanation given by Mr. Popp suggests that the defence of "due diligence" and the defence provided by proposed subsection 635.19(2) of Bill C-75—and now Bill C-39.

—are the same and that, consequently, an amendment providing for the defence of "due diligence" as you moved is useless. If such were the case, it is clear that the amendment you moved was not opposed by the Government as a matter of principle, but rather because the wording of proposed subsection 635.19(2) was already providing for the purpose sought to be achieved by your amendment.

However, as I will now undertake to explain, the defence of "due diligence" and the defence provided for in proposed subsection 635.19(2) are two different things.

The defence provided for in proposed subsection 635.19(2) may be described as a statutory defence of necessity. Proposed subsection 635.19(2) offers a defence of necessity in cases of wilful violations of a regulation, for instance where the captain had reasonable grounds to believe that compliance would have imperilled life. The defence of "due diligence" is one that permits the person charged to explain that despite the fact he or she took all reasonable measures to comply, apparent commission of the offence occurred without his or her having intended to do so.

At law, there is a presumption that the defence of "due diligence" is available to the person charged. However, by its very nature, a presumption can be overturned by the language—

I wonder, Madam Speaker, if I could have just a few more minutes by unanimous consent?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member may continue.

Mr. Angus: I thank Hon. Members and you, Madam Speaker.

—used in the statute prescribing the offence. In the case of proposed subsection 635.19(2), it is not clear, to say the least, whether the words used in proposed subsection 635.19(1) leave open to persons eventually charged the possibility of availing themselves of the benefit of the defence of "due diligence".

Clearly there is a dispute between the counsel for the Department and the interpretation of the researcher of the Library of Parliament. I wrote to the Minister's office on Friday last and requested this be reviewed with a mind to bringing in an amendment today but, obviously, because of consultation we have had, that cannot happen. Therefore, I would encourage the Minister to have his officials review this matter, as well as the matter of the aboriginal guides, and bring in separate legislation. I know I can speak for my caucus when I say that we would give fairly quick and speedy passage to the two amendments. I am sure other Hon. Members will consider that as well.

I would like to reiterate my pleasure at being here today in the House speaking to this very important matter. It shows that a back-bench Member of Parliament, an opposition Member of Parliament, can have a major influence if he or she does the homework, develops the coalition and the lobbying and can convince the Government to change its approach with respect to a particular piece of legislation. I wish to thank my colleagues on the legislative committee. We had some rocky times. We felt we were being pushed a little bit too fast for our liking. However, we are all colleagues and I appreciate the opportunity to be able to work with them. I know that at 3.30 p.m. today we will be doing just that when we commence our deliberations with respect to the deregulation legislation. I am sure there will be a great deal of conflict with respect to that legislation as well.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been discussions among the Parties with respect to the most expeditious way of utilizing the time of the House while at the same time accomodating the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) who wishes to make a speech on Bill C-39. What we propose is that we adjourn the debate on Bill C-39 at this point in time until after Question Period and proceed to discuss report stage of Bill C-6. If, at the conclusion of his speech—and we have not by any means finalized this—the question is put and a division is requested then we suggest that that division be deferred until 6.15 p.m. this evening at which time we will have dealt with the division of the amendment of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) with respect to the Budget.

With the unanimous consent of the House I suggest that the debate be now adjourned.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

ATLANTIC ACCORD—CANADA-NEWFOUNDLAND

MEASURE TO IMPLEMENT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-6, an Act to implement an agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador on offshore petroleum resource management and revenue sharing and to make related and consequential amendments, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, of course we are at the report stage of Bill C-6 and since the House is sitting past one o'clock our critic is not here now to proceed with the report stage debate of Bill C-6. Personally I would like the House to consider that the agreement we made—

[English]

The deal we had with respect to Bill C-39 and Bill C-6 is that the critics of the various Parties would be in the House to speak. They are not here at the moment, but I know that they are en route. At least I know that the Hon. Member who speaks on behalf of the Liberal Party is on his way to the House. I wonder if the House would see fit to take its time and to give us a few minutes to allow the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) to get here. We could proceed at this time with the amendments, or at least the tabling of them.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I wish to point out that I am the critic for my Party in this particular area. I am ready to proceed. I think the best way we can proceed is to table the amendments first. Since there are so many clauses and a great deal of material with respect to them I agree with the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). Perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary could take us through the amendments in an orderly fashion and provide us with an explanation.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): There are eight report stage motions on today's Order Paper and Notices in amendment to Bill C-6, an Act to implement an agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador on offshore petroleum resource management and revenue sharing and to make related and consequential amendments.

Motions Nos. 1, 3 and 7 will be grouped for debate. Motion No. 1 will be voted on separately. A vote on Motion No. 3 will apply to Motion No. 7.

Motion No. 2 standing in the name of the Hon. Minister appears to seek to introduce a new concept into the Bill. However, there is some doubt in my mind. Therefore, I have decided to let the motion go forward.

Motion No. 4 will be debated and voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 5 and 6 will be grouped for debate but voted on separately.

Motion No. 8 will be debated and voted on separately.

Hon. Michel Côté (for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved:

Motion No. 1.

That Bill C-6 be amended in Clause 8 by striking out lines 26 to 30 at page 6 and substituting the following therefor:

"(2) Subject to section 101, the Canada Petroleum Resources Act and the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act and any regulations made under those Acts do not apply within the offshore area."

Motion No. 3.

That Bill C-6 be amended in Clause 101 by striking out lines 18 to 34 at page 53 and substituting the following therefor:

"101. (1) Part VII of the Canada Petroleum Resources Act applies, with such modifications as the circumstances require, within the offshore area.

(2) The rates fixed by the Federal Minister pursuant to section 80 of the Canada Petroleum Resources Act, as they apply to the offshore area, are subject to approval by the Board.

(3) Notwithstanding subsection 78(2) of the Canada Petroleum Resources Act, one of the members of the Environmental Studies Management Board established by subsection 78(1) of that Act is to be appointed by the Board on the recommendation of the Provincial Minister.

(4) The Environmental Studies Management Board referred to in subsection (3) shall submit to the Board a copy of every annual report and recommendation submitted to the Federal Minister pursuant to paragraph 79(1)(d) or (e) of the Canada Petroleum Resources Act at the same time the report or recommendation is submitted to the Federal Minister."

Motion No. 7.

That Bill C-6 be amended in Clause 236 by striking out lines 1 to 39 at page 139 and lines 1 to 40 at page 140 and substituting the following therefor:

"236. Notwithstanding section 49 of the Canada Oil and Gas Act as it read immediately before the coming into force of this section, where an exploration agreement in relation to any portion of the offshore area was entered into or negotiations in respect thereof were completed under the Canada Oil and Gas Act on or after February 11, 1985 and before the coming into force of Part VII of the Canada Petroleum Resources Act,

(a) the interest owner shall deposit for payment into the relevant fund an amount determined in accordance with subsection 81(2) of the Canada Petroleum Resources Act; and

(b) where, prior to the coming into force of this section, there has been deposited for payment into the relevant fund in relation to that exploration agreement an amount determined in accordance with section 49 of the Canada Oil and Gas Act as it read immediately before the coming into force of this section, the Minister may refund to the interest owner an amount equal to the difference between that amount and the amount required to be deposited under paragraph (a)."

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I wish to make a few remarks on both the amendments recommended by the legislative committee, as well as the amendments recently tabled by the Government.

The amendments recommended by the legislative committee fall into one of three categories, those arising from Bill C-5, those of a technical nature, and those of a policy nature.

In the first category the vast majority of these amendments are identical to those made to Bill C-5, the Canada Petroleum Resources Act. Since Bill C-6 incorporates Bill C-5 in its entirety, it is necessary to make similar amendments to Bill C-6 to ensure that the two pieces of legislation are consistent.

In the second category there are a number of amendments which are technical in nature, or which are made to ensure that the French and English versions of the Bill are in conformity.

The third category contains amendments recommended by the committee of a policy nature.

There is an amendment to Clause 142 of the Bill. This clause provides for an oil and gas committee whose main function is to review, at the request of an interest holder, any decision made by the Canada-Newfoundland Offshore Petroleum Board. The amendment clarifies the membership of the committee by excluding any members of the board or their staff from sitting on it. This will ensure that the review committee does not include members who work for the organization whose decision is being reviewed. Otherwise, this could be perceived as the board reviewing its own decisions.

There is an amendment to Clause 152 which provides that federal, rather than provincial legislation governing industrial relations would apply to floating exploration and production structures. This reflects the agreement with the province that the intent of the legislation is not to cause any decertification of unions when an offshore structure moves from offshore Newfoundland to offshore Nova Scotia or vice versa. Without this amendment there is a risk that such decertification could occur.

The amendment to Clause 232(4) establishes a sunset provision with respect to the operation of the offshore development fund committee. The mandate of the committee is to monitor and review the implementation of the development fund. The committee would terminate three years after the last payment is disbursed from the fund. This accords with a provision in the development fund agreement which requires all records to be maintained for this same three-year period. It is advisable to maintain the committee for this three-year period, but no longer.

The final policy amendment is to Clause 236 which deals with the payment of levies by interest owners for the environmental studies research fund. Under the new regime established by Bill C-5, interest owners would be liable only for back levies applied during the two years preceding the ownership of the interest. This amendment provides a transition provision to ensure that this part of the legislation is applicable from the date when the Atlantic Accord was assigned. This will ensure that new interest owners, who entered into an exploration agreement between the signing of the Accord and the passage of Bill C-6, will be liable only for the two years of back levies.

I also wish to comment on eight amendments which the Government is introducing at this report stage. Four of these simply replace a reference to the Canada Oil and Gas Act with a reference to the Canada Petroleum Resources Act, the replacement legislation. This replacement legislation, Bill C-5, only received third reading by the Senate on November 6, 1986. Under legislative drafting procedures, Bill C-6 could not refer to the new Act until it had been passed by the Senate.

Three other amendments are also of a technical nature. The amendment to Clause 232(4) changes a citation to the provincial Act which had been incorrectly numbered. The amendment to Clause 239 removes a provision for the coming into force of several other clauses of this legislation. These other clauses will come into force automatically when this legislation is proclaimed. They incorporate sections of the Canada Petroleum Resources Act which has been recently proclaimed.

The third technical amendment is to Clause 233. This amendment is to ensure that the payments from the offshore development fund will be disbursed in conformity with federal government accounting practices.

The eighth amendment is of a policy nature. The amendment to Clause 16 establishes a requirement for the board to purchase liability insurance, the premium which would be paid for by the two governments. As members are aware, it is standard practice for a corporation to carry liability insurance, and to provide indemnity for its board members. However, if the Canada-Newfoundland board is unable to obtain total insurance coverage, an indemnification provision would apply. Under this provision, the two governments would indemnify the board members against any costs and amounts awarded against them, as long as the board members were acting honestly, in good faith, and within the scope of their duties.

I recommend that all Members of the House support the amendments proposed by the committee and the Government. These amendments will ensure that the legislation is technically sound, is in accordance with the Canada Petroleum Resources Act, and reflects the agreements which we have reached with the co-signer of the Atlantic Accord, the Government of Newfoundland.

In closing, I wish to thank my colleagues, the critic for the Liberal Party, and the critic for the NDP, for their co-operation in allowing the report stage of this Bill to receive quick passage.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Madam Speaker, I wish to make a few comments regarding the report stage of this Bill. First, I wish to say that it is unfortunate that this Bill has taken so long. I do not mean that as a criticism of the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, because he has worked quite well on this. Had it not been for the Hon.

Parliamentary Secretary the report would probably not presently be at the report stage. The opposition Parties have moved quickly on this Bill. The Province of Newfoundland is very anxious to receive some funding under the Canada-Newfoundland Offshore Development Fund Agreement. As far as its own contribution is concerned, it has had these moneys for quite some time.

I wish to mention two of the amendments proposed by the Government. First, Madam Speaker, you have already mentioned Motion No. 2 which is correctly perceived to be introducing a new concept. It is important that the board members be protected from possible liability, but this could certainly be done with a private agreement between the governments. The motion that I am concerned about is not mentioned in this particular grouping. I presume that we will be talking about amendment No. 6 later. Is that correct, Madam Speaker? The grouping presently is Nos. 1, 3, and 6.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Nos. 1, 3, and 7.

Mr. MacLellan: I wish to say that I hope that this Bill receives passage through report stage today. It is important that it not be delayed any longer, and that the people of Newfoundland have the benefit of the funding that will be forthcoming under the Canada-Newfoundland Offshore Development Agreement.

• (1330)

Mr. Shields: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Motion No. 6 is a technical amendment to Clause 233 to be in accord with the actual accounting practices of the Office of the Comptroller General. There is no necessity to have specific language appropriating funds. It is sufficient to have a statutory provision authorizing payment of funds from the Consolidated Revenue Fund. It is technical in nature, just to keep in line with our practices.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I will deal with Motion No. 6 later. This afternoon I will have an opportunity to give a speech on third reading which will deal with what I think about the Bill and about the disastrous energy situation in the East Coast off Newfoundland and Nova Scotia.

Before beginning discussion on these motions I wanted to raise a matter at the earliest stage of debate after committee hearings, which is now. I am not very satisfied with the manner in which the Bill was dealt with in committee. As a matter of fact, I have been in the House for almost eight years and it was the worst I have ever seen. It was a disgrace.

There were two large Bills containing 200 clauses each. One was Bill C-5 and the other was Bill C-6. The first Bill went through the House and to a legislative committee. It was a Bill dealing with the entire offshore regime which the federal Government controls, that is, the North, the Pacific, the Atlantic—the entire offshore. It mainly dealt with Canada lands. The federal Government controls the North, so it really dealt with a new oil and gas regime for the northern territories. We debated the Bill for a long time. We in the New Democratic Party took a long time in the committee to force the Government to listen to the native point of view. As with many things, such as energy in the North, native people were frozen out. By taking our time on Bill C-5, native people representing different native organizations, as well as the Inuit and other native people from northern Quebec, came to the committee. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will listen to my remarks. These people appeared before the committee. We forced a hearing for them before the committee in the fine sense of parliamentary tradition. The Government did not buy all their amendments, but at least they had a hearing, which made the Government and its bureaucrats think about some of the concerns of native people in the North vis-à-vis energy development. The Bill then went through.

The next thing which happened was that Bill C-6 went before the committee. I indicated to the Government that we would not delay it. Since many of its provisions were similar to the previous Bill, and since it dealt specifically with the East Coast offshore, as the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) just said, and other Members have said, we thought the Newfoundland Government needed the Bill and the money, and we wanted to put it through. I was not about to delay it in committee. However, I pointed out an article by a learned professor at Osgoode Hall in Toronto which appeared in the Law Journal and raised some very interesting constitutional matters that may cause the Government of Canada, no matter who is in Government, some problems in the future. I thought it was proper to take at least two days on the Bill.

Hon. Members opposite seem to be talking about something, Madam Speaker. I wonder if it would be possible to have some order. If they are not interested, perhaps they could go outside and talk.

Let me continue. I was a member of the committee dealing with Bill C-6, with the present Parliamentary Secretary conducting it through the committee. At 5 p.m. on the day we were debating the Bill in committee we agreed that we would sit until 5.30 and that consideration of the Bill would be finished on the following day. I then left the committee because I had to attend another meeting. We must remember that there are 210 Conservative Members of Parliament, 30 members of the NDP, and 40 members of the Liberal Party. There are many meetings and it is difficult for us in this Parliament. We have had pretty good co-operation from the Government in other matters, despite its large majority. As I said, the committee was to sit until 5.30. The Liberal Member who appeared before the committee left at 5.20 because apparently his father had heart problems and he had to leave; it was an emergency. Instead of the committee finishing at 5.30, the Parliamentary Secretary and others made motions that the committee wind up the whole Bill and go through every clause. Only Conservative Members were present when the committee wound up its consideration of the Bill by 6 p.m. and pushed it through. In my view that was unparliamentary. If one cannot take a person's word, that person is very diminished in my view.

The committee was chaired by the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor). It is a matter of public record who else was on it. It was pushed through by the Parliamentary Secretary. If I were the Prime Minister of Canada, I would not promote that Parliamentary Secretary. Thankfully for him I do not have any choice in that matter. However, this matter should be raised in Parliament, and I will send it to the Prime Minister's Office. How can they expect co-operation from us—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. I understand the Hon. Member's concern. I am sure he has many ways to let it be known. However, I am trying to understand how it relates directly to Motions Nos. 1, 3, and 7 which are now being debated in the House. Perhaps the Hon. Member would indicate that relationship to the Chair.

Mr. Waddell: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you for letting me put it on the record. Parliament works by people co-operating in Parliament. When those kinds of tricks are played, why should people co-operate? It seems to me that co-operation is what the parliamentary system is about. It is about fighting hard, but essentially co-operating and playing clean. A day will come when the Parliamentary Secretary will need a favour or some help from the Opposition, and he will have to search deep for it.

Because of the interests of Newfoundland and the interests of the other people of Atlantic Canada, the Bill should go through. Therefore, we will not oppose the particular amendments which appear to be technical ones. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys may have something to say on Motion No. 6, but as far as I can see, Motions Nos. 1, 2, and 7 are technical amendments and we are prepared to let them go through. We have not forgotten what happened in committee, and some day those people responsible will pay for it.

Mr. Morrissey Johnson (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Madam Speaker, since the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) wished to set the record straight, and rather than immediately getting into what I wanted to say about the Bill before us now, I should like to set the record straight.

I was on the committee that dealt with Bill C-94, Bill C-92, and Bill C-6. If the Hon. Member had given the co-operation which he said he did not get, Bill C-94 would have been passed prior to the summer recess.

Bill C-6 is important to Newfoundland. It is also on record in the minutes of the legislative committee that I asked the Hon. Member whether he was speaking for himself or on behalf of his Party. I wanted to know if I should go back to Newfoundland to say who was really holding up the legislation that was so vital to the people of Newfoundland.

As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Athabasca and Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Shields) has stated so clearly, the amendments to Bill C-6 deserve the complete support of the House. I am glad Hon. members of the Opposition have agreed to give it quick passage.

These important amendments to this historic legislation have been given careful consideration by both the legislative committee and the Government. The amendments described by the Parliamentary Secretary strengthen this Bill by building on the spirit of co-operation and fairness that has guided the Governments of Canada and Newfoundland during the drafting of this proposed legislation. It has been two years now since the signing of the Atlantic Accord between the Government of Canada and Newfoundland. Bill C-6 will enshrine that federal-provincial agreement in law.

This legislation establishes a clear set of rules for the exploration and development of the rich petroleum resources off the shore of Newfoundland. The impediments to the development of petroleum resources off Canada's East Coast have been removed. Companies that recognize this area's resource potential can invest in its development knowing the rules of the game before risking the vast amounts of capital necessary for such a development. This legislation establishes a $300-million offshore development fund and this joint federal-provincial fund has already committed $37 million for investment in education and training of Newfoundlanders for technical jobs in the offshore.

The amendments to Bill C-6 which are before the House today will ensure that this legislation is consistent with related legislation, and specifically with Bill C-5, the Canada Petroleum Resources Act. It will ensure that Bill C-6 is fair to interest holders, workers and both levels of Government.

One of the amendments tabled today, which was recommended by the legislative committee, will ensure fair treatment to companies operating off the shore of Newfoundland. Now appeals to the Canada-Newfoundland Offshore Petroleum Board will be reviewed by a committee comprised of persons not directly affiliated with the Board.

Another amendment recommended by the legislative committee will protect the rights of workers on floating offshore structures. This amendment provides that federal legislation governing industrial relations would apply to floating offshore structures. This reflects the agreement with the province that the intent of legislation is not to cause decertification of unions after an offshore structure has moved from offshore Newfoundland to offshore Nova Scotia or vice versa. Finally, amendments to this legislation improve the management of offshore development by ensuring that disbursements from the joint offshore development fund conform with the federal Government's accounting practices.

Bill C-6 is legislation that reflects the co-operation and good will that exists between the Governments of Canada and Newfoundland regarding the concerns we share for the environment, for workers, particularly Newfoundlanders, and for the risks taken by the private sector.

In closing, I would like to thank the legislative committee for its valuable contribution to this legislation which deserves the unanimous support of the House.

Motion No. 1 (Mr. Masse) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt Motion No. 3?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 3 (Mr. Masse) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It was agreed that the vote on Motion No. 3 would apply to Motion No. 7.

Motion No. 7 (Mr. Masse) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The next motion is Motion No. 2.

(b) by adding immediately after line 10 at page 10, the following:

(2) The Board shall purchase and maintain insurance for the benefit of a person who is a present or former member, officer or employee of the Board, and the heirs or legal representatives of that person, against any liability incurred by that person in the capacity as such a member, officer or employee, except where the liability relates to a failure to act honestly and in good faith with regard to the best interests of the Board.

(3) For greater certainty, the expenditures of the Board associated with purchasing and maintaining the insurance referred to in subsection (2) shall form part of the budget or revised budget of the Board in respect of a fiscal year.

(4) Notwithstanding subsection (2), where the Board has established to the satisfaction of the Federal Minister the impossibility of purchasing and maintaining the insurance referred to in subsection (2), the Government of Canada shall, subject to subsection (6), indemnify a person who is a present or former member, officer or employee of the Board, or the heirs or legal representatives of that person, against all costs, charges and expenses, including an amount paid to settle an action or satisfy a judgment, reasonably incurred in respect of any civil, criminal or administrative action or proceeding to which that person is a party by reason of being or having been such a member, officer or employee, if that person

(a) acted honestly and in good faith with a view to the best interests of the Board; and

(b) in the case of any criminal or administrative action or proceeding that is enforced by a monetary penalty, believed, on reasonable grounds, that the conduct in issue was lawful.

(5) Where the Board has purchased and maintained insurance referred to in subsection (2), the Government of Canada shall indemnify a person referred to in that subsection, or the heirs or legal representatives of that person, for any liability incurred by that person in accordance with this section to the extent that the insurance purchased for the benefit of that person does not cover such liability.

(6) The Government of Canada is not obliged to indemnify anyone pursuant to subsection (4) against an amount paid to settle an action unless the amount so paid was approved by the Government of Canada.

(7) Where the Government of the Province has indemnified a person referred to in subsection (4), or the heirs or legal representatives of that person, pursuant to section 16 of the Provincial Act, the Government of Canada may pay to the Government of the Province one-half of the amount so indemnified.

(8) Any amount payable in respect of indemnification under this section may be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund."

DISARMAMENT

SOVIET PROPOSAL TO REMOVE MEDIUM-RANGE NUCLEAR MISSILES FROM EUROPE

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, Soviet Leader Mikhail Gorbachev's call for the removal of medium-range nuclear missiles from Europe within five years is a most welcome announcement. It not only reopens the door to a concrete plan for action towards disarmament, but also augurs well for the talks between the two superpowers which ultimately will decide the fate of a world wanting to rid itself of all nuclear weapons. I urge our Government to support the two sides negotiating in good faith on this important proposal and I encourage our U.S. neighbour to take most seriously this latest breakthrough on a matter of such critical importance.

VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

TRIBUTE TO WORK OF KINSMEN FOUNDATION

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to the Kinsmen Clubs of Saskatchewan which serve our province with dedication and distinction. This past weekend I had the pleasure of participating in the 11th Kinsmen Telemiracle in Saskatoon which raised $2.1 million in 20 hours. The Kinsmen Foundation has long contributed to assisting those who are less fortunate. These contributions will help support people with special needs throughout the province.

Since 1972 the Kinsmen Foundation has answered requests from residents in 145 communities in Saskatchewan, including organizations such as cystic fibrosis, mentally retarded, learning disabled, wheelchair sports, Camp Easter Seal, abilities' council, and dozens more. I ask my colleagues to join with me in congratulating the 1,600 Kinsmen and Kinettes who volunteered their time so generously in order that others may enjoy a better life.

COMPANIES' WITHHOLDING OF SOFTWOOD LUMBER EXPORT TAX

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the two largest forest products companies in B.C. have decided to withhold payment of the 15 per cent export tax on softwood lumber bound for the U.S. market. Today is the first day for voluntary payments. This decision represents a technical violation of the December 30 agreement between Canada and the U.S., but since Bill C-37 is before a legislative committee and will be for some time, collection of the tax is not enforceable by Revenue Canada.

As more evidence is heard by the committee studying Bill C-37 it becomes clear that the effect of the $600 million tax varies widely from operation to operation and region to region. For example, some companies are exempt while identical operations across the street are not. Some re-manufactured products are exempt while other similar products are not. Some mills must pay the tax despite the fact the raw logs come from the U.S. Some mills pay 30 to 40 times the stumpage rate paid by a similar mill in another region.

If some companies are now excusing themselves from paying this tax, then fairness must prevail and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) must advise all Canadian companies exporting to the U.S. softwood market that, at least for the moment, the wood is not legally taxable and there is no interest charged on missed payments.

BEAUCE REGION

PRIDE IN 250 YEARS OF ACHIEVEMENT

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, throughout 1987, the Beauce region will be celebrating its 250th anniversary, commemorating the founding of the five "seigneuries" that make up its territory. What would New France have been without the people of "New Beauce"? In fact, it is the only inland territory colonized under the French regime.

Our ancestors struggled to survive in this new land where isolation helped develop some very special traits. The people of Beauce are stubborn, inventive, creative, resourceful and hard workers. The expression "jarrets noirs" is synonymous with all these character traits.

The people of Beauce take pride in their survival, their drive and their eagerness to rise to a challenge. I represent a courageous group of people who stand on their own two feet, and that is why our unemployment rate is four points below the national average.

Today I am proud to salute two gentlemen, the co-chairmen of the 250th anniversary festivities, Mr. Paul Vachon, former mayor of Ville Sainte-Marie de Beauce and Mr. Fabien Roy, a former Member of the House, both of whom are in our gallery today.

AUDITORS' TREATMENT OF FARMERS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, last week when the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) was boasting about an unprecedented federal grant of over $1 million for a court-house in his own riding, the auditors in his Department were busy preying on the farmers of western Canada who are facing the worst financial crisis in the grain industry since the 1930s and the days of R. B. Bennett.

The Keystone Agriculture Producers have responded with outrage at this harassment of farmers and re-evaluation of farm equipment and of regular commercial contracts made in 1983 and 1984. The Government is trying to extract more blood from farmers at a time when they are already reeling from low grain prices and falling land values.

Today we learned that there will be 403 more people in the Department of National Revenue in the coming year. I call upon the Minister and the Government to call off these auditors and this harassment of agricultural producers.

PUBLIC SERVICE

CALL FOR LEGISLATION DEFINING POLITICAL RIGHTS OF PUBLIC SERVANTS

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, last week we heard from a spokesperson for the Treasury Board that legislation protecting the political rights of more than 230,000 Canadians, members of Canada's Public Service, might have to wait until after the next election.

I am a member of a political Party which made a clear commitment two and one half years ago to present legislation defining and expanding the political rights of public servants. This has been discussed at length in private meetings and in public debate. I and other Members of this House have spoken on this issue, carefully reviewing and weighing the many questions it presents.

This is not a partisan issue, Mr. Speaker. It is a question of fundamental rights, a question of who should have the power to define, rescind, or extend the civil liberties of Canadian citizens. For far too long successive Governments have avoided their responsibility to deal with this issue. The time has come to discard this cumulative record of indifference, to face squarely a question fundamental to our definition of democracy. The time has come to resolve this issue, not to hide from it.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

DEPARTMENT'S ATTEMPT TO ACQUIRE RANCH LAND FOR MILITARY PURPOSES IN ALBERTA

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, a range war is raging in western Canada, not between cattlemen and sheepmen, but between cattlemen and the Department of National Defence. The Department of National Defence plans to take over some of the most valuable ranch land in Canada and is offering to pay more than twice the market value. Ranch lands nearby are selling for an average of $282 an acre while the military is offering $800 an acre for the famous OH Ranch west of Longview in southwestern Alberta.

There is something improper happening here, Mr. Speaker, since three years ago the ranchers, area residents, and conservation groups made it perfectly clear to the Government that they did not want this beautiful, pristine grazing land watershed turned into a military training ground for tanks, other armed vehicles, machine gun and hand grenade practice, and the like.

Today area ranchers, rural councillors, conservation groups, MLAs and the area's Member of Parliament oppose this military takeover. I urge the Government to find out why the military is paying such high rates for the land, to listen to the people, to respect the requests of the area's elected representatives to keep the beautiful Highwood Valley for people and ranching, and to train for war elsewhere. The Government should follow the advice urged by ranchers' placards last week in Longview which said: "Make hay—not war!"

RAILWAYS

REQUEST THAT QUEBEC NETWORK REMAIN INTACT

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, trains are dying out in Quebec and especially in Abitibi. Well before the introduction of Bill C-18 whose purpose is to update our railway system, it was already clear, from internal confidential memos, that Canadian National had started to dismantle its workshops at Senneterre and its railway network in Quebec.

The Quebec Minister of Transport, Mr. Marc-Yvan Côté, has attacked officials of the federal Ministry of Transport, saying that as far as railway transportation is concerned, they are being manipulated by Toronto to protect Western interests.

Bill C-18 is a good Bill and its objectives were supported by Quebec. However, the wording is unacceptable, and Quebec is demanding several amendments in order to restore a measure of balance. The main areas where railway lines would be abandoned are the Gaspé, Beauce, the Eastern Townships, Abitibi—Témiscamingue and Lac-Saint-Jean.

I want to appeal to all Members of this House, Liberals, New Democrats and Conservatives from Quebec, to immediately make representations to the Minister of Transport that the railway network in Quebec should remain intact. Otherwise, it will be a disaster for our lumber, pulp and paper and mining industries.

BY-ELECTIONS

HAMILTON MOUNTAIN BY-ELECTION DATE CONDEMNED

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, Liberals on Hamilton Mountain are ready to do battle. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney can call the election any time he wants. We want to challenge him to call it earlier. Why is he calling it in July of this year? It will be almost one year that the riding of Hamilton Mountain has been without representation. The NDP cannot complain about that because they vacated the seat. The Tories cannot complain about it because they set the date. However, we, the Liberal Party in Hamilton Mountain, have elected a candidate who is ready to do battle on the hustings.

• (1410)

We want action on the Windermere Basin and the $1.25 million that the Government refuses to give to an area that has been designated as one of the most polluted bodies of water in North America. We want action on the Hamilton Airport and, especially, action on the steel industry.

When the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) says that it is merely a small matter that the steel industry is being deluged with unfair trading complaints from the United States, that is unacceptable. We need someone who will fight for Hamilton. We need someone from Hamilton who will fight for all of the people. The only candidate who can do that is Beth Phinney for the Liberal Party.

IMMIGRATION

SUPPORT FOR MEASURES TO STOP EVASION OF CANADIAN LAW

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) and the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) are to be commended for their firm action in reasserting control over our borders from those individuals who have sought to subvert Canadian immigration laws. Already, all of our points of entry are reporting a dramatic decrease of individuals wishing to circumvent standard immigration procedures by declaring themselves refugees. The Government is not acting against genuine refugees but only against those who are openly abusing Canada's compassion to peoples in need of assistance.

The rhetoric the Government has received on this issue is totally unjustified. When people are coached on how to break and evade our laws, the Government must act, for the basic foundations of our democracy are being undermined. The Ministers acted in a manner which has preserved Canada's humanitarianism as well as sending a strong message to the world that Canada will not tolerate lawbreakers in our society.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

TAKEOVER OF CADBURY SCHWEPPES IN WHITBY, ONT.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, too often over the past few years this House has been advised of corporate manipulations that have resulted in the totally unnnecessary closure of plants and offices. One of these tragic events is occurring at Whitby, Ontario, where the confectionery operation of Cadbury Schweppes Canada is being taken over by William Neilson Ltd.

On the very day that this corporate takeover was announced in January, the 450 workers at this efficient plant were informed that they would be thrown out of work, many of whose seniority reaches up to 19 or 20 years.

We must deplore this callous plan and last week's decision of the Canadian Competition Tribunal to discontinue its investigation of the takeover. I call upon the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) to exercise his responsibility and authority under the Competition Act to order that the inquiry proceed forthwith.

THE ECONOMY

EFFECTS OF GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, the Opposition say that the Government is living in the past. I am proud to say that this is true.

We are turning back the clock on government overspending. For the first time in over 30 years the annual federal deficit will decline three years in a row, despite the burden of paying interest on the past Liberal debt.

We have turned back the clock on high interest rates. The Bank of Canada rate has declined nearly 5 per cent. We have turned back the clock on the prime rate ten years, to 9.25 per cent.

We have turned the clock back on short-term mortgage rates by 20 years, to 7.5 per cent. We have turned back the clock on high unemployment by 2 percentage points, and have provided the kind of environment in which the small business sector has been able to create 675,000 new jobs in the past 28 months.

By any yardstick the economic policies of the Government have been successful, and we intend to turn back the clock some more to return to the days when the Government balanced its books and the days when individual Canadians could expect their initiative to be rewarded.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

MAIN ESTIMATES—CRITICISM OF FUNDING ALLOCATIONS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, this morning's Estimates were a litany of cut-backs on the backs of those people in this country who can least afford it. There were cut-backs in social programs, health transfer funds and education transfer funds.

However, tucked away beneath the layers of cuts that reflect a welt across the backs of Canada's poorer citizens were a few increases. There is an increase in PCO, Dalton Camp's new office, with three new positions and a $250,000 budget. The $2.3 million secretariat in the PCO has gone to $18 million for a separate office, creating a bureaucracy of privatization to sell off the Crown assets.

Treasury Board managers throughout the Civil Service will get a productivity bonus of some $4.5 million in total. All that is happening at a time when the fishermen of Atlantic Canada, who have just gone through the Canada-France Fisheries Treaty, see a 15 per cent reduction for small craft harbours.

• (1415)

The Government is totally out of touch with the needs of ordinary Canadians. It is paying managers to lay off employees, cutting back on health, education and social programs, and putting new furniture in Dalton Camp's office. It is a downright shame.

Oral Questions

SOVEREIGNTY

PROTECTION TO BE AFFORDED BY PROPOSED POLAR CLASS 8 ICE-BREAKER

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the Class 8 ice-breaker, construction of which ought to start soon in a West Coast shipyard, will do much to promote Canadian sovereignty in our Arctic waters. While primarily and properly a civilian vessel to be operated as part of the Canadian Coast Guard fleet, the ship will be designed to meet military specifications if it is ever to be required for such a purpose.

The vessel promotes Canadian nautical technology and will provide many-man years of employment in our shipbuilding industry. Navigation in Arctic waters will be greatly enhanced when we have the capability of keeping the Northwest Passage open year round. In addition to all of this, the ship will provide a floating scientific research platform.

With the commissioning of this vessel, Canada will take the lead in world-wide ice-breaking technology.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—FORTHCOMING VISIT BY UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in a few weeks the President of the United States, a good friend of the Prime Minister, will be here in Ottawa. I doubt that on this visit either of them will have too much to sing about. Is the Prime Minister preparing the scene for the visit of the President by indicating through nameless officials that in the trade talks with the United States everything is now on the table? Will the Prime Minister tell this House and all Canadians what his position is before he tells the President? And if not, why not?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have naturally seen the speculative story which was carried by Canadian Press. I do not need to remind the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition that many people can engage in speculation and that the policy of a Government is not official policy until it has been approved by a Cabinet. On the question of the debate about trade in the country, this Government believes it is very important that there be the widest possible debate based upon hard facts. That is why we have set up an extensive network of consultations with the private sector. That is why, for the first time, we have brought the provinces into the process. It is why there was consideration of this question by the Special Joint Committee of the House of Commons last summer.

In 1985 I indicated to the House that we would be prepared to have a parliamentary debate. We think that would be an appropriate thing to do. The next meeting of First Ministers on questions of trade will be on March 10. My colleague, the House Leader of the Government, will be consulting with the House Leaders of other Parties later this week with an eye to arranging a debate on a day of government time a week or so after that First Ministers' Conference.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs is quite right in suggesting there should be debate because, since the Prime Minister introduced the subject into this House on September 26, 1985, there has been no debate in the House of Commons and no public debate in the country. It is about time, and we would welcome that debate.

NEGOTIABLE ITEMS INQUIRY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): On September 26, 1985, the Prime Minister told this House, and I use his own words in Hansard at page 7056:

> Our political sovereignty, our system of social programs, our commitment to fight regional disparities, our unique cultural identity, our special linguistic character—these are the essence of Canada. They are not at issue in these negotiations.

I put to the Prime Minister, and I hope he will reply, or to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, that last week a senior government official—and the Secretary of State for External Affairs can either deny it or confirm it—let it be known that everything was now negotiable. Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs or the Prime Minister declare succinctly and simply to this House, a yes or no will suffice, is the Auto Pact on the table? Are our cultural industries on the table? Are our agricultural programs on the table? Yes or no? Whom are we to believe?

• (1420)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition knows the parliamentary system well enough to know that, given the choice between an unidentified spokesperson and the Prime Minister of Canada, it is the Prime Minister of Canada who states the policy of the Government. In one of his more eloquent interventions in the House the Leader of the Opposition just quoted the Right Hon. Prime Minister. The Prime Minister's words state the continuing policy of the Government.

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I gave the Minister the opportunity to either deny or confirm that the word "officials" is qualified by expressions such as "nameless" and "clandestine". Canadians are confused, very obviously, because as a result of the Government's capitulation in the cases of softwood lumber, fisheries, books and drugs they can see that this Government is prepared to negotiate anything in favour of the Americans and at the expense of Canadians. Now again I ask the question: Does the Minister claim that the Prime Minister can make a public statement while letting these nameless officials continue secret free trade negotiations with the United States, in some other way? Will he confirm or deny, and in any case will he tell us what is the position of his Government before the President of the United States comes to Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the position of the Government is that which I explained and as supported by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

[English]

I am astonished that the Leader of the Opposition would be worrying about confusion in regard to the trade issue. On December 1, 1986, dealing with the issue raised by my hon. friend, The Ottawa Citizen quotes members of his Party as follows:

> "We want to trade around the world with every nation of the world. We don't want to lock ourselves in (with the United States)," yelled Axworthy from one microphone.
> Screamed Johnston from another: "If you want to protect cultural industries, you do so through bilateral arrangements with the United States."

The Liberal Party is a Party based on division and hypocrisy. It has no policy on this issue at all. The Government speaks for all Canadians in making these arrangements.

CANADIAN CULTURAL IDENTITY

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, we are asking the Prime Minister questions about his Government's policy. The Prime Minister has said that our unique cultural identity is the essence of Canada. For Canadians, cultural identity is the books and magazines that they read, the TV and films that they watch, and the music to which they listen.

Does the Prime Minister realize that less than 5 per cent of the films and TV drama available to our viewers is Canadian? Does he realize that when Canadians go to the book and magazine stands that they have a very small chance of learning about themselves and who they are? Therefore, does the Prime Minister not recognize how fragile our cultural industries are? Will he instruct Mr. Reisman that culture is not on the balance sheet and under no circumstances can these industries be treated—

Some Hon. Members: Order, order.

Some Hon. Members: Speech!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has several questions. They are certainly important ones. I would ask the Hon. Member to confine her question to one question and not to draw it out overly long.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to a 5 per cent Canadian opportunity and a very small chance for book publishers and those involved in the cultural industries. I agree with her. That represents a terrible indictment of those who governed Canada for the previous 20 years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: This is the result of a Liberal policy that was completely insensitive to the cultural realities of Canada. We heard it was so bad that a leading member of the NDP asked Canadians to watch ABC when they could listen to the sterling programs of the CBC. That, too, is an indication of how far the situation has gone.

Culture is protected on this side of the House, and we are proud to do it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1425)

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister cares to be partisan and play with Canadian politics. I would prefer to take a look at and ask very specifically if Bill C-58 and the Canadian cultural content regulations, the various support measures, and the Canadian film, magazine, and book publishing policy are on the free trade table? Have you directed Mr. Reisman not to negotiate with those as your bargaining chips?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have three quick comments. First, this trade negotiation is not about culture, it is about trade. Second, the Government, recognizing the legacy that we inherited from the former Government, a legacy that, as the Prime Minister has said, had severely weakened the cultural industries of this country, has already begun to act on changes in film distribution, changes with respect to book publishing, and other cultural areas. Third, the Government looks forward to the debate on trade in the House, so that we will know whether there are one, 40, or 400 different positions from the Official Opposition on this issue.

CHILD CARE

NATIONAL SYSTEM—GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. During the election campaign two and a half years ago, the Prime Minister said that the Conservative Government was concerned about providing an effective child care program. Last November at the First Ministers' Conference the Prime Minister made the same statement, he repeated it over Christmas, and this morning when speaking to a national symposium on the family he said the following, "Canada shall have an effective national child care system".

My question to the Prime Minister is this. Since nothing was found in the Budget about money allocation for such an effective child care program, will the Prime Minister confirm that in all the Estimates that are before Parliament for the first time today there is not a single new dollar reference to an effective child care program? Will the Prime Minister tell us why not?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thought I had addressed that in my speech this morning which dealt with the urgent requirements of Government and the Canadian people involving themselves in the quest for equality and fairness for all Canadian women. In regard to that specific point, I indicated that the Hon. Member for Lincoln in her capacity as chairperson of the task force would be bringing in a report within weeks, and it would be on the basis of that parliamentary task force with its recommendations that the Government will act, as I indicated to the First Ministers, to implement a truly national, effective, and accessible policy to benefit all Canadians.

GOVERNMENT COMMITMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has referred to the immediate need of Canadian families. They know that they have the need, and we in this Party know that there is a need. Will the Government set aside making speeches and commit itself now to a Supplementary Estimate that could be drawn from the $300 million of unallocated funds that are found in today's Estimates in the appropriate Minister's Department? Will the Prime Minister make a commitment today to use $300 million to launch an effective child care program in this country?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in my remarks this morning I indicated that our commitment to the establishment of a day care program was real, that the resources required to sustain it would be found even in a difficult economic climate, and that we viewed this as a priority issue to bring about fairness for Canadian women. I have given that assurance to the Premiers, and I give it again to my hon. friend with great certainty that the appropriate resources required to fund a day care program of this nature will be found by the Government of Canada and introduced.

INQUIRY WHY FUNDS ABSENT FOR CANADIAN FAMILIES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister knows full well that when Canadian banks ran into difficulties the Government of Canada found the money. It was good for the banks in the past, but why not for Canadian families right now?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my friend amazes me because the Canadian Government also found $1 billion to help Canadian farmers but he does not mention that. That money—raised before—was to help the depositors of these chartered banks. Now there may be diverging views concerning the use of public funds, but if we acted quickly to help Canadian farmers, we are also committed to do the same thing for Canadian women and, regardless of our financial difficulties, we will find the resosurces required to implement this kind of plan for the benefit of Canadian women.

CHANGES IN GOVERNMENT REGULATIONS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister as well. In reference to the life threatening reality facing refugees, the Prime Minister told the country last August:

> If we err, we will always err on the side of justice and on the side of compassion.

Therefore I would like to ask the Prime Minister how he can now justify recent changes which eliminate overnight the list of 18 non-deportable countries, which jeopardize people who return to those parts of the world, which drive people to protect their lives through hunger strikes, which strand families at airports, and which continue to peddle a non-existent, non-legal, non-written agreement with the United States. How can the Prime Minister promote a chaotic system which ignores the principles of justice and compassion, two principles about which he spoke so highly only six months ago?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, our policy, straightforward, remains the same—real refugees who come to our door will be provided a haven and settled. A real refugee will never be sent back to face death or torture. However, our proud tradition was being undermined by a lot of abusers. The measures we have put in place are to detect those abusers, not to deny access to real refugees.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REFUGEE DETERMINATION SYSTEM

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows the conditions facing a number of families whether they are applying from the United States or from within. However, I return to the Prime Minister who I hope will have the leadership to address a story of human tragedy within our borders. Given the fact that the only solution to the problem is the establishment of a new, permanent and independent refugee determination system, and given that we have been promised one for three years by four different Ministers of Immigration, will the Prime Minister not rescind recent announcements which endanger legitimate refugees and allow the system to continue until legislation—

Mr. Speaker: I think the Hon. Member has put his question, and the Minister can respond.

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, our commitment to refugees is very clear—$50 million this past year to international humanitarian agencies such as the UNHCR and the Red Cross, and another $16 million in terms of food aid. Every claimant who comes to our door, the only western democracy to do so, is given an oral hearing in front of an independent tribunal. That is what our feeling is. We know that a new system is in the process of being determined. However, in the meantime every claimant, whether in the United States or elsewhere, is entitled to that fair and open hearing and will be given that hearing.

There is no danger to the people now waiting in the United States because we have an arrangement with the Americans. Case by case that arrangement is working. Our officers, in conjunction with their INS officials, are making sure that every individual is available for that hearing.

ESTIMATES

CUT-BACKS AFFECTING DISADVANTAGED REGIONS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board.

Could the Minister explain to the House why the Government continues to ignore the plight of disadvantaged regions in its Estimates, and specifically, considering that only 10,000 jobs were created in the province of Quebec last year, could the Government perhaps explain why it has just cut $71 million in equalization payments to the province of Quebec for the 1987-88 financial year?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I can inform the Hon. Member that the Estimates tabled this morning in the House demonstrate the Government's will to restrict its spending as we have been doing since the beginning of our term.

The results for the economy have been clear across the country, in all regions. I think we can say there has been a substantial reduction in the unemployment rate, that inflation has been maintained at reasonable levels, that interest rates have gone down and that among industrialized nations, this country has enjoyed a level of economic growth second only to that of Japan.

I think this Government's economic policies are benefitting all Canadians and that all Members of this House should be glad to have those policies in this country.

CRITERIA FOR ALLOCATION OF FEDERAL FUNDS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the President of the Treasury Board could answer my question specifically. How does he justify a situation in which Ontario, where the unemployment rate is down to 6.6 per cent, is receiving an increase in transfer payments and other federal payments amounting to $550 million, while Quebec is seeing a cut of $71 million in equalization payments, which if we look at total transfers and equalization payments means an increase of only $7 million? How does he justify this discrimination against Quebecers?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could answer the question. I think the Hon. Member is making some very imaginative use of figures. The entitlements for equalization for the Province of Quebec, as for other provinces, went up last year and will go up again in the coming year. Federal-provincial transfers on post-secondary education and health care are subject to a formula. They are also going up. These two programs—equalization and the Established Programs Financing—are both going up at one of the fastest rates of any government program. In the next five years I believe the EPF figure will be over $25 billion higher than the amounts paid out over the previous five years—from $65 billion to over $90 billion.

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF NEW LEGISLATION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The refugee situation in Canada has degenerated because the Government has failed to act and has procrastinated for over two years. In June, 1985, the Plaut Commission recommended a new refugee process. In November, 1985, the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration made further recommendations. The former Minister of State for Immigration promised in the House legislation for September, 1986, six months ago, and still we have no Bill. I should like to ask the Prime Minister, who is in charge of the Government, one would hope, when the Government would finally table its Bill to provide the country with humane and efficient refugee legislation.

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, the Bill will be tabled very, very soon. However, in the meantime there is no doubt about the fact that we are the only western democracy which offers every claimant who comes to our door an oral hearing in front of an independent tribunal. There were 18,000 claimants last year and, according to our Refugee Status Advisory Committee, two-thirds of them were non bona fide refugees. Certainly we have protected the 5,500. What we are looking at now is a system which will expeditiously clear away the over 12,000 non bona fide claimants as we had at our door last year.

Mr. Allmand: The Government has been promising that legislation for over two years, and we still do not have it.

REQUEST FOR NEGOTIATION OF ACCORD WITH UNITED STATES CONCERNING CENTRAL AMERICA REFUGEES

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, while waiting for this legislation is the Government prepared to approach the United States at the earliest opportunity with a view to negotiating a formal accord so that Central America refugees are not deported to their country of origin while their applications are still under study in Canada? Are you prepared to do that?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, the exchange of letters and the existing agreement work out very well on a case by case basis. The applicant is or will be available for the inquiry. We are working in close co-operation with the United States Government and, if a date is set for the inquiry and the applicant receives a deportation notice, the United States can immediately defer the date, or we can set an earlier date for the inquiry, or we can bring the applicant back. But no applicant will be put in a dangerous position because of the date. If he does not have a criminal past his inquiry and Canadian refugee status determination process will take place here.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

ESTABLISHED PROGRAMS FINANCING

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In the Main Estimates that were presented to the House today, the Government indicated that fiscal transfer payments will go up by only .23 per cent and health insurance by only .6 per cent, and that post-secondary education will actually decrease by .6 per cent. In addition to that, the Province of Newfoundland believes it is being asked to return $76 million in equalization payments. Can the Minister of Finance indicate to the House that he will sit down with his provincial counterparts to come to an agreement that would provide an adequate level of services to all provinces in Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has mentioned a number of figures. I know that one of them is wrong. I would have to check the "blues" for the other ones because he mentioned so many of them at one time.

We have had, I believe, 26 meetings on equalization with provincial Ministers as well as officials during the course of the past two and a half years. As far as the Established Programs Financing is concerned, I responded to the Hon. Member's colleague by saying that the amounts we are spending on EPF will grow from $65 billion to over $90 billion from the last five years to the next five years. That clearly is a very strong indication of the support this Government is providing to post-secondary education and health care.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO NEWFOUNDLAND PREMIER

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is again directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister is aware that the Premier of Newfoundland has indicated that he predicts the province will return to the financial crisis of 1933 unless the equalization problem is solved. In light of the prediction of financial crisis and chaos in the province made by the Premier, will the Minister not sit down with his provincial counterparts one more time to try to resolve this problem?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has referred to equalization. I would like to remind him that last year the Government provided supplementary equalization payments for which it had no legal obligation at all. This was done because we shared the concerns the Hon. Member has just expressed. In addition, we will be increasing, through the changes in the technical aspects of the formula, the equalization payments this year and next over and above that provided for by the normal formula. The amounts to which the provinces are entitled will go up in excess of 5 per cent, and if the Hon. Member were to check the Estimates he would see that that is one of the faster growing programs of government.

CONFIDENCE IN SYSTEM—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. Last week the Minister rightfully condemned Charles Bronson vigilante justice but at the same time he admitted that Canadians are frustrated with the present system. Will the Minister advise the House, bearing in mind that he is the chief law officer responsible for the justice system in Canada, what he intends to do to restore the confidence of Canadians in the justice system? In particular, does he intend to make changes in such things as the present sentencing, bail, and parole laws?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question asked by the Hon. Member who has had a long-standing interest in the criminal justice system. Of course I intend to work co-operatively with my provincial counterparts in areas of mutual jurisdiction including public legal education, victims of crime, and other areas where I think the criminal justice system could use improvement in terms of explaining the process and the reasons judges sentence in the way they do.

Within my own area of responsibility, I look forward to receiving the sentencing commission report which should be forthcoming soon. This report will address the whole question of the appropriateness of the penalties for the crimes under the Criminal Code. I look forward to entering into a debate with the people of Canada and with the Hon. Member on this important issue.

PAYMENT OF BONUSES TO SENIOR MANAGERS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the President of the Treasury Board announced today $4.5 million in bonuses to be paid out after the end of this month to "senior Public Service managers who are instrumental in the realization of person-year reductions goals and expenditure reductions". Is it necessary to pay bonuses to 5,000 already highly paid senior public servants? Would it not be better to use that $4.5 million to help reduce unemployment rather than to try to create it?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance and I announced a year ago that we would introduce a productivity bonus for senior management categories within the Public Service with the expressed intent of rewarding the competence and productivity of senior managers. We have done that. We have waited to see how the performance of these managers would be over the year before we announced the results, and we felt that it was appropriate at this time to announce a program totalling $4.5 million in the form of a productivity bonus to managers who have performed exceptionally over the past 12 months.

IMPLEMENTATION OF PROGRAM

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, according to the Estimates, 3,100 jobs will be terminated with the help of this $4.5 million. It is clear that the Government has now created a hierarchy of hit-men in the Public Service. Since there are now 3,100 contracts out on people's jobs, how will it be determined who will get paid for each lay-off? Is it not possible to waste money by having two pay-offs for each lay-off? This is a Government of pay-offs for lay-offs.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, if I needed a speech writer, I would know exactly where to go. However, I do not.

I must say that this productivity bonus is a recognition of an outstanding effort by an outstanding group of people. I am not ashamed to say that the senior Public Service has done an outstanding job not only in terms of job reduction but in terms of carrying out the economic policies of this Government.

Let me remind my hon. colleague that the top level of the Public Service received a pay increase of zero, the second tier received 1 per cent, and the third tier of those eligible for this bonus received 2 per cent. All we are saying is that those who have performed exceptionally well will be able to receive a very meagre 1 per cent as a productivity bonus, or 1.5 per cent if their performance was particularly exceptional. I think that is treating senior managers fairly and recognizing their contribution to the Government's effort to curb expenditures that were really out of control under the former Government.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

CRUISE MISSILE TESTING

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. When the Liberal Government of the day agreed in 1983 to test the Cruise missile in Canada, the then Secretary of State for External Affairs said on July 18, 1983, that we would test Cruise missiles until "concrete results were achieved in the INF negotiations; namely, results that would decrease the level of missile deployment in Europe". Will the Government indicate now that it too will end Cruise missile tests if the breakthrough on INF in Geneva is realized?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows better than to ask hypothetical questions. She has been a Member of the House for a long time and she understands the rules. I would think that she would join with me in welcoming not only the significant change in the position that has been taken by the Soviet Union and the initiative put forward by Mr. Gorbachev but also the positive response of the United States which has resulted, among other things, in an agreement not to end the current negotiating sessions at Geneva on March 4 but rather to carry them forward. We think that is very good news and should be celebrated on its own grounds.

CONTINUATION OF GENEVA TALKS—CANADIAN POSITION

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the then Secretary of State for External Affairs also said in July, 1983, after being asked what circumstances would allow Canada to terminate Cruise missile testing, that those circumstances would be: "if there were a substantial result in INF talks or indeed if the zero option were adopted". That is what is taking place in Geneva, if the Minister does not know. I am asking if he, too, would see the probability of ending Cruise missile testing under those circumstances.

• (1450)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): What is taking place in Geneva, just to be precise about it, is that a discussion which appeared to be closed has now been opened. We will determine Canadian Government policy on the basis of what is actually decided in Geneva.

ENERGY

INQUIRY CONCERNING LOCATION OF SERVICE STATIONS WHICH INCREASED GASOLINE PRICE BY ONLY ONE CENT PER LITRE

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. On Friday, February 20, in answer to a question concerning the three-cent a litre or 13-cent a gallon increase in gasoline prices announced by certain companies the Minister told Canadians that if they did not like such increases they could go to other service stations, and I should like to quote him. He said: The consumer can teach them a lesson by going to the companies which have only increased their price by one cent a litre.

My question to the Minister is this: Where are those miraculous service stations which are supposed to have increased their prices by only one cent a litre? Does the Minister believe that Canadians can benefit from competition when even State-owned Petro-Canada increased its prices by 13 cents a gallon?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, there is no constitutional authority for the federal Government to engage in price controls. That is a provincial responsibility and he should talk to his provincial colleagues if that is what he is asking for.

The Director of Investigation Research of the Combines Branch of my Department monitors the situation continuously, especially when there have been increases. If he or any other Member of the House has evidence of collusion he should bring it to the attention of the Director and action will be taken. I might point out that my colleague from Brampton—Georgetown informed me that over the weekend the price dropped 2 cents a litre in his constituency, showing that the market-place has been working.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER ORDER PETRO-CANADA TO REDUCE PRICE

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that according to the law he can direct Petro-Canada to lower the price of its product in the market-place. The price of a barrel of oil went down by $2 U.S. recently. As well, Petro-Canada just announced an increase of 28 per cent in its profit. Therefore, can the Minister use the power the law gives him and direct Petro-Canada to lower the price by 2 cents a litre?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): As a matter of fact, the Hon. Member is inaccurate. The Petro-Canada Act states quite specifically that the Government may give policy direction to Petro-Canada but not involve itself in day-to-day operations. Hon. Members opposite can check the Act if they choose to do so. The policy put in place by the previous Government, and which we think is appropriate, is that Petro-Canada should operate in the market-place as a commercial corporation. That I presume is what it is doing.

I repeat, if there is any evidence of collusion to manipulate the market-place to the disadvantage of the consumer, then action will be taken. If the Hon. Member has any such evidence I ask that he bring it to the attention of the Director of Investigation Research of the Combines Branch.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—ELIMINATION OF TARIFFS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I would like to return to the free trade issue. The Government is becoming known for what seems to be, given the stories last week, hoax and trickery. Will the Prime Minister take this occasion to confirm or deny that the free trade negotiators are aiming to eliminate all tariffs for the Auto Pact without exception, and whether we are discussing cultural industries and agriculture?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): If the Hon. Member were genuinely interested in having facts on the table, he would not carefully construct tricky questions.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That is what he has just done. If he is asking me is it the goal of the trade negotiations to reduce tariffs, the answer is yes. If he is asking me if the Auto Pact is on the table, the answer is no. Why can he not ask a straight question? He gets straight answers when he does.

REQUEST THAT PARLIAMENTARY TASK FORCE OVERSEE NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Let me try a straight question.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Langdon: It is going to be tough to get an answer from the Minister but let me put it to him. Will he or the Prime Minister set up a special parliamentary task force to oversee the trade negotiations—

Some Hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Langdon: —and let Canadians know precisely what is taking place behind closed doors?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, I will not. Why not? For at least the following reasons. First, there is an extraordinary and unprecedented degree of co-operation among federal and provincial authorities, and indeed federal and provincial Ministers, overseeing these negotiations. Second, there was an opportunity for a joint standing committee of this House and the other place to look at the question of trade. Third, there is going to be an opportunity for a full debate in this House and I look forward with great anticipation to seeing if the NDP are going to be able to come forward with a consistent position or if they are going to be against free trade negotiations in the same way they used to be against the Auto Pact.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENERGY

OIL AND GAS INDUSTRY—EXCISE TAX REVENUE

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Four major oil companies with refining and marketing capacity are continuing to fleece the Canadian consumer. However, those producers without marketing and refining capacity are being pushed to the wall because of the lack of assistance from the Government. By the end of the fiscal year 1986-87 the Government will have made billions of dollars as a result of excise tax increases on gasoline, some $480 million alone in this coming fiscal year. Why does the Government continue to use the oil and gas sector as a cash cow without being prepared to assist the industry?

Mr. McDermid: How can you ask that question with a straight face?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I cannot believe my ears. Let me recount for the Hon. Member what went on between 1980 and 1984. There was the Petroleum Gas Revenue Tax. There was the Natural Gas Liquids Tax. There was the petroleum compensation charge. There was the Canadian ownership charge. If any Government ever looked upon that industry as a cash cow it was the Government he supported for the four years ending in 1984. Where was he at that time?

Some Hon. Members: More!

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, the Albertans do not think that is particularly funny.

Mr. McDermid: Coming from you they do.

Ms. Copps: He speaks for Alberta and that is more than you can say for the deadheads on your side of the street.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: Come on, Sheila, be nice; you are going to be a mother soon.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps Hon. Members would permit the Hon. Member to put his question.

Mr. Andre: Especially his seat-mate.

GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE FOR INDUSTRY

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister seems to have a different attitude. He said in a release on February 18, the same day as the Budget, that measures would be implemented to assist the energy industry during this period of severe difficulty. When is the assistance going to take place? After most of the producers have gone bankrupt?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister put out a press release at the time of the Budget which said much the same as I have been saying. There have been meetings of Energy Ministers. The first meeting since 1978 was held under the auspices of my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. They will be reviewing the impact of current pricing on security and supply and reporting, I believe, in July.

I have said there has been a good degree of inequity in the tax system as it affects the oil and gas industry, starting with the taxes I referred to in my earlier answer. There is still work to be done there. We hope to address the problem in tax reform. Yes, there are things being considered right now, and in due course we will be making those announcements.

PLANNING FOR SPRING PLANTING

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. He will know that Canadian grain farmers will soon have to make some basic decisions concerning spring planting and acreage and crop and so on. Since there may be expectations of further government programs such as the Canadian Special Grains Program, based on seeded acreage, can the Minister give direction as to the thrust of any possible future government programs? In particular, should western dryland farmers be considering seeding stubble?

• (1500)

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to indicate to the Member and the House that the Special Canadian Grains Program is on track. The cheques are being delivered on time. We have now delivered well over 150,000 cheques. We also have about 40,000 applications in the mill and over half of those will be completed by the end of the day.

The day that we released the program we indicated to Canadian farming people, and have tried to repeat the message every day since, that they should not plan their 1987 cropping pattern based on the formula of distribution in the Special Canadian Grains Program.

TRADE

SALE OF POTASH TO UNITED STATES—ANNOUNCEMENT OF ANTI-DUMPING INVESTIGATION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. This morning the people of Saskatchewan and New Brunswick received some very bad news, namely, that the U.S. Department of Commerce has announced that it is going to investigate whether or not Canadian potash was sold in the United States at under the cost of production.

Can the Secretary of State explain why, according to my information, in a diplomatic note sent to the Americans he failed to deal directly with the U.S. argument that we are selling our potash under the cost of production? Why did he fail to deal with the allegation that there are unfair Canadian subsidies, and that an export tax is not acceptable? Can he explain to the House why he did not make these strong arguments on behalf of the people of Saskatchewan and New Brunswick? Get off your knees and stand up for Canada.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to hear that kind of talk in the House of Commons. Today federal officials met with representatives of the industry and the provinces to work out a plan to answer the charges coming from the United States. I would point out that it is an anti-dumping investigation which is going on rather than one for a countervail duty, and that will take up to a year. We are co-operating with the producers on this problem and will defend the right of the potash producers.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

AWARDING OF CONTRACTS—NOTIFICATION OF MINISTER'S OFFICE

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Supply and Services. According to an internal government document all awards for government contracts over $25,000 in six selected ridings including, conveniently, her own and that of the Prime Minister must be brought to the attention of the Minister's office before an award is announced.

In light of recent events which have sharply brought into question the fairness of the bidding system regarding government contracts, how can the Minister justify this policy which leaves itself open to political interference?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): As usual, Mr. Speaker, the Opposition is all mixed up. First a distinction should be made between the contract award process and the information system concerning contracts about to be awarded. The information method I set up is meant to ensure close co-operation between the Government and the private sector. This being a new mechanism, we set up this system, of course, we had to begin with a pilot project. I might also point out that this is a non-partisan mechanism available to all Members of the House.

PRICE OF GASOLINE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In the early 1970s we had a crisis in the oil industry when oil companies deceived Canadians. We now have phoney increases at the pumps. Increases in excess of excise gasoline taxes are being charged at the pumps across the country. Why are these companies, including Petro-Canada, being allowed to get away with this? What does the Government intend to do about it?

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the market-place will decide whether the latest increases will be sustained. For example, in Toronto market prices were generally up 4.2 cents a litre last week. It is my understanding that some service stations have carried that price over to this week, but others within the Toronto area have dropped their prices by approximately 3 cents. Therefore, market forces are at play and are working. I am sure that given time this will happen.

POINT OF ORDER

CORRECTION TO MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to correct the record with regard to an exchange in the House on Friday, February 20. At that time I inadvertently used the word "families" when I should have stated that 263,000 fewer individuals were below the poverty line since this Government came into office. Therefore, it is "individuals" rather than "families" as I inadvertently said. I apologize for the error.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties. I believe that if you were to seek it, you would find unanimous consent of the House to revert to Statements by Ministers in order to allow the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to make a statement.

In order not to interfere with Private Members' Hour, we suggest that the Chair seek unanimous consent not to extend the sitting so that Private Members' Hour would not be interfered with.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members have heard the suggestion and the request.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, there have been contacts by the Government with the Official Opposition on this matter. We will give our consent today. However, I want to make it clear that we do not consider this a precedent for having Statements made at three o'clock rather than the customary time of eleven o'clock when Routine Proceedings ordinarily take place. We expect that statements will generally be made at the time provided for in the rules.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: There seems to be a disposition to proceed as suggested by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary. The suggestion made by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary with regard to time also seems to have approval, especially that of members of the Opposition. I thank the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

SHIPBUILDING

AWARDING OF ARCTIC CLASS 8 ICE-BREAKER CONTRACT—MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure to announce that my colleagues, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) and the Minister of International Trade (Miss Carney), met this morning with Versatile Pacific Shipyards Incorporated of Vancouver. They informed Versatile that the Government proposes to build the world's largest ice-breaker, the Arctic Class 8, at Versatile Pacific Shipyards and they conveyed a draft letter of intent outlining the conditions the shipyard is expected to meet.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Canada must be able to exercise our sovereignty over our North. That requires tools as well as will, and the Government attaches the highest priority to advancing Canada's national interests in the North. No Government in Canadian history has done more in so short a time to reaffirm and consolidate Canada's northern sovereignty.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): In my statement in the House on September 10, 1985 I set out the policy of the Government in respect of Canadian sovereignty in Arctic waters. I said that "The policy of the Government is to maintain the natural unity of the Canadian Arctic archipelago and to preserve Canada's sovereignty on land, sea and ice undiminished and undivided".

[Translation]

To implement this policy, we must take appropriate steps to strengthen our actual control over the waters of the Arctic archipelago. Building an Arctic Class 8 icebreaker is a major step towards attaining this goal. A vessel that enables us to patrol Arctic waters practically year round will be the best possible instrument to affirm our sovereignty over the waters in question. We will be able to provide for both safe navigation and compliance with our laws throughout our Arctic waters. The decision to build the icebreaker is a clear sign to the world of our firm resolve to exercise our sovereignty in the Arctic. It will also put us on a line with other countries who have this type of vessel and thus provide a sound basis for our position as one of the major Arctic countries.

The construction contract will provide over 1,100 person years of employment in British Columbia's shipbuilding industry during the four years the work will take.

Other provinces will benefit through sub-contracting arrangements. We will ensure that Canadian content is as substantial as possible, and we intend to obtain major long-term benefits from foreign suppliers in the form of joint enterprises and technology transfers.

• (1510)

[English]

In addition, Canada's arctic infrastructure and control are being strengthened in such areas as ship construction for support of northern commercial operations, aids to navigation, ice reconnaissance and forecasting, satellite communication, establishment of marine parks, political devolution and native land claims.

In the past, Canadian policy in the Arctic has been characterized by fits and starts. That will no longer do. The Government has made a firm commitment to the Arctic. Our response to the report of the Special Joint Committee on Canada's International Relations places unprecedented emphasis on the northern dimension of Canada's foreign policy. In the coming months the Government will act to give further effect to the undertakings we have made,for example, in continuing to modernize Canada's northern defences and in promoting enhanced co-operation with circumpolar countries and with Greenland.

This Government is determined to assert Canadian sovereignty in the North and promote Canada as a key player in Arctic co-operation. The decision to proceed with construction of the ice-breaker is proof of that resolve.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, of course we are happy for the Versatile Pacific Shipyard, but this is not a very enlightening statement. Apart from a few partisan slapshots, which are rather wild and inaccurate, and on which I shall comment in a moment, this is a remarkably vacuous declaration by the Minister. What information does it provide us about this proposed contract?

[Translation]

For instance, what is the cost?

[English]

What is the cost? I looked in the Estimates which were tabled today but I saw nothing under ice-breaking except an increase of $7 million over last year. Does this mean there will be no funds under this program until 1988-89, or are they hidden somewhere else in the Estimates and have escaped me? We did not receive the Estimates or the Minister's declaration until noon.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, there is nothing in the Estimates. I would like to know the cost and when construction will start.

[English]

When will this ship be commissioned? More important—

—Who will be the designers of this icebreaker?

[English]

Furthermore, we do not know who will be the designers. We know that an ice-breaker will be built and that a letter of intent has been given. Apart from the fact that it is going to Versatile, which is important information, that is all we know.

Since the Minister has emphasized that the sovereignty role is a primary concern, presumably this proposal will somehow be integrated with the proposals in the forthcoming Defence White Paper which we also have yet to see. It is impossible for us to relate this to sovereignty, taken in isolation. We know that an ice-breaker operating in the Arctic by itself would simply facilitate the passage of foreign vessels which, of course, cannot now penetrate the Arctic ice.

Let me return to the partisan slapshots to which I referred. Specifically, the Minister had the temerity to say that no Government in Canadian history has done more in so short a time to reaffirm and consolidate northern sovereignty. This is not a pro-active policy, but strictly a reactive policy.

When the Minister talks about fits and starts, I remind the House of the fits which took place when the Polar Sea penetrated the Northwest Passage, having told the Canadian Government it would do so, but not seeking permission. That occurred in July, 1985, and the Government subsequently authorized the passage of the Polar Sea after the fact. The Americans never sought any authorization from the Government to send their ice-breaker through the Northwest Passage.

No one dared challenge the sovereignty of the Northwest Passage while Liberal Governments were in power. Prime Minister Trudeau never had to authorize retroactively the passage of any foreign vessel through the Northwest Passage. The Minister is quite right when he says that nothing like this has been done in the past. His Government's action is strictly a reaction to its failure to assert its sovereignty.

On September 10, 1985, the Minister made a grand declaration when he, among other things, referred to the Canadian Laws Offshore Application Act which was introduced in April, 1986, almost a year ago. It passed first reading and has been on the Notice Paper since October. We do not know when that Bill will be brought forward.

In terms of Liberal Governments, I must say, en passant, that first it was not challenged because there was respect for Canadian sovereignty under Liberal Governments. Second, it was the Liberal Government that negotiated a 200-mile limit on the Law of the Sea which has been so instrumental, not only in terms of Arctic sovereignty but in terms of sovereignty over all Canada's territorial waters. I remind the Minister that it was also the Liberal Government that procured the long-range patrol aircraft which provide a means of surveying the Arctic. When the Minister says that the Government will increase flights over the Arctic, it is with the tools already furnished by a prior Liberal Government.

Therefore, I am not much impressed by this declaration, although Canadians can be assured by one comment by the Minister, that this is an ice-breaker with the capacity to break ice. I notice that the Minister had the wisdom to read that passage in its French text, but Canadians will be grateful that this ice-breaker will have the capacity to break ice. Hopefully, Canadians can look forward to a Government that will have the capacity of governing. I am afraid, though, that they may have to wait until 1988 or 1989 for that happy event.

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my Party I am pleased to respond to the Minister's statement. New Democrats have been in the forefront of demanding more Canadian action in maintaining and promoting Canada's Arctic sovereignty. We have also been in the forefront in advocating a major restructuring of Canada's shipbuilding industry and the need for a planned revitalization of that industry. I want to refer in particular to my colleagues, the Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) and the Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) in that regard.

New Democrats welcome today's announcement. The construction of the world's largest ice-breaker by Versatile Pacific is welcome news for British Columbia, the shipbuilding industry, and shipbuilding workers. It is a welcome symbol of commitment by Canada to establishing a larger presence in the Arctic.

I urge the Government, however, to do more—much more. If Canada is to regain its natural place as a major shipbuilding and shipping nation, the Government must keep its earlier promises to revitalize the industry. Canada must end its ad hoc approach to shipbuilding which has drastically weakened the industry and cost thousands of jobs. It is time for planning and vital long-term support.

I also urge the Government to do much more in establishing Canada's undisputed sovereignty in the north. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), has on several occasions pointed out this Government's failure, and the long failure of previous Liberal Governments, to adequately address our boundary disputes on the North-West coast and in the Arctic. We have also pointed out that any establishment of Canadian sovereignty in the North must deal with the urgent need to address the rights and land title of our aboriginal peoples.

Finally, I urgently remind the Government that the long awaited and much welcome news of the contract for the Polar 8 ice-breaker will not address the larger and critical issue of foreign militarization of the Arctic and the potential weakening of Canada's sovereignty through the north warning system, SDI developments and through U.S. submarine voyages. Canada must join the efforts of other Arctic and Nordic nations to demilitarize the whole Arctic region and to support a nuclear weapons free zone in that region.

CORRECTION TO STATEMENT

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I would like to qualify the information I gave today in Question Period for my friend, the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom). I inadvertently misled the House when I said the meeting was taking place today. In fact, with respect to the potash situation, the meeting took place on February 19. I just wanted to clear up that matter for the record.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-39, an Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act and to amend the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, the Maritime Code Act and the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act in consequence thereof, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Speaker: I think the situation was that the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) had completed his remarks but there was still a 10-minute question and comment period. There being no questions and comments, is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time and passed.

ATLANTIC ACCORD

MEASURE TO IMPLEMENT

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-6, an Act to implement an agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador on offshore petroleum resource management and revenue sharing and to make related and consequential amendments, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Motion No. 2 is now before the House.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, my wish is to debate is on Motion No. 6. I am prepared to allow a vote on Motion No. 2.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the New Democratic Party, we are prepared to let this motion go through. I notice the ruling of the Speaker states, "The Hon. Minister seeks to introduce a new concept into the Bill, however, since there is doubt in my mind, I have decided that the motion should go forward". I do not know whether the Parliamentary Secretary wants to speak specifically, but I think he should perhaps just outline the terms of the motion so we have in Hansard the fact that there is no substantial change from the principles of the Bill.

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Motion No. 2 is an amendment to Clause 16 which is to establish a requirement for the Board to purchase liability insurance, the premium of which would be paid for by the two Governments. As Hon. Members are aware, it is a standard practice for a corporation to carry liability insurance and to provide indemnity for its board members. If the Canada-Newfoundland Board, however, is unable to obtain total insurance coverage an indemnification provision would apply. Under this provision, the two Governments would indemnify the Board members against any costs and amounts awarded against them as long as the Board members were acting honestly and in good faith and within the scope of their duties.

I question whether it is a change in policy. It is rather just a way to cover the Board members from harm.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 2 (Mr. Masse) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): We will now proceed to Motion No. 4.

Hon. James Kelleher (for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved:

Motion No. 4.

That Bill C-6, be amended in Clause 119 by striking out lines 48 and 49 at page 67 and lines 1 and 2 at page 68 and substituting the following therefor:

"(h) any study funded from an account established under Subsection 76(1) of the Canada Petroleum Resources Act, if the study has been completed; and".

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 4 (Mr. Masse) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): We will now proceed to Motions Nos. 5 and 6.

Hon. James Kelleher (for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved:

Motion No. 5.

That Bill C-6, be amended in Clause 232 by striking out line 3 at page 138 and substituting the following therefor:

"subsection 204(4) of the Provincial Act, dis-".

Motion No. 6.

That Bill C-6, be amended in Clause 233 by striking out lines 8 to 14 at page 138 and substituting the following therefor:

"233. (1) There may be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, for the purpose of making payments pursuant to this Part, amounts not exceeding, in the aggregate, the sum of two hundred and twenty-five million dollars."

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I would just like to explain Motion Nos. 5 and 6 briefly. Motion No. 5 with respect to Clause 232 is a technical amendment. The previous citation to the section of the provincial legislation was incorrect. The correct section reference is Section 204(4) of the provincial Act and not Section 232(4). So this is technical in nature. What we have to do is to mirror the provincial legislation, which is what has been done.

Motion No. 6 is also a technical amendment to bring about agreement with the actual accounting practices of the Office of the Comptroller General. There is no necessity to have specific language appropriating funds. It is sufficient to have a statutory provision authorizing payment of funds from the Consolidated Revenue Fund. This is really just a technical amendment as well.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Madam Speaker, I do not quite agree with the Parliamentary Secretary with respect to his analysis of Motion No. 6. I think it is more than just a technical amendment. In fact, I think it goes quite deeply into the intention that was agreed upon when the development fund was signed by the federal Government and the provincial Government of Newfoundland. Clause 233(1) states:

There is hereby appropriated for the purposes of making payments pursuant to this Part, and such payments may be made out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund in, an aggregate amount not exceeding the sum of two hundred and twenty-five million dollars.

That is the way Clause 233 reads at the present time. The change being proposed by the Government would have the clause read:

There may be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, for the purpose of making payments pursuant to this Part, amounts not exceeding, in the aggregate, the sum of two hundred and twenty-five million dollars.

The amendment omits the words: "There is hereby appropriated for the purposes of making such payments—". In my opinion, if we were to leave the wording as it is presently, then the funds would automatically be put into a fund, a development fund, to be jointly administered by the Province of Newfoundland and the Government of Canada. If we do not have those words then what we have is the federal Government drawing down from the Consolidated Revenue Fund funds to be applied against the expenditures outlined in the agreement whereby the payments may not be made on time or whereby the payments are not in a particular fund governed by the Province and the federal Government and the board that would oversee the fund. There is a significant difference. I can understand the Department of Finance not wanting to part with money any sooner than it absolutely has to part with it. However, if we approve the amendment then we are going counter to the spirit of the development fund agreement and counter to what was the intention of the Province of Newfoundland.

I ask the Government to withdraw this amendment because I do not think it is in the interests of Newfoundland. After all, the Government has delayed this Bill for a considerable amount of time. Newfoundland passed its legislation some time ago.

I wish to take exception to the remarks made this morning by an Hon. Member from Newfoundland who stated that the Opposition held this Bill up. That is not the case. As a matter of fact, this Bill was dealt with quickly and expeditiously by members of the Opposition. The Bill was given first reading one year ago. We then dealt with second reading and the matter was referred to committee at the end of June just before the House adjourned for the summer recess. Members of the Opposition did very well in dealing with Bill C-5. It was a committee which dealt with Bill C-92 and then Bill C-94, which were the numbers of the Bills in the first session, and which Bill C-5 and Bill C-6 now represent in this session of Parliament. There was no time to deal with Bill C-94. At that time there was no mention by the Government or anyone else that the Opposition was stalling with respect to these Bills. In fact, members of the Opposition have bent over backward to deal expeditiously with this Bill.

I would like to see report stage proceeded with quickly. But I do not think it would be in the best interests of the people of Newfoundland not to point out that I think the amendment suggested by the Government goes counter to their interests.

Motion No. 5 (Mr. Masse) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Mr. Masse, seconded by Mr. Oberle, moves that Bill C-6, an Act to implement an agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador on offshore petroleum resource and management and revenue sharing and to make related and consequential amendments, be amended in Clause 233 by striking out lines 8 to 14 at page 138 and substituting the following therefor:—

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think the record should properly show that the motion was moved by Mr. Oberle for Mr. Masse and seconded by Madam Landry.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): If I remember correctly, the motion was moved for Mr. Masse by Mr. Kelleher and seconded by Mr. Oberle.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, with respect to the particular motion you are putting before the House at the present time there are two cabinet Ministers in the House in their seats. I suggest it should be moved for Mr. Masse by Mr. Oberle and seconded by Madam Landry.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): We will check the record. However, when the motion was first proposed these people were present and I think the motion was in order.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hesitate to interrupt at this time. It is a small matter but I think we should clear up the proceedings. I cannot say who is present and who is not present since there are rules of the House with respect to that. However, I do not recall seeing the Hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) in the House. Therefore, he could not have proposed the motion. I support what the Parliamentary Secretary has said with respect to the way the motion should read.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I hope the House will allow me to try to make things clear. When the motion was first introduced in the House it was introduced in the following way. It was moved by Mr. Kelleher for Mr. Masse, seconded by Mr. Oberle. I think that should stand.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

• (1540)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 6 (Mr. Masse) agreed to.

Hon. James Kelleher (for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved:

Motion No. 8

That Bill C-6, be amended in Clause 239

(a) by striking out line 17 at page 141 in the English version, and substituting the following therefor:

"239. (1) Subject to subsection (2),"

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 8 (Mr. Masse) agreed to.

Atlantic Accord

Hon. James Kelleher (for Mr. Masse), moved that Bill C-6, as amended, be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): When shall the Bill be read the third time? At the next sitting of the House?

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been discussions among the Parties, and if you were to seek unanimous consent you may find that there would be a disposition in the House to proceed with third reading at the present time.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I confirm that indeed there have been negotiations. The Official Opposition, in the spirit of co-operation and in trying to get the Government to do the right thing, has agreed to proceed to third reading today.

[Translation]

Mr. Waddell: Now that the NDP has 36 per cent of popular support according to the polls in Quebec, we are agreeable, as are the Government and the Opposition, to proceeding with consideration of the Bill at this time.

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that Bill C-6 be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I wish to thank my colleagues from the Liberal caucus and the NDP caucus for their co-operation in expediting this Bill, which is very important to Newfoundland and it is waiting patiently to see that it is passed.

It is with great pleasure and satisfaction that I introduce for adoption by the House on third reading Bill C-6 to implement the Atlantic Accord.

The Government of Canada seeks to establish harmonious relations with the provinces, to stimulate economic development and foster social justice from coast to coast. Every action it takes necessarily bears witness to this fundamental guiding principle of the Government. Bill C-6 is another striking example.

We believe that the country's stability and prosperity depend on each provincial Government fully carrying out its role within our political and economic framework. That is why this Bill establishes the Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador as equal partners in the management of offshore oil and gas resources.

The establishment of the Canada-Newfoundland Offshore Oil and Gas Board under the Accord demonstrates this recognition by assigning an equal number of representatives from each Government as well as a chairperson selected by mutual agreement. The Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador will jointly give to the board instructions on key issues such as the rate and method of exploration and production of petroleum resources. In this manner, the two levels of Government will be able to ensure that the board is kept aware of their primary concerns. Similarly, a number of basic board decisions can be reviewed by either Government. This management system, which is based on the responsibilities and capabilities of both parties, is a model of co-operation and co-ordination, something which has been absent for a number of years.

These basic concepts also guide the Government's economic position. We believe that in order to foster economic development throughout Canada it is necessary to stimulate the economy of each province. This requires, among other things, the revival of provincial sources of revenue. Hence, in addition to a joint management system, the Government of Canada grants Newfoundland access to revenues deriving from the exploration or exploitation of offshore oil and gas resources. This sharing is possible because we consider oil and gas resources offshore Newfoundland to be the same as land resources.

As a result of this Bill, the province will participate in key resource management decisions and provincial statutes regarding resource revenues will be incorporated. These important measures are introduced pursuant to federal legislation in an area where the Government of Canada has jurisdiction. The Bill also provides for equalization payments to Newfoundland once production has reached a specified level. The purpose of these payments is to ensure that the province is not penalized, and that it will be able to benefit from the additional revenue for a period defined in Part V of the Bill.

However, we also believe that economic development must promote social justice, and that job creation is one of the best ways to bring this about. To this end, Bill C-6 establishes the $300 million Canada-Newfoundland Development Fund, three-quarters of which is funded by the Government of Canada. It allows the province to set up the socio-economic infrastructure needed to allow it to profit from offshore oil and natural gas development.

In order to establish this infrastructure, Newfoundland will undertake the construction of access roads or drilling rig manufacturing plants, and it will be prepared to provide required goods and services. It will also attend to the training of the people needed to fill the positions that will become available because of these activities. All these activities will create jobs.

In concluding, I wish to quote the Hon. Brian Peckford, Premier of Newfoundland, on the occasion of the signing of the Atlantic Accord on February 11, 1985. He stated:

—this whole agreement has been accomplished recognizing our role in Confederation and our commitment to national self-sufficiency for Canada—

There is no other document in existence that so clearly establishes Newfoundland's right to have a significant say and control over such a huge resource ... Today marks a watershed in the development of Newfoundland. It signals a dramatic turning point in the economic history of this place.

• (1550)

His words underline in an eloquent fashion the achievement of the objectives set by the Canadian Government when it first took office. We are convinced—and Bill C-6 is further evidence of this—that by giving each province increased control over its economy, the political unity and economic prosperity of the whole country are strengthened.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to speak on third reading of Bill C-6, a very important piece of legislation in terms of what it can do for the Province of Newfoundland. I do not agree with a great deal of the legislation and think that it is counter-productive. However, it is important that it be passed as soon as possible.

As I said at report stage, I do not agree with the change to Clause 233 which would strike out the following words: "There is hereby appropriated for the purposes of making payments pursuant to this Part". If we just say that funds can be taken from the Consolidated Revenue Fund and there is no reference in the section to the funds actually being appropriated, the funds may not go to the Province of Newfoundland as quickly as it would like. In accordance with the spirit of the agreement between the province and the federal Government, the funds should be appropriated immediately and put into the special development fund so that they can be used, and perhaps even accumulate some interest, for the benefit of the people of Newfoundland. It is a complete change of the position and the spirit of the agreement between the two Governments.

I am also unclear about Clause 41(1)(b) which refers to the feedstock requirements of the facilities at Come-By-Chance, if the facilities were operating at capacity. What may be intended here is sufficient feedstock to service the refinery at Come-By-Chance. However, the wording is not very secure and it more or less excludes Come-By-Chance if the refinery is not operating at capacity, which would be very damaging to the Province of Newfoundland. The wording in Clause 41(1)(b) should be clarified. The federal Government should state emphatically what it means in that very important clause.

With the passage of the Bill through the House and subsequently through the other place, $225 million, as agreed by the federal Government and the Province of Newfoundland, will go to the development fund. Finally it will be available to the province to help it develop infrastructure and facilities to assist it in being ready for the time when Hibernia and other oil deposits reach the developmental stage.

I only hope that the Province of Newfoundland spends the money a lot better than did the Province of Nova Scotia. That province built roads, but they were nowhere near areas where there would be oil or gas development or any of the oil or gas coming ashore. It was used for political purposes. I request the Government of Newfoundland to use the money to develop infrastructure for the offshore. It is important for the people of Newfoundland that nothing happens to delay further the bringing ashore of oil reserves off the coast. I emphasize that it has been delayed enough and that the passage of the Bill will do nothing to bring on those reserves. We need resolve on the part of the federal Government to develop a fiscal regime to bring about a policy which will take major producers by the ears and say that the reserve must be developed.

The people of Newfoundland have been disappointed many times. One example would be the Churchill linerboard plant. They have suffered through the ups and downs of the refinery at Come-By-Chance, which we hope is on an up cycle and will continue in that way. They cannot wait forever to realize the potential of Hibernia and other deposits off the coast of Newfoundland.

This area has tremendous potential, and the potential is being allowed to dissipate. Many small business which were operating with the express purpose of being part of the exploration and development of Hibernia were unable to keep their businesses going and have closed their doors. As many as 200 small businesses have been lost because of the Government's delay in bringing this important resource ashore and in delaying the fiscal regime necessary to act as the cohesive force.

The most damaging aspect occurred almost a year ago when Chevron sent $500 million back to its parent company in San Francisco, stating as a reason for doing so that the indecision about Hibernia and the lack of resolve by the federal Government with regard to this important resource made it unsure of the future role of Hibernia in Canada's oil and gas sector. Rather than dealing with the uncertainty of sitting and waiting for something to happen, it sent the $500 million back to its parent company. It was very damaging because it was $500 million targeted for equity on the offshore. We are not only minus the $500 million itself, but we are also minus the borrowing leverage which the $500 million could bring. If the parent company in turn lends the subsidiary in Canada millions of dollars, it would not be the same because the parent company would be borrowing from the head office. Unfortunately the delay has caused the loss of a potential $500 million in equity.

However, the potential remains. The Avalon Basin is tremendously rich in oil and gas. Unfortunately government programs have met a drastic cut-back in exploration. The uncertainty of the Government in terms of where it is going and the importance of developing the Avalon Basin area has meant that the industry has cooled and backed away from previous intense negotiations about bringing the reserves onstream. I ask the Government to bring this matter forward.

Bill C-6 was introduced and given first reading as Bill C-94 in the previous session on February 7. At least two months later it was given second reading. It was the end of June before it went to the legislative committee along with Bill C-92 for study. Because of the co-operation of the two opposition Parties, Bill C-92 went through committee stage. Then Bill C-92 became Bill C-5 in the present session, was passed at report stage, given third reading, was subsequently passed in the other place, and has now become law. Because of time constraints we were unable to deal with Bill C-94, as it was then known, or Bill C-6 before us now. It went to committee not as soon as we returned but weeks later. Here we are today on March 2 dealing with report stage and third reading of the Bill.

• (1600)

This is a Bill that could potentially provide the Province of Newfoundland with $225 million in development funds. Months ago the Province of Newfoundland passed its companion legislation and it has been waiting for this House to pass its Bill. I think the Government has perpetrated a breach of trust. I think it is unfair to the people of Newfoundland and the Government of Newfoundland. However, it is not surprising when one considers the way the Government backed away from the potential economic value of Hibernia to the Province of Newfoundland.

I would ask the Government as I have asked it before to please proceed with Hibernia and to pass this legislation as quickly as possible, as I think the Government will do after today. I plead with the Government to get on immediately with the development of those very important oil reserves.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I have a few words to say on third reading stage of this very important Bill. Of course, I agree with the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan). The Government does have control of the agenda. I do not want the Hon. Member for Bonavista—Trinity—Conception (Mr. Johnson) to return to Newfoundland to say that either the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys, who is a Liberal, or the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway, who is a member of the NDP, was holding up this Bill. We are not holding up the Bill. We do not have control of the parliamentary agenda. The Government could have brought this Bill before the House at any time. Now it is before us. Let us deal with it.

I have some real concerns in the back of my mind. We could be setting up a strange creature we have not examined properly over which we may not have control. That creature is this dual management of the offshore resource. I know it is a way of trying to get around the problem of giving Newfoundland control without the requirement of a constitutional amendment. The Supreme Court of Canada says that the federal Government owns the offshore, so I know what the Government is trying to do. However, I think we may have created a rather strange creature that may be difficult to control.

During the second of the two committee hearings which were held, I tried to voice my concern. As reported at page 1:93 of the committee hearing of Tuesday, November 4, 1986, I put it this way:

> Let us say as a matter of national policy the government decides it wants to change the situation fairly dramatically in Hibernia to develop it to take Canadian control over the development. This is hypothetical. Mobil does not want to go ahead with it. They have things in other parts of the world they want to do. The Government of Canada decides we have to go with Hibernia and the board sides with Mobil. How locked in are we to an independent board as opposed to national policy set by a Minister?

This question has now come up again.

D. Paul Emond of Osgoode Hall Law School wrote an article in Resources, the newsletter of the Canadian Institute of Resources Law, an eminent Calgary group. In the Resources newsletter number 12 of August 1985, Professor Emond spoke of the problem involved with control over what we are setting up. He said:

> Offshore exploration activity is partly the result of massive federal subsidies. While costly, these expenditures have made good political and even economic sense. They have enabled us to learn more about the size and accessibility of frontier oil and gas. They have benefited have-not provinces such as Newfoundland. They have also benefited other Canadians, as owners of the frontier lands. How else can Canada justify paying such large subsidies for offshore exploration?

We have spent about $11 billion on offshore exploration subsidies since 1960. Professor Emond continues:

> One would have expected, therefore, that the federal government would be reluctant to give up almost all of the financial benefits that development of the Newfoundland offshore might bring.
> The Atlantic Accord expresses the federal interest in the Newfoundland offshore in terms of national self-sufficiency, security of supply and, to a lesser extent, Canadianization of the industry. This seriously understates the federal interest. In the past, Canadian energy policy has reflected a multiplicity of interests, including conservation, environmental protection, economic development, regional disparity, and consumer price protection.
> This apparent narrowing of federal policy interest would be less disturbing if the Accord provided for periodic review and mechanisms by which it could be adjusted. But, without Newfoundland's consent, that option is not available. Indeed, if Newfoundland achieves the requisite support from other provinces, clause 64 commits the federal Government to introduce a mutually agreeable resolution into Parliament to constitutionally entrench the Accord. If that should happen, the Accord and the Board would be effectively insulated from any government review.

Professor Emond also points out in this article that the board is almost completely divorced from government policy. That is what I meant when I described this hybrid we have created. Suppose there is another energy crisis in the 1990s and we have to develop Hibernia right away. Suppose the federal Government wants to be involved in it. There may be some difficulties over that with the board.

It has been put another way by Frances Russell, a very thoughtful journalist who writes for the Winnipeg Free Press. Her column in the Winnipeg Free Press of January 17 reads in part as follows:

> One sure way to achieve harmony, of course, is to give your opposite number everything he wants and more.
> The Mulroney government conceded without a murmur what the Liberals had fought, at great political cost, to achieve: that Ottawa, as the government of all Canadians, should have some access to the nation's resource wealth.
> Although Ottawa's constitutional ownership rights to Newfoundland's offshore resources were upheld by the Supreme Court of Canada, the Liberals planned to give the province a minority say in management and full revenues until it became one of Confederation's "haves."

The Mulroney government went a giant step further in Carney's Atlantic Accord. It provided for joint management of the resource, with Newfoundland having the exclusive right to set royalties and with disputes between the two governments to be resolved by a panel of appointed officials.

The following is the key paragraph in the column:

Fundamental matters of state involving the national interest are to be decided, not by the national government, but by a group of bureaucrats, half of whom represent a province.

Ms. Russell goes on to say:

The Western Accord, signed with Alberta, Saskatchewan and B.C., was a complete federal rout.

The dismantling of the Liberals' National Energy Policy meant a total repudiation of Ottawa's hard-won power back to provincial capitals, and a potentially massive flow of revenue from the federal government through the provinces back to the oil companies.

If I might put it another way, Frances Russell is really asking who is speaking for Canada. I must say that I am surprised that members of the Liberal Party have not put up more of a defence of its own National Energy Program rather than succumbing so easily to some of the Tory myths about the National Energy Program. That program had faults and it had some pluses. Conservatives just do not tell the truth about it and I think the Liberals have bought those myths too easily. They should have defended the program.

Let me return to the Bill that is before us. All of us in the House want to pass the Bill in order to help Newfoundland. We want Newfoundland to become a have province and to be like some of the western provinces that have used their resources for economic growth. We all believe in that. However, I am saying that there is a little niggling doubt in the back of my mind. Professor Emond and Frances Russell talked about it as well. That doubt is that in an energy crisis when we will need a national policy for Canada, will a future Government be stymied by the fact that we have set up this hybrid, strange creature that will manage the Newfoundland offshore, a board that will either be a creature of the provincial Government or a creature unto itself, removed from government policy? You should not on principle remove bureaucrats from the control of their political masters, so that when there is a concern over national policy you can act. While I hope we do not, I am afraid we might wake up in 10 years and regret that we did not give that closer scrutiny in this Bill.

As far as I can see, there is nothing happening in oil exploration off Newfoundland and Nova Scotia. In fact, exploration has collapsed. The Department of Regional Industrial Expansion review of capital investment reports that petroleum companies operating in Newfoundland, who cut their investment by 42 per cent in 1986, will pare off another 46 per cent this year. In dollar terms the investment declined from $443 million in 1985 to $356 million last year, and they anticipate a mere $270 million next year. In other words, as long as world oil prices are down and the Government does not give more grants, there is not going to be much exploration off Newfoundland. The Globe and Mail says that offshore exploration for oil and gas is expected to remain stagnant with only one or two rigs working off the Newfoundland coast.

While we all tried to support this Bill in that we thought it was an example of the new federal-provincial co-operation, we now know that the Premier of Newfoundland has had some fundamental differences over the fisheries question with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his Ministers. We have to contrast the urgency attached by the former Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to speedy passage of Bill C-94 in the last session of Parliament with the lackadaisical approach by the present Minister in bringing this Bill forward. Newfoundlanders are now seeing the reality in a Government led by a Prime Minister who once said, in the course of the election campaign, that he was not afraid to inflict prosperity on Newfoundland.

In the course of committee deliberations on this Bill and Bill C-5 previously which dealt with frontier energy, concerns were expressed about encouraging balanced, sustainable, long-term regional development and the need to ensure that the development of the offshore petroleum industry in Newfoundland proceeds carefully so as not to harm the vital fishing industry on which so many Newfoundlanders depend for their livelihood. Now, however, the Prime Minister's Government has, in its own inimitable fashion, simplified matters by handing over the fishery to France. We need a regional development strategy. I was hoping the legislative committee would hold some hearings in Atlantic Canada, examine the development fund details and look at safety concerns. After all, we had the Ocean Ranger disaster involving a tragic loss of life. These rigs are going to go into Iceberg Alley, and we have not really looked at the danger there. I hoped we would look into preferential hiring of local people and the effect of development on other industries such as the forest and fishing industries of Newfoundland. I hoped we would look at Canadianization and who will benefit from it. Will it be Mobil Oil of New York or will it be Canadians? Finally, I hoped we would look at the role of Petro-Canada. Yet we did none of that. Quite frankly, the Conservative Members on the committee were not interested in examining these issues which have to be examined.

As someone who is not from Atlantic Canada, like some other speakers in this debate, I find that many of the Premiers in Atlantic Canada have sold a kind of bill of goods to the people there. "This great development is a pot of gold and you are going to be rich tomorrow". That is wrong. It is fraudulent in many ways. I know they have won elections like that, but I think politicians have to be honest with the people of Newfoundland about regional development. If I can put it as honestly as I would like to, I say to the people of Newfoundland that it is my observation that they should not forget their fishing industry. Do not forget the forest, mining and tourism industries. Do not just go for this pot of gold at the end of the rainbow. Do not think that Hibernia is somehow going to be a heaven and you will have a big surplus fund like Alberta has. I hope there is development.

I said in my speech in this House on second reading on May 26, 1986, that we need Hibernia in the 1990s. We are asleep now and we are going to have another energy crisis. Oil is a non-renewable resource and we are running out of cheap and easily obtainable oil. The National Energy Board told us we will be running out in about eight years. We will have to go to the frontier and it will cost Canadians a lot more. The price of gas could be double what it is today if we have to develop those resources. The world oil resources will then be concentrated in the Middle East, a very unstable area. We are looking at an energy crisis in the 1990s and we should wake up and realize it. That is why the development of Hibernia is important. That is why this Bill is important. It is flawed in many ways, it was a quick fix Atlantic energy Accord in the style of the Government. However, we will do our best to make it work, and that is why we are prepared to let it go through today.

Mr. Joe Price (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, I would much prefer to discuss some of the more positive aspects of this legislation but I will succumb to the temptation to comment on a number of statements made by members from both opposition Parties with respect to delays. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) indicated a concern over the length of time the Government took to introduce this legislation. I simply ask him where he and his Government were prior to 1984 when the Government of Newfoundland approached his Liberal Government in Ottawa to try to resolve this dispute so we could get on with development. He knows and the country knows how many times the provincial Government made those approaches and how many times it was rebuked. I would also remind the Hon. Member that within six months of taking office, this Government went to Newfoundland and signed the Atlantic Accord. For the Hon. Member's information, the legislation was introduced and debated, and it could have been passed in a timely fashion concurrent with the legislation in the province. Why did it not get through all stages of this House? Because of the delaying tactics of the Opposition, in particular the NDP.

Mr. Waddell: Not true.

Mr. Price: Indeed it is true. My colleague from Bonavista—Trinity—Conception sat on both legislative committees which dealt with Bill C-94 and Bill C-6. He came out of those committees time and time again in frustration expressing concern because of the delays by the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

• (1620)

Mr. Waddell: Would the Hon. Member not allow the native people to speak in committee?

Mr. Price: I am not suggesting that we should not allow the native people to speak. I am suggesting—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Burin—St. George's (Mr. Price) has the floor.

Mr. Price: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The delays were indeed unnecessary delays. I, being a member of the legislative committee on Bill C-6, do not mind saying in this House that I supported an extension of the committee sitting so that we could get on with the passage of this Bill. We indeed extended the sittings on that day and got through that Bill in a timely fashion because we, as Members from the Province of Newfoundland, were concerned that this Bill not be delayed any longer. We wanted to get the development under way.

The Hon. Member talks about a lack of research on iceberg movement. Has he not heard about the fine research efforts at the Memorial University of Newfoundland? The C-CORD Foundation is a world leader in marine research. It was the same Member, incidentally who said that the Atlantic Accord was only a piece of paper. I suggest that there are people in Newfoundland who think differently.

The spirit of this legislation marks a clean break from the Ottawa-dominated policies of the previous Government. Indeed, the Atlantic Accord is a milestone in the history of federal-provincial relations in Canada. We all remember the inability of the previous Government to reach an agreement with the Province of Newfoundland on the issue of offshore oil and gas resource management and revenue sharing. There were some who said it could not be done, that Newfoundland's demand for a shared management regime based on equality was unrealistic. Not only were their demands realistic, they are now realized because of the determination of the Government to do what is morally right for the Province of Newfoundland. Together this Government and the Province of Newfoundland showed that it could be done in a way that recognized our respective roles in Confederation and our joint commitment to energy self-sufficiency for Canada.

This legislation is based on the principle of federal-provincial sharing of decisions on important issues which affect the economic and social development of a province and the country as a whole. The Atlantic Accord reflected in Bill C-6 clearly established Newfoundland's right to have a significant say and degree of control over the management of its important offshore oil and gas resources. It protects Newfoundland from the kind of arrogant and uncaring actions demonstrated by the previous Liberal administration.

The principle of joint management has been ensured by the creation of a strong, independent Canada-Newfoundland Offshore Petroleum Board. This legislation empowers the board to make decisions on all matters related to the management of offshore oil and gas resources. There is a provision for joint policy direction to the board by both Governments on key issues such as industrial and employment benefits, public reviews, and decisions affecting the pace and mode of exploration and development. This will ensure the board remains responsive to both Governments.

In addition, certain fundamental decisions of the board will be subject to review by both Governments. In the event that the two Governments fail to reach a consensus on a fundamental board decision, the responsibility of approval will rest with one of the two Ministers depending on whether or not Canada is self-sufficient in crude oil. This legislation will be well received by the industry. It provides a stable regime within which industry can develop valuable offshore oil and gas resources in the interests of Newfoundland and Canada as a whole.

The important issue of revenue sharing has been resolved in a way consistent with the Government's belief that provinces should play the primary role in benefiting from wealth generated by our natural resources. The sharing of offshore revenues will be the same as it is between Canada and those provinces with petroleum activities on land. In this regard, the legislation adopts Newfoundland legislation related to the establishment and collection of provincial-type resource revenues and taxes of general application. This Bill also confers important powers on the province regarding resource management. These important measures are enacted through federal legislation in an area in which the federal Government has legislative jurisdiction.

The signing of the Atlantic Accord was itself more than ample proof of our respect for the rights of both Canada and Newfoundland in the offshore. That respect is enshrined in this legislation. The first benefits of this new partnership will occur with funding from the $300 million Offshore Development Fund. This fund will be used to put in place the infrastructure necessary to ensure Newfoundland receives maximum benefits from future petroleum development. The Newfoundland Government has shown foresight in its first proposals for projects under the fund. Already approximately $37 million has been committed to projects related to education and training. Through projects such as these, Newfoundlanders will be qualified and ready for the many jobs resulting from development of offshore oil and gas resources.

Bill C-6 provides protection for the Newfoundland economy by ensuring there will not be a dollar-for-dollar loss in equalization payments when the revenues begin to flow into the provincial treasury. Additionally, this legislation continues an oil spill compensation regime which, with respect to absolute liability for oil spill damages and debris, requires the oil industry to provide financial security. The new legislation includes the formation of a committee with representatives from both Governments and the petroleum and fishing industries. This committee will be required to review and monitor the effectiveness of the compensation regime.

In closing, Madam Speaker, I wish to say once again how proud I am of the achievements of the Government and the Government of Newfoundland which are reflected in this Bill. I am confident it will benefit future generations of Newfoundlanders as well as other Canadians. With this law we show all of Canada that the principles of social justice can be achieved through federal-provincial co-operation in a way which strengthens our country and ensures better lives for all Canadians by the sharing of responsibility and the wealth of our bountiful resources. On behalf of the House, I would like to thank the committee for its contribution in the study of this Bill. The proposed legislation deserves the unanimous support of the House and I ask all Members to support it accordingly.

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I will not be very long. For just a moment I will refer to the last statement of the Hon. Member. He has called upon all Members of the House to support this legislation. I can assure him that I will say no to the passage of the legislation, but I will not hold it up, simply because I cannot.

While I have 20 minutes in which to speak, it may only take five minutes to explain why I do not like this legislation. The Bill gives the Newfoundland Government substantial funds immediately upon its passage, but I believe it will go down in Newfoundland history as being the biggest sell-out in the Province of Newfoundland, far surpassing the agreement made on the upper Churchill in Labrador that is sometimes referred to by politicians in Newfoundland and Ottawa.

It is the biggest sell-out in Newfoundland history because of a clause in the Bill that was briefly alluded to by some other Members. According to that clause, no new industry can be built in Newfoundland using offshore oil from Newfoundland unless every industry is fed by that oil in other provinces in eastern Canada. Not one petrochemical industry can be built in Newfoundland in order to utilize offshore oil unless the Irving refinery in Saint John, New Brunswick is satisfied, unless the Point Tupper refinery is reopened in Nova Scotia, and unless the petrochemical industry in Dartmouth and Halifax is satisfied.

The Newfoundland Bill that is the same as this Bill was passed unanimously by all Parties in the Newfoundland Legislature. It means that for all time petroleum resources taken from the offshore cannot be used to construct new industrial capacity in the poorer Province of Newfoundland.

Perhaps the only contribution I may make today is to put that proof on the record so that sometime in 20 or 30 years when there is a big row in Newfoundland about the big sell-out that took place in 1987, people may look back and say that at least it was pointed out in the House and is in the official record. I refer to Clause 41(1) under Regional Security of Supply. That clause states that the delivery of petroleum from the offshore in Newfoundland will go first to:

> (a) the end use consumption and feedstock requirements of industrial facilities that are in place in the Province on the day of the coming into force of this Act;

The clause mentions industrial facilities, but the only other refinery that was open in Newfoundland, other than Come-By-Chance, was torn down two years ago.

Mr. Shields: Build her up.

Mr. Baker: The Parliamentary Secretary says to build her up. That cannot be done because it is not allowed after this Bill is passed.

Clause 41(1)(b) states:

> The feedstock requirements of the refining facilities at Come-By-Chance on the day of the coming-into-force of this Act or any refining facility constructed in the Province to replace those facilities;

The facilities at Come-By-Chance are the only ones in existence in Newfoundland. Those two subclauses are not required. Those facilities are not operating at capacity, which is 100,000 barrels a day. They never operated at capacity and never will. Subclause (b) concludes "—or any refining facility constructed in the province to replace those facilities". Therein you are guaranteed 100,000 barrels of oil a day from the offshore for Newfoundland. The clause goes on to state:

> —or (c) the feedstock requirements of any refining facility located in the province that was not in place on the coming-into-force of this Act, other than a facility referred to in paragraph (b)—

Which is the facility at Come-By-Chance. It goes on to say where:

> —the feedstock requirements required to satisfy the demand of industrial capacity, on the day of the coming-into-force of this Act, in the Provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island—have been met.

The Bill refers to existing industrial capacity in those three provinces on the day of coming into force of this Act. There is no industrial capacity in the Province of Newfoundland that wishes to use offshore oil. Yet Come-By-Chance is guaranteed 100,000 barrels a day. Yet in the same clause the Irving refinery in New Brunswick is guaranteed capacity which is about 290,000 barrels a day. It is operating at 40 per cent to 45 per cent capacity. It guarantees the refining capacity of Nova Scotia on the day of the coming into force of this Act.

Then there is Newfoundland, which is far behind, with no industrial requirements at all for offshore oil. There are no mothballed refineries in Newfoundland, no refineries operating on oil from Venezuela like others in Atlantic Canada, and no refineries operating at half capacity. This Bill stipulates that for all time offshore oil from Newfoundland cannot be used to construct any new industries there because it does not have those industrial requirements on the day of the coming into force of this Act. I was law clerk in the provincial Legislature of Newfoundland for three years. I know Newfoundland legislation probably better than anyone in this Chamber and perhaps am only matched by the Member for St. John's West, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie). I taught him when he was new to politics, and I suggest it is obvious that I taught him very well. He knows almost as much as I know about Newfoundland legislation. I do not know of any other piece of legislation in the Newfoundland Legislature that is so glaring in intent to do harm to the industrial future of Newfoundland than this legislation.

It states that for all time offshore oil off Newfoundland cannot be used to construct a petrochemical industry or anything other than what is presently at Come-By-Chance, which is really not operating to any capacity today. It is hard to believe that the legislation could be worse, but when one reads further, one sees that it refers to the time when there is a shortfall of petroleum deliveries in the province. This is after Nova Scotia is satisfied, after Prince Edward Island is satisfied and after New Brunswick is satisfied. Once everyone is satisfied and all the refineries of the Maritimes are blocked with oil, the Minister from Newfoundland might declare a shortfall in petroleum deliveries in that province. We are only talking about Newfoundland. The province gets the first option to acquire on commercial terms, protecting the big multinational oil companies, petroleum produced in the offshore area, unless—u-n-l-e-s-s—a sales contract with respect to the petroleum has been entered into prior to the giving of the notice.

In other words, not only is Newfoundland relegated to the position of being less than every other province on the eastern seaboard, but it is now relegated to the position of being less than the multinational oil companies which are drilling for the oil. Would it not be silly for a company to drill on Hibernia if it were not guaranteed a contract for sale of the oil? Why else would it drill? What Clause 41(2) does—as if Clause 41(1) were not bad enough—is to tell the oil companies that if they have a contract, they do not have to give it to anyone. If they have a contract in Venezuela, in the United States, in England or in France, they can take the oil to those countries. If Saudi Arabia wants to buy the oil, it can be given to them. They do not have to supply Newfoundland with anything. That is why I say that this is the biggest sell-out in Newfoundland history that I know of.

Imagine what would happen to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister if he stood in this Chamber and introduced a Bill which provided that oil found in the Province of Alberta from this time forth must go to satisfy the existing industrial capacity of Saskatchewan, Ontario and Quebec. Imagine if it would not be allowed to be used in Alberta to construct a petro-chemical complex. A separation would take place. Confederation would be no more. Alberta would not be a part of Confederation any longer. I know the Hon. Member is from Fort McMurray because there are a lot of Newfoundlanders up in Fort McMurray and when they have problems they have to telephone his office, so I know him fairly well. If the Hon. Member stood in this Chamber and supported such a Bill which told the people of Alberta that their oil can no longer be used to build a petro-chemical complex or oil refinery in Alberta, that it must be sent to Saskatchewan, Ontario and Quebec, he would not be allowed back into Calgary airport. He would not be allowed off the plane. Here we have an incredible situation. The Newfoundland Government is saying it wants this Bill. It wants the clauses passed and passed yesterday.

For the record, Madam Speaker, I think this is a bad Bill. I think the drafters of this legislation probably knew that when they were drafting the Bill. It is the worst Bill ever concocted in the history of this place. I do not know why the Newfoundland Government agreed to it. I have to agree with some of the remarks made by some government Members of Parliament from Newfoundland when they said: "We want this Bill now because the payments can start and we need the money in Newfoundland. We need the $200 million". This guarantees that over $200 million could be passed to the provincial Government for projects with respect to much needed employment. Therefore, Madam Speaker, all I want to say for the record is that one of these days some student will be researching this Bill. He is going to think that there was a bunch of crazy Members of Parliament back in 1987. He will think that the Newfoundland Legislature must have been insane to have passed this particular piece of legislation. I want to be on the record as pointing out that I do not agree with this legislation at all and I certainly would not do anything to hurry its passage.

Mr. Hovdebo: Madam Speaker, Bill C-6 is supposed to give Newfoundland the same kind of control over its resources on land and in the sea around Newfoundland as the other provinces have who are land-locked. I wonder if the Hon. Member would comment if the legislation really does this? The fish resource of the sea is a resource which Newfoundland has depended on. It has thought, I am sure, that it owned that resource as much as it does the oil which could be developed from under-sea mining. Just lately the Government made an agreement with France which gave away a considerable amount of that fish resource which belongs to Newfoundland. Does the Hon. Member think that the people of Newfoundland have any assurance that this Bill will guarantee that this Government, or some other Government, will not do exactly the same thing later on and give away some of Newfoundland's oil in the same way as the Government has given away Newfoundland's fish?

Mr. Baker: Madam Speaker, with respect to the question of the resource being treated the same as if it were on land, there is in this Bill a section called The Security of Regional Supply. Certainly, if it were treated the same as if the oil were on land, then we would not have any guarantees under this Bill to support industrial capacity which lies outside the Province of Newfoundland. Therefore, it differs considerably from the situation if the oil were on land.

The question raised by the Hon. Member concerning the piece of territory which is off the coast of Newfoundland, in which St. Pierre and Miquelon is in the middle, and where we presently have a dispute, I would say that if any constitutional experts were sitting down and examining the position of the federal Government, they would think that the first thing which should be done is that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) should be removed from his position.

There is no case in history to even hint that France has any rights whatsoever beyond three miles to ten miles off St. Pierre and Miquelon when one looks at international law. France was in just the opposite position with respect to the Channel Islands where another country was claiming an extended zone. What happened there? We all know that it ended up to be 10 miles. It is absolutely insane for Canada to say to France: "This is a disputed zone", which is an admission by Canadian standards that France actually has a claim on that offshore area. There is not an example in the entire world where a colony of another country has rights to 200 miles. Nowhere in international law is there an example of that. One wonders where the advice in the Department of External Affairs came from. Or was it from the Department of External Affairs? Was it perhaps from the Department of External Affairs of France? Perhaps they got it mixed up. That is the way the Government has treated the Newfoundland fishery and even the Newfoundland resources which are off the coast of St. Pierre and Miquelon.

This Bill does not treat the resource as if it were on land because if it were on land, the oil would not be guaranteed to every other province except the Province of Newfoundland.

RADIO ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-3, an Act to amend the Radio Act, as reported (without amendment) from a legislative committee.

Hon. James Kelleher (for the Minister of Communications) moved that Bill C-3 be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

Hon. James Kelleher (for the Minister of Communications) moved that the Bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to introduce the third reading of Bill C-3, an Act to amend the Radio Act. As the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) explained when appearing before the legislative committee that examined this Bill, it costs money to employ people to manage the radio frequency spectrum.

Most spectrum users have been contributing towards the cost of this service for years through their radio licence fees. However, federal and provincial departments as well as Crown corporations and Government agencies have never paid for a service that ensures they can use their radio equipment interference-free.

These agencies have always been exempted from paying fees, pursuant to sub-section 2(2) regarding Her Majesty in right of Canada and each province. Currently, costs are paid for from the general tax revenues. In other words, not only have hundreds of thousands of licensees been contributing to these costs for years by paying their own fees but they also pay for those who do not through their individual and corporate income tax.

To provide for sensible and prudent administration of a vital resource, it is only fair to have the cost of such administration shared as widely as possible. We all tend to be more appreciative of what we pay for. Even if the fee is not considerable, the fact that there is one tends to enhance our interest in the service provided.

Madam Speaker, this would seem to be a very straightforward Bill. We heard a number of witnesses who said they were in favour of the Bill because it provided for a measure of fairness in paying for license fees, and there were of course other witnesses who will now have to pay license fees and who did not agree. There was one point which gave rise to quite a bit of discussion and which unfortunately resulted from a misunderstanding about the scope of this Bill. I am referring to fees collected for municipal radio licenses. These fees will not be increased as of April 1, 1987 as provided under Bill C-3, because the Bill does not affect fees for municipal radio licenses. The cause of all the confusion goes back to June 1986, when it was announced that preferential treatment for users of municipal radio services would come to an end. Municipal radio licensees were advised they would have to pay the same fees as private sector users. This proposal was part of a plan to apply the user-pay principle to all users of the radio frequency spectrum, as part of the Government's public finance administration program. The proposal was to become effective, as I said before, on April 1 and would have meant an increase in fees for most municipal radio licensees.

However, on January 21, 1987, the Minister advised all Members that these particular radio licence fees would not be increased. There will be no change, so that municipalities will continue to enjoy their preferential treatment. Madam Speaker, I think that is the essence of the Bill, and I would ask the House to adopt this legislation because we would like to see it become effective as of April 1, in order to establish an equitable system that will apply to all radio frequency users.

[English]

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak to Bill C-3, an Act to amend the Radio Act. Although this Bill is only a few lines in length it will have important financial consequences for those affected by it. The Bill, if passed, will have ramifications for those government institutions which utilize radio frequencies for communication purposes.

At present, the federal Department of Communications is charged with the responsibility of setting the rules for those who wish to use the radio spectrum in Canada for purposes other than broadcasting to the general public. The Department regulates these users by giving each of them a licence to operate at a certain frequency, at a certain power and at a certain place so that there is no interference in using the spectrum. In short, the Department of Communications is concerned with spectrum management at the local, provincial, national and international levels when spectrum service has to be negotiated.

Bill C-3 establishes a user-pay principle in the field of radio spectrum. Current provisions of the Radio Act exempt federal and provincial Governments, government Departments and agencies and certain Crown corporations from paying any radio licence fees to the Department of Communications. However, Bill C-3 will remove this exemption. As a result, provincial and federal government Departments and agencies will pay the same licence fees as would be charged to a user in the private sector. The Government calls this equity. The Government calls this fair usage. I say that it is just a transfer of burden from the federal taxpayer to the provincial taxpayer and that it has rather serious consequences.

The Radio Common Carriers Association of Canada informed the Legislative Committee on Bill C-3 that one positive feature of charging government Departments for radio licences is that those Departments may be forced to reconsider whether or not they really need to occupy a radio frequency. They stated that if one has to pay for something, then one has to take a look at what one is getting. I do not know that that is a good enough reason for having to take such a broad sweep at this area, including every agency and all provincial users, into the wide net that is being conceived by this Bill.

If one looks at the theory that charging an entity for a service which has previously been provided for free may force that entity to reconsider the need for the service in the first place, it is possible that some government agencies which currently hold licences, but make minimal use of radio frequencies, may decide to surrender them. As a result, a number of frequencies may be freed up for other users. If there is good management, that should have happened in the first place. Our provincial Governments are as capable and as concerned with good policy and management as is the federal Government.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. I am sorry to have to interrupt the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone).

It being 5 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PARITY PRICES FOR FARM PRODUCTS ACT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville) moved that Bill C-221, an Act respecting parity prices for farm products, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Madam Speaker, it is with pleasure that I rise today to propose Bill C-221, an Act respecting parity prices for farm products. For many years in the House I have said that the number one industry in Canada is agriculture, the production of food for Canadian people and other people around the world. I also believe that when the farmer is better off we are all better off. When the farmer is better off there is more money for the creation of jobs for young people in the towns and cities of Canada. We must do whatever we can to support the farmer who is going through some difficult times.

In essence, this particular Bill proposes the establishment of a floor price for agricultural products that has some reflection in the cost of production and a decent return for farmers. This Bill is proposing that, like workers who have a trade union or businessmen and professionals and their associations, farmers should have some guarantee that the price they receive will support them and their families in the production of food.

This Bill specifically deals with wheat, oats, and barley which are now marketed through the Canadian Wheat Board. It also deals with pork and beef. There is no marketing board for those two products. This Bill would establish a price that would reflect parity for what a farmer receives for grain with the costs of production and a decent return for his product. This applies only to domestic human consumption, because we can set a higher Canadian price without violating the GATT rules when dealing with the Canadian consumer, particularly in the case of these grains, because we do have the selling agency, the Canadian Wheat Board. That agency is the sole selling agency for Canadian grain. Therefore, we can have a domestic price different from the international price. Presently there is a $7 domestic price, while the international price is $3 to $3.50 a bushel. There is no technical difficulty in having a parity price for grain domestically consumed. We are talking here of about 9 or 10 per cent of the grain produced by our farmers. I believe that that can and should be done as soon as possible.

Some people ask what the cost of production is. We all know that the cost of production varies region to region, province to province, and product to product. There are cost of production formula for a number of commodities such as milk, with the milk marketing agencies; turkeys, chickens, and for other commodities. It is not impossible to devise an average cost of production formula that is relevant to grain producers, as we have one for other producers. So that can be done.

The second part of this Bill deals with pork and beef. That is a little more complicated because we do not have a national beef marketing board or pork marketing board. This Bill suggests that there should be marketing commissions in these two areas to lay the ground work for a parity pricing system. I strongly believe in economic democracy and political democracy. I propose in this Bill that we should only have these marketing agencies and commissions if the farmers choose to follow this particular route. In other words, if the beef producers wish to establish a national marketing board, that is their prerogative. If they choose not to, that is also their prerogative. If the farmers choose not to follow that route, we cannot have a different Canadian price, or a price based on the costs of production which are different from the international price. That would be a violation of GATT rules. That is why I put it in this manner. The same thing pertains to hog producers. If they wish to establish a national hog marketing agency, then we can do so, but only if they vote in a majority to follow that direction. If they do, we could then have a different Canadian price that is higher or lower than the international price without violating international trading rules. Those are the points that I wish to make on these particular products.

The third point that I wish to make is that this Bill deals with wheat, oats, barley, hogs, and beef, but it could be amended to include other products. I have received representation from corn growers in Ontario, and from soybean producers. They would like to have some marketing mechanism where their price is in accordance with a reflection of the cost of production and a decent return, and where they too would have a floor price or a guaranteed price for the commodity they are producing for the people of Canada.

The fourth point I wish to make, which may be of particular interest to my friend from Lethbridge, is that this Bill does not provide a subsidy. This Bill would take the higher price out of the market-place. I believe that, as a first priority, the farmers do not wish to have a subsidy from the taxpayer or the federal-provincial Governments. What the farmers want is a fair share from the Canadian market-place. If it costs $7, $9, $10, or $12 to produce a bushel of wheat with a decent return, then the people of Canada should be paying that price for products manufactured or produced from that bushel of wheat. Indeed, if those products are too expensive for low income people, then the federal or provincial Government should devise a plan where there is a subsidized price for that loaf of bread, litre of milk, or whatever the commodity may be. It should not be the farmer who subsidizes the consumer. If there is need of a subsidy, then it should be the Government that subsidizes the consumers who need that particular subsidization.

I make it very clear that this Bill would take the increased price from the market-place and not as a subsidy to the farmers.

The last point I wish to make is that this Bill does not deal with international pricing. For many commodities, for example, western wheat, the majority of our sales are made to countries around the world. Under the regulations of the House of Commons, as a private Member I cannot produce a Bill that would call for a subsidy or a deficiency payment. That is an expenditure of public money, and in accordance with the rules I cannot do that. That is why this Bill is drafted only to provide a parity price for the food domestically consumed in this country.

On the other hand, I do believe that we will need a large deficiency payment for grain farmers for the following couple of years because of low international prices. Even with the billion dollars last year which worked out to 48 cents a bushel of wheat, the farmer is fortunate if he produces the best quality grain and has the correct weather to produce that grain to receive $3.50 a bushel for that grain. On the other hand, the Americans who are growing grain a few miles south of the border of Saskatchewan in Montana or North Dakota are guaranteed a floor price of $4.80 U.S. a bushel of grain. This converts to $6 Canadian a bushel for grain. It is not fair for Americans to receive $6 a bushel and Canadians to receive $3.50 a bushel. That cannot be covered by this Bill because of the regulations of the House.

The last point I wish to make is that many people say there is a surplus of food in the world. There is no surplus of food. People are dying of starvation. The problem is the distribution system for the food, and helping poorer countries afford to buy food from Canada.

This is a votable motion and I request that Members vote freely and support an idea that would provide farmers with a basic floor price based on the cost of production, and a decent profit for the work put into producing food for the people of Canada. That is not too much to ask. I hope that my colleagues in all Parties will support this particular idea.

• (1710)

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, I am delighted to have an opportunity to speak on Bill C-221, an Act respecting parity prices for agricultural products. It especially zeroes in on the idea of having a parity price or a cost of production price related to wheat used for human consumption in Canada. It also provides for the establishment of commissions for the marketing of beef and pork. In the current national farm products marketing legislation those two commodities are not named. However, they would be included if this Bill were passed and adopted by the House.

I think it is important to take this opportunity to call the attention of the nation to the urgent problems facing Canadian agriculture. That urgency was brought home to all Canadians during the last 12 months, especially because of the United States Farm Bill. It has cost our grain producing industry some $2 billion to $3 billion and has resulted in a drop of some 10 per cent to 20 per cent in direct farm incomes without assistance in western Canada, as the Hon. Member outlined.

Recently I had the opportunity to look at the impact of low commodity prices which the Bill seeks to alter, at least for commodities consumed domestically, especially hogs, beef, and wheat. During the past 12 months we have seen a drop of 6.9 per cent or over $7 billion in the value of farm land. In the period from 1984 to 1986 we saw a drop of some 15 per cent in farm values across the board. In some areas of southwestern Ontario and western Canada those figures are minimum. They have experienced losses which may be two times or three times those averages. For well established farmers with 100 per cent equity it is not as urgent a problem as it is for young farmers. If we take away some $17 billion worth of farm asset value across the country, obviously we are taking away equity from many young farmers who are starting out or have been in the industry for the last four years or five years or even eight years or ten years. All they are left with is debt, and in many commodities the income is not adequate to service that debt.

Let us take a look at the Farm Credit Corporation figures. They are simply devastating. In the last 12 months alone, 18,000 of the 75,000 FCC loans were in arrears. The amount of money which is due, payable, and overdue has risen from $260 million as at January 1, 1986 to some $377 million as at January 1, 1987. Even more disturbing is the fact that these 18,000 FCC loans have been in arrears for more than two years. Experience has shown that when loans are in arrears for more than two years, it is almost impossible or extremely difficult for farmers to recoup. As at January there were some 2,600 applications before farm debt review boards. During the coming year thousands of young farmers will be facing a most difficult, painful, and terrible experience. The Bill before us really addresses the farm income problem, which is a major factor.

Let us look at the last Budget presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). He went into great detail about the $1 billion Special Canadian Grains Program announced by the Government in Saskatchewan during the election campaign. However, he did not make any commitment on how much the Government would provide under that program for the coming year. Farmers need to know whether the Government of Canada will stand behind them in the new crop year starting August 1, especially as it relates to grains in the western part of the country and throughout the Canadian agricultural community. If we look at the Budget we see no new commitments for the farm debt crisis. No new money was committed in that regard.

As a matter of fact the western agricultural caucus of the Liberal Party held hearings last week in Winnipeg, Saskatoon, Edmonton, and Vancouver. It was painfully apparent to the various agricultural groups which made presentations to our caucus that the Government had made no new commitments in the Budget with regard to the farm debt crisis or to the exact amount that would be provided for the new crop year.

According to the Estimates tabled today, the Department of Agriculture has had a reduction in staff of some 275 people. ARDA has been cut back from $21.9 million to $13.5 million. Research has been cut back from $240 million last year to $220 million this year. We see no indication in the Estimates of how much will be paid out under the Western Grain Stabilization Act, to which farmers contributed a third and the Government of Canada contributed two-thirds. There was no commitment in the Estimates or in the Budget in terms of what assistance will be provided.

I should like to refer to what really concerns farmers most. This Bill talks about utilizing the mechanism of national marketing boards and agencies to try to reach a parity price or a price related to the cost of production. Nothing has caused greater concern in the controlled commodities of milk and other dairy products, feathers, poultry, eggs, and turkey than the ongoing free trade negotiations between Canada and the United States. A year ago the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) told me in the House that marketing boards could not be taken off the table because they had never been on the table. In a leak from the Department last week it was made very clear that everything is on the table, that when Simon Reisman sits down with Peter Murphy, all items are on the table, contrary to what the Minister said.

The part of the whole free trade negotiations that concerns me the most is the comment made by Daniel Amstutz, the American Under-Secretary of State for Agriculture, in a radio interview on CBC a week ago last Sunday. In that interview, Mr. Amstutz, the chief adviser on agriculture for the United States trade representative, made it clear that in his opinion, there would be no free trade agreement without agriculture being on the table. He wanted to have major changes to the whole supply, management and marketing boards in any agreement Canada and the United States would sign. That is why many farmers will be very concerned with those negotiations and why we need to be concerned with the Bill before us today. Under a comprehensive free trade agreement, marketing boards would clearly be out of the question as far as the Americans are concerned.

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Madam Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to join in this debate on a topic which was the subject of a set of parliamentary committee hearings. This committee toured the country during 1986 and I had the honour of being a part of it along with the two Hon. Members who spoke previously. Indeed, the committee was charged with the responsibility, among other things, of examining parity pricing. A number of witnesses raised the concept of parity pricing. However, given the variety of views expressed on such issues as the definition of parity pricing and its relation to the domestic price of wheat and since no consensus was reached, it was the conclusion of the committee that it would not make a recommendation with respect to parity pricing.

Virtually every group which appeared before the Special Committee on the Pricing of Domestic Wheat addressed the matter of parity pricing. Indeed, some individuals and organizations based their entire presentations on the concept of parity pricing and made little reference whatsoever to domestic wheat. It is therefore with some surprise that I see the matter here again.

I wish to take this opportunity to quote from a few of the presentations which were made before the committee with respect to parity pricing. I recall the presentation of Mr. David Ramsay, the provincial MP from the riding of Timiskaming. He said the following:

> If the main problem in agriculture today is overproduction, and I believe it is, then it is imperative that we take the initiative and formulate a strategy to deal with this problem.
> I believe the concept of parity pricing is the first step that needs to be taken on the road to a comprehensive supply management system for all our commodities in this country.
> Parity pricing would ensure a decent level of return on those commodities that have their prices determined by the international commodity markets. But I do feel that if any direct price supports are instituted, we must at the same time control the level of production. It would be more self-destructive in the long run if we followed the European example of high price supports without any production controls.

That was an interesting presentation made by someone who would appear to favour the five-year program which has been so successful in the Soviet Union. If memory serves me correctly, I believe this is the Member who has since bolted from the New Democrats and joined another Party in Ontario. Perhaps his conclusions would be different now.

It would be interesting to contrast what Mr. Ramsay had to say with the presentation of the Western Canadian Wheat Growers. In answer to a question concerning supply management or quotas which are inherent in this notion of parity, Mr. Esquirol said:

> To answer your question on supply management or quotas—I forget the word you used—you cannot have one without the other.
> I suppose if I can be a little bit bold or deviant and say that farmers like to produce, as a thoroughbred likes to run, as soon as you destroy this incentive, I think you have allowed or you have taken away the incentive or the energy and the contribution that Canadian farmers can make to this country.

I believe those are very interesting contrasting points of view which would fairly reflect the two sides of this question, a question which I hope is more one of theory than of practicality.

The fatal flaw in any sort of reference like this is the matter of cost of production. I think it was obvious from the presentations that were made to the domestic wheat committee hearings that inevitably the gravitation is toward the highest possible cost of production rather than the lowest possible cost of production, which surely should be the target. Representatives of the Canadian Cattlemen's Association correctly pointed out the problem in their presentation. They said the following:

> With or without public support, commodities will not sell above a price determined in the market place. Obviously, therefore, some surplus product would have to be taken off the market and stored—until the market improved. If the market did not improve, these stored products would accumulate to overhang the market much as they do now within the EEC.

The Leader of the Alberta New Democratic Party appeared at the hearings and was asked what he thought about parity pricing. He said the following:

As I look around the world in many agriculture commodities, they are subsidized by government, whether you want to call it parity pricing or whatever you want to call it. It is clear that subsidies are occurring in other parts of the world. We can talk about free trade and all the rest of it, but if they are doing it we have to do the same thing to protect our own producers.

I find myself in complete agreement with the statement made by the Leader of the Alberta New Democrats. I agree with his comments and I think we all do. The problem lies with the degree of subsidization that is going on in agriculture in the rest of the world. The answer clearly is the two-track policy which our Government, of which I am proud to be a member, has embarked upon. That involves two thrusts: one domestically to protect our farmers, and the other an international thrust to deal with the problems of international pricing.

Our producers, cattlemen and grain farmers are among the most efficient in the world. They are quite capable of competing on a level playing field with producers anywhere else. They do not want parity, they do not want subsidies and they do not want government intervention. What they would like is to be left alone. They would like to get all Governments world-wide out of agriculture so that they could compete head-on with producers from other countries. Were they able to do so, I suggest that our producers would do very well. I believe they can out-produce anyone, but they cannot compete against the Treasuries of western Europe and the United States.

On the domestic side, clearly we have undertaken to assist and shall continue to do so to the extent that our Treasury and our population will allow. We in this Government have acted, and I think actions speak louder than words. The Government has put forward some good, practical programs that put cash in the pockets of Canadian farmers, not vague notions. Our farmers are being squeezed right now because of the interventions of Governments elsewhere, because of parity and because of the programs and guarantees of other countries which lead to inefficient production and which have flooded the world with over-production. The lowest common denominator of efficiency has been utilized, particularly in the Common Market, with disastrous results for our own producers.

On the international side, the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) has clearly been working in concert with the other grain exporting countries to do everything possible to bring an end to the grain subsidy wars we have been seeing. As well, under the Uruguay round of GATT talks, our statesmen succeeded in securing the inclusion of agriculture on the agenda for the upcoming GATT talks.

On the domestic side, the Government has done a lot of things. It has eliminated capital gains for the most part on farm lands. It has amended the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act to double the level of interest-free cash advances. It has also straightened out some technical problems to enable tenants to apply for advances without the consent of landlords. We have enacted legislation rebating over 35 cents per gallon on fuel tax. In response to drought, over $150 million was paid out to western farmers. Under federal-provincial crop insurance programs which are contributed to dollar-for-dollar by the farmer and the federal Government, large amounts have been paid out. We amended the Western Grain Stabilization Act as promised to put forward timely interim payments each spring. Last year some $859 million was paid out under that program with more to come. The $201 million shortfall in Canadian Wheat Board sales was recently covered.

Finally, we have the Canada special grains program which has paid $1 billion to Canadian grain farmers. That to some people is not enough, but the net farm income in Saskatchewan for this year was estimated to be in the area of $400 million. Saskatchewan's share under the program I just referred to is $420 million. With a stroke of the pen this Government doubled net farm income in Saskatchewan. That is timely action and I suggest that is what counts.

I would like to close by quoting from the presentation of the Canadian Cattlemen's Association to the committee which dealt with grain and parity pricing. They closed with this comment:

Let us assume for one mad moment that parity pricing were the option of choice. Canadian agriculture earns 50% of its gross farm income in export markets. Who will buy our products at the parity price? Obviously, the answer is no one so long as other nations are prepared to meet the market. Then who will pay to make up the difference? Surely not the farmer. After struggling to achieve parity pricing, he is not about to give half of it back to move half of his product into world markets. And, if the Government pays the bill, how long will we avoid a successful countervail challenge?

The entire idea of parity pricing distills down to nonsense. It is not remotely a viable policy option for Canadian agriculture. It is, in fact, a cruel hoax upon the desperate hopes and aspirations of many financially distressed farmers.

I think Canadian farmers know that this Government's programs have put a lot more cash in their pockets than the moribund policies put forward in this Private Members' Bill.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I have always wondered what it meant to be a progressive person and a conservative person at the same time. I often felt it was a contradiction in terms. Having listened to the Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson), I am absolutely convinced that this is the case. By definition Conservatives are contradictory. He went on for some time saying he was in favour of the free market-place, we should not give out subsidies, we should not support farmers, and we should not have all these different support programs, and in the last half of his speech he listed all the ways in which Government has helped farmers. You cannot have it both ways. I suppose as long as you send only part of your speech to your constituents you can cater to whatever group you want to at that point.

I want to say how pleased I am to have an opportunity to say a few words on Bill C-221 put forward by my friend and colleague from Yorkton—Melville. You will know that the NDP has been calling for this approach to agriculture for many, many years. I do not think anyone would argue that there does not appear to be a growing crisis in the farm community. If you look at the Farm Credit Corporation books you will find that over the last 12 months there were in excess of 18,000 farm loans in arrears, to say nothing about all the farmers who deal with other lending institutions. Of course this farm crisis has many causes, including such things as poor debt-equity ratios, the high cost of farm credit, the fact that young people cannot afford to get into farming, the increasing cost of doing business, market stability, and the ongoing problems of storage, process and marketing, as well as transportation costs. The list goes on and on. This sector of our economy is experiencing very difficult times and, as my colleague indicated, this is perhaps the most critical sector of the Canadian economy. Not only does it provide us with the very essence of life itself, food in its various forms, but it represents something which has always been Canadian, the farm and ranch. I think they stand high among the ideals and goals we have for our country. I feel we should do whatever we can to preserve the family farm and ranch.

The fundamental problem, of course, is that the prices many producers receive simply do not cover their costs. This Bill attempts to match the cost of doing business with the price the producer receives for his or her product. A lot of people came to this country from oppressive countries where a modern-type of feudalism was a reality. Large land owners, corporations or state farms dominated the agricultural landscape. People came to Canada so they could start their own farm or ranch. I suspect that unless something along the lines suggested by Bill C-221 is done we will have the 21st century version of feudalism in Canada where the corporate farm is the major food producer. I think all of us who are fortunate enough to represent the rural part of Canada see with a heavy heart every time we visit our constituency that more and more agricultural land is falling into the hands of the banks and the corporate sector. This is not good for the long-term stability of agriculture in Canada.

Granted, if we are going to ensure that our food producers receive adequate prices, it will cost Canadians in a variety of ways. However, perhaps a more important question is not what it will cost to keep the family farm and ranch in business but what it will cost if we do not. What will be the cost of rural depopulation as the small towns of Canada pack up and move away? Where will all those people go? We also have to start asking ourselves whether we want to see control of our food supply concentrated in the hands of a few corporations. In the long run that would result in a food pricing cartel and significant price increases for the consumer.

When you look at the alternatives and the fact that the Governments of our competitors are helping their farm sectors in one way or another, then we have come to a time when we have to, as the old Newfoundland saying goes, fish or cut bait. We have to decide whether we are going to support the family farm and ranch or not. That is why Bill C-221 takes a step and indicates to the farm community that we are serious.

There are steps which can be taken and legislation which can be introduced to guarantee a fair return for the producer. I do not think that is unreasonable when you consider how we support utilities, pipelines, port facilities and all sorts of other things which are critical to our economy. We are prepared to say that if it costs this much to operate that particular venture or enterprise we will have to guarantee a fair return. That is all we are saying in this Bill. If it costs x number of dollars to produce a bushel of wheat or to raise a healthy steer, then that is the price the farmer or rancher should receive in return. This Bill refers to wheat, oats and barley used for human consumption. It includes beef and pork as well. There is no reason that, if Parliament felt it could support this Bill, we could not expand it to include all food products.

In closing let me say again that I appreciate this opportunity to speak to the Bill and support the notion that this is one way in which we could act as a unified and co-operative Parliament to ensure that food production in Canada stays in the hands of family farms and ranches and does not go the way of corporate agricultural business.

Mr. Elliott Hardey (Kent): Madam Speaker, as my hon. colleague, the Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson), has indicated, the matter of parity prices for farm products has been discussed in this House before as it has certainly been in my riding of Kent and around countless kitchen tables in rural Canada. The goal of the Bill put forward by the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) is commendable. Surely every Member of this House would agree that our farmers deserve a fair return for their investment and labour. However, I do not believe for a moment that any one Bill can ensure adequate returns for all the farmers of Canada at all times. The reality is that no single program will achieve that goal, least of all the mammoth bureaucracy proposed by Bill C-221. Surely the parity pricing experience in the United States has taught us that lesson.

For the purpose of this debate, I think it would be valuable to review the U.S. system of parity prices and its consequences. The first parity formula in the U.S. was established by the Agricultural Adjustment Act. The purpose of the Act was to "re-establish prices to farmers at a level that will give agricultural commodities a purchasing power with respect to articles that farmers buy, equivalent to the purchasing power of agricultural commodities in the base period".

This concept of equivalent purchasing power for farmers over time is quite appealing. However, in order for purchasing power to be maintained over time it must also be true that equality is reflected in the base period. Clearly, in the United States it has become apparent that there were substantial income differences in the base period. No matter what base period one uses, that is going to be true. Basically, the intended purpose of the original parity pricing Act in the U.S. was similar to the intended purpose of the Bill put forward by the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville, that is, prices of farm commodities should reflect changes in the prices of the articles that farmers buy.

Thus, the two original parts of the U.S. parity formula were, one, prices farmers received for products they sold and, two, prices they paid for the articles they bought. Legislative changes were periodically made to the formula as inevitable problems arose. I am relating established facts and am not looking into a crystal ball.

A major new wrinkle appeared when the Commodity Credit Corporation was established in order to stabilize supplies and prices of certain farm products. The corporation, in effect, was to act as a storage agency, making loans to farmers for their products, selling what they could, and storing the rest. The loan rate was, in effect, a support price.

At first the corporation set its own loan rates to farmers. Then, in 1938 the Agricultural Adjustment Act took over and incorporated parity prices into the loan rate formula. In the case of corn, for example, the loan rates varied with the size of the corn crop. This had incredible consequences. Agricultural production in the U.S. had already been increasing faster than demand due to rapid technological advancements. The setting of price supports and percentages of parity worsened the over-production problems considerably. As a result, huge stocks of wheat, cotton, and feed grains were accumulated by the Commodity Credit Corporation. Attempts to deal with the oversupply problem were costly to taxpayers and not entirely effective. By the 1960s emergency programs to reduce production were required. Obviously, the investment in price support programs had become very expensive.

It is also interesting to note that although costs associated with the parity formula grew dramatically, farmers were often not at the receiving end. Much of the money went to storage agencies and indirectly to construction companies for building storage space. For example, in 1958 the realized cost of the corn program was $271 million. Of that, $110 million went to the grain trade and transportation agency. That is nearly one-half.

As the U.S. experience vividly illustrates, parity prices are not suitable to the purpose of price support. Their use for this purpose has cost billions of dollars, only part of which has gone to farmers. Let us look specifically at the U.S. dairy sector. The Act which established parity pricing, and under which the Commodity Credit Corporation operates, are the basic laws under which U.S. dairy prices are supported through government offers to purchase. Manufacturing grade milk prices are supported at 75 to 90 per cent of parity.

Again, the aim of the program is to establish a parity price that will give milk the same purchasing power, in terms of things that farmers generally buy to produce farm products, as milk had during a five-year base period. The corporation tries to ensure that the support price will be reflected in the market by offering to buy butter, milk powder, and cheese at specified support prices.

Today we see the practical results of this policy: vast oversupplies of dairy products in the United States. A herd buy-out program is the United States' current expensive attempt to deal with the oversupply. The parity policy on its own is not taking into account the demand side of the milk market in the United States which creates a serious problem in terms of farmers' individual production decisions. That is because farmers look to the level of Commodity Credit Corporation purchases in order to judge current supply and demand. They know that if purchases are high then probably supplies are too high relative to demand. They know that if purchases are low and market prices are above the support price, then supply is probably low relative to demand.

The problem with this system is that the response of dairy farmers to the changes in support prices are delayed. As you see, Madam Speaker, if prices rise as a result of an increase in the support price, farmers will increase their production, although not by much initially. Production will increase in larger amounts later until a peak is reached. Then production will increase more slowly until the stimulus of the support price has no further effect.

The policy is based on what has turned out to be an incorrect analysis of the agricultural problem in the first place. It is not simply a price problem. Production, changing technology, fluctuating input costs, and the many variables in the international market-place all come into play.

Therefore, I reiterate my earlier statement that the way to deal with the many factors that affect returns for our farmers is not by introducing one sweeping Bill as proposed by the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville. Rather, the solution rests on consistent, ongoing initiatives to lower production costs and to increase the competitiveness and efficiency of our farm sector. That is, and I hope will continue to be, the policy of this Government.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Madam Speaker, I am pleased this afternoon to take part in this debate on Bill C-221, introduced in the House by the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom). I can say that generally speaking, I support some of the views contained in this bill. However, I must say that although I support this bill entitled "An Act respecting parity prices for farm products", I am not convinced that it would provide parity pricing for those commodities, except for wheat of course since this bill contains a specific section about this matter.

[English]

As I was saying, Madam Speaker, in terms of red meat as proposed in the Bill before us, I still do not think that this Bill would give Canada parity pricing in the area of red meat, particularly beef and pork. The Bill addresses the question of establishing a marketing board for those two products. I do not believe it would provide parity pricing for those commodities because I think parity pricing or something close to it in the red meat sector would be achieved under a supply management system.

• (1750)

I suggest that this should be the issue being discussed today. That is the only effective means I know to arrive at anything close to parity pricing which is the relation of the cost of producing something to what it is really worth, in comparison to the same amount of time invested in other areas.

It is interesting to have this conversation today, and particularly informative to hear Conservative Members, in view of the current Canada-U.S. free trade negotiations. We know that there would be very little opportunity for supply management in any new commodities under such a free trade agreement. In fact, we would be hard pressed to maintain supply management in the areas where it already exists.

I want to draw to the attention of the House a brief that we received recently from chicken producers. They sent a very impressive memo to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) in which they state very clearly that supply management is totally irreconcilable with free trade. When I hear chicken producers and the dairy farmers of Canada who have made similar presentations in the past, I am greatly concerned about the direction these negotiations are taking.

I recall the Minister of Agriculture initially saying that agriculture will not be on the bargaining table. Later, he said that if agriculture is on the table in the beginning, we can be assured that it will be removed almost immediately. These negotiations have taken place for almost a year, but there is still no talk of removing the supply managed agricultural sector from the discussions.

I recognize the good intentions of the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) in his proposal to move toward parity pricing in the area of beef and pork. I favour that, but I wish pork producers in this country would be more willing to have a supply management system for hogs. They must make their own decision and, as far as I am concerned, I would not want to be party to any suggestion that would impose a forced system of supply management on hog and beef producers. There must be an agreement among the majority of producers in all provinces where there is a significant amount of production.

[Translation]

This is why, Madam Speaker, I should like to end my remarks by saying that I am pleased to support the Bill of the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom). I acknowledge that this measure has been introduced in this House on several occasions in the past. As a matter of fact, about a year ago I had the opportunity to take part in the debate and offer my support. Although I am not in full agreement with the Hon. Member when I say that I do not believe his Bill would lead to parity prices for all farm products, or even for the products mentioned in the Bill itself, I do think that the intention is good and, in addition, as he suggests, we ought to promote the establishment of pork and beef marketing boards. In the case of pork there are such boards in a number of provinces, especially mine, and undoubtedly it is the same thing in your province, Madam Speaker.

In any event, I support this Bill. I do hope the House will adopt it and that we will convey two messages at the same time. First, we want to continue to protect our agricultural sector which has been so hard hit since the Conservative Government took office, if I may put it this way. Second, we should use this opportunity to send a clear message to the Ministers by telling them that we want to make sure that supply management, that quotas will be protected in the free trade negotiations between Canada and the United States. This is why I ask my colleagues on either side of the House who represent agricultural ridings, including the Hon. Member for Argenteuil—Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault), to support this Bill because it is good for my riding, for hers, and for those of other Members who represent agricultural ridings.

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to rise this evening to speak on Bill C-221 introduced by my colleague from the New Democratic Party. What gives me even greater pleasure is the fact that, every time I have the opportunity to address this House, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) opposite seems to be there. I do not know whether this is a coincidence or not, but he is always there.

Madam Speaker, I had prepared some interesting comments which might not have been quite in agreement with the views of my colleague directly opposite or of my colleague from the New Democratic Party, but I would like to suggest that we call it 6 o'clock and that I be recognized the next time this bill is debated rather than beginning my speech only to have it interrupted. Could I have the agreement of the House?

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is there unanimous consent to call it six o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Friday, February 20, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approve in general the budgetary policy of the Government, and the amendment of Mr. Garneau (p. 3594), and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Cassidy (p. 3604).

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being six o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 13(4)(a), the House will now proceed with the deferred division on the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Cassidy. The question is as follows. Mr. Cassidy, seconded by Mr. Murphy, moved:

That the amendment be amended by adding immediately thereafter the following words:

and this House further condemns the Government for introducing a budget that tolerates the existence of 1,250,000 unemployed Canadians and fails to show fairness to the average Canadian family and regions that continue to feel the burden of economic recession with respect to employment and income;

-for failing to introduce a system of universal childcare that would assist families and create jobs;

-for failing to demonstrate to the average Canadian taxpayer a genuine commitment to tax reform by eliminating in this budget some of the worst excesses in the tax system, such as the erosion of the corporate tax base begun by the Liberals in 1983;

-for failing to even give mention in the budget to the tragedy of 4,000,000 Canadians living in poverty; and

-for failing to make full employment the first priority of the federal government.

The House divided on the amendment, which was negatived on the following division:

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I have the honour to present petitions signed by residents of my riding in the communities of Flin Flon, Nelson House, Lynn Lake, Thompson and The Pas?

The petitioners point out their concern with the federal Government's attempt to change the Patent Act. They believe this will increase prescription drug prices and restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. It will unfairly hurt those whose health needs requires the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis. They say this is yet another example of the Canadian Government's concessions to the U.S. in an attempt to resolve the free trade negotiations at the expense of ordinary Canadians. The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject those proposals.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 106, it is my honour and pleasure to present a petition on behalf of a number of western Canadians. They suggest that the federal Government's proposals to change the Patent Act with respect to prescription drugs will increase drug prices and severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. They point out that this will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health requires the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis and they call upon the Government to stop this Bill.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, question No. 72 will be answered today.

[Text]

FEDERAL TAX PAID BY CABLE TELEVISION SUBSCRIBERS

Question No. 72—Mrs. Finestone:

1. For each year 1985-86, 1986 to date, what was the total sum of money raised from the 8 per cent federal tax paid by cable television subscribers across Canada?

2. Was the total sum paid to the Government and, if not, to whom was it paid and what were the amounts?

3. For the same years, what amount was paid by the Government to (a) the Broadcast Program Development Fund (b) Telefilm Canada?

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of National Revenue, Customs and Excise and the Department of Communications as follows:

1. The 8 per cent federal tax on telecommunication programming services is levied on cable television and related companies, not directly on the cable television subscribers in Canada.

April 1, 1985 to March 31, 1986	$52,361,582.31
April 1, 1986 to December 31, 1986	$53,899,261.06

2. This revenue was paid by cable television and related companies under the Excise Tax Act, directly to the federal Government.

3. The following amounts were paid by the Government, in thousands of dollars:

	1985-86	1986-87 (as of Dec. 31/86)
(a) to the Canadian Broadcast Program Development Fund:	$64,418	$36,602
(b) to Telefilm Canada:	$73,185	$59,216

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Monday, March 2, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approve in general the budgetary policy of the Government, and the amendment of Mr. Garneau (p. 3594).

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak to the amendment moved by the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau).

[English]

During the parliamentary break last week I and several of my colleagues from the Upper House had the occasion to tour the four provinces of western Canada as part of a caucus investigation into the economic problems and opportunities for development there. That opportunity to visit, immediately upon the heels of the Budget, revealed clearly to us the very serious gap between the hard economic reality of western Canada and the total lack of commitment or response by the Government of Canada to those new realities.

We began by meeting with groups of farmers in the Province of Manitoba. These people, who had been in the farm business for 30 or 40 years, had one basic message, that they had to leave their farms. They can no longer make money. Their sons and daughters do not want to take over the land. A farmer who has 900 to 1,000 acres of good production land was talking about walking away from it this fall because each year he experiences a shortfall of $12,000, $15,000 or $20,000. Although the grain payment has been loudly trumpeted in this House as the solution to the problem, the farm community of western Canada sees no solution in sight. Farmers are terrified by the changes in the international market, the lack of security for the future, and the escalation in costs.

We also spoke to a number of university students. They are facing quotas, for the first time in the history of public universities in western Canada; controls on the number of students able to attend. As the restrictions grow, due to budget restraints, universities will no longer be a channel for mobility for working class young men and women. They will in fact become elitist organizations because of the restrictions. That is to say nothing of the cut-backs in research. The faculty of engineering at the University of Manitoba, a well respected major faculty which is trying to be at the forefront of research and development, has an operating budget of $1 million a year.

We met with people from the oil industry in Alberta who perhaps presented the most glum and most desperate set of circumstances that one could possibly imagine. In 1985 there were 12,564 wells drilled. In 1987 they expect just a few more than 3,000 to be drilled. Their message was that Canada, under the present low level of investment in the oil and gas sector, will no longer be able to maintain its reserves. It will increasingly be forced into a position of dependency on imported oil and gas because no capital investment is going into the oil and gas sector, even to maintain our level of reserves.

We talked to the business community of British Columbia. Mr. Makin came before us. He said that in 1981 capital investment in British Columbia was at $12 billion. By 1986 it had fallen to $8 billion and was decreasing even more.

These people basically suggested that the economy of western Canada is not in a healthy state. Commodity resources are suffering from the depression of world-wide prices. The business community is not getting the investment it needs to generate new production. The universities and research centres are being cut back from opportunities to develop new products and innovation. We kept being asked where the leadership of the federal Government is to provide answers to these problems. When they read the Budget papers they found no answer. The Budget was not a document, economic blueprint or agenda for change. At best, it was a chartered accountant's tote sheet and, at worst, simply a public relations exercise. There was nothing in there which would provide basic political decisions upon which economic decisions could be made.

I believe this demonstrates that the Government has lost the fundamental Canadian requirement to have a political economy recognizing the interchange between political decision-making and economic decision-making. This country was not built by the free flow of market forces, but by a series of political decisions setting out investments, guidelines and directions in which the market-place could operate.

We no longer have a Government which believes in a political economy. We no longer have a Government which recognizes that it shares the responsibility to provide signals to the market-place, to compensate where the market-place is not operational, and to provide a direction and thrust to the economy, whether by building a railroad, providing signals in the energy area, or attempting to deal with incredible changes on the international market-place. There is nothing in the document, absolutely no reflection that there is a hard, tough economic reality facing Canadians and that the federal Government must accept some responsibility for providing leadership in that area.

We received close to 100 representations from a wide variety of interest groups. Through those, certain messages began to come through about the structural changes taking place in the Canadian economy. Perhaps the most frightening for western Canadians, as it would be in other parts of Canada, is the decoupling between the resource economy, the commodity markets of Canada, and industrial production.

According to all the economic textbooks, there used to be an interrelationship between prices, growth, employment and between commodity markets and industrial markets. That is no longer the case because it has been severed. The depression in commodity prices, the slow-down in production and the retardation in employment in those areas that are based on the resource economy has not affected the industrial economy. We know that at least one part of the economy, southern Ontario, is experiencing some growth, but it is somewhat of a condemnation of the theory that a coupling of the national economy is taking place. There is no effort to stitch that national economy back together and provide for the stability or the investment in the resource economy to respond to that growth.

It is also clear from the representations we have received that there is a greater gap between new production and investment, and employment. Perhaps the harshest judgment that must be levelled against the Budget is that after four years of a growing economy the unemployment rate in this country is still near 10 per cent. In spite of the ability to recover from the world-wide recession that affected this country in the early 1980s, Canada has been one of the slowest countries to recover its employment base. There are still many people unemployed even though there have been four years of economic growth above 3 per cent or 4 per cent.

I suggest something is fundamentally wrong when the Government has only increased employment by 1 per cent or 2 per cent after four years of recovery. This problem is most directly impacting the regions of Canada rather than the central heartland, as shown by the pathos we see in places which had a booming economy but are now facing 15 per cent unemployment. Again, the Budget provides no answer to this situation.

In fact, the Estimates that were tabled yesterday reveal that there is close to $200 million in cut-backs in the job-creation programs of the Government, including cut-backs on programs for student hiring, DRIE grants of investment in those regions and even cut-backs in the commitments of the previous Government for development in those areas. This is at a time when the economies of the regions are experiencing a serious downfall.

That fact alone should warn the Government that the unemployment rate is not responding to the growth rate, but is responding unevenly by decreasing in one region, at best, while increasing in other regions during a time of so-called recovery and economic growth. Surely the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and his colleagues should have given Canadians answers to those questions, but the Budget was silent on that matter.

Another example we learned from the weeks of hearings we held is that the international economy is directly affecting the Canadian economic reality, with debt crises in third world countries, increasing prices of commodities, loss of capital flows, and other serious influences. Yet, there is no ability to respond to those influences because the Government is too obsessed with the Canada-U.S. free trade talks. One would be led to believe from reading the document carefully that we are not part of an international economy, because it did not take into account the incredible fluctuations taking place in capital markets, the fact that our trade balances in all other parts of the world are declining, and that we are losing markets in Asia, Latin America and Europe.

There has been no effort to develop new markets and new products for those areas. Western Canadians who are involved in agriculture and industry believe they can do so, but being small business people, they do not have the huge corporate budgets for those new markets and product development. They tell us that they need assistance to transfer technology, that they need science centres to test new products and develop and open new markets, and need to increase value added products in order to respond to that demand. Yet again, the Budget provides no response to that. It is no wonder that western Canadians are deeply frustrated and disappointed with this Budget.

I am sure Conservative Members have had an opportunity to read recent public opinion polls. They know that one of the important political stories in Canada today is the incredible crumbling of the Tories in western Canada. In my Province of Manitoba, for example, the Conservatives have fallen from 50 per cent support of voters to 20 per cent in a matter of a year. While I should be happy that we are leading with 44 per cent of support, the fact is that it does not reflect the fumbling performance of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) or the scandals involving the Government. The Conservatives are losing support because western Canadians are seriously disappointed that the Government is not responding to the economic crisis in western Canada. It has been unable to provide economic leadership to the problems facing Canadians.

Westerners want some assistance to meet the affects of the U.S. Farm Bill that has driven agricultural prices down 25 per cent in the last year. The Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer), the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) only say that the problem will be solved seven or eight years from now. Those producers want a clear signal that there will be a program of deficiency payments to keep our farmers in business and, at the same time, tell the Americans and Europeans that they cannot force us out of markets.

Western Canadians want a clear commitment to research and development in western Canada, rather than its withdrawal. Let me give an example from yesterday's Estimates. An ERDA agreement in the Province of Manitoba was signed in 1983, designating that province as the centre of development for urban bus research and development and manufacturing. This was identified by the province and the federal Government as an area of potential export markets. The agreement was signed for $21 million over a five-year period, but, according to the Estimates, the Government spent $17,000 in the first three years of that agreement. In other words, the Government had an opportunity to give a western province the potential to develop a new technology in an export market that is growing around the world by assisting manufacturers in that area to develop new products. Instead of using that agreement, the Government snuffed it out.

Similarly, another agreement on communications and culture was signed with Manitoba. It was designed to develop that area as a potential export market for that province. The agreement represented a $22-million commitment, but only $6 million has been spent with one year left in the agreement.

It is clear that the Minister of Finance and his colleagues are cutting back on cash flow in order to meet their deficit targets. They are cutting back on investment, jobs and potential economic development that would create new tax dollars and new revenues which would be far more productive in reducing the deficit than these mealy-mouthed, niggardly and cheap reductions we see now.

The fundamental problem facing the Government is that there is no sense of political economy which reflects the philosophy that the driving force in the economy should be full employment. We hear these great panegyric and rhetorical displays about lowering the deficit. Rather, the Government should be aiming at full employment which is the best answer to deficit reduction. The best way to deal with the fiscal framework in this country is to employ far more people. The difference between a 9.7 per cent unemployment rate and a 5 per cent unemployment rate is a 50 per cent reduction in the Government deficits and a substantial increase in opportunities for Canadians. The fact is that the Government does not have a commitment to full employment. It has not built into its decision-making process any concept that full employment must be the primary objective and goal and, therefore, the economic decisions it makes are not geared or driven by that particular purpose or judgment. That is the fundamental flaw of its whole budgetary process.

There is no concept of political economy in this case and no sense that political decisions will make a difference, just a reliance upon this kind of laissez-faire market-place, the end result being that growth takes place only in one region and the rest of the regions suffer a serious recession to the point where they are in danger of losing their fundamental ways of making a living. That is our objection and the reason we have introduced a non-confidence motion with respect to this Budget. It is not an economic blueprint. It provides no economic leadership. It does not deal with the problems of structural change. In fact, it has no sense of goal or purpose which will give a direction to those parts of our national economy which are looking for some kind of assistance.

As long as we continue in this way, the disparity and gaps will grow wider and the sense of desperation and frustration will grow even more extreme. We can only hope that within the next 18 months to two years the Government has left to continue this absence of economic leadership, conditions will not get so bad that when we become government we will not be able to rescue it.

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan—Similkameen): Mr. Speaker, I was rather interested in the Hon. Member's comments about agriculture in the west and deficiency payments, and so on. Not too long ago the Hon. Member sat on this side of the House. His Government had a Minister of Agriculture who refused to honour an application for assistance under the Stabilization Act for Okanagan fruit farmers for 1983-84 soft-fruit crops and the 1984 apple crop. I wonder why the Hon. Member has chosen to change his tune now that he sits on the other side of the House? The Minister of Agriculture at that time told me as a result of my questions in the House: "We are not going to pay the Okanagan farmers any stabilization payment. Let them go to the province or some other place. We are not going to help them out". The Hon. Member has now a great heart for Canadian farmers. Is it just Manitoban farmers he is interested in? How does the Hon. Member account for this sudden change in attitude? It certainly was not demonstrated when he sat on this side of the House and had the ability to do things for farmers. He slammed the door in their faces.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the question because, as the Hon. Member might know, I had the occasion last Thursday to be in the Okanagan and to speak at a public meeting in Kelowna, very close to his home town. We had occasion at that time to engage in some interesting debate about the comparative interest in the Okanagan of the Hon. Member's Government and the Government I represented. I would suggest to the Hon. Member that he would be much better to spend his time doing something to get his Government to change its mind about its decision with respect to the West Kootenay Power and Light Company rather than listening to past history, because there are 12,000 consumers in that district who are just about ready to skin the Hon. Member alive because his Government, through Investment Canada, has approved a decision to sell out a public utility which the consumers of that region think is fundamental to their growth.

They do not believe they are receiving the kind of representation from their existing Member of Parliament to get that decision changed.

I would also point out that at the same meeting it was brought to my attention that the Government the Hon. Member represents is also engaged in negotiation on free trade which puts at risk the entire horticultural industry of the Okanagan.

I would like to finish because the Hon. Member asked me a question and I am very happy to answer it. I want to tell him what the people in his riding are saying. I spent some very interesting evenings there.

Mr. King: You do not need to do that. I know what they are saying.

Mr. Axworthy: What they are saying is that the Hon. Member and his Government are selling them out through that negotiation. As we know from the announcement last Friday, the Government has put those things on the negotiating table and is going to wipe out a triple million dollar industry because, once again, the Government is flying in the face of economic reality. It does not realize that the horticultural industry in British Columbia, Ontario and the Maritimes cannot withstand that kind of across-the-board level playing field negotiation that the Prime Minister has got us into. It seems to me that that is a far more terrifying prospect for the farmers, as they spoke to me last Thursday evening, than some past history the Hon. Member is trying to gouge up. The Hon. Member would be far better advised to deal with the present and the harsh reality the farmers are facing now than try once again, in typical Tory fashion, to live in the past, because I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, that is what is going to defeat them.

Mr. King: Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in the Hon. Member's comment. I happened to fly to Toronto last night with the president of the British Columbia Fruit Growers' Association. We had to spend an hour and a half in Toronto because our plane to Ottawa was delayed. We sat with a member of the other place, a Liberal Senator from British Columbia, who asked the president of the British Columbia Fruitgrowers' Association if he had any concerns about the free trade talks which are ongoing in Washington. The answer was: "No, we already have free trade in apples back and forth. There will be no difference whatsoever". I do not know who the Hon. Member was talking to, but I would imagine it was the fringe element of the fruit industry who share the convictions of the Hon. Member opposite that anything which has any element of contact with the United States should be avoided.

I am not impressed by the visit of the Hon. Member to Kelowna. I read the news items. In fact, I was able to use the accounts of the Kelowna meeting in four of my townhall meetings and received great response. I refuted the evidence the Hon. Member raised in Kelowna. It is a very easy matter to counter arguments which are sort of light weight.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, talking about light weight arguments, I think we have had the model set for us by the Hon. Member. All I can say is that it is not only the Premier of British Columbia who lives in fantasy land, several Conservative Members of Parliament occupy that same space. The fact is that I am surprised that a Member of Parliament who represents an area so vital to the national economy, which has major vineyards and a large horticultural industry, is so totally oblivious to the impact which an across-the-board comprehensive trade arrangement will have. If the Hon. member is castigating those people I met with as somehow "fringe elements", I would say to him very clearly that it is time for him to get back to his constituents. They represent farmers who have been in the business for 30 or 40 years, several generations, and they have all said without any equivocation that they are deeply concerned about the possibility of agriculture being negotiated as part of those deals, because they realize the kind of cost-cutting and competition it will generate.

• (1140)

The Hon. Member has alluded to the President of the British Columbia Fruit Growers' Association. If the Hon. Member is so confident, will he get up in the House and say that he recommends that the seasonal quotas be taken off? Is that the position he will now take in the House? That measure was brought in as a way of ensuring that the horticultural industry, and others, would be able to withstand that type of competition. Is that the Hon. Member's position? If so, I would like to know, and I am sure the people of the Okanagan would like to know. If he has any guts, and if he says that his arguments are so weighty, then he should get up in the House right now and say that that is his position.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Côté).

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour for me to take part in the debate on this budget, because once again, our Government has shown that it knows how to keep its promises and that our desire to put the economy on a sound basis is not wishful thinking. About two weeks ago, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) brought down a budget that augured well for Canada. He has shown once again that the determination and firm attitude of this Government has helped to put the economy back on the right track. The message has been clear and consistent since September 1984. We must restore this country's fiscal responsibility and good fiscal management. The national debt must be taken in hand, the deficit brought down and Government spending brought under control.

In the third budget brought down since this Government was sworn in, these objectives have been achieved once again. For the third consecutive year, the deficit is down. We must not forget why this politically suicidal decision to reduce the deficit was made and why we were not afraid to implement that decision. The reason was that Government involvement in the economy was about to paralyze our economic growth. Layers of regulations distorted investment decisions and business practices. Fifteen straight years of budget deficits had swollen the national debt to $200 billion. The rapid increase in the public debt made Canada's future economic prospects increasingly uncertain. It was a malaise that fed on itself. The more distortions the Government produced, the more it had to produce. The more it subsidized, the more it had to subsidize. The more it regulated, the more it had to regulate. The more it spent, the more it was given to spend, in an unceasing spiral that was making our industry inefficient and non-competitive and undermining our prospects for economic prosperity.

Mr. Speaker, Canadians know perfectly well, and it doesn't take a degree in economics to realize, that it doesn't really pay to get a subsidy of $1,000 if the subsidy has to generate $1,500 in taxes for the same year. Taxpayers know their arithmetic, and that is why in the last election they did not ask the Liberals to help them out of the economic mess we were in. When it came to power, the Government was firmly resolved to put an end to these destructive policies.

We made a clear statement of our objectives in November 1984 in our agenda for economic renewal. And now, two years later, we have made substantial progress in achieving these objectives. The results are eloquent proof that good management pays.

Mr. Speaker, good management means good government, and good government means that a government, instead of being part of the economic problem, starts solving that problem. At this point, perhaps I could illustrate the Government's emphasis on controlling operating and administration costs, always with a view to bringing down the deficit. Just to indicate how effective the Government's measures have been, in 1987-88, net operating costs will be essentially the same as in 1984-85. Now that, Mr. Speaker, is good management.

By reducing the deficit, which is not an end in itself, we increase employment, stimulate economic growth and expand the opportunities available for all Canadian men and women. The results are impressive. Since our Government came to power, the Canadian economy has produced 675,000 new jobs, because we created an economic climate favourable to economic growth and job creation. This record number of new jobs represents, for Quebec alone, 163,000 jobs created in less than 30 months, whereas the Liberals took 55 months to create 40,000 jobs. Since we first came into office we have therefore created four times as many jobs a month as did the Liberals. These are the figures which our forgetful colleagues opposite are trying to hide from the people. But I am confident, Mr. Speaker. And if one of the provinces so proudly displays the motto "Je me souviens", it is to remind members opposite that it was not born yesterday.

In addition, inflation has levelled at around 4 per cent. Real growth in the economy has averaged out at about 3.5 per cent, a better achievement than that of the United States, second only to Japan among major industrialized nations. Interest rates have never been so low in almost ten years. Canadians would never have been able to enjoy such economic prosperity had the Conservatives not been at the helm. What this means is that a $50,000 five-year mortgage now costs $1,500 less a year than in 1984, a saving of about $125 a month. We are rightfully proud of these results, for they show that the less the Government interferes and the more it acts as an economic lever, the better private sector interests can achieve the goals they have set for themselves.

For instance, before we took office my riding, like so many others in Quebec, was in the doldrums. Unemployment was at an all-time high, prospects for improvement were dim, and the few small businesses which managed to survive were finally forced to close down after years of sustained efforts because nothing had been provided to help them. Thousands of new businesses have opened their doors and created new jobs, a fact which reflects growing confidence among both Canadians and foreigners alike. People know that Canada is again open for business. Statistics attest to that. Our national debt is a mortgage on future generations and we are successfully getting a handle on it. In terms of the economy, the deficit has dropped from 7.4 per cent a year when we took over to 5.1 per cent this year. Where it used to represent one and a half times the American deficit, on a proportional basis, both are now practically the same.

These are no longer projections or promises but facts, Mr. Speaker, and the world community has acknowledged that these results are the best posted by an industrialized nation. In addition, they were achieved without losing sight of our sense of responsibility and discernment.

Sixty-three per cent of our declining deficit with respect to the Gross National Product can be traced back to lower expenditures and sound management, but too often our friends opposite would rather forget that.

Rather than seeking only public political popularity and playing to the gallery, our Government preferred to emphasize good management even though this approach may antagonize some people. When we took over we decided to act responsibly and learn to live within our means. The Speech from the Throne delivered last October made it clear what the priorities of the Government would be in this parliamentary session and, within the constraints of our financial plan, they will be implemented over the coming months.

Unlike the previous Government, we have shown we can set our priorities and responsibly allot our resources to achieve these objectives. We have increased the agricultural gas tax rebate, something which the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) conveniently forgot to mention earlier today. Finally, we have implemented a $1 billion special assistance program for Canadian grain producers. Moreover, we have done so without exceeding the expenditure objectives set in the 1986 budget.

There are hundreds of farmers in my constituency, so I find these measures particularly interesting and important. They are not aimed at helping small groups, but major sectors which are often put at a disadvantage. We shall pursue this disciplined and responsible action within the limits of the financial framework outlined in the budget.

The new refundable sales tax credit implemented in 1986 will provide assistance to lower income Canadians. We have also improved the child tax credit and developed a new benefit system to allow the neediest taxpayers to obtain prepayment of the credit each November.

A complete reform of pension mechanisms will promote retirement savings while improving pensions for all Canadians. Part-time workers and women will benefit particularly from the changes in pension standards.

As far as new initiatives are concerned, this budget represents a pause before we introduce our comprehensive tax reform proposals this spring. Mr. Speaker, we are continuing to work at the initiatives announced in the Speech from the Throne, including tax reform, and I know that you will find our proposals consistent with our program and good for Canada. Indeed, we have already initiated the reform process by introducing a minimum tax for high income Canadians. I wish to emphasize that we, the Conservatives, were the ones to introduce this tax.

Even my socialist friends opposite lacked the wisdom to support it, on the grounds that Bill C-23 was not strong enough. But the fact remains that the NDP, that third party, that champion of the widow and the orphan, has refused to support a minimum income tax provision for the rich.

We have gone a long way these last two and a half years. This budget shows our economic renewal program is bearing fruit and remains effective. We are on the right track. We must go on building a stronger, more aggressive, more flexible economy, for the benefit of every Canadian.

Mrs. Pépin: I have a question for the Hon. Member. I listened to him earlier as he praised the favourable repercussions of the budget, and I would like him to state where he thinks his Government will get the money for women-targeted programs, especially child care? Where is that money in the budget?

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin) for her excellent question. She listened to one part of my speech, as she just indicated. As you know, Mr. Speaker, when we came into office in 1984, we took over a business whose economic vehicles had nothing but flat tires. We had to repair several of them and change others, within our means. So, if this can reassure the Hon. Member for Outremont, she probably had an opportunity last night to see our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) before a women's group. He repeated that child care would be a priority for this Government. But as I said earlier, you know what little flexibility we had in reducing the deficit. And the results, as I described them, are ample proof that Canadians made the right choice in 1984.

We remain convinced that as soon as the Liberals have finished digging into what I would like to call—and if my language is unparliamentary Mr. Speaker, you will certainly call me to order—I mean, into sceptic tanks, they will return to a somewhat more reasonable policy and will think more about Canadian men and women, including mothers—I say that to please the Hon. Member for Outremont—who need a more adequate child care system, as she had clearly demonstrated and as was previously stated. As soon as they realize the economic reality of this country, I am convinced that Canadian men and women will maintain these Hon. Members and this Government in their positions, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin) on a supplementary question.

Mrs. Pépin: I should like to reply to my Hon. Conservative friend and ask him to explain to me why Canadian women were right to support a Government such as his. I should like to know also, because we are talking about the economic contribution of all Canadians, why we are not mentioning the significant contribution of Canadian women to the Canadian economy. When dealing with the overall impact of a budget, this is an aspect which we may have overlooked. I simply want to give him another opportunity to say what Canadian women have contributed to the economy and why they were right to support his government.

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I think that the question itself provides the answer. Why were Canadians, particularly women, right to get rid of the former Government and have confidence in ours? Quite simply because the former Government was not leading them anywhere but towards a deficit and out-of-control indebtedness.

Mrs. Pépin: Tell me about women. You have cut several programs.

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): As much as men, Mr. Speaker, women were aware of this unbearable situation, and why? Because they simply could no longer have confidence in them.

Mr. Prud'homme: I must say that I listened very carefully to the excellent speech made by the Hon. Member, certainly more so in form than in substance. I can see the speech was very well prepared, but I must admit that I am less enthusiastic about the answers to the questions. These must be made directly and off the cuff, and the Hon. Member attempted to lower the debate by suggesting that Liberal Members ought to be less concerned about septic tanks. That gave me a clear idea of where he wanted to drag us.

The only question I have for him is that, first he did not answer the questions asked by my colleague from Outremont (Mrs. Pépin) concerning all those cut-backs in retraining centres and so on. She expressed her own views. I would like to ask the Hon. Member who again made a speech that was very well prepared—I don't agree with the substance but I certainly admire the form, and you can tell there must be something new going around, when we have all these polished speeches, and we all know how the system operates in the House—but in any case, I would like to ask the Hon. Member whether he thought it was really necessary to have a budget at this time, since aside from a few additional taxes, the budget contains absolutely nothing. Couldn't this have been done in the form of a statement by the Minister, leaving the real budget until later this spring? Now we have to waste six full days on a Budget Speech we cannot really consider as such. Would the Hon. Member care to explain why he thinks it was really necessary to have a budget at this time?

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his good words about the style and preparation of my speech. I would like to take this opportunity to give him a few words of encouragement, and his party as well, since as he said just now, he knows how the system operates. Since that is the case, and the Hon. Member has been able to see for himself that in addition to having good speeches, we can also have good policies and a good program and act on that program, I would urge the Hon. Member to get his colleagues and his leader to use the same system to give us a good set of alternative policies that is, if they have any, because they have been doing nothing but criticize.

To get back to the kind of answers I gave, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that my answers were as good as the questions, which means that the quality of the answers was in direct proportion to the quality of the questions.

[English]

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to take part in the debate on the Budget presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on February 18. The Budget presented that day was a sorry disappointment. One cannot, in debating it, but speak critically of what the Government put before us and speak with regret at the opportunities which are being lost.

The Minister of Finance spoke of the Budget from the standpoint of new initiatives, as representing a breathing space. I am far from the only person in the country who saw the Budget as a "do-nothing" Budget, as a Budget of lost opportunities, as a failure to recognize that there still were very serious problems facing Canadians in many regions of the country. The Minister of Finance was prepared to allow the forces that have favoured him up to this point to carry the country onward, in the hope that there would be a continuing gradual improvement of the sort which some regions of Canada have known.

Being realistic about the situation, I recognize that there has been one very happy feature of the situation over the last few years, though it is not a feature for which I think the Government deserves any credit at all. I am referring to the fact that interest rates have fallen from the incredible levels which we knew in the early 1980s. Interest rates were at outrageous levels at the time, thanks to international action, chiefly by the Federal Reserve Board of the United States, which drove interest rates beyond 20 per cent and taught us all a useful lesson. If people thought before then that we could no longer have a depression, we all know these days that if we maintained interest rates at that point for a year or 18 months the globe would in fact experience a depression. There is no assurance these days that we are out of the woods at all as far as that is concerned.

The action taken by the Brazilian Government just last week in indicating a three-month moratorium on interest payments to the large banks which have lent so much to that country was an indication of how deeply we are still in the morass. However, I recognize that interest rates in Canada have fallen to more sensible levels, thanks to the good sense which has prevailed in other countries. As a result we have seen an increase in housing which has had the usual effect upon unemployment, with construction workers happily employed, paying taxes and no longer requiring unemployment insurance. That has represented some improvement in the economic situation.

In Thunder Bay in the last couple of weeks we have had the problem of variable entrance requirements being affected by some decline in interest rates resulting in people previously eligible for unemployment insurance at 10 weeks finding themselves out of luck because 16 weeks is now the requirement. In northwestern Ontario that seems to be a highly ironic thing to do at a time of still significant levels of unemployment above 10 per cent, and at a time when it is difficult to get work in the depths of winter. That kind of action should not be taken. It reflects the kinds of policies the Government carries on which were inherited from the previous Government and which the Conservative Government has done nothing at all to improve. I am speaking particularly of the variable entrance requirements which were designed to reduce the draw on the unemployment insurance fund in the late 1970s, but produced hardship for many Canadians.

The fact remains if there has been some improvement in a few places, but in many parts of Canada there remains much to be done. If we consider the unemployment insurance figures as they existed in January of this year we find Ontario's rate generally is set at 6.6 per cent. I have already indicated that we in northwestern Ontario are looking at 10 per cent plus. That is one indication, within a large province, of regional disparity.

Let us look at some of the other provinces. In British Columbia the unemployment rate is 13.6 per cent, on the Prairies, 9.4 per cent, Quebec, 10.8 per cent and in Atlantic Canada, 15.3 per cent. That was not a situation on which a Finance Minister should have been resting on his oars.

The Finance Minister does not just rest on his oars in these budgets, he socks it to Canadians in the way of increased taxation. We got some of it in this Budget. The decision to lay still more taxes on Canadians should provoke an outcry, a tax revolt, and I think it will as we approach the next election when Canadians recognize what is being done to them.

The Toronto Star published a story which appeared in Quorum yesterday. The figures it provides are fascinating. The Executive Director of the Social Planning Council in Toronto, Mr. Pennington points to two studies. The one noted at greater length is the one provided by the National Council on Welfare. As it happens the Fraser Institute in Vancouver, a very conservative think tank, has been providing figures that fit right in. What does Mr. Pennington tell us:

—he was astonished to learn that two such radically different groups as the National Council on Welfare and the Fraser Institute—reached the same conclusion in studies released last month.

The studies show that individual Canadians face federal tax bills in the next fiscal year that will be 48 per cent higher than those they paid in 1984-85—

That is, when the Government obtained its mandate.

—while corporations will face only a 4.3 per cent increase over the same period.

And they show that an urban family of four living on the poverty line with a $20,812 annual income faces a 35 per cent tax hike over what they paid in 1985, while a couple earning $100,000 will see only a 2 per cent increase.

That is fairness in taxation from a Conservative Government, Mr. Speaker? The article goes on:

The National Welfare Council study shows that a two-income family of four, earning a total of $15,000,—

Clearly below the poverty line.

—faces a 90 per cent increase over what they paid in 1985.

"I'm jolted," said Barb Couchman, Executive Director of the Family Services Association—

I would think that Conservative back-benchers might also feel jolted by what their colleague, the Minister of Finance has done to the Canadian people. What we have here is the most rank unfairness in taxation, laying the burden of Government on the people. It is fine to talk about assisting those most in need, as the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) likes to do, but after you lay taxes like this on Canadians, on the poor, it will be very, very difficult to recover.

The result of these actions, which for the average Canadian family of four means a tax increase since the Government came into office of about $1,380, has had one very important economic effect. It transfers money to the Government which the people of Canada should have to spend at a time of high unemployment in most of the country and at a time of very real need to support economic activity, production and sales. Because disposable income has been lost to Canadians, demand has been very weak.

Economic depression begins to affect other parts of the country other than the resource industries which have been battered in case after case. Just look at the mining, the oil and gas and the farming sectors which are disaster areas of the Canadian economy. This is an important reason why unemployment rates are at the present level, that they are and yet we have a Minister of Finance refusing to recognize it. Sure, he says in the Budget speech, the benefits of our strong economic performance have not been evenly shared across the country. Some regions are hurting. My God, most of the regions of Canada are hurting, Mr. Speaker. Only southern Ontario has anything to be very happy about in these circumstances. Of course, a Finance Minister from Bay Street may be quite content with that, but most Canadians are not, and it is a situation with which the Minister of Finance has refused to come to grips.

In the area of regional disparity spending, about which the Minister should be doing something, he has reduced spending significantly. Three years ago the regional development spending totalled $14.85 billion. By the coming fiscal year that will have dropped almost $3 billion to $11.95 billion. With that kind of decline of over one-fifth, it is not surprising that very little happens in the various regions of Canada.

I want to focus on one particular aspect of the Minister's taxation principles to underscore how he is refusing to take opportunities to improve the situation of the Canadian people and create employment. This Minister of Finance in his very first Budget reduced the capital gains tax for those who are lucky enough to have the money to get in on it. This was a $500,000 tax holiday. That tax holiday was interesting to some people but, of course, Canadians who have $15,000 or $20,000 in annual income will not be able to make use of it. In the same Toronto Star report to which I have referred we are told people are spending $12,000 of their annual income in Toronto just covering rent. People like that will not be able to take advantage of that $500,000 capital gains tax holiday. The Minister of Finance thinks he is going to lose $850 million this coming year in taxes as a result. That is very interesting, Mr. Speaker, because he admits the loss.

The Government talks about child care. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) yesterday was promising again that there would be some activity in this area. If the Finance Minister had not given this money away and instead spent less than one-half of it, namely, $320 million on improved child care he would have helped all those middle-income families who desperately need it. At the moment they are forced to spend their own hard-earned money, which they would like to put to other uses, ensuring that their children are properly cared for. This would have provided about 25,000 additional spaces for children and could well have created 5,000 jobs. There is money which the Minister of Finance could have taken in, which may not create a single job in Canada. But, after all, one can have condominiums in Florida or other places, buy art works or deal in antiques or whatever.

• (1220)

There is no assurance of any improvement in employment. The Minister of Finance passed up a splendid opportunity to create additional employment. That failure is a splendid example of the short-sightedness of the Minister and his Government in giving away money to the wealthy, taxing corporations only a little bit more, while socking the poor and middle-income earner with an incredible burden.

As a Member of Parliament from northwestern Ontario, I want to address the issue of regional development. I have already made reference to the decline in total spending on regional development from almost $15 billion three years ago to under $12 billion today. That points out that there is less concern about regions today, although Lord knows it was bad enough before that Government was elected.

When the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion was considering the assistance it might provide, we in Thunder Bay found ourselves in the odd position of being lumped in with the City of Toronto. I suppose it is nice to be included in the prosperous half of the country statistically, but the people in my region do not think of it as having anything like the economic strength which characterizes the area known as The Golden Horseshoe, where Asian companies are building automobile assembly plants these days. We just do not have the resources or attractiveness of southern Ontario. Yet the staff at our DRIE office has been cut back and there is precious little taking place in the way of regional development.

There were of course other programs and the Government, by reducing spending, has damaged regional development in that way as well. I can cite several examples. When I visited the Canadian Forestry Service Centre in Sault Ste. Marie last fall I was told that reforestation spending through the Canada Employment Commission was being cut and likely to disappear entirely. The Government is proud of the Canadian Jobs Strategy. I am sorry to say that in our region there is concern among those who are trying to assist women in obtaining training because the Canadian Jobs Strategy has weakened those programs almost fatally.

Another example is that of our local advisory council. We considered Challenge '87, another program the Government is proud of. Quite frankly, I found it shameful that in the third season of a summer employment experience development program organized by the Government the situation of deadlines, late release of application forms, and so on, was just about as bad as it was the first year. I could understand it happening in the first year when changes were being made in order to produce a better plan. However, it seems to me completely shameful that this continues in 1987. In particular, I cannot understand how the Government can do this to the private sector, the small businesses it wants to take part in the program. It is simply not fair to give people just a couple of weeks to come up with projects, fill in and file the applications. It is most certainly not fair to students to receive approval as late as the middle of April, and only then be able to hire other students.

Those are only some of the shortcomings of the Government in regional development. We very badly need the Government to recognize the action it needs to take. We need to recognize that resources have to be provided. I have watched the Government fail in its efforts at co-operative development for months now. It has worked quietly, we are told, on a response to the task force on co-operative development. We still have not had any public statement. Here we have a report which has been before the Government from the beginning of its mandate and there has not been a response.

As well, we in the NDP are very critical of an economy which is shot full of government incentives. However, I can understand the co-operative financial institutions, such as credit unions, seeking something of the same sort for themselves. Yet again the Minister of Finance has refused to do anything. Here is a potential for community-based economic development to be encouraged, yet the Government has blown it entirely. It is playing around with things like community futures committees. However, I do not see any substantial assistance or support for community-based development. People talk about potential for some special kind of training. I expect there will be consideration of relocation in some communities. However, there will not be the kind of financial assistance which is not seen as a subsidy. The Minister of Finance always thinks in terms of subsidies but it ought to be seen as an investment in the community. The Government is incapable of seeing things that way, and that is why it will be turfed out in the next election, and why the people of Canada are going to turn to the NDP which wants to encourage community-based economic development in order to produce prosperity and employment from coast to coast.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments. Debate.

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my remarks in this budget debate will focus on the announcement by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) that we can soon expect major reform of the income tax system. He certainly deserves the congratulations of every Member of this House for having the vision, courage and foresight to see that the jerry-built, ramshackle, out-moded system he and the rest of us inherited can soon be replaced by a rational, planned, contemporary system.

In his budget address the Minister committed himself to reform which would reduce income tax rates, achieve greater equity for taxpayers, and inspire economic growth. In my remarks I want to focus on one reform which can contribute to all those objectives. For half a century income tax has been administered as a kind of legal larceny. I say that without reflection on the integrity of any Minister or public servant. They have all operated within the law. The fault lies with the law itself and what it has legitimized. It lies with a system which has permitted Governments to reach in the pockets of all income taxpayers and seize what has rightfully belonged to them for themselves.

I make that claim on a premise that a democracy should not make the assumptions of a totalitarian state. By that I refer to the opinion advanced half a century ago by Harold Joseph Laski who wrote that in the 20th century governments have extended their power over more and more of life to a point where governments assume that they have a right to control all of it and should they refrain from controlling some area, it is because they have chosen to refrain. At no point does a government today, Laski suggested, recognize that it has no right to extend its control over that area.

My remarks are based on the conviction that a democracy does not make that assumption as a totalitarian government does, that in a democracy there are recognized limits to the legitimate authority of governments, that there are areas of life which belong to people on their own without intrusion by government. I ask the House today to focus on what that belief can mean for tax reform.

I submit that it means that governments will respect that a person has a responsibility to provide for himself and his dependents and, consequently, has a right to the income required to fulfil that responsibility. My thesis is that a person has what can be regarded as a human right to the income required to fulfil the natural responsibility to support oneself and one's dependants.

If we agree on that principle, I ask the House to go one step more with me and agree that persons should have that basic income free from tax. It should be respected as the person's basic income and should, therefore, be free from any trespass by a government.

I recognize that some Members might see that as a radically innovative and radically unpractical point of view. However, I submit it has already been recognized in principle by the personal exemption granted taxpayers, spouses and dependants. I am aware that many understand such exemptions simply as being tax deductions, that is tax avoidance provisions which governments have allowed and which governments can take away. However, I am arguing that that is precisely what they are not. They are essentially different from what are called deductions, should not be considered tax avoidance, and should not be subject to the changes and chances of government policy.

The term "exemption" itself suggests another meaning. It can mean that part of a person's income is respected as rightly exempt or free from taxation because it is income which the person needs to fulfil this natural responsibility to provide for himself and his dependants. I submit that income tax should be collected only on the surplus income, that being surplus in the sense of being what remains after a person has earned and retained what is needed for human existence.

If that can be recognized, or at least implied, in the present tax system, why speak of it today? I have two reasons. One is that the current exemption is too small to meet the need. The other is that as small as the exemption is there are those who want to take it away. The present exemption can be defended if it is no more than an arbitrary figure chosen to give the taxpayer another way of reducing taxable income. It is, however, indefensible if the exemption means that the tax collector respects this natural right to a basic income free from the tax collector's eager grasp. The current exemption would not provide for the existence of any human in today's Canada. It does not even keep pace with inflation. The 1986 exemption, for example, was $4,180, up only $40 over the previous year, even though that meant an increase of less than 1 per cent to cope with inflation of 4 per cent.

Canadians need a personal exemption which more approximates what they need for basic human existence; not for luxury, not for comfort, not even for security, just for existence. I submit that that amount should be seen as exempt from the tax collector. It should be respected as the natural right of the person, upon which the Government has no right to intrude. I would like to think that tax reform would bring us a system in which we might conceive of an invisible sign on an invisible fence around a very visible income. The sign would read, "Personal, Private, Tax Collectors Keep Out". This belongs to the person as a natural right for his natural existence.

I said that there are those who would eliminate this personal exemption, small and inadequate as it is. I understand the motives and respect the arguments. One argument is that the exemption offers more tax benefit to the middle and upper income earners than it does to the lower income earners. With respect, I can argue that that critique shows that such persons insist on equating the personal exemption with any other deduction and with any other tax avoidance provision. I ask them to see that the exemption respects that all of us, regardless of income level, have a common humanity for which each of us must provide. We all have a common humanity which requires each of us to accept the responsibility to provide for our own existence and those who depend on us. Therefore, each of us should have a basic income which is exempt from taxation.

I recognize, as does every Member of this House, that low income persons and families need assistance which others do not. Justice demands that they receive it. However, I submit that the income tax system is not the way to provide it. That system should be seen for what it is, a method of raising revenue. It should not be a program for redistributing the wealth. The strong should assist the weak, but the income tax system is not the way to do it. That should be the work of the Department of National Health and Welfare, not the work of the Department of Finance.

I therefore urge that the forthcoming income tax reform retain personal exemptions and make them adequate to meet a rising cost of living. We ought to take very seriously the great pressure on individuals and families, certainly in large cities such as Scarborough from which I come, to cope with the rising cost of living, so frequently on limited resources. An individual trying to be self-supporting on $12,000 a year today is a person who is struggling. A family of four trying to maintain themselves on an income of $20,000 a year today is certainly struggling. We must ask ourselves whether the income tax system should put another burden upon those people. Should we demand of them yet another challenge to be faced? Can we think in terms of lifting at least some of that burden, removing some of that challenge, so that they can have the dignity of self support, the self worth of maintaining themselves without the country making that almost impossible for them?

I recognize that whenever we talk about raising exemptions or improving benefits we are talking about either a loss of revenue or an increase of government expenditure. We must address ourselves to the question of how to meet the need. The fact is that although there is an amazingly large number of Canadians earning $12,000 a year or less, the amount of tax revenue coming out of that large number is proportionately small, about $650 million. The number of individuals and families coping with the cost of living on incomes of $20,000 or less is larger and the tax burden is correspondingly larger. It is about $4.5 billion. We are now beginning to talk about big money.

As we contemplate the forthcoming tax reform we must keep in mind the possibility and, indeed, the absolute requirement that the corporate sector contribute a much more just and rational portion of the income tax revenue of the Government. It is shocking to read the report entitled "Road Map to Tax Reform" issued by the Economic Council of Canada and to learn, according to this document, that the corporate income tax is riddled with a variety of tax credits, allowances and deductions. In any recent year, about one-half of all corporations paid no tax at all. In some cases, the report states, this was because the corporation had experienced real losses. We must not fly with flights of fancy to think that all the needs of the country can be made up from the corporate sector, but the report goes on to say that in other cases the fact they paid no tax was due to the provision of the corporate income tax legislation and to the competence of the accountants and legal experts.

When we are talking about a corporate sector which pays income tax just under $10 billion and we learn that that represents taxation paid by no more than half the corporations of this country, we see that one dimension that our forthcoming income tax reform must explore is the possibility of a more rational and more just contribution by that sector to the life and well-being of this country.

I submit that by that reform, along with others, it will be possible to give some further respect to individuals and families who are trying to cope with their natural responsibility to support themselves and their dependants on very limited incomes. I submit that for years they have been unjustly, irrationally, and unnecessarily forced to suffer further by the Government intruding upon that which should be regarded as theirs.

What I have described today can be called tax reform from below, in contrast to what I will label tax reform from above. The kind of tax reform that we read about in the United States can be fairly described as tax reform from above, for one of its priorities has been the reduction of income tax brackets, and the reduction of income tax rates very often at the top level of income. There is an argument to be said in favour of that, but I would plead for some further recognition in this country for a tax reform that will do justice to those who are striving to meet the challenge of human existence with limited resources.

I would plead that this Parliament, in undertaking this historic reform which can be before us within the next few months, will give a priority to tax reform from below and that we will try for a tax reform that will bring justice from the bottom up, rather than privilege from the top down. That alone will satisfy the demands of democracy.

The reason I have asked for the attention of the House today is that, more than anything else, a tax system expresses the values of a society and expresses the real principles upon which a society is based. We can see in the kind of tax reform to which I have referred the opportunity for a democratic system such as Canada has not enjoyed for many days.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I am always interested in listening to a radical in the Conservative ranks discussing what might be the best of all possible worlds, but not of course, as it is made by the present Minister of Finance. The Hon. Member referred to a tax system as a means of expressing the values of a society. Will he clearly characterize the values that prevail in the Budget of the Minister of Finance who increases taxation on the poor so sharply while guarding the corporations? In light of the Hon. Member's vision of society, it is strange that one can have such a sound and democratic vision which has not been achieved by the Government.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for this opportunity to extol further the merits of the Budget and the virtues of the Minister who presented it. Let me add a few ways in which the needs of lower income people have been met by the Government and this Budget.

When we took office, one of the problems which confronted many Members, including myself, was the spectre of widespread unemployment. In the community I represent, I find more frequently that there are signs saying "Help Wanted".

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): That is Toronto.

Mr. Stackhouse: The Hon. Member says Toronto. I remind the spokesman for the NDP that Toronto is part of Canada and I am shocked that the NDP is not aware of that.

A second way in which the Government and its Minister of Finance have contributed to the well-being of ordinary Canadians has been by slashing interest rates. It has been decades since we have seen such a home building boom in this country as we have witnessed in recent years. This is primarily because of the lower interest rate policy.

An Hon. Member: He is building a new house.

Mr. Stackhouse: I congratulate him. He will know what Government to credit for it. These are indications of the way in which our Government is progressive and conservative at the same time. We are progressive in opening opportunities for people as a way of conserving the fundamental values upon which this country is based.

Mr. McCrossan: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member made a very good point about trying to have an effective layer of tax exempt income which would be very much higher than the basic $4,000 that exists now. He also suggested that this layer could be as high as $12,000.

However, if there was a $12,000 tax exemption, over three-quarters of the benefit would flow to the very highest income Canadians. Does he not believe that a better way to proceed would be to have a tax credit so that the tax paid by the first $12,000 for someone who is earning $12,000 would be refunded or credited to them, rather than increasing the exemption, so that the money went to the people who need it most?

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend and neighbour for this significant question. It gives us an opportunity for an all too brief debate on the issue raised in my remarks and in his question. It is a fundamental issue which requires more debate than we can afford today, and I hope we can return to it.

We are not talking only about benefiting the low-income person. We are talking about respecting the right of every human being to a basic income to meet the needs of a human existence, which the middle-income person has and the upper-income person has. We are saying that each of us, having a common humanity, has a need for a basic income which is common to us all. That is the first point.

Second, if we had a larger exemption similar to what I have described we would be able to totally remove many people from the income tax rolls who are now on those rolls. Some of the income they are now paying to the Government would be returned to them.

Third, many people who are unable to cope with their needs because of low income or family responsibilities, regardless of how they manage their income, require some supplementation by society. I do not see the income tax system as a way of doing that. I would rather see that coming through forms of payment which Parliament would authorize and the Government would administer. That is my approach to the issue. I recognize that the Hon. Member has raised a valid and important question and I hope he and I can debate it again at a later time.

• (1250)

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I have both a comment and a question. First, I commend the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) for the positive mention in The Toronto Star this morning. I think it shows he is a dogged Member of Parliament who pursues his ideas and sees them through to fruition. I would like to solicit his support on another idea.

Mr. Stackhouse: I was hoping for your support.

Mr. Nystrom: That is no problem at all in terms of credit cards and interest rates, so we can do a trade off here. The Hon. Member mentioned that some Members of the New Democratic Party do not realize Toronto is part of Canada. Toronto has done very well. In fact, about 90 per cent of the jobs created in this country in the last year have been in Toronto, primarily because of the auto industry. Does the Hon. Member have some ideas on how we can spread some of that affluence across the country? I look at western Canada and I see tremendously high unemployment rates. I see Albertans who are very discouraged about what is happening. I look at northern Ontario and see an unemployment rate around 15 per cent. In some places in Atlantic Canada unemployment rates are as high as 20 per cent.

I look at western Canada in terms of the farm economy and find that our farmers are receiving prices now which in some cases are worse than they received in the 1930s. Even with the $1 billion deficiency payment, the maximum price a farmer can now receive for his bushel of wheat is $3.50. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) knows well of what I speak because he is a farmer in western Canada. The deficiency payment is 48 cents a bushel and the maximum price is $3.50 for a bushel of wheat for the Canadian farmer. The American farmer meanwhile, because of subsidies, receives a minimum of $4.80 U.S., which is about $6 Canadian.

What do we do to spread some of this wealth around? I am very happy for Toronto. Toronto is very much part of Canada. We are not all Torontonians and we all deserve to receive a fair shake. The Hon. Member did say that there should be a minimum amount of Government. I am paraphrasing him, but he said that sometimes there is too much government. However, is it not one of the roles of Government to try to divide more equally the national pie so that the Saskatchewan farmer and the Newfoundland cod fisherman can receive a more fair share? I wonder if I have the support of the Hon. Member opposite to help us in this very worthy cause of getting more money into regional development, more money for people like fishermen and farmers in order to give them a better chance to be competitive in terms of having a fair share of the national pie? We do not all want to be Torontonians, but we all want the same opportunity which Torontonians now have. We all want to ensure that there are jobs for people regardless of whether they live in Toronto, Yorkton, St. John's, or even Calgary, where my friend to my left knows there is considerable unrest because of growing unemployment.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate once again the New Democratic Party giving me the opportunity to review the positive achievements of the Government in addressing the kind of problem he identifies. In terms of regional disparity, I remind him of the $1 billion award for prairie farmer assistance and the announcement made just yesterday in Vancouver by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) of a major ship construction contract. I also remind him of the announcement a few weeks ago of a major undertaking by the Government to make possible continuing the steel industry in Cape Breton Island. Those are positive initiatives across the country, from one region to another. We find positive and constructive actions taken by the Government to address the very problem the Hon. Member identifies.

What I would say to the Hon. Member, as he asks us to do more, is that he consider supporting the general financial policies of the Government which have as an objective, among others, the increase of wealth in this country. One of the things the New Democratic Party must be realistic about is that we cannot spend what we do not have. We have been doing that as a country to our detriment and disaster. If we are going to spend more to lift the level of life in this region or that region, we have to increase the production of wealth. This wealth generation has to come by stimulating the economy and businesses which have an opportunity for growth. The Hon. Member mentioned the auto industry. That is one. I wish he would be conscious of the house construction industry which is another. It has a tremendous spin-off effect in making work for so many. Therefore, I would suggest to the Hon. Member that he take very seriously what the record around the world shows, that the needs of people are best met when a private enterprise economy is given adequate stimulation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I am in your hands but, in view of the time, I would suggest we call it one o'clock and resume debate after Question Period.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreeable?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 12.55 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

NATIONAL PARKS

PRESERVATION OF SOUTH MORESBY—PRIME MINISTER'S FORTHCOMING MEETING WITH BRITISH COLUMBIA PREMIER

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in exactly two days the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will meet with Premier Vander Zalm while loggers are beginning to cut timber in Windy Bay on Lyell Island. This is a unique forest ecosystem with beautiful spruce and cedar trees, the streams are filled with salmon and trout, and the sky is criss-crossed by all kinds of birds.

Canadians from coast to coast recognize the immense value of the South Moresby archipelago, and of Lyell Island in particular, and want this heritage protected for the enjoyment of this and future generations. We urge the Prime Minister to impress on Premier Vander Zalm that the preservation of South Moresby is of national and international importance. The Prime Minister should ask the Premier to stop the logging, avoid further confrontation between the Haida Nation and the loggers, and negotiate a national park that would cover only 0.2 per cent of B.C.'s forests. This is the kind of leadership Canadians expect from their Prime Minister.

SYSTEM TO MONITOR SPOUSES DEFAULTING ON SUPPORT PAYMENTS

Mr. Léo Duguay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, 60 per cent of single-parent families headed by women live in poverty. This is not only the result of low incomes earned by female family heads, but also because enforcement orders are often not enforced. Poor single parents and their children often receive no support from the other financially secure parent.

The Family Orders Enforcement Assistance Act which the Government passed in June, 1986, will allow the attachment of moneys under federal jurisdiction. Yesterday's Estimates gave Revenue Canada $627,000 to implement a computer system to nab spouses who are defaulting on support payments. Their refunds will be withheld until they meet their support obligations. Some 30,000 Canadians who last year ripped off their spouses, their families and their children, will find that this callous disregard for their families will not go unchecked. The Government intends to ensure that they live up to their obligations.

LIBERAL MEMBERS' STATEMENTS ON CRUISE MISSILE TESTING

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I was very interested to read a press release from the Liberal external affairs critic that called on the Government to stop testing the Cruise missile. After all, it was the Liberal Government that signed the Cruise testing agreement to begin with. He was obviously following the example of the Liberal defence critic. He is also practising that fine Liberal tradition of saying one thing to get elected and doing the opposite in office.

But wait, Mr. Speaker, it seems that these two gentlemen forgot to check with their leader. He says that these critics do not speak for the Party—another contradiction! The Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston) says: "I'm the critic, you know." But is he? After yesterday's fiasco maybe he should check that with his Leader, too.

Will these critics find a Party? Will the Liberals ever agree on a policy? Will the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) get his house in order in time for the next election? Stay tuned. "As the Liberals Turn" appears daily—right next to Mary Worth and Rex Morgan in the comics section of The Globe and Mail.

HEALTH

FUNDING OF AIDS DISEASE RESEARCH AND EDUCATION

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, recent reports have stated that an estimated 1,200 people in Edmonton are infected with the deadly AIDS virus. AIDS is spreading at such an alarmingly rapid rate in Canada that it is time for all Canadians to become serious about AIDS education. Our Government has scheduled an AIDS education program to begin this March and has pledged $3.7 million toward that goal. This is only part of a total of $39 million for AIDS research and education.

We must all accept the reality of AIDS in our society and educate all Canadians, both young and old, on the far-reaching effects of this disease. We should support full public information in the communities, in the school systems and through the media. It is only through such measures that we will be able to combat this disease in a realistic manner.

I commend the Department of National Health and Welfare for its commitment of funds and its dedication to conquering this plague.

INTRODUCTION OF INTERCHANGEABILITY CLAUSE AND ITS EFFECTS ON BILINGUALISM

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): In Quebec City, Mr. Speaker, Canada Post Corporation has introduced the polyvalence or interchangeability clause whereby French unilingual technical representative positions will be replaced by positions identified as being bilingual imperative, and people who have been doing this work for years will be declared surplus.

If Canada Post management are really anxious to promote bilingualism in Canada, Quebec City is the wrong place to begin because the need and urgency are definitely not a priority.

Would it be that Canada Post is intent on cutting jobs to the detriment of bilingualism?

If the Crown corporation believes in bilingualism, why not make it possible for its employees to become bilingual, and why not offer them adequate training instead of declaring them surplus?

This provoking approach on the part of Canada Post management certainly does not help improve working conditions and service to the public.

KNIGHTS OF COLUMBUS

ALTRUISM

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, we have in Canada an organization which is doing outstanding work in our contemporary society. I am referring to the Knights of Columbus in all provinces.

In Abitibi the 10,000 members are under the direction of district 08 representative Yvon Marchand of Val-d'Or. Barraute, Rochebaucourt, Champneuf and Lamorandière Local 3490 can be cited as an example. It is under the direction of Mr. Jean-Claude Chevalier, great knight third degree, and Messrs. Denis Collins, Robert Lefebvre, Roger Jobin, Marcel Piché, Onésime Boucher.

Every year these 300 members put in thousands of hours of volunteer work to help young people and senior citizens. Their major achievement in 1987 will be the purchase of an ambulance for the region.

Mr. Speaker, Canada's Knights of Columbus draw inspiration from four great principles: unity, fraternity, charity, and patriotism.

RAILWAYS

SELECTION OF BRANCH LINES FOR REHABILITATION ON PRAIRIES

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, some time ago the Technical Committee of the Senior Transportation Committee made recommendations to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) regarding the rehabilitation of branch lines on the Prairies. The committee gave number one priority to putting heavy steel rails on the Blaine Lake subdivision.

The answer came back from the Minister's office deleting and downgrading the Blaine Lake subdivision, and instead putting in the Bromhead subdivision from the Assiniboine District. The lines do not compare in the amount of grain that they move. The grain companies, the railways, and the farmers are objecting.

I call upon the Minister of Transport to reinstate the technical committee's recommendations, and to assure the House and the people of the Prairies that political intervention and interference will not be the basis upon which future rehabilitation will be established.

GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO IMPROVE POSITION OF WOMEN

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, at the First Ministers' Conference last November, the Prime Minister tabled "Dimensions of Equality: A Federal Government Work Plan for Women". This document specifies the measures our Government is undertaking to promote women's achievement of equality.

As we approach International Women's Day it is appropriate to review the many initiatives that our Government is pursuing to improve the status of women. These include work in the area of pensions, family violence, child care, women's health, sports and fitness, and issues related to women's employment. The Government is committed to addressing the particular needs of farm women, aboriginal women, disabled women, immigrant women, and visible minority women.

In short, we are determined to create the conditions that will enable all Canadian women to pursue their ambitions on an equal footing with men, and to realize their full potential in society.

FISCAL MANAGEMENT—POSITION OF QUEBEC

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, the Main Estimates tabled by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) were one more indication that Quebec is being penalized by this Conservative Government.

Despite an unemployment rate of 11 per cent, Quebec has seen no change in the level of its transfer payments. Ontario, on the other hand, with an unemployment rate of 6.6 per cent, will receive $550 million more in transfer payments, an increase of 7 per cent. As for the social welfare component, Quebec's share of transfer payments will go down 7.6 per cent, from $1.26 billion to $1.16 billion for this year.

Mr. Speaker, when we get to the point where a provincial Minister of Finance threatens to sue the federal Government because of its fiscal management, we can assume the province in question is not getting fair treatment. It should come as no surprise today that the Progressive Conservative Party enjoys only 10 per cent of the public support among Quebec voters.

This morning, the newspaper La Presse contains an article on the Estimates, under a headline that speaks for itself: "Quebec feels the pinch".

Mr. Speaker, I urge all Conservative Members from Quebec to wake up and make sure their Conservative Government is giving Quebecers a fair deal.

HARBOURS AND PORTS

MAINTENANCE OF HARBOURS AND WHARFS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, once again the federal Government has ignored the worsening state of our harbours and wharfs. The budget for small craft harbours is simply a drop in the bucket. Dependable and well maintained harbours and wharfs are absolutely essential.

The Government's neglect is a threat to the safety of Canadian fishermen and boaters. While the Government bails out banks and squeezes low and middle-income taxpayers for every last cent, the real needs of Canadians are ignored. In my own constituency fishermen in West Point, Tignish, Fishing Cove, and Alberton are kept waiting and waiting.

I urge the Government to fulfil its responsibilities and to allocate some badly needed assistance to our harbours and wharfs.

SHIPBUILDING

NEGOTIATION OF CONTRACT WITH VANCOUVER SHIPYARD TO BUILD POLAR 8 ICE-BREAKER

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission—Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I rise in the House today to commend our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) for once again demonstrating his commitment to improving the economy of western Canada and to creating jobs in every region of our great country.

Yesterday, in Vancouver, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) announced our Government's intention to negotiate a contract with Versatile Pacific Shipyards to construct a Polar 8 ice-breaker. This ice-breaker, which will be the largest of its type in the world, will be vital to preserving our sovereignty in the northern reaches of our country.

The Polar 8 project is worth hundreds of millions of dollars and will create 1,000 person-years of employment for the British Columbia shipbuilding industry. This means prosperity not only for B.C. but for all of Canada.

On behalf of all British Columbians, I must tell the Prime Minister how pleased we are with this clear and decisive action to address the issue of regional disparity. The future of western Canada is a top priority with our Prime Minister and our Government.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

FUNDING OF SCHOOL CONSTRUCTION ON RESERVES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the previous Conservative Member who spoke on behalf of western Canada did not speak on behalf of the Province of Manitoba.

The Budget presented a week and a half ago and the Estimates tabled yesterday have one glaring omission, that is, there is no significant increase in capital funding for the building of schools on reserves.

My own riding is a great example of the problem which exists across the country. We have schools in terrible and deplorable condition. People cannot even obtain a feasibility study for the next five years to see whether or not they can build a new school. The condition of federal reserve schools is deplorable. The education received by students is inadequate. The Government's neglect is shameful.

I call upon Parliament, in the study of the Estimates, to ensure that there is adequate funding so that native children have a chance and opportunity our the country.

SHIPBUILDING

CONSTRUCTION OF POLAR 8 ICE-BREAKER—ANNOUNCEMENT OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH VANCOUVER SHIPYARD

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, yesterday was a very special day in British Columbia, particularly in North Vancouver and Victoria. As the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) announced that the Government of Canada intends to proceed with the design and construction of the Polar 8 ice-breaker at the Versatile Pacific Shipyards, at a total cost of $328 million in 1985 dollars, he provided a new and a secure future for the shipbuilding industry of British Columbia.

Many people were involved in making this decision. I appreciate the support of cabinet colleagues and members from across the country who supported the bid from British Columbia for this most important project.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Collins: I am sorry the Liberals and New Democrats do not seem to support it.

I also want to mention, particularly, the work of the Greater Vancouver Shipbuilding Coalition, a unique coalition of industry representatives, union representatives, and municipal politicians who made the case clearly and persistently about the expertise and capability of British Columbia shipyards.

The impact of the project means a certain future for West Coast shipyards for many years to come and, most important, certain employment for hundreds of shipyard workers.

I also anticipate a renewed sense of pride and international recognition which the workers and all those involved will receive as they build the biggest, the most powerful, and the best ice-breaker in the world.

I have on occasion been accused of being a cheer-leader for the Government. On this occasion I want to give three cheers for the Government.

HOUSING

REDUCTION IN FIVE-YEAR MORTGAGE RATES

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, for the first time in 20 years Canadian homeowners are offered a five-year mortgage for less than 10 per cent. This will not only allow people to afford their own homes but will further stimulate the lumber, construction, and housing industries. The Government's achievements in economic growth brought the inflation rate from a high of 12.9 per cent in the summer of 1981 to 3.9 per cent today.

Interest rates in 1981 reached an ultimate high of 21 per cent. We have not seen a five-year mortgage of 9.8 per cent since 1973. This, Mr. Speaker, is further proof that the Government's strategy for increased economic development is really working.

STATUS IN PUBLIC OPINION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, in August, 1985, the Tories had problems. Boy, did they ever have problems. So they called upon super Dalton

Camp to the rescue at a cost, so the Estimates tell us yesterday, of $250,000 a year for an aide to the Government to get it out of trouble. What has happened since, Mr. Speaker? The Government has taken a virtual nosedive since the day Dalton Camp set foot on Parliament Hill.

What is the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) going to do now? Is he going to call upon the big blue machine? Is he going to call upon super Norman Atkins, or is he going to call upon someone's chauffeur to help him? Nobody knows for sure. The ship is sinking fast and soon it will be gone, completely submerged. Who will help the battered Tories next, Mr. Speaker? Certainly not I.

FEDERAL FUNDING OF VARIOUS ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, Ottawa is hosting the International Women's Week, a conference designed to focus on the role of women in society. The conference which has received government funding of $15,000 annually for the past four years has applied for a $20,000 grant this year to help defray costs. There is no reason whatsoever for these moneys not to be granted except that the conference does not represent all the views found in Canadian society.

The conference will have seminars conducted by Norma Scarborough, President of the Canadian Abortion Rights Action League, and over 10 lesbian groups will be sponsoring seminars. Yet the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) stopped payment of an $8,000 cheque for the Alberta Federation of Women United for Families, which is an anti-abortion group, and the conference has excluded REAL Women who represent a pro-family viewpoint. Why is a double standard being applied by the Secretary of State? The views of pro-life groups are far more important than the anti-life lesbian rights. Pro-life deals with life and this fact supersedes all others. To paraphrase George Orwell in Animal Farm, it seems some people are more equal than others.

ORAL QUESTIONS PERIOD

[English]

SHIPBUILDING

CONSTRUCTION OF POLAR 8 ICE-BREAKER—STATUS OF CONTRACT AWARD

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Secretary of State for External Affairs announced that the Polar 8 ice-breaking contract would be granted to Versatile Shipyards of British Columbia. I have long been a supporter of that ice-breaker being built in British Columbia, and I welcome the announcement. But the announcement was tentative at best. It was an announcement, as I read the document, of an intent to negotiate.

If I might quote from the proposed letter of intent issued yesterday by the Government, it reads:

> This letter is not to be construed under any circumstances as creating:—(b) any obligation to proceed with any aspect of the Polar 8 project; (c) any agreement to award any contract—

Will the Secretary of State be good enough to clear up the confusion? Does Versatile have a contract or not?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): I hope, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman will not mind if I attempt to clear up his confusion rather than the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In the first place the document and the proposition presented to Versatile yesterday are certainly far more firm than anything that was done by our predecessors who let 20 years go by without taking any action on the Polar 8 ice-breaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: Big deal. So what?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I will come to you. If you have guts enough to ask a question—

• (1420)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Minister.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, there has been a process under way for five months in which the Minister responsible for DRIE made the necessary arrangements to assist the parent company Versatile in connection with its Quebec operations which have now been sold, and where he helped resolve the situation in western Canada with their farm implement company. Yesterday we gave them a firm proposal. So long as they are able to meet the financial and technical requirements, it is a firm proposal under which they will have a contract to build the new world class Polar 8 ice-breaker. It is not tentative but is quite firm so long as they can meet conditions which protect the Canadian public and taxpayer.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I am glad we finally got the Minister's attention. His interpretation of that document, the proposed letter of intent, is a little more generous than he would have given it had he still been Minister of Justice.

CANADIAN DESIGN INQUIRY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a further question to the Minister, since he responded. He suppressed the Bruneau task force report which unanimously recommended that a Canadian design be used for the ice-breaker. The reason was obvious. This would ensure Canada's leadership in ice-breaker technology. Will the Minister or the Prime Minister order that the report be made public so we can see its terms in full, and will they assure the House that the Canadian design group will be used for the ice-breaker?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition, who represents a district in Vancouver although he has given up his residence there now—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I am glad to see he is concerned about the design group. This is going to be a Canadian design with the design done in Canada. There are a number of Canadian designers and design companies located in Canada to do this design who are interested in doing the design work. We have asked Versatile to put together a design team which will be subject to our approval. Construction will involve $320 million in 1985 dollars, which means the dollar of 1985 with inflation protection. The Hon. Leader of the Opposition might not grasp what that concept means. It is 1985 dollars. Some $8 million will be spent on the design—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

CANADIAN TECHNOLOGY AND SOVEREIGNTY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if we can peer through the bombast, the Minister has told us there is no contract, just a proposal. As well, he has not confirmed that the Canadian design is going to be used.

Yesterday, his colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, said in the House that one of the purposes of building the ice-breaker was to protect and enhance Canadian sovereignty. Is the Minister of Transport suggesting he will allow our lead in ice-breaker technology to go to our competitors, including countries not currently members of NATO? Is that what he is telling us?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, one wonders whether the Leader of the Opposition is supporting the Polar 8 ice-breaker at all. By the way, he should read the book "Two Years Before the Bombast".

The original design of this ice-breaker was done by German & Milne. As a result of the Bruneau committee it will be redesigned to save $100 million as the committee recommended could be done. That is what the next design team will have to do. It will be a Canadian design and the work will be done in Canada. I can assure the House of that. We will all be proud in 1993 when we sail through any part of the Arctic archipelago on this new Polar 8 Conservative ice-breaker.

FINANCE

FEDERAL PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. This morning, the Quebec Minister of Finance released a letter to his federal counterpart on the subject of equalization payments and established programs financing. In the letter, the Minister said, and I quote:

> Finally, the Government of Quebec cannot accept your Government's decision to let health and post-secondary education programs deteriorate and refrain from correcting the substantial deficiencies pointed out in the equalization program. Nor can it tolerate the unfair way it is being treated in this respect.

My question to the Minister of Finance is as follows: Why, in an attempt to balance its Budget, did the federal Government decide to transfer part of its deficit to the provinces by refusing to pay them the amounts provided under the agreements, which in Quebec's case, according to the Minister's letter, means $857 million in foregone revenue for the period from 1986 to 1990?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the equalization programs and established programs financing are among the federal Government's biggest programs. We have increased funding for the two programs by more than 5 per cent. I think that in a period of restraint for the federal Government, we have treated the provinces quite well if we consider all the Government's other programs.

FUNDING OF POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, as a result of the 1986 mid-decade census, the federal Government will recuperate a windfall gain of nearly $600 million from its equalization payments to the provinces, and for post-secondary education and health care. Is the Minister prepared to use part of the federal Government windfall to compensate for the heavy losses the Maritimes, Quebec, and Manitoba will suffer?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that there was a misuse of figures in Question Period yesterday. The figures which were used by his colleague were only cash payments. They omitted tax transfers. The Hon. Member is shaking his head, but his colleague did use those figures incorrectly. The increases in both cases are in excess of 5 per cent when the tax transfers are included. That is the correct way of looking at this, as the Hon. Member knows.

Mr. Broadbent: Oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I would be very happy to debate this at any time with the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

SIZE OF FEDERAL PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, since the Government is supposed to be introducing new legislation on equalization soon, the Minister will have the opportunity to have that debate.

Will the Minister now confirm that when the Government gets around to publishing the figures they will show that many of Canada's poorer provinces will have a net reduction next year in the amount of money they are getting through equalization payments? Specifically, will he confirm today that Newfoundland will get $28 million less, Manitoba will get $40 million less, and the Province of Quebec will get $97 million less?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not know where the Hon. Member got those figures. If he cares to give me their source, I may be able to respond to the question accurately.

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT IS LISTENING TO CANADIANS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I put the question to the Minister and his responsibility is to answer yes or no. If he has the figures it is his responsibility to give them to the House of Commons today. Here is my question: The Governments of the poorer provinces are not alone in expressing their opposition to this new approach of the Conservative Government, so do other people like Chambers of Commerce in the Province of Quebec, as well as union members in Quebec and the Maritime Provinces. My question is simply this: Does the Government listen to the people of this country?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I heard quite clearly. Under the equalization program last year we made additional payments to all provinces, although the federal Government was not legally bound to do so, but we did give due consideration to the difficulties experienced by the poorer provinces. This year and next year we will have increased the payments twice each year through technical changes in the equalization payment program.

• (1430)

CONSTITUTIONAL POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my last question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Minister of Finance knows very well that when he produces the equalization legislation many of Canada's poorer provinces will have a net reduction in equalization payments. Since the Constitution makes provision for equalization, is it the view of the Government that equalization must be achieved through means now being pursued by the Government of Quebec and some Governments in Atlantic Canada which have indicated that they may take the federal Government to court? Does the Prime Minister believe that the way to obtain national reconciliation is to force the poorer provinces to get just equalization by taking the federal Government to court?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, last year, without obligation, the Government of Canada proceeded to pay supplementary equalization payments to the provinces that were less well off because we strongly believe in the concept of fairness and ensuring equalization in real terms to all regions of the country. Clearly Canada has been unsuccessful not only in the last decades but over the last number of months. We are working very hard to correct the areas of serious economic imbalance and, of course, equalization is one of the main instruments to achieve this. However, that process has a formula and a series of criteria that have been agreed upon historically and reinforced by Members of the House.

Mr. Murphy: Imposed by the Liberals.

Mr. Mulroney: I invite my hon. friend to reflect upon the action taken unilaterally by the Government last year which I think brought very considerable benefit to the provinces he has mentioned. That is our track record. We hope to continue working with the provinces and being helpful in these areas.

FEDERAL FUNDING OF POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It concerns the Government's plan to cut $14 million this year from its support to provinces for post-secondary education. Does the Minister agree that well trained and educated young Canadians have the best chance of getting jobs in our society, and if so, how does he justify this kind of cut which removes access to post-secondary education?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member did not hear my response to her colleague. She is on misusing those figures and she knows it. She knows that the EPF formula includes both cash transfers and transfers of tax points. If she does not know that, she should go back and do her homework. If you include the post-secondary education tax transfers you will see that there is a 10.9 per cent increase, for a total increase in transfers on post-secondary education from $4.803 billion to $5.053 billion. That is a total increase of 5.2 per cent. Those figures are from the Estimates and it is very—I am not quite sure of the word I should use, Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am very grateful to the Hon. Minister for indicating that he was not sure of the word he might have used. If other Hon. Members would follow suit, it would make the task of the Chair much easier.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the Government's Budget and spending estimates indeed paint a very discouraging picture for Canadian families. There are escalating taxes, cuts in job-training, cuts in funding for education, and no response to the crisis in child care. How does the Minister expect a regime such as this to produce a better life for Canadians?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me remind the Hon. Member of what the Government has done in the past two and one-half years. We have seen the creation of 677,000 jobs, we have increased the Child Tax Credit, we have accelerated the payment of the Child Tax Credit, we have introduced a refundable low-income Sales Tax Credit, we have increased the pensions to veterans, the spouse's allowance has been increased, there has been $100 million a year for programs that will be provided to those people who are on welfare to help provide training to get them back in the job market. I can go on, Mr. Speaker, but I see you are signalling that I complete my answer. That is the record.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PETRO-CANADA

PRICE OF GASOLINE—REQUEST THAT CORPORATION BE DIRECTED ON PRICING POLICY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. He will know that motorists from Halifax to Victoria are fed up with the way oil companies, including Petro-Canada, are gouging the consumers at the pumps. My question relates to the Minister's comment yesterday when he said that the Petro-Canada Act states quite specifically that the Government may give policy direction to Petro-Canada. Will the Minister or his colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, issue a directive to Petro-Canada insisting that the new policy of Petro-Canada be that it act to bring down to as low a price as possible the cost of gasoline at the pumps for Canadian consumers?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is correct. In fact, it is Clause 7(2) of the Petro-Canada Act, which makes it very clear that policy direction is only in writing from the Governor in Council. This implies very clearly that there should not be political interference in the day-to-day operations of Petro-Canada. If the New Democratic Party is suggesting that the Government should get involved in the day-to-day operations, perhaps we should consider whether Petro-Canada should be a Crown corporation at all, which implies arm's length, but should be brought in as a Department of Government. I am sure that will satisfy the socialists, but it is contrary to good sense.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ACTION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Minister should be aware that Petro-Canada is not Exxon, Texaco or Mobil. It is a Canadian oil company owned by the people of Canada to serve the people of Canada directly. We are not suggesting day-to-day interference. Price-setting is a policy decision and the Minister has identified that the Government, through Order in Council, may set policy for Petro-Canada. Why does the Minister not stop being an apologist for the oil companies and begin taking action to protect the consumers and motorists of Canada?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think I am probably the last person in the House to be accused of apologizing for Petro-Canada. The fact is that constitutionally the federal Government cannot get involved in price-setting. It is in the Constitution. I did not write it. The Hon. Member is suggesting that we do indirectly what we are precluded from doing in the Constitution.

Mr. Broadbent: Utter nonsense. You don't know what you are talking about.

Mr. Andre: The Leader of the New Democratic Party would hear better if he kept his mouth closed.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I think the Hon. Minister has answered and has done his best to make his point.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

POLAR CLASS 8 ICE-BREAKER—INCLUSION OF RESEARCH PLATFORM

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. The Polar Class 8 ice-breaker announcement yesterday by the Secretary of State for External Affairs is welcome news for millions of Canadians who want to see the reaffirmation of our sovereignty over Arctic waters and islands. Is the Minister prepared to convince his cabinet colleagues that there should be an allocation of sufficient resources in order to establish a research platform on that particular vessel?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to tell the Hon. Member that the decision is already made. Science and research development activities will be a very important part of the vessel's mission. In fact, there will be a research platform for the Government's hydrographic and oceanographic research. It will help us to develop agreements with foreign countries. It will be a very important component of the mission.

REFUGEES

ADMINISTRATIVE REVIEW—MEDIA REPORTS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Immigration. The Government's refugee policy is drowning in a sea of confusion. It has an outdated system, a special administration review initiated last May, temporary changes made two weeks ago, pending new legislation promised, and now we have media reports suggesting that the Government has approved a second administrative review or amnesty. Will the Minister tell the House and Canadians whether in fact the Government has approved or is planning a second administrative review? And when will the bureaucratic nightmare come to an end so that Canadians can have one clear, comprehensive policy which they can understand and in which they can have some degree of confidence?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, this Government has not granted an amnesty to refugee claimants. It is not the intention of this Government to grant an amnesty. Those cases which were in the backlog prior to May 21 have been handled in an administrative case-by-case review based on humanitarian and compassionate guidelines and family, social, and economic criteria. That is not an amnesty. Very soon we will be bringing forward the new refugee determination process, the amendments to the Immigration Act.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, the Minister's policy is beginning to resemble a train with two cabooses on either end going nowhere. That is what it looks like to Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is seeking to ask a question and certainly, I am sure, all Hon. Members would want to hear it.

CABINET POLICY

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, in documents advancing an administrative review—not an amnesty—why did the Cabinet issue specific written orders not to keep this in the public domain? Was it the strategy to have a back-door policy for refugees while promoting a front-door get-tough policy for all Canadians? Was that the strategy?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, our policy is very clear that real refugees who come to our door will always be provided with a haven and settled here. We have not caved in and we will not cave in to what the Hon. Member is trying to indicate. With respect to the administrative review of the people in the backlog which is under way, there has been an approval rate of 80 per cent or 85 per cent. Fifteen per cent to 20 per cent are being refused. That is not an amnesty, in my opinion.

TRADE

POTASH EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES—ANTI-DUMPING INVESTIGATIONS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Yesterday the U.S. Department of Commerce decided to begin anti-dumping investigations against Canadian potash producers. This morning the U.S. International Trade Commission held hearings regarding injury to U.S. potash producers. I would like to know whether or not the Secretary of State for External Affairs can tell us exactly what the Canadian Government is doing now, and what it plans to do in the future, to fight these outrageous allegations by the U.S. potash industry against the Canadian potash industry and to protect jobs here in Canada, particularly in Saskatchewan and New Brunswick.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question was given yesterday. We have been meeting with the industry involved. We have offered to do all we can to aid the industry against this claim. We have also made our views known to the American administration, that we consider this inappropriate.

CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Because of the importance of this issue in Saskatchewan and New Brunswick, and the fact that President Reagan will be visiting Canada on April 4 and April 5, I wonder if the Prime Minister can assure the House that he will raise this issue with the President of the United States and will argue the Canadian position forcefully with the President in order to protect jobs here in Canada.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we will not wait that long. I will raise it when I meet with Secretary Shultz next week.

EMPLOYMENT

FUNDING OF JOB-CREATION PROGRAMS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. In the Estimates tabled yesterday, expenditures for job creation were cut by $153 million. This is at a time when unemployment has increased to 9.7 per cent nationally and is over 11 per cent in six provinces, all with serious difficulties. Why will the Minister not recognize that the so-called recovery is not happening in these provinces, cancel these cuts, and authorize new employment programs for these hard hit regions?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, we have restored confidence in our community. Real jobs have been and are being created in industry. Look at the figures in the youth sector in particular where unemployment is down 4 per cent in January, 1987, versus January, 1986. To me, that is a commitment to real jobs.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, what he says may be true in Ontario but—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: More, more.

Mr. Gauthier: He said "may be".

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member started off his question by saying to the Minister that what he says may be true, and that is a considerable improvement on the preface to some questions.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I said what he says may be true about Ontario but it is not true in six or seven provinces of this country.

PUBLIC CONCERN ABOUT UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): In a Gallup poll published yesterday, 41 per cent of Canadians—60 per cent in Atlantic Canada—said that unemployment was their greatest concern. How can the Minister ignore this cry for help from so many Canadians? Why does the Government not show some political will and do something about it?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, mortgages are at a 20-year low. Interest rates are down again. Jobs created since September, 1984 are; 34,000 in Atlantic Canada; 164,000 in Quebec; 356,000 in Ontario, and 119,000 in the West, and more can still be done.

NARCOTICS

DRUG ENFORCEMENT AND EDUCATION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. The Prime Minister will recall that last September he indicated that in his judgment there was an epidemic of drug abuse in Canada. If there is indeed an epidemic as the Prime Minister described it, could the Prime Minister tell us why, in the Estimates which were tabled in this House yesterday, there are no new resources or moneys allocated for drug enforcement, education, or other drug related initiatives on the part of the Government?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Hon. Member asked the question because it gives me an opportunity to indicate to him—

Mr. Broadbent: What about the epidemic?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Drug use is not very funny, Mr. Broadbent.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Many Canadians take drug abuse very seriously. The Prime Minister takes it very seriously. The Cabinet takes it seriously. What we are saying in terms of the Estimates, coming directly to the Hon. Member's question, is that one does not have to put an issue which is still under discussion within the Government and with the provinces into the Estimates which were tabled by the President of the Treasury Board. What it can be, very clearly, is a policy announced as a stand-alone within the fiscal framework.

Mr. Blaikie: It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, if something is an epidemic, that at least within six months of declaring it to be an epidemic, some action might be forthcoming on the part of the Government.

PRIME MINISTER'S REFERENCE TO EPIDEMIC

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Does the Prime Minister still think we have an epidemic? If he does, why is there no action forthcoming right here and now on this issue? Or was the Prime Minister just doing one of his more famous imitations of his friend south of the border?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that my hon. friend, who constantly asks us to run down south of the border to solve environmental problems, now chooses to trivialize what we view as a very important matter.

• (1450)

In September I indicated that in my judgment the abuse of drugs in the country had reached epidemic proportions. That view was sustained, although I know people disagreed with it. But I remember the Chief of Police of Edmonton and the Chief of Police of Metro Toronto, and many other leading authorities in Canada, saying that drug abuse had indeed reached epidemic proportions. As a result, we have begun intensive consultations—

Ms. Jewett: So do something.

Mr. Mulroney: —and I realize the NDP seems to choose to trivialize this very important issue—

Ms. Jewett: Don't be silly.

Mr. Mulroney: —that is so debilitating of our families and the young people of Canada. We began intensive consultations with all of the police authorities throughout the country, with international authorities, with all agencies of the federal Government and with leading groups across the country. We will be introducing a policy which reflects our determination to be helpful to the people in the families of Canada in ridding the country of this scourge for all of us.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FERRIES

NEWFOUNDLAND-NOVA SCOTIA—CANCELLATION OF NIGHT FERRY

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, three days ago, on Saturday, CN Marine, a branch of Transport Canada, announced the cancellation of the night ferry crossing from Newfoundland to Nova Scotia. For the first time since Confederation, and for this entire month, it will take three days from the time one gets off the bus at Port aux Basques until one gets on the train at North Sydney. I ask the Minister of Transport what he has done about this. He was informed of it on Friday. Has he been too busy boasting about his big Polar 8 that he claims will run over the Americans if they get in the way? Has he had a chance to run over his own Department, and CN Marine which is responsible for this schedule change?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is living in the past. There is no CN Marine. That company is now known as Marine Atlantic.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: The Hon. Member has sown confusion throughout Newfoundland and Labrador on this matter. What happened is this. The Sir Robert Bond, which is on the crossing now, is unable to do very well in ice and has had considerable delays. Thus a decision was made to carry passengers only on the Cariboo. The Cariboo is doing very well in ice. There is early ice this year. In fact, it is two weeks early. The hon. gentleman would not understand that, I suppose.

What happened was that there had to be some changes because the Sir Robert Bond was doing better than it had been scheduled to do so the lay-offs were cancelled. The Atlantic Freighter was brought on and 18 more people were hired. The result is that six more people are employed today—

Mr. Broadbent: Six?

Mr. Crosbie: —12 more employees are employed today than were employed last week. The hon. gentleman is completely wrong. He has cooked up confusion.

With respect to what I propose to do with Marine Atlantic, if it cannot keep this situation clarified for the Hon. Member I will make them tingly.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I know that all Hon. Members are anxiously awaiting the conclusion of this difficult exchange. The Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate.

ICE CONDITIONS—CANADIAN SOVEREIGNTY

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, ice-bound Canadians are wondering now, after listening to the Minister, whether it is worth it to have to construct the world's largest ice-breaker to make up for the incompetence of the Government to protect our sovereignty. Does the Minister of Transport not agree that what we do need are more ice-breakers to break the ice, to end the isolation of tens of thousands of Canadians at this time of the year and not just one big daddy up north? Send up the Minister of Transport. He has enough hot air to melt the entire Arctic.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I cannot be expected to match a geyser like that. Too many bakers spoil the broth.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: The new Polar 8 is a new super world-class ice-breaker. In addition to the construction of the Polar 8 to establish our sovereignty even more firmly in the Arctic—which nobody else had done anything about in the last 20 years—we have established baselines around the outer perimeter. We have enhanced military surveillance. There are more over-flights and there is increased naval activity. The Secretary of State for External Affairs is mano a mano with the United States. We introduced the new Canadian Laws

Offshore Application Act last April, which I hope the House will pass soon to show that it is backing us up.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FISHERIES

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET REPRESENTATIVES OF STAR-KIST PLANT WORKERS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. This week representatives of fisheries workers from across Canada are in Ottawa. They want to meet with the Minister. Will he commit himself now to meet with these representatives? In particular, will he commit himself to meet with representatives of the Star-Kist plant and of the community of St. Stephen, New Brunswick, where 400 workers are unemployed and have no prospects? Will the Minister meet with these people?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member need not have asked that question in the House. He might have asked my staff to determine that, of course, we are very concerned with respect to the situation of those workers from the Star-Kist plant who will be arriving in Ottawa tomorrow. I certainly do intend to meet them.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that they will be glad to meet with the Minister and have an important agenda.

HERRING-ROE FISHERY—LEASING OF LICENCES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is this. When the Minister has known for four years about the problems and hardships caused by double-licensing and leasing of licences in the herring-roe fishery in British Columbia why has he not acted already? Will he commit himself to stop this unjust practice immediately?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, again, the Hon. Member should know, or could have found out from my office, that I did meet with representatives of the United Fishermen & Allied Workers' Union on Sunday to hear their concerns about this matter which affects some 400 fishermen. These fishermen are particularly anxious to fish this year because of the much larger quotas and the higher prices being paid for herring-roe. However, this represents only one-tenth of the people who will be engaged in that fishery. The Herring Industry Advisory Board did not recommend changes for this year. The fishery is already under way and I have promised changes for next year.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

USE OF LOW-SULPHUR WESTERN COAL BY ONTARIO HYDRO

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday the Deputy Prime Minister met with Premier Peterson to discuss the use of low-sulphur western coal to cut acid rain emissions in Ontario. Will the Deputy Prime Minister advise the House if the Premier is now prepared to order the provincial Crown corporation, Ontario Hydro, to cut acid rain emissions immediately in the same way that he would be prepared to do with private industry?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would like to advise my hon. colleague that I did have a very productive meeting with the Premier yesterday. He clearly expressed the desire, along with the co-operation of the federal Government and the producing provinces, to increase the utilization of western coal in Ontario.

He assured me that for additional capacity requirements that would be forthcoming after 1990 coal would be considered as a viable feedstock for the generation of future electricity. To that end, we agreed to establish a committee composed of himself, myself, and representatives of the producing provinces, the Premiers of the producing provinces, in an effort to facilitate and to encourage its utilization in a combined, co-ordinated, and co-operative fashion. I think this is an excellent example of federal-provincial co-operation that will assist in cleaning up the environment and provide tremendous spinoff benefits both in Ontario and in western Canada.

SIZE OF FEDERAL FUNDING

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. I wish to thank the Minister for taking the opportunity yesterday to meet with members of the United Mine Workers of America to discuss the deplorable unemployment situation in Cape Breton. The Minister will know that they are operating without a collective agreement. Negotiations have come to a halt. Four hundred and eighty jobs are in the process of being terminated. Yesterday we learned that $40 million had been slashed from the capital expenditure program of the Cape Breton Development Corporation. Will the Minister explain the fairness of this particular action, and what he is prepared to do to rectify the situation for one of Nova Scotia's most important resource industries?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I should like to correct the statements of my colleague. First, there is no cut-back in the regional industrial expansion estimates, indeed the increase is close to 4 per cent, which goes to show that the Government is aware of regional disparities.

Second, Mr. Speaker, funds had been set aside last year for certain programs related to Devco operations, mainly with respect to projected losses of about $18 million and to new capital expenditures of about $33 million. Since these funds were not used, they no longer appear in this year's estimates. That, Mr. Speaker, is an example of sound management and good administration.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

UTILIZATION OF NOVA SCOTIA AND NEW BRUNSWICK COAL

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Several months ago I asked the Deputy Prime Minister a question with regard to the utilization of coal from eastern Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. At that time the Deputy Prime Minister took it as an advisement. Will the Deputy Prime Minister explain to the House what discussions he has had with the Premier of Nova Scotia and the Premier of New Brunswick with regard to the utilization of coal from that region in the Province of Ontario? Are we in Atlantic Canada going to receive the same treatment as you are trying to bestow upon the people of western Canada?

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member. In the last few days there has been a tendency to use the word "you". I know it is involuntary and Hon. Members do not mean to do it, but I would ask that Hon. Members put their questions through the Chair.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Hon. Member knows that at the present time Ontario Hydro is purchasing something in the order of three million tonnes of coal from western Canada. Ontario Hydro is an ongoing customer. As a matter of fact, in discussions yesterday with the Premier, we did raise the prospect of using coal from other sources. It will certainly be a matter for consideration.

I should indicate to the Hon. Member that with the nuclear generating facilities that are currently coming on stream, the additional capacity will not be required until some time after 1990. It is the considered view of Ontario Hydro and of the Government of Ontario that coal can be utilized as a feed stock for the generation of future electricity as their demands increase. I can only indicate to the Hon. Member that yes, the matter was raised, and I would also be glad to discuss it with the Premiers of the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Vancouver East, one question, please.

CHILD CARE

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL FUNDING

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Government Estimates show that there is a $301 million reserve fund in the social development envelope. Will the Prime Minister designate these funds now for the first stage of the development of a comprehensive, flexible, affordable system of quality child care? Will he make his promises real with federal bucks for kids?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I indicated that the Government was awaiting the report of the parliamentary task force in regard to child care. I have also indicated on past occasions that the commitment of the Government, and I hope Parliament, to the establishment of a national comprehensive child care program is real. The Government of Canada shall, even in difficult circumstances, find the resources necessary to do our share in making a child care program a national reality. If we believe in economic equality for women, we must believe in this type of proposal, and this Government shall support it.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

GRAIN TRANSPORTATION AND HANDLING COSTS

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. I wish to ask him if he will give consideration to advising individual farm producers, at the time of the receipt of their final payment, of the costs that were deducted from world price, such as demurrage charges, transportation, handling, and port charges, so that they, on an individual basis will be able to help rationalize the transportation and handling system to lead toward a more orderly manner in which we can market grain in the tough competition of the international market?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, this issue has been raised many times in the past. The Hon. Member has taken a specific interest in it. Everybody should have as much information as possible on which to base decisions. We will certainly look with interest at that suggestion, as far as information going out from the Canadian Wheat Board is concerned. It would also be useful to encourage grain companies to put that information on cash tickets, so that producers can then have a look at it. I thank the Hon. Member for his suggestion. We will look into it, and see what can be done in a year from now when the final payment is made.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Algoma, one question, please.

AUDIT OF FARM MACHINERY TRANSACTIONS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. In his absence, I will direct it to the Deputy Prime Minister. At a time when western farmers are facing the worst crop and grain prices since the 1930s, why is the Government revaluing the regular commercial transactions on farm machinery that were made by thousands of farmers in Manitoba and Saskatchewan in 1983 and 1984? Why has the Government embarked on this witch-hunt or harassment of farmers?

Can the Deputy Prime Minister tell us if the 403 extra investigators and auditors outlined in the Estimates yesterday will be used to go through the income tax files of thousands of Canadian farmers?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I have seldom heard a question from a member whom I respect so highly filled with so many fallacies and inaccuracies. First, it is not a witch-hunt that the Hon. Member refers to. It is a very orderly and necessary audit that is being done in many sectors across the country only to correct the more blatant abuses of capital cost allowance and investment tax credit utilization. For the most part, the extra investigators to which my friend refers are used to provide services for taxpayers, not to audit. For example, they assist with services such as tracking down maintenance evaders, and things of that nature. Again, Revenue Canada is being miscast in a role that was never intended.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt, one short question, please.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

LOW LEVEL FLIGHTS BY UNITED STATES AIR FORCE PLANES OVER NORTHERN ONTARIO

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Defence. Last week the United States Air Force announced that high speed and low level B-52 jet bombers will start flying in a corridor between Sault Ste. Marie and North Bay. Will the Minister tell the House why an environmental impact study was not undertaken before permission was given by the Government for these low-level flights to take place?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Because it is simply the reactivation of a route which has been in place for some 14 years.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Mackenzie with the last question.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

INTEREST RATE LEVELS

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, this pertinent question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. My constituents and I wish to know what is happening in the Farm Credit Corporation regarding reducing interest rates. What contingency plans are in place to help save young farmers, so that the Government does not end up owning all the land?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): The Minister of Agriculture has just stepped out. I will certainly take the Hon. Member's question as notice and see that he is provided with an adequate answer from the Minister.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approve in general the budgetary policy of the Government, and the amendment of Mr. Garneau (p. 3594).

Mr. Speaker: When the House took recess at one o'clock, the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston) had the floor.

[English]

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this occasion to speak in the Budget debate. This is the first opportunity that I have had since the Minister delivered his quite extraordinary Budget. My reaction to the Budget was one of surprise. Perhaps one could even say astonishment or as we say in Quebec—

—I was speechless when I read the document.

• (1510)

[English]

I asked myself in the lock-up which preceded the delivery of the Budget why we needed to be locked up all afternoon to look at such a skimpy proposal. Why a Budget or, more important, why call the document delivered by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) a Budget?

[Translation]

Granted, they had to introduce a few taxes, and I will have a word to say about that this afternoon. He said it was necessary to reduce his deficit. I will have a word to say about that as well.

[English]

In a few moments I will come to the shameful exercise, how he attempted to get the deficit down. A simple statement by the Minister and a tabling of a Notice of Ways and Means in the House would have been sufficient. It would have been the appropriate thing to do, given the kinds of proposals the Minister brought to us that evening a week and a half ago.

Apart from the rhetoric in the document, which I think can be best described as self-congratulatory claptrap, what has the exercise we witnessed accomplished and what was it intended to accomplish? Was it simply to tell us once again, for the third time, that we would have tax reform in the future? Was that the purpose of the exercise? I will also have a word to say about tax reform.

I would admit—and I think most Hon. Members would agree—that the Minister by and large has enjoyed a reputation as a straightshooter, or perhaps as one of a few stars in a galaxy of black holes, or perhaps as a beacon of hope shining across a sea of incompetence if not corruption. I fear that with the Budget the Minister has set about to destroy that reputation by engaging in fiscal flimflam at best. He has allowed himself to be used as a decoy, probably to draw fire away from the flock of wild turkeys which surrounds him on the government benches.

Why has the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) done this to the Minister of Finance? Why has the Minister of Finance permitted this to be done to himself? I suspect that some public relations genius—perhaps Dalton Camp or probably Dalton Camp—saw a Budget, even a Budget totally devoid of substance, as a good diversionary tactic to get the Opposition and the media off the problems of scandals, incompetence, and corruption which have plagued the Government. In fact, they have hobbled the Government and have brought the Government to the lowest level of public support or public esteem since Gallup began taking polls on popular support in 1942. Indeed that is a deserving mark of historic achievement.

[Translation]

But what a public relations disaster, Mr. Speaker. What is particularly clear from the speech by my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), who responded to the Minister's Budget speech, is the Government's and the Minister's record on the economy and especially on taxation. That is crystal clear.

[English]

Not only did the Minister act as a decoy, as I suggested, but he has quite properly added himself to that flock of turkeys and has become a prime target, and deservedly so. He is guilty of complicity in this public relations exercise scheme because he in fact did not have a bona fide Budget to deliver.

The Government simply rolled out the Minister to the centre of the national stage. He is their own Mr. Clean. They regard him as a white knight, a Sir Galahad, but he had nothing with which to defend himself. He had no Budget. He had no real proposals. His attire was skimpy and resembled more that of Lady Godiva than that of Sir Galahad. Like her, he has been totally exposed in the course of this exercise. For example, his budget documents show us in stark terms the failures of his policies to date.

To recall a few highlights of this record, Mr. Speaker, I suggest we look at the direct taxes paid by Canadian taxpayers since this Government came to power and since the present Minister of Finance was appointed.

I am referring, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister's own "Budget papers". On page 21, we find table 3.6, "Budgetary Revenue Projections". We see that between 1984-85 and 1987-88, there was an increase of $14 billion in personal income tax collected under the Income Tax Act, an increase of 48 per cent. Shame! If we look at sales and excise taxes and duties, which are also paid by Canadians, by individuals, by consumers and their families, all these taxes have increased from $14 billion to $22 billion, which means $7.5 billion more or an increase of 53 per cent.

However, despite these increases, this year's deficit, that is, the deficit for 1986-87, will be the same as at the end of 1983-84. What a record. I may remind you, Mr. Speaker, that 1983-84 was the last full year under this country's previous Liberal administration.

[English]

Next year the Minister can do no better. He is forecasting a deficit of $29.3 billion which is only $200 million less than he forecast last year for the current year. So much for the Minister's projections! More important—and this is where I say the Minister has engaged in fiscal flimflam or in a shell game—he has achieved this reduction in a manner which, in my judgment, leaves his credibility in tatters. The single major revenue initiative found in the Budget is to require employers to remit twice monthly instead of once monthly the taxes which are held from employees.

The Minister calls this, accelerated remittances of source deductions. For me it is a transparent example of very creative bookkeeping. It creates a false impression and is intended to create a false indication of the true deficit position.

Let me explain, Mr. Speaker. This additional burden which is being imposed upon Canadian employers has the effect, in terms of the deficit, of moving one payroll date back from April of 1988 to March of 1988. That is estimated to bring an additional $1.2 billion into the 1987-1988 year. Of course, it removes $1.2 billion from the immediate following months in the 1988-1989 year. What kind of image of sound financial management does that project, Mr. Speaker? Does the Minister seriously think that borrowing from Paul in 1988-89 to pay Peter in 1987-88 fools anyone? Frankly, I regard it as an irresponsible manipulation of the Government's cash flows to meet a deficit objective. Imposing that additional paper burden, additional hardship and additional loss of interest on small Canadian businesses, municipalities and employers right across the country simply to meet an artificially established deficit objective is irresponsible, and I say shame! I expected much more from this Minister of Finance than that kind of fancy bookkeeping footwork. If he puts the amount where it should be, without this change and accelerated cash flow in 1988-89, the deficit becomes $30.5 billion.

I never thought that we would have to scrutinize the Minister's actions on issues of this kind. Previously I must admit I did see the Minister as a tinkerer in many respects. Now he has become "Wilson the accelerator". How far will he carry that acceleration, Mr. Speaker? Now that he has discovered this magic recipe to accelerate payments, can we count on him to limit the damage or are we going to find more distortions in future budgets? I hope we can count on the Minister to limit the distortion to this one exercise. Even then I say it is totally improper.

The Minister of Finance may have discovered a recipe and in future demand prepayment of future years taxes. Who knows? I understand that that practice has been followed in some other countries. Prepaying taxes for future years would quickly reduce the deficit but give a totally false perception and create a false reality in the country's financial condition.

I know that you suffered through the Budget speech yourself, Mr. Speaker. You know that it devoted a great deal of time to the issue of tax reform and what wonderful tax reform is planned. As I said, this is the third time we have been told about tax reform, which we have yet to see.

[Translation]

What is interesting, however, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that all his initiatives as Minister of Finance to this date and the tax increases which I have just mentioned are in direct conflict with the objective of the tax reform he is now proposing. Such a reform would be in conflict with the tax measures he has taken to date, including the most substantial increase of individual taxes in Canadian history. Now, the Minister wants to initiate a tax reform to correct his own mistakes. In his paper, he points out that the key to tax reform is to reduce the tax rate of individual taxpayers, even though he has just increased individual taxes for all Canadians.

[English]

Having created this extraordinary burden, this mess in terms of the fiscal system, not the least of which was the capital gains tax exemption which he stubbornly refuses to recognize is an error and should correct, he now seeks the way out of this dilemma through tax reform. This would be humorous I suppose if it were not so serious for Canadians.

Let me return to my point. There is no Budget here. There is no fiscal plan. How can one have a Budget in this country without a fiscal plan? It was the Royal Commission on Financial Management and Accountability, the so-called Lambert Commission report, that told Government that one should have a five-year fiscal plan. To give the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) credit, when he was Minister of Finance briefly, rightfully, back in 1979, one good thing he did was to include a five-year fiscal plan which was continued by the successive Liberal Government. This Government has refused to deliver a proper fiscal plan since it has been in office. It has delivered no fiscal plan at all, just simply projections for the next year. The public and parliamentarians are entitled to know what the fiscal plan is that the Government has in its own possession in the Department of Finance. We know that the information exists. We are entitled to see it and the Government should be obliged to give it to us.

If the Minister is not going to produce a fiscal plan, and if there is no more than this self congratulatory clap-trap that I have described, and there is no more than the imposition of a few taxes, again I say why a Budget? He did remove the ill-conceived taxes on Christmas trees.

Mrs. Finestone: And books.

Mr. Johnston: You will recall the tax we placed on ourselves, Mr. Speaker, to get back at the Americans for the tax they imposed on shakes and shingles. We told the Minister at the time that it was fiscal suicide by self-immolation. He did not agree. Finally the Minister has accepted our advice and has wisely withdrawn that tax. He did not do it with humility. He said the circumstances had changed. Of course, the circumstances have not changed at all and the other tax is still in place. He simply recognized the stupidity of his own actions and those of his Government, but he incorporated it in his speech as if it were some quite remarkable achievement that had been brought about by the imposition of those taxes in the first instance.

Then the Minister puts a tax on airline tickets, Mr. Speaker, which hurts the regions of this country. The Minister tells us that that particular tax was recommended by his colleague, the Minister of Transport, which I thought was indeed remarkable. Nonetheless, again we have this marked insensitivity to the distant regions of Canada.

In that same vein, the Minister has imposed a fuel tax which once again, apart from the hardship on individuals and the increased tax at the pump, is a tax on distance. It hurts tourism, trucking and it hurts the consumer, especially the consumers in the regions. The tax has to be passed on. It has been passed on before and it will be passed on again. This is a direct tax on distance, a direct slap, as I say, at the regions.

In an address last fall in Toronto I noted the Minister stated that one of the difficulties in trying to match U.S. tax rates in Canada would be due to the higher cost in our economy as a result of geography and demographics. If he believed that, why would he simply turn around and again add to those costs in his Budget by putting a tax on transportation fuel?

We do need a Budget. We now need a real Budget, not this public relations exercise, not this self-congratulatory statement with taxes that are not neutral but harmful. We need a Budget that deals with the problems facing the country:

the environment, employment, the regions, senior citizens, women, housing, research and development, education, small businesses, transport and tourism. All those issues are forgotten in the budget recently tabled in this House.

[English]

Where is it? Where are the solutions to these problems? When will we see them? After this exercise that, as I say, we suffered through with great anticipation, and the media from all over the country gathered in Ottawa to listen to the great pronouncements from our Minister of Finance, I am not convinced that this Minister can deliver the goods with respect to this list of problems which I raised, this list of concerns which haunt Canadians in every walk of life from coast to coast, in every region, hamlet and village. These are the real problems. When is the Minister going to address them?

[Translation]

When is the Minister going to deliver? When will he address the real problems of Canadians? When will he give us something concrete about the tax reform, which is supposed to improve our tax system, to provide equity, to stimulate economic development, to encourage the regions and to protect the neediest members of our society? When are we going to have this tax reform?

Mr. Speaker, we in the Opposition are very disappointed at the performance of this minister. He has really ruined his reputation with his little game. He has played a dirty trick on us.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments. Debate. The Hon. Member for Bonavista—Trinity—Conception (Mr. Johnson).

[English]

Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Bonavista—Trinity—Conception.

Mr. Morrissey Johnson (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure to take part in this debate and support the third Budget my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), has produced. It is a Budget which clearly demonstrates that the Government has successfully met the challenge of maintaining a sound and steady management of both the fiscal and economic situation of Canada since assuming office two and a half years ago this week.

Last week at home in my riding of Bonavista—Trinity—Conception most of the constituents I met expressed to me their satisfaction with the way the economy has been managed. While they are of course unhappy that unemployment is not lower, as am I, the vast majority are pleased with the progress the Government is making. They know that better economic performance is the key to providing more help to the disadvantaged regions of the country. They know that the better economic performance since September, 1984, has allowed this Government to increase assistance to those in need.

Before reviewing the many actions this Government has taken to assist disadvantaged Canadians wherever they live, I would like to reflect for a minute on the dismal situation which existed before we assumed office. At that time the need for economic renewal was pressing. Some 15 straight years of budget deficits had swollen the national debt to $200 billion, a burden of almost $23,000 on every Canadian family. The national unemployment rate was almost 12 per cent and interest rates were far too high, discouraging both investment and consumer confidence. Finally, after almost 12 years of Liberal mismanagement the people of this country said they had had enough and overwhelmingly elected a responsible Government to administer their hard-earned tax dollars in a responsible manner.

In November, 1984, this Government set out its philosophy of responsible economic management in an agenda for economic renewal. Restoring fiscal responsibility was the starting point. We set out to get our fiscal House in order by reducing the deficit and slowing the growth of the national debt. This Government has restrained spending and managed its affairs more efficiently than our Liberal predecessors could have imagined, let alone accomplished. However, the Government's program for economic renewal has meant much more. We have introduced policies and programs which provide a better framework for growth and job creation, and which are less of an obstacle to change and innovation. They contribute as well to improving Canada's competitive position world-wide.

We have adopted policies which help small business and foster entrepreneurship and risk-taking. Yet for the new policies to succeed we knew they had to be fair and consistent with the basic sense of compassion, tolerance and justice which are characteristic of Canadians. That was the challenge and here are just some of the achievements.

Canada has enjoyed real economic growth averaging about 3.5 per cent during the last two and a half years. This is second only to Japan among the major industrial countries and it surpasses the growth of the U.S. Short-term interest rates are at their lowest level in nearly a decade and it is interesting to note that some articles appearing in the newspapers are saying this Government is on the right track.

Too bad that the Hon. Member who just spoke did not read some of those statements in today's paper. He would have seen that mortgage rates are down to their lowest level in the past 10 years. As a result, housing starts are up to an eight-year high. In my own Province of Newfoundland, the value of building permits in 1985 alone was 19.5 per cent higher. That represents an additional $30 million in construction activity. In the first 10 months of 1986, the value of building permits increased by another 13.5 per cent, representing an additional $18 million in construction activity. Nationally, inflation has been lowered to around the 4 per cent range. In Newfoundland, the inflation rate of 2.9 per cent is below even the national average. Nationally, the unemployment rate has dropped by two percentage points, and in Newfoundland it has fallen by 4.6 percentage points since this Government's election, from 23.8 per cent to 19.2 per cent. As I said at the beginning of my remarks, I am not very happy that the unemployment rate remains so high in my province but at least it has not increased by 9.9 percentage points as it did between February, 1980 and September, 1984, when the Liberals were last in office.

Finally, I would like to mention the important progress we have made in reducing the deficit. When this Government took office it inherited a deficit of $38.3 billion. Last year the deficit fell to $34.4 billion. This year we will further reduce the deficit to $32 billion. In our third year the deficit will be down to $29.3 billion. As some of my colleagues who spoke before me stated, this is the first time in 30 years that the deficit has declined for three consecutive years. I apologize to the members in the Opposition because I know that it pains them to hear this good news.

Clearly the Government's economic renewal program is working. It is delivering more growth, more jobs and more opportunity for Canadians now. The outlook for 1987 is proof of that. Canada's employment growth is expected again to beat all other major industrial countries. Canada should enjoy real output growth of 2.8 per cent, making this economic upturn the second longest of the post-war period. Inflation is projected to average less than 4 per cent.

Earlier I referred to the measures the Government has taken to assist disadvantaged Canadians. The Opposition would like the low income people of the country to believe that the Government does not care about their needs. Such individuals know that this is clearly not the case for they are benefiting from the Government's actions including the prepayment of the child tax credit of $454 per child. One million low-income people received this prepayment in November, 1986. Four million low-income families and individuals are now receiving the benefit of a refundable sales tax credit of up to $50 per adult and $25 per child. The child tax credit has been increased by 36.5 per cent or $140 per child, up from $384 in 1985 to $524 in 1987. The Government extended the spouses' allowance. Now 169,000 widows aged 60 to 64 who are in need receive this assistance. The Government extended the tax deduction for disability for 185,000 people.

These and other measures by the Government to assist low-income Canadians will be complemented and strengthened when our tax reform proposals are introduced in the spring. The Government is committed to increasing the number of low-income Canadians who do not pay personal income taxes. The Government is committed to making the tax system fairer and simpler for the benefit of average Canadians. In other words, more Canadians will pay less tax.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment specifically on the Government's economic record as it relates to my Province of Newfoundland. As I said at the outset, Newfoundlanders are pleased with the federal Government's performance in controlling federal spending, reducing interest rates, and continuing good financial management. The Government has already taken a number of steps to help address the concerns of my province. The historic Atlantic Accord treats Newfoundland as an equal partner in offshore development and creates the $300 million Canada-Newfoundland Development Fund. I am pleased that Bill C-6, an Act to implement the Canada-Newfoundland Atlantic Accord, passed third reading yesterday.

The Government has signed multimillion dollar economic and regional development agreements with Newfoundland, including $112.5 million for highways, $38.5 million for the pulp and paper industry, and $33.6 million for forestry resource development. For Atlantic Canada as a whole there is up to $1 billion in loan guarantees and low interest rates for certain investments in the region through the Atlantic Enterprise Program. Companies in Newfoundland are taking advantage of this program. On Friday I had the opportunity to announce benefits which two companies in my own riding will be receiving from this program.

In addition, $600 million in federal procurement provided to the region through the Atlantic Opportunities Program will also have a positive impact. For example, in my riding Terra Nova Shoes is, for the first time, now supplying footwear to the Department of National Defence. It is interesting to note that the 9 per cent federal sales tax on fuel used by fishermen which had previously been removed has not been reinstated.

All these initiatives and others are part of a continuing effort by the Government to increase assistance to Atlantic Canada. One of my colleagues in the Opposition says that the sales tax on fuel has increased by 1 per cent. I remind him that that 1 cent is not applicable because fishermen and loggers, as well as the farmers of the country, will receive a rebate of that 1 per cent which is an excise tax. I was talking about sales tax.

It is true that we have come a long way in two and a half years, but it is true as well that we have a long way to go. This Budget shows that our agenda for economic renewal is working and will continue to work for the benefit of all Canadians.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak immediately after a member of the Conservative Party who spent a good portion of his time suggesting that the new Budget will show lower income people how well off they are. In fact, the Fraser Institute, a very conservative-thinking institute, has suggested that the only two areas which managed to escape taxes are large corporations and the very rich. It looks as though the aim of this Budget is to increase taxes in the lower and middle-income areas without increasing taxes in the other areas. Higher income individuals and corporation taxes increased only very slightly. For instance, a couple with two children earning $15,000 paid only $407 in federal income taxes in 1985. In 1986-87 they will pay $770 in taxes. That is a 90 per cent increase. The taxes of those earning $20,000 was increased from $1,200 to $1,700, a 35 per cent increase. The federal income taxes of those earning $42,000 rose to $6,102, an increase of 32 per cent or $1,487. Those figures are an indication of how the Budget will affect lower income earners.

Let us look at higher income earners. The taxes of a couple earning $100,000 will only increase by $319 compared with the couple earning $15,000 whose taxes will increase from $407 to $770. The couple earning $100,000 will have only 2 per cent increase compared to the 90 per cent increase experienced by the couple earning $15,000. In fact, as a result of this Budget, taxes went down approximately 5 per cent for those earning $80,000, and decreased by 1 per cent for those earning $50,000. The Hon. Member who attempted to explain whose taxes were increasing has not read the Budget thoroughly to determine the levels of taxation. Those earning only $7,000, which is below the poverty level, face an increase of 148 per cent, which is the largest increase in the Budget. This Budget is not intended to help lower income Canadians but to help the very rich and the big corporations.

The Budget is not intended to eliminate the deficit but forms the centre piece in preparation for tax reform. While this Budget represents a monstrous tax grab of approximately $1 billion from people in the lower income areas of Canada, it is only the centre-piece on which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Government intend to implement tax reform in the next year or two.

Let us examine what has been happening with our tax system in the last two and a half years. The Government has increased taxes on lower income people through direct income tax as well as indirect taxes through increased excise sales tax on almost every item. In fact, the Minister of Finance proudly stands up to say that he will broaden the base of taxes on goods and services. Theoretically, the income tax base is as broad as it can be, but the Minister indicated that since it is unfair that 40 per cent of goods and services in this country are not taxed at all now, all goods and services will be taxed. Direct taxes on goods and services is regressive because those with low incomes will have to pay the same as those earning high incomes.

The tax structure in this country will impose very high taxes on the majority of middle class and lower income Canadians. The Government will introduce tax reform in which it will broaden the base by taxing goods and services while lowering income tax. Those who will be the most affected by tax reform that will increase in the tax on goods and services will be those who are living below the poverty line and earning less than $7,000 and do not pay any income tax.

Perhaps the Government hopes that just before the election Canadians will notice that their take-home pay is suddenly larger as a result of reduced income tax, but will not recognize that the total tax they have paid in the previous three years has risen by several hundred per cent.

The crisis in agriculture today has developed in the last number of years. However, it has been emphasized this year by the low commodity prices. There are two methods by which to increase the income of people who earn their living from resources which depend upon commodity prices. One is to increase the price of the commodity directly, and the other is to decrease the input cost of that item. The problem facing agriculture is that the sale of the commodity no longer covers the cost of production so that today even farmers who have no debts find themselves in a position where they can no longer make a profit.

While this situation was happening before the Government took office, in the last two and a half years that it has been in office it has not only been unable to increase the price of the commodity to help the situation, it has increased the input costs considerably. Today, inspections and government services which have been available to farmers for many years are no longer free. The Government has implemented a user-pay structure that is eroding the already small profits farmers have been making. The situation is such that there is now a story about the farmer who has won a million dollars in a lottery. When asked what he would do, he said that he would keep farming for a couple of years to get rid of the money. That is the situation facing farmers on the Prairies these days.

One of my neighbours told me that he has no debts but his net worth this spring will be $75,000 less than it was last year.

If this situation continues we will lose a whole generation of farmers. This Budget did not nothing to alleviate the problems farmers are facing. It did nothing to assist them to get over the hump. Therefore, more and more farmers can be expected to go under, either registering bankruptcy or being foreclosed in some way, or even walking off their farm and leaving what they have there. In fact, the Government, not necessarily in this Budget alone but over a period of time, has increased the burden the farmers must carry. For many farms to survive, the farmer or his wife must leave the farm to work in order to bring in some extra income to meet the costs of running the farm. This is becoming the norm for a larger and larger proportion of the farm population. In fact, more than 50 per cent of farms now have outside incomes which are the same as, or even more than, the farm income.

• (1600)

When this Government was elected back in 1984, it promised it would do something about those farmers who must get money from somewhere else in order to keep their farm operating. Section 31 of the Income Tax Act restricts the amount of outside income a farmer can use to keep his farm going. I know it is not right that a farmer should have to go and work at a job someone else could have, but in many cases that is the only way he can keep the farm going. The Government promised it would do something about Section 31 which allows the farmer to write off $1,000 against farm losses. A committee of this House unanimously recommended that that amount be raised to at least $10,000. The Government promised it would eliminate the limit entirely. Nothing was done. Therefore, farmers who are valiantly attempting to keep the farm going by working off the farm and using the money to pay their farm debts are being discriminated against by the Government.

Lately a number of farmers have had their income tax reviewed because at some time during the last 10 years they have purchased machinery and taken an investment tax credit at a level which the Government considers to be a little higher than they should have. If you had gone through one of these deals, Mr. Speaker, you would realize that what the farmers are doing is taking advantage of a tax law which is in place and which is legal. They turn in their old machinery, buy new machinery and receive a tax credit. They are now being blamed for making the best possible deal they could. It is not illegal. In fact, it is probably a very good Conservative philosophy. But these farmers are being questioned and many of them are being told they will have to repay some of the tax credits they have received over the years.

Tax reform seems to be the centre-piece of this Budget. The Government is increasing income tax and other taxes so that when the tax reform comes in, it will already be taking such a large portion of the incomes of middle and lower wage earners that they will be very happy to get some relief in that area.

There is nothing in the Estimates for the ice-breaker which was promised. There is nothing for the drug relief program which was also promised. There is no money identified in these Estimates, or in the Budget, for child care. There is a lot of money provided for advice from people like Dalton Camp but there is no money for the main promises the Government has made over the years. There is nothing in the Budget to attack unemployment and nothing for regional disparities. There is nothing to help out those areas which have a large unemployment problem. This Budget is for the very rich and for the large corporations. The poorer among the population are feeling the results of the Government's philosophy, which is all in preparation for some fanciful tax reform, and if the plan works, as it has in the past, the burden of taxes on the lower wage earners will only increase.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approve in general the budgetary policy of the Government; and the amendment of Mr. Garneau (page 3594).

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for my colleague and friend from Prince Albert. I wonder if the calculations he gave from the Budget with respect to the percentages paid by the poor and so-called rich take into consideration the alternate minimum tax. As I gathered from his speech, they do not. I can tell from my riding that that alternative minimum tax is having quite a dramatic effect on the number of dollars people are paying in 1986. Can he tell me whether his figures reflect that?

Second, is the Hon. Member arguing in favour of, for example, a combine which would originally sell for $90,000 being sold for $140,000 just so the farmer could get the larger tax credit? Of course, that in effect means that the rest of us as taxpayers end up having to pay a lot more. Surely that is the same type of deal as the practice of some of these huge companies which use the tax loopholes, which were originally an incentive, in an artificial way, which hurts the public's good.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, first, the figures I quoted on taxation were the figures which were presented in a brief by the Fraser Institute and also by the Federal Advisory Council on Welfare. Both groups are funded to some extent by Government. The brief shows the effect of federal income tax increases on those particular groups.

As far as the tax credit is concerned, many of the farmers who use those tax credits recognize them as wrong in some way. However, they were put there by the tax structure and, in most cases, the farmer accepted the deal which was given to him by the machine companies. I do not think it should have gone on. I am glad the Government is doing something about it. However, to go back 10 years and have these farmers repay these credits is creating a hardship which many of them will not be able to survive. It will force them into bankruptcy. What has happened in the farming community in the last few years is that many large farms have become over-extended to the extent that they have large debts which they are now unable to finance. If they are further burdened by the reclaiming of these large portions of tax, which are taxes not against them but which were within the law at that time, then they will be put into a situation which will not help the farming community as a whole in any way at all. I am suggesting not that we leave the tax credit but that we not go back and try to collect the tax from those farmers in the way that appears to be happening now.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge—Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that we now have the New Democratic Party on record vis-à-vis action against farmers who took advantage of the tax credit for the purchase of machinery. This is a very serious situation in western Canada. The fact of the matter is that some machine dealers and some farmers knew exactly what they were doing. They artificially elevated the price of machinery. I know of some examples in which prices were elevated from $90,000 to $140,000. They knew that this was wrong. It is questionable as to whether the law should be ignored when it comes time to enforcing it. At any rate, I am glad to see the NDP onside with respect to that particular question.

I wish to offer my congratulations to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on his third Budget. In terms of yearly Budgets he has clearly formalized the process. It has now been made easier for us by having the Estimates and the Budget at the same time. In this way we can more effectively question the Minister of Finance with respect to spending and how the money will be raised. It also makes the system much easier in terms of the response of provincial Governments. They now know what they will be receiving.

There are a number of reasons why I think this is a good Budget. There is no doubt that, in general, the economy has improved dramatically over the course of the tenure of the Minister of Finance. One of the reasons for this is that Canadians exercise their sovereignty and change their Governments. The first Budget of the Minister came out with an economic plan to cover the next four or five years. It gave a degree of certainty to business, something for which members of the business community asked. In this way they can make their plans, something that the first Budget allowed them to do. The two subsequent Budgets have kept on that track.

Some 677,000 new jobs have been created by Canadians as a result of increased confidence. This is a significant contribution to Canada and its well-being. It means that more revenue will be derived from income tax. It also means that fewer people will be on welfare and collecting unemployment insurance benefits. Unemployment has gone from well over 10 per cent to 9.7 per cent this year. It should be at 9 per cent by the end of this year. That is very significant. Everyone should be thankful that it is occurring. These are results which do not always occur just because of a change in federal Government or because of the actions of Government. They happen as a result of people having confidence in their country.

There is no doubt that the problem of regional disparity is serious. Even though I come from the west, I am thankful that Ontario is doing well. I am thankful that jobs are being created in Ontario. The Province is manufacturing jobs, which means that we can export more material. This helps our current account. It helps pay revenue into our tax coffers and it means less unemployment. I ask Hon. Members to imagine where the country would be if Ontario were having the same set-backs that we are having in the west. These setbacks are not as a result of government action but as a result of international commodity prices. If Ontario were in the same condition as the west, then we would see some two million to three million people unemployed. As a result, our social programs would not be worth the paper on which they are written. I think the nation should rejoice that Ontario is doing well rather than being envious.

In the late 1970s I could not understand the antipathy toward the west when we were doing so well. Young people from other parts of the country were moving into Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and B.C. To my mind that was good for the country. We were hot at that time. We were able to pay more money to help the disadvantaged regions. The same is true today. I can say without hesitation that I am thankful that Ontario is doing well. It bodes well for the country.

Interest rates are at their lowest in 10 years. That is very significant. It is not something which has occurred simply by happenstance or by accident. It is a major historic event for Canada. I lived through the period of time when interest rates were around 21 per cent under the Liberal-NDP coalition. Those interest rates killed people. Indeed, they are still killing people literally and figuratively today because of bad economic policy.

It costs us less to service the national debt when interest rates are down. The individual businessman who almost always takes out loans from his bank now has more money in his pocket because of lower interest rates. A family with a $50,000 mortgage now has $125 to $130 more in their pockets each month than they would have had if the Liberals and the NDP were in power. This gives families more disposable income. It gives them more freedom to decide how they will spend their money as opposed to a financial institution taking it away from them in terms of high interest rates or in terms of the Government of whatever political stripe deciding how to spend it for them.

I now wish to refer to a part of the Budget which has not received any coverage in the media which, in my judgment, is of historic significance. In terms of program expenditures and tax revenues the deficit is down by $1.3 billion. When we came to power, the deficit to service the national debt was huge, but program spending under the Liberals and the NDP reached the level of being several billion dollars more than tax revenue. Once we are into the next fiscal year we will see a surplus between our tax revenues and our program expenditures. Once we have balanced Budgets in terms of programs and revenues we can then truly work on the national debt and solve that problem because our economy is growing. The national debt will then make up a smaller and smaller percentage of the gross domestic product.

I would like to say a few words about the social dimensions of the Budget. I think one has to consider them as a package. There is no doubt that when we get to the end of the five years—and indeed we are at that level today—the people who are poor will have more cash in their pockets than if we had remained under the Liberal-NDP coalition. The tax credit and the refundable sales tax program in tandem, for example, mean that a single mother raising a child has something in the order of $44 more in her pocket as a result of the last Budget than she would have had under the status quo. That is a principle which I fully support.

I am prepared to argue with anyone at any public forum across the land with respect to this subject. The theory of the previous administration, and certainly the idea of the Liberals and the NDP, was that social programs should be available to everyone. Then, presumably because of a progressive tax system, the cost of them is taxed back from the rich. That has never been the case. The tax system never brought in 100 per cent of the funds needed to cover these programs. Therefore, whether we consider family allowances or old age security, we find the rich getting richer and richer because of the Liberal-NDP philosophy. Our philosophy is that those who are genuinely poor should get cash. Those of us who are earning beyond a certain threshold do not need to have family allowance or old age security, and, therefore, they ought not to be paid.

When there are limited dollars they should be applied where they are really needed. I must say that I stand embarrassed in the House when I hear Members of Parliament arguing for a continuation of the family allowance to be paid to those of us who are Members and receive a basic allowance of $57,000.

I want to deal with the argument that the NDP raised that magically somebody else out there is much richer than those of us who are Members of Parliament. The facts do not show that. I wish to read into the record data from the summary of income tax returns prepared by Statistics Canada. A person who earns $15,000 in total income is in the 55.42 percentage group. That means that only about 45 per cent of the people earn more than $15,000. I am talking about the people who file tax returns. A person who earns $25,000 is at the 78 per cent level. That means that fewer than 22 per cent of taxpayers earn more than $25,000. Many people in the country earn approximately $35,000. A person who earns $35,000 is at the 91.62 percentage level. Fewer than 9 per cent of taxpayers earn more than $35,000. A person who earns $50,000, which is a little less than MPs, is at the 98.18 percentage group of tax filers. Fewer than 2 per cent earn over $50,000.

The fact of the matter is that there is no mythical rich person that the NDP harp about whose taxes we can increase and thus reduce the deficit or for whom we can provide new programs. It has to come from you and me, Mr. Speaker.

The Government and the Minister of Finance deserve universal support and credit for the fact that now people have clear in their minds the relationship between program expenditures and taxes. When a new program is offered, we also offer a tax to the people. I hope that that is fixed in their mind so that when the Liberals and the NDP offer all types of rich programs they will also say to people that the tax rates will have to go up, ladies and gentlemen. Which do you choose? If the question were put to the people in that manner, they would often say that the program is not needed. We would prefer to keep the money in our own pockets and decide how to spend it rather than give it to the Government to decide.

In terms of agriculture from a western perspective, I have to say that never has a Government allocated so much money to one sector, and particularly that sector being western Canada. Spending in agriculture is up by some 62 per cent from the previous administration. That does not include the $1 billion expenditure that is coming up. The sugar-beet producers in my riding would have been forced out of the industry had there not been government help. They received $10 million or $11 million allocated under the tripartite stabilization program, and it saved that industry. I hope that we can come up with an even better program once the Canadian Tariff Board brings in its recommendations or the options that will be available. Contrast that with what was done by the previous administration when the sugar-beet industry in Ontario went down the tube. The previous administration was not there to help that industry when it was needed. But the Conservative Government was there when that industry in Manitoba and Alberta needed help.

In terms of farm fuel, when my relatives fill their fuel tank it now costs them $40. Under the Liberal administration it cost them $115 to fill their tank.

I have to say with some regret that the population in western Canada does not genuinely appreciate the significance of the removal of those taxes on the oil industry. The reason is that they feel that the taxes were put on improperly and that we have righted a wrong. We are not receiving the political credit, but even without it the population in western Canada has to appreciate the fact that when the Government puts on taxes it is very seldom, if ever, that they are removed. I am not aware of one tax that has been removed, including the temporary income tax that was put on to finance the First World War. It has never been removed.

The natural gas and liquids tax, the incremental oil revenue tax, the Canadian ownership special charge, the crude oil export charge, the petroleum compensation charge were all charges on the oil industry that were put on by the previous administration as its policy which it claimed was the National Energy Program. Of course, it was not that. It was the western oil and gas taxation program, which benefited the rest of the country. A national energy program may well be necessary. But if it involves taxes, it should be a tax that applies across the country on a Btu basis so that the energy would be picked up whether it is solar or electrical energy from Ontario or Quebec, or western petroleum energy. That would be a true national energy program, and it may well be needed in the future.

Let us not forget, and I hope that westerners will not forget, that the six or seven taxes were removed. That is a significant event. The difference in revenues is that under the Liberals approximately $5 billion from these taxes were withdrawn, and now it is under the general program where we all pay a few taxes, particularly on profits, amounting to about $500 million. That is a substantial benefit. The money is left in western Canada and is applied by these companies and people as they decide rather than as Ottawa decides.

I have a short comment to make with respect to gasoline. No matter what province it is, the provincial Governments are now pulling far more taxes out of gasoline than the federal Government. Therefore, the people of Ontario and Quebec who pay a lot of money for their gas should be looking to their provincial Liberal Governments that have imposed high gasoline taxes. There is nothing to say that those Liberal Governments could reduce the provincial gas tax. It is not the resource that is being taxed. It is a way of raising money from the people. If the Governments truly wish the people to have cheaper energy, they should remove those taxes.

Mr. Boudria: I feel a question coming on.

Mr. Thacker: My colleague opposite should realize that there is no tax in terms of energy in the Alberta Government, at least to this point. Who knows what future Budgets may hold. Because of the hard times that are now hitting, I suspect that there will have to be some tax increases. But it is a free choice by the provincial Governments whether or not to put a tax on gasoline. Rather than complaining about the federal Government and its role in taxing gasoline, they should be looking to reducing the provincial taxes.

Mr. MacLellan: I wish to direct a question to my hon. friend. He is right in assuming that many people in western Canada feel that the PGRT was a tax that should not have been imposed. By its removal, the Government was merely righting a wrong. I also listened to the list of taxes which the Hon. Member said had been removed. As I mentioned yesterday in Oral Question Period, that is old news. I do not think western Canadians are impressed by the actions of the Progressive Conservative Party in respect of the National Energy Program. They are very concerned about the energy situation in western Canada. They want to know whether the Progressive Conservative Government will honour its commitments. They want to know whether the Conservatives will honour their election promises or whether the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will honour his commitments and do something. To date nothing has been done, and they feel betrayed.

What purpose is served in trying to portray western Canadians as being concerned or in a state of euphoria over a reduction or a removal of those particular taxes? Western Canadians are concerned about what the federal Government will do to help their energy sector.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt in agreeing with my friend that we are not getting any political credit for having taken off those taxes. That is absolutely true, but frankly I think it is wrong.

Western Canadians should be thankful that they have been removed. Had they not changed Governments, those tax rates might have been juggled a bit but they would still be there. We have taken off those taxes. We have actually eliminated the statutes so that if a future Government of whatever stripe tried to put those taxes back on, it would have to submit fresh legislation. Of course in that event we from the West would fight it and let the bells ring, as we did when the last piece of legislation was brought in.

Within the fiscal restraints, which the Hon. Member realizes still involves a deficit of some $32 billion, and hopefully dropping to under $30 billion next year, there is a question about how much can be done. Is it the position of the Liberal Party that the Government should increase the deficit to give help to oil companies? Is it its view that we should put taxes on the entire Canadian population and then transfer money to the oil companies?

My own view is that for 50 years oil companies searched for and found oil. They produced it, sold it, paid higher than average salaries, and made a profit at $2.35 per barrel. That went on from the 1930s-1940s until recent times. Then in the late 1970s prices skyrocketed with OPEC prices up to $35 to $36 per barrel. Now it is down to $20 to $24 Canadian per barrel.

The fact of the matter is that the input costs of everyone, including the oil companies, were too high in that big bubble. They put up large office towers. There were expensive contracts, subcontracts, and farming agreements. They paid too much for their land. They had to rachet down, and they have done it. From here on there is no reason that the oil companies cannot do quite well. When they start to do well, so does the service industry.

If my friend was talking about the service industry, I agree that they are the people at the front lines. When the Liberals were in power, we said that the program would not hurt large multinational companies. We said that it would ultimately hurt tiny Canadian producers. Our prediction was absolutely correct, to the enth. We told people that they would suffer because an artificial market was being created by the previous administration. Unfortunately our predictions have come true.

The adjustment process is almost over. We have a base from which we can build into new prosperity in the future.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I have a few comments to make with regard to Liberal hypocrisy. I listened to them talk about the price of gas. What unmitigated gall. I can recall the 1980 election, lying to the Canadian people that they were going to give them cheap gas. Between 1980 and 1981 gas went up 60 cents per gallon under the Liberal-NDP coalition.

The Grits and the Socialists were not the least bit interested in getting cheap gas for Canadians. They allowed it to go up 60 cents per gallon. Look at them now; they ridicule us because it goes up a few cents. Gas is a lot less today than it was when the Liberals were in power.

I congratulate the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker) who talked about agricultural problems. I have listened to much rubbish and nonsense today in the debate about the Conservative Party having written off the west, that nothing is going into the west. I could spend two hours this afternoon reading off what is going into the west—programs beyond belief. They have the gall to say that nothing is going into the West. I do not understand why the media do not do a job on the Liberal Party.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If the Hon. Member made a motion to allow him to spend two hours reading the benefits bestowed by the present Government upon western Canada, I think Hon. Members on this side of the House would be agreeable.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) may continue with his question or comment.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Table Officers could assist in this motion. I would most certainly be agreeable to doing that. I might have been a little short on my time; perhaps I should have said three hours or four hours. If it could be arranged, I would be only too glad to accommodate the Liberal Party.

The Liberals mentioned that we were doing nothing for western farmers or for agriculture. I should like to give one example. CIDA is to spend $450 million on Canadian food products, according to a recent announcement in Winnipeg. The projects funded by CIDA include $310 million to the World Food Program for the next two years; $89 million worth of canola oil and technical assistance to India over the next five years; $13 million worth of canola oil as food aid to Pakistan this year; and $40 million over the next three years to support the activities of the Winnipeg based Canadian Foodgrains Bank, in addition to $8 million already donated this year. The list goes on and on.

Turning to more aid for agriculture in the West, a program of $1 billion of assistance is being formulated to supplement the cash flows of grain farmers affected by the drop in world wheat prices. Through a series of rebates, all federal sales and excise taxes have been removed from farm fuels. Farmers now receive a full exemption of up to $500,000 from capital gains realized on the sale of farm property. This is to assist them with retirement, but the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party are opposed to farmers having pensions. They have made that quite clear on numerous occasions.

Legislation has been passed to create farm debt review panels. The Government has made a record pay-out of $580 million under the Western Grain Stabilization Program. The Western Grain Stabilization Act has been amended to provide interim payments to farmers so that they can receive much needed cash in time for spring seeding. Grain farmers received $150 million in assistance for crop damage caused by drought and grasshoppers. Livestock producers received $48 million.

Interest rates are at their lowest level since 1979, saving farmers millions of dollars. We have doubled the maximum payments to farmers for storable crops under the Advance Payments for Crops Act. Farmers who have no choice but to leave the land will now be eligible for transition and training assistance under the new Rural Transition Program.

The Government has brought in commodity based mortgages and the shared risk mortgage program to assist western farmers. We have concluded new grain deals with the U.S.S.R., Brazil, and Egypt. The WGTA producers' freight rate has been maintained at the 1985-86 crop year level, saving farmers over $40 million. Action has been taken to reduce European beef imports into Canada by 55 per cent. A new long-term dairy policy has been announced. Sugar-beet producers will receive stabilization help as a result of a new federal-provincial-producer program.

I see that my time is up, Mr. Speaker. If it could be arranged for me to read this information into the record—and I will contact my office to get the rest of the material—I would say that three hours would cover about half of it.

• (1640)

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity this afternoon to participate in the debate on the Budget. After listening to speeches from some Tory Members across the way, particularly the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie), who disguised his questions to the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker) in such a manner that he was really delivering a speech instead of asking a question, one has to wonder whether the Member was talking about the same Budget that we are talking about. We are talking about the slimmest budgetary document ever introduced in this House in recent years. We are talking about a Budget that had very little in it, not only very little in terms of content but very little in terms of substance. I know that does not bother the Tories in this House. Not to have substance suits them just fine, as we all know. Is there anything so bad about having a Budget with nothing in it, some Tories have asked? Maybe there isn't, but then why bother presenting one? Why didn't the Minister just present a press release and a Ways and Means motion, I ask you, Mr. Speaker? Perhaps Tory Members who are wondering what is wrong with a Government without a vision would then know the answer. The mere fact that they ask suggests and tells me why the Government is in serious trouble.

Let us talk about the Government. Since it came to power in 1984, the public debt has risen from $175 billion to $300 billion. That is a $125 billion increase or a 40 per cent increase in three and a half years. Forty per cent of the debt of the country has been generated while the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has been in that position. Maybe Tory Members can make copies of my speech and give them to their constituents. Constituents have a right to know about this kind of activity. We should remember that the Government is talking to us about what it claims is lowering the deficit. I have some difficulty with the way Tories define lowering the deficit. First they take over and the deficit is supposed to be $34 billion. Immediately after that they say the deficit is supposed to be $38 billion, then they lower it to $36 billion and tell us they have saved some money. I have a hard time with that, and I am sure you do too, Mr. Speaker, being the non-partisan person that you are. The deficit was then lowered, according to the last Budget, to $29 billion. But the Government changed its mind and said no, it could not deliver on that. The deficit will be $32 billion. When the Tories could not meet that, they introduced the next Budget and said the deficit would be under $30 billion. We will have it at $29 billion some odd. Do you know how the Tories can achieve this, Mr. Speaker? They will do it in two ways. First, by selling off Crown corporations.

Mr. McDermid: Good.

Mr. Boudria: A Member opposite said good. Selling off the furniture to pay the rent is Tory economics. Let the record show that the Tories across said good to selling off the furniture to pay the rent. Second, the Tories are accelerating remittance procedures so that businesses and municipalities have to remit twice a month. I am sure the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) is concerned about this. I will repeat it slowly so that he will understand. Municipalities will now have to remit twice a month. This will cause major disruptions to municipalities and to large businesses. It will create one extra payment at the end of the year, which is the only reason that the Government will be able to get the deficit below the infamous $30 billion, something it has been striving for.

Let us talk about gas taxes. In the great constituency of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, having an automobile is not a luxury. I represent a rural riding, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

In a riding such as mine, which is about 100 kilometers long from east to west, a car is no luxury. As you know, Mr. Speaker, because you do have the opportunity to drive through my riding when coming to Ottawa—and by the way I would encourage you to make frequent stops in my riding and spend all the money you like. This is good for the local economy. However, for my constituents, owning a car in order to move around, to go to work, as some of my constituents who are present today and are following this debate would know, having a car is important for earning their livelihood. Indeed it is important for my electors because they cannot use any public transit system.

Mrs. Finestone: Why not?

[English]

Mr. Boudria: The Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) asks why. I know she knows the answer, but I will give the answer because the Tories probably do not understand and I am glad she asked me to explain. Obviously the Minister of Finance thinks the whole country is served by the TTC. He is wrong. There is no Toronto Transit Commission in the riding of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell. If you want to travel from one end of the riding to the other, you have to use your car. If you go to work, you have to use your car. Those people have the same right to live as does anybody else even though they do not have the TTC the way the Minister of Finance thinks we all do.

What has happened since the Conservatives have taken over? Since the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) have taken over, gas taxes have increased by 4.5 cents a litre. I say to the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown very slowly again, that is 18 cents per gallon.

Mr. McDermid: And how much tax came off?

Mr. Boudria: Eighteen cents a gallon may remind him of something. A preceding Tory Government was turfed out of office because of an 18 cents a gallon gas tax, and the same thing will happen to this Government.

Mr. McDermid: How much tax has been taken off?

Mr. Boudria: Let me talk to you about the regions of the country. Again the riding of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell has been well served by the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board.

[Translation]

The CIRB program, Mr. Speaker, was beneficial to my constituency; we were given grants to modernize our textile industry, our footwear industry, so it could better compete with foreign industries. What happened? As soon as this Conservative Government came to power, against all those promises they made during the election, bang!, Mr. Speaker, the grants were cancelled. The CIRB program was abolished by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). And I am certain Hon. Members from Quebec, Hon. Members from eastern Ontario and from areas where there is a textile industry know there was a lot of work to be done. I, for one, and my constituents were hoping that in their last Budget he would have something to say, that the Minister of Finance would say that yes, it was worthwhile trying to save the footwear industry, that yes, the textile industry should be maintained. It was not to be so. Instead, we had a very hollow document, as hollow as Tory policy.

I would now like to say a few words about poverty, Mr. Speaker. There are now four million Canadians living below the poverty line. There is no reference to those Canadians in the budget I have here. Not a single word. And this is unacceptable.

Mr. Lanthier: Not words, but action.

Mr. Boudria: Tonight, Mr. Speaker, when you and I, as well as the Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier), the Hon. Member for Ville-Émard, the Hon. Member for Côte-Saint-Paul and others across the way, go home tonight, we will think of the 8,000 Canadians who are homeless. None of these 8,000 canadians will be helped by this budget, something we all should remember, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

In the Budget there is what some Canadians now know as the kiddie tax. What is it? It is a tax on granola bars, of all things. Yes, tax the kids. That is Tory strategy.

Mr. McDermid: They are full of sugar.

Mr. Boudria: That is Tory policy. What did the Tories do with the tax? Did they put the money toward day care or toward helping single parent families? Absolutely not, Mr. Speaker. I will tell you in two minutes what the Government has done with the money.

Let us talk about the municipal infrastructure. I had the opportunity to represent the people of my constituency at all three levels of government in Canada. I started with a seat on municipal council, then I was elected to the provincial legislature, and now I have the honour and privilege of representing the people of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell in the House of Commons. Speaking of municipalities, they are very worried by the fact that their infrastructure has decayed. It is getting old and they need funds to upgrade. They made representations to the federal Government and the Minister of Finance asking for assistance to review and renew their infrastructure. What happened? They were hit with the accelerated remittance requirement which I referred to a while ago. The Federation of Canadian Municipalities issued a press release on February 19 entitled "Tax provisions hit municipalities. Door ajar on infrastructure". It says, very briefly, that the new procedures for revenue collection announced by the Minister of Finance will cost Canadian municipalities tens of millions of dollars every year. The municipalities asked the federal Government for help, and they got whammed across the head and had their pocket-books ripped off by the Tory Government. That was the help they got from the Tories.

• (1650)

Mr. Speaker, I would like to describe briefly those who will have to carry the tax burden. It is a fact that ever since the Progressive Conservative Party assumed power, Canadians, as individuals, have had to bear a greater share of the tax burden. Since 1984-85, according to the official estimates provided by this Government, personal income tax has increased by 52.5 per cent. I repeat, 52.5 per cent, while corporate income tax has decreased by 18.1 per cent. Here is the question I ask Hon. Members opposite: Is that Conservative justice? Is this the kind of justice Canadians from my riding of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell and other areas of the country have to expect? Well, I can assure you that this is not my idea of justice.

[English]

Much has been made recently about tax reform. During the last election campaign the Tories promised tax reform. In February of 1986, the Minister of Finance said there would be tax reform at an early date. In October of 1986, he said there would be tax reform in his next Budget. On January 30, 1987, he said, "Sorry, folks, I kind of goofed. I can't put it in the next Budget. We will have it in the spring." Then on February 18, the Minister brought down his Budget and said that we will have tax reform some time in the future.

Mrs. Finestone: Good thing you were not holding your breath.

Mr. Boudria: Yes, it is a good thing. That is a very astute remark on the part of the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone).

Let us talk a bit about research and development. Many of the constituents I represent, particularly those in the western end of the riding near Ottawa, are employed in research and development. Last fall I received numerous phone calls from people working at the National Research Council. They were very upset by the fact that they were about to lose their jobs. They saw the NRC budget drop from $520 million in 1984 to $398 million in 1986, a decrease of $122 million. As if that was not bad enough, on October 9, 1986, the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) cut another $20 million from the NRC's budget. How does that coincide with the promises made by the Conservative Party during the last election campaign? I know the Tories want to forget about the last election campaign and the promises they made to the people of Canada, but I am not going to allow them to forget. I have here the book of 338 Tory promises which I think I may have brought to your attention once or twice before. The book says very clearly on page 25 that the Government would double its R and D effort to 2.5 per cent of the Gross National Product in its first four years in office. That came from sources in the Conservative Party. As a matter of fact, it came from the book Pocket Politics 1984. Do you remember that little book? I am sure you would not have seen it, Mr. Speaker, because you are non-partisan, but you must have heard about it. It was a small book given to Conservative candidates. They used to stick it in their pockets. It contained instant answers and promises to make to the people of Canada, methods by which they could con the people of Canada into believing the Tories wanted to do good things for this country. We all know differently now and the public opinion polls tell us how different it is.

In any case, in that 46-page policy booklet there is a specific promise to increase research and development to 2.5 per cent of the Gross National Product. What has happened? There have been massive cut-backs in R and D. I tell you, the people of the National Capital Region, those employed in that field, people who have worked hard all their lives, are very upset with the Government. They are not bound to give them their support again.

If you think I am perhaps being unduly partisan, which I know of course is probably the furthest thing from your mind, I want you to know that I am not the only one who feels that way.

I would like to call your attention on an article published this morning in the Journal de Montréal and entitled: "Tories: Free fall". Allow me to read a few excerpts, Mr. Speaker:

> Brian Mulroney's Conservative party can only be sure of 10.7 per cent of decided votes in Quebec, before distribution of undecided votes, which does not make any sense or is hardly believable.

A reduction which is described as unbelievable, Mr. Speaker.

I note with much regret that my time is about over. I should like to deal for a few minutes with the issue of agriculture. As you certainly know, the main industry in the riding I represent is farming.

[English]

Just going back to the year 1985, the United States passed the United States Food Security Act, 1985, now commonly referred to as the U.S. Farm Bill. Under that Bill a system of $70 billion in subsidies was established. It was specifically designed to displace the markets of other countries, including Canada. The Government of Canada never raised a little finger to fight that. No lobbyist was ever hired. No one made representations, that I know of, except perhaps a few dedicated people at our embassy in Washington. Of course they were so badly outnumbered there was very little they could do. What we needed was a major effort on the part of the Government, but it has so badly kowtowed to the Americans after the Shamrock Summit of 1984 that of course it was completely powerless to do anything.

I would have a lot more to say about this Budget, but suffice it to say that the people of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell do not like it. I do not like it either. The public opinion polls tell me and everyone else that the Government had better clean up its act here and now, otherwise it will be turfed out of office.

• (1700)

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, after the remarks of the Hon. Member we have to get a number of facts and figures straightened out. Canadian people are entitled to an honest explanation of who is responsible for starting the uncontrolled spending and who is the king of deficits. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, the Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner), took over as Minister of Finance in 1972. At that time there was a surplus of $700 million in our current account. When he left in 1975 there was a deficit of almost $5 billion. The trend continued and we inherited a $38 billion deficit generated by the kings and queens of deficit, the Liberal Party.

If we had left everything that we inherited in place, if we had changed absolutely nothing, the debt for 1986 would have been $42 billion. We have reduced the debt by $10 billion, which is an excellent start. If the Liberal Party had been allowed to continue its policies, this country would have been turned into another Argentina or Mexico. That is the route we were taking.

The Hon. Member across the way mentioned something about Crown corporations selling furniture. I would like to give some statistics on the success story of de Havilland. Over the last decade the taxpayers of Canada watched $830 million of direct federal assistance poured into de Havilland to help keep it alive. Today, under the management of Boeing, sales and employment have increased. The Liberal and New Democratic Parties have said that if we sold de Havilland to Boeing it would collapse and everyone would lose their jobs. This has not happened. It has been the success story of the year. They have recent contracts which will increase employment by 250 jobs throughout Canada, 100 of which will be in Winnipeg. That should infuse about $11 million into the Canadian economy.

We know all about the Liberal Party's philosophy on Crown corporations. They did not even know how many Crown corporations they had when they were in power. They could not tell us the number of Crown corporations. After about six months of hammering away we finally got a count and found out that there were over 400 Crown corporations. What on earth did we need 400 Crown corporations for? The Liberal bureaucracy could set up a Crown corporation on its own. It had a free hand to do anything it wanted to. We are going to get rid of a lot more unnecessary Crown corporations. We are going to sell excess land and buildings. We are making an honest and concentrated effort to reduce the deficit, which would have reached $42 billion this year.

Those are a few facts which should be on the table with regard to who created this huge deficit. We did not create it. We inherited it and are dealing with it. Every federal Government Department is reducing expenditures and cutting out waste and mismanagement. For the first time in the history of the Auditor General's report he has commended us for making an honest and concentrated effort for eliminating waste and mismanagement within the Government. We will receive more glowing reports from the Auditor General.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, that was pretty hard to take. We heard a Tory saying that selling off Crown corporations is always the right thing after they sold Teleglobe for something like six times the earnings. Those people who pretend to be the friends of business and to know what they are doing in the business world sold a Crown corporation for five or six times its earnings. That is really a bit much to take. It is also difficult to listen to Tories pretending to be such able managers. They forget to tell us that the only two banks to have collapsed in the last half a century collapsed under the administration across the way with two Ministers of Finance looking on. They have no lessons to teach on this.

The Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine referred to the deficit king and talked about waste and mismanagement. I want to talk a little bit about waste and mismanagement too. I was not going to, but I have been provoked so I will have to. The Government instituted the $500,000 capital gains exemption, which will cost $800 million and will benefit the rich. It bailed out two banks at a cost of $1.6 billion. It gave $200 million to the Hongkong Bank of Canada and spent $41 million to create a monument in Port-Cartier which is euphemistically called the Port-Cartier prison. It spent $2.3 million on the so-called Stevens inquiry, $1 billion for the Gulf-Reichmann deal, and $2.7 million for new uniforms for the Armed Forces. Those are the uniforms that smell. Remember those, Mr. Speaker?

The Government is spending $10 million a year for three years for Mr. Reisman and free trade, which will probably lead us exactly nowhere. It spent $12 million on advertising to convince us that surrendering our sovereignty to the Americans is in our best interests. That is Tory politics. The Government has put $15.1 million in the Budget for cabinet Ministers' staff which has doubled since the Government has been in office. It spent $2.6 million on the Shamrock Summit so we could hear the Prime Minister and Ronald Reagan singing to us on TV. My television has not worked the same since. The expense for an office for the Prime Minister's wife is $100,000 a year.

We are paying $250,000 a year for the salary of Dalton Camp who was hired in September of 1986 to straighten the Government out, and it has been in a nosedive ever since. I want my money back for that Dalton Camp nonsense and so do the taxpayers of my riding. If there is a king of mismanagement, deficit and improper financing, it has to be the Conservative Government across the way.

Mr. Jepson: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria). I heard him speak of government waste, and I think it is important that we make clear to the Canadian people the extremely difficult circumstances we found ourselves in when we came to office a brief two years ago. We were faced with interest payments on the debt we inherited and payments for a social net which absorbed 83 per cent of all our revenue. We were left with roughly 17 per cent of discretionary spending cuts with which to pare our deficit down.

To the credit of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), he has done a remarkable job in little over two years. He has pared the annual deficit down by 24 per cent and is continuing to do an excellent job on that. We are seeing the results of that sound fiscal management reflected in the market-place. We are seeing increased investor confidence and the creation of 25,000 jobs per month since we were elected. It is important to remember that of the 25,000 jobs, 70 per cent are long-term. The record of the previous Government was the creation of 7,500 jobs a month in its last term, 83 per cent of which were short-term, or 24-week wonders, to allow people to earn unemployment benefits and leave them frustrated.

I urge the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) to consider the impressive record of the Government. Mortgage rates are down to below 10 per cent for the first time in 17 years. Interest rates are down 4 per cent. We have the fastest growing economy of all OECD countries, including Japan, and the fastest job-creation of all OECD countries, including Japan. While much has to be done, it is like a breath of fresh air when we reflect on the record of this Government in such a brief period, considering the morass we inherited.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, the Conservatives always refer to this morass. If we were to believe all of this, we would probably abolish every social program in order to justify eliminating the deficit. Perhaps the Tories basically want to cut off many of those programs that we established. As a matter of fact, the House will recall that they tried to deindex senior citizens' pensions. I will not repeat what Solange Denis said on the steps of Parliament Hill because you would not allow me, Mr. Speaker. But most Canadians know well the true Tory agenda.

Let me deal with the so-called job-creation of the Tories since they have been in power. We are told that 115,000 new jobs have been created. We also know that 127,000 new jobs were created in Ontario, primarily in the southwestern part of that province. This means there is a deficit of 12,000 jobs for the rest of the country, including the area I represent. They should not talk to me about job-creation when there is 14 per cent unemployment in Hawkesbury in the riding I represent.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) has departed. He talked about these great deficits and how the Conservatives brought them under control. The Conservatives do not have a monopoly on deficit control in this country.

The Hon. Member has returned and perhaps he is interested in knowing that in Saskatchewan, between 1944 and 1964, the CCF Government of Tommy Douglas and Woodrow Lloyd had a balanced budget and often had a surplus. That continued between 1964 and 1971 under Ross Thatcher, a Liberal Premier. During Allan Blakeney's term as Premier of that province between 1971 and 1982, there never was a deficit. Since the Conservatives under Grant Devine took office in 1982, there has been a massive deficit in that province amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars a year.

I say to my hon. friend from Winnipeg that in Saskatchewan, in terms of deficits, Tory times are tough times. In terms of deficits, Tory times are tough times as they were in the 1930s under R. B. Bennett. If he wants to see patronage, if he wants to see wild spending, and if he wants to see incompetence, he can come to Saskatchewan and talk to Grant Devine. He is a walking expert on the subject.

Mr. Boudria: I thank the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom)—

Mr. McKenzie: Your colleague.

Mr. Boudria: Our colleague. The Hon. Member does not have to be quite so partisan. We are ali colleagues here. I thank the Member for Yorkton-Melville for bringing that to the attention of the House. He eloquently mentioned Ross Thatcher, a Liberal Premier and another Premier of a different political persuasion. We know that Mr. Thatcher came from another political Party and it is very likely that it was the enlightenment which came upon him from joining the Liberals that made him such an able manager.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We shall resume the debate with the Hon. Member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Harvey).

Mr. André Harvey (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for giving me the opportunity to address this House and all my fellow Canadians to comment on the budget brought down by our Government. This budget easily proves in my opinion that Canada has become the best country in the world in the space of only two and a half years.

We promised two and a half years ago that a Conservative Government would take Canada from one of the last among industrialized countries to the head of the pack.

I think that we can be proud of the fact that, after two and a half years, whatever the Liberals might say, the closest competitor of Canada as far as economic performance is concerned is Japan. This is no dishonour for a newcomer among countries with positive economic indicators since Japan has an outstanding performance.

Mr. Speaker, before speaking directly about the budget itself and our continuing objective to make Canada the best country in the world and to maintain it at its present level, I would like to try to show, based on the record of the Liberal Party and its stated intentions for the future, that it is absolutely impossible to have any confidence in the comments made by the Official Opposition about this budget.

Afterwards, I shall try to outline, not the record of the New Democratic Party, but its true intentions, show the way it contradicts itself on many issues and prove that these people cannot have our trust or our support.

When we look at the record of the Liberal Party, we find that, after 12 or 15 years under a Liberal Government during the last two decades, the debt had increased to $23,000 per family. This means interests of $70 million a day which Canadians must pay, or $3 million in interests an hour because of the wasteful spending of the Liberals.

Right now, the Grits, the Official Opposition have all the answers. The Liberal Opposition have among other things the solutions to the serious economic problems this Government is now overcoming.

It is important, if we are to analyse the credibility of their statements, Mr. Speaker, to check on what the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) stated in 1974-75. He had this to say: "We must do everything—he was then Minister of Finance—we must do everything possible to stop the increase in Government expenditures. As in the past, we will endeavour to reduce wages, limit Public Service growth, and approve only the most important of new programs."

So far so good. But what I find interesting, Mr. Speaker, is that the year after that statement was made, the federal deficit had increased 150 per cent. In other words, such a performance was no great shakes.

One only has to read the pre-budget statements of the Leader of the Official Opposition—and I will spare you, Mr. Speaker, the statements made by former Liberal Prime Ministers—to quote once more from the Leader of the Official Opposition, some 10 years later. His speech has not changed.

There is program duplication, while other programs are not viable. Some Government activities are wasteful. All this, Mr. Speaker, from the Official Opposition. We have programs which no longer serve any purpose, which are no longer useful, and I will put the axe to them. That was in 1984.

I was listening a few minutes ago to my Liberal colleague who had doubts as to whether we had changed their programs. I could spend two hours speaking about program changes this Government has made. We could speak about the Canadian Jobs Strategy, that great program that is based first and foremost on the private sector. Instead of providing subsidies which remain fruitless and never create jobs, most of our programs are aimed at small- and medium-sized businesses whose main purpose is to create permanent jobs.

All this to say that when the Official Opposition formed the Government they showed arrogance and contempt towards everyone, including Parliamentarians and members of provincial and municipal governments. My honourable friend mentioned his political contribution to levels other than federal and I could tell him a thing or two myself about it. I might have an opportunity to do so later on.

Mr. Speaker, I find unfortunate that the opposition should refer to opinion polls at every opportunity. As a matter of fact, we are likely to have about 20 more of them before the next election. Personally, I trust the Canadian people, when the time comes, to know how to differentiate between demagogy and achievements and between lying and telling the truth.

I will not deprive myself of the pleasure of quoting Mr. Gilles Baril who served his fellow citizens with distinction at the provincial level and who has made an analysis which I feel fully deserves to be conveyed to all my fellow Quebecers.

"Federal Liberals, these clever masters of institutionalized patronage, for 20 years put their friends in charge of various federal departments. From the ordinary village Post Office through the CBC, the Crown corporations, the RCMP, the Civil Service and the great Deputy Minister, they all belonged and still belong to the Liberal family. Canadians have quickly forgotten the red cliques, their gimmicks, their faked projects such as the Canada Works—" —which, by the way, no longer exists, Mr. Speaker. The Canada Works Program was abolished by our Government, Mr. Speaker.

"—in which the uncle, the aunt, the cousin or the organizer of the Liberal candidate campaign was involved."

—Make work programs which never amounted to anything and never created permanent jobs.

"Canadians, according to Mr. Baril, have quickly forgotten the "Louix IX" style of the former Prime Minister, his trips and parties, the fact that his country was ruined by high interest rates, high inflation and high unemployment. They have also forgotten that Liberals have been the champions of public fund waste and dilapidation, causing Canada to fall from the third to the seventeenth rank among industrialized nations."

Mr. Speaker, we brought it up from the seventeenth to the second place. This is quite a record in two and a half years; we could have made that promise two and a half years ago, but we would have been accused of being over optimistic, but indeed the facts are there. International organizations maintain that at present Canada is the best country in the world after due consideration of all economic parameters. This is obviously exasperating for the Grits. I am telling them not to be that nervous because we will not harm them. We will continue to take action on basic issues.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, we must carry on with our policies in spite of the fact that demagogy—and I think that it will be short-lived—is now more popular than the achievements of this Government. We must not despair because there is an increasing number of responsible individuals.

I have here an editorial from Le Devoir blaming the Liberal Party, especially their Leader, for not having been bold enough in their decisions on certain economic issues. I will come to it in a few minutes, Mr. Speaker. They lack boldness because they want to play politics. Here are some examples. Can you, Mr. Speaker, define the position of the Liberal Party on free trade? Can you show me a statement indicating a consensus in the Liberal Party between the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) who is the spokesman for his Party and the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston) who has been removed as the Liberal spokesman on trade issues because he agrees with the Government? He said that there was no choice, that we had to negotiate. It is to ensure a better future for Canada. Could you show me one single document, Mr. Speaker, where the leader of the Liberal Party has stated in any constructive way the position of his party on free trade? Absolutely not, Mr. Speaker. And I dare the Liberals to come up with any coherent document on which they all agree concerning our free trade policy, which is now endorsed by all the organizations in this country which care for the future prosperity of Canada. With regard to this issue, Mr. Speaker, we must not underestimate the importance of Canada as an economic partner for the United States. You can be sure that the United States are able to grasp the importance of this trade agreement as a model for multilateral negotiations which are a part of GATT. Here again, the Liberals have no policy.

On the Constitution, Mr. Speaker, how can you expect Quebecers to trust the proposals of the Liberal Party after having been put in their place and scorned by the previous Government? To think that the Liberals, at a recent convention, took position on the Constitution. One can hardly refrain from smiling at such news, but it is also somewhat sad. It is somewhat sad to hear the Liberals expound their views on the Constitution after having given us the brush-off for 15 years and having left us out in the cold in 1982.

Some say our Government has not conceived constructive policies for young people. I remember that in the spring of 1985, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), the defender of the disadvantaged, attacked us as a Government saying we did not have any program for students, for the young. Yet, youth unemployment has dropped several percentage points. Why? Because we have put forward the best programs, not one but seven programs with Challenge '86, Challenge '87 and Challenge '88 where we got unexpected and unbelievable success. Those programs are significant. They are very successful. Why? Because we appealed to the true partners the Government can trust, those in the private sector. Our money, our programs are helping businesses, small and even big ones to create challenging jobs for young Canadians, jobs that are also relevant, and it is important to save our young people from being told when they graduate that they lack experience equivalent to their degree of training. But it is true, we have not heard anybody say anything about our programs for youth. In that area as in others, our performance has probably been exceptional.

For a laugh, Mr. Speaker, to help you understand and see the unbelievable void of the Liberal Party in all areas, you should read once more its resolution on the need for Canada to withdraw from the Atlantic Alliance. The Liberals who wasted so much public money, are telling us, in their resolution, that we should get out of the Atlantic Alliance in order to save money, when we know full well that neutral states spend much more on defence than members of the Alliance. This only means, as it was pointed out by the editorialist in Le Devoir, that the Grits programme is pure political opportunism. There is nothing the Grits will not do to get elected. But what is important to us is that the Government stays on the right track.

There is another major issue for Quebec, that is Bill C-22 on drug patents. Let us look at the position taken by these defenders of the needy, in particular that of the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie. You know that the pharmaceutical industry is located mostly in Quebec. This is not a drawback, we are here to defend Quebec interests and, consequently, the interests of the whole country. What is the position of the Grits on that Bill about pharmaceuticals? They do have a position. However, judging by what they said . . . the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellette) said, in 1983, on Bill C-22: "that a series of amendments is actually under consideration, but the industry will have to accept some form of price control in order to protect the consumer".

That is what this Government has done. You should check the position of the Liberals on Bill C-22, concerning drug patents which give minimum security to companies that discover new products in Quebec. This will generate $100 million in investments. Again, this is a blatant contradiction and I ask them to officially state their position. Ours as a government is clear.

Mr. Speaker—much has been said about tax reform. In case the Grits, the Official Opposition, do not know, the tax reform is already under way. It began with Bill C-23 which was passed before the Christmas recess. I do not make any unwarranted statements. I asked my colleagues to check which way the Official Opposition voted. Bill C-22 which was passed before the Christmas holiday provides for a minimum tax for the rich.

I therefore feel that in their new role as champions of the have-nots, Liberal Members could at least have congratulated the Government for that stance. They have voted against the collection of a tax on millionaires, on wealthy people.

I shall deal with the New Democratic Party in a few minutes, Mr. Speaker. There again, things are rather comical.

What I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, is that I could easily illustrate the record of the Liberals as regards their regional development policy. My region in particular has suffered deeply from never-ending federal-provincial disputes. There are some issues, Mr. Speaker, on which two, three, four or five electoral campaigns were run in my region and that we settled within two years. I have no lesson to take on regional economic development. People will tell me that our Government is neglecting regional economic development even if the estimates provided under that item in the budget have been increased by 4 per cent and even if the example which I will give shows quite well our concern for remote areas. I ask you to listen carefully.

Do you know that the last agreement signed by the Liberal Government provided for $1.4 billion spread out over 10 years? We have signed one providing for $1.6 billion over a five year period. And we are told that Quebec is losing $77 million one day and $97 million the next day. We are told that Quebec is also unfairly treated under our regional development policies.

All I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, is that I am sure slander and lying will only last so long.

Unfortunately, you are signalling that I have only two minutes left. It is really not enough.

With respect to the policies of the New Democratic Party, Mr. Speaker, we should ask them to tell us today why they want to keep the Auto Pact when a few months or a few years ago they advocated its review every five years? This is what I would like to know.

I am also eager to know the position of the New Democratic Party on the constitutional issue in Quebec, its exclusive rights on language matters. We will follow that very closely.

I would also like to know the official position of the New Democratic Party on Bill C-23 on a minimum tax and a sales tax credit to the underprivileged as well as on Bill C-22.

All this to say, Mr. Speaker, that this Government must maintain its thrust, maintain its direction, even though temporarily, it hurts of course to have the polls against us. But I suggest that if this country has been run by polls during the past 75 years, it is now time to stop governing by polls. Personally, I am not interested in wasting public funds because the polls are not good. This will not happen. I prefer to maintain the economic performance of this Government, a responsible Government, and see a 24 per cent reduction in deficit growth within three years. This is definitely a record, it is incredible. This is why all the international agencies that have economic expertise say that Canada is doing an extraordinary performance, that investment in this country also is extraordinary. And of course I am pleased with that. I would need two hours, Mr. Speaker, to speak to them quite calmly. I do not want them to be nervous. I will not hurt them. But it is a good thing that they should hear the truth, because what is being peddled around is a bunch of lies, Mr. Speaker. It is not the truth, and I invite them to come to our regions. I could illustrate this with an example, Mr. Speaker. I invite them to come to the Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean area and defend our regional issues, and also in the Beauce area, and all across Quebec for that matter.

Having said that I will add that concerning regional development, I am ready to compare this Government's performance over the past two and a half years, and you may rest assured that it is considerably better than the 25 years of Liberal mismanagement. And the results are there to prove that jobs are being created everywhere, in remote and other areas, where of course this is more difficult than in large industrial communities. The policy of our Government has revamped the old Liberal programs which existed solely for the purpose of fostering and encouraging patronage. Our whole strategy is bearing fruit, which is quite extraordinary, Mr. Speaker. I will have the opportunity to get back to this. I had to skim over some of the stands taken by the New Democratic Party which is making gains just now on the basis of its economic and constitutional contradictions. Its members do not know which way to vote on interesting Bills. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you for allowing me these few minutes and I will have the opportunity to deal again with this within the next two years.

[English]

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Harvey) on a well-researched speech. However, I think I have to correct him on one issue.

Mr. Nystrom: Only one?

Mr. McKenzie: He said that the Liberal Party does not have a position on trade. It has all sorts of positions. One has just to take their pick. The Leader of the Official Opposition has two positions on it. He is for it and he is against it.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member whether he supports the Government's advances in research. There have been a great number of false and misleading statements about our being against research. Nothing could be further from the truth. I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that federal funding for science and technology in 1986-87 increased to an estimated $4.223 billion from last year's estimated level of $2.748 billion. With an increase such as that I do not know how anyone can stand on his feet and say that we are against research. The problem with research is that the Liberal Party had a policy of dishing out money to anyone who had a little pet project. We are not dishing out the money. We will not pay for waste and duplication, for programs that are being researched elsewhere.

I wish to ask the Hon. Member if he agrees with the new policy in place in the Department of Employment and Immigration. It is called the increased interview activity program. Under this program the Department calls in the unemployed to try to find out why they do not want to take jobs which are available. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) has called in over 75,000 people so far and we have placed 25,000 people in positions. A great many Canadians are not coming in for their interviews because they know why we are calling them in—we want to put them to work.

We know the Liberal Party destroyed the work ethic in Canada. There are all sorts of statistics which show that firms cannot find people to fill positions which they have open. One example I have here is with respect to Leeson Electric Canada which wanted to hire people to help out with the youth unemployment crisis. They advertised for truck drivers, shippers, receivers and trainers to learn the rewiring of electric motors. What happened is that they could not find anyone to fill those positions. With one million unemployed there is something radically wrong. We are dealing with this issue. I think we will have to continue to remind Canadians that the Liberal Party destroyed the work ethic in Canada.

We have another problem with the labour unions. The heads of the labour unions have told the people not to take these jobs. They have told the people to stay on welfare. Many of the companies are offering more than the minimum wage. For example, where the minimum wage is $4 they are offering $6, $8 and $10, and they still cannot find people to fill these positions. However, we are dealing with this situation.

I want to know the opinion of the Hon. Member for Chicoutimi in terms of whether he supports the Government's program to restore the work ethic in Canada which calls the unemployed in for interviews and which places them in jobs.

[Translation]

Mr. Harvey: Clearly, Mr. Speaker, for my friend the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) to ask me to understand the policy of both the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party is clearly asking me for the impossible. If I may, I should like to read what is the Liberal philosophy according to a former Liberal member. "To be a Liberal is first and foremost to be a Member of the House of Commons. And in this context, everything can be justified". It is not a Conservative member who is saying that but a Liberal. "If the development of Canadians as individuals can be achieved through socialism, the Liberal Party can be socialist. If the development of Canadians as individuals can be achieved through a change of direction to the right, by greater emphasis on the private sector, the Liberal Party can be a party of the right". I must continue, for you have not heard the worst yet. "If, to develop, the Liberal Party deems necessary to become communist, we will become communist. This is what being a Liberal means". I shall refrain from giving the name of this former member, but I shall perhaps have another opportunity to do so later.

In my humble opinion, when the Liberals speak about research and development, do you know what they have in mind? They figure out the amounts allocated to research and development only on the basis of what the Government does. As for us, our philosophy is that, if we want research and development to be effective and aimed at productive sectors, capable of generating employment, it must be carried out mostly by the private sector. What is our strategy, Mr. Speaker? It is not to have direct subsidies and direct Government research, but to provide incentives in the form of investment credits, and this has had marvelous results, even for our small businesses.

I am convinced that the Liberals have still not read all about our programs. Many small businesses in all the Liberal constituencies are carrying out research and development thanks to Government subsidies, but after two and a half years, the Liberals have still not had the time, with their demagogy, to read about our programs even though it is much better to provide research incentives than to throw money away since this is much less likely to promote productive research. No one is better able to decide in what sector research should take place than private enterprise.

The second area of criticism for the Liberals is employment. However, if we look at the record of the Liberals between 1979 and 1984, we find that they created 1,255 jobs a month. As for us, we are creating 25,000 jobs a month, but we are not taking full credit for this and saying that it is only because of the Government. The fact remains that, because we have inspired confidence to the private sector, there has been an outstanding performance at that level and this is due to our main partner the private sector which is there to create jobs. We must not forget that the investment climate in this country has never been so promising, particularly for foreign investors. I would suggest it is the result of this Government's sound management policy which, despite the demagoguery and falsehoods of the Official Opposition and the NDP, is bearing fruits outside our borders. We have a good credit rating in this country, Mr. Speaker, and it is nice to be told that Canada—in any case I am proud to be told that Canada is the best country in the world. It took us two and a half years to reach that level, so imagine what it is going to be like after four years.

Our main competitor was Japan, and I am proud because we can give an example of entrepreneurship, of work dedication, and of things well done. We mention Japan. Canada now ranks second after Japan and two years hence the Japanese will say: We ought to be able to do better than the Canadians. This is why our Government, through the Prime Minister, does not lay open to pettiness and reactions full of meanness. Our Prime Minister still has his national reconciliation objective in sight and signs regional economic development agreements, something which the Liberals did not even know—$1.6 billion in ten Quebec sectors. I am certain that the majority of the Liberal Members are not even aware of it.

Second, Mr. Speaker, the proof is made, economic recovery is a fact. As for social justice, Mr. Speaker, there will soon be daycare services and tax reform.

The Reds would like us to proceed more quickly with the tax reform. They had 75 years to do so themselves. Why should we not take another four months to think about tax reform? The income tax of all individual taxpayers will go down, Mr. Speaker, including corporate taxes. Those who have not paid any taxes in 75 years will have to pay some within a few months. In fact, the rich already have to pay a minimum tax. Our Government had to come to power to initiate this reform.

Our fourth major principle, and we must not go against our four major principles, about which we are making substantial progress, is international recognition for our country. Canada has to be seen as a country which is not afraid to negotiate throughout the world. We played a major role at the disarmament conference. Our positive contributions have enabled Canada to play a very interesting role in this regard. I am certain that, now that Canada is part of the Group of 7, which was not the case previously—once more, it needed our Prime Minister, who, by working intelligently, not with contempt for everyone and arrogance, but by negotiating intelligently—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his time has expired. The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) for debate.

• (1740)

[English]

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I wish to say a few words on behalf of all of us here in the Opposition who are present—at times one feels like a tiny minority.

The budget debate gives the House a unique opportunity to talk about the general direction in which we think the country should go. It is a little like the Throne Speech debate which also gives us that flexibility. It gives us a chance to speak on behalf of our particular constituency or region, because we all come from different realities. I come from a part of the country that is suffering economically. My constituents ask the question, "Where is Canada going as a nation?" During the parliamentary break last week I had a chance to have public meetings in my riding, in the village of Stenen, the towns of Norquay, Buchanan, Springside, and Mikado. All are very small communities.

The question that most people are asking is, "Where are we going as a country?" This is a country with tremendous wealth and potential, yet in the last 20 years our living standard has dropped from number one or two in the world to down to about tenth, eleventh, twelfth, or fifteenth position depending on how it is measured. They ask the question, "Where are we going as a nation?" I think that we have a choice. We can either be a leader, or a follower; for much of our history, we have followed the American economy wherever it goes, or we can just get out of the way. Recently we have been getting out of the way as we are pushed on shakes and shingles, on the U.S. Farm Bill, on softwood lumber, and starting yesterday on the question of potash. I do not believe it has to be that way. I believe that we can have a dream of a better tomorrow for ourselves, our children, and our grandchildren. I believe we can be a leader in the world. I believe that we can be a model for the rest of the world to follow. I believe that we have the potential, the intelligence, and the human spirit in this nation that if we had leadership, we could lead the world and be a model in the world of tomorrow.

I am concerned that the Budget does not provide that type of leadership. It has been described by everybody as a stand pat Budget, a safe Budget, a Budget that continues in the same direction. I am afraid that with that type of Budget we will not lead the world. I believe that we can modernize our economy. More money can be spent on research and development. We can specialize in certain areas. We can support our basic industries like farming, fishing, forestry, and resources. We can become a world leader if we have the dream and the vision.

As well, we lack a national spirit which unites us. All too often we are fighting, region against region, group against group, sector against sector. I do not see any evidence in the Budget brought down a couple of weeks ago that this will change.

As a matter of fact, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) have said time and time again that the economy is healthier now, that jobs are being created now, and that there is a great spin-off creating wealth from one part of the country to the other. That is just not the case. In most parts of the country there are more people unemployed and in desperate straits now than there were seven years ago, back in 1981.

I should like to refer to an article which appeared in The Globe and Mail on February 28. It indicated, for example, that in the last year—and I think Canadians would be interested in this information—more than 95 per cent of the additional jobs in Canada were located in the Province of Ontario. I may add that even Ontario development has not been very balanced, because 15 per cent of the people in northern Ontario are unemployed. Therefore, 95 per cent of the jobs created last year were created in southern Ontario, primarily because of the stimulation provided by the automobile industry which is going very well.

Between January 1986 and January 1987, the total number of jobs in the country rose by 137,000 according to Statistics Canada, but only 5,000 of those jobs were located outside the Province of Ontario. Another way of looking at it would be that 40 per cent of the people working today are working in Ontario and Ontario has only 36 per cent of the population of the country.

If we look at the net number of people who are working, there are 2,000 fewer jobs outside Ontario today than there were a year ago on a seasonally adjusted basis, according to Statistics Canada. Therefore, 2,000 fewer people are working in nine provinces today than was the case a year ago, according to Statistics Canada.

When people in my part of Canada hear the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance saying that there has been a creation of jobs, that there is new wealth, that there is a golden opportunity in the land, and that things are going well, they become very angry because it is not happening in Saskatchewan. It is not happening in western Canada, in Quebec, in the Atlantic provinces, or in northern Ontario. There is tremendous inequality in development in the country today. I do not see any evidence in the Budget to correct that tremendous imbalance. If it is not done soon, we will have growing regional inequities and regional alienation.

Last Friday a poll was published in The Globe and Mail which indicated that support in Manitoba for the separatist Confederation of the Regions Party had grown from 3 per cent to 7 per cent since October. Manitobans are feeling more and more alienated from not just the Government of Canada but from the national institution of Parliament and other Canadian institutions. This is a very serious issue.

I just heard the Hon. Member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Harvey) suggest in this House that everything is going fine now in the Canadian administration, thanks to this Tory Government. However, Mr. Speaker, would you take a very close look at the unemployment rate figures in Canada? A parallel can be drawn between the years 1981 and 1986. Everywhere in Canada unemployment rates are now higher than six years ago. And in provinces like Newfoundland, where six years ago there was a 13.9 per cent unemployment rate, the current rate is 20 per cent, a 6 per cent increase. And in Prince Edward Island, it went from 11.3 to 13.6 per cent. And in Saskatchewan, six years ago, there was 4.7 per cent unemployment and now the rate is 7.7 per cent. In my riding and in that of the Hon. Member for Assiniboine, the unemployment rate has almost doubled over the past six years.

A still more extreme example, Mr. Speaker, British Columbia had a 6.7 per cent unemployment rate six years ago, but now the rate is 12.6 per cent. And things are still worse in Alberta, where six years ago the unemployment rate was 3.8 per cent, as against 9.8 per cent now, Mr. Speaker. It is easy to see that we need a new regional development policy for Canada, because the only region in this country where everything is going right is southern Ontario. I have nothing against Ontario and Toronto men and women. I do not live in Toronto. There are other regions in Canada where the unemployment rate is much too high now.

[English]

Another concern is the sectoral problems. Canadian farmers are in great difficulty nowadays. Resource industries are in great difficulty. One needs only to talk to my Conservative colleagues from Alberta about the oil industry to understand the tremendous problems of that industry because of the fall in the price of oil around the world. We have the same problem in potash. To make things even more complicated, the American Department of Commerce decided yesterday to begin investigation of the anti-dumping petition in the United States. Just this morning the American International Trade Commission held hearings about whether or not there was injury to two New Mexican potash mines because of supposed subsidies in Canada, primarily by the Government of Saskatchewan.

Our resources are under attack by growing protectionism in the United States, yet we have a Budget which does not try to redistribute opportunity and money in any serious way to the regions of Canada which most need it.

I think they are making a big mistake and running the serious risk of not only the Government itself being defeated but of deepening regional alienation and division within Canada. I am very concerned about the possibility of a rise in western Canada of a western separatist Party which feels alienated from our system because western Canadians are not getting their fair share.

[Translation]

The same thing goes for Quebec. Five years ago, a referendum was held on Quebec's independence. For quite a while in that province, there was a movement towards independence, and now we have a Government with 57 Quebec members which, according to the most recent polls, has the support of only 14 per cent of Quebecers. There is certainly a major alienation from the federal Government in Quebec.

[English]

Then we have Newfoundland where the cod issue, in terms of the sell-out to France, has made Newfoundlanders so angry that they called open line shows questioning whether or not they should have joined Confederation in the first place and talking about the future of their province within the country. The issue has so angered Newfoundlanders that a Conservative Premier—and we all know how important is Party solidarity in Canada—is leading a crusade and a virtual war on his federal colleagues in Ottawa and against the great codfather, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie).

These things do great harm to Canada. I am afraid about the future of the country. As I said in the beginning, I think we have tremendous potential in Canada. If we had a vision, we could lead the world in terms of economic development. We could be a world leader in transportation, in the resource industries, in agriculture, in fisheries, and in forestry. However, we are not doing that. It is not Canada which comes up with new and innovative ideas, machines, and high technology. Instead, we import most of those things from Japan, the United States, and western Europe.

[Translation]

Forty years ago, during the Second World War, Germany, France and Japan were practically destroyed, but today, their economies are stronger than our own.

Mr. Speaker, it is six o'clock, so I will continue either tomorrow or whenever we resume debate on the budget.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

REFUGEES—CHANGES IN GOVERNMENT REGULATIONS. (B) REFUGEE DETERMINATION SYSTEM

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take up questions that I had the occasion of asking the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) yesterday in the House of Commons and followed up today with the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard). They dealt with the whole question of Canada's refugee policy. Essentially Canadians are getting confusing signals from the Government. On the one hand we have a system that is outdated with the present phenomenon facing Canada and facing the plight of refugees.

A special administrative review was put in place last May 21 by the former Minister of Immigration. Then the Government tinkered with the present parameters of that policy and announced changes some two weeks ago. It is promising legislation to set aside the system, creating a new independent refugee determination system. Today in media reports we learn of the Government's plan, already approved by the Planning and Priorities Committee, to usher in a second administrative review, or what The Globe and Mail and other newspapers refer to as general amnesty.

Canadians and refugees who are seeking asylum in Canada wish to know what kind of system we have. Over the last two years we have been trying to advocate bringing in a new, separate independent system apart from immigration, recognizing that an individual applying for landed immigrant status is pushed by certain criteria and that refugees seeking asylum are pushed by completely different motives and circumstances. That debate started with the Standing Committee on Immigration which submitted an umbrella report.

Rabbi Gunther Plaut provided a landmark report. Churches, organizations and immigrant aid societies across the country have given their input. The evidence is in. It clearly points toward the new system, yet we still have a Government that prefers to procrastinate. It is one that tinkered with the system a certain mode two weeks ago and then, as evidenced by this amnesty or special administrative review, is tinkering with it in another way.

We are sending out two sets of signals. We have a front door policy and a back door policy. As I explained earlier, the policy is beginning to resemble a train with two sets of cabooses and which is going nowhere because each caboose is pulling in separate directions and each is playing one against the other. When we have a disorderly system and an inconsistent policy there is chaos. Chaos does two things. First, it allows greater abuse and allows those individuals who are making fraudulent claims to get away with them. Second, and more important, legitimate refugees are suffering as a result of the chaos, disorder and delay. We have individuals and families who have been waiting two, three and sometimes four years to get their lives determined. We need a system that is expeditious and fair.

The Prime Minister said on August 19 of last year when he was referring to the plight of refugees that "if we err, we will always err on the side of justice and on the side of compassion." Yet, as a result of changes made last week on which the Government hangs its hat, it is against fraudulent claims and false refugees. The entire country is, Mr. Speaker. Every Member of Parliament is against abuse in the refugee system or any other portion of our federal domain. We are not suggesting that we are in favour of fraudulent refugees, we are suggesting that there is a way of dealing effectively with the fraudulent refugee. Second, we are saying that we should not do the first to the detriment of legitimate refugees trying to normalize their lives and the lives of their families.

Because of the changes, rather than leaving the system as it is, imperfect as it is, people should know the rules of the game until a brand new system is in place and we have the gospel for this country's refugee policy. Instead we have one layer of bureaucracy on top of another, and the policy is being tinkered with every second or third day. In the end no one knows the direction the Government is taking, and certainly the refugees are getting conflicting signals.

By removing the B-1 list, in theory at least we may be deporting people to countries which we, just 10 days ago, deemed dangerous because of real persecution. We are jeopardizing those people. We are driving people to protect themselves through hunger strikes. We are stranding people at airports.

Canada has had a tradition of helping refugees in their plight. We cannot take everyone. We cannot open our doors wide enough for all the world's refugees. No one is saying that. However, we have a role to play. Yet that role is becoming fuzzy simply because we are sending confusing signals, which in turn is because the system is not working well. We have the ability to eliminate the backlog and take care of those seeking refugee status and at the same time give Canadians confidence that the system has a degree of integrity and consistency and will protect their interests as well.

What we in the Opposition are trying to say is, stop tinkering with the system. Stop sending up trial balloons and leave the system as it is until we can bring in a new and permanent system. I look forward to the Government agreeing with that principle and telling us when we can expect such a policy.

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to respond to the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) concerning this very important issue. Last week, while the House was in recess, we had an opportunity to be in our ridings. It is not often that we get comments in our constituency offices about things which have been done well. However, the announcement made by the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) concerning changes in the refugee determination process was most positively received by the Canadian public.

I want to point out how welcome those changes were in my riding of Scarborough Centre. The changes were made to be fair to both the people coming into this country and those who live here now. Certainly we encourage refugees coming to Canada. The compassionate and humanitarian nature of both Canadians and this Government have never been questioned. The Nansen Medal which was awarded to the Canadian people is a great tribute to that compassion.

To specifically reply to the Hon. Member's comments, I wish to emphasize that the Government is satisfied that the current arrangement with the U.S. Government is providing the necessary protection against removal of a potential refugee claimant to a country where he or she alleges they will be at risk. The arrangement with the U.S. Government is that there will be a case-by-case review of each refugee claimant. Where there is no danger of immediate removal from the U.S., an immigration inquiry will be scheduled and the individual will remain in the U.S. until then. Where U.S. immigration indicates an individual is under deportation order and subject to immediate removal, the person will be allowed to enter Canada immediately to await the inquiry. Since those measures have been initiated there has been almost daily contact between the U.S. and Canadian officials at border crossings. There is evidence that American officials are co-operating to ensure that no potential refugee claimant will be removed from the U.S. prior to the date of the Canadian immigration inquiry.

I want to say to the Hon. Member that the administrative review was not an amnesty. Some 80 per cent of those reviewed have been allowed to stay in Canada. Some 20 per cent have not. That is not an amnesty. We are considering each case separately. We are not planning an amnesty as reported in The Globe and Mail. The Minister spoke very clearly about that in the House today. The fact is that we have not had an amnesty and are not planning one. Each case will be decided upon separately. I want to emphasize that Canada and the Government will treat each real, true refugee in a compassionate and humanitarian way, as is the Canadian way.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION—FUNDING OF CO-OPERATIVE HOUSING

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, if you ever drive up Dawes Road in my constituency, you will see apartment buildings on both sides of the street, some of them high-rise and some of them low-rise. Those apartment buildings have been there for approximately 20 years. Some of them are well looked after and some are not so well looked after. One particular complex of buildings which is well looked after is the Chadwick Towers complex on Dawes Road. That is a co-op housing complex. The residents own the complex. They pay a maintenance fee and share in the maintenance and management of the complex. However, when the residents sell their property they cannot sell it at a profit.

As you well know, Mr. Speaker, this is excellent housing for low and modest income people, for middle-income people, for single family parents, and for young families. It is a great type of housing facility. I am proud that co-op housing is in my riding in Chadwick Towers. I am proud that that is not the only co-op housing development in my constituency. On Glenburn Avenue there are the Glenburn Apartments, which was a poorly maintained building. We were always having problems with this particular building. The then tenants got together with a co-op housing movement, bought the building, gutted and rehabilitated it, and turned it into a co-op. It is now a credit to our community.

I was hopeful that we were going to have another co-op housing development in our community, the Todmorden. Unfortunately, it was recently discovered that there is methane gas on the site where they were going to build this complex. They are, therefore, looking for another site on which to build it.

The co-op housing concept is a great one for providing housing for modest and middle-income people. I know you will recall, Mr. Speaker, that the former Liberal Government decided a couple of years ago to cut back on the number of units allotted for co-op housing. In reaction to that, the co-op housing movement came forward with a new concept called the index-linked mortgage. They convinced Canada Mortgage and Housing that the index-linked mortgage was a good idea.

Last year Canada Mortgage and Housing, proceeding for the first time under the index-linked mortgage concept, decided to allot 5,000 units to co-op housing. That was based on the fact that the index-linked mortgage could be obtained at a 4 per cent rate. Later it turned out that these mortgages could not be obtained for better than 5 or 5.5 per cent. Because of that, the 5,000 units of co-op housing were not produced. In fact, CMHC cut back to 3,300 units of housing. That is quite a shortfall from what had been allocated and promised originally. Furthermore, CMHC promised that 30 per cent of those 5,000 units originally would have shelter allowance and there would be some subsidization for low-income people. As a result of the cut-back in the number of units, the shelter allowance was cut back as well. In fact, there are 510 less co-op housing units with rent supplements than there would have been under the original allocation.

• (1815)

Our Government has done a great job in housing. There were more housing starts in the past year than there have been for many years. With interest rates falling and the economy beginning to move again, there will be even more housing starts in the coming year. When we consider the new social housing policy and all of the funds being directed to those in need, we will be able to produce with the same money in the social housing field about twice as many social housing units as we did in the past. We have been doing a good job in housing, but not in social housing altogether.

We need more rental housing, more shelter for single people and families, and we need more co-op housing. Members will recall that the co-op housing allotment by CMHC for 1986 was less than in 1985. In fact, it was the smallest number of units allocated in any year for the last 10 years or more.

The former Liberal Government let the co-op housing field down and let Canadians down by allocating fewer and fewer co-op housing units each year. That was an election issue. In fact, the Progressive Conservative Party promised during the 1984 election that there would be more co-op housing units produced under a Progressive Conservative Government. The Progressive Conservative Party is committed to co-op housing and I know that you, Mr. Speaker, are committed to co-op housing. Tonight, I hope that we will hear from the Parliamentary Secretary that the Government will keep that promise, that it will produce more co-op housing units this year and there will be a major allocation to co-op housing. If that does not happen I will be disappointed. In fact, I will be furious with the Government if I do not hear that from the Parliamentary Secretary tonight.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to respond to the points raised by the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) on December 11 last year, about the supply of rent geared to income housing and the co-operative housing program.

[English]

Let me reassure the Hon. Member that the concerns he expressed tonight about co-op housing and low rental housing in his riding are the same concerns expressed in the riding of LaSalle which I represent. We have the same problems that were caused by the former Liberal administration and we are trying to correct them.

[Translation]

Our Government's success in this field is a source of intense pride for us all and especially for the new Minister responsible for the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McInnes). I welcome this opportunity this evening to give some additional information on these programs.

In 1985, when government guidelines and housing programs were being reviewed, one of the guiding principles was to channel public funds to those who were most in need.

That is exactly what we have done. Now that a new set of programs, many administered jointly with the provinces, are being implemented, more truly needy Canadians are able to take advantage of Government assistance in obtaining affordable housing.

[English]

To help moderate income Canadians, those on the margin of ownership, a new co-operative housing program was developed to provide co-op members security of tenure through more effective use of public funds.

Furthermore, all housing co-ops must allocate a certain number of units for subsidized housing. Federal-provincial shared cost programs provide for rent geared to income in about 30 per cent of housing units for low-income Canadians.

Still on the subject of co-ops, if operating costs exceed market levels for rents, a subsidy is applied to make up the difference. Subsidies paid in subsequent years are normally indexed to the real rate of inflation. During the program review, the Co-operative Housing Foundation urged the Canadian Government to adopt an experimental mortgage instrument that had been used for some time, with considerable success, in Denmark. I am referring to an indexed mortgage loan, fully guaranteed by the mortgage loan insurance plan under the National Housing Act, which has been available for about six months.

The real interest rate hoped for by the Foundation did not materialize, unfortunately. Capital costs have soared, and last year's budget was not as flexible as the co-operative housing sector would have wished.

• (1820)

[English]

The Government of Canada continues to support the co-op form of tenure as an alternative for Canadians, and is watching with great concern the acceptance of this experimental mortgage instrument.

[Translation]

Our Government remains committed to channelling its limited resources to Canadians who are most in need.

[English]

That is to say our Canadian Government continues in its resolve to target its limited resources to helping those Canadians in greatest need in York East and in LaSalle.

FISHERIES

LICENSING OF SCALLOP FISHERMEN

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my disappointment at the decision of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans to withhold the renewal of licences for scallop fishermen for the 1987 season. During the Christmas break, in fact on December 29, 1986, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) released a press release indicating the plan for 1987. So much for openness by the Government which campaigned on that in the 1984 election. Once again an arbitrary decision was made by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans with no thought or consideration of the effect this measure will have on the lives and livelihoods of the fishermen affected.

In order to qualify for the new licences, fishermen must have landed scallops valued at $350 during any of the last five years. However, this arbitrary threshold ignores the fact that many fishermen simply do not sell their catch. Many keep the scallops for their own consumption, thereby significantly augmenting their over-all income, which is very limited. I call upon the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to rescind this order immediately and to end this unfair and arbitrary decision affecting the inshore fishermen of Nova Scotia and the Atlantic region.

WOMEN

CHALLENGES TO MEET

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Mr. Speaker, this being the week marking International Women's Day, all men and women must now ask themselves what progress has been accomplished since women took to the streets to claim their equality rights.

As women, Mr. Speaker, we are forced to conclude that even though there has been some progress at various Government levels since the Progressive Conservative Party took office, be it with respect to employment equity or appointments to the upper echelons of the Public Service, unfortunately some deplorable situations still remain in day-to-day life.

Specifically, violence against women in films, television and pornographic literature; minimum and hardly enforced sentences for sexual assaults against women; lack of adequate day care services; wage disparities, particularly in private industry; lack of social incentives with respect to sharing parental responsibilities, just to name a few.

Mr. Speaker, women did make some progress since they first demonstrated in public, but we have to admit that the fight is not over yet and that they still have a long way to go.

INDUSTRY

ANNOUNCED CLOSURE OF CANADA PACKERS PLANT IN WINNIPEG

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the meat packing industry has played an important role in the economic life of Winnipeg. Its well-being has been a major concern to workers in the industry in Winnipeg, as well as farmers across Manitoba.

Recently Canada Packers announced that it would close its plant in Winnipeg. This will mean the lay-off of almost 1,000 workers, many of whom have worked for the company for 20 or more years and will have great difficulty finding other employment. The decision by Canada Packers to close this plant was, to a large extent, brought about by the federal Government's funding for a new pork killing and processing plant in Neepawa. The Food and Commercial Workers Union warned the Government that the establishment of that plant would mean the likely closing of the Canada Packers plant in Winnipeg.

Burns and Company which has a plant in Winnipeg is contemplating the establishment of an expanded plant, which would mean 200 new jobs. I call on the Minister to make it a condition of government assistance in building the plant that the company give first choice of new jobs to workers at Canada Packers who are laid off.

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt because this is the time for Members' statements. However, I want to bring to the attention of Members that we have been going over the allotted 60 seconds for these statements. It is giving me difficulty because it is cutting down on the number of Members who can be heard. I do not want to interrupt a Member because these are important matters. I just want to give some notice that I will have to stand and ask Members to stay within the limit. I just want to give that notice now.

U.S.S.R.—REUNIFICATION OF JEWISH FAMILIES

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, I rise before the House today to comment on the plight of Soviet Jews. Many Jews have been denied the right of family reunification. Thousands of refusniks who have applied for exit have had their visas denied. More important, after a refusnik applies to leave, it seems that more often he or she is subject to being dismissed from his or her job. Furthermore, some have had their children expelled from school, some are being arbitrarily arrested, and some have had their personal property confiscated. Because of these Draconian measures, many more are afraid to apply for an exit visa to leave Russia.

When the Helsinki Accord was signed in 1975, one of the main principles agreed to was that participating states would deal in a positive humanitarian spirit with the applications of persons who wish to be reunited with members of their family. As a signatory to that accord, the Soviets have clearly not abided by this agreement.

I urge the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to continue his good efforts in having the Soviets agree to allow these persecuted Jewish people the freedom to leave and join their loved ones in Israel and other nations around the world.

HOUSING

ADVANTAGES OF HOUSING CO-OPERATIVES

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, according to a Co-operative Housing Foundation of Canada press release, a Gallup poll indicates widespread support for co-operative housing organizations: 72 per cent of respondents agree that housing co-operatives should be subsidized to give people an opportunity to find affordable housing. There are a number of housing co-ops in Montreal, especially in my riding of Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic. Mr. Speaker, I was able to see for myself that this kind of housing offers advantages to the residents and the whole community.

In Canada last year, 3,500 new co-op units were built throughout the 10 provinces and two territories. Therefore the number of co-op housing units built in such remote localities as Yellowknife does not meet the demand.

I would urge the Minister responsible for housing to continue to make every effort to meet the needs of poorer Canadians. I would also urge him to find new solutions to provide more financial support to men and women who are not destitute enough to be eligible for Government assistance, yet not so well-off as to be able to find decent housing without having to tighten their belts unduly.

MINES AND MINING

IMPORTANCE OF SPECIAL MINING SHARES

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, Canada's mining regions reacted very positively to the last Budget brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). Since February 19 I have been receiving calls to congratulate and thank us for maintaining the flow-through shares program. For many months I have been speaking out in support of this program, admirably seconded by the Quebec Prospectors Association and representatives from the mining industry in Abitibi—Témiscamingue and across this country.

Mr. Speaker, we made the point that the benefits of this financing program outweigh what it costs governments in loss of tax revenue. Flow-through shares are effective instruments for providing incentives to major economic activity in Canada's mining regions. Flow-through shares benefit the economically weaker northern regions of our provinces. Mr. Speaker, flow-through shares must be maintained under our upcoming tax reform.

HOUSING

FUNDING OF CO-OPERATIVE HOUSING PROJECTS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, in a cross-Canada Gallup poll conducted in January of this year, 72 per cent of respondents agreed with the statement: "The Government should allocate subsidies for housing co-operatives as a way of providing affordable housing to Canadians". As well, 56 per cent of renters said they would be willing to try co-ops themselves. Yet the Government went back on its promise to provide 5,000 co-op units per year. Instead, it is going ahead with only 3,200 units. This is a significant decline from previous years. It has as well reneged on its commitment to provide 1,500 rent supplemented co-op housing units for 1986. That number has been reduced to 950.

The Co-operative Housing Foundation, which is the voice of Canada's 1,100 non-profit housing co-operatives, wants to know why the federal Government is cutting back when Canadians are saying co-op housing is a high priority. Co-op housing has a proven record and strong public support. I call upon the Government to authorize the promised 5,000 co-op housing units and to release funds for the full 1,500 rent supplemented units.

NUTRIENT VALUE OF BEEF

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge—Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate Canadian beef producers for meeting the needs of health conscious Canadians. Consumers can now be assured that the beef they serve their families is as low or lower in cholesterol than most other meats, including fish and chicken, while at the same time remaining a good source of iron and other essential nutrients.

I would also like to congratulate the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and Agriculture Canada for undertaking research to establish the latest figures on the healthfulness of Canadian beef. This data will now be included in the nutrient file of Health and Welfare Canada and its subsequent publication entitled "Nutrient Value of Some Common Foods". This is good news for all Canada.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

ANTI-BALLISTIC MISSILE TREATY—OPPOSITION TO REINTERPRETATION

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Paul Nitze, the senior adviser to the President on arms control, is coming to Ottawa this week to brief the Canadian Government on the White House's reinterpretation of the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty so as to enable extensive testing of the Strategic Defence Initiative known as star wars.

The response of the Canadian Government should be firm. There is no need for a reinterpretation of that treaty. Although it was signed only by the two superpowers, it is not a private contract to be nit-picked by lawyers in the Kremlin and the White House simply to provide new interpretations which would permit the extensive testing of this new defensive system.

All humanity has a stake in that treaty. It is the very cornerstone of arms control. The reinterpretation which is sought by the United States could seriously jeopardize the future of arms control negotiations.

LIBERAL PARTY

SPOKESPERSONS' AUTHORITY

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, in 1983, the Liberal Party of Canada, today represented in the House by 40 Members with as many different positions, concluded an agreement with the United States to allow the testing of Cruise missiles in Canada.

In November 1986 at their Party convention, those same Liberals decided to demand an end to the testing of U.S. Cruise missiles in Canada.

In February 1987, the official defence critic for the Liberal Party said that testing should be stopped immediately. Visibly embarrassed, the Leader of the party remarked that Liberal Members, even senior members, should not make statements on the missile issue on behalf of the Party. As soon as the Leader of the Liberal Party finished speaking, another member, the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston), the Liberal critic for external affairs, said he agreed with his colleague from Sudbury.

The Liberal Leader was embarrassed again, and said rather awkwardly that he would have something to say when he had something to say.

Mr. Speaker, we knew that the Liberal Party of Canada had no ideas or programs or policies, but is it leaderless as well?

SPECIAL CANADIAN GRAINS PROGRAM—CALCULATION OF PAYMENTS TO FARMERS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, there are already some inequities showing in the Special Canadian Grains Program, the $1 billion assistance program to farmers. Some $700 million of the program remains to be paid out. The initial payment has been mailed out to farmers. It was based on a system of providing yield averages based on large crop insurance districts, as opposed to the average production potential of each farm, as was understood in the first place.

By using these large districts instead of actual farm production, inequities have crept in along the borders in particular. A 20 per cent or more difference exists between one road allowance and another where a farmer is caught in what is a relatively low-producing crop insurance district, even though his land is high-producing, comparable to the land of his neighbour across the road. This is creating inequities in the amounts of the payments.

As well, there are inequities in that producers of the so-called specialty crops are not covered even though their prices have fallen in response to the fall of the general market. Specialty crop prices reflect the market and are down by at least as much as the market for wheat, oats, and barley. The program should have covered those crops as well.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

PROMOTION CAMPAIGN BY DELEGATION VISITING EUROPE

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, a contingent of some 20 Canadian maritime and government officials is now taking part in a joint Canada-United States trade mission to northern Europe. The purpose of the mission is to promote greater use of the St. Lawrence Seaway-Great Lakes system. They have already met and were well-received by their counterparts in Denmark, Sweden, Norway and Finland. They have still to visit Dusseldorf, Antwerp and London.

The Canadian delegation is led by William O'Neil, President of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, along with representatives from two provinces, the users, and port and seaway officials. The delegation is joined by a 22-member contingent from the United States.

This mission, coupled with the federal Government's contribution of $175 million to rehabilitate the Welland Canal, is evidence of the Government's continuing support of the great Seaway system and its commitment to improving trade relations with northern Europe.

LABOUR RELATIONS

REQUEST FOR REOPENING OF STAR-KIST TUNA PLANT AT BAYSIDE, N.B.

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Today, Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and I met a delegation representing the former employees of the Star-Kist Canada Limited tuna packing plant in Bayside, New Brunswick.

The delegation's spokesman described for us the human tragedy which is afflicting this part of New Brunswick. Sixteen months have already elapsed since the closing of the plant which employed over 400 working men and women. The unemployment rate in this area currently reaches 36 per cent. These men and women want to work. They are recognized as the world's most productive fish processors.

Most of them have now run out of unemployment insurance benefits. Some have been placed in job creation projects, while others are on welfare.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I should like to quote part of their presentation: "We beg of you today to give this matter the attention it deserves, to use all your powers to reopen the Bayside plant and make it possible for us to go back to work."

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Before calling Oral Questions, I think it would be appropriate for the Chair to give some indication to the Chamber with respect to the length of Question Period. The Chair has been trying very hard to ensure that the maximum number of Members are given a chance to be heard. I think Members will have noticed that, yesterday, we went perhaps a little too long. Thus, I would ask Members today to be disciplined with their preambles and remember that their colleagues are also waiting their turn.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1420)

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that we will all do our best to stay within those guidelines beginning now, and followed by the succinct, concise replies from Ministers.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

INITIAL GRAIN PRICES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister in the absence of the Prime Minister. It has been reported this morning that the Canadian Wheat Board is recommending a 20 per cent drop in initial grain prices. This will mean thousands more bankruptcies for Canadian farmers, particularly in western Canada. Under those circumstances, if it happens, thousands of farmers will not even bother to plant. Despite all the promises of the Government to the Canadian farmers, we are now seeing the collapse of the western grain economy. Will the Deputy Prime Minister guarantee to the House and to the Canadian farmers that initial prices this year will be at least as high as last year's prices in order to maintain some certainty in a very difficult situation?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): The Hon. Leader of the Opposition should know that the Canadian Wheat Board makes recommendations to the Government as to what the initial payments should be. The Government looks at those recommendations, and at other recommendations. We are presently in that process of deciding at what level the initial payments should be.

The Right Hon. Member should also know that the Wheat Board did not make public its recommendations to the Government of Canada. What has been happening is that other analysts have been commenting on what they think the Board has recommended. In order to set the record straight, the recommendations that the Board has made to the Government are strictly confidential.

REQUEST FOR GUARANTEED RETURN FOR FARMERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question to the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board is this. We now have the uncertainty arising from this report, and it is incumbent upon the Minister to clarify the situation for the Canadian farmer. The Minister knows that a combination of low world grain prices, a trade war between the European Community and the United States, and the actions of this Government, frankly, are conspiring to drive the Canadian farmer off the land.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has evoked some response on this important matter. Perhaps keeping in mind the fact that we do want to allow the maximum number of questions, all Hon. Members would allow the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition to put his question.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I am sure we can understand the nervousness of the Members opposite. There is no Saskatchewan election this year, and there are no more votes to be bought.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): In these circumstances, the Canadian farmer is wondering how he can trust the Government.

My supplementary question to the Minister is this. In view of the uncertainty caused by this report, the Minister has admitted that there has been a recommendation for lower initial prices made by the Canadian Wheat Board—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister is free to stand up and say what the situation is.

Will the Minister guarantee the same return to farmers this year as they received under last year's prices? Will he do that today?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, as a farmer I do not wish to minimize the difficulties that are faced in the international grain market. The Right Hon. Member should be fair about the situation. He will know that the Government and the Prime Minister have pushed for settling this dispute at the international level. In the first two years of this Government agricultural spending was increased by 62 per cent in light of the over-all reductions that were made in other government expenditures.

If the Right Hon. Member is fair, and if he has done his homework, he will know that in light of what will happen this year on spending in agriculture in western Canada, which is where the majority of grain will be produced, we intend to increase agricultural spending again by about 50 per cent. That is not abandoning the farmers. In my view, that is supporting them in a very difficult time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I wish to refer the Minister to the Canadian Press report which is far more detailed than he likes to admit.

REVENUE CANADA

TAX AUDIT OF FARMERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to direct my final question to the Deputy Prime Minister. He knows that the farm economy is collapsing, yet his colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, is choosing this very time to exact his pound of flesh by conducting a massive tax audit of every Canadian farmer. He is hitting the Canadian farmer when he is down. Under the present circumstances, will the Deputy Prime Minister order his colleague to stop the tax audit immediately?

• (1425)

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, if I might be permitted to respond to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, I want to assure him and all Members of the House that what he refers to as a massive tax audit or as being discriminatory toward western farmers is a complete fallacy. That is not the case at all. This particular, what he calls, audit has been directed in a gradual way across the entire country for several months. There is only a fraction of 1 per cent of farmers across the country who are even touched by the audit. There have been no reassessments. It is only done, as I am sure he as a former Minister of Finance would understand, to look at the more blatant cases where the capital cost allowance or the investment credit tax credit are being massively abused.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER END TAX AUDIT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Revenue has already indicated that it is a wide-scale tax review and tax audit by his auditors of over 1,000 farmers, 400 in Manitoba alone. In view of the tremendous financial stress which is being put on western Canadian farmers because of the financial disaster the Minister just indicated, is the Minister willing to call off this wide-scale tax audit which he is carrying out?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I want to tell my hon. colleague opposite, first of all, that it is not what he refers to as a wide-scale tax audit. It is directed at cases across the country, not at farmers alone but in other sectors where there are, I repeat, obvious abuses. I want to assure him and all Members of the House that several months ago I met with SMIDA. Recently I have met with Keystone Press. I have talked with Members of the House from all Parties. I am not at all interested in doing anything which will put an additional burden upon western farmers or any other sector of our economy.

INVESTIGATION OF FARM EQUIPMENT PURCHASES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, farmers are being singled out and victimized by the Department of National Revenue for legitimate private purchases of farm equipment which they made in 1983 and 1984. When is a commercial agreement not a commercial agreement? Why are these being opened up? Why is the Minister not willing to call off this witch-hunt, this harassment of farmers?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, with the greatest of respect I would invite my colleague opposite to put this down for debate so that I can deal with the issue with him. I repeat, he is giving misinformation to the House. It is not an audit which is directed at farmers. It is not an audit that is singling out any part of the industry. It is simply to get the worst abuses of capital cost allowance and investment tax credits in cases where they are really not in the best interests of Canadian taxpayers as a whole. I repeat, it is not directed at farmers. It is directed at everyone or every company that is using this kind of investment tax credit or capital cost allowance in an improper way.

GRAIN PRODUCERS—GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Just a minute ago the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board talked about what the Government had done for grain producers last year. The crisis faced by farmers is taking place this year, and they want some action by the Government. If the Government acts on a recommended additional 20 per cent cut in the initial price, it will mean an $800 million withdrawal from the pockets of farmers, which would mean from the whole prairie economy. Will the Government quit talking in generalities and make a specific commitment today? What will it do for Canada's grain producers in this crop year?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the Hon. Member's intervention. It should be very clear, if one examines the record, that the Government has always stood by Canadian farmers. Indeed, this year alone we have just paid out over $300 million, that is, the interim payment from the billion dollar Special Canadian Grains Program. Subsequent to that there will be another $700 million. That will be the final payment under the billion dollar program. To indicate our continuing concern and our continuing support for the farm community, the Minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board will commence a new round of meetings with farm leaders tomorrow afternoon.

MINISTER'S ADVICE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture knows that what he has just rhymed off is what the Government plans to do for the current crop year. What the farmers are now making their minds up about is planting for the next crop year. Since the Minister himself said yesterday, and I quote: "Farmers must base their decisions on the market—"

• (1430)

Mr. McKnight: On the Prairie you plant potatoes and corn; we seed wheat.

Mr. Broadbent: If the Hon. Member for Saskatoon would be interested in doing something for farmers instead of heckling, the farmers of western Canada would be happy.

At least the Minister is listening politely. The Minister said yesterday, "Farmers must base their decisions on the market, not on what the Government might do". Those are his words, Mr. Speaker. And if they based their decisions on the market, they are going to lose an additional $800 million this year. Is the Minister really saying to farmers either go deeply into debt, or pack up, go to Toronto and look for a job?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): No, Mr. Speaker, that is not the intent. Indeed the Canadian farmers will not take it as an intent or a word of advice in that respect.

Mr. de Jong: They will not take it.

Mr. Wise: The Hon. Member should realize that Canadian farm leaders themselves join with us in expressing that word of caution to the Canadian industry. I welcome the opportunity to do so again. Canadian farmers should not plan their 1987 cropping pattern based on the distribution formula in the Canadian Grains Program. We are a Government that would prefer to develop a program not in isolation but rather in concert and in co-operation with Canadian farm leaders. That is exactly what we did in the past and that is exactly what we are going to do in the future. We are commencing that meeting tomorrow.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, it is certainly the case that farmers are looking for action. I am sure all Canadians were moved to see on the front page of The Winnipeg Free Press on the weekend a man who had been farming for 30 years, successfully up until the present market circumstances had devastated his prospects, who has packed up and gone off the farm. We want to put an end to that circumstance. We want Canadian farmers to farm.

Since the Europeans are helping their producers, and the Americans are helping theirs, what will the Canadian Government do in terms of a moratorium on debt, in terms of energy costs, fertilizer costs, and in terms of all the inputs? What will the Canadian Government do concretely to help our grain producers?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we will continue to do exactly what we have been doing, that is, working on a day-to-day basis with farm leaders, sitting down together, working out a program that will be most effective and most helpful that will keep as many Canadian farmers on the land producing food.

DEFICIENCY PAYMENT REQUESTED FOR NEXT CROP YEAR

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to come back to ask a question of the Deputy Prime Minister. We have not been able to get answers from either the Minister of Agriculture or the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board. We know that the spokesperson for the Wheat Board has said "We are talking about nuts and bolts, economic survival and whether it is worth while for farmers to put in a crop this year". That is drastic language, Mr. Speaker. Can we not receive today a commitment from the Government that it will provide a deficiency payment for the next crop year? Farmers must decide now what to plant. They need that information if they are going to plant a crop and if we are going to have a grain economy in the west this year. Can't we get an answer today?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Wheat Board is a Crown corporation that operates and does a very good job as far as selling Canadian grain is concerned. It regularly makes recommendations to the Government of Canada about setting initial payments. That process is under way and is a normal kind of a process at this time of the year. We will be looking at the Wheat Board recommendations and we will be taking other things into consideration before we announce what levels the initial payments will be.

In the meantime, as I said in answer to the first question, if you could take into consideration all government spending in agriculture in western Canada, it looks as though it is likely to increase over 50 per cent in the coming crop year. That is a significant amount of benefit that will flow to grain producers who are suffering from the very severe world market declines.

Mr. Benjamin: Fifty per cent of what?

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT COMMITMENT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. It is true that the Wheat Board recommends but it is the Government that decides. Farmers are asking for a decision. They recognize, with the admission of the Wheat Board, that prices will be drastically lower. They need a commitment and a decision now to plant a crop for the forthcoming crop year. Let me ask again, Mr. Speaker, why will the Government not indicate clearly that it will repudiate the statement made by the Minister of Agriculture and make a commitment today to provide deficiency payments so we can have crops in the ground beginning this spring?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I am not so sure the Hon. Member understands the system. He was a former Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. I remember one time running into him during the 1984 election and I had to give him instructions on how to sign the forms to provide for cash advances. He is demonstrating the same kind of knowledge about the system now.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: Just make a decision.

Mr. Mayer: The system is in place. We are in the process of determining at what levels initial payments will be. They have never been announced this early before. They were announced as late as May 15 by the Government of which you were a part—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Mayer: —of which the Member was a part. We will announce it at the normal time which is the middle of April.

MINISTER'S PLANS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board. As a farmer, he is aware that Canadian farmers are facing a competitive world situation where European farmers will be taking home slightly more than $8 a bushel for wheat at the farm-gate and American farmers are being guaranteed, with their deficiency payments systems, something in the area of $6 Canadian per bushel. We have come through a year where the initial price we are guaranteed in effect is about $3 Canadian. We are now facing a market reaction that indicates we will have to be looking at something in excess of 20 per cent lower than that again this year. As a farmer, will the Minister tell us what he is going to be planting this year?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member is asking me what I am going to plant on my own farm, I will be happy to tell him. The Member is the only farmer in both opposition Parties across the floor.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mayer: That is true. I have faith in the ability of Canadian farmers to compete. I intend to plant on the same basis as we have in the past and what we did on my farm. I do not intend to back away from production. I intend to reduce my input costs and do the very best job I can of coping with a very difficult situation.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister then telling us that he does not expect any additional payments through a special grains program to cover the current crop year, and he is making his planting plans accordingly?

Mr. Andre: What has that got to do with government business.

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): I did not say that at all, Mr. Speaker. Probably it would be more useful for the two of us as farmers to engage in this kind of a discussion by ourselves.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SHIPBUILDING

CARIBOU II—INQUIRY WHY WORK NOT STARTED IN QUEBEC SHIPYARD

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Last Monday, the Minister of Transport tried to pull a fast one on the people of British Columbia by telling employees at Versatile Pacific in Vancouver that their company would get the contract for the Polar 8 icebreaker, while in fact there was only a letter of intent from the Government to the company. Mr. Speaker, to Quebecers this story has a familiar ring, because the Conservative Government has announced three times over that work would start on the Caribou II, the ferry that was supposed to be built at the Versatile shipyards in Lauzon, and nothing has started yet. Could the Deputy Prime Minister explain to the House why, considering this contract was announced a year ago, in March 1986, work has yet to start at the Lauzon shipyards near Quebec City?

• (1440)

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Hon. Member rose to his feet to get some elucidation on this issue. Regarding the second Caribou, or the caribouboo, the contract was signed and awarded and was entered into by Marine Atlantic with the shipyard in January. That was as a result of the herculean and stupendous efforts of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion who straightened out the affairs of Versatile in Quebec and saw to the sale of the operation to Marine Industries in Quebec. The Hon. Member can give the Minister full credit and I hope he will do so in his district and throughout Quebec. Tell them the truth.

INQUIRY WHEN JOBS WILL BE CREATED IN SHIPYARDS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister would come up for air, he would know that the contract was signed on March 26 but not a single job has started at the shipyard. People want action, work and jobs, not statements. The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion went to Quebec City three times to announce that construction would start on the Caribou II. Five thousand shipyard workers in Quebec are still waiting, not just for more words but for a firm commitment, for contracts and jobs, and they're not interested in funny remarks by the Minister of Transport. They want to know when work will start at the three Quebec shipyards in Montreal, Sorel and at Vickers.

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, no one can be sure what the workers want but what the hon. gentleman is producing for them is not likely to be what they want either. Ninety-five per cent of all the work going on in Canadian shipyards today has been put there by the Government as vessels are either being built for the Department of National Defence or the Canadian Coast Guard. The Henry Larsen is in Vancouver, and there is the Versatile shipyard, and the three Canadian patrol frigates at the Saint John Shipbuilding Company. There is a Type 1100 Canadian Coast Guard vessel at Halifax. There are two Coast Guard vessels at Sorel, and two Tribal Class destroyers at Davie. That is where the work is coming from for Canadian workers.

U.S.S.R.—REUNIFICATION OF FAMILIES

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan—Similkameen): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Scarcely a week goes by that I do not receive inquiries on family reunification and the Soviet Union. I am aware of the representations the Minister and the Prime Minister made to Foreign Minister Shevardnadze in Ottawa last fall. Has the Minister received any response to these high-level representations?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his interest in this matter. The Prime Minister and I raised forcefully and directly the question of family reunification with Mr. Shevardnadze when he was here last fall. I am sure the House will be pleased to know that our Ambassador in Moscow was informed last week that of the 42 outstanding family reunification questions involving Canada, 22 have been resolved. That means that 57 individuals will be allowed to leave the Soviet Union to join their families in Canada within the next two months.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I hope that that is a sign that the rest of the cases will be resolved and that this reflects a real change in the Soviet Union. As for the Prime Minister and I, we intend to continue to pursue the remaining Canadian cases both with renewed vigour and with renewed hope.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

GOVERNMENT FUNDING—CANADIAN CONTENT PROGRAMS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance who will know that in his Budget of this year there were winners and losers in the cultural area and over all it was a net loss for cultural agencies as compared with what they had before. Could the Minister explain to the Canadian public how the CBC can fulfil its mandate with only 87 per cent of the budget it had three years ago? How can it increase Canadian content when there has been this reduction in its budget?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think that question should be more appropriately put to my colleague, the Minister of Communications who, as the Hon. Member knows, is in China this week. She should be back shortly and that would be a more appropriate time for the Hon. Member to put the question.

CORPORATION'S MANDATE

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is one of government policy and commitment. The CBC has made a commitment and has been required by the CRTC to increase Canadian content. How can it fulfil that mandate to increase Canadian content without a budget? Is the Government reneging? Does it not want the CBC to fulfil that mandate? Is it against Canadian television programming?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, on the contrary. The Minister of Communications has commented on this very point on a number of occasions in the very recent past. The Hon. Member is quite well aware of that. The CBC has been asked to work within certain budgets, as is the case with all other government Departments and Crown corporations, in the interests of dealing with the broader problem with which we are faced, the problem of the federal deficit and the growing debt. The success we have had in working on the deficit problem has led to lower interest rates, to a considerable amount of job creation, to record housing starts, to a very healthy economy—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

NOTIFICATION OF MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT PRIOR TO AWARDING OF CONTRACTS

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Supply and Services. The Minister stated on Monday that a new system for notifying Members of Parliament prior to the awarding of government contracts in their ridings is a "non-partisan mechanism available to all Members of the House". Could the Minister tell the House how she can justify this as being non-partisan when certain ridings, including her own and that of the Prime Minister, will be notified in advance of any contract award of over $25,000 while all other ridings in Canada will only be notified if the awards are of at least $100,000 up to $400,000? Why the special treatment to herself and the Prime Minister?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, this is another question that shows the Opposition has never understood regional disparity.

I announced our Government's intention to work closely with the private sector. We had to set up a pilot project, which is to end on March 20. We had to start somewhere, and who can blame me for starting with the area I know best, the Lower St. Lawrence in the Gaspé?

[English]

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, the Government has educated all Canadians on what regional disparity is about because it is the author of it. Let us be realistic. The Minister is targeting a national program at Tory ridings and is hiding it by calling it a pilot project. Why does the Minister not treat all Members of the House of Commons alike? Why does she not treat her own Conservative colleagues alike rather than having herself and the Prime Minister and a handful of others making—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair is having some difficulty determining exactly what the question is.

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I just said we had to start somewhere, and that considering the bureaucratic constraints under which we operate, we had to have a pilot region first. If the project proves satisfactory, it can then be extended to other pilot regions.

The figure of $25,000 was set for this pilot region because we had to consider the unemployment rate which is considerable. I know many people in the area selected who would like nothing better than have contracts worth over $400,000 on a regular basis.

ENERGY

CLOSURE OF PETRO-CANADA REFINERY IN MONTREAL—REQUEST FOR MORATORIUM

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Conservative Government is setting the scene for the gradual privatization and closure of the Montreal East Petro-Canada refinery. Last Monday, 21 workers were laid off after only a week's notice and none was offered alternative employment. Petro-Canada is behaving like a bad employer. My question is this: Will the Minister intervene, first to cancel the unwarranted dismissal of these workers, second to freeze the situation and, third, to grant a 60-day moratorium to study various ways to save these jobs in Montreal east?

• (1450)

[English]

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, Petro-Canada is a Crown corporation which is directed to compete in the market-place with competitors. The decisions which Petro-Canada makes in these matters are those of Petro-Canada.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, Petro-Canada answers to the Conservative Government. Is this how the Conservative Government defends the interests of Quebec and Quebec workers?

[English]

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, Petro-Canada is the responsibility of a previous Government which formed it. It is directed to compete in the market-place like any other company and that is what it is going to do. We believe in the market-place taking precedence.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Good-bye, Montreal.

Mr. Fulton: Good answer. You guys will go to zero in Quebec.

Mr. Axworthy: Ten per cent in the west. You have a great record.

HUMAN RIGHTS

INDONESIA—ALLEGED VIOLATIONS IN EAST TIMOR

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs knows that Indonesia has officially been conducting a so-called transmigration program which has resulted in what is tantamount to genocide in East Timor and elsewhere. In view of the fact that 10,000 people have recently fled from Irian Jaya because of clandestine violence by the Indonesian Army, will the Secretary of State for External Affairs now publicly inform Indonesia that Canadians are not going to divorce their aid program to Indonesia from their concern about the human rights situation and the cruel violation of human dignity?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Indonesia and the Governments of other countries with regard to which there are allegations of abuses of human rights know very well the position of this Government. The Prime Minister has personally raised, as Prime Ministers before him would not, questions of human rights abuses in Korea, China, Zimbabwe and elsewhere.

With respect to Indonesia, as I had occasion to indicate to the Hon. Member the other day, his facts are out of date. If he is interested in serving the interests of human rights, he should do the elemental work of getting his facts straight first.

REFUSAL OF PERMISSION TO VISIT EAST TIMOR

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs recently offered me in this House the opportunity to go to Indonesia to see for myself that things are now quite fine in East Timor, as he and his Ambassador allege they are. Would he be willing to substitute for me representatives from Amnesty International or Pax Romana, or Pax Christi, or the Australian Committee for Overseas Aid, or any of a host of other non-governmental organizations, who told me last week that they are yearning for the opportunity to go to East Timor and Irian Jaya and have been flatly refused permission by the Indonesian Government time and time again?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I really do not understand the Hon. Member's insistence upon having other people do his work for him.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: Be serious. It is a serious question.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Treat your office seriously.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): If the member is making a representation to me, I will certainly convey that representation to authorities in Indonesia. He will know that they have already allowed journalists, ambassadors, and representatives of some organizations into East Timor to see for themselves. My request in return would be that, once evidence is in hand, the Hon. Member start a new practice and base his questions on facts.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MILITARY EQUIPMENT EXPORTS

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It relates to HITEC'87 which is the conference sponsored by his Department yesterday, today and tomorrow to promote military exports to certain parts of the world. Manufacturers have been invited to come to this conference.

Can the Minister explain why the Department would, at public expense, be promoting military and military-related exports to countries which have major human rights violations or are in the midst of conflict or are CIDA recipients? Why are we, at public expense, promoting military exports to those countries?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons that we are prepared to promote military exports is because there are a number of Canadian jobs involved in the production of military equipment. The Hon. Member, who is generally characterized by honesty in the House, will know that the term "military equipment" covers much more than weapons. I understand that she talked about military equipment, but I think it is important that it be understood that what is involved here is not necessarily weapons. It is also important that it be understood that there are some very close limits upon the exports of various kinds of military goods to various categories of countries, including those in relation to which there are allegations of human rights abuses. Indeed, I have tightened the law in that regard.

CONFERENCE ATTENDEES

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I sent a letter to the Minister today following up on the letter I sent to him a couple of weeks ago on this subject. In view of the enormous Canadian interest, and indeed the taxpayer interest in this country, would he make available to us a list of all the trade officials who have been brought back for this conference, a list of all the companies that have been invited, a list of the companies that have attended, and a list of the proposed military exports which the Department has in mind?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, some of the information which the Hon. Member seeks may not be available for reasons of Canadian law relating to commercial confidences or to questions relating to the Privacy Act. I will, naturally, make available to her all of the information that the law allows, although I am rather surprised that she would use Question Period to raise that question rather than follow normal procedures.

Ms. Jewett: I have written to you today.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I would also appreciate precision as to whether it is the view of her Party that there should be no exports of any kind of military equipment to any country receiving CIDA assistance.

REFUGEES

IMMINENT DEATH OF HUNGER STRIKER—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Immigration. Mr. Speaker, the CBC has just announced that one of the Chileans who has been on a hunger strike in Montreal for nearly two weeks is expected to die within 24 hours. I would remind the Minister that the families of these strikers had already left Chili for Canada when the Government unveiled its new policy. Given this emergency situation, can the Minister announce that he will allow the families of these strikers to gain immediate entry into Canada? He can review their applications here after these families have been reunited with their relatives.

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, one must not play with the lives of individuals. We are very sympathetic. As I said clearly, a people and a country cannot be held to ransom.

• (1500)

[English]

We cannot hold a country to ransom. We have done everything humanly possible since Sunday to analyse each case in Buenos Aires. They have not been willing to co-operate. They lost a week before returning the forms to us. All I can say is that at the end of the day, when we have had a chance to review all that has been brought forward, we will then plan how we can work with the group we have.

Mr. Berger: We are talking about a special situation. These people had already left for Canada when the Government's policy was announced.

PROCESSING OF REFUGEE CLAIMS

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, given that we are down to a number of hours, that a person's life may be hanging in the balance, and that there is no time for bureaucratic procedures, will the Minister act now and process the claims of these individuals inside Canada, which was the policy of the Government until it regrettably changed it on February 20?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, all Canadians will want to be assured of who is coming to Canada. We had the right, and we only asked for some basic information. We waited a week for that information and it has taken less than three days to analyse 91 cases. We have sent resources from Santiago and we have sent resources from Ottawa. We are doing all that we humanly can.

Let me remind the Hon. Member that those people who were about to board the plane in Buenos Aires said that they were going to London, England, for a vacation. It was the Argentinian airline that decided not to let them board the plane because they did not have transit visas. Those transit visas could have been obtained in Buenos Aires.

FINE BALANCE—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the status of women.

Mr. Speaker, considering the fact that the report of the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women entitled Fine Balance has again pointed out a number of anomalies concerning the economic situation of women, would the Minister tell us whether she endorses this report and what measures she intends to take with respect to its findings?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for the first question this week on International Women's Week. I am sure the Hon. Member knows that the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women is an agency at arm's length from the Government. It does superb research into issues of concern to women and, for the first time, has published a long-term strategic plan. Last November our Government published a work plan on behalf of the Government, which is also the first time that has happened. I am delighted to see that there is a great deal of overlap around the priorities for family and economic equality for women.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands. One question, please.

SHIPBUILDING

EMPLOYMENT IN WEST COAST SHIPYARDS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. I want to congratulate the Government for taking an important first step in ensuring a future for the shipbuilding industry in British Columbia.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Manly: We fully expect that Versatile will be able to meet the financial and technical requirements in order to proceed and get a firm contract to build the Polar 8. In the meantime, however, the shipbuilding industry is in real distress. Will the Minister tell us what further steps he plans to provide shipyard jobs in the months before the Polar 8 contract can go ahead?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the Hon. Member is pleased that this action has been taken. It certainly is an improvement on the attitude of the Official Opposition. We appreciate a little appreciation every now and then.

An Hon. Member: You need it, too.

Mr. Crosbie: As a matter of fact, we do not get enough of it. The Henry Larsen is being completed at the Versatile yard. As I said earlier in Question Period, the unfortunate state of affairs is that 95 per cent of shipbuilding under way in Canada today is a result of government contracts. We will continue our shipbuilding program in Defence and in the Coast Guard. However, I cannot be any more specific than that.

Mr. Tobin: It was under the previous Government. Give us some appreciation.

Mr. Crosbie: Why don't they win the election, then start talking? They would not say a word when they were in government for the last 20 years.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise Hon. Members that the time for Question Period has expired.

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table in both official languages, the Government's response to petitions Nos. 332-467, 332-481, 332-706, 332-720, 332-723 to 332-728 inclusive, 332-762 to 332-765 inclusive, 332-770, 332-791, 332-844 to 332-854 inclusive, and 332-923 and 332-1110.

Mr. Speaker: I would draw to the attention of Hon. Members that the Minister is rising to address the Chamber. I know there is a certain amount of movement at this time because some Members must leave to attend other important matters. However, I would ask Hon. Members to give their attention to the Minister.

INTERNATIONAL WOMEN'S DAY

CONTRIBUTION OF WOMEN

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization) and Minister responsible for the Status of Women): Mr. Speaker, next Sunday, March 8, will be International Women's Day. On that day, everywhere in Canada women will be taking an active part in the life of our society, as they do today and every day. At home, in their communities, and in every occupation and trade in our economy, women will be making an immeasurable contribution to our national well-being.

I am proud to sit in this House as the Minister responsible for the Status of Women.

[English]

Our Government takes its commitment to women very seriously. It means working nationally and internationally to advance the status of women. It means living up to our obligations under the United Nations Convention on the elimination of all forms of discrimination against women and our commitment to implement the Nairobi Forward-Looking Strategies.

Since my appointment to this portfolio I have had the opportunity to meet many women in different regions of this country. Just a few weeks ago I travelled to Manitoba and met with and listened to a large number of women who are working with groups involved in worthwhile projects at the community level. This week I will be at Halifax and Wolfville, Nova Scotia, and then to Montreal to do more of the same.

These informal consultations have been an enriching experience. They provide me with a first-hand view of the situations women face in different parts of our country, and an appreciation of their goals, an appreciation of their lifestyles and their concerns. These first-hand experiences offer a perspective on Canada's changing demographics as influenced by the concerns of single mothers, the special needs of immigrant women, visible minority women, rural women, and urban women.

Meeting with them and their groups in their own region has enabled me to bring back to Ottawa the perspectives and perceptions of women from all across Canada. These conversations on every trip reinforce my commitment and dedication to, as well as my affection for the women of this land.

[Translation]

My mandate also includes chairing meetings and co-ordinating the Government's response to briefs submitted by women's groups on matters of principle. In recent months, my Cabinet colleagues and I met, with representatives of the Catholic Women's League, the National Council of Women of Canada and the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women.

Through these meetings we keep abreast of positions taken by women's groups on various public interest issues, from child care to acid rain. The Government gives full consideration to their opinions and concerns when developing its policies and programs, in a concerted effort not to make decisions without first considering the repercussions they might have on the women of this country.

The concerns of women were high on the agenda of the March 1985 National Economic Summit. As a matter of fact, it was the first time such questions were one of the themes of a national economic conference. My colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) meets regularly with women's groups in the course of his pre-budget consultations. Last spring the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women set up a wide-ranging series of consultations with women's groups, and it has just concluded a national seminar on the family. I am pleased to point out that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) and I had an opportunity to attend this seminar.

• (1510)

[English]

As Hon. Members know, the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women functions as a valuable channel to the Government for the concerns of women across the country. It is drawn from a variety of backgrounds, regions and perspectives and council members fill dual and crucial roles, both of advising the Government and of informing and educating the public on issues of concern to women. Over the years the Advisory Council has been in the forefront of identifying issues of importance to women and responding to these issues with policy recommendations and publications.

The Council's briefs and other presentations to the Government have dealt with such important issues as women's legal status under the Constitution, unemployment insurance, pornography, prostitution, child care, divorce and family maintenance and home-makers' pensions. In its recent publications, the Council has addressed such topics as wife battering, new directions in family law, adolescents' orientation to the future and women as health guardians in the home. I am very pleased to see its new work plan for the next few years "Equal Status for Women in Canada in the 1990s". This is indeed a future oriented group.

Yesterday I had the pleasure of announcing a $.5 million permanent increase in the budget of the Council as recommended by the Government Task Force on Program Review. This increase will enable the Council to initiate relevant new research efforts and improve its ability to produce resource materials for new and expanded audiences. This expansion of the capabilities of the Advisory Council is further evidence of our Government's strong and unwavering commitment to the women of Canada. In the coming weeks and months, issues of interest to women will continue to be front and center on this Government's agenda.

Under the Prime Minister's leadership, our Government has brought women's concerns to the fore. Clear evidence of our commitment to women was provided in the document we published last fall Dimensions of Equality: A Federal Government Work Plan for Women. All Hon. Members of the House have received a copy. It is the first time a Government has produced a specific work plan on behalf of the women of Canada in order to give the country the knowledge and background to help us in our work on women's issues. Tabled by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) at the Annual Conference of First Ministers in Vancouver last November, there has been great demand for this book from across the land. It has turned out to be one of the best things we will continue to do.

Less than four months after its tabling, a number of work plan initiatives have already been accomplished or are well underway. For example, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) has announced that the Canadian Forces will conduct trials with women in combat roles. Also in keeping with the Government's commitment to expand the role of women in the Armed Forces, we have had the appointment of Canada's first woman General, Brigadier General Sheila Hellstrom, whom I am very proud to mention in the House today.

A review of sex stereotyping in internal Government communications is being completed. Labour Canada conducted an educational seminar for labour representatives on Equal Pay for Work of Equal Value. The Department of the Secretary of State funded a national conference held in Toronto as a follow-up to the 1985 Nairobi Forum and United Nations' World Conference on Women.

[Translation]

Discussions have begun with the provinces concerning child care. I will have more to say about this in a few minutes.

Last November there was a national conference of immigrant women and visible minority women, sponsored in part by the Secretary of State and Multiculturalism Canada.

The percentage of women appointed to various positions on Government boards, agencies and councils now stands at 27, so we are very close to the 30 per cent objective we had set for ourselves at the beginning.

These are only a few of the commitments towards women which our Government has honoured. Among some of our other achievements, I might mention the reform of legislation on divorce and alimony, and the repeal of the Indian Act provisions which for decades had been discriminatory towards native women.

[English]

As well, there is employment equity legislation, the establishment of a national training and employment program which, for the first time, sets participation targets for women, measures to expand and equalize pensions and the introduction of legislation to deal with the sexual abuse and exploitation of children.

At the First Ministers' Conference last November the Prime Minister described adequate child care as one of the most significant factors in ensuring the economic security of women. He has made a personal commitment to improve the accessibility, affordability, quality and flexibility of child care in Canada. I need not remind Hon. Members that child care is a serious national issue. It is a serious issue because first and foremost, it is about children, their future, their development and their place in our families and in our lives. It affects women, our society and our economy. Our Government is firmly convinced that an improved child care system will enable women who need or want to work to be in the labour force and to benefit from such a system. An improved system will provide opportunities for women to take the training programs. There is no point in having training programs if one cannot get out the door. There is no point in having employment equity if one cannot get out the door. On behalf of this Government, we want to give women the key which opens the door to opportunity and choice.

Public consultations have been a major focus for our Government thus far on the child care issue. We established a special Parliamentary Committee on Child Care with a mandate to seek information from a concerned public on this important debate. The committee conducted extensive cross-country hearings and I am delighted to hear that the committee is expected to present its report to address these problems later this month.

[Translation]

In the meantime, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has entered into consultations with the provinces which hopefully will lead to an agreement on improvements to the child care system by June 30. Clearly, that issue will remain at the forefront over the forthcoming months.

Women's health is another Government priority. It is obvious that women must be in good physical and mental health if they are to carry on with their numerous essential roles in our society. A good health care system is essential for women to realize their full potential.

• (1520)

[English]

The list of health issues of concern to women is a lengthy one. It includes access to health care, mental health, occupational and health safety, drug use and abuse, sexually-transmitted diseases and contraception. In particular, older women, disabled women, immigrant women and native women also have particular health concerns.

Our Government is responding to these concerns through the development of a health strategy for women. A vital component of the strategy will be a health promotion plan of action on aspects of women's lifestyles that are detrimental to their health. A number of research and demonstration projects on women's health issues are already being funded. Health and Welfare Canada is planning a symposium on the changing patterns of health and disease to take place in the spring of 1988.

[Translation]

A few weeks ago, I was made aware once again of the need for continuing research and awareness efforts on women's health needs when I visited the Women's Health Research Foundation in Winnipeg.

This volunteer, non-profit organization is promoting research on health matters that are closely connected with women. Last month, they sent to some thousand Manitobans a questionnaire aimed at establishing what problems and issues are considered by women to be important for their own health and welfare.

That kind of information is vitally needed to improve our health care system and get it to handle women's health needs with compassion and efficiency.

Our continuing consultations with women and women's groups have no other aim but to promote that exchange of information.

[English]

International Women's Day provides us with an opportunity to pay tribute to the achievements of the women of Canada. As Members of this House, we acknowledge that these are challenging times for women, and men, due to the changing demands of what is a transitional society. All Canadians are encouraged to realize their full potential. The Government is determined to ensure that in this process one's gender does not pre-determine the attainment of individual goals. International Women's Day gives us cause to reflect on these matters, to celebrate our progress and to prepare for the years ahead.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I am also very happy to rise and address the House on behalf of Canadian women on International Women's Day.

[English]

This is a week in which women of all social status, all ages, single or married, mothers, single parents, housewives, students, workers and professionals can join in a common cause and celebrate the gains made for women over the years and their evolving role in Canadian society. It is also a week in which they can come together and inform the Government of urgent needs and demands that have yet to be satisfied. They can remind the present Government of all the promises made over the last two years and demand an accounting.

Canadian women are growing impatient with the endless rhetoric of the present Government. They are demanding a Government with the strength to act. The Minister said that the drop in the fertility rate could be the most important women's issue of the 1990s. I ask what the Government has done and is proposing to do about this issue. The fertility rate over the last 20 years has dropped from four births per woman in 1960 to 1.7 births per woman today. The birth rate in Canada is at a level at which it can just sustain the present population size and, by all accounts, the trend will continue downward and worsen.

We are in urgent need of research on fertility. Why are couples choosing to have fewer or no children? Can we do anything to reverse this trend? We need to know more about the ramifications of surrogate mothers and artificial insemination. The cost of raising children is prohibitive. It is possible that the presence of adequate and affordable child care is deterring people from having children. Yet the Government has been abysmally slow, postponing action on child care time and time again.

The Minister said that more and more women are entering the job market.

[Translation]

As we know, two-thirds of Canadian women work outside the home, most of them are mothers, and 60 per cent of all women with children under three years old work outside the home. I would like to know what this Government is doing to help these women in the labour force.

As for Bill C-62 on Employment Equity, I was listening to the Minister praise this Bill, but I must admit that, in my opinion, it is toothless and is nothing but a collection of data in its present form.

[English]

The Government boasts about its Canadian Jobs Strategy Program, yet women complain that the majority of women participants are being trained for ghettoized jobs, clerical, service, sales and routine factory work, which pay low wages and are often seasonal or part-time. The federal Government has failed to fulfil its promises to provide prorated benefits to part-time workers. It has stalled again and again on child care. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) claims that his commitment to child care is real. Women cannot achieve equality in the workplace without child care. Women are tired of empty promises. They want affordable, accessible child care services now, not five years down the road.

The recent Budget did not set aside one penny for child care. How can the Government keep pledging its commitment to this issue in good conscience?

[Translation]

The Minister indicated recently that four out of 10 marriages ended in divorce and that the majority of single-parent families have a woman as head of the household and live under the poverty line. I would like to know what the Government is doing for these families.

If we refer to the budget brought down in late February, we find that families with an income of $15,000 or less were hit with a 53 per cent tax increase, while families with an income of $100,000 and more have seen their taxes increase by 6 per cent over the last three years.

The Government has also made plans and promises to create a central agency to deal with divorce cases. In my opinion, the Divorce Act still does not reflect the promises made by the Federal Government to Canadian women. It is still impossible to find, or rather, the defaulting husband can perhaps be found, but all that the Government does is to provide an address and say to which province the husband has moved, but a woman who wants to receive her support payments must initiate proceedings in another province and often wait up to three years before getting any money. I therefore do not think that the Government has made that much progress in the area of divorce and kept its promise to Canadian women.

Naturally, there is nothing about the promises regarding part-time work. The Government has done absolutely nothing about part-time work and pension benefits for homekeepers. There is no mention either of housing, even though the neediest families are those without proper housing and the Government has made drastic cutbacks in its housing program.

• (1530)

[English]

The Minister knows that one out of 10 Canadian women is a victim of family violence. Again, what is the Government doing about this problem? Last year the budget of the Family Violence Information Centre was cut. The Government underfunds transitional houses for battered women. This action implies that women's issues are not the priority that the present Government pretends. Action in dollars makes programs, not rhetoric.

The Prime Minister said that for many women child care is the key to future equality. Only 9 per cent of the children in need of day care receive approved services. Approximately 60 per cent of Canadian mothers are in the workforce, and many are in desperate need of affordable, accessible, flexible, quality child care. So far we have had nothing but words on this issue, pages and pages of suggestions, but not one penny toward a viable national child care system.

[Translation]

A recent poll indicated that two-thirds of Canadians support a universal day-care system. I would really like to know when the Government will do something about this.

[English]

Is this simply a publicity campaign? Is the Government stalling so that it can present a comfortable package before the next election?

The Conservative Government was eager to attract women, 52 per cent of the Canadian electorate, and it made all manner of promises. To date there has been the deindexation of family allowance, an increase in federal sales and excise tax which hurts lower and middle income families, cut-backs on programs for training women, cut-backs on transition houses for battered women, and nothing but words and vague promises on the child care issue. The three big Conservative promises that would involve government expenditure and action, namely, home-maker pensions, pro-rated benefits for part-time workers, and the national child care system, have turned out to be empty promises.

I mentioned before that it gave me great pleasure to address the House on this subject during International Women's Week. Having said that, I urge the Government to follow up on these many promises and show a true commitment to women across Canada and their concerns.

[Translation]

There have been many promises, discussions and consultations, but little action. In my opinion, consultations carried out without listening, responding and acting are not of much use to Canadian women.

[English]

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I owe an apology to my friends, the Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin), and the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell). I made a reference to their not asking questions earlier this week. I understand that after agreement with my office it was decided that we would wait until the statements were made before we asked questions together in the House. Like many things, it totally escaped my notice, for which I apologize.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, since 1910 women around the world have met on March 8 to celebrate International Women's Day. We meet to celebrate the achievements of women, to share our knowledge and experience, to extend mutual support networks, and to re-energize so that we can continue to press for changes that are needed on the long road to equality.

Canadian women hold out their hands in solidarity to women in other countries as we work in our own ways for the forward-looking strategies endorsed in Nairobi in 1985. Canadian women provided outstanding leadership at that conference. Our Governments have been slower in implementing these strategies here at home.

We stand in solidarity with women around the world who are working for peace and an end to nuclear arms, in order that the world's children can grow in safety and in health. We ask our Government to work more aggressively for disarmament, and to show its commitment by immediately cancelling the new five-year agreement to test nuclear Cruise missiles.

We stand in solidarity with African women, and women in other Third World countries who are struggling for survival, and who bear impossible burdens, particularly those who bear the burden of apartheid. We ask our Government to implement full economic sanctions against South Africa. We also ask for increased funding for CIDA programs for women in development.

We stand in solidarity with women of Latin American whose loved ones have disappeared, who suffer from the violence of war and dictatorships and oppressive patriarchal relationships. We ask our Government to be more sensitive to these women and their families, and to welcome those who seek refuge in Canada.

We also ask our Government to provide more support, including language and job training with child care for immigrant women. We urge measures to counteract the racism that visible minority women experience in Canada.

Native women who apply for reinstatement to Indian status face many difficulties. We ask the Government to provide the additional resources that were promised to Indian communities to accommodate resettlement.

Canadian women fought for and won equality under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. This was a great legal achievement. But we have not yet achieved equality in fact. Rather than patting itself on the back, we ask the Government to listen to what Canadian women are saying. Many fear that we may be going backward from equality objectives. Unfortunately, I have to say that this movement is being led by some elected Members of the House.

On behalf of many Canadian women, I ask the Minister responsible for the Status of Women (Mrs. McDougall) to be a stronger advocate and conscience within the Government for women's rights. We ask her to be outspoken and active in removing obstacles that women face, rather than defending government positions. In particular, I ask that the Minister reconsider and reform employment equity to make it mandatory in order that women have equal job opportunities with equal pay for work of equal value in all federally-related jobs. This would be a great initiative, and a model for other employers to emulate.

I ask the Minister to review the Canadian Jobs Strategy program, and to work with the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) to remove the barriers and improve both training and job opportunities for women. We also ask her to meet with the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) to implement changes in the Canada Labour Code to cover prorated wages and benefits for part-time workers.

We also ask the Minister, as a women's advocate, to analyse the impacts on women of free trade, deregulation, and privatization policies of the Government. Women are worried that once again they will be the last hired and the first fired.

Feminization of poverty has escalated, particularly for women who are raising children alone. We ask that the Government exempt low income people from taxes, and call for an increase in family benefits with reindexation of family allowances. We urge tax reforms that will redistribute incomes more fairly, along with a concerted attack on poverty through a full employment program and income security policies.

The Minister has said that the Government takes its commitment to women seriously. These are serious concerns of Canadian women which the Government must address. Yesterday the Minister allocated $500,000 to the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women, for which I congratulated her. Will the Minister also advocate increases to

Secretary of State women's programs which were cut back in funds by 5 per cent last year? This means that women's groups in the front line out there in communities are very short of funds, and many centres are closing down. Will she reaffirm that the objective of equality must be the basis for future funding under this Secretary of State program so that we can continue to improve equality for women? We commend the Government for increasing the appointments of women to various positions and as Deputy Ministers. If only we could adopt a policy of gender parity in the House of Commons, how changed this place might be.

Finally, the Minister talked about child care and women's health programs. Need I say once again that the Government's goodwill toward child care will only be evident when it allocates federal bucks for Canada's children. Federal initiatives and leadership are essential as a precedent to negotiating shared funding for child care with the provinces. Will the Minister not ask that the $300 million, which we discovered in reserve funds in the social development envelope in the current Estimates, be named for federal child care initiatives as an act of good faith?

Questions affecting women's health and well-being have been neglected for too long in Canada. A top priority should be a program of research into safe and effective methods of contraception for both men and women. A secondary area is the need to study carefully, with the full participation of women, new reproductive technologies to develop a sound and ethical policy in Canada.

I know I have not covered many issues, including increasing violence, pornography, and sexual abuse. Women stand together and demand that this abuse must stop. On behalf of the New Democratic Party, I extend warm greetings, in sisterhood and in solidarity, to Canadian women on Sunday, March 8, in celebration of International Women's Day.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

STRIKING

PRESENTATION OF THIRTEENTH AND FOURTEENTH REPORTS OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the thirteenth and fourteenth reports of the Striking Committee.

If it is agreeable to the House, I intend to move concurrence in the fourteenth report later today.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present petitions on three different subjects. The first one is from a group called Senior Power, people who reside in Pangman, Weyburn, and Trossachs, Saskatchewan. They humbly request that the Government of Canada reject the proposals to amend the Patent Act because they believe that they will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians. They also believe that the proposals of the Government will result in higher costs to provincial government drug plans, wherefore your petitioners do humbly pray.

TRANSPORTATION—ECONOMIC REGULATORY REFORM

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have two further petitions to present. They are from Saint John, New Brunswick; Sackville, Wellington, and Sunnydale, Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario; Truro and other points in Nova Scotia. They state that in their opinion transportation is a natural monopoly without economic regulation, and that economic regulatory reform or deregulation of the dimensions proposed in Bill C-18 will create unnecessary chaos in the transportation industry, leading to unacceptable reductions in safety standards, as well as deterioration in the quality, type, and frequency of service. Wherefore the petitioners humbly pray that the Government withdraw Bill C-18 and retain public convenience and necessity as fundamental factors in the development of public transportation policy.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have a further petition to present from residents of places such as Woody Point and Bonne Bay. They say that the proposals of the Forget Commission on unemployment insurance for fishermen are totally unacceptable. They call upon Parliament to ensure that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) rejects any recommendations which would deprive fishermen of the right to collect unemployment insurance and enters into consultations with all representatives of fishermen in Canada in order that improvements to the programs offered to fishermen can be made. In this your petitioners are duty bound and will forever humbly pray.

CONCURRENCE IN FOURTEENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, if the House agrees, I move, seconded by Mr. Lewis:

That the fourteenth report of the Striking Committee, presented earlier this day, be concurred in.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion moved by the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

STATISTICS CANADA—PRIVATE COURIER SERVICES

Question No. 70—Mr. Boudria:

In 1986, did Statistics Canada utilize private courier services and, if so, what was the (a) total cost (b) total cost per province (c) name of the company and, in each case, the total amount spent?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Statistics Canada reports:

Yes, Statistics Canada utilized private courier services in 1986. It should be noted that approximately one-half of the total spent in the year 1986 was in connection with the 1986 census.

(a) Total expenditures: $354,782.93

(b) Total expenditures per regional office and headquarters:

St. John's	$ 1,059.32
Halifax	24,879.81
Montreal	12,449.89
Toronto	81,936.79

Mr. Lewis: I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all notices of motions for the production of papers stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall all notices of motions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—POLLUTION—EMISSION REDUCTION AGREEMENTS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia moved:

That this House deplores the government's failure to pursue effectively federal-provincial agreements with the result that the Conservative Governments of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia remain reluctant to sign SO2 emission reduction agreements, thus jeopardizing the credibility of the Canadian acid rain program;

That this House also deplores the fact that, two years after the Quebec summit meeting, no benefits to Canada in the form of SO2 emission reductions in the United States have materialized; and

That, therefore, this House urges the government to:

(1) pursue vigorously the implementation of agreements on SO2 emission reductions with the Provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, and

(2) request at the April, 1987 summit meeting that the United States reduce SO2 emissions over the Canadian border in a significant manner.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in putting this motion before the House today, we in the Opposition do so because we feel that this issue is of public concern right across the country; a matter about which Canadians are deeply and understandably exercised, and in doing so we are making a contribution to the understanding of this issue as it stands presently. We are advancing ideas in the hope that we will eventually arrive at the desired goal of cutting emissions that effect acid rain to the point where the environment around us, human health and other factors will benefit.

The motion itself is couched in the words that express regrets about the situation in which we find ourselves both domestically and internationally, but they are expressed in the form of regret rather than accusations or sharp criticism, because we know that in essence this is an issue that unites all Canadians. It brings together all three Parties in this House. It brings together federal and provincial Governments to a considerable degree at least, and it is an issue about which Canada has become known abroad as a strong engine in the search for solutions. We want to approach this matter today in a constructive manner, keeping in mind of course that the design of this House and the parliamentary system to which we belong do encourage constructive criticism. It was in that spirit that the motion today was drafted.

I would like to confirm to you, Mr. Speaker that we on this side of the House in my Party applauded the Government in 1984 when it took such an interest in the question of acid rain. We saw it as a desirable continuation in pursuing public interest in a manner that transcended political viewpoints and, in a way rightly or wrongly, as a continuation of the work that had been initiated in preceding years on which I will dwell in a moment or two. It has become quite evident though that we disagree on the process. How do we get there? We certainly agree on the substance of what we want to achieve. We disagree, for instance, on how we should convince the Americans to come on board. We feel that we should not pursue the route of research and demonstration projects, but we know that that is one way of keeping the theme alive.

When it was announced, as a result of the summit a year or so ago, that that was the route which the federal Government intended to take on behalf of all of us, we thought we should give it a chance, because maybe it is the way to proceed. But if we look at the continuum of this process, we find some very important dates in the history and in the saga of acid rain. We find, of course, the agreement of February, 1985 which was a federal-provincial agreement. It was preceded by the agreements that took place in March and June, 1984 between the federal and the provincial Governments, which were also preceded by the conclusion that very same year that we had to go it alone if the Americans did not want to proceed. All of these were preceded in 1980 by the memorandum of intent, to which I understand you, Mr. Speaker, also had a role to play, that we must see this thing over a period of several years as a continuum and as an evolution of policy in the public interest.

At this stage, March 4, we have to express profound regret that no provinces, two years and one month after another confirmation of the agreement of February, 1985 on acid rain, have yet signed and that two provinces, namely, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, seem to have profound problems in adhering and sticking to the understanding and to the agreement itself. In that respect, we are fully supportive of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) and of the Government of Canada, that that agreement has got to stick and has to be respected by the provinces, which was understood clearly by all the participants at the meeting of February, 1985, as it was fully understood in June 1984 and in March 1984.

There was a division of labour. The responsibility of reducing acid rain emissions was divided in two parts. It was said, "You, the provinces, take the responsibility of cutting down your emissions through your utilities, because utilities are provincial, and the federal Government will take on the economic burden of modernizing the smelters". It was envisaged that this responsibility would require substantial funds as well, but, nevertheless, something that could be done by way of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Department of Industry at the time and, therefore, it was a reasonable division of labour. The provinces present, through their Ministers of the Environment at the time understood very well this division of labour.

At this stage we find it impossible to understand why the Province of New Brunswick and the Province of Nova Scotia would, all of a sudden develop, double talk on this issue, would waiver and indicate that they cannot deliver on a commitment that is just two years and one month old.

The agreement also includes certain important considerations. The Government of Canada in February, 1985 did say that it would make available $150 million for smelter modernization—fine. It also said that for the development of a clean coal technology, which is the important message to the provinces, that it would make available $70 million. Yesterday during questioning in the special committee on acid rain we learned to our amazement that of the $70 million, $35 million has been used by the Province of New Brunswick, by the New Brunswick Power Commission, without any recognition that this amount somehow came from Ottawa and without any indication that that was something the province would appreciate in order to resolve the problem. Half of the amount has been used and so far we have not seen any political expression or will to come on board.

There is also an amount of $25 million for technology development announced as part of the package, as well as research and monitoring funds to an extent of $18 million per year. You can see that the totality of the package is there. The division of labour was announced and explained. The political representatives of the provinces, as mature adult responsible individuals, said yes. Some are coming through. We were told in committee that several provinces are doing what they agreed to, and some are even doing more, as in the case of Ontario. The Province of Manitoba is sticking to its commitment and the Province of Quebec is doing its part too. For the life of us, the members of the committee, we cannot understand why the two provinces, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, are not carrying their share, which is actually one of the lowest burdens requested to be carried of all the provinces.

• (1600)

The fact that there is to be an upcoming summit is another reason we are debating this matter today. It is another link in the long chain I mentioned a moment ago, beginning with the Memorandum of Intent of August 1980. I will not bother you, Mr. Speaker, with all the developments that have taken place since, but it seems to us that on the eve of this important meeting between the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) and the President of the United States, a good debate in the House is not only appropriate but is absolutely essential. I look forward to hearing the Minister's and my colleagues' analyses of today's situation.

It is urgent, therefore, that both New Brunswick and Nova Scotia sign the federal-provincial agreements at the earliest possible date with an indication before the summit as to when they will do so. They have been given two years to carry out that assignment. I suppose the Minister, through his officials, has pursued the matter frequently. I suppose there is a group of officials constantly negotiating the matter so as to bring it to a conclusion. Surely the Prime Minister will not want to go to the summit in April without having closed ranks behind him, without having all the provinces saying that they are ready to deliver and do their share.

The whole policy was based on the premise that we must go to the Americans with clean hands. I must confess that I had some reservations about that approach because there is such a difference between the forces. We emit 4.5 million tonnes a year while the U.S. emits somewhere between 24 million and 25 million tonnes of SO2 per year. Even if we go to them with clean hands we will still face damage to the environment, lakes, forests, the aquatic systems, structures and human health. There will be an amount of SO2 that will still be threatening us because we are downwind of it. Even if we come through perfectly clean, we will still be damaged. Nevertheless, it was a good gesture.

You will forgive me, Mr. Speaker, if I lack that sense of modesty for which you know me so well when I say that it was actually in February 1984 when Ruckelshaus came back from negotiations with the White House empty handed that we said that we must go it alone because there was no alternative. We said that we could not wait forever in the hope that somehow something would be triggered. We made that decision, and I am sure the present Minister has renewed it himself on a number of occasions, knowing very well that it needed an enormous degree of political commitment because of our uncertainty as to whether or not the Americans would follow. I suppose it was in that light that the decision to go the Lewis-Davis route of further research was made. Having gone that far, the reluctant provinces must come on board.

There is another main thrust of today's motion. We should take the cue of the present Minister of the Environment. On January 22, 1987 he said that U.S. clean coal initiatives will be of no immediate help to Canada. I felt that it took courage to say that. I congratulated him. I suppose he said what he did because his own officials delivered to him a study he had requested last November. He was giving a signal, not only to us in the Opposition, because we watch these things like hawks, but to his own Government as well. He was saying that the approach of further research and demonstration projects was not working. Yes, we agree fully that the U.S. coal initiative is of no immediate help to Canada. Therefore, the second part of our motion urges the Government of Canada to be clear in communicating its message to the U.S. and to say clearly that it wants a significant reduction in SO2 emissions that are transboundary and affect our economy, our environment and our health. That is what we really want.

There must come a point when we must make a decision as to how to invest our time. It is our perception of the matter at least, and I am sure it is the perception of the Minister in his own private moments when he turns off the light at night to go to bed, that we must ask ourselves if we have not reached the point at which we must stress a new tack. We must ask ourselves if we should not say openly and frankly, as one must among friends, that the quality of our relations with the U.S. will be affected and will deteriorate more and more the longer the White House ignores the message calling on it to take action of substance, not further research.

We were very heartened when we read a statement made by U.S. Senator Mitchell the other day. On January 16, in presenting his Bill, he concluded that he would also continue to press the administration to change its view that everything must be known before anything can be done. He is saying that we cannot have 100 per cent scientific assurances but that there is a point when we must act. We cannot wait for the last "i" to be dotted and the last "t" to be crossed. He said that each year we wait the cost of not taking action increases and that the price already paid is already too high. We are fully behind that statement and we know that there is a North-South alliance on the matter of acid rain. We in Canada are not alone. Congressmen and Senators are saying the same things as we are saying.

The time has probably come to renew our lobby in Washington and to renew the efforts of those who are on the side of the Staffords and Mitchells of this world. Whichever Government will be in power when we succeed, bully for it; we will applaud it from this side of the House because we all feel the same way. We are telling the Minister to tell it like it is, to ask for emission cuts and to push the provinces. We are telling him that we are 100 per cent behind him when he asks the provinces to stick to their commitment. They made that commitment in the full knowledge of what it meant and they must deliver. We will do our duty along with the Hon. Member from Muskoka by pressing the matter in committee. We might have taken a different tack. It would have been very tempting to ask embarrassing questions, but we refrained from doing so. We can assure the Minister and the Government that on this matter we have the same determination as he, but we are asking him to change at last Canada's position at the next summit because it is time to say it like it is. We want emission cuts.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I was most interested in the remarks of the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) with respect to this motion and the issue of acid rain. I was particularly pleased with the credit he gave to the present Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) and the present Government. Although his comments may have escaped me, I am sure that at least indirectly and by implication he was giving the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) credit as well for making the acid rain issue one of top priority with regard to discussions between Canada and the United States. As the Hon. Member knows, the present Prime Minister made a commitment to deal with the issue of acid rain. As I understand it, he is the only Prime Minister who has given acid rain that priority in his dealings with the United States, particularly in his discussions with the President of the United States.

I agree with the Hon. Member's statement. I know that the present Minister, the Government, the Prime Minister and, I am sure, the New Democratic Party as well, agree with the Hon. Member's statement that it is important to get all of the provinces behind us on this issue immediately.

I was particularly interested in the quotation from United States Senator Mitchell who said that on this issue of acid rain we must take action now because each year the cost of not taking action increases. To me that sums up the whole situation. It leads me to a concern that I have, not with the attitude and position of the Provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, but with the approach that is currently being taken by the Province of Ontario with respect to the acid gas emissions from the coal burning generators of Ontario Hydro. On Monday of this week the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) met with Premier Peterson of Ontario to discuss the possibility of Ontario Hydro using low sulphur western coal in order to reduce acid rain emissions in Ontario and Canada.

Apparently the Premier has expressed concern that because of long-term contracts it will take approximately five years before they can do very much about this. That is certainly not in line with the comments of the Hon. Member and it is not in line with the comments of United States Senator Mitchell. I believe that the people of Ontario and Canada want something better than that. They want action on this issue. They want acid rain emissions by Ontario Hydro reduced immediately. Can the Hon. Member advise the House whether he and his Party are prepared to make representations to Premier Peterson on this issue to ensure that actions are taken immediately to reduce acid emissions by Ontario Hydro?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) either does not understand the substance of the agreement or is raising a phoney question. The fact is that Ontario has agreed to cut emissions by 62 per cent by the agreed upon date of 1994. It is left to Ontario to find the means to do that. The fact remains that Ontario has actually exceeded the requested percentage within the specified time. If, within that time, ways can be found to use a different kind of coal, that may even increase the reduction. However, the point is that Ontario has stuck to its agreement. I hope the Hon. Member for York East understands the substance of the agreement, namely, that Ontario was asked to reduce emissions by 50 per cent or so and has managed, by virtue of intense political will generated at Queen's Park, to exceed that target and reach 62 per cent.

I do not need the Hon. Member for York East to paraphrase and regurgitate my comments. I do not need historians to tell me what I said only a few minutes ago, although I appreciate his desire to do so. However, there is one comment he made which I would like to rebut, namely, that the present Prime Minister is the only one who has taken an interest in acid rain. There is a difference in style and approach. The two preceding Prime Ministers, Mr. Turner and Mr. Trudeau, took as intense an interest in acid rain as has the present Prime Minister, if not more so. The difference was that, unlike the present Prime Minister, the two preceding Prime Ministers had enough confidence in their Ministers of the Environment to leave that responsibility with the Minister of the Environment of the day. If the present Prime Minister would have left the file in the hands of the present Minister of the Environment, we would be further ahead than we are today.

[Translation]

Mrs. Killens: Mr. Speaker, first of all, the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) is to be commended for his objective presentation today. I think all Members will agree that the Hon. Member avoided any hint of partisanship. I would like to ask him to elaborate somewhat on the maple syrup industry, since this is a very important sector in Quebec and the Hon. Member did not have time to touch on this subject. It is no coincidence that we chose the maple leaf for our flag—and like all Canadians I am very proud of that flag—since it symbolizes one of the major industries in this country and especially in Quebec. I am told that in Quebec, and especially in the Sherbrooke area, the industry's existence is in jeopardy. I would therefore appreciate it if the Hon. Member could give us the benefit of his research in this area.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic (Mrs. Killens) is perfectly right. There is another aspect of the damage and hazards caused by acid rain that should be mentioned, and in fact she has already done so.

The maple syrup industry is faced with a very serious problem today. The Government is of course aware that the industry has made representations to the Prime Minister about the cost of this damage, and these have come mainly from the Quebec association of maple sugar producers. An economic study was made, showing how much our failure to act has cost so far. The bill amounts to $80 million. According to the producers, every year that goes by without a decision being made to reduce acid rain will mean an additional several million dollars. This is the first time an economic sector in this country has sent a bill to the Government for damages. It was quite an experience for all of us, and for the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) too, I am sure, because it was the first time we had a demonstration of the damages experienced by an economic sector in this country.

• (1620)

[English]

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, before rising on debate I would like to make a point of order. I must object once again to the practice of recognizing for questions or comment a member of the same Party as the Member who spoke, when there are members of other Parties rising at the same time to ask a question or make a comment. That was not the intent of the reform. It is a long-standing quarrel of interpretation between the Chair and myself. I just wanted to reiterate it because a very useful debate between the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) and the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) was passed up as a result of that.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) on the same point of order.

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, after the Chair has recognized the member of the other Party which has clarified a point or asked questions, and this happens in the Party of the NDP member, when a member of his Party makes a speech we often see members of the same Party repeat the question to the Chair, and I fail to understand why the member should rise on this kind of question.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I know that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) and the Chair have had a number of discussions over this precise point. Without having to justify the decision of the Chair in this particular instance, I would like to indicate to the member that I agree partially with what he has said, but must point out to him that only one member of the Conservative Party was standing up at the time. It was the member to whom the Chair had given the floor for the first question. Had there been someone else rising I can assure the Hon. Member that that member would have been recognized prior to a member of the Liberal Party, in that case. However, we will proceed with debate. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I apologize for that diversion. Some points of order bear repetition when the opportunity presents itself.

We welcome the motion moved today by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). It gives us the opportunity to debate the whole question of acid rain. This issue is high on the Canadian political agenda and has been for some time, but it is particularly important this week and in the coming weeks as we near the summit meeting between the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the President of the United States, where we expect acid rain to be discussed, and hope against hope that action will be forthcoming as a result of that meeting.

The motion states:

> That this House deplores the government's failure to pursue effectively federal-provincial agreements with the result that the Conservative Governments of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia remain reluctant to sign SO2 emission reduction agreements, thus jeopardizing the credibility of the Canadian acid rain program;

Anyone who is concerned about this issue knows that I am not an apologist for the Government, but the failure in this narrow respect lies with the Conservative Governments of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia and not necessarily with the federal Conservative Government. Those two provincial Governments have failed to take seriously their agreements with the federal Government in 1985 that they would arrive at subsequent detailed agreements with the federal Government to reduce acid rain emissions in their own provinces. I suggest that nothing has changed to warrant the Governments of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia pulling out of this agreement at the last minute. They are doing so at a very inopportune moment, when the Prime Minister ought to be able to show evidence of as much progress as possible when meeting with President Reagan in April.

Yet two provincial Conservative Governments are moving at the last minute to undermine the Prime Minister, and I expect that when the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) speaks today he will explain how the Government will address this action by those two provincial Governments.

The Special Committee on Acid Rain is considering calling the Premier of New Brunswick before the committee to hear why the Government of New Brunswick has acted in this way. We have already heard from the New Brunswick Power Corporation. I must say that the reasons it gave why it was unable to live up to the agreement were insufficient. Not only is it jeopardizing the credibility of the Canadian Government in this respect, it is jeopardizing the credibility of Canada's collective political determination to do something about acid rain. In the final analysis, that is more important than the credibility of the Government.

The Government does have a credibility problem insofar as it has backed down on the deadlines for the institution of nitric oxide emission controls and has not instituted as quickly as possible emission controls on heavy vehicles, and this reflects badly on Canada, but the lack of action on the part of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia is not the Government's fault.

Let me turn to Manitoba which I believe is proceeding toward an agreement. The Manitoba Government faces a much more difficult question because it is dealing with the modernization of a very old smelter in the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting operation in Flin Flon. The situation is much more delicate than that facing New Brunswick Power and Nova Scotia Power who do not have to worry about a disappearing market. The people of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia will continue to require electricity. Unlike Manitoba, New Brunswick Power and Nova Scotia do not face the prospect of shutting down if the acid rain negotiations are unsuccessful or if proper funding and restructuring is not provided. However, there is a political will in Manitoba to do something about acid rain, and progress is being made in spite of these difficulties.

The Governments of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia cannot be excused for pulling out of this agreement at the last minute, thereby putting the Prime Minister and Canada in a very difficult situation and, most significant, damaging our credibility on this issue.

We have heard the argument about coming to the table with clean hands. That is not the most important argument and the Hon. Member for Davenport made a good point when he said that such a strategy has its limits. In the final analysis, we must deal with the sheer magnitude of the damage being done to the Canadian environment by American emissions. That is the environmental fact which must override these petty arguments about who will do what and when.

The Canadian environment is at stake, and this, in turn affects the very essence of Canada-U.S. relations. Let me give this analogy. How long would one continue calling a neighbour a friend when that neighbour consistently pollutes one's backyard and garden, and makes the neighbourhood playground uninhabitable for children? How long would one continue to call that person a neighbour, let alone a friend?

The Special Committee on Acid Rain met with a number of American journalists earlier today. The point I made at our meeting with them was the same, that it is not only an environmental question, but a fundamental question of Canada-U.S. relations.

• (1630)

With respect to the process, the motion goes on to state:

That this House also deplores the fact that, two years after the Quebec summit meeting, no benefits to Canada in the form of SO2 emission reductions in the United States have materialized;

Unfortunately, this is not a great surprise to a great many people. There was a lot of feeling at the beginning of the very first summit that the approach being taken by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was not going to work, that he had far too high an expectation of what could be produced as a result of the new relationship he sought to enter into with the President of the United States.

I think the Prime Minister set himself up rather badly by creating expectations that anyone who was paying any attention knew were unrealistic expectations. It was a process, one might say in retrospect, that was destined for failure partly because of the hyperbole of the Prime Minister and that of the Government still today with respect to what it has accomplished. We still hear members on the government side talking about what they have accomplished, that for the first time the Americans have realized that acid rain is a problem. We heard that even today. It is not the first time that Americans have realized that acid rain is a problem either at the administrative level or the congressional level. It is the first time the Reagan administration acknowledged there was a problem, yes. Within the context of the Reagan administration, that is progress. When there is someone who, as the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) is fond of saying, thinks that acid rain might come from ducks, who then admits it actually comes from emissions from industry, I suppose that is progress. However, it is not something I would get up and dance about. It is not something on which I would hinge the credibility of my approach to Canada-U.S. relations. Yet that appears to be the only thing the Government can point to or, at least, that is what it persistently does point to.

In the final analysis, what needs to be impressed upon all Governments and everyone concerned with this issue is the inevitable and unavoidable economic costs of not doing anything about acid rain. We have to be able to do our bookkeeping in a fundamentally different way than that fragmented, piecemeal way whereby everyone takes into account how their own books look, whether it is Inco, the Province of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick Power or the West Virginia Coal Company, whoever it happens to be. We must find a way of doing the kind of global ecological bookkeeping which enables us to make over-all political decisions about what is in the best interests of the environment and, therefore, in the best interests of the economy. We cannot build a healthy, sustainable and just economic future on the basis of an environment which is slowly but surely being eaten away every day by acid rain.

I do not know if Hon. Members have heard this story, but the nature of environmental destruction is such that it progresses geometrically rather than arithmetically. That is to say that we never know at what point the damage may quadruple, or whatever, in such a way that we are faced with a very different situation from that which we were able to predict only a short time ago. I think we are in that position with respect to forestry, for instance. Five years ago not even West Germany, where it is most advanced, was aware that there was anything like the significant reduction in tree growth. Yet in Canada, it is now established that there is a two-thirds reduction in growth in trees. I ask Hon. Members to imagine, for the sake of trying to understand how these problems develop, a pond which will be progressively covered by lily pads. It starts out with one lily pad and it will take 28 days for that vegetation to cover the pond. At first there is one lily pad and then there are two lily pads, then four, then eight, then 16, then 32, then 64, then 128. The fact is that if it takes 28 days to cover this pond with lily pads, on the twenty-seventh day half the pond will still be left, but we only have one day to go. With many of these environmental questions, we do not know whether we are in the twenty-fifth day, the twenty-sixth day or the twenty-seventh day, and there are people in industry, in politics and elsewhere, both in Canada and the United States, who say: "Do not worry about it. We have half the pond left. What are all you environmentalists worried about?". The way in which environmental problems progress is as I have just described it. I ask people to think about that because that is our situation with respect to acid rain.

I do not know at what day we are now. I do not believe anyone does. However, I do know there are not that many days left before we will have done irreversible damage to our environment.

I spoke earlier about the economic costs, and a good example of that is what is happening in Quebec.

[Translation]

With respect to the impact of acid rains in Quebec, Mr. Speaker, I should like to give as an example the serious situation in that province, particularly concerning the future of sugar bushes. As a result of acid rains, the degradation of forests, and maple groves in particular, is progressing rapidly over the whole Quebec territory. According to the Quebec Agricultural Producers Union, Quebec maple syrup producers have already lost at least two million taps because of acid rains, and such losses are increasing at an alarming rate. APU spokesmen also estimate that the loss is already worth $87 million and, should degradation continue, it will threaten the livelihood of 10,000 Quebec maple syrup producers. Worse still, these figures do not take into account the acid rain impact on the other forest industries, nor on tourism or fisheries.

Mr. Speaker, air pollutants, especially acid rain, are the cause of major social and environmental losses in Quebec and elsewhere in Canada. This Government should take decisive action. First and foremost, this Government, and especially the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), should adopt a more aggressive attitude toward the Reagan administration. Faced with an ecological and economic disaster it is time, for the Prime Minister to explain to Mr. Reagan the bitter resentment felt by all Canadians toward the American's lack of action in the fight against acid rain, and to emphasize the need for the Americans to take concrete action to reduce air pollution affecting Canada.

[English]

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the comments of the Hon. Member about the acid rain situation. I know his own deep feelings and those of the New Democratic Party about this problem. I was pleased as well to hear his acknowledgement that he felt the Government was committed to bringing an end to acid rain and to doing so as quickly as possible. What bothered me, however, were his comments after relating the problem. I think he knows, as all of us know, what the problem is and, although all of us may not be 100 per cent aware of the magnitude of each and every part of the problem, we certainly know that it is an enormous problem.

The real issue facing us, as the Hon. Member said, is how to solve the problem. I did not hear what the Hon. Member or his Party would do, that is not being done at the present time, to solve this problem. I believe he indicated that one of the steps that should be taken is to put our own house in order. He also said that we do not necessarily have to wait until our hands are completely clean. I suppose he is implying that they could be a little dirty at the same time as we are talking to the United States about the question. I think he agrees that we have to put our own house in order at some stage of the game.

He then went on to say, as I understand it, that we should talk to the Americans, that we should try to negotiate with them. If I understood the Hon. Member correctly, he says that we have come to the stage at which it is time to stop talking nicely to the Americans because, in effect, their attitude is not that of a good neighbour or friend. He said that it is time to go back to the method that was used by the previous Liberal Government which kicked and screamed and shouted. In this fashion, he seems to suggest, the next time the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) meets with the President of the United States he should tell him that Canadians are outraged about the acid rain situation in the United States and that he has to do something about it. Perhaps we should do that. Does the Hon. Member truly believe that we will get any further by shouting and screaming and by perhaps calling out our Armed Forces and invading the United States? Does he really think that this is the sort of action that will achieve something? If he does, I would like to hear him tell us what he thinks it will achieve. If he does not, I would like to hear what he and his Party would really do that is any different from what the Government is doing with respect to the acid rain situation in the United States right now.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I must say that I have always had a great deal of respect for the interventions of the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) except when it comes to his most recent comment in which he so caricatured the position of whoever it was he was talking about with respect to calling in the Canadian Army et cetera, that what started out to be not a bad question turned out to be something about which he will be ashamed when he reads it in Hansard tomorrow.

The fact of the matter is that part of the problem with the debate has been the caricaturing of the two approaches taken by the Liberal Government prior to 1984 and the Conservative Government after 1984. It is not the case that the Liberal Government was kicking, screaming, yelling and throwing verbal hand-grenades at Washington. It is not the case that the current Government has done nothing but be obsequious, create false expectations or be totally gullible. There are elements of truth in both those caricatures. But, in the final analysis, they are caricatures.

What we have not considered when we debate what approach will be most successful is whether or not we can be successful. We have not considered whether or not there is not some point at which the Canadian people would appreciate the honest admission of failure and acknowledgement that there may be some things that neither approach will accomplish. Maybe it is in the nature of the United States of America that whether one kicks the Americans in the shins or whether one slaps them on the back they will not do anything that is not in their self-interest. Perhaps that is the conclusion we have to draw first before we can begin to have a real debate about the matter, as opposed to the phoney debate to which the Hon. Member just contributed with respect to whether or not the approach of the present Government or the last Government will work. All of this is based on the assumption that there is some sort of magical button that neither Government has yet found and pushed that will bring the United States into line on these types of issues.

I am sorry to say that the history of the United States is not that there are magical buttons which one can push, either rhetorically, at summits, or on stages singing When Irish Eyes Are Smiling. Nor is there any other measure that might have been taken by the previous Liberal Government. Perhaps what we need to do is to get down to business instead of playing the game that if somebody would only do what the other guy advises them to do we would be so much more successful.

And if the Prime Minister does not come up with some significant advance with respect to acid rain at the summit it is my best political advice to him that he come out and say so. He should say that he did his best for the people of Canada but that he is up against a nation which is known for its self-centredness and for the fact that it is one of the most powerful nations in the world. Powerful nations in the world do not have a history of doing these types of things just because someone asks them to.

Mr. Corbett: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) with a great deal of interest. The Hon. Member normally takes a tack that is credible and sincere. In his opening statements he attacked the sincerity of the Province of New Brunswick—and I will only deal with that province because I am not in a position to comment on the policies of the Province of Nova Scotia. The Acid Rain Committee, as Your Honour may be aware, had the opportunity of listening to a presentation by the Minister of Environment for New Brunswick, the Hon. Robert Jackson, in which he made some points emphatically clear. Unfortunately, because the Hon. Member who just spoke took a tack that is contrary to the facts that are on the record, I am afraid that his entire approach to the issue loses a substantial amount of credibility.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member how he can couple his comments that the New Brunswick Government, along with the Nova Scotia Government, failed to take seriously acid rain agreements when in fact he is fully aware, since he was a member of the committee, that the facts speak for themselves. Indeed, New Brunswick has been a forerunner in acid rain abatement. Emission controls in New Brunswick with respect to the basic case in tonnes in 1980 were set at 215,000 tonnes. The province agreed that it would reduce those emissions to 185,000 tonnes by 1994. The Hon. Member is well aware that that goal was reached by 1983—11 years in advance of the date set in the initial agreement. Yet the Hon. Member says that the Province of New Brunswick has failed to meet its commitments. He says that it is pulling out at the last minute. There has been no indication from the Province of New Brunswick that it intends to pull out at the last minute. What it has done is to signal that there could be some concerns that should be addressed in the future to deal with the problems that we are all faced with in terms of regional disparities and merging parts of the country that we would try to assist economically. I would ask the Hon. Member how he expects his speech here today to stand up and be credible in view of the flagrant points of view that he has signalled being absolutely contrary to the fact that, indeed, New Brunswick has not only led the way but has met its commitment to those emission controls well in advance of its target date.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that what I said in contrary to the facts. I think that there is a well recognized national concern that what the Government of New Brunswick and the New Brunswick Power Commission said before the Special Committee on Acid Rain constitutes a real danger that agreements will not be signed between New Brunswick and the federal Government, for instance, and that that is a concern that is shared by the federal Government and all who are observing the acid rain situation.

I should point out that the Hon. Member who asks me the question is a Member of Parliament from New Brunswick. He feels constrained to defend the position of the Progressive Conservative Government of that province. I suppose that that is an understandable political reality. However, it has nothing to do with the fact that there can be any certainty that the New Brunswick Government will live up to the agreement that it made in 1985—not steps it took before 1985 but the agreement it made in 1985—with the federal Government to do certain things by certain times.

• (1650)

The other day when I listened to the New Brunswick Power Commission, I certainly had the impression that it felt it was no longer willing and, in its judgment, able—which is of course what is at debate—to live up to the agreement that it made, because of changes in the policy of Quebec Hydro. It made a rather elaborate argument about why it could not do what it had said it was going to do. Why the Hon. Member would now stand here and say that it will do it, when the New Brunswick Power Commission came before the committee and made an elaborate argument about why it could not, is something that I will leave to your wisdom, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I wish to begin by saying to the mover of the motion that I genuinely welcome the motion itself, while expressing some regret about its negative tone. Given the fact that the Hon. Member has an obvious commitment to the issue, and given his efforts as a Minister of the Crown in the previous Government to make progress on it, I am sure that he would be the last to want to leave any impression that his Party is playing politics with an issue that has traditionally transcended partisanship.

I remind the Hon. Member and the House of the two landmark reports of the parliamentary Subcommittee on Acid Rain, the one to which I was a contributor entitled Still Waters, and the later document, Time Lost. They received the unanimous support of all Parties in the House.

This motion today could not come at a more delicate time. The Government is at a crucial point in negotiations with the seven eastern provinces from Manitoba to Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland, and with the United States. In the case of the provinces, the Government is in the throes of negotiating individual agreements to implement the commitments they made as separate provinces, and collectively, in February, 1985. With the United States we are working to achieve not only full implementation of the celebrated Special Envoy's recommendations, but also action to substantially reduce the transboundary flow of pollution into Canada from the United States.

Notwithstanding the critical flavour of the motion, and the fact that Members of the House may differ on details as to how to cope with acid rain-causing emissions, I think it can be said there are no differences among us on the over-all objective. There can be no doubt about the supreme importance that the federal Government attaches to finding long-term lasting solutions to acid raid. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has made acid rain not only his number one environmental priority, but also his primary agenda item with the United States among the myriad of bilateral issues with which we as a Government are wrestling. The Prime Minister is the first Canadian head of Government to make acid rain a personal, individual priority. In doing so he has elevated the profile of the issue at home and abroad, including the United States, where public awareness has soared in recent months. I must say that I am a little discouraged that the Prime Minister has not been given more credit, or more encouragement, within the House and the country at large for at least trying.

The mover of the motion may recall a different situation before the Government took office. I do not draw the attention of the House to this point in order to paint caricatures of us as good guys over here, and them the bad guys over there. I am putting today's debate in an historical context. In August, 1980, the Minister of the Environment prior to the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), for whom I had great respect, signed a Memorandum of Intent with the United States. He had the good grace to do it when I was in Lahaina. For all the high hopes at that time little real progress was made on the Memorandum of Intent signed in August, 1980. I am not critical of the Government for its lack of progress with the United States, because the conditions that then made progress difficult continue to prevail now, making it difficult for this Government to move the American elephant even one step on the issue. In June, 1982, only months after the Memorandum of Intent was signed, committing the two Governments to solid action on acid rain, the previous Government broke off formal negotiations with the United States out of sheer frustration. No progress can be made on any issue by any Government when the principals are not present at the negotiating table.

The now Prime Minister assessed the situation while Opposition Leader. He arrived at two conclusions as Prime Minister prior to the March 1985 Shamrock Summit in Quebec with the President of the United States. The Prime Minister stated that if Canada is to make any progress with the United States, it must have the moral authority based on a "clean-hands" approach to acid rain within our own borders.

Literally speaking, we had to put our money where our commitment was. Second, the Prime Minister stated that we needed a process that would bring the United States back to the bargaining table. The process had to recognize existing positions, especially the one taken by the United States at that time namely, that acid rain is not a problem, let alone something that should be elevated to the top of the agenda of the two countries. Needed too was a mechanism for moving the issue forward. With no small amount of effort in the space of two and a half years, the Prime Minister, the Government, and the country, because it is a non-partisan issue, have achieved some real progress on those two objectives.

I wish to deal with what the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), and indeed the Prime Minister, has called our "clean hands" policy. Almost six months after the new Government took office in February, 1985, my predecessor reached what I think we can all agree was an important accord with our colleagues from the seven eastern provinces from Manitoba through to Newfoundland. The eight Governments, including the federal Government itself, agreed to reduce total Canadian sulphur dioxide emissions in Canada to 2.3 million tonnes, which was a 50 per cent reduction based on 1980 figures. Each province agreed to a specific reduction program within its borders as a contribution to the total national emission reduction effort. They agreed to enforce their respective programs through legislation or other fiats, and to do so by 1994 at the latest.

The provincial emission limits were not developed by the federal Government and imposed by it on the participating provinces. The control program was not shoved down their throats. The provincial limits were volunteered by individual provinces as their contribution to a great national cause. I stress the fact that commitments were made by each province as much to one another as to the federal Government.

It was not an agreement between the seven provinces on the one hand and the federal Government on the other. It was an agreement among eight Governments to one another and to the people of Canada. The federal Government was acting as the glue holding together a compact among different Governments and different jurisdictions.

The federal role in the February 1985 accord was clear. We agreed that if financial assistance was deemed necessary for the actions required at non-ferrous smelters, we would take the lead as the federal Government in arranging it.

Why was this commitment limited to smelters? I think that is an important question in the context of the motion we are debating today, especially vis-à-vis Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. It was for two good reasons. First, smelters are responsible for most of the sulphur dioxide emissions in eastern Canada. Second, the provinces clearly indicated themselves that they wanted the lead in dealing with their own utilities. The coal question, the thermal power coal question, revolves around provincial utilities in Nova Scotia, in New Brunswick, and in Ontario, for that matter.

In any event, why should federal tax dollars be used to subsidize profitable provincial utilities, no matter how noble the cause might be? That question was asked by the provinces themselves when the agreement was reached in February, 1985. As the federal Government's part of the bargain, Cabinet agreed to provide up to $150 million to share the costs of smelter modernization-pollution abatement initiatives required to achieve provincial emission limits, as well as a further $150 million for research and development and demonstration projects.

All eight parties to the February 1985 accord knew exactly what they were doing at the time. There was no hidden agenda, no fact concealed, no possible eventuality raised, and no condition attached to the agreement. It would be reprehensible now, 24 months later, for any party or any Government, provincial or federal, to renege on its commitment. There can be no ransom, no changing of terms, no procrastination based upon limp-wristed concerns about what might happen in future if this or that were to happen and specific control measures were thereby made more difficult to achieve.

The eight Governments must all stay the course. If some unforeseen circumstance should make it difficult for one or other of the partners to do so between now and 1994, I am sure the others will want to help it so as to keep the pact intact.

What sense does it make now, in the late winter of 1987, to be worrying about some possible circumstance in 1992 or 1994 which would cause us to rethink what we agreed to in February 1985? For my part, I intend to begin soon signing on behalf of this jurisdiction the formal federal-provincial acid rain abatement agreements necessary to ratify the original February 1985 compact among the different Governments.

Cabinet has authorized allocation of funds for the smelter modernization-pollution abatement program. The cash is there. It has been set aside. It has been committed. Manitoba will have up to $20 million; Ontario, up to $85 million; and Quebec, up to something like $42 million.

Some observers claim that the Atlantic provinces are being denied assistance for the acid rain clean-up. They see the millions of dollars for Manitoba, Ontario, and Quebec and no money for New Brunswick or Nova Scotia, and ask: Aren't we as federal and provincial Governments discriminating against eastern Canada?

I am an Atlantic Canadian. I come from Prince Edward Island. My mother was a British Columbian. I derive no pleasure, no pride, and no satisfaction from the fact that at the eleventh hour we are making some efforts to unravel the ball of yarn.

The truth is that there is no discrimination. Under the Energy, Mines and Resources coal utilization program, about $70 million in federal assistance has already been provided in Atlantic Canada to bring new clean coal technologies to the point where they can be considered for commercial use. Moreover, in New Brunswick the federal Government provided a $100 million grant and a $350 million loan for the construction of the Point Lepreau nuclear station. That has profound implications for the acid rain effort in the country, because nuclear energy is relatively clean in respect of acid rain.

Other examples of federal Government subventions to the Atlantic provinces for programs and projects in this general area could be cited, including a multi-million dollar electricity subsidy program in my own Province of Prince Edward Island.

I now want to turn to the Canada-U.S. situation. As I mentioned earlier, little progress was made by Canada prior to September, 1984 when the current Government was elected. Some well informed commentators have argued that by the summer of 1984, on the eve of the election of the new Government, the acid rain issue had actually slipped backward to about where it was in 1979 before the Memorandum of Intent was signed by the Governments of Canada and the U.S. Such was the situation that we faced when we took office. With all due respect to the Hon. Member for Davenport, the official spokesman on the environment for the Official Opposition, despite his contentions, we have made progress since September, 1984.

When President Reagan endorsed the report of the Special Envoys, the Prime Minister interpreted his support as a commitment by the U.S. administration to seek from Congress the funds necessary to implement the recommendations. Indeed, the President gave a specific commitment to that effect, I think it was at the news conference when the President endorsed the report.

The President's 1988 budget proposals provided the first opportunity for the United States to honour its commitment to Canada concerning the Special Envoys' report. The initiatives outlined, however, fell substantially short of meeting even the minimum requirements.

The Prime Minister and I gave a clear and unequivocal message to Vice-President Bush at our January 21 meeting in Ottawa. We also made clear to the Vice-President what Canada expects from the United States. I want to conclude on this note. To eliminate acid rain damage and to prevent it from happening in future, Canada is seeking a reduction in the transboundary air pollution flow from the United States to two million metric tonnes of sulphur dioxide per year or about 50 per cent of the 1980 level. We want such a reduction on a targeted and scheduled basis.

As a step toward the objective, we are pressing for full implementation of the Special Envoys' recommendations in a way that achieves early reductions in U.S. emissions affecting Canada. Our objective is based both upon sound scientific information and upon existing principles and obligations under international law that nation states must ensure that activities within their jurisdictions do not damage the environment of other states.

Finally, our objective also extends naturally from the Special Envoys' report itself, which contemplated reductions in "the flow of airborne pollutants across our common border". Our commitment to our objective is strong and unwavering. We will do everything we can to make progress in the time leading up to the next summit between the President of the United States and the Prime Minister of Canada and thereafter. The U.S. administration is having in its words "a fresh look" at its response to the President's commitment in light of the vigorous representations made by the Prime Minister and myself and other Cabinet Ministers to the Vice-President during his visit to Ottawa. Our goal cannot be clearer nor our resolve stronger. We want action, and we want it now.

• (1710)

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I have some brief questions to put to the Minister so as to provide as much time for questions by others. First, I wish to inquire why the Hon. Member for Funday—Royal (Mr. Corbett) does not seem to be supporting the Minister. Second, will the policy which the Minister has just announced, namely the cutting of transboundary emissions, be the new policy of the Government of Canada at the next summit? Third, flowing from the debate that has taken place this afternoon, will the Minister provide the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) for April 5 at the summit with a study on the economic damage to the U.S. economy, forests, agriculture, building structure and human health so as to strengthen his hand in demonstrating that inaction on the part of the United States is hurting the U.S. economy?

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, the Member has asked three questions. I will try to deal with them as expeditiously as I can. On the first question, I am not aware of any lack of support from any colleague within my caucus, let alone from the Hon. Member for Fundy—Royal (Mr. Corbett), although obviously we may differ on details, he from the perspective of his province and I from a national perspective.

Second, I do not think the position that I outlined in my remarks today, which echo ones that I have expressed publicly before this occasion, constitute a new position of the Government of Canada. The envoys' report, from memory I think it is on page 4, contemplates a bilateral accord between Canada and the United States, building, more or less in the words of the report, on the spirit of the Memorandum of Intent signed in August, 1980. We have always seen the envoys' process, the report and the recommendations themselves, not as the last step in a long journey but rather as one of the first steps. The scientific evidence is clear. If we are to minimize damage to our ecosystem, to our aquatic life, to our terrestrial features, to our built environment, to our statuary and human health, we have to keep acid rain loadings down to a maximum of 20 kilograms per hectare. If we were to eliminate all sources within Canada of acid rain causing emissions, we still could not achieve that objective because 50 per cent of the emissions affecting Canada cross the border from the United States. In places like the neighborhood of the Hon. Member for Parry Sound—Muskoka (Mr. Darling) the figure may well be higher. Certainly it is higher in the Haliburton areas in Ontario. We are simply taking the science and translating it into policy. We have to have at least a 50 per cent reduction in U.S. flows into Canada to complement those reductions that we are planning within our own country in order to achieve the maximum acceptable acid rain loadings.

Third, I think the suggestion of the Hon. Member that a certain report be made available to the President during his visit with the Prime Minister in April is a good one. I do believe that that report has already been brought to the attention of the senior people in the United States Government. In case it has escaped the attention of the President, I will ensure personally through the Prime Minister that it does not do so in future.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I have two things. I would urge upon the Minister to pay a great deal of attention in the Government's negotiations or discussions with the Americans to the economic approach. Maybe it is a case, as I said before, that the United States of America will not do anything that is not in its self-interest. Because this is probably true, we need to demonstrate just how much it is, not only not in the long term, but in the medium term and even in the short term economic interest of the United States to act with respect to acid rain emissions in its own backyard, both in the Canadian sense and in the American sense of that.

I made the joke earlier about the President at one point thinking that acid rain came from ducks. Just recently we learned, thanks to the Isaac Walton League and a study done by it, that acid rain is actually decimating the population of waterfowl on the East Coast. It is that kind of reality that should be brought home to the Americans.

I have a question for the Minister about the federal-provincial agreements. I must say that I am only now—perhaps I should have seen it earlier—seeing how loose, in a sense, the agreement of 1985 was that was signed at that time. I have a question about those agreements. Were the amounts of money, which the Minister talked about going to provinces, having to do with acid rain abatement of programs for smelters and what not, for instance, the $20 million for Manitoba, outlined in the agreement of 1985, or are these amounts that have been arrived at subsequently? In other words, what are provinces, which were a party to that agreement in 1985, bound to with respect to actual dollars and cents? What were the expectations or details announced at that time?

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member recognizes that I was not the Minister of the Environment at the time the agreement was forged. I can, nevertheless, answer his questions as best I can. There was a general agreement among the federal Government and the seven participating provinces, first, that they would slash their total acid rain emissions by 50 per cent by 1994 based on 1980 figures; second, that each participating province would contribute to the total effort by slashing its emissions according to a specific schedule agreed upon; third, there was an understanding that the $150 million dollar fund at the federal level to assist the provinces, and through the provinces industry, to achieve the respective provincial control programs, would be used for smelter modernization-pollution abatement, not for thermal power plants, let alone ones operated by the utilities. There were no specific dollar figures attached in February, 1985 on a province by province basis. It was understood, however, that the $150 million would be spent by a rough rule of thumb commensurate with the contribution each province made to the problem. In other words, it was clear, because Quebec and Ontario together accounted for about 80 per cent of the total acid rain-causing emissions in the country, their subvention from the $150 million would be in the neighborhood of 80 per cent of the $150 million fund. In the case of Ontario, because its contribution to the problem was greater than that of Quebec, obviously it would be drawing more heavily from the fund. It was that kind of rough rule of thumb.

When I became Minister, the Minister for the Environment in Ontario almost within days of my appointment came to me and said "We, as a Government, are totally committed to honouring our arrangement within the total deal, but before we can forge a specific control program, especially concerning the four major sources of acid rain pollution within Ontario, we need to have some indication from you, that is from the federal Government, as to our share of the $150 million". I, for my part, said, "I cannot very well answer your question until I see your control program and assess what the funding requirement is". It was a chicken and egg kind of thing, a vicious circle, but we agreed on a trade off. Instead of either one of us imposing a requirement on the other, we said, fine, Ontario will rough out its general approach, and for our part we will give Ontario some general idea of how much we think its program would cost and on the basis of an estimated cost what the federal contribution might be toward it from the $150 million. It engaged in that kind of exercise with each of the other provinces. We arrived at the figures I cited, but keep in mind that those are rough figures and in some cases maximums.

In the case of Ontario, the Government is rightly insisting that the prospective recipient industries demonstrate before the fact that they need a subvention either from the province or from the federal Government because neither of us is in the business of lining the pockets of industry.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I too wish to congratulate my colleague for raising this subject which I believe is of great importance to all Canadians. However, it is of particular importance to residents of the Province of Nova Scotia, a part of which I happen to represent.

While listening to the remarks of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), I was somewhat disappointed that he would not be more specific with regard to what he intends to do to ensure that the provincial Governments abide by the agreements and understandings both in terms of the letter of the law and in terms of its spirit. Perhaps we might spend a few moments on why the federal Minister of the Environment is so reluctant to ask his provincial colleagues in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, to mention just two provinces, to proceed.

Many reasons for this could be offered. I do not think any of them are political, but perhaps they may be. Is it because the present administration in the Province of New Brunswick is due to end its term and that the Minister of the Environment sits by, not so much saying nothing but doing nothing? Is he operating on the instructions of the federal Minister representing New Brunswick in the federal Cabinet to cool it so that the Premier of the province may be able to muscle out a few more votes in the next provincial election?

I think the course that will be followed in New Brunswick is rather evident. That administration will come to an end very soon. Perhaps what is more disturbing is that the federal Minister of the Environment has allowed a very serious situation to become even more serious. He has not taken his responsibilities seriously by trying to enforce the agreements made in those two provinces.

One theory has been advanced by others, but not by me because I would not want to be partisan. It is not my nature. One might say, however, that the people of the Province of Nova Scotia, like our good brothers and sisters in the Province of New Brunswick, are in election mode in a preliminary way. Again, the provincial Minister of the Environment, the Hon. Laird Stirling, is travelling to Ottawa, appearing before the committee and crying great tears of concern. He is telling everyone that he is very concerned, that the Premier is concerned, that the caucus is concerned, that the Conservative executive of his association is concerned, that his mother is concerned and that his sister-in-law is concerned, but he does not take any action.

What does the federal Minister of the Environment do when in Nova Scotia? He just nods his head, continues onward and says nothing. Again, and I say this sincerely, not only does he not say anything but he does not do anything to rectify the serious problem we are now facing as a result of acid rain.

We would have hoped that the Province of Nova Scotia, for example, would have been utilizing funds under the coal technology program. That is not being done. We have heard the great platitudes of the Premier of Nova Scotia who, I might add, has on several occasions changed the entire thrust of the energy policy of Nova Scotia, depending upon where he was speaking. When he is down by the Bay of Fundy, he talks about tidal power. When he is in the Halifax-Dartmouth area, he changes his speech and energy thrust to talk about the offshore oil and gas. When he goes to eastern Nova Scotia, he talks about the utilization of coal from Cape Breton.

We all know that the provincial Crown corporation, the Nova Scotia Power Corporation, utilizes a great deal of coal produced by the Cape Breton Development Corporation. The emission standards used in the burning of the coal ought to be enforced by the province. We all hope that the Power Corporation will continue to burn that coal, but there are technologies available that are workable and feasible and are in the long-term interests of the people of Nova Scotia, whether they happen to reside in eastern Nova Scotia, Metropolitan Dartmouth-Halifax or indeed Lunenburg, Yarmouth and areas west. The problem is that the Premier of Nova Scotia has abdicated his responsibilities toward the environment and he is being aided and abetted by the federal Minister of the Environment.

In the Legislature which has just recently opened in Nova Scotia, the provincial Leader of the Liberal Party outlined very clearly where he and his Party stood on the issue of acid rain. I think it would do Hon. Members well, and particularly Hon. Members opposite who represent ridings in the Province of Nova Scotia, to examine very clearly what the Leader of the Official Opposition in the Province of Nova Scotia has said. He has said that acid rain poses an immediate and serious threat to the quality of life and economic well-being of the entire Atlantic region. In Nova Scotia, the effects of acid rain are already being severely felt. Eighteen—not one, not two, not three but 18—former salmon streams in the Province of Nova Scotia are no longer able to sustain fish. That is an appalling number of streams in view of the small size of the Province of Nova Scotia. Another 13 rivers are listed as being endangered. Those rivers are the spawning grounds of the Atlantic salmon and once destroyed, the extinction of the salmon species will not be far behind. Surely as Canadians, whether we reside in Nova Scotia, Ontario, Quebec or the West, we would want to protect and enhance the salmon stocks wherever they may be.

Acid rain which falls in the Maritimes does not originate there but, in my view, in the industrial heartland of the eastern and central regions of North America. The only viable long-term solution to the problem is a major reduction in the industrial emissions which cause acid rain. For this we need international co-operation. Before you seek international co-operation you have to show leadership at home. Leadership is not going to the Canadian Club to amuse different organizations. Leadership is not speaking to different groups across the country. Leadership is taking bold, significant and concrete action which, from time to time, may mean exerting pressure and demanding that the provincial Governments live up to their responsibility as equal partners on this most important issue of acid rain.

The Government is afraid to exercise leadership on this issue both internationally and domestically. Why does the Government refuse to show leadership and demand that the provinces live up to their responsibilities? The conclusion is obvious. The Government does not mean what it said. This is another example of a national Government trying to set national policy with mere platitudes, as it has done, as an analogy, with regional economic development in eradicating inequalities in this country.

The Government says it is very concerned. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) went to Newfoundland in August of last year and said that our economic development programs are not working. We read that in the Throne Speech, and now we have a new Budget which provides not one new cent or one new innovative program to eradicate the problem of regional economic development. The same is true with regard to the environment and acid rain. The Government has done absolutely nothing to effectuate the positive changes which all Canadians want to see.

Our clean lakes, rivers and streams are one of our greatest natural resources. To sit idly by, as the federal Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) is doing, while they are poisoned by industrial contamination would be a criminal act in any jurisdiction in the western world. In Nova Scotia our power plants are almost exclusively generated by coal and oil-fired plants. Our present provincial Government's commitment to reduction of emissions from these plants has been wanting.

For the benefit of members opposite I want to indicate what the official Leader of the Liberal Party in the Province of Nova Scotia said. He said that Nova Scotia has been living up to the letter of agreements concerning reduction of emissions, but has refused to take the lead. He said that a Liberal Government in Nova Scotia would be prepared to show leadership on this issue and serve as an example to other jurisdictions. The technology exists to keep emissions from coal and oil-fired generations to a bare minimum, but that technology costs money. In his opinion the expenditure must be made because the alternative may well be ecologically devastating.

I am glad that my colleague from the New Democratic Party agrees. I am glad once again to see the New Democratic Party following the lead of the Liberal Party in this most important endeavour of trying to control and eradicate the effects of acid rain in this country.

Let us not lose sight of what presently exists. The Government of the Province of Nova Scotia is not doing enough. The federal Government is not helping. It is rewarding the irresponsible behaviour in my Province of Nova Scotia. Economically it is also essential that the acid rain problem be addressed immediately.

Without our inland salmon fishery, the tourist industry in the Provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick would suffer a major set-back. Acid rain also poses a distinct threat to various agricultural sectors and to the long-term health of forest related industries.

Due to the federal Minister's failure to exercise his responsibility, we will not only see an exacerbation of the acid rain problem, but direct and consequential effects of the failure to act on behalf of Canadians. Due to his failure to put pressure on the provincial Governments, a very important sector of our economy, namely the tourism sector, will lose great job-producing potential. The failure of the federal Government to show leadership and make the provincial Governments respond accordingly is telegraphing to all Canadians the message that the Government is not overly concerned about that sector of our economy.

We have heard from numerous sources which have come before different committees of the House of Commons about the effects that acid rain is having on our agricultural sector. In fact, we will hear it again from the Maritime Farmers Council which is meeting tonight. The forest industry is another potential blockbuster employer in the country. If action is not taken immediately by our Governments, that sector, too, will be in great jeopardy.

The Liberal Party, both federally and in the Province of Nova Scotia, advocates immediate remedial action to save our endangered rivers and streams. This can be accomplished through a program of river-bed liming, which has been proven effective in Sweden and in a pilot project on Nova Scotia's south shore. It is not being tried elsewhere in the province as it should be because the province does not want to exercise its responsibility. If that is the case, why does the federal Minister not intervene? The answer is obvious: pending elections. River-bed liming will save the salmon. Admittedly, it is not the long-term solution. However, if we do not save the salmon today, there will not be any left to save in 20 years or more when we finally solve the problem at the source by reducing emissions.

It is very obvious what is taking place. Our tourism, agricultural, forestry and fishery sectors are in danger due to the lack of action by the provincial Government in the Province of Nova Scotia, aided and abetted by the co-operation it is receiving from its federal counterparts in the federal Ministry of the Environment.

The argument about this issue which has been eloquently made by others has not been challenged by the Government, the media or indeed any of the environmentalists. The reason for the lack of action by the provincial Governments of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia and the reason for the irresponsible behaviour by the Minister of the Environment, who is known throughout the Atlantic region as Mr. Clean, is that provincial elections are to take place. If that is not the case, the Premier of New Brunswick and the Premier of Nova Scotia should say so very clearly. However, when this issue is raised, they are never to be found.

It is sad that the provincial Governments have been allowed to abdicate their responsibilities for the serious issue of acid rain and the problems it causes to the sectors of our economy. I hope the Department of the Environment will take concrete steps to ensure that we as Canadians, provincially and federally, exercise our responsibility and live up to our commitments so that we may co-operatively deal with the international situation.

The Minister of the Environment must stop acting like a dutiful sheep to the provincial Governments and accept his clear and concrete responsibility as I am sure the former Minister would have done.

Mrs. Browes: Mr. Speaker, I wish to comment on the Hon. Member's speech. I was disappointed by the tone of his speech and would have expected him to applaud the leadership and sense of responsibility shown at the federal level. The leadership shown by the Government since its election has resulted in the envoys' report and its enforcement, and has resulted in the Department of the Environment and the Minister receiving those commitments from the provincial Governments. It is tragic to hear the Hon. Member talk about lack of leadership and sense of responsibility at the federal level, when our progress in the past two and one-half years has been truly remarkable. There is a political will to clean up acid rain in this country, and it is unacceptable for the Hon. Member to turn this into a partisan issue when all of us should be committed to doing whatever we can.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the eloquent comment made by the Hon. Member. She is obviously as concerned as I am about this matter.

Perhaps I can take this opportunity to inform her of the facts. It is a political issue in the Province of Nova Scotia. It is clear that there is an irresponsible Premier there who refuses to exercise the authority that has been given to him by the people of Nova Scotia to try to eradicate acid rain. Furthermore, when it comes to the issue of acid rain in Nova Scotia, the federal Government should be ashamed and embarrassed to set a foot in that province. It has been grossly negligent with regard to that issue.

Let me give two examples. The Minister has told the Board of Trade in Halifax that the provincial Governments must do more. He speaks about emissions from the Nova Scotia Power Corporation as a result of its burning coal. Yet there are two projects before the federal Ministers responsible for regional industrial expansion and the environment that could greatly assist in lessening the emission of acid rain from the burning of coal.

One project is the synfuel project. However, the former Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion has taken an idiotic partisan attitude toward that synfuel research and development project. With a small amount of money that could be taken from funds already existing in the Governments of Nova Scotia and Canada a pilot project could be initiated dealing with the burning of coal and the lessening of acid rain emissions.

The second example of irresponsibility by the federal Government and the Minister of the Environment concerns the carbogel project that is waiting to be funded by the federal and provincial Governments. Yet the irresponsible Premier of Nova Scotia travels to eastern Nova Scotia to say that his Government has changed its energy policy and will now utilize coal. Everyone in Nova Scotia realizes that the days of transporting coal by ship to burn at a power plant are over because of the acid rain problems.

The federal Government must live up to its responsibility and make its provincial counterpart live up to its responsibility to fund the carbogel and synfuel projects jointly because the power generated by the Nova Scotia Power Corporation is derived from coal. Yet the Government, the Minister and the Prime Minister have done nothing other than talk about their concern for acid rain and their concern about coal.

I thank the Hon. Member for her eloquent comment, which gave me an opportunity to explain the irresponsible behaviour and gross negligence of the Minister and the Premier with regard to a very important problem that could be resolved if there was some political will. The only political will in the House of Commons being exercised by the Minister of the Environment is to maintain Richard Hatfield in New Brunswick and maintain John Buchanan in Nova Scotia. I can assure the Hon. Member on both counts that they will be gone.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I have been listening with interest to the Hon. Member's contribution to this debate.

Mr. Crosbie: You are the only one. You are the first one I heard admit that.

Mr. Angus: It is a change, anyway. The Hon. Member responded to an interjection I made about his Party taking the lead on this issue. If his Party did such a good job, why do we still have the problem?

Mr. Dingwall: I thank the Hon. Member for acknowledging the contribution I have made to this debate. The answer to the question is obvious. I do not know of a Government, provincially, federally or municipally, which would say that an acid rain problem could be resolved overnight. I did not even suggest it in debate. What I am suggesting is that there are levers of power in this country, both provincially and federally, which have to be exercised in order to eradicate the problem. Unfortunately, the present administration does not see fit to accept those responsibilities.

• (1750)

In Nova Scotia, with which I am very familiar, we did fund the synfuels project, as one example, so that the emissions from coal would be reduced and reduced substantially. The Tories cut it off. We did fund the carbogel project at the Nova Scotia Power Corporation so that the emissions from coal, again, would be reduced. What have the Tories done? They have cut it off. We did have pilot projects in all the Atlantic regions with regard to the utilization of coal, because it was noted time and time again by the federal Ministry of the Environment that the emissions from coal were a problem. There were pilot projects in New Brunswick in the Colson Cove. There were pilot projects in other parts of Nova Scotia. In fact, even federal and provincial institutions in the Atlantic region did carry out trial projects as well. So there were very concrete and specific initiatives taken by the previous administration. However, that is not the problem. The problem today is that there is no political will being exercised by the federal Government, nor the provincial Governments of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, to address this very serious problem.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, let me start my contribution to the debate today with some bad news. We have already received the answer from some American representatives to the motion today. The motion reads in part:

> That this House also deplores the fact that, two years after the Quebec summit meeting, no benefits to Canada in the form of SO2 emission reductions in the United States have materialized; and
> That, therefore, this House urges the government to:
> (2) request at the April, 1987 summit meeting that the United States reduce SO2 emissions over the Canadian border in a significant manner.

This afternoon CBC Radio at five o'clock ran a story which indicates that the majority leader in the Senate of the United States, Senator Byrd from West Virginia, said that the United States should slow down on its plans for legislation to deal with acid rain. He basically indicated, and I am paraphrasing him, that the case had not been yet proven that SO2 emissions were the cause of acid rain and that acid rain, in turn, was causing the problems created both in Canada and in the United States. Lo and behold, he said we have to put more money into research. That is a response from the man whose Party controls the Senate of the United States, and which he leads. He is now parroting the line taken by the President of the United States that more money is needed for research, as opposed to what we believe in this House that more action is needed to do something about the problem.

I would like to focus on a couple of areas during my participation in this debate today. From time to time I have made reference to my previous incarnation as a provincial Member in the Ontario House. Once again I find myself dealing with a topic I dealt with back in 1975-76. That, of course, is the question of the impact of American SO2 emissions on Canada and particularly on northwestern Ontario. One of the elements I raised at that time, and I was a voice in the wilderness, was the impact of SO2 emissions on the health of human beings.

The District Health Council in my community of Thunder Bay did a study around 1975 and discovered that we had a higher than normal incidence of respiratory disease, not necessarily deaths but diseases of the respiratory system including the lungs. There were those of us who believed at the time that part of the reason for that difference was the apparently high levels of SO2 emissions from a couple of our pulp and paper mills and later from an Ontario hydro coal-fired generating station. I did some research in terms of follow-up and discovered back then, thanks, quite frankly, to the environmental protection agency office out of Duluth, Minnesota, a study conducted in Allegheny County. That is part of the Pittsburgh area. Although I do not have the document handy and I cannot quote the exact figures, the result of that study was to show the direct relationship between SO2 emissions and the health cost in that particular county in the United States. What the study found was that for every 1 per cent reduction in SO2 emissions, there was a corresponding savings in terms of American dollars spent on medical aid. The study proved that the benefits of reducing SO2 and other airborne contaminants went far beyond the question of saving lakes from acidification and saving our forests, whether it be the maple sugar forests in Quebec or the softwood and hardwood forests in Ontario and elsewhere, from reduced growth. It showed that there was clearly an impact on the health of human beings. I would suggest, and I do not have the specifics to use as verification, that the people who would be affected would be our seniors, our young children and those in other age groups who are more susceptible than others to environmental airborne contaminants.

What we are asking the American Government to do, while clearly of benefit to us here in Canada, is probably of even greater benefit to its own citizens. If by reducing those SO2 emissions, the Americans can improve the health of their citizens and reduce the financial burden on their health care system, it is in their best interests. Of course it is in our best interests as well.

I think in a lot of ways Canada as a whole, and I am thinking about the federal as well as the provincial context, has taken those first important steps. We in this country have said to our industries that we have to start cleaning up. We may feel strongly that we have to push them harder, further and faster but, compared to the United States, we have done a fantastic job. Once again in our negotiations, whether by the current federal Government or the previous federal Government, or the provincial Governments, we have not done our job in terms of getting the same deal out of the United States. We have not gone the extra step to not only demand but ensure that promises are actually followed through with dollars and cents. It is clear that the President of the United States has not lived up to his commitment to the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney). He has not ensured that Congress has been provided with the amounts of money necessary to pay for the reductions.

• (1800)

The Americans are still listening to the coal lobby. They are still focusing on one part of their country at the expense of another large part of it, and at the expense of the Canadian environment. That has to change. They have to understand that this is not just a Canada-U.S. fight. They must understand that this is a fight between one part of America and another part of America. They have to move quickly, on the one hand, to put in place the necessary reductions and, on the other, to ensure that for those industries directly affected replacement mechanisms are available for those workers who may be displaced. Appropriate assistance must be given to keep these industries intact in order that economies of communities do not suffer. We must do the same in Canada. We can no longer approach the situation in a black and white fashion. We can no longer say that because it is a job we have to keep it regardless of the expense. I think we can have it both ways. We have shown that in Canada, and it is time that the United States agreed to it.

I would like to come back to the health problem. As I mentioned at the beginning of my comments, my interest in the health issue goes back to 1975, which is 12 years ago. A recent report in the United States brought down by the Environmental Protection Agency was covered in an article in The New York Times of February 19, 1987. The report was requested by Lee M. Thomas, Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, in an effort to review its priorities. It was prepared by 75 of the agency's senior professional staff members. I would now like to quote part of the article which states:

> The report found that the problems posing the greatest overall risk to human health and the environment in the United States included such conventional air pollutants as sulfur and lead, the destruction of ozone in the atmosphere by man-made chemicals and the risk from pesticides, especially pesticide residues on foods.

Clearly, this report confirms what the Allegheny County study stated back in the 1970s. It also confirms the studies done with respect to the great fogs of London in terms of the impact on the human population. I say to Hon. Members regardless of what Canada and the United States may want to talk about, the United States now has a document which very clearly states that the health of the people of the United States is at risk. Quite clearly it confirms that the health of Canadians is also at risk because of continuing acid rain emissions in this country. They too will have an impact on our health care delivery system.

We hear provincial Governments these days talking about the need to reduce the demand on health care services, and some have imposed user fees. Others try to curtail access. But we could do so much to ease the burden on our health care delivery system in Canada if we would just make a bigger dent in acid rain emissions on both sides of the border. This is clearly an important focus. It is one on which Canadians are in agreement with us.

Results of recent polls indicate that the vast majority of the Canadian public—I believe it is well over two-thirds, if not higher—believe that the environment is the major issue before us today. It is the one about which they are the most concerned. They believe it is important not only to protect our own health, but they want to see our lakes and rivers protected. They do not want to see them killed. They do not want to see fish populations killed off. They do not want to see our forests slowed down in growth. Quite frankly, we cannot afford it. We have not been reforesting as we should have been. In some places there is a danger that we will run out. We are doing research to try to accelerate growth so that the sustainable yield can be improved upon and so that the turn-around time between planting and harvesting can be improved to keep some of our communities viable. The last thing we want to hear is that acid rain is slowing down this growth.

Acid rain also has an impact on our wildlife in that it gets into the food-chain. Canadians are concerned about this. It is not as if Parliament is going against the grain of the Canadian people by holding back. The people of Canada want us to move forward. They want us to move forward on our own soil. They want us to push the American Government to move forward in the United States. We are of one continent and, yes, we have the longest undefended border in the world. However, acid rain keeps blowing north. The only way we can deal with it is through political pressure from this side of the border and by pressure brought to bear by the people of the United States on their own administration. They must stand up and be counted. They must ensure that their legislators listen to them in the same way that we should be doing here in Canada.

This is an appropriate moment for me to sit down and perhaps respond to any questions that Hon. Members may have.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Desjardins), for questions or comments.

Mr. Desjardins: Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to what was said by the Hon. Member opposite who spoke to the motion before the House today. His speech focussed mainly on the second part of the motion referring to the failure of the United States to take action on acid rain.

I can assure the Hon. Member that like him, I am very much aware of the health concerns of people living in areas where the effects of acid rain are being felt. I represent the region of Abitibi-Témiscamingue where we have the Noranda mine, and people in their fifties and sixties often have to leave the area because of respiratory diseases. I represent a region that used to be a hunting and fishing paradise, but today, hundreds of lakes are contaminated and our forests are deteriorating. When we realize how important our forests are to the economy of this area, the situation is far from reassuring.

Mr. Speaker, I went into politics for the reasons mentioned by the Hon. Member. I felt that as a citizen, I had certain responsibilities. I wanted things to change, and I felt that the quality of life of my fellow citizens and the quality of our lakes, forests and soils should be one of the responsibilities of our governments. In fact, I welcome this opportunity today to mention that the federal Government has made commitments that will result in $120 million being invested in my riding so that Noranda Mines can install pollution control devices. For future generations, this is a very important step.

My question to the Hon. Member is this: Since his comments dealt with the second part of the motion, would he now have the honesty, as many others have had today, to recognize that, since September 1984, this Government has done more in the fight against acid rain than the previous Liberal Governments, that this Government has set target dates, budgets and SO2 emission reduction figures of 50 per cent, and that the provinces will have to do what they are asked? Will he recognize that the internal measures taken by this Government to fight acid rain are among the most innovative in industrialized countries and certainly much more progressive than what the previous Liberal Government had done?

• (1810)

[English]

Mr. Angus: I wish to thank the Hon. Member for his comments and his question. I am sorry to hear that seniors have been forced to leave his area because of the environment that has been created through industrial development. I know of many people from northwestern Ontario who ended up in Arizona because a doctor told them to go to a place where they can breathe.

There is a situation in one part of my riding called Westport where there is a cold inversion. On extremely cold days when the temperature is minus 30 or 35, a plume from one of the paper mills blankets a residential area. That is the type of thing I am concerned about. I know that the Hon. Member sees the same situation in his own riding.

In response to the Hon. Member's question, I will not use the excuse that I was not here during the previous administration. I was watching it, and some would say that I was a perennial candidate. I would say that there is a difference, and that there has been an improvement. Quite frankly, I have not followed this issue with the same interest as my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), although it is one of those issues that I keep my eye on from a distance. I do not believe that enough has been done, although I will admit that there has been some improvement. We must do more, for example like what the Government has done with Noranda in terms of making sure that it can clean up its act. It is one thing to say "thou must", but if the tools are not provided at an acceptable price to the Canadian people, we cannot do our own job within Canada.

Mr. Redway: I listened with interest to the Hon. Member and his comments relating to the acid rain situation. His comments were illustrated with an oral picture that indicated the problems. All of us share his concerns, and these concerns are common throughout the House and the country. What all of us have a problem with is what can be done that is not presently being done to try to come to grips with this problem?

In his remarks, the Hon. Member said that what had to be done in both the United States and here was the application of political pressure. I am sure that the Hon. Member will agree that there has been a great deal of political pressure exerted on the United States from Canada in one form or another, sometimes by trying to be friendly and negotiate, and sometimes by raising our voice or shaking our fist. I wish to know if the Hon. Member has some other suggestions as to what can be done in the way of political pressure. It is all right to stand in the House and talk about it, use generalities and say that we need more political pressure. But specifically what would the Hon. Member suggest to move us along in this process closer to the ultimate solution, rather than just talking in terms of generalities, of which all of us are guilty?

Mr. Angus: I wish to respond to the Hon. Member's intervention by making two comments. First, the Government must stop pretending that there is progress when there is not. Our position will be undermined with that type of information. More specifically, the Government of Canada could bypass the American administration and go directly to the people of the United States. The Government could pinpoint those crucial areas that are under the acid rain cloud, and talk to the people directly through a media campaign on the radio, in the newspaper, on television, or advertisements, and point out its own studies relating to the health impact, and the impact on the environment of the United States. We could have our embassy staff in Washington arrange to go to those crucial areas and have the American people start lobbying their Representatives and Senators. There is an American election coming up. The primary trail has now started. We should have our people priming Americans who are concerned with the issue to ask those potential presidential candidates where they stand and push them in a direction that will mean better things for both Canada and the United States. We can do that. We have the ability, and it is not against the law. I think we have the responsibility.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Desjardins) for a question or comment.

Mr. Desjardins: Mr. Speaker, my question to the Hon. Member is this: Does he agree that, in the case of Newfoundland and Nova Scotia, where the polluters are public corporations, the federal Government should not have to finance the clean-up and that the provinces themselves should ensure that their polluting corporations pay for their own clean-up?

[English]

Mr. Angus: Clearly we should start with the premise that the responsibility starts with the owner of a company, whether it is a power company, a steel company, or any company that has emissions. On the other hand, it is people in other areas who are on the receiving end of what comes out of those stacks. Is there not a rationale for the cost of that clean-up being spread? This has been part of the debate in the United States as to who should pay. Should it be only the coal-producing states or the coal-producing areas that pay? Should it be those taxpayers who live within the area that is being hit by acid rain, or should it be the country as a whole? The same debate must occur here. I will give this example. In Ontario we have an opportunity to replace high sulphur American coal with low sulphur western Canadian coal which is mined in British Columbia, Alberta, and Saskatchewan. It could be railed through those provinces, plus Manitoba, into Ontario. It could be handled in Thunder Bay, loaded on to a ship, and floated down the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Seaway to hydro plants in southern Ontario.

• (1820)

That would allow Ontario Hydro to reduce its emissions, assuming it decides to go for it. Should it only be the consumers of Ontario Hydro who pay for it, or should the citizens of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario, and Quebec, because they will receive a benefit from it through reduced acid rain emissions, share the load? That is the fundamental question with which the Government must deal in terms of the committee struck by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), along with some of the provinces and some of the industry. They will have to come to grips with it.

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate today concerning acid rain and in response to the motion of the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). It is an important issue of public interest.

It was interesting to hear a previous speaker mention going directly to the American people on the issue. We have had excellent leadership at the federal level from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), from the Minister, from the Department, and from the Acid Rain Special Committee. The acid rain committee met today with about 14 journalists from the United States. It was an excellent thing to do. The issue is important in our own press, but it seems that it is not sufficiently stated in the American press to stimulate interest and a political will for the American Government to do something. Most of us have friends or relatives living in the United States. In speaking with my sister who lives in Michigan a week or so ago, I told her about our interest, our work, and our commitment to the issue. I also told her how disappointed we were with the administration of the United States. She said: "If you are that concerned, I will phone my Congressman and my Senator". I hope thousands and thousands of American citizens will phone their Congressmen and Senators so that the American Government will keep the commitment it made some two years ago.

The federal Government has established a clear objective for resolving the acid rain problem. Acid deposition must be reduced to less than 20 kilograms per hectare per year in all vulnerable areas. This objective is derived from extensive scientific observation of the effects of acid rain in Canada and is supported by scientific information from other countries.

To achieve the objective, total Canadian sulphur dioxide emissions from the Saskatchewan-Manitoba border eastward must be reduced to 2.3 million tonnes per year or 50 per cent of the 1980 level. Also, the transboundary flow of sulphur dioxide from the United States into eastern Canada must be reduced to about two million tonnes or about 50 per cent of the 1980 level.

The Canadian acid rain abatement program is well under way. Quebec and Ontario have already introduced regulatory programs. Quebec will achieve emission reductions of 45 per cent by 1990. Ontario will achieve its emission reduction of 60 per cent, or 10 per cent more than it was originally committed to, by 1994. Manitoba recently issued draft regulations to achieve its 25 per cent reduction in emissions by 1994.

Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island have air pollution control initiatives which will achieve the 25 per cent and 16 per cent reductions required respectively by 1994. Regulatory and program measures to achieve more than 90 per cent of the emission reductions under the Canadian acid rain abatement program are now in place.

The Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) is now in the process of negotiating formal federal-provincial acid rain abatement agreements to ratify and make binding this part among Governments. There can be no backsliding from the commitments which have been made. All eight Governments must show their clear determination to deliver.

The federal Government has done so. Let me cite a few examples. Through the Industrial and Regional Development Program of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, the federal Government has assisted Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting in Manitoba to demonstrate commercially a new process which would reduce emissions from the plant by about 35 per cent. Under the same program, Inco and Falconbridge in Ontario are being assisted in the commercial demonstration of technologies in time for the December 1988 decisions called for in Ontario's regulations. To date, only Noranda has submitted a request for financial assistance for smelter modernization-pollution abatement. A cost sharing agreement with Quebec and Noranda is expected to be concluded shortly.

Substantial progress has also been made under the coal utilization demonstration program of Energy, Mines and Resources. Alternative coal combustion systems, including fluid bed combustion, coal-water mixtures, coal preparation and improved burner systems, have advanced to the point where they can be considered for commercial use.

The federal Government's research and monitoring program has also produced some significant findings. Studies in Nova Scotia have shown that the emission reductions, which have taken place over the past 15 years or so, have cut the acid deposition in some areas to less than 20 kilograms per hectare per year—the level required under the abatement program. The rivers in those areas are starting to show signs of chemical recovery. Not only is this good news, but it clearly demonstrates Canada is on the right track with its abatement program and objectives.

Since the western coal task force released its report in August 1986, there has been considerable discussion in a variety of forums on the subject of using more western Canadian coal to reduce Ontario Hydro's acid gas emissions.

Environment Canada recognizes that low sulphur western coal has the potential to reduce emissions substantially. Because there would be considerable benefits to the country, we are encouraged to see that Ontario Hydro is committed to full consideration of the role western coal could play in its emission reduction plans.

We are encouraged that the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) met just this week with Premier Peterson. They have agreed to establish a committee involving themselves and the western Premiers. The purpose will be to explore opportunities for improving the economic competitiveness of western coal in Ontario. I applaud the initiative of the Deputy Prime Minister in this particular regard.

Not only will the Canadian acid rain abatement program reduce the damage Canada is doing to itself, it will also reduce the transboundary flow of air pollution from Canada into the eastern United States. In 1980 the transboundary flow from Canada to the United States was about 1.5 million tonnes. By 1994 this will be reduced to about 0.8 million tonnes. This should help alleviate some of the damage being caused in the northeastern United States. In the Adirondacks, for instance, as much as 25 per cent of the acid rain which falls is of Canadian origin. By significantly reducing our contribution to acid rain damage in these areas, Canada is honouring its international obligation not to pollute other countries to the extent of injury to human health or property.

More than half of the acid deposition in eastern Canada comes from U.S. emissions. Areas such as Muskoka-Haliburton through to Quebec City receive about three-quarters of their acid deposition from the United States. In 1980, about four million tonnes of sulphur dioxide flowed across the border into eastern Canada. In order that acid rain damage be eliminated, Canada is seeking a reduction in the transboundary air pollution flow to about 2 million tonnes of sulphur dioxide per year and implementation of a U.S. program to reduce the transboundary flows to this level on a targeted and scheduled basis.

What the United States does to honour its commitment and how it does it are its own legitimate domestic decisions. Whether the transboundary flows are reduced to the level required is Canada's business. With this in mind, we should judge the extent of our satisfaction with U.S. actions not by dollars spent or technology used, however important that is, but rather by what really matters, reductions in transboundary flows of air pollution.

Canada and the United States have a long and outstanding history of resolving transboundary environmental problems. The special envoys on acid raid put what needed to be done rather well in their report, and I quote:

> The foundations of that response—the joint statement and the memorandum of intent—are already in place. A precedent for that response already exists in the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement.

What remains is to borrow from that precedent and build upon those foundations a bilateral accord which will jointly address a common problem in the best tradition of U.S.-Canadian environmental relations. We know exactly what should be in that accord and we are prepared to meet our obligations to the United States. We want the Americans to do likewise.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I notice that the Parliamentary Secretary in indicating progress being made with the provinces and the cuts implemented by each of them did not include any reference to Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. Did I miss something or did she omit those two provinces and, if so, why?

Mrs. Browes: Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak to that particular issue because the commitments that have been made with the federal Government are ones that we believe the provinces should maintain. As the federal Minister of the Environment said just a few moments ago in this House, we believe the provinces should keep those commitments and we will do everything in our power to make sure that happens.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there are times when I wish I was paid by the page, and today is one of them. I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to Nos. 332-522 to 332-557 inclusive, 332-567 to 332-574 inclusive, 332-578 to 332-591 inclusive, 332-594 to 332-601 inclusive, 332-604 to 332-611 inclusive, 332-613 to 332-618 inclusive, 332-624, 332-625, 332-668 to 332-671 inclusive, 332-678 to 332-682 inclusive, 332-686 to 332-701 inclusive, 332-703, 332-704, 332-717, 332-729 to 332-735 inclusive, 332-766 to 332-768 inclusive, 332-855 to 332-867 inclusive, 332-879 to 332-881 inclusive, 332-934 to 332-944 inclusive, 332-1006 to 332-1014 inclusive, 332-1113 to 332-1115 inclusive, and 332-1118 to 332-1122 inclusive.

PATENT ACT

PRESENTATION OF REPORT OF LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, as the Chairman of the Legislative Committee on Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, I have the honour to present the Bill to the House of Commons with amendments. Your committee, Mr. Speaker, is recommending about 30 amendments, many of which are of a technical nature.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is appropriate that, on the same day as the committee reports on Bill C-22, I have an opportunity to present a petition on behalf of many Canadians from British Columbia who are calling upon the Government to reconsider the changes it is proposing to the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs. The petitioners believe that the increase in drug prices for average Canadian consumers will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. They are calling upon the Government to reconsider its decision to proceed with Bill C-22.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition from Newfoundland which indicates concern about fishermen in Canada who depend upon unemployment insurance to survive the long winter months. The petitioners recognize the economic pressures on fishermen created by shorter seasons and lower prices and that unemployment insurance benefits have become critical for their survival and that of their families. They are calling upon Parliament to ensure that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) reject any recommendation which would deprive fishermen of their right to collect unemployment insurance and to enter into consultations with all representatives of fishermen in Canada in order that improvements to the program offered to fishermen be made.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, it is timely, after having just heard that the Bill to change the drug patent laws in Canada has cleared committee and will be back in this House for debate, to present petitions from hundreds of my constituents who responded to the opportunity to petition which was afforded them through my householder. I take great pleasure in presenting the names of these hundreds of my constituents who are opposed to the federal Government's plans to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs. The petitioners believe that these changes will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. Therefore, they call upon Parliament to reject these proposals. We hope against hope that in the coming days and weeks during third reading stage we will be able to change the Government's mind on this very unfortunate piece of legislation.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 106. The petition relates to the changes to the Patent Act which have now been reported from committee. The petitioners express their concern that the Government is changing the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs. They believe that these changes will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers, will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs, and will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis. The petitioners believe that the Government is giving concessions to the United States at the expense of average Canadians as a result of the free trade negotiations. The petitioners are from a number of communities in my riding including The Pas, Thompson, Flin Flon, Lynn Lake and Leaf Rapids. They are very concerned that the committee was not allowed to travel and hear from ordinary Canadians.

• (1110)

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present petitions with several hundred names from various communities throughout the Algoma—Manitoulin area which call upon the Government to withdraw its legislation relating to the Patent Act which will have the effect of increasing drug costs and provincial medicare programs, and generally working a hardship on low-income families, those who are ill and those who do not have forms of insurance to cover health care costs.

CANADA POST—OPPOSITION TO CLOSURE OF RURAL POST OFFICES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I also have several other petitions calling upon the Government to reinstate the full postal service in rural communities and not close or privatize the post offices as is being proposed for dozens of post offices throughout the Algoma—Manitoulin area.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I have the honour to present three petitions signed by residents of Winnipeg and various towns in Manitoba including Teulon, Stonewall, Balmoral, Petersfield, Deloraine, Goodlands and Gimli. The petitioners say that the federal Government's proposal to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. Therefore, they pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

We intend to debate this issue at considerable length at report stage and third reading.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour to present a petition signed by a number of residents of the area surrounding my constituency. The petition consists of another group of names to be added to the hundreds of other petitioners from my constituency.

The petitioners wish to tell the federal Government that the changes to the Patent Act will increase the cost of prescription drugs and, therefore, they call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase the costs of drugs to Canadians.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition with respect to a different area. The petitioners pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) rejects any recommendations that would deprive fishermen of their right to collect unemployment insurance, and enters into consultation with representatives of the fishermen of Canada in order that improvement to the program offered to fishermen is made.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): I rise to present a different set of petitions having to do with the anxiety of the fishermen that the Government is seriously thinking of taking away their right to collect unemployment insurance. They are of the view that unemployment insurance must be improved so it can better meet the needs of those who risk their lives to provide food for Canadians and for the world market which is so important to this nation's economy. They, therefore, call upon Parliament to ensure that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) rejects any recommendation which would deprive fishermen of their right to collect unemployment insurance, and to enter into consultations with all representatives of fishermen in Canada in order that improvements are made to the program offered to fishermen.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would just like to bring to the attention of Hon. Members again that if they are going to present petitions they should present them all at the same time. I would hope that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) would do that the next time around.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In keeping with your comments, we all recognize that the presenting of petitions is an ancient and honoured parliamentary tradition. I believe that Hon. Members of this House would do well to honour the tradition that one presents the petitions which are presented to one to present in the House and not shuffles them around the Chamber in the middle of the comments you just made so that another person could be put up to give a petition. I have absolutely no difficulty with any Member of Parliament presenting a petition which has been given to that Hon. Member to present. However, I find it offensive to have a pile of petitions brought into the Chamber and shuffled from one Member of the New Democratic Party to another.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I believe the Parliamentary Secretary was referring to me who passed along a sheaf of petitions to my hon. friend from Comox—Powell River. I think if the Parliamentary Secretary were to look actually at the petitions the Hon. Member will present, he would find they are actually in his name. I was asked to bring the petitions into the Chamber to present to the Hon. Member because he was previously involved with a committee meeting. Therefore, he will be presenting his petition. It is in his name and it is a petition which was sent to him for presentation.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, of course, my House Leader, as always, is eloquent on these matters and absolutely factual even when there are errors on the part of the Parliamentary Secretary.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I too have the honour to present petitions which stand in my name on the issue of the Government's intention to remove unemployment insurance benefits from fishermen, thereby depriving them of the substantial income required by fishing families all across Canada. The petitioners urge that the Government provide them with relief from this nefarious plot to remove basically a substantial part of their family income.

I too would join with many colleagues in the House in support of the petitions which urge that unemployment insurance be provided to fishermen in a fair and equitable way.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, under the circumstances I accept fully the explanation of the House Leader of the New Democratic Party and withdraw my comments with respect to this particular incident.

Motions

SECRETARY OF STATE

AUTHORIZATION TO TRAVEL FOR STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have two motions to present which have been discussed with the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party and I will place them separately, if I may.

I should like at this time to move that the Standing Committee on Secretary of State be authorized to adjourn from place to place within Canada, a total of seven days, between March 23 and April 15, 1987, in relation to its mandate under Standing Order 96(2) to inquire into the Women's Program with the Secretary of State Department, and that the necessary staff accompany the committee.

Motion agreed to.

TRANSPORT

AUTHORIZATION TO TRAVEL FOR STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would also move that the Standing Committee on Transport, pursuant to its Orders of Reference dated Wednesday, February 4, 1987, and Wednesday, February 11, 1987, be authorized to adjourn from place to place within Canada for a period of two weeks and that the necessary staff accompany the committee.

• (1120)

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. As Whip of the Liberal Party I have no difficulty with the Parliamentary Secretary's first motion. He knows that when we are specific in motions with respect to making certain travel arrangements Whips of all Parties have no difficulties in concurring. However, with respect to the Hon. Member's second motion I have some difficulty.

I would like to make the point that authority is requested for the committee to adjourn from place to place within Canada for a period of two weeks. There are no dates attached to the motion, whereas in the first motion there were some dates. I will give my consent today. However, I would like the Parliamentary Secretary to ask committee chairpersons, and committees in general, when they want to travel across Canada not to make motions open-ended in terms of dates. It would be better if we had arrangements which set out specific dates. In this way it would be much easier for us to work in the House and to have our Members present when they are needed.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend makes an excellent point. I think it would be to the benefit of all Members of the House, especially those in the position of Whip. I will take the Hon. Member's point and carry it forward to committee chairpersons.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPERS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all the questions on the Order Paper be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House that all questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PRAIRIE GRAIN ADVANCE PAYMENTS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-12, an Act to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, as reported (without amendment) from a legislative committee.

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)) moved that Bill C-12 be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Mayer moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few brief words on the situation facing Canadian grain producers. I would then like to make some comments on the Bill itself.

I do not think it is any secret that international grain prices are extremely depressed. If one considers what has been happening around the world, one realizes that there is an excess amount of product over what has come to be called "real demand". If one looks at the producing countries which are causing the problem, one will see, at least in my view, that it is being caused by the European community. Through its agricultural policy the European community has been subsidizing agriculture significantly since the Treaty of Rome. As a result of not placing any limits on over-all production, very large subsidies have caused production to increase dramatically. Not only have levels been very much of an incentive to production, but the fact that prices paid to producers in Europe have been constant has also been an incentive to produce. Any businessman or farmer knows that if one can plan on a year-by-year basis on certainty of prices, then that in itself, as well as the fact that one does not have to be concerned about varying prices, is an incentive to production. If we consider the over-all level of prices and the price support system which the Europeans have in place, we will see that that price level is also a very substantial incentive to producers in Europe to increase their over-all production.

I would now like to provide Hon. Members with two examples of this which I think make the point. If we consider the southern Prairies in our country, we see that we produce very high quality Durum wheat. It is probably second to none in the world. It is recognized around the world as being of very high quality. In the current crop year, our producers are receiving $130 per tonne as an initial payment. European producers are receiving $480 per tonne, over three times what the Canadian producer is receiving. If we do our arithmetic and translate that figure into Canadian dollars, we see that the Europeans are receiving about $13 a bushel for Durum wheat.

In terms of the barley market internationally, Europeans are one of our major competitors. They produce considerable quantities of barley for export. Presently, our producers are receiving $80 per tonne as an initial payment. If we look to what is happening in Europe, we see that European prices are over three times what the Canadian producers are receiving. The Europeans are receiving $285 per tonne. The price varies from time to time, but that is the general level. So when we compare $80 per tonne to $285 per tonne, we see that that is a very attractive price as compared to what Canadian producers are receiving.

With respect to other commodities, almost every agricultural commodity that Europe produces is now in a surplus position. For example, with respect to beef, Canada has a high quality beef herd. As far as Canadian beef producers are concerned, there is probably a gene pool in terms of Canadian beef which is second to none around the world. If we consider Europe, we see that through incentives to production Europe has gone from being a net importer of something in the order of 300,000 tonnes of beef in 1978 to being the largest exporter in 1984. If we consider what Europe exported last year, we see that Europeans exported something in the order of 600,000 tonnes of beef. In addition, they have about 700,000 tonnes of beef in storage, according to the figures that we have seen. That is a tremendous amount of product in storage for which there is no apparent market at the price that the Europeans are paying to produce it.

If we talk about quantity of products, again, we should look at what is happening with respect to wheat. As recently as 1977, just 10 years ago, Europe was a net importer of wheat to the tune of about 24 million tonnes. With respect to last year, as far as Europe is concerned, it was a net exporter of wheat to the tune of close to 15 million tonnes. It has gone in a very short period of time from being a major importer to being a major exporter. In fact, it is now the third largest exporter of wheat in the world after the United States and Canada. I can also talk about Japan in this vein. Japan is another country which protects its agricultural sector from the realities of the world market-place.

This is a very difficult situation that we face. What we have been doing as a Government is to take two deliberate approaches. If we are to find a lasting solution to the problem, it must be found at the international level. This is why Canada has been placing so much emphasis on talks with respect to agricultural products and trade problems internationally. It was our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who at the last summit placed agriculture on the agenda. That is why we have been so concerned about having agriculture form part of the GATT agenda and why we have been so supportive of the GATT process. We have done this so that this time around at the GATT discussions agriculture will be included as a main agenda item. This is why we are pursuing every other international meeting in which we are involved, pursuing it in the sense that we want to have agriculture as part of the discussions because it is a very major problem.

• (1130)

We also make sure that we sell our grain and oilseeds. Last year Canada increased its world share of the wheat market. In the present crop year we have the prospect of again increasing exports. In order to do that, we are suffering severe price penalties because the price is extremely low. We all know how serious the situation is. We have been attempting to deal with the situation through some direct government involvement. Some Acts have been amended to allow for stabilization money to be made available sooner. The Western Grain Stabilization Act was put through the House two years ago to allow for interim payments under that Act prior to spring seeding. It was supported by all Parties in the House, and it has been well received by producers.

The Government has removed the tax on farm fuel. Under the Special Canadian Grains Program we are at present paying out the largest financial support program in the history of the country, as far as farmers are concerned.

The Bill in front of us provides for cash advances to farmers in the Wheat Board region who have harvested their grain but have not had an opportunity to sell it. This will be of assistance to farmers in providing them cash more quickly than if they had to wait for delivery opportunities and quotas to open up. It will also help the business community because there will be extra cash in circulation prior to the time when grain would normally be sold and when producers would realize the cash from the sale of that grain. This Act was first introduced in 1957. The former Minister of Agriculture under Mr. Diefenbaker, the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), made one of the most interesting speeches I have heard in the House. He talked about the time when he introduced the Act and brought it in.

This Act is being amended today so that producers will be in a position to benefit from it in a more timely and a more easily administered fashion. To state it very briefly, at present the forms for which producers apply each year have to be set by Order in Council. The forms vary little from year to year. The Canadian Wheat Board is the organization that administers this Act. One of the amendments will allow the Board itself to set the prescribed form. It will be simpler in detail, and will allow for less red tape and hold-up.

In the Bill there are also provisions for emergency cash advances for unthreshed grain. In the fall of the year if the harvest is late and the producers have not been able to harvest their grain and receive the cash advance, there are provisions in the Bill to allow for emergency cash advances. One of them is for unthreshed grain, so that the producer can have half of the cash advance if he has grown the grain but has not yet had an opportunity to harvest it by November 15. In this case there will not be an Order in Council required and it can simply be done at the discretion of the Minister of the day. This will speed things up.

We are doing the same thing concerning cash advances for drying tough and damp grain. At present there are provisions in the Act that allow for a $3,000 assistance package and an interest-free cash advance that allow producers to take advantage of that extra loan if they have grain that has been harvested but it is in a tough or damp condition. If there has been a difficult harvest season, this will assist people to dry the grain and get it into marketing condition.

The Hon. Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Scowen), who is a registered seed grower, and who is well recognized in his area as a very good farmer, has been concerned about one of the aspects of this Bill. In his area of northern Saskatchewan, which is indicative of the northern Prairies in general, farmers dry grain on a more regular basis than in other parts of the Prairies. The Hon. Member has been concerned that we should take a look at this Bill and try to make use of it to assist producers and to encourage them to dry their grain. This is one of the ways in which to assist producers to get a crop off a little sooner. In many cases in doing so, they will harvest a higher quality product.

Canada is well known for its high quality grain. This amendment will be used to provide the Minister of the day with more discretion to decide when there can be cash advances for drying. That provision will be used on a trial or test basis in northeastern Saskatchewan, covering part of the riding of the Hon. Member for Mackenzie, and probably part of the riding of Prince Albert, to look at doing exactly what the Hon. Member suggested, that is, to make use of cash advances to assist producers to harvest grain in a higher quality condition. In that manner, they will be in a better position to market a better quality product.

Without the efforts and the insistence of the Hon. Member for Mackenzie, we would not be engaged in this project. We look forward to working with the producers and Members from that area to see how this will work. We will then see the success rate, and on that basis how this measure can be used in other parts of the Prairies.

In addition, we will be able to set the rates of the cash advance in a simpler fashion which will not involve an Order in Council. It will be in the regulations in such a manner that an Order in Council will not be required.

In the Bill, we will also be amending the procedure by which a producer who rents land can obtain a cash advance. At present that producer has to receive a signature from his landlord before he can receive the cash advance. The Advance Payments for Crops Act, which applies to other crops in the Prairies as well as other crops in the rest of the country, has provisions that simplify this, so that there will be less hold-up in receiving the cash advance for people who rent land.

The Act is also being amended so that everybody is treated fairly across the country. Nobody will receive a larger cash advance than $30,000. There is some concern that we may be limiting cash advances, because at present producers can receive a cash advance under the Western Grain Advance Payments Act, and they are also eligible for a cash advance under the Advance Payments for Crops Act. One of the amendments limits the total amount of advance that any producer can receive to a maximum of $30,000. In our view, that is a fair and even-handed way to proceed. If there is concern that the cash advances are too low, then we can look at raising the over-all levels so that everybody is treated fairly. The present situation is such that not everybody across the country is eligible for two cash advances, one under the Advance Payments for Crops Act, and one under the present Bill. By limiting the amount to the maximum everybody is treated evenly.

Another amendment concerns people who, because of the fact that they irrigate, grow more grain than other people who farm under dry land conditions. Farmers who irrigated may in fact have enough grain on hand to be able to qualify for the maximum, or certainly a fairly large amount. However, because of the way in which the Act presently sets the amount for which they are eligible on an acre basis, they in fact are not eligible for the full amount for which they should be eligible based upon the amount of grain they have grown, harvested, and stored on their farms.

One amendment changes that so that the maximum amount a producer is able to receive will be directly related to his production, not to the amount of acres which he farms. That is an improvement and something which everyone welcomes. It treats people in an even-handed way, based upon the amount of production on their farms.

There are two other amendments. I might say that repayment under the Act has been very good, but unfortunately there are cases where producers have gone into default. When they go into default and cannot repay the cash advance, because it is a loan, interest rates are set at the time their loan is declared in default. Let us say some producers went into default four years or five years ago when interest rates were extremely high, from 16 per cent to 20 per cent. Those producers are still paying interest rates at that level, because there is no provision in the present Act to adjust interest rates after they have been initially set.

We are amending the Act to set interest rates yearly, based upon current conditions. Again I think it is a step in the right direction because it treats people on a fair basis. People who have gone into default are having a bad time, obviously, and they do not need to be penalized further in today's situation by having to pay interest rates which are as much as 8 per cent and 10 per cent higher than present interest rates.

Another amendment allows the Canadian Wheat Board, which administers the Act, much more discretion in terms of making adjustments for people who, for one reason or another, have not been able to deliver grain. It can be because of weather conditions, road problems, washed out bridges, personal hardships in their families, or such things. The way the Act is presently written, the Canadian Wheat Board does not have the latitude to make some adjustments based upon common sense or upon an approach which includes information which should be relevant to producers who have had problems in terms of delivering grain and therefore fulfilling their obligations under the Act once they have taken a cash advance.

All in all I think the legislation has worked well. As I said, it has been in effect for almost 30 years. It is one which benefits farmers and local communities served by farmers, because it puts cash into the hands of farmers quicker than would otherwise be the case. The amendments we are discussing today will streamline the administration of the Bill in such a way that the functioning of the Act will be more timely and more responsive to the needs of producers.

In conclusion, we very much appreciate the co-operation from all sides of the House, not only at second reading but during its consideration in committee and here today. I thank the Hon. Member for Mackenzie who made some very useful suggestions. As a result of the amendments before us today, we will be able to look at the concerns he raised and take them into account. We will be able to operate on a trial or experimental basis advances for drying purposes, which will encourage people to harvest their grain and get it off in a more high quality condition than would otherwise be the case.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the third reading debate on Bill C-12. The Minister has given a very good summary of the legislative provisions of the Bill. Unfortunately, he did not answer the $64,000 question about which all farmers in western Canada are concerned, that is, what will be the exact initial price for grain in the coming crop year. I should like to talk a little about that this morning.

However, at the same time I agree with the Hon. Minister that the Bill improves the legislation for cash advances. Many of the amendments are technical in a way, but they provide significant improvement for farmers who utilize this very good Act and its provisions.

My regret is that we did not pass the legislation last October. The Bill was actually brought in on October 7. We debated it first on October 21 and again on October 28. Then it went to committee and did not return until December 3. In fact, if we had been able to pass it in the House on October 21, or if we did not have so many government Members speaking on the Bill on October 28 and so on, the amendments to the legislation could have been available to farmers in this crop year.

As the Minister outlined, the amendments are pretty significant. They are based upon stored grain instead of cash advances on an acreage basis. Farmers who are paying high interest rates due to default on previous cash advances could have had the benefit of a lower interest rate throughout the winter. Farmers who were tenants could have had the advantage of a cash advance rather than being denied it throughout the winter, which was one of the most difficult winters faced by western grain farmers. These provisions would have been extremely beneficial, but I guess they are better late than never. Essentially we miss a whole year of the benefits under the program.

When we first debated the Bill and offered to expedite its passage last October 21, I do not believe the quotas were open to any extent in most areas of the West, so cash advances would have been very valuable to farmers at that time.

I want to inquire about some of the most devastating news to hit western Canada yesterday. It was indicated that the Canadian Wheat Board recommended that the initial price be reduced by 20 per cent. Just to put that into perspective, two years ago or three years ago the initial price for No. 1 wheat was $170 per tonne. Two years ago it was $160 per tonne. Last year it was $130 per tonne. If the recommendations of the Canadian Wheat Board are acted upon, we will see the initial price for No. 1 wheat being down to $105 per tonne. I do not think any sector of the economy has faced such a devastating blow as to see its gross price drop from $170 per tonne to $105 per tonne. If there is any other such sector, it is perhaps the petroleum sector. That industry has faced a similar kind of reduction in the value of its commodity. Unfortunately, grain, wheat, barley, oats and crude oil are produced essentially in our two western Provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan.

I was surprised yesterday when the Minister seemed to deny the report in the House that the Wheat Board was recommending a 20 per cent reduction in the initial price of wheat. Clearly the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) was telling those attending the CFA conference in Hull that that was the recommendation. We have had to face the most devastating news two years in a row. There was a 19 per cent reduction in the initial price of wheat last year, and now there is a 20 per cent reduction this year from something around $3 Canadian a bushel Canadian to about $2.50 a bushel or even lower.

There is concern that the Government is not coming clean with Canadians. Perhaps the reason the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is so low in the polls these days is that he does not come clean with Canadians about exactly what the true facts are. In any event, the Minister of Agriculture indicated yesterday, as reported in a Canadian Press story, that farmers should not count on massive Government aid when deciding what to plant this year. That was the devastating news in the Budget.

There was a great deal of talk about the special grains program put in place last fall but which is really only being paid in this fiscal year. There has been nary a word about the new crop year. Do people decide to plant crops this year? Will the price be as low as $2.50 a bushel for No. 1 wheat? You can imagine what the price of barley and the price of No. 3 feed grains will be if the price of No. 1 wheat is as low as that. Why is there no clear indication from the Government about what is to happen?

If we look through the Budget papers, we see no commitment about the new crop year. We do not know whether there will be a special grains program, whether there will be a deficiency payment, whether the existing price for wheat will be maintained, or what is going to be done. The Minister talked about the problems with the EEC and about the price of beef and meat stored by the EEC. However, he did not get into the details on this main agricultural Bill as to what he is going to do about the initial price of wheat this year or whether there will be an additional special grains program. Clearly those questions are on everybody's mind.

We also see that there is no action whatever concerning the farm debt crisis in the Budget papers. Even with a 19 per cent reduction in the price of wheat last year in Saskatchewan and a 17 per cent reduction in the property values—that is an average, it is probably twice that in some areas of the province—there is nary a word in the Budget about new financial assistance relating to the farm debt crisis.

I just had the opportunity a few days ago of looking at the Farm Credit Corporation situation. The FCC is the major federal Government lending agency. It has some 75,000 mortgage accounts across the country. It is interesting to note that 18,000 of these, clearly 25 per cent, are in arrears. Those arrears have grown by 30 per cent in the last 12 months, from January 1986 to January 1987, from $260 million to $377 million. This 30 per cent increase is an increase of $117 million.

The Minister of Agriculture has had a moratorium on Farm Credit Corporation foreclosures in this past year. We are told now that some 5,200 of them, or almost one-third of those mortgages in arrears, have been in arrears for more than two years. The FCC's experience is that once mortgages are in arrears for more than two years, it is almost impossible to recoup. That is why we are extremely concerned about there being nothing in the Budget on the farm debt crisis. There is no financial assistance, whether in the form of reduced interests or lower mortgage rates. This is in spite of the reduced price of grain last year. Now we have this double whammy of an increased reduction in price again this year.

I hope we can get a clear pronouncement about where the Government is going on the initial price of grain. But first the Government has to come clean and say that the Wheat Board has recommended a reduction of 20 per cent, if that is what it is. The Minister of Agriculture says that this is what it is. The Minister responsible for the Wheat Board does not say what it is. As a matter of fact, at the CFA meeting yesterday the Minister was surprised because he did not know about that recommendation, and yet members of the advisory board to the Canadian Wheat Board said that this is what was being recommended. We really need a clearer indication of where the Government is going and on what basis a special grains program will be put into effect. I do not think that can be weighted off and negotiated a year from now, next fall or in December. It may not happen at all. There is no election in Saskatchewan this year. If there had been no election last year, it is highly questionable whether there would have been a special grains program.

There are a number of serious problems with the special grains program. People who have switched to alternative crops, peas, lentils and others, to reduce the acreage of wheat are not getting any assistance. I think the Government has to exercise its responsibility, provide leadership and make it clear on what basis there will be assistance and whether there will be assistance, because it is not clear at this time. The Minister heightened that uncertainty when he said yesterday at the Canadian Federation of Agriculture's annual general meeting that farmers should not count on massive government aid when deciding what to plant this year. Here we have the price of wheat going down and probably the prices of all grains going down by 20 per cent perhaps to a price that is even lower in actual dollars than what was paid in the 1930s. Yet the Minister is saying that farmers should not count on any assistance in that regard from the federal Government.

I looked very carefully through the Budget papers to see what assistance would be provided under the Western Grain Stabilization Fund, because that is a major support program. One-third of the money is put in by the farmers and two-thirds by the federal Government. People in the industry have suggested that the fund may be as high as $1 billion this year. I think it would be useful for the Government, which is not exactly enjoying a lot of popularity in Canada right now, to make it clear how much will be paid out under the Western Grain Stabilization Fund and when it will be paid. Will it be paid on the basis of two-thirds or 70 per cent in a timely manner in April with the balance in October as it was last year?

In the Budget papers it is suggested that the contribution by the federal Government to the fund in this coming year will be some $99 million. I am told by people from the Department that in fact that fund is about $90 million in the red right now. It is difficult if not impossible to find out exactly how much will be paid out under the Western Grain Stabilization Fund.

I believe there is concern as well with the Government coming clean and outlining exactly what the initial grain price will be. We saw a deficit in the past crop year, 1985-86, of some $201 million, mostly on barley. Some people in the industry have suggested that the deficit in the pool accounts this year will be as high as $400 million to $500 million. Perhaps the Government could spell out exactly what the arrangements on initial price and the special grains or deficiency programs will be. Will it be resource neutral, and on what basis will it be established? It would be very useful to know those things because we will be facing an impossible situation if there is no support or stabilization.

At the Canadian Federation meeting yesterday, I spoke to people from the Saskatchewan and Manitoba pools. They said that many farmers facing a price of $105 per tonne will simply not be able to go to the bank to get the cash flow required to plant this year. I think it is imperative that the Government make it clear what the initial price will be and what kind of stabilization program will be provided.

It seems to me that at this time, farmers are facing greater uncertainty than they have at any time in the past 50 years. In his first three Budgets, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) increased personal taxation by some 50 per cent while dropping back on corporations by 5 per cent. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) has not given any commitment on grain freight rates in the coming year.

We know that the former Minister of Transport, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), was able to instruct the grain transportation agency to reduce its volume from 30.5 million tonnes to 28.5 million tonnes last year. The Prime Minister was therefore able to say at a press conference last April that he had frozen freight rates. Freight rates really were not frozen, the grain transportation agency was simply instructed to reduce its estimate. The impact of that has been that all of the money that was in the tally-averaging fund of some $70 million has been used up so now western farmers are facing a $100 million increase in the cost of the transportation of grain. The price they will have to pay to transport grain will increase from $6 a tonne to about $9 a tonne at a time when the value of a tonne of grain is dropping from $130 to $105 per tonne, if we believe what the Minister of Agriculture and the Wheat Board Advisory Committee have reported to us. However, we should wait, of course, to hear exactly what the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) will say.

We are facing a difficult time. The Minister of Finance increased personal taxation by 50 per cent in the last three Budgets. The Minister of Transport has increased the cost of shipping grain by 50 per cent. The Minister responsible for the Wheat Board has reduced the initial price of grain over the last three years from $170 a tonne to $105 a tonne. The Minister of Agriculture said yesterday at the Canadian Federation of Agriculture meeting that in fact farmers should not count on massive support this year. At a time when the worst financial disaster to strike western Canada is before us, the Minister is telling us not to count on support.

There is one footnote to this difficult time in western Canada and that is the fact that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) is carrying out a wide-scale tax audit of farmers' investment tax credits in Manitoba and Saskatchewan particularly. The farmers claimed these tax credits in 1983 and 1984. If there is anything unnerving to farmers it is to see that kind of widespread tax audit going on. I believe that many farmers who are being audited are honest, responsible people who have bought machinery, tractors or combines after entering into legitimate, fair and proper contracts. Now the Department of National Revenue is sending its men throughout the country at a time when farmers are under extreme financial stress. The Department of National Revenue is moving across the Prairies calling into question these accounts.

Yesterday I had a meeting with a number of producers from the Canadian Cattlemen's Association. A producer from near Saskatoon described the initiative on the part of the Department of National Revenue as being a whole can of worms. He made a fair deal to purchase a combine. I have forgotten the exact figures, but the same techniques are always used. The farmer buys a combine or a tractor at, say, $100,000. He pays $40,000 or $50,000 to the farm implement company and then signs the agreement and pays the money or makes arrangements to borrow the money to make the payments. Now, three or four years later, the tax department embarks on a program which the Government is, incidentally, phasing out, and this is also causing a great deal of hardship. Officials from the Department of National Revenue are saying that the amounts allowed on tractors or combines are not right. The farmer was not terribly concerned about how much he was allowed for his tractor or combine. He was concerned about the difference. However, the dealer sold the machine at list price, and now the tax department is changing the rules. The producers I talked to yesterday are going to court to fight it all the way. We hear that repeatedly from farm communities, particularly those in Manitoba and Saskatchewan. They say they get great sympathy from the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board, but not from the Minister of National Revenue. When we put questions to him in the House, he said this is a general program. That may be, but it is farmers who are being nailed. We think what the Government is doing is extremely unfair and it should be called off.

I do not want to hold up passage of this Bill. It should have been passed last October, and I suppose its main impact will not be felt until next September or October. However, the advantages will be felt at that time, and it is a beneficial package. I hope the Minister will soon make a statement concerning the initial price of wheat, the assistance to be provided in the way of a deficiency payment, and on what basis, so that farmers will know whether it is possible to plant a crop this year. It is important that the Government clarify these points quickly so producers will know where they are in the coming year.

Mr. Mayer: I have a point of order, Mr. Speaker. If I might, there are two points raised by the Hon. Member which I think should be clarified. First, the Hon. Member should know that even if this Bill had been passed on October 21, it could not have been used for the current crop year. Unless the amendments were in place prior to August 1, it would have been impossible to apply them for the current crop year. I suspect the Hon. Member is confusing the crop year with the calendar year.

In line with that, we will, as soon as this Bill is passed, be looking at what kind of interest rate relief we can give to those in default. Where we can make use of one of the amendments which allows for interest rates to be moved down, we will do it as quickly as we can. We may be able to do it sooner than on August 1, which is when the rates are normally set.

As well, the Hon. Member should know that the Canadian Wheat Board has made recommendations to the Government as to what the initial price should be. The 20 per cent figure being used did not come from the Canadian Wheat Board, it came from other analysts.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I appreciate the point of clarification but it is not a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: On that same point, Mr. Speaker. We have a rule in the House which allows for questions and comments after speeches except in the case of the Minister and the first two Members replying. However, I know the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) would love to take whatever time is required to reply to the Minister.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do not want to—

Mr. Foster: I just want to reply to the point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): You mean you want to reply to the point of clarification?

Mr. Foster: Yes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Because it was not a point of order. I will allow it, but I think it is unfortunate that the first three speeches do not have a question or comment period. However, because the Bill is so important and I know the Hon. Member would like to clarify his statement, I will recognize him.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to know that the Minister hopes to be able to deal with the question of reducing interest rates for this crop year. Had we been able to do it last October, it would have saved those people in default a lot of money.

Concerning the recommendation of the Canadian Wheat Board, I was really quoting what the Minister of Agriculture told members of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture more than I was quoting press reports to the effect that the initial price recommended by the Board was 20 per cent lower than last year. That would bring it down from $130 a tonne to $105 a tonne. That would be really devastating, and I hope the Minister will, at an early occasion, clarify those several points regarding the initial price and also with respect to whatever grain assistance program is going to be provided.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I wish to thank Hon. Members for those points of clarification.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin with a comment on the comment by the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer). On October 21, when the Minister first spoke on this Bill, I suggested that it could be referred to committee at the end of that sitting. Many of the factors which led to the crisis in Canadian agriculture are still in place. That is what I said then, but it was not referred to committee at that time. I now want to go to part of the reason why I suggested that it go through. I quote directly from page 588 of Hansard of October 21, 1986, where the Minister said:

> I hope the Opposition will look at this legislation very favourably and give it reasonably quick passage. There are a couple of provisions which, if we can pass this Bill without a lot of delay, can actually be of some use to producers this year. Most of the amendments will have to wait until next year before they will have full effect, but some amendments, if we can have reasonably quick passage of the Bill, will be of use to producers this year.

That is a direct quote from the Minister from last October 21. We believe everything the Minister says, so we thought they could be used last year.

I will not spend too much time on the Bill because we have already spoken on it. We support it at third reading. We got it through committee in one sitting and back into the House by December 3, which was much later than we had hoped or expected. It has not come back before the House until now.

• (1220)

Grain used to move through the system only at the call of the exporters. Back in the old days this meant a great variation in the prices paid for grain when the farmer brought it to the elevator. At that time the location of the farmer could be a great advantage. Farmers who lived near Winnipeg could get into the market earlier. Those who lived in the Peace River country or in northern Saskatchewan, as I do, had problems getting the crop in when it was needed. Those farmers could not take advantage of the call of the exporter for the kind of grain he wanted.

The quota system solved this problem to some extent, but did not solve the problem of not being able to deliver on time. Farmers still needed the money as soon as harvest was over, and they could not earn it as effectively as they may have under other circumstances. There are still some problems with it. For instance, last year there was no quota until the end of October, which meant that farmers did not receive any cash flow until that time. The situation still exists to a certain degree today.

The answer to this broad problem was the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act which was introduced by the Member for Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) when he was the Minister. In introducing that Act he attempted to solve both of those problems at the same time and, effectively, succeeded. That was not only an advantage to the farmers, but also an advantage to the Wheat Board because there was not so much pressure on it to ensure that every farmer had an opportunity to deliver some grain. If their particular type of grain was not called for, the farmers could get an advance payment instead and did not have that much of a problem. This allowed the Wheat Board to be much more specific in calling the type of grain it needed for the sales it had made. Now, five or six weeks before the boat to be loaded arrives at the harbour, the Wheat Board calls up enough grain to fill the boat without any time being lost.

This Bill amends a very important part of the cash flow structure of farmers. It is, to some extent, a housekeeping Bill in that it straightens out problems that have shown up over the years in the advance payment structure. With regard to productivity, farmers who are producing far above the average per acre will be able to use the grain they have on hand rather than the amounts of grain which would be expected to be produced on those acres. That is very important in northern Saskatchewan, northern Alberta and northern Manitoba where we produce much larger crops per acre than they do in the south. As the Minister suggested, the yield of farmers who are irrigating is doubled again. That, therefore, is a worthwhile change.

The provision for current interest rates is a relief needed badly by some farmers who are in default. It is very bad that they are being charged higher levels of interest. Under this Bill the landlord is no longer required to sign. A real problem for a farmer-producer who was renting from five different people was that he had to get five different signatures before he could get an advance payment, even if the advance was on grain which had nothing to do with the landlords. This Bill gives the Minister the power to have forms passed without going before the Cabinet, which makes good sense. The provision for emergency advance payments for unthreshed grain and drying without going before Cabinet is a logical approach because it is the Minister who will make that recommendation to Cabinet in the end. Finally, the fact that grade will be recognized in the amount of the advance payment means that a farmer can get more advance payment for less grain if he has higher quality wheat or, vice versa, he can use a larger portion of his wheat at a lower level.

The suggestion made by the Hon. Member for McKenzie (Mr. Scowen) that the Minister should have the authority to make advance payments at the start of the crop year to enable producers of grain to better finance the drying of damp and tough grain has some value, particularly in my part of the country. I believe we could have much more higher quality grain coming off the fields if farmers were willing to take it off a little earlier and dry it. Last year is a good example. The division between No. 3 and No. 1 was large enough. With no payment on No. 1 and No. 2 it did not make that much difference, but it could have made a large difference. With No. 1 and No. 2 being our prime products, it is important that we encourage farmers to produce as much of the high quality grains as possible because they are the grains which many of the buyers are looking for.

We will push this legislation through as quickly as we can today. However, I want to take this opportunity to comment on a couple of other things relative to farming. This particular Bill is one of a series, I suppose, of Bills which have been passed over the years to allow farmers to have some kind of security that at the end of the year the production from their land will bring them enough at least to pay the cost of preparing the land, planting and harvesting. They should have some feeling of security that there is going to be a return for their work and investment. The legislation we now have in place has given considerable support to the farmers, that is, the Western Grain Stabilization Act, the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act and the deficiency payments brought in last year.

These are all factors which contribute to some kind of security for a farmer that when he plants in the spring he will at least be able to pay his costs in the fall. However, that kind of security is fast disappearing. It disappeared to some extent last year, and this year it is of major concern to farmers. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and, I suppose, the Cabinet in general, need to look at farming in general. They need to take a global look or, I suppose a better word would be a "national" look at agriculture, and try to put in place something which would ensure, within certain conditions and reasonable limits, that a producer who produces well and is efficient will at least get back his cost of production.

After the last year of disaster, to some extent, in grain prices, we now have a situation where farmers are finding they really do not know what they should seed next year. They do not even know if they should seed at all. If they do not receive some commitment or some security of return, we cannot be surprised if many farmers decide they just cannot afford the fertilizer and therefore will not put it in. Many of them might say they cannot afford the spray so they will not use it, or they may decide they cannot even afford to summer fallow this year because the cash flow is too small. Those are the kinds of questions producers in the Prairies are asking themselves and the kind of questions we here in this House must be able to address. We should be able to give them some answers which would make them a little more secure than they are at the moment.

There may be no seeding this year, unless we have some kind of commitment from the Government that there will be a return at least at the level of last year, and there are other areas in which the Government could take action.

It is very interesting that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in speaking to a group of people yesterday suggested that he could do nothing about the problems of the Prairies, that they were world problems. The problems of the farmer are spread between the cost of production and what he receives for his product. Therefore, there are two things which can be done. Either we can guarantee a higher level of return or we can do something about the cost of production. There is no reason why the Government could not look at a rebate for farmers of taxes on fuel. There are a lot of costs relative to the use of fertilizer such as the taxes on gas to be used in the fertilizer machinery. There are the taxes on fertilizer, generally. The cost of fertilizer could be reduced. Even the cost of chemicals could be reduced by allowing generic chemicals, which the Government is moving towards to some extent, and by making sure it does not take its pound of flesh each time a product for farming is purchased by the farmer.

At the moment the greatest factor in costs of production to farmers is the interest which is paid for their debt. The Government could put a moratorium on interest payments for a period of time as long as it does not increase the farmers' debt at the end of that period of time. That would at least give him a cash flow. The farmers at present have no commitment to ensure that they will receive the cost of their seed back if they plant this spring. They need that assurance, otherwise we are going to have a tremendous number of farmers making a decision—which they may in the end make anyway—to get out of farming. They are going to start making that decision before their spring work this year because they really have no incentive for starting that cycle of production.

I think it is important that Hon. Members of this House recognize the problems faced by the grain farmers. I could spend a lot of time on that subject. I hope members of the Government who are farmers are making the point as often as possible with their colleagues in Cabinet that low prices are the cause but increasing the prices is not the only solution. We can do it in other ways. What we need over the next couple of years is a structure which will allow the survival of the farmers who are now on the land. We have had about six years of culling out those farmers who are inefficient and bad managers. This has been going on for six years. Why should it continue? Most of the people who are presently farming are efficient farmers and producers. The concern I have is that they be given the opportunity to survive. We in this Parliament have a responsibility to ensure that it is possible for them to survive.

I am glad the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) is here because there is another area which greatly affects farmers, and that is, transportation itself. It is one of the areas which for many years was the only factor in the farmers' input costs which they could be assured was going to be the same the following year. That was finished a few years ago when the Crow rate was dismantled. We now have greater transportation costs than we had in the past. That is something about which the Government could do something. It would increase the amount of money going back into the pockets of farmers from grains.

• (1240)

It has come to light recently that there are a number of lines in the North which need upgrading. I consider this to be a very unsavoury situation. For instance, in my constituency, the Blaine Lake Subdivision which was supposed to have heavy steel, has been taken off the priority list of the technical committee for some reason which no one can put their finger on. I suggest it is probably because of political interference.

These types of situations do not help farmers. They create the type of environment in which they feel that everything is going against them. What the Government and all of us should be doing is putting in place the type of structure that would give them the security to go on producing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If there are no questions or comments, the Hon. Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Scowen) on debate.

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to stand today in my place and talk about Bill C-12 and other matters which I would like to bring to the attention of the House. I commend the Minister for his excellent coverage of the Bill. I think that because he has covered it so well we do not have to talk too much about it. I understand that Members of the House are in agreement with this particular Bill. I think it has been agreed that we should pass it as soon as possible.

I would like to make a few comments on what the Minister stated about my proposal with respect to the drying of grains in certain areas which, over the years, have suffered from heavy rainfalls. A lot of people do not understand this situation, which is why I would like to explain it. The Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) and I come from a part of the country which is along the fringe of a forest area. To the north there are a great many lakes and trees which attract rainfall. We have a higher amount of rain than the rest of the province, which allows for increased production in most years as compared to the other prairie provinces. This is all fine and dandy when the crop is growing. However, when harvest time rolls around it becomes a public nuisance, which makes it very difficult to harvest the grain when it is in its peak period.

The Bill in front of us calls for the Minister to be given a chance to give a cash advance in case of emergency. In our particular part of the country the emergency starts at the time the crop is ripe. As the rains fall on the crop, the quality of the grain quickly deteriorates. Not only does the grain drop in quality but the number of bushels for which the farmer is finally paid decreases. For instance, we now try to swath our grains, and wheat in particular, about the third week in August. Of course, the seeding time usually establishes when one's crop is ripe. We try to let it ripen to a certain standard. We swath the grain and try to pick it up within about four days, depending on the weather, and then we dry it.

Over the last few years we have been successful in producing No. 1 and No. 2 wheat in the particular area about which I am talking. These grains weigh up to about 65 pounds per bushel and are of high quality. Those who are not fortunate to get their crops off early, having to leave it until October, will have grain that will weigh as little as 55 pounds per bushel. It usually turns out to be No. 3 grain or feed grain, which causes a considerable loss to farmers, both in terms of bushels and in price.

I have always been an advocate of trying to get the crop off and drying it. Our farmers have had dryers for many, many years. Even though one may have a dryer it is not always possible to follow the process. However, with dryers and modern combines we can harvest the grain. The straw is tough and the grain may be fairly tough. With modern dryers we can usually salvage a fairly good grain. This is the reason I would like to try this particular run along the fringe line in our area.

I think the Canadian Wheat Board keeps pretty good records with respect to what is dried and what is not. It can tell from the samples it takes. I think this would be a beneficial experiment. If it were it could expand into other areas. Over the last couple of years the Prairies have suffered from deterioration of crop. Farmers on the Prairies have not had the experience of drying grain as we have had in the North. They have had a few disasters. For example, they have burned grain and so on and so forth simply because they do not know how to operate the dryer in an emergency. They try to do things too quickly. We use the same type of equipment but because of our experience with this problem we are able to dry the grain very nicely.

Something I did not mention earlier is the fact that in the early part of the year when the humidity is down and the temperature is up the cost of drying grain in late August to early September is about two-thirds less than when it is done in October or November when the humidity is higher and the days are shorter. At that time of year temperatures are considerably lower. Even the temperature of grain is down to the point where the cost of just bringing its temperature up to where the moisture can be brought out of it is considerable.

I would now like to make a couple of comments with respect to the speech of the two previous speakers. The Hon. Member for Prince Albert made some very good suggestions. I have to agree with his observations with respect to what is going on at the present time. There are a great many problems out there. I think that we should get together on some of the problems in order to make life a lot easier for our farmers. They are now in a position in which it is difficult to have optimism with respect to what to do. As Members of Parliament I think we have to work together to try to get a number of these problems solved. This Bill is one of the ways in which we are trying to do this. The Special Canadian Grains Program was another one. Between the Special Canadian Grains Program and the Grain Stabilization Program, farmers should be able to receive enough money by seeding time to put in a crop. We also must get together and solve the further problem of the shortfall in income of the farmer for another year. I have some suggestions on that problem.

I wish to comment on the points raised by the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster). I agree with him on some points, and there are some that I object to. I take the signal from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) a little differently from him in what he has said about what the Government may or may not do in the future.

The signal that I receive from the Minister of Agriculture is that farmers should be careful not to overdo the planting of crops this year and should try to stay within a reasonable amount of planting simply because there may not be a great amount of money to cover twice as much crop as there was this past year. That creates a problem with an over-production situation. We must be careful when telling farmers what we are doing to encourage production. I do not agree with the Hon. Member for Algoma when he stated that we are very low in the polls, and there are a lot of problems there for our side.

Mr. Marchi: You may not bottom out yet.

Mr. Scowen: That is quite possible, we may not bottom out yet.

In my experience, and I have a few years on the Hon. Member and probably a little more experience, the most popular boss does not always do the best job. In my experience, whether it is a boss or whether it is a president of a club, the one who is not the popular one is usually the one who gets the job done. Our farmers want the job done and our economy back in place. When the smoke clears, we will find that all is well in the Canadian economy with the way things are being done at the present moment. I have to bring that touchy subject up.

Another subject that I would like to talk about is one that I have brought to the attention of the House many times, that is, the interest rate set by the Farm Credit Corporation and the situation that was created in 1982 by the previous Government. I realize that the Act that was introduced in 1982 can be amended. I think that it should be amended so that the Farm Credit Corporation conforms with the original intent of that program. It was there to assist farmers, not to charge them an interest rate that they cannot possibly pay. Farmers cannot pay that interest rate at this particular time. They cannot pay penalties on land that they are trying to sell to cut down their capital cost and interest. The farmers cannot handle the situation that presently exists in the Farm Credit Corporation.

I would like to see the Farm Credit Corporation set up a different system and establish a separate corporation where farmers and the Farm Credit Corporation, or farmers and banks, would be able to go to a separate corporation and put their joint equity into one place. This would allow the banks to maintain the holding price on their books at a level that would allow the farmer to have an equity in the joint venture. The farmer would be allowed to buy back his shares so that eventually he would own the land. I have approached the Farm Credit Corporation on this subject, and I would like to bring the Farm Credit Corporation back in front of the Standing Committee on Agriculture to try to find a way to set up this idea.

Mr. Foster: I was interested in the comments of the Hon. Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Scowen). He has put forward some important items with regard to the Bill before us, and the impact it will have on his area.

The Hon. Member commented on the Leader of his Party and said that the most popular boss does not always make the best one. That is true. The Hon. Member certainly has a boss who is not very popular these days, so he should probably do a bang-up job. The Hon. Member did not explain how he was going to become popular, but we will have to wait and see how that will be done.

Mr. Crosbie: Get to the point.

Mr. Foster: I can hear the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) revving up. Of course, he is very sensitive about these issues. He often makes comments which do not make much sense. He certainly has a problem this year because the western freight rate issue is one that is before him.

In the 1984 election the Government promised that it would freeze existing grain freight rates to producers in western Canada. The caveat was put on until the farm situation was better. Clearly in the last few weeks the farm situation is much worse, yet we are told that the price of grain freight rates will increase from $6 to $9 a tonne at a time when grain prices dropped 20 per cent last year and 20 per cent this year. I would hope that when the Minister of Transport revs up, he will say something constructive about that grain freight rate problem. It is worrying and concerning western agriculture, because it involves $100 million of additional costs.

I was interested when the Hon. Member for Mackenzie said that when the smoke clears the economy will be seen to be very good.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On that basis, I think we should call it one o'clock. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

STATUS OF WOMEN

CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, this is International Women's Week, and the women of Canada want action from the Government, not more words, rhetoric, and photo opportunities.

Over the last two years women in Canada have witnessed the erosion of the Government's commitment in the area of employment and training. Total government expenditures on employment and training have dropped by 32 per cent in real terms. The 30 per cent seat reservation for women to train in non-traditional occupations has been eliminated. The budget for preparing women for the workforce has been reduced by 40 per cent.

No action has been taken to implement the recommendations of the Wallace Report on part-time work when over 70 per cent of part-time workers are women. In government employment programs 76 per cent of female participants are being trained in low-paying traditional ghetto jobs.

Once again, women want action and commitment from the Government, not more press releases.

INFORMATION

ROLE OF JOURNALISTS

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I have just been vindicated by the Quebec press council concerning a complaint I filed against the newspaper La Presse and an unsigned article written by journalist Michel Vastel.

Stressing that the choice and handling of information is a matter of media judgment, the press council does acknowledge that the information published in that article was harmful to my reputation. In addition the press council emphasizes that the harm done to me has never been fully corrected since the retractation published by the newspaper La Presse did not fully dispel all doubts in the mind of the reader.

Mr. Speaker, let us refrain from making overly hasty generalizations. Some journalists are good, others less so. There are good and honest politicians whose only interest is to serve their constituents.

However, time has come indeed for professional journalists, like other professionals, to establish their own code of ethics and self-discipline mechanisms. As indicated by the press council, in his role of public informer the journalist must produce balanced information which faithfully mirrors facts and incidents, and fully respects the individual.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

SOUTH MORESBY—HAIDA PEOPLE'S HERITAGE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the South Moresby archipelago, including Lyell Island, is part of the traditional homeland of the Haida people. The Haida have never ceded their aboriginal title to this unique part of the world containing over a quarter of all seabirds which nest on Canada's West Coast. It has the highest concentration of nesting bald eagles in Canada and the highest density of Peale's peregrine falcons anywhere in the world.

The Haida have a special responsibility to preserve this part of their heritage, which is also part of the world's heritage. Unfortunately this is being threatened by clear-cut logging on part of Lyell Island at Windy Bay. The giant Sitka spruce, cedar, and hemlock which grow in this beautiful part of our world are a part of our world heritage which must not be destroyed.

Canadians of all political Parties must join in demanding that the Government of British Columbia co-operate with the Government of Canada to—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

SITUATION OF REGIONAL WEEKLY PUBLICATIONS IN QUEBEC—NECESSITY TO OBTAIN INFORMATION

Mr. Édouard Desrosiers (Hochelaga—Maisonneuve): Mr. Speaker, Quebec regional weekly publications are very concerned because of unfair competition from Canada Post.

Several months ago a number of parliamentarians asked for information, but a certain individual, Mr. Pollock, refuses to give us that information.

Mr. Speaker, it is common knowledge that a mailman today earns close to $40,000 a year. But there is unfair competition. Some people pay one, two and even three cents for each flier delivered to Canadian households. We sought information:

What is the cost of surplusses given to every mailman working for Canada Post?

Mr. Speaker, as a Canadian Member of Parliament I demand that we be given any relevant information we need.

FISHERIES

EAST COAST TUNA FISHERY

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, Atlantic fishermen no longer have any confidence in the federal Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon). Despite their blatant overfishing off the south coast of Newfoundland, the recent Canada-France fisheries agreement will give French trawlers new quotas despite the fact that quotas for Canadian fishermen have already been cut back. Where is the fairness?

Prior to this fiasco we had the Bayshore tuna deal where the Minister rejected the advice of his own advisory committees and, at the request of Premier John Buchanan, approved the sale of 401 tuna to Japanese vessels in order to bail out the Premier's friends.

What did the Minister say? His reply was: "I make no apologies for having Canadian fishermen and our officials on board Japanese vessels to find out how they are catching fish we cannot fish". That was on December 8, 1986.

I refer the Minister to project report No. 63 entitled "Japanese Tuna Longlining Off Canada's East Coast". This study was done in the fall of 1983 by the development branch of the Scotia-Fundy region in Halifax. The report even has some nice coloured pictures. I hope the Minister will read this report and then he will understand how fishing takes place in Atlantic Canada.

WOMEN

GREATER PARTICIPATION IN PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION

Mrs. Anne Blouin (Montmorency—Orléans): Mr. Speaker, when this Government came to power, it promised to double the number of women on federal councils, commissions and boards. During this week of festivities to mark International Women's Day, we can point with pride to the considerable progress that has been made. Mr. Speaker, since September 1984, over 25 per cent of the Government's discretionary appointments went to women, an increase of 67 per cent over the previous Government's record.

We have every reason to be proud of the progress made during the past few years. However, there is a lot of catching up to do. As a country we cannot afford to under-utilize half of the pool of skills available, and as a Government, we must continue to provide models for future generations of young Canadian women.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT'S RESEARCH SPENDING LEVELS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced the pending federal-provincial agreement on scientific research in Canada. He said such an agreement was remarkable, but what is truly remarkable is how little his own Government cares about scientific research.

When in the Opposition his Party talked about doubling Canada's research and development spending, and then as the Government it instituted the continuing cuts at the National Research Council, the granting councils, Government departmental research institutes and our universities. It is his Government which also cut the federal share of funding for health and post-secondary education by $2 billion, and now it wants to cut get federal-provincial co-operation to fund research.

Can the Prime Minister now say how the deficit ridden poorer provinces will participate in his program when their equalization grants are also being cut back?

I call on the Prime Minister to say if and when his research policy will get Canada closer to the accepted expenditure target of 2.5 per cent of the Gross National Product. Scientific and university communities in Canada are waiting for these answers, not more speeches that make more vague promises about our scientific future.

THE ECONOMY

EXISTENCE OF GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS—GREATER USE URGED

Mr. Terry Clifford (London—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, today's Globe and Mail reported a survey of 200 prominent Canadians who said "Canada is a second-rate power moving towards third-rate status". I disagree.

Our Government Ministers and their Departments, such as agriculture, forestry, youth, small business, international trade and external affairs are producing resources and innovations to help Canadians understand and participate as a nation of traders offering bold new technologies, products, and people resources to the world. The fact that these programs exist is positive. The fact that Canadians do not know about them is not.

Our Government must tabulate, examine, and then deliver these resources and programs to Canadians. I urge all elected representatives to ensure that no dust settles on these resources. We've got them, let's use them. The challenge is there for all Canadians to guarantee that Canada enjoys the first-rate status we deserve. For we are, Mr. Speaker, nulli secundus.

SOCIAL SECURITY

PARTICIPATION OF WOMEN HOMEMAKERS IN CANADA AND QUEBEC PENSION PLANS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): As usual, on the occasion of International Women's Week, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his Government are making endless promises to the women of this country. I think we should recall that the Prime Minister and his colleagues made the same gesture in July 1984 in Sherbrooke, when the Prime Minister, who had promised to reinstate full indexation of family allowances, promised to give homemakers access to the Quebec and Canada pension plans.

Again, in the Throne Speech on November 5, 1984, the Prime Minister solemnly promised he would give homemakers access to the Quebec Pension Plan and the Canada Pension Plan.

Mr. Speaker, today there are still three million women in Canada who are not entitled to participate in the Quebec Pension Plan and the Canada Pension Plan and are doomed to poverty because of this Conservative Government.

HUMAN RIGHTS

U.S.S.R.—REUNIFICATION OF FAMILIES WITH RELATIVES IN CANADA

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, as Chairman of the Canadian Parliamentary Group for Soviet Jewry, I want to commend and applaud the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) for their unrelenting efforts to persuade the U.S.S.R. to allow Soviet Jews to be reunited with their families in Canada.

• (1410)

When Foreign Minister Shevardnadze visited Canada in October, 1986, he was given a list of 42 families wanting to reunite with relatives here in Canada. Yesterday we heard the good news that 22 of these families representing 57 people will receive exit visas. Today members of the B'Nai Brith Hillel National Student Secretariat are in Ottawa to highlight the issue of Soviet refuseniks and dissidents. While we all welcome and rejoice over yesterday's announcement that 57 Russian Jews will be allowed to emigrate to Canada, we must keep in perspective the fact that there are still at least 400,000 who want to flee the tyranny of the U.S.S.R.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

CALL FOR END TO CRUISE MISSILE TESTS

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I urge the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to make strong objections to any weakening of the ABM and SALT treaties when he meets with U.S. arms negotiator Paul Nitze. Tomorrow my Party will propose a motion to the House calling for an end to Cruise missile tests in Canada. The motion will read:

> That this House, alarmed by the role of air launched Cruise missiles in the violation of SALT limits and alarmed by threats to the integrity of the ABM treaty, aware also of the possibility of a negotiated elimination of all medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe, calls for strong initiatives by the Government to strengthen arms control and disarmament, including the termination of Cruise missile testing in Canada.

I urge all Hon. Members of the House to support the motion when it is debated tomorrow and when it comes to a vote on Monday. I urge Canadians everywhere to contact their Members of Parliament to appeal to them to vote in favour of ending Cruise missile tests in Canada.

STATUS OF WOMEN

TRIBUTE TO CONTRIBUTIONS AND ACHIEVEMENTS OF FARM WOMEN

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Speaker, as this is International Women's Week I would like to recognize publicly the special contribution farm women have made and continue to make to western Canada. In the history of the Canadian West, men and women worked together to break the land and to settle the Prairies. It was no accident, therefore, that the first Canadian women to receive the franchise were those on the Prairies who had demonstrated so convincingly that they deserved the right to vote.

Farm women still share equally, but often without recognition and fanfare, in the many tasks associated with farming. In addition, many women have added to their workload by taking off-farm jobs. The economic significance of their contribution has never been in question. However, I look forward to the day when the voice of farm women is more frequently heard in governing circles on rural municipal councils, as leaders of farm organizations, and as representatives of rural constituencies both at the provincial and federal levels.

I would like, therefore, to applaud the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) for appointing 24 women out of a total membership of 79 to federal farm debt review boards, as farm women as well as farm men are severely affected by the financial crisis which exists today. However—

Mr. Speaker: I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—SITUATION IN NEW BRUNSWICK

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, after hearing testimony from the New Brunswick Environment Minister and the New Brunswick Power Corporation, we, the members of the Acid Rain Committee, are wondering if anyone is in charge of acid rain control in New Brunswick. The Minister seems confused about whether the New Brunswick Power Corporation reports to Cabinet or whether it is the other way around. In addition, the Government of New Brunswick now seems to be having second thoughts about its commitment. The timing of this could not be worse because the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will go to the summit in April without a unified Canadian agreement to reduce SO2 emissions.

Our committee is left with no recourse but to invite Premier Hatfield to appear before the Acid Rain Committee so we may see if he knows anything about acid rain in his province. Only the Premier can sort out the Alice in Wonderland acid rain policy of New Brunswick, but time is of the essence.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

SIGNING OF CANADA-CHINA FILM CO-PRODUCTION AGREEMENT

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I know all Members of the House will join with me in recognizing the work of the Hon. Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) on her trip to the People's Republic of China. The Minister has succeeded in signing a film co-production agreement with China as part of her visit to promote Canadian culture and telecommunications.

A co-production agreement is a legal accord between two governments intended to lessen the cost and risk of film production. This agreement allows film producers to draw on Government, business and private funds in both countries. Under the agreement, films are made as co-productions and are considered to be national films in both participating nations. The agreement can also ease restrictions on the movement of people and equipment across borders to facilitate production.

In the past Canada has signed film co-production agreements with France, Italy, Germany, Israel, and the U.K. This agreement is a major achievement for Canada and is the first co-production of this magnitude ever undertaken by China. The Minister's and the Government's commitment to international film production should be applauded.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DENIAL OF DIPLOMATIC ACCREDITATION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise to commend strongly the action of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) in his recent decision not to grant diplomatic accreditation to General Amos Yaron as military attaché for Israel. The Minister is to be commended for his courage in taking this step which he acknowledged is not done very often.

In view of the fact that an Israeli inquiry found that Yaron was well aware that more than 700 Palestinian civilians were brutally murdered by Christian militiamen in the Sabra and Shatila camps in Lebanon, this action is entirely appropriate. We know well the history of that slaughter in September of 1982, and the action taken by the Minister in placing Canada's position clearly on the record in this area is to be commended. Finally, I would note that this was done despite the fact that General Yaron was accredited to Washington. The Minister must be congratulated.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

DEMAND FOR AMENDMENT OF STATUTE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, bilingualism is not dead in Canada. Although certain individuals do not consider it as a significant issue, this does not mean that it is a non-existing cause: three feature articles in the newspaper Le Droit, two in La Presse, a long column in Le Devoir, three articles in the Globe and Mail, and so on.

The issue is raised practically every day in nearly all newspapers, yet certain Members of this House still do not see that if the debate still goes on, I am telling you, ladies and gentlemen, it is because it is a matter of national scope.

Scandals fade away, but major issues remain. Today the Commissioner of Official Languages will give the Prime Minister a study on official bilingualism and the private sector. I sincerely hope that this initiative of the commissioner will prompt the Prime Minister to table the amendments to the Official Languages Act at the earliest opportunity.

CHILD CARE

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the last two years are littered with the broken promises of the Government. As you may have noticed, we see this week that the Tory promise machine is spewing out some new ones. Canadians are asking the Prime Minister why they should believe his promises about child care when his Minister of Finance said last night in committee that he knew of no specifics of the program. Why, when he was talking to the Advisory Council on the Status of Women, did the Prime Minister not tell the whole truth and admit there was no program and no money had been allocated in the Estimates for any such program?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question from the right hon. gentleman surprises me. We indicated to him and the House that, upon receipt of the parliamentary task force report on child care, we will meet with the First Ministers and elaborate on a comprehensive program in this area. This has been sadly lacking in Canada over the many years his Government was in office, and I hope we have his help and support in implementing this kind of program to benefit Canadian women.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, that is not the impression he was attempting to give to the women he was talking to on Monday morning.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER RESPECT PROMISES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Take the Prime Minister's latest promise which he very appropriately made last night in Waterloo: his new science policy. And like Napoleon, when he took his hand out of his vest it was empty: a science policy, yes, but no money, whatever the Prime Minister may have promised during the election campaign about doubling spending on research and development in four years. My question to the Prime Minister is therefore: When is he going to start keeping his past, present and future promises with real money?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, those are the key words: real money. The Leader of the Opposition is suggesting that we use borrowed money, since the Government's finances were in such a sad state that interest rates—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: Let them laugh. Interest rates went up because of the amounts the Government had to borrow. So borrowed money is not the way to solve a serious problem that has been with us for many years.

Another example of how not to go about it is the scheme used by the Hon. Member for Westmount and his colleagues and I am referring to the Scientific Research Tax Credit. The Government of Canada and the research community lost out as a result of flips involving hundreds of millions of dollars, and all because of this measure that was introduced by the previous Government. We have started by creating an advisory board at the national level. The first meeting, last Monday—

REQUEST FOR GUARANTEED RETURN FOR FARMERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have cited two programs announced this week by the Prime Minister with regard to which there are no specifics and there is no money allocated in the Estimates. Perhaps the most bitter are the promises made to the regions of the country. The grain economy is collapsing. We anticipate, as indicated by the Canadian Wheat Board, perhaps a 20 per cent reduction in initial prices this year.

What about the Prime Minister's promise to the family farm? Will he give a firm undertaking today, which was not given yesterday or the day before, that he will guarantee the same return to farmers as they had last year, particularly in view of existing circumstances?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my right hon. friend will search for many areas in which to criticize the Government, and he may find some. However, one of the least valid would be in the area of protecting the interests of the Canadian farmer and the Canadian family farm. The Government has consistently worked with the provinces and the farm leaders to be of assistance to Canadian farmers. We did that most recently in the autumn through an emergency program which put hundreds of millions of dollars directly into the pockets of western farmers. We have helped Canadian farmers in many real ways and will continue to do that to their benefit in the future.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER EXPLAIN DEFINITION OF NATIONAL DAY CARE SYSTEM

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. This week, in connection with the Conference on the Family . . . Only a few minutes ago, the Prime Minister stated that Canada would have a national child-care system. The Minister responsible for the Status of Women has said that an agreement concerning details of the child-care system will be concluded by the end of June. I wish the Prime Minister would explain to the House what he means by a national child-care system. I am asking the Prime Minister, since he made the statement.

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address the question put by the Hon. Member. She will know that following the meeting of the First Ministers in Vancouver the Prime Minister very clearly put the federal Government in the forefront of a process and conclusion for a child care system. That system has a number of components which are in train, such as meeting with Social Affairs Ministers and the parliamentary committee to formulate a strategy to be presented to the provinces by the end of April and to be concluded by the end of June. The Member knows the plan. She is part of it. We are hopeful that the report will come out in the next two weeks. The Prime Minister has said very clearly that that plan will be in place and that the resources will be there to fund it.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT SUBSIDIZE DAY CARE SYSTEMS

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question was directed to the Prime Minister who, after all, made the statements and the promises. The Budget provides no funds for day care. Again, I want to ask the Prime Minister whether his Conservative Government is going to provide any leadership on day care, and by that I mean subsidize a day-care system and set national standards. My question is directed to the Prime Minister. What does the Prime Minister mean by day care?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are indeed going to deal with setting up a national child-care system.

Mrs. Pépin: What is it?

Mr. Mulroney: Since the Hon. Member insists on asking the question, I have to say it is a system that should have been in place years ago in this country.

Mrs. Pépin: What are you going to do?

Mr. Mulroney: When the Hon. Member presided over the Council on the Status of Women, she failed to urge her Liberal friends to set up a system.

Mrs. Pépin: Certainly not! I was the first person to bring the matter up.

Mr. Mulroney: It really is too bad in this country. Promoting the status of women is a priority for the Government of Canada. I think we have already introduced some important measures, and we shall introduce more, including this national child-care program.

THE ECONOMY

INVESTMENT INFLOWS AND OUTFLOWS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It arises out of the balance of payments figures which were tabled earlier this week. Those figures show that in the two and a half years since the Conservative Government came to power there has been no net inflow of foreign direct investment. At the same time the figures show that Canadian direct investment abroad, the kind which directly creates jobs, has increased by $11 billion since the Conservatives came to power. Can the Minister confirm those figures? And can he tell the House whether he is concerned about the evidence that investment is going out of this country rather than coming in?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I commented on this specifically in the Budget. However, I can remind the Hon. Member of what the Budget said. The inflows of capital in 1986, I believe, were 70 per cent higher than they were in 1984. The Hon. Member knows that one of the reasons for the strength in the Canadian dollar is the very substantial increase in portfolio investment, investment which is coming in from Europe, Japan, and the United States. They are showing confidence in the direction in which this country is going. That is the reason the dollar today is higher than 75 cents as compared to this time last year when it was a little over 69 cents.

INVESTMENT LEVELS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister recall the statement made by his Leader during the course of the 1984 election campaign that: "The Government would send a signal of confidence around the world to come and do business in Canada again"? Under those circumstances, can the Minister explain that while we have proven ourselves able to borrow money abroad, foreign direct investment in Canada has actually fallen and that $11 billion of Canadian direct investment, which could have been creating jobs here in Canada, has gone outside Canada? Are you concerned about that? And what are you going to do about it?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would ask Hon. Members to refrain from using the direct personal pronoun "you". I know Hon. Members will try a little harder.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should reflect on things which are being said outside this country. As I commented to the Hon. Member yesterday afternoon in committee, I would hate to have to walk around being a pessimist my whole life in the same way he does. If the Hon. Member looks outside the country he will know what the OECD is saying what the European Management Forum is saying and how our status in the European management standings has gone from No. 11 a couple of years ago to No. 6 today. There is the recent report from Japan by the Japanese industrial leaders who came here in October and have gone back with a glowing report on things we are doing in this country. That is quite contrary to what was the case 10 years ago when the same group was here under a man by the name of Makita. The Makita Report damned the policies of the previous Government and that turned off a lot of investment which could have created jobs here in Canada.

INQUIRY CONCERNING POSSIBLE NUMBER OF JOBS CREATED BY $11 BILLION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): It is very hard to be optimistic if you are one of the 1,250,000 unemployed people in this country.

Yesterday, the Minister acknowledged before the Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs that, not including Quebec, the number of jobs in the nine other provinces in this country increased by only 5,000 between January 1986 and January 1987.

Could the Minister inform the House how many jobs could have been created in the Atlantic provinces, Quebec and Western Canada if the $11 billion invested by Canadians outside this country had been invested here in Canada to create jobs for Canadians?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, what I also point out to the Hon. Member is that if he had taken the exact same figures from the middle of the year, which is the most recent period, he would have seen that there was a better balance between the job creation in Ontario and job creation outside Ontario. Off the top of my head I believe the figures are something in the order of 116,000 in Ontario and 74,000 or 76,000 outside Ontario. There is still an imbalance. However, it is quite a bit better than the figures which the Hon. Member points out.

Yes, we are not happy with that imbalance. That is why we are doing so much to try to address that imbalance. That is why we have dealt with the problems in western Canada through drought payments, the farm fuel tax rebate, the special grains program, the assistance to the oil and gas industry, and the change in the—

INITIAL WHEAT PRICES—REQUEST FOR COMMITMENT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It concerns the promises that the Government has made to farmers. In 1984 the Prime Minister promised to make Canada a superpower in grain exports. Yesterday the Minister of Agriculture told farmers at the Canadian Federation of Agriculture meeting that, in fact, the Wheat Board was recommending a 20 per cent reduction in initial prices. Does the Government plan to keep its promise of making Canada a superpower when our farmers are receiving $2.50 per bushel while their American counterparts receive $6 per bushel? Will the Government make a commitment today that our farmers will receive at least as large a return as they did in the last crop year?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to Canada being a superpower in agriculture. In fact we have one of the best beef herds in the world. We have dairy cattle which are the best in the world. With respect to grain, our grain is recognized as a standard by which other countries set their grading systems. If the Hon. Member is talking about market penetration, he should know that last year Canada increased its share of world markets. This year we have the prospect of increasing our share of world markets.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mayer: As we all know, price remains a very serious problem. We are dealing with that in many, many ways.

GRAIN FREIGHT RATES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Transport. In his absence perhaps the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board could respond. In the 1984 general election the Government promised to freeze the grain freight rates for western farmers. We have now learned that grain prices are to be reduced by 20 per cent. Is the Government prepared to freeze those freight rates for another year in view of the reduction in grain prices? The senior grain transportation committee is already indicating that transportation rates will increase by 50 per cent. Will the Government keep its promise to freeze those freight rates for the coming crop year?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member had looked back at the debate on the Western Grain Transportation Act, he would know that if we had followed the Liberal projections the Liberal freight rate for the moving of grain would be something in the order of $11 per tonne. It is considerably less than that. The Minister of Transport indicated in the House the other day that he would ensure that any adjustments that may be required, in accordance with the provisions of the Liberal formula that was adopted under the Western Grain Transportation Act, would be very minimal and would take into consideration the current state of agriculture in western Canada.

FUTURE OF STAR-KIST PLANT IN NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Yesterday representatives of some 400 workers from the Star-Kist plant in New Brunswick came to Ottawa in a last-ditch attempt to save their jobs and to have the plant reopened. The Minister said only that he has not in any way prevented the plant from reopening. Does the Minister have any positive proposals, anything that he can and will do to help reopen that plant or to find other sources of work for these unemployed people? The people of St. Stephen want not only a Minister who claims innocence, they want a Minister who will give some leadership, and not stand on the sidelines.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting that this is the first question a member of the Opposition has asked in at least one year on behalf of these workers.

As I indicated to the media and to the workers who visited Ottawa yesterday, the Government of Canada is extremely frustrated that the H. J. Heinz Co. has chosen not to reopen the plant at St. Andrews and St. Stephen, New Brunswick. We have been encouraging the company to do so. We have offered every form of assistance to enable the reopening of that plant for at least the past 12 months. I encourage the Hon. Member and all members of the Opposition to join the Government in appealing to H. J. Heinz, a respected international corporation, to get that plant reopened and those workers back to work.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Minister of Fisheries. Since workers gave the Minister a ticket to fly to New Brunswick to meet with them there, and since the Minister has accepted the invitation and will be going to meet with them, will he make a statement to the House when he returns outlining concrete proposals to help those workers, either with respect to the reopening of the plant or finding some other source of employment?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, again, the Hon. Member from the Opposition has not been doing his homework. We have indicated repeatedly that various forms of assistance have been offered to the H. J. Heinz Co., including offers of financial assistance, for a period of time going back to last June and July. It would behoove the Opposition well to encourage H. J. Heinz, with the Government, to get the plant reopened or relieve the dilemma of these workers and tell them whether or not it intends to reopen the plant. If the Hon. Member has any other suggestions I would like to hear them.

TAX AUDIT OF FARMERS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. The Minister has told the House repeatedly that there is nothing unusual about the tax audit of the western farmers. Perhaps the Minister would explain to the House, then, why he has hired the services of an additional 403 investigators in his Department and why the retroactivity of this particular audit goes back not one, not two, not three but five years and beyond. Will he explain to the House why agricultural organizations in western Canada are so outraged at the harassment that their members are facing from the Ministry of National Revenue?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the question from my colleague from Nova Scotia. With respect to the question that he raised I want to inform him that, first, he is mistaken if he thinks that some of the additional person-years are just directed for audit purposes. As I mentioned in the House a couple of days ago, for the most part they are to provide services, for example, the tracing down of maintenance skips, as well as investigations concerning the child tax credit and services such as that.

Yesterday I assured the House, including the Leader of the Opposition, that certain criteria were being applied, that this was not directed at western farmers but was a nation-wide audit. In view of the concerns that have been expressed, and continuing inquiries I have made, I have instructed my Department to pause in this particular audit to make certain that none of these audits are falling into the category of being unreasonable. I also want to make certain and illustrate to the House that our Department is sensitive to these concerns. We will be doing an inventory of the audits that have been done up to this point to make certain that the criteria that I have told my colleagues about in the House are in fact the criteria which are being adhered to.

• (1440)

SCOPE OF TAX AUDIT

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. I welcome that new information. But would the Minister confirm for Members of the House that the directive that he issued to expand the tax audit nation-wide was issued to hide the fact that he and his Ministry singled out and targeted the western farmers because they knew they were in their most vulnerable position at this time? Is that not the real reason?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, as you and other Members of the House know, I have been a Member of the House for some time. I can assure you, and all Members of the House, that that is about the most absurd suggestion that I have heard since I have come here.

SPECIAL CANADIAN GRAINS PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In response to a question from my colleague from Ottawa Centre, the Hon. Minister said that we were being pessimists. At the Finance Committee meeting yesterday afternoon the Minister said that there was a problem in western Canada caused by factors outside our control. They, western Canadians, are prisoners of market forces outside the boundaries of this country. The Minister also said that there was very little that he could do about it. There is something that the Minister can do about it, and my question to him is this. Why does he not stand up at this time and announce an extension to the Special Canadian Grains Program? Western farmers want to know before they seed what the Government will do to help them.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am going to be generous and say that the Hon. Member read the headline to the story that he is reading from, because he surely did not read the transcript of the meeting of the committee yesterday, or the second half of the story. I did say that I cannot control an international price. But I did go on to say that yes, there are a lot of things that we are doing about it. I outlined the following, and I will run down this very quickly—the Atlantic Opportunities Program, the Atlantic Initiatives Program, the Cape Breton Investment Tax Credit, the special report that the Prime Minister is asking for—

An Hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister has obviously quite a lot of information that he would like to give to the Opposition. I am sure that both Hon. Members could find a way to exchange that information.

ENERGY

REQUEST FOR SPECIAL FUND TO HELP SMALL OIL PRODUCING COMPANIES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I will take your advice. I do have a list to give to the Minister of things that he could do immediately to help western Canada. One other example of what he could do now, and I ask him if he will, is make the commitment that he will take the $450 million that will be gained as a result of the increased tax on gasoline and promise that money as a special fund to small, independent producers in western Canada? Will he help those oil producers, and use the money that has been collected?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member has not heard, I will tell him that I am going to Calgary tomorrow and I will be meeting with the three oil and gas industry associations. I will be discussing the concerns that they have on the outlook for their industry.

I do wish to refer the Hon. Member to a comment made by the Alberta Wheat Pool. They praised the Government of Prime Minister Brian Mulroney for its handling of problems in the agriculture industry. It is really quite an extraordinary hard time right now and they felt that so far the present Government has responded well. That is action.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Murphy: Why don't you quote Getty?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Who wrote that, Bill Fox?

Mr. Mazankowski: The Winnipeg Free Press.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REPORTED INTEREST IN ALBERTA RANCH LAND

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Associate Minister of National Defence. Given that the beautiful Kananaskis country on the eastern slopes of the Rockies west of Longview, Alberta, should be retained for ranching and tourism; and given that the Canadian army which is marching into this Kananaskis country to buy several hundred acres of land should not be asked to retreat or back up, will the Hon. Associate Minister of National Defence give this command to the army: "About turn and advance right out of the Kananaskis country?"

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): I wish to assure the Hon. Member that the Canadian army is not marching into the territory he is discussing. The fact is that we have not offered to purchase any ranches, in spite of the newspaper reports. The fact is that the owner of the ranch has offered to sell to the Canadian army at a certain price.

Mr. Riis: For twice the price.

Mr. Dick: We have not accepted that offer. We have had evaluations done, and the price seems to be too high according to the Minister, and according to the person who offers to sell. We have asked for more information.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—ECONOMIC SANCTIONS INQUIRY

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. When the Prime Minister was on his South African tour he promised additional economic sanctions against South Africa. The Deputy Prime Minister has promised that the Prime Minister would make a statement about his tour upon returning to the House, which we patiently await. Yesterday the Secretary of State for External Affairs indicated that as early as January he had been authorized to impose additional economic sanctions against South Africa. Why have these sanctions not been imposed? What are they? What is he waiting for at this point?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, even though the Hon. Member declined to take part in the very useful discussion yesterday in a committee of this House on policy with respect to South Africa, he does know the procedures with regard to Cabinet and the authority of Ministers. What I indicated to the committee is that I have received the authority of my cabinet colleagues to take further measures with respect to South Africa when the Government concludes that it would be appropriate to do that.

We have had singular success in concerting our actions with those of other members of the Commonwealth, other members of the Economic Summit, and other countries. We intend to continue along that path of working with others. The Prime Minister has signalled his intention to seek to have the question of South Africa on the agenda of the Economic Summit in Venice. As the Hon. Member knows, we will be hosting meetings of La Francophonie and the Commonwealth in Canada later this year. In the context of all of those engagements working with our friends who share our determination to bring an end to apartheid in South Africa, Canada will continue to exert the leadership it has shown to date.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, there is nothing to write home about in that answer. Yesterday, unfortunately, I was at another committee, a good many sit during the afternoon. I have the impression that the Government does not intend to do anything before the Commonwealth conference. Is it true or not?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as it often happens, the impression of the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount is unfounded. I have no idea whether this position is endorsed by his leader or whether, with respect to South Africa, he is giving the same position as that which relates to Cruise missiles.

TRAINING FOR FUTURE EMPLOYMENT

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the status of women. The Minister will know that the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women, and other groups, have criticized the Canada Jobs Strategy because it is mainly training women for low paying pink collar jobs. What is the Minister doing to change this program in order that women can train for better paying non-traditional jobs, rather than being locked into low-paid clerical, sales, and service work?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Half of the jobs created by the Government have been created in the women's sector.

Mr. Angus: So much for the status of women.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Are you going to take that sitting down, Barbara?

Mr. Weiner: The Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women has stated that they are pleased that the Government recognizes the importance of providing federal training programs which are specifically designed for women. That is what Sylvia Gold said.

Oral Questions

SKILLS TRAINING PROGRAMS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): I see that the Government recognizes International Women's Week by ignoring the advocate for women.

My question is directed to the Minister responsible for the status of women during International Women's Week. What will the Minister do to persuade the Minister of Employment and Immigration to reconsider his policy of contracting out low skills training programs, instead of providing adequate funding to colleges and universities for skills development programs that will move women into higher paying jobs?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, what the Hon. male—Member—has—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1450)

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we could just start over again.

Mrs. McDougall: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will see if I can get my tongue and my teeth moving together. The Hon. Member fails to notice that when we on this side of the House talk about women, it is not just myself in the Government. The women of Canada have 40 allies, most particularly the Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. McDougall: Let me also say that the Canadian Jobs Strategy was the first employment program by a Government in Canada which had targets for women. The participation rate by women is 46 per cent, compared with 37 per cent in previous programs. The Government, through the appointments process as well, has helped the women of the country. It is a record that cannot be challenged by anybody.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

FEDERAL FUNDING

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. I should say that I am glad the Prime Minister finally made it to Waterloo. Since he took office that university has lost the dean of its maths faculty to Tennessee; a leading chemist to Princeton; and professors in computer science, engineering, and accounting to U.S. industry, U.K. universities, and Switzerland. The Prime Minister's biggest export has been our brains—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Some days I would like to help.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Berger: Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, I could not say the same thing about the Tories. After freezing budgets for university research and cutting payments for post-secondary education, how can the Prime Minister possibly expect Canadians to believe his latest promises regarding research and development? When will the Government put its money where the Prime Minister's mellifluous mouth is?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with regard to research and development in science and technology, I referred earlier to one—and I think most fair-minded people would agree—of the great tragedies which has hit—

Mrs. Finestone: That is old history.

Mr. Mulroney: The Member says that it is old history. In 1984 a tax program of the previous Government was devised which cost the research community probably $2.6 billion in lost revenues. When we consider that the federal Government commits the largest expenditures, $4 billion per year, in terms of research and development, that was an enormous historic loss brought about by the Government of which my hon. friend was a member. I know he regrets it as much as I do. It left Canada in a situation whereby when Government changed, among industrialized countries Canada had one of the lowest rates of scientists and researchers in the population—for example, 280 per 100,000 in the U.S., 240 in Japan, 150 in Germany, and only 90 in Canada. That is an enormous tragedy which was brought on by some decades of neglect. There is enough responsibility to go around for all Members of the House.

The Government is committed to working with the universities, the research centres, and the provincial Governments to make research and development in science and technology the cornerstone of future sustained economic growth in Canada that it should have been for decades.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NEED TO STOP BRAIN DRAIN FROM CANADA

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, had the Prime Minister taken five minutes of his time yesterday to listen to the students, the faculty and the administration of the University of Waterloo he would have realized that his policies so far have been worse than a failure—his policies, not ours. When will he listen to academics throughout this country and put a stop to the brain drain from Canada for which he bears full responsibility?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my friend is asking whether I spent five minutes to listen to the students. I was with them for several hours. I had an opportunity to deliver a speech and then listen to the students. I met with faculty members and research directors. Last Monday I chaired the first meeting of the Advisory Council on Science and Technology which includes 40 of the most important individuals in the field from all levels of Canadian society. We are preparing at the federal level—with higher, not lower appropriations—a new initiative in research and technology here in Canada with the support of the provinces and of universities such as the University of Waterloo which I visited yesterday. I can tell my friend that I was given a warm welcome by students and faculty members alike, and only modesty prevents me from telling you that there were standing ovations all the time!

IMMIGRATION

INTRODUCTION OF VISA REQUIREMENT FOR CHILEANS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Immigration. When the Minister announced the regulation requiring transit visas for the Chileans travelling through Canada, he refused to give a grace period to complete their flight such as he gave last year to the Portuguese when he imposed the visa there. Will the Minister now apply that grace period principle equally and fairly by allowing the plane load of Chileans now stranded in Buenos Aires to proceed to Canada?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, we have been working expeditiously and humanely in handling every claim since last Sunday in Buenos Aires. One must not play with people's lives. A country such as ours cannot be held to ransom. Our record in landing real refugees in the country, the moral leadership we have shown, and our commitment to refugees must not be underestimated.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, that was no answer, but I would point out that the Minister knows that the Chileans are fleeing a dictatorship that tortures and murders its opponents and has secret police in Buenos Aires following them on the streets, while not one of the 3,000 Portuguese refugee claimants who came to Canada had any reason to fear imprisonment or death in Portugal for their views. Therefore, will the Minister explain to the House was his act of discrimination against Chileans, shown by the regulation which specifically mentions them, based on Canada's interest in selling military equipment to Pinochet, or was it based on the fact that most Chileans are of non-European race?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, our policy, straightforward, is that every real refugee who comes to our door will be given a haven and settled here. I may remind the Hon. Member what his Leader, the Hon. Member for Oshawa, had to say on a recent Webster radio show: "If a person has had a fair and just hearing, if he has had all the rights of appeal inherent now in Canadian law and he is found not to be a real refugee, then kick him out of the country".

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NARCOTICS

ADDICTION RESEARCH FOUNDATION FUNDING

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Prime Minister and it deals with his credibility. I was disgusted earlier this week to hear him pontificate about a national drug epidemic, and I would like to ask him to explain his bloated pronouncement. We heard this morning that the Addiction Research Foundation in Canada gets more research money from American government agencies to study drug abuse than it gets from Canadian federal government sources. Can he explain that in light of his bloated announcement?

• (1500)

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, regarding the drug strategy, the Prime Minister stated clearly—I agree with him, many people agree with him—that for parents and young people who are caught in the vortex of drug abuse, for them, for their families and for society it is an epidemic. Where we can help them get out of that vortex, we will.

DRUG SNIFFING DOGS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister, given his personal concern about the national drug epidemic, at the very least will he guarantee that the Estimates will provide for six new dogs, six dogs, which have not yet been budgeted for, to cover a total of 28 dogs in airports across the country for his fight against drug abuse, which is an absolute farce.

An Hon. Member: That is a lot of Alpo.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the concern the Government and many members in our society have for drug abuse is not a farce. Does she feel that there should not be a response? Does she feel that when kids are involved in drug abuse that that is not an epidemic—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Oshawa.

THE CONSTITUTION

MÉTIS CLAIM TO LAND RESOURCE BASE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Almost two years ago he promised the Métis people of Canada that he would meet with them to discuss their claim for a land and resource base. Since it is just three weeks from now that the First Ministers will be meeting on an historic occasion to discuss constitutional amendments exclusively devoted to aboriginal peoples, why has the Prime Minister not lived up to his commitment to meet with the Métis to discuss this important matter? Will he do so before the conference takes place?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has, in fact, met with the Métis representatives. He has also appointed me as an interlocutor with respect to this very important group of Canadians. I think the commitment of this Government with respect to the Métis is precedent setting. We have taken a greater interest on the federal side with respect to these people than any predecessor Government in Canada. We are committed to working toward a constitutional amendment which will set a constitutional basis for self-government which will also define the rights of aboriginal peoples generally across the country. We look forward to working toward success and we are committed to that end.

FORTHCOMING CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister and I hope he will answer it. I chose my words with care. I know the Prime Minister met with the Métis. That was not the point. The point was that the Prime Minister promised to meet to discuss their claim to a land resource base. Since they did not discuss that at the meeting to which the Minister referred, will the Prime Minister live up to his commitment to meet with the Métis to discuss that? In relation to that, in the proposal that will be put before the First Ministers in three weeks time, will the Prime Minister assure that there will be recognition of the Métis' need for a resource and land base?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend for his question in such an important area. He might be well advised to review the facts. A lot of important questions have been raised at that meeting and others.

Mr. Broadbent: Did they discuss land?

Mr. Mulroney: My hon. friend is acquainted with the complexity of the land base problem, the resources, and the jurisdiction that controls those resources. There are lawsuits galore in this regard including, I think, litigation against the Government of Manitoba.

Mr. Murphy: The same thing with the federal Government.

Mr. Mulroney: I have asked the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Indian Affairs along with Senator Murray, to meet with the leadership of these various groups, hopefully next Friday, to try to do the very best we can to ensure that the conference, scheduled for the end of the month which deals with, among other things, this fundamental issue, will finally result in a substantial degree of success that will bring justice and fairness to the native peoples of Canada. We are deeply committed to seeking energetically and thoroughly that kind of solution for the native peoples, and we hope we have the full support of all Members of the House in that endeavour.

Mr. Speaker: The last question goes to the Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park.

SPORTS

FUTURE OF CANADIAN FOOTBALL LEAGUE

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. Reports in today's media indicate the the CFL and a group of U.S. football teams are planning to join forces to establish a new North American football league. Since this in essence would mean the demise of the CFL and its importance as a unifying national institution, what action will the Minister take to preserve the integrity of the Canadian Football League?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I am in regular contact with the CFL on a number of issues. I can inform the Hon. Member and this House that those reports are not only speculative but unacceptable to the CFL and to the CFL Commissioner, Doug Mitchell. The League is attempting at this time to try to make itself a more viable operation. We are assisting in that process in trying to get outside government sponsorship for a new TV deal that will be announced in the near future so that Canadians can continue to take advantage of seeing this very unifying league called the Canadian Football League, and the Grey Cup.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Government House Leader to give us the customary statement of business for the coming week.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Yes, Mr. Speaker. As a result of consultations with the Opposition House Leaders, I think there will be general agreement for the following order of business. Today we will continue with Bill C-12, amendments to the Prairie Grain Advanced Payments Act, followed by Bill C-21, the Shipping Conferences Exemption Act; followed by Bill C-3, an Act to amend the Radio Act. Friday, tomorrow, will be another allotted day. I believe it will be a New Democratic Party opposition motion. On Monday and Tuesday, I would propose to call Bill C-40, which is second reading and possibly reference to the Committee of the Whole of the borrowing authority Bill. I will be able to report on future business perhaps later next week.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, just following up the report by the Government House Leader to facilitate business of the house, I might indicate to the Government and to the Official Opposition that, indeed, Friday is a designated day for the Opposition. The New Democratic Party will be putting forward a motion dealing with testing of the Cruise missile in Canada, and calling for that to stop.

PRAIRIE GRAIN ADVANCE PAYMENTS ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mayer, that Bill C-12, an Act to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity today to speak on Bill C-12 as presented in the House of Commons. The Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) made some very eloquent remarks earlier today and described for us the Bill and its details. I will try to touch on some issues which concern me and which I believe concern much of the agricultural community across the country as they pertain to this piece of legislation and about farming issues generally.

First, we know that the cash advance is based on grain stored and not necessarily on acreage. We know that the interest rate on defaulted advances is a floating rate instead of a fixed rate as it had been in the past. Of course, generally that is a good thing because it will assist in bringing the rate down for some people who are financed at a higher rate. However, we are hoping that the Government would bear in mind that in the unfortunate possibility that interest rates rise again, there should be some way of assuring the farming community that the floating rate will not become a floating rate similar to that of chartered banks which in the past brought those rates up very dramatically because interest rates had risen. I do have a concern about the potential for the future. Of course, in the immediate future it will be of benefit to those people who will be able to reduce their payments.

As I understand it, the total of the cash advance will be $30,000 and those people applying under this Bill will not be able to apply as well under the advance payment Act. Of course, this could lead to abuse as, I understand, it has on occasion in the past. I also understand that there is an escape clause for farmers who cannot deliver grain under certain special circumstances.

All of this will, of course, be a modest improvement. We should remember, however, that the main issue is not being addressed. I know that it is not the specific purpose of this Bill, the Bill to the amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, to resolve all the problems of grain producers. No one pretends that that is the role of this Bill. However, it should be noted nevertheless that it is high time the Government became aware of the major concerns of the agricultural community and saw to it that some of these issues are resolved.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Algoma, raised in the House previously the possibility that the price of wheat will go down from somewhere in the order of $3 to $2.50 this year in terms of payments made by the Wheat Board. I must say that that is a very big concern for Canadian farmers. Over the last few days, we have heard of the concern and worry that exists in the community. People are wondering if it is worth their while to seed this year. That is a very unfortunate kind of decision that farmers will be faced with making this year. As unfortunate as it is, I think we should realize that it is not something that will be necessary for only one year. Unfortunately, there are many more years during which the U.S. Farm Bill will apply, and therefore the problems in the agricultural community will be there for some time. It could be that unless the Government faces reality, that very unfortunate decision some farmers may have to make in the next few weeks will apply not just for one year but for several years to come or at least until the expiry of the U.S. Farm Bill.

[Translation]

Last year, Mr. Speaker, together with some of my colleagues, I had the opportunity to visit Washington. On that occasion, we were briefed about the American farming legislation. I can assure you that the message we got from the United States was very dismal indeed for all Canadian farmers.

[English]

The U.S. Farm Bill or the United States Food Security Act, 1985, is one of the reasons there are all these problems in the agricultural community at this time. Perhaps the United States is not the only cause of this problem. There are a number of other causes for the difficulties in the agricultural community now, including the fact that the United States enacted the United States Food Security Act, 1985, as a retaliatory measure against the European Economic Community which was, in the eyes of the United States, subsidizing its own agriculture to a level which was unfair. It was basically these unfair subsidies from the EEC that apparently caused the United States to impose its own unfair subsidies to match the other ones.

Of course, the Canadian farmer is not faced with the possibility of competing against the U.S. farmer or the European farmer but in fact is competing against the Treasuries of the countries of western Europe and the United States put together. Canadian farmers are very effective and productive. Some would say that they are too productive since there is an over-abundance of product at the present time. It is unusual, though, that those very productive Canadian farmers are having such difficulty making ends meet. They certainly do not deserve to face the hard time they are facing now. However, because they are competing against the subsidies of foreign countries, they are nevertheless faced with this very difficult situation.

When my colleagues and I visited Washington last year, we attended a briefing session at which we asked representatives of the Canadian Embassy in Washington what efforts had been made by the Government of Canada to attempt to have this particular Bill either delayed, changed or altered in such a way that it would not damage Canadian agriculture as it has now. We asked our representatives in Washington specifically which lobbying firm they had hired in order to fight off this very offensive piece of legislation. Of course, we know that in the past, Canada has hired United States lobbyists. Mr. Deaver is one example of a lobbyist who was hired to lobby on the issue of acid rain. There was quite a bit of controversy over that, but we will not touch on that at this time. The point is that for other very important issues, the Government of Canada sought the assistance of professionals in order to ensure that we had as much help as possible to either delay, defeat or alter legislation before the U.S. Congress.

When we asked our people in Washington what kind of resources they had to fight off the U.S. Farm Bill, a Bill containing $70 billion in U.S. subsidies, they said that they did not hire anyone. Of course, that is not the fault of the staff of the embassy, that was a decision that should have been made by the Government of Canada. The staff of the embassy were, I am sure, doing their best with their own limited resources. There were one or two people with expertise in agriculture lobbying 535 U.S. legislators.

Not surprisingly, the United States adopted the U.S. Farm Bill. It did not change it in any way to accommodate Canada. It did not alter it in such a way that it could provide any form of relief for us. Following the passage of the U.S. Farm Bill, First Bank Agri-Services, which I gather is a division of the Bank of Montreal, commissioned a study to be done by Chase Econometrics Incorporated. Chase Econometrics, a very reputable firm, undertook the study which predicted the effects the U.S. Farm Bill would have on Canadian agriculture. Looking at some of the tables in this document, you will see the basic loan rates for major U.S. crops over the next two years. The basic loan rate is for all intents and purposes nothing less than the price you get for your product. In 1985 the U.S. price for wheat was $3.30, and $2.55 for corn. They predicted it would be $2.40 to $2.70 in 1986, $2.28 to $2.85 in 1987, $2.17 to $2.71 in 1988, $2.06 to $2.57 in 1989, and $1.95 to $2.44 in 1990. According to that study, the price of agricultural commodities will go down every single year from now until the end of 1990.

It is very sad to have to make public that kind of information. It tells me that the Government of Canada will have to develop a very serious aid program for the agricultural community, not just for the next three or six months but from now until the end of 1990. That is when the U.S. Farm Bill expires. It is not you or I who will be able to convince the Americans, now that they have passed this unfortunate legislation, to alter it. It is too late. We should have done our work properly before the Bill was passed. We should have lobbied, we should have sent delegations, including Members from both sides of the House. We should have employed the Canada-U.S. parliamentary group. We should have done everything to try to make our American counterparts aware of the fact that we, their trading partner and ally, were going to be very seriously affected by this legislation. But we did not do anything.

It is unfortunate that the Government of Canada did not see fit to do whatever was in its power in order to obtain amendments or, even better, defeat that legislation.

The challenge now is for the Government of Canada and, yes, its taxpayers to support the agricultural community during this time of crisis. The crisis will not end after a few months. The Bill was passed in December of 1985, signed by the President, and it will be there until 1990.

I will just take a few moments to describe some of the features of that legislation just in case the people in the grain industry think they are the only ones suffering. They are not, but of course that will not make them feel much better because their difficulties will remain. By the time that U.S. legislation has expired there are several other areas of agriculture that will have been hurt. Section 104 of the legislation deals with the avoidance of an adverse effect of the milk production and termination program on beef, pork and lamb producers. According to Canadian government officials, this could depress international prices and North American domestic prices and displace Canadian exports to Third World countries. Section 153 will depress international prices and displace Canadian exports in the dairy industry. Section 1006 affects wheat and feed grain exports, which is what we are dealing with now. That section provides the Secretary of Agriculture with discretionary authority to establish a program applicable to any of the 1986 to 1990 crops for wheat or feed grain and provide incentives for the export of such crops from private stocks. You no doubt recall the issue being raised in this House about the effect this measure was having on the Canadian agricultural industry. The U.S. was giving extra subsidies for exports and it caused us to lose that export potential or lose customers we already had. There were certain Middle East countries where that has happened over the last few months or so.

[Translation]

Finally, Mr. Speaker, needless to say that I have found in my document pages upon pages of sections in this US Farm Bill which have or could have highly detrimental effects on our agricultural industry.

When the United States is willing to spend 70 billion dollars of their own currency to pre-empt foreign markets and recover their so called fair share of the market-place, the message I get is that a foreign country as a means of retaliation is trying to steal away customers from other nations. I find this quite regrettable.

Even if we support Bill C-12, I should not like my honourable colleagues in the House to return to their ridings over the weekend to make their constituents believe that they have done a lot of good and solved all the problems facing the farming industry, for such is not the case. The problems of the farming community will be with us for quite some time and in the coming years they will certainly require on the part of the House and on the part of the Government and the Canadian public the desire and the collective will to give badly needed support to our farming community.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There are no questions or comments. Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

SHIPPING CONFERENCES EXEMPTION ACT, 1986

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Monique Landry (for the Minister of Transport) moved that Bill C-21, an Act to exempt certain shipping conference practices from the provisions of the Competition Act, to repeal the Shipping Conferences Exemption Act, 1979 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be now read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise this afternoon and say a few words in support of Bill C-21.

• (1530)

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hesitate to do this, but I would like to seek the indulgence of the Member. As he probably understands, we are before the Transport Committee dealing with Bill C-18. I came here specifically to make a short intervention on this legislation before returning to the Transport Committee. If the Member has no objection, I would like to be allowed to speak and then return to the Committee. If he has no objection to that, he could speak later.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I guess it depends on how short the Hon. Member's intervention will be because I, too, have other commitments. Unfortunately, I will have to leave the Chamber at four o'clock. I do not expect to be too long.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) has the floor.

Mr. Redway: I thank the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) for his kind indulgence. It is very appropriate that we are debating this particular Bill today because in the business section of The Globe and Mail this morning there was an article entitled: "Canada a second-rate power moving toward third-rate status, survey says". That particular article was referring to a survey of some 200 leaders from business, government, labour, universities, consumers and women's groups who, according to the report, took part in a poll by Hay Management Consultants and indicated that they believed that Canada is now a second-rate economic power moving toward third-rate status because there are a number of difficult issues confronting Canadians which neither Canadians nor the Government are prepared to face up to. Two of those issues were Canada's declining competitiveness and the excessive regulation of many industries. It therefore seems quite appropriate to me that we are dealing this afternoon with Bill C-21 which deals with both those areas. It is an attempt to provide for greater competition in the liner conference shipping segment of our economy. It is, at the same time, an attempt to try to deregulate that sector to a degree in order to provide for that competition.

This Bill is designed to provide greater competition in liner conference shipping. While it does exempt conferences from certain provisions of the Competition Act, it has three provisions which will encourage greater competition: independent action, confidential service contracts, and a complaint procedure.

Clause 4(3) of Bill C-21 requires shipping conferences, as a condition of exemption from the Competition Act, to provide in their basic agreement the right of independent action for individual members of the conference. Independent action means that a member line can provide a service in a manner or at a rate that is different from those rates provided in the tariff of rates established by the conference. It also includes the provision of a service by a member line that is not provided for in the conference tariff. This provision will allow individual conference members to compete vigorously with non-conference competitors. It provides a means for conference members to avoid the ponderous, time-consuming rate review committees that conferences have created to review their tariff of rate structure in the past.

A second feature of independent action is a provision that requires a member contemplating independent action to give notice of its intended action to other members of the conference. The benefits of this provision are two-fold. First, it protects the interests of other members of the conference and, second, it encourages other members of the conference to join this rate, thus providing cheaper shipping services to more Canadians. A clause in this section allows other members of the conference to join the independent action on or immediately after the day on which the independent action is first taken. The notice period is important and must balance the need to protect the interest of members of the conference and the need to respond quickly to requests for project rates or other requirements with short response times.

In the past, shippers have criticized conferences for not responding quickly enough to requests for lower rates which are required when quoting prices for particular projects. Shippers, when quoting prices for such projects, must make decisions on the costs in days or weeks and, as transportation is often the most significant element in the over-all cost, they need a decision on a reduced rate within the same time frame. Too often a representative of a conference member line undertakes to get a lower project rate established by the conference only to return in two or three weeks to indicate that, although the line he represents was prepared to carry the goods at the proposed rate, the other members of the conference turned down the request. In addition, to ensure that shippers are aware of this competitive rate, the conference must publish the independent action rate or service item not later than ten days after the receipt of the notice.

The independent action provision will encourage conferences to be more responsive. Canadian exporters and importers do not wish to lose contracts and members of the conferences do not wish to lose cargoes for transportation. This provision provides a mechanism whereby individual conference members can provide the response that shippers require and ensure that both shippers and conference members benefit.

Independent action is not a new thing. It has been practised by conferences on a voluntary basis for many years. The difference intended here is that the conference can no longer agree that its members should not take independent action. For some specific commodities conferences may have no rates quoted in their tariff. These rates are commonly called "open rates". For commodities with open rates individual conference members may, of course, quote whatever rate they wish. This is a form of voluntary independent action, the sort of thing which this Bill will enshrine.

It is not likely that a large number of independent action rates will appear as a result of this provision. As the action rests with conference members, it is expected that they will agree upon a lower rate in most cases and that the new rate will become the conference rate. This provision will strengthen, however, the bargaining position of the conference member seeking a lower rate and provide a downward pressure on freight rates, providing benefits to all Canadian importers and exporters.

The provisions governing service contracts also provide further elements of competition. Service contracts are defined as a contract between a shipper of goods and one or more members of a conference whereby the shipper agrees to provide to those members, for transportation by them over a fixed period of time, a specified minimum quantity of goods, and in return those members agree to carry the goods at a specific rate schedule and agree to provide a specific level of service.

The existing act requires all rates to be filed and available for all shippers. This provision has prevented shippers from taking full advantage of their economic power, as conferences must always consider the implications for their total trade. Clause 4(1)(c) of Bill C-21 allows conferences to establish the terms and conditions respecting the use of service contracts by their members. Clause 12 of the Bill ensures that service contracts will remain confidential. The Bill also provides that members of a conference are no longer bound by these terms and conditions after notice is given to the other members of the conference. The conference may establish the length of this notice period but such notice may not exceed 15 days.

A further element of competition can be found in Clause 14(1) of the Bill which deals with the complaint procedure. The existing act requires the Canadian Transport Commission, after receiving a complaint against an agreement or action of a conference, to use the public interest test as the means of determining the suitability of the agreement or act. Bill C-21, on the other hand, allows the Canadian Transport Commission to order the conference to remove the offending feature of an agreement or action if that feature has, or is likely to have, by a reduction in competition, the effect of producing an unreasonable reduction in transportation service or an unreasonable increase in transportation costs.

All of these elements of Bill C-21 combine to provide a significant increase in competition in the liner conference shipping area while ensuring that the public interest is protected. That is, of course, exactly what the article in The Globe and Mail today referred to, the survey by the Hay Consulting Firm which indicated that Canada was slipping as an economic and trading nation because of our declining competitiveness and excessive regulations of many industries. This Bill is aimed at correcting, at least in part, those problems, and I trust Hon. Members of the House will agree to pass it quickly in order to ensure that Canada retains a first rate position in the world of trading nations once again.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to take part in the second reading debate of Bill C-21, to repeal the Shipping Conferences Exemption Act, 1979, and to exempt certain shipping conference practices from the provisions of the Competition Act.

I must say that, as former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, it is difficult for me, as a matter of principle, to accept a bill which provides exemptions from the Competition Act. However, I know that shipping operations must take into account what is going on throughout the world, and there have been similar pieces of legislation in Canada throughout the years. However that may be, I am still very reluctant to accept such a bill which exempts an important sector of the Canadian economy from the provisions of the Competition Act.

Second, I must also say that I am very reluctant to accept this Bill because it follows from the general principles contained in the policy statement of the Conservative Government entitled Freedom to Move. This Bill, along with Bills C-18 and C-19, which were recently debated in this House, represents the entire policy of this Conservative Government and reflects an overly favourable leaning toward large Canadian shippers. I repeat that the biggest Canadian shippers are clearly favoured by Government policies. I would have no objection if the other shippers also benefited. However, it seems to me that, in all its initiatives, this Government always favours only the wealthiest, the strongest, and the biggest in our society. I find it difficult to explain such a behaviour, such an instinctive reflex on the part of the Government.

[English]

Bill C-18, Bill C-19 and now Bill C-21 are all Bills for big shippers, which means that the Government is trying to make us believe that a big shipper Bill means favourable returns for consumers. The logic at the outset could be simple and appealing. However, I think there are many flaws in this policy and approach of the Government. Unfortunately, these Bills place some big shippers of given goods in a favourable bargaining position vis-à-vis the carriers and vis-à-vis the other small shippers. Theoretically this could lead to lower transportation costs for the shippers and the savings should normally be passed on to the consumer. Unfortunately, it does not always happen that way.

[Translation]

What makes me sad, Mr. Speaker, is that this proposal might at first glance seem attractive, especially for a Government which is systematically and shamefully taxing the middle and lower classes of our society and whose budgetary demagogy has virtually cost it the respect of the entire population—if we ask people whether they are satisfied with their Government, whether they still have confidence in this Government, everyone spontaneously says that they feel wronged and frustrated as this Government thinks only of the wealthy and attacks the neediest members of our society through all its initiatives—at first glance, it therefore seems that this would be a perfect opportunity for the Government to improve its image and say that freer trade and deregulation of transport in Canada will benefit the consumers. but I think the situation is actually quite different. The reason unfortunately, is the danger that in the long run, because of pressures that may be exerted by the major Canadian shippers on transportation companies, we will rapidly be faced with a significant number of transportation company bankruptcies or wind-ups in Canada. And those shippers, who originally would have liked to benefit from lower costs and other windfalls brought about by deregulation, will be the first to get caught and forced to surrender to a few large corporations which will control the transportation market and will then set their own rates.

I think the danger in that deregulation exercise is the possibility that the supply of transportation in Canada become too heavily concentrated into the hands of few companies. Whether it be rail transportation or trucking, airlines or even shipping companies, that deregulation exercise can bring about disaster and job losses to thousands of Canadians. Only this week, before the Transport Committee, officials of CP Rail told us that because of this Government's deregulation proposals, some 8,000 miles of rail will have to be abandoned by the CPR because of maintenance costs and because of pressures for lower freight rates stemming from deregulation. Now, 8,000 miles of rail, that means whole communities, towns and villages will be without the service they had grown accustomed to. This means that remote areas in Canada will simply be abandoned because market logic requires that anything not profitable is slashed. And this is what CP Rail will be doing.

We believe that essentially the same thing can happen in the shipping industry if this Conservative legislation is enacted as it now stands. There is a danger that the larger shippers may exert pressure on the conferences, which will obviously bring rates down. This of course will profit a few major shippers, but it can also force out of business the conferences that are now serving the Canadian public.

The ramifications of the Bill are all the more disquieting that, if one reads the briefs that were submitted by the various conferences, there does not appear to be anyone supporting Bill C-21.

I will quote just one excerpt from a brief that was submitted by the Eastern Canada Caribbean Rate Association.

• (1550)

[English]

This is one of the conferences which has submitted representations concerning Bill C-21. After reading many of the briefs I have come to the conclusion that they all seem to oppose the Government's initiatives. Thus I will not read into the record all of the opposing representations, but I will read one as an example of the type of representations that we are now receiving against this initiative of the Government. I quote the brief of ECCRA, which is the acronym for the Eastern Canada Caribbean Rate Agreement, which states:

> ECCRA feels that it cannot stand by in silence facing the prospect of Bill C-21 being enacted into legislation by the Parliament of Canada. Should it become law, this Bill would be highly detrimental to the interests of ECCRA and all other Conferences shipping to and from Canada. ECCRA feels that Bill C-21 would not make good legislation. There are many provisions which would contribute to this. Prohibitions of the right to establish "multi-modal rates", prohibition of 100 per cent loyalty contracts, ambiguity in certain terms such as "predatory practices", "designated shipper group", and "ocean carrier", and yet another sunset clause are all of some concern to ECCRA. However, the most troubling provisions are those concerning Independent Action and Service Contracts contained in Section 4 of Bill C-21.

It is the position of ECCRA that the Conference system in Canada would be destroyed if the new legislation fails to allow Conferences the right to regulate service contracts. This right currently exists under U.S. legislation and prohibiting such Conference control in Canada will create uncertainty and instability within the Canadian shipping industry. ECCRA earnestly believes that Conferences must be able to decide whether service contracts should be entered into with the shippers by the Conferences or by the individual lines. It should be pointed out that such an imbalance between the Canadian legislation and the corresponding U.S. legislation could be very dangerous. The present competition from American ports like New York and Seattle—

There are many other American ports that are not mentioned in this paper which come to mind. I am thinking in particular of the ports of Boston, Portland and others that could be in competition with Canadian ports.

—represent a potential drain of cargo from Canadian ports.

Most other major trading nations such as the U.K., Germany, Japan, Korea, Taiwan and Sweden have little or no legislation regulating Conferences. Conferences have been allowed to operate freely as this has been considered to be in the national interest of those countries. The federal Government of Canada should be doing everything it can to encourage carriers and Conferences to operate in Canada, not to discourage them by increasing regulation, creating uncertainty and perhaps legislating their demise.

Canadian government policy has been to allow and encourage Conferences to operate in Canada. At the same time it has been government policy to encourage and foster healthy competition. These two policies are not contradictory. Conferences certainly do not fear competition and have existed for some time in an environment of fierce competition. Low rates are already the reality of today's market-place. However, Section 4 of Bill C-21 could quite possibly lead to the destruction of the Conference system operating in Canada and gravely damage the national interest. The possible ramifications of the current provisions in Bill C-21 need to to be thoroughly examined and most certainly Section 4 should be amended if government policy continues to be to allow and encourage Conferences in Canada.

If that policy has changed, there has been no proper and in depth study done that would justify such a change in policy. ECCRA hopes that the Committee will heed its warning and examine the entire matter in detail before acting.

[Translation]

Of course, this point of view is that of a conference. I am not ready to endorse entirely this statement before having the chance to question the authorities of the Department who have drawn up this Bill. I do not mean the Minister because once again I am sorry the Minister is not present to introduce his Bill and to answer my questions. However, when the legislative or parliamentary committee does consider the Bill I hope the Minister will make a point of appearing before it and submit himself to our questioning. Anyhow, if he fails to appear, we will do as usual and address our questions to his officials who seem to be more interested than he is in transportation matters.

However, it is obvious that we have to raise questions, get some information and learn whether the Government's policy has changed. We know that every five years, the shipping conferences have been granted exemptions from the Competition Act. The 1979 legislation expired in 1984.

We are now in 1987 and the Conservative Government has not yet found the time to introduce a bill to settle this matter. We are only now tackling the matter which should normally have been settled in 1984.

However, as the conference is asking in its paper: Has the policy changed? Bill C-21 now under consideration is entirely different from the legislation introduced in 1979. If we want to extend the 1979 legislation, there is quite a number of useless clauses in this Bill. But if the Government wants to create the impression that it wants to exempt the fishing conferences from the provisions of the Competition Act while suffocating them and making sure that they are not exempted, I suggest that it should come right out and say so. Why play hide and seek with the conferences? If the Government no longer wants the shipping conferences to be exempted from the provisions of the Competition Act, it should say so frankly and not introduce such a Bill. It should declare: From now on, the forces of competition will apply freely, the market place will be wide open, and any shipper will be able to do business with any shipping conference. As shipping conferences, you will not be allowed any longer by mutual agreement to establish what is called a conference and impose your terms and set your prices. The deal should go to the lowest bidder.

From reading this brief, I get the impression that the Government is not doing exactly what it says it is doing. It is using a Bill to extend the 1979 legislation and do more. Do you know what this reminds me of, Mr. Speaker? Bill C-75. The Government tried to use Clause 4 of that Bill to charge a fee to all ships using the St. Lawrence seaway and the Great Lakes for Canadian Coast Guard services. It was a general legislation which provided for a series of changes which everybody accepted or was ready to accept. On top of that, however, there was this Clause 4, and for the first time the Government could arbitrarily charge fees to all Canadian users. You know what happened. The Liberal opposition, supported in this by all the parties involved in the shipping industry in Canada, fought mercilessly to force the Government to delete clause 4 from Bill C-75.

My Montreal colleague, the Hon. Member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers) is smiling, I see. He knows quite well how detrimental Clause 4 of Bill C-75, had it been maintained, would have been to the Montreal harbour, to the transportation of goods in the Montreal harbour and all the other harbours along the St. Lawrence river. Thanks to the representations of the Montreal Board of Trade, the transport minister of the Quebec government, and a journalist of the Journal de Montréal who wrote a very important report in which he insisted and tried to shake up the Minister of Transport to get him to change this famous section 4, the Government finally came to its senses and recently introduced Bill C-34, which was a true copy of former Bill C-75 of the last session, but without the famous section 4.

I wonder if the same thing might happen with Bill C-21. Taking advantage of the fact that it must renew the agreement under the Act of 1979, the Government comes to us with a bill and says: Now that the five years the legislation was to apply are over, we must give the exemption back to the shipping conferences, and that is what we are doing. When one reads the legislation, one realizes there is more to it than that. It is not only more, but even the opposite of what is intended or what we are told is to be done.

I draw the attention not only of the Government but of the public in general to the strange administrative method which seems to come naturally to the Conservative Party. We are not really sure the Conservatives know where they are going. Every time we read the particulars of a bill they introduce, we find out there is much more in the bill than appears at first glance. So, until we start a clause by clause study of the bill, I hope the transport minister will have an opportunity to review this and let us know exactly what his intentions are.

In conclusion, I would like to quote a comment.

• (1600)

[English]

—a comment that has been sent to me by Mr. Ronald B. Gottshall who is Managing Director for the Transpacific Westbound Freight Agreement. He has written the following to all the members of the Transport Committee. This gentleman lives in the United States. In light of the tabling of Bill C-21 he felt that he wished to notify us of the danger of this legislation. I wish to quote what he said:

> Legislative measures which undermine the ability of the conference system to do its job in promoting rate stability and equity are contrary to the economic interests of a trading nation.
> The United States has stood largely alone in taking legislative steps to weaken the conference system, with consequences that have been devastating for its own merchant marine and which, before long, will be shown to have deleterious consequences for its foreign commerce as a whole. Although changes in the law contained in the present Bill largely follow the U.S. model, there is no objective evidence suggesting that U.S.-type changes undermining a conference system are wise or in the national interest of Canada. The premises of the U.S. legislation were accepted by the U.S. without any basis in objective studies, and early experience with the U.S. legislation strongly suggests that these premises are unsound. We would hope that Canada would not follow such a course.

Here again the Canadian Government has a tendency to copy Americans. Here again we see the Conservative Government trying to do exactly what took place in the U.S., without really looking at it and analysing it to find out whether or not it is in the best interests of Canada. The gentleman I just cited volunteered advice. He told us to be careful, that we were copying the American initiative, and that he was not sure it was a good thing. Indeed, it does not seem to have been in the best interests of Americans.

Therefore I ask the Minister why we are trying to do something which does not seem to be right. Is it because we have a phobia that we must do exactly what the Reagan administration is doing? I find it absolutely repulsive that everything initiated by the Conservative Government is a carbon copy of bad American initiatives, particularly in the field of transportation. I think we are embarking upon a very dangerous path.

Deregulation in the United States, as we know, has created many difficulties and many problems. A number of areas in the United States have been deprived of services they used to have as a result of deregulation. Thousands of employees in the transportation field have lost their jobs in the United States because of deregulation. However, we have a Government which blindly follows the American experiment with its Bill C-18, Bill C-19, and Bill C-21. I hope the Government will wake up before it is too late and will look at it in a way which protects the Canadian interest.

I have no objection to being friendly with the Americans or to believing that the United States of America is a great country. However, that does not mean that we must be a carbon copy of that country. Certainly our Government must consider the Canadian interest first, not necessarily the North American approach to everything which comes under discussion between Canada and the U.S.

American authorities have put pressure upon the Conservative Government to deregulate the transportation field. We know why. If we deregulate the transportation industry in Canada there is a great chance that substantial chunks of our trucking industry will be taken over by the Americans. We have been told that with deregulation and with the implementation of Bill C-18 and Bill C-19, Canadian railways are bound to lose a lot of traffic to American railways. We have been told time and time again that the deregulation process of the current Government would substantially benefit American transportation companies.

It is important that the Government wants to help Canadian shippers. I have no objection to doing our best to help them, but I do not want it to be done in a way which jeopardizes our Canadian transportation industry. If we want to help shippers, let us do it in a balanced way, in a way which takes into account the interests of small shippers as well. I do not want legislation which favours exclusively big shippers through confidential contracts where, because of their power and force, they could negotiate confidential contracts at a much lower rate than they would normally receive.

Who will pay the difference? Obviously small shippers will not receive the same deal on confidential contracts as big shippers. Transportation companies must survive, so what they lose through confidential contracts with big shippers they will get back from small shippers. I do not think the legislation is fair and balanced as it is conceived. Therefore I want reassurance from the various Ministers that Bill C-18, Bill C-19, and Bill C-21 will not impair our vital transportation industry which, over the years, has provided hundreds of thousands of jobs for many Canadians in all parts of the country. In every region of the country there are people working for trucking companies, railways, airlines, and maritime companies. There are good jobs everywhere in Canada in the field of transportation. Unfortunately these jobs are unduly threatened by the action of the Government.

Unless the Ministers assure us of security of employment in their legislation, I am afraid we could not accept such legislation or such a move on the part of the Government. We need more assurance and more information.

In conclusion, I must say that I regret the absence of the Minister. I understand that he might be busy somewhere else, but I hope he will be in committee when we give the legislation clause by clause consideration.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—Richmond East (Mr. Dingwall)—Cape Breton Development Corporation—Size of federal funding; the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap)—Immigration—Salvadorans and Guatemalans—(a) Request for explanation of Canada-United States agreement. (b) Processing of refugee status applications; the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon)—Automotive industry—(a) Elimination of 9 per cent tariff on automobile trade between Canada and the United States—Government position. (b) Request for maintenance of tariff differential.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

SHIPPING CONFERENCES EXEMPTION ACT, 1986

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-21, an Act to exempt certain shipping conference practices from the provisions of the Competition Act, to repeal the Shipping Conferences Exemption Act, 1979 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to take part in the debate on Bill C-21, an Act to exempt certain shipping conference practices from the provisions of the Competition Act, to repeal the Shipping Conferences Exemption Act, 1979, and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof.

Clearly this Act is one of the package of Bills the Government has put forward to change practices in the transportation industries in and touching on Canada. It is to make changes which are likely to have the most detrimental effect for the companies involved in transportation and to have the most serious effect for those employed in the industry. I regard this Bill as no less contentious than Bills C-18 and C-19 which have already been debated in this House.

I want to consider some of the problems likely to result from this Shipping Conference Exemption Act, 1986 which is before us. The matter of shipping conferences themselves deserves a little bit of consideration in order to make clear what one is dealing with. Shipping conferences are an organization of carriers involved in a particular direction of trade, an organization to ensure that trade is carried on in an orderly way. What the carriers recognize in coming together in such an organization is that there are possibilities of competitive practices which might be of advantage to someone for the moment, presumably to someone interested in shipping and having some product moved, but which could in fact have a quite serious impact on other carriers in the trade and which would be disruptive to orderly conduct of that trade.

It is obvious in putting it this way that I want to deal in the first part of my comments this afternoon in a fairly penetrating way with competition as it exists in the ocean shipping industry and as part of the recognition of the nature of competition in our economy generally. I think I need to do that because the Government puts forward this Bill with very little regard for its consequences, without an appreciation of the contradictory potential of it. With the Government putting it forward, particularly as a program of removing regulation from transportation, it appears to suggest that completely unregulated, untrammelled, unwatched or supervised competition will somehow be a good thing. If we had competition of that sort in an industry like ocean shipping, Mr. Speaker, we could have predatory pricing practices which would destroy the operations of other competitors in the short run, and which might very well destroy ongoing operations of the company indulging in it. We would have in a competitive situation, if it were completely open, a ship arriving in a port without a cargo, conceivably looking for return cargo, fair game for someone wanting to undercut rates being quoted by others, then grabbing the cargo and going on his way. If the competition were severe between vessels of various carriers, one could see practices of this sort very quickly driving operations into the ground, into a deficit area that would make it impossible for companies to survive.

It was 100 years ago that practices of that sort led to the development of the shipping conferences in the merchant marine of Great Britain. It was the necessity to get some kind of organization of trade to ensure that it would be carried on in an orderly way and in a way that provided an amount of profit to companies which allowed them to pay decent wages to their workers and cover their operations. It was that kind of concern initially that led to the organization of these conferences. The result gradually was the spread of such arrangements from country to country, which has been well described by someone already quoted by the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), Mr. Ronald B. Gottshall, Managing Director of one of the super-conferences these days, the TransPacific Westbound Rate Agreement. Mr. Gottshall has observed in comments on Bill C-21 that:

> Every major and successful trading nation permits and in most cases encourages strong conferences in its foreign commerce. Pacific basin and European countries like Japan, Korea, Taiwan, England, Germany and Sweden, whose economies are heavily dependent on exports and imports, all permit a strong conference system. They do so because stability and equity of ocean rate making, which is strong, enforceable conference system provides, promotes the growth of commerce.
> Price instability and discrimination in shipping rates, as these successful trading nations have found, is inconsistent with national trading interests and the development of export commerce.

Those observations on the use made by important trading countries of the conference system can be applied to the Canadian situation. We clearly have not obtained all those gains from a sound conference system. One of the results should surely be the development of a Canadian merchant marine operating on the oceans. We have not seen that happen. I regret that very, very much.

We in our Party have long been concerned about the shipbuilding industry across Canada in several great port cities. We have been concerned about the possibilities of developing the steel and other industries that are subsidiary to shipbuilding. We have been concerned about the possibility of employment for Canadians in a merchant marine. We regret very deeply the failure of Governments past, the present Government particularly, but really no less so the Party which is now the Official Opposition and its failure to do anything about the development of a Canadian merchant marine. If we had done that, we would have strength in a variety of productive areas and employment for Canadians.

Perhaps I shall say in all honesty the reason that has not happened is partly the result of international conditions. After the Second World War the United States led the way in encouraging flags of convenience, registry of vessels in Panama, Liberia and other places. Those vessels lacking safety, labour and other provisions were able to undercut any vessels registered in North America. In the United States the domestic shipping industry has been maintained largely because of the Jones Act which has required American bottoms, American registered vessels, for coastal trade. If it were not for that kind of basis, there would not be very much of a registry in the United States either. I realize those were the international factors within which our Governments operated, but I do not think they made any effort to have the system changed in order to encourage a Canadian merchant marine.

Recognizing that the possibilities of a conference system which have been exploited by many countries were not used in the Canadian situation, we now find ourselves faced with the situation of how to regard the conference. My justification for it has been in the way of making possible employment and productivity in Canada, which is only possible if shipping can be carried on in a profitable way by companies registered in Canada. I am clearly putting forward a case for the conference which is founded on the profitability within checks, of course, of companies involved in ocean shipping.

There, Mr. Speaker, is one of the most ironic aspects of my comments this afternoon and our debate of this Bill. One would expect a Conservative Government to have a due regard for decent profits in every industry, no less so among companies carrying on the business of ocean shipping. I submit that Bill C-21 will be highly disruptive of ocean shipping and will have a most deleterious effect on the profitability of companies in the business now. So many of them are running in the red already in the economic circumstances of our time and Bill C-21 will only make it worse.

I need to say very hastily in making these observations for my caucus that when I talk about the profitability of these companies, I want that to be within a reasonable range of operations. There, of course, is the very basis of our case for regulation. If we are to avoid the cut-throat, destructive competition in ocean shipping which the conference system was designed to prevent, then the only reasonable response to the situation of organization through conference is to ensure that the system is regulated, that the rates are registered with an authority and that there be the possibility of investigations, roll backs and so on. That of course is the system that has prevailed with the Canadian Transport Commission. That is the organization that we want to maintain in this area.

What do we see instead of that? A number of concepts are being put forward by this Bill that will threaten the viability of the conference system which the Bill appears to be renewing and protecting from the competition law of Canada. If it were applied here, it would of course prevent this kind of an agreement or collusion, if you will, among carriers in one particular industry. First, the Bill continues the exemption from the Competition Act, but puts forward mechanisms likely to be quite disruptive to the conference organization for which the Bill allows. It does so by means of two different arrangements. One is the arrangement for independent action and the other is the arrangement for confidential service contracts.

The proposal for independent action is, by its very nature, a destructive feature for the conference. We have an organization of carriers who have established the rules for their trade, including rates that shall be charged, and who ensure that there will be competition in this system on the basis of published rates known to all. At the same time there is a provision for an individual carrier to break with that agreement and establish a rate, which I recognize must be published, allowing it to undercut the arrangement it has made with others.

The length of time that should prevail if independent action were to be allowed is one of the important features here and the Bill in Clause 4 allows a company to take independent action on 10 days' notice. That is not very long. I note from the material Mr. Gottshall presented to us the insistence of one of the conferences, the Transpacific Westbound Freight Agreement organization, that if there is to be independent action, there should be at least 30 days' notice given. Thirty days' notice allows the other members of the conference to react to the situation. It allows them to consider the possibility of matching that rate.

If the point of independent action is to reduce rates, and I am sure those who developed this Bill had that objective, then a competitive process in which the others have time to respond to information that has been given in order to establish a new rate would seem to be a fine result to achieve. Mr. Gottshall also suggests that there should be for these arrangements a life of at least six months to a year, so that this action would be continued and there would be some measure of stability in the industry when such changes take place.

These comments on the matter of independent action are ones that need to be taken very seriously when considering whether or not it is advisable to introduce this disruptive element into the operations of the conference. If independent action is dubious, when we consider the possibility of confidential service contracts, we consider going back to the worst era of companies doing anything to their competitors in order to make money for the short run no matter what may happen in the long run. This particular provision seems to me to be completely incredible. Even if we were to accept the possibility that the Canadian Government is simply aping the U.S. Government in legislation that came into effect two and a half years ago, it would still be completely incredible.

This provision allows a shipper to make a confidential arrangement with one carrier. Surely large shippers who have much cargo to move will have the ability to persuade a particular carrier to reduce the rate for him. He will be allowed under the Bill to keep that rate secret so that others are not sure, although there will undoubtedly be rumours about what kind of contract exists. This arrangement is surely designed to disrupt the conference system entirely. That makes one wonder what is the point of Bill C-21.

If we are to renew the exemption of the conference system from the impact of the competition Act, then why do we have these destructive elements in the Bill? If in fact we do not want the conference system to operate, then let us make it immediately open to prosecution under the Canadian Competition Act and not fool around with a Bill that supposedly extends or renews the exemption while undercutting it in these particular ways.

These proposals for independent action in Clause 4 and for confidential service contracts in Clause 12 are the two most contentious elements in the Bill. There are other smaller items that are not much less contentious than these for those who are involved in the industry. The ironic thing about Bill C-21 is that it is not only the carriers who are opposed to it. There is no doubt that the carriers are opposed to it, as I can assure Hon. Members from what I have seen in the way of briefs presented. The Hon. Member for Papineau has already read substantially from one of those briefs while saying that others have already come before the Transport Committee. We do have evidence that the carriers are opposed to the Bill, but we also have before us the quite astonishing fact that the Shipping Federation of Canada, an organization of persons in ports who act as agents in the shipping trade, are no less opposed to it. These are the people who have been opposed to the development of the Canadian deep-sea merchant marine, the reason I feel anything but sympathetic toward them. They have come to Members of Parliament with their critique of and opposition to Bill C-21. Regarding the matter of confidential service contracts, they say that these would primarily interest the shippers of commodities, raw materials and semi-finished products, perhaps a dozen such commodities representing a significant percentage of Canada's water-borne exports. They go on to say:

> Confidential service contracts would primarily interest the shippers of those commodities and undermine the ability of conferences to be stabilizing forces—so much so that the continued existence of the conference system would be pointless, if not made impossible.
> The deep-sea shipping industry has faced a shippers' market for several years now and pressures resulting from the new proposals relating to service contracts and independent action would only lead to lower rates at a time when rates are already at levels which inhibit shipowners from operating profitably. The result of this interaction between shippers and shipowners would not be in anyone's best interests and would result in shippers ultimately suffering a long-term loss for a very minor short-term gain.

We have at times heard about short-term pain for long-term gain. This is promise of long-term loss for a very minor short-term gain. That is the reaction of the Shipping Federation of Canada to the Bill.

• (1640)

We also have very great concern about what may happen if both Bill C-19, which deals with trucking, and this Bill are passed. The U.S. has so-called private ports, Elizabeth, New Jersey, being one, which have freedom from a good deal of the law on contracting. That results in very low costs. If the trucking legislation is changed in such a way that U.S. trucking companies can run into Canada very easily it becomes quite possible that much of the container business in particular could become centered in a few American ports from which they could be run into Canada. That would have very serious consequences for some Canadian ports, Saint John, New Brunswick, perhaps being the best example. Conceivably Halifax could be affected as well. Who knows what its impact might be in Vancouver. We can see employment in Canadian ports suffering considerably as a direct result of this legislation.

That is an indication of how serious the consequences of this Bill may be and how important it is that the Standing Committee on Transport be allowed to consider it fully. This legislation should go to the standing committee and not be left to a legislative committee to deal with separately. It is part of the deregulation complex and it should be possible for the standing committee to consider the various dangers resulting from this system.

The question of what the intention actually is in this legislation forces us to consider for a few moments the context of the American legislation within which the Canadian legislation was surely put forward. The U.S. passed legislation a few years ago in this area and it seems the Canadian Government is putting forward similar or even worse legislation in this Bill. The U.S. does not allow for the confidential service contract. That is a Canadian wrinkle which, as I have said, is likely to be completely disruptive of the industry. Last year, of 29 carriers operating in the westbound trade from North America to Asia, less than half actually belonged to the Transpacific Westbound Rate Agreement. Of those, 13 companies lost an average of $50 million. Among those companies we find U.S. Lines, now undergoing reorganization with a court-appointed receiver because of the financial plight it fell into and in the circumstances which were only made worse by the American legislation. I want to note the following comments of the Shipping Federation of Canada:

> Although we are totally opposed, for the above reasons, to suggestions that Canada's legislation emulate that of the U.S., if the Minister is adamant that it be so patterned, then it is our strong recommendation that the passage of new legislation here await the trial period of the U.S. legislation and the study to be conducted by the Federal Maritime Commission as to whether or not it is workable for the longer term. The trial period extends over five years, of which two and a half years have passed, leaving two and a half years more experience to be gained. In the circumstances, it would seem prudent to extend our current legislation until that review has been conducted by the Federal Maritime Commission.

The Federation is well aware of what has happened in the U.S. where it passed a law with little investigation of the situation. Congress legislated in the hope that shipping conferences dominated by other countries in the Pacific, particularly Japanese and Hong Kong interests, would have some sort of freedom of independent action which would allow the American companies to do better against their Asian competitors within the conference system. While the protectionist intent of the legislation was quite clear, its economic effect has been completely destructive of the American companies operating in these conferences. Witness the comments by Ronald B. Gottshall, managing director of the Transpacific Westbound Rate Agreement, speaking in New York on January 8, 1987. In his comments on the policy he says the following:

> The last part of the declaration of policy, which states that the Act's purpose is to encourage an economically sound and efficient U.S.-flag fleet, is one which in my opinion seems doomed to failure as a general purpose of the Act. While there is evidence that there will be an American flag fleet, the question is not "how big?", but instead "how small?".
> In my position as managing director of an agreement covering many nationalities and flags, I believe it is essential that each trading partner maintain a presence in trade to represent the transportation interests of its constituents. Without dwelling on the U.S. flag fleet, it's possible that as a result of its adverse effects, the Act won't help anybody.

He then says more specifically concerning the effect of the Act:

> Now that we've heard the worst, what do we do about it? Six months ago I was of the opinion that we could survive the five years until review of the Shipping Act and that perhaps even a longer review period was necessary because of the cyclical nature of the shipping business.
> Now I'm not sure that we can wait that long. The abuses brought about by "pro-competitive independent action" and "service contracts" have exacerbated the situation, and there may be fatal results for a significant number of carriers before any scheduled review. The shipping public, particularly in the North American trade, customarily presses for faster transit times and more frequent departures; point-to-point services; and systems that will track cargo at any point in the transportation scheme. At the same time, and even though everything they want costs money, many of these shippers firmly believe that transportation costs can be consistently depressed without any effect on the transportation system. To be sure, there was an old saying that, "carriers may go, but ships remain", meaning that there will always be an operator for unemployed vessels.
> That truism, of course, depended heavily on the banks who in the past were far more willing to extend operating loans to almost anyone. Today, many banks have backed out entirely or substantially reduced their commitment to the shipping business because of its unpredictability and high default rate. Those banks that are still in the business are less willing to finance new carriers, or even extend credit to existing carriers for expansion purposes where the risk factor is high.

He concludes the speech by saying:

> If trade is going to grow and prosper, there must be adequate transportation resources available to carry it. Without being redundant, that takes two things:
>
> A commitment by the carriers to provide the capital and facilities to meet the challenge; and,
> A commitment by shippers to pay an equitable price for the services they need and want.

The effect of Bill C-21 will be to allow those shippers who can exploit their strength in the market to force desperate carriers in the short run to undertake contracts that they cannot make a profit on. The result will be quite destructive in the carrier business on the oceans touching on Canada. The fact that 90 per cent of the companies involved in the conferences are owned by Governments of other countries, with the remaining 10 per cent in foreign private hands, if you will, should not be a reason for the Canadian Government to put forward a bill which will be so very, very destructive.

• (1650)

I will conclude my observations on Bill C-21 by pressing, in the strongest possible terms, for this Bill to be considered by the Transport Committee. It is necessary to consider its effects on the ports of Canada, employment in those ports, and on the agencies dealing with the shipping trade in Canada. It is necessary, surely in terms of some regard for the countries, to consider what its effects will be on the various carriers. The fact that the Shipping Federation of Canada is opposed to the Bill, those being the people involved in presenting the cargoes rather than owning the carriers, is the best possible reason to have this matter put before the Transport Committee where it can be properly considered. My colleague, the Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus), and others are very active in this.

The Member for Papineau made some comments on Bill C-75 from the last session. I appreciate that Members can be quite myopic about the rest of the country when celebrating what they accomplished in their own region. However, it is manifestly unfair to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan, and others in my caucus to focus only on Montreal in the battle to have cost recovery for the Coast Guard removed from Bill C-75. The effort was exerted on the Great Lakes as much as on the St. Lawrence, and perhaps even more, although I do not want to indulge in the same kind of myopic behaviour. The Member for Papineau knows very well as a result of his visit to the Transport Committee, and I believe with the Seaway committee when he came to Thunder Bay last June, that there is as much concern about cost recovery at the head of the Lakes as there is in Montreal. I say that to balance the record on this matter and I am sure he will accept the accuracy of my observations.

I would like to reiterate, underscore, and emphasize in the strongest possible way that Bill C-21 is part of the Government's deregulation package. It will be a destructive element in deep sea transportation as the other Bills will be disruptive in other parts of Canada's transportation industry. We New Democrats think that an industry has the right to make a decent profit. Only with decent profits being made is it possible for workers to negotiate decent wages for themselves while, at the same time, capital obtains the reward that it deserves. In transportation that calls for open, sound organization, information being made available, and regulation of the industry to ensure that the profits do not become excessive. That is our basis for regulation.

I apologize to no one for putting forward this case which respects workers and capital and recognizes the needs of the industry to provide a service as well as recognizing the importance of a well organized transportation industry for all Canadians producers and all those who want the goods. There is nothing for which to apologize. We New Democrats find ourselves in the very strange situation that we are the only ones making such a case these days. The rest of the world seems to have gone mad with some kind of a free enterprise faith and are worshipping very strange gods indeed.

I would like to underscore something which the Hon. Member for Papineau has suggested. There are many briefs before the Transport Committee. The Member read substantially from the brief of the Eastern Canada Caribbean Rate Agreement. I note that the Inter-American Freight Conference has submitted a brief. I have drawn a great deal of advice from the Transpacific Westbound Rate Agreement. The Asian North American Eastbound Rate Agreement has submitted a brief in another direction. I understand that there are 25 briefs expected from the carriers and their organizations. I am sure there will be others.

The Shipping Federation will want to comment on this Bill in a most critical way. They will call for the Government to take it back and give us simply a shipping conference exemption Act and, particularly, to get rid of the provision which exists in the Bill for the confidential service contract. This is not law that the Parliament of Canada should be passing. I call upon the Parliament of Canada to throw it down.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Mrs. Landry (for the Minister of Transport) seconded by Mr. Kelleher, moves that Bill C-21, an Act to exempt certain shipping conference practices from the provisions of the Competition Act, to repeal the Shipping Conferences Exemption Act, 1979 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a Legislative Committee.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a Legislative Committee.

RADIO ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed, from Monday, March 2, consideration of the motion of Miss MacDonald that Bill C-3, an Act to amend the Radio Act, be read the third time and do pass.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I would like to seek guidance from the Chair. I started to debate Bill C-3 on March 2 at almost the same late hour. As it is almost two minutes to five, I wonder whether the House would consider calling it five o'clock, or would you like me to speak for two minutes and then continue when the Bill is next before the House? What is the wish of the House, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Does the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary wish to call it five o'clock?

Mr. Lewis: Under the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I think that would be appropriate. The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) is here and prepared to proceed with Private Members' Hour. Our speakers for Private Members' Hour are here as well.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Therefore, the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) will be recognized when the Bill is next before the House so that she can make her great speech.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to thank you for your consideration, and through you, to thank the Parliamentary Secretary.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 5 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--MOTIONS

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

DEFENCE OF QUEBEC'S INTERESTS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of establishing a permanent mechanism, consisting of representatives of the government, the official opposition and the government of Quebec, in order to ensure that Quebec interests will be better defended in the future.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I think it would be useful to repeat the motion, whose purpose, and I hope it will be supported by all Quebec Members of the House, is to set up a committee representing both Government and Official Opposition Members, as well as the Quebec National Assembly, and thus provide for better defence of Quebec interests that are being neglected here in Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to mention seventeen issues which, after the thirty months this Government has been in power, and that is since yesterday, have yet to be resolved. These are situations where people have lost their jobs and are waiting for the Government to reverse its decision so they can get their jobs back. There are other situations where decisions are still pending, and as a result, jobs and grants will be lost, and also situations where the sick and the elderly are going to have to pay for the federal Government's cutbacks. I would like to mention, one by one, the seventeen Quebec dossiers that are languishing, Mr. Speaker.

First of all, I think everyone will recall the case of Montreal East and Vickers, Bombardier and the plan to attract new businesses under the designated-area program. Nothing has been done yet.

• (1700)

We have the shipyards. We have not only Montreal East but also the Lauzon shipyards near Quebec City, where the Minister, the Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) have been making promises, promises, promises and all kinds of announcements, but nothing has materialized yet and nobody is working in the yards. And we have the same situation in Sorel and Montreal. The only projects people are working on now are the frigate contracts that were awarded under the Liberals.

Mr. Speaker, there is the paper mill in Matane. There is also the Desbiens paper plant in the Lac-Saint-Jean area. During the election campaign, the Prime Minister came on a visit and made promises. The Minister of Employment and Immigration sent a circular letter and held a press conference to announce that the plant would at last be opened. They, the Minister and the Prime Minister, are giving us a lot of talk but no action. The plant is still closed and people are waiting for an answer.

Mr. Speaker, in the Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean area . . . and by the way, are there any Member from that area?

And what about the potato growers? The Canadian Government decided to pay millions of dollars to potato growers in the Atlantic provinces. There is nothing for Quebec, Mr. Speaker. All they had last week was a cheque for $30,000 to plow under their potatoes, while their counterparts in the Atlantic provinces received compensation. And nobody from Quebec is standing up for them.

Mr. Speaker, at the GM plant in Boisbriand, they are still waiting to hear about the subsidies.

There is another matter that has been going on for some time, in the riding of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), and I am referring to the employees at Melcher's.

Then there is the famous promise concerning a banking centre in Montreal. It now looks as if we might have a counter to deposit cheques during the night, not to cash them! You read newspaper reports concerning the economic fall-out of the space station—Quebec was awarded only one contract while Ontario ended up with ten of them.

There is the matter of equalization payments.

In the immigration sector, the provincial government asked for financial compensation to be able to cope with the massive influx of refugees into Quebec, but again this Conservative Government said no.

Referring to Bill C-18 provisions related to railway transport, Minister Côté said that the impact will be felt in regions far from Montreal, services will be cut back. Again no answer, and no objections raised by Members.

I read an article today which clearly indicates that the Minister asked for funds to clean up the environment, just like Ontario got to fight pollution in the Great Lakes. Sure enough, we were told the Minister had left for Montreal and said: "No way, not a cent!"

Other files. Quotas in the footwear industry. The textile and clothing sector.

I am working on my 17th file concerning Quebec consumer associations still waiting for answers to their applications for grants to promote the interests of Quebecers.

Mr. Speaker, I have 17 files here which have been pending, unanswered. Talk about other files which were settled, Domtar to name one. Why did Domtar get money? Because we had to set up a survival committee to force the Government—and here I must pay homage to my colleagues from Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) and Richmond—Wolfe (Mr. Tardif) who were very active on the Domtar survival committee—to award grants to Domtar. But this was not new money, it came from the funds given to the provincial government.

Let me get back to the matter of Montreal East. There was a survival committee made up of people from all political parties. You may recall that the Gulf refinery was shut down, but the Member for Mercier did not even lift a finger. Mr. Speaker, a Minister has resigned. A Conservative Member has crossed the floor, he is now an NDP Member and still nothing has come from Ottawa. As in the other case, the Domtar case, the Provincial Government has obtained that half of the refining facilities remain in operation.

Canadair was taken over by Bombardier—the CF-18 contract. I know that in a few moments the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais), the Hon. Member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers), the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine)—the three or four who were there today—will try to tell us that the obtained that. That is not true. It was Norm Cherry, the Canadair union representative, who set up a survival Committee, a pressure group, and enlisted all Montreal businessmen, all the church establishment. A council speaking unanimously for the greater Montreal area forced the Government into awarding the CF-18 contract to Canadair, and Canadair was purchased by Bombardier, the highest bidder.

The only thing I can give them credit for, Mr. Speaker, is Pétromont, but then it was one of the vice-presidents who got that. The others had nothing to do with it. They will brag, but anyway . . . Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for La Prairie has put his head on the block concerning the Champlain Bridge tolls, but everybody still has to pay.

Then looking at the resolution, at its implications, certainly there is not a Member here who will not support the motion if he believes in the interests of Quebecers rather than in stuffing his own pockets, as we saw in those patronage cases, if he is really commited to the interests of Quebecers. He will support this motion, not because the Liberal member for the Montreal—Sainte-Marie riding is asking him to, but because the 50 Melcher's employees under the leadership of Margot Bruneau are asking him to, because Mr. Beaubien, who is the president of the Vickers' employees union and because the presidents of the Bombardier's employees union and the Montreal East citizens' committee are asking for action, on the ground that the people in that area have the right to work. The people in the Hochelaga—Maisonneuve riding have the right to be treated honourably just like the people in any other province in the rest of the country, and they too have the right to get contracts which will give them jobs, irrespective of patronage.

The people from Lauzon to Lévis, those of Quebec city should not always have to—the union is forced to organize a march to hang the member for Lévis in effigy, to organize a sit-in at the office of the Minister of Region Industrial Expansion in the Quebec area just to get a labour contract or they have to come to Ottawa. It is for these people that I am asking for this. The Matane people are sick and tired of the promises the Prime Minister, one hand over his heart and the other over the Gospel . . . Matane: Nothing is settled. It is Mr. John Ciaccia, the Provincial Minister of Energy who says that if the Matane case is not settled, it is because the Federal Government is dragging its feet. He is saying that, not me. The Desbiens plant in the Sagueney—Lac-Saint-Jean riding, the potato producers . . . Is there one single Quebec member of the Conservative Party who can stand up and tell me that the farmers . . . will the Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne), as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture, rise in the House and say: The Quebec potato producers are not so good as those in the Maritimes and therefore cannot be compensated. Is that the Government's decision? He will stand up and say: Yes, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie is right, Quebec farmers should be treated as equitably as all the other farmers in this country.

You know about the decision, Mr. Speaker, I notice unfortunately that my time is running out when my honourable friends were starting to listen, including the Hon. Member for La Prairie: That might help. I am anxious to hear what they have to say. I am counting on their support and I dare hope for the sake of these people, that with everybody's help we can protect the 10,000 jobs which are being jeopardized in Quebec.

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, it is with great interest that I take part in the debate today, no so much to speak to the basic issue of the motion but to take this great opportunity given by the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie to Quebec Members to show the vigour, enthusiam, competence and efficiency we put into our representations and efforts to promote the interests of Quebec. I would certainly commend the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie for being somewhat more restrained in his remarks. He was more reasonable, less insulting than usual, more disciplined, so I think he deserves praise in that respect.

But as far as the motion is concerned, Mr. Speaker, I think he would have been well advised to introduce it when the Liberals were still in office because we should not forget that Quebec's unemployment rate was over 14 per cent when we came to power. Mr. Speaker, 500,000 young people were without work throughout Canada and various industries were closing down in Quebec. So he would have been much better advised to present his motion when his Party was still on the government side. We will not change the world, the parliamentary system exists, Canadians elected a Conservative Government on September 4, 1984 and, until further notice, we are at the helm in this country.

Here in the House of Commons we have standing committees on which Members of the three Parties sit and which have the power to make recommendations, propositions or representations concerning any legislative measure on which they may or may not agree, Mr. Speaker. In addition, I think it is a well known fact that ours is a Government which practices consultation. With respect to our proposed legislation, we have never had a government which has done so much consultation with the people or the socio-economic organizations in Quebec and the rest of Canada. Mr. Speaker, this is why I suggest that the motion introduced by the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) is quite unacceptable . . .

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): Ridiculous.

Mr. Desjardins: It is even ridiculous, as my colleague the Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne) has termed it, since, as I have said before, never has a federal governement had a team of men and women so earnestly committed to the concerns and interests of Quebecers, Mr. Speaker.

An Hon. Member: All 74 ridings.

Mr. Desjardins: Mr. Speaker, there are many Conservative Members from Quebec who would have liked to speak in the House today but, unfortunately, given the little time at our disposal, only a few will have the opportunity to speak for Quebec.

An Hon. Member: What a pity.

Mr. Desjardins: It is indeed a pity since I am convinced that Hon. Members from Quebec, whether they represent the Abitibi—Témiscamingue area, the Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean area, the Gaspé, the Montreal region or any other region of Quebec, would have good things to say about what the Conservative Government has accomplished in their respective regions.

Mr. Speaker, the greatest economic achievement of this Government in Quebec has been the signing of regional economic development agreements. This Government has signed close to ten subsidiary agreements dealing with regional development in Quebec, a type of agreement which the liberals refused to sign when they were in power on account of the hostile, contemptuous and confrontational attitude with which they regarded Quebec. As a Government, Mr. Speaker, the first thing we did was to sign economic development agreements with the Government of Quebec, amounting to more than 1,600 million dollars. It is not peanuts, Mr. Speaker, it is 1 billion 600 million dollars and it explains why the rate of unemployment in Quebec has gone down from 14 per cent to the present 10.8 per cent. It comes from that kind of initiatives.

Our Government, Mr. Speaker, has signed economic development agreements with Quebec in several areas, for example, industrial development, forest development, mine development, transportation, tourism and, more recently, agriculture and agri-food development. I am confident that the Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne), if he has a chance to speak, will tell us all the benefits that the agri-food agreement with Quebec will bring to agriculture development in that province. These agreements, totalling as I said 1 billion 600 million dollars, have brought down the rate of unemployment and in my area of Abitibi—Temiscamingue, for example, the rate which was 18.8 per cent in 1984 was down to 10.8 per cent in January 1987. There is no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that this improvement can be attributed to our efforts in regional development.

The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie, whom we understand and support, likes to defend the older people and the youth of this country. As a Member from an outlying area called Temiscamingue, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that a number of Hon. Members in that same situation would have a proud record of achievements regarding senior citizens and young people. As far as the former are concerned, Mr. Speaker, in a riding like mine, in a period of a year and a half, our Governement has granted 5 million dollars to build housing for senior citizens. Just ask these senior citizens and retirees whether or not they are happy about the money invested to improve their quality of life and environment.

As for young people, which is not only a priority for the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie, but also a major priority for the Conservatives, nearly $2 million have been invested in my own constituency in youth programs and organizations, including $450,000 early this year to create a youth resource centre where 40 disadvantaged young people will be able to receive training to rejoin the labour force. This is a five-year program, which means that, in Temiscamingue, 200 young people will receive training, and education to rejoin the labour market within the next five years. This is how we defend the interests of the population of Quebec.

Another issue which the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie rarely mentions, but of which we talk a lot ourselves is the issue of women. In my constituency, over $1 million have been invested in organizations which defend the interests and the rights of women. This is an enviable record. I could have shown today letters of appreciation from various youth groups and women's organizations thanking our Government for its assistance.

An issue which the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie did not mention, and I can understand him because the Liberals have nothing to brag about in this area, is the environment. Before we came into power, Mr. Speaker, Quebec Members were not even aware that the biggest polluter in Quebec—

Some Hon. Members: Oh! Oh!

Mr. Desjardins: Mr. Speaker, I understand the reactions of the Members opposite. When the Liberals were in power, they did not recognize that the biggest polluter in Quebec was Noranda Mines in Rouyn-Noranda. In fact, the only statement made between 1979 and 1984 by my predecessor, who should have known that the biggest problem in Abitibi-Témiscamingue was pollution and acid rain, was to the effect that he wished the federal Government would put pressure on the United States to clean up the Niagara River. How shocking! The people of my region must be shocked to know that, while their own health and that of our lakes and forests was being threatened, my precedessor spoke about the pollution of the Niagara River. Such an attitude is unacceptable and immoral, Mr. Speaker!

This Government made commitments in Quebec on environmental issues as never before, to the point that $42 million will soon be earmarked, and I ask Hon. Members opposite to take good note of it, $42 million will go to Quebec, to Rouyn-Noranda, for a pollution control system at Noranda Mines which will at last solve the quality of life and environmental problems in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, the environmental issue is crucial and Canadians have recognized it in a poll as the most important problem.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Desjardins: I hear them heckling on the other side because they do not like hearing good news, since they never had any themselves. But on this side of the House, some of us have good news to spread.

Mr. Rossi: Mentioning yelping—

Mr. Desjardins: As regards environment, our Government has shown to the province of Quebec in less than two years that it was committed to solve the problem. I see that I have only one minute left but I wish to conclude on this environmental issue which is most important. The Liberals never took any action against acid rain. But after less than two years, we are allocating $42 million to the solution of the pollution problem in Quebec through an air pollution control system at Noranda Mines.

Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members from Quebec are doing more than ever before to defend the interests of the province of Quebec and we will continue to do so.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in today's debate on the motion presented by the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), and I hope he will be back in the House to hear what subsequent speakers will have to say.

Mr. Speaker, in speaking to this motion, I am not going to try and compete with the Hon. Member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Desjardins), who discussed about thirty or so cases in great detail, and I do not intend to emulate the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie who condemned the Government with a verve that was almost as impressive. Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak to the motion itself, although if anyone is to be commended and thanked, I think all Members of this House should thank the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie for raising the subject of the interests of Quebec and Quebecers.

• (1720)

I would like to consider the mechanism proposed in today's motion, because I think it has some deficiencies. It is important that we take this opportunity to discuss the specific problems facing Quebec's economy today. I am referring to the problems in Montreal East, where plants and refineries were closed down as a result of this Government's policies. There are the potato growers and their problems. The shipyards in Quebec City and Montreal are in trouble. There are problems with the textile and clothing industry in the Eastern Townships and Montreal. These are matters with which all parties represented here in the House are quite familiar. We are all very concerned and take these matters very seriously.

However, Mr. Speaker, when a motion like the one before the House today is presented, we may assume, for the purpose of addressing these problems, we must consider whether it is a practical proposal, a practical mechanism.

Although I admire wholeheartedly the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie and the sincerity and the persistance with which he pursues these issues, occasionally there is a hint of partisanship which also comes to the fore in his motion, and as a Member of the New Democratic Party, I must say that I find no reference to the third party in this House. Mr. Speaker, I note that we have before us a proposal which has to do with the Government or even with Parliament because to be a government institution there are too many players mentioned in the motion, whereas as a Parliamentary institution they are too few.

I should like to ask the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie why such a motion was never moved while his party was in power at the federal level, and especially at the time when his party was in power at both the federal and provincial levels.

Although the idea put forward today is rather new, one should wonder why, when they had the opportunity, the Liberal party of Canada and the Liberal party of Quebec never established such a mechanism as suggested by this motion.

Mr. Speaker, there was a time, not too distant, when it was apparently difficult for the Government of Canada and the Government of Quebec to deal with any issue, when any subject was a source of friction between the two parties. Times may have changed or perhaps priorities. I would suggest to my honourable friends on the Government benches that it might have been a change with people which brought about a change in attitude and resulted in . . . Well, I believe it is easier now than it was ten years ago, for instance, for the federal and provincial Governments to discuss problems, and issues which are now perceived as common and shared problems.

Unfortunately, the proposal put forward today is a ridiculous one. It totally ignores the way our Parliamentary system works, under which, according to our Parliamentary tradition, the powers of Government are used by the executive. The executive power being wielded by this Government, surely it is unfortunate in the present context, but perhaps a few years down the road nobody will be complaining. The power is wielded exclusively by the Government while the Opposition may criticize and make suggestions but cannot act where executive power is concerned.

As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, with this proposal, such an organization would include the federal Government, the Official Opposition—this is not specifically stated but I suppose so—and the Quebec Governement. It would be an hybrid organization, because from a governmental point of view, it is obvious that such a mechanism would only include the Quebec Governement and the federal Government, but if the organization were set up at the parliamentary level, it would include the Government, the Official Opposition and the NDP at the federal level as well as the provincial Opposition and the Quebec Government.

Mr. Speaker, this could be a satisfactory and possibly more interesting combination and surely such a structure could be more productive than the one suggested in the motion. However, I should also ask, Mr. Speaker, what will the other provinces think of such a mechanism. Will we receive requests from other provinces for the setting up of such a joint mechanism with the federal Government. With this arrangement, would we be adding another level of advisory organizations within the structure of federal-provincial consultations which I think is already over burdened.

The present motion, Mr. Speaker, recalls to mind many of the traditional features of the Liberal Party which keeps believing it is natural for it to form the government. When it is in power, Mr. Speaker, it advocates parliamentary traditions, it extols the responsibility and powers of government. When they are out of office, Mr. Speaker, then the agenda, the issues are entirely different. They raise matters for consultation. Pretending to promote democracy, they propose all kinds of supposedly democratic mechanisms that frankly have no other aim than to take way from the government powers the Liberals themselves exercise, favour and keep when they are in office. God forbid their return to power!

So, Mr. Speaker, I think that on Monday, on the matter of the Government's borrowings, we would have an opportunity to discuss all the issues we might want to raise, about the interests of Quebec and all other areas of the country. The concept we have here, Mr. Speaker, is not a practical one, even though the spirit in which it is raised is commendable.

Mr. Édouard Desrosiers (Hochelaga—Maisonneuve): Mr. Speaker, I was really looking forward to speaking to the motion presented in the House today by the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), but when I saw the motion, Mr. Speaker, I was astonished and appalled. How could a Member with his experience present a motion like this? The whole idea is so unacceptable that I fail to understand how the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie could consider asking for a permanent mechanism.

Especially when we consider that as far as relations with the provinces and the ten Premiers are concerned, more meetings are being held than ever before and relations have never been better, Mr. Speaker. As you know, the provincial Ministers meet on a regular basis to discuss current issues, and now for the first time in the history of this Parliament, there are people who defend the interests of Quebec.

Perhaps I may recall, Mr. Speaker, that a few years ago, three refineries in Montreal East were shut down. Where was the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie when thousands of jobs were lost after they shut those three refineries in Montreal East, since he was referring to Montreal East a while ago? Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie was one of the people who were largely responsible for the situation. What did he do about it at the time? He did and said nothing. The Canadian people finally understood and said: For the first time, we can have people able to defend our interests in the Canadian Parliament if we ask the Conservative Party to govern this country. This is when the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie set up a kind of survival committee.

Mr. Rossi: The polls now give you 10 per cent.

Mr. Desrosiers: After the Conservatives were elected, he put together a survival committee to save Eastern Montreal. Can you imagine? He was there a while ago when the President of the Treasury Board went to Eastern Montreal with assistance worth millions of dollars. The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie was there in the case of Chemtech in Eastern Montreal. This created hundreds of jobs.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member was saying earlier that he hoped that the people of Hochelaga—Maisonneuve were being well served. I have news for you, my dear colleague for Montreal—Sainte-Marie. The people of Hochelaga—Maisonneuve have never been better served. I can tell you that, this year, there have been nearly $200 million in subsidies for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve and that hundreds of jobs have been created. We were talking earlier about Versatile Vickers. My dear friend for Montreal—Sainte-Marie, I would like to tell you that the Canadian Government has just set aside $611 million for Versatile Vickers in Montreal, Lauzon and Sorel and that this will create hundreds of jobs between now and 1991.

Do not try to suggest that we are not taking care of the population of Hochelaga—Maisonneuve. You say in your motion that you want the Official Opposition and the Quebec Government . . . The Canadian Government is well able to make its own arrangements. We are well aware that these are your friends. In fact, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie used to be a Member of the National Assembly. Perhaps he will want to return to it soon. I would not be surprised because, as I said a while ago at the CBC, the interests of Quebec will not be defended by 57, but by 75 Progressive Conservative Members of Parliament after the next elections.

Some Hon. Members: There are going to be major changes!

Mr. Desrosiers: And let me tell you, Mr. Speaker—and you will see that the Prime Minister will go down in the history of this Parliament as one of the greatest Prime Ministers Canada ever had, surrounded by outstanding Ministers.

Some Hon. Members: Bissonnette, Sinclair, Stevens!

Mr. Desrosiers: I know this irks you. I understand that frustration of yours—it really hurts. We have fellows here who are extraordinary managers, who are putting some order back into all the mess you created.

Remember, my dear colleagues, and you Mr. Speaker, the disastrous situation we inherited from the Liberals. When we came to power, Mr. Speaker, you will recall that we had to pick up the pieces, just like a puzzle we are in the process of putting back together, piece by piece. I know this does not please the Liberals. Of course this is hurting them. In short, we have people here who are competent, conscientious and who want to provide Canadians with a genuine renewal.

Let me tell you for your information, gentlemen of the Liberal Party, that in the Hochelaga—Maisonneuve constituency, there is the Montreal Catholic School Board, which you know very well, Mr. Member from Montreal-Sainte-Marie, being from a neighbouring constituency. You know that in my constituency we have millions of dollars invested in housing—low-rental housing for poor people—we have millions of dollars invested in the Angus Shops. This week, I am going to announce additional tens of millions of dollars, 3,040 units, something that was never seen under any Liberal administration! You have never seen anything like that! The people of Hochelaga—Maisonneuve can see very well what the Progressive Conservative Party is doing. As I said, Mr. Speaker, the Catholic School Board of Montreal had trouble for years getting federal subsidies for training programs.

It is a shame to ask in this motion for a mechanism to ensure that Quebec interests will be better defended in the future, Mr. Speaker. I needed just a few weeks to bring here spokesmen of the Montreal School Board, and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) spent a few days to settle the matter; furthermore, we have just given millions of dollars to the Catholic School Board of Montreal. The Conservative Party is distributing the real wealth to the people of Canada, something you never did. Remember, Mr. Speaker, that under the Liberal Government, there were no members representing the West. Today—

An Hon. Member: People want Serge Joyal back.

Mr. Desrosiers: You can talk about my predecessor. We can talk about him for a long time. He was the shadow Hon. Member and Minister. We knew him well. My constituents can tell you that it took six years to be able to see him. He was never there. He was too busy. Believe me, I am in my constituency five days and five evenings a week. I have thousands and thousands of members in my association, and people are pleased, satisfied, happy to be members of the Progressive Conservative Party because, for the first time, there are honest people in the Conservative Party, serious people and people who work hard. We are going to succeed. I know we are not lucky with the media. You know, most of those people are Grits. The Liberals have been here in Parliament for a hundred years. There are whole families of them in every department. It is common knowledge. We know the system. We may have trouble at times, Mr. Speaker, but I can assure you that we have the guts, the principles and the strength to defend the Canadian people; whatever they may say to the contrary, we are showing them and we will show them how successful we can be.

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, today we are debating the motion of the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) who wants to ensure that Quebec interests will be better defended in the future. I would suggest that if we go back to 1981 when the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie and his colleagues were on this side, all Liberal Members at the time the Constitution was signed completely ignored the fact that there was a province called Quebec. They made fun of the whole Province of Quebec, but now they are asking us to set up a committee to look after the Province of Quebec, yet when they were in office at the time they did even want to admit its existence. No wonder then, Mr. Speaker, that we should be wary about the real meaning and seriousness of the motion introduced by the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie. Generally speaking, Mr. Speaker, I must say that we have come a long way since September 1984 with respect to the rights and the development of Quebec. For openers, on December 14, 1984—apparently the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie has forgotten already—we signed a 10-year regional development agreement, and until now there have been nine subsidiary agreements entailing outlays of $1.235 billion in the Province of Quebec. I must say also that progress in the case of the CF-18 was a topic of long debates, and the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie often raised the matter during Question Period to complain and blame the Government. Yet just a few minutes ago I heard him say that the Government did not have anything to do with the fact that the $1 billion contract was to be awarded in the Montreal region, that the aircraft technology would have developed in that region anyway. He just said we did not have anything to do with that. Is that seriousness, good faith, credibility? When problems occur, when solutions are slow to come because of the reflection going on, we are accused of doing nothing, but comes a settlement, and others are supposed to have reached it.

One day will come, and that time has already arrived, Mr Speaker, when people will be sick and tired of hearing such criticism. Indeed, when looking at the latest shuffle inside his Party, one can see that even the so-called leader of his Party cannot bear with him anymore since, officially, he has nowadays very little responsibility inside his group.

As far as Quebec is concerned, one must also talk about the Petromont project. This project provides for transportation of natural resources of gas at a better price once and for all, and this, on a permanent basis, without having industries depend on special grants as our predecessors used to do, thus creating constant anxiety in the sector. From now on, the Petromont project will insure a long term viability to a great number of businesses using natural gas as the basis of their products. This is yet another achievement of our Government, which also means 250 additional jobs.

We also heard Members on the other side complain a great deal about the banking centre issue. What we have accepted concerning the international banking centre in Montreal is precisely what had been rejected by Mr. Lalonde when he was Minister and yet, today, our Government and Quebecers stood for the creation of such a centre in Montreal. The Montreal Board of Trade, the Board of Trade of Canada, the mayor of Montreal, the Premier of Quebec and his Minister of Finance have all said that they were satisfied with this international centre, but the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) chose not to express clearly his views on that question. He feared losing votes outside Quebec. Not one Liberal Member has given his support to this initiative.

When we introduced our bill concerning the pharmaceutical industry, where were the Liberal Members Mr. Speaker? They know that Bill C-22 will bring $1.4 billion in development in Canada, of which $700 million in the Montreal area. But not a single Liberal gave us his support on this issue, Mr. Speaker.

We are currently negotiating with the United States, through Mr. Reisman and our Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney), a trade agreement which will open for us a market of 240 million people. Where is the support of the Liberal Party? There is none. The Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) gave us his point of view. The Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston) gave us a different one. The Member for Laval-des-Rapides hesitates and their leader does not know what to say. He said that he will speak when he has to, Mr. Speaker.

The trade agreement with the U.S. is supported by Liberals in Quebec. It is a Liberal Government that gives us his support in that area. Premier Bourassa formally supports us. The Minister for International Trade is constantly delivering speeches in support of the negotiations and of the positions we take in the process. He strongly encouraged us to sign an agreement that will be in the best interests of the people of Quebec. This is what we worked for and what we achieved, Mr. Speaker.

A few minutes ago, I heard someone talk about environment. Instead of subsidies which have to be renewed every year, and which add to the debt we pile on our grandchildren's back, the Government chose for the first time to cooperate with a private business and granted $33 million in the agreement with Noranda Mines which is considered the single major source of pollution. The $100 million allocated to the project will allow further refining. It is not a question of raising the height of the chimney as the Liberals did. We are determined to stop the pollution and that is exactly what we will do.

Mr. Speaker, I should also mention that our Minister who represents the Quebec City area, the Hon. Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté), has handled outstandingly well the case of the country's shipyards. Members opposite are no longer raising the question but day after day during question period they would ask for details. They have to be reminded, Mr. Speaker, that shipyards in Quebec, including the great Lauzon shipyard, the Vickers shipyard and the one in Sorel, will be spending $1.22 billion from now until 1991. That has never been mentioned by the Hon. Members, and I can give details, Mr. Speaker. Those are federal Government contracts and assistance to upgrade the shipyard facilities and develop special services; those are no longer mere short term solutions like those we used to have under the Liberals when a ship here and a ship there were contracted out as election time drew closer, and once the election was over the ships were repaired elsewhere. That is what the Liberals used to do. Of course, we will do the opposite. We will build on a long term basis and develop facilities so our eastern shipyards, the ones at Lauzon, Sorel and the Vickers, will be able to face international competition.

I heard earlier the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie refer to East end Montreal. We have recreated employment in East end Montreal, and handed it over to private enterprise. The Vickers shipyards will resume operations and will have a new vocation. The Hon. Member told us that contracts for the frigates were to be awarded. The Liberals had announced that frigates would be built. They bought dozens of elections on that promise as they did in the case of the Matane's paper mill which was referred to by the Hon. Member of Montreal—Sainte-Marie. Time after time, they were elected on the basis of these promises. I could mention the dairy policy, the federal Government's intervention on behalf of the farmers who were subjected to a freeze since 1981. I could also—regrettably, I would have liked, Mr. Speaker, to speak about the remarks of the Hon. Member for Terrebonne which I found impossible to summarize. By the way I noticed the absence of the only Quebec NDP Member, the Hon. Member for Terrebonne (Mr. Toupin), who did not even care to show up today to discuss a concrete issue facing Quebec.

So, if as he claims, apparently he represents all the Hon. Members of his caucus, then, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Malépart: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) has just mentioned that the Hon. Member for Terrebonne is absent. I would like you to call him to order. He knows full well that he cannot allude to anyone's absence. We could mention the absence of the Hon. Member for Mercier (Mrs. Jacques) and of the Member for Rosemont (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) from the Government benches.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine).

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, as usual, my colleague the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie is not behaving in a very civilized manner. It is about time that some people in this House tell him so. I mentioned that the Hon. Member for Terrebonne should have stood up, Mr. Speaker. As he represents 100 percent of the socialist party caucus for Quebec, it would only seem normal that the Hon. Member for Terrebonne should stand in his place and expound his philosophy regarding the evolution of Quebec. Nevertheless, we have neither heard him speak nor seen him rise.

Mr. Speaker, now with regard to what our Government has done—I see my time is running out and I shall conclude shortly—I would like to point out that in the field of agriculture we have been the first to endorse an egg marketing agreement, the first since 1981 to bring security to our milk producers all across Quebec who had been begging for a dairy policy for years. In 1985, we gave them what they had been asking for by introducing a five year program.

For all these good reasons, Mr. Speaker, the proposal made by the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie should be given no more consideration than any other statement he makes in this House.

• (1750)

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I also welcome the opportunity to take part in this debate on the interests of Quebec and the motion presented by my hon. colleague and friend, the Liberal Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), who, as we all know, is doing an excellent job as a true defender of the interests of his province. This fact is recognized by all Quebecers and everywhere he goes in the province, people are aware of this.

Mr. Speaker, we have heard several speakers, including three Conservatives from Quebec who tried to praise the Conservative Government for defending the interests of Quebecers.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to start with the first Conservative speaker, the Hon. Member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Desjardins), who has a lot of softwood lumber in his riding. Mr. Speaker, we did not see the Hon. Member rise in the House to protest. In fact, Mr. Speaker, the Quebec lumber industry exports 2.8 of its annual production estimated at 3.37 to the United States. The lumber industry in Quebec consists of 113 plants, mostly located away from the major centres. These small—and medium-sized businesses, Mr. Speaker, employ 38,000 workers directly and 157,000 more indirectly. Whole villages in the Gaspé, Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean, the Outaouais, the Laurentians, Abitibi and on the North Shore depend exclusively on this industry. Mr. Speaker, everybody knows what happened. They made a deal with the United States and they sold out Quebec's interests. Thousands of jobs are at risk as a result of this policy. And what did the Conservative Members from Quebec do about it, Mr. Speaker? They didn't say a word and meekly accepted the decision made by the Minister for International Trade.

Mr. Speaker, we rarely have the opportunity to hear the Hon. Member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosier) in the House of Commons.

Mr. Malépart: It is the first time he rises.

Mr. Gagliano: I do not know if it is the first time. It may be the second since I have already heard that same speech tonight.

Mr. Jourdenais: He has risen more often. You are not here when he speaks.

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member took pride in the fact that this government had met the premier and that they have been discussing. Quebecers do not need words, Mr. Speaker, they need jobs.

Mr. Speaker, he said that it is a good government and that they are good managers. I have a list, but I would run out of time if I had to say in ten minutes what good managers they are and what they did with the taxpayers' money. I will give a few examples only, not all because it would take quite a while. We should not forget, Mr. Speaker, the $1.6 billion bailout for the two western banks to guarantee deposits over $60,000. Everybody knows the banking law: deposits are not guaranteed above $60,000. Those who had deposits in those banks knews very well that they were running a risk, but interest rates were high and they took full advantage. So, the government paid all those people, Mr. Speaker. How much dit that cost? Two hundred million were given to the Hongkong Bank to take over the Bank of B.C.

Those great issues, Mr. Speaker—the Port-Cartier prison, which was transfered from Drummondville to the Prime Minister's constituency—

Mr. Malépart: A scandal!

Mr. Gagliano: The Gulf/Reichman agreement—$1 billion worth of tax exemptions that were allowed when Gulf was sold to Olympia & York. And then there was the Gulf shutdown. After having been allowed $1 billion in tax exemptions, in return they shut down the Gulf refinery in the East end of Montreal. I could go on, Mr. Speaker. This Tory Government's mismanagement can be weighed by the ton.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind Hon. Members of a date, one they may have forgotten. On July 26, 1984, the Tory caucus was in Quebec and that day, following a Quebec caucus, the then Leader of the Opposition who is now our Prime Minister made lofty statements about the textile industry, the clothing industry, the footwear industry. He was going to protect that industry. He was going to make sure the footwear quotas would remain in place, because that industry was not to disappear, it had to be maintained. But not long after that, only one year, they had forgotten about those promises, those ten-point promises. Everyone knows them.

Everyone has read them, and all the newspapers have referred to them with fanfare, but I have no time to spare to read them here. I know very well that Conservative Members do remember them. Then, Mr. Speaker, what happened, one year later, in the footwear industry for instance? Quotas were removed on men's shoes, and a program of quota reduction was announced for women's shoes. I think that by 1988 there will no longer be any quotas left on women's shoes. Under the pretense that Canadian consumers should be protected, because according to the Tories, Canadian consumers were paying higher prices because of quotas. But what has happened after the quotas were removed? Footwear prices did not go down. Quite the opposite, they went up, and consumers paid more. But many, many jobs were lost in Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote a few figures. For instance, since quotas were removed on November 1st, 1986, Italian imports have increased by 36 per cent, Spanish imports by 147 per cent, Taiwan imports by 238 per cent. According to the Shoe Manufacturers Association of Canada, production went down 32 per cent in 1986. Between August 1985 and August 1986, manufacturers have reported 2,000 jobs lost, 1,700 of which in Quebec. Those are jobs, not rhetoric administrative action or promises. Quebecers are fed up with promises. That is why accordig to Gallup polls, it is clear that the Conservative Party has come down to 10 per cent in Quebec. Never in the history of Gallup polls has a political party tumbled so low. Those are the results they are responsible for. This is what people think of the Conservative Party in spite of all their rhetoric. The evidence is quite clear. You only have to refer to Le Soleil of February 28 where the following can be read: "Wilson is strangling Quebec." Can this be more explicit? It is not the Liberal Party but Quebecers who are saying it. Therefore, I think the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie has presented a motion, and I do not agree with the NPD Member who has dealt merely with the technical aspect of the motion especially since NDP Members are not acquainted with Quebec issues, in which he suggests setting up a mechanism for solving those issues. I hope that all Members of this House will support this motion.

Mrs. Anne Blouin (Montmorency—Orléans): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I wish to commend the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) for having had the wits and the guts to move that motion. In fact, this proposal will be a milestone in the history of Canadian parliamentarism and I must draw the attention of the Leader of the Opposition to the fact that the Liberal Party has now in its ranks a great constitutionalist, a man who does not hesitate to go to the heart of the matter to question the very essence of our parliamentary system, in order to protect his province.

There are several aspects in my hon. colleague's proposal, all of them very subtle that I wish to analyze.

Firstly the purpose of this motion is to bring back members of the Liberal Party to the Government. In fact, the motion provides for the creation of a mechanism which would include members of the Official Opposition. I think, Mr. Speaker, that Canadians have already voted on that issue and that the number of Liberal members in this House reflects quite well the people's will as to the make up of the Government.

Of course, I am sure that in spite of the small number of its members in this House, the Liberal Party has enough resources to man such a mechanism all by itself—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to say that the hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 42(1), this order shall be dropped from the Order Paper.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION—SIZE OF FEDERAL FUNDING

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise again this evening concerning an issue I have raised with the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) since December 10, 1986. On that occasion I asked the Deputy Prime Minister this question:

> Could the Deputy Prime Minister explain to the House why a similar study has not been initiated by his Government with regard to the utilization of coal from eastern Nova Scotia and New Brunswick for shipment to the Province of Ontario?

The Deputy Prime Minister said in reply:

> I will certainly take the representations of the Hon. Member and consider the action he suggested.

That question was followed up in the Adjournment Debate of January 28, 1987. I again raised this issue on March 3 and asked what the Government of Canada was prepared to do about it. I raise this issue again because since December 10, the Deputy Prime Minister has been informed of the unfairness of the treatment of the people in eastern Nova Scotia. I thought he would have had an opportunity to check with officials from both the Department of the Environment and the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion and provide the House with a substantive answer. However, when questioned on March 3 his response was, "Yes, I would be glad to discuss it with the Premiers of the Atlantic provinces".

I specifically requested the Deputy Prime Minister to show some leadership and initiative. Not only do we want to see coal from western Canada utilized by Ontario Hydro—

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, it might be nice if he stuck to the question.

Mr. Dingwall: —we want to see coal from eastern Nova Scotia and New Brunswick utilized as well. I would have thought that just on the basis of fairness and equity, the Deputy Prime Minister and his Government would have considered my suggestion. Obviously the Government has done absolutely nothing. I am not suggesting he has misled the House.

Mr. Forrestall: You are the one doing the misleading, blatant misleading.

Mr. Dingwall: What I am suggesting is that the dutiful sheep across the way, the Hon. Member for Dartmouth—Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) who is the Parliamentary Secretary, has sabotaged this initiative.

Mr. Forrestall: Sabotaged it? Why don't you deal with the question you put down?

Mr. Dingwall: He, like Members opposite, has no interest or concern whatsoever about promoting and enhancing economic development in eastern Nova Scotia. I say shame to the Parliamentary Secretary. It is absolutely gross negligence on his part.

Mr. Forrestall: At least I am honest and tell the truth.

Mr. Dingwall: Honest? You are not honest at all.

Mr. Forrestall: You are damn right I am.

Mr. Dingwall: You are not honest. Why don't you stand up and debate—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please.

Mr. Forrestall: Why don't you speak to the question?

Mr. Dingwall: Oh, go back to the bar!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I know the Hon. Member would like to withdraw—

Mr. Forrestall: It would be a hell of a lot more pleasant than sitting here listening to your nonsense.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I know the Hon. Member would like to withdraw that last remark.

Mr. Dingwall: I withdraw, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Forrestall: I doubt very much if he would like to, Sir, but he will.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): He withdrew the remark. The Hon. Member has another minute.

Mr. Dingwall: Before I was rudely interrupted by the Hon. Member I was going to say that I want to conclude by saying it is high time that the Government of Canada start exercising its responsibilities in a fair and responsible manner across the board. We have had enough of the broken promises of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté) and, more particularly, the Deputy Prime Minister. They have failed the people of Nova Scotia. In particular, they have failed the people of my constituency, Cape Breton—East Richmond, because they have not taken into consideration the utilization elsewhere of coal from eastern Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. However, they have all sorts of time and money to consider the utilization of coal from western Canada.

• (1805)

It is not fair for the people of Atlantic Canada to be treated in such a fashion. It is unconstitutional. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will have enough intestinal fortitude, instead of being a dutiful sheep for his masters, the Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister, to exercise some real compassion and concern for the people of his region.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the item called for tonight had to do with an unfounded allegation that we had cut Devco's budget by $50 million, thus causing—

Mr. Dingwall: You did!

Mr. Forrestall: I have not heard the Hon. Member make even the briefest reference to the subject matter he put down. Tomorrow at three o'clock I will ask the Chair to entertain a question of privilege because it happens so often that Members put down one subject matter and get up and deal with another.

Mr. Dingwall: Go sit in a brook.

Mr. Forrestall: If you were honest, straightforward, and open with your own constituents—

Mr. Dingwall: You're about as honest as a crooked road.

Mr. Forrestall: —you would have the guts to get up and tell the truth. Or do you know what the truth is?

Mr. Dingwall: Go back where you came from.

Mr. Forrestall: Do you know what the truth is?

Mr. Dingwall: Go back where you came from.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has only three minutes.

Mr. Dingwall: Then perhaps he should address himself to the issue.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to bring to the Member's attention the fact that the Minister did meet earlier this week with the executive members of UMW. They had a very fruitful meeting which produced a very clear understanding with respect to what is going on in the industry. Obviously the Hon. Member neither knows nor cares.

Mr. Dingwall: Don't mislead the House.

Mr. Forrestall: He is more concerned with coming in front of this Chamber and using scare tactics and misleading information and, above all, indulging himself in the luxury of calling one item and then addressing himself to another.

Mr. Dingwall: You'll regret those words.

Mr. Forrestall: He knows precisely why—

Mr. Dingwall: You'll regret those words, big mouth.

Mr. Forrestall: —there is not the sale of Cape Breton coal to Ontario Hydro. I would invite him to get up and answer this question: Under what regime, under what Government, under what administration did we lose coal sales to Ontario Hydro? I would ask him to address that.

Mr. Dingwall: You don't even know what you're talking about. That's typical.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, in his original question the Member accused the Government of cutting $50 million from Devco. He knows that for the last three years we have had an extraordinarily high level of capital expenditure. We are trying to develop the new Phaleen mine. We are trying to get on with the Victoria Junction wash station. Those two capital items are completed and there is, of course, a reduction in this year's capital expenditures. However, that does not lead to lay-offs within Devco, as the Member knows.

Mr. Dingwall: Sit in a brook, will you. Your mind is about as clear as a fog.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like to recognize the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap).

Mr. Forrestall: That nonsense isn't deserving of a response.

Mr. Dingwall: Oh, oh!

Mr. Forrestall: Is that all you have to say?

Mr. Dingwall: It's a lot more intelligent than what you said.

Mr. Forrestall: Come on outside.

Mr. Dingwall: Aren't you tough?

Mr. Forrestall: What did you say?

Mr. Dingwall: I said, "Aren't you tough".

Mr. Forrestall: Come on outside and say that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I cannot hear the hon. gentleman.

IMMIGRATION—SALVADORANS AND GUATEMALANS—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF CANADA-UNITED STATES AGREEMENT. (B) PROCESSING OF REFUGEE STATUS APPLICATIONS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am very troubled that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) has done great harm to many refugees coming from the United States to Canada, particularly Salvadorans and Guatemalans. Because of his decision to send them back to the United States to wait for their inquiry in Canada, he has not only forced them to live for weeks and months in absolute poverty and in extreme anxiety through fear of being sent back to the country from which they fled, but he may in fact have caused them to be deported from the U.S. to El Salvador and Guatemala because when they are returned to the United States, they are arrested and charged with being illegal aliens.

• (1810)

This issue arises from a question I raised in the House on February 20 when the Minister made his announcement. On that day the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration told the House:

> —Canada—and this dates back to some time—has an agreement with the United States of America which provides, particularly in this case, that people who apply for refugee status in Canada and whom we are unable to process immediately will not be deported by the United States . . . . We are exchanging correspondence, but I see no point in tabling documents today. I repeat, nobody has been deported by the United States, and I have been assured that none will be.

There was evidently a reason why the Minister was unwilling to table that correspondence. That reason was that the correspondence did not in fact take the position attributed to the United States by the Minister. In fact, that correspondence took a contrary position. Mr. Alan Nelson, the U.S. Commissioner of Immigration, wrote that correspondence to Mr. Joe Bissett, the Director of Immigration in Canada.

He said that district directors will, on a case-by-case basis, at their discretion, set a reasonable period of time for the alien to effect such a departure. He said that the arrangements between Canada and the United States would not cover certain cases of refugees, including those where the refugee was under a deportation order, had a criminal record or where there was derogatory information.

Another spokesperson for the U.S. Immigration amplified this position. He said that the U.S. will not bend its policy to protect refugees turned away from the Canadian border purely because they have a request from Canada.

The Minister said at the end of his answer that he had an assurance which in fact he either knew he did not have, or if he did not know that, he should have known. On February 26, I wrote to the Minister pointing out this information and suggested that one of two things must be true, either the Minister was aware that his statements were, so to speak, inoperative, or he was not aware of the correspondence. If he was aware of it, I suggested, the only honourable course would be for him to resign for misleading the House. If he was unaware, then he owed this House an apology as well as the resignation of his executive director, Mr. J. B. Bissett, who had received the letter from Mr. Nelson.

I have had no reply from the Minister of Employment and Immigration. However, we have had public nonsense from his front man, the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr.

Weiner), who was quoted in the Montreal Gazette on Thursday, February 26, as claiming that the United States has a "model record" on human rights issues. How utterly false. The Minister of State for Immigration must know better. He has access to the facts of immigration and acceptance of refugees. He must know what he says about the United States is wildly untrue. In the matter of human rights for Salvadorans in the United States, the U.S. record is shameful. It deports them back to those lands of prisons, torture and murder with only a token nod to refugee claims. For example, between September 1985 and October 1986, the United States processed 2,183 refugee claims of Salvadorans and admitted only 55. That is only 2.5 per cent. It forced 6,047 back to El Salvador. Of 471 refugee claims by Guatemalans, it accepted only five, which is 1 per cent, and forced 3,502 back to Guatemala. Was that just? Not by Canadian standards.

• (1815)

During 1983 to 1984 Canada found that from 25 per cent to 59 per cent of Salvadoran refugee claimants were true refugees. At the very least that is 10 times the figure found in the United States. From 57 per cent to 70 per cent of Guatemalan claimants in Canada were found to be true refugees. In other words, the very lowest rate of acceptance in Canada is 10 times as high as the highest rate in the United States. Shame on the United States of America. Shame on the Minister of State for Immigration for calling that a model record. Shame on the Minister of Employment and Immigration for throwing many hundreds of Salvadorans and Guatemalans back to the United States. Shame on him for telling the House that he had been assured that they would not be deported to El Salvador and Guatemala when he has no such assurance.

[Translation]

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have an opportunity to comment further the response of the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) to the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) on February 20, 1987.

I would like to tell the Hon. Member that the American authorities and a United Nations Commissioner have stated on several occasions since the implementation of the temporary control measures that, under the agreement between our two countries, claimants who are scheduled for a hearing in Canada will not be deported to their country of origin.

The representative of the High Commissioner for Refugees in Ottawa stated on March 3 that no refugee status claimant had been threatened with deportation from the United States since the implementation of the temporary control measures.

Canada has received assurances that no claimant staying in the United States would be the subject of a deportation order and that these people would not be denied access to the border.

We have also obtained assurances that those for whom an inquiry date has been set would be allowed to remain in the United States in the meantime. In addition, the United Nations Commissioner has said that there is no indication that this agreement between Canada and the United States will not be respected.

We can therefore assert, Mr. Speaker, that no one is in any danger.

The Deputy Commissioner of the Inquiry Directorate in the United States Immigration and Naturalization Service said that the U.S. Government had informed the Canadian Government it would allow the people involved to remain in the United States until the day set for their inquiry in Canada.

Our policy is humane, Mr. Speaker. All applications from people seeking refugee status will be examined individually.

When a person is not facing deportation from the United States, we set a date for an inquiry and he or she will be allowed to stay in the U.S. until that date. Should the U.S. Immigration Service indicate that the person is under an expulsion order and will be deported very shortly, he or she will be allowed to enter Canada immediately to await the inquiry.

The Government believes that these provisions afford sufficient protection to claimants coming from countries where they might be endangered.

To answer the Hon. Member's question regarding the process of granting refugee status, I would like to remind him that the new rules put in place May 21st, 1986, were designed to exclude from the process people coming from countries on list B-1, because they were the most likely to get a favourable decision. In effect, they would have received permission from the Minister upon filing a claim in Canada. It is clear that increasing numbers of non-genuine refugees, even from these countries, have taken advantage of these provisions and the Government had no alternative but to return to the procedure in existence before May 21st, 1986.

Such a policy change appeared to us as the only way to adequately protect and accept, legally, the true refugees in Canada.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY—ELIMINATION OF 9 PER CENT TARIFF ON AUTOMOBILE TRADE BETWEEN CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION. (B) REQUEST FOR MAINTENANCE OF TARIFF DIFFERENTIAL

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): In this discussion I am pursuing the questions that I directed to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and which were answered by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). First, we are focusing on the automotive trade, and second what the consequences would be for automotive trade both in Canada and the United States if the duties which presently exist were eliminated as part of the broader free trade arrangement between the two countries.

I asked the Minister if he was prepared to commit himself to the maintenance of that 9 per cent tariff which presently exists between the two countries. The 9 per cent tariff has the effect of operating as a sanction with respect to the Auto Pact. Parts and automobiles that go back and forth across the border are not subject to the 9 per cent duty. The reason is that they meet the qualifications which are set out both on the Canadian side and the American side of the border. In particular, on the Canadian side of the border, they meet the 60 per cent Canadian value-added safeguards which were promised by letter by the various producing companies to the Canadian Government in 1965 at the start of the Auto Pact.

I must say that in my various exchanges on the subject of free trade with the Secretary of State for External Affairs, I have never received such complete non-answers as in this case. The Minister must have returned from a trip and been totally out of touch with what had been taking place, and had absolutely nothing constructive to say. I regret that the Minister took that course, because ordinarily he is a Minister for whom I have some respect.

However, what we are facing with respect to the automotive industry is an extremely serious crisis which is highlighted today by the fact that the auto trade figures have been released by the Canadian parts manufacturers. These figures indicate that the Canadian auto trade balance dropped between 1985 and 1986 by 72 per cent. Our deficit with Japan went up over 36 per cent to a total of $3.1 billion in deficit in auto trade with Japan. The deficit went up by over 12 per cent to $1.9 billion with Korea, and other countries.

Therefore, we face a shrinkage of what used to be quite a healthy surplus in this sector of our economy to a mere $310 million. This is very small when considering the total Canadian automotive trade was $68 billion in 1986.

The key point which these figures show is that we must defend our capacity in a world of changing patterns of production and a world of changing technology. We must defend our capacity as a relatively small country but a country that can produce automobiles quite successfully.

• (1825)

We must retain our capacity to protect the existence in Canada of important production facilities. In short, we must protect the production safeguards of the Auto Pact. We must also extend those production safeguards to the Korean and Japanese companies which are being established here.

This is why I moved a Private Member's Motion to have all parts of the auto industry in the country meeting the 60 per cent Canadian value-added content requirement. However, let me point out that the Government has had, right from the start of the discussions on the Canadian-United States free trade arrangements, warnings by its own bureaucrats in secret documents, of which we have received copies, indicating that if the tariffs were reduced, the safeguards would become inoperative.

Let me quote specifically from Annex II which is labelled "secret" to a document entitled "A Canada-U.S. Free Trade Area Agreement". It reads as follows:

> Unless the sector were excluded from its product coverage, a Canadian-United States free trade agreement would of course lead, after the transitional period, to the elimination of Canadian duties on vehicles and original equipment parts . . . In the absence of any other constraints, this would mean that automobile producers (as well as Canadian car dealers and consumers) would be able to import vehicles and . . . parts duty free and in effect the Auto Pact's production safeguards would become inoperative.

That is precisely the point we were making in our question.

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I want to respond to the Hon. Member who has raised, once again, the question of the treatment of automotive trade in the current bilateral negotiations with the United States. This time it is as a result of a response given in the House on February 17. While the question has been asked many times previously, and the answer has not changed, I will be pleased to restate the position of the Government for the benefit of my hon. colleague.

I believe our position with regard to automotive trade in the negotiations with the U.S. is quite clear, consistent, and reasonable. The Government has said repeatedly that the Auto Pact is working well, and that Canada would not be raising it at the table during the trade talks—"if it ain't broke, don't fix it".

In the meantime we have undertaken a fact-finding exercise with the United States on automotive issues. This was in no sense a negotiation, but an exchange of information on the situation and trends in the automotive industry.

The Auto Pact is not the only auto related issue, however. A substantial and increasing portion of North American automotive trade takes place outside the Auto Pact. In 1984 this amounted to $3.3 billion Canadian. We will have to consider how it would be affected by any comprehensive agreement we might strike with the United States.

Remembering also that the over-all aim of these negotiations is to achieve a trading arrangement as free as possible from all impediments to trade, we will of course want to negotiate issues such as tariffs, customs procedures, procurement, imports from third countries, duty remission programs, and subsidies on both sides of the border. These important matters could well affect trade on automotive products.

The position taken by the Government of Canada is that if the United States side has proposals to make which would be of benefit to Canada by enhancing Canadian employment, production, and trade, we will listen with interest.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

IMMIGRATION

REFUGEES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, the Government's refugee policy brings to mind the answer one often hears on the telephone answering service: "Thank you for calling the Government of Canada. Toutes nos lignes sont occupées. All our lines are busy. Veuillez rester en ligne. Stay on the line."

Since February 20 the Government's answer to refugees seeking Canada's protection has been: "Don't bother us, stay home until you hear from us. Don't call us, we'll call you."

The contempt and ignorance of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) are overwhelming. He claims that certain refugees are dishonest because they buy tickets for London but ask for political asylum in Canada. He does not seem to know that a refugee would be putting his life on the line if, before departure, he were to publicize his intention of definitively leaving his country.

Mr. Speaker, February 20, 1987 will for ever be remembered as the infamous day when the Government of Canada broke with our long-standing humanitarian tradition of welcoming refugees.

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

PUBLIC MAPPING SERVICES—OPPOSITION TO PRIVATIZATION

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, it is time for us to go back to the basics of our language and our principles of government. In the light of recent reports that the Government may sell federal mapping facilities to a private consortium, we evidently have to emphasize that a public service, the Public Service, is exactly that. It is a service provided to all of the Canadian public.

The mapping services provided by the Government have played an essential role in making Canada a rich, livable and secure country. The services provided by Canada's scientists and our technical mapping specialists are indeed useful to the private sector. They are being shared and must continue to be shared with the private sector.

• (1105)

Vaguely worded statements about joint ventures are not acceptable. A true joint venture, a partnership of independent entities coming together to share skills and opportunities, would not be simply appropriate but essential. But a sell-out of the skills, the technology, and the expertise developed over decades by Canadians working in the service of their country would be a betrayal of government's responsibility to provide a true service to all the people of the country.

REFUGEES

HEARING OF CHILEAN REFUGEE CLAIMS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, Chileans are fleeing brutal repression, disappearance, torture, prison, death, and all the other actions of the dictatorship headed by Pinochet which have been going on for over a decade. There are even secret police in Buenos Aires who are harassing Chileans who are known to be refugee claimants there.

These refugee claimants ought to be allowed to state their claims in Canada under our fast-track procedures and with due process of law. In fact those who have arrived in Canada and have gone through the fast-track procedure have done remarkably differently from the average. The average seems to be about 10 per cent of acceptance of Chileans, it has now become 56 per cent. This shows that they have a strong claim. Even those who may not be precisely refugees by the narrow definition have a strong claim under humanitarian consideration.

There were two planes that left Santiago on the morning of February 20. One arrived in Canada the next day and all the claimants aboard have been accepted. The other one was stopped at Buenos Aires, and should be allowed to come in the same way as the other did with all those who have been accepted.

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

OPPOSITION TO POSSIBLE PRIVATIZATION OF CERTAIN BRANCHES

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, so the Government wants to privatize or joint venture parts of Energy, Mines and Resources. Good luck! Not only am I surprised but I am shocked at this potential plan. In fact I feel like Premier Peckford and the Hon. Members for Bonavista—Trinity—Conception (Mr. Johnson) and Burin—St. George's (Mr. Price) when they were not informed on the recent Canada-France cod issue. I am beginning to feel more and more like a member of the Opposition.

The Government has enough difficulties these days without looking for more trouble. The potential plan to privatize the Surveys and Mapping Branch of the Canada Centre for Remote Sensing, and the Environment Canada hydrographic services in a joint venture with Lavalin, or any other company in Montreal or Canada, is not only bad business but bad politics. I will fight just as long and just as hard as the unions to prevent this from happening.

If the Treasury Board and the Ministry are flying a trial balloon to see how quickly it gets shot down, well, bang, bang—it's dead!

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

QUEBEC'S SITUATION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): As you would know, Mr. Speaker, discussions are now going on in Ottawa in an attempt to bring the Province of Quebec back within the Constitution, with honour and dignity. Sad to say, this is just another masquerade on the part of the Conservative Government because the Quebec Minister of Environment has just stated publicly that his province is being treated unfairly in connection with the St. Lawrence industrial pollution.

In the opinion of the Quebec Minister of Finance, Quebecers are victims of this Government's inequity with respect to equalization payments.

Another Minister, responsible for multiculturalism, is seeking financial assistance from Ottawa to cope with the influx of refugees, and again the federal Government says no.

The Quebec Minister of Transport, Mr. Côté, is opposed to Bill C-18 because it will lead to the abandonment of railway lines in Quebec.

And we just learned recently that once again Quebecers were hoodwinked about the space station: only one out of ten companies was awarded contracts, so the Chambre de commerce de Montréal was forced to join—

Mr. Speaker, considering that the Conservative Government got a strong mandate from Quebecers, I dare hope that Quebec Members will wake up and do justice to their province.

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

CONSIDERATION OF PRIVATIZATION OF CERTAIN BRANCHES CONDEMNED

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I was shocked, and so were the surveying and natural resource industries across Canada and the employees at Energy, Mines and Resources, when we learned that the Surveys and Mapping Branch at the Canada Centre for Remote Sensing, and the Canadian hydrographic service are being considered for privatization.

I know the Canadian surveying industry and these government agencies. They are world-class. Industry and government currently interface in a magnificent way. I condemn these privatization initiatives both from a national and local perspective. Many of my constituents work in these agencies, and their careers would be destroyed and their lives disrupted. Nationally, these agencies are regarded as being world class, and that status can only be maintained if they are under the mandate of the federal Government.

• (1110)

I seek assurance from all Members of the House that the Government will not privatize the aforementioned agencies. I ask every Member of the House to support this request. They must remain under the aegis of the federal Government.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

IMPLEMENTATION OF DEREGULATION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, a little noticed line in the Government's spending Estimates for this year is the extra $1 million to be given to the CRTC for purposes of implementing deregulation. Thus, not only are Canadians to see the Government following the American Government on deregulation in communications, a policy for which the Government has no mandate, but they will also have to fork over an extra $1 million to the CRTC for the privilege.

Perhaps since it is only $1 million one should not complain. So many of the Government's spending priority mistakes will cost the taxpayer a great deal more. But it is government policy in microcosm. Having promised to keep up cultural spending at least to increases in the cost of living, the Government has made budget cuts. Some cultural agencies have obtained increases this year, but over-all cultural spending will be kept down to 95 per cent of what it was during the last year of the previous Government.

Although there are tough choices to be made in spending, the Government has found an increase of $1 million for increased work-load to implement deregulation measures.

Come on guys and women in the Government, let's get serious.

ENERGY

PRICE OF GASOLINE—CALL FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. George Minaker (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, recently an article appeared in the Calgary Herald concerning Turbo Resources Ltd. Turbo is primarily an independent retailer of gasoline. The President of Turbo stated that the big oil companies "can't control the price of crude oil, so their ability to make it 'upstream' is beyond their control. Therefore, there is very strong incentive to expand the margins downstream". That means big profits at the gas pumps. In the interview, the president stated that he was grateful for the niche his giant rivals leave open.

Turbo Resources, with little exploration or production interests, was able to pay their bank $47.3 million in loan principal, $10.5 million in interest, and still realize a $13.4 million profit in the first nine months of 1986. There appears to be no competition as both independent and large gas companies are making huge profits at the gas pumps.

Deregulation is supposed to benefit everyone, not just the oil and gas companies. I call on the Government to investigate gas prices immediately in order that all Canadian consumers can benefit from deregulation.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

PROJECTED INCREASE IN SASKATCHEWAN DEFICIT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Party often talks to Canadians about the need to control deficit spending in the country, and across the provinces. The Conservative action is different.

According to The Globe and Mail this morning the deficit in Saskatchewan has tripled since last fall's estimates. Before the election campaign in Saskatchewan, the Government said that the deficit would be $389 million. Now that the election is over the deficit is $1.2 billion in Saskatchewan. This is a tripling of the deficit. The Government has misled the people of Saskatchewan, it is incompetent and insensitive, and it does not deserve to govern.

When the CCF-NDP were in power in Saskatchewan with Tommy Douglas, Woodrow Lloyd, and Allan Blakeney, there was a balanced Budget, and five years ago there was a surplus. Now there is an accumulated deficit in that province of hundreds of millions of dollars.

Mr. Speaker, the Conservatives say one thing in an election campaign, and once they are in government they do exactly the opposite.

INFLATION

CONSEQUENCES FOR CERTAIN RETIREES

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Gerald Bouey, former Governor of the Bank of Canada, did not mince words when he criticized the previous Government for its inflationary policies.

Mr. Speaker, between 1970 and 1984, the Liberals put a hidden tax burden on the neediest in our society, a tax of more than 300 per cent over fourteen years. In other words, Canadians who retired in 1970 with $10,000 in the bank can buy now what they were then able to buy with $3,333. It was the Liberal Party that put this hidden and insidious tax burden on Canadians.

Today's senior citizens who had saved money for their retirement have seen their savings dwindle to only one third of their original value, thanks to the Liberals. And when I see Members of the Liberal Party criticizing our policies, after they robbed Canadians of $7,000 out of every $10,000 over a period of fourteen years—

Mr. Speaker, when the Leader of the Liberal Party was Minister of Finance, from 1972 to 1975, he took part in this organized pillaging of Canadians. It was while he was Minister of Finance that we got the 50-cent dollar.

That is what the Leader of the Liberal Party has done for the poor in this country, Mr. Speaker.

INDUSTRY

PLASTIC INDUSTRY'S CONSULTATIONS WITH GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENTS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, leaders of the Canadian plastics industry were in Ottawa this week.

The industry association, the Society of the Plastics Industry, or SPI, estimates total product sales at $10 billion per year, with 80,000 employees in 2,000 plants in at least 150 federal ridings across Canada. The Chairman of the SPI is Sheldon Berney, President of Reliance Products of Winnipeg.

The industry is focusing its goals on consultation with various federal government Departments, including DRIE, External Affairs, and Science and Technology, to equip the industry better to compete in the international market-place and enhance its ability to contribute to the Canadian economy.

The plastics industry is Canada's fastest growing industry and has been for 15 years. The industry predicts that it can be Canada's number one industry by the 21st century if the right policies are adopted. Our Government is working in co-operation with the industry toward the development of those policies.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY WHEN GOVERNMENT WILL MEET COMMITMENT TO REMOVE POLLUTION FROM ST. LAWRENCE RIVER

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of the Environment my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Last spring, the Minister of the Environment announced that cleaning up the St. Lawrence River was his main priority. After a year of doing nothing, the Minister still has his action plan without a budget to implement it, so that he is now putting the onus on the Province of Quebec to shoulder the entire cost.

My question is as follows, and it is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister: When will the Minister of the Environment or this Government keep its promise to clean up the St. Lawrence by provinding appropriate funding?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think the leadership which has been shown by the Prime Minister and indeed by the Minister of the Environment in all these matters has been simply outstanding. The Minister is currently in the process of negotiating acid rain emission agreements with the provinces. As well, he is undertaking to deal with the issue which the Hon. Member has raised. In the absence of the Minister of the Environment, I can only assure my hon. friend that we are taking this matter seriously. I will ensure that it is brought to the attention of the Minister of the Environment when he returns.

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL FUNDING FOR QUEBEC

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of the Environment has already said that he has no money for the Province of Quebec. In fact the Quebec Minister of the Environment knows, as do Canadians and the federal Cabinet, that the announced action plan is another empty Tory promise. Quebec has pledged billions to clean up the St. Lawrence River and is now seeking financial support from the federal Government, according to the action plan. Why won't the Government pull its weight instead of passing the buck to the Province of Quebec?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Government is pulling its weight, not only on this particular issue but on the whole issue of acid rain and environmental issues in particular. As I indicated, we are pressing the United States to do its part. However, first of all we must get our house in order. It is to that extent that the Minister of the Environment is co-operating very closely with the provinces. If the Hon. Member is a little patient he will see, as in most other cases, that sometimes it takes a little longer to do these things in a consultative and co-operative way, but in the final analysis it usually works out to be the best approach.

[Translation]

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I don't understand the Deputy Prime Minister. The Minister already said there was no money to help the province of Quebec clean up the St. Lawrence. Is that what the Government means by pulling its weight?

People seem to forget that municipalities are also involved. In fact, this Government refused to act on a recommendation by the Canadian Federation of Municipalities for a development and assistance plan for waste water treatment plants.

I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister how he can let the present Minister of the Environment criticize the United States in every way for its stand on acid rain, when he is not prepared to provide the promised financial assistance to the Province of Quebec to help clean up the St. Lawrence River?

• (1120)

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to note that the Liberal Party, which ignored over the past 25 years many of its obligations with respect to issues that fall within federal jurisdiction, is now suggesting that we, as a Government, not only catch up to all its delays and failure to take action with the important issues within federal jurisdiction but that we should get involved in areas of provincial and municipal jurisdiction.

Mr. Garneau: You said you were going to do so. You promised.

Mr. Mazankowski: If that is the official position of the Liberal Party, I will be interested to hear what the Member's Leader has to say.

Mr. Garneau: Why have you given $200 million to Ontario?

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL FUNDS FOR QUEBEC

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, allow me to remind the Deputy Prime Minister that the St. Lawrence river pollution originates from the Great Lakes, that pollutants are being dumped all along the river, that the problem does not affect Quebecers only, since the issue has interprovincial and international ramifications. Why would the Minister of Environment, on behalf of the Government, ask Quebecers to bear the entire cost of depolluting the St. Lawrence? Indeed the Government proved to be generous towards Ontario and Nova Scotia when it gave them $85 million and $34 million respectively to depollute. Why not Quebec as well? Why should Quebec be ignored?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think we better get serious here. First, what the Hon. Member is implying is that this pollution has occurred over the last two years since our Government took office. What happened to the 20 years of neglect previously? We are going to deal with this issue, as we have dealt with other important national issues, and the Hon. Member should just be a little patient.

Mr. St. Germain: We do not need lessons from you over there.

Mr. Mazankowski: We certainly do not need lessons from that gentleman or that Party as to action on matters of the environment and important matters with respect to pollution.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the problem is that the Minister of the Environment is an artist of inflammatory statements. Yesterday he called U.S. Senator Byrd a Neanderthal. The problem is the Minister is long on rhetoric and short on action. Will the Deputy Prime Minister direct his Minister to climb down from his Mr. Clean pedestal and wet his feet in the St. Lawrence River, which he himself described as an open sewer, so that we can get action instead of just rhetoric?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this Government has a Minister of the Environment who is honest, sincere, and fully dedicated to discharging his responsibilities. I will certainly not take any criticism of the kind that has been levelled from that Hon. Member who really does not have very clean shoes when it comes to defending the interests of the environment as far as the administration of which he was a Member is concerned.

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

REPORTED PROPOSAL RELATED TO PRIVATIZATION OF CERTAIN BRANCHES

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Forestry who apparently has charge of the possible privatization of the Surveys and Mapping Branch in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. Could the Minister explain what is going on with respect to this proposal for privatization which has led spokespeople for Lavalin in Montreal to talk about plans for employees. They have suggested that not all the employees will be taken over and only two years of job security will be provided. Can the Minister explain what is going on? Could he assure this House and those 1,300 employees in surveys, mapping, the remote sensing centre and the hydrographic service, that their jobs and their work will not be privatized under this Government?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to point out that the media reports on this particular matter are incorrect. I want to state at the outset unequivocally that we will not be selling the Surveys and Mapping Branch. I want to tell the employees of that branch in Ottawa, the people of Ottawa and the people of Canada, that that branch is not for sale. Neither are there plans to privatize that particular branch. In fact we have never discussed privatization in the strict sense of the word.

• (1125)

I do want to mention that through recommendations of the Nielsen Task Force, Treasury Board officials are looking at ways in which the private and public sector could complement each other in domestic and international markets for that particular service. However, in this regard Treasury Board and EMR officials have had exploratory discussions with a number of companies, not just one company. I think it is important to note here that Ministers have not in any form considered the policy related to these discussions. Media and Lavalin statements go well beyond what is warranted by these exploratory and preliminary discussions.

Mr. Speaker: I will return to the Hon. Member in a moment. I think I should indicate to Hon. Members that the Chair did let the Minister go on perhaps for quite a long time. However, I would point out that the matter was raised three times, I believe, in statements by Members, and it is obviously an important matter. This was the first opportunity for a Minister to respond so I hope Hon. Members will understand.

[Translation]

POSSIBLE PRIVATIZATION OF CERTAIN BRANCHES OF INSTITUTE OF CARTOGRAPHY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister be more specific, because not only the spokespeople for Lavalin but his boss the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said in Sherbrooke last January that the Department is considering the possibility of privatizing and relocating certain branches of the Institute of Cartography? Just what exactly is under review? And does the Government expect that fewer employees will be needed in cartographic services and other centres which are the subject of discussions?

[English]

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): Mr. Speaker, I do not know how I can be more positive than I was in this particular regard. I stated at the time that the Government has not made a decision in this regard at all. Any discussion on this is premature and unwarranted at this time. The Ministers have never even discussed it.

PRICE AND JOB SECURITY REPORTS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister is telling the House that all discussions are premature, can he kindly tell the House how then it comes about that a senior spokesperson for Lavalin and its partners in Bell Canada has the understanding that the price might be $55 million and that there might be only two years of job security, and has thought through exactly how the company will proceed with the privatization? Is this privatization on the boards or not? Why can the Government not make up its mind whether or not the jobs of these employees will be secure?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): Mr. Speaker, I have already mentioned that any discussions with Lavalin and other companies are exploratory at the best, and anything they have read into it with regard to pricing I can say is definitely premature.

CANADIAN CENTRE FOR REMOTE SENSING

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, in his reply the Minister addressed his answer primarily to the Surveys and Mapping Branch of his Department. Could he give the House the assurance that those comments apply to the Canadian Centre for Remote Sensing and the Canadian hydrographic survey?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry and Mines): Mr. Speaker, I can comment on the Canadian Centre for Remote Sensing because that is under my jurisdiction and I can say that my comments apply to that as well. The Government has not discussed this in terms of policy whatsoever.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT MINISTER BE MORE PRECISE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the same question and to the same Minister, the Minister said in English:

[English]

—"in the strict sense of the word" when talking about privatization. What does the Minister mean when he says that the privatization we are hearing about for these three EMR Departments will not be in the strict sense of the word? Is he telling us that indeed there are other things in the works? Is the Government looking at other ways of privatizing these three essential services?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): Mr. Speaker, to date any discussion and any action by this Government in terms of privatization has been with regard to a Crown corporation. We have never at any time discussed the privatization of a Department or function of the Government to this date.

• (1130)

FUTURE OF PUBLIC SERVANTS AND FAMILIES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister, in the name of the Government, give a guarantee to the 1,300 public servants and their families whose futures are at stake here that they will be fully protected, and make it clear that there are no privatization plans in the works for these three Departments? Will he also give us the assurance that if indeed he has something else in mind regarding the strict or unstrict interpretation of the word "privatization", it will be done openly through the regular tendering process and not in secret meetings with private sector interests?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): Mr. Speaker, I can say that if a decision were made, and no decision has been made in this regard, it would be on a public basis with a public call for proposals for such a service. There has been no decision made and no discussion by Ministers in this regard.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Is the future immigration policy of the Government to be based on the fundamentally racist premise enunciated by the Hon. Member for Willowdale that Canadians seek as immigrants people who can adjust to this climate—

Mr. Speaker: I would hope that all Hon. Members would be extremely careful, whether intentionally or otherwise, in imputing racist motives to any Hon. Member of this place. It is going to evoke a very strong response and that gives the Chair a lot of difficulty in keeping order. We are Hon. Members and, unless one had the most profound evidence on which to base a statement like that, it just does not seem to be appropriate. I know the Hon. Member, an excellent Member of this place and one who speaks with force and determination on matters of concern to all Hon. Members, would want to be careful in how he describes the motivation of another Hon. Member. I would hope he would rephrase his question.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what other interpretation is to be placed upon the phrase—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Keeper: Listen!

Mr. Speaker: It seems to the Chair that if there is a suggestion in a preamble that any Hon. Member is racist, in this country that is a most disagreeable and offensive suggestion.

Mr. Keeper: Listen to the statement.

Some Hon. Members: Out!

Mr. Speaker: I am quite sure that the Hon. Member can ask a question without impugning the motive or character of a particular Member. There has certainly been no basis laid for that kind of comment about any Hon. Member. I would hope in the interest of the very thing which the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville feels so strongly about that we would have these discussions in such a way that we do not impugn the honour of Hon. Members. I must say that the Chair views a suggestion of racism as a most disagreeable and serious suggestion indeed.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, is it the intention of the Government to base its future immigration policy on the premise that there exists a class of people who can adjust to this climate?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member, who has been in this House for two years plus, is fully aware of the fact that any policy announcements made by the Government come either from the Prime Minister or the Minister involved. Those are the policies to which this Government adheres.

I can tell the Hon. Member that our policy is certainly much more humane than the policy expressed by his Leader when he was interviewed by Mr. Webster on The Jack Webster Show in Vancouver not too long ago where he stated: "If you find out that these are not bona fide refugees you kick them out of the country".

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MEMBER FOR WILLOWDALE

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, again—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville has co-operated with the Chair and I would ask Hon. Members to listen to his question.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, the statement by the Hon. Member for Willowdale has implications with respect to the self-perception of visible minorities in this country. It reflects poorly on the Party in power, on this House, and on the Canadian people. I ask the Government whether it will insist upon an apology from the Hon. Member for Willowdale for his statement.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the statement, whatever it is, that the Hon. Member refers to does not reflect government policy. I suggest to the Hon. Member, if he is concerned about public policy on a very important issue, he should concern himself with the position of his own Party Leader.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

AWARDING OF CONTRACTS—NOTIFICATION OF DELAYS

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Supply and Services but in her absence I will direct it to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Minister's departmental document dealing with the Government's new plans to meddle with the awarding of federal contracts states clearly that if there are inquiries and a request is made to delay an award, the responsible procurement officer shall inform management immediately of the situation. How can the Minister stand up in this House and state that this system does not open the door for political interference by the Government? It is spelled out right here in her own departmental document.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister I would simply like to advise the Hon. Member that this question was answered earlier. The rationale for the new system is to improve the quality of information given to Canadians on the $7 billion spent by DSS each year. The system covers all of Canada. It is not partisan, contrary to what was done by the Liberals when they were in power.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, it is partisan in that it covers contracts as low as $25,000 for the Tory Members in those six ridings, including the Prime Minister. Don't give us that line.

PROCESS OF AWARDING CONTRACTS

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, this political meddling program the Minister set up has nothing to do with regional economic disparity, as she said last week, but it does have a lot to do with the regional political disparity of the Tory Party. That is the problem. Why does the Deputy Prime Minister not admit that the Minister of Supply and Services and her political staff can now interfere with the awarding of government contracts? That is spelled out in the document and the Deputy Prime Minister cannot deny it.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I do not think this Party has to take any lessons on purity from the Liberals given the way in which patronage and contracts were handled by the them. They certainly wrote the book on it.

I am advised that it was the Department which requested the $25,000 threshold be used in a two-month pilot project in order to determine its feasibility. It is in this spirit that the Hon. Minister followed the advice of the Department.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER POLLUTION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a very easy question for the Deputy Prime Minister. Does he know that this week in Montreal the Minister of the Environment said that the federal Government will not spend a cent to clean up the St. Lawrence River? Is that the policy of the Government, not a cent? Yes or no?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think I dealt with that particular question earlier. The Hon. Member knows that the Minister of the Environment is not in the House at this time. He was here this week to participate—

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): He is hiding away.

Mr. Mazankowski: He was here this week participating in a debate. I will certainly draw this to his attention and I am sure he will get back to the Hon. Member.

• (1140)

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I think Canadians who especially live along the St. Lawrence would like to know what is the policy of the Government. How much money can they expect from the federal Government? This is a national problem and we simply want to know if it is the Government's policy not to contribute any money whatsoever? Does the Minister of the Environment know that? Is there one policy?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, obviously the Hon. Member is very exercised about this issue. I will try to convey the sincerity of her representations to him when he returns.

CHALLENGE '87

DISTRIBUTION OF FUNDS—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF APPLICATION DEADLINE

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of State for Youth and the Minister of Employment and Immigration, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker, according to sources at the Ministry for Youth and the Department of Employment and Immigration, the way funds are being allocated to the various components of Challenge '87 varies widely.

I therefore want to ask the Minister to establish clearly before the House how the $180 million for Challenge '87 is to be shared, and to extend for all of Canada the March 20, 1987 deadline for submission of projects, to compensate for the usual late arrival of registration forms.

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, the question is very specific. I have taken note of the question and will ask the Minister of State for Youth to respond when he returns to the House.

ESTABLISHMENT OF QUEBEC SOCIAL AFFAIRS NETWORK—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

At the same time, could the Minister give us the assurance that he will do everything he can to revise the agreement to meet the demands of a number of social agencies in Quebec that cannot apply under the Challege program, and that as soon as the agreement is revised, the Government will set aside additional funding for these agencies?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, interest rates are continuing to go down, and if the inflation rate is still low, if the climate of confidence we have created in this country persists and if we continue to create as many jobs as we have, that is what Canadians want.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

STUDY OF RANCH LAND IN ALBERTA

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. In April, 1985, the Department of National Defence conducted an environmental land use study on the OH Ranch in the Kananaskis. The study was then given to the Treasury Board advisory committee who recommended public consultation. Why was the study hidden from Albertans for two years? Contrary to what the Associate Minister of National Defence told the House yesterday, for the last two years the Canadian Army has been sneaking around the Kananaskis trying to buy ranches.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter that comes under the authority of my colleague, the Associate Minister of National Defence. I will take the question as notice.

REQUEST FOR COMMITMENT DEPARTMENT WILL NOT ACQUIRE RANCH LAND

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, this is an issue of considerable concern in the Province of Alberta. My supplementary question is specifically related to the duties of the Minister of National Defence, because General Milner from CFB Calgary told ranchers in the area: "If you don't want us we won't come". Since the Alberta Government refused DND requests to buy the Nelson ranch in exactly the same area two years ago based on the high value of ranching in the area and the high value of tourism, will the Minister of National Defence stand up for General Milner and let Albertans know that the ranches in the Kananaskis will not be taken over by DND?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, again this is by nature of a representation on the part of the Hon. Member. I will refer his representation to my colleague, the Associate Minister.

CARTOGRAPHY

POSSIBLE PRIVATIZATION—GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines, whose responsibilities include the Mapping Branch, and I would appreciate a straight answer.

Yesterday, Mr. Camu and Mr. Rochon from Lavalin confirmed on a Sherbrooke radio station that they had been approached by the federal Government to take over the Government's mapping services.

I would like to ask the Minister who has been saying there is no truth at all in this how he explains the fact that the Government approached Lavalin? On the radio they said they expected an agreement to be reached this fall. What I would like to know is whether the Minister is not informed and is trying to use scare tactics here in the House or whether his senior Minister, who has said that privatization was an option, is negotiating with Lavalin and several other parties without keeping him informed?

[English]

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): Mr. Speaker, I cannot be responsible for the comments by Lavalin. If they drew some conclusions from some preliminary or exploratory discussions with staff members from Treasury Board, so be it. I am the Minister responsible for that particular branch and it has not been discussed at the ministerial level. It has not been discussed by Cabinet. I have already made that very clear two, three or four times.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, if Government politicians are not involved, how come Mr. Rochon told reporters in Sherbrooke that not only were negotiations being held but the Government insisted on having these private facilities in Sherbrooke?

[English]

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): Mr. Speaker, I cannot be responsible for what Mr. Rochon said. I do not know what he said. The important thing to realize is that there has been no policy decision on this whatsoever. There has been no memorandum, which I would sign, sent to Cabinet. There has been no discussion of it in Cabinet.

FUTURE OF RURAL POST OFFICES

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Post Office. In light of the importance of rural post offices to the survival of rural communities, will the Minister tell us how many post offices in rural communities where the postmasters are retiring will close?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give an answer to that because there are no plans to close rural post offices. There is no list and there are no circumstances under which I can provide the kind of information the Hon. Member is seeking. There is an indication that when a postmaster retires, quits or otherwise, first there will be discussions with the Member of Parliament and with the people in the community to see if there cannot be an improvement in service in a somewhat different fashion than had been in place. I see nothing wrong with that. I wish opposition Members and others would stop making mischief with this issue and causing concern for so many people.

CONSULTATIONS WITH RURAL RESIDENTS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister prepared to indicate to the House that, rather than Canada Post asking citizens of rural villages whether they would like to go to another town to get their mail now that their post office is being closed, it will ask them whether they want to accept what the Minister calls an improvement of service or keep the post office as it is now? Will the Minister make these consultations genuine?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Post Office is a Crown corporation that was supported by the New Democratic Party and indeed every Party in the House. It is Canada Post's responsibility to manage its operations. Again, the Hon. Member is using words to try to put fear and concern in the minds of people who feel they might be affected. He is doing it for political purposes, which is irresponsible for a Member of Parliament. The fact is that the world is changing. That reactionary Party is saying there should be no change under any circumstances or conditions. The world is changing, and the NDP will have to get used to that fact.

LINGUISTIC POLICY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post Corporation and relates to the corporate linguistic policy. Canada Post linguistic policy provides that communications with the public will be in both official languages if 10 per cent or more of the population speak either official language. Why are nine out of thirteen Quebec City Canada Post employees considered as being surplus because they do not speak English when anglophones make up only 2.8 per cent of the population of Quebec City?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Post Office indeed has the responsibility of following the Official Languages Act and ensuring that services are available in both official languages where required. The Hon. Member is asking me about a specific situation and a specific group of jobs. It is up to the Crown corporation to deal with its employees. Surely he would not expect that as a Minister I would be involved in that kind of minute detail of the corporation's operations.

MANNER IN WHICH POLICY IS APPLIED

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, the Minister responsible for Canada Post Corporation, if indeed he is the Minister responsible, must ensure that the Crown corporation respects the policy of the Official Languages Act. So here is my supplementary: Do Canada Post officials apply the linguistic policy in Toronto, Calgary, Vancouver and Winnipeg as it is applied in Quebec City, or must francophones always pay the price of bilingualism in Canada?

• (1150)

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Post Office had better be applying the law of Canada in all its operations everywhere in this country. If the Hon. Member has firm evidence that in fact the law is not being followed, then he should fulfil his responsibilities, take that information to the Post Office and ensure the law is being followed, rather than trying to exploit this delicate issue politically and making accusations which may or may not be based on fact.

THE CONSTITUTION

COST OF SETTLING NATIVE PEOPLE'S CLAIMS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, in view of the depopulated state of the ministerial benches today, I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. I would like to ask him if the reported remarks of the President of the Treasury Board as to the "huge" amount of money involved in settling native claims in Canada are, first, part of the Government's campaign to reduce expectations leading up to the FMC? Second, is the Government prepared to share those calculations with native leaders and with the people of Canada? Third, has it ever calculated the cost of not settling those claims?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I want to tell the Hon. Member and all Hon. Members of the House that the Prime Minister and the Government place a great importance on the meetings of the First Ministers and the native leaders at the end of this month. What the President of the Treasury Board has said is that there will have to be financial requirements as part of the settlement which we all hope will take place at the end of this month at the FMC. What he has stated is simply another component of what I know many of us know is a very complex issue. However, we believe that historical breakthroughs can be made by the end of that meeting.

BENEFITS RESULTING FROM JAMES BAY AGREEMENT

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, and it should be directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Is he prepared to give his colleague, the President of the Treasury Board, a patient and detailed explanation concerning the huge benefits and revenues which have accrued to the people of Canada and the people of Quebec as a result of the James Bay Agreement?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think any of us who have been involved in Indian affairs know that if we can get settlements, we can get economic development and education. Progress has been shown in James Bay and in other agreements such as in the Beaufort, for example. The goals of economic development and social progress are all goals I would hope everyone in the House and most Canadians would share. What the President of the Treasury Board, the Minister of Justice, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Senator Lowell Murray have been obligated to do is to sit down again as early as next Friday to put further face on those negotiations with the hope that we are going to have success at the end of March. I hope that the Hon. Member will also applaud that kind of action because I believe it could be an historical breakthrough. I hope it happens.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

FINANCING OF QUEBEC CONSUMER ASSOCIATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Now that negotiations on the Constitution are under way and the Conservative Government would have us believe it is willing to recognize the special character of Quebec—we already know it has refused to help the province in the matter of industrial clean-ups, equalization payments and refugee assistance—I would like to ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs why he has ignored recommendations by consumer associations in Quebec, whose responsibilities are more specific than in other provinces, and why the Government has a new policy to fund national associations only. Why is the Minister refusing to fund regional and local consumer associations in Quebec?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it really is regrettable that the Hon. Member should term a question like that in semi-linguistic terms as if it is a regional thing, pitting one part of the country against the other. He knows that is not the case. There is a limited amount of money in the grants and contributions program which we are endeavouring to distribute in the most equitable and fair manner as possible. Surely the Hon. Member would expect us to bear in mind that the national nature of the activities of the organization is clearly very, very important in looking at establishing a priority list. There are many, many more requests than we can possibly honour, given the fiscal constraints. We have to make decisions. We make them fairly, honestly and openly, and the Hon. Member does a disservice to the Department and to the Government to suggest this somehow has to do with linguistic or regional considerations, since that is not the case.

[Translation]

FINANCING OF PROVINCIAL ORGANIZATIONS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, we have here a clear demonstration it is against the Minister's principles to recognize Quebec's specific character. The previous Government, including the two Ministers of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the Hon. Member for Papineau and other Ministers who were responsible for that portfolio, had always recognized that in the province of Quebec, the responsibility for defending the interests of consumers lay with the organizations in that province, and the funding was there, because the Canadian Consumers' Association was not active at all in the province of Quebec. Why did the Minister abandon the principle of funding Quebec's province-wide organizations?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if the Liberal Party were consistent in their views towards Quebec, they would be supporting Bill C-22 which the Province of Quebec is unanimously in support of.

Apparently this standard put forward by the Hon. Member is applied selectively. I am willing to defend the criteria used by the Department in allocating the grants on the basis of fairness, equity, and value to the taxpayers who pay for the program. For the Hon. Member to suggest it somehow has to do with regional considerations—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Oral Questions

BANKS AND BANKING

BRAZIL'S SUSPENSION OF INTEREST PAYMENTS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. Since Brazil has suspended its debt interest payments and Canadian banks are owed almost $7 billion by Brazil, including up to 65 per cent of its capital equity in the case of the Bank of Montreal, has the Minister of Finance or the Minister of State for Finance had urgent talks with the Canadian banks about this dangerous situation?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, as was indicated at the G-7 meeting a week ago in Paris, Canada and the other countries in the G-7 regret the action taken by Brazil, as the Hon. Member knows, and we expect a resolution of this can be worked out shortly.

I am happy to tell the Hon. Member that Brazilian officials are scheduled to meet shortly with the advisory committee of the banks to discuss Brazil's rescheduling request. After that we will be having further consultations with the Canadian banks.

INDEBTEDNESS OF THIRD WORLD COUNTRIES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Given that Canadian banks have loaned $25 billion to 34 high-risk countries, will the Government now accept the recommendations of the Joint Committee on International Relations and try to launch a top level meeting of key governments from developed and underdeveloped countries, banks and others, to relieve Third World countries of some of their over-powering debts?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that is a very important question and an issue which was considered at some length and carefully by the Joint Committee on International Relations. It has made a recommendation that we are considering. I think, if there is a difference, it is a difference as to means. It is a difference as to whether or not it would be effective to convene a large conference. There are some evident disadvantages to that which I will not detain the House by citing. However, there is no question that a country like Canada is well positioned by our reputation and standing to take some kind of initiative in this field. We are looking at the range of opportunities which might be open to us, and when I have something more concrete to report to the Hon. Member and to the House, I shall do so.

PENITENTIARIES

ILLITERACY AMONG INMATES

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. Many people are concerned about the low literacy rate among prisoners. This creates a barrier with respect to their finding meaningful employment when released and making worth-while contributions to their communities. Will the Minister indicate in the House how he intends to deal with this serious problem?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for his question. This is indeed a serious problem. Upon assuming office I discovered that 50 per cent of the inmates in our federal prisons, or some 6,000 prisoners, are functionally illiterate. We have acted in this regard. I was at Queen's University in Kingston on Tuesday where I announced a new program of adult basic education which will dramatically improve the literacy of the prisoners by 400 per cent in the first year. I believe that this will better equip them to get jobs on the outside.

CANADIAN JOBS STRATEGY

TRAINING OF WOMEN FOR FUTURE EMPLOYMENT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for the status of women. In her absence perhaps whoever is Acting Minister could answer the question.

Since the Government ended the policy of reserving 30 per cent of training seats for women in non-traditional work we have a situation in which 76 per cent of the women being trained under federal government training programs are being trained in low-paying, traditional female ghetto jobs. If the Government's statements supporting women this week are anything more than political rhetoric, when will the Minister recommend the return of specific training seats for women?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier in the week, the Canadian Jobs Strategy is working very well. We are creating real jobs and providing women, as well as others, with the type of experience and training that will give them a lifetime career and a job on which they can really count.

PART-TIME WORK—WALLACE COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I will try another approach. Since over 70 per cent of part-time workers are women and since part-time work is increasing, when will the Government implement the Wallace Commission on Part-time Work which recommends prorated benefits for part-time workers?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I wish to remind the Hon. Member of the fact that one-half of the new jobs that have been created have gone to women.

PRORATED BENEFITS FOR PART-TIME WORKERS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is also with respect to the plight of part-time workers who are mainly women. My question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Will the Government keep its promise to institute some legislation to provide benefits to part-time workers?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, that is usually the type of issue that is discussed within the framework of the House Leaders' meetings. If the Hon. Member wishes to make representations to his House Leader, then I am sure that he will raise it at the next meeting of House Leaders.

GOVERNMENT POLICY INQUIRY

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, that answer is not good enough. Is the Government willing to introduce legislation providing prorated benefits to part-time workers, most of whom are women? That is a matter of government policy. I hope that the Government House Leader will announce what is the policy.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that we do not normally make policy on the fly, as do the NDP or the Liberals. But I will certainly take his representation into consideration.

Mr. Speaker: The following will be the last question. The Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek.

USE OF 2,4-D CHEMICAL

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture who will know that a number of producers consider 2,4-D to be one of the most important inputs to successful farming in western Canada. He will also know that these producers are concerned about possible restrictions on its future use. Will the Minister assure these producers that 2,4-D will be available for the 1987 spraying season?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to respond to the Hon. Member's question. Indeed, it is a good news day for Canadian farmers, with my colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, announcing this morning a final determination on the corn countervail exempting the B.C. livestock industry.

I can also respond positively to the important question raised by the Hon. Member. Canadian farmers will indeed be able to use the chemical 2,4-D for the 1987 planting season. I believe there are some seven million hectares of land on which 2,4-D is used. The two Departments, the Department of National Health and Welfare and Agriculture Canada, will continue to study the issue in the interests of health and safety, also taking into account some of the economic benefits of 2,4-D.

POINT OF ORDER

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION—TOPIC FOR DISCUSSION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order stemming from the "Late Show" last evening and occasioned by the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall).

Apparently the Hon. Member had some difficulty throughout the day yesterday. First, he intended to ask the Chair to call his pending question regarding the Patent Act. Midway through the day he changed his mind and requested that the Table bring forward the question he had asked the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté) on March 3 regarding his meeting with representatives of the UMW at Devco and the proposed funding outlined in the Estimates for 1987-88. By the time the Hon. Member rose in the House last night he had changed his mind again as to the issue that he so down-gradingly debated last night and which was not the question that he had put forward to the Table.

While it might not be intentional, this is increasingly becoming a habit. It causes a disruption of order in the House where some Members come to ask legitimate questions and where the Government wishes to give accurate, informative answers. I suggest it goes against the spirit of parliamentary reform. This abuse of the system should not be permitted to continue even accidentally. Time and again the Hon. Member asks questions to which he already knows the answers only to achieve an end by one means that he could not by another.

I invite my colleagues through you, Mr. Speaker, to be at least honest in their attempts to obtain information from the Government and to ensure that Officers of the Table ask Members to be clear and precise in their submission for pending "Late Shows". Perhaps we should return to the practice of insisting that supplementary questions be strictly relevant to the initial question. In any event, I hope that with this brief intervention and your words of wisdom, Mr. Speaker, the abuse of this system along these lines might come to an end.

Tabling of Documents

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I believe there was a complete misunderstanding. I know the Table will take full responsibility for what happened yesterday. The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray).

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, first, the Hon. Member who just spoke is attributing a motive to the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall). Clearly, this is contrary to the rules. I do not think the Hon. Member can suggest that certain questions are legitimate and certain questions are not, or that certain Members are honest in their questions and that certain are not. Clearly, that is unparliamentary. Members are entitled to use their judgment with respect to their questions. Hon. Members expect to receive serious answers from the Government to their questions.

Second, the Hon. Member who is the target of this point of order is not present in the House. I respectfully ask that any determination of this point of order, if there is one, be delayed until he has a chance to respond.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): So be it.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—ARMS CONTROL—CRUISE MISSILE TESTING

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam) moved:

That this House, alarmed by the role of air-launched Cruise Missile deployment in violation of SALT limits and alarmed by threats to the integrity of the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty, aware also of the possibility of a negotiated elimination of all medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe, calls for strong initiatives by the government to strengthen arms control and disarmament measures including the termination of Cruise Missile testing in Canada.

She said: Mr. Speaker, I urge all Members of the House to support this motion. I feel it is particularly timely that we should do so, as the motion itself suggests. I wish to refer to it in a little more detail than was possible when writing the motion.

I think that all Members of the House in all three Parties are alarmed by the role of the air-launched Cruise missile and its deployment in violation of SALT II limits. Indeed, last June the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) protested the breaching of SALT II limits which would come about if the United States put the one hundred and thirty-first Cruise missile-equipped strategic bomber into place. Our Secretary of State for External Affairs protested to the American Secretary of State, and I believe he protested to the President.

Members of our Party, the Liberal Party, and other parties also said that one of the most important bulwarks of our security, and the common security, was the maintenance of arms control regimes. Nevertheless, at the end of last year, the United States administration, through the deployment of the one hundred and thirty-first strategic bomber, did breach the limits of SALT II.

This is particularly important for Canada, and for Canadians, because it is we who test the air-launched Cruise missile. The breach of the limits on those bombers carrying air-launched Cruise missiles made us directly complicit in the breach. That is why we called then for giving notice of termination of our testing program.

I do not exaggerate when I say that all Members of the House believe, as the Joint Committee on Canada's International Relations believed, that defence, security, and arms control are all links in a single chain.

Referring to the second clause in the motion, about this time all of us became alarmed. I may say that above all the Government became alarmed about the threats to the integrity of the ABM Treaty. These threats came about because of breaches in that Treaty by both sides, but particularly by the potential testing, development, and even possible deployment of the Strategic Defence Initiative, star wars.

All along the Government had said that it would accept research into star wars, that research was prudent. But I understood that at no time did the Government support the testing and development of strategic defences, let alone deployment or partial deployment of those defences. Although I cannot say for sure, presumably the Government made it as clear to the United States as it did on the breach of SALT II limits that it did not wish to see the testing, development, or deployment of strategic defences.

I assume it stressed that such testing, development, and partial deployment that is now taking place, at least as far as the testing and development is concerned in the United States, is a matter of grave concern because it will totally undermine the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty. Again, this is a matter of particular concern to Canadians.

If, as Secretary of Defense Weinberger particularly suggests, the research, testing, and development have proceeded so rapidly that there could be partial deployment of SDI by the early 1990s, one of the grave effects of this will be to encourage the Soviet Union to strengthen its strategic offensive weapons, including a much larger increase in the development of strategic bombers carrying air-launched Cruise missiles.

This puts Canada in an incredibly quixotic position of continuing to test air-launched Cruise missiles under an SDI program being pursued by the United States, leading directly to the Soviet Union, which has not hitherto had strategic bombers and missiles as a strong element in its offensive forces, developing that element. We literally invite them to do so.

All Members of the House have been conscious of this since the threats to the ABM Treaty became visible, and the abandoning of the strict interpretation of the Treaty became clear. All of us have realized that the consequent and additional consequent results of this would be to encourage the Soviet Union to develop not only its bombers, but all of its strategic offensive forces.

This brings me to the third element in the motion, which is our awareness of the possibility of a negotiated elimination of all medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe. We are, as is the Government, and the Liberal Party, very heartened by what is taking place right now in the approach toward what is basically a zero option in Europe. It looks very clear that this will be achieved. We do welcome it strongly and heartily. But it will be for nought if, through the violation of SALT II limits, and through the destroying of the ABM Treaty by the development and deployment of star wars, all we are doing is enhancing the threat that comes to both sides by the development of strategic offensive weapons.

The elimination of medium-ranged nuclear missiles in Europe will only enhance, if these other developments continue, the build-up or the escalation of strategic weapons. This is one reason we have always called for and hoped that intermediate range and strategic weapons could be dealt with in one basket and, indeed, that space weapons could be included in that basket.

That has not come to pass. The Soviets have decided that they would go along with separating out the baskets. However, as I say, eliminate intermediate range weapons, nuclear missiles, and enhance strategic offensive weapons, submarine-launched strategic bombers and land-based missiles, and the agreement on intermediate-range weapons becomes enormously weakened.

As I understand it, both the Liberal and Conservative Parties have always argued that the two-track decision taken in 1979, which allowed for the deployment of nuclear missiles in Europe at the same time as arms reduction negotiations were taking place, linked Canada into that decision by making one of our contributions the testing of the air-launched air missile. By the way, that was not the position of this Party. We fought and argued that the testing of the air-launched Cruise missile was strictly an arrangement between Canada and the United States.

However, let us take the argument used by the other two Parties. I referred the other day to a statement by the then Secretary of State for External Affairs on July 15, 1983, when the decision to test the air-launched Cruise missile was made, that this testing was an obligation and a commitment which would be carefully re-examined if progress were made in the other branch of the famous two-track decision, namely, the reduction of nuclear missiles on both sides. That is exactly what is taking place today.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs said that whether we would now terminate Cruise missile testing was hypothetical until we see what happens in Geneva. However, what I was asking was, since it is becoming clearer every day that the elimination of intermediate-range nuclear missiles is definitely coming, and both sides welcome it, surely we can say today what was strongly implied by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in 1983.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): But not said.

Ms. Jewett: If one reads the words of Senator MacEachen, knowing how to read him—and I have had long practice in this—he very clearly implied that the reduction of intermediate range weapons would cause us to reassess the situation in respect of air-launched Cruise missiles. At the very moment there is a further strong argument for Canada to take the lead and to say that this is the time—if ever the time were to come it is today—to say that we will not continue with testing the air-launched Cruise missile.

It seems to me that the Conservative Party has said all the right things on SALT II and on the ABM Treaty, but it has not made enough criticism of testing development and possible deployment of star wars. It has said many of the right things. It has said that it has urged the United States not to breach treaties. It has urged it to go ahead with the Soviet Union on arms reductions. However, it has not given a clear message to the United States. It has not made it clear to the United States and to the Soviet Union that Canada's security is involved in all these matters, as well as the common security, or that it is in our security interest that SALT II limits be maintained and that the ABM Treaty not be breached.

It is in our interest, as much as the interests of the rest of the world, that we say clearly to the United States that we will not be a part of these breaches, that we will not be a party to seeing an enormous escalation in offensive strategic nuclear arms, and that we will not be a party to developing even a further potential battle of strategic bombers armed with Cruise missiles and now, apparently, Cruise missiles which are called "Stealth" missiles with stealth technology. We have not said this clearly enough. However, more important, we have not taken the one action open to us which would enable us to stop treating our security as a spectator sport and to do something about it, namely, to say that we will not continue participating in this escalation, in this breach of treaties.

It is not enough just to say that we adhere to arms control regimes. We must show that we adhere to them. We must show that we want other nations to adhere to them. We must show that when threats to them or when the dismantling of such arms regimes involves us directly or indirectly, as it does in continuing to test the air-launched Cruise missile, we will take action. When the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) goes to meet the President at the next summit, or when the President comes here, or when the Prime Minister goes to the Soviet Union in a few months time, he would then be able to say that Canada not only gives lip service to arms control and disarmament measures but Canada practises them.

I should think that the Liberal Party as well is moving in this direction very strongly. I was very heartened to see the Liberal Party at its meeting in the fall pass a resolution asking for the termination of Cruise missile testing. I know it did that in the context of the breach of SALT II, in the context of the threats to the ABM Treaty, and in the context of possible negotiations being reached for the reduction of arms in Europe. Then the defence critic for the Liberal Party, the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith), who at our last motion on Cruise missile testing on June 14, 1983 was one who abstained on our motion as an indication that he was not happy to vote against it, said a few days ago that the time had indeed come to terminate the testing of Cruise missiles. I was heartened when the critic for external affairs, a few days after that, in a statement he made on February 27 also agreed that the time had come, for many of the same reasons that I have been outlining today, if not for all of them, to terminate the testing.

I know their Leader has not yet said that, but his Party and his two chief critics have spoken.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Leader will speak.

Ms. Jewett: The Leader of the Liberal Party will speak. I urge upon them, and upon the Conservatives too, that Canada—all of us in all three Parties—should send a real strong message, not just say that we are concerned about the arms control regimes, not just say that we fear the development of strategic offensive weapons which may become even greater than they are today, or not just say that we want to see both sides strictly adhere to the ABM Treaty. As I mentioned, we must take the one element of all these matters which touches upon Canadians most directly, most intimately, and most forcefully—the testing of the air-launched Cruise missile—and say that we will not any longer be complicit or involved in the dangers of the dismantling or potential dismantling of treaties.

All of us in the House believe in arms control. We have all said it many times. The public believes very strongly in it and continues to register in favour of terminating the testing of the air-launched Cruise missile. Editorial opinion—and I refer to the Vancouver Sun, for example—is moving in this direction as well. In fact, a clear statement was made that now was the time.

With all the strength I can muster, I want to urge everyone to look at what has been happening, to look at the hope which is building up in Europe, and to look at the two sides of the equation—arms and arms control. I want us to look at what is in our own security interests as well as in the common security, of the interests of all. I want to look at all those things with as much seriousness and urgency today in this debate that I can possibly muster. We want to see Canada act as well as talk. The Canadian public wants to see us act. The message we would give to Washington and Moscow it seems to me could be the strongest possible message there is, namely, that Canada will no longer test the air-launched Cruise missile.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments? Since there are no questions or comments we will resume debate. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner).

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I think we all admired the eloquence and commitment with which the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) has addressed this vital issue in this House, an issue that concerns us not only as Members of Parliament but as Canadians, indeed as citizens of the human race. I want to congratulate her on the force and engagement that she gave to her argument.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I want to say at the outset that no Party in this House has made a greater contribution over time to the cause of peace and disarmament than the Party that I have the honour of leading. I need not recite the accomplishments on behalf of peace and disarmament of the late Lester B. Pearson, particularly in his support of the founding of the peacekeeping role for Canada in the United Nations, or the efforts of Mr. St. Laurent in a similar vein and, in recent years, of my predecessor as Leader of our Party, the Right Hon. Pierre Elliott Trudeau, particularly his peace mission and doctrine of suffocation in disarmament. I am proud that I have the honour of continuing his declaration of our opposition as a Liberal Party to the doctrine of star wars and participation by this country in any extension of the Strategic Defence Initiative of the United States. We will continue to monitor the Government of Canada as that whole issue develops.

We have, therefore, from this corner of the House a great tradition in the pursuit of peace. We shall live up to it and we shall continue it.

[Translation]

We do not want peace based on fear and escalation of the arms race.

[English]

We want, however, a secure peace with balanced and verifiable reductions in the arsenals of devastation, a peace based on a common understanding and respect of our legitimate requirements for security. This is why we have traditionally and historically looked to security as a road to secure peace. This is why the Liberal Party has been insistent on the maintenance of Canadian security.

In this House Mr. St. Laurent when he was Minister of External Affairs proposed in 1948, when we were all plunging into a cold war, the creation of a "collective security league"—those were the words he used in this House—to give the western democracies what he called a "preponderance of moral, economic and military force".

[Translation]

This proposal was the beginning of the Atlantic Alliance. This collective security system, which turned out to be a vital factor in maintaining peace, and has been for forty years, has served us well thanks to its fundamental objectives which are the pursuit of peace and our collective security. We have always met our commitments to our allies in these two respects.

[English]

Security means that we can exercise our sovereignty in peace over our own land and waters. Without it we would be like tenants without a lease, perhaps in peace for a time, but vulnerable to abusive visitations by friends and foes alike. We have learned our lesson from history. We will not sacrifice our sovereignty and security for elusive goals. We shall make them concrete instruments in the pursuit of peace.

The motion tabled by the New Democratic Party this morning may be well meaning in its broad objectives inasmuch as it urges the Government to grasp with a vision, that it has so far singularly lacked, opportunities for disarmament and improvements in East-West relations. At long last there are hopeful signs of progress, Mr. Speaker. I shall in a timely way state the views of my Party for these exciting prospects in the opening of the relationship signalled by Mr. Gorbachev's initiative and by the response to that by the United States.

[Translation]

However, the motion before the House today, whose purpose is to sell the policy of the New Democratic Party which is opposed to NATO, is a disappointment to Canadians. It shows once again that the New Democrats have failed to recognize the importance of this country's security and the importance of our vital relationship with our allies.

[English]

The motion for that reason is not acceptable to us because it does strike at the heart of NATO's collective defence. It would commit us, we believe explicitly but certainly implicitly, to unilateral disarmament and neutralism for Canada, the course to which my Party cannot subscribe. I intend, therefore, to table an amendment to the motion which would remove these flaws. The words "the role of" at the very beginning of the motion are indicative of the thrust of the motion.

Indeed, when the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam was talking about the air-launched Cruise missiles, it was clear that she was not only talking about the violation of SALT, she was also talking about the very existence of those air-launched Cruise missiles as a deterrent to themselves. In her vocabulary this morning there is a linkage in her mind, and the significance to us is that with these words the motion rejects the fundamental element on which NATO deterrence is based. Mutual deterrence, however much we regret it, is the instrument by which both East and West are now currently maintaining peace. If we reject the role of the air-launched Cruise missile in deterrence, we work for the destabilization of what is already a pretty unstable system of security between East and West. The motion, therefore, has a fundamental anti-NATO thrust which the New Democratic Party is promoting with a complete disregard for Canadian security to our allies who subscribe, as we do, to the need for deterrence until we have put into place a better way of managing the preservation of peace.

With our amendment, the House would express its alarm at the violation of SALT limits by Cruise deployment. We fully share this concern. We are equally concerned with the maintenance of the ABM Treaty which reference is appropriately made in the motion, but we would cast the motion within the mould of our treaty obligations. Our amendment consists, when I present it, of adding at the end of the motion the following wording "in a manner compatible with Canada's NATO and other bilateral obligations".

The agreement under which the Cruise is being tested was entered into by a Liberal Government. We permitted testing in an act of solidarity with our NATO allies in order to carry out collectively the reaction of the alliance to an escalation of nuclear confrontation in Europe by the U.S.S.R. with the deployment of its SS-20s.

This NATO decision was known as the two-track decision, and the Hon. Member has made reference to it, because in addition to deployment by NATO of a counterforce, it promoted negotiations with the U.S.S.R. for the elimination of all intermediate-range ballistic missiles in Europe by NATO and the U.S.S.R.

The Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam is against the two-track system. She should recognize that in effect, with the reopening of negotiations between the Soviet Union and the United States, we have now again in the current context a re-establishment of the two-track style, and anything Canada does ought to be consistent with that philosophy. Recent U.S.S.R. proposals and U.S.A. responses create new hopes that such negotiations can successfully be concluded.

We intend to ensure that any termination of Cruise testing in Canada is made with full respect to our obligations. Our agreement with the United States provides for such determination in circumstances over which we remain the sole judge, but surely after consultation with our allies. We should not lose sight of the fact that the obligations to which our amendment refers concern the pursuit of peace as well as the maintenance of security. We shall want to terminate Cruise missile testing as a contribution to disarmament negotiations. Therefore, we clearly look forward to concrete results in the negotiations between the two superpowers. The timing of any such termination should further and enhance the pursuit of those negotiations.

I might say that in the pursuit of peace, the Liberal Party does not need any instruction from the New Democratic Party. At our November convention, my Party voted for a cessation of Cruise missile testing. It also voted strongly in favour of Canada pursuing peace through the NATO alliance, and together these are the thrusts of the amendment we will put to the House. Without this amendment, the motion as it stands is not acceptable to the Liberal Party.

There is a distinct difference in our approach. On the basis of its responses and resolutions that are binding upon it, the NDP is a neutralist, isolationist Party. The Liberal Party is not. We are committed to our alliances, we are committed to Canada's international obligations and we intend to continue to move toward ensuring peace by strengthening arms control and disarmament within the scope of those alliances, within the scope of those obligations and within the scope of what those obligations mean to Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Therefore, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston):

That the motion be amended by changing the period at the end of the motion to a comma and adding the following:

"in a manner consistent with Canada's NATO and bilateral obligations".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will accept the motion. Questions or comments?

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the right hon. gentleman with a great deal of interest and I think all Canadians have followed with interest the development of the Liberal Party's policy since the November convention. I think the time has come for a clear statement of policy on behalf of the right hon. gentleman.

It appears that we have a traditional Liberal policy which could be summarized as ending Cruise testing if necessary, but not necessarily ending Cruise testing.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: Surely we could have expected greater clarity than that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: I wonder if Hon. Members opposite would allow me to put the question because I think it is a significant one. There was indeed clarity given by the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston), the external affairs critic for the Liberal Party, and also by the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith), the defence critic for the Liberal Party. Is the right hon. gentleman aware of the press release issued by the critic on official stationery and on behalf of his Party entitled "Cruise Missile Testing Should Stop" dated February 27, 1987? This communiqué quotes the spokesman for the Liberal Party as saying the following:

"In the interests of international security, I call upon the Government of Canada to exercise its option and cancel cruise missile tests without further delay. Circumstances have clearly changed sufficiently to meet the criteria for cancellation—'unforeseen imperative circumstances'—and it is time for action."

If the right hon. gentleman is aware of that statement, how does he reconcile the position he has taken today with that taken by the official spokesman of the Opposition?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, of course changes in circumstances have occurred continually since that particular statement. There has been the Soviet offer and a very positive American response. Obviously the timing of any decision by Canada to cease Cruise missile testing ought to be in concert, co-ordination and as a team, as a bargaining chip, if you will, so as not to impede the solidarity of the alliance as it moves toward those negotiations. Therefore, I think it is within the judgment of the Government of Canada to decide when that card ought to be played and it certainly ought not to be played prematurely so as to jeopardize the current negotiations.

The brief answer to the Hon. Minister's question is that circumstances are now taking a more positive thrust and we think the decision of Canada ought to be considered in that respect.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, there was the November position of the Liberal Party, the February position of the Liberal Party and now the March position of the Liberal Party. What will we find in April? The position taken by the right hon. gentleman's critic was that we cancel Cruise missile tests "without further delay". That means now, not later.

There is one other element that came out of the Liberal convention in November which was left unexplained by the right hon. gentleman. He will recall the fact that at his convention a resolution was passed which called upon Canada to declare itself a nuclear weapons free zone. The right hon. gentleman did not address that question in his remarks. Could he clarify the position of the Liberal Party of Canada on that?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I did not clarify those remarks because they were not germane to the discussion this morning. I said immediately after our convention, and by the way, we are the only political Party that is freely discussing the issues before the country—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We certainly do not hear any free discussion in the political Party the hon. gentleman has the honour of representing. I said at the conclusion of the convention that the resolutions of the Liberal Party on defence, peace and security had to be interpreted within the over-all commitment of the Party, virtually unanimously, to the making of our allegiance to the NATO alliance and our other alliances. That includes, I said then, the Cruise missile testing resolution. That also includes reconciling a nuclear-free zone, whatever definition might eventually be given to that, within our commitment to NATO as our Government and this Party understand it.

• (1250)

Ms. Jewett: Mr. Speaker, is the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) aware that various member countries of NATO take independent initiatives all the time? They are not accused of being isolationist and neutralist. Some refuse to have foreign troops on their soil. Some refuse deployment of nuclear weapons on their soil. Right now Belgium is looking at the possible discontinuation of such deployment if the arms negotiations continue so successfully. Some refuse to test Cruise missiles. Does he realize that other independent nations within the alliance have not raised questions such as he raises today? If he does realize that, why is he adding this rather confusing addition to what I thought was a fairly clear motion? Why does he say that Canada, like Norway, Belgium or other west European powers, if in its best judgment such a decision should be made, cannot make such a decision?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): If the Hon. Member believes that Canada has that flexibility within NATO, then she and her colleagues should have no difficulty in accepting the amendment. We would welcome their specific and positive adhesion to the commitments and obligations involved.

Ms. Jewett: Does the hon. gentleman know that the other countries I referred to have been able to take these initiatives without this kind of verbiage surrounding them? I find it really quite meaningless. You either take an initiative or you do not. Why should he suggest this House has to surround something, on which frankly I hope we might get agreement, with all kinds of qualifiers? Other nations do not do that.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What the Hon. Member is suggesting quite explicitly, and substantiating the argument I made before the House, is that her Party is not comfortable with the NATO obligation. If it were, she would have no difficulty accepting our amendment and moving towards perhaps a unanimous resolution of the House on the issue.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the hon. lady—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: When are you going to get your act together?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Would the Hon. Member like to direct his question to his Leader?

Mr. Prud'homme: Yes, to the Leader. The Hon. Member got us confused.

Mr. Beatty: You were confused before it ever started.

Mr. Prud'homme: I think I can have a good one for you if you speak in the debate. I see you are not going to speak in the debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. If the Hon. Member would ask his question?

Mr. Prud'homme: I was saying, before I was rudely interrupted by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty), that it seemed he is not going to participate in the debate. We would have questions for him on the comment he made earlier.

My question to the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) is whether he would ask the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) if she intends, yes or no, to accept the amendment? She said maybe and maybe not. We cannot question her so I am asking the Leader of the Official Opposition if he would ask her, yes or no.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I would suppose the only way within the rules I could reply to the Hon. Member is to pose another question to the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam, where in her preamble she would state where she stands on the amendment.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner). If I heard his speech correctly he stated that his concern with cutting off Cruise missile testing was that this might somehow run against our commitments and our involvement in NATO. If it is determined that the commitment to NATO and NORAD would prevent us from ceasing Cruise missile testing in this country, is he saying that he would therefore not cease Cruise missile testing in Canada and would have done exactly what the Government has done?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I think if the hon. gentleman in his reflective moments would be good enough to, read what I had to say it would substantiate that we believe any termination or cessation of Cruise missile testing should be taken in a manner and at a time that would enhance the negotiations towards disarmament and arms control. That should be done following our obligations under our treaties in consultation at the most effective time and in the most effective way. He would have a common course with us if he could persuade his colleagues when they ruminate over the weekend to recognize our obligations under NATO and make our contribution to peace even more effective.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. I believe there is agreement to call it one o'clock.

Therefore, it being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order arising out of the amendment to our motion by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner). I believe the amendment to our motion is clearly out of order. Our motion states very clearly that we want a termination of Cruise missile testing in this country. The Liberal amendment to our motion states that they want this to be done: "in a manner that is consistent with Canada's NATO and bilateral obligations". I believe that this is a contradiction and the amendment should be out of order.

Canada has bilateral obligations with the United States to test their Cruise missile. There was an agreement, and I believe that since the Liberal motion states we must do this in a manner that is consistent with these obligations, it is clearly out of order.

Let me quote two citations to give you some precedents, Mr. Speaker. The first is from Beauchesne, Fifth Edition, page 154, citation 436(1). It states:

> An amendment proposing a direct negative, though it may be covered up by verbiage, is out of order.

It goes on to state examples that appear in Journals.

The second precedent to which I draw your attention is a ruling by Mr. Speaker Lamoureux on October 16, 1970, when he said, in regard to a motion that dealt with an amendment dealing with the War Measures Act:

"An amendment proposing a direct negative, is out of order."

Hon. Members realize that the way to express their disapproval of a motion before the House is to vote against it rather than to propose an amendment which is in fact a direct negative.

Those are two examples of precedents that we should consider in terms of determining whether or not this amendment is out of order, as we believe it is.

Finally, we believe that the intention of our motion is clear and that the intention of the amendment is also clear. It negates the motion. There is a fundamental contradiction. If the mover of the amendment is against our motion, then he should vote against it rather than move an amendment to negate it in another way. I ask you to take that under advisement and determine whether you agree that this amendment by the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra is out of order because it contradicts, contravenes, and negates the very purpose of the motion itself.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is so far off base that it hardly justifies a reply. It is clear, as the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) pointed out this morning, that the Hon. Member is torn with respect to voting for this amendment. Let me point out that the obligations to which the Member makes reference are set forth. The specific obligation with respect to testing of the Cruise missile falls under the umbrella agreement of February 10, 1983. There is specific provision in that agreement, under clause 23 in a series of paragraphs, for termination in accordance with the agreement. Obviously, those are obligations under the agreement. That is one example to show that he is far off base.

There is a provision which specifically provides that either Party may terminate. In fact, this provision has been cited in the House by a number of Hon. Members from the New Democratic Party.

This amendment is meant to add clarity and precision to a badly drafted motion, to ensure that what they intend by this is, within the obligations which Canada has assumed under its multilateral and bilateral obligations. There is no negative there at all.

Ms. Jewett: Mr. Speaker, our motion is very clear indeed. It concludes: "—including the termination of Cruise testing in Canada". The Liberal amendment directly negates that by saying that this must be done in a manner consistent with our bilateral obligations. We are saying to end Cruise missile testing. There would be no testing next January, February, or March—

Mr. Johnston: It does not say that.

Ms. Jewett: That is the immediate impact of the termination of Cruise missile testing. The amendment indicates that there will be no termination as long as we have an agreement with the United States, an agreement which lasts until July, 1988. It is not possible to terminate or indeed even give notice while continuing with obligations to test the Cruise missile.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I am in some sympathy with the Hon. Member because obviously she recognizes that this is a badly drafted and, I believe, deliberately ambiguous motion. I do not see the words "June, January, or February" in this motion. I do not see the word "immediate" or any reference about how Cruise missile testing is to be terminated. In fact, there are provisions under contractual obligations to which we are parties which provide for termination. We have added clarity and precision to the motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hon. gentleman will know that this is a continuation of the debate. I looked at the amendment carefully when it was first proposed. It is an attempt to make the termination of Cruise testing more clear. It is not a direct negative. I read the amendment, accepted it, and proposed it to the House. I do not believe there should be any further debate on that. I will recognize the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark).

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, before I begin my formal remarks, may I say that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) indicated to me before we rose that he had to be out of the House for an engagement in Toronto. I simply want to record my appreciation of his parliamentary courtesy in indicating to me the reason for his absence. I know his respect for the House and that had he been able to stay he would have stayed for the debate.

I am afraid I cannot speak quite so fulsomely of his amendment. You have made a ruling as to whether or not it is in order, Mr. Speaker. That is not the question, in my judgment, Sir. The amendment which has been added by the Official Opposition is deliberately superfluous. I was interested in the Chair's observation that it is not a direct negative. That is also the language which could be used to describe the position of the Liberal Party on the motion. It is not a direct negative, it is not a direct positive, it is not a direct anything. What it is is an attempt to camouflage, to hide a Party which is incapable of coming to a decision on a fundamental issue of importance to this country and, indeed, an issue which affects our standing and reputation in the world. The Chair has declared the amendment in order. I simply want to indicate to you, Mr. Speaker, that this Party intends to remove the camouflage, to vote against the amendment, so that the Liberal Party of Canada will have the opportunity to stand in the House of Commons and indicate directly where it stands on this issue. I expect it will vote 40 different ways.

I am pleased these issues are before us. I appreciate the initiative of the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) in bringing the matter before the House. These questions are of fundamental importance to the country. Some of her comments I could agree with. In that respect I would hope the debate would be regarded by our allies and by others in the country, if for no other reason than to indicate the extent of the concern in this House and in this country about the limited and restricted interpretation of the ABM Treaty.

I must say to the spokesperson for the New Democratic Party that I think this debate also reveals a fundamental difference, not just of substance but of approach to some of these issues between her Party and the Government. There is no doubt of her sincerity. However, I believe she has fallen into what is perhaps an inevitable trap for Parties which are never in office. She thinks it is enough to express opinion. She is not interested in trying to influence events. This Government has the obligation, not simply to express our opinion but to try to influence the events in the world of which we are a part. We are convinced that one does not influence events by opting out. What this motion proposes is that Canada opt out of some of its obligations and opt out of the capacity to have influence on fundamental questions.

This resolution suggests that to support unarmed Cruise missile testing in Canada is to oppose to SALT II. That is false. This motion suggests that Canada could strengthen the West's negotiating position by breaking the western solidarity which helped bring the Soviet Union to the table. That, Sir, would be foolish. It would have the opposite effect. If the New Democratic Party intends to be taken seriously, it should treat seriously these fundamental issues raised in this question.

Let me go through the motion piece by piece. First, this Government fought at every opportunity the U.S. decision to break out of the SALT II limits. We lost the fight. We think the break-out is bad for arms control. However, the fact that the United States does not consider itself bound to an unratified treaty should not lead us to break a signed agreement. We lost an argument on SALT II. The NDP now proposes that we should also lose our influence in NATO, in other words, lose our ability to win any other arguments on issues vital to Canada and to world peace. That, Sir, is not strategy, it is spite. It is not logic, it is visceral anti-Americanism.

Regarding the integrity of the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty, Canada is very worried about the consideration being given by the United States to adopting a broad interpretation of the ABM Treaty. As the House will know, the U.S. position to date has been that while a broad interpretation is allowable legally, it has agreed to abide by a restrictive interpretation. Canada supports a restrictive view and we urge the United States to adhere to it.

Yesterday, Ambassador Paul Nitze spoke with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) and myself and heard that view reiterated strongly by Canada. Mr. Nitze made it clear that the United States has taken no decision to move to the broad interpretation. Certain Americans are urging a broad interpretation. They have not yet won the day. The consultations with the allies, of which Mr. Nitze's visit yesterday was part, is designed deliberately to give an opportunity for those of us who favour a restrictive interpretation to make our case. Those consultations will continue. Canada will continue to make the case for a restrictive interpretation. We will do that in contacts at every level with the United States and in the alliance.

Our view is that, particularly in a period when there is renewed hope for progress at Geneva, it would be wrong for one of the superpowers to unilaterally change one of the existing elements of arms control. We understand that it is a question of legal definition. We understand that the United States has long argued that the broader interpretation is legally correct. We hope we can make enough Americans understand that a change now from the restrictive to the broad interpretation would be a real change in the atmosphere of arms control and, in our judgment, a change for the worse.

Again I ask the House, how do we best influence the Americans? Does our influence increase if we break our agreements with them regarding the testing of the unarmed Cruise? Of course, it does not. There is a chance, even a good chance, that the combined weight of the allies, speaking with unity, can persuade the President to continue to adhere to the restricted definition of the ABM Treaty. The New Democratic Party wants us to break that allied unity. That would mean losing the best chance we have to work effectively for a restrictive interpretation of the ABM Treaty.

Third, the INF talks mark a very important, indeed, a very exciting breakthrough. Mr. Gorbachev has taken an important initiative in dropping his insistence that SDI and intermediate nuclear forces be dealt with together. We welcome his stepping back from that condition in the same way we welcome the tabling in Geneva by the United States delegation of a draft treaty proposing the complete elimination of U.S. and Soviet INF missiles in Europe. This treaty reflects longstanding alliance positions as well as drawing on important understandings which were reached at the Reykjavik Summit. It is the embodiment of an ambitious plan for the elimination of a whole category of missiles in Europe, a plan, Sir, which was developed in concert with the alliance over a period of several years. Taken together, these two actions by the superpowers represent a positive and encouraging step.

Very important questions remain. There will be serious problems of verification. There is the question of what to do with the short-range missiles in Europe not included in the discussions now engaged in again at Geneva. There is the question of the placement outside Europe of the remaining intermediate nuclear forces and, undoubtedly, as the negotiators in other countries scrutinize the language of Mr. Gorbachev's proposal, and scrutinize the language of the U.S. draft treaty, other serious questions will also arise.

The point to underline, however, is that arms control negotiations have begun again in earnest. It is important for us both to reflect upon how that happened, how it came to be and also to consider what it might mean. Obviously, it came to be as a result of several factors, including imaginative and courageous decisions by leaders of both the superpowers, but in the longer perspective it is undeniably the case that a major factor leading to these arms control negotiations has been the consistent unity displayed by the allies of the United States. There has, of course, also been unity on the part of the allies of the Soviet Union. They have no choice. Allies in a democratic alliance have a choice. Every time that choice is exercised there is the opportunity to break alliance unity or to respect alliance unity.

There are widely different views within the North Atlantic Alliance. Part of the Soviet strategy consistently has been to try to bring those differences into the open, to try to break the unity of the western alliance, because the Soviets knew that divisions in the West would weaken the hand of the United States at the negotiating table.

One of the major reasons, Sir, we have the prospect of an arms control agreement today is that the West has stood together. Yet, in this House of Commons, on the eve of the resumption of serious discussions of an INF agreement in Europe, we are being invited to break that western unity which helped bring both sides to the negotiating table. The motion of the New Democratic Party is an invitation to set back the arms control negotiations process. We have seen the skill, particularly in recent months, of the Soviet Union in dealing with western opinion. Imagine what it would do with a decision by Canada on the eve of INF discussions to break an agreement respecting the testing of the unarmed Cruise missile. That would be broadcast everywhere as evidence of division in the West, as evidence of weakness in Washington. Instead of leading to serious discussions it could unravel the serious intent that has been demonstrated so far.

• (1420)

One of the reasons we are so active in this alliance is that we believe that alliance unity makes progress on arms control possible. Progress on arms control is very important to the Government and to the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I for one do not propose to throw away the prospect of arms control progress because of erratic resolutions that might have been taken at a political party convention of the Liberal Party or of the New Democratic Party.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, suppose we consider another aspect. An agreement on intermediate nuclear forces would affect the land-based cruise missiles that contribute to Europe's nuclear deterrent capacity. The cruise missiles being tested in Canada under an agreement with the United States are air-launched and are part of the strategic deterrent forces of the United States. The role played by U.S.-based strategic deterrent forces in maintaining the global balance of nuclear deterrence would expand if an INF agreement were to lead to the elimination of U.S. missiles in Europe. In this perspective, tests to verify the reliability and effectiveness of air-launched cruise missiles would be needed even more if an agreement on intermediate nuclear forces were concluded, both from the point of view of arms control and defence.

[English]

One of the Government's priorities in our arms control and disarmament policy is the enhancement of strategic stability. The air-launched Cruise missile with its long flight time and its relatively slow recallable carrier is currently among the most stabilizing elements of nuclear deterrent forces. However, we believe that it too should be subject to arms control restraints. We have supported the inclusion of air-launched Cruise missiles in the limits on strategic nuclear arms being negotiated at the Geneva talks. But those decisions should be made by negotiations at Geneva; they should not be made unilaterally, disruptively or individually for reasons of spite, ideology or the dictates of a Liberal or NDP convention.

The Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam spoke earlier about Canada's security being involved. Of course, Canada's security is involved. We are not here involved in an empty debating forum; we are here involved in a common alliance trying to come to terms with some of the most difficult and stubborn questions ever to face mankind. They are critical questions. They are vital questions. If we do not resolve them, they could literally mean the end of us all. We have an obligation to do the best we can to exercise every ounce of influence that we have. Influence is not exercised by taking actions of spite that cut off ones obligations. One does not help people get to the negotiating table and then, just when the hard negotiation is about to begin, weaken the side which one supports. That is not the way for people to work in an alliance. More important, that is not the way for us to achieve progress on arms control.

The Government and the country have a distinguished record in this regard. I was interested in the observations of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition who paid deserved tribute to the late Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent and the late Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson for the roles they played in trying to bring about understanding in control of arms to the world. We are continuing to play that role. We are trying to return Canada to that tradition of constructive participation, influencing our allies, working with our allies toward constructive progress. That is the position of the Government.

We have spoken and acted on a number of fronts. Sometimes our arguments carry; sometimes they lose. But if we are serious about this we cannot run away in spite every time we lose an argument. What we have to do is stay and fight so that our arguments have a chance to prevail.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If there are no questions or comments, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) on debate.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have to say with some reluctance that it sounds as if the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) on issues of arms control is saying: "My country, the United States, right or wrong". I would have to say that is a position with which I would profoundly have to take some issue.

I must also reflect my concern at the Secretary of State's insistence that he thought that the New Democratic Party was somehow acting for reasons, as he put it, of spite. The New Democratic Party has been opposed consistently and for a long time to Cruise missile testing in the country, as the Minister well knows. That concern flows from our concern about the future of our country, of our continent and of our world, of our children and of our children's children. I hoped and thought that each member of each Party in the House could take it that that concern about our children and our children's children is something which moves every Member of Parliament and every Canadian. Therefore, I think that the comments made by the Secretary of State were inappropriate and should not have been offered here in the House of Commons.

I was disappointed, upset and rather dismayed to hear the suggestion made by the Secretary of State that the air-launched Cruise missile, which he admits is a strategic weapon, is among the most stabilizing of weapons because it is slow and recallable. The fact is that the air-launched Cruise missile is a new addition to strategic weaponry between the two superpowers of which there is already too much. In addition, it may be recallable but it is not detectable. As we saw from the route that was taken by the missile that was tested recently in Alberta and across the Rocky Mountains, the missile can dip and dive. It can turn left and turn right. It can go up and down—

Mr. Beatty: Like the Liberal Party.

Mr. Cassidy: Like the Liberal Party, that is right. It can be directed along routes so that it is not liable to visual detection either. Therefore, because of the possibilities of stealth, it is a particular factor for destabilization as opposed to other types of strategic weapons which, for all the terror they carry, are at least detectable and predictable in their course, if they are ever launched, and which can also be more easily verified because of their size and emplacements than can the air-launched Cruise missile.

I was disappointed in the comments of the Secretary of State who suggested that it would be even more necessary that Cruise missiles be available in the nuclear arsenal of the United States of America if the intermediate nuclear force talks in Geneva come to a successful conclusion. In other words, even though we have more than 10,000 nuclear strategic missiles—and God knows how many warheads—in the West, and a similar amount in the East, somehow we need to add to that horrendous pile of nuclear weapons if several hundred intermediate nuclear missiles in the European theatre of operations are withdrawn. I hate to say it, but the Secretary of State appears to be suggesting that if one de-escalates in terms of European missiles, then in fact we should have a new round of escalation in terms of strategic missiles because of air-launched Cruise missiles.

I have to take issue as well with the comments the Secretary of State made with respect to the solidarity of the western alliance. He suggests that in order to maintain a negotiating position at Geneva it is necessary that there be no hint of division or of difference of views between the powers in the western alliance. In other words, he is saying that any hint of division—

An Hon. Member: Is this debate?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I wish to bring to the attention of the House that we are on debate. I asked for questions and comments after the speech of the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). There were no questions or comments, therefore, we went into debate. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) is on debate.

Mr. Cassidy: The point I was making is this. Somehow it is not divisive of the alliance, according to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, for Canada to oppose the United States breach of the SALT agreement to which they had adhered for a number of years. I know that it was not a treaty. It is not divisive of the alliance for Canada to oppose the broad interpretation of the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty. As the Secretary of State for External Affairs has pointed out, that is something that Canada has done with force and vigour on a number of different occasions, both publicly and privately. It is not divisive of the western alliance, and of our friendship with the United States and the other countries in NATO, for Canada to refuse to support the star wars or the Strategic Defence Initiative. That is all right, too. The Secretary of State for External Affairs did not criticize it, so presumably he accepts that it is all right for other NATO countries to have a differing view of their obligations, to refuse to have foreign troops on their soil, to have a different command structure relative to troops which they have loosely committed to NATO, or to refuse to have testing of nuclear weapons or placement of nuclear weapons on their soil. That is all right, too. But then the Secretary of State for External Affairs has turned around and said that it is not all right if Canada takes the step that we have proposed, which is that we should simply refuse to have testing of Cruise missiles in Canada.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs is saying, as the Liberal Government said before him in 1983 and 1984, that there will always be reasons for the Government to defer action on Cruise testing. There will always be reasons to refuse to act, and to refuse to stop Cruise testing despite the opinion of the majority of Canadians who say that it is time to stop testing of Cruise missiles in Canada, and that that time is now. It is because of the way that we as Canadians feel about what our role should be in the world, and about the type of contribution that we can make to world peace and disarmament.

The New Democratic Party has the view that the amendment proposed by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) is contradictory to the motion. However, you have accepted it as being in order. We are not prepared to vote for the amendment proposed by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition because it is definitely contradictory to the motion which is being debated today. Our motion makes it quite clear that we call for the termination of Cruise missile testing in Canada, not in five years, 10 years, some indeterminate time, not depending on whether it is February, March, or November, but that we do so now.

We do have a bilateral agreement with the United States. Under that agreement we have a sub-agreement relative to Cruise testing. In other words, at the present time we are committed to Cruise testing. However, there is a loophole in that agreement which, in view of substantial changes in the international situation, permits us to say, let us stop Cruise missile testing in Canada now. We are saying that now is the time to invoke that particular clause. We do not have to wait until July, 1988, or until 1992 or 1993 when the umbrella agreement expires. We can do so now. We should do so now. That is the message that clearly should be taken by the House voting for the motion proposed by the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett).

In moving the amendment stating that the resolution would be supported only in a manner that is consistent with Canada's bilateral obligations, I believe we have what is known as an oxymoron; it is a contradiction which is in fact not sustainable. That is why we are not prepared to support the Liberal amendment. I am glad to hear from the Secretary of State for External Affairs that he, like us, is prepared to see this issue clearly debated and discussed in the House with a clear vote in terms of Canada's taking the initiatives in the area of disarmament and arms control, and on the specific question of whether we should stop Cruise missile testing, and stop it now.

The New Democratic Party has always been opposed to Cruise missile testing. I would point out that these tests are not being made in the context of Canada's obligations to NATO. In fact, they have not been requested by our friends in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. They have been requested under the umbrella agreement which exists with the United States. These tests are to add to the American strategic forces and, as my colleague has already pointed out, these forces now exceed the SALT limitation in terms of bombers capable of carrying air-launched missiles.

The level of strategic forces is already too high and too dangerous on the side of both superpowers; 10,000 more missiles is ample for the western allies to obliterate the Soviet Union and its friends, I suppose some 400 or 500 times, and I believe for the Soviet Union to do the same thing to us here on the North American Continent. Frankly, once is too many times. Twenty, 50, or 200 times beyond that is far too many.

We are particularly concerned about the Cruise missile because it is destabilizing, and because it is of particular danger to us in Canada with the most sparsely populated terrain which lies in the field of potential conflict, should there ever be such a devastating conflict between the superpowers.

One of the concepts of deterrence which has lasted for 35 years, albeit imperfectly, is that each side has some knowledge of the level of weapons, and the threat which is directed against it by the other side. In fact, by various means the two sides do seek to inform each other of what they have, and to know what the other side has. In other words, there is not total secrecy in this area, and there is a certain common interest in knowing what they have pointed against each other. Therefore, it is crucial that weapons be detectable.

The Cruise weapon deters detection because it cannot be seen, traced, or tracked as easily as conventional strategic missiles. The Cruise missile deters arms controls and verification because it is so small. Something that will fit on the back of a tractor-trailer cannot be verified. There are probably hundreds of thousands of tractor-trailers in this country, and millions in the United States. Any one of those could purportedly be carrying beef, furniture, or some other product, or it could be carrying two or three Cruise missiles that potentially could be used against some potential adversary.

This matter should be of particular concern to Canada. Since taking office the Secretary of State for External Affairs has indicated in his statements that Canada is committed to arms control in the context of deterrence. If there is a weapon which, if widespread, undermines deterrence, we should be doing our best to discourage it rather than allow its proliferation.

It has been argued today by the Leader of the Official Opposition that to stop Cruise missile testing would violate the two-track concept of the European NATO policy which has been pursued for the last several years. Regardless of one's views on that particular policy, it is a fact that the air-launched Cruise missile is not an intermediate weapon. Therefore, it is not part of that two-track policy which was directed to the European theatre.

The air-launched Cruise missile is designed to go over the North Pole, down the rivers of Siberia, and to hit inland centres in the Soviet Union without being detected at an early point in any type of strategic or hideous exchange between the superpowers. It was not called for, and it has nothing to do with the two-track policy of NATO. There is no NATO obligation with respect to Cruise testing in Canada.

• (1440)

We have no agreement with NATO in respect of Cruise testing. We have an agreement with the United States. As the Hon. Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) and the Right Hon. Pierre Trudeau, at the time they were responsible Ministers in their respective Governments, admitted in the House that there is no NATO obligation.

We are suggesting in the debate that whatever the Progressive Conservative Party or the Liberal Party may have thought of the commitment of the NDP to ending Cruise missile testing in Canada from 1983 to the present, conditions have now changed to the point that they can now join us in calling for an end to Cruise missile testing.

The Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam pointed out that the Americans have now exceeded the limit of 131 bombers capable of carrying air-launched Cruise missiles, and that this is in direct violation of the SALT II agreement. The American proposals to weaken the ABM Treaty by a so-called broad interpretation have not been abandoned, whatever Secretary Nitze had to say in his discussions with the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs when he was in Ottawa yesterday.

I welcome some of the encouraging comments made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, but we have not had a clear repudiation. It may be that, in the context of the change in chiefs of staff in the White House and other unrelated matters which have undermined the force of the American administration, they have decided to bide their time. However, they are only biding their time. The President has not abandoned his commitment to his interpretation of the star wars initiative, which would require a broad rather than a narrow interpretation of the ABM Treaty, and which, therefore, threatens to undermine the only arms control treaty in force between the United States and the Soviet Union.

Also, as my colleague pointed out, there was a dramatic prospect for the removal of all intermediate range missiles in Europe. I do not believe that we as Canadians should be encouraging a new area of competition between the superpowers, just at a time of taking away a particular area. I profoundly believe that the removal, or an agreement to remove intermediate nuclear force missiles, coupled with the progress made on chemical weapons, the progress made on conventional troops in the Stockholm Talks, the progress being made at the United Nations in terms of unanimous support for Ambassador Roche's resolution or Canada's resolution on verification measures related to nuclear testing, and the lengthy moratorium to which the Soviet Union adhered, despite the failure of the United States to go along with it, are surely reasons to seek a pause in the escalation of the ludicrous nuclear competition which has taken place for many decades between the superpowers.

We have therefore presented a motion that attempts to enable Canada to take an initiative that reflects Canadian public concern and will be a valuable contribution to arms control and to nuclear disarmament. As a NATO member, I would point out that Canada is free to choose the manner of its contributions to NATO. Various NATO countries do not allow foreign troops. They do not allow nuclear missiles on their borders. They have different means of interpreting the treaty. Even if there were some loose form of NATO obligation, there is not a specific obligation. The suggestion about a bilateral obligation is there, but let us spell out exactly what it means.

We have an umbrella agreement on testing with the United States. Regrettably the Government chose last week to do nothing about that agreement and, therefore, it is extended from 1988 to 1993. Cruise missile testing takes place in the context of that over-all agreement. It is in the context of the sub-agreement that we have the opportunity either to continue or to cease. We do not believe the bilateral obligation is sufficient to outweigh Canada's commitment to maintaining the integrity of the ABM treaty, to maintaining the SALT agreement, and to ensuring disarmament and mutual security.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the long-standing position of the New Democratic Party has been to oppose cruise missile testing in Canada. On behalf of Parliament, we ask all parties here in the House of Commons to oppose cruise missile tests in Canada right now, and not to defer or muddle the decision but make it clear.

I welcome the statement of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) that the Government will vote against the amendment of the Official Opposition because indeed we must have a clear vote. We on this side welcome the fact that it will be a clear vote, and we appeal to all political parties to side with the majority of Canadians who want to see an end to the cruise missile tests and hope Canada will take a new initiative aimed at world-wide disarmament.

[English]

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I must say I find it passing strange that the Hon. Member who has just spoken would inform the House that the New Democratic Party would not accept the Liberal amendment, because, as he said, it was an oxymoron, a contradictory statement, or a contradiction of terms which negates the effect of the resolution, when he spent the better part of 15 minutes telling Hon. Members that nothing in Canada's current obligations under NATO, or nothing in our bilateral obligations under NORAD, would prevent the Government of Canada from saying that Cruise missile testing must stop. He spent the better part of 15 minutes making the case that nothing prevents the Government, if it should so choose, from putting an end to Cruise missile testing.

Having done that, he went on to tell the House that they would not accept the Liberal amendment which would simply add the words: "Cruise missile testing in Canada in a manner consistent with our NATO and bilateral obligations". The Hon. Member cannot have it both ways. His words are now recorded for all Canadians to examine. He just made the case that nothing in our NATO or bilateral obligations prevents us from taking unilateral action, if the Government of Canada so chooses, to end Cruise missile testing.

Why then is the New Democratic Party not prepared to accept a Liberal amendment which would have no more effect than to recognize—and it is the crux of the matter—that Canada is a full partner in NATO, that Canada has bilateral obligations and treaties with other nations, and that any decision we take in respect of the Cruise should be made in light of those obligations and in the light of that partnership? It is not something we do in the closet with the doors closed and with our eyes closed, expressing in a simplistic fashion some kind of childlike wish for a better world. Is the NDP so opposed to NATO and NORAD that it can find in its heart the wisdom to use an oxymoron bit of logic to try to describe why it is opposing an amendment which would put the NDP in a position to acknowledge Canada's valuable role in NATO?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his contribution to the debate, although I regret his failure to clarify the position of his Party on this particular question. Of course I acknowledge that Canada is a member of NATO and that we have obligations to NATO right now. When we form the Government we will deal with those particular questions.

The question is what initiatives Canada should take in respect of arms controls and disarmament. We have suggested that those initiatives should be strong and that they should include a termination of Cruise missile testing. I have made the case that we are entitled to do that within the context of the bilateral agreement with the United States which now exists. As the Hon. Member stated, I made that case. I made it strongly and I think eloquently. The fact is that that case was rejected by the Hon. Member's Leader who made quite clear that "the motion of the NDP as it stands is not acceptable to the Liberal Party". Therefore, in proposing his amendment it would appear that he felt the motion as amended would be acceptable to the Liberal Party.

The crux of the motion is to terminate Cruise missile testing now. The Hon. Member's Leader said that terminating Cruise missile testing now is not acceptable and, therefore, since the motion became acceptable with his amendment, and if I may use a bit of logic here, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition was stating that the motion as amended did not call for a termination of Cruise missile testing now. That is why we cannot support the effort of the Liberal Party to try to get on all sides of this particular resolution. That is why I welcome the fact that on Monday when we come to a vote on this question the Liberal Party will be forced to acknowledge whether or not it is in favour of ending Cruise missile testing in Canada now.

• (1450)

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member, even drawing from his quiver of wordy weapons such understandable phrases as oxymoron, can twist and turn all he wants. He cannot erase the fact that on the one hand he has made a case that nothing involved with Canada's current obligations in NATO or current obligations under bilateral treaties prevents Canada from acting, if that is Canada's decision as a sovereign nation, while on the other hand stand in the House, as the Member has—it is in Hansard—and say that the reason he cannot accept the Liberal amendment, which merely points out that Canada ought to act in a manner consistent with our NATO and bilateral obligations, is that if we add this acknowledgement to the motion it negates the motion. Nothing could be further from the truth.

Mr. McCurdy: The leader does not tell the truth.

Mr. Tobin: The simple fact is that the New Democratic Party has great difficulty with the notion that Canada is a member of NATO. The NDP is deathly opposed to Canada's involvement in the community of nations which is seeking to prevent nuclear war. That is the blunt reality. It is not a pleasant one for the New Democratic Party, but it is blunt. The New Democratic Party is on record that it is opposed to Canada's involvement in NORAD. The reason the NDP is opposed to this motion which asks us to act as a responsible nation in the community of nations is that it puts the New Democratic Members of Parliament in this House at variance with the position taken by its Party in convention. That is the only reason.

Mr. Murphy: You guys are going to be doing it.

Mr. Tobin: If the Hon. Member is serious in wanting to inject in the Government opposite, when the time is right, a bit of backbone, so that we act, if conditions are appropriate, to put an end to nuclear missile testing, and if he wants the support of the members of this Party to send that signal across the floor of the House, why are New Democrats not prepared to accept the Liberal amendment which, after all, acknowledges that Canada is a part of NATO and has other international obligations?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I am struck by the reference of the Hon. Member to the New Democratic Party and the respect that we hold for the positions that our Party takes in convention, in view of the fact that the speech made by his leader earlier today in the debate is quite directly at variance with the position that his Party took in convention. I listened very carefully to the Hon. Leader of the Opposition, who for 20 minutes gave us a lengthy argument as to why his Party is not in favour of ending Cruise missile testing now, despite the fact that the convention said directly the opposite, and despite the fact that both his defence critic and his external affairs critic indicated they favoured ending Cruise missile testing now.

Ms. Jewett: That is right.

Mr. Cassidy: If the Leader of the Liberal Party had said, we will propose an additional form of words along the lines that were proposed, but we understand that this still means Canada is committed to ending Cruise missile testing now—that is after all the major point of the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam—but that the intent of the resolution is still that the House gives a message to the Government that we end Cruise missile testing now, then I think we could have seriously considered accepting that particular amendment.

Mr. Tobin: The resolution does not say that.

Mr. Cassidy: It is certainly clear that the reason the amendment was put forward by the Liberal Party was to cover up the divisions that occur within that Party, between the Leader who takes one side, and a convention and a caucus that take the other side on the question of Cruise missile testing. They are hopelessly divided. I suggest that the bombast coming from my friend, the Hon. Member for Humber—Port-au-Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin), will not cover up the fact that the Liberal Party does not know where it stands on this issue. We know where we stand. The resolution calls for an end to Cruise missile testing now. I hope the Hon. Member will support it.

Mr. Tobin: Where do you stand on NATO?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate. The Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston).

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I must say I enjoyed that exchange. I had a great deal of difficulty following it, although it had my undivided attention. I still do not know, as I stand here, what the position of the New Democratic Party is on NATO. Nor do I quite understand how the word "now" gets read into this motion presented by the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett).

With that being said, I find that the motion itself does contain a number of serious ambiguities, some of which were addressed by my leader in his comments at noon. It certainly wants from lack of precision, as we have just heard from the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) who read the word "now" into the text, which it does not have. Should we give the NDP the benefit of the doubt, that this is simply bad drafting, or is there something more mischievous about this motion? For example, as the leader pointed out, the very first line of the motion attacks the role of air-launched Cruise missile deployment. This morning in her opening comments, the sponsoring member said, again changing the language of the motion, that the House is alarmed by the role of air-launched Cruise missiles and the violation of the SALT limits. I heard her say it right here. It is the intention of this motion to attack the role of air-launched Cruise missiles, which was the point raised by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) this morning? He made the point that that is a direct assault on the deterrent factor of NATO itself. It appears to me that the New Democratic Party is trying to bootleg an attack against NATO and the deterrent effort of NATO through this resolution, in a very cute way.

As far as the violation of SALT II is concerned, we have expressed our concern. I will come back to SALT II in a moment. I know the New Democratic Party has expressed concern about those violations and representations that have been made to Washington, and made in the conference of NATO Ministers as recently as in Halifax, but their concerns seem to have fallen on deaf ears. The breach of those SALT II limits has become a symbol in this arms race, and its deliberate breach suggests that there are now no limits. That is a matter of great concern to us on this side of the House. I will return to SALT in a moment.

Those words, "the role of", used in the context with which they were put forward this morning, add nothing at all to that motion, unless they are designed to attack NATO itself and the deterrent NATO feature. If one eliminates those words, I suggest to the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre, who is nodding his head, that, yes, indeed the point with respect to SALT II limits is still there.

Mr. Cassidy: I was shaking my head.

Mr. Johnston: The New Democratic Party we know rejects Canada's role in NATO and NORAD. It has not had the courage to say so directly in this resolution. I hope that the amendment proposed—I hope adopted—will make the New Democratic Party honest on this point, so it will say here in this House where it effectively stands.

• (1500)

Turning to the last sentence of the motion, that which calls for the termination of Cruise missile testing in Canada, it is interesting to note that once again, the resolution falls far short of precision. However, it is not unlike the resolution which was adopted last November at the Liberal convention. Following that convention, our Leader explained that the resolution was to be interpreted within the context of Canada's bilateral and multilateral commitments, notably to NATO. The amendment he has moved, which I have seconded, brings precision to this motion. I urge all Members of the House to accept it notwithstanding the rejection of it out of hand by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) in his intervention earlier this afternoon.

On February 27, in fact one week ago, I had called for an arrest or stop to Cruise missile testing, as I had on earlier occasions in the House. For example, on December 1, 1986, as reported on page 1643 of Hansard, I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs the following question:

> Could the Prime Minister advise President Reagan that Canada does not intend to proceed with the Cruise missile tests until the U.S. Government decides to meet its obligations under the SALT II Treaty and the ABM Treaty?

Like others on all sides of the House, across Canada, in the United States and in Europe, I have been concerned by the apparent obdurate attitude of the United States on at least three issues, and I will deal with them, which directly affect arms negotiations because they seem to be preventing the implementation of the most important track of the two-track policy adopted back in 1979. I do not intend to deal at great length with history, but we should bear in mind that, as we have already heard, the two-track decision was to deploy nuclear weapons on European soil on the one hand while seeking to pursue arms reduction negotiations at Geneva on the other.

As the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) pointed out, in 1983 our Government entered into a test and evaluation agreement with the United States, and subsequent thereto the United States asked Canada to test Cruise missiles. It was terribly important at that time, as it is today, that there be solidarity in the Atlantic alliance as these negotiations with the Soviets were approaching.

The Cruise missile decision was not an easy one to make, but within the collective solidarity of the alliance, European nations were agonizing over the requirement that they place nuclear-armed missiles on their soil. Canada agreed that to fulfil its role and to do its part, it would test unarmed Cruise missiles in this country. I would refer you, Mr. Speaker, to a letter addressed to the Hon. George Shultz from the then Secretary of State, the Hon. Allan J. MacEachen, of July 15, 1983. He said:

> You will recall that when I wrote to you on January 21, I underlined the serious concern of the Canadian people about the decision their Government might take on the anticipated U.S. request to test the cruise missile in Canada. At that time I stressed how important it was for the Government to be able to assure the Canadian public that the arms control aspect of the negotiations in Geneva is being pursued as vigorously and as earnestly as is the deployment of new missiles.

He went on to point out the following:

> Canada joined in the NATO "two-track" decision in 1979, under which new Allied missiles will be deployed in Europe beginning this year unless a verifiable agreement can be reached with the Soviet Union to make this action unnecessary. When we met with our NATO colleagues in Paris in June we agreed that, if the negotiations are to succeed, it will be important for all the Allies to stand together behind their decision. As our contribution to this solidarity, Canada has agreed to help test vital components of the technology of the cruise missile.

The two tracks were clear: the deployment, of which the testing of the Cruise missile was a part, and the renewed effort to secure arms reductions. The arms-reduction track has not proceeded as the world might have hoped, but Mr. Gorbachev's arrival on the scene brought new hope for meaningful arms reductions. The security track, of course, has been followed very well. However, Mr. Gorbachev threw out the challenge to get back on that other track when he said: "On behalf of the Soviet people, I am appealing to the wisdom and the dignity of the Americans not to miss another historic chance on the way toward ending the weapons race".

I think many of us felt that the United States administration did not adequately accept that challenge. First and foremost, there was the star wars initiative. That, as we know, suggested that there would be a broadening of the interpretation of the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty. This interpretation, if agreed upon by the United States, would presumably allow extensive testing and deployment. I must say I was heartened to hear the Secretary of State for External Affairs tell us today that Paul Nitze, the senior arms adviser to the President, has told the Canadian Government that the United States has not yet moved to that broad interpretation. Nonetheless, that is a matter of great concern.

The second issue which prevented us from getting back on that second track was the failure to accept a moratorium on nuclear tests, something which had been offered by the Soviet Union and which had in fact been followed by the Soviet Union for 18 months. The reason, of course, the moratorium was not accepted by the United States was that it apparently was intimately related to this ill-conceived star wars initiative. Apparently nuclear testing is necessary to develop one of the essential components of that system, the nuclear X-ray laser.

Third, we saw the breach of the SALT II limits against the wishes of all the NATO allies. The Secretary of State made the point that they argued with great vigour in Washington to convince the United States not to breach the SALT II limits. However, on all these issues, the moratorium, the reinterpretation of the ABM Treaty and the SALT II limits, the Americans did not appear to be listening to our concerns or to the concerns of the allies. All of our pleas seemed to fall on deaf ears.

The result of that was that arms-control negotiations, for which we had so much hope after the arrival of Mr. Gorbachev and the initial meeting in Geneva, were, all of a sudden, the subject of dismay and despair because of what I call this apparent obdurate attitude on the part of the United States. Negotiations came to a virtual standstill.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that at Reykjavik, Mr. Gorbachev insisted that the removal of the intermediate-range nuclear missiles in Europe depended upon the abandonment of the star wars initiative by the United States. However, the seemingly stubborn refusal of the U.S. to make concessions on star wars prevented the pursuit of meaningful negotiations in that regard. We seemed to have lost that most important track of all, namely a concerted, solidified and consolidated effort on the part of the allies to sit down and negotiate an arms control agreement with the Soviet Union.

• (1510)

How do we get back on track? The U.S. did not seem much impressed with our rhetoric, our arguments or those of our allies. The star wars and SALT road-blocks remain. That is why I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs last December 1 whether he could advise the President that Canada wanted to discontinue Cruise testing until the Americans started to live up to their obligations, as we saw them, under the ABM Treaty and SALT II, notwithstanding the fact that SALT II had not been formally ratified. What has happened? Since I last suggested that course of action and a discontinuance of Cruise missile testing, Mr. Gorbachev has changed his position and attempted to place the arms reduction negotiations back on track with negotiations on the removal of intermediate-range nuclear weapons from Europe. I am gratified and pleased to see that the U.S. has in turn made a solid and positive response. This may indeed be the historic breakthrough. During this period, I suggest, the allies have to stand solidly together because the purpose of the interventions I made in the past was to get them back on track and it now looks as though we are getting back on track. I would like to refer to the comments of two respected journalistic sources in Canada. In an editorial on March 3, The Globe and Mail, referring to Mr. Gorbachev and the zero option, said:

He has thereby opened the way to the first major arms control pact of the 1980s.

I would also like to refer to Mr. Richard Gwyn who writes a column for The Toronto Star from London. It is a sensitive, perceptive and informed column. He offers the following comments:

Gorbachev has done it. Because he has done it, almost anything now becomes possible: A major cut in long-range (intercontinental) missiles that would free both superpowers from their fear of a surprise attack; elimination of chemical weapons; phasing out of nuclear tests, and a pact to reduce conventional forces.

Much is left to be done, but Mr. Gwyn adds optimistically, and I would like to share some of that optimism:

The catalytic new agreement Gorbachev has added to East-West relations is that of trust.

The U.S. and the Soviet Union are moving back to the table. As you know, on March 4 the U.S. handed the Soviet Union a draft treaty agreement. Obviously I have not seen its terms, but we understand it would eliminate all medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe and limit the two superpowers to 100 nuclear warheads apiece of the same kind of missiles on their own soil. On the eve of these negotiations which could begin that historic breakthrough, and which will hopefully move into other areas of disarmament such as ICBMs, chemical warfare and tactical nuclear weapons, I would not fire off a message to the U.S. that we are going to terminate our relations under that agreement. That was the point that our Leader made this morning and that is the point I would make to the gentleman from Ottawa Centre. I do not see that as enhancing these negotiations when we must stand solid because we finally are back, it would appear, on both tracks. We finally can see real opportunity for major breakthroughs on arms control.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I appreciated the speech by the foreign affairs critic of the Liberal Party, but I am a bit confused because of statements he made earlier which seemed to be a clear position taken on behalf of his Party. He now seems to be fudging. The essence of the motion we put forward was that this House calls for strong initiatives by the Government to strengthen arms control and disarmament measures, including the termination of Cruise missile testing in Canada. On November 27, 1986, the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston) asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) the following question:

Would the Government consider putting pressure on the United States to respect its obligations under the Salt II Treaty and stop the Cruise missile tests?

I would like to ask the Hon. Member two questions. First, was that question accurately reported in Hansard at page 1590? Second, did he favour stopping the Cruise missile tests at that time? Third, if it is so important now to make a reference to honouring Canada's commitment to NATO and other bilateral agreements, why was that not contained in the question he put in this very House to the Minister?

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I thought I had covered that ground quite thoroughly in my comments. My point is that the circumstances today, March 6, and I hope the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre will agree, are certainly substantially different from what they were one week ago or on November 27. The whole purpose of telling the U.S. to stop testing Cruise missiles or we will stop testing Cruise missiles is to bring them back to observe their obligations which would bring the Soviets back to the negotiating table. Now, thank goodness, that has happened. I say that the circumstances have dramatically changed during that intervening period. The whole purpose of those interventions, if you read the question I put on December 1 as well as the one on November 27, was in that vein. The Americans were not listening. At least that was my impression and I think it was probably the Hon. Member's impression. They were not listening to their allies. How do you attract their attention? How do you get them to listen to common sense and get back to the negotiating table? Well, it has happened. Things are back on track and we should all be optimistic and grateful for what has taken place during the past week.

[Translation]

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to you for this opportunity to comment briefly on the proposal of our socialists colleagues to stop cruise missile testing in Canada. This proposition is exactly the same as the one advocated at the November 1986 Liberal Party convention. It is exactly the same as the position expressed in February 1987 by the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston), and he is the Opposition's external affairs critic. It is the same as the position of their expert in defence matters. Earlier this morning the Party leader said that his party would move an amendment, so all Liberal Members applauded strongly, except for the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount who perfunctorily went through the motion.

So then the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) rose to ask the Leader of the Opposition to reconcile the position of his rebellious colleagues. The Leader of the Opposition replied that the Soviet Union had changed, had—

Mr. Johnston: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston) on a point of order.

Mr. Johnston: Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I find it totally uncalled for and unacceptable on the part of the Hon. Member to comment on the way I applaud my leader. He should listen to what I say. Perhaps he is shortsighted, because I did applaud. His seat is far away and I can understand why.

• (1520)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I appreciate what the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston) is saying. I hope the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) would comment on the speech of the Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount.

[Translation]

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount has indicated that he will not support the proposal of the socialists to abandon Cruise missile testing in Canada and he said that he will not do so because the United States and the Soviet Union have made new proposals to eliminate intermediate range weapons. However, these proposals were made on February 27 and the Hon. Member omitted to point out that he maintained the same position in this House on March 4, after the United States and the Soviet Union had taken position. I therefore ask the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston) to be consistent with what he himself said in the House of Commons on March 4, 1987, and to explain to this House the position of his party on putting an end to Cruise missile testing in Canada. I would like him to be consistent with himself, his party and his Leader, if they in fact have one.

Mr. Johnston: I do not know where he got his reference, Mr. Speaker, I have no idea what he is talking about. I made a few speeches this week, but I do not recall raising that question. Could he give us the page number, Mr. Speaker? Perhaps I will be able to give him an explanation after that.

Mr. Fontaine: March 4, 1987, page 3799.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, this has nothing to do with Cruise missiles. I would not want that a wider interpretation be given to the ABM treaty. The position has never changed. Indeed it is the same position as the one just expressed by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It seems to me it is an entirely different question, Mr. Speaker. It has nothing to do with the question he has just asked.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There are one and a half minutes left for questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member who, last week, was opposed to Cruise missile testing and is now in favour is a very changeable spokesperson for his Party on external affairs. He said that it is because of the commencement of some opening in Geneva with regard to an intermediate nuclear force. Nothing is concluded. Does he believe that the United States has decided to adhere to the SALT limits? What evidence does he have for that? Has the United States abandoned its efforts to broaden the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty? Both these matters are raised in this resolution.

Has that changed, or has the member become credulous in his belief that everything is changing?

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, let me take the member slowly through the point. The reason for concern with respect to the ABM Treaty and SALT II interpretation is that the star wars initiative, especially, brought negotiations to a stop. Mr. Gorbachev said that he would not discuss intermediate range nuclear weapons as long as the star wars proposal was on the table. He said that at and after Reykjavik.

It is only on March 1 that Mr. Gorbachev said that he would go to the table. The United States has put forward a counter proposition as of March 4 and is going to the table.

When we talk about being in favour or being opposed to Cruise missile testing, it becomes somewhat of a red herring. The whole purpose of the discussion we have had in the House, and the points I made in November and last week, which were referred to by the Hon. Member, were to attempt to remove that obstacle so that they could go back to the table. They are now back at the table.

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), has very clearly laid out Canada's position on the very important area of arms control and disarmament. He has done this, as he said, at a time when some small rays of sunshine have appeared in what has been a gloomy arms control environment of late. The Department of National Defence has been pleased to lend support to recent efforts in this field.

Canada's position on arms control and the value of existing treaties is clear. Arms control is a very important aspect of national security, but so is defence.

In the short time available to me, I hope to demonstrate that the defence aspect, including such activity as testing the Cruise missile in Canada, is a necessary and valuable adjunct to the arms control effort.

For many years now, the western alliance strategy of deterrence through strength has helped us avoid a major East-West conflict, including the ultimate horror of nuclear war. The major component of deterrence from the western viewpoint has been provided by nuclear weapons, the vast majority of that nuclear deterrent being provided by the United States.

A strategy of deterrence requires that the weapon system components of that deterrent be viable. This viability can only be ensured by the testing of systems, continually upgrading them in keeping with developing technologies, and demonstrating that viability to friend and potential foe alike.

It is a fact that the Soviets, and their Warsaw Pact allies, continue to upgrade their air defence forces. Their interceptor aircraft, surface to air missiles, surveillance systems and the command and control facilities to co-ordinate all of this are of a very high calibre. The ALCM helps to balance the equation.

Ensuring the viability of a component of deterrence is not in opposition to a viewpoint that supports arms control. In fact, the opposite is true. Viable deterrent systems encourage arms control. It is in that context that Canada is following its version of a two-track system, that is, supporting testing and evaluation of a component of the nuclear deterrent while actively encouraging progress in arms control. There is no contradiction in our approach.

Canada's defence is inextricably linked to the policy of collective security arrangements with the United States and our European allies. In this way, Canada is able to make a unique and valued contribution to enhance alliance security. These arrangements are very much linked to the nuclear deterrent strategy I mentioned earlier. They go hand in hand.

Our contribution might be seen as modest compared to those of other NATO allies who have nuclear weapons deployed on their territory. Some of those weapons are the subject of current debate and, provided the right guarantees come to pass, may be removed in the future.

The point is that it was the resolve of the alliance to deploy these weapons which has allowed the West to negotiate from a position of strength rather than a position of weakness.

The European allies took bold and difficult decisions which may now begin to bear fruit. Should Canada do any less? Of course not.

The decision to test the ALCM in Canada recognized the need within NATO to share the burdens and obligations of collective defence. That need has not changed. In fact, as potential breakthroughs in arms control appear, alliance solidarity is more necessary now than ever before. In addition, close co-operation with our allies, particularly the United States, ensures that we do have a voice at the bargaining table. The strategic defence of North America is a joint responsibility, and we must ensure that our views are heard. Canadians do not want their Government to abdicate its responsibility in this regard. There is more to be lost than there is to be gained.

• (1530)

An argument frequently heard against the air-launched Cruise missile is that it is a first strike weapon and it is therefore destabilizing. Any serious strategist knows that this is simply not true. ALCMs must be carried to their launch points by bombers. Given the large number of bombers required to mount an effective first strike and the long flight time to reach those launch points, it is very likely that any enemy would have ample warning. This warning time would be extended by the long flight time of the Cruise missile itself. Total surprise could not be ensured by air-launched Cruise missiles, and no prudent military planner would risk launching an attack in that manner. I hope that will set the record straight.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the United States Air Force has just completed two very successful test flights of the Cruise missile in Canadian air space. Those flights not only proved the effectiveness of the system but also allowed for some very useful collateral training and research by the Canadian Forces. The CF-18s of our air defence force were given the opportunity to practise intercepting and tracking the Cruise missiles. Other valuable research work was done in surveillance and defence against the Cruise missiles such as giving our CP-140 Auroras an opportunity of verifying their detection systems.

Hon. Members will be aware of the recent increases in the number of Soviet long-range bombers approaching the Canadian air defence identification zone. The bomber known as the "Bear-H" is a Cruise missile carrier. Just as the Cruise missile itself is part of the deterrent, so are the forces which defend against Cruise missiles. Thus, Cruise missile tests in Canada provide a very useful training vehicle for our forces.

In replying to this motion, I should remind the House that the project arrangements for Cruise missile testing is part of an over-all test and evaluation agreement with the United States. This agreement was signed by the previous Liberal Government in 1983. There have been misleading reports recently in the media in regard to a so-called extension of the agreement. Those reports have left an impression that the Government is committed to a further five years. This is, of course, not the case. Once again, let me set the record straight. The agreement was for an initial five-year period with an automatic five-year renewal. The agreement has always been, and still is, liable to termination at any time by either party giving 12 months' notice. Furthermore, it can be terminated at any time in an emergency. Either party can terminate a specific arrangement under the agreement—for example, Cruise missile testing—at any time on one day's notice should imperative circumstances so warrant. The Government is not held captive by this agreement. We have repeatedly stated our intention to carry on, and will do so, but this in no way precludes second thoughts should circumstances change.

In order to maintain the strength of deterrence, a program of test and evaluation is vital. Making our territory available under sound and safe conditions is a valuable contribution by Canada to the western alliance. Canada benefits from the protection provided by the nuclear deterrent. We also benefit from the opportunity to practise and improve our own air defences in conjunction with the Cruise Missile Test Program.

In closing I would like to say that there is no contradiction in supporting a reasonable and meaningful commitment to a stronger defence effort, and yet being equally supportive of peace initiatives. In my opinion, the twin concepts of peace and security are inseparable. I take great pride as a Canadian in associating myself with our Prime Minister's view that "we are not a nation that has any international aspirations except that of peace". May we always continue, as a nation, to pursue that aspiration.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Dick) to give the justification with which he would feel happy in defending the decision of the United States to exceed the SALT II limitations which it had previously accepted voluntarily. I recognize that it was a voluntary recognition. With that extension over and above the bounds of Cruise missile deployment which took place and exceeded SALT II, why did the Minister feel that this was not an occasion for Canada to abrogate arrangements with the United States? Recognizing our capacity to change the arrangements we have with the United States and given our strong commitment to SALT II, to treaty relations and to trying to cut back the escalation of superpower armaments, why did the Government not at that stage decide to abrogate the Cruise testing arrangement with the United States? Why was the Government not prepared to do that?

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) for that question. If he had been here earlier to hear the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who put it very clearly, he would know that, yes, we were against the United States for abrogating the SALT II Convention. However, we did not want to throw the baby out with the bath water. We did not decide from spite, such as the New Democratic Party out of spite decided we should really get upset, close down everything and say we do not want to talk anymore. We decided to say we disagreed with the United States and argued against it very forcefully. We lost the argument, but we are still working towards disarmament and maintaining our strength, and at the same time contributing to the strength of the alliance and solidarity with our other allies. If we get to a point where the two superpowers can negotiate and reach an agreement, then when we arrive at that decision will be the time perhaps to change course.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, if one is engaged in an argument with an ally as, for instance, we were in the trade negotiations with the United States, and we have in fact taken counter-measures against measures which the United States took which we felt were not justified, such as the shakes and shingles decision, why would the Minister expect the House to believe that our making a stronger response to the United States would help? After all, we are talking about the testing of Cruise missiles, which is undoubtedly useful to the United States but it is not of tremendous strategic necessity that the testing take place in Canada. Why would we not exercise a little more strength in our argument by cutting back on the commitment that we made 10 years ago?

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I feel that this is a childish approach. It is like being upset because the Americans abrogated SALT II and went beyond. It is as if, because one lost that argument, one must throw a temper tantrum and say: "I am going to walk out". Because we might have had some quarrels with them over shakes and shingles in the trade negotiations, the Hon. Member's Party has steadfastly said: "Then quit the discussions and walk away from the table". We still say that we can win in the long run by keeping those discussions going. I do not see any reason for having a temper tantrum and walking away.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, this morning the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) suggested that if we were to vote in favour of this motion we would be demonstrating a weakness in the NATO alliance. Both he and the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Dick) suggested that if we were to stop Cruise missile testing, in a sense we would be letting down the NATO alliance.

I wish to ask the Minister the following question. Does he believe that the United States was letting down the NATO alliance when, without consultation, it sold arms to Iran and used the profits to fund the Contras in Nicaragua; when it raided Libya and Grenada without consulting its NATO allies; when it unilaterally withdrew recognition of the World Court on certain key international questions; when it violated the SALT II limits; and when it continually, along with the Soviet Union, violated Article 6 of the non-proliferation treaty of 1970 which states that nuclear weapons states are not to increase their nuclear arsenals but to reduce them? In 1970, the United States had 4,000 nuclear weapons. In 1985, it had 11,000. In taking all these actions without consulting its NATO allies, does the Minister think that the Americans were acting in a responsible way to their NATO allies? Does the Minister think we would be acting in a worse manner if we were to stop the testing of the Cruise missile in view of this disregard by the United States of its NATO allies?

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) had been here this afternoon rather than this morning he would have heard the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) speak.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Dick) knows that it is against the rules to refer to a Member's presence or otherwise in the House. Since the debate started this morning with the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett), the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) has been in the House. I think the Minister should either answer the question of the Hon. Member or abstain. He should not try to side-track in answer to the Hon. Member. He asks good questions, which I think the Minister should answer. He can also refuse to answer them since that is his right. He should address these issues and not say: "If the Hon. Member had been here—". I have been here in the Chamber or behind the curtain all day, as has the Hon. Member.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Dick) knows that Hon. Members should not reflect upon the presence or otherwise of other Hon. Members in the Chamber. He has exactly one minute to answer the question.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that I have any time left. It seems as if the Liberal Party is trying to filibuster my opportunity to reply to the substance of what the Hon. Member had to say.

The Hon. Member had a number of things to say. I forget all that he listed. However, in his list in regard to a number of areas he was, in part, wrong. It is true that perhaps the United States was wrong with respect to some of the things it did. In other areas it did consult. It did not consult Canada when it went to Grenada, perhaps because it did not trust the Government at the time. It was a Liberal Government which could not be trusted. It consulted the British and the other islands in the Caribbean. So the Hon. Member is wrong.

I heard at one time, and perhaps the Hon. Member does not believe me, that two wrongs do not make a right.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time for questions and comments has now terminated. The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) on debate.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, it is sad to hear the word games which have taken place today in attempts to wriggle around particular clauses and to escape from the basic question which is before the House. That basic question is one which has to be put perhaps by a new generation of Members of Parliament.

In the past months and weeks I have received letters from Brownie packs in my constituency. These are heartfelt letters, letters written by little girls who want to say to us assembled here as Members of Parliament that they want peace in the world. They want to grow up. They want to have good and productive lives ahead of them. They want to see Canada become a leader in the fight for peace. We have received letters from seven or eight different Brownie packs in Windsor. I can read some of the letters which represent typical ones which have been sent to us. I think it is crucial that Members of Parliament hear some of the words sent by our young citizens, people such as Lindsay, who is six, who writes:

Ask Prime Minister Mulroney to talk with President Reagan about peace and getting rid of nuclear weapons.

Others have written to us and stated: "I think Canada should help find a peaceful solution to the problems causing war". Those words are from Laura who is seven. "Canada should help other countries to find peaceful answers to their problems." Those are the words of Bonnie who is six. This is very much the voice of a generation that has a sense of fear, because there are those of us who, frankly, have let them down in the last 10 to 15 years.

It seems to me that there has been case after case of potential peaceful initiatives put forward in terms of steps which could take the world from a dangerous path of escalation in arms and in its capacity and willingness to use arms, to a path of de-escalation and disarmament. These are initiatives that will take us away from the possibility of what could be a nuclear termination of civilization as we know it. That is basically what this motion is about today. It is not a motion about scoring partisan points, or embarrassing one Party or another; it is a motion that is setting front and centre before the Parliament of Canada at least two or three of the crucial issues which are wrapped up in the arms control debate.

I have been very disappointed by the recent actions of the Government with respect to this cry from our young people for a peaceful world. For instance, I heard today from the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Dick) about how we must be inextricably linked to the alliance system, as if the alliance system were an end in itself. Surely the goal is to achieve a peaceful world and establish a momentum toward disarmament. If the existence of alliances stands in the way of that, they should be dismantled and not extolled, as was the case with the last speaker from the Government.

This crazy approach that has been suggested here, in the United States, and also in Margaret Thatcher's Britain, that somehow through strength we will get peace makes me think more of George Orwell and the reversal of meaning of the words where the ministry of war becomes the so-called ministry of peace. That is what we are talking about when we hear the Government and leaders from the western alliance talk about the goal of peace through strength.

In the last year and a half we have seen the destruction of SALT II. It was supposed to be a movement toward strength, yet it destroyed one of those basic elements of stability which remained within the world. In spite of that, the United States continued to deploy its Cruise missiles and overstep the bounds which existed within the SALT II agreement.

Let us look at the spectacle of a Government in the United States which has admitted that it lied to its own people. It is now sending its representatives throughout the world and is trying to persuade us, the allies of the United States, that we should reject the ABM Treaty as it was established in 1972. Again, that was one of the basic points of stability, one of those few threads that saved us from further escalation in the potential for nuclear war. Let us talk about Reykjavik and what appeared to be an agreement which was reached and very quickly repudiated by the United States.

Let us talk about the initiative taken by the Soviet Union to put a ban on nuclear testing. We may have thought that this was some type of trick on the part of the Soviet Union. But surely anybody who looked with care at what was taking place had to come to the conclusion that this was a sincere gesture that suggested to us that if the United States responded there could be a nuclear test ban treaty. Yet that too was rejected.

With the type of steps that have taken place in the past year and a half, it is time for us to recognize reality and to recognize that the thrust throughout this period has been toward escalation, and not toward disarmament. Running implicitly through that thrust is the tremendous amount of resources that have been allocated by the United States to the Strategic Defence Initiative within the United States, and the nibbling effects and attempts by the United States to circumvent the ABM Treaty and to put in place some elements of that SDI system for testing purposes. That is what has taken place.

Yet Canada stood aside while this has gone on. Our words have been good. I previously mentioned to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) that I was pleased that the decision was taken not to put Canada into SDI as a full partner. There were steps taken to say to the United States, not out of spite or out of anger or adolescent retribution but as part of a serious effort on the part of this country, that we wanted to put into effect the commitment of our young people, our Brownie packs and those girls who have written to me from Essex County, and the commitment that we heard right across this country from the joint special committee which looked at our international relations. In city after city we heard from peace groups that had come together in the middle of the summer under difficult circumstances and said to us, as passionately as they possibly could, "We want Canada to be a peacemaker. We want Canada to be a leader in the fight for peace. We want Canada to challenge those who are not prepared to give their priority to a peaceful world for the future".

• (1600)

That challenge has not been taken up. With the case of Cruise missile testing, a simple, easy, and straightforward message could be sent to the United States, without great cost to that country, without great cost to the alliance system, or without great cost to United States' thinking or its overwhelming concern about security. A step could be taken. Cruise missile testing could be stopped easily. It could be stopped at once, which would have an effect. The effect would not be to stop the arms race. The effect would not be to cause immediate changeovers in American thinking from escalation to disarmament. It has taken, instead, some quite creative and courageous gestures on the part of the Soviet Union—and I am not afraid to say so—to take that direction in the future. It has also taken a much weaker President within the United States looking for ways to respond, to get the direction of change finally shifted. It could have been helped. It could have been assisted. We in this country could have given it a little push. We could have listened to young people across the country who have talked to us in heartfelt and very deeply concerned terms. We could have said no to future Cruise testing.

If we had done that, it would have helped. We could have taken, as our motion suggests, a much more critical position vis-à-vis the United States in respect of its attempts to overstep SALT II. We could have taken a much more argumentative position in respect of the ABM Treaty in public than we have done thus far. We could have taken those steps.

In doing that, we would have made the contribution for which our young people are asking. I am referring to the contribution believed in very strongly by the generation that came after World War II and that believes that any future war will destroy the world. I hope not just this Government across the aisle but future Governments will take the opportunities given to them.

I urge my friends on all sides of the House to take the opportunity provided by the resolution, which strongly expresses the passionate concern of our young people, to put their voices and votes behind the resolution and to give it support, not as a panacea or a final answer, but as something which will help change the dangerous escalation of the present to what I hope will be the disarmament of the future.

Mr. Crofton: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief comment and a question for the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon). He alluded to the Joint Committee on External Affairs, which travelled the country and listened to many Canadians from all walks of life, making representations on the matter of arms control, disarmament, and SDI. I happen to have been a member of that same committee. I heard the same representations. In many instances they were very informed; occasionally they were not so informed. However, on every occasion we heard feelings that were deeply felt. They asked Canada to show leadership and to show responsibility.

When the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) made her opening remarks today, she said that Canada should stop playing at spectator sports. I suggest that the resolution before us indeed invites Canada to stay at home and be a "no show". Canada is indeed a participant and has worked very hard, in all forums available to it, toward disarmament.

The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor said that it was time for reality. I suggest to him that he and his Party sometimes show a remarkable lack of reality. I, for one, am not prepared to declare our neighbourhood burglar-free. It is only common prudence if one takes appropriate measures to ensure our security as a nation.

People in the country belong to associations and unions because it makes for a more effective voice. Is he suggesting that they should not belong to unions if they want to make a better argument and have more strength? I think not. Indeed I think his observations lack some reality.

If ever there were a wrong time for Canada to send the wrong signal to the wrong group, it would be to break our agreement arbitrarily on the testing of the Cruise missile at this time. Can he stand in his place and honestly say that Canada's taking that action would not have an adverse effect upon the negotiations and would not undermine the position of the United States in these very difficult times?

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I stress again to the Hon. Member, for whom I have great respect and with whom I have discussed many of these issues in the course of many hearings across the country during the summer, that our goal as Canadian parliamentarians cannot be to think in terms of what will help the United States in these difficult times.

Our goal—and I believe it passionately—should be to try to work as hard as we can for world peace. Often I think that this can involve us in work with the United States. I am not one of those people who buys the argument that the United States is some kind of malevolent nation ruled by a Dr. Strangelove who is somehow attempting to dominate the world.

We are talking about a very difficult process to try to take us toward greater peace. I agree with the Hon. Member that greater peace or greater disarmament is not something which will wipe nuclear weapons off the face of the earth in a year and a half or something like that. That is not realism.

As I see it, realism is the attempt to respond to what many young people across the country want—a leadership role for Canada which takes us as urgently as possible in the direction of disarmament.

I am quite willing to answer the Hon. Member's final question by saying yes. If we were to say to the United States that it is now time for disarmament to be the first priority for all of us in North America, and for that reason we are cancelling the Cruise testing program, that would be a positive contribution toward peace in the world.

• (1610)

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment and a question for the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon). The Member talked with some passion. I am sure he is sincere about his desire to participate in the debate that would lead to peace in the world. He talked earlier in his remarks about receiving letters from young children who said they wanted a more peaceful, safer world. I hope the Member in making those remarks realizes and appreciates, as I do, that on the question of peace and on the question of wanting security for ourselves, for families and for the community of nations, there is not a single Member of this House of whatever political stripe marked across his back who has a monopoly. It is not a monopoly that the Liberal Party enjoys, it is not a monopoly that the Conservative Party enjoys, and it is not a monopoly that the New Democratic Party enjoys. All of us aspire to that kind of safe and secure world. The question then becomes, how do we achieve it? I would submit to my friend from Essex—Windsor that it is not good enough to stand on any given day on any given subject and say, it is what the people want today, therefore, we should do it. The polls tell us almost consistently that people want capital punishment, but I do not believe the Hon. Member or his Party wants capital punishment. The polls tell us that the majority at least of people want on any given day a ban on abortion, but I notice the Hon. Member and his Party do not seek to put that forward as public policy, at least not as NDP policy.

It is the job of parliamentarians of whatever Party to examine all of the information available, to be concerned with what public opinion and what public feeling is and, having all of that information available to us as full-time public policy makers—not as people who get the news on Friday night and suddenly develop an opinion—to come to the House with what we believe to be a responsible proposal. I submit that members of the Liberal Party and members of the New Democratic Party have in common a desire to see an end to all nuclear weapons and have a common desire to see the day when the Cruise missile is no longer tested in Canada. We all have that desire.

Mr. Witer: Or anywhere else.

Mr. Tobin: Or anywhere else. We all have that desire. The question then becomes, what is our role in achieving that objective? Where I think the New Democratic Party historically, and again today true to its tradition, has failed in its attempt to participate in that process is that it seeks to close the door upon itself, to ignore Canada's relationship in the community of nations, to set a policy, a wish list, of how the world ought to be, and to send that message beaming like some signal into space in the hope that it will find intelligent life at the other end. It is not going to find intelligent life at the other unless it is hooked up to organizations and associations that allow it to communicate with its partners on the planet earth, particularly those people in the western alliance.

My passion for peace is as great as the member's—I know he would not doubt that. I have three children also, one seven, one four and one four months old, and I want to see them all grow up, and I also want to see my grandchildren. I want to do what is right, not just for my constituents and what they say today, but what is right for them. It is more than a vote at stake, it is the continuation of the planet that is at stake.

What is the position of the New Democratic Party? What is the Member's position with respect to Canada's role in NATO, Canada's bilateral treaties and, in particular, NORAD? Does the member not believe that our influence can best be felt when we are an active and independent sovereign member of those western alliances? If he shares my view, why will his Party not accept the Liberal amendment which acknowledges Canada's role in those western organizations?

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I will try to be brief in answering the question. First, I want to say to my hon. colleague and to all colleagues in the House that I do not want to pretend, and I hope that nothing that I have said has suggested, that I feel that our Party or myself or any given group has a monopoly with respect to being concerned with peace. The reason I put the position that I put as strongly as I possibly could is that I want to persuade as many people as I possibly can to take the concerns of our young people, not because they are somehow the majority in our constituencies, but because they are the people who will carry this world on beyond us for peace very seriously. But a tough intellectual question has to be faced, namely, what is happening in the whole arms control process?

An Hon. Member: NATO.

Mr. Langdon: Are we heading toward escalation, as so much of the last few years suggest to me—

Mr. Tobin: You are avoiding the question.

Mr. Langdon: or—I will come to the question too—are we in fact heading toward disarmament? I have to say, as I look at the way the world has evolved, that we are heading very much toward escalation. That is something that Canada should have fought vigorously and should fight vigorously.

With respect to NATO, which is not part of this debate or this motion—

Mr. Tobin: You cannot separate them.

Mr. Langdon: —I am quite willing to answer the question. I am not sure whether the member was here when I dealt with it in my speech, but I said that if it becomes a choice between working for peace and defending an alliance, one has to work for peace as the first priority.

Mr. Tobin: What about right now?

Mr. Langdon: I believe right now, with my Party, that to work for peace requires us to put distance between ourselves and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. That is a decision which we have held for many years, as the Hon. Member knows.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Could I seek unanimous consent of the House to let the member continue explaining his position with respect to NATO? We have not had this on the record in the House. All members from all Parties, I believe, would give consent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent?

Ms. Jewett: We have heard it 100 times.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

An Hon. Member: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There is not unanimous consent. Debate. The Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin).

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, this has to be the most amazing thing that Members of Parliament have ever witnessed. Members of Parliament assembled for debate initiated by the New Democratic Party from both the Conservative and Liberal Parties have just given unanimous consent to the New Democratic Party for the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) to tell the House his Party's position on NATO so that we could understand the context in which this resolution was put forward. Let the record show that every Conservative Member and every Liberal Member gave the required unanimous consent. But a member of the New Democratic Party said no.

• (1620)

Ms. Jewett: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, that is not true.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I do not need to reflect on who said no and where it came from, but I heard a no and I do not think there is any other explanation.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We are not exactly a large contingent at this stage of the proceedings on a Friday afternoon. I certainly did not hear anyone from our caucus object to it, so I suggest that the Hon. Member put the question again.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do not wish to reflect on who said no. I heard a no. Therefore, the Hon. Member is on debate.

Mr. Tobin: Of course, the Speaker is right as he always is. It does not matter ultimately at the end of the day who said no. Let me only say, as I am entitled to, that it is with great regret that I heard from whichever direction I heard it, but my left ear picked it up best, the "no" that was shouted out because I was looking forward to hearing finally from a member of the New Democratic Party indeed what the Party's position was with respect to Canada's obligations under NATO and other bilateral treaties.

There is an interesting phenomenon in Canadian politics. In Canada, we have a system of the two traditional Parties which have put forward policy, postulated on the solutions to the problems of the nation at any given point in time, and engaged in vigorous debate while a third Party has sat on the sidelines with a pea-shooter in an attempt to score quick, easy, cheap points. In recent days, for whatever reasons—and I won't go into them—this Party has found itself with a slight surge in the public opinion polls. Today is as good a time as any for Canadians to begin to ask themselves what it is this Party stands for.

For far too long, Canadians have taken the view that it does not really matter what members of the New Democratic Party stand for because they will never be in a position to do anything about it anyway. They do not look that closely at what it is they stand for because Canadians have traditionally taken the view that the NDP has a Utopian view of the planet, everything for everybody, a carrot for everyone, and what they stand for is not really that important. Unfortunately, this Party picked a Friday to move this motion, a day not traditionally known as one for a great membership in this place. They picked a moment when the Leader of their Party could not be here. One must understand that he had other more pressing and realistic engagements to attend to.

I said a moment ago, and it ought to be restated, that as much as I as a Liberal disagree with my friends opposite about unemployment initiatives, I must believe that as human beings, they care fundamentally about the unemployed. They may be awfully stunned about how they are trying to cure the problem, but I have to believe they care. As much as I may be concerned about peace on this planet and as much as I may believe from time to time that their policies are not the right ones, I must believe that they care about every man, woman and child in Canada. We may agree to disagree on how we come to grips with many of the problems we face, be they social, military or economic, but all of us are here perhaps pursuing different policies but ultimately trying to achieve the same objective.

What I find offensive—yes, offensive—about the motion put forward by the member of the New Democratic Party is that it was almost blinding to watch members of the New Democratic Party deliver their presentations on this motion because the effect of the haloes they were wearing would nearly knock your eyes out, Mr. Speaker. It is the holier-than-thou attitude that says: "We can create in this nation an island apart and separate from the rest of the planet earth, and because, having carved a trench so deep and wide around this nation that the rest of the world does not matter, we can speak out, send out our message, express our Utopian vision and the rest of the world will listen". It is that kind of naive, narrow quality that emanates from members of the New Democratic Party that is either the function of a childlike, beautifully innocent view of the world, God bless them, or a kind of insidious simplifying of complex issues in an attempt to attract votes. It is one or the other, either a childlike beauty in their thinking, and may they retain it for a long time, or a deliberate attempt to grab the polls on any given day and say they have a policy to solve world problems and express it by way of resolution in the House. I suspect it is the latter.

The fact is that every Member of Parliament wants to see an end to Cruise missile testing in an appropriate fashion within the context of our obligations under NATO and NORAD and to our partners in the western alliance. It is not beyond the realm of possibility, if we go beyond the stereotypes painted by members of the New Democratic Party of Conservative or Liberal Members, that in the appropriate context, even the Conservative Party would find an appropriate moment to end Cruise missile testing when it makes sense in the context of our obligations. However, this motion sets Canada up as some widget existing on some unknown planet that has no neighbours, alliances, organizations or treaties to worry about, and that is not reality. That is why the Liberal Party moved a very simple amendment to the motion of the New Democratic Party about which members of the New Democratic Party claim they care. It was an amendment that said that disarmament measures including the termination of Cruise missile testing in Canada should be taken in a manner consistent with our NATO and bilateral obligations.

If members of the New Democratic Party were sincere and meant what they said, if they were serious about convincing more people in Canada to look at grasping the opportunity when appropriate to end Cruise missile testing, they would support the Liberal amendment that was put today because it does not negate their motion. It merely asks that we grow up and recognize that we are not an island unto ourselves. It is an amendment that asks that we recognize that we are full players in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. It is an amendment that asks that we recognize that we are part of the NORAD agreement, and one that asks that we recognize the nature, reality and history of the planet earth, as imperfect as it is, on which we live. That is all it is. It is an amendment that proves that we are now out of the university debating club and into the House of Commons, a part of the real world that takes us beyond fantasy. That is all it is. We asked the NDP to support that amendment. Yes, all Members of Parliament want to give voice to their desire to achieve a safer world. However, our actions have to be more than empty words and rhetoric. They have to be meaningful. To be meaningful they must be taken in the context of our obligations to NATO and our neighbour to the south.

There is something which occurs in this place far too often and it troubles me. Some Liberals and Conservatives are guilty of this, but it is primarily Members of Parliament from the NDP who have a hard time making a distinction between a disagreement with U.S. policy on any given day of the week, and expressing an overwhelming and general dislike for the U.S. No one can be brought to his feet faster in a fit of frustration than this hon. servant from Humber—Port-au-Port—St. Barbe when a tariff is put on fish. No one can express quicker his frustration and anger when cedar shakes and shingles, softwood lumber and countless other products are harassed by the U.S. administration. However, I make the distinction between U.S. policy on trade or, for that matter, any other area, and my frustration and anger at that policy, and my sentiments about my neighbour, that nation south of the border. Too few members are making that distinction. We have heard the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) say he is not one of those who believes that the U.S. is some kind of sleeping giant being run by a Goldfinger in the back room. I am glad to hear that because too many members of his caucus have and express that view.

The motion before us as amended expresses the concern of the House with the role of the air-launched Cruise missile and its deployment as a violation of SALT limits. The motion expresses the concern of the House about the integrity of the ABM Treaty. It calls upon the Government of Canada to adopt stronger measures to protect the integrity of SALT II and the ABM Treaty, including cancellation of Cruise missile testing within Canada's obligations as a member of NATO and under our other bilateral treaties. That is the amended motion before the House. I submit that every single Member of Parliament can and should be able to support it. I say that not only to my friends in the NDP, I say it to Members of the Conservative majority. It merely expresses the will of this Parliament to use all of those vehicles at our disposal, within the bounds of our responsibilities and obligations, to try to play a role and exert some influence in this world. The words we have added to the motion remind us of our obligation and take us back to the real world. Canada is but one of many players. We like to believe, as we sit in this place enraptured by the splendour of our chandeliers, television lights and stained glass windows, that this is the only Parliament on the planet. The NDP would say that this is so. Everywhere around the world people are tuned to what is being said in the Parliament of Canada and there are no other voices and no other Parliaments. All we have to do is but to speak and megamillions stand up and applaud. Well, that is not the real world. That is not the planet we live on. That is not the way it works.

Unless this nation is prepared to play its role in the treaty organizations we belong to, we may as well abstain from the international arms debate. That is what the NDP would have us do. That is its policy as spelled out at its convention and spelled out by the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor today. The NDP believe the best way that Canada can have a say and exert influence is to withdraw from NATO. Let Canadians from coast to coast hear that. That is its policy. It is also its policy that we withdraw from NORAD. The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor has said it for the first time, I think, in years in this Parliament.

The reason this motion is put before the House today and the reason the NDP has rejected our amendment is that that Party wants to make this House and its members turn Canada into an isolationist, pacifist nation of philosophical angels wandering about in the clouds miles above what is really happening down here on the planet. It is a wonderful place we want to preserve, but it has some warts, and wishing them away will not make them disappear. I beseech members to support the Liberal amendment to this motion

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments?

Mr. Attewell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the Hon. Member for his statements about the NDP. He was very clear and direct, and I want to thank him. I would also like to ask him where he thinks that Party places its faith. The NDP certainly does not place it in our NATO or NORAD allies. Perhaps it places it with the other side, the Soviet Union. That regime would not permit a man suffering from cancer for over six years to leave that country. How can we possibly trust a regime like that in disarmament talks when we cannot trust them to follow the basic human rights accords they have signed? If the NDP does not put its faith in the teamwork of democracy, where does the Hon. Member think it is placing its faith?

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question and comments, although I suspect I may disappoint him slightly. You have to believe one of two things about members of the NDP. Either they are as childlike in their view of this world as they portray themselves to be and are genuine about it, or they are very Machiavellian. I do not believe they can possibly be that Machiavellian, so I assign to them a childlike beauty in their view of the world. I would not want to suggest, as the Hon. Member might lead me to suggest, that the NDP would put its faith in the Soviet Union. I would not want the Member to believe, despite my comments about the NDP, that I think the role for Canada is to follow in a slavish manner the lead of the U.S. Nor should we follow in a slavish manner the lead of the U.S. Nor should we in a slavish manner always condemn the Soviet Union. I think the role for Canada is to take an independent course, to be slavish neither to our NATO allies, nor to be bound in some doctrinaire way to suspect or condemn always the initiatives of the Soviet Union. Our role is to stay in the game, as frustrating and as tough as it is. As angry as we may get on some days with our NATO partners, we can only have a role to play if we are in the game.

• (1640)

The New Democratic Party motion and its policy to get out of NATO and NORAD and set itself up as the high priest of honesty and integrity is the equivalent of myself, the Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe, not being satisfied that I am heard properly in this place, going to a mountain top to talk to myself and be satisfied because no one disagrees with me. The NDP would have us go to the mountain top, talk to ourselves and listen with pleasure to our own echoes because no one disagrees with us.

Ms. Mitchell: What is your position on the Cruise?

Mr. Tobin: I rise today simply to say to members of the New Democratic Party that if they are serious about this motion and making progress, they should lend support to the amendment put by my Leader which would ask us to play a mature and responsible role in the world. If the NDP were truly interested in an improved world, rather than making a flamboyant statement, it will lend support to this amendment.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I have one question for the Hon. Member. What is his position and the position of his Party on Cruise missile testing in Canada? Does he support nuclear weapons and the original agreement that was introduced by Mr. Trudeau in the last Parliament?

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, the position of this Member is that Canada is a full—

Ms. Mitchell: Do you support Cruise missile testing?

Mr. Tobin: As I said, the Member would be happiest on the mountain top where she could hear her own echo. She does not want me to give an answer. That is a common problem among members of her Party. If she will listen quietly, I will give her an answer.

Ms. Mitchell: Yes or no.

Mr. Tobin: The Member says: "Yes or no". This is not a yes or no planet. It is not black and white.

The answer is that as part of its commitment to our partners in the western alliance, particularly with our partners south of the border, Canada has engaged in a testing program of a guidance system for a Cruise missile. We signed an agreement in 1983, and as long as Canada can use that access to Canadian space as a means of exerting influence on our partner south of the border, we ought to use it.

When it becomes clear that the current initiative on Euro-missiles is not making progress or that our partner south of the border is not acting sincerely and seriously, Canada ought to exercise its option to put an end to those tests.

The member can criticize the Government on free trade, or for giving up the NEP, Investment Canada and many other things for nothing in return. If she suggests that Canada, as a member of NATO, ought to cancel the Cruise for nothing in return, then the member is hardly being consistent in the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments have terminated. Debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate, if only for one and a half minutes. Last week I received a letter from one of my constituents, Patricia E. McGuil, who protested against the Cruise missile tests and wanted her protest put on the record of the proceedings of the House of Commons. The same afternoon, Mr. Speaker, I received nine telephone calls. Not many perhaps, except that even a single protest in my riding is important and deserves consideration.

Mr. Speaker, when we talk about armament or disarmament, we are tempted to consider every possible solution under the sun, and I think everyone wants to have the widest possible range of solutions open to public scrutiny.

Personally, Mr. Speaker, I am against capital punishment, but that does not mean I want to see murderers walking down Main Street. That is why we must go beneath the surface and take a serious look at issues like Canada's participation in the NATO Alliance and the cruise missiles, especially in a country—and I think this is very important—that has no nuclear missiles on its territory.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 4.45 p.m. it is my duty to interrupt these proceedings and put every question necessary to dispose of the Business of Supply in accordance with Standing Order 82(9). The question is the following one: Ms. Jewett, seconded by Mr. Nystrom, moved:

That this House, alarmed by the role of air-launched Cruise Missile deployment in violation of SALT limits and alarmed by threats to the integrity of the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty, aware also of the possibility of a negotiated elimination of all medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe, calls for strong initiatives by the government to strengthen arms control and disarmament measures including the termination of Cruise Missile testing in Canada.

In amendment thereto Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra), seconded by Mr. Johnston, moved:

That the motion be amended by changing the period at the end of the motion to a comma and adding the following: "in a manner consistent with Canada's NATO and bilateral obligations".

The question is on the amendment. All those in favour of the amendment please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 13(5), a recorded division stands deferred until 6 p.m., Monday, March 9, 1987.

It being 4.47 p.m. this House stands adjourned until Monday next at 11 a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 3(1)

COMMONWEALTH DAY

OBSERVANCE OF ANNIVERSARY

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, today, March 9, is Commonwealth Day, which has particular significance this year for Canada.

In October, in your own City, Sir, of Vancouver, we will host the next meeting of the Commonwealth Heads of Government. In that same internationalist tradition, Canada will welcome the second Francophone Summit to Quebec City in September. These are both family meetings for Canada, taking us back to the roots and traditions which shaped our unique country, but also, as strong and vital families, helping us reach out to new influence and new opportunities in a changing world.

It was once the style to be nostalgic about the Commonwealth. Today, it is one of the most relevant and effective associations to which Canada belongs. Under its auspices we are involved in ocean development in the Caribbean and the South Pacific; in technical co-operation in Asia and in Africa; in scholarships and research on all six continents; in co-operation at Geneva on international trade; and continuing dialogue among countries whose conditions range from the poorest to the most advanced.

In Chittagong, in Bangladesh, last month, I met a Canadian who had been involved in the first Canadian project under the Colombo Plan. That was the beginning of our program of external aid and the beginning also of Canada's reputation in the developing world as a trusted, modern power.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in the past two years, Canada has used the forum provided by the Commonwealth to exercise effective pressure against the evil of apartheid in South Africa. I would like to take this opportunity, on Commonwealth Day, to report to Parliament on recent conversations the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) had in Africa, on my own meetings with some of our Commonwealth partners in Great Britain and Asia, and on consultations held by the Minister for External Relations (Mrs. Landry) and the Minister of State (Immigration) (Mr. Weiner) with representatives of several South African countries.

Canada played a very active role in launching the activities of the Eminent Persons Group and drafting the first set of Commonwealth sanctions against South Africa. We have applied every sanction and every measure approved by the Commonwealth in Nassau and London. In fact, the Prime Minister is playing a major role in this respect among Commonwealth leaders, both personally and as chairman of the Vancouver meeting.

It was in this spirit that in January at Victoria Falls, he met with the leaders of three Commonwealth countries, members of the front line States: President Kaunda of Zambia, Prime Minister Mugabe of Zimbabwe and President Masire of Botswana. He saw for himself the potential danger that the violence inherent in apartheid represents for fragile economies. From all sides, people voiced their concern that increasing violence as a result of South African intransigence and aggression would lead more and more victims of apartheid to give up all hope for a negotiated settlement.

The Prime Minister reiterated Canada's commitment, expressed in the following terms on October 23, 1985 at the United Nations, and I quote:

> Canada is prepared, if there are no fundamental changes in South Africa, to consider sweeping sanctions against that country and its repressive regime. If there is no progress in dismantling apartheid, we may have no alternative but to break off completely our relations with South Africa.

[English]

The front line states understand that Canada does not seek, through sanctions, to bring the South African Government to its knees, only to its senses. Our approach is steadily to build international pressure on South Africa as we restrict its trade. Canada will invoke further measures when we consider that they will have the most impact. We have told the front line leaders that we think that for them being on the front line itself means economic sacrifice and political risks. They should not be held to a rigid timetable on the questions of sanctions, costly as they would be to them and vulnerable as they are to South African retaliation.

In the Nassau Accord the Commonwealth has called for a suspension of violence on all sides. Our Commonwealth partners in the front line states understand Canada's position that we cannot support violence, although we can understand the feelings of those who have felt the full effect of the violence of apartheid. Indeed, part of the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) purpose in going directly to the front line states was to demonstrate again that they are not alone in this fight against apartheid, or in their work to build and to maintain their own economies.

Canada is determined to provide material as well as moral support to South Africa's neighbours. At Victoria Falls, the Prime Minister signed an agreement to build a $50 million electrical interconnecter line which will permit Botswana to tap into the electrical resources of Zimbabwe and Zambia. This is only one of many ways in which Canada is helping South Africa's neighbours to reduce their vulnerability to South African sanctions. Over the next five years, we expect to contribute approximately $30 million annually to the South Africa Development Co-ordination Conference, SADCC. That is in addition to the $400 million we will be providing in bilateral assistance to southern Africa over the same period. In New Delhi, I discussed with Prime Minister Gandhi means by which Canada might work closely with the Fund for Africa, established by the non-aligned movement, particularly in the work of ensuring secure transportation routes. The Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) was in Botswana for the most recent SADCC meeting, and discussed similar projects.

At the same time, we have been working to assist the victims of apartheid in South Africa. In the current year, $1.5 million is being disbursed for assistance to the families of political detainees, and we have mounted a $7 million education program. Nine days ago, in Montreal, Dr. Alan Boesak suggested to me other ways in which Canadian humanitarian help could be effective in South Africa.

The Prime Minister of Canada is the only leader of an Economic Summit country to have been to southern Africa since the pressure for change has built against apartheid. He has discussed the issue regularly with our Summit partners, and will put the question on the agenda of the Venice Summit.

Since the African National Congress plays such a major role now in South Africa, and will be closely involved in any resolution of that problem, the Prime Minister and I look forward to meetings with the President of the African National Congress, Oliver Tambo, in the next few months. Mr. Terence Bacon, our former High Commissioner to Zambia and Zimbabwe, has been seconded to the Commonwealth Secretary-General as special adviser on southern Africa.

As was noted last week in the Standing Committee on Human Rights of the House, by the New Democratic Party Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy), the issue of the fight against apartheid has risen above normal partisan considerations in Canada. It is a common commitment of this Parliament and country.

In a broader sense, so is our commitment to the Commonwealth. What was once a connection to our past has now also become a principal instrument of contemporary policy, and a symbol of the breadth of spirit, and the breadth of alliances, which this special country Canada will require to achieve our interests in the future.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Official Opposition, I wish to join with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) in this recognition of Commonwealth Day, and underline the importance that this day presents to Canadians because of the major responsibility and obligation that the Commonwealth increasingly has to deal with the issues of great concern to people around the world.

We are pleased with, and so register, the opportunity that Canadians will have to see the Commonwealth in action as it holds its major meeting here in October. I am sure that all parliamentarians will find the occasion of Canada hosting that very important meeting to be one that we hope will focus more clearly on Canadian positions on the South African issue. In that manner, it will become not just a matter of bi-partisan support, but a matter of clear commitment by all Canadians of the actions that must be taken.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs has stated that the Commonwealth has now been brought under the front stage of world events. I think that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is correct in saying that. The value of that organization as a way of bringing countries with a wide variety of points of view together is one that we can only see now in its clearest and most honest evaluation that such organizations are of incredible value in today's world. There are not many like them with that particular type of composition.

As we saw at the last meeting in Nassau, it provides an opportunity for initiatives to be taken. The question that must be asked is what will be the initiative that is taken at the Commonwealth meeting in Vancouver in October? Quite clearly, we are faced with the tragic failure of the Eminent Persons Group which we all regret, because we certainly supported that initiative. It is clear that the Government of South Africa had no intention of responding to that initiative, and I think that events would show that since that initiative it has undertaken even further Draconian actions, and the further detainment of people. The last figure or estimate is that close to 20,000 people, both black and white, in South Africa are under detention by that Government. The restriction of freedom of the press, perhaps one of the most fundamental freedoms, gives even further cause for anguish.

We should not underestimate the importance and the difficulty which that meeting will face. It is only six months away,and on behalf of our group I wish to urge that some careful planning and policy-making be initiated, so that the developments of the Commonwealth meeting will have the proper anticipation and development leading up to it.

We were encouraged by the meetings taken by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in his tour of southern Africa, and the efforts made to establish clear communication with the front line states, and with other African states. I believe that our leader has said that we applaud the Prime Minister for that initiative. However, what we raise as a question is the continuing ambiguity that seems to be apparent in the Government's position on the issue of sanctions itself.

During his meetings in Senegal, the Prime Minister stated, and I quote from his words, that "The Commonwealth Summit Meeting will be the determining factor in announcing a complete sanctions package". That sets a very clear timetable. However, last week when the Secretary of State for External Affairs was before the Standing Committee on Human Rights and the same question was asked, we certainly detected less of a willingness to commit to that type of statement made by the Prime Minister.

One thing that cannot be afforded in this most important of all foreign policy initiatives of the Government is any sign of ambiguity or confusion. If Canada is to take the lead in the Commonwealth, as it should, and as it has the opportunity to do, it is absolutely essential that there should be no hesitation or doubt as to where we stand, and what we will do about it.

I wish to use this occasion to urge the Secretary of State for External Affairs to take that into account, and to understand the commitment made by the Prime Minister in his statements in Senegal, and in other places in South Africa. These statements were reported in Canada with eight-inch headlines, that Canada was prepared to undertake full, total, comprehensive economic and diplomatic sanctions. If we now begin to draw away or back away from that position, it will weaken our possibility to provide the strength of purpose and direction that will be required in October.

One of the ways that the Government could clearly signal that there is no hesitation on its part is to now begin the type of discussion and development with those areas of the Canadian business community that are presently engaged in economic relations with South Africa as to what would be required for a total sanction package; how will we go about the disinvestment, how will we go about applying total sanctions? If there is to be any clear signal given, then by demonstrating that we have a blueprint, that we know how we will do it, I think we will strengthen our position, and give strong and undeniable messages to those who need to receive the messages.

I agree with what the Secretary of State for External Affairs said last week in the Human Rights Committee, that one of the primary roles for Canada to play is not only in initiating actions for our own purposes, but in trying to influence the actions of others, of the United States, certainly Great Britain, and members of the European Economic Community. By Canada initiating action now, putting in place the building blocks toward a full sanctions package, it would provide the strength of that message to these important allies and convince them to do the same. We have already had the example of the U.S. Congress substantially overriding the position of the administration in this regard. There are certainly signs that members of the EEC are now prepared to begin that kind of plan.

• (1120)

I urge the Government to provide, perhaps in honour of Commonwealth Day, the kinds of steps we can take domestically to show that we mean business when we get to the meeting in October. I want to make clear that that in no way takes away from what I accept as being the unequivocal commitment of the Government. However, I want to see that commitment followed by action. The action itself should become as important as the commitment in sending out the kinds of messages we want to send. We hope that the meeting in October will provide the platform on which a wide variety of countries can take a further step toward ending apartheid and toward presenting to the world a set of proposals on how that anguished country might move toward a democratic system. If Canada plays its proper role at the Commonwealth Summit in October, hopefully the next time we celebrate this very important day it will be in more positive terms.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I am most pleased to have been chosen by my Party to join with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) in speaking in recognition of Commonwealth Day.

The Commonwealth, to those not a part of it, must seem a curious institution. Created by conquest, it has become a model of international co-operation based upon the shared values of justice and equality among a diversity of peoples around the globe. Transcending race, transcending religion, and transcending cultures, it has taught Canadians that our own nation can develop strength and vigour through diversity.

As we have become a multicultural and multiracial nation and have demonstrated our commitment to independence, self-determination, economic development, and to the end of oppression and racism, Canada has assumed a position of leadership in this most friendly of international associations and in the world. It has been most particularly in the fight against apartheid that Canada has established a position of leadership within the Commonwealth, displacing even the mother country as its Government struggles to understand that justice is not equivocal or to be delayed.

As noted by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the people of Canada and the Parliament of Canada see the issue of apartheid as a question, not of partisanship but of justice. All of us support the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) when he said, "if there are not fundamental changes in South Africa, we are prepared to invoke total sanctions against that country and its repressive regime. If there is no progress in the dismantling of apartheid, our relations with South Africa may have to be severed absolutely".

We are concerned, however, that the promised action has been so long delayed. The South African regime has become not less oppressive but more oppressive; not more conciliatory, but more recalcitrant. Thousands have been displaced from their homes in ruthless pursuit of the still existing homelands policy. Thousands more have been jailed, tortured, and killed, including very small children, under the present state of emergency. Devious manipulation of a tortured people has turned black against black, as a curtain of darkness imposed by the evil regime keeps from the world the dark details of its evil oppression.

Even as we applaud the Government's international leadership we must mention, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs failed to do, that Canadians expect more, as was so clearly demonstrated just nine days ago in a meeting of groups opposed to apartheid in Montreal.

As stated in the reports of the Special Joint Committee on Canada's International Relations and the House Committee on Human Rights, they want full legislative, mandatory, universal, economic sanctions imposed against South Africa, and they want them now.

We share, as my colleague in the Liberal Party shares, the concept that Canada must act to demonstrate leadership and to provide a model of what others should do. It has been our consistent position that we exhibit an appropriate model when we exhibit leadership, by applying what most can be done by the country. We have hesitated too long in doing what we can do and should do. I know the Secretary of State for External Affairs has within his vest pocket permission from the Cabinet to proceed with increased sanctions. It is the position of my Party and most Canadians that he should proceed now, so that when the Commonwealth meets in Vancouver in the fall Canada can exercise its leadership, having demonstrated what should be done by others, most particularly what should be done by the mother country.

I am most pleased, as I am sure are other Members of the House, that the Government, through its Prime Minister, has made a commitment for increased aid to the front line states, for they will suffer, as he has indicated, most of all by acts of retaliation by a South African regime already engaged in actions to destabilize those nations. I hope the Secretary of State for External Affairs has expressed the full commitment of his Government when he was asked last week at the committee hearing whether the Government was prepared, in co-operation with other nations, to provide those means to the front line states by which they may protect themselves against South African aggression, those very establishments we have helped fund to enhance their transportation facilities and to allow their economic growth and development. It will do no good if we give them aid for development while we sit idly by and watch an aggressive military regime undermine our contribution.

We should not forget in that context our commitment to the freedom of Namibia. We should take conspicuous note of the inconsistency involved in our efforts in the front line states, while the United States of America provides $100 million for South Africa's allies in undermining the Angola regime and in resisting the freedom of Namibia.

We join together with all Parties in expressing our national commitment to justice, particularly justice for the South African majority population. However, along with other Canadians, we hope we will not hesitate any longer in expressing the leadership for which so many have called in leading the fight against apartheid.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

PRESENTATION OF FOURTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the fourth report of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. This report deals with the management of Indian bands and moneys.

In a 1984 decision involving the surrender of Indian bands, the Supreme Court of Canada held that the Department of Indian Affairs had a fiduciary duty to Indian people and awarded damages of $11.7 million to an Indian band. Approximately 100 other lawsuits against the Crown are pending, and 25 per cent of these claims with a dollar value represent a potential liability of $1.77 billion. The remainder have no stated dollar value.

The Standing Committee on Public Accounts believes that Indian people should receive the same standard of asset care that all Canadians would expect from a professional trustee. In addition, the Department must protect the Crown from future legal liabilities.

The committee has noted a number of areas where the Department has not met professional standards in the management of lands, estates, and moneys. The Department has indicated three types of responses to these deficiencies which will be monitored closely by the committee.

OPPOSITION TO ESTABLISHMENT OF MILITARY BASE

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I have great pleasure in presenting a petition on behalf of Canadians. The certificate of the Clerk of Petitions is attached. Your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to restrict the Department of National Defence from using, utilizing, purchasing, leasing or in anywise establishing a military base on the eastern slopes of the Rocky Mountains of Alberta, particularly the Highwood River Valley area abutting the Kananaskis Provincial Park as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I have the honour and the duty to present petitions on two matters. One is a petition signed by members of the Senior Citizens Association, Imperial, Saskatchewan in which they say that the proposed amendments to the Patent Act will unfairly hurt Canadians whose health needs require the purchasing of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis and the proposal that the federal Government will result in higher costs to provincial drug plans. Therefore, the undersigned, your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

TRANSPORTATION—ECONOMIC REGULATORY REFORM

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I have two petitions from citizens of Deer Lake, Newfoundland, Calgary, Alberta, Saskatoon, Saskatchewan and Fredericton, New Brunswick. These petitioners request Parliament, on the grounds that transportation is a natural monopoly without economic regulation, that the Government's Bill C-18 will create unnecessary chaos in transportation as well as a deterioration in the quality, type and frequency of service, to have Bill C-18 withdrawn and to reject the proposals therein.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Elliott Hardey (Kent): Madam Speaker, I have the duty and the honour to present a petition from approximately 110 constituents from the riding of Kent. This petition is certified by the Clerk of Petitions. The petitioners indicate that they wish the Government to reject proposals to change the Patent Act because they feel the amendment will raise the cost of prescription drugs.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Madam Speaker, I have a petition that has been duly certified. It documents the extent to which fishermen across Canada depend upon the Unemployment Insurance Program. It expresses their concern that this program is being taken away from them, and calls upon Parliament to ensure that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) rejects any recommendation that would deprive fishermen of their right to collect unemployment insurance. It also calls upon Parliament to ensure that the Minister enters into consultations with all representatives of fishermen in Canada in order that improvements to the program offered to fishermen are made.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present on behalf of citizens of the Prince Albert district a petition which calls on the Government and Parliament to reject proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians and thereby establish a recognized level of purchases of prescription drugs.

TERRITORIAL LANDS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Flora MacDonald (for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-43, an Act to amend the Territorial Lands Act.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be aswered today: Nos. 66 and 73.

[Text]

ACTUARIAL SURPLUS OF PSSA, CFSA AND RCMPSA

Question No. 66—Mr. Gauthier:

As of March 31, 1986, what was the actuarial surplus of the Public Service Superannuation Account (PSSA), the Canadian Forces Superannuation Account and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Account, using the assumptions contained in the most recent valuation report of these accounts that was tabled in the House of Commons but with (a) an annual inflation and salary increase scenario of 3.5 per cent and 4.5 per cent respectively; (b) an annual interest rate scenario of (i) 11.0 per cent for 1986-87, 1987-88, 1988-89 (ii) then reduced by 0.1 per cent for each of the next three years (iii) then reduced by 0.2 per cent a year until an annual rate of 7.5 per cent a year is reached, and (iv) continuing thereafter at a rate of 7.5 per cent a year; and (c) for the PSSA a current service employer rate equal to (i) 1.25 times (ii) 1.50 times, and (iii) 1.75 times the employee contribution rate?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Based on the hypothetical factors provided in the question, the calculation is estimated to be:

	($ billions)
(i) PSSA	8.1
(ii) CFSA	7.5
(iii) RCMPSA	.9

The Public Service Superannuation Account employer current service contribution rate does not affect the calculation.

TARIFF ON ENGLISH LANGUAGE BOOKS

Question No. 73—Mrs. Finestone:

1. Was a 10 per cent tariff on English language books imposed by the Government on June 6, 1986 and, if so, to date, what was the total amount collected?

2. What nations' book sales to Canada were affected and what amount of the total sum collected was attributable to each country?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue):

1. Effective June 6, 1986, the Customs Duty on Books Remission Order (1982), which allowed duty free entry of certain books, was revoked. Consequently, novels, works of fiction, some periodicals, publications to encourage enrollment in educational institutions outside of Canada and books of printed music reverted to being subject to the legislated duty at the rate of 10 per cent ad valorem under the most favoured nation tariff and the U.K. and Ireland tariff.

Other books, including text books or works of reference included in the curriculum of any university, college or school in Canada; books for bona fide libraries; books and periodicals in any other than in the English language; books which have been actually printed and manufactured more than 12 years; books for the promotion of medicine, the fine arts, law, science, technical training and the study of languages, are not affected by this change and remain duty free.

The amount of duty collected from June 6, 1986 to November 30, 1986 (date of the latest available statistics) was $11,142,000.

2. Of the $11,142,000 collected in duty on books imported under tariff items 16900-1, 17100-1, 17800-6 and 18200-2, $9,741,000 was collected on books imported from the United States; $979,000 from the United Kingdom; $109,000 from Hong Kong; $85,000 from Japan; $47,000 from Italy; $44,000 from Belgium and Luxembourg; $37,000 from Spain; $14,000 from West Germany; $14,000 from Switzerland; $2,000 from France; $1,000 from Ireland, and the remaining $69,000 from other countries.

[Translation]

Mr. Lewis: I suggest, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The questions enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I wish to inform the House that because of the Ministerial statement Government Orders will be extended by 23 minutes beginning at one o'clock p.m. today.

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1986-87 (NO. 2)

Hon. Tom Hockin (for the Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-40, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to a Legislative Committee.

He said: Madam Speaker, I rise today to seek approval of Bill C-40, an Act to provide borrowing authority. As Hon. Members are aware, the Financial Administration Act requires that statutory borrowing authority must be obtained from Parliament in order for the Government to borrow. Specifically Part IV, Section 36 of that Act requires that:

No money shall be borrowed or security issued by or on behalf of Her Majesty without the authority of Parliament.

This refers to new money only, rather than the refinancing of existing debt. Under Section 38 of the Act, there is continuing authority to borrow funds to repay maturing debt. While Section 39 provides for short-term temporary borrowing, statutory borrowing authority must be obtained from Parliament to permit the Government to implement a regular debt program to meet its financial requirements.

• (1140)

There can be no doubt that the timing of the Bill before us is appropriate. The Government is following the pattern for an improved budgetary process that was set out in a paper the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) tabled in May 1985. The same pattern was followed with the last borrowing authority Bill. One of the suggestions presented in that paper which the Government has been actively pursuing is that parliamentary approval of borrowing authority for each upcoming fiscal year should be sought at the same time as the Budget is presented. The logic behind the proposal was that the Budget presentation in February would set out the financial information for the new fiscal year for parliamentary study. This is a course of action now being taken and I would hope that debate on the Budget and the fiscal stance presented by the Government will be helpful in examining this borrowing authority Bill.

[Translation]

Allow me now to give you a few details concerning the provisions of the Bill and the reasons why this borrowing authority is being sought.

[English]

The largest amount is $24.3 billion in borrowing authority requested for the next fiscal year, 1987-88, as set out in Part II of the Bill. I will discuss that in more detail later in my remarks. First, however, I would like to deal with the circumstances underlying the request in the Bill for supplementary borrowing authority in the current fiscal year which ends March 31.

Part I, Clause 2(1), seeks supplementary borrowing authority for 1986-87 of $3.6 billion. This amount is equal to the amount of borrowing authority that has already been used to acquire U.S. dollar reserves during the period from April 1, 1986, to January 31, 1987. While the Government does have a non-lapsing reserve of $2 billion carried forward from borrowing authority legislation in 1984-85, this reserve is not sufficient.

[Translation]

The Government therefore is seeking to borrow an additional amount of $3.6 billion to replenish this $2 billion reserve and have the operating margin required to react on the exchange market when further interventions become necessary between now and the end of this fiscal year.

[English]

Clause 2(2) of the Bill provides for the cancellation on March 31, 1987, of all borrowing authority conferred by the above Section that remains unused in this fiscal year 1986-87 and to the extent that it exceeds borrowing pursuant to Section 39 of the Financial Administration Act undertaken between February 18 and April 1, 1987.

[Translation]

Hon. Members know that Section 39 empowers the Governor in Council to borrow when it appears that there will not be enough money in the Consolidated Revenue Fund to make expenditures.

[English]

This action is designed for short-term, temporary use only. The term of the borrowing may not exceed six months and each borrowing requires approval by the Governor in Council.

Financial requirements are seasonally high in the first quarter of a new fiscal year, especially in April when they typically exceed what can be financed through a feasible borrowing operation in that one-month period. Thus, fiscal 1986-87 year-end cash balances will have to be built up in order to help meet these heavy seasonal requirements and this will be done on a temporary basis through short-term borrowings pursuant to Section 39 of the Financial Administration Act.

The Minister of Finance announced on February 26 that authority under Section 39 was being used to provide for a net increase of up to $600 million in Treasury bill borrowings this week. Funds borrowed under this Section cannot be rolled over in the regular way as under Section 38 and will require new borrowing authority. Thus the Bill provides for borrowing authority to the extent it equals money borrowed under Section 39 in 1986-87 to be carried forward into 1987-88 to roll over the maturing debt issued to build up cash balances in the current fiscal year.

The primary reason for seeking supplementary borrowing authority now is the impact on the Government's borrowing operations arising from the recent volatility in the exchange markets which has been quite extreme. Our actions to maintain an orderly exchange market in this volatile environment, in the face of upward pressure on the value of the Canadian dollar during January and early February, have resulted in a very substantial increase in the Government's official reserves. Domestic borrowing was therefore increased to obtain Canadian dollars to finance this increase in reserves. There no longer remains sufficient borrowing authority to facilitate additional borrowings. As a result, the Government found it necessary to use Section 39 of the Financial Administration Act to enable it to continue its debt operations, and I should note that Section 39 was used in similar circumstances in 1983 and 1985.

It is most important that the Government be in a position to maintain an orderly, ongoing debt program so as to rebuild its cash balances. Speedy passage of this Bill will help to achieve this objective and will reduce the need for heavy reliance on short-term borrowings pursuant to Section 39 of the Financial Administration Act.

[Translation]

Now, Madam Speaker, allow me to tell you about the borrowing authority we will need for the next fiscal year. Part II of the Bill provides borrowing authority of $24.3 billion for the year 1987-88. This amount covers the $21.3 billion financial requirements set forth in the Budget plus a $3 billion non-lapsing reserve for unforeseen outlays, including a new build-up of international official reserves during the year 1987-88.

[English]

In light of recent exchange market developments, the $3 billion reserve amount being sought is appropriate. In the month of January alone, about $2.5 billion in borrowing authority was used as a result of exchange market operations. The proposed $3 billion reserve will provide the Government with the ongoing flexibility that is needed to rebuild its cash balances.

[Translation]

If I may, Madam Speaker, for your information I should like to table a document explaining the source and use of the borrowing authority for this fiscal year until February 28, 1987.

[English]

One of the fundamental principles of fiscal policy as set out by the Minister of Finance is that the Government should ensure substantial year-over-year reductions in the Government's financial requirements. This is of particular interest to the House because, over three years, the Government will have reduced financial requirements by 28.5 per cent: from $29.8 billion in the year we took office to $21.3 billion in this coming fiscal year. This steady reduction in the demands made by the Government on the nation's savings is one of the most important factors underlying our steady economic advance.

In conclusion, the borrowing authority requested by this Bill is reasonable in the circumstances. The added flexibility we are seeking allows us to cope with sudden large demands for funds and to moderate exchange market fluctuations. It is, I submit, a prudent measure in light of the potential volatility of the exchange markets. The authority we are seeking to cover next fiscal year's financial requirements reflects the Government's ongoing policy to bring about steady and substantial reductions year by year in the federal Budget deficit.

[Translation]

Ever since this Government took office, the Minister of Finance has clearly expressed our determination to stay within the bounds of financial responsibility. In the context of that policy I urge the House to pass the Bill.

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Madam Speaker, in speaking to Bill C-40, our normal reaction might be that the Budget Speech has been read, the Main Estimates have been tabled and that the debate on the Budget Speech is extensive enough to warrant keeping our comments on the borrowing authority Bill to a minimum. However, I think we would not be doing our duty as the Official Opposition if we were to give such short shrift to a Bill that will add to the national debt as much as $30 billion, if we consider the borrowing authority being sought by the Minister in clause (2), that is, $3.6 billion between now and March 31, 1987, the $24.3 billion for current expenditures and a contingency fund of $3 billion, something for a rainy day, but $3 billion just the same. This Bill seeks borrowing authority for all these amounts.

As I said before, we could go back to what we said in our speech in response to the Budget Speech made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), but I think we should dig a little deeper and put this borrowing program into perspective, in the light of the commitments made by this Government during the 1984 election campaign and also in the light of what was said by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance during the weeks and months following the 1984 election, statements that have been repeated many times both in and outside the House.

Madam Speaker, the group of which I am a member believes it is essential that public administrators act prudently when administering the affairs of this country. We believe in fiscal responsibility, and I may remind the House of what was said by the Leader of my Party, now the Leader of the Official Opposition, in the weeks preceding the election campaign, and of my own comments on financial matters. We have explained many times why, during the 1984 election campaign, the Liberal Party of Canada limited the number of promises and the commitments it made. It was because of a financial situation that was largely the result of an economic recession that had affected not only Canada but the entire western world. The impact of this economic recession has been compared with that of the Depression in the thirties, and if its impact was not as dramatic, this was undoubtedly because of our social programs that helped maintain the purchasing power of Canadians and ward off disaster from many Canadian families.

In other words, throughout the 1984 election campaign we took a position favouring fiscal responsibility not only in words but in actions as well, and I am referring to the kind of limited election program we were advocating. We on this side of the House and the Leader of the Liberal Party who was then Prime Minister, myself and many of my colleagues reminded Canadians of this harsh reality. During that time the Conservatives travelled throughout the country making promises. We counted roughly 330 of them, all rather an expensive drain on the public treasury. Yet at the same time as they were making election promises right and left they also told Canadian consumers they would get new funds through various programs or projects, they were told the deficit would be reduced because it had become imperative to gain control over the public debt. A very conservative approach, quite contradictory of course! One day they were making promises, the day after they were saying they would do this and that. I have had opportunities to debate this issue with many people as it often happens during election campaign, open debates before student groups and various associations, and my experience has always been the same. In the same breath the Conservatives were saying: We will give more and spend less. Altogether contradictory.

As I have done in earlier debates, Madam Speaker, we might recall the statements made by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance concerning the solemn commitment that a Conservative Government would not raise taxes. It was imperative not to raise taxes. We were even told that it would be against the economic well-being of all Canadians. So what have we seen since their Party took over? Taxes have gone up dramatically. If we look at tax increases for the years 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87, we find that personal income tax will have increased by 53 percent during that period because of the combined effects of income tax increases brought about by deindexation of tax tables, rate increases, withdrawal of benefits, and so on. Individual taxes, that is personal income tax and taxes on consumer products, will have increased by 53 percent while corporate taxes, including income tax and taxes paid by oil companies, will have decreased by 18 percent. Individuals will pay 53 percent more and corporations 18 percent less.

Madam Speaker, there are two possibilities. Either the Conservatives made promises that they knew they could not keep, which would have been a very petty political game, or else they did not know what it meant to govern the country. I still do not know which is true, but one thing is certain, and that is that this Government has not only neglected to keep its electoral promises, but has also done the opposite of what it had said it would do. It is one thing to promise a bridge and quite another to destroy a bridge. In this case, not only has the Government not kept its promises, but it has done exactly the opposite of what it said, namely brought about a very large tax increase.

Madam Speaker, does this increase, especially in individual income tax and consumer taxes, do these increases of billions of dollars . . . The 53 percent tax increase within a three-year period which I mentioned earlier means an increase of $22 billion, or nearly $1,000 for each man, woman, child and senior citizen in Canada. There are new taxes. If we consider the fact that a very large number of people, such as children, pay no taxes, it means that the Mulroney-Wilson Budgets of the Conservative Government will put an additional burden of nearly $2,000 on each Canadian family even though we had been promised lower taxes.

Madam Speaker, it is not surprising that the popularity of a Government which fails so flagrantly to keep its electoral commitments would fall to 22 percent in Canada as a whole. Only 22 percent of Canadians still have confidence in this Government, and the figure is as low as 18 percent in Quebec. This is not surprising since the Government has failed to keep all its commitments.

I said earlier that taxes had been increased even though the Government had said that this would not occur. What effect has this had on the budgetary deficit after three years of a Conservative Government since, according to the Conservatives, the deficit was to be their main priority after the elections? The 1986-1987 deficit keeps to practically the same level as in 1983-1984 when this Government came to power, that is for the last full year of the previous administration. After increasing taxes by $22 billion, they now come up with more or less the same level of deficit.

And looking now at the impact on the national debt, Madam Speaker, the debt increased to a level where at the end of the fiscal year under review in the estimates and the Budget Speech, this Tory Government will have added $10,000 to the debt burden of each Canadian man and woman, an absolute record for any Government over such a short period of time! In brief, not only did they not honour their commitments with regard to income tax, not only did they just about fail to alter the deficit to any extent, Madam Speaker, we are now coming to a situation where the national debt has increased from $16,000 to $26,000 because of this Tory Government's management.

Madam Speaker, with this legislation we are to all intents and purposes requested to approve a possible $30.9 billion in total borrowings. But, essentially, this Tory Government has succeeded in concealing part of its deficit. This they did in a tricky way in their dealings with businesses. You know how things go—businesses pay out wages and salaries, part of which they withhold for income tax purposes and hand over once a month to provincial and federal Governments. This Tory Government has now decided to go and get that money twice a month. And during the initial phasing-in period—the result will be the same—because once the system is onstream during the initial implementation year, 1987-1988, they will be getting $1.2 billion more over the fiscal year.

Of course, those $1.2 billion will add up to this Tory administration's actual deficit, which will then go up from $29.3 billion to $30.5 billion. Those are the facts. After three years of Tory administration, after an economic recovery that has been going on since 1983, after increasing taxes by $22 billion on the backs of Canadian taxpayers, they now have come up with a $30.5 billion deficit. And is that the last trick used to arrive at that deficit figure? No, there is yet another one. There is the $1.2 billion windfall. There is the deferral of a $200 million expenditure with regard to the Department of National Defence. Another tricky way of saying: We will spend those dollars but we will not pay them out—we will wait until next year. And this means they are adding to the deficit. This is another $200 million to be added to the deficit figure. And, finally, in the envelope—since they changed cash management methods with respect to the envelope for public assistance to development, they succeeded again in coming up with an artificial saving of $150 million for this year only. All this means, Madam Speaker, that without handling anything, simply by presenting figures on the same basis as in previous years—because clearly, changing the accounting basis alters the basis for comparison—the actual deficit for fiscal year 1987-88 amounts to $30.8 billion, even before making provision as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has himself stated for the ice-breaker that was announced with great fanfare by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) last week.

There is no provision nor estimates either for implementing the Prime Minister's commitment with respect to child care programs. There is no money either provided for the anti-drug action referred to by the Prime Minister and the Minister for social affairs in their speeches. There is no provision for that.

We have no reservation either against granting assistance to western farmers who in 1988 will probably face the same conditions as in 1987 with respect to wheat price and the Government had earmarked therefor $1 billion which means, Madam Speaker, that the Minister of Finance and the Government are trying to tinker with the books. Actually, the 1987-88 deficit will exceed $29.3 billion and it already does as a result of tricks used by the Minister, but if we take into consideration all those commitments made since the Budget Speech for which no estimate has been provided, the deficit will be considerably higher. This is the reason why the Government was wise enough to cover up because when a Bill is introduced asking the House the authority to borrow, since the money can be used for almost any purpose and allotted to any department, the debate deals almost entirely with public administration. In order to avoid that, the Minister have resorted to a double dodge. He said: Since we are in March, today being March 9, we will earmark $3 billion for the period ending March 31, 1987, and another $3 billion as a reserve for up to the end of 1988. This means that the Minister of Finance has arranged for some room to manoeuvre ranging between $3 and $5 billion so that he would be in a position to borrow further amounts without having to come back to the House and face another public debate and relevant questions. We have before us the first instalment, the first $3.6 billion which will be used to repay the loans made by the Minister of Finance to protect the Canadian dollar on the exchange market.

Madam Speaker, I wonder why a Government which would like to see the interest rates decrease—this is at least what the Minister has said, although he has maintained that there is no magic formula . . . Last year when the dollar was dropping I asked the Minister what he intented to do. He told us that he had no control over interest rates and the dollar value. In his Budget, he congratulated his Government for having succeeded in reducing interest rates. He cannot of course have his cake and it eat too and cannot say when conditions are bad that interest rates are controlled by the United States and that the markets are controlling the value of the Canadian dollar, and take credit when conditions are better. I think that the Minister would do well to correct his statements and remain consistent in his comments .

However, more recently it has been suggested that up to $3.6 billion should be borrowed to avoid an overvaluation of the Canadian dollar. Madam Speaker, there is now a gap in interest rates between Canada and the United States on 90-day Treasury Bills—or at least there was up to last week-end—of between 130 and 140 percentage points, that is to say, between 1.3 per cent and 1.4 per cent. I wonder if, instead of overcharging the loans, the policy of the Department of Finance should not be rather directed toward lowering interest rates, in view of the fact that the Canadian dollar, under pressure from the market, is somewhat stronger. I wonder why the Government is artificially maintaining interest rates at that level, when it could easily reduce the gap by, say, as much as 50 percentage points, thereby making it possible for Canadian men and women to benefit from this situation, instead of fighting against foreign speculators who, under pressure from the United States for a devaluation of the American dollar, are taking refuge in Canada and buying Treasury bills and other Canadian securities because the funds available to them must be invested somewhere and I do not see why the Minister of Finance is so anxious to take these so-called speculators, to tax instead of allowing interest rates to go down a little as a result of the current gap. I imagine $3.6 billion amount being sought could have been lower. I have already mentioned of course with regard to the forecast deficit, the $3 billion reserve.

As I stated a while ago, Madam Speaker to reflect facts without decieving Canadian men and women the real deficit for fiscal year 1987-88, should have been estimated at $30.850 billion. But when we consider the other moves made by this Government, we realize that part of its deficit has been transferred to the provinces and municipalities in the following ways:

Let us begin with municipalities. Municipalities table their budget once a year, as we all know, and their budget must balance. By changing sales taxes, by widening the sales tax base to include components of asphalt and prestressed materials, concrete, etc., we have transferred to municipalities an additional charge which forces them to either curtail their services or raise their taxes. We have in fact transferred part of the deficit to municipalities by forcing them to pay to the Federal Government taxes which they did not pay before. Secondly, by also raising the tax on gasoline—an input which is of course used by public utilities, transport commissions, etc., bus and subway services—we have added to the financial burden of municipalities. The deficit has been shifted in part from the federal Government to the municipalities.

This is even truer and more striking in the case of provincial Governments. I have mentioned this before in the House, but I would simply like to recall the impact of the federal Government's decision to curtail transfer payments to finance health programs such as hospital insurance and medicare, as well as post-secondary education, a program so essential that it bears repeating and one which cannot be turned on and off like water from a tap. No act or ministerial decision can regulate the number of people who are ill or will suffer health problems in a province, whether in Quebec, Ontario, New Brunswick or British Columbia. Provincial autorities who are responsible for the administration of hospitals, health care and post-secondary education are faced with the urgent needs of users. At a time when provinces were making considerable efforts to control their expenditures, the federal Government decided proprio motu after offhandedly notifying the provinces of its decision, to reduce by 2 per cent the growth rate of federal transfers for the funding of those programs. What it means is that, instead of sharing in the evolving growth of collective wealth, the Gross National Product, it was decided transfer payments would be geared to the Gross National Product less 2 per cent.

Madam Speaker, according to figures that are quite precise even though they are preliminary, that represents a deficit transfer from the federal to the provincial Governments of about $8 billion, give or take a few billions, in the next five years.

That amounts to $2 billion for the Province of Quebec and about the same for the Province of Ontario. The federal deficit has simply been shifted to the deficit of the provinces. Then they boast that financial positions have been substantially improved. Madam Speaker, if the financial statements of Canada were presented on a comparative and real basis, we would realize that after three or four years of economic recovery, after tax increases of billions of dollars, the deficit the federal Government made one of its top priorities after the election is at the same level if not higher than in the last full year of the Liberal administration.

Madam Speaker, this Government has transferred part of its deficit onto the provinces and their taxpayers, from British Columbia to Newfoundland. There is no exception, all Canadians provinces will have to share this loss of $8 billion. Maybe the Hon. Member disagrees with the decision made by his Government. He should say so. The figures agreed upon during the federal-provincial conferences on the subject show that between 1987 and 1991, that is the next five years, there will be a transfer of $8 billion. In other words, the federal Government will contribute $8 billion less to Medicare, hopital insurance and post-secondary education.

Who is going to pay? Are we going to forbid people from being sick? Are we going to deny a college or university education to our young people? Is that what we are going to do? Are we going to ask families to contribute more substantially to the cost of education in CEGEPs in Quebec, colleges in other provinces and universities? Unless the Government asks or forces the provinces to eliminate some services? That is—during the weekend, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Vincent) was on a radio program, and I heard him say that he had no reason to believe that provinces should spend that much money. I hope he is the only one in his group to think that way and that Hon. Members from all provinces are aware of the importance of post-secondary education, aware of the importance of Hospital Insurance and Medicare, especially for an aging population, and will not echo this rubbish from the Parliamentary Secretary who says that Quebec, Ontario and the other provinces can merrily cut into the financing of their hospital insurance, Medicare and especially post-secondary education programs.

This Conservative Government has transferred part of the deficit to the provinces in order to reduce somewhat the debt and the borrowing it will have to do—without that the amount in Bill C-40 would be higher—and, now, the Ministers of Finance in Ontario, Quebec and the other provinces will have to go and borrow on the financial markets instead of this Minister.

But also there were drastic changes made in equalization payments. Madam Speaker, the equalization formula was changed in 1982. It is true. The purpose was to extend the base for arriving at the average for comparison purposes. And since in that equalization formula, agreed upon in 1982 by all provinces and the Government of Canada, there was a danger that the new formula would not bring about the same results as the former formula, the then Canadian Government had guaranteed that the payments made under the new formula would not be lower than those granted under the previous one. And as evidence of its good faith, the federal Government said: We will guarantee that for three years. Because it was felt at that time by everyone, the technicians included, and it was actually believed that that was going to happen. Unfortunately, the projections proved to be worse than had been foreseen, and after three years, a correction had to be made, because the guaranteeing formula had operated for three years and as it was coming to an end, a correction had to be made.

Madam Speaker, that correction was made. That is true. Except that, in usual Tory fashion, an injustice was produced that I have been denouncing in this House since the impact is known. The then Minister of State (Finance) had stated from her seat, speaking on behalf of the Government, that each province would receive in equalization payments at least 95 per cent of the money it had received the previous year. The additional money that were voted by this House ensured that all provinces got at least 95 per cent with one exception, Quebec. Why those double standards? Why did the Government refuse and still refuses to honour its promise and the commitment made in this House by the Minister of State (Finance)? Why impose on Quebec taxpayers alone the burden of levying or paying those $66 million that have increased to nearly $90 million?

Why that discrimination against one single province? Madam Speaker, if such commitment had been made by the Parliamentary Secretary or by a back-bencher it would be understandable, but it was actually made in this House by someone in the Government. We thus see that this Government not only reneges on its election commitments but then it does not even honour the commitments made in this House by a Minister answering from his seat on its behalf to a question put by the Opposition. If those commitments had been honoured and part of the deficit had not been transferred to the provincial Governments through the financing of established programs, if such firm commitments made to the provinces had been kept, we would see that the management of the public debt and the deficit by the Conservative Government is far less wonderful than what the Minister of Finance and other Government Members would like to have us believe in their comments inside and outside this House.

[English]

Bill C-40 is an example of how the Government mismanages public funds. The Minister of Finance has used a number of tricks to camouflage part of his borrowing. He asks to borrow $3.6 billion for his operations in order to maintain the value of the Canadian dollar. He asks for another $24.3 billion for regular government operations. He asks for an additional $3 billion just in case.

I suppose the additional $3 billion for the end of the year could not cover the commitments made by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) with respect to building an ice-breaker, since there is nothing in the Estimates to finance even part of it. Will this additional $3 billion be used to finance the day care system announced by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) last Monday? Or will it be used to cover the expenses of other programs which have been announced by different Ministers and for which there are no figures provided in the Estimates? If this is so, then the deficit for fiscal year 1987-88 will not be $29 billion but something closer to $34 billion. We know that the real deficit is higher than the one contained in the Budget Speech.

The Minister has used a number of tricks to hide certain expenses. We know that he transferred a part of the deficit to the provinces as a result of changes in the way the Established Program Financing arrangements are financed and also as a result of changes that have been made to the equalization formula by the Government.

We realize that the Government has not lived up to its promises. We heard members of the Government make a number of promises during the election campaign. In the House and outside the House we have heard the Minister of Finance say that he will never increase taxes. Yet we know that he has increased taxes by billions and billions of dollars. It is unbelievable that a Government can so openly deny all its commitments and then bring down a Bill such as this, which is similar to the one passed in 1985-86 and which will add thousands of dollars on to the shoulders of Canadians. That is the increase per worker in the national debt under the Tory Government.

These are good reasons for the Official Opposition to say that we intend to vote against the Bill. In doing so we will ask the Government to live up to its promises. The Government promised a certain number of things to Canadian taxpayers. We realize day after day that the promises are broken day after day. In voting against Bill C-40 we send an additional message to the Government to be responsible and to live up to its promises.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Madam Speaker, I wish to participate in this debate on Bill C-40 more out of a sense of sorrow than out of a sense of anger, since it effectively continues some of the concerns which my Party has raised in the course of the debate on the Budget. I appreciate the courtesy of the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) in giving us some insight before the Bill was brought forward. We have had some discussions with him about the purposes of the Bill that was brought forward in terms of borrowing for the exchange fund and in meeting the Government's budget borrowing requirements as a consequence of the deficit forecast and the cash requirements of the 1987 Budget. I also appreciate that some self-interest was involved on the part of the Government because there is a deadline with respect to this Bill. Its passage is required by the end of the month, and the Minister was seeking to have some co-operation from opposition critics.

Co-operation does not necessarily mean support. We in the New Democratic Party remain concerned about the failure of the Government to take any meaningful action with respect to regional disparities in Canada in the course of the Budget. Of course, this borrowing Bill does not hit at that directly but it certainly hits at it indirectly. It speaks to a recipe for deficit reduction which people in my Party find uncomfortable and unacceptable to live with.

In terms of deficit reduction the Government's view seems to be that deficits can be reduced in two ways. Taxes can be increased, particularly those on individuals, and that has been done with a vengeance. Since the Government came to power revenues from personal and sales taxes have increased by more than 50 per cent at the same time that revenues from the corporate sector, in terms of taxation, have actually gone down. Taxes on individuals can be increased in order to combat the deficit, or programs can be cut back. The Government can cut back on its Canadian Jobs Strategy, for example, something which directly affects disadvantaged Canadians. These are people who are out of a job and who need assistance in getting back into the labour force or who need assistance in terms of obtaining training for the new skills that are required in the 1980s and the 1990s. The Government can cut back on spending in economic and regional development, as it has done with a vengeance since taking power. Or it can cut back on the programs of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, as it has also done since taking power.

In other words—

[Translation]

—the Government's economic policy for getting rid of the deficit is either to increase taxes that affect us personally, such as sales tax, or cutting Government spending, and especially spending that affects individuals such as job creation, the Department of Employment and Immigration's job strategy and the regional industrial expansion programs in the Government's Budget.

That is their policy. However, Madam Speaker, there is no concern about the need for a full employment policy, the need for getting rid of the unemployment that unfortunately still exists in our country. The Budget offers nothing in this respect, and in fact, Bill C-40 merely reflects the Budget as far as unemployment is concerned in this country. In fact, the Government is saying we will have to accept the employment situation, instead of setting goals for reducing unemployment, just as the Government sets goals every year to reduce the deficit.

Madam Speaker, I would like to quote from a speech given last Friday by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) at the Macdonald-Cartier Club in Calgary, which was about the Government's policy, not just how it affects the West, but the Government's policy in general.

• (1230)

[English]

We know to what extent the vacuum in terms of leadership in the Government has allowed power to drift back into the Department of Finance. We also know what happened when the present Minister took over the Department of Finance two and a half years ago. He was one of the few Ministers to still be in the same position two and a half years after the Government came to power. He found a group of advisers who were, relatively speaking, of like mind with the Hon. Minister. They are increasingly taking charge of the Government.

You may recall, Madam Speaker, because you were a candidate in that election, how the Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised that there would be jobs, jobs, jobs immediately the Conservative Government came to power. For example, in the Province of Quebec there is still an unemployment rate of over 11 per cent in the city and region of Montreal, one of the two metropolises of our country.

After two and half years, that is not good enough, but that is the result that we have had from the Government, and from the policies put forward by the Minister of Finance. These policies reflect a wing of policy of his Party. I also believe that they reflect the views of the business community in Canada, and the traditional views which have been put forward by the Department of Finance for many years. At times they win, at times they lose. Now they are on a roll because of the disbandment by a Leader of the Opposition, when he was Prime Minister, of the ministry responsible for economic development, because of disbanding and other efforts to balance the control and direction of economic policies within the Government, and because of the fact that the Department of Finance has therefore become much more powerful than it was two or three years ago.

In Calgary on Friday, in the conclusion to his speech to the Macdonald-Cartier Club, the Minister of Finance said this, "In my remarks today, I have stressed the fact that the government you elected," and "you" is underlined, "in September, 1984, has carried out your program," "your" is underlined, "your desires for fiscal rejuvenation", "your" is underlined, "your principles of a market-driven economy," "your" is underlined, "and your commitment to stimulating the private sector." "Your" is also underlined. I would challenge any Conservative, including Conservatives from Calgary, to tell me that there was a large group of unemployed Calgarians or Albertans who were in the hall of the Macdonald-Cartier Club when that meeting was held on Friday; that there were a great many single mothers who are on welfare; a large number of native people; a large number of handicapped people; a large number of poor people. Were they in that hall? No, they were not. The people who were in that hall were representatives of the business community in Alberta who came together to hear the Minister of Finance.

I recognize that a serious downturn has occurred in the Alberta economy because of changes in the energy sector. This has affected the business community, as well as other people in the population of the Province of Alberta. My Party has also recognized that in calling for specific action. My Leader has been calling for specific action to take the revenue from the increase in taxation on gasoline and use it for the small producers of oil and gas who have been shut out by the Government's policies of catering to the large producers and the multinationals, and not to the small producers.

What is interesting is the blatant, unabashed, and unashamed manner in which the Minister of Finance said to the representatives of the business community that we are following "your program, your desires for fiscal rejuvenation"—that means cut the deficit before other priorities—"your principles of a market-driven economy, and your commitment to stimulating the private sector".

Over the weekend I refreshed my memory of what has been occurring in politics over the last decade or so in terms of the dying years of the Trudeau Government in its first and second manifestations, the brief blip when the Conservatives were in power under the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), and now under the Government of the present Prime Minister. The point that was made in an excellent book which I recommend to all Members of Parliament, Ron Graham's book, One-Eyed Kings, is that there has been in the past something of an accommodation in terms of Government policy between accommodating the interests of the business elite in the country on the one hand, and also ensuring an adequate policy in terms of job creation, and in terms of a net of welfare services for average Canadians. That was followed under previous governments, often because of the efforts and pressures of the New Democratic Party.

A Government to stay in power, if it is one of the two old Parties, has probably no choice but to try to balance the needs of ordinary Canadians, and accommodate its friends in the business elite. I say quite bluntly that what has happened is that the policies that are reflected in Bill C-40, and are reflected in the Budget, are policies which are designed to accommodate the business elite and ignore the needs of ordinary Canadians. That is one of the reasons the Conservatives have fallen to the abysmal levels in terms of public esteem. It is not only that they violated public trust, although that is an extremely important factor, it is that they have violated the trust ofthe people in expecting the next Government of Canada to be implementing its promises of jobs, jobs, jobs in every region of Canada, and to be demonstrating fairness to every Canadian in terms of job creation and in terms of the tax system. These are things which the Government has failed to do.

I wish to cite a few points made by the Minister of Finance in his speech, and then comment on them. In his speech to the business elite in Calgary, he said that he believed "we"—whoever that is—"share a common purpose—that is to restore the economic health throughout this country". Every Party talks about restoring economic health throughout this country. We, as a Party, believe that this is not a matter for rhetoric, it is a matter for action.

When you look at the fact that between January, 1986, and January, 1987, of the net creation of 137,000 jobs across Canada, all but 5,000 of those new jobs were in the Province of Ontario, mostly in southern Ontario, and there were only 5,000 new jobs created in net terms between Newfoundland on the East Coast and British Columbia on the West Coast, I ask what type of restoration of economic health does that amount to? The answer is damn little.

The Minister of Finance stated, and I quote:

> I recognize that some regions in this country have not participated fully in the economic recovery, and that a good deal of the growth has been concentrated in other parts of Canada, besides Alberta.

The Minister of Finance euphemistically ignored the fact that today the unemployment rate in seven provinces in Canada is higher than it was at the height of the 1981-82 depression. It is higher in two provinces than it was in September of 1984 when the Conservatives came to power. There has been a certain amount of progress in most provinces since 1984. There has been some reduction in unemployment. But one has to ask if that reduction has been enough. I would certainly answer, as I think most Canadians would answer that it has definitely not been enough.

I wish to cite some figures, and I do not wish to repeat my comments in the Budget debate, but in January of this year unemployment, on a seasonally-adjusted basis, rose again to 9.7 per cent from 9.4 per cent.

As we pointed out—

[Translation]

—in seven provinces, the unemployment rate today is higher than it was during the 1981-82 recession. If we consider two of our provinces, Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia, the unemployment rate is higher today than it was in September 1984. Madam Speaker, if we look at the situation in our major cities, we find the following: According to Statistics Canada, in January the unemployment rate was 15 per cent in Vancouver, the Expo '86 city; in Victoria, the capital of British Columbia, it was 14.6 per cent; in Edmonton, 12.5 per cent; in Saskatoon, 11.4 per cent; in Montreal, the metropolis of the Province of Quebec, the unemployment rate, according to the Parliamentary Secretary, was 11.4 per cent, while it was 10.3 per cent in Quebec City. In St. John's, Halifax and Saint John, unemployment was 10.8, 10.4 and 12.1 per cent respectively.

Such is the difficult situation in our major cities, and you know quite well, Madam Speaker, that unemployment is often much higher in rural areas than in major cities.

If we compare this with the situation in Toronto, where the constituency of the Minister of Finance, Etobicoke, is located, we find an unemployment rate of 4.8 percent. I am well aware that there are unemployed workers in the Maritimes who spend two or three months working for the building industry in Toronto and that it is difficult to find workers in that city, where the situation approaches what could be called full employment. My son, who is 20 or 21 years old, now works in Toronto, where he has just found a job. It is not a very big job, but there are still jobs in the Toronto area.

However, saving Toronto and the economy of southern Ontario is not the same as saving the economy of the whole country. The Minister of Finance has said that the regions of this country have not participated fully in economic recovery and that much of the growth which has been concentrated in other regions of Canada has failed to occur in Alberta. He is speaking the truth since the major part of this growth has occurred in Ontario.

Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance has said in his Calgary speech: "We, as national Government, must look at the problems in each region. And I can assure you that we are working and will continue to work night and day to guarantee that all Canadian men and women benefit from the economic resurgence in our country."

Madam Speaker, I have to ask: Where is the economic resurgence in Newfoundland? Where is the economic resurgence in Alberta? In British Columbia? It is not there.

Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance has also assured us that tax reform is on the fast track. This means that it is being prepared quickly, Madam Speaker. According to the Minister, his proposals will be published in the spring. He says that the Government wants to lower rates and to enlarge the tax base for personal and sales taxes and to reduce the number of tax categories.

However, Madam Speaker, the tone of the speech made by the Minister of Finance suggests that he now expects to achieve neutrality in terms of income, but only for personal and sales taxes. This means that there will be no transfer of the tax burden from individuals to corporations.

If we look at the situation in the United States, Madam Speaker, we find that Congress has just passed a tax reform project to transfer about $132 billion in taxes from individuals to corporations. What is the Minister of Finance saying? He says: "We know that unfair distortions remain in the corporate taxation system. We want to correct promptly—" Madam Speaker, the Government has been in power for two and a half years and it now promises changes and tax reforms although corporate taxes decreased since 1984. But I say that we want to correct promptly those distortions.

"Corporate tax rates", he says, "must be lowered to remain competitive in view of tax reforms taking place in the United States."

Madam Speaker, in the United States, taxes paid by corporations have increased by $132 billion and here is our Minister of Finance saying that in spite of all the tax breaks given to corporations, their tax burden should not be increased at all and that corporate taxes will be lowered.

The Minister says that we will in effect eliminate some loopholes. That is a good thing. But we must also take into account the fact that corporate income tax has not increased at all, while personal income tax have gone up by 50 per cent.

Finally, Madam Speaker, the Minister said to journalists, before the Macdonald-Cartier Club in Calgary, probably answering a question about Petro-Canada: "We believe", he said, "that Petro-Canada has outlived its public policy purpose. Therefore the Government can now proceed to the sale of Petro-Canada."

Madam Speaker, a few Conservative Members agree to the privatization of Petro-Canada. As a New Democrat Member, I can say that the reasons for the purchase of Petro-Canada are still valid, that the Canadian people supported it when it was recommended—on whose suggestion? By a New Democrat under the minority Government of 1972-74. One of the reasons why New Democrats are now on an equal footing with Liberals in the Province of Quebec is because we, the NDP, recognize why Canadians wish to maintain Petro-Canada as a Crown corporation.

• (1240)

[English]

I am very concerned to hear Conservatives in the House supporting the perhaps offhand comments made by the Minister of Finance in Calgary, suggesting that Petro-Canada no longer fulfilled any public policy role and therefore we could move ahead in order to sell it off. We think there is a public role. We think the Government should have directed Petro-Canada in the last two weeks not to go along with the increase in gasoline prices which was put into place by one of the multinational oil companies. We think—and Canadians think it as well—that one of the reasons for Petro-Canada is to have a window on the industry and to have a means by which to protect Canadians from being gouged at the petrol pumps by private multinational corporations. That was the situation which prevailed back in the 1970s. We feel—I think most Canadians feel it—we do not want to see a situation where we are once again held to ransom by privately owned oil companies if energy prices start to climb in a dizzying spiral, as they did at that time.

The Minister of Finance also talked about how he viewed the world. In speaking to a business audience—and there were certainly no poor people there—he said that the deregulation of industry in an approved climate to foster entrepreneurship and attract foreign investment and freer trade was part of the fundamental belief that the best economic decisions are those which are made in the market-place.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cassidy: Again Conservative Members are saying: "Hear, hear", as they listen to me quoting certain comments of the Minister of Finance.

The other day I rose in the House to ask the Minister of Finance why it was the Government, which has fallen over itself in order to try to attract foreign investment and show that Canada is "open for business again", in their words, had in fact done so badly. In 1985 and 1986 combined we had a net outflow of some $10 billion on job creating—the long term direct investment account. Direct investment by Canadians, Madam Speaker, accounted for a $10 billion outflow over those two years, $5.1 billion in 1985 and $4.8 billion in 1986.

What happened in terms of direct investment from foreigners? Direct investment by foreigners was up by $1.5 billion in 1986 but it had fallen by $2.5 billion the previous year. So over those two years Canada had a direct investment outflow, a disinvestment by foreigners of more than $1 billion. Yet the Finance Minister goes to Calgary and says "Look what a great job we are doing in attracting direct investment from foreigners". But he and the Government are doing a lousy job.

One of the miracles that was going to happen for the economy was that money would come flowing in in direct investment to help create jobs, particularly in the depressed regions of Canada, but that did not occur at all. In fact, the direct opposite occurred. American multinational corporations have been pulling investment out of Canada. We are seeing this even in the industrial heartland of Ontario. In the riding of my leader, Oshawa, in the chocolate factory, which has employed 400 people, a rationalization is taking place. Is it the Roundtree plant that is closing, it has been taken over by Cadbury's—perhaps it is the other way around—

Mr. Stewart: Try Nielsens.

Mr. Cassidy: —but 400 jobs will be discontinued.

In the riding of Lakeshore represented by an able Conservative Member more than 1,000 jobs at the Good Year Tire plant are disappearing. Why? Not because the plant is not profitable but because the company is pulling manufacturing out of Canada for a year or two. The company wants to break the union despite the co-operation the union has given to make the plant more profitable. I have been there and those jobs are being sacrificed on what used to be called a kind of cross of gold. Now it is a cross of paper entrepreneurship. The U.S. parent company in an effort to fend off a buy-out by a British corporate raider borrowed very heavily to prevent the company from being taken over so as to protect management's prerogatives. As soon as that had been done, what happened? The U.S. parent company embarked on a cost-cutting exercise which is leading to 1,000 or more jobs being cut. Those jobs in the industrial heartland are continuing to disappear, even in areas with relatively high employment. In other words, disinvestment rather than investment is taking place. We were promised the opposite.

What about the Canadian corporate sector? Our fundamental belief is that the best economic decisions are those made in the market-place. That is what the Minister of Finance says. What forecast is he making about the economic decisions that will be made in the market-place by Canadian business in 1987? He says there will be a real increase of only 1.5 per cent in business investment over the course of this next year. That is simply not enough in order to provide the job creation we need, the creation of jobs in the small business as well as the big business sector. We need the ability to remain competitive.

As well, one assumes there will be a continuation of Canadian direct investment in large sums into the United States and abroad. Instead of investing in Canada, which could be taking the jobless rate down and creating employment, Canadian business does not have the confidence of the Finance Minister's convictions to the point that it is prepared to invest here. The consequence, of course, is a situation of continued economic recession in most regions of Canada. But do we deserve it? If you look at the favourable treatment given to big business, the answer is no. We have given enormous concessions to big business over the course of that period of time. We have given tax concessions and tax cuts.

When talking about the deficit there continues to be an enormous overhang of tax losses and other deductions of which business has not yet even taken advantage, commenced under the Liberals in 1983. They passed rules which allow for an extension to seven years of tax loss carry-forwards and of investment credit tax carry-forwards. This Government inherited a situation where those carry-forwards were worth about $13 billion or $14 billion. Now they are worth double that. If the Government intended and wished genuinely to bring the deficit down, it could and should be acting in order to eliminate some of those carry-forwards to ensure that business pays a fair share. The Government would not have opened up new loopholes, such as the $500,000 tax concession to people on high incomes.

I asked the Minister of Finance about the situation and whether or not he was happy with the high unemployment rate. He shed crocodile tears in the Committee on Finance last week. He said, "Look, I am not happy with the 9.7 per cent unemployment rate, but it is better than 11.7 per cent. Aren't we doing wonderfully because Canada's growth rate has been higher than the other OECD countries". It is good that our growth rate has been higher because we have to run very fast just to stand still in Canada. When we still have 1.25 million Canadians who are out of work, we are doing not much more than standing still. The forecasts that come from the OECD, from the private sector forecasting groups and from our own economic council which indicate that we will have unemployment of more than 9 per cent into the 1990s and that we will continue to have 1.25 million Canadians unemployed in perpetuity, make me unhappy as well. I would be more than unhappy than the Minister of Finance.

Canada needs a policy of full employment in which we make a commitment to bring down unemployment year by year to a level which is tolerable and sustainable. What is that level? It used to be 3 per cent, Madam Speaker. I note that in Japan the unemployment rate has risen above 3 per cent for the first time in 20 years. Perhaps we cannot do as well as the Japanese have been able to do but, nonetheless, if you look at the country and the hidden rates of unemployment they are a lot worse. If the participation rate of workers in Newfoundland was as high as it is in Ontario and if there were only the number of jobs that there are there today, we would have an unemployment rate in Newfoundland not of 18 per cent or 19 per cent but of 36 per cent or 37 per cent. More than one-third of the active population seeking to be in the labour force would be unemployed. Many women, older workers and youths are simply not counted as being in the labour force in that province because the situation of finding jobs is so bad.

We have to run faster just to stand still. In other OECD countries they have stable populations or a declining populations. We still have an increasing population because of immigration and fertility rates. We have a more rapidly growing population than the United States. It is almost automatic that we have to have a higher rate of job creation in Canada than in any other OECD country. The question is not how do we do compared to West Germany, Greece, Spain or the United Kingdom, but how are we doing in relation to what we need to do here in Canada? We are doing well enough.

I have a few other comments about the priority Canadians put on the deficit as opposed to action to reduce unemployment and to create jobs, which is a major and unused way of reducing the deficit. According to the Decima poll on the attitudes of Canadians relative to the deficit which was reluctantly made public by the Finance Department a few days ago, people in Canada still expect the Government to be responsible for the country's economy. The proposition put by focus groups was, "Even though we've got to rely more on the Canadian business sector for economic growth, I still expect the Government to oversee and manage the country's economy". Eight-eight per cent of the people polled by Decima agreed with that statement and only 12 per cent disagreed.

When people were asked back in 1985 what they felt was the most serious long-term threat in terms of economic problems, 44 per cent polled said unemployment and 28 per cent said the deficit. When they were asked what the federal Government was most concerned with, 26 per cent said that the federal Government was most concerned with the deficit and 28 per cent said it was most concerned with unemployment. Then those polled were asked what the federal Government should be most concerned with. Two-thirds of the respondents said that the Government should be most concerned with unemployment and only 19 per cent said the deficit. Things have not changed very much since that time. The Government continues to put deficit fighting at the top of its priority list as reflected by Bill C-40 and the Budget, while Canadians continue to be most concerned with unemployment.

The comment I made a few moments ago about the needs, priorities and perceptions of Canada's elite versus the needs, priorities and perceptions of ordinary people across Canada is, I believe, well taken. Perhaps the elite who speak to the Minister of Finance are concerned about the deficit. However, I must say that ordinary Canadians are much more concerned about unemployment and about what will happen to them. That is what we have to see the Government take action on over the course of the next two years and beyond.

I would like to say a final word in regard to the tax system. As I said earlier, I was disappointed to hear the Minister of Finance indicate in Calgary that he believes that there should be tax neutrality and, therefore, no transfer of tax burdens between individuals and corporations, and that he will put back on to individuals every penny they save on income tax by means of the business transfer tax. I suspect that that means among other things that he will tax food with a business transfer tax and ordinary Canadians will be given a minuscule tax credit to compensate for this major new tax on a necessity of life.

We have pointed out again and again to the Government, confirmed by the Government's own figures, that some 80,000 companies across Canada are profitable each year but do not pay corporate tax. The Government told us a few months ago that 12,000 of those corporations are paying taxes and that the Government is making some progress on that. However, when we asked the Minister of State for Finance for the figures, we found that the figures were somehow obtainable by him to make rebuttals in the House of Commons but were not accessible to members of the Opposition.

We have estimated that corporate tax breaks are now costing the federal Government some $10 billion per year in forgone revenue. Some of that money might go back into the corporate sector for job-creation programs, but that $10 billion suggests that corporations may only be paying half of their way in terms of income tax. When we talk about the need for action, job creation and regional development and the vital need for a national program of day care, we are lectured constantly about the deficit. I would suggest to the Government that it is about time it looked in the mirror to see how much revenue is being lost because of the tax system and how much could be gained.

I would like to suggest a few principles of tax reform that I think should guide the Government. We believe and recommend to the Minister and the Government that there should be a shift to direct taxes and that we should be seeking to raise revenue primarily through the direct taxation of individuals and corporate incomes rather than through indirect sales, consumption or payroll taxes which are not geared to ability to pay. We think income should be taxed equally, regardless of how it is earned, and that the current bias in favour of investment and property income as opposed to wage and salary income should be eliminated. We believe it is necessary to cut corporate tax breaks and to restore a fairer balance in the tax system between individuals and corporations through such things as a minimum tax on corporations and the elimination of the transferability of dividend incomes between corporations without tax. We think that incomes taxes should be progressive so that they rise as people's ability to pay rises in order to help redistribute income from wealthy and average-income to low-income Canadians. We think the tax system needs to be simplified so that it is as clear, simple and intelligible as possible. This will help restore public co-operation and trust. We believe the Budget should have accounted for tax expenditures which now come to some $30 billion per year because that is every bit as much a loss to revenue as payments by the Government. We believe that taxes on ordinary Canadians should be cut.

Those are some principles that I commend to the Government and the country. I suggest that if those principles were put in place, and if we were to have tax reform now, we could take a major step toward fairness as well as bring the deficit down, while at the same time achieve the goals of economic growth in every region of Canada.

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, although we have been here for a few years now we find it very difficult to follow the essential points of the debates because the Opposition is bent on steering the debates towards something else. Today the debate has to do with additional borrowing authority, yet they are campaigning on the Budget. Well, Members of the Opposition—official and unofficial alike—are welcome to debate the Budget, we are prepared to accommodate them. However, on behalf of the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin), I will explain the technical provisions of the Bill now under consideration by the House.

So if I may I should like to give some explanations concerning the technical aspects of the Bill and the reasons why this borrowing authority is being sought. The largest amount is $24.3 billion in borrowing authority requested for the next fiscal year, 1987-88, as set out in Part II of the Bill. I will discuss that in more detail later in my remarks. First, however, I would like to deal with the circumstances underlying the request in the Bill for supplementary borrowing authority in the current fiscal year which ends March 31.

Part I, Clause 2(1), seeks supplementary borrowing authority for 1986-87 of $3.6 billion. This amount is equal to the amount of borrowing authority that has already been used to acquire U.S. dollar reserves during the period from April 1, 1986, to January 31, 1987. While the Government does have a non-lapsing reserve of $2 billion carried forward from borrowing authority legislation in 1984-85, this reserve is not sufficient. The Government, therefore, is seeking an additional borrowing power of $3.6 billion in order to replenish its $2 million reserve and to get the necessary room to manoeuvre in order to react on the exchange markets and face any situation which might arise before the end of the current fiscal year. Let Chicago speculators be warned that Canada is ready to face the music.

Clause 2(2) of this Bill provides for the cancellation on March 31, 1987, of all borrowing authority conferred by this clause that remains unused in the fiscal year 1986-87, (in other words, to eliminate all the other previous borrowing authorities replacing them with a new one) to the extent that the unused authority exceeds the amount authorized pursuant to Section 39 of the Financial Administration Act between February 18, 1987, and April 1, 1987. In other words, the unused portion of the temporary borrowing authorities are now expired and replaced by the provisions of this Bill.

Hon. Members are well aware that under Section 39, the Governor in Council may authorize a borrowing power when it is felt that there will not be enough reserve in the Consolidated Revenue Fund to make the necessary payments. The idea is to improve the Government's cash-flow. This action is designed for a short term, temporary use only. The term of the loan may not exceed six months and each borrowing requires the approval of the Governor in Council.

As a rule the financial requirements are high during the first quarter of a new fiscal year, especially in April when they exceed the financial requirements which can be met with a borrowing operation in that one-month period. Thus, the year-end cash balance at this period of the year will have to be built up to help meet the very heavy seasonal requirements, and this will be done on a temporary basis through short term borrowings under Section 39 of the Financial Administration Act.

On February 26 of this year, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced that authority under Section 39 was being used to provide for a net increase of up to $600 million in Treasury bill borrowings this week. The funds borrowed under that section cannot be rolled over in the regular way, as under Section 38 and will require new borrowing authority. This Bill, therefore, provides for borrowing authority to the extent it equals money borrowed under Section 39 in 1986-87 to be carried over into 1987-88 to roll over the maturing debt issued to build up cash balances in the current fiscal year.

Madam Speaker, the Government is seeking this additional borrowing authority because of the impact the recent volatility on the exchange markets have had on the borrowing operations of the State. The steps we have taken to maintain an orderly exchange market in the face of upward pressures on the value of the Canadian dollar during January and February of this year have resulted in a subtantial increase in Canada's international official reserves. Domestic borrowing was therefore increased to obtain Canadian dollars to finance this increase in reserves, so that we lack enough borrowing power to facilitate additional borrowings.

The Government, therefore, found it necessary to use Section 39 of the Financial Administration Act to continue its debt operation. I should note that Section 39 was used in similar circumstances early in 1983 and 1985.

If I may, Madam Speaker, I should like to deal now with the borrowing authority we will need for the next fiscal year. Part II of the Bill provides for a $24.3 billion in borrowing authority for the fiscal year 1987-88. This amount corresponds to the $21.3 billion financial requirements provided for in the estimates, plus a non-expiry reserve of $3 billion for contingency purposes, including a new accumulation of official reserves for the fiscal year 1987-88.

In the light of recent exchange market, developments, the $3 billion reserve amount being sought is adequate. In the month of January alone, about $2.5 billion in borrowing authority was used as a result of exchange market operations. The proposed reserve of $3 billion will give the Government the necessary flexibility to make it possible to rebuild its cash flow, in order to face all the contingencies of the volatility of the Chicago Market which, according to the Minister of Finance, cannot direct the financial future of our country.

Let me conclude, Madam Speaker, by stating that the borrowing authority requested in this Bill is reasonable in the circumstances. The added flexibility we are seeking is not exaggerated, and it allows us to cope with sudden large demands for funds and to moderate exchange market fluctuations, and it is undoubtedly a prudent measure in light of the present volatility of the exchange markets, whether it is spontaneous or speculative. The authority my Government is seeking to cover the next fiscal year's financial requirements reflects the Government's ongoing policy to bring about steady and substantial reductions year by year in the federal budget deficit, in compliance with the November 1984 Economic Statement and with the 1986 Budget and the new 1987 Budget.

As clearly stated by the Minister of Finance since our Government has been in power, in 1984, we are committed to take the lead to fiscal responsibility and we refuse to choose the easy solution of the cheque without funds which will be paid later, say by the next generation. In the context of this policy, I therefore ask this House to pass this Bill as quickly as possible.

Mr. Garneau: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member who just spoke if he agrees with the Government's decisions to reduce financial and fiscal transfer payments under established programs financing for health services, hospital insurance, health insurance and post-secondary education, which means that the provinces will have to provide a far greater share of the financing from their own resources. In other words, I would like to ask the Hon. Member whether he agrees with a decision made by the Conservative Government to transfer part of its deficit to the provinces.

Mr. Lanthier: Madam Speaker, I think it is high time we set the record straight. I would like to know on what grounds they are talking about a reduction. After all, it is common knowledge that without being under any obligation to do so, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) already answered the question in a very positive way when he stated that last spring, the Progressive Conservative Government authorized payment of an additional $110 million to the Government of Quebec alone. So there is an increase, not a reduction.

When they say that we are shipping the deficit out to the provinces, Madam Speaker, that is just not true. I remember when I was Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance, I attended a number of meetings in preparation for the consultations with the provinces to find a new formula for transfer and equalization payments. The Government will very shortly be introducing a Bill to enact the new equalization formula. Meanwhile, our Minister of Finance, always acting on the principle that we must transfer as much as possible to those who need it most, and to do so, stop giving to those who do not need it at all, our Minister of Finance was able to find $110 million to transfer to Quebec alone. I wonder about all this talk of cutting equalization payments and shipping out responsibilities when the Canadian Government transferred $110 million more to the Quebec Government alone.

Madam Speaker, I certainly do not agree that the Minister of Finance has been acting as suggested by the financial critic of the Opposition. Of course I understand the present policy being followed by federal Liberals from Quebec, who are hanging on to the provincial Liberals' coat-tails to strengthen their claims, because the federal Liberals from Quebec are like losers trying to get on the bandwagon with the winning team. Madam Speaker, if that is the case, it isn't going to work. I think the Hon. Member should find some other subject, because today, there have been no cuts and in fact our Government has increased payments, without being under any obligation to do so. And I am referring to those additional payments that were made to the Province of Quebec.

[English]

Ms. McDonald: Madam Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary raised the matter of the Government intending to reduce the deficit. Can he define the term "deficit reduction"? Would it not be better to admit that the deficit is going up? We have a large accumulated deficit and when you add $32 billion or $30 billion or $29.7 billion, or however many billion you add to it each year, the deficit is still increasing. At the very most the Government should say it is going to increase the deficit by a slightly smaller amount than it did last year.

Would he also not agree that deficits since 1984 have been larger than the deficits in the Trudeau years? The Member can compare them year by year or take an average, whichever he prefers. However, they are in fact larger. We are hearing a lot of rhetoric about deficit reduction but the deficit is not going down, it is going up.

• (1320)

Finally, would the Member not agree that the great deficit slasher in Canadian history is Tommy Douglas? When he was Premier of the Province of Saskatchewan they actually reduced the deficit. Year by year, over a 20-year period the deficit, which had been accumulated under Liberal management in Saskatchewan, actually went down. That is what Canadians understand by deficit reduction. The present Government is actually still increasing the deficit.

[Translation]

Mr. Lanthier: Madam Speaker, I think there is confusion concerning the terms.

[English]

We must differentiate between debt and deficit. Debt is a long-term accumulation of deficits, but the deficit is annual.

[Translation]

According to the question here, the deficit is reduced. It has been declining steadily ever since we took office in 1984. Every year we try even harder not only to reduce it, but even if we maintain it we will reduce it as a result of the diminishing value of the dollar due to inflation. But not only that, we reduce it every year. Even so it is important to say today that we are adding to the debt. But according to the long term program set forth by the Minister of Finance, by 1990-91 we will have gained control over the annual deficit and then we will be in a position to come to grips with the national debt. Of course we must avoid confusing the two words debt and deficit. As we said, the deficit has gone down and I believe the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State (Finance) are aware that the deficit is carried over from year to year; the national debt will go up, but the deficit declines every year, we are holding it in check and will soon gain control over it. Indeed private enterprise and financial sectors have shown confidence in our financial policy by increasing their investments.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): When debate is resumed there will be three more minutes for the period of questions and comments following the remarks of the Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier). For the time being, it being 1.23 p.m. I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At 1.23 p.m. the House took recess.

CRIMINAL CODE

SEXUAL ATTACKS—JUSTICE'S ATTITUDE

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, on September 6, 1984, a young Ottawa woman was the victim of an odious and indescribable sexual assault.

After consuming alcohol in a bar, the young woman went to the apartment of a friend of the eventual assaulter. There, the young woman lost consciousness and the two men raped her, shaved her and introduced beer bottles and other objects in her vagina. In addition, they videotaped their horrible acts.

These two men, who had a criminal record, pleaded guilty not of rape, but of gross indecency and were condemned only to 18 months each in prison.

Mr. Speaker, this was not an act of gross indecency, but a criminal act, nothing less than a rape. The judge in the case said that the victim had given her consent to the incident since the plaintiff had consumed alcohol and had gone voluntarily to the apartment. In addition, the fact that she was unconscious made the act less serious. How can there be any talk of consent in such circumstances? The young woman was unconscious and had never imagined such an aggression possible. To speak of consent reduces the impact of horror and the seriousness of this assault. To identify such an attack with gross indecency instead of sexual assault minimizes the appearance of seriousness.

Mr. Speaker, I ask the Department of Justice, the Canadian Bar Association and all judicial bodies in Canada to hold retraining classes for judges to give them a different approach and different attitudes when confronted with cases of sexual assault.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PAROLE ELIGIBILITY OF CHILD KIDNAPPER

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I and the residents of Moose Jaw were horrified and outraged to learn that a man convicted of kidnapping a young boy and threatening the child's life is eligible for parole only 10 months after receiving a five-year sentence for his horrendous crime.

The sentence was already too lenient, as any compassionate and reasonable person will conclude after reading the frightening details of the crime conveyed by The Globe and Mail last February 27. Now he is eligible for parole only 10 months after a premeditated, calculated kidnapping of a young boy. This young boy was drugged, bound, and forced to kneel in a car and taken over 1,000 kilometres from his home before the kidnapper, a paedophile, was caught by an alert and courageous Ontario Provincial Police officer.

Parole only ten months after sentencing? The kidnapper had already assaulted a 15 year-old boy, a 13 year-old boy, two boys aged 12, and another aged seven. Five children were assaulted before he lured the boy from Moose Jaw into his car. Surely justice demands and the public deserves to see less leniency in this case.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

RAID ON DUNCAN SIKH TEMPLE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, on November 6, 1985, RCMP raided the Duncan Sikh Temple as part of the investigation into the explosion at Narita Airport in Japan and the loss of Air India Flight 182, both on June 23, 1985.

Although the raid found no evidence for the investigation, it did violate the sacred space of the Sikh people and placed the entire Sikh community under suspicion.

Given the central place of religious freedom in the Canadian Constitution, the police should have had extremely well-founded reasons to believe such a raid would produce important evidence.

Last year I asked what reasons existed to justify the raid but was told that the information to obtain a search warrant was sealed until January 13, 1987. This has been extended to June 1, 1987.

In the interest of religious freedom and fairness to the Sikh community, I call on the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) to unseal this information.

DESIGNATION OF GREAT CREE COUNCIL AS NON-GOVERNMENTAL ORGANIZATION BY SOCIAL AND ECONOMIC COUNCIL OF UNITED NATIONS HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Government and all Canadians I extend congratulations to the Quebec Great Cree Council for having been designated a non-governmental organization by the Social and Economic Council of the United Nations Human Rights Commission.

The status granted the James Bay Crees is particularly significant because this is the first time a Canadian native people group has been recognized as such by the United Nations.

As a result of the adoption of the Cree-Naskapi Act in 1984, the Crees found ways to set up the kind of local government which they chose and which respects the spirit and the letter of the James Bay and Northern Québec Agreement.

I particularly want to commend Great Chief Ted Moses and his assistant Matthew Coon Come for the effort before the Social and Economic Council of the United Nations Human Rights Commission. I am convinced that the Crees will use their new status to promote the well-being of their people and of other native people in Canada and elsewhere in the world.

DAMAGE CAUSED BY CHLOROFLUOROCARBONS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, next September Canada will host an international conference in Montreal to complete negotiations and, hopefully, to sign an international treaty to control the release of chlorofluorocarbons and other substances that damage the ozone layer. Canada has been a leader in the search for a solution to this global problem, and we welcome the initiative.

Chlorofluorocarbons are used to propel aerosol sprays, manufacture foam plastics, and operate refrigerators and air conditioners. When released into the atmosphere chlorofluorocarbons are broken down. The chlorine released damages the ozone layer, allowing more ultraviolet radiation to reach the ground. Increased exposure to ultraviolet radiation would increase the incidence of skin cancer, slow the human body's immunological response, and reduce the productivity of some of the world's most important food crops, including wheat, rice, corn and soybeans.

Problems with such far-reaching implications for the entire world require co-operation on a global scale. Hopefully, we have a model here for the solution of complex international environmental issues in the future.

AEROSPACE INDUSTRY

QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Richard Grisé (Chambly): Mr. Speaker, the many involvements of the Conservative Government in the aerospace industry in the Montreal area have created a rather unusual situation, that is a shortage of specialized manpower. Thus, according to the director of the National Aerotechnical School in Saint-Hubert, in the riding of Chambly, job opportunities are excellent in that sector. Thanks to the efforts of our Government, students who are being trained for the aerospace sector and are registering at the National Aerotechnical School are now sure of a job, and some of the companies are even hiring them before they complete their schooling.

Our Governement has given the aerospace industry in Quebec a new impetus taking part in many projects involving companies such as Pratt & Whitney, Canadair, Spar Aerospace, CAE Electronique and several others. Statistics clearly indicate the development of manpower in that sector since our coming into power in 1984. Close to 4,000 new jobs have been created in 1985 and 1986 while the Centre for Aerospace Manpower Adjustment in Quebec expects the creation of some 3,000 new jobs between now and the year 1990.

Mr. Speaker, our Government is honouring its promises, especially in the Montreal area and in the riding of Chambly, so much so that our area will be seen as the turntable for the Canadian aerospace industry in creating jobs and giving confidence to our younger people. This is what the Conservative Government is all about, Mr. Speaker.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

SUPPORT FOR ENTRENCHMENT IN CONSTITUTION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, a national poll commissioned by the Inuit Committee on National Issues and conducted by Decima Research between February 17 and 20 of this year reveals majority support for aboriginal self-government and its constitutional protection from every region of Canada. Some 84 per cent of Canadians want the federal and provincial Governments to come to an agreement on aboriginal self-government. Some 77 per cent of Canadians want that right entrenched in the Constitution. In just 17 days that final and unique opportunity presents itself at the Constitutional Conference here in Ottawa.

While the majority of Canadians want action, the process is blocked by the Liberal Premier of Ontario, along with his Conservative and Socred allies in Saskatchewan, Alberta, and B.C. Even here in Ottawa the largest majority Government in Canadian history led by a Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) from Quebec refuses to produce its written position on aboriginal self-government. Last week the Prime Minister refused to meet with the Métis. Today he refused to address the National Assembly of First Nations just down the street.

On March 26 Canadians expect Canada and the provinces to recognize and entrench aboriginal self-government.

REFUGEES

SUPPORT FOR GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I commend our two Ministers responsible for employment and immigration for the measures they took to make it possible for Canada to continue to help genuine refugees who need our protection by attacking and deterring abuse of the refugee determination process.

• (1410)

These measures reflect the Government's commitment to provide genuine refugees with protection. However, to do so, we must prevent the refugee system from being undermined by abuse by phoney refugee claimants.

Canada has a long and honourable tradition of refugee and humanitarian assistance. Since the Second World War some 500,000 refugees have found new homes in Canada, and special humanitarian measures have helped thousands of other people. When the size of our population is taken into account, our record of aid to refugees in recent years is second to none.

I commend the Government for these actions which made it possible for Canada to gain control again over our borders.

I also commend the thousands of immigration counsellors for their dedicated and excellent service in the face of recent increased pressures placed upon them by so many illegal and bogus refugee claimants and queue jumpers.

HUMAN RIGHTS

U.S.S.R.—TREATMENT OF JEWISH CITIZENS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the Soviet Union's carefully timed release this year of a few prominent refuseniks and prisoners of conscience seems to be part of the Kremlin's effort to paint itself as humane. Given the abysmally slow pace of current Soviet-Jewish immigration, this individual case-by-case approach is a smoke-screen behind which the Soviet Government continues the brutal repression of its Jewish citizens, particularly the 400,000 who have indicated their wish to join their families around the world.

On March 8, International Women's Day, a brave group of Jewish women in the Soviet Union began a three-day hunger strike, a desperate act of last resort to bring their message to the world. I wish to quote part of their statement:

> Many years have gone by since we first applied for permission to emigrate. Since that time we have been ousted from the social and communal life of Soviet society into the murky waters of the anti-Israel and anti-Zionist propaganda campaign. Almost all of us, and our husbands, are deprived of the right to work in our professional fields. We have suffered from acts of harassment, yet we've never violated law and order. Our efforts to bring up our children and educate them in the spirit of Jewish national traditions have been utterly defeated.
> Have we no right to re-unite with our own people? Are we serfs of the state? Save us and our children!

POLITICAL PARTIES

POSITION OF LIBERAL PARTY ON CRUISE MISSILE TESTS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, just where does the Liberal Party stand on Cruise missile testing?

In January the National Liberal Convention passed a resolution calling for a ban on Cruise tests. Last Friday the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) said that Cruise testing should continue. The same day the Liberal caucus agreed on an immediate end to testing. But the caucus chairman said that was not the end of the issue. Today we read that at least one Liberal Member of Parliament will vote against his Leader on this issue. Now the Liberal caucus chairman says that he does not know how the Liberal Members of Parliament will vote.

That is only one issue. Where do they stand on trade negotiations with the United States? Where do they stand on deficit reduction? Where do they stand on cutting government expenditures?

In 1984 the Leader of the Opposition, the then Prime Minister, had a choice and he could not make it. When Canadians take a close look today, they will find that nothing has changed.

FISHERIES

MARITIME ECOLOGY LABORATORY

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, senior staff members of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans insist that there are no cut-backs in scientific programs as a result of restructuring and down-sizing at the Maritime Ecology Laboratory located at the Bedford Institute of Technology in Nova Scotia.

The Maritime Ecology Laboratory is comprised of an excellent mix of researchers, chemists, biologists, and physical oceanographers who are recognized as world class leaders in marine ecology. Their research has gained international respect. In addition, these scientists provide expertise for university professors and students, as well as private industry and the military. The Maritime Ecology Laboratory has been doing significant research in marine food chains, and the effects of long-term climate changes on the fishery. The dismantling of this laboratory by transferring key scientists to other regions of Canada will destroy our reputation for excellence in marine ecology, and curtail basic research in this important area of study.

TARIFFS

IMPOSITION OF TARIFF ON CORN IMPORTS—PROTECTION OF BRITISH COLUMBIA CONSUMERS

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission—Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, on March 6, 1987, the Canadian Import Tribunal determined that subsidized grain corn from the United States is causing material injury to the domestic grain corn industry in Canada. As a result, the Government introduced a countervailing duty on imports of grain corn from the United States.

Once again the Government of Canada has shown its appreciation and understanding of the unique circumstances that exist in the various regions of this country. In response to the concerns voiced by residents of British Columbia, we have acted on their behalf to ensure that this tariff does not apply to corn imported for consumption in British Columbia. In taking this action, British Columbia consumers are protected from a potential increase in the price of corn and the undue hardship it would cause.

• (1415)

Our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and our Government are committed to treating every region of the country with respect and equality. This is living proof of the Prime Minister looking after the regions of the country.

CORRECTIONAL SERVICE CANADA

CALL FOR LOWERING OF PERSONNEL'S RETIREMENT ELIGIBILITY

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, employees of Correctional Service Canada, particularly guards and other personnel working directly with inmates, have jobs which are very stressful and sometimes dangerous.

For more than 10 years these employees have been promised the same opportunities for early retirement as members of the Armed Forces, members of the RCMP, and air-traffic controllers, that is, the privilege to retire after 25 years of service if they so desire.

There is no doubt that the stress on correctional employees is as great or greater than on the peacetime army or the RCMP. We call upon the Government to proceed with this long promised privilege of early retirement, if employees wish to take advantage of the opportunity.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

PETRO-CANADA

FUTURE OF CORPORATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It concerns the mixed signals which cabinet Ministers are giving about the future of Petro-Canada. Canadians are witnessing shades of 1979. Last Friday in Calgary the Minister of Finance said: "I don't believe that Petro-Canada has any public policy role". This morning in St. John's, Newfoundland, the Minister of Transport, accompanied by the Minister of Energy, announced more exploration on Canada's East Coast and said:

> Contrary to recent statements in the press, Petro-Canada has been and will continue to be a strong, positive force in the development of oil and gas activities in Newfoundland and Labrador.

I ask the Prime Minister to which of the views of his two senior Ministers does he subscribe? Can he tell us plainly whether or not Petro-Canada is for sale?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is no inconsistency between the statements of the Ministers at all. The Minister of Finance was reported in the following way: "Mr. Wilson told his audience that there are no immediate plans to sell the oil company and he said the Government has not received any bids from firms willing to buy it. But he did say the matter is being looked at by the Minister of State for Privatization, Barbara McDougall". It seems to me that that is an entirely consistent position. The Government is going to examine assets of this nature and ascertain if they continue to play an appropriate role in public policy, and we will make a determination as we have in other cases.

Mr. Tobin: Only this particular Prime Minister could find those two statements consistent, and that speaks volumes for itself.

DEVELOPMENT OF TERRA NOVA OILFIELD

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, Newfoundlanders, and I know all Canadians, welcome any news of activity off Canada's East Coast. What we do not welcome, however, is an announcement this morning in Newfoundland of Petro-Canada's intentions for the Terra Nova oilfield for 1991, coupled with statements by the Minister of Finance and by the Minister of State for Privatization suggesting that Petro-Canada may not be around long enough to keep its commitments. Can the Prime Minister give the people of Canada, particularly the people of Newfoundland, an assurance today that the development intentions announced this morning by Petro-Canada for the Terra Nova oilfield will be carried out because Petro-Canada will be around long enough to ensure that they happen? Can he give us that assurance?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, will Petro-Canada be around? Well of course it will be around. Will it always be around in exactly the same configuration as today? That is a matter for the House to decide. Will it continue to serve Canada? Absolutely. I think my hon. friend would agree in retrospect that de Havilland having been privatized, for example, is giving great service to Canada and more jobs, as is Canadair in Montreal. These are perfect illustrations of where the Opposition opposed something which has now brought on new growth and prosperity.

Mr. Tobin: The Prime Minister's privatization mania would put Canadians back on their knees before OPEC; that is what it would do. The Government has abandoned security of supply for the country and has abandoned any attempt to use Petro-Canada as a means of ensuring a fair price for Canadian consumers at the gas pumps.

• (1420)

REQUEST THAT CORPORATION NOT BE SOLD

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, since the Government has absolutely no mandate, none whatsoever, from Canadians to sell Petro-Canada, will the Prime Minister give the House a commitment today that no such initiative will be taken until he has had a chance to bring this matter before the people of Canada in an election?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we campaigned very vigorously on raising the question of privatization and making the determination as to what instruments serve the national policy. I said clearly that we did not want companies financed by public money doing jobs that should be done by the private sector.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: The Liberal Party will have to make up its mind. Is it a traditional Liberal Party of St. Laurent and King, or is it the Liberal Party of Broadbent and the rest of them?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CRUDE OIL PURCHASES—NOVA SCOTIA BOARD'S REQUEST FOR INFORMATION

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Petro-Canada has told the Public Utilities Board of Nova Scotia that it may have to pull out of Nova Scotia if it is forced to disclose information on crude oil purchases publicly, as requested by the Public Utilities Board. Instead of trying to destroy public confidence in Petro-Canada, why doesn't the Government follow the recommendation of the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission and use Petro-Canada's potential to help formulate orderly and good competitive practices in the industry?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, Petro-Canada's mandate is defined in a piece of legislation adopted by this Parliament, which clearly indicates that Petro-Canada's activities and commercial standards should be acceptable to the business community of this country as a whole. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources cannot interfere in its daily activities, which is Petro-Canada's responsibility according to Parliament's decision on a bill introduced by the Liberal party when it was in power.

As a matter of fact, contrary to what a Liberal Party leader indicated in Toronto over the week-end, it is not Petro-Canada's duty and responsibility to get involved in the gasoline price issue in Canada. That does not come at all within its mandate. I urge you to refer to the legislation and the guidelines which the ruling Government of the day gave Petro-Canada. Neither in the legislation nor in any guideline were ever these issues put forward by the former Liberal administration or by our Government for that matter. There are trade practices in this country, and it is within these practices and standards that Petro-Canada must operate. That is what the Act says and that is what is happening.

[English]

ROLE OF PETRO-CANADA

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, it is the Government that changed the practices of Petro-Canada. What the Government is saying is that it is okay to blackmail the people of Nova Scotia and keep from them the information which they have every right to have. Why doesn't the Government forget about this craziness of privatizing Petro-Canada and just try to use it to foster some competition in the industry?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is resorting to the lowest kind of demagogy. Petro-Canada's responsibility, everywhere in Canada including Nova Scotia, is first and foremost to abide by the laws passed by the Canadian Government and the Nova Scotia Government. If it feels that Petro-Canada is not abiding by the law, the Nova Scotia Government should take the necessary steps to have it enforced.

[English]

CORPORATION'S MANDATE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. On Friday in Calgary the Minister of Finance said that Petro-Canada ought to be privatized because it had no public policy role. In the context of the mandate that the Conservative Government gave to Petro-Canada changing its role, the Prime Minister will recall that immediately upon taking office his Government changed the role of Petro-Canada. In the words of Petro-Canada's chairman in the 1984 report he says that the Government has changed its role, given it a new mandate, and from now on Petro-Canada is "to behave in a commercial sector manner", that is, to maximize profits. Isn't it the height of hypocrisy for the Government to change the public role of Petro-Canada one year and then use that changed role as an excuse to privatize it the next?

• (1425)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I simply do not see the connection between the premise and the question. If my hon. friend is asking if the Minister made a statement, I refer him to what the Minister said. There is no inconsistency at all in that. We raised this question specifically during the election campaign and indicated that, if appropriate and if beneficial to Canada, we would take action in regard to privatization. That is exactly what we have done in some cases. I know my hon. friend does not always agree but I think he will acknowledge that we brought these cases forward, we explained them, and we proceeded with them. If we feel it to be in the national interest, we will do that in other cases, including Petro-Canada and others.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I will try again. According to the Chairman of Petro-Canada himself, until this Government was elected Petro-Canada had a public policy role to play. According to Mr. Hopper, the new Government changed that role and instructed Petro-Canada to behave just like Shell, Imperial Oil, and Gulf.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: A Tory down there is saying: "Hear, hear".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: We do not say: "Hear, hear"; we say Petro-Canada has a responsibility to the energy sector and the people of Canada, not just to maximize its profits. Is it not hypocritical for the Government to change the role of Petro-Canada one day and then, having changed its role and destroyed its public responsibility, announce that as an excuse for privatizing it the next day?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend refers to the public policy role of Petro-Canada. Under the Liberal-NDP coalition, that public policy role was to gobble up the taxpayers' money and to compete with the private sector. That is exactly what was taking place.

We have just developed a very harmonious relationship with the management and direction of Petro-Canada, but we indicated in the election campaign that at an appropriate time we would examine whether or not this was an appropriate use of taxpayers' money and whether the national interest would best be served by maintaining that structure or by changing it.

We indicated in the past that change was appropriate and we introduced changes in the House that brought benefits to de Havilland, Canadair and others, and there may be others still. The Minister of State for Privatization was appointed specifically for the purpose of examining privatization because we believe that the private sector, and an expanding private sector, are very much in the national interest.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada let the Conservative Government of 1979 know what they thought of that idea during the 1980 election. If the Government wants to fight an election campaign on privatizing Petro-Canada, we will welcome that campaign any day of the year.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT RESTORE ORIGINAL MANDATE TO PETRO-CANADA

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my last question is directed to the Prime Minister. Instead of altering Petro-Canada's mandate whenever an energy crisis occurs or whenever we are faced with a price problem, would the Government consider restoring Petro-Canada's original mandate?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are proceeding with this matter, just as we did with others, for instance Canadair where, I think, the House's decision is having a very beneficial impact on Montreal and elsewhere. It is an instrument of national development, and we are considering Petro-Canada from this point of view.

[English]

My hon. friend has referred to the 1980 election campaign. We will have time to fight another election campaign and quite properly we will be judged, but the NDP voted against the Conservative Government for 18 cents a gallon and then supported the Liberals all during the life of that Government while it increased gas by $1.18. The Hon. Member should be ashamed of himself. We will deal with his hypocrisy in the next election campaign.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DEVELOPMENT OF NEWFOUNDLAND OFFSHORE OILFIELD

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, Newfoundlanders cannot be blamed today if they have mixed emotions abut the big announcement because they cannot really understand what the Government of Canada is saying with the Minister of Finance saying on the West Coast that Petro-Canada will be sold and with the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources saying in St. John's, Newfoundland, that there are long-term plans for Petro-Canada off the Newfoundland coast. Is the Government now saying that if Petro-Canada is sold there will be a guarantee in the contract of sale to honour the drilling and production plans announced today by the Government and Petro-Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, Petro-Canada's President clearly indicated that announcements made in St. John, Newfoundland, were based on a business approach. Canada's energy policy is conducted on the basis first of geology and second of market forces and the right to invest within that framework. For sure, there is a policy difference, and the NDP Leader is right. We have put an end to intervention in the area of energy, and it is within that policy framework that the Petro-Canada decision was made. It is a business decision. When the Government considers, as it has done, whether Petro-Canada should be privatized, it is clear that business operations will carry on.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT—DISTRIBUTION OF GOVERNMENT BROCHURE IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the announcement today by the Minister of Energy and the Minister of Transport is the culmination of a week of fancy publicity in Newfoundland with half-hour television programs paid for by the taxpayer. We now have a booklet going out to every household in Newfoundland and Labrador. I ask the Minister of Transport, the man responsible, if he really believes this fancy and expensive taxpayer-paid publicity is going to work. PC may stand for Petro-Canada today in St. John's but it stands for Propaganda Campaign throughout Newfoundland, master-minded by that PC in Ottawa, Papa Crosbie.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member certainly spouts poppycock.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I am happy to advise him that a brochure is going to every household in Newfoundland today giving the facts on the Canada-France fishery boundary, and that I and others who appear in the film are not accepting any residuals so that the cost is considerably lower than it might have been.

PETRO-CANADA

REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF PRIVATIZATION PROPOSAL

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister concerning the privatization of Petro-Canada. At this time in our history there is a crisis in the oil industry right across the country. If ever there was a time in our history when we needed a publicly-owned energy company, now is that time. Can the Prime Minister stand up and, in light of the need for a publicly-owned Petro-Canada, indicate that he is prepared to withdraw the proposal for privatization?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, there is always a crisis in the energy sector. When producers are not concerned, consumers are. Right now, the crisis stems from the fact that there is a glut of petroleum products, which affects the producing sector.

Working through a Crown corporation is one way among many others of establishing an energy policy. The policy now established by Canada is a market-oriented policy, contrary to the previous Government's policy. Although there was Petro-Canada, the Energy Department's policy was bad, it was an interventionist policy that produced the National Energy Program and the difficulties which befill Canadians. And that policy was supported by the NDP.

All this to say there are various ways of doing that. There are various public policy instruments. We have statutes, regulations, standards, criteria, taxes, departmental policy interventions, corporations, there is not just a Crown corporation—

[English]

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is again directed to the Prime Minister. I believe the Minister who just spoke has forgotten our history. It was 1973 and we were captives of the large multinational oil companies. We New Democrats are proud that we brought Petro-Canada into existence. We are approaching exactly the same crisis now. I ask the Prime Minister to stand in his place and give a commitment to the people from one end of this country to the other that he will not throw Petro-Canada down the tubes.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, this Government has respect for people. Clearly, Mr. Speaker, any analysis, any reviews will take public interest into account.

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

GOVERNMENT'S PRIVATIZATION POLICY

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources or to the Prime Minister. I am not sure which of the two can provide an answer, because the issue is not clear, and I am referring to the privatization of some of the Department's operations, namely its mapping division.

I have here a press release issued today by Lavalin, in which the president of the company confirms that recently, as part of its make or buy policy, Treasury Board started talks with his company and Bell to explore the possibility of privatizing certain federal services engaged in mapping.

I also have a press release issued by Treasury Board on March 6, which reads:

"Treasury Board has not negotiated any pilot projects with Lavalin or any other company, Mr. de Cotret stated—

Mr. Speaker, who is telling the truth?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for reading the press release. Quite frankly, we had some purely exploratory talks with several companies to discuss our make or buy policy. There were no negotiations or contracts or any attempts in this respect. There was never any attempt to engage in an exercise of this kind, as stated in my press release.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, we were promised responsible government. I want to ask the Prime Minister to inform the House whether this Government intends to privatize the sectors in question, especially the mapping division. And what about the employees? Do their careers count for anything at all with this Government? Can we give them some assurance? Couldn't their morale, which is very low at this time, be given a boost by a firm statement from the Prime Minister: "No, we will not privatize these services."?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I may point out to the Hon. Member that in all the talks we have had about privatization so far, excluding these preliminary talks which concern an area that has never been the subject of a Government privatization plan, the interests of our employees have always been uppermost in our minds. That has been so in every case of privatization, Mr. Speaker. We have always said that the interests of the taxpayers and the employees come first. These two sets of interests receive equal billing in every privatization exercise.

BY-ELECTIONS

ST. JOHN'S EAST—DISTRIBUTION OF GOVERNMENT PAMPHLETS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. He spent $40,000 of taxpayers' money on a TV film shown across Newfoundland last Thursday which was nothing but a blatant commercial for the Conservative running in the St. John's East by-election on July 20. Now the Minister is bragging about 135,000 pamphlets being mailed to Newfoundlanders. When the writ for the by-election has been dropped and all parties are restricted to election spending of less than $35,000, does the Minister believe the Government can shake off its reputation for mismanagement and dishonesty with this kind of sharp practice at the expense of the taxpayer?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have that question asked because I have in my hand a letter sent by the Leader of the NDP using the frank of this House of Commons and asking the people of St. John's East to vote for the NDP.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Crosbie: The Hon. Member has the gall and hypocrisy to get up and ask that question of me when his own Leader is using his frank to send this message to every voter in St. John's East.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Crosbie: You should be ashamed of yourself.

• (1440)

Mr. Mazankowski: Resign!

Some Hon. Members: Resign, resign!

Mr. Mazankowski: Honest Ed.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Fess up, Ed.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The old double standard.

Mr. Mazankowski: Now the truth comes out.

Mr. Blaikie: Were you expecting that question, John?

Mr. Crosbie: No.

Mr. Blaikie: Do you always carry Ed's letters around?

PROVISIONS OF ELECTION EXPENSES ACT

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Contrary to what the Minister says, when the New Democratic Party has mailed into St. John's East after the writs have been dropped, the New Democratic Party has paid for the mailings. In the spirit of the Election Expenses Act, will the Minister now do the right thing by the Canadian taxpayer and charge the cost of that TV program and that mailing to the Conservative Party rather than the Canadian taxpayer?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have in my hand a pamphlet which sets out the facts in the Canada-France fishing boundary dispute.

Mr. Broadbent: Who paid for it?

Mr. Crosbie: It was paid for by the Government because it sets out information which every Newfoundlander is interested in having, not the half-truths and specious nonsense which the NDP has spouted. In this hand I have the frank of the Leader of the New Democratic Party who said, "I hope you will work with me to elect a New Democratic Member of Parliament". That was paid for with the taxpayers' money.

There is nothing in here about voting for any Party. This gives the facts about the fishery. This is an election cry asking them to vote for the New Democratic Party. I will accept your apology humbly when it is offered.

Mr. Murphy: What's the date on it?

REFUGEES

ENTRY OF CHILEAN GROUP

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It is with regard to the human desperation which I witnessed yesterday during my visit with the 20 Chilean refugees in Montreal whose families are stranded by this Government in Argentina.

Given that their families were caught in transit while the administrative changes were being announced in Ottawa and that no period of grace was accorded, and given that the United Nations High Commission on Refugees has deemed them to be bona fide refugees, will the Government not admit its mistake, stop any further procrastination, and allow these individuals to enter the country and rejoin their families here?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Last week, Mr. Speaker, referring to the case of Chileans in Montreal, the Minister of State Immigration explained how we are proceeding, particularly with respect to those who are now in Buenos Aires. I think he was very clear and I fully endorse his statement.

On February 20 we set up and applied control measures. We are now making every effort required to try to define exactly the situation of those people and, if they are authentic refugees, they will have the right and opportunity to come or come back to Canada. We are simply applying the measures, and again I repeat that we are doing what we are supposed to do and what we announced two weeks ago we were going to do.

[English]

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, the Minister and his Government should stop manipulating public opinion and inciting the backlash which we are seeing in certain parts of the country.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT SHOW COMPASSION AND JUSTICE

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister if instead of denouncing the hunger strike he might deal with what caused it in the first place, namely people stuck in transit, people who are genuine refugees, and people who want to be re-united with their relatives. When will the Minister show the compassion and justice to which the Prime Minister was referring last summer?

[English]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member talked about compassion and help for the refugees. I would like to have more from the Liberal Party in particular. Last summer when we asked this Party what its position was on refugees, the Member told us we could open refugee camps.

Mr. Marchi: That's not true.

Mr. Bouchard: I listened to you. Can you please listen to me? Yesterday the Member was in Montreal. He needs more than photos with the people.

Mr. Marchi: Why don't you go visit them rather than going to Florida?

Mr. Bouchard: We need to know more. Where do you stand?

Mr. Marchi: Why don't you go visit them rather than going on holidays?

Mr. Speaker: Order, the Hon. Member for Abitibi.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

NEED FOR ADEQUATE POSTAL SERVICE FOR VILLAGE OF UMIUJAQ IN ABITIBI

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post Corporation. For some months now, I have been trying to get adequate postal service for the Village of Umiujaq in Abitibi. Could I possibly have a positive answer this week, so that the people in that remote community can get adequate postal service, because Canada Post's fanthom President Landers has no concern for those people's isolation? Mr. Minister, I want action.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumers and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the Hon. Member's question, I enquired from officials of Canada Post Corporation this morning. They assured me that postal services will be provided to the Village of Umiujaq in the coming week.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: Canada Post Corporation is now consulting with the town's mayor, and also with the Member of Parliament, to make sure that the service provided is adequate.

CHILD CARE

PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE'S REPORT

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. As the Minister knows, the research director of the Special House of Commons Committee on Child Care has decided not to renew his contract with the committee, claiming that there has been interference with the work of the committee.

Would the Minister not agree that, given the urgent concern of Canadian families about the lack of affordable child care in the country, those families must have confidence in the integrity of the committee's report?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the House will receive that report this month.

An Hon. Member: But tampered with.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I suggest to Hon. Members that they do not know the contents of the report. I think we would all be wise to judge the report and its contents when it is made public.

FORMER COMMITTEE RESEARCH CONTRACTOR'S VIEWS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. I do not think he understands the question. The question is with regard to the concerns which have been raised by the research director of this committee who is reported to have said that his "concern was more the research integrity of the report, that the text itself was consistent with the data and what our understanding was of what the hearings had said". The director of research seems to be saying that there has been interference.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has obviously tried to be generous in this matter. However, it seems to me that the question directed to the Minister is about something which took place in a committee. Unless the Member can rephrase his question to address a matter of ministerial responsibility, the Member is getting very close to being out of order. Perhaps the Member could rephrase the question.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps I could direct the question to the chairperson of the committee rather than to the Minister.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member wishes to direct the question to the chairperson of the committee. Questions to chairpersons of committees are in order, but they are limited to scheduling and administrative procedures in the committees. I think that in this case that would probably be out of order also.

Mr. Young: Can I try the question anyway?

Mr. Broadbent: How do you know what the supplementary question is?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member could consider whether he wishes to place another question to the Minister. In the meantime I think it is appropriate to recognize the Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

[Translation]

INQUIRY WHETHER CANADIAN POPULATION WILL HAVE CONFIDENCE IN COMMITTEE'S REPORT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): I have a question for the Prime Minister. Since his Government has been procrastinating for two and a half years on the subject of child care, and it now appears that the Director of Research for the Committee on Child Care has resigned, we would like to ask the Prime Minister whether he can guarantee that the Canadian people can have confidence in what will come out of that report, in view of the fact that although that Committee's chairperson has received a seven-page memorandum from three researchers she chose to keep it secret and would not even provide committee members with copies of the memorandum that criticized the process. Does the Prime Minister think that report will enjoy the confidence of the Canadian people?

• (1450)

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I believe that question is very similar to one asked by a New Democratic Member, and which I answered. The answer is the same.

CONTENT OF FORTHCOMING REPORT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, it was not the same question. Given that the Prime Minister refuses to answer specific questions but only wants to make general, grandiose statements with no substance—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Ms. Copps: I will direct my supplementary question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Does he expect the Canadian public to have confidence in a committee report that is so bad that a seven-page memo criticizing the process was given to the chairman, which the chairman refused even to distribute to members of the committee? Does he expect the Canadian people to believe anything that comes from this so-called day-care report that is nothing more than a Tory sham?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, this is another example of how the member operates. She does not know anything about it, she just has innuendo. She does not follow the rules of her leader who says to know the facts.

Ms. Copps: I have the facts.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): She throws out allegations and hopes they will stick. If she wants to talk about day care, let us talk about the facts rather than her fixations or the allegations about which she knows nothing.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Copps: Those are the facts.

INVESTMENT CANADA

INTENDED PURCHASE OF AMC SHARES BY CHRYSLER CANADA LIMITED

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Investment Canada. It concerns this morning's announcement of Chrysler Canada Limited buying out a 46 per cent share in AMC in Brampton. Given that the Canadian Government committed some $60 million to AMC in 1985, will Investment Canada thoroughly review this takeover to make certain that the $60 million is protected and that it is in the best interests not only of the company but the job creation for which that $60 million was originally intended?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are aware of this letter of intent which was announced as recently as this morning between Chrysler Renault car manufacturers concerning a per centage of 46 per cent of the shares which would be purchased by Chrysler Corporation, and we have indeed instructed Investment Canada officials to examine this transaction to make sure that it meets the benefit requirements.

[English]

REQUEST FOR JOBS GUARANTEE

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, in view of the tremendous amount of taxpayers' money involved in this deal, will the Minister make the guarantee of jobs the number one on the list of benefits?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that this reply has already been given by Chrysler management when it indicated that no job would be jeopardized, and I can assure the Hon. Member that the Government of Canada is always concerned about job creation. We have already considered setting up a mechanism which would assure Canadians of new opportunities and employment, and we will respect this commitment.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

POSTINGS OF MARRIED COUPLES WHO ARE MEMBERS OF FORCE

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Solicitor General my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It concerns the ridiculous new policy of the RCMP with respect to transfers of married couples who are both members of the Force. Four women who are about to graduate from the academy and become members of the Force have filed grievances because they have been refused postings near their husbands and, in fact, have been posted hundreds of miles away from their families and husbands. In two cases they have been posted thousands of miles apart. Does the Prime Minister agree that this policy of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police is unfair and inequitable? Will he immediately instruct the Commissioner of the RCMP to adopt a more fair and reasonable policy with regard to this matter?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Solicitor General I will be happy to take the question under advisement. I assure the Hon. Member that I will look into it and discuss it with the Solicitor General as soon as he returns.

Mr. Nunziata: In effect, these women have been given a choice; either quit the RCMP or leave their husbands and families.

An Hon. Member: Sit down. That is not a question.

FORCE'S POLICY

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of his so-called commitment to women, fairness, equity, and equality, will he personally look into this policy of the RCMP and ensure that it is changed and a new policy is implemented that would be fair, reasonable, and equitable in the circumstances?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I will look into this, as I indicated in my response to the Hon. Member's first question. At this point, not knowing the facts, I do not necessarily accept the premise of the question. However, I understand the very legitimate concerns of the Hon. Member and can only assure him that I will talk to the Solicitor General and ensure that we look into the matter in every respect so that equity and probity are followed in this case, as in all others.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

ENTRENCHMENT IN CONSTITUTION

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister who is aware that aboriginal chiefs and leaders from across Canada are meeting this week in Ottawa to prepare for the First Ministers' Conference near the end of the month. Since the Prime Minister has refused an invitation from the Assembly of First Nations to address this assembly and thus has forgone the opportunity to clarify the Government's position not only to aboriginal people but to all Canadians, will the Prime Minister explain that refusal? Furthermore, since the aboriginal peoples of Canada did not give up their right to self-government in any of the 484 treaties signed between the Crown and the aboriginal peoples of Canada, will the Prime Minister explain to Canadians why the Government appears to be preparing to deny that right in the upcoming negotiations?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what nonsense the Hon. Member is talking about. I have been available, I suggest, certainly more than any other Prime Minister in memory, for meetings of substance with the leadership of native groups here and across the country. We have had many meetings leading up to the very important series of meetings in the next couple of weeks. I do not know what the Hon. Member is referring to because he will know that we came very close to securing an agreement on a constitutional amendment two years ago. We are very much committed to that process of justice. Everything the Government has done is consistent with trying to bring justice and dignity to the native peoples of Canada. I am at a loss as to why the Hon. Member would try to read something other than that into the entire process.

Mr. Parry: If the Prime Minister is unaware of the specific invitation I am sure we can arrange to have him invited personally.

ALLEGED OPPOSITION OF PROVINCES

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, in view of the Prime Minister's protestations, what has he and the Ministry done specifically to try to convert the provinces that are apparently against the inherent right to self-government to a position that will validate and recognize that right of the aboriginal peoples of Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, again I am afraid my hon. friend does not know all the facts. A very important ministerial meeting with the leadership is scheduled for March 13, in anticipation of the First Ministers' Conference that will be held a few days later. The Hon. Member asks what has the Government done and will it bear fruit. I do not know. That is the object of the meetings. The penultimate meeting on the thirteenth will be followed by the televised constitutional First Ministers' and leadership meeting. Are we seeking a constitutional amendment? Of course we are. Have we laid it out? We have done so with absolute clarity. Do we want the provinces onside? We have worked exactly toward that end. We hope we will bring justice to the people of Canada, but not by the supercilious and uninformed criticisms of the NDP. It has to be done by a national Parliament acting with a certain amount of unity and cohesion.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

VIA RAIL

PLAN TO REDUCE SERVICE BETWEEN TORONTO AND WINDSOR

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. I ask the Minister if there is any truth to a report which appeared in The Sunday Star which states that starting June 7 VIA Rail will be reducing passenger rail service between Toronto and Windsor. If this is the case, does the Minister agree with these reductions?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Hon. Member realizes that VIA Rail is a Crown corporation and responsible for the administration and management of its own affairs. I understand that there are to be some reductions in service primarily in the Quebec-Windsor corridor. The modifications represent about a 6 per cent reduction in train miles in the corridor. They are being implemented to effect economies through the reduction of lightly used trains to make schedules more convenient for the majority of the users of the trains.

I do not think these are extensive changes. This is within the power of management, which is doing its best to run the system as efficiently and effectively as it can.

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT CAN ASSURE SERVICES IN ATLANTIC, QUEBEC, AND WEST WILL NOT BE REDUCED

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, if there are to be reductions in service in a well-travelled region such as southern Ontario, could the Minister indicate whether there will be reductions in service in the Atlantic, Quebec and Western Regions which are a lot less travelled than the Ontario region? Could he indicate to us whether there will be reductions in those areas which are already unsufficiently served?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the only reductions in service that I know about are the reductions that we have just been discussing here. Incidentally, it is the expectation of VIA that over five years this action will improve its losses by about $28 million and improve its occupancy rates. It certainly seems to be an objective worth attempting to achieve.

Mr. Speaker: I must advise the House that the time for Question Period has ended. I hope that Hon. Members from both sides of the House who were hoping to be heard today will speak with their Whips in order to get a little further up the list tomorrow. The Chair will certainly try to accommodate them.

The Chair has several questions of privilege to consider which must be dealt with now. There is a question of privilege to be raised by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) which, in ordinary circumstances, would take precedence in point of time. However, there is also notice of a question of privilege from the Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie). An indication has been given to me by the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party that he also wishes to raise a question of privilege which concerns the same issue. The Chair proposes to hear the Minister of Transport and then the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party on this issue. The Hon. Minister of Transport.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED MISUSE OF HOUSE OF COMMONS STATIONERY, PRINTING AND FRANKING PRIVILEGES

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege of which I gave you notice before two o'clock this afternoon, as is required. My question of privilege has to do with a flagrant misuse of the House of Commons Stationery and Printing Services and free mailing privileges by the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) who is the Leader of the New Democratic Party and who mailed a partisan political pamphlet soliciting support for his Party in the upcoming by-election of the federal riding of St. John's East to all households in St. John's East. I have the document in my hand, if it is necessary that it be tabled.

It states on the envelope: "A message from Ed Broadbent, MP". Inside the envelope there is a letter, a copy of which I hold in my hand.

Mr. Broadbent: Read it out.

Mr. Crosbie: I will not read the whole letter because it would bore every member here to tears. However, in the second to last paragraph—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Read the whole letter!

Mr. Crosbie: I simply will not be shouted down, Mr. Speaker, of that I can assure you.

In the second to last paragraph of the letter the Hon. Member states:

> I hope you will work with me to elect a New Democratic Member of Parliament in the coming by-election in St. John's East. Together we can do it.

I do not know what they are hoping to do together.

Mr. Broadbent: You'll find out, John.

Mr. Crosbie: But I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will be very disappointed in what he gets to do in St. John's East.

By the way, this is a letter which was sent with a card. This card is a questionnaire the first part of which reads:

> Yes, Ed, I want you to keep up your fight to make the Mulroney Government respect Newfoundland and listen to the serious concerns of Newfoundlanders.

It is also pointed out on this card that if it is mailed the postage will be free. So that is a double misuse of the frank.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Crosbie: The frank was used to send this out to every household in St. John's East, and there is a card for the respondent to send back free. So it is free both ways. Everything is free with the NDP. I can assure the Hon. Member that he will not do it together or singly in St. John's East. This is a direct breach of privilege.

That this is a breach of privilege is clear from your own ruling, Mr. Speaker. I refer Your Honour to page 403 of Hansard for October 16, 1986, with respect to an earlier case in which NDP Members from British Columbia—and we saw one of them today during Question Period trained in the deep traditions of the hypocrisy of that Party—abused their stationery, printing and frank privileges to carry out a mass mailing during the provincial election in British Columbia. So there is an emerging pattern of abuse here demonstrated in this letter from the Leader of that same Party.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Crosbie: I refer you, Sir, to your own words on that occasion. What better could I do? On that occasion Your Honour ruled:

—that the Chair should not move without great care in ruling on whether or not a communication sent under the frank is a question of privilege. However, having said that, I think it is clear that there could be cases where, depending upon the content of the communication sent under the frank, it could be a question of privilege if the content worked against the right of Members to free expression and the carrying out of their obligations as Members.

It is just those rights which have been breached by the contents of the letter sent by the Leader of the New Democratic Party. The purpose of this letter is to achieve a partisan advantage through the misuse of mailing privileges. The Leader of the NDP has placed part of the cost of his Party's campaign in the St. John's East by-election on the backs of the ordinary Canadian taxpayers of this country. It is the taxpayer who has to pay for this abuse which violates the clear guidelines on the use of stationery and printing services.

I refer Your Honour to the Members' Manual on Allowances and Services which states under the heading "Unacceptable Requests":

The following types of material may not be reproduced:

(a) Material unrelated to activities of the House of Commons

(b) Material of a partisan political nature such as:

(1) solicitations of party membership—

(3) requests for monetary contributions—

The letter states:

I believe Newfoundland needs a new voice in Ottawa, a voice that will ensure that Newfoundland is on the political map in Canada. I hope you will work with me to elect a New Democrat Member of Parliament in the coming by-election in St. John's East. Together we can do it.

If that is not material of a partisan political nature, then what in the name of heavens is it? For years we have been smothered with the sanctimonious sanctity and hypocrisy of the hon. gentleman opposite who tut-tutted and raised questions of conflict and scandal whenever he had the opportunity. Here we see the most frank and barbarous use of the frank, and an abuse of the mailing privileges of the Members of the House by the Leader of a Party.

What is this if not a violation? Other Members of the House cannot exercise similar freedoms without also violating the established guidelines of the House of Commons which are intended to prevent misuse of public funds. God help the people of Canada if that group ever gets into a position to expend public funds.

That is why this letter is a breach of my privileges as a Member of Parliament. The Leader of the NDP has violated the rules governing the use of stationery, the printing of materials and the use of the frank to seek an unfair advantage in the by-election in St. John's East.

Mr. Manly: You don't know what you're talking about.

Mr. Crosbie: I don't know what I'm talking about?

Mr. Broadbent: Let him go.

Mr. Crosbie: I am delighted to see the Hon. Member here today. I am delighted that he has asked me a question.

Is the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party to be permitted to exceed his privileges in this case, as he has done before? I am now told by outraged people who live in St. John's East that this is not the first of this kind of unseemly material to come from the Hon. Member for Oshawa. If he is to be allowed to do this and violate the privileges of other Members, then what is there to prevent him from doing it again in the context of the federal election when the cost to the taxpayers will be far greater?

• (1510)

Our election law is based on the notion of balancing campaign expenditures. There are strict limits on what can be spent. Violations of such limits are treated as serious offences. The NDP Leader is one of the first to be barking, bellowing, and barracking in his seat whenever he gets the opportunity.

I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that this case goes to the very heart of your earlier ruling. If this does not raise a question of privilege, as you then defined it, then the meaning of your ruling, which was notable for its clarity—and if I might be permitted to say, Mr. Speaker, all your rulings are noted for their clarity—must simply collapse.

The Hon. Member opposite has set himself and his Party up as a self-declared conscience of us all. The Leader of the NDP is constantly raising questions of conflict or scandal, or the appearance of a conflict, or the shadow of a scandal. If it is shown to be not a conflict of interest, the Hon. Member will say it is apparently a conflict of interest because I said it was a conflict of interest in the first place. That is what we have had to put up with all the time. We have the Leader of the NDP, not in an apparent anything, but in an obvious case of having his hand in the cookie jar and being caught with the sugar on his fingertips.

I ask that the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party agree to reimburse the public for the cost of this illegitimate use of printing and mailing privileges. Will he learn the lesson:

Of all the cants which are canted in this canting world, though the cant of criticism is the most tormenting, the cant of hypocrites is the worst.

Will the Hon. Member frankly admit that and stop his canting? Will he agree to reimburse the House for the expenses? Will he agree not to do this again? Will he observe the privileges of this House in a proper manner?

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that you find this to be a prima facie case of privilege here, and that this matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure. Do not let the hon. gentleman stand and refer to a factual brochure about the fishery and the fisheries dispute, and suggest that this is in any way similar to this mishappened document sent out in a clandestine manner using the franking privileges.

I would like a report on how often this has been done by the hon. gentleman this year. How many millions of pieces of mail have been sent out improperly in this manner by the Hon. Leader of the NDP?

I wish to table this document. This is the evidence that should be sent to the committee. I am prepared to testify, and hundreds more from St. John's East, who are sickened and disgusted by this heartless display of ignoring the rules of parliamentary democracy, will appear before the Committee too, if necessary.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have heard a lot of nonsense in the House in my years, but I think that all the limits of credibility have been exceeded by the absurd pronouncement of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie).

I do not think that the Minister has a question of privilege at all. I indicated to you, Sir, that I had a question of privilege given what this absurd Minister said earlier in Question Period. I wish to comment on his accusations.

The Minister has referred to the guiding principles of the House as they pertain to members' franking privileges. The Minister knows full well that the same guiding principles and regulations pertain not only to what I happened to send out on this particular occasion, but to all the householder mail that is sent out by every Member of Parliament, by all Members in all Parties, of any type, including householders to their constituencies. If the Hon. Minister is raising a question of partisanship, which he has, I could take about four days, three hours, and 19 minutes quoting from every one of his members' householders and find in each and every one of them—

An Hon. Member: You could not.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Hon. Minister. I wish that he would listen.

The point that I am making is that if we are talking about partisanship in publications that come from members, it is a common practice for all Members to make partisan comments at times. I have supported that publicly when the question has been raised about other Members in other Parties. All Members of the House know that it is the right of the member to make partisan comments. That has been practised throughout my experience in Parliament, in householders as well as other publications. That is principally what we were elected to do. I have no apology to make for that.

I wish to comment on the other parts of the Minister's interesting diatribe earlier today. The Hon. Minister talked about printing and mailing. First, who paid for the printing? I will tell you who paid, Mr. Speaker, the New Democratic Party of Canada. I will comment on the Conservatives and their obligations in a minute.

I have just received a copy of the mailing from the Post Office. Different parts have been checked off. Some members can mail freely. We can, in most publications, and in others we pay for it. Under this, who paid for the mailing? The New Democratic Party paid for the mailing, as well as publications.

The point that the Minister raised, the question of printing: we paid for it, the New Democratic Party. Unlike the Tories and what they put out, which I will come to in a minute, we paid for the mailing.

What about the date that this was sent out to the people of Newfoundland?

Mr. Crosbie: The date doesn't matter.

Mr. Broadbent: He says that the date doesn't matter, because we have caught the Tories spending public funds after an election was called. That is why he says it does not matter. I say to the Minister that to the New Democratic Party it does matter.

Ms. Copps: Don't be so sanctimonious.

Mr. Broadbent: You can get up, madam, and make your points in a moment.

The date does not matter?

Mr. Crosbie: No.

Mr. Broadbent: Apparently some Liberals do not care about this, and I am surprised. I note that it is not the leadership of the Liberal Party.

The date does matter, because once an election has been called, as all Members know, we are under legal obligations about the expenses, which is totally appropriate, and which I thought had been accepted by all Members in the House. What is the date on the matter that the Minister received and to which he objected? I wish to advise the Minister of the date. It was February 19, which was before the writs were issued for the election in St. John's East.

It seems to me that the Minister is striking out on every account. Who paid for the publication? The New Democratic Party. Who paid for the mailing? The New Democratic Party. Was it sent during the election period? Not at all. It was sent before the writs were issued.

I wish to come to my reason for being concerned about the implication raised by the Hon. Minister of wrongdoing on our part during Question Period. If we compare this with what has gone on in Newfoundland, what do we find? First, a leaflet has been mailed by the Conservative Government to every citizen in Newfoundland. It is a coloured brochure. When was it mailed? After the writs were issued. Who paid for it? The people of Canada, not the Conservative Party.

Mr. Crosbie: Absolutely.

Mr. Broadbent: Second, there was a half hour television program going into every home in the Province of Newfoundland. Who paid for that, after the writs were issued? I will tell you that it was not the Conservative Party of Canada, it was the people of Canada who were paying for that. That is a disgrace.

Mr. Fulton: Snake bellies.

Mr. Crosbie: Do you want a loan of the tape?

Mr. Broadbent: We totally welcome the comparison of the two different types of mailing; one that came out of my office which was paid for by my Party in the publication and in the mailing before the writs were issued, and another produced by the Government which was paid for by the people of Canada after the writs were issued.

The Minister should have the decency to stand up and resign.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1520)

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary on the same consolidated question of privilege.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to participate in this consolidated question of privilege. I think it is quite clear that there is a dispute here. However, I would say to the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) that we take him at his word. If in fact the printing was paid for prior to the election being called it does not become part of election expenses. If in fact the postage was paid for prior to the election being called, we agree that it does not become part of election expenses.

I call upon the Hon. Member to produce the proof, not here and now, I appreciate that. If in fact it has been paid for, not only the printing, but the paper, the envelope, the cost of transporting it to the postal station, and the postage, I appreciate that. I take the Hon. Member at his word because I have never had reason to doubt his word on something like this. I call upon the Hon. Member and his Party to prove positively and absolutely that everything was paid for at the time that it was done, not when the complaint arose, in February when this blatant letter was sent out using, I might add, not New Democratic Party paper, not New Democratic Party letterhead, but the letterhead of the office of the Leader of the New Democratic Party. There is no sign on this that it is election material. I appreciate that, but there is no sign on it that it is not a blatant attempt to misuse not only the stationery but the office of the Leader of the New Democratic Party in asking that "you will work with me to elect a New Democratic Member of Parliament in the coming by-election in St. John's East".

I remind the Hon. Member of his comments on May 1, 1986, "Political Parties are responsible for their propaganda. Why does the Conservative Party not pay for this propaganda". I call upon the Leader of the New Democratic Party to prove that they paid for this propaganda in February prior to the writ being issued, that they paid full value for all of it, that is, the typing of it, its reproduction, the paper, the letterhead, and the envelope.

I have one curious question. If in fact this was all paid, and if in fact there was no effort to use the frank, I raise one question for my hon. friend, why was the frank on the envelope? If in fact it was paid for, full-fledged and with no problem, why was the frank on the envelope? That is the question we must ask ourselves.

Mr. Broadbent: I will be happy to deal with all those.

Mr. Lewis: That is fine. I would have thought the Hon. Member, having raised a question of privilege, would be prepared to give the House the benefit of that. This question has been part of a deliberate pattern by the New Democratic Party to raise this kind of thing. The Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco) on October 16, 1986 raised a blatant political message by way of a mass mailing on the B.C. election campaign solely for political gain brought about by the brother of the current, or I guess soon to be departed, Leader of the New Democratic Party in B.C. In part the letter said—and it was probably written by the same wordsmith in the New Democratic Party offices—of course it was all paid for, and the fact that the frank was on the envelope did not mean anything—"we are asking you to join with us in getting to work to elect the next provincial New Democratic Party. Phone your local campaign headquarters and get involved now". That was not even federal. In the last instance it was not even federal. It was part of a designed campaign to take a free ride on the back of Canadian taxpayers for individual political purposes, whether provincial or federal.

I want to ask the Leader of the NDP a question because we all want to know the answer. Is he gearing up for the next municipal election campaign somewhere? Are we to use the frank for that too? It is about time that somebody stood their ground and acted honourably in the House.

I want to point out what has been done on the other side of the question. In an earlier Parliament the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) raised a question about a committee that was set up by the Minister of Transport to study rail line abandonment. Once the question of privilege was raised, our Party paid for it without question. It is interesting to note that at a later date the Liberal Government of the day found that study so valuable that it paid for our expenses and in fact used the study for the purposes of the federal Government.

I want to close by saying that an abuse of the privileges of a Member of Parliament is an abuse whether it is prior to an election or during an election. The only difference is that if it is during an election, then it must be included in election expenses. If it is an abuse of the privileges of the House and the privileges we enjoy as members before an election, it is still an abuse.

I call upon the Leader of the New Democratic Party to produce his evidence. I do not doubt that he has it; I do not doubt that the Party has it. I call upon them to produce all evidence proving that it was paid for, every last expense in connection with that letter, so that they can demonstrate that they have done this with some honour, and not come into the House to leave out there the great suspicion that possibly they are doing the same thing in Yukon and Hamilton Mountain.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, this is a classic example of a Government trying to make use of the best defence known, which is offence. It is quite clear, in terms of the $40,000 on the film and the 135,000 leaflets going around in Newfoundland, paid for by the people of Canada, that it is something they want to cover up and keep the press from thinking about.

However, let me deal with the issue made by the Parliamentary Secretary because I think it opened an enormous Pandora's box. It was something that I did not feel any necessity to raise during the provincial election in British Columbia. However, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre, the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney), happened to send out somewhere between 50,000 and 100,000 householders with a picture of herself and Bill Vander Zalm standing arm in arm on the front of it. It just happened to be there in the middle of the election campaign.

If this issue is to be dealt with seriously, the House will never be able to deal with anything serious again. I can bring in thousands of documents mailed out by Conservatives which are obviously partisan and obviously paid for by the House of Commons. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) abused the Leader of my Party. He has not even apologized after my Leader produced a certified copy from the Postmaster of the House of Commons that we had paid for the mailing. He still sits there on his rump like a cod tongue, acting as though, "Ho, ho, I am the high and mighty Minister of Transport. We have no issues in Newfoundland. We are losing. We are going to try to fabricate some kind of mamby-pamby issue to shove into the mouths of the people of Newfoundland". Well, I do not buy it and Newfoundlanders will not buy it, because they know you have been caught with your hands in the till for the movie and for those little diddley-daws on what really is not true about the Canada-France agreement. It is a lot of blah, and you should be embarrassed about it.

Mr. Speaker: Before recognizing the Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain), I understand that there is some strong feeling about the matter, but I ask all Hon. Members to refrain from using the personal word "you".

Perhaps, now that the matter has been explored with great vigour by several interventions, the Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody would try to confine his remarks to the issues.

There are two issues here. One was raised by the Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) who says that a frank has been used to deliver a message, a political message, which is aimed at an upcoming by-election. The Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party has said that a publication put out by the Government of Canada in respect of the fisheries situation and the relationship between Canada and France in terms of certain fish stocks is an abuse of the Government's position. That also is aimed at resulting in some political advantage for the Government. Those are the two issues.

• (1530)

The question is whether or not there is a question of privilege. There is clearly a complaint on both sides and clearly there is an issue of what is appropriate when parliamentary rights to communicate with constituents are used. I am not saying it is a question of privilege, but I do want Hon. Members to try to address that specific point because that is what I have to decide.

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission—Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. This is a breach of individuals' privileges. The Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) tried to put forth something that is not the true picture. He spoke in his opening remarks when countering the remarks of the Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), of householders being utilized, a totally different situation from that with which we are dealing. We are dealing with our own ridings. When householders are of a partisan nature, they are often rejected and not printed. A member is told to produce a householder which does not solicit votes, and that is the whole issue here.

What is revolting to all Canadians, Mr. Speaker, is the sanctimonious attitude of the New Democrats. They speak of the abuse of public funds. This matter unquestionably is a deliberate abuse of public funds. All of us are tainted, whether we like it or not, when one member abuses his privileged position to either his or his Party's advantage. This is not right either morally or legally, vis-à-vis the rules of this place. When it comes to public spending—and make no mistake about it, Mr. Speaker, this is public spending in the true sense of the word—the NDP over there yell the longest and the loudest about it.

We are dealing here with the privileges of each and every Member of this House having been abused by the misuse of stationery in this case and possibly the misuse of the frank. I take it that the Hon. Member for Oshawa has stated he has paid for the postage. I still question why he utilized his frank.

The most disgraceful part of the exercise is seeing the New Democrats sanctimoniously and hypocritically chastising everybody in this House and challenging one of the most honourable Canadians, the Minister of Transport. It is unheard of.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I will keep my contribution to this discussion as brief as you would like it to be.

Mr. Speaker: I know the Hon. Member will do just that. The Chair I think has given all members a chance to express their views with language which has been brisk and vigorous, but it has been within the bounds. The Chair now really does need some procedural advice. The Hon. Member.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, knowing my reputation as an expert parliamentarian, I can understand why at this stage of the debate, after so much colourful and exciting language, you would call upon me to summarize this matter in a way that is logical and succinct and which will give the Chair the ability to make the decision rather quickly. I hope the Chair will be slightly tolerant, but I want to say that as a representative, as are all members ultimately, of Newfoundlanders who were the recipients of the propaganda being debated in the House, in case there is any misapprehension whatsoever in this Chamber that whether you wrap flimflam in a $40,000 slick video presentation, whether you put it in a blue, white, red and yellow householder or wrap it in a letter from the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent), Newfoundlanders can recognize flimflam no matter how it is packaged. Whether it is $40,000 flimflam or the NDP Leader's letters of flimflam, the people of St. John's East will not swallow it because it is all flimflam in the end.

I believe that it is incumbent upon Members—that is what we in this Party shall be doing—to go out in the streets of Newfoundland to communicate with and listen to the people. That is the appropriate forum. Whether or not there has been an improper use of taxpayers' funds in this spitting contest that we see between the New Democratic Party and the Conservative Party, the only logical question to ask is that of the Chief Electoral Officer. We shall see when the election is over and when all of the forms have been filed whether or not the Election Expenses Act has been followed. That is all that matters, Mr. Speaker. I submit from where I sit that that perhaps this is all you have to rule upon today.

Let me say in defence of Newfoundlanders that when you manufacture nonsense, be it in a $40,000 package or a letter from the Leader of the New Democratic Party, Newfoundlanders will recognize it is nonsense every time. We are not impressed by this spitting contest between the two Parties. We want some answers. We want some leadership. We want to know what the policies are to put the Province of Newfoundland back to work and to help it realize its full potential. We do not want a shouting match between schoolchildren in a forum that has been changed into a schoolyard. This is a shameful, shameful day.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, on this same question of privilege, I would like to point out that, a few weeks ago, I also made a statement pursuant to Standing Order 21 to denounce the same use of franking privileges for partisan purposes by the Leader of the New Democratic Party. What I was denouncing at the time was the fact that, the Hon. Member had used his franking privileges to send a partisan message to Jonquière residents in which he took position on the tax reform and income taxes.

I have here another document from the Hon. Member of which I would like to read a few sentences:

"Mr. Broadbent, I want you to know what I think about fair taxes and employment." Then, there is only a small space where you cannot write either yes or no. It is simply written "yes". You have to put a check-mark if you agree with the statement. Then, the document says: "Yes, I believe that a tax reform guaranteeing that everyone pays his fair share is necessary. Low or middle income Canadian men and women should not have to bear an unfair tax burden." I wonder why such a question should be asked to Canadians, Mr. Speaker. It seems very obvious to me that everyone would agree that people must not bear an unfair tax burden.

Then, the Hon. Member said: "Yes, I believe that tax rebates should be used to create new jobs, not to provide tax holidays for groups or big businesses." The terms used are not even correct. It should be tax shelters and not tax holidays.

On another point, the Hon. Member says: "Yes, I agree with you when you support fair taxes." Is there anyone who could be against fair taxes, Mr. Speaker? Even though the words "A message from Ed Broadbent" were written on the letter, the Hon. Member is using for partisan purpose his privileges as a Member of Parliament, for which he pays less than ordinary citizens. The return postage was also prepaid. No stamp was required and it was addressed to: Ed Broadbent, Member of Parliament, House of Commons. The Hon. Member was using his privileges for partisan purposes, which is exactly what the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) is now describing, but in relation with another type of letter.

Mr. Speaker, we can go back to the statement I made a few weeks ago pursuant to Standing Order 21, when I said that, to top it all, this was only a mock survey. If the Hon. Member were at least using his privileges logically, even though such behaviour would still not be acceptable, it would be somewhat better. But this was just a sham. People could not even reply by saying yes or no. There was just a space for yes and questions on which everyone agrees since we are all for fair and equitable taxes.

[English]

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, it would be tempting to continue to listen to Conservative and NDP Members fight it out for third place, but I think we are dealing with something of importance to the proceedings of the House of Commons and that is whether or not we do have here a genuine question of privilege. As I understand it, Citation 84 on page 25 of Beauchesne's refers to the role of the Speaker in these matters. The citation reads:

> Once the claim of a breach of privilege has been made, it is the duty of the Speaker to decide if a prima facie case can be established. The Speaker requires to be satisfied, both that privilege appears to be sufficiently involved to justify him in giving such precedence (or as it is sometimes put, that there is a prima facie case that a breach of privilege has been committed); and also that the matter is being raised at the earliest opportunity.

What are we talking about when we deal with a matter of parliamentary privilege? In this connection, I would respectfully refer you, Mr. Speaker, to Citation 16 on page 11 of Beauchesne's. In both cases, I have been referring to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition. Citation 16 appears to be a quotation from Erskine May, Treatise on the Law, Privileges, Proceedings and Usage of Parliament, 19th Edition. I respectfully draw to your attention some of the words of this Citation which read as follows:

> Parliamentary privilege is the sum of the peculiar rights enjoyed by each House collectively as a constituent part of the High Court of Parliament, and by Members of each House individually, without which they could not discharge their functions and which exceed those possessed by other bodies or individuals. Thus, privilege, though part of the law of the land, is to a certain extent an exemption from the ordinary law.
> The distinctive mark of a privilege is its ancillary character. The privileges of Parliament are rights which are "absolutely necessary for the due execution of its powers". They are enjoyed by individual Members, because the House cannot perform its functions without unimpeded use of the services of its Members; and by each House for the protection of its members and the vindication of its own authority and dignity.

You must decide, therefore, Mr. Speaker, whether the matter raised by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), or for that matter the question raised by the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent), falls within the rather restrictive definition of privilege set down in the authorities I have cited and if in those circumstances you are in a position to rule that there has been a prima facie breach of privilege as so defined.

It may be that what has been complained of by the Minister of Transport is something to be looked at in another forum or by others outside this Chamber. I will not attempt to deal with that at this time. However, the question is whether or not we are talking about a matter of privilege within the definition set down by the authorities in question.

As I have said with respect to the matters before us and as I think a member on the government side indicated by saying we are dealing with what he called rather ingeniously a consolidated question of privilege, you have a rather narrow and specific task to perform. With respect to the point raised by the Leader of the New Democratic Party, I suppose it could be argued that at some point it will be a matter of parliamentary debate on the proper expenditure of public funds by the Government when it comes to various mailings and films in the Province of Newfoundland.

I know you have invited us to make some comments on the procedural aspect of this, Mr. Speaker. While my doing so may detract from the other aspects of the discussion at this time, and while, as I have said, it would be tempting to allow members of the Conservative and New Democratic Parties to continue their ongoing fight for third place, I thought I would rise at this time to draw to the attention of the House considerations at which we must look when any of us raise a question of privilege, and to call upon you, Sir, to see if there has been a prima facie breach of such a question.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, thank you for allowing me to participate in this important discussion. I think you, Sir, will have to rule on this sleazy operation of the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). I would like to remind my hon. friend that, as my Leader said—and I know my hon. friend will accept him at his word—we paid for the printing and the postage, and that is not the case with the postage on the stuff he sent out which was paid for not by a political Party but by a Department of the Government.

I would like to point out to you, Mr. Speaker, and to my hon. friend from St. John's West, that I have here an epistle sent out under the frank of John Thomson, MP, Calgary South, advertising the Stampede Barbecue at Spruce Meadows. Thank goodness it got sent to an NDP MLA in Regina. That is how I got it.

I have another letter, Mr. Speaker, that begins with: "Dear Fellow Conservative". The envelope reads J.B. M.P., Regina East. I hope the Hon. Member for St. John's West is paying attention to this. The letter is addressed to Mrs. Pat King and reads: "Dear Fellow Conservative". I must say that this is the last thing Mrs. Pat King would ever be. In any case, the letter reads as follows:

> Accompanying this letter is a request addressed to you by Bill Wheatley, President of the Regina East Progressive Conservative Association, to formally join the Association.
> The Regina East Constituency is one of the fifty federal ridings singled out by the new leader of the NDP for an intensive effort on its part to elect an NDP Member of Parliament.

By the way, we happened to do that. The letter goes on:

> In order to respond to this challenge, it is important for our party to maintain a strong grass-roots organization.

The letter was sent out under the frank of James Balfour.

Mr. Crosbie: They are not even Members any longer.

Mr. Benjamin: Oh, yes, but why, all of a sudden, is my hon. friend exercised about the matter when his Party has been the worst offender in the misuse of taxpayers' funds by Members of Parliament in the whole history of this Parliament and of every Parliament going back to 1867?

I think you, Sir, will have to come down hard and fast on what is contained in the newsletters of Members of Parliament, and we are prepared to live with that because we pay our bills. We might be slow but we pay them.

I have another letter which reads as follows:

Dear Supporter,

I want to bring to your attention our Party's financial statement for 1979.

I must say I am proud that individuals are responsible for more than 81 per cent of PC Party contributions—the highest per centage of all Canadian political parties.

I think he has the statistics wrong but that does not matter. The letter goes on:

We in the PC Party have always believed our roots sprang from a belief in individual initiative—

Et cetera, et cetera, ad nauseam. It goes on:

I am sure you will join me in expressing sincere gratitude to PC Canada Fund Chairman Terry Yates, and his board of directors,—

It is not a political Party, it is a corporation and it should be subject to the corporate laws of Canada. It goes on:

—for ensuring that our Party can meet its financial commitments—

I would be happy to provide the Chair with a copy of the envelope. By the way, Mr. Speaker, this letter was sent to me asking me for a donation. I have here more requests for donations from the PC Canada Fund than you can shake a stick at. It just shows how hard up the Tory Party is when it asks me for donations. I would give it something for a welfare cheque but nothing else. This letter came addressed to me at 21st Avenue in Regina and it was signed by, would you believe, the Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark).

I defy the Hon. Member for St. John's West and anyone else in the House to find anywhere else that kind of blatant soliciting of funds or peddling of so-called news at the expense of a Department of the Government so obviously aimed at pursuing political purposes.

• (1550)

Now that this can of worms has been opened, I invite you to go over the record and rule that from now on, in fact even retroactively, every Member of this House will be sent a Bill for the printing, stationery, and postage, the whole damn works.

Mr. Nunziata: Ed could not afford it.

Mr. Benjamin: I have a newsletter coming out next month and I hope you will examine it carefully. If I am wrong in any part of it, send me a bill and I will pay it. My Leader has already paid the bills for this one.

Mr. Crosbie: Let us see them.

Mr. Thacker: When?

Mr. Benjamin: Does the hon. gentleman not accept my Leader's word?

Mr. Lewis: He did.

Mr. Benjamin: He accepted the word?

Mr. Crosbie: Let us see them, that is all I am saying.

Mr. Benjamin: That means you do not accept his word.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, yes, we do.

Mr. Crosbie: You do what you like and I will do what I like.

Mr. Benjamin: Make up your mind. The problem is that when it comes to Newfoundland we have too many members that are liars.

Mr. Crosbie: You are not going to have another one from there.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I think you should rule that if Hon. Members from all Parties—

Mr. Tobin: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I think I can anticipate the point of order. The Hon. Member just said that when it comes to Newfoundland we have too many members who are liars. The Hon. Member was very careful not to say which ones were among the too many. I am sure the Hon. Member is only expressing a point of view which, perhaps, goes to occasional lapses of accuracy by Hon. Members no matter what part of Canada they come from. I am sure he is not trying to call any particular Member from Newfoundland or all members together liars, and I am sure he would like to indicate that through the Chair.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I apologize. I am perfectly prepared to withdraw it. I was trying to use a Newfoundland accent where they talk about "lawyers". If my colleagues from Newfoundland take offence, I withdraw unequivocally.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, may I just say a few words in conclusion?

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the House will permit the Minister to say a few final words, and then the Chair will consider the matter and report back to the House in due course.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, with reference to my question of privilege, I properly gave you notice in writing before two o'clock this afternoon of a question of privilege with respect to this letter sent by the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) to the electorate of Saint John's East. The NDP Leader alleges that he laid some kind of a notice of breach of privilege against me. It was not done in writing or in accordance with the rules and nothing has been produced which the Hon. Leader of the NDP is alleged to be complaining about, namely that a pamphlet or document has been sent to every household in Newfoundland dealing with the Canada-France fisheries dispute. No document was presented by the Leader of the NDP of which he complains. He says there is some kind of half-hour documentary film, about which he complains, paid for by the Government. I am quite willing to confirm that there is such a film, it was on television in Newfoundland last Thursday night, and I highly recommend that members recall it on their systems and have a look at it. They will find that there is absolutely no partisan political material in either that TV program or in the pamphlet which has not been produced in this House by the Leader of the NDP. How can the man complain of a document he has not seen? He is not a Newfoundlander and until someone down there mails him a copy of this pamphlet how can he complain? He has not read it, he has not seen it, and when he does read it and see it he will no longer have an excuse for his abysmal ignorance of the fishery problems in the Canada-France treaty.

There is no question for you to decide upon concerning my allegedly breaching the privileges of the Members of this House. None whatsoever. There is nothing before you.

If I might just address my own question of privilege, the Hon. Member for Oshawa says he paid for the mailing. If he says he paid for it, I am not going to say he did not. I will simply say that it would be interesting to see when it was paid and how much was paid for mailing 36,000 pieces of mail apparently.

Mr. Tobin: About $201.

Mr. Crosbie: About $201. That is quite a bargain, because if they all went out at 34 cents apiece for 36,000 pieces of mail it would be $12,240.

Mr. Benjamin: Do you accept his word or don't you?

Mr. Crosbie: I would like to see how much was paid for this mailing.

Mr. Benjamin: You do not accept his word? Make up your mind.

Mr. Crosbie: I want to see how much was paid for the mailing and by whom. If the Hon. Leader of the NDP says the Party paid for it, let us see the evidence. The way for that to be done is in the committee to be set up on this question, if Your Honour rules that there is a prima facie case of a breach of privilege. I would then like to see who paid for the stationery, because the stationery used is that of the Leader of the NDP in his capacity as an MP. Did the NDP pay for that?

Mr. Murphy: Yes.

Mr. Crosbie: We would like to see that, and the envelope as well. Those are some of the questions which remain unanswered.

Mr. Benjamin: You do not take his word?

Mr. Crosbie: They are not answered by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) tottering in here, living in the past and producing letters sent out years ago by Members who are long departed—

Mr. Murphy: Joe Clark?

Mr. Crosbie: —some of them to the Senate and some to the grave.

Oh, how it hurts these souls of sanctimony to be caught and hung on their own petard violating the rules of this House for partisan political advantage. Hypocrites anonymous no longer, just hypocrites, that is what they are.

I refer once again to the rules on allowances and services. Under unacceptable requests, as I read to you before, Part B concerns material of a partisan political nature, which this is. Then further on down we have reference to the reproduction on letterheads such as Party stationery and so on. If you go on to Part F, you will find reproduction of material prepared by Party research offices. We got the distinct impression today, and perhaps someone over there would like to deny it, that this material was prepared by the NDP research office. If so, they have no right under the rules to reproduce and send that material out under the franking privileges or otherwise of this House.

Was all this referred to the printing unit so that it could review the material to see whether it met with the rules? It was not.

Mr. Benjamin: It is automatically.

Mr. Crosbie: I would ask you to rule, Mr. Speaker, that there has been a prima facie breach of the privileges of the Members of this House.

Mr. Benjamin: It never went to the printing unit, you bonehead.

Mr. Crosbie: This kind of activity by the NDP has to be stopped. Just as they did in the B.C. provincial election, they are now attempting to break every rule in the book when it comes to the St. John's East by-election. But I will tell them this: They will never see an NDP Member elected from St. John's East, never, even if they send out 500,000 pieces of mail from now until the end of July. There will be no NDP Member elected, not even with this sanctimonious breach of the rules of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1600)

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has listened with care to the interventions which have been made. The Chair will consider the problem, which seems real enough, and will consider whether or not it is a question of privilege and, if not, how it might be resolved.

The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) has waited patiently to raise a question of privilege.

INTERVIEW GIVEN TO PRESS BY MR. DE COTRET

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I gave you written notice of my question of privilege at eleven o'clock this morning. It is with regard to an interview given by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) to a Globe and Mail reporter, Mr. David Stewart-Patterson.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Chair can assist the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member sent to the Chair a model notice which set out the points exactly. I invite the Hon. Member to go over those points. However, I point out that the Minister, who is alleged to have made certain statements which are the subject of the complaint, is not in the Chamber today. I propose, if this would meet with the approval of the Hon. Member raising the question, to hear the Hon. Member and then adjourn the matter to allow the Minister to reply, if he wishes, and to allow other Members to make comments. Given the hour and the fact that the Minister is not here, if that is agreeable to the Hon. Member, we will proceed in that way.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is most agreeable to me, Mr. Speaker. It is important that some background be given with respect to this particular issue. Some weeks ago the Standing Committee on Employment and Immigration was questioning UI commissioners who were witnesses before the committee. These commissioners included the Chairman, Mr. Gaétan Lussier, the Deputy Minister of Employment and Immigration. At that particular meeting a member of the committee moved a motion to have the witnesses sworn. The motion was carried and the witnesses were sworn.

In an interview with Mr. David Stewart-Patterson of the Globe and Mail last Friday the President of the Treasury Board is quoted as having said:

> It's a terrible precedent. I would never ask a public servant to testify under oath. The committee is really saying he's a liar. I don't believe that.

Later in the same interview the Minister is quoted as having said:

> I would have liked to see Gaétan Lussier walk right out of the room.

The President of the Treasury Board is not the ordinary, run-of-the-mill Minister. In fact, he is the Minister of public servants. In more specific terms, he is the Minister of the mandarinate. He is their Minister.

First, in my opinion, the Minister is imputing motive to the members of the committee which can only be considered as a reflection, not only on the members of the committee, but on all Members of the House.

Citation 50 of Beauchesne's, found on page 19, reads:

> A suggestion in a newspaper in 1941 that a member nominated to a committee could not act impartially was noted by the Prime Minister to be a breach of privilege but the House took no action.

In this particular instance the President of the Treasury Board is imputing motives or comments to members of the committee. He is suggesting that the members of the committee thought that Mr. Lussier was a liar and that is why the committee was putting him under oath to give testimony. Standing committees of this House have the power to put witnesses under oath. The Deputy Minister was appearing as a witness. The Minister is telling the Deputy Minister that he does not have to submit to Parliament. Who pays the Deputy Minister's wages? Who foots the bill for the Deputy Minister? Why, Mr. Speaker, the taxpayers of Canada do. Who are the voices of the taxpayers of Canada? The Parliament of Canada, every single Member in this House, is a voice for the taxpayer. We are even more so the voice of taxpayers in committee. In fact, committees today are recognized as doing extremely important work.

The Minister shows disrespect for the Parliament of Canada by counselling the Deputy Minister to ignore a standing committee and the House. We may not have a fifth amendment in the Constitution of our country, but who needs it when we have the President of the Treasury Board? Who needs a fifth amendment when the Deputy Minister is being counselled by the big cheese of all the mandarinate to ignore the committee and Parliament?

If you find that I have a prima facie case of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I would be willing to move the appropriate motion.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) who has put the matter very succinctly. Again, I commend him for the great care with which he framed his notice which was served in plenty of time. In view of the suggestion by the Chair that this matter be adjourned to another appropriate time when the Minister might want to be here, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has a comment.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments of my colleague and your suggestion. I will bring the matter to the attention of the Minister in order that he may take the matter under advisement and consider his course of action.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1986-87 (NO. 2)

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre), that Bill C-40, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): When the House rose there were three minutes left in the period for questions and comments following the speech of the Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier). Are there any questions? There being no questions, we will resume debate.

Borrowing Authority

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Madam Speaker, we are again debating a borrowing authority Bill, and the circumstances are again not very happy. The public debt is continuing to increase more rapidly than economic growth. This must be of concern at any time, but it is of particular concern when the Government is raising taxes, cutting services, and taking measures which run counter to increasing economic growth.

We in the Official Opposition have criticized every Budget brought down by the Conservative Government since it took office, and each for the same basic shortcomings. We are disturbed by the Government's apparent fixation in the short term and by the lack of concern and vision for what the country's future will be. Second, while we are sympathetic to the need to reduce the deficit, we have serious reservations, both about the choices the Government has made to meet this objective and about the poor results to date.

Canadians have not been well or fairly treated by the Government which made so many promises that have not been fulfilled. Since the Government came to power Canadians have been subjected to a regime of continually escalating taxes and dwindling services. Only corporations and the wealthy have been spared the steady erosion of their disposable income that started with the first Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in May, 1985. By April, personal income taxes will be 48 per cent higher, an increase of $43.3 billion, than in 1984-85, the year the Government was elected. For corporations, however, the increase is a mere 4.3 per cent.

This 48 per cent increase in personal taxes does not include the 62 per cent increase in federal sales and excise taxes, which account for a further $22.83 billion out of the pockets of Canadian consumers.

Although sales and excise taxes are levied at the manufacturers' level, they are invariably passed on to the consumers in the form of higher prices.

Sales taxes have not only been increased at every opportunity, they have been extended to cover a wide range of products not previously taxed.

In last year's Budget, the Minister of Finance announced a 3 per cent surtax on all individuals. It has been described as temporary, but no mention has been made of how long it is to be in effect. It is clear that in its search for revenue the Government has squeezed the average Canadian, the person of modest means, as well as the poor. Not only are the poor paying more, the measures brought in by the Government, including the deindexation of tax brackets and the elimination of the $100 federal tax reduction, are creating a situation where more and more low-income people are being added to the tax rolls even though their incomes remain static. The Government has quite deliberately put the burden of deficit reduction squarely on the backs of low-income and middle-income Canadians.

What has it offered in return for all these extended raids on the taxpayers' pocketbook? We were told that increases were necessary because everyone had to participate in reducing the deficit. Low and middle-income Canadians have done more than their share, but has the Government done its part? Has it succeeded in reducing the deficit? Let us remember that attacking the deficit was a key goal the Government set for itself. Yet two and a half years into its mandate its record on the deficit is less than impressive.

Despite all the belt tightening inflicted on taxpayers, the cuts in services, the new user fees and service charges, the deficit in fiscal year 1986-87, after four years of economic recovery, will be $32 billion compared to $32.4 billion in the last full year of the previous Liberal Government when we were just beginning to climb out from recession.

What happened? The Government has raised taxes by $6 billion but all of its self-congratulatory rhetoric cannot hide the fact that despite the tax burden added on Canadians in the name of deficit reduction the Government has scarcely managed to make a dent in it.

The high level of public dissatisfaction with the Government comes as no surprise. There is very little to show that the Conservatives remember the promises they made to Canadians.

Last week in the House I asked the Minister of Finance how he expected his policies to result in a better future for Canadians. The Minister's answer was less than satisfactory because it was merely a litany of some of the measures he has introduced, ostensibly to assist Canadians. He mentioned the refundable sales tax credit, but surely that is a very meagre provision. It is available only to those with annual incomes below $15,000. That still leaves out many families living below the poverty line.

The Minister also mentioned the prepayment of the Child tax credit as a measure introduced to improve the quality of life for Canadians. Again, this is a very restricted measure, available only to those whose incomes fall below $15,000 a year. It simply means that those families receive in November what they would have received anyway the following April. However, the approximately 300,000 Canadian families living below the poverty line but with incomes over $15,000 are not eligible for it. In any case, the money going back to Canadians through the sales tax rebate and child tax credit prepayment combined is still less than half of what the Government gets when it raises sales taxes by 1 per cent. I remind members that the Government has raised sales taxes by three per centage points since coming to power.

In his response, the Minister also mentioned increases in veterans' pensions and spouses' allowance. While that is all well and good, I point out that these are also classed as income for tax purposes and are therefore vulnerable to the Minister's hungry hidden taxes which are taking bigger bites each year from the incomes of Canadian seniors.

Finally, the Minister threw out the figure of 677,000 jobs having been created. How does he explain that there are still 1.25 million Canadians having trouble finding just one job? Unemployment is not likely to abate under the Government. In January this year unemployment was 9.7 per cent. After four years of economic recovery, this is not a result of which to be proud. Unemployment levels have barely edged down from their mid-recession high of 11 per cent. According to the forecasts of the Minister of Finance, unemployment will still be at an unacceptable 9 per cent by the end of this year.

The Government would appear to be satisfied with that because in its spending Estimates tabled on March 2 we see that it plans to cut its funding for job-creation by 12 per cent, from $1.8 billion to $1.6 billion. To be fair, not all job-creation funds are being cut. The Estimates indicate that employment programs for welfare recipients and refugees will receive some additional support.

However, I remind the Government of one very important thing which it seems to overlook. It is the relationship between education and employability. Education and training are the keys to success in the job market. This was recognized by the Forget Commission which was appointed by the Government to review the unemployment insurance system. In its report, the commission said that: "Canada must take immediate steps to put in place the ingredients essential for bringing about full employment". Among those ingredients the commission listed education, skills development and training. The commission report went on to say: "Failure to respond to this challenge will result in lost opportunities for all Canadians and will doom the least successful to a marginal existence on unemployment insurance and social assistance". The Government cannot fail to be aware of this. My colleagues and I have raised the matter time and again in our speeches and in questions in the House.

I find it utterly amazing, therefore, that the Government could have tabled on the one hand a Budget that abdicated job-creation to so-called market forces and, on the other hand, tabled spending Estimates that show millions of dollars cut from federal support to the provinces for post-secondary education and from federal job-creation programs.

The Estimates show a cut of $14 million in cash transfer payments for post-secondary education. When I raised the matter in the House, the Minister of Finance very indignantly responded that there will be no cut since the Estimates provided for an increase in tax transfers to the provinces. The provinces are not obligated to apply tax transfers to specific programs. There is no guarantee that there will be a replacement of the $14 million cut that the federal Government has made in the cash transfers that are specifically targeted to post-secondary education.

The Government says that it is concerned about unemployment. But how are Canadians to find this credible when the actions of the Government indicate the opposite? Things are especially difficult for those living outside central Canada, in regions where unemployment is worse now than it was in the depths of the recession. But what is the Government doing?

Since coming to power it has year over year reduced its support for the economically disadvantaged regions. Even with the grain subsidy program, regional development support has dropped by about $2 billion since the Conservatives took power. In his Budget Speech the Minister of Finance acknowledged that the regions are "hurting"; but he had no new programs to announce. The Estimates tabled last week showed, apart from the grain subsidy, very little to change the perception that the Government has abandoned the regions.

Recently, the Association of Mayors and Reeves made a special request of the Government for additional funds for municipal infrastructures: sewers, roads, bridges and so on. The mayors and reeves made very persuasive arguments in favour of protecting the quality of life and, in particular, in favour of creating employment. The Government refused their requests. However, it was not content just to refuse a request for assistance from municipalities, it has acted to make life more difficult for municipalities. The increase in the excise tax on gasoline has, of course, pushed up the cost of providing public transportation. The additional requirement for deducting the essential deductions from wages, that is, the Canada Pension Plan, unemployment insurance and income tax, which are now required to be deducted fortnightly instead of monthly, is adding to the workload of municipalities. Of course, the sales tax has hit municipalities very hard.

So we are really seeing the Government making a desperate attempt to look as though it were reducing the deficit while it is transferring more of its deficit to municipalities and provinces. But we do not see serious attempts to stimulate the economy and to take the type of measures that would in fact reduce the deficit in a long-term and constructive way.

We have had a great deal of rhetoric from the Government on the subject of tax reform. It was supposed to be the centrepiece of the February Budget. It has now been put off to some nebulous time in the spring. But there was a hint in the Estimates of what Canadians might expect from tax reform. It is why most Departments will have to adjust to further cuts in staff. We see that Revenue Canada is scheduled to hire over 400 new tax collectors. That does not seem to line up with the Finance Minister's promise that tax reform would make the tax system fairer, simpler and more efficient.

I now come to the Public Service. The Government has made much of how it would bring in greater efficiencies in the Public Service. Last year, the Government announced that it would consider instituting a system of what it called productivity bonuses for managers in the Public Service who have been successful in "meeting expenditure targets". What that seems to amount to is bonuses for those who were able to cut jobs. We learn from the Estimates that the Government will be spending about $4.5 million on bonuses for last year's work. The bonuses are for senior management, people who already earn anywhere from $50,000 to $120,000 per year. I have learned that their job performances will be evaluated in the normal way. Those who are judged satisfactory will receive a bonus of 1 per cent of their salary, while those judged superior or outstanding will receive a 1.5 per cent bonus. There are between 5,000 and 6,000 public servants in the senior management categories who will be eligible for bonuses. I estimate that a maximum of 10 per cent of these are women.

There are a great many more women in the lower ranks of the Public Service, in the categories that are more vulnerable to lay-offs and job elimination. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) has said that although 5,500 Public Service jobs, or person-years, were cut last year, in the end, because of transfers, natural attrition and so on, only 500 were actually laid off. It would be interesting to find out how many of those 500 were women and, in particular, how many were women supporting families. It would be interesting to know what standards and criteria the Government established to determine which jobs were to be cut and what their impact was on jobs held by women. This is information we have tried without success to obtain in the Public Accounts Committee.

We have also had a great deal of rhetoric from the Government on the subject of child care. The accredited day care centres can only accommodate 20 per cent of the children whose parents work outside the home. Of all the Canadian families with children under the age of 16, over one-half, or 51 per cent, are two-parent, two-earner families. There was nothing whatsoever in the Estimates with respect to day care. Yet last week in the House the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised the establishment of a "national comprehensive child care program". From where is the money to come? It is not in the Estimates. It is not in the Budget. We do not see any mention of it in the borrowing authority Bill. It is a program which is very much needed, but given the Government's success rate on keeping its promises Canadians may be excused if they wait to see action rather than putting their faith into words.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): If there are no questions or comments, I will recognize the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) on debate.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, we have seen hypocrisy piled on hypocrisy by a Liberal Party which, first, says it will not support the borrowing authority Bill, and then proceeds to castigate the Government with respect to all sorts of cuts in expenditures ranging from training programs to education to transfers to the provinces. Somehow these Members seem to say that we are supposed to operate the country and increase training, transfers and benefits, while not increasing taxes or borrowing. They seem to say that we are supposed to go behind Parliament Hill and pick from the trees out there the money which is on them. That is the hypocrisy of the Liberal Party. It is also the hypocrisy of the New Democratic Party. That is why members of those Parties could never form a Government.

The people of the country may consider us to be down a bit right now, but they will certainly be looking at Members opposite, too. As the people look at them, they will note what they did to the country. Over a period of time they took the nation from basically being in balance, where, aside from wartime, the taxes received were sufficient to pay the ordinary running expenses of the country, to the time when along came John Turner, the then Minister of Finance, now the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, who changed the system so that taxes went down on an indexed basis, and expenses went up on an indexed basis.

The year ending 1984-85 was the fiscal year when the present Government took over. The year had elapsed seven months by that time. The spending was in place, the orders were in place, and the staff were in place. If it had not been for Michael Wilson, our Minister of Finance, putting on the brakes in November of 1984, the deficit for that year would have bounced to well over $40 billion. As it was, it was $38.5 billion. Here they are, hypocrisy.

I have spoken on borrowing authority Bills since I was returned to the House in the 1979 election. I spoke when the Government was under the leadership of the Right Hon. Joe Clark. I also spoke when we were in opposition. In detail I have gone over the cost of the borrowings and the fiscal imbalance problems that are built into our system. As a Government, we have endeavoured to get a handle on it, get our arms around this problem. Bit by bit we are doing so, but it is not easy. It is very much like a frog trying to get out of a well. We go up a little, but then the expenses drive us down.

This year, $28.5 billion of what we have to spend will go in interest to pay for money that was spent years ago. It goes in interest to pay the bills run up by the Government, supported by the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson). No wonder we have our problems. Yet the Hon. Member suggests that we spend more and tax less. What an interesting idea. She suggests that we find a money tree. That is the essence of their position, go find a money tree. I suppose we should go and print it as does Brazil or Argentina. That is what they were in the process of doing. The Government is turning it around, but it is not easy with the problems of regional disparity that the Official Opposition has alluded to. The Government knows about them, and that there is an unemployment problem of enormous proportions in western Canada that did not exist. Western Canada was dragging the country along, and it can no longer do that at the present time with the horribly low prices for oil. At one point oil went down to less than $10 a barrel. Therefore, we are not able to receive the tax revenue from that source, nor are we able to cut back expenditures, because we have to pour more and more money into unemployment insurance and other benefits in order to help the west get back on its feet. It is not easy. But what does the Official Opposition suggest? It suggests that we should not tax as much, spend more, and run a larger deficit. "We will not let you have any borrowing authority", they say. That is a brilliant, progressive concept put forward by the Liberal Party.

Let us look at what we presently have in terms of deficits. In the seven months beginning this year, and I am going by the real figures, $72.5 billion was spent. That was approximately $3 billion more than the previous year. In the same period, revenue was up by about $6 billion. In going over the figures of Department after Department, and I wish to name some of them, I have found that expenses are down for the Departments of Employment and Immigration; Energy, Mines and Resources; Fisheries and Oceans; Labour; Public Works; Regional Industrial Expansion; Secretary of State; and Transport. We have been carrying and controlling the expenditures of Government by making sure that we receive value for every dollar that is spent, not because we wish to be niggardly or because we wish to cut back on the people who are employed, but because we have to. If we do not cut back on expenditures, more money will have to be borrowed. We have cut back rather dramatically on expenditures.

The Hon. Member for Trinity referred to bonuses to public servants who make their Departments run more efficiently. Somehow that is supposed to be the wrong idea. I suppose good public servants should not be rewarded for running their Departments more efficiently. Somehow it is a heresy that competent, progressive, capable people who bring about efficiency for their Department should not be rewarded. The Liberal Party would reward incompetence. The Government rewards competence, capability, honesty, and progressiveness.

Last year the House granted the Government $22.6 billion in borrowing authority. The Government had problems in western Canada, and the Finance Committee has heard about the problems in connection with the collection of taxes from the major oil companies. The tax collection from the major oil companies was down $1.5 billion. Also there were problems in the west with respect to the prices of grain, and the fact that the PGRT was completely abolished, but still continued with the obligations in connection with PIP grants. In spite of all that, the deficit rose, and for this year's operations $24 billion has to be borrowed.

In addition to that, in order to stabilize the currency, it was decided to put some money into reserves. One of the problems Canada has had for some considerable period of time is that the former Government ran down the foreign exchange reserves. This Government could run them down, I suppose, but not by much. It was decided that the reserves should be built up. This year the Government doubled our foreign exchange reserves and built them up to over $6 billion.

The $3.6 billion of borrowing authority required in this Bill for this year alone is to make up for the shortfall, and to make it possible for the reserves to be replenished. Replenishing the reserves is not increasing the debt of the country, because it is more money on one side of the balance sheet and more debt on the other side, but there is an asset to cover the liability.

If there are no reserves, there must be a line of credit with an American bank. For a long period of time Canada had lines of credit with American banks. That was the idea of the former Minister of Finance, the Hon. Marc Lalonde. He went to the American bankers and gave them a quarter of a per centage point for a line of credit. If there was trouble with currency, we whipped down south and borrowed money. That line of credit cost money.

Taiwan has $40 billion in reserves, and Germany has $55 billion in reserves. Canada managed to put $6 billion into reserves. That is not enough. We should have a stronger currency position. Our currency is traded world-wide. The other day our committee was in New York talking to the international bankers. The bankers in New York said that we in Canada should not sell ourselves short. They said that our currency was the fourth most traded in the world after the U.S. dollar, the British pound, and the German mark. It was not the French franc or the lira or the yen, but the Canadian dollar. It is important that the Canadian dollar be strong, that the Canadian dollar be preserved or protected. It is also important that we have those reserves. That is one of the reasons for the borrowing authority Bill.

I have not heard anyone on the other side talk that way. They are just yammering and stonewalling a Bill because they do not really understand it. It is an obligation on the part of their finance critics to understand it, not just talk about matters of no importance.

I should like to turn to the other portion of the Bill. The financial requirements this year, according to the Budget, are $21.3 billion. They are down from last year. For the year just ending, the financial requirements were $24 billion. Next year they will be $21.3 billion. This is a substantial reduction in financial requirements. We have asked for that $21.3 billion in Part II of the Bill, plus an additional $3 billion as non-lapsing borrowing authority. They sit back and ask why we want this non-lapsing borrowing authority. It is simply because we must ensure that our financial affairs are strong and that when needed we can step into the market-place to borrow money to stabilize our currency and keep our reserves in line, that is, to do those things which a Government that understands its obligations to its people must do. We need that non-lapsing borrowing authority.

In the course of this year in managing matters we have used up the non-lapsing borrowing authority. We had $2 billion available. It has been used up. It cannot be reinvigorated. The $2.6 billion in the Bill to help the situation lapses at the end of this year, so the only non-lapsing borrowing authority we will have will be the $3 billion in Part II of the Bill. It is necessary to have it.

Do we hear opposition spokesmen—the Liberal finance critic, the NDP finance critic, and the Ministry of State for Finance critic of the Liberal Party—say anything about the Bill or talk about the Bill? No, they ask why we cannot spend more. How are we to spend more and not borrow more? They say that we cannot borrow, so go out and print it. They say that we cannot tax any more. What are we supposed to do—not spend it or print it, or plant a tree and pick the fruit?

They complained when we cut the money to the CBC. They said that it was terrible. When we cut back on transfers to the provinces, they said that that was terrible. When we cut back some indexation in the Income Tax Act, they said that that was terrible. When they knew that we were spending nearly $12 billion on unemployment insurance and that we were not getting value for it, what did they say? When we established the Forget Commission to do something about it and to make some suggestions, they said that under no circumstances should we follow its recommendations because we might wind up getting value for the money spent on unemployment insurance in terms of training people, putting people back to work, and making the country more prosperous. They said: "Don't do that". When we increased taxes on gasoline, they said that we should not do that. How are we supposed not to have borrowing authority?

I would have thought that the Opposition would have taken a leaf out of some of the statements made by the Progressive Conservative Party when it was in opposition on these kinds of Bills. We pointed out to the Government of the day that there was waste and inefficiency in the unemployment scheme. We pointed out to the Government of the day that there were problems which might be cut back in terms of money to the CBC. We said that certain efficiencies could be had in transportation. We said that there were certain efficiencies which could be had in disposing of Crown corporations, that the Government did not have to pour out more and more money for those corporations to stay alive. We pointed out that there might be some productivity and growth in employment if they were sold off.

They do not make those suggestions. They do not give us a concrete method by which we can come to grips with the financial problems of the country. They just say: "No, don't spend here", "no, don't tax there", and "no, give me more". More, more and more is not effective opposition. Those Parties could not govern the country. They are not prepared to come to grips with the problems of the country or to look at our true fiscal imbalance.

Even this year, having increased taxes as we have, and having decreased expenses as we have, we will be short in terms of the money requirement to carry the country next year by $21.6 billion. In other words, we will not take in enough to cover our expenses. We have a real problem. We would expect suggestions from the Opposition on how to solve the problem, but we have not had a suggestion.

How are we doing? If we look at the budget problems since we took over, as the Minister mentioned, we were borrowing 28.8 per cent or 5 per cent less than we had been borrowing. The fact is that our deficit as a per centage of Gross National Product is down by 39 per cent, and our borrowing requirements as a per centage of Gross National Product are down by 42 per cent. It is a pretty simple situation. It is like that of a home owner earning $50,000 per year and having a $50,000 mortgage. In that event one has real problems. However, if perchance one's salary goes up and one has a gross family income of $75,000, it is substantially easier to carry that $50,000 mortgage.

Because of good management of the country and the fact that we have been able to have growth in the country which is higher than in any other OECD country, we have been able to come to grips with the debt problem. That debt problem, while enormous and totally wrong in itself, and while we should not be borrowing money we cannot pay with current taxes coming in, is less of a problem today than it was last year or the year before. We are getting our hands and arms around it, and I think the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) ought to be congratulated.

Mr. Manly: Madam Speaker, I have just one brief question for the Hon. Member. He indicated that he did not think there was a very effective Opposition. I have looked at where the Conservative Party is in the polls. Where does he think his Party would be in the polls if there were in his mind a truly effective Opposition? Would it be down at 18 per cent, 15 per cent, or 12 per cent? How effective does he want the Opposition to be?

• (1650)

Mr. Blenkarn: Madam Speaker, I am glad the member has raised the issue. One of the major problems we face is that over many, many years a great number of Canadians became used to the free lunch. They are encouraged in that expectation of a free lunch by the New Democratic Party and by the Liberal Party which promise all things to all people because all you have to do is have the Government get it for you. As we cut back on the free lunch, we get a number of people upset with us. We are prepared to take that penalty, but I do not think the Opposition is. It is about time the Opposition started being responsible. After all, if the New Democratic Party is so high in the polls, perhaps it can show Canadians where it is going to get the money for all the free lunch items which it keeps on demanding, crying for and mewing about in this House.

[Translation]

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for my colleague from Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn).

[English]

He referred to the Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) when he was Minister of Finance in 1975-76, the year he left office. In that year the Auditor General, Mr. MacDonnell said:

> I am deeply concerned that Parliament—and indeed the Government—has lost, or is close to losing, effective control of the public purse—

As you know, Madam Speaker, the current Auditor General, Mr. Ken Dye, in his report to the House of Commons for the last fiscal year made a comment under a very interesting headline entitled "Spending Public Money Wisely" which reads:

—if a deliberate effort were made to establish an environment that encourages managers to achieve satisfactory results at reasonable cost, significant improvements could be made in achieving value for money. I am therefore very pleased to see policy in line with that view of things.

Does my colleague feel that this very positive endorsement by the federal financial watchdog, the Auditor General, is a good endorsement of the Government's fiscal management?

Mr. Blenkarn: Madam Speaker, I think we have made some real progress in managing more carefully the public purse. We have a long way to go yet. I run into, as I am sure my colleague does, all sorts of instances where I think we might have done something more reasonably, perhaps at less cost. Perhaps there are things we are doing now that we might not need to do at one point. But I am really pleased, as I mentioned in my remarks, about the system whereby we are motivating our senior people in the Public Service to watch very closely how they spend money. We are now rewarding them on the basis of their competence of staying within the budget lines. I think members ought to be pleased. In times past we used to see Supplementary Estimates (A), (B), (C) and (D) and I remember a Supplementary Estimates (E). But last year we only got to Supplementary Estimates (B), and last year they stayed pretty close to the requirements. Let me say to Members of this House that the management of money has been far more effective than ever before.

Mr. de Jong: Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), a member that we in the Finance Committee hold in high esteem. Very often more wisdom comes forth from him in the Finance Committee than when he gives speeches in the House. We understand that when he gives speeches in the House he is on television and has to do his political posturing. If citizens would care to wade through the reports of the Finance Committee, they would find some worthwhile suggestions from the member on how we can cut some tax loopholes that corporations and the well-to-do, particularly, enjoy which would help reduce the deficit.

It is unfortunate in the member's remarks today that he did not go on at some length about some of the areas that should be cut off. One major reason that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) was unable to fulfil his deficit predictions was that his estimates of corporate taxes were down by some $2 billion last year. The Chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs also knows that there is well over $30 billion in unused business credits, losses, deductions still out there in the books. Some estimates go as high as $35 billion to $38 billion in business exemptions that still have not been used. This is a major concern to all of us. I am certain it is a concern to the Hon. Member, as it surely must be a concern to the Minister of Finance himself.

What suggestion does my colleague feel the Government should take to make certain that those profitable corporations pay their fair share and help carry the burden of reducing the deficit?

Mr. Blenkarn: Madam Speaker, I want to thank my colleague for his question. The finance committee, of which he is a part, has been involved in the question of tax reform and has heard witnesses on tax reform matters since before Christmas. We are bit by bit going after various industry groups that are paying little tax, if any at all. We have come up with a number of suggestions that we have given to the Department that I suspect will form part of the tax reform package. Having said that, I do not think that the tax reform package will really solve our deficit problem directly in raising new revenue to pay it down. It will not. But it will make it possible for us to reduce tax rates to the point where our businesses will be more competitive with those in the rest of the world and where it will be possible for individual tax rates for individual Canadians to be less than they are, as promised by the Minister of Finance.

I think in the long run, of course, that tax reform is essential to the growth of the country because it will enable the tax wedge to be more evenly dispersed in a fashion that will encourage rather than discourage economic activity, and the new economic activity that tax reform will bring hopefully will improve the fiscal imbalance about which I spoke earlier.

Mr. de Jong: Madam Speaker, is it possible to start my remarks now on the debate?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): There is only one minute left before five o'clock. If the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) wants to be recognized, I can do so at this point for some 30 seconds. He does know, I am sure, that he would lose his right to speak should he not be in the House when we resume debate.

It being 5 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

PUBLIC EMPLOYEES POLITICAL RIGHTS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre) moved that Bill C-231, an Act to provide for the political rights of public employees, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Madam Speaker, this is the third time we have had an opportunity to discuss a resolution or, in this case, a Bill with respect to the issue of political rights which I have had the honour of introducing into the House. I have brought the matter before the House repeatedly because I do believe that all political Parties have a responsibility to carry through on the promises made by all three Parties at the time of the 1984 election campaign. That promise was to change the federal law to remove restrictions to political activity by rank and file public employees working for the Government of Canada and to do so before the next federal election. In fact, I think that action should be taken in time, for example, for people in Ontario who work for the Government of Canada to be able to participate in a reasonable way in the forthcoming Ontario election.

What is different about this debate is that Bill C-231, which we are debating at second reading stage, is the first comprehensive Bill on political rights which proposes what could be put in place of the restrictions that now prevail in Section 32 of the Public Service Employment Act. It seeks to address this problem upon which all three Parties have made promises and to ensure that the freedoms in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms would apply to federal public employees. Thus the intention of Bill C-231 is to repeal Section 32 of the Public Service Employment Act and replace it with legislation to give the fullest possible protection of the Charter freedoms of expression, of association and of assembly to public employees consistent with the principles of a non-partisan Public Service based on merit.

I have talked about the issue of political rights for a long time, dating back to my service in the Ontario Legislature. For the last couple of years, I have talked with public employees, with people in government and with public-sector unions about what fair and balanced political rights legislation should contain. Bill C-231 represents what I believe is an appropriate balance and is a Bill upon which legislation can be based. There may be a need or desire to deal with some considerations the Government may have in mind in the legislative committee, but I believe this debate has gone far enough and the Government should express its support for the principle of the Bill in the House today. I would ask all Hon. Members to agree to allow this matter to go to the legislative committee and not to talk it out until six o'clock tonight.

I think my Bill respects the rights of public employees as citizens living in a democracy while recognizing the need for restrictions on those employees who offer public policy advice to the Crown or who occupy sensitive positions. The mechanics of the Bill are very simple. Political rights are restricted to a small group at the top of the Public Service, namely, deputy heads and people in confidential or managerial positions as defined by regulation. Those regulations would in fact have to be reviewed by Parliament before they could come into force, but that would mean that 92 per cent to 95 per cent of the people working for the Government of Canada and a similar proportion of those working for Crown corporations and Crown agencies would have the political rights that are spelled out in this Bill.

The Bill essentially embodies the recommendations made in the D'Avignon report of a few years ago, which also called effectively for a two-tier approach with restrictions on people providing policy advice or managing the over-all Public Service while the people who hold nursing jobs, drive trucks, work at word processors, do statistical analyses and do a vast range of other jobs for the Government of Canada would in fact have their political rights restored and would be able to act like anyone else with a private sector job.

The rights that would be granted are the following: the right to support a Party or candidate actively including being involved in a political campaign; the right to make financial contributions to a Party or candidate or to collect funds on their behalf, the right to be actively involved in a Party and to hold office in a Party without getting a warning note if one tries to attend a convention or hold office in a local riding association; and the right to express views and to participate in the democratic process.

The Bill also outlines a new procedure for public employees to become candidates themselves. Under this procedure, they would inform the Public Service Commission and unless they were in a restricted category would become entitled to leave of absence in order to stand as candidates. Also, a person who became an elected Member would have the right to return to the Public Service after being defeated or leaving politics after a certain period of time.

This Bill, I believe, embodies the freedoms in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. This is essentially the series of rights put forward by other proposals such as the D'Avignon report, and is very similar to provisions on political rights that prevail in a number of provincial jurisdictions particularly in western Canada and in a number of western countries which are like our jurisdiction, such as Great Britain and Australia. It is also very similar to the recent proposals put forward in the report on political activity and public comment and disclosure by Crown employees which was recently produced by the Ontario Law Reform Commission.

I would like to recall to all Hon. Members the promises made by all three political Parties, but in particular the promise made by the Progressive Conservative Party at the time of the last election. I am anxious to help the Government, and I do mean that seriously. Let me step back for a moment. I am anxious to see that the promises all of us made last time are kept. I hesitated a moment ago because I do not think this issue should be treated as a partisan one but as one on which all Parties can join constructively together. The Conservative promise, and it is similar to one we made, is the following:

> The PC Party believes that the present restrictions on political activity are unnecessary and likely not justifiable under the terms of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. While the rights of some senior public servants must be restricted in order to prevent conflict of interest, we feel that this issue could be addressed without disenfranchising over 200,000 public servants in the process.
> We believe that this matter should be addressed by an all-party Parliamentary Committee in consultation with public service organizations, and we believe the situation can be quickly resolved. Much of the work, after all, has already been done as part of the D'Avignon Report, but the current government has not demonstrated the political will necessary to implement the long-overdue changes.

You will have noticed, Madam Speaker, that the proposals I have outlined in Bill C-231 are certainly in principle very similar to the proposals enunciated by the Progressive Conservative Party in its response to questions from the Public Service Alliance and to the promises it made at the time of the last election.

Last week when I thought my Bill was coming up, I spoke to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) who is responsible for this particular area and I asked him what would happen, because he has made substantial progress on a number of other issues in what is called the six-pack of outstanding issues dealing with relationships with public-sector unions. Unfortunately, we have not seen that progress in this area. The Minister said, and I give him credit for it, that the Government will act on this particular issue. He said: "I would like to ask you to trust me and I believe that what we come forward with will be something that you will feel quite positive about. You may not agree with every last clause, I accept that, but the general thrust is something that I believe you can accept". The Minister said that to me, and I would hope that a spokesperson for the Government would reiterate in public that pledge.

My problem is that the Public Service unions have heard next to nothing about this issue from the President of the Treasury Board since the matter was briefly broached with him about a year and a half ago. Other issues have been resolved or are being resolved, but this issue has not been touched. That I regret because I think the time for action is now and in fact has passed. I would remind Hon. Members opposite that there are elections taking place and people are being deprived of their rights right now.

I deplore the way in which both the Public Service Commission and a number of senior bureaucrats and former bureaucrats have entered into this particular debate by arguing for no change when there is, I believe, a mandate for change, which did not just occur in my constituency of Ottawa Centre but occurred because all three Parties promised to act. In conjunction with a number of public servants, I have taken this matter to court and I intend to continue with the case which is now before the Federal Court of Appeal with the support of the Public Service Alliance which is financing the legal action. However, I believe that the appropriate place for this matter to be resolved is in Parliament, and that is why I believe that with all-Party support, we could send this matter to the legislative committee today and we could take action to bring rights to Public Service employees who are now deprived of them because of archaic legislation which can, must and should be changed.

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to make a few comments on Bill C-231.

We are called today to examine an issue which is not new by any means but which deserves a special attention. As a matter of fact, the issue of partisanship and political activities of federal civil servants is one that the Government has been thinking about for a fair period of time.

At the turn of the century, a certain number of laws were passed in order to guarantee a neutral and impartial federal civil service. Thus, our civil service has gained an excellent reputation and respect because it was able to strike a proper balance between the rights of the individual civil servant and those of Canadian citizens who are entitled to a competent and impartial public administration.

At the present time, civil servants are not allowed to take an active part in certain aspects of our political process. As an example, they cannot publicly endorse any candidate. However, they can be candidates themselves with the authorization of the Public Service Comission. The PSC can refuse this authorization pursuant to section 32 of the Public Service Employment Act if it is of the opinion that his usefulness in his position would be impaired.

Public servants can also participate indirectly in the federal, provincial, or municipal process through contributions to political parties and their voting right.

• (1710)

[English]

The principle of non-active participation by public servants has been challenged in recent years, as you know. More so since special interest groups are demanding specific individual rights. During the 1984 federal election campaign this was made an issue by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). The issue was brought before the Federal Court seeking an injunction and to declare Section 32 of the Public Service Employment Act unconstitutional. The injunction was denied. Together with a number of public servants the Hon. Member lodged a complaint before the trial division of the Federal Court of Canada. The case was heard in Ottawa in April of 1986, and in August of that year Mr. Justice Walsh delivered a 48-page decision. He clarified what public servants were allowed to do and what they were prohibited from doing within the scope of Section 32 of the Act. The Hon. Member was not happy with the decision, and this Bill comes as no surprise to any Member of the House, as he said a few minutes ago.

Through this Bill the Hon. Member proposes to lift the restrictions and grant some public servants the total freedom of political partisanship. However, it also imposes tougher restrictions on a number of other public servants. Clause 4, subclause 2, specifies the exception:

> A person employed in a managerial or confidential capacity as defined by the regulation or a deputy head may exercise the right set out in Clause 4, subclause 1(a), and Clause 4, subclause 1(c).

Those two subclauses deal with the right to vote and the right to make financial or other contributions to a political Party. Considering that the regulation mentioned in Clause 4 is not determined, let us suppose that the criteria for determining managerial or confidential exclusions are the same as those in the Public Service Staff Relations Act. Under that Act, approximately 7.5 per cent of all public servants are excluded for managerial or confidential reasons. If we take that figure and add to it those public servants such as senior executives and managers, personnel administrators, and others employed in non-represented groups, we come up with a figure of approximately 10.5 per cent of the total Public Service for which the Treasury Board is the employer and who would not benefit from this Act. That means that one out of 10, or approximately 20,000 public servants, would be subjected to more restrictive legislation than we have now. Would we be able to claim this Bill would provide public servants with the fullest protection of freedom of expression as guaranteed by the Charter of Rights and Freedoms? I do not believe so.

The Bill also provides for disciplinary action. It gives the Public Service Commission the authority to make necessary regulations setting out disciplinary procedures. Until now disciplinary action has been dealt with as part of the normal disciplinary procedure. Under the present rules, disciplinary action is taken under the provisions of the Public Service terms and conditions of employment regulations made pursuant to Section 7 of the Financial Administration Act. Incidentally, these procedures provide management with the appropriate flexibility in disciplinary action to weigh both the offence and the measure proposed. Furthermore, the procedures encompass redress procedures which have passed the test of time.

In his decision following the complaint by the Hon. Member or Ottawa Centre, Mr. Justice Walsh stated: "Since it is not seriously disputed that some limit must be placed on political activities of civil servants to maintain public confidence in their perceived impartiality in carrying out government policies, it would appear that this is a sufficiently important objective to justify the statute imposing some such limit, even if of necessity this would override to some extent some rights and freedoms protected by the Charter".

In an article in The Ottawa Citizen dated March 6, 1987, there was reference to the fact that the Ontario Divisional Court dealt with this very question of public servants entering politics. The judges agreed that the provision they were dealing with did infringe on rights guaranteed by the Charter. However, they said that the restrictions do not breach the Charter because they are reasonable limits imposed in a free and democratic society. The court's decision of last August referred to other questions.

The Hon. Member referred to the D'Avignon report. That report referred to the British system. It suggested it would serve as a good example for the Public Service of Canada. My friend, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre, made specific reference to that. I suspect he will do so again today. The system is based on a categorization of positions according to the nature of the responsibilities and the degree of implication of the incumbents in the political process and their role as advisers to the Government. Those who occupy positions not described as sensitive are given full freedom of political action, while those in positions of a sensitive nature are forbidden to participate actively in any political pursuits. This solution seems at first glance to be attractive, but it may not be the appropriate solution for the Canadian environment. However, we believe it is possible to strike a happy balance between the basic rights of Canadian citizens and the principle of neutrality and impartiality in the Public Service of Canada. We recognize that there are risks associated with increasing the political rights of public servants, but we are not opposed to reviewing the current restrictions with a view to ensuring that there are no more than is necessary to ensure the maintenance of an impartial Public Service. However, we do not believe the legislation proposed by the Hon. Member will serve the best interests of the Government, public servants or the public. Rather, we believe a better long-term solution will be found and we are firmly committed to addressing this important issue.

I agree that public servants want a freer rein in their political efforts. However, from what I have heard from those assembled here in the nation's capital, it does not seem to be a burning issue. Certainly in my riding there are many, many thousands of public servants, but I have had little or no representations on this. I have had a few from the odd personal constituent, but what they are more concerned about is job security, promotions, fair competitions, secure pensions, dental plans and many more other pressing issues. I should add that, in spite of the rules, many of them do work actively in campaigns. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) is negotiating, as the Member said. There have been discussions with the unions to reach an honest solution to this problem. I am convinced, Madam Speaker, that the Conservative Government will reach that solution fairly and soon.

[Translation]

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to speak to this Bill. I should like to commend my colleague from Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) for being very consistent in the presentation of this issue. I had the pleasure of taking the floor when he introduced it the first time, and again at another stage of that reading. I have not changed my mind with respect to certain problems I have concerning the way some of the provisions of his Bill are drafted. As a matter of fact, this is why I had prepared a legislative measure on the same topic of political rights, but I was advised to withdraw it when I was appointed Parliamentary Secretary last fall.

I have it here and I would like to explain why I have problems with the Bill of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre, although I must admit I am very glad to see he does not resort to a partisan approach on this issue of political rights, as he often did on other matters. Then it becomes quite difficult for us Government Members to help him because we often deal with issues which are of interest to all Members of the national capital region and we would like to work closely together to improve the lot of those of our constituents who are public employees.

In my own Bill, for instance, I mentioned not only— I had the same approach to the effect that our public employees, who are Canadian citizens, must have the same rights as those of other citizens. After all, Madam Speaker, we have reached the point where prison inmates have the right to vote in an election. So why should a public employee lose his political rights? Except that I had given a more specific definition of categories of people who should enjoy full rights when it comes to running in municipal, provincial or federal elections, including men and women who, in my opinion, would not be able to run or actively support a Party without causing prejudice to the service they give taxpayers, or even to the work which Parliament and the Government must do.

For instance, I specifically mentioned all deputy heads, which the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre has also done. I do not see how a deputy head could be a candidate and continue to carry out his duties after or during an electoral campaign while publicly supporting the political views of a given party.

I also said that the immediate assistant of the deputy head, that is either the Assistant Deputy Minister or the Associate Deputy Minister, was in the same position of having access to privileged information and of being able to influence Government policies and the administration of his Department. I therefore cannot see how such a person could be given these rights. However, if we exclude the deputy head and his immediate subordinate, there are a great number of public servants who, in my opinion, should have all the rights including that of being a candidate in provincial or municipal elections without having to ask for leave to do so, except if they occupy positions where they are dealing with Government policies, for instance as program or planning director. I believe that my colleague for Ottawa Centre speaks in this regard of confidential positions, and I have some difficulty with that as I do not understand exactly what he means. I know that he says that there will be regulations to define such positions, but in my own bill, I specified that this applied to policy development and planning, as I could not see how such rights could be granted to employees with such responsibilities.

But in the case of all other positions, whether secretarial, maintenance, or whatever, which have nothing to do with Government policies, I do not see why an employee would not have every right to become a candidate, to campaign or to support a party as long as he does not do so during working hours. I also added, Madam Speaker, that employees should have the right to refuse to work for a given party, as some of my constituents have told me that they were faced with the obligation of supporting actively or indirectly one party or another because they were public servants. I therefore believe that the rights of public servants should include the right to refuse to support a party and to campaign indirectly or directly for such a party.

Mr. Cassidy: This is covered by Clause 8.

Mrs. Mailly: The difference is in the way that this is defined, Madam Speaker. The Hon. Member says that this is covered by Clause 8 of his Bill. Let us go there immediately:

—no employer shall refuse to continue to employ an employee or otherwise discriminate against an employee in regard to employment or any term or condition of employment on the ground that the employee refuses to engage in partisan work—

The Hon. Member is right, but I achieved the same thing differently when defining this right. It was a different approach.

All this goes to say, Madam Speaker, that we generally agree on this issue, but have a different approach. This is why I find it difficult to support this Bill.

There is also another aspect. The Hon. Member said earlier that we are getting near the time for provincial elections. For my part, I believe that there should be an exception. I was saying to myself, yes, a public servant should be able to seek election on the provincial level, but I cannot admit that he could campaign for and support a provincial party with as much freedom as he would do on the federal level. I have a problem there, because I will realize he is a federal servant. We should therefore draw a line in his political commitment to another level of Government. This is an idea that I have, a suggestion I am making—we should look at that aspect.

This is why, Madam Speaker, I cannot support the legislation as it now stands, but I agree with my colleague for Ottawa Centre that it is about time the issue were seriously discussed by a committee of the House. Now, we cannot refer the Bill to a legislative committee and have the same kind of discussion as if it were referred to a standing committee of the House that could look into all aspects of the matter. This means that all Members who are interested in political rights could express their views and then we would have a legislation that should be introduced, rather than going for the Bill put forward by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre, referring it to a legislative committee where we would be restricted by—

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, I have come to a point where I believe the matter of political rights should be referred to a standing committee of the House. I suppose this should be the Committee on government affairs, or something like that, so that we may really look directly into that. I know the President of the Treasury Board has discussed the matter with the unions during the negotiations. The ground is well prepared. But I believe we should stop referring to bills all the time and that kind of thing, we should really be looking at the matter seriously in order to bring forth a legislation that will please everybody, that will preserve and indeed allow for the full use of the political rights of our public servants as Canadian citizens.

[English]

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to rise today and support my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), on Bill C-231. This is an extremely important measure which would give political rights to federal public servants. One would hope that similar legislation would be adopted in all parts of Canada at the provincial level. It is certainly very much needed.

We accept the principle that all Canadians have political rights. We have a Charter of Rights entrenching these rights to political participation, yet we have the anomaly that more than 200,000 public servants at the federal level alone are deprived of certain of their rights. They have the right to vote, of course, but they do not have full rights to political participation. There are no good reasons for this.

In the past, when there were measures to prevent the participation of public servants, when the civil service did not have the merit principle, that did not stop corrupt practices. These are completely different measures. We need good, clear conflict of interest guidelines, not only for public servants but for politicians. That is certainly a different matter. We do not want to deprive public servants or any other Canadian of their right to participate fully in Canadian society.

I am sorry that the Conservative Party spokespersons are backing away this afternoon from a principle upon which they agreed in the last federal election. It is quite clear that this matter became an issue in the last election, not only in ridings containing many public servants, but throughout the country. All three Parties said they were in favour of removing the restrictions which are currently legislated.

A representative of the New Democratic Party is introducing a Private Member's Bill to do precisely that, yet the Conservatives are nitpicking about particulars. The member who just spoke stated that the whole subject matter should be vaguely studied by a parliamentary committee, as though no one had given any previous thought to this subject. This is a second reading debate in which the principles of the Bill are debated. It is possible to make amendments at the committee stage and I urge members opposite to let the Bill go to committee where they can introduce amendments for those areas in which they feel there should be additional restrictions. Restrictions on the activities of public servants are reasonable.

The Charter of Rights does not mean that every right is absolute. In fact, a clause in the Charter states that there can be restrictions where they can be justified in a free and democratic society. Restrictions on senior public servants with respect to policy areas would be reasonable. There are more than 200,000 federal public servants. Many of them have jobs in which there would be no reason for them not to fully participate politically.

Indeed, certain forms of political activity are presently allowed, such as making contributions to a political Party. Therefore, public servants are not completely removed from political activity, but there are these anomalies in which they can do one thing but not another.

This Bill would make it possible for members of the federal Public Service, except for carefully defined exceptions to vote; to support actively support a political Party or a candidate; to make financial or other contributions to a political Party; to solicit or collect funds; to be a member of a political Party, to hold office in such a Party; to express views or engage in activities in relation to matters that form part of the platform of a political Party. In other words, they can take part in political debate. That is normal and healthy in a democratic society.

The Bill states that an employee who is elected to office at the federal, provincial or territorial level shall resign from the position that he or she held prior to taking the oath of office. If the employee referred to is subsequently defeated or not re-elected, that person would have the right to resume the position. I believe that should be supported so that we may encourage more people to run for political office.

Finally, the Bill states with respect to discrimination that:

> The Commission, in prescribing or applying selection standards under subsection (1), shall not discriminate against any person by reason of race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, age, sex, marital status, disability, conviction for an offence for which a pardon has been granted or political belief or affiliation.

The key point is the addition of "political belief or affiliation".

Other jurisdictions have added this phrase without any ill effect. I can cite the experience in the Province of Saskatchewan when the CCF Government took over in the 1940s under Premier Tommy Douglas. It improved the function of the civil service and introduced the merit principle. It began a system of fair tendering for contracts and allowed political rights for civil servants. While political rights were not legislated for the Province of Saskatchewan, many people exercised those rights without that protection. Certainly they were not free to exercise those rights on behalf of the Party not in power before the CCF was elected. The combination of the best of both worlds was to allow political activity as well as change the system to make it one that is responsible, fair and operating in accordance with the best principles by which Canadians want government to run. I believe Canadians want to see such a goal achieved.

I want to refer to remarks made by Professor Reg Whitaker in an analysis of the effects of creating the possibility of political activity for public servants. He notes that jurisdictions that have taken such action have not had to retract these rights once they have been given. They have found that public servants have acted responsibly and the public has continued to have confidence in the Public Service.

Professor Whitaker also notes that prior to 1918 when there were not these political rights, there was rampant patronage. Preventing public servants from taking part in legal political activities did not stop them from other political activity.

He notes that financial donations are allowed about which the public has not shown any concern. It has not been an issue because people have not seen it as a cause of problems. Why should the ability to make a financial donation be accepted, yet the ability to work in a local riding association and go door-to-door to talk politics be forbidden? Professor Whitaker does not see that restrictions on those kinds of activities make any sense.

There have been no consequences to workplace harmony which can be shown to have flowed from the abolition of controls on public servants' free time electoral participation. There is evidence from where this has been tried that it has been quite acceptable.

The section that forbids this kind of political activity interferes with the fundamental freedoms of public servants far more than is necessary to ensure the impartiality of the Public Service and the public perception of impartiality. It cannot be justifiable to restrict the fundamental freedoms of persons whose freedoms need not be restricted. The Government has not shown that these freedoms need to be restricted.

If the Government wishes to introduce very careful restrictions, it can do so.

Let me quote further from Professor Whitaker. He states:

> Democracy must mean more than the simple right to vote, or it has little substantive meaning. Democracy includes the right to participation by all citizens in the democratic process, and full debate on the issues. In a representative democracy, this means that citizenship includes, as an essential attribute the right to participate in "partisan" political activities, namely the election of candidates for office and the right to attempt to influence the electoral choices of fellow citizens through electoral activity.

I regret that Conservative Members are unwilling to support this measure. Let me remind them of the following promise made by the Conservative Party in the last election campaign about political rights for public servants:

> The Progressive Conservative Party believes that the present restrictions on political activity are unnecessary and likely not justifiable under the terms of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. While the rights of some senior public servants must be restricted in order to prevent conflict of interest, we feel that this issue could be addressed without disenfranchising over 200,000 public servants in the process.
> We believe that this matter should be addressed by an all-Party Parliamentary Committee—

Of course, one will be formed if the House lets this Bill go to committee:

> —in consultation with public service organizations, and we believe the situation can be quickly resolved.

We do not need a longer study. This question has been at issue for many years. We know what the answers are. It is a question of perhaps making some very minor amendments. But we would like to see the House proceed to getting this Bill discussed in committee so that we can have measures with respect to which all Canadians can be proud which allow full political participation for the great mass of our public servants.

• (1740)

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Madam Speaker, I am rising once again to speak on an issue which certainly deserves debate—more than debate, it deserves action.

When I first spoke on this issue two years ago I had reason to hope that the Treasury Board would be taking swift action to define and expand the political rights of over 230,000 adult Canadians who have until now been prevented, often by bureaucratic decree, from the expression of political views which other Canadians take for granted. These are Canada's public servants, people who are prevented from speaking on political issues, people who are forbidden to answer telephones or deliver handbills for candidates in provincial or federal elections, people who are told, sometimes not by Parliament, the guardian of our democracy, but by an unelected regulatory agency that they must not join their fellow citizens in raising their voices on issues which may be of profound importance to them.

What I am saying now is not new. I have spoken in the House on several occasions outlining in detail the arguments in favour of extension of political rights to public servants, and outlining and attempting to refute the arguments of those who would deprive public servants in Canada of those rights. I have written on this subject in the journal Policy Options, published by the Institute for Research on Public Policy in Canada, in The Ottawa Citizen and Le Droit. Several of my colleagues in the House on this side of the aisle and on the opposition benches have also spoken at length on this subject.

Is it any wonder that this debate here in this Chamber today raises a lingering whisper of debates gone by, a depressing sense of déja vu? I have refrained, myself, from introducing legislation on this subject because I believed what the Treasury Board said when it told us that the Government would introduce legislation.

My Party made a clear commitment during the election campaign to introduce legislation which would define the political rights of public servants and which would extend to most public servants the rights other Canadians take for granted. I do not take this commitment lightly. Initial delays introducing legislation were justified on the basis of the need to investigate the inter-action between extension of these rights and other activities of public servants.

But the debate on the subject has already been very detailed. In my view there can be no justification for refusal to honour the commitment my Party made during the last election campaign. Yet, there is a genuine risk that resolution of this issue will be postponed again, and yet again that legislation will not be brought forward by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) before the next election. There is a very real chance that we will have no legislation at all, that the commitment we made during the last election will not be honoured. Indeed, we had an open admission just about two weeks ago from a spokesperson for the Board that despite the years of debate legislation probably will not be introduced, and certainly not be effective, before the next election.

What does this mean for public servants? It means that, once again, hundreds—perhaps thousands—of public servants across Canada who have participated liberally—if I may use such a pejorative term—in the election campaigns of all three political Parties will be looking over their shoulders worrying that Big Brother, working out of the Public Service Commission office, will nail them for stuffing envelopes or painting lawn signs. It means that drivers, clerks or technical staff whose work may never touch on policy will remember that they cannot join their neighbours in the simplest of election tasks without risk to their jobs. It means that, once again, all of the political Parties in the House will be deprived of the services of talented, intelligent people who may be prevented by the Public Service Commission from taking a leave of absence and running for office.

I was myself a public servant. I received permission to take a leave of absence prior to the last election, and for five months I lived without income to run for our Party in the last election. But other individuals, talented, articulate and competent, who could have served our political Parties, this House of Commons and our country were denied the right even to seek the nomination of a political Party in the past. This basic right was denied not by Parliament, carefully considering the implications for our system of Government, but by unelected officials who determine who shall be entitled to political expression, and who shall not.

I would like to be clear about this. I am not happy with the way existing legislation has been interpreted by the Public Service Commission, interpreted in such a way as to regulate and limit severely the political rights of public servants. But, having said that, I believe that the basic responsibility for this problem lies with Parliament, with this House of Commons, which in the past delegated to these unelected officials the powers which they now wield.

The statement by the Treasury Board spokesperson to which I referred that legislation will probably not be forthcoming in time to be effective before the next election is just not good enough. The Progressive Conservative commitment remains. It cannot be hidden in a cloud of obfuscation or buried beneath yet another litany of excuses. Political responsibility, and our honour as people who are prepared to live up to our commitments, demand that this issue be faced now—not avoided for another two years.

Mr. Cassidy: There is a member who stands up for his principles.

Mr. Daubney: If the Government will not face this issue, then the House must turn to the vehicle of Private Members' Bills to get action.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) has been active, and I am pleased that he is now active in the House and not just in the courts of Canada, as I have been active in seeking the extension of political rights to public servants. This Bill, if it were to come to a vote, would go a long way toward resolving the problem. Unlike another Bill on this issue on the Order Paper and Notices put forward by one of the Hon. Member's colleagues, the Bill we are debating today does not provide for blanket extension of all political rights without exception to all public servants. It recognizes that some limitations must be placed on the expression of political views by public servants holding sensitive policy development or managerial positions. Such limitations are, indeed, appropriate where it can be demonstrated that work is of such a sensitive nature that open political affiliation would jeopardize the public servant's ability to deliver services to the public, or advice to a Minister.

Any Bill which seeks to extend political rights must, as this Bill does, accept the reality that some limitations are necessary and appropriate. However, I believe that this Bill, as much an improvement as it is over the status quo, still leaves too much discretionary authority to the Public Service Commission, particularly when it comes to the determination of which public servants should be entitled to rights and which should not. I believe that Parliament itself must specify which categories, which position classifications, are entitled to political rights without review by unelected officials, which categories function in an area of policy development and managerial sensitivity important enough to limit their rights, and which categories must be defined by review of individual job descriptions by the Public Service Commission.

We have a model for such specification in the report of the D'Avignon Commission which reported almost eight years ago on this subject. The object of such specification is to remove from the Public Service Commission the right to determine, for 70 per cent or more of the public servants, who should enjoy the rights of political expression, and who should be deprived of them. We must limit the power of this unelected body to intervene in the exercise of democratic rights. This House itself must take the responsibility for extending or withholding political rights to specific categories of public servants. Some people whose work is not obviously sensitive or, conversely, whose jobs are not clearly outside the realm of policy development, would still need to have their political participation determined by the Commission. But the arbitrary exercise of power by the Public Service Commission would be substantially reduced, and all public servants would know where they stood.

In summary, we need legislation which implements the recommendations of the D'Avignon Commission. In the absence of such legislation from the Government I intend to introduce a Bill in the near future which would make these changes. In the meantime, I commend the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre for the Bill he has introduced and which we are debating today. I would prefer to be voting on this issue and not simply debating it yet again, but I say to the Hon. Member and to all of Canada's public servants that that day will surely come.

• (1750)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question? On debate, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to address once again a subject in which I am keenly interested, namely, a Bill that would provide public employees with the right to full participation in political life.

Indeed I want to congratulate the author of this Bill, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). The purpose of Bill C-231, like many similar Bills, is to provide public employees, and I am reading the explanatory notes: "with the fullest possible protection of the freedoms of expression, of peaceful assembly and of association guaranteed by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and consistent with the principles of a non-partisan and merit-based public service.

The political rights recognized in this Bill would be granted to all full and part-time employees except those appointed by Order-in-Council and those in confidential and managerial positions as defined by regulation. Before coming into force, these regulations would be subject to the approval of the House of Commons.

Madam Speaker, if we look at the Index to the Debates of the House of Commons, I think there has not been one session since I first came to the House, since 1972, when this proposal was not raised, namely to extend to federal public servants the right to participate actively in political life.

I am of course one of those who has always supported the argument that this right—and it is a basic right in a democratic society like ours—is based on the concept of freedom of speech for all public servants. However, I have always qualified my support with the restriction that public servants in a position to advise the Government on policy are excluded. It seems to me it would not make sense for a senior official, a senior executive like an assistant deputy minister, to be in a position to advise the Government on policy and at the same time go into politics and criticize that Government.

Having said that, I recognize the contribution made by the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney) with his recommendation, having supported as did many of his colleagues in this House the D'Avignon report which, Hon. Members will remember, had been sponsored by the Liberal Government of the time as one of two initiatives for the purpose of possibly amending and updating the Public Service Employment Act and the Public Service Staff Relations Act. As far as the Public Service Employment Act is concerned, Section 32 dealing with political activity has always been strictly interpreted by the Commission. Come election time, the Public Service Commission has always placed civil servants in a somewhat delicate position reminding them, through memos that they were not to participate in any way in the political process.

God knows, Madam Speaker, that in my riding as well as in many others, civil servants do participate in it in many ways, from newsletter preparation to telephone roll calls.

I feel therefore it is somewhat hypocritical, if I may use that term, to forbid people to do something while allowing it at election time. And the only time a civil servant may be called upon to answer for his action is when another candidate during an election will complain to the Public Service Commission. As long as his grievance has not been recorded, a grievance which would trigger an investigation from the Commission, nothing happens.

On the basis of my own experience and according to Canadian history a grievance has never been filed with the Public Service Commission to the effect that this or that person had worked for or against a candidate.

Once again it is a legislation which is not universally applied but which is nevertheless sometimes strictly interpreted by the Commission.

Hon. Members will remember that the D'Avignon Report did not deal extensively with political activity. In fact, hardly four or five pages—four pages in fact—deal with participation in political activity. I remember quite well that when the report was made public, I had personally moved a motion, which comes up quite often for discussion in this House and the arguments put forward are based on a system which exist already in England. The idea was to divide the Public Service in three parts or groups. Part I would include all occupational groups in which the duties of all positions are sufficiently sensitive in nature to require the denial of the right to participate actively in the political process to all incumbents, namely all senior executives and all senior managers.

Part II would include the occupational groups in which the duties of the positions vary, so that neither a blanket denial nor complete political freedom can be supported.

I suggest that as a physician, a chiropractor or even as an engineer employed the Public Service, Madam Speaker, I cannot see what impact I could possibly have on the Government's policy in the areas of foreign affairs, defence or general politics.

I feel therefore that professionals involved in a specific activity would not embarrass a Government by taking part in the political process.

And the third group would include the occupational groups in which the duties of all positions are such that incumbents could be permitted full political freedom. I think that there are some 80,000 civil servants—that is quite a number—who could easily be free to fully exercise their right to political activity.

This is a brief summary of the report tabled by the Special Committee on the Review of Personal Management and the Merit Principle. There is a matter of serious concern to my constituents and with which I should like to deal during my remaining few minutes, namely the independence of civil servants while carrying out their duties. For instance, they say that if a public servant is employed in a sensitive position at Customs or Unemployment Insurance where he or she or she has to judge the relevance of arguments brought forward by an individual, I am told that if that person were perceived as having a bias in favour of or against the Government, the decision he or she would make would not be judged to be, how should I say, magnanimous or independent.

That being said, Madam Speaker, I think this could be regulated by committee. Activity could be restricted. I think it is pretty clear that it would be in the interests of the public servants themselves to appear before the committee after second reading to explain how they would discipline themselves and how they intend to convince the general public that they would still be objective in the performance of their duties. I don't think we should be too concerned about the caveat I made, namely that in some cases, public servants might show political bias in the performance of their duties. As far as I am concerned, objectivity and the merit principle will prevail.

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of order, Madam Speaker. I would point out that the speech of the Hon. Member will eliminate any possibility for the House to refer this matter to a legislative committee. Indeed I would urge the Hon. Member to refrain from speaking at all.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): You know very well that this is not a point of order. The Hon. Member rose on debate and I gave him the floor. The Hon. Member for Gaspé (Mr. Marin).

Mr. Marin: Madam Speaker, there is hardly any need to remind the House of Commons that Parliament, the Government now in office and the Public Service whose responsibility is to serve the Government do not exist for themselves. They serve the people of Canada.

No matter what measure they are debating in the House, parliamentarians can be sure they will not go astray if they are guided by the following criterion, to wit: Does the measure serve the interests of the Canadian people, yes or no?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but the hour provided for consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 42(1), this item will be dropped from the Order Paper.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—ARM CONTROL—CRUISE MISSILE TESTING

The House resumed from Friday, March 6, consideration of the motion of Ms. Jewett:

That this House, alarmed by the role of air-launched Cruise Missile deployment in violation of SALT limits and alarmed by threats to the integrity of the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty, aware also of the possibility of a negotiated elimination of all medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe, calls for strong initiatives by the government to strengthen arms controle and disarmament measures including the termination of Cruise Missile testing in Canada,

And the amendment of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra):

That the motion be amendment by deleting the period at the end thereof and adding the following words:

"in a manner consistent with Canada's NATO and bilateral obligation."

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 13(5), the House will now proceed with the deferred recorded divisions on the amendment and the main motion concerning the business of supply.

Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra), which was negatived on the following division:

PETITIONS

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 106, I have the honour to present two petitions. One petition is signed by a number of fishermen who point out to Parliament that in July, 1985, there were 1,093 fishermen collecting unemployment insurance, and by February, 1986, there were 29,847 fishermen collecting unemployment insurance. Obviously, this indicates the need for fishermen to receive unemployment insurance. Therefore, the petitioners are asking Parliament to ensure that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) reject any recommendation that would deprive fishermen of their right to collect unemployment insurance, and asking the Government of Canada to enter into consultations with all representatives of fishermen in Canada to ensure that improvements are made to the program that is offered to fishermen.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to present a petition on behalf of a number of western Canadians who are concerned about the Government's proposal to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs. They believe that these changes will severely increase drug prices for Canadian consumers, and restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy the necessary prescription drugs. The petitioners are asking Parliament to reject proposals which will increase these drug prices for Canadians.

OPPOSITION TO ESTABLISHMENT OF MILITARY BASE

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I have great pleasure in presenting a petition on behalf of 130 Canadians who are mostly from the Province of Alberta. The undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to restrict the Department of National Defence from using, utilizing, purchasing, leasing, or in any way establishing a military base on the eastern slopes of the Rocky Mountains of Alberta, particularly in the Highwood River Valley area abutting the Kananaskis Provincial Park. As in duty bound your petitioners humbly pray.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present three petitions from residents of Winnipeg, and towns in Manitoba such as Starbuck, Sanford, and Oakville. The petitioners state that the federal Government proposal to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers, and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. Therefore, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a duly certified petition from a number of Canadians who are concerned about unemployment insurance for fishermen. They point out the great dependence of fishermen on unemployment insurance. The petitioners fear that the Government is contemplating removing the right to collect unemployment insurance. The petitioners wish to see the unemployment insurance program for fishermen improved. The petitioners call upon Parliament to ensure that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) rejects any recommendation that will deprive them of their right to collect unemployment insurance, and further to enter into consultations with representatives of fishermen to improve the unemployment insurance program for fishermen.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1986-87 (NO. 2)

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Monday, March 9, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-40, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to start off debate today on Bill C-40 which requests greater borrowing authority. We have heard much in the House from both members of the Conservative Party and of the Liberal Party about the deficit. When we start discussing borrowing authorities, it generally boils down to a debate concerning the deficit. Historically opposition Parties criticize the Government for not managing its affairs better and thus producing the type of deficit we have today. Then of course the Government justifies it by claiming that it was the previous administration which caused inefficiencies in government, and that it is doing everything possible to alleviate the deficit. Thus we end up involved in this type of discussion on the deficit.

It surprises me when I hear spokespeople from the Liberal Party during this type of debate. It was not too long ago when they formed the Government and laid the groundwork for the type of deficit we are facing today. It is also surprising when one hears the comments of Conservative government Members. Their justifications in this debate were quite different than when they were in Opposition. In fact, a sort of flip-flop occurred.

The Conservatives today are taking the same line which the Liberals took just a few years ago, and the Liberals are taking the line which the Conservatives took just a few years ago. In essence, nothing has changed.

It is true that the policies of the former Liberal Government are a great part of the reason for the deficit today, but not necessarily the type of spending which that former Liberal Government undertook. When the Conservatives were in Opposition—and they still believe it as the Government—they claimed that the reason for the deficit was Governments had been living beyond their means, and Governments had spent too much on human and social programs.

However, let us look at the figures in industrialized nations or in OECD countries of the world. We begin to realize that what we as a country spend as part of our Gross Domestic Product on social programs is below that of almost all other industrialized countries. We spend less on old age pensions, education, family allowances, and social programs such as unemployment insurance and housing than do Holland, Germany, England, Italy, Sweden, and Denmark. What we as a country spend on social programs is less than what almost all other industrialized countries spend on social programs. Compared with other industrialized countries, Canada is not spending more on social programs. In fact, as a country we spend less. In part that is understandable.

Given the resources of the country and given the relatively young age of our population, there should be no reason that we in Canada should not have full employment and more opportunities for Canadians to find meaningful work with an adequate income to supply the basic necessities and needs.

When I hear Conservative Members telling us and the Canadian public that the reason for the high deficit is that we have lived beyond our means and our social programs have been too rich, I say balderdash. The facts do not support that contention.

Let us take a close look at the cause of the deficit. The real reason for it is that Liberal Governments and Conservative Governments have not been collecting the taxes they should have collected, mainly from the corporate sector. If there is a free lunch in Canada today it is one enjoyed by corporations. When we look at the statistics we begin to realize that the total number of profitable corporations which paid no taxes in 1983 was 79,196. Almost 80,000 profitable corporations did not pay a cent of tax. Their profits were roughly $13.3 billion. In other words, $13.3 billion in profits were not taxed at all. Those corporations did not contribute a cent to the operations of the country. That is a free ride and a free lunch.

If we break down that figure, we begin to realize that the number of profitable financial corporations which paid no taxes in 1983 totalled some 28,000. Their profits were $7.2 billion. Not a cent of tax was collected from the 28,000 financial institutions which had profits of over $7 billion. The number of corporations with profits of over $25 million which paid no taxes in 1983 was 64. In other words, 64 companies with profits of over $25 million did not pay a cent of tax. That is another free lunch, and the figures continue.

When we talk about the deficit and the reason for it, let us not be fooled by propaganda which claims that our old age pensioners are on a free ride, that we pay too much to mothers and fathers to raise their children, that our unemployment insurance system is too rich, that our welfare system is too rich, or that we spend too much on education, hospitals, and other health services. No, that is not the reason for the deficit. The reason for the deficit is the free ride enjoyed by large corporations.

I think the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) finally recognizes the problem facing Canadians. In the last month we heard statements from him suggesting that corporations have been on a free ride a little too long. He is now beginning to say that they should be paying their fair share. It has taken some time for a Minister of Finance to awaken to what is happening, and well he should.

When we look at the Minister's statements during his budget presentation and at the documents which he tabled at the time, we begin to realize why his deficit projection from the previous year was out by several billion dollars. The Minister rose and said that the reason for it was the $1 billion contributed to agriculture, most of which is going to western agriculture. That is a red herring. It is not $1 billion out of last year's finances, it is only $300 million, and $700 million will be coming out of the 1987-88 year.

We begin to realize why the projections of the Minister of Finance for deficit reduction were off when we look at the Budget Papers and see that the projections for corporate income tax for the 1986-87 year were off by some $2,260 million. In other words, we find that some $2.260 billion in tax dollars the Minister expected to raise from corporations were not raised. His projections for 1987-88 are off by some $2.325 billion. Again, the revenues the Government was expecting to raise from corporations will be down by over $2 billion in this financial year. That is why the deficit projections were off and why we have the type of deficit we have today. It is not because average Canadians are on a free ride with Government largess, it is because the corporate sector has not been paying its fair share.

We see the same story told again through other tables presented in the Budget Papers. The Minister of Finance expects that corporate profits will increase over 20 per cent this year while revenues from the corporate income tax will only increase some 3.9 per cent. Profits will go up by over 20 per cent but public revenues from corporations will only go up 3.9 per cent. That is why we have the problem with the deficit, Mr. Speaker. There are folks out there who have been earning a lot of money who have not been paying their fair share.

Who are the people who have been taxed? When you look at the statistics, you begin to realize that it is the middle and the lower-income Canadians who have been carrying the burden of deficit reduction. An average two income family with two children whose income was $15,000 will have its tax increased over 90 per cent. These people are living well below the poverty line, Mr. Speaker, yet that family's income tax has increased over 90 per cent.

It is not just higher income tax that families are paying, they are also paying more in sales taxes. The Government has dramatically increased the amount of taxes Canadians are paying through sales taxes. Not only is the Government now taxing manufactured goods, it is taxing granola bars, frozen yogurt, pop, vitamins, other pharmaceuticals and a whole host of items that were never taxed before. The major burden of that tax falls on lower income Canadians because a higher percentage of their income must go to the basic necessities of life.

Since this Government came into power, people earning $15,000 a year are now paying 90 per cent more in taxes. People living at the poverty level earning $20,812 a year have seen their taxes increased by 35 per cent. The middle-income person with an average income of $42,000 a year has seen his income tax increased by 32 per cent. However, the individual earning over $100,000 a year has been helped by the Government. It has offered the individual earning over $100,000 a year all sorts of new tax loopholes. These individuals will only see their income tax increased by 2 per cent. Here we have a person living well below the poverty line, a two-income family with two children, earning $15,000 a year whose income tax has increased by 90 per cent while another family earning $100,000 a year has seen its income tax increased by 2 per cent. Is this fair, Mr. Speaker? That is the major question we have to ask today.

Take the case of a single pensioner in Vancouver with an income of $9,312, that is the old age security and the maximum CPP. After deduction—his or her taxable income is $2,521 and the tax payable is $273 federal tax and $4 in individual surtax, This single pensioner is trying to eke out a meagre existence on $9,000 a year, which is well under $1,000 a month on which this individual tries to exist paying tax. But, what else is there?

We find that TransCanada PipeLine in 1980 on $102.5 million in profits and in 1981 on $154 million in profits did not pay one cent of tax. In other words, $256 million in profits from TransCanada PipeLine did not yield one cent of tax. With a tax rate of just 25 per cent, we would have been able to reduce our deficit by $64 million, had TransCanada PipeLine been paying 25 per cent tax on the millions of dollars it has earned. But no, the TransCanada PipeLines of this world can go through life and not pay any tax. Meanwhile, the single pensioner in Vancouver on a meagre existence of $9,000 a year ends up paying tax. Is it fair, Mr. Speaker? We in the New Democratic Party say it is not fair and it is about time that this unfairness was corrected.

Let us look at a family of four with one earner, one dependant spouse and two children, with an income of $22,500—on the poverty line. This family lives in Toronto. That earner will pay $2,329 in federal tax and $35 in individual surtax. This family does not earn very much, well below $2,000 a month, and is trying to raise two children in Toronto with high housing costs and is expected to pay and contribute over $2,000 to reduce our deficit.

Let us take a look at trust companies. The Guaranty Trust Company of Canada paid no current taxes in 1978, 1979, 1980 and 1983 and a current tax rate of only 1 per cent in 1984 on profits totalling $32 million. With a tax rate of 25 per cent, the Guaranty Trust Company would have paid $8 million in taxes. One could go on with a list of trust companies that did not pay one cent of tax. Yet somehow the Government considers it fair that that family who is living on the poverty line in the City of Toronto trying to raise two kids is expected to pay over $2,000 in taxes while trust companies do not pay one cent.

The Liberals and Conservatives justify these tax breaks because they claim investment is the engine of growth. Give the corporations a tax break and their profits will create jobs. With an unemployment rate that continues, and with the hundreds of billions of dollars in lost revenues from corporations because of tax breaks, surely that theory has proven to be non-workable. We in the New Democratic Party believe that the real engine of growth is people. If people have enough money to spend on the basic necessities of life, on a roof over their heads, some food on the table and clothes on their backs, that will create jobs, Mr. Speaker. The dollars they spend will create the domestic demand that will surely allow Canadians to work.

We in the New Democratic Party will be opposed to this Bill because we do not believe that the strategy of deficit reduction followed by this Government and the previous Liberal Government has worked. In fact, it has only supplied a free lunch and a free ride to the wealthy of Canada.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend my colleague for what I think was an excellent presentation of some of the basic economic and moral problems this country faces today. Someone earning over $100,000 a year will be facing a tax increase of approximately 2 per cent a year while someone living on the poverty line earning around $15,000 a year will be facing tax increases of 90 per cent. This indicates very clearly that there is a direct line between the wealth of the rich and the poverty of the poor and that direct line is the tax system. It is an unjust tax system and even the Government has finally recognized that.

The Government has promised tax reform and has talked about it for a number of years. We expected it would be here with the present Budget, but of course it has now been postponed. We do not know exactly what will be in the tax reform, but I would like to ask my colleague if he could indicate to the House what hopes he has for the proposed tax reform the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) will bring in.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, we all wait with bated breath the Minister of Finance's tax reform proposals. I believe it is important to the Government from a political point of view to bring in tax reform. The American tax reform proposal has seen top individual tax rates being reduced to some 28 per cent. I believe that around $130 billion of extra revenue will be taken out of the corporate sector in the United States just by plugging up loopholes. Many individuals will benefit from that. Whether this Government will do the same, I am not certain. We will have to wait and see.

Politically, it would seem that this Government could very well use tax reform as a method of attempting to get itself re-elected in the next election. That is why I personally believe the Government keeps postponing tax reform. It is something it should have given indications of in 1984, and certainly tax reform or at least steps in that direction should have been included in the 1985 Budget. The Government has kept postponing it and postponing it. I suspect we will see tax reform around the time the next election will be called as a political ploy.

I also suspect that through the tax reform package, personal income tax will drop, and will perhaps drop substantially. However, I am afraid that the Government will take back the extra tax savings of Canadians through a new type of business transfer tax or a tax on consumption. The Government will put dollars into our front pockets but will take them back out of our back pockets. The Government will take the dollars back through a value added or business transfer tax which is a hidden tax, a sales tax, a tax Canadians will not see and will not be aware of when they pay it. In essence, tax reform could very well be a shell game; now you see the pea, now you don't, now you see your tax dollar, now you don't.

It is unfortunate, but I do not believe that the Government is philosophically committed to the notion that it is people, the meeting of human needs, that should be the engine of growth in Canada. I believe the Government, like the Liberal Party, is committed to the notion that if the guys at the top do well, eventually those benefits will trickle down and at some stage there will be more employment. It is called the trickle-down theory. In essence, it means that if we feed the horse a lot of oats, eventually the sparrow will get some. The oats will pass through the horse and the sparrow will be able to get the horse's droppings. This trickle-down theory has not worked.

I would also like to point out to my colleague and to the House that a cruel joke has been played on the poor of Canada. The poor are the victims, the casualties of the fight against inflation. The House will recall that in the mid-70s when inflation was raging at 12 per cent and up, there was a national and, in fact, an international resolve to wrestle inflation to the ground. The causes of inflation were many but essentially it was human greed, the greed of the oil industry, the greed of OPEC and the greed of primary producers. Those in the market-place who had the strength got on the bandwagon and there was this inflationary effect. Governments decided to wrestle inflation to the ground through a restrictive monetary policy. This meant that a great many people lost their jobs, including industrial workers, white-collar workers, lawyers and accountants. These people are still without jobs and they are the ones who have been been taxed by the Government ever since it has come into power.

Mr. Ravis: Mr. Speaker, I was beginning to think that the Hon. Member's entire presentation was about the trickle-down effect and droppings. I would like to follow up on the question put by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly), about waiting for tax reform with bated breath.

I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I too am waiting for tax reform with bated breath, but I am waiting for it with a positive attitude about what will come from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) who, in 1984, brought forward a very realistic economic agenda. Now that we are two and a half years into our mandate, there are some very impressive performance indicators showing that we are on the right track.

Having been here for two and a half years, I am convinced that if one holds something up to a member of the NDP, even if it is the best piece of legislation in the world, he or she will show us how it can be ripped apart. Members of the NDP feel that there must be something wrong with it, that there must be a negative side to it. They wonder how it could possibly be good. I would ask the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) if members of the NDP will take that attitude when the tax reform package comes down. Will they say that there must be something wrong with it and that there is nothing good about it? I think people across Canada, and I have been speaking to many of my constituents in Saskatoon and other parts of Canada, are getting very tired of the negative aspect of the House of Commons which does not appear to be working in the best interests of Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There is another Hon. Member who has a question so I would hope that the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) would make his answer very succinct.

Mr. de Jong: Right, Mr. Speaker. First, this Party has been talking about tax reform and the unfairness of our tax system for decades.

Mr. Ravis: And we're doing something about it.

Mr. de Jong: I would claim that if it were not for the New Democratic Party and the fact that we have made this an issue, the fact that we have done research and the fact that we have risen in the House to point out the corporations that have not been paying their fair share, it would not have been an issue today. As a Party we are committed, and that became one of our priorities after the 1984 election, to focusing public attention on this issue and to making it a public issue for public debate. We have done that and we hope the results will be positive. When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced that he was going to introduce tax reform my Leader and other members of the Party, including myself, were hopeful and optimistic. We welcomed that announcement. I hope that after the recommendations for tax reform have been worked through the Finance Committee in a non-partisan way we will produce a fair tax system we can all be proud of and for which we can all take credit.

Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the Member's comments. He spoke about Liberals and PCs justifying the tax breaks and the hundreds of millions of dollars of lost revenues. He mentioned many times that members of the NDP do not think that is fair. In fact, he used the words "cruel joke" on one occasion.

The Government of Manitoba spoke in similar terms about the Scientific Research Tax Credit. At one point the Minister of Finance there called it "legalized theft". It was discovered later that there were two Manitoba cabinet Ministers who had invested and made money in that program. Therefore, the cruel joke is the NDP's assertion that it has the market cornered on social conscience. Does the member understand the concept that you can have no social justice without economic stability?

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, of course you need economic stability in order to have progress and social justice. That is why the New Democratic Party talks about economic planning and having an economic strategy.

The Hon. Member made a point about individual members in the Manitoba cabinet. What individuals do and what the Party policy is are two different things. Second, if the law of the land allows certain things, can we blame individuals for taking advantage of it? They were only taking advantage of the law which was put in place. The Scientific Research Tax Credit was an open invitation for a raid of the Treasury. It was introduced by the Liberals and continued by the Conservatives until it became so outrageous that they finally had to shut the whole show down.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the period for questions and comments is now terminated.

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to add a few comments to the debate on Bill C-40, an Act to provide borrowing authority for the Government. Simply put, this Bill would provide the Government with the authority to borrow an additional $3 billion for the 1986-87 fiscal year and $21.3 billion for the 1987-88 fiscal year.

There can be no doubt that the timing of the Bill before us is appropriate. The Government is following the pattern for an improved budgetary process which was set out in a paper tabled by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in May of 1985. The same pattern was followed with the last borrowing authority Bill. One of the suggestions presented in that paper, which the Government has been actively pursuing, was that parliamentary approval for borrowing authority for each upcoming fiscal year should be sought at the same time as the Budget is presented.

The logic behind this proposal was that the budget presentation in February would set out the financial information for the new fiscal year for parliamentary study. This course of action has now been followed for two consecutive years. Therefore, this debate on borrowing authority has a complete picture provided by the Budget and the spending Estimates as we consider this request for borrowing authority.

The $24.4 billion total figure mentioned in this Bill is comprised of the projected financial requirements of $21.3 billion, as I indicated, plus a $3 billion reserve to provide flexibility to meet contingencies such as fluctuations in the level of Canada's international reserves. This is very prudent in light of recent exchange market developments. For example, in the months of January alone about $2.5 billion in borrowing authority was used as a result of exchange market operations. The proposed $3 billion reserve will provide the Government with the on-going flexibility which is needed to rebuild its cash balances. While the $21.3 billion for the fiscal year 1987-88 is an enormous amount of money, it compares favourably with the necessary amounts borrowed since we have taken office.

The fact that these figures are trending downward reflects the very welcome fact that over the past three years the Government will have reduced financial requirements by 28.5 per cent, from $29.8 billion in the year in which we took office to $21.3 billion in 1987-88. This is the lowest level in six years. Relative to the size of the economy, financial requirements have fallen from 6.7 per cent of the gross domestic product to a projected 3.9 per cent. This steady reduction in the demands made by the Government on the nation's savings is one of the most important factors underlying our steady economic growth and advance.

Yesterday I listened to the debate of the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) as she put forward some of her Party's opinions on this borrowing authority Bill. Since she is a member of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, I decided to listen carefully to what she had to say. She said that we must spend more, tax less, and reduce the deficit, all at the same time. She castigated the Government for its various spending cuts. She then zeroed in on the incentive bonus which was provided for senior civil servants if they effectively ran their departments and controlled spending within those departments. I cannot understand why someone would criticize another for doing a good job. The only thing which is appropriate when you do a good job is incentive to do a better job next time. Does that mean that Liberals want to reward incompetence? That is what it sounds like. I am glad I am on the side of the House which rewards efficiency and discipline in the controlling of government spending.

The Member's answer with regard to what we should be doing was to increase training, increase spending, and increase transfer payments while at the same time reducing the deficit. I must ask what fairyland school of economics that Hon. Member attended. I saw in her biography that she attended the London School of Economics. We all know that it has a leftist bent, but I am sure that they did not teach the fairyland, hypocritical type of economics which we were hearing yesterday.

At the end of the Hon. Member's comments she had the audacity to say that we should let actions speak rather than words. Well, let us do that. Let us look at the actions of her Government and her Leader, when he was the Minister of Finance, and compare those with the actions of the present Government. Let us allow the actions to speak rather than the words.

From 1972 to 1975 the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) was the Finance Minister. Let us examine a few indicators of what took place during those years. When the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition became the Finance Minister he had a $481 million annual surplus rather than a deficit. In three years he turned that $481 million surplus into a $4 billion deficit. Under his leadership spending rose by an average of 23 per cent a year. The gross national debt grew by 50 per cent and deficit costs grew by 85 per cent. The inflation rate doubled from 5.1 per cent to 10.6 per cent. That is not surprising. When someone says that we must spend more, tax less, and yet somehow reduce the deficit, the only option left is to print money, and that is exactly what that Minister of Finance did. It is not surprising that inflation went up.

During his tenure as Minister of Finance the Bank of Canada rate rose by 4.25 percentage points. Under his leadership unemployment rose by 1 per cent and the youth unemployment rate rose by 2.5 per cent. From 1980 to 1984, when the Hon. Member for Trinity was on the Government side and was obviously voting for these kind of measures, interest rates went as high as 23 per cent. The unemployment rate reached almost 13 per cent. Inflation rose about 12 per cent. Many small businesses went bankrupt. Some families lost their homes because due to high interest rates, they were unable to meet mortgage payments. The deficit rose from $13.3 billion to $38.3 billion, almost tripling in size during those four and a half years.

Let us now look at what has taken place since September, 1984, to the present. Since September of 1984 interest rates have fallen by 4.8 per cent. On a five-year, $50,000 mortgage that means a saving of $132 a month or $1,584 per year for the home owner. Unemployment has fallen from 11.7 per cent to 9.7 per cent today. Youth unemployment has fallen from 18.3 per cent to 14.4 per cent. Inflation has remained in the 4 per cent range for two and a half years. That is the most stable price environment we have enjoyed since 1971. On a seasonally adjusted basis housing starts are up 67 per cent since September of 1984. In my riding some construction companies are having difficulty finding workers because the demand for new houses is so great. When we took office the deficit was running at $38.3 billion. That is now down to a projected $29.3 billion for the fiscal year 1987-88. We have had a decline in the deficit for three years in a row for the first time in 30 years. That is a very significant achievement given the size of the deficit when we took office. We also have to remember that interest has to be paid on the deficit. When you cut the deficit from $32 billion to $29.3 billion you are also cutting the amount of interest you have to pay. Looking at the amount of interest we have saved also indicates the tremendous progress we have made. We still have a long way to go, but at least we have made an excellent start.

During the 1980-84 Liberal Government, spending grew by an average of 15.1 per cent. Even before the recession Liberal Government spending rose, in 1980-81, by 14 per cent. The Liberals cannot use the excuse of an increase in spending because of the recession. They were already doing it before the recession started. From September, 1984, to the present this Government has cut the spending increase to an average of 3.9 per cent or just under the inflation level. Therefore, for the first time in 14 years, public debt charges are growing more slowly than the economy.

In summary, I believe the Main Estimates tabled on March 2 represent a further significant contribution to the Government's record of expenditure management. This is the third consecutive year that the growth rate in the Main Estimates has declined. This year's increase is the lowest in a quarter of a century. In 1987-88 the size of the Public Service will be at its lowest level since 1980-81. This track record clearly reflects this Government's strong commitment to sound management and to the operation of an efficient and effective Public Service while maintaining and even expanding some programs which serve the real needs of Canadians.

I say we should look at the facts and look at the record. Rather than listening to an NDP spokesman, a Liberal spokesman or even myself, let us look at what the Auditor General has said about the control of spending throughout these years. For the period 1972 until 1975, the Auditor General commented on the last year that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition was Minister of Finance. He was deeply concerned that Parliament and, indeed, the Government had lost or was close to losing effective control of the public purse. Financial management and control in the Government of Canada was grossly inadequate. That was the record established by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and the Liberals, and that is the kind of financial situation they want to bring back should they become the Government.

Now let us look at what the Auditor General said this past October. In tabling his report he said that his sense was that there is an interest in better accountability and better management. He went on to say that he believed Members of Parliament and the taxpayers of Canada should be heartened by the genuine improvements. That is our record. We have seen the Liberal record and now we have seen our record over the last three years. I would put our record on the line any time. It speaks for itself and the comments of the Auditor General then and now support that record 100 per cent.

I have to say to the Hon. Member for Trinity, or any opposition Members, but particularly those in the Liberal Party, that I challenge them to tell it like it is. Let us hear all of the facts, not just the things they want to talk about. Let them not speak out of all sides of their mouths at the same time. They cannot do it. How can they say spend less, yet add to existing programs, increase training and transfer payments, and at the same time reduce the deficit? That cannot be done. I ask Hon. Members in the Liberal Party to start telling it like it is, given these facts. If they want to be critical, let us have some constructive criticism. Let them tell us what they would do if they were in our position today. I think they would find our approach is working extremely well.

Look at the economic indicators, the spending controls put in place by this Government, and the deficit reduction. Look at what is happening in the economy. Look at what outsiders are saying about Canada. The Japanese sent a study group here in 1976 and they were very disheartened. They could not recommend investment in Canada. However, last November they were here again and they said things have changed. This Government has brought spending under control. It now makes sense to invest in Canada. Therefore it is not just government spokesmen saying that. The Auditor General said it, the facts say it, and outsiders are saying it.

I ask members of the Opposition to get their act together and give us some constructive criticism in harmony with the facts. They will find that what we are trying to do goes in the right direction. Sure, we might cut less in one area and more in another. I am willing to look at that and debate it. However, we can start being honest about the facts. Let us stop playing politics with the Canadian taxpayer and the Canadian economy and start telling it like it is.

Therefore I commend this Bill for speedy passage.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, after that tirade one wonders whether one should even question the self-righteous in this House. Canadians are not totally convinced that this Government is all perfection, as the Hon. Member says. I do not think they will turn those thoughts around very quickly. Can the Hon. Member explain why the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), in August of 1984, in Toronto, went on the record saying that a Conservative Government would reduce the deficit by cutting government expenditures and not by increasing taxes. Canadians know that individual taxes have gone up 53 per cent since the Government took office. Everyone knows that the cuts in spending have taken place in important organizations and government institutions in Canada. The Government is even putting the long-term energy future of this country at stake. There have been drastic cuts in the field of science and technology. However, during the 1984 election campaign the Minister of Finance said his Party would not increase taxes to pay the deficit, but would cut government expenditures in order to reduce the deficit.

• (1200)

The Hon. Member concluded his remarks with great oratorical rhetoric. I want to tell him that the rhetoric he used at the end of his speech is the rhetoric Canadians are becoming used to from the Government. I will let the Hon. Member respond to that important question. I will ask him a second question if I have the opportunity.

Mr. Reimer: Mr. Speaker, there are two or three elements to the Hon. Member's question. The first concerns the reduction of the deficit without taxation and the second deals with some of the cuts. I noticed the Hon. Member watching me toward the end of my remarks when I said that we can debate whether cuts in one area are more or less appropriate than cuts in another area. I agree that it is fine to debate the appropriateness of specific cuts in certain areas. However, at the same time it must be agreed that we should make progress in reducing the deficit. I assume that is what the Hon. Member meant and, therefore, was following my suggestion to be constructive in looking at some of these issues and where cuts are made.

Let us consider the question of deficit reduction. The Minister of Finance said in his Budget Speech, as reported at page 3575 of Hansard:

> When we took office, government spending on all programs was growing by almost 14 per cent a year—

An average of 15.1 per cent from 1980 to 1984. He went to say:

> Since then, program spending has grown on average by only 2.8 per cent a year, well below the rate of inflation. Spending on government programs is being reduced in real terms and relative to the economy. About 63 per cent of the decline in the deficit relative to the size of the economy will have been achieved by reductions in spending.

The fact that 63 per cent of the reduction in the deficit is through cuts in spending shows the way in which we are attempting to reduce the deficit. Through that method we have achieved 63 per cent of the reduction in the deficit to date.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member boasted that the Government's policy has been able to reduce the unemployment rate some 2 per cent. The Hon. Member obviously comes from southern Ontario. What advice would he give, not only to me and opposition Members for our constituents in British Columbia, but to his Conservative colleagues from British Columbia where the unemployment rate in January this year was 15 per cent? What advice would he give his Conservative colleagues from Newfoundland when the Forget Commission report said that if the people of Newfoundland had the same participation in the labour rate as they do in Ontario there would be 38 per cent unemployment in Newfoundland? What advice would he give his Tory colleagues in seven provinces across Canada where the unemployment rate today is higher than it was at the height of the recession in 1981-82? What advice would he give his colleagues from other parts of Canada when they realize that of the 137,000 jobs that were created between January, 1986 and January, 1987, all but 5,000 of them were in Ontario? Surely the Hon. Member must realize that the growing disparity among regions should receive government attention in its budgetary process and that the borrowing authority should be directed toward more job-creation and eliminating this growing disparity amongst regions? Will he address that question?

Mr. Reimer: Mr. Speaker, there is no question that the benefits from the figures I have been using are being enjoyed more in southern Ontario than anywhere else in Canada. However, that does not make the figures inaccurate.

Mr. Manly: It makes them irrelevant.

Mr. Reimer: It does not make them irrelevant either. They simply point out the situation on a national basis. There is no question that there are regions in Canada in great difficulty. The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté) and the Government are dealing with that through measures such as those to assist people in the steel industry in Cape Breton. We are working on this serious problem, but that does not make any of the figures I have used invalid.

I welcome the Hon. Member's comments because it appears he is beginning to support our trade talks with the United States. British Columbians tell me that it is essential to have this trading agreement with the United States so that rather than trade wars and countervailing duties there is a system whereby we can secure and enhance our present trade. I welcome the Member onboard in supporting these trade talks with the United States so that all regions can begin to enjoy the benefits that southern Ontario is enjoying today.

Mr. Ravis: Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment my colleague because I believe the figures he has cited accurately represent the story as it is. The most frequent message I heard prior to the 1984 election was to come to Ottawa to deal with the horrendous spending and borrowing and bring about some semblance of economic recovery in this country. I heard that message many times and I am surprised that Liberal Members are not prepared to recognize that the situation is beginning to improve.

I say to the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) that it is disappointing in some parts of the country, but surely he must recognize that a much stronger southern Ontario today is helping all Canadians by sharing the costs.

How do the constituents of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer), view what is happening today? For instance, there have been some increases in taxes. An economist from the University of Saskatchewan told me that he would like governments to begin asking people to pay the increase in taxes today rather than in the future, and pay for a deficit in the same year. How do people from Kitchener feel about sharing the burden of turning the economy of the country around? The Government must shoulder some of the load, but surely taxpayers must shoulder some of the load as well.

Mr. Reimer: Mr. Speaker, I have constituents in different situations who give different responses. Some constituents are encouraged by our attack on the deficit. Other constituents are pleased with our control on spending in general terms. We have attempted to implement these measures by cutting government spending on some programs. We have improved other programs to make them more specific, such as job-training through the Canadian Jobs Strategy. Some of my constituents are praising the success of some aspects of those changes.

However, we must also be honest. I indicated that 63 per cent of the reduction in the deficit has been achieved by controlled spending. That means that 37 per cent has been achieved by increased taxes. No one wants to increase taxes. There were increased taxes in the last Budget. None of us want that either. I think the Minister of Finance at least chose the few areas which are probably the least destructive of all increases in taxes in general. So I commend the Minister of Finance for that. I do not like having to pay one cent a litre more for gasoline. I am sure no one does. However, we have to raise taxes to meet the debt problem and we have to continue to do so, controlling Government spending at the same time. We have to continue to work in that direction.

Another very important part of the Budget of the Minister of Finance was the promises made with respect to tax reform which will begin to meet the problems our people at the lower and middle end of the wage scale are facing. Much of the debt load over the past 15 or 20 years has been through the personal income tax route, therefore Canadians are heartened by that promise. I am sure we are all looking forward in anticipation for the results of that initiative.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, could the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer) comment on the change the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is proposing in terms of payroll remissions? As you know, Mr. Speaker, he is recommending that employers basically remit twice a month instead of once a month. The purpose of this seems to be to move $1.2 billion from 1988-89 back to 1987-88, which has the effect of reducing, at least superficially, the deficit to $29.3 billion in 1987-88. Would the Hon. Member tell us whether he approves of that kind of creative bookkeeping in order to reduce the deficit, of which his constituents, he tells us, are very much in favour? Does he not think this places an undue burden on small and medium sized businesses, which is really not warranted, simply to get the deficit down artificially in this fashion?

Mr. Reimer: Mr. Speaker, in the short time I have to respond let me say that I was talking to an accountant in Kitchener and I asked what that would do. His comment was that, yes, it would create some hardship for some but he did not think it would in all cases. It would depend on how they were looking after this need in the first place. I can acknowledge that if small business has to send this money in that much more quickly, all of their procedures will then have to be changed so that this can be done. They must do it. They have no choice. So, yes, I can acknowledge some hardship. However, this accountant, and I have only talked to one, at least gave me the impression that it was possible. They could do this, although it would create a little extra burden on them.

Again, it is the same theme we have been exercising throughout. That is, that all sectors of the economy must assist in bringing this huge deficit under control. We must show progress each year to reduce the deficit. Therefore, I would say to the Hon. Member that, yes, every new way to collect tax has some imposition upon people, as does this measure, but we must continue to work at it because of the huge debt left to us by the Party of the Hon. Member.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will have one more question or comment from the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) and then we will resume debate.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I have a question directed to the Hon. Member. The Government is so determined to reduce the deficit, as the Hon. Member has said, that as part of its program to do so it has cut the transfer funding to the provinces. It has changed the formula for EPF payments so that the payments to the provinces to help pay for the costs of health care and post-secondary education will not be increased as they would have been under the old formula. The Government has also cut the equalization grants. The results have been, and I will just mention the Conservative provinces, that the Province of Saskatchewan announced a few days ago that it would have a deficit of $1.2 billion and would have to lay off 2,000 public servants. Alberta has a deficit of over $1 billion. British Columbia announced yesterday a huge deficit. The Atlantic Provinces, which have always had deficits, have even greater deficits now. Therefore, I ask the Hon. Member if that is what the Government meant when it talked about reducing the deficit? It is a bookkeeping thing. It is transferring the deficit from the federal Government to the provinces, and particularly to the have-not provinces which have the least ability to meet the costs of the basic needs of their people.

Mr. Reimer: Mr. Speaker, the reduction in the transfer payments is a reduction in the increase of the transfer payments. It is not that they are reduced, in that sense. It is the increase which is reduced. Let us be sure we are saying the same things.

The Hon. Member mentioned the deficits of the Provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta as two examples. I would say that is not due to the lower increase in the transfer payments. That is due to the problems with low grain prices and in the energy sector. It has very little to do with the reduction in the increase in transfer payments. I would suggest to the Hon. Member that he look at what is really causing the difficulties and not bring up something which is not contributing to those provinces' deficits in any significant way.

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I just want to say that the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer) did admit in his remarks that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) was wrong to have made those commitments in August of 1984 when he must have known full well that he could not carry them out. I hate to put him in the position of having to apologize for that incident, but it is true that the Minister of Finance—

Mr. Reimer: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. gentleman in the beginning of his remarks said that the Minister of Finance was wrong and I admitted it. I did not say that. I think the Hon. Member is going to have to change his choice of words. Perhaps he will want to express that in another way.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think that is a matter of debate. The Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) has the floor.

Mr. Hopkins: Yes, it is a matter of debate, Mr. Speaker. As the Hon. Member should understand, debate goes both ways across this Chamber. The Hon. Member certainly admitted that taxes had to be increased, and that is exactly what I said. The Minister of Finance stated in Toronto that he would not increase taxes in order to pay for the deficit, and the Hon. Member for Kitchener has just admitted in this House that the Government had to increase the taxes in order to do that very thing.

But are they doing it, Mr. Speaker? Again, we hear a lot of rhetoric about the great accomplishments with respect to the deficit, which seems to be continually on the minds of the Government backbenchers. The Minister said he was not going to increase taxes. He should apologize to every Canadian today because individual taxes have increased by 52 per cent to 53 per cent. Taxes on high income earners are on the decline at a time when they are on the increase for lower and middle-income earners. The Government now has the nerve to talk about tax reform. It is building an unfair system first and will then tear it down a bit the year before the election and say, "What great people we are". That is the farce going on in this country today in the field of finance.

I do not want to see Hon. Members on the Government side, or those who have borrowed seats on this side, tell us they plan to be here after the next election in their usual places. Because if they do, they should not go on at great length promising all these things. Goodness knows, we had enough promises during the last election campaign which have never been met. The Government promised 6 per cent real increase in defence spending. If inflation goes beyond the 4 per cent limit, the Government is going to have a minus factor in the real growth of the defence budget. Yet it thinks that it is the great prince on a white horse, the great friend of the defence community of this country. The fact is that the Government has misled that community, and it has not kept its commitments. It has not even kept the 3 per cent commitment with the NATO Alliance. The Government says it will increase the budget, and at the same time this year there may well be a minus growth in that defence budget.

• (1220)

I wish to comment on the suggestion that there is tremendous growth in employment. My goodness, when listening to the speeches from the Government side, one would not think there was no problem in the country. Maybe the Members do not go home and visit their constituents enough. This morning I checked with employment offices in eastern Ontario, and I know what the figures are there. When people talk about growth of employment in Ontario as compared to the rest of Canada, let us get down to the particulars of that statement. Ontario's growth in employment does not relate to the growth of employment in northern or eastern Ontario because the growth is not in those regions. What is being talked about is the golden horseshoe of the Province of Ontario, and I wish to make that straight. There was a job increase of 127,000 in Ontario in 1986. In the country as a whole there was a 115,000 job increase. The Government brags about that. If there were 127,000 jobs created in Ontario, and 115,000 in the country as a whole, that must mean that in 1986 there was a net loss of 12,000 jobs in the rest of the country.

When we talk about the regions let us include northern Ontario and eastern Ontario with the other regions of the country where those job losses took place.

The Minister of Finance comes from Toronto, and he can stand and brag about the golden horseshoe, without mentioning it, of course, and say what tremendous growth has taken place there. He may well be right. But let us not forget that when Bill Davis and Leslie M. Frost, and the other great Tory Premiers led the Province of Ontario, they used to take all the credit for the growth of employment in the Province of Ontario. I guess it is only fair then that in the good Tory tradition of Tory Premiers of the past a Liberal Premier can step out front and say that it is because of his Government in the Province of Ontario that all the jobs have been created, it is certainly not because of the manner in which the Government in Ottawa is operating.

It has been mentioned in the House today that the deficit the federal Government is trying to cope with has been passed on to others. That is quite true. That is another item that unfortunately the Member for Kitchener forgot to mention. There have been added expenses passed on to the provinces because of the actions of the Government. That is not paying off the debt. That is passing the buck. Some of the provinces are not in a position to pay. If the provinces are not in a position to pay, then the people in those regions of Canada receive less services than those who live in the wealthier parts of the country. That is not in keeping with the 1940 Rowell-Sirois Report, which was a very good in-depth document that went into the financing at the federal-provincial levels.

The equalization programs have been attacked in order to help the Government reduce the deficit. We have to ask whose deficit is it at the provincial level? Is it the federal deficit that is being passed on to the provincial deficit? What about the municipalities of the country? What about the taxpayers at the municipal level? The whole thing seeps down to the municipal taxpayers.

I wish to comment on some of the other famous cuts that we have been hearing about. In science and technology there have been severe cuts in the National Research Council. On many occasions in the House I have raised the matter of the Algonquin Radio Observatory, one of the greatest telescopes in the world. It will soon be closed down, supposedly to save $1.1 million in the Budget. But did the Government save this money? How many millions went into the famous prison in the riding of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney)? The great institution that is the Algonquin Radio Observatory telescope would be able to continue operating for a further 30 years on the money that was wasted on the prison in the Prime Minister's riding. The Government then brags about all it is doing for science and technology in Canada. If that is not the reverse gear of science and technology, Canadians are wondering what is.

When the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) was asked about this in the House he said that he would appoint a task force to look into the matter, and have it bring back a report, particularly since the cuts that had been made troubled a number of people because they may have interfered with the health of basic research in the country. The Minister appointed the task force, and after the task force reported back to the House, we found that the Government had hogtied the task force on the National Research Council cuts, and that the task force was to report only on the health aspects of the cuts at NRC. The task force could not talk about it in wide terms. Indeed, that is said in the report. On page 2 of the report the task force stated:

> You first asked us to consider whether or not the decisions made by the National Research Council and recommended to the Government in our opinion endangered either the health or the safety of the Canadian public.
> It is our view—

They then state their decision. On page 8 the task force states the following:

> We have not attempted to interfere with with actual management decisions made. This would be inappropriate in our view.

Well, that is what all the questions were about, the actual cuts in science and technology.

The task force further stated:

> —we have not been asked to comment on the broader governmental policy decisions which resulted in these reductions and we consider that such comment would be equally inappropriate.

In other words, the task force was not asked to do it, therefore, it cannot be put in the report. After the report came out with those narrow guidelines to go on, the task force practically gave the Minister a clean bill of health on his decisions. As a matter of fact, the task force was not asked to do the specific things that we wanted to see it do when we questioned the Minister in the House. The science community is rightly angry because it has not had its day in court on this decision. Members who represent many high-tech and science-oriented installations in this country are perturbed.

It was sloughed off to a minor scale task force which did not meet the crunch of the bad decisions of the Government respecting science and technology and the future of the country. It was no wonder that the press indicated that the Minister of State for Science and Technology was dead wrong to claim that his task force report on the National Research Council vindicated the cabinet ordered budget cuts at the NRC. The article went on to indicate that it did no such thing, that the task force passed over the most important issues raised by the Government's assault on the NRC and that the narrowness of the group's mandate was the excuse cited by the three-member board. They admit that the Government did not allow them to go into the issues raised on the floor of the House of Commons, because it knew very well what would be the answers.

I should like to refer to a large telescope in Algonquin Park which weighs over 900 tonnes. It was programmed to be upgraded and polished, to become one of the three most famous installations of its kind in the world. As a result of a combined project by France and Germany, there is one in Spain, and there is a second one on a mountain in Japan. The Government, which pretends to be interested in science and technology and space, killed the very project in Canada that gave the most information about space itself. Not only did it give Canadians information on space, but people from many countries came here to conduct experiments and use it. In fact, Americans came up here because it was a better facility than those available in the United States. It is the old adage—if something is working well, kill it. That is what is happening with the Government.

Let me refer to what this means to Canada. It is the loss of the largest fully steerable telescope for astronomy in North America. Its value in terms of scientific research in Canada, in North America, and in Europe is incalculable.

Let us take the Post Office, for example—

Mr. Bradley: Please.

Mr. Hopkins: I hear a Tory Member saying "please". Is it any wonder? It does not matter what answer government Members give on the question of post office closures in rural Canada. The fact of life is that no one out there is listening to them because no one believes them any more. They talk about small community Canada, and the Minister says that any changes will only result through "natural opportunities". Is that not a wonderful term? The natural opportunities include things such as resignation. I am sure the resignation of an individual does not have much to do with whether or not there is a need for a postal service in a community. Also they include retirement. What relationship is there between someone's retirement and the need for postal service in a community? Also there is the promotion of a postmaster. Will everyone feel so glorious about the promotion of the local postmaster that they will say, "Now that he has been promoted, we do not need any postal service in this community"? Also there is the loss of the post office site. If the post office closes up or if it is sold, what does a real estate sale in a community have to do with the requirements for local postal service? That is the kind of logic which has caused trouble for the Government.

The Conservative Government says that rural post office closures and other changes in rural mail service will be concentrated in communities where these natural opportunities happen. We in the Liberal Party feel that postal service belongs to communities and that retirements or the sale of buildings have nothing to do with the continuing postal service needs of people.

It has been said that the national deficit should not be attacked on the basis of income tax alone, and that is quite true. However, why does the Minister of Finance condone the raising of taxes, particularly for low and middle income people? The Budget does nothing for agriculture. It does nothing for forestry. In fact, we have seen cuts in the forestry sector, in the compiling of statistics about forestry resources in various provinces. We have also seen a 15 per cent tax applied to softwood lumber on this side of the border. This is why Canadians are convinced that the Government is not strong enough to handle the foreign and trade relations of Canada, which will become a greater problem in years ahead.

We have had the announcement of an ice-breaker three times. One of these days they will get around to getting it on stream.

Mr. Ravis: Thick ice.

Mr. Hopkins: Indeed it is thick ice. I think it is also a lot of red tape and a pretty thick layer of politics. It will be rather interesting to see what comes out of it.

However, the slick Budget of the Minister of Finance is simply a reflection of the policies of the Government and of its attitude to difficult national and regional problems. For all the great speeches we have heard about the reduction of the national deficit, here we are in the middle of a debate about the Government wanting to borrow $28 billion. We have seen all the government cuts and tax increases. We have also heard the statement of the Minister of Finance that reductions in the national deficit would take place by cutting government expenditures, not by raising taxes.

I will rest my case there, because it could not be more clear.

Mr. Ravis: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins). I returned to the House this week with a different attitude about the Chamber, mainly because I had spoken with many people who are feeling very frustrated about what goes on in the House. I listened to the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer) who laid out in a non-partisan way, as I said earlier, some of the facts about where the country is at today. The Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke talked about why we are debating today the borrowing of $28 billion. Surely to goodness the man must start being honest with himself and with the rest of his colleagues. Why don't we forget for the moment that we are Liberals and Conservatives and look at this issue in terms of what the circumstances are in Canada today. I hate to bring these things into the Chamber, but the Member quoted from an article. We can all do that, we can all zero in on little items and make the Government look bad or make the Opposition look bad. I want to quote Geoffrey Simpson of The Globe and Mail. He wrote about "limits to spending" as follows:

> The Liberals, they are wont to forget, sent Canada on a spending spree which, coupled with the decline in the government's revenue base, brought on an enormous deficit confronting the new Government.

• (1240)

You do not have to be a journalist or an economist to figure that out. Those are the facts. How can the Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke challenge the Government and say it is raising taxes and it is not dealing with the situation as it should be? I cannot figure out what else one can possibly do. No matter how much we cut we will still be facing a very difficult situation in years to come. Cutting Government spending and raising taxes will still not solve the problem. I would like the Member to be honest and just tell us what the Liberals are doing to face up to this issue. They got us into this mess in the first place.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member said, "I want the Member to be honest". I want to tell him that I am honest with my colleagues in this House and I do not think he is in a very good position to stand up in this House and insinuate that another Member is dishonest.

Mr. Ravis: I did not say that.

Mr. Hopkins: He brought that factor in twice. We are facing a great self-righteous attitude. Do you recall what the Hon. Member said, Mr. Speaker? He said that it is time for us to forget about being Liberals and Conservatives. Yet the Hon. Member for Kitchener carried on a tirade against the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson). Asking his question, the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ravis) carried on a tirade against the Liberal Government. You do not ask someone to be mutually neutral and then lambaste them. It does not bother me because I have heard this great philosophy for a number of years and I know from whence it comes.

Mr. Bradley: The Liberal Party.

Mr. Hopkins: The Hon. Member must remember my point that the present Minister of Finance stood before the people of Canada in 1984 and made promises that the Government cannot keep today.

Mr. Bradley: Not true.

Mr. Hopkins: I will give the Tories the credit that they were smart enough to know better, Mr. Speaker. The Tories made that commitment but they are not carrying it out. They talk about annual deficits as though they are total debts. They talk about interest rates. The national debt today has increased by leaps and bounds in the last three years that the Government has been in power. The amount that has increased is certainly not just interest.

Mr. Bradley: It has not increased by leaps and bounds.

Mr. Hopkins: The Hon. Member shouts. If he wants to stand on his feet he will have his chance to say a few words. The Hon. Member better realize that the day is coming when the Government will have to answer to all Canadians for Government assets, Crown-owned assets, which it is selling off in order to pay the deficit. The Government is still not able to cope, not even with the Minister of Finance'e statement.

Mr. Bradley: Because you left it too long.

Mr. Hopkins: The Government is still increasing taxes by 52 per cent for the average Canadian.

Mr. Ravis: Who got us in this mess?

Mr. Hopkins: The Hon. Member is self-righteous again. If you are in a mess, the Government is continuing the mess because it is continuing to increase the debt year after year.

Mr. Bradley: Not true.

Mr. Hopkins: Do not start the nonsense that you are pure over there. Canadians do not believe that.

Mr. Ravis: We are not pure.

Mr. Hopkins: The Tories are grappling with something they say they are succeeding at, but they are not succeeding at it. They might as well admit it. The only alternative is to say, "We are going to increase taxes by 52 per cent to 53 per cent for the average individual, and we are going to lower taxes for the wealthy people and lower taxes for large business corporations. Then we will give you tax reform just before the election".

The debt has been added to in the years since the Government has been in power as a result of mismanagement. It has been selling off assets owned by Canadians. The Tories say that the Government is making great strides. Let us be honest about this and say that the present Government is adding to the debt by leaps and bounds and it is not all interest. Do not try to tell us that.

[Translation]

Mr. Hudon: Mr. Speaker, I am not likely to forget there are Liberals and Conservatives here in the House, considering what we have just heard. We have been hearing the most incredible nonsense. First of all, the Hon. Member opposite doesn't know what he is talking about. When he says we are going to reduce the deficit by $28 million, I think this should be $21.3, and we are talking about billions, and we are talking about $7 billion which will go directly to servicing the national debt.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps my colleague would tell us what party let Canadians dream about a telescope for so long, since he mentioned the telescope a while ago. I think we should not forget which political party skewed reality for Canadians by giving them the illusion that all our society needed was Canada Works projects. People would work 26 weeks and draw unemployment insurance for 52 weeks. Which political Party set up Petro-Canada? Which Party introduced the National Energy Program? Which Party brought up the subject of sports lotteries? Remember all that? Sport Select and the whole bit? Which Party established FIRA? Which Party gave us the F-18? Which Party increased the tax on gas by four times what we had asked for in the Budget brought down by the Conservative Government that was in power for eight months? Which Party put a ceiling on indexation of Old Age Pensions at the beginning of the eighties? Which Party let interest rates rise to 20 per cent?

I think it takes unconscionable nerve to tell the House we are increasing the deficit. Under the Liberals, Mr. Speaker, and I think they were in power in 1967-68, the operating deficit was $712 million, and by 1984, it had grown to $38.3 billion. Today, Mr. Speaker, the deficit is $29 billion. We brought the deficit below $30 billion. You can hardly expect Canadians to believe they got a raw deal in September 1984 and that we increased the deficit.

I just wanted to say that under the Liberals, between 1967 and 1984, public spending as accounted for in the various Budgets increased not by 100 per cent, not by 200 per cent but by 862 per cent, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member just said we increased the deficit, a deficit that is now below $30 billion. Under the Liberals, in 1984, the last year they were in power, it was $38.3 billion. I fail to see his point.

• (1250)

[English]

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, I have certainly got them going on this one. It is quite obvious that Members opposite are very anxious to placate themselves and to try to tell the public what a tremendous job they are doing. The Hon. Member says the Government has reduced the deficit by $30 billion. The Hon. Member for Kitchener just finished saying that the deficit for 1987-88 alone would be $29.3 billion. That is being added to the national deficit.

Mr. Bradley: The national debt.

Mr. Hopkins: Sure, the national debt. How can one member rise to say it is being reduced by $30 billion and another member rise to say it is going up by only $29.3 billion? They do not really agree among themselves over there.

Mr. Hudon: Speak about the telescope, it's better.

Mr. Hopkins: The Hon. Member mentioned the telescope which is world famous and serves not only our own nation but many others. It has put us in the forefront of technology. The Hon. Member asked what Government created that. That was originally started on a smaller scale by the Diefenbaker Government, and the large telescope was built by a Liberal Government. There was a great plea a while ago for total unity between Liberals and Conservatives. I must say that Mr. Diefenbaker, whom I knew very well and with whom I got along very well, was the one who started it but, like always, anything Tories start the Liberals have to finish. We operate the large telescope for $1.1 million annually. At the same time, we did not turn around and waste $40 million somewhere else on a prison in our Prime Minister's riding as the Government of the Member. I just got finished saying that if the Government really wanted to save money it could have run that great telescope for 30 years with what the Prime Minister wasted in one fell swoop.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is unfortunate that we cannot continue the question and comment period. I know the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer) would like to ask a question. However, we must resume debate with the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow).

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, during the election campaign, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), who was then Leader of the Opposition, said that the real, major issue, in fact the only issue in the election campaign, the issue on which the public should judge the political Parties, was jobs, jobs, jobs. Despite the promises of the Prime Minister, and despite the claims that his Government has created hundreds of thousands of jobs, the fact is that there are still a million and a quarter Canadians unemployed. The fact is that in the Budget Papers which accompanied the Budget presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) some weeks ago, it is predicted that unemployment for the next few years will continue at the unacceptably high rate of 9 per cent.

What has happened? Instead of concentrating on the Prime Minister's election promise of jobs, jobs, jobs, the Government has concentrated on its determination to reduce the deficit which it claims has had such a disastrous effect on Canada. Along with the deficit, the Government has talked about the tax changes it will bring in, tax changes which will give us a simpler and fairer tax system.

Let us look at the record of the Government. The Government has now presented three Budgets and a financial statement. We have seen that deficit reduction has been its real priority for three years running. Tax reform to this Government is something for the future, something which we may get, and even that I doubt. I doubt that tax reform will give us a fair tax system under which those who can afford to pay and should pay will pay their fair share, instead of having poor and middle-income people who have for so many years over-paid continue to pay the unfairly high share of taxes they have paid.

There have now been three Budgets and a financial statement which have had the effect of increasing taxes for ordinary Canadians. Every Budget brought forward by the Minister of Finance increased income tax rates, sales taxes and excise taxes and imposed a host of fees and charges for services provided by the federal Government to meet the needs of the Canadian people. We have estimated that the increases brought in by the Government in the last three years will cost the average Canadian family $1,350 this year. Not only have costs to the ordinary Canadian risen, virtually all social programs, including one to which the Government said it was firmly committed, child care, have either been cut back or put on hold.

The Government has ignored the very real momentum which has built up in the feeling of need for a major reform of the tax system. The Prime Minister realized that the feeling for that was made clear in the debate which took place between the Leaders before the election. At that time, the Prime Minister promised a minimum tax so that no Canadian with an income which should be taxed would not be taxed. Many Canadians with high incomes had been able to avoid paying any income tax at all for years. That promise has been largely ignored until now.

The Government has shifted a considerable amount of the federal Government's debt onto the provinces because of continued reductions in federal expenditures. It has changed the formula for transferring funds under the Established Programs Financing through which the federal Government pays its share of the cost of post-secondary education and health care. The Government has also cut back on equalization grants and various forms of regional development spending. As a result, we have seen a sharp increase in the deficits of most of the have-not provinces. The Province of Saskatchewan announced a few days ago that it would have a deficit this year of $1.2 billion and that it would cut services and lay off 2,000 employees. Alberta has a huge deficit and the Province of British Columbia has a deficit of over $1 billion. The Atlantic provinces, which are so dependent on the federal Government for financial aid and which are among the most have-not provinces in Canada, have seen their deficits skyrocket again. That is one of the most unfair methods used by the federal Government to reduce the deficit which it says is so detrimental to the country. May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 1 p.m., I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 21

CANADIAN SPACE AGENCY

DEFINITION OF ROLE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government reduces the National Research Council budget by tens of millions of dollars because, first, it wants to invest $824 million in Canada's space program and create a Canadian space agency.

Second, it privatizes Teleglobe Canada, the only Canadian international satellite communications company.

Third, the Tory Government negotiates with Lavalin and Bell Canada to transfer to the private sector the mapping and remote sensing services of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, a deal allegedly worth $55 million.

Given the fact that the $824 million earmarked for the space program include $247 million for remote sensing and $207 million for telecommunications, and that the Government has privatized the federal services responsible for such activities, we must conclude that the Canadian space agency will be nothing more than a purveyor of contracts to the private sector because the federal services which might handle them will no longer exist.

TRADE

IMPOSITION OF TARIFF ON CORN IMPORTS FROM UNITED STATES

Mr. Elliott Hardey (Kent): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Import Tribunal made its final assessment last Friday and upheld the countervailing duty applied by the Government of Canada to imports of grain corn from the U.S. The final figure is $1.21 Canadian or U.S. 84.9 cents. Corn producers in Ontario who initiated the action are pleased even though it does not bring them totally out of the doldrums of poor market conditions.

What is important, however, is that Canada has proven that it is deficiency and subsidy programs which have devastated the farmers of Canada. We have made a stand against the injurious effects of the U.S. Farm Bill and this stand has been noted around the globe. Moreover, it is important that Canadian corn growers get more out of the market-place and less from government assistance in order to protect our stabilization programs.

The world must soon accept the futility of subsidy wars. Perhaps this action by Canada will help drive that point home. The Ontario Corn Producers Association should be congratulated for its effort.

REFUGEES

VICTOR REGALADO—SCHEDULED REOPENING OF IMMIGRATION INQUIRY

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I call on the Government to give Victor Regalado a fair hearing. In 1982, Mr. Regalado, a Salvadoran journalist, sought refugee status in Canada and was found by the Minister of Employment and Immigration to be a bona fide refugee. However, he was detained and ordered deported because the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Employment and Immigration signed a security certificate against him. His deportation was stayed because Canada would neither send him back to El Salvador nor back to the U.S. which, as the then Minister of Employment and Immigration said, has a policy of not accepting refugees from that country and of sending them back. Now the present Government, following its new policy of deporting some Salvadoran refugee claimants, has scheduled a reopening of Regalado's immigration inquiry for next Monday for the purpose of deporting him. To send Regalado back to likely imprisonment, torture or death, on the basis of an unknown accusation against him which he has never been allowed to defend himself against, would be a horrible crime. I call on the Government to cancel Monday's inquiry and find a more humane and just solution.

SUSPENSION OF AUDIT OF FARMERS' INCOME

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Speaker, as someone who has been expressing concern about Revenue Canada's investment tax credit to the Minister for well over a year, I was pleased to hear him announce last week that he had ordered a pause in that audit until he could explore the problem more fully. I also applaud the Minister for his willingness some three weeks ago to meet at very short notice on this same issue with both representatives of Keystone Agricultural Producers and some of us who represent Manitoba constituencies.

Having said that, I now urge the Minister to inform his officials that they must devise an audit which distinguishes between those few farmers who may have deliberately set out to abuse the investment tax credit, and the vast majority of farmers who have simply filed a tax return according to the instructions in the Farm Tax Guide. Unless Revenue Canada officials can make that distinction, many Canadian farmers who have no idea of what wrong they have allegedly committed will be unfairly caught in a web which appears to have been woven retroactively.

CONGRATULATIONS EXTENDED TO PIERRE HARVEY

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Last Saturday, Mr. Speaker, Pierre Harvey, an outstanding athlete from Saint-Lambert-de-Lévis, became the first Canadian ever to win the world's cross-country ski cup. At the end of this race of only 30 kilometres he crossed the finish line more than a minute ahead of his closest competitor, a practically unbelievable margin of victory.

[English]

He described his victory as the greatest day in his skiing career. It was also a great day in Canadian skiing history. Harvey is a modest person and appears to shun publicity. However, all Canadians should be aware of this spectacular achievement and proud of this superb athlete and fine representative of Canada.

Congratulations, Pierre Harvey, and good luck!

INDIAN AFFAIRS

VISIT BY SOUTH AFRICAN AMBASSADOR TO PEGUIS RESERVE

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, today within my constituency of Selkirk—Interlake, South African Ambassador Mr. Glenn Babb will visit the Peguis Indian Reserve to view living conditions there. Canada is a free country and the Chief of the Peguis Reserve has every right to invite Mr. Babb to visit, without a special card.

Canada does not pretend to have dealt adequately with Indian, Inuit, and Métis people. We have held a series of constitutional conferences with native leaders and we will be back at the conference table at the end of this month. Blacks in South Africa have not seen such commitment.

It is to be hoped that the Chief of Peguis will tell Mr. Babb that Indians on reserves are protected by the same fundamental constitutional rights as are all people in Canada, that native people receive free health services, education, housing, and unemployment insurance, have freedom of assembly and mobility, have freedom to work and access to a free press, are exempt from paying income taxes and federal sales tax, and have the right to vote. Why, native people can even take elected representatives to court. Mr. Speaker, Canada does not have any lessons to be learned from the Government of South Africa about the treatment of aboriginal people.

ROAD SAFETY

USE OF REAR SEAT SHOULDER BELTS IN CARS

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, my intervention is with regard to the need for Governments to make rear seat shoulder belts mandatory in all cars manufactured in Canada. I have a letter signed by Dr. Blair of the Children's Hospital in Vancouver. It is addressed to the President of GM Canada, the President of Chrysler, the President of American Motors, and the President of Ford Canada. It says:

> The CBC, on their program The Fifth Estate, recently aired a piece on the horrendous injuries that can occur with lapbelt-only rear seat automobile restraint.
> Any of us who have dealt with automobile accident victims can—speak—of the "lap-belt syndrome"—spinal injury, internal abdominal injuries—
> I think it is our responsibility, as doctors concerned about preventive medicine, to speak out in favour of mandatory rear seat shoulder restraints in all newly manufactured automobiles.
> It behooves us to encourage our government to make rear seat shoulder restraints mandatory on Canadian built cars . . . . Most importantly, we must encourage our patients to "buckle up" themselves and their family.

THE MEDIA

INTERPRETATION OF FACTS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, every day our society receives an ever growing mass of information. Media professionals have a significant and increasing influence on the way citizens think.

One of these days, Mr. Speaker, perhaps we will experience the following hypothetical situation:

The official in charge of communications at the office of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) advises the media that a unique and extraordinary event will take place in a few days: the Prime Minister of Canada will walk across the water of the Rideau Canal.

On the appointed day the Prime Minister arrives near the canal and, closely watched by cameras, newsmen and hordes of curious people, he crosses the Rideau Canal by simply walking on the water.

A unique event in 2,000 years! Just read the media headlines: "Brian Mulroney can't swim!"

VIA RAIL

STANDARD OF SERVICE ON WINDSOR-TORONTO ROUTE

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, Windsorites have more in common with the west than prairie grass, and much more in common with the Atlantic provinces than a gregarious people, that being the unceasing insensitivity and often incompetence of the foci of decision-making in central Canada. Let us consider VIA Rail. VIA Rail, on the route from Windsor to Toronto, has been a study of inconvenience and a source of unremitting complaints almost since its inception.

Along the busiest rail thoroughfare in the country, with a market of thousands of potentially Toronto-bound passengers cultivated by promotion and in love with Canada, no malevolent design could have contrived to discourage travel by VIA Rail as has the management of this corporation. Ride on a GO Train, a train with no heat in winter and no air-conditioning in the summer; buy a ticket and find no room on the train; get on the train and wait two to four hours to leave, and then perhaps complete the trip by bus; stay hungry but healthy by avoiding the food. Then hear the answer to your complaints by the enlightened management of VIA Rail—cut costs by eliminating trains which are, after all, now "only lightly used".

POLITICAL PARTIES

POSITION OF LIBERAL PARTY ON CRUISE MISSILE TESTS

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, what a sorry state the Liberal Party finds itself in with no clear policy stance on anything and no direction from its Leader. At no time has this been more evident than yesterday when this House voted on a matter of international importance, an issue which required a clear Canadian statement, and the Liberals were unable to present the public with a policy. They were even unable to agree within their own Party.

• (1410)

In the vote yesterday, four Liberal Members opposed the so-called official Party stance. But the House and Canadians know that there are others within their ranks who are at odds with their party policy.

With all this confusion the Liberals have begun to resemble a horse with two heads, tearing at its middle in an attempt to run off in every direction.

To top it all off, for a decision as significant to the nation as was made here yesterday, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) was not even present to stand in his own line of fire.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

AWARDING OF CONTRACTS—PRE-NOTIFICATION OF MINISTER'S OFFICE

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Supply and Services (Mrs. Vezina) has an internal document in her Department that requires all federal contracts over $25,000 in six eastern Quebec ridings to be reported to her office for announcing purposes. One of these ridings is her own and one is that of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). But the document also asks for all information at least 48 hours in advance.

It goes on to say: "If no response is heard from the Corporate Relations Board", which is her officials, "—award can proceed in the normal fashion". This smacks of political interference. It goes on to say: "If there are inquiries and a request is made to delay the award, the responsible procurement officer shall inform management immediately of the situation". We know that the Prime Minister wants to make many announcements these days, but the truth of the matter is that this political meddling system that has been set up by the Minister of Supply and Services has nothing to do with regional economic disparity but a lot to do with the regional political disparity of the Government.

ACID RAIN—SIGNING OF ABATEMENT AGREEMENT BY GOVERNMENT AND PROVINCE OF ONTARIO

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, the signing of an abatement agreement this morning between the Canadian Government and the Province of Ontario is more solid progress in the fight against acid rain.

In 1984, when our Government took office, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made the clean-up of the environment and acid rain in particular a top priority. For the first time ever, the problem was discussed face to face by a Canadian Prime Minister and the President of the United States. Essential to our getting the U.S. to take action was the need to get our own house in order by reducing our own acid rain emissions.

In 1985 the seven provinces east of Saskatchewan agreed orally to cut acid rain emissions in half by 1994. Today and yesterday, formal agreements to that effect were signed with Ontario, Newfoundland, and Prince Edward Island. Hopefully all seven provinces will sign before the April meeting between the Prime Minister and President Reagan so that we can show that Canada is united in the battle to eliminate the environmental scourge of acid rain.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

THE CONSTITUTION—ALLEGED POSITION OF ONTARIO GOVERNMENT

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have with me a policy memo of the Department of Intergovernmental Affairs in Ontario which I feel all aboriginal people in Canada would be interested in. The briefing paper states that Ontario's position in the upcoming First Ministers' Conference should: "—oppose any suggestion that Indian treaties are nation-to-nation agreements or that aboriginal peoples retain any element of sovereignty or inherent rights implicit in the treaty approach".

The Leader of the federal Liberal Party (Mr. Turner) should refute that position and state publicly that the Liberal Party does recognize that Indian treaties provide inherent rights.

The Liberal Premier of Ontario will hold a unique veto power at the First Ministers' Conference, and the aboriginal people of Canada expect Ontario to take a lead in these talks, as indeed the province has in the past.

The Premier of Ontario was well advised to fulfil the provisions of the NDP-Liberal Accord in that province. He is now showing Canadians that, when left to itself, his Government back-peddles. Yesterday it was revealed that 84 per cent of Canadians support the right to aboriginal self-government. I say to Mr. Peterson: "Wake up", and I say to the Leader of the Opposition: "Speak up". Prove to Canadians that you can have a united position on aboriginal rights.

PENITENTIARIES

ILLITERACY AMONG INMATES—INTRODUCTION OF NEW EDUCATIONAL PROGRAM

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, many of the inmates in Canadian prisons today cannot read or write. They are functionally illiterate. In the past this has meant that they were unable to read, write, and do arithmetic above a grade 5 level. This has now been raised to a grade 8 level, which is more realistic in today's computer age.

The Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) recently announced the establishment of a new adult basic education program to increase the functional literacy of federal penitentiary inmates. In my riding of Fraser Valley East, Fraser Valley College has just been granted an extension from Correctional Services to increase the services that it now provides to over 100 inmates in seven federal institutions through its literacy and life skills programs.

This is an important move taken by a Government that recognizes a silent problem and works to solve it. Colleges such as Fraser Valley are committed to helping Canadians achieve a strong sense of self-worth and to make them more productive members of society. I know that the teachers and staff of the Fraser Valley College welcome the stand taken by the Solicitor General in making literacy a number one priority for inmates. I for one cannot imagine a life without books. Can you, Mr. Speaker?

IMMIGRATION

MINISTER'S ATTITUDE

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, when the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) got back from Florida, he said that he failed to understand how refugees who had spent only three or four days in a country could protest against the laws of that country. He was referring to the Chileans who are on a hunger strike in Montreal. I would like to inform the Minister that these refugees are not protesting against the law. The law has not changed. They are protesting against the repressive measures taken by the Minister on February 20 that closed this country's doors. I can also inform the Minister that these persons are not alone. While he was in Florida, people started to react.

Last Tuesday night in Montreal, 400 people met to protest the action taken by the Minister of Employment and Immigration. There were representatives from various churches, including the archdiocese of Montreal and the Anglican, United, Mennonite and Presbyterian Churches. There was a rabbi and the President of the Canadian Jewish Congress. There were union representatives. The Minister has seen only the beginning of a vast protest movement that will not cease until these repressive measures have been repealed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

PETRO-CANADA

FUTURE OF CORPORATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. I say to him that I disagree with the views of senior Ministers of his Government about Petro-Canada. I believe firmly that Petro-Canada has a policy role to play in this country and that Canada should never again be held hostage by OPEC. Does the Deputy Prime Minister not believe that Petro-Canada has a vital and crucial role to play in the exploration and development of oil and gas, particularly on the frontier? And does he not believe that that is important and vital to the self-sufficiency of this country in the future?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think the Prime Minister dealt with that question quite completely yesterday. He clearly pointed out the fact that Petro-Canada was a candidate which was being examined. I am interested in the comments of the Hon. Leader of the Opposition because we are not really sure what his position is in terms of the rest of his Party. His colleague, in his book Up the Hill, complained very bitterly about the fact that Canadians invested billions of dollars in this particular institution and that there were strong suggestions it should be divested.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is again directed to the Deputy Prime Minister, since he and his colleagues have the responsibility for this Government.

Is the Prime Minister or is the Deputy Prime Minister depending on the foreign multinationals to guarantee Canada's oil self-sufficiency? Is he depending on the multinationals to do the necessary exploration to develop our resources on the frontier? Does he not he understand that Petro-Canada should be used also to compete with the multinationals? Is this not part of the present Government's policy?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, in the view of this Government it is not necessarily public ownership which determines the viability of the frontier of this land. Petro-Canada made an announcement about which we were very pleased regarding frontier exploration and it was a decision taken by the company on a straight commercial basis because the company, privately or publicly owned, has faith in the future of Canada and in the energy industry.

POSSIBLE SALE OF CORPORATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister why it is that his Government wants to sell Petro-Canada to Canadians. We own it already, don't we?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, said this morning that he owns our share of Petro-Canada and that if Canadians own this directly they will still have a stake in the future of the energy sector, even more so than they do if it is owned by the Government. We do not think, as the Hon. Member appears to do, that government ownership solves every problem.

• (1420)

CORPORATION'S ROLE IN EXPLORING FOR OIL

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Government seems to want to destroy Petro-Canada for no apparent reason. Does the Deputy Prime Minister agree with the comments made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources this morning on Canada AM that Petro-Canada has completed its vital job of exploring for oil in Canada?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Petro-Canada will not stop exploring for oil should it go into the private sector. The Hon. Member is suggesting that it will lie down and die. It will not. Our view of privatization is that we intend to strengthen Canadian companies through the privatization process, and give Canadians a direct stake in it.

FUNDING OF EXPLORATION

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, subsequently in that same interview this morning on Canada AM, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said that the reason the Government wanted to sell Petro-Canada was to raise more funds to be able to continue with exploration. Now, which is it? If the Government will receive the funds for the sale of Petro-Canada, who will do the exploration? The CBC, or Fitness and Amateur Sport? Who?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): This morning my colleague said that Petro-Canada will need to raise money from some source in order to further its exploration. The Government can control Canadian corporations in four ways: it can tax, it can spend, it can regulate, or it can own. Ownership is not the final answer to whether exploration is done in this country.

GOVERNMENT PLANS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. I am from British Columbia, and I am tempted to send my BCRIC shares to the Minister. She can paper her cottage with them, and see how much they are worth.

I wish to ask the Minister a question with respect to the Government's privatization plans. Will the Minister confirm that plans are under way to privatize Petro-Canada by selling 20 per cent of the company for approximately $700 million? If the Minister cannot confirm those figures, will she at least confirm that the plans are to make Petro-Canada part private and part public?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot confirm that. The company is under review at the moment, and no decisions have been taken on whether or not Petro-Canada will be privatized and, if so, how it will be privatized. We are examining the possibility very seriously. I have said that before, my colleague the Minister of Finance has said it, and the Prime Minister has said it. It was a campaign commitment that we would look at Petro-Canada. That is exactly what we are doing.

Mr. Waddell: All of this was supposed to happen in the Government's second term. Given what the Government has done, maybe it will not have a second term, so it is doing it now.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I know that the Hon. Member wants a second term.

Mr. Waddell: I will try not to fly by the seat of my pants, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Questions

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): My supplementary question to the Minister is this. Given that the Government has been sabotaging Petro-Canada for the last two years by cutting high-risk expenditures, by cutting research and development, by hosing consumers at the pump, by taking dividends out of the company and not putting any equity back in, is it any wonder then that there is no public policy set by the Government for Petro-Canada right now?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, the Government has said all along that it would examine the need for any public policy. My hon. colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, has already answered this question. The issue is under serious review. When the people of Canada elected us, they knew that we were interested in privatizing companies that we thought had no public policy purpose. The reason that it does not have a public policy purpose is that there are other ways in which we can encourage exploration and development, and we have done that.

ENERGY CRISIS CONTINGENCY PLANS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Is the Government aware that in 1973 during the first energy crisis the British Government told British Petroleum, of which it owned a 50 per cent share, that it had to meet British energy needs first before other energy customers, and that British Petroleum refused?

• (1425)

Given that there would be minority shareholders who, under our law would have an interest, how does the Government propose to direct that kind of privatized Petro-Canada to ensure energy security, exploration, and development to meet the energy crisis of the 1990s?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member keeps asking the same question in different ways. I have already pointed out that there are other ways to encourage exploration and development and Canadian self-sufficiency. The Government has other powers besides the power of ownership. A privatized company in the hands of Canadians could help to fill the interest of Canadians in self-sufficiency and in Canadianization.

DEVELOPMENT OF TERRA NOVA OILFIELD

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources announced in St. John's, Newfoundland, Petro-Canada's decision to drill two new wells at the Terra Nova oilfield. Also the Ministers in question announced the mode of production to be employed if Terra Nova is to be brought into commercial production. Both the decision to drill two new wells and the decision on the mode of production were taken without the advice or the consent of the Government of Newfoundland. Why did the Government of Canada break its legal commitments to the Province of Newfoundland under the terms of the Atlantic Accord passed in the House only a few weeks ago? In describing the agreement, the Prime Minister said that it was an accord which makes the Province of Newfoundland a full and equal partner in its own offshore development.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the decision made by Petro-Canada was a business decision, and the announcement was made in an entirely appropriate manner. If and when a development plan is submitted, depending on the results of geological testing, it will be submitted as agreed to the Canada-Newfoundland Offshore Petroleum Board.

[English]

TERMS OF ATLANTIC ACCORD

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the terms of the Atlantic Accord make explicitly clear the equal role of the Government of Newfoundland in the development of the Newfoundland offshore. Yesterday, the Minister who just spoke and his colleague from Newfoundland, in a fit of pique in the middle of a cat fight with the Premier of Newfoundland, made unilateral announcements without respecting the terms of the agreements contained in the Atlantic Accord. Will the Deputy Prime Minister stand on his feet and apologize to the people of Newfoundland for that unilateral action which made a mockery of the Prime Minister's commitment to the people of Newfoundland and of the Atlantic Accord? When the Prime Minister announced the Atlantic Accord, he said: "We have believed firmly in the principle of equality—equality in terms of joint management—". Where is the equality today?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, first of all, we certainly have no apologies to make for the decision by Petro-Canada. In fact, we are delighted. Second, the process that led to the decisions and the announcement made by Petro-Canada were quite normal and appropriate.

LAY-OFFS IN MONTREAL EAST—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): My question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Last week I stated that the Conservative Government was gradually setting the stage for the privatization of Petro-Canada—apparently this has since been confirmed—a move which would lead to the closure of the Montreal East Petro-Canada refinery. There are regular lay-offs: 21 workers lost their jobs and none was offered alternative employment. I asked the question lask week but did not get an answer. What does the Minister intend to do to save these 21 jobs in Montreal East and do justice to these former employees?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, Petro-Canada management make their decisions on a commercial basis in what they believe to be the interests of society and all Canadians.

GOVERNMENT'S INTENDED MEASURES TO SAVE JOBS IN MONTREAL

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, Petro-Canada answers to the Conservative Government. Is the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources a Minister without resources, without energy so it would seem? Can the Minister give a specific answer to the question and tell us what he intends to do to save these jobs in Montreal East?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will have to learn that the best way the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources can serve the House is to read the Petro-Canada Act first. The Hon. Member ought to do the same thing, for he would realize that under the provisions of the Petro-Canada legislation the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is expressly forbidden to intervene in the day-to-day trade activities of the corporation. The House so decided and that is the way the legislation reads.

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

FUTURE OF BRANCHES—DISCUSSIONS WITH LAVALIN CORPORATION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. On Friday the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines told me:

> We have never at any time discussed the privatization of a department or function of the Government to this date.

I repeat: "We have never discussed the privatization . . . " We know that Lavalin met with Treasury Board three times at Treasury Board's request. We know they discussed the privatization of certain departments working in the field of cartography. Will the Government come clean and tell us what it intends to do with these essential services? Will the Government tell us the truth and tell us what is going to happen to the 1,300 employees who are involved in this very essential service?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I will try to answer, once again, the same question from my hon. colleague. It was very clear in my answers yesterday, I believe yesterday, that there were exploratory discussions on a make or buy policy, which is not privatization. Those discussions were preliminary in nature. They had to deal with a number of corporations to follow up on a recommendation by the Task Force on Program Review, a task force that was composed of public sector, private sector, and labour representatives. And in order to give up a thorough follow-up to those recommendations, we did discuss the potential for a make or buy policy. Obviously this topic was raised. These were exploratory in nature. There were no negotiations, no offers sought, no offers made, and no bids received.

[Translation]

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, in that case, I contend that the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines misled the House. On Friday he said, and I quote:

> We have never at any time discussed the privatization of a Department or function of the Government to this date.

We are talking about three of the Government's essential services, and the Minister just admitted that he started talks with Lavalin and Bell about privatizing these services.

Would someone please tell us who in this Government is telling the truth?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we are not talking about privatization. We are talking about a make or buy policy.

Mr. Speaker, speaking of getting our act together, I wish the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier would consult with his colleague from Shefford, who said on CHLT in Sherbrooke last Saturday, if I am not mistaken—

An Hon. Member: Last Friday.

Mr. de Cotret: Excuse me, last Friday. He said: "Frankly, I have no problem at all with the concept of privatization." Actually, that is not the right word. "I have no problem at all with the concept of privatizing Government services. I know that in a similar case, this was done for the provincial institute of cartography. It did not create any problems, so far as I know, although we would have to look at all the details and conditions. In any case, the concept is certainly not one that I would reject out of hand."

So, I wish the Opposition would get its act together.

[English]

FUTURE OF EMPLOYEES

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, you may agree with me that the Liberals are confused about privatization but so is the Government on what it wants to do.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cassidy: My question is for the President of the Treasury Board and deals with the same issue. I would like the President of the Treasury Board to explain to me what will the 1,300 employees of the surveys and mapping and the other two branches concerned do? What services will they provide and on what basis, if any, will they gain their income if the Government decides it is going to buy the mapping services from the joint company run by Bell and Lavalin? If this service is contracted out, is the Government not talking about privatization by pink slips as far as the employees of the Government of Canada are concerned?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): They are blue slips.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, if I am not mistaken, there are three ifs in the Hon. Member's question. If this, if that, and if the other thing. All I can say, once again, is that there were general discussions, very initial discussions on the over-all question of a make or buy policy for the Government of Canada following the Task Force on Program Review. No negotiations were ever entered into, no bids were sought, no offers were received, and no decision on the issue has been made. How can I answer a hypothetical question of that nature?

[Translation]

GOVERNMENT'S CONTRACTING-OUT POLICY—IMPACT ON PUBLIC SERVANTS' JOBS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a supplementary to the President of the Treasury Board. How many more public servants will be affected by the Government's determination to start discussions with the private sector, to transfer services that are now provided by employees of the Public Service of the Government of Canada? Is that what the President of the Treasury Board meant in his statement, that there would be discussions with a number of companies in the private sector to arrange for transfers of jobs in a way similar to what would happen by privatizing the mapping division?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre is implying that the Government should never have discussions with the private sector to try and identify the best way to spend taxpayers' money. We are trying to improve efficiency and productivity in the public sector. To do so, we are having discussions with the private sector. I think that is only normal. We are also having discussions with the labour unions. We are continuing these discussions in order to give Canadian taxpayers across this country the assurance that the money they put into the federal Treasury is spent with their best interests in mind.

HEALTH

AIDS DISEASE—CONTENT OF ADVERTISEMENTS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. We now know that the Canadian Telecasters Committee has hypocritically rejected three of the four ads designed to fight AIDS in this country, the three ads that happen to use the word condom. Now that these ads have been rejected, can the Minister tell us what specific strategy his Department has in place to get out the message to every Canadian household about this killer disease?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in response to the Member's question, I believe, and I think most objective people who have seen the ads feel that the ads conveyed the situation. I believe it was a balanced message. I fully appreciate that in the area of sexuality there will be different points of view.

I would hope in connection with the ads which the Canadian Public Health Association developed, and which the Department of Health and Welfare through taxpayers' money bought, that the telecasters would reconsider the position they took. The CPHA had a press conference at approximately one o'clock this afternoon in which that same message was put forward. I would hope that the telecasters upon second thought would look at those ads. I do think that they reflect not only a general approach, which I think is fair to the attack on AIDS, but also which is in keeping with what I think is proper and decent.

REQUEST FOR DOOR-TO-DOOR MAIL CAMPAIGN

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister will know that his Department is not going to spend a single penny to get this message out over the airwaves, door-to-door, or in any other fashion. Given that the Minister's colleague from St. John's West can find the money to distribute brochures to every household in Newfoundland about a fishing agreement, does he not think that at the very least his Department should be considering a door-to-door brochure on the issue of AIDS across Canada?

Mr. Crosbie: Do you want me to send condoms with them as well?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the point which the Member puts forward as the basis for her question is not accurate. We have put forward money, public money, for brochures. We have brochures in doctors' offices, universities, and colleges where Canadians can pick up those ads. We have put forward money to various groups which have support groups for AIDS patients. I have said, as the campaign is launched, that if more is needed we will have a look. In a very difficult situation in which we must bring forward the best and most accurate information, I do not think we serve anyone by putting forth either sensational points of view or views that are simply not accurate.

WASHING OF VEHICLES LEAVING NEWFOUNDLAND IN ORDER TO COMBAT POTATO DISEASE

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. At this time the Department of Agriculture is washing every vehicle that leaves Newfoundland in order to stop the spread of potato warts and golden nematodes to the mainland. These diseases could wipe out the potato industry in P.E.I. and the rest of Canada as well. In order to save money the Department is thinking about the option of discontinuing the washing of vehicles leaving Newfoundland. Will the Minister advise the House and the Canadian potato industry what is being done to ensure the continuance of this very essential program?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's interest in the subject and I appreciate the Hon. Member and his colleagues from P.E.I. and Newfoundland bringing this matter to my attention. I would like to allay their fears by indicating that indeed, as far as the Department is concerned, no final decision has been taken but I have instructed the Department to put a full and complete hold on that operation. Indeed, it should continue to function in the future as it has in the past. I will also be holding a meeting either Thursday or Friday morning with my colleagues from those two provinces. We will sit down together to map out, in co-operation and in concert, a future course of action on that problem.

ASSISTANCE FOR GRAIN FARMERS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Agriculture. For some time now and particularly in the last couple of weeks, the Government has clearly indicated that special assistance will be provided to grain farmers in the 1987-88 crop year. Taking the Government at its word, can the Minister confirm that he will not be announcing any details whatsoever about the 1987-88 special assistance program before spring planting, and possibly not even before harvest?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that question as well. Indeed, the Hon. Member, the House and the industry will, I am sure, take some satisfaction in the fact that my colleague, the Minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, and I met some 55 farm leaders last Thursday. They joined with us in a joint press release which sent a very sensible signal to the industry that indeed Canadian grain and oil-seeds farmers should not plan their 1987 cropping pattern based on the formula of distribution of the Special Canadian Grains Program, nor should they base their 1987 cropping pattern on the expectation of continuing government assistance.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

ANNOUNCEMENT OF INITIAL PAYMENTS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister has just indicated, he is aware of the great difficulty farmers are having in deciding what to plant in the spring. Since the Minister will not confirm a special assistance program, can he tell us if he will be announcing the 1987-88 initial payment details this month or will he simply be announcing the initial payment level for the top grades? Will he be announcing any details at all about initial payments?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, after much discussion and consultation with farmers and farm groups, it is the opinion of the Government that we should go ahead and announce initial payments at the normal time which traditionally has been in the middle of April.

The Hon. Member will also know, being a farmer, that initial payment announcements are not necessarily accompanied by the spreads. They are announced at some time later. I think last year the spreads were not announced until some time toward the beginning of June. We will probably be looking at announcing the spreads at a later date than we have in the past, but we intend to announce initial payments at the normal time which would be some time in the middle of April.

FINANCE

COLLECTION OF GASOLINE TAXES

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I will direct my question to the Minister of State for Finance. In the February Budget, the Government, by changing the method of collecting gasoline taxes, effectively increased the operating costs of independent service stations. This has had the effect of reducing competition in the market-place. I met with members of the association involved and they asked me to ask the Minister the following question. Why has the Government decided to hit small Canadian-owned independent gasoline marketers while at the same time helping large multinational oil companies which have, in the final analysis, increased the price of their product at the pump for all Canadians?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the question of retail prices of oil and gas is one that goes beyond the premise of that question. I cannot agree with the premise of the question. In fact, the market is shaped by a host of different factors and not just the ones pointed to by the Hon. Member.

[Translation]

IMPACT OF PAYMENT OF GASOLINE TAX BY INDEPENDENT DISTRIBUTORS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, it is widely acknowledged that independent distributors do stir up market competition to a certain extent, and the fact that they can no longer collect the tax and are forced to pay it themselves even before selling a drop of gasoline creates a cash flow problem for them. This is why again I am asking the Minister why the Government has decided to end the tax collection arrangement and why, even before making a sale, independent distributors have to pay the gasoline tax which has just been increased by the Government? This cuts down their opportunities to be more competitive. Why did the Government do that?

[English]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows why the Government made that change. It was to ensure that we did not have any more problems with the collection of revenues when there was a clear leakage in revenue collections. It had nothing to do with the premise he is alleging.

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

PERFORMANCE OF SERVICES FOR PUBLIC

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question supplementary to those asked earlier this afternoon of the President of the Treasury Board. Does the Minister not recognize that there are certain services in any self-respecting sovereign and developed nation that are properly performed by the Public Service and not by the private sector, including those three branches under discussion in this case?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, once again I only have to respond—

Mr. Gauthier: Tory split. Get your act together, guys.

Mr. Allmand: I thought they were all united over there.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, following extensive studies of the Task Force on Program Review, we are trying to pursue all the avenues suggested to see if there are efficient and productive ways to spend taxpayers' money better. That is what we did in this case. There have been discussions in a number of instances with private enterprise. That is the sum total of what we are doing. We are trying to spend taxpayers' money better than the previous Government did for over 20 years.

PENSIONS

REIMBURSEMENT OF CERTAIN RETIRED PEOPLE— GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration and has to do with Government action with respect to the inclusion of pensions as earned income.

Last December 5 the Minister said that changes would be made to the regulations concerning retirees. Mr. Speaker, three months have slipped by and those people still do not know where they stand. How much longer will these retirees have to wait before the Minister clears up this confusion and introduces legislation to reimburse them?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Indeed, Mr. Speaker, in December I announced two specific measures, including one concerning beneficiaries retiring after 1986. We said at the time that we would take requalification into account. As to others who retired before 1986 we set up guidelines for employment centres but we had to reconsider them because they were extremely complicated and difficult to apply. We are now reviewing these guidelines and a Bill will be introduced at the earliest opportunity.

REQUEST FOR RETURN TO PREVIOUS SITUATION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, confusion reigns supreme at local unemployment insurance offices where thousands of early retirees have gone to collect what was rightfully theirs. The Minister has created more confusion with his announcement. Will the Minister cut out all the flimflammery and jiggery-pokery, stand up in this House, and clear up the confusion right now? Why does he not simply say we are going to go back to the situation as it was before January 5, 1986?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member expects me to say that we will go back to the pre-1986 situation, it is quite out of the question. I have been very clear about that. People who retired after 1986 must requalify before we consider them to be eligible for unemployment insurance.

Now then, with respect to those who retired before 1986, I said and I repeat to my colleague that we are now reviewing the policy and the moment we are ready to unveil it, Mr. Speaker, we will do so. There is no flip flop.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

FORGET COMMISSION RECOMMENDATION CONCERNING EARLY RETIREES

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. On December 5, he rejected one of the few Forget recommendations which were any good, which was to cancel the cut in unemployment insurance for early retirement pensioners. At the same time he promised to reimburse some of those claimants. At first he prepared a questionnaire to assist the process, and then cancelled it. When will he stop the procrastination, this stop and go administration, and remedy this cruel and unjust policy?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I just answered the Hon. Member's colleague on the other side. In fact, I could give him more or less the same answer, although the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt at least did not have the impudence to refer to the Forget Report. Are you for or against the Forget Report? You will have to make up your mind some day. Instead of evading the issue, why not get to the point and say whether you are for or against the Report?

[English]

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, that is one of the most ridiculous statements I have ever heard. The Minister has already rejected one of the Forget recommendations. Does that mean he is going to reject all of the Forget recommendations? Otherwise why delay his statement to May 15? There was never any question of rejecting or accepting all the recommendations.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT MINISTER LISTEN EVEN MORE TO PUBLIC

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, more than 50,000 Canadians were treated unfairly as a result of these cuts.

When will the Minister decide to listen to the many groups and individuals protesting against this policy, including his advisory council, the Forget Commission and even members of his own caucus, and cancel these cutbacks immediately?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, yesterday we saw that even people in the Hon. Member's Party do not always vote the same way, which did not keep them from sitting in the House today.

What I want to say to the Hon. Member is simply that on January 5, we made commitments with respect to people who retired before 1986. We are going to introduce a Bill, but only when the Government is ready to do so.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REPORTED PURCHASE OF BRASS TOMBSTONE FOR FELINE'S FUNERARY RITES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Earlier in Question Period he was crowing about better spending of taxpayers' money. If the Government learned that an official in one of its Departments purchased a 15-pound brass tombstone for the burial of his wife's cat using public funds from his Department, would the Government request that person's resignation?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I was not aware of it. If the Hon. Member would like to give me the facts I will be happy to give him an answer at a later date.

Mr. Fulton: I am sure that if Erik Nielsen were sitting there I know the answer he would give. The cat's name was Boobnik.

PROPRIETY OF EXPENDITURE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Does he believe that public funds should be used to buy tombstones for cats? Or should those who do this kind of thing be better employed in the private sector?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sure the Hon. Member has an important matter to raise but I have to advise the Chamber that the Minister is really not in a position where he must reply to that question. The question is probably out of order. If the Minister wants to try to shed some light on this mystery he can do it.

DISARMAMENT

VISIT OF SOVIET AMBASSADOR TO OTTAWA

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs advised us during his comments on Friday that Paul Nitze, the senior adviser on arms control to the President of the United States, was here and met with the Prime Minister, the Minister of National Defence, and the Secretary of State for External Affairs. At the same time Ambassador Karpov, the most senior Soviet official involved in arms control issues, was in Ottawa but did not meet with any government Ministers. I ask the Deputy Prime Minister why the Government did not seize this historic opportunity to meet with Mr. Karpov to discuss the forthcoming arms negotiations at Geneva.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs is in Washington today meeting with Mr. Shultz at their quarterly summit. I do not know what his schedule was for Friday so I will have to take the question as notice and get back to the Hon. Member.

GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I cannot believe that the Ministry was not aware of the presence in Ottawa of Ambassador Karpov. I hope the Minister will take steps to correct this situation, whether it is in the Minister's office or at the Department of External Affairs. The Government has missed a major opportunity to get a briefing from the senior Soviet arms negotiator. Does she agree, and will she do that?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, of course I will do that. I do not think it is necessary to assume that no one in the Department of External Affairs met with the Ambassador or was briefed. I am simply saying I am not aware of the schedule of the Minister on Friday. I will look into it and get back to him.

SOCIAL SECURITY

GUARANTEED INCOME SUPPLEMENT—ISSUANCE OF RENEWAL APPLICATION FORMS

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is he aware that approximately 12,000 Guaranteed Income Supplement pensioners in the Kitchener-Waterloo-Elmira area did not receive their GIS renewal applications? If he is aware of that, would he inform the House what steps are being taken to prevent these recipients from being cut off in April?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am aware a number of people serviced by those offices did not receive the GIS renewal form which they are obligated to complete at this time of year. We have issued or are in the process of issuing new forms, and I want to tell the Member and his constituents that none of them will lose any funds for which they are eligible should there be any delay whatsoever.

HEALTH

AIDS DISEASE—EDUCATION OF ARMED FORCES PERSONNEL

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. As he knows, the Government's education program regarding the deadliest virus ever known consists of one television ad which is not shown in prime time because the Government refuses to pay for it. Is it part of the Government's anti-AIDS program that the Armed Forces have no AIDS educational program which would be accessible to the people in the military?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, what the Hon. Member said with respect to that being the only program is not the case. I have already replied in the House today regarding the four ads which the CPHA prepared and which I hope telecasters will reconsider broadcasting, at least three of them. With respect to the Canadian Armed Forces, I will check into that. I appreciate his raising it with me and I will see what is being done and what more should be done. I thank him for bringing it to my attention.

• (1500)

INCIDENCE OF AIDS IN FORCES PERSONNEL

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, in finding out the details about the lack of an AIDS educational program in the military, will the Minister of National Health and Welfare also find out what the incidence of AIDS is in the Armed Forces of Canada and what provisions have been made to protect members of the Armed Forces when they are exposed to circumstances in which the possibility of infection with AIDS may be very serious and devastating?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I do not want the Hon. Member to be misled by my first answer to believe that there is nothing being done in the Armed Forces with regard to AIDS and protection against the illness. I believe some work has been done with regard to what the incidence of the illness is, but I do not have it right at hand. I will find out. Whatever information I have I will make available to him as I have to everyone on the AIDS question. Obviously, if more work needs to be done to bolster the program, I am open to that as well.

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the Hon. Member for Trinity for the last question.

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION

PAYMENT MADE TO ALBERTA GOVERNMENT TO HELP TRUST COMPANIES

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance and is with regard to the $275 million payment from the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation to the Alberta Government to finance that province's bail-out of two ailing trust companies. Since the Corporation has a deficit of over $1 billion and has no mandate to give grants to provincial Governments, why did the Minister approve the payment?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I was very happy to approve the payment because it was the best solution for the CDIC to minimize its exposure and to minimize what it would have to pay out, as well as solving the problem of those financial institutions in Alberta. There is room for that payment. However, CDIC will have to have its funds replenished very soon if it is going to continue to make payments of this sort.

USE OF TAXPAYERS' MONEY

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I am questioning the Government's apparent manoeuvering to use taxpayers' money for a $275 million gift of a bail-out without consulting Parliament. Will the Minister not agree that it looks furtive and that there should be more openness and accountability for an unusual arrangement of this kind?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, this is not a gift and it is quite wrong to call it a gift. The CDIC received all the indemnities it wanted. The CDIC proceeded in this instance, as it always has, by making its understanding public, and it will continue to do so.

PRIVILEGE

INTERVIEW GIVEN TO PRESS BY MR. DE COTRET

Mr. Speaker: I advise all Hon. Members that there was a question of privilege raised yesterday. It was agreed that it would be continued today when the Minister was here.

[Translation]

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, at the end of Oral Question Period yesterday, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) informed the House that he had given the Chair written notice of his reasons for raising a question of privilege about an interview I gave to the press as reported in The Globe and Mail last week.

Mr. Speaker, you suggested adjourning the matter and I want to thank you for doing so.

[English]

As a first point, Mr. Speaker, I noticed that in the intervention of my hon. colleague in this House he stated that I had been quoted as having said, or had apparently said, or words to that effect, certain things. While he may question the accuracy of the media in this respect, I can say that the media truly reflected what I said on this very important issue. The media report was indeed accurate.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I shall, if I may, expand somewhat on the statement I made to the press and thus comment on the question of privilege which, in my opinion, is not well founded.

[English]

Essentially, Mr. Speaker, I took the opportunity of a general press conference to make what I thought was a very important point, that we have in this country a competent, able, and hard-working Public Service which is doing an excellent job for the country. I stand by those statements. I would like to have been able to convey that message personally to the Public Service critics in the opposition Parties.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) claims that I am imputing motives or comments to members of the Committee. I would like to repeat what the Hon. Member said as reported at page 3967 of Hansard, and I quote:

[English]

He is suggesting that the members of the committee thought that Mr. Lussier was a liar and that is why the committee was putting him under oath to give testimony.

[Translation]

Without going over the full proceedings of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration of last January 28, Mr. Speaker, I think that a reading of the report on that meeting makes it quite clear that the question of swearing in the witness stemmed from the obvious concern of certain committee members who wanted to be sure they would get correct answers to their questions. I do not question the authority of the House of Commons or the authority of one of its committees to order witnesses to be examined under oath, as set forth in Beauchesne's Citation 635.

Mr. Speaker, my remarks to the press related first and foremost to the relevancy of such a request by the committee under the circumstances. Let me explain this.

Mr. Speaker, we all agree that in a parliamentary system the Minister is responsible for providing information to Parliament and its committees. Such is the basic principle of ministerial responsibility in a democratic parliamentary system. Ministers are responsible to this House for action taken on their behalf. On the other hand, public officials have the obligation to support their Minister in his relations with Parliament. In keeping with a long-standing tradition, Mr. Speaker, public employees must not express their views nor make speeches on the options being considered by the Government, but they must help the Minister convey to this House and its committees factual and objective information related to the management of programs under the jurisdiction of the Minister involved.

Mr. Speaker, no one ought to question the integrity and professionalism of public servants. No one ought to question the respect which public servants have for our democratic institutions. Therefore my remarks to the press expressed my astonishment at the extraordinary and uncommon request that a senior official be sworn in, something which has very seldom been heard of in the parliamentary records of this House. As a matter of fact certain committee members, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt among others, did acknowledge this during the committee proceedings.

Mr. Speaker, the fact remains that public servants have always been very heedful of the expectations of Parliament, ever respectful of ministerial responsibility and our parliamentary traditions. This relationship between public servants and parliamentary committees has always been based on mutual confidence and respect, and I know, Mr. Speaker, that all Members of the House are anxious to maintain and strengthen this tradition.

Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that my remarks should be misinterpreted. I cannot imagine how the Hon. Member can allege that, and I quote:

> The Minister shows disrespect for ... Parliament by counselling the Deputy Minister to ignore a standing committee of the House.

First of all, I never did counsel any Deputy Minister, this one or any other, to ignore a standing committee of the House. On the contrary, I always encouraged them to give frank and honest evidence, and to divulge any information sought by Hon. Members of this House. All I wanted to do, Mr. Speaker, was to recall our principles and our parliamentary traditions.

The remarks I made during the Globe and Mail interview reflected my concern about a procedure which I deem inappropriate and unnecessary, and which, I might add, may very well undermine the climate of confidence and co-operation required for the smooth operation of Parliament and the Government machinery.

• (1510)

[English]

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the committee in question, I want to make a brief statement. To some extent it is incumbent upon me to make it clear that, after spending many hours together, it is my understanding from committee members that if the action taken at the meeting in question in any way brought the loyalty and good work of the public service of Canada into question we would like to apologize for perhaps leaving that impression. That was certainly not the intent of the committee. We join with the Minister in applauding the efforts of the Canadian public service which does valuable work for Canadians.

The record of that meeting shows that four people were sworn in on that occasion. They were commissioners of the Unemployment Insurance Commission. Technically it was not the Deputy Minister who was being sworn in but a commissioner of a Crown agency who happened also to be a Deputy Minister. However, it was in their capacity as commissioners of the Unemployment Insurance Commission that these people were sworn in.

Finally, I understand that this incident has caused a great deal of discussion, at many levels of the public service as well as within Cabinet, among the Clerks at the Table, Members of Parliament and other committee chairmen. The dilemma is when it is appropriate to swear in witnesses. Indeed, Beauchesne provides the power for committees to be masters of their own destiny. Therefore, I submit that in the final analysis the choice must rest with the committee and its members on any given occasion.

I believe some of the concern raised by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) and other Members, particularly one Member from Montreal who serves as vice-chairman of our committee, deals with the issue of rights of committee members to compel people to attend committee meetings and be witnesses before those meetings. There was a suggestion in the article in question that it might have been wise for a civil servant, when faced with a request from the committee to be sworn in, to leave the meeting.

Before you rule on this matter, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that you may wish to reflect upon that. If the committee has advertised a meeting with witnesses, and those witnesses have agreed to appear, would it indeed be wise for them to leave when they are asked to be sworn in, or would that almost compel the committee to report to Parliament on the issue of whether or not that particular witness was in contempt of Parliament as a result of that unwillingness to be sworn in when Beauchesne enables committees to swear witnesses? If that would lead one to conclude that contempt of Parliament would be shown, it would lead to a situation more serious than the present situation. I urge you to reflect upon that principle before responding to the issue.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the remarks by the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, on which I sit. It is unfortunate that other chairpersons of Standing Committees are not here to participate in this question of privilege.

I listened to the Minister. He admitted that the press report is accurate. He went on at some length about the competence of senior civil servants, their loyalty and so on. That is not in question. I happen to have known this individual, the Chairman of the Unemployment Insurance Commission, for some years. I concur with what the Minister said. However, that is not the question.

Regardless of whether the Minister or the witnesses agree, a motion was properly put to take testimony under oath. The committee chose to vote for that motion and put those witnesses under oath. I was on that committee that day and voted for the motion to put the witnesses under oath. The Minister can surmise and guess what the committee had in mind if he wants. In fact, he said, "The committee is really saying he's a liar". The Minister is accusing the committee of calling the Chairman of the Unemployment Insurance Commission a liar. No such thought occurred in my mind, and I will tell the Minister right now that I certainly did not say that. I did not think it.

As I said, for whatever reason, the committee decided to put the witness under oath. The Minister is responsible for civil servants. He is not an ordinary Minister but the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) in charge of the various statutes that govern civil servants. The Chairman of the Unemployment Insurance Commission happens to be the Deputy Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Minister said, "I would have liked to see Gaetan Lussier walk right out of the room".

I did not say in my remarks yesterday that the Minister was mocking the committee. However, I believe he was counselling disrespect for the committee and ultimately disrespect for Parliament. I sit on that committee, as do all other members who sit on the committee, as a representative of Canadians.

It may be irrelevant, but let me point out that the committee member who moved the motion to put witnesses under oath was a Conservative member, one of the majority in the committee.

I believe there is a prima facie case of privilege. When a Minister of the Crown, the big cheese of the mandarins advises them to disregard a decision of a committee of Parliament, he is telling Mr. Lussier and Mr. Edwards—

Mr. de Cotret: No. That is false.

Mr. Rodriguez: You said it here. You said the report is accurate. It states, "I would have liked to see Gaetan Lussier walk right out of the room". What is Mr. Lussier to take from that? When it happens again Mr. Lussier will walk out of the room.

I believe there is evidence that the Minister has breached the privileges, not only of myself but of other Members of the House. You can chuckle and put your books down on the desk in disgust, but the fact of the matter is that there is clear advice to civil servants and I say it is a breach of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). Those watching might think that the Chair had done something with its books to show disgust. I just want it completely clear that the Hon. Member was not referring to the Chair. The Chair is listening very carefully to this matter. I invite the Hon. Member to complete his remarks.

Mr. Rodriguez: Of course, Mr. Speaker, there is no reflection on the Chair. You were listening intently. I was referring to the way in which the Minister threw his paper down and appeared somewhat disgusted when I said he was counselling disrespect for Parliament. I did not give the interview. He gave the interview and he admitted it was accurate. Any senior civil servant reading this report could only take one conclusion from it, that the Minister is behind them if they walk out on the next committee meeting of Parliament where a motion is passed to put the witnesses under oath.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I believe there is prima facie evidence of a breach of privilege and if the Chair so finds, I am prepared to move the appropriate motion.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank the Minister for moving so quickly to return to the Chamber and, take part in this important matter. I also want to thank the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) for his intervention. I think I should advise Hon. Members that the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) raised a question of privilege on this exact matter. I think perhaps there was a slip-up somewhere but it was understood he would be notified when the matter returned to the Chamber. Today, unfortunately, the Hon. Member for La Prairie is in his constituency doing the job he has to do and, as a consequence, I am going to adjourn this matter once more to give the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) the opportunity to intervene if, indeed, he feels it is necessary.

Again I want to assure the Minister and the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) that I have listened very carefully to their words on the matter. I want to thank all Hon. Members again for their clear interventions. The Chair will consider the matter very carefully. However, as I say, I will not prepare any judgment on this matter until I hear from the Hon. Member for La Prairie, which should be soon.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1986-87, (NO. 2)

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-40, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the net result of the federal Government's determination to reduce the deficit has been that we have not actually substantially reduced the deficit but have in fact transferred most of it to the provinces. The combined deficits of the 10 provinces on a national accounts basis rose last year from $4.9 billion to $8.2 billion. Thus the over-all net reduction in federal-provincial deficits was $4.2 billion. For that deficit reduction we paid a very stiff price. The stagnation of regional economies anywhere outside southern Ontario resulted in only 5,000 jobs being created in 1986. In the western and Atlantic Provinces the unemployment rates remain at very near the same levels as they were when the Conservatives took power in 1984.

Other things which have happened as a result of the Government's determination to cut the deficit is that vital programs such as post-secondary education and health, which are financed partly by the federal Government and by the provinces, will see a reduction of $2 billion in funding between now and 1990-91.

My Province of Manitoba has done a relatively good job in terms of job creation. The unemployment level in Manitoba has fallen despite the cuts in federal support. However, the province now faces a number of very unpleasant choices. It can cut its programs, it can opt for a higher deficit, as have many of the other provinces, or it can increase provincial taxation. We are told that at some point in the future this determination to reduce the deficit, for which there has been so much retrenchment, will lead to the position where the promises made by the federal Government in 1984, prior to the election, will be redeemed.

One of the promises the Government made was that it would reform the tax system. It would make the tax system simpler and fairer. I have already referred to the fact that in the three years the Government has been in office it has increased income tax, sales tax, excise tax and taxes on fees for services so that the average family is paying $1,350 more in taxes now than in 1984. The Government has done nothing about plugging the loopholes for the wealthy in terms of personal income tax or for many corporations which have been quite profitable.

To illustrate, let me to point to the fact that in 1976 there were only 24 persons paying no income tax on incomes in the top tax bracket. By 1983 there were 259 Canadians who paid no tax on incomes over $200,000. From inquiries I made I discovered that in 1981 the average income of the 239 persons that year who paid no income tax was an astounding $615,000. Let us compare that with the fact that there are many people living below the poverty line who are still required to pay income tax. This is the unseemly free ride that minimum tax rates were supposed to stop.

We are told again and again that at some point in the near future the Government is going to bring down a White Paper and explain how it is going to give us a fair tax system. However, what the Government has done is open the flood gates to the wealthy with, for example, the $500,000 capital gains exemption and the increase in the amounts which can be contributed to RRSP plans to which the wealthy can contribute up to $15,500 in the year in which they would not have to pay any income tax. These are examples of the kinds of things the Government has done to make us believe it is not serious and that we will not receive any real proposals to make the tax system fairer.

Not only has the Government let the wealthy off in terms of them paying a fair share in the form of income tax, it has let the corporations get away with murder. In 1950, federal corporate income tax and personal income tax accounted for equal shares of the revenue received by the federal Government. Today we see individuals paying almost 45 per cent of the federal Government's revenue and the corporate share dropping sharply to below 20 per cent. We also see the taxpayers' share increasing by 15 per cent and the corporate side not increasing at all. Yet the Government is not forcing the corporate sector to pay its fair share of taxes.

Preferred shares which are now very popular with many corporations still go untaxed. We continue to see tax deductible interest on takeovers, which take massive amounts of borrowing without producing any new employment. The Government tells us how it stepped in to cut the scandal of the scientific research tax credit while at the same time it permitted those who had already made application to receive that tax credit. We lost, not $1 billion but over $3 billion in taxes which these companies should have paid. The Government wants to present a hopeful picture today. But it is short of revenue and it is reluctant to find or create more revenue. In order to try to deal with the deficit, it sells off profitable and useful Crown corporations such as Teleglobe. There are thousands of Crown corporations at the federal and the provincial level. Crown corporations were not a product of the imagination of some wild-eyed socialists. Ninety-five per cent or more of the Crown corporations at the federal and provincial levels were established by Conservative, Liberal, Social Credit, and PQ Governments. These Governments established Crown corporations because they saw a need which had to be met. The private sector was not willing to meet these needs, so Governments created those Crown corporations. Now these Crown corporations are being sold without any thought as to the reasons for which they were established and the benefits which they bring to the country.

I have talked about how the federal Government has transferred debts to the provincial Governments, which have accentuated the regional stagnation, which is further compounded by the Government's failure to produce a workable regional policy. There have been a number of concrete and worthwhile suggestions of things which need to be done. Because of its fear of increasing the deficit, the Government has rejected these suggestions out of hand.

The Federation of Canadian Municipalities made a very useful proposal when it pointed out that in most Canadian cities the infrastructure in the core area is falling apart. We need to begin to rebuild the services and to rehabilitate the older parts of Canadian cities. We need to start to rebuild the roads, sewers, bridges, and drainage systems which are falling apart and rapidly wearing out. The federation estimated that it would cost $14 billion to renew these facilities before we become caught in a cycle of expensive schemes of temporary repairs. The federation called for a federal, provincial, and municipally financed joint program.

That proposal was rejected out of hand by the federal Government, despite the fact that there were obvious benefits. New construction would mean job creation, which would be a socially useful expenditure and money would be targeted to areas that need it most, particularly in the inner cities.

It was a former Conservative Government headed by Mr. Diefenbaker which inaugurated that type of program with its Winter Works Program. Instead of accepting that proposal, we have the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) rejecting it, and the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), who should know better, talking about under-priced water supplies to Canadians provided by the cities. Of course, he wants them to pay rather than the federal Government. We are seeing very little innovation from the Government on the expenditure side.

I wish to deal briefly with a couple of other problems. Despite the fact that unemployment is still running over 9 per cent, the Government has cut funding for job creation by $100 million. It has also taken money away from the governmental non-profit sector, and given a substantial part of the job creation money to the private sector. The result is that there has been little in these programs to help those who need it most, native people, the handicapped, or women.

I wish to comment briefly on what has happened to research funding. When the Conservatives were in opposition they said that if elected they would move rapidly to equal what other countries are doing in the way of funding scientific research and development, that they would move to a point where 2.5 per cent of the Gross National Product would be allocated to those efforts. In fact, we are now doing even worse in Canada than we did when the Liberals were in power. Less than 1.5 per cent of the Gross National Product is being spent for scientific research and development now.

The Government puts its hope in the idea that the private sector will put in substantial amounts of money into research and development. I have yet to meet a scientist who believes that the private sector will do that. If the private sector does not invest, it means that we will fall further behind in the objective of moving toward an adequate expenditure in the field of scientific research.

The Government has failed in its promise to give us a fairer tax system. It has put increased burdens on ordinary Canadians. It has made it easier for the wealthy and the corporations which are profitable to avoid paying their fair share of taxes.

For all those reasons, I and other NDP Members of Parliament propose to vote against this borrowing authority proposal.

Mr. Lesick: I have been listening with keen interest to what the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) has said this afternoon, specifically with regard to problems that we have had with the inequities of income tax in 1976 up to 1983, and how the figures had increased from 20 to over 200 for those who were not paying any income tax whatsoever. The Hon. Member said that corporations were paying a much lesser amount of money than private citizens on a percentage basis. The Hon. Member then mentioned the $500,000 that people can save by selling off their assets.

The Hon. Member should realize that all of these figures that he has given us and all of the items that he has enumerated date back to the time when the Liberals, together with the NDP, formed the Government. Therefore, the Hon. Member should accept some of the responsibility, because he was a Member of the Parliament at that time and he was responsible for part of the problem that we are facing today. It is only farmers who are receiving $500,000 rather than any person in Canada and, as the Member mentions, just the rich. That is not so. It is that coalition that has caused the problems that we have today. It is that coalition that has allowed the previous excessive spending.

Why does the Hon. Member not admit to being a party to the inequities of the income tax? Why does the Hon. Member not admit to being a party to the extra expenses which the people of Canada are asked to pay? They are the victims of the incompetence of this coalition. It is not the present Government that has caused this problem; it was a previous Government of which at times the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North was a part.

Mr. Orlikow: There is one statement which the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Lesick) made with which I agree, and that is that the basic faults in the tax system, both in terms of personal and corporate income taxes, were established during the years when the Liberal Party formed the Government. I can agree with that, although I point out to the Hon. Member that it is his Conservative Party which has been in office since 1984 that made these loopholes even easier for both individual taxpayers and corporations. I say to the Hon. Member that he is wrong and that he has not looked at the record when he suggests that we supported the Liberals on those tax measures.

Since the early 1960s, ever since Parliament received the taxation recommendations of the Carter Commission, the commission appointed by former Conservative Prime Minister Diefenbaker, the New Democratic Party has called for implementation of most of its proposals to plug the loopholes. We criticized the Liberals, just as we are criticizing the present Conservative Government, for not dealing with the problem.

Let me say something about my criticism of the $500,000 capital gains exemption. I do not have the time to go into the details today, but we have made clear that there should be an opportunity in the tax system for farmers and small business people to transfer their land and businesses to their children or relatives without being required to pay heavy taxes on supposed capital gains. My criticisms on behalf of the NDP are obviously felt by many people.

If the Hon. Member has not looked at recent polls, he should look at them to see how far support for the Conservative Party has fallen all across the country, but particularly in western Canada and especially in Alberta, a province which during recent elections elected 100 per cent of its members from the Conservative Party. I also ask him to look at the recent provincial election and what happened in the City of Edmonton where 16 NDP Members of the Legislature were elected. The people of the country are dissatisfied with what the Government has done. They are showing that dissatisfaction quite clearly, and they are very justified in doing so.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on Bill C-40, an Act to provide borrowing authority, and to try to determine what the Government is doing and where it is going in respect of its financial policy. The borrowing Bill will allow the Government to borrow $24,300 million by the end of March 1987. The difficulty is that we are no wiser about where the money will be spent.

Certainly the Budget did not provide us with any indication of that, if it can be called a Budget. It was completely undecided about what route the Government would follow. It did not even tell us whether it would reduce the deficit. The deficit reduction, for which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) took many bows, was in the order of $200 million. He certainly did not deal with the very serious financial problem, as he termed it.

I should like to focus particularly on the energy sector and what was missing from the Budget for that important industry. Government Members said that they did not know how they would finance assistance to the energy sector. They said that as recently as the fall of 1986. They did not know whether they would give assistance to the energy sector, whether they would finance the assistance with increased sales and excise taxes, or whether it would be from consolidated revenues or whatever. However, they decided to increase the excise tax in the Budget by one cent per litre. As a result of this one cent per litre increase, they will raise $450 million. They also decided to equalize the excise tax on leaded and unleaded gasoline, from which they will raise another $30 million. Through the Budget the Government is to raise $480 million. What will that do for the energy sector? It will do nothing for that sector.

This is the same Government which said that it was interested in self-sufficiency and security of supply. It said that it wanted to maintain a strong energy sector. In the last federal election it received complete support from the energy producing areas of the country. It has completely let down the people who had every reason to expect that something would be forthcoming.

What is going on with the Government? The energy sector lost over 50,000 jobs in 1986. In Calgary it lost another 6,000 jobs in the month of January 1987. Because of the decline in the energy sector, to the end of January 1987 the country has lost at least 56,000 jobs. It is a very serious problem. It is not only a western Canadian problem; it is a Canadian one. However, the Government refuses to recognize the seriousness of it. It is walking away not only from the problem but from its responsibility as a Government.

Obviously there is complete disagreement in the Government on how to handle the situation. The Minister of Finance is doing absolutely nothing. He came out with a Budget indicating that funds would be raised from gasoline sales, but it did not indicate that anything would be put into the energy sector. On the day the Budget was released, a press release by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) was circulated in western Canada. He indicated that the Budget was not intended to be a vehicle for announcing specific measures to assist specific sectors or regions.

What is the Budget supposed to do? What is its purpose? It is not helping the regions. It is not bringing forward any kind of financial planning.

The press release went on to indicate that the Government had another way of helping the energy sector through what it called a western economic diversification strategy. It indicated that in this strategy measures would be implemented to assist the energy industry during this period of severe difficulty. To which period did it refer? The downturn in the energy sector has been going on since January, 1986. The press release talked about a strategy which would help the energy sector for a period which had no beginning or ending. However, more important, it completely ignored the period of difficulty which has now lasted for 14 months.

The Government has absolutely no solution to the problem or no idea what it will do to help the energy sector. The Government should be honest with western Canadians. It did not say that it had no idea or that it would do nothing to help the energy sector. It said that it would come forward with a western economic diversification strategy but did not give any period of time as to when the strategy would be implemented or what it would contain. It merely tried to pacify western Canadians and let them think that the Government was interested in doing something for them.

Also the Deputy Prime Minister indicated in his press release that investments in energy exploration and development, which are so important to Canada's future energy security of supply, would be encouraged and assisted. Why cannot that be done now? Why do we have to wait for a strategy which has not been formulated or has not been given any definition? It may not even be a strategy which the Government fully intends to bring forward. Why tell western Canadians that they cannot have something now when they are at the height of economic difficulty? Why tell them that they have to wait for the Government to get its act together and come to grips with the problems faced by western Canada at the present time?

The release went on to indicate that the federal Government would co-operate closely with the provincial Governments and industry to examine appropriate measures to accelerate non-conventional oil projects. That is complete hogwash, Mr. Speaker. The Government is not co-operating with the provincial Governments. I believe in consultation. It is important to have consultation in the energy sector, as with all sectors. The Government has talked with the provinces and they have told the federal Government what they want, but the federal Government is no longer communicating with the provinces. The federal Government is backing away from its responsibility, and particularly the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse).

There is a blatant disregard for the problems in western Canada. What is going to happen? What has been happening? The Government says that the market should dictate what takes place. The market should determine what exploration takes place, what development takes place and what gasoline is sold for at the pump. Let me refer first to exploration.

This Government has placed as one of its pillars of energy policy security of supply. It said that that is very important, but the Government does not say that all the time. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) says it all the time, but the Minister of Energy recently denounced security of supply and said it was not important. But this is the same Government, the same Prime Minister and the same Minister of Energy who say that the private sector will do it. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) is making too much noise. If he is not interested in what is happening in western Canada I would ask him at least to sit quietly.

Let me tell you what the private sector said this morning at the meeting of the Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources. Imperial Oil was appearing, and its witness said:

> Spending a lot of money to find and develop whatever undeveloped oil and gas reserves Canada might have strictly for the sake of self-sufficiency makes little sense.

That is what Imperial Oil Limited's Vice-President, Bob Peterson, said today. He went on to say:

> —that ensuring Canada has a secure supply of energy won't help the country much if there is another oil crisis. Canada is more likely to be hurt by the economic impact of such a crisis on its trading partners than by the impact the crisis has on Canadian energy prices and consumption.

Who will help us develop security of supply? We are telling Canadians that there is no security of supply, that there is no policy of security of supply by the Government and the Government has abandoned its role. The private sector will not pick it up. You cannot expect the private sector to spend money at a time when oil prices are low in the interest of having some supply when oil prices are high if the industry does not know when those oil prices will be high. The industry can get a cheaper supply of oil from other sources. The bottom line is profits. There are large reserves of old oil from which companies can get quite a profit. For instance, companies will not spend money on upgraders in western Canada which cost a great deal of money.

Where are we going? We are going nowhere because the Government does not know where it is going. It has no idea. It says the Budget is not the place for a significant policy for energy in western Canada. But that has changed now. On March 4, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was in Calgary. A newspaper article reported:

> Faced with growing hostility in Alberta's depressed oil patch, federal energy Minister Marcel Masse has given his support to a potential $80 million tax break for the industry.

That is a complete change of policy. The Minister said in Alberta that he did not have the details but that the Minister of Finance would be there on Saturday, March 6 and would tell them what it is all about. The Minister of Finance visited Calgary on March 6 and had absolutely no details for the energy sector. He just told them that the Government would come out with a strategy at a later date and that people should be patient. But these are people going bankrupt and who have lost jobs. They wonder how they will look after their families, and all the Minister of Finance told them was to be patient. Even more galling was the remark of the Minister of Energy when he told reporters:

> That the issue of the depletion allowances, which would cost the federal Government about $80 million a year in lost taxes, "was not directly related" to the Budget.

Here is a tax policy granted to the mining sector which the oil and gas sector now wants but the Government is stalling. It will not make any commitment at all on earned depletion for the oil and gas industry. The Minister of Energy had the gall to say that it did not relate to the Budget. What does relate to this Government? What will make this Government concerned about the economy? What will make the Government be concerned about the problems in western Canada?

The Government is now planning to privatize Petro-Canada, the corporation which led exploration in the offshore and in areas where the private sector was not too interested in exploring and drilling. The Government, because it has a successful Crown corporation that has done what it was supposed to do, is going to get rid of it. That makes sense if you are that Government because that is what the Tory Government does. When something works it gets rid of it.

The Minister of Finance says, with respect to Petro-Canada, that it does not have any public utility role at all. The Minister of State for Privatization (Mrs. McDougall) says that she cannot think of one benefit that Petro-Canada has provided. The Minister of Energy said this morning on Canada AM that Petro-Canada has completed its role in exploration in Canada. Later on in the same program he said the Government wants to sell Petro-Canada because it can get more money to carry out exploration.

How in the name of heavens can you rationalize those statements? If the Government sells Petro-Canada and receives a fee, who will do the exploration? Petro-Canada will not be there to do it. A private sector corporation will have to do it. But will the Government give the money to the private sector corporation, over which it has absolutely no control? This is the same Government that says Petro-Canada should not be an arm of public policy, in direct contrast to the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission, which said in its report on competition in the petroleum industry concerning the downstream area of the industry:

> Petro-Canada gives the Government the opportunity to reduce the competitive restraints and associated public cost of that market, not only without having to pass special laws, but in ongoing pervasive ways that could not be achieved by laws.

Everybody is telling the Government that Petro-Canada has a role. Even the strongest foes of Petro-Canada in western Canada, if they were to be honest with you, would tell you that Petro-Canada has provided some benefit to the energy sector and to the economy.

I think we have a rather frightening situation. We do not know what is going to happen. The situation has not changed in the energy sector in western Canada. The situation is the same: there is still a downturn in the oil and gas industry. This downturn has reduced activity considerably and has reduced the number of wells drilled in 1985 from 12,000 to half of that in 1986. The forecast for 1987 is that the number of wells drilled will be reduced yet again.

• (1600)

The outlook is not encouraging. One of the reasons it is not encouraging is that the people do not have any confidence in the Government. They feel as though they have been betrayed. They supported the Government in the belief that it understood and would bring forward policies that would be helpful to them. They have been completely frustrated and led down the garden path by this Conservative Government.

This is true not only of the situation in western Canada but of the situation in Atlantic Canada as well, and not only with respect to the energy sector. Because there is to be a by-election in St. John's East, the Government has now told Petro-Canada that it wants activity in Terra Nova and the Avalon Basin. This same company, which is not supposed to be an arm of public policy, which is supposed to be completely independent, flew the two Ministers to Newfoundland where they made an announcement of two delineation wells to be drilled. This raised the hopes and led the people of Newfoundland to believe that there would be development of the oil reserves at the Terra Nova site. That is just complete speculation, because this Government does not believe in doing anything in the interests of Newfoundlanders or of any other Canadians. It will be devastating if the Government does not fulfil that commitment, yet Petro-Canada is completely backing away, except, ironically, where the Government has told it that it has to announce activity.

Regional development in Canada is a complete misnomer under this Government. The Government has no policy of regional development. The only regional development in which this Government believes is the strengthening of the muscles on its behind. The Government has completely forgotten about the needs of Atlantic Canadians and Canadians in have not regions. The Government throws out a fund every now and then, but nothing is ever done with it. There is no commitment to ensure that funds succeed and that economic disparities are corrected.

This Government has developed an arrogance one would not have believed possible in just two years. It is completely disinterested in people and has a complete lack of concern for the problems of Canadians.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) for making a very excellent speech. He outlined very clearly his position on the oil industry and how the Government is failing in its attempt to help the oil industry. Clearly, the Budget and the borrowing authority Bill with which we are dealing today did not address the needs of the oil industry.

I would like to follow up on the Hon. Member's final remarks on regional disparity. The Hon. Member is from Cape Breton and I think he clearly understands that the Government has been a total failure when it comes to job creation in Atlantic Canada. The programs that were announced were programs in name only. There was no substance to them.

In my own Province of Prince Edward Island, we had the highest rate of unemployment in January, 1987 since 1982. Unemployment is now up to 14.6 per cent, but the Hon. Member knows full well that that is not the true picture. These figures are seasonally adjusted and do not take into consideration those who are employed in the fishing industry and others who are drawing UIC benefits.

I would like to point out to the Hon. Member the Government's lack of funding for post-secondary education and have him comment on that. Students from my province have come to me to express their tremendous displeasure at the Government's funding for Established Programs Financing. The University of Prince Edward Island's tuition fees are among the highest in Canada. Last year, tuition fees were $1,480, plus other mandatory fees and book costs. When you add to that living expenses together with the lack of employment for students in the Atlantic provinces, the situation is almost such that the ordinary young person in Atlantic Canada is being held back by the Government's lack of funding. The Government is not investing in one of the best areas I know of to invest in, and that is, the future of young people.

We in Atlantic Canada have been totally let down in the area of post-secondary education as we were in many other areas. I heard some government Members speak this morning about lowering the deficit from $32 billion to a projected $29.5 billion. However, looking at it very carefully, one finds that the reduction is mostly as a result of tax increases and not of any savings that I can see. I see the Government as being penny wise and dollar foolish. It has the largest Cabinet ever, although every week or so one or two cabinet Ministers fall for one reason or other, but they continue to be reappointed. I could go on and on about the way the Government is wastefully abusing the taxpayer while cutting back in ways that will be detrimental to the long-term future and viability of Canada, and particularly cutting back on programs that affect the education of young people.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, the young people of Canada and particularly of Atlantic Canada are being left singularly without hope. As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson), has said, not only are opportunities slim but the morale of young people is low and is eroding even further. It is becoming more and more apparent that it is the Government's intention that only the wealthy should be able to go to university and that assistance for universities should be reduced to such an extent that young people who cannot find summer jobs or get assistance from their parents will not be able to attend university regardless of how well they do in school.

With respect to jobs, the picture is equally bleak. The job base in Atlantic Canada is eroding as the Government tends to centralize all its activities in the larger centres. Young people are being trained without having opportunities to find jobs in their fields of expertise. It is a concern for them and for their parents and it is a concern for the future of Atlantic Canada. I think it should be a concern for all Canadians.

Mr. Gagnon: Mr. Speaker, we really do not have to take any lessons from the Liberals on how to look after an energy policy. They brought in a National Energy Program, they brought in the PGRT, and they brought western Canada to its knees. If any divisive program was brought in by the Liberals, it was the NEP, aided and abetted by the NDP. That stands for the No Down Payment group. All they believe in is spend, spend, spend. They are fiscally irresponsible. If you do not have fiscal responsibility, investors, foreign or Canadian, will lose confidence. That will cause a run on the dollar. That happened at this time last year and it caused higher interest rates. Last year interest rates were 4 per cent higher than they are today. People have said that it is not Canadian policies which cause higher interest rates. I say to them, look at Australia. The prime rate in Australia is 18.25 per cent. Ours is 9.25 per cent. We must be doing something a little better than they are doing.

My friend from the Liberal Party was talking about Petro-Canada. That company received $4.25 billion from the taxpayer. What we got back was $50 million. We should have received 10 times that amount every year, not just a one-time payment, for the last seven years. He talks about all this fantastic exploration on the frontier by Petro-Canada. He also forgets that on top of the $4.25 billion that company received from the Government, it was also reimbursed for 80 per cent of its exploration costs through PIP grants. Another hand-out.

The Hon. Member talks about competition. Some of the marketing companies which have disappeared into Petro-Canada are Supertest, BP, Canadian Fina, Pacific 66, Gulf, Royalite, and Purity 99. Those are seven that I can think of at the moment. If you wonder why we do not have competition in the market-place, it is because Petro-Canada has gobbled up all the competitors. When you have competition, you have a fair market price. I can point to Regina which has a co-op refinery, or Calgary with a Turbo refinery. Does my Liberal friend still believe that Petro-Canada is a good instrument for Canadians?

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend says the Government does not have to take any lessons from the Liberal Party. To give you an indication of the stubbornness and stupidity of the Government, the lessons are there but it refuses to take them. The Hon. Member implies that because of the NEP we were decimated in western Canada. His Government is now compounding the problem by not having any policy at all. It then wonders why it is not going over well in western Canada. The Tories wonder why the people of western Canada are completely disgusted with them. Not only is there not an unpopular policy, there is no policy at all. The Government has not even tried to find something that would help. It just backs away and snubs those people. That is the worst affront of all.

The Hon. Member says the Liberal Government brought the oil and gas industry to its knees. His Government is not only doing that, it is kicking the industry when it is down. It is incredible that the Government and the Conservative Party do not understand what they are doing. They ask, why is Petro-Canada important? Why did the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) fly in a Petro-Canada jet to Newfoundland to announce two delineation wells if Petro-Canada is not important? If Petro-Canada is such an nonentity, why is the Government using it to try to bolster its pathetic position in St. John's East? I do not have to repeat what Petro-Canada has done for this country. The Government, through its Ministers, is demonstrating that daily.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse)—Banks and banking—Chartered banks' interest rates—Spread between bank and prime rate; the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—National Research Council—(a) Future of Algonquin radio observatory (b) Use of observatory equipment; the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway)—Revenue Canada—Disappearance of microfiche records—Result of investigation.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1986-87 (NO. 2)

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-40, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to participate in the debate this afternoon on Bill C-40, an Act to give the Government borrowing authority. As in the past, this kind of Bill is usually very bland with not much flesh or detail except that it will give the Government $24.3 billion in this fiscal year. Therefore, I think it would be very irresponsible of us on this side of the House not to rise in our place and ask what it is for. Like any other big business, big Government has to borrow money, very often in advance. However, I think we should have the right to demand to know, not only why the Government is borrowing that amount of money, but for what specific purposes. We also have to ask it to justify those huge expenditures. If I am not mistaken and if my memory serves me correctly, that is what this place is all about. That is why Parliament began in England some 700 years ago, to force the Government to justify the spending of taxpayers' money.

To get an answer to this question we have to cast our minds back to the Government's last Budget. That is hard to do because there was little in that Budget to make it memorable. In fact, one could sum up the most recent Budget in just four words: More of the same. I have a partisan political temptation to stop right here and just say, go ahead. After all, the Government has been good to the NDP. Looking at the recent poll results one could make the case that the Conservative Government is the best thing ever to happen to the NDP. However, I cannot do that. My conscience, my mail and my contacts with my constituents remind me daily that this country is hurting.

The fact that so few approve of the Government is not to be celebrated, it is a cause for concern. There is a feeling, even in my own constituency in southwestern Ontario, that somehow the recession is behind us, that we have overcome the great obstacles such as very high interest rates and massive unemployment, and that the country is back to work, the unemployment problem is solved, and much lower interest rates are benefiting everyone from coast to coast. However, all one has to do is to travel beyond about 200 miles from the City of Toronto in southwestern Ontario, with the possible exception of Montreal and certain parts of southern Quebec, to find out that Canada has not bounced back from the recession of 1981-82. Indeed, there are greater regional disparities today than there were then. There are higher unemployment rates in seven provinces today than there were in 1982. Let us not fool ourselves that the Government's fiscal and monetary policies have somehow led us out of recession or depression and brought us back into the warm sunshine of advancement and development. Such is just not the case.

We have to skip the first half of the last Budget, which was just self-congratulations or breathing space. We then get to the meat of the Government's proposals in the February Budget. However, in this case maybe bare bones is a better way to describe it, because the Government only proposes to raise a few taxes and even those proposals hit hardest at low and middle-income earners. Of course, that has always been the case. Those who make up the largest single segment of our wage-earning population, the men and women in the so-called middle income group, have been hit again.

The first tax increase comes at the gas pumps. The ordinary guy who drives to work is asked to pay another one cent on every litre of gas. The Government clearly hoped that everyone would just shrug at another penny tax. However, even that slim hope faded when the big oil companies decided to tack on a few cents for themselves. That caused an uproar. I hoped that the Government would step in to stop such a blatant price gouging. After all, the oil companies were hoping to pin the rap for this increase on the Government. However, the Government could not muster enough courage. Instead, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) told Canadians not to buy the gas if they did not like the price. Truly spoken like a man who gets driven around in a limousine. If he had to get to work and his tank was empty the day after his Budget, his answer might have been a little different.

Gas was not the only thing to be taxed. The Government also broadened the sales tax to include snack food. This is a small measure which might have been overlooked in a more substantial Budget. However, the sales tax extension, albeit small, was a perfect illustration of the Government's philosophy. Instead of getting its money by making sure that every individual and corporation is paying its fair share, it chose to implement a regressive, indirect tax which hits the consumer hardest. I would have preferred to see tax reform, and I will return to that later.

Sales taxes are, by definition, regressive taxes. It does not matter whether you are a millionaire or on a fixed retirement income, you pay the same tax on the same article. That is just not fair. A loaf of bread is the same price for a person raising a family on $15,000 a year as it is for the rich person raising a family on $150,000 a year. Sales taxes are very, very regressive.

There was also a 4 per cent hike on the excise tax on tobacco products. This is a traditional sin tax which everyone expects to see in Budgets. We have seen it in virtually every Budget for the last 20 years. However, it ignores a crying need. This is no time for another mindless revenue grab from tobacco. The Government should realize that this cash cow is dying. I represent an area with a large number of tobacco growers who desperately need help to convert their operations into other products which will give them a decent return on their investment.

I would like to spend a couple of minutes to repeat a few things I have said in this Chamber on other occasions. When those hard-working tobacco growers started growing tobacco 50 or 60 years ago in the tobacco belt of southwestern Ontario they took a great risk. They went into an economic wasteland, the backwater of southern Ontario which was not much good for producing anything else. Through hard work, worry, borrowing, and paying their taxes year in and year out they fashioned for themselves a decent standard of living while building up some very viable family farms. For a number of years they prospered. However, in recent years, due to many different obstacles, not the least of which is the health factor, the tobacco industry is now on the decline. Judging by the predictions of most of the experts, the tobacco industry will continue to decline in this country.

It is very easy for us to say that people should stop smoking, that we should stop advertising tobacco products, and that we should bring in every kind of regulation and law imaginable to encourage people to quit smoking. I am a living example of a person who smoked cigarettes for 30 years and finally quit. I am happy I quit. I got scared. I knew that the writing was on the wall and that smoking was a dangerous habit to indulge in.

However, on the other side, we must look at the tobacco industry and the tobacco producers in particular. Is it fair to pull the rug out from under them and say that not only has their product been scientifically proven to be dangerous but that we do not care about them any more, that we will let them fend for themselves other than putting $15 million in the kitty to help them get out of tobacco and into something else? Tobacco farmers need about three years of good prices and then will not need government assistance to get out of tobacco. They will be able to leave with dignity, independent of government aid. They will have enough money to set themselves up in another industry or business or to enter a trade.

Unfortunately, both the federal Government and the provincial Government of Ontario are doing very little other than saying a lot about what should be done rather than putting a meaningful program into place to assist the tobacco growers. It is a shame that because of the health factor some 20 townships in southwestern Ontario will suffer drastically in terms of their tax base. The families of tobacco growers are going through tremendous adversity, depression and anxiety because their livelihood is literally being taken away from them. I hope that the Government will put together a program to assist these people in a dignified way which will allow them, of their own volition, to move into another kind of business.

While so many farmers are going bankrupt and their land is falling out of production, no government aid has been announced. The Government has an opportunity to tell those farmers that they are not alone. The Government could have said that this year's tax hike on tobacco would be directed exclusively to developing alternative crops, researching new markets, and providing assistance to convert tobacco farms to other kinds of production. That opportunity was missed. Tobacco farmers found out what other Canadians learned the hard way, that they cannot trust the Government to fund fairness.

By looking at what is not in the Government's fiscal plan you can see the real curdle, if I can use that expression, of this Budget. There were no plans to create jobs. There were no new plans to help farmers. There were no new plans to correct regional economic problems, and there was no tax reform. Each of these glaring omissions says something about the Government. The Government tells us something with each studied silence. If you do not have a job, the Government says "tough". If your farm is in trouble, the Government says "sell out". If you live in a depressed part of the country, the Government says "move". If you want a fair tax system, the Government says "wait until election time".

These issues should be addressed when the Government lays out its plans for the coming year. I know the Government will argue that job creation is part of its over-all plan. It will point with pride to the number of jobs created since it came to office. That is fine if you live in or around Toronto. Of these new jobs, 95 per cent were created in Ontario, but even in Ontario jobs are not being created equally. The region I represent has unemployment of approximately 11 per cent. That is about 4 points above the provincial average in one of the most prosperous areas of the country. Imagine the despair in Atlantic Canada, in the West, and in the North. There should have been a clear target for lowering unemployment, especially in depressed regions of the country.

There should also have been some attempt at tax reform. I will not repeat the tax increases which have been heaped on the average Canadian family in the last two and a half years. They have been put on the record again and again. The federal taxes of the average family have increased by approximately $1,350 a year since the Conservatives came into office. Canadians were looking forward to this year because they had been promised tax reform. Indeed, that was supposed to be the main attraction of this year's Budget. We would have welcomed the closure of loopholes such as the capital gains exemption. Perhaps I should not call that a loophole. It was simply a special tax concession given to investors. Canadians would have been happier with a simpler tax system where every individual and corporation paid a fair share. Instead, it was put off. I expect the Government wanted the delay so that the new system could be announced closer to the next federal election. However, every day that the Government delays will cost it dearly, because it is another day that Canadians are forced to endure an unfair tax system. If there is one thing that Canadians want today, it is a fair tax system. They do not want to hear another promise of fairer taxation during the next election campaign.

• (1630)

I suggest it would be in the interests of the Government, which is currently so low in the polls, to bring forward real tax reform well in advance of the next election if it hopes even to form a minority government after that election.

There are other areas where fairness might have been advanced. The framework and the timetable for implementing a national system for child care might have been proposed. Long-term solutions to the crisis in Canadian agriculture might have been suggested as well. However, while there has been a lot of talk, none of these areas has seen any action. Borrowing billions of dollars for more of the same is sadly inadequate.

I have outlined some of the glaring deficiencies in the Budget on the one hand and addressed very briefly the Government's intention to borrow some $24 billion on the other. It is time that the Government came clean with the Canadian people and that it brought forward meaningful tax reform. That is what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was forced to promise in the last election campaign during that great national debate on television in the summer of 1984. Over two and a half years later we are still waiting for even a White Paper or Green Paper on tax reform.

The tax system is at the very heart of a fair and equitable society. Historians will look back and judge the Government on how fairly it treated Canadians. One of the criteria on which they will base their judgment will be how fair the tax system was.

We all know that in the past our tax system, as in the United States, has always been used and indeed, one might cynically suggest, written as an instrument for the few to avoid paying taxes rather than a broad simple approach in which everyone pays his or her fair share in personal and corporate tax.

I want to refer to corporate taxation. There is no question that unless corporations pay more in income tax in this country individuals will have to pay more and more. It is most regrettable that the balance is so much in favour of the corporations and that individual taxpayers in Canada are having to pay such an inordinate amount of money from their hard-earned income.

Finally, I want to talk about the plight of our farmers. I sincerely hope that part of the money from the $24.3 billion that the Government intends to borrow in the fiscal year will go to a program that is not simply words but represents action to assist not only tobacco farmers but all farmers in this country so they may get their finances in order and make a decent living. Unless there is a decision that is based on the political will to preserve the family farm in this country, it will be lost. We will be at the mercy of offshore prices and will pay the same for bread, milk, cheese and other commodities as do Norway and Sweden which must import such products. We must ensure that we can export our surplus products so that the farmers can make a decent income.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments? Resuming debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon the debate centres on a Bill authorizing the Government to borrow in order to meet its financial commitments, and if we look at the Budget brought down last month, I am sure a private company would have trouble getting a loan on the basis of the accounting methods used by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

The Minister reduced the projected deficit by $1.2 billion without increasing revenue or reducing spending. He used an accounting trick which he referred to as "accelerated remittance of source deductions". This is just another example of Conservative sleight-of-hand.

Since the federal election in September 1984, Canadians have become resigned to unacceptable tax increases. Everything is taxed again and again and again. This year, the Conservative Minister of Finance brought down a Budget that is not worthy of the name. However, even in this document he still managed to raise taxes. He raised the tax on gas by one cent a litre, which means that since the Conservatives came to power, excise tax on gas has increased by a total of 18 cents per gallon, which reminds me of the 18-cent tax per gallon—

Mr. Hudon: Less than the increases you brought in.

Mr. Gagliano: —which the Minister of Finance in the Clark Government announced in his 1979 Budget, a proposal that was rejected by this House. Canadians voted this decision down in a general election in 1980, by electing a Liberal Government, and in 1984, the Conservatives returned to power. They failed to learn from their 1980 experience, because now they are bringing in the same 18-cent tax again, Mr. Speaker.

The Conservative Government, and especially the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance, say that these taxes are necessary to reduce the deficit.

Barely a year ago, in February 1986, the Minister of Finance, with a masterful stroke of the pen, cut spending by $500 million so that the deficit forecast for 1986-87 would be less than $30 billion. In other words, he projected a deficit of $29.5 billion, but now at the end of this fiscal year, it looks more like a deficit of $32 billion, a difference of $2.5 billion.

This year, in the so-called Budget he brought down on February 18, 1987, he projected a deficit of less than $30 billion. He managed to get the deficit down to $29.3 billion by using accounting tricks like the accelerated remittance of source deductions, which will raise $1.2 billion by taking money out of the operating capital of our businesses, especially certain small businesses.

He also managed to prune a few hundred million dollars from the National Defence budget. Mr. Speaker, we are asking Canadians to do their share to help resolve our financial problems. We are asking Canadians to be honest with themselves and with the Government. And now we see the Minister of Finance of this country using hardly acceptable accounting methods to give the impression he is reducing the national deficit, while in reality, his imaginative forecast is misleading.

Mr. Speaker, after three budgets featuring astronomical tax increases, we will end the year 1986-87 with a deficit of about $33 billion, roughly the same as the deficit incurred during the last full year of the Liberal administration in 1983-84, $32.399 billion. If we add to that the nearly $7 billion tax increases plus the money the Government got for selling Crown corporations we might say today that the Canadian Government would have run up a deficit of approximately $40 billion. Such is the financial picture of the Conservative Government, Mr. Speaker. Where is the deficit reduction we were promised?

• (1640)

[English]

With the Conservative Government in power, everyone agrees that the rich and the corporations feel a smaller tax bite than the poor. From the budget documents we can see that Ottawa will take from individuals in the coming fiscal year, which begins on April 1, $43.3 billion or 48 per cent more than in 1984-85, the year the Government was elected. These documents also revealed that corporations will pay an estimated $10.135 billion in federal income tax in the coming fiscal year or 4.3 per cent more than they paid in 1984-85. These figures do not include a 62 per cent increase in federal sales tax and excise tax over the same period.

Not only has the federal sales tax been increased four times by the middle of this year, it has repeatedly been extended to a variety of products previously not covered. The latest victims are candies and ice-cream for kids. These increases, along with other excise tax increases on tobacco, alcohol and gasoline, have added to the tax take of the provinces.

A report last month prepared by the Welfare Council, a federal advisory group, states that a two-income two-children family earning $15,000 paid $407 in federal income tax in the calendar year 1985. This year the same family will pay $770 or a 90 per cent increase. A family earning $20,112, the poverty line for a family of four in a city of 500 or more, paid $1,290 in federal income tax in 1985. This year that same family will pay $1,736 or 25 per cent more.

At the average income level of $42,000, the federal income tax bite this year will be $6,102, an increase of 32 per cent or $1,487. In contrast, the income tax take from a couple earning $100,000 will have increased by $319 or 2 per cent for the same period. Federal income tax for a family earning $80,000 will have risen 8 per cent or $1,056. These figures are very disturbing. These figures are telling us that the gap between rich and poor in Canada is increasing rapidly and dangerously and the Government is not doing a thing about it. In fact, the Government is helping to make it larger.

Since it took office, the Government has promised fiscal reform, but we are still waiting. How long do we have to wait? In his Budget, the Minister of Finance promised we would have a White Paper in the spring so we can know the intentions of the Government. I hope that in the next Budget he will act on tax reform. How can Canadians trust the Minister of Finance or the Conservative Government that they will not, with the excuse of a tax reform, increase taxes? After all, the present Minister of Finance said in the House of Commons on March 6, 1984, that if a Conservative Government were elected "we would cut spending. We would not raise taxes. Tax levels in Canada are already too high", and later in the same speech he said: "If we raise taxes, we provide funds for politicians and bureaucrats to spend". But in his three Budgets, he has increased taxes. Canadians have never experienced such increases since the last World War. How can Canadians today trust the Minister of Finance, the Prime Minister and this Conservative Government that they will not take advantage of tax reform to dig more deeply into the pockets of low and middle-income earners in order to give presents to their friends as they did in the past when they allowed tax concessions to multinationals and high income earners?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance keeps on talking about the tax reform, making us believe he will deliver the goods as he promised in his February 18, 1987 Budget Speech. We will be waiting impatiently for this famous White Paper to find out what the Government intends to do.

On several occasions the Minister of Finance indicated to the House that if the Opposition had any worthwhile suggestions to make we ought to give him our ideas just so he might come up with a tax reform which all Canadians could live with.

Mr. Speaker, since we are debating economic issues I should like to take this opportunity to offer a few tax-related suggestions to the Minister of Finance so that we might design a fair, equitable and simple tax system for all Canadians.

For starters, the Government must not seek ways to increase taxes if it wants its tax reform to be respected and appropriate. Should the reform lead to higher taxes, the Government must promise to reimburse taxpayers through tax credits or otherwise so as to create a climate of confidence in our tax system.

Mr. Speaker, it stands to reason that a tax reform calls for higher taxes. But then people will protest and the tax reform will lose its objectivity. It is therefore imperative that the tax reform address the problems inherent in our very complex legislation. It should be aimed at eliminating such complexities, everything which Canadians no longer understand and which even some experts find baffling.

Mr. Speaker, this is not new, and I am sure you and the Members of this House will agree, and in fact Canadians all agree they have had enough of Government red tape. If we want the tax reform to be objective and feasible and fair, it should provide us with a simple system that can be understood by everyone. Our tax system should be aimed at one specific purpose: to finance our programs, both economic and social, in a manner that is non-discriminatory.

Mr. Speaker, another bit of advice I would like to give the Minister of Finance concerns his so-called business tax, his new sales tax that could well lead to a tax revolt in this country. I must say that Canadians are ready for a revolt. It has happened before, and people from the general area around Montreal Island who know something about municipal taxes . . . If the Minister of Finance proposes a new sales tax that will take even more money out of the pockets of Canadian taxpayers, we are going to have some very violent demonstrations.

To avoid this, and to make tax reform acceptable, the Minister of Finance should indicate in his White Paper the goal of this new tax which should be objective and not penalize small businesses.

The important thing is that as soon as his White Paper is published, the Minister of Finance should make it clear how he intends to exempt small businesses from this new tax system.

Mr. Speaker, today, and the Minister of Finance said so himself so we agree on that, only one third of our businesses are subject to federal sales tax. If the new sales tax applies to everyone, Mr. Speaker, this means that the majority of small businesses that are not subject to federal sales tax will be subject to the new tax and will therefore have to cope with an enormous paper burden. They will not accept this, and there will be protests, and we will lose the whole objective aspect of this federal sales tax which could be part of a fair and equitable tax reform.

Mr. Speaker, bearing in mind that small businesses create most of the jobs in this country, a tax system that would be unfair to this sector would increase unemployment and defeat the purpose of the tax reform the Minister of Finance intends to propose and which everyone agrees is badly needed.

Mr. Speaker, although the Opposition is often accused of being negative, I have just given the Government and the Minister of Finance a few constructive proposals. We all realize that tax reform is complex. We realize the Minister of Finance will have trouble reconciling all these aspects within his caucus and his Department. However, considering the Minister has been promising tax reform ever since this Government came to power two and a half years ago, it is high time the Minister of Finance released his White Paper and told the Canadian people what this Government intends to do about introducing a truly Canadian tax reform that is sensible, fair and just.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to caution the Minister of Finance by suggesting that the methods he has been using up till now to reduce the deficit are misleading and that nobody is deceived by such a tactic. Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, someone going to the bank to apply for a loan and submitting a balance sheet that would show inflated revenues to embellish his financial situation. And after reviewing that, the bank manager would discover that the applicants' revenues and expenditures are fictitious, and that he submitted a fake balance sheet, that does not reflect the company's true situation. This is exactly what the Minister of Finance has attempted to do with his budget last month, to show a deficit that was lower than $30 billion by resorting to unacceptable accounting trickery.

Mr. Speaker, he asked businesses to remit tax money every other week, instead of once a month. This automatically will mean twice the paperwork, because instead of filling forms and computing, and balancing payroll accounts once a month, they will have to balance them every other week.

The Minister of Finance in his budget speech suggested this would only affect larger corporations. Again he miscalculated, because any building contractor with 20 employees will be affected, Mr. Speaker. And in my calculations, I only used the Quebec income tax deductions, which of course do not include the Canada Pension Plan nor the fact that provincial income tax is collected. Therefore, if I do the same calculations for the other provinces, the number of employees for a business required to make the accelerated remittances will be less than 20. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, if really we are to initiate a tax reform for the main purpose of reducing paperwork, I think the Minister of Finance is going the wrong way about it. He is increasing the paperload and not reducing it. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I submit that Canadians are aware of the deficit problem, which to a large extent was due to a recession.

Canadians are willing to pay their share to reduce that debt, but the Tory Government must prove its good faith. Up until now, they have been doing the opposite, increasing taxes while not reducing the deficit, and the public debt is increasing. Unbelievably, Mr. Speaker, the national debt has increased from $180 billion to $295 billion, an increase of about 60 percent within three years. Well, I hope Canadians will see their taxes decreased and not increased, with a proposed new tax system that will be adequate for our economic and social development, that will reduce unemployment, and especially reduce the gap between the rich and the poor, all of which would help us establish a just society which our children could inherit.

[English]

Mr. Hovdebo: Would the Hon. Member give us some indication of the cost to a small business of making submissions to Revenue Canada every two weeks rather than once a month? As far as a small business is concerned what is the extra cost?

Mr. Gagliano: Definitely, the first cost that a small business will incur is that it has to send $15,000 to the Government 15 days earlier than it is presently doing. Therefore, it will incur operating expenses. Today the majority of businesses operate with an open credit margin, and automatically there will be the interest expense every 15 days that it presently does not incur because the money is submitted once a month. Cash flow will be affected, and there will be an interest expense.

Second, submitting the money every two weeks will double the bookkeeping or accounting expense because it will be twice a month that the accountant has to balance the payroll book. The accountant cannot just write a cheque and say, "Here is so much for federal income tax, and so much for UIC". The payroll has to be balanced and the employer contribution has to be calculated. Therefore, with the accelerated deduction at source created by the Minister of Finance, it doubles the paper work for a small construction business with 20 employees.

As I previously said in my speech, that calculation was done for the Province of Quebec. If the same calculation is applied to other provinces where the number of employees may be 15 instead of 20, the federal Government collects Canada Pension Plan and provincial income tax. The new Wilson rule is based on the total remittance by the year, and not what is in the remittance. In provinces other than Quebec, a small business has to be small, in other words, instead of 20 employees, it may have 15 employees.

Mr. Henderson: I wish to comment not only on this Budget and the Hon. Member's views, but on the previous Budgets introduced by the Government since 1984. As a Member of Parliament from Atlantic Canada, I find that regional disparities are becoming greater. While there certainly is a turn in the economy, it is concentrated in Ontario, mostly in Toronto and southern Ontario.

At the meeting of the House of Commons Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said that western Canadians are prisoners of the international economic forces and there is not much that the federal Government can do about it immediately. That quotation appeared in the Thursday, March 5, 1987 edition of The Ottawa Citizen. He has certainly recognized the problem of disparities, as was indicated in the news release, but there was nothing in the Budget which attempted in any way to relieve the situation.

• (1700)

Over the last two years to three years we have seen the progression of even a greater gap between have and have not areas. I wonder whether the Hon. Member would comment on that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret that there will not be time.

It being five o'clock the House will now proceed to consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

MOTOR VEHICLES

SUGGESTED REQUIREMENT FOR AUTOMATIC HEADLIGHT SYSTEM

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of introducing a measure which would require that all motor vehicles manufactured and sold in Canada or imported into Canada be equipped with an automatic system which would cause headlights to be turned on whenever the motor vehicle is in operation.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the use of daytime running lights is intended to increase the visibility of vehicles so that they can be seen before collisions occur with another vehicle or with pedestrians. Protection is facilitated by the increase in contrast between a vehicle and its background. The use of daytime running lights is effective in increasing vehicle visibility both at night and in the daytime regardless of the background and environmental conditions.

This initiative would be the most important safety feature since the introduction of the wheel brake. It has been demonstrated to result in less accidents than any other safety advance in the automotive industry.

Nearly 45 per cent of all road accidents occur because of recognition errors, including both perception and comprehension. The lack of vehicle visibility is the major cause.

We have evidence before us to establish clearly and factually that daytime running lights in the use of automobiles is a safety factor which brings very positive results. In Sweden, the use of headlights at any time has been compulsory since 1977. It is estimated that there is a 95 per cent participation rate in that country. Multiple daylight accidents have decreased in urban Sweden by 20 per cent and in rural areas by 17 per cent. Summer accidents where the days are longer have decreased in urban areas of Sweden by 12 per cent.

In Finland, the use of daytime running lights inside built up areas in the winter has been compulsory since 1972. The participation level is high, and daytime multiple accidents have decreased by 32 per cent since 1974.

Greyhound Bus Lines in North America conducted a test project which involved 100 per cent participation in the use of daytime running lights. It was observed that daylight collisions decreased by 24 per cent in Canada and by 12 per cent in the United States.

American Telephone and Telegraph also conducted a test project. The drivers of its vehicles across the United States were asked to have their headlights on at all times, both daytime and at night. In the first six months multiple daylight accidents decreased by 32 per cent. After two years of the experiment it was noted that the accident rate had decreased by 45 per cent.

Clearly there is evidence to establish that visibility increases with the contrast created by the use of daytime running lights. It is an inexpensive and extremely effective measure by which we might decrease automobile accidents.

We do not need to turn to Greyhound Bus Lines or Nordic countries to note examples of the effectiveness of this measure. Since 1966, the daytime use of headlights on motorcycles has been compulsory in Canada. It should be noted that since the introduction of that safety feature, there was a 40 per cent decrease in motorcycle accidents. In 1982, Canada had more than 800,000 motor vehicle accidents wherein 4,169 persons died. Estimates predict that with the use of daytime running lights approximately 120 lives per year would be saved and 11,000 injuries, together with $200 million in related costs, would be eliminated. Total accidents in Canada would decrease by 4 per cent to 5 per cent with use of universal daytime running lights and fatal accidents would be reduced by about 3 per cent.

Merrill Allen of the University of Indiana found that drivers did not seem to know under what conditions they should turn on their headlights. A study done by Transport Canada found that at dusk oncoming unlighted cars were visible to one another only if they were within 500 feet of each other. However, a full 1,500 feet is required for safe passing. At dusk a masking effect occurs if an unlighted car is preceded or followed by a lighted car. The unlighted car in effect becomes invisible.

It was further found that drivers judge a lighted vehicle to be closer than it really is and therefore passing is discouraged. In Canada daytime running lights usage is less than 14 per cent. Thus, full participation in the use of daytime running lights would produce an estimated 10 per cent to 20 per cent reduction in daytime multiple vehicle collisions. This would equate to a 3 per cent to 6 per cent reduction in over-all annual accidents.

A retired engineer and lighting specialist for General Motors indicated that such lamps on automobiles would require an energy equivalent of about eight-tenths of a gallon of gas per car per year. As original equipment on cars, daytime running lights would cost about $15 per vehicle. This recommendation is practical, workable, and responds to a demonstrated need. It is a very economical way in which to reduce accidents, save lives, decrease property damage, and provide a very worthwhile service for Canadian drivers at very little cost.

Owners of existing automobiles would have the option of either switching on their headlights while driving or installing an automatic switch system which would allow their headlights to come on at low beam. Vehicles could be modified, if the owners so wished, to install one of the less expensive options and link it to their ignition systems. The study by Transport Canada indicated that the benefit to cost ratio would be about two to one.

In conclusion, let me say that the use of daytime running lights in Canada on motorcycles has resulted in a 40 per cent reduction in motorcycle accidents. In Sweden and Finland there has been the clear demonstration of a significant reduction in accidents because of the use of daytime running lights. The American Telephone and Telegraph Company has noted extremely positive results, as much as a 45 per cent decrease in accident rates with its experiment. There are similar statistics for the Greyhound Bus Corporation in Canada and the United States. The evidence is there. It is clear for all to see. It is inexpensive. It can save lives and prevent as much as 11,000 injuries a year. Canada ought to adopt this simple but effective system for protecting its citizens. I hope the Bill will be allowed to pass in the House of Commons.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to speak today on the motion of the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) asking that the Government introduce a measure requiring that all motor vehicles manufactured and sold in Canada be equipped with an automatic system which would cause headlights to be turned on whenever the motor vehicle is in operation.

I wish to commend the Hon. Member for this proposal which I find quite constructive. I hope that Government authorities, especially the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), will give it favourable consideration. I am not certain that the Minister will act quickly, but I hope that the Hon. Member will use his influence with the Government to speed up the process.

Indeed, such a measure could reduce considerably the number of front-end collisions on Canadian roads. In addition, it could reduce the number of accidents causing fatalities or serious injuries. I therefore believe that this is a very important proposal which deserves to be not only considered, but also implemented by the Government.

It is attractive from many aspects, but I believe that the Government should consider some of my comments before putting it in effect.

Indeed, I find this motion quite appropriate since an increasing number of drivers keep their headlights turned on all day. In Ontario, there are now road signs saying:

[English]

"Keep your lights on at all times for greater safety". Indeed, many people going to work early in the morning or returning at the end of the afternoon are using their lights even on a sunny day. They use their lights for greater safety.

• (1710)

I think it is a useful and a valuable recommendation of the Hon. Member. However, there is a caveat. Under closer scrutiny, under a more careful analysis going beyond the principle to the application, the motion does not look totally attractive unless some provisions are embodied in the initiative.

I would like to enumerate some conditions that should be attached to such a recommendation in the motion.

[Translation]

First, as I said earlier, we in the Liberal Party believe that this proposal is valid since studies clearly show it would have a positive impact on the number of road accidents.

However, we believe that implementing such a measure could cost thousands of dollars to Canadian drivers because it would inevitably overload the electric system of motor vehicles. We believe that any measure introduced for the purpose suggested by the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) should take into account the problems of implementation. Obviously, Mr. Speaker, a headlight system designed to stay on only 10 per cent of the time is not a complete and proper system. Car manufacturers should therefore develop a different system which would enable all Canadian cars to be equipped with permanently turned on headlights. Otherwise, consumers could find the maintenance costs for their headlights rather expensive.

[English]

I am sure that for garage or automotive parts manufacturers such an initiative, if it is implemented without proper preparation by the automakers themselves, could become a very lucrative market. I would not want the consumer to pay unnecessary costs just to make such a motion valid.

[Translation]

I think that there are other costs which Canadian motorists would have to assume and I suggest that the Government should carry out an in-depth study of this matter before going ahead. Of course, we are talking about the additional cost resulting from the installation on a car already built of the necessary special equipment, as well as the cost resulting from its installation on an imported vehicle, not to mention those resulting from the changes to be made to the assembly line.

Those of us who are following more or less closely the evolution of car design all know that an increasing number of cars are provided with so-called pop up headlights. The purpose of this design is to enhance cars not only esthetically, but to make them more streamlined.

One can easily imagine that this design would lose a great deal of its streamlining effect under a legislation such as that proposed this afternoon by the Hon. Member for Crowfoot. These cars would have to run all day long with their headlights popped-up, which would certainly result in increased gas consumption.

Another potentially dangerous aspect of the legislation introduced by the Hon. Member is its impact on the auto pact.

What would be the consequences of a legislation which, not being reciprocated by the American Government, would de facto create a non tarif barrier on the North American car market. In fact, a car built in the United States and meeting U.S. standards could not be driven in Canada without first undergoing some expensive changes.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I want to emphasize that notwithstanding the few reservations I have just mentioned, we in the Liberal Party support the spirit of the motion moved by the Member for Crowfoot. We certainly believe that the implementation of such a measure would have quite a positive impact by reducing the number of car accidents on the highway, thereby increasing highway security.

If such a measure could only spare one life, the Hon. Member for Crowfoot should be commended for his initiative. I conclude by saying that the Government should take the necessary steps as soon as possible and call upon all car manufacturers to incorporate such equipment in the design of their cars without any additional cost being passed on to Canadian consumers.

• (1720)

[English]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support this motion although it does seem to us that the announcement made by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) for a daytime running light system effective December 1, 1989, may make much of this proposal superfluous. The Minister has proposed that all vehicles manufactured in or imported into Canada must be fitted with a daytime running light system as of December 1, 1989, and as of September, 1988, any new vehicle manufactured with a daytime running light system must meet technical specifications under federal regulation. The Minister goes on to specify these regulations.

I can support this motion because of the toll taken by automobile accidents and the tremendous pain, suffering and cost flowing from them. More than 4,000 men, women and children died in highway traffic accidents in Canada in 1985, and it is expected that the 1986 count will not be much different. As well as the 4,000 people who died as a result of highway accidents, there were tens of thousands of people who were involved in traffic accidents which did not result in death but did result in injuries, many of which were of a permanent nature and as a result of which there were tremendous ill effects on the health and well-being of the victims, high hospital costs, lost income and effects on family members of those who were injured.

I would like to take a moment to remind the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) that the Governments of Sweden, Norway and Finland, which are far ahead of us in doing the kind of thing the Hon. Member for Crowfoot has suggested, have been for many years social democratic Governments. We socialists can sometimes do the right thing.

Only in Saskatchewan does there exist a voluntary system such as the one the Hon. Member is advocating. The only complaint about what is done in Saskatchewan is that the use of night lights can dazzle some drivers. Some feel that a retrofit for pre-1989-built cars should be made available so that we may enjoy the benefits of the program sooner than if we waited for cars that will be produced in 1989.

Automobile accidents have resulted in a catastrophic toll, a toll which calls for major advances not only along the lines suggested by the Hon. Member for Crowfoot but in vehicle design and operation, driver education, police enforcement and highway construction. We know, for example, that a high percentage of accidents are the result of young drivers. We should have a much better system for educating young drivers. We need to have a much better system in fact for educating all people about the dangers of driving while under the influence of liquor. Our highways need to be improved and we need better police enforcement of the law. For 12 months of the year, we should have programs such as those that are put into place in many cities and provinces at Christmas and New Year's when more people than usual get involved in drinking. Much of what I have suggested is long term and requires considerably more research than that which has been done until now. However, there are areas in which the federal Government could do more.

It could be said that rather than doing more, we are going backward. For example, the federal Government is moving to deregulate interprovincial trucking. As a result of that deregulation, there will be no enforceable safety codes. Standards for the amount of time a driver can drive a truck will not be governed nationally but will effectively be governed by each province. Thus, interprovincial transport will not be regulated effectively. There is plenty of evidence to suggest that once the trucking industry is deregulated and we have the competition to which deregulation leads, truck drivers going long distances will drive for longer and longer hours in order to cut costs. They will probably take drugs which will supposedly help to keep them awake and that is—

Mr. Benjamin: Won't matter if their lights are on or not.

Mr. Orlikow: My colleague has said that it will not matter if their lights are on or not. That is a prescription for more and bigger accidents.

Further, the Ministry of Transport is backing away from areas over which it has direct responsibility. Whenever a car-train accident occurs, it is because the car tried to beat the train at a level crossing. We should move as quickly as possible to get rid of level crossings. That would not only save lives and cut down on accidents but would permit trains to move much faster as they do so successfully in Europe. Instead of getting rid of level crossings and making both rail and automobile travel safer, the federal Government, in its desire to save money, has put a hold on the elimination of level crossings and has chosen to implement a program on the cheap. In other words, there will be a billboard campaign designed to promote level crossing safety.

Surely there is much to do to promote automobile safety. This motion is a small step that is already under way. Some other steps which could be taken are improving education, redesigning and improving our highways and cracking down on drinking and driving. We could probably do a better job controlling those few automobile drivers who insist on exceeding the speed limit by anywhere from 10 to 25 miles an hour.

If the Canadian experience with daytime lights for cars matches that of the Scandinavians, multiple vehicle collisions will fall by 10 per cent to 20 per cent and there will be a saving of up to $200 million a year in medical and property damage costs. If those figures are correct, and I think the estimate is on target, then it seems to me we should not just be talking about it but we should be investing some money in the short run which would pay tremendous benefits in the long run.

As I have indicated, we are going to support the motion and I commend the Hon. Member for bringing it forward.

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and pleasure to speak in support of the motion proposed by my colleague and neighbour, the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone). With very little reservation speakers from both opposition Parties agree with the spirit and intent of the motion. That indicates the importance and validity of the motion which the Hon. Member has been endeavouring to present to the House for a great length of time.

More than 20 years ago my wife and I travelled into Saskatchewan and we saw oncoming cars with their lights on. I blinked my lights a few times to indicate to them that their lights were on in case there was a problem. However, they did not respond and I soon learned the error of my ways and the correctness of theirs. The moral of that story is that I could see the oncoming cars very readily. That is why this motion is so important. I am not suggesting that the Hon. Member was promoting this idea as long as 20 or 25 years ago, but he certainly had a great interest in it for many years and has been endeavouring to promote greater safety on our roads.

Each year in Canada there are approximately 700,000 collisions involving motor vehicles, pedestrians and bicyclists. These collisions, which we mistakenly refer to as accidents, claim roughly 4,000 lives and produce more than 200,000 injuries year after year. I do not believe this year will be any different unless we do something along the lines proposed by the Hon. Member. When you consider that half these collisions are caused by the failure of the driver to see the other vehicle, it becomes important to identify methods of improving the visibility of vehicles on our roads. The use of lights during the daytime is considered to be the most effective method of achieving that objective. Canada recognized that fact as early as 1974 when it became the first country to mandate automatic light systems for new motorcycles. Since then a number of studies have not only confirmed the fact that lights reduce motorcycle crashes, they have also confirmed the value of using daytime running lights for all motor vehicles. As a consequence, a proposed motor vehicle safety standard was published on July 12, 1986. It would apply to all new passenger cars, trucks, buses and multi-purpose passenger vehicles. The final technical specifications were announced on December 29, 1986, and the regulation is expected to be ready for approval by the first quarter of 1987.

The figures I have given indicate how important this motion is. We should all take them into very serious consideration. I commend not only the Hon. Member but all government and opposition Members who agree with the motion's intent. It is my pleasure to say that we should heartily support the motion and I am looking forward to its speedy passage.

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I am also delighted to speak on this motion for a number of reasons. First, and probably most important, I come from Saskatchewan where we have had a voluntary program like this in effect for some time.

I want to begin by saying that Private Members' Hour is a very special time when Members can put forward very worthwhile Bills and motions such as this. It is a time when Members from all Parties can choose to agree or disagree. From what I have heard so far today I gather there are a number of Members who support the motion and I want to assure the House that I feel the same way.

The Hon. Member has been working on this idea for six or seven years. He did not come up with it just a few months ago. He has been pressing very hard on the issue, and I think his constituents should be very proud of a Member who brings this kind of motion to the House.

It may appear to be very obvious, but I can tell you that in Saskatchewan hundreds of lives have been saved because of the program I referred to earlier, and I believe the province is in the process of doing a full evaluation of its effect. The program, called Lights on for Life, has been in place for about five or six years and about 50 per cent of all vehicles on the highway comply with it. I have to admit that my reaction, much like that of the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Lesick), was that someone must have forgotten to shut his lights off. However, you soon begin to realize just how much quicker you notice oncoming traffic when cars have their lights on. I believe it is in the neighbourhood of 10 seconds to 12 seconds sooner. Of course, some people even leave their lights on while driving in the cities, and while I believe that has a certain application it is probably not as useful as it is on the highways.

The point I want to make about this motion is that it will save lives and lower insurance rates. The cost of insurance is something a lot of people complain about. It will also keep a lot of people at work rather than at home suffering from the results of an accident and having to ask for assistance from either Government or some other agency.

In conclusion, the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) deserves the hearty congratulations of all Members of this House. I urge the Department officials and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) to move quickly on this motion.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I just want to say to my hon. friend that we think this motion is fine, although it is slightly deficient. However, on the assumption that the House will pass the motion, it will be incumbent upon the Government to bring in appropriate legislation.

I also want to say to my friend who just finished speaking, the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ravis), that as usual Saskatchewan led the way. We are still working on getting Alberta to do something about seat-belts, however.

Let me point out where the motion is slightly deficient. My good friend, the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Lesick), pointed out that 20 years ago he flicked his lights on when he drove into Saskatchewan to remind oncoming motorists that their lights were on. It is about that far back that we started a campaign which said at dawn and dusk put your lights on and leave them on. That is when the lights on campaign started. However, while there was no problem in putting the lights on, the towing companies and cab drivers were really happy about boosting batteries because you forgot to shut them off. The motion says, "—would cause headlights to be turned on whenever the motor vehicle is in operation". My hon. friend, the Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone), should have added "—and automatically turns them off when a vehicle is no longer in operation". The technology has been available for years to do that. As long as four or five years ago you could order the special equipment to do that. We agree that that should be standard in every vehicle manufactured in Canada or imported into Canada. There is no argument on that score.

The Parliamentary Secretary and I have been working for some time on getting into place a national highway code and a board with representatives from the provinces, the territories and the federal Government. The code and the board would deal with driver training, qualifications, vehicle standards, maintenance and repair. As my good friend, the Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), so aptly pointed out, if a driver who has been on No-Doze pills for eight, 10, or 12 hours finally zonks out, it does not matter a damn whether his lights are on, he will be in the ditch or will have run into somebody else. All these other things must be put in place at the same time.

I hope the Government will agree to withhold proclamation of the legislation currently before the House until all these other measures are in place. We must have the inspectors, the training, the board and everything else in place before we start messing around with other parts of transportation law. It is a given that those things should be in place first, because it is unanimous among all Parties that safety takes priority over everything else, even if it increases the cost of transportation. The public agrees that safety takes priority and that if it increases the cost modestly for every one of us, so be it. This is just one of several dozen steps which must be taken.

We support this motion, even with its slight error of omission. I am sure that the House will pass this motion. Perhaps we can let this motion carry and call it six o'clock.

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, I, too, support the motion of the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone). I hope it will be given passage. However, I have a rather dry and technical comment to make in connection with the requirement of the Treasury Board to make a cost-benefit analysis of such a regulation.

A lot of people question the cost and apparent waste in relation to the apparent benefits of daytime running lights. I would like to present a summary of the likely costs that will be incurred by the introduction of a regulation requiring daytime running lights on all new passenger cars from, for example, the model year 1990 onward. I will then make a comparison of those costs with the anticipated benefits accruing from daytime running lights. In so doing, I hope to give some of the answers to the questions raised by the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) in his comments earlier this evening.

Federal government Departments are required, in accordance with Treasury Board guidelines, to undertake such an analysis of cost-benefit. Cost-benefit analyses are, at best, approximate due to the assumptions necessary. In addition, because the manufacturers' response to a performance standard may vary from company to company, it is not always possible to forecast accurately the costs. In this case estimates have been made of the costs that would be incurred in vehicle equipment modifications and operating expenses for several possible systems that are most likely to be introduced in response to the regulation. These have been compared to the social benefits, expressed in dollar terms, which would accrue from the reduced accidents which we anticipate, using estimates of the minimum social value of accident losses.

In making these comparisons a suitable timeframe has to be selected. In this case the suitable timeframe selected was the average life of an automobile. In developing the cost-benefit comparison, a number of options were considered. Cars and light trucks might use reduced intensity headlamps, regular intensity low-beam headlamps, increased intensity parking lamps, modified turn signals, or separate special purpose running lamps. The regulation requiring daytime running lamps emphasizes that only the daytime running lamps need be turned on automatically. The options for heavy trucks and buses are generally similar to those for cars.

It is generally easier in road safety cost-benefit comparisons to establish costs. The cost to manufacturers of the vehicle modifications were based on analyses of production vehicle component costs. These estimates have been amended accordingly. The additional maintenance costs were based on the manufacturers' minimum specification for lamp bulb lights and surveys of market prices for replacement bulbs. The extra fuel required to run these systems over the life of a vehicle was estimated from projections of the additional electrical load combined with the engine operating efficiency. The cost of the extra fuel was based on estimates of market price. These factors were all combined to produce a lifetime cost for vehicles. The modifications imposed by the regulation for small motorcycles and snowmobiles are expected to be so small that they were not included in the cost-benefit analysis.

With regard then to the passenger motor vehicle, the lifetime estimated costs of the most likely systems for a passenger vehicle are as follows: reduced intensity high beams, $40; reduced intensity low beams, $150; higher intensity parking lamps, $80; modified turn signal lamps, $60; and special purpose lamps, $70.

In comparison to the present habit of using the existing headlights, which is estimated to cost $350 over the lifetime of a vehicle, these costs are reasonable. The higher cost of this option, which the regulation will not exclude by reason of its safety factors, mainly results from the fact that using headlamps at normal intensity wears them out much more frequently than would the reduced intensity lamps permitted in the regulation. It is anticipated that vehicle manufacturers will normally choose one of the options using only front lights to minimize the extra electrical load and bulb replacement. Lifetime daytime running light costs for trucks and buses of the front light options are estimated to range from $40 to $370. These costs compare to those of the passenger cars.

Let us go back and look at the benefit side. The effectiveness of daytime running lights in avoiding accidents has been the subject of several major studies. The best evidence comes from Sweden, as the Hon. Member for Crowfoot has already mentioned. Several other shorter term studies have already been made in the North American market. That increase in light use was accompanied by reductions in multi-vehicle daytime accidents of between 11 per cent and 13 per cent. The reductions took place on all types of roads, in all seasons, and involved all road-user types. Based on this Swedish experience and other smaller-scale studies, it appears evident that we should be moving in a direction suggested by the motion.

• (1750)

Based on these estimates, total fatal accidents may be reduced by 1.8 per cent to 4.2 per cent, and accidents involving personal injury by 3.8 per cent to 6.2 per cent, and accidents involving only property damage by 3.1 per cent to 5.6 per cent. By applying minimum dollar values to these accident reductions over the lifetime of the total Canadian vehicle fleet, lifetime savings estimates can be developed, which can then be compared with the costs. On a per vehicle basis, it is estimated that the lifetime savings can range from $65 to $430, depending on the scenario adopted. Of course, the estimated savings with respect to buses and heavier motor vehicles are equally comparable.

Of these savings, health care cost savings make up about 5 per cent, 30 per cent are from losses of productive work, and the remaining 65 per cent in savings is from property damage costs. When one develops the average lifetime motor vehicle cost for the Canadian fleet, it is estimated that Canadians will have a potential benefit savings of over $100 million per year.

Therefore, the motion of the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) is subject to approval and should be passed.

[Translation]

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I intend to comment very briefly on the motion presented by the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone). I strongly support this motion, and I believe all other Members of this House would agree with me.

[English]

I will ensure that I sit down before the time expires so that the motion can be passed. The Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) has worked on this matter for some six or seven years, as pointed out by the Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ravis). He has promoted the matter by writing letters and doing all those things required of a good Member of Parliament. He would be too modest to say that his idea was stolen by the Department and announced recently as being an initiative of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), who I am sure would want it noted clearly that the Member for Crowfoot is the one who has pushed for this measure, in the best tradition of a Private Member in the House.

If the Members we heard today, including the Member for Crowfoot, the Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), the Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), the Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Lesick), the Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid), and the Member for Saskatoon East could work together every day on matters like this it would be a joy to be a Member of Parliament.

I hope the Member for Crowfoot will take up the issue of shoulder straps if we can agree that the evidence is increasingly strong that safety belts without shoulder straps are not a deterrent. If the member takes this issue on with the same tenacity, hopefully the day will quickly come when the Department will demand that motor vehicle manufacturers include shoulder straps as well as seat belts. There is an indication that a child wearing a seat belt without a shoulder strap may be better off not wearing a seat belt at all. If that is true, hopefully shoulder straps will become a policy as well.

As was indicated by the Member for Edmonton East, there are approximately 700,000 collisions every year in Canada involving motor vehicles, pedestrians, and bicycles. Those collisions which we mistakenly call accidents, claim about 4,000 lives a year and produce more than 200,000 injuries. The fact that many of these accidents occurred because someone has not seen another vehicle seems to make the case overwhelmingly for supporting the motion before the House today.

It has also been made clear that Transport Canada is in the process of issuing a regulation that will require daytime running lights on all new passenger cars, buses and trucks from the 1990 model year onward. If that had been done seven years ago when the Member began pushing for this measure, how many lives and injuries may have been saved?

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I want to say just a few words in support of this motion and I certainly do not intend to take up the rest of our speaking time.

I just want to join all the Members of this House in commending the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) for his initiative. I adopted this practice myself some years ago, and now I always have my lights on when I travel by car. As far as I am concerned this is absolutely essential and a very good idea from the point of view of safety. The Hon. Member and the Government are to be commended for introducing this proposal which, if I understand correctly, will be compulsory next year for vehicles built and sold in Canada.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Malone) agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to indicate to the House that tomorrow will be designated as an allotted day.

Furthermore, I think you will find unanimous consent to agreeing to the following proposal:

That, notwithstanding any Standing or Special Order of the House:

On Thursday, March 12, 1987, at 4.45 p.m., the Speaker will interrupt any proceeding then underway and put, forthwith and successively, without amendment or debate, all questions necessary to dispose of every stage of both Bill C-40, an Act to provide borrowing authority, and Bill C-3, an Act to amend the Radio Act; provided that, no later than 3.45 p.m. the Government will call the Order for resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for third reading of Bill C-3.

And, that, when the House adjourns on Thursday, March 12, 1987, it shall stand adjourned until 11 a.m., Monday, March 16, 1987.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion presented by the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski). Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Adjournment Debate

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL—FUTURE OF ALGONQUIN RADIO OBSERVATORY. (B) USE OF OBSERVATORY'S EQUIPMENT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, on November 3 I asked the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) to explain why the Director of the Herzberg Institute which operated the telescope at the Algonquin Radio Observatory had notified 25 permanent employees that because of the cut of over $1 million in its budget the observatory would be closed next year and their jobs would be phased out. I asked the Minister to explain what was happening. He said, as reported at page 1006 of Hansard:

There is a reduction in the program which has been announced. However, the decision on the long-term future of the observatory has not been decided.

The Council is looking for alternatives.

That was a strange reply by the Minister because the people who work at the Algonquin Radio Observatory now know that the observatory will close on May 31 this year. The team of 19 persons who operate and maintain the observatory will lose their positions.

My point was that the decision had been made and 25 positions were to be sacrificed from the Herzberg Institute. The decision was that since the Algonquin Observatory was not to be upgraded, then it was to be closed. What are the costs of that decision? A $40 million to $50 million facility is being mothballed when it could have been upgraded and made a world-class facility which others would have used. The expertise of the team, which has been lauded by people in the field from one end of this country to the other and by experts in many other countries, has been lost to the nation forever. Canadian astronomers will be forced to go to the United States, in Massachusetts and West Virginia, to use their facilities. In other words, we will become users of another country's facilities rather than suppliers for ourselves and for others.

Canada is now negotiating with Great Britain to buy time on its telescope in Hawaii as we go from being a provider to a buyer of these kinds of facilities. That is just one illustration of what the Government's misconceived and improper approach to scientific research is leading to. When the Conservatives were in opposition, they and we listened to the criticisms of members of the scientific community, the private sector, the universities and Government laboratories who repeatedly pointed out that while other industrialized countries belonging to the OECD and Japan were spending between 2 per cent and 2.5 per cent of their Gross National Product on scientific research and development, Canada was spending just about half that percentage. We were repeatedly told by those who were knowledgeable that this would lead to a long-term decline in Canada's ability to meet its needs over the next 25 years and to meet competition from other countries which are moving ahead so rapidly in this period when so many scientific discoveries are being made.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised that a Conservative Government would move rapidly toward the magical goal of allocating 2.5 per cent of the Gross National Product to scientific research and development. He did not say that this would happen only after we had dealt with the deficit, which is much too great. The Conservatives won the election. They formed the Government with the largest majority any Party has ever had, but what do we see happening? We are now spending less as a percentage of our Gross National Product for scientific research and development than we did when the Liberals were in office. If we look at what the Government is proposing, we see that from now until 1990 the Government is not proposing any increases unless the private sector substantially increases its investment in scientific research, and then the Government will match it.

As a result of this policy, the NRC has been gutted in order to make funds available for deficit reduction and the space program. Cutbacks have been made to the granting councils, to funds for universities as well as to departmental research. Yet the Prime Minister makes speeches about the importance of research and development for Canada, knowing full well that we are no closer to reaching the 2.5 per cent target for research and development as a percentage of our Gross National Product which he promised.

My question to the Government is simply: How can the Prime Minister and the Minister of State for Science and Technology continue to make these statements when such institutions as the Algonquin Radio Observatory and the Bedford Institute of Oceanography in Halifax are now history?

• (1805)

Mr. Gordon Towers (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology): For some reason, mostly attributed to the Opposition, there is a great deal of misinformation and concern with respect to this particular item. I welcome this opportunity to set the record straight. I trust that all who are concerned over this issue will listen carefully.

The NRC's mandate includes the responsibility to "operate and administer any astronomical observatories established or maintained by the Government of Canada". At present, NRC operates three facilities; radio telescopes in Algonquin and Penticton, and an optical telescope and computation centre in Victoria. NRC also contributes to the Canada-France-Hawaii optical telescope in Mauna Kea, Hawaii, in return for 40 per cent of the operating time. These instruments are available to and heavily used by university researchers from Canada and other countries, although NRC has many fine astronomers in its own right. Dr. Herzberg, who continues to work in this field, is an example of the quality of this work.

The Algonquin Radio Observatory has a 46 metre fully steerable parabolic reflector. This reflector was constructed over 20 years ago, and it needs major refurbishment which will involve replacement of the steel reflecting surface of the instrument with a more precisely manufactured surface. The upgrade would have made the telescope capable of operating at millimetre wavelengths instead of centimetres. The telescope is expensive to operate.

Two decisions have impacted on the telescope. First, the estimated cost of the refurbishment rose from $7.9 million to $11.7 million. This excludes the engineering design study which has already been paid for. Refurbishment would also increase the cost of ongoing support. Thus, at this time the plans have been cancelled to refurbish the telescope. Second, NRC management allotted a significant budget reduction to its astronomy division, the Herzberg Institute of Astrophysics. This reduction will affect about 21 people working with the Algonquin Radio Observatory.

NRC management reviewed this decision with the Associate Committee on Astronomy, and other representatives of Canadian users of astrophysical facilities. Further to recommendations from these groups, NRC held discussions with a U.K.-Netherlands group which is completing the construction of one of the world's best sub-millimetric telescopes on the summit of Mauna Kea in Hawaii. This facility will be called the James Clark Maxwell Telescope. Mauna Kea, a 4,300 metre mountain in Hawaii, is one of the world's best astronomical sites with very dry and stable atmospheric conditions. For this reason, a growing number of major telescopes operate there at visible, infra-red and millimetric wavelengths. This allows a beneficial sharing of facilities and expertise.

NRC has now reached a preliminary understanding which would allow Canadian astronomers to buy 25 per cent share of the JCMT in exchange for a contribution of approximately $10 million spread over 10 years.

The JCMT will be operational in June, 1987. By buying a share of this world-class millimetric telescope, Canada will give its astronomers immediate access to one of the most exciting new areas of research in astronomy. Refurbishing the ARO would have required another five years of difficult and more expensive technical work.

This decision is expected to be strongly endorsed by the Canadian scientific community.

BANKS AND BANKING—CHARTERED BANKS' INTEREST RATES—SPREAD BETWEEN BANK AND PRIME RATE

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to return to the subject that I raised some weeks ago during Question Period, namely the spread between the bank rate and the prime rate. The bank rate set by the Bank of Canada is the rate that it will charge for supplying money; the prime rate is that which is set by the chartered banks for their most favoured customers. Over the years, traditionally there has been a three-quarter per cent difference between those two rates.

• (1810)

Today we find that the Bank of Canada rate is set at 7.54 per cent and the prime rate at 9.25 per cent. Thus there is a spread between the two rates of 1.71 per cent. I have asked to debate this point again for reasons I will outline in a moment. However, at this point I should like to indicate how the situation has steadily deteriorated over the past several years, to the point where it has now reached critical magnitude.

For example, the spread is now 31 per cent higher than it was for the 1986 average monthly spread. It is 82 per cent higher than it was for the average monthly spread during 1985. Now it is more than double what it was for the 1984 average monthly spread.

In February 1978 the bank rate was 7.5 per cent, which was very close to today's bank rate of 7.54 per cent. At that time the prime rate was 8.25 per cent or a full percentage point lower than it is today. Because interest rates have come down, especially in recent months, we appreciate that related rates have been brought down, such as mortgage rates, consumer loan rates, and the rate charged businesses seeking more capital.

However, we should ask the following question: How much more benefit would there be to Canadians seeking more capital if we closed some of the gap between the bank rate on one hand and the prime rate on the other? It is not of much value if, through the initiative of the Government and the soundness of its economic policies, the bank rate comes down unless the full benefit is passed on to the consuming public. That is not the situation today. Certainly much of the benefit is passed on to the public, but not the full benefit. That is the point of the question I raised and why I asked that we return to it today.

If the spread were to be closed, perhaps mortgage rates would be a full percentage point lower. There would be opportunities for small business people to obtain capital at a rate one percentage point lower than they must now pay. There would be increased benefit to the persons who receive employment opportunities through the spinoff from raising capital and initiating enterprises. I believe it is one of the critical economic questions which must be asked.

What is the answer? I hope the Government and Parliament has some influence with the chartered banks and the other lending institutions in Canada. I hope we could raise questions with them about why in 1978 we could have a prime rate of 8.25 per cent and a bank rate of 7.5 per cent whereas now we have a prime rate of 9.25 per cent and a bank rate of 7.54 per cent.

Some people suggest that the Canadian consuming public is being asked to help the banks faced with the instability of $25 billion in loans to the Third World, and that the banks must look for resources in this country wherever they can find them, one of them being a higher prime rate. It may be justified, but it is not justified for the Canadian public to be unaware of why it is being asked to accept higher interest rates than are justified.

This question has come before Parliament in Oral Question Period, and I bring it before Parliament again in this Adjournment Debate. The answer needs to be given to the House and to the public.

• (1815)

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): The Hon. Member in his question has asked about the differential in the bank rate and the chartered banks' prime lending rate. As the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) noted in his initial reply, the spread tends to vary with market conditions. Over the past 10 years, the Canadian economy has experienced differentials ranging from 0.25 per cent to over 2.5 per cent. Historically, spreads tend to become greater in times of declining interest rates and smaller in times of increasing interest rates. This reflects the caution exercised by our financial institutions in assessing changes in the market-place. The Government is, of course, pleased that the general level of interest rates has declined over the last several months.

While there is undoubtedly a linkage between the bank rate and the chartered banks' prime lending rate, I would like to note that it is not an exact or inflexible relationship. The spread reflects developments in a number of different markets, such as the commercial loan market and the commercial money market. Each of these markets is subject to its own influences, and a change in one rate, such as the bank rate, does not automatically warrant a change in another rate.

When the Hon. Member posed his question at the end of January, the spread was 1.76 per cent. Since then, Hon. Members should note that the spread declined to 1.58 per cent on February 12. Although the spread has again widened to the current value of 1.71 per cent, the brief experience of the last one and a half months has shown how spreads can change.

While the prime rate is one factor in over-all borrowing costs, Hon. Members should also look at other rates to determine the impact of recent developments. Spreads have generally narrowed and there has been significant competition in other aspects of the mortgage agreements. For example, mortgage rates have dropped significantly. The major lenders now offer a wider range of prepayment options and are more flexible on the transfer of mortgages.

As Hon. Members know, on December 18 the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) tabled the policy paper entitled New Directions for the Financial Sector. One of the major objectives of that paper is to increase competition in the financial markets. The proposals will allow more players into the market-place, which will benefit not only borrowers but also savers who provide funds to financial intermediaries. The Government will introduce legislation during the course of 1987 to bring these changes into effect.

REVENUE CANADA—DISAPPEARANCE OF MICROFICHE RECORDS—RESULT OF INVESTIGATION

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, this is income tax time again. I do not know whether that makes you feel very happy but it sure does not make me feel very happy. It is the time of year when you have to get out that income tax return, get all your papers together, try to sort them all out, fill in the return and file it before the tax deadline.

The first problem I always have is finding the income tax return itself in order to fill it out. This year I suspect I will have even more problems than I have had in the past. Usually the Department of National Revenue sends me an income tax return. I am not sure whether the Department of National Revenue has done that this year. I usually prepare my own returns. They are not prepared by a tax preparer. By now I should have received my return. If filing a return prepared by somebody else, I understand that this year, to save money, the Department will send only a label. Some of my constituents tell me that is probably just as expensive as sending the return itself. They wonder whether the Government is saving any money with that procedure. Other people tell me that even though they do not have a tax preparer prepare their returns, they still have not received returns from Revenue Canada. Perhaps they are in the same spot as me. I am not very happy about it at this time of the year.

The next thing I have to do is try to find the T-slips, the T-4s and T-5s. I always understood that by February 28 all T-4s and T-5s are supposed to have been sent out. For some reason or other, in the last few years, I seem to get more and more T-slips weeks after February 28. I do not know if that is because of a problem with Canada Post or with National Revenue, but it does not make me very happy.

Usually when I am making out my tax return, I look around to see how many tax deductions I can find. I suspect that perhaps you do so as well, Mr. Speaker. This year I heard about the former Liberal Government having put in the tax laws something called the scientific research tax credit. I have heard that people have been saving millions if not billions of dollars in taxes this way. I suspect that when I go to fill out my tax return, I will not have a scientific research tax credit to try to use.

I heard as well that the former Liberal Government had something called a tax remission. In fact, something like $400 million worth of tax money that was supposed to come from Dome Petroleum and from Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting was given away. I suspect that when I go to fill out my tax return this year, there will not be any tax remission for me and I will be very surprised if there is a tax remission for you, Mr. Speaker. I see that you are nodding your head and I know you agree with me.

As if all of this was not bad enough, I heard this year that one of the employees of Revenue Canada apparently walked out with some of my private records. In fact, this employee had walked out with the microfiche records of something like 16 million Canadian taxpayers. That to my mind is a real shocker.

We have heard of things disappearing from government records and files before. In fact, it seems to me I heard that the mould for the dollar coin had disappeared. As a matter of fact, I understand it disappeared when it was on its way to Winnipeg through the mail or a courier service. As a result of that, when I go to spend a dollar coin in the future, it will apparently not have a voyageur on the back of it but it will only have a Canadian loon. I can understand things like that disappearing and I know the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) can understand that too.

Then I heard about government documents disappearing. I suppose you have probably heard about those as well, Mr. Speaker. Before the Nielsen task force report on the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development was released, someone else seemed to have it before you and I saw it, Mr. Speaker. The Forget Commission report seemed to have been made public before it was supposed to have been released. This fellow at The Globe and Mail, Victor Malarek, seems to have every confidential record of the Immigration Department before the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) has seen them. I suppose these things do get out into the public that are not supposed to but it does bother me.

It is particularly bad to see this happening to private business records of members of the public. It is particularly bad when it happens to something like the microfiche records of the Revenue Department affecting the lives of 16 million Canadians. To my mind, that is just a downright breach of the public trust.

I would hope that the procedures of the Department will be tightened up and explained to us. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will be able to explain to us why, for instance, there were 180 different sets of these microfiche records floating around Canada and why they were located in as many as 60 different places. What sort of supervision is there? I expect that you and I should get some answers on that tonight and I expect the Parliamentary Secretary is going to assure us that this sort of thing is never going to happen to private citizens of this country again.

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to respond to my hon. colleague on the question he raised December 16 of last year.

The Minister has been informed of the results of the RCMP investigation into the disappearance and subsequent recovery of microfiche data on taxpayers. A Revenue Canada employee has been charged with theft, possession of stolen property, and breach of public trust. The matter is now before the courts. The Department has taken appropriate action in respect of all the individuals involved in this unfortunate chain of events. In addition, I wish to assure the House that significant steps have been taken to strengthen microfiche security procedures in the Department. A 100 per cent check of the inventory of all microfiche in the Department has been done. This revealed only minor discrepancies, all of which have been effectively dealt with. A complete review of the number of sets in our offices has been conducted and resulted in a significant reduction.

Telex instructions were issued immediately following knowledge of the disappearance to highlight microfiche security policies and remind staff to adhere strictly to them. Daytime cleaning has been instituted in sensitive locations. Strengthened employee screening procedures are now being implemented. Further improvements are being made as a result of the independent RCMP review of the Department's security arrangement for microfiche. The Hon. Member will appreciate that it would be counter-productive to elaborate on the specifics of any of the Department's security measures. However, the House should rest assured that real improvements have been made and that Revenue Canada is striving to prevent any similar occurrences in the future.

I must stress that the Minister's goal is to provide a balance between service to taxpayers and security of confidential information. I want to remind all Hon. Members that while the Department is extending improved and stringent measures to protect the confidentiality of taxpayers' financial records, it is at the same time entering the annual filing season. At this time of year we have very direct contact with more than 16 million taxpayers through the mailing of individual tax returns and guides, through the telephone inquiry service provided at district offices, and in the temporary tax assistance centres. I do not want this House to lose sight of the importance the Department places on providing service to the 16 million people who will file tax returns by April 30.

I believe that this effort to improve service should not go unnoticed. A new no-calculation option has been introduced on the T-1 special tax return for those who file to claim a child tax credit or the federal sales tax credit. Instructions in the general guide have been made clear and more readable with larger print and more space. These changes, coupled with improvements to our telephone inquiry service, will help all of us when we face the annual task of filing our tax returns. I believe we must keep the problems in perspective as we remember the continuing efforts of this Department to meet the needs of those it serves while protecting the confidentiality of the taxpayer.
