While the long-term goal of the society is the establishment of a free-standing hospice, the immediate plan is to provide a community hospice service to match up trained volunteers with a terminally ill patient and family. The volunteers will provide emotional and practical support to the patient and family members. Each volunteer is trained to help dying patients and their families to live each day as fully as possible.

The efforts of the Hospice/Palliative Care Society of Cape Breton deserve every support which can be provided. I urge them to continue their efforts on behalf of the people of Cape Breton. I also urge the Government of Canada to provide meaningful financial assistance in order that their goals may be achieved in the very near future.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

MINISTER'S ANNOUNCEMENT OF INCREASED OPPORTUNITIES FOR PARTICIPATION BY WOMEN

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago in Toronto the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) delivered an address in which he announced an increased role for women in our Armed Forces in those few areas in which they do not already serve.

The Minister emphasized that the fundamental principle involved here is that every Candian citizen has equal rights and responsibilities when it comes to the defence of our country.

Canada stands in the forefront of military forces in the world in regard to the employment of women. The important points, however, are that even though Canada is already leading in this area we are committed fully to the principle of equality for women in the Forces, and that further changes will be made based upon valid scientific trials to be conducted as soon as possible with the objective of determining how, when, and in which occupations remaining restrictions can be removed.

I am certain that all Canadians applaud the Minister's approach and attitude.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES LUMBER AGREEMENT

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, millions of Canadians have been humiliated by the sell-out of 15,000 Canadian jobs and the compromise of Canadian sovereignty which was the price the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) paid to get an agreement on softwood lumber.

Yesterday the U.S. Ambassador to Canada, Thomas Niles, said that the success of the lumber agreement is evidence of the dynamic and positively developing relationship between the two countries and that the lumber agreement is an example of the success that is possible on acid rain.

While the Prime Minister and Thomas Niles herald the success of the lumber agreement, it is apparent that neither side agrees on what the lumber agreement means. U.S. officials continue to maintain that the United States has the right to dictate forestry regeneration policies under the terms of the agreement. The Canadian Government says no, that is not the case. The United States responds that it is.

This supposedly successful agreement has further poisoned relations between Canada and the United States. Since acid rain is a poison which is killing thousands of Canadian lakes, infecting Canada-U.S. relations, and threatening the health of all Canadians, I tremble to think what the Canadian Government will call a successful agreement on acid rain, and what price it will pay to get it.

ACID RAIN—POSSIBLE REDUCTION THROUGH USE OF LOW SULPHUR WESTERN COAL BY ONTARIO HYDRO

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, acid rain does untold damage in the Province of Ontario. Carriers on the St. Lawrence Seaway, mostly based in Ontario, are looking for downward cargo. Yet the Premier of Ontario continues to obstruct the use of low sulphur western Canadian coal.

A federal-provincial study reports that such use could create thousands of jobs—40 per cent in Ontario—and at one stroke cut the acid gas emissions in the province by one-half.

Ontario Hydro is a major polluter. We see the use of western coal as Canadians working together toward solving two major national problems: the fight against acid rain so graphically described in the U.S. by the Ontario Minister of Environment; and strengthening the western economy.

The Premier's foot-dragging on this matter, coupled with his intervention on the Kimberley-Clark controls as proposed by his Minister, destroys the hard-won credibility of that Minister and puts environment in the Province of Ontario on the back-burner.

FOOTWEAR INDUSTRY

URGENT NEED TO RESTORE IMPORT QUOTAS

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): In June 1985, Mr. Speaker, the Government stated its intention to support the Canadian footwear industry. In November 1986, the same Government abolished men's shoe quotas on the basis of three arguments: lower consumer prices, minimum disruption of Canadian production, no job losses.

Well, barely one year after this ill-advised decision, the results are nothing short of catastrophic. Consumer prices have gone up, imports of men's shoes have soared by 50 per cent, and 2,000 jobs have been lost.

In light of these facts, Mr. Speaker, the Government can and must forthwith restore quotas, or else the Canadian footwear industry might very well sink, along with its 20,000 workers.

ONTARIO HYDRO—POSSIBLE BENEFITS TO BE ACHIEVED THROUGH USE OF LOW SULPHUR WESTERN COAL

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, if Inco or Falconbridge said that they could not reduce their acid rain emissions for the next five years, would Premier Peterson sit quietly waiting for time to pass?

If western Canadians bought American products instead of the ones made in Ontario, would Premier Peterson be pleased?

If another Government could create 13,000 jobs in Ontario, would Premier Peterson tell them to save their money?

Not on your life, Mr. Speaker. It is time for Premier Peterson to sit down with the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) to see how Ontario Hydro can cut its acid rain emissions in half and, at the same time, create 13,000 jobs by using western Canadian instead of American coal.

If the premier hurries, he may even have time for another skate on the Rideau Canal.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

EX-SERVICEMEN'S INELIGIBILITY FOR BENEFITS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, during his visit to Africa, the Prime Minister told the world that he as a Canadian has never been a second-class citizen. Retired servicemen and retired Royal Canadian Mounted Police are feeling like second-class citizens these days.

Many of these ex-servicemen have paid unemployment insurance premiums for 30 years. Now they discover that when they cannot find a job they are not allowed to collect unemployment insurance payments. It is time the Government gave these people, who have dedicated their lives to the service of Canada, a chance to feel their service was appreciated, and allow them to collect unemployment insurance benefits.

CANADA-INDIA EXTRADITION TREATY—CALL FOR DELAY IN SIGNING

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, Canadian Sikhs are justifiably alarmed and concerned about an extradition treaty which is about to be signed between Canada and India. A quarter of a million Canadian Sikhs feel this treaty will allow the Indian Government to terrorize and intimidate randomly members of the Canadian Sikh community.

Of particular concern to Canadian Sikhs is the prospect of having the internal strife related to Punjab autonomy spill over into Canada. India also has a disturbing record of human rights abuse which adds to the apprehension felt by Canadian Sikhs. This apprehension can be traced to two Indian statutes which have been described as "Draconian", the Terrorist and Disruptive Activities Act which, among other things, has clamped down on press freedom, and the National Security Act, which allows for preventative detention without charge or trial for up to two years.

Offences under both of these Acts appear to be extraditable offences. We do not know concusively because the details of the treaty have not yet been released. Unfortunately, the Government failed to have meaningful discussions with the Sikh community before the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) left for the treaty signing. I call upon the Government to delay the signing of the extradition treaty until the necessary consultation with Canadian Sikhs has occurred.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT—MINISTER'S TELEX TO NEWFOUNDLAND PREMIER

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

Yesterday the Minister of Transport, on behalf of the Government of Canada, made public in Newfoundland a telex to Premier Peckford in which the Minister of Transport in effect calls into question the honesty of the Premier of Newfoundland. The telex says:

I regret that for some reason you wish to make it appear that you heard nothing of this proposed visit —to Paris—

before it occurred.

Do the Prime Minister and his Government stand behind this contention of the Minister of Transport that in fact the Premier of Newfoundland is now engaged in some kind of political charade?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport stands very strongly in favour of the rights of the fishermen of Newfoundland and Labrador. I understand he is on his way to his home province for a meeting with the Premier and other interested parties. I understand that is taking place tonight or tomorrow.

EXCHANGE OF MESSAGES BETWEEN NEWFOUNDLAND AND OTTAWA

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, two days before the Canada-France fish treaty was signed, the federal Minister of Fisheries telephoned the provincial Minister of Fisheries, Mr. Rideout, and advised him of Ottawa's intention to make concessions to the French. Will the Prime Minister now acknowledge that the Premier of Newfoundland telexed him that same day, two days before the treaty was signed, rejecting Ottawa's position on concessions to the French? Will the Prime Minister also tell us, given Newfoundland's unequivocal position, why he refused to acknowledge the telex of the Premier of Newfoundland and why he did not instruct his Minister of Fisheries not to proceed with the treaty with the French?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, once again the Hon. Member, along with his coherts, has the facts rather confused. I called my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries for Newfoundland, on the Monday after the agreement had been signed. Shortly thereafter the Deputy Prime Minister also called the Premier of Newfoundland.

POSSIBLE MEETING OF PROVINCIAL PREMIERS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member does not have the facts confused. He has the telex, which was unanswered and not responded to, in his hand. It is clear the Prime Minister was personally involved in this deal. It is clear he refused to respond to the telex of the Premier of Newfoundland and call off the signing of the treaty.

Is the Prime Minister prepared to say today that he will abide by a recommendation of Canada's 10 Premiers to cancel the Canada—France fish pact if indeed, as we expect, such a recommendation is the result of a meeting of all 10 of Canada's Premiers? Will he do that?

• (1420)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are working with the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador, and the industry. Mr. Lorne Clark, the chief negotiator, is presently in Newfoundland. I understand he had a productive series of meetings this morning. He is meeting with Premier Peckford this afternoon.

Mr. Tobin: Oh, oh! A tough meeting.

Mr. Mulroney: I am just trying to answer the Hon. Member. I am told it was that type of productive meeting.

My hon. friend implies that it would be good policy for the Government of Canada to surrender its responsibility into the hands of the provincial Premiers in the event of conclusion of international accords. Without in any way diminishing the impact of the Minister of Transport's visits to Newfoundland and the responsibilities that he discharges so well, it is the Government and the Parliament of Canada that speak for the people of all Canada, and not the provincial Premiers, or any combination thereof. Notwithstanding our genuine desire to work in intimate co-operation with all of them, it is the Parliament of Canada that speaks for all Canadians.

TERMS OF 1972 TREATY

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday the Prime Minister claimed that the deal his Government came to with France was necessitated by the 1972 Treaty negotiated by this Party when we were the Government.

I am not prepared to sit on this side of the House and hear the names of honourable men, like the Hon. Don Jamieson and Romeo LeBlanc, dragged through the mud. I wish to ask the Prime Minister now if he will do the honourable thing and withdraw his allegation, because all Canadians agree that that allegation is false?

Mr. Crosbie: Withdraw the treaty.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): History speaks well enough for itself. It is important that members of the Opposition, and all Canadians, especially the fishermen and the people of Newfoundland and Labrador, realize that what we have agreed to is the beginning of a process to resolve once and for all the serious overfishing by France in the disputed area south of St. Pierre and Miquelon, and to ensure that the longer term fishing arrangements provided for in that treaty are to the advantage of the fishermen of Newfoundland and Labrador, and not to their detriment.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, I cannot accept that. The Minister of Fisheries and the Prime Minister have lied to this House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rompkey: I ask them now, will they withdraw those allegations?

An Hon. Member: You know better.

Mr. Speaker: This is a matter of very great importance to the country, and certainly to Newfoundland and Labrador. I would ask that the Hon. Member withdraw those words and put his question more properly.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, I regret that the one thing that is most important to the House is the truth. The people of Newfoundland did not send me here to say anything but that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: He wants to get thrown out.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure that in due course, when the Hon. Member has a chance to consider his position, he will take the opportunity to withdraw those words.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that I cannot withdraw those words, Sir. I know what your ruling will be. In anticipation of that, I take the only course that is open to me.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure that in due course the Hon. Member will think over his position. In the meantime, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt.

MINISTER'S TELEX TO NEWFOUNDLAND PREMIER

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It has to do with the Canada-France fishing agreement. Yesterday the Minister of Transport, or the Minister responsible for Newfoundland as he is better known in the Cabinet, sent a telex to the Premier of Newfoundland.

• (1425)

I should like to quote the following statement from that Telex:

When I was informed of that telex on Thursday, January 22nd, I took steps of my own which I thought had resolved the issue but this turned out not to be the case and an interim agreement was signed at Paris on January 24th.

Will the Prime Minister confirm that his Minister responsible for Newfoundland had serious concerns about this interim agreement and that he was left out in the cold when the signatures were appended to the agreement?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Hon. Minister of Transport, can speak for himself in the appropriate place, as he always does. He will speak strongly and positively on behalf of the interests of the fishermen in the province he represents. It is important that the House note that opposition questions focus more on what we might call water under the bridge than on this tremendous opportunity which will be pursued with dignity and integrity by the Government, to the benefit of the fishermen of Atlantic Canada and Labrador.

REQUEST THAT AGREEMENT BE TORN UP

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. Outside Cabinet today the Minister of Transport, in conversation with the press, hinted that his days in Cabinet might be numbered over this issue.

Mr. Crosbie: That is not true.

Mr. Rodriguez: What more evidence does the Prime Minister need than the people of Newfoundland, the Atlantic Premiers, and the threatened resignation of his Minister responsible for Newfoundland? What more does he need to tear up this agreement, start all over again, and do it the right way?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can tell my hon. friend what the Hon. Minister just said, that that is not true. He is here to defend the interests of the people of Newfoundland and Labrador as brilliantly and as effectively as he has done for many years.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, we now have the spectacle of a looming First Ministers' Conference on the matter. It is back to the federal-provincial confrontation days of the previous Liberal Government. Does the Prime Minister not see what we need to do now? He should do the honourable thing. He should put aside this agreement and in fact start all over again and do it the right way, rather than return to the days of confrontation. Does he not recognize the importance of this issue?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, if the Government chose to take the advice of the Opposition, which we have heard not only on this issue but on the matter of Canada-U.S. trade and on the matter of energy policy, et cetera, we would have produced nothing of change and nothing of benefit to the people of Canada as has been well demonstrated by the turn-around in the economy and by improved employment from one end of the country to the other.

MINISTER'S PRESS RELEASE

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Government claims that it has an obligation under the 1972 agreement. Indeed the official press release from the Secretary of State for External Affairs, dated January 27, indicated:

The French will also receive in 1987 fishing allocations in Canadian waters outside the Gulf in accordance with obligations under the 1972 Canada-France Treaty—

In the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs who is on his passage to India, I will direct my question to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Does he recall issuing a press release on November 26, 1986, in which he said:

We have told the French that under the 1972 Treaty we have no obligation to provide them with any fish to replace what they have been catching in the Gulf and, specifically, no obligation to provide them with any northern cod—

Why this complete about-face? Is it because the Government is concerned about a shortage of cod at Maxim's in Paris?

• (1430)

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): That, Mr. Speaker, is most definitely not the case. We certainly are concerned about a shortage of cod to the fishermen of the Hon. Member's province and throughout Atlantic Canada. That is why we are embarking on a series of important negotiations, and that is why for this present year the French allocations of cod in Canadian waters have been reduced by 14,000 tonnes to half what they were last year because this Government believes it is time to patriate those resources to the benefit of our own fishermen.

CONSERVATION OF RESOURCES—QUOTA ALLOCATIONS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, in the 1972 agreement, Article 2, as quoted by the Prime Minister, it states:

—the right of French nationals to fish in these waters subject to possible measures for the conservation of resources, including the establishment of quotas.

Did the Minister of Fisheries or did he not cut Canadian quotas because of conservation of resources and establishment of quotas, and did he or did he not ban Canadian fishermen from the nose of the Grand Banks because of conservation of resources and the establishment of quotas? Since he did that to Canadians, why does the Government feel so obliged to bend over backwards for the French? Fish and chips are just as good as cod au gratin.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): I do not know where the Hon. Member purchases his fish and chips, Mr. Speaker, but I can tell you that our objective is to keep the fishermen of Newfoundland and Labrador in the chips.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

TRADE

CHARGE ON LUMBER EXPORTS—USE OF REVENUE IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade. From the other side of Canada the Minister learned just a few minutes ago the devastating news from British Columbia that, in spite of her repeated assurances in this House that the money collected from the export tax on softwood lumber would be reinvested in the forest industry, the Minister of Forests of British Columbia just announced that the Government of British Columbia plans to spend none of the $400 million collected on the reforestation of silviculture and, as a matter of fact, is cutting back on existing programs. In spite of the Minister's repeated assurances that she gave this House and the people of Canada that this is how the money would be used, what steps does the Minister plan to take now to ensure, in that major lumber exporting province, that this money will be returned to the forest industry?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the reports to which the Hon. Member refers. I find it interesting that the Party which fought our attempts to save money for British Columbia is now apparently in favour of saving money for British Columbia.

Let me answer this question—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Carney: —if the Opposition allows me the opportunity. Our Government provided the Government of British Columbia the opportunity to use funds that would have gone to the U.S. treasury, for reforestation in B.C. As the Hon. Member knows, that is provincial jurisdiction. As the Hon. Member knows, and as every British Columbian M.P. knows, our forests are a silvicultural slum and if the Government of B.C. does not act in a proper way to ensure that reforestation policies are carried out when the federal Government has provided the funds, the Government of B.C. will have to answer to its voters.

STATEMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO BRITISH COLUMBIA MINISTER

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister for International Trade telling us that she has been conned by the Socreds of British Columbia? Is she saying that in spite of the fact she has been across the country and throughout the entire Province of British Columbia on a number of occasions giving us the assurances that money will be reinvested in the forest sector, the Minister of Forests for British Columbia did not have the courtesy to inform her or her colleague, the Minister of State for Forestry, that he was making that decision today and that in that announcement none of this $400 million will be going back to develop the forest resource in the Province of British Columbia?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, if, in fact, the Forestry Minister made those statements—and I told the House I am not familiar with the statements—he would be contradicting his own Premier who has regularly indicated publicly that that money would be used for reforestation.

CURRENCY EXCHANGE RATE—EFFECT ON LUMBER INDUSTRY

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I too have a question for the Minister for International Trade. While the recent rise in the Canadian dollar is good news for many Canadians, I think the Minister will agree that for the hard hit lumber industry, already suffering the pernicious 15 per cent export tax, it is bad news. Is the Government aware that the recent rise in the Canadian dollar will cost the lumber industry over $170 million on an annual basis, and on the basis of that the industry will be paying the equivalent of over 20 per cent export tax? Based upon those figures, is the Government now prepared to request from the United States a renegotiation of that agreement to take into account the major change in the exchange rate so that the lumber industry will not be paying the equivalent of a 20 per cent export tax?

Mr. Benjamin: Figure it out.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Yes, the Hon. Member from the NDP has it right, I am trying to figure out the garbled arithmetic of the Hon. Member opposite.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: There is an ad valorem tax of 15 per cent, an export tax, which we negotiated to keep those funds in Canada. That, in fact, is what is happening. If you look at the prices of lumber since the export tax was imposed, the Americans are paying that tax and the money is going into provincial coffers. Why the Hon. Member wants to add in exchange rate differences, to which the lumber industry is well accustomed, is something for him to explain.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, it is a sad commentary that the Minister for International Trade does not understand that a rise in the exchange rate will have a devastating effect upon the lumber industry. How stupid can one Minister be? She is responsible for international trade. That is shameful, Mr. Speaker. When will this Minister come to her senses and begin acting as a Minister of Trade and do something, knowing that the exchange rate on top of her 15 per cent export tax will destroy the industry? When will she start smartening up and do something for the lumber industry?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I think that the comments, which are fairly gross of the Hon. Member, about the stupidity of the Minister for International Trade—

Mr. Axworthy: It takes one to know one.

Miss Carney: —are not supported by the performance in the market of the stocks involved. Let me explain to him in terms of forestry stocks, which indicate the health of the industry as perceived by public investors. MacMillan Bloedel stock has gone up 39 per cent since the deal was put through, Canfor stock has gone up 40 per cent, B.C. Forest Products stock has gone up 32 per cent, Abitibi Price has gone up 36 per cent, and West Fraser stock has gone up 21 per cent. In fact the entire forest index has gone up 27.7 per cent. That is a public reaction to the softwood lumber deal, not the remarks of the Hon. Member.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: You are being governed by speculators; is that what you are doing?

Mr. Crosbie: Ask another one, Lloyd.

Mr. Axworthy: She is so stupid we will keep asking questions.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville.

Mr. Nystrom: Maybe those two Members should step outside, Mr. Speaker.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—AGRICULTURE MARKETING BOARDS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. I will shift from a West Coast/East Coast issue to an important national issue. American Secretary of Agriculture Lyng said that Americans intend to discuss the Canadian Wheat Board and other farm marketing boards in free trade talks, and one of Lyng's senior officials, Daniel Amstutz, said "functioning of marketing boards is now on the negotiating table".

Yesterday the Prime Minister rightfully said that Clayton Yeutter's comments on cultural matters were "a stunning ignorance of Canada". Does the Prime Minister agree that the comments of these two senior officials on the future of Canadian agriculture and marketing boards represents the same stunning ignorance of Canadian agriculture as Clayton Yeutter's were of Canadian cultural matters?

• (1440)

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the agricultural issues are involved in the free trade talks with the United States. However, I have already informed the House that the major problem we have in agriculture is between the European Community and the U.S. We feel very strongly that the solution to these problems will be found at the GATT negotiations, not the Canada-U.S. bilateral negotiations.

NON-NEGOTIATION OF MARKETING BOARDS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, the Minister does not understand the question. I think the farmers of Canada deserve an answer from their Prime Minister.

The Prime Minister should know that farmers have fought for marketing boards, they have built marketing boards, and marketing boards are vital to the future of farming in Canada. Will the Prime Minister now tell Canadian farmers that marketing boards will not be on the table and, if the Americans insist on it, we will pull out of the trade talks here and now? Will he tell that to Canadian farmers here and now?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture as well as the Minister for International Trade have repeatedly said that our marketing board system will not be on the table when we get into trade talks with the Americans. With regard to the senior official from the Department of Agriculture, the Hon. Member is talking about Mr. Daniel Amstutz, the Under-Secretary to the Secretary of Agriculture in the United States. I can well understand his frustration with our system of selling because it is far superior to theirs and we have been outselling them.

Again, I said last week that I would make a different offer. We would be prepared to go to the United States to explain how our system works so that they may adopt it and do a better job of selling. If they would accept that offer, I am sure we would all be better off because they would do a better job of selling and we would not have to get into the ridiculous situation of having to lower prices in order to make sales.

DEPARTMENT OF EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

INVESTIGATION OF LEAKS TO MEDIA

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the two Ministers of Immigration, I address my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. My question concerns the Department of Immigration's special investigation aimed at discrediting members of the media. I received a letter from an immigration official who said the following:

> This is a dangerous and disgusting event. These two men and Lussier are creating a feeling of fear, terror and intimidation. Please do something to stop it.

How can the Deputy Prime Minister justify such an unethical journalistic witch-hunt at the expense of the taxpayers? Will he assure the House that the findings of this shameful operation will be ignored since they were solely intended to discredit members of the media and shamefully intimidate officials in the Department of Immigration?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, the object of the investigation to which the Hon. Member is referring was put in a memorandum sent to employees of the Department on November 26 last. It was indicated that the investigation was done because of leaks and security breaches within the Department, and also that people who worked in the Department were called upon to co-operate if they wished. There have never been any complaints from the unions or anyone else except for the one to which the Hon. Member is referring today. We find it unusual that it would come in that form, but that is the only thing that is behind this whole story.

REQUEST THAT INVESTIGATORS' REPORT BE MADE PUBLIC

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that the only reason the investigation was conducted was to cover up at any cost the embarrassing mistakes and judgment calls of the two Ministers of Immigration. He knows that and the Government knows that. Given that the media have an important role to play in the political process and given that officials of his own Department are threatened and offended, does the Minister not feel that it was a flagrant abuse of taxpayers' dollars to conduct such an intimidating witch-hunt? If he has nothing to hide, is he prepared to make the report public and table it in the House of Commons so we may learn the purposes behind that investigation?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, I will not answer in the same primitive tone in which the Hon. Member put his question.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Charest: Suffice it to remind the Hon. Member that not too long ago his own Party thought it was the end of the world when, in another Department, there was such a breach of security. The same thing happens in this Department and, all of a sudden, we are trying to fight the press. The Hon. Member should make up his mind and try to be consistent.

NATIONAL SOVEREIGNTY

SUGGESTED MINING OF ARCTIC WATERS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Associate Minister of National Defence. Will the Minister categorically reject the screwy suggestion of the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security to place, in peacetime, live mines in Canadian Arctic waters?

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member has adequately described the suggestion and it is not a suggestion which is under contemplation by the Department of National Defence.

CULTURE

FREE TRADE—CULTURAL INDUSTRIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister, who insists on feigning ignorance about culture and free trade.

I am asking this very specific question for the fourth time, Mr. Speaker. Will the Government confirm it is excluding the cultural industries, in other words, television, film, publishing and music, from the free trade talks? Will the Prime Minister address this concrete question instead of talking vaguely about cultural identity?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the comments made by the Prime Minister yesterday. He again said that our cultural identity was not on the table, and this also applies to program content and ownership of our cultural industries.

[English]

REQUEST THAT BOOK TARIFF BE REPEALED

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, does the Government not realize that it has put culture on the negotiating table itself by imposing a book tariff as a retaliatory measure for the shakes and shingles deal? Will the Government undertake to withdraw that book tariff as a sign of good faith to Canadians that culture will not be up for grabs in negotiations on free trade?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I do not know how often members of the NDP need to be reminded that Canada's cultural identity is not on the table. I do not know if they are trying by their promotion to put it there but we would resist any effort made by members of the NDP to have our cultural identity negotiated.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADA EMPLOYMENT CENTRES

MONTREAL WATERFRONT—ALLEGED RACIAL DISCRIMINATION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for multiculturalism. In answer to a question I put on November 26 about racial discrimination on the Montreal waterfront by an official in the Department of Employment, the Minister for Employment said that he would suspend the official and conduct an investigation. We have now learned that the so-called investigation was tainted because the union and members of the union would not participate, the key dossier in the file disappeared mysteriously, and the official was only suspended for two weeks. Since the Minister responsible for multiculturalism has an interest in racial discrimination matters, would he repudiate this fiasco which took place and urge the Government to have an impartial public inquiry into this matter?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Employment and Immigration is obviously not in the House. I am not aware of the file but I will certainly raise the matter with the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF INVESTIGATOR'S REPORT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, we have also learned that although the investigation was tainted and incomplete, the investigator gave his report to the Government two or three weeks ago. The report was requested by the president of the union and the Minister would not give it to him. Would the Minister responsible for multiculturalism also ensure that that report, incomplete as it is, is made public so that we may all see it?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, I will advise the Minister of Employment and Immigration of the Hon. Member's concerns when he returns to the House.

THE JUDICIARY

APPOINTMENT OF FORMER PREMIER TO MANITOBA COURT OF APPEAL

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice and concerns the recent appointment of former Tory Premier Sterling Lyon to the Manitoba Court of Appeal. Yesterday the Minister stated that he consulted with Manitoba Attorney General Roland Penner prior to making this offensive appointment. In view of the fact that this morning Attorney General Roland Penner sent to the Minister of Justice a telex categorically denying that suggestion, saying that he is both astonished and angered by the suggestion, and demanding a retraction, will the Minister of Justice now apologize to the Attorney General and the people of Manitoba? Will he explain why there was no consultation on this important appointment to the bench?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I think the apology for the slander of a distinguished Canadian should come from that

Hon. Member, not the Government. The reality is, as both the Hon. Member and the Attorney General know, that the appointment to the Court of Appeal was discussed in Ottawa at the time of the meeting with representatives of the provincial Attorneys-General. I have read press reports concerning the Manitoba Attorney General and the contents of that discussion, and I have indicated to him and publicly that that was not at all that was discussed when I had my discussions with him about the Court of Appeal.

Mr. Speaker: I am going to recognize the Hon. Member for Burnaby but I do caution him. He is an excellent counsel, as some others of us are, I hope, and will know that when discussing this matter he should choose his words carefully.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, it is a sad day for justice and for federal-provincial relations when the Minister of Justice deliberately misleads the people of Canada on this fundamental issue.

Mr. Speaker: I noticed that the Hon. Member did not say the Minister of Justice had deliberately misled this House but the people of Canada. However, it is getting awfully close and I would ask the Hon. Member to recognize the courtesies which are extended here. The Member has a point, he knows how to make it well, and there is no particular reason to impugn the motives of a Minister, and certainly it is not appropriate to say that the Minister is misleading this place deliberately or anything near that.

SYSTEM OF MAKING JUDICIAL APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, what action is the Minister taking to follow up on the promise made by his predecessor a year ago to, in effect, change the system of judicial appointments to ensure that patronage does not play a role and that a man who has displayed such contempt for the Charter of Rights and for equality for women and Francophones in Canada—that that kind of system no longer plays a part in judicial appointments? When will he change that system?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I think you are aware of the fact that Citation 321 of Beauchesne's puts parameters on reflections on members of the judiciary, especially when they are falsely based as the Hon. Member falsely bases the premise of his question. I am very proud of the quality of appointments to the judiciary by my predecessor and myself. For example, more women, as a percentage of appointments, have been appointed since I have been Minister of Justice than under any previous Minister. They have been of the highest quality, and I absolutely feel that the Hon. Member's question is unfounded and unjustified.

FINANCE

EFFECT OF FEDERAL SALES TAX ON SMALL BUSINESSES

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Since the Tory Government was elected the federal sales tax has been increased by 3 per cent. Alexander Ceramic Studio in Ville La Salle is almost bankrupt because of the federal sales tax. Will the Minister save that business and increase the sales tax exemption ceiling for small businesses?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member reflects on the broader aspects of his question he will understand that interest rates are down some 4.5 percentage points over the last two years. A number of specific provisions have been made in the Income Tax Act to help small business people meet their obligations and objectives. He will also know that the level of economic activity in the country has been a good deal higher than in previous years and is doing as well as we ever have in Canada relative to practically any other country in the industrialized world.

NEED TO INCREASE FEDERAL SALES TAX EXEMPTION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance doesn't understand how important the federal sales tax exemption is and how it works. Will the Minister of Finance make a commitment here and now to increase the exemption from $50,000 to $250,000, to help small businesses and, more specifically, Alexander Ceramics Studio, which will go bankrupt in a few days unless the Minister announces these changes?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member wants to bring me the details of the specific company he is referring to I will be happy to look at them. He knows, at least I hope he does, the importance of bringing the deficit down in measured steps. That is one of the principal reasons why we have interest rates at a nine-year low and why mortgage rates are at a 13-year low. Those low mortgage rates are leading to record housing starts which are creating jobs.

CAPITAL GAINS TAX EXEMPTION—REQUEST FOR ELIMINATION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. He will know that two days ago the Economic Council of Canada joined the long list of business as well as labour and other organizations which have called for the elimination of the $500,000 lifetime capital gains tax exemption. It also called for capital gains to be taxed in full. Will the Minister accept the Council's advice and send a signal to ordinary Canadian taxpayers that the Conservative Government is sincere in its commitment to tax reform by eliminating the capital gains tax exemption in his Budget on February 18?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sure some of his colleagues in western Canada—the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville is leaving the House in disgust at the suggestion the Hon. Member has made that we eliminate the capital gains tax exemption for farmers.

ECONOMIC COUNCIL'S RECOMMENDATION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, now that the Minister has digressed perhaps I can bring him back to the main question which is on speculative profits and stock deals, the profits of individuals. It does not relate, as the Minister knows, to the question of farms which everyone agrees should be exempted.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cassidy: My Party has said that on many occasions. Is the Minister prepared to accept the advice not just of the Economic Council of Canada but also of his friends on the Business Council on National Issues who also stated that the capital gains tax exemption should be eliminated and capital gains should be taxed at full rates? Will he reform the tax system that way or not?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): I guess that is probably the quickest flip-flop the NDP has ever made.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I am sure the Hon. Member has thought carefully about what he is proposing but I want to draw his attention to the fact that the Economic Council called for quite a significantly different treatment of savings. I believe in the past the Hon. Member made some critical comments on the RRSP proposals we legislated last year. The Economic Council is proposing that rather than an 18 per cent limitation, in exchange for elimination of the capital gains exemption, the limit go to 25 per cent or 30 per cent. Perhaps the Hon. Member would like to address that part of the proposal by the Economic Council.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—CULTURAL INDUSTRIES INQUIRY

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the U.S. Vice-President, George Bush, met with the Prime Minister a few weeks ago to discuss the progress of the free trade negotiations. Why did the Prime Minister not seize that opportunity to obtain a specific commitment from Mr. Bush that Canadian book publishing, periodicals, and TV would be non-negotiable? Why will he not name these as protected cultural industries and part of the essence and identity of Canada?

• (1500)

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it has been explained repeatedly in this House, and as recently as yesterday, that the Prime Minister has said that cultural affairs are not on the free trade table. You cannot take off the table something which is not on the table.

With regard to the tariff on books, we have explained that it was put on because of the United States action in placing a tariff on shakes and shingles. When the U.S. moves to remove that tariff, we will be in a position to remove ours.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I do not know that our cultural industries will find that to be a very satisfying response.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister answer yes or no as to whether the border broadcasting policy, the disallowance of tax privileges for foreign magazines, and Investment Canada book publishing are to be negotiated by the Government? Is it up for grabs? Will the Minister answer yes or no with respect to those policies? We want a straight answer.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I refer the Hon. Member to yesterday's Hansard at page 3102 where the Prime Minister again repeated the statement which he made at the University of Chicago. He said:

> If we and our American partners cannot strike a deal that will achieve these goals, a deal will not be struck. Our political sovereignty, our system of social programs, our commitment to fight regional disparities, our unique cultural identity, our special linguistic character—these are the essence of Canada.
> They are not at issue in these negotiations.

Mrs. Finestone: I read that yesterday.

Ms. Carney: We will repeat that every day in the House of Commons should it be necessary so you can understand it.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL FUNDING

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. He is aware of the growing crisis in Canadian cities which are literally rotting and falling apart. For the past two years the Federation of Canadian Municipalities has been making a plea to the federal Government for financial assistance which his Minister of Finance has turned down.

Will the Prime Minister now accept the responsibility of his office, overrule his Finance Minister, and insist that funds be included in the upcoming Budget to restore the integrity of our cities?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I believe I answered that question from the Hon. Member for Trinity last December. The hands of the federal Government are full dealing with matters which are 100 per cent federal government responsibility and those which are shared costs between the federal and provincial Governments. Municipal infrastructure is a responsibility of the municipalities and the provinces. We have done nothing to hold back municipalities or provinces from dealing with that matter if they think it is as serious as they say it is. I encourage them to get on with the job if they feel that way.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows full well that the provinces and the municipalities together cannot afford the price tag. He also knows this would create 75,000 jobs. Why will he not provide the financial assistance necessary to get these cities back in shape? Every hour he waits the price goes up.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the logic of that is quite flawed. There is nothing to stop a municipality or a province, or the municipalities and the provinces together, from fixing a bridge, a pot-hole, or a water-main. Whatever the provinces and municipalities want to do in that area of their responsibilities is within their jurisdiction.

With regard to jobs, we have been getting on with the job of getting the economy going again. In the last two and one-half years 666,000 jobs have been created. That is directly related to the policies which the Government has followed in getting interest rates down and creating a better investment environment. Capital is coming into Canada from Europe, Japan, and the United States, which has created jobs, dealing with the very thing which the Hon. Member asks about.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ONTARIO HYDRO—MEETING ARRANGED BETWEEN DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER AND PREMIER OF ONTARIO

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Will he advise the House whether he has yet heard from Premier Peterson to set a date to discuss the cutback of acid rain emissions in Ontario through the use of low sulphur western coal?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's continuing interest in this very important matter. I have had correspondence from Premier Peterson. We will be meeting on March 2.

POINT OF ORDER

WITHDRAWAL OF WORD USED DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Speaker: I ask Hon. Members to wait a moment to hear a matter. I have received a note from the Hon. Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador (Mr. Rompkey). He would like to make a statement.

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I hold the Chair and, more particularly, you personally, in the highest regard. I believe the House should know that there is no issue of such fundamental importance to my province as the one before the House now. Never, in the 15 years that I have been here, have I seen the level of emotion in my province so high as it is on this issue. That is because it goes to the very heart and soul of what makes us a people and what makes the province so special and, indeed, what it is. It is my place today to reflect the level of emotion which my people feel. I did that.

We use words to convey messages. While I am confident that in the long run the message which I conveyed today will stand up, there are, nevertheless, rules of this House. You have made rulings which I respect. I now want to withdraw the word in question which I used to convey the messages which I expressed today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I know that Hon. Members would want me to say to the Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador that we do understand the depth of feeling and the emotion which he has expressed. His chivalrous and courteous withdrawal of the offensive words is a credit to this place and is very much appreciated. We thank him for that.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Government House Leader to tell us what business the Government intends to present to the House for the coming seven days.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I will do so with pleasure. We will start today with Bill C-19, which will be followed by Bill C-21 and then Bill C-12, the Bill to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act; report stage of Bill C-6, the Bill with regard to the Atlantic Accord; and then Bill C-2 with regard to Canagrex.

USE OF UNPARLIAMENTARY WORD

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, during Question Period today the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) used the word "slanderous" for the second time in reference to another Member. If you refer to citation 320 in Beauchesne's you will see, as you obviously know, that slanderous reference to a Member is unparliamentary. I ask that the Minister review the "blues" and stop using this word so lightly. He has used it in reference to myself in the past and has now used it in reference to the Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson).

Mr. Speaker: The Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) raises a complaint about the use of the word "slanderous". The complaint is properly taken. I am sure the Minister will reflect upon the representation which has been made.

I ask all Hon. Members to remember that the use of such words does cause agitation in the Chamber, which could lead to disorder with which the Speaker must deal. In addition, there are words which are not necessarily unparliamentary which, used in certain ways, create exactly the same disorder. I thank the Hon. Member for Hamilton East for her intervention.

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council) moved, for the Minister (Transport), that Bill C-19, an Act respecting motor vehicle transport by extra-provincial undertakings, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, it is an honour and a privilege to open the debate on Bill C-19.

• (1510)

[English]

The Motor Vehicle Transport Act, 1986 will effect the reforms of economic regulation of our trucking industry right across the country, reforms to which the federal and provincial Governments have agreed. The provisions of the Bill may be summarized very quickly.

Entry requirements to the industry now based on the test of "public convenience and necessity" will, after a transition period, be based on a new simple fitness test. Truck applicants will only be required to prove that they have met the all-important safety standards and bonding and insurance requirements.

Other restrictions on operating licences, such as routes and places to be served, as well as controls over fares to be charged, will be eliminated. There is a rather long history behind these new provisions.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, the trucking industry has gone through tremendous changes during the last sixty years, if we only consider the trucks themselves, trucking routes, loads and distances travelled.

[English]

Who could have foreseen that the business of local cartage that existed in the 1920s would give rise to everything up to transcontinental service with routes now reaching deep into the United States?

Trucking is a vital and constantly growing part of Canada's national transportation system. As a whole, the trucking industry generates over 70 per cent of total surface freight revenue. The for-hire segment alone contributes over $6 billion annually to our Gross National Product.

The industry pays the salaries of some 90,000 men and women who work in for-hire trucking across the country. I suggest there are perhaps another 200,000 to 250,000 of our citizens who earn their daily income from the spin-off industries providing goods and services to this industry.

Canada is an exporting nation, and trucking is increasingly important to our exports. In 1984, trucks carried 50 per cent of our exports to the United States. I might remind Hon. Members that 2 million to 2.5 million Canadians owe their livelihood to our exports to that market, which accounts for approximately 80 per cent of our entire exports. I believe many other Canadians earn their living from the transport, distribution or handling of exports to Canada.

Over the years, the relationship between the industry and Government has also changed. Since 1984, the provinces have been responsible for trucking regulation in both their own and the federal Government's jurisdiction.

Over the years, different regulations grew up across the country. In different provinces there were different requirements for entry, routes, rates, commodities, safety precautions and so on.

That reality made the trucker's job of meeting the needs of shippers more difficult than need be. However, as the trucking industry has grown and matured, regulation has been reduced in all provinces, especially in recent years. This has gradually given our truckers greater freedom to compete within the industry and with the railroads and other modes of transportation.

However, the industry remains saddled with a regulatory regime which limits growth and innovation which frequently differs from province to province. It restricts services and imposes unnecessary costs on the industry, on its customers, and ultimately on the economy as a whole.

This is not the way to meet future needs. Surely, an efficient, flexible transportation system is critical to Canada in order to link up east and west and to connect us to major markets in the United States.

Designing a transportation system that achieves the best service at the best price is vital to Canada's economic well-being. In trucking, that task has involved federal and provincial Governments, the trucking industry, producers and shippers in extensive consultations spread over a number of years. A broad consensus developed that we need less economic regulation and more uniformity in regulation of trucking across Canada.

An historic agreement on regulatory reform of the trucking industry was signed in February, 1985, I believe by all the provinces, the Territories and the federal Government. The new Motor Vehicle Transport Act, through Bill C-19, puts that agreement into law.

The Bill also provides for further federal-provincial agreements, including the definition of the fitness test and a uniform national safety code. Federal and provincial Ministers responsible for transportation agreed to these additional elements last October.

As we develop new economic and transportation policies, it makes some sense to look at the policies of our neighbour to the south, particularly when we consider the value of the transportation crossing our borders. We can learn from their mistakes and successes and I believe we have learned a great deal from the U.S. experience with the deregulation of the trucking industry. We have looked at what has worked well, what has not, and considered the profound differences between the two countries. We now have a truly made-in-Canada policy for our trucking industry.

Let me illustrate this with two important examples. The United States adopted a strategy which called for economic deregulation of trucking, to be followed by reform of safety regulation. It appears that they have yet to get around to safety. Of course, we intend to do quite the opposite because we believe that safety of the transportation system is the number one priority of truckers and all Canadians. The Minister has stated this on many occasions. Consequently, a uniform national safety code has been developed and approved in consultation with the provinces and the trucking industry. This code will be the cornerstone of the new fitness test. The other elements of that test will be insurance and bonding requirements.

The second illustration is the step by step approach to implementing reform. The Americans introduced sweeping trucking deregulation in an environment of quite restrictive entry requirements and rate controls. Unlike the Americans, we have gradually introduced reforms within the existing regime. To a large extent, much larger than in the United States just prior to their deregulation, our trucking industry already operates under market competition.

In addition, the reform to which I believe the federal, provincial and territorial Governments all agreed provides for a transition period. During that time, a reverse onus public interest test will apply in addition to the new fitness test.

Finally, the federal and provincial Governments in their agreement of 1985 aimed to begin the transition period in January, 1987. The transition period will now begin a year later, in January, 1988. As a result of further consultations and compromise, the fitness only test will not come into effect until 1991. What that means is that Canada's trucking industry will have roughly a decade to adjust gradually to less regulatory control.

The Memorandum of Understanding also called for an independent study of the potential effects of eliminating the "public convenience and necessity" test in favour of a "fitness" test. That study has now been completed and released. Let me mention briefly some of its conclusions: First, the gradual weakening of control by the provinces over market entry and rate regulations has already caused significant changes in the trucking industry. That industry is, therefore, better prepared for reform than the American industry was in 1980, just prior to the U.S. deregulation. Second, many small independent operators have already entered the industry. A sudden flood of new entrants, as has happened in the United States, is therefore unlikely. Third, there is no evidence that the current regulatory regime is supporting extra-provincial services to small communities which would be discontinued after reform of entry requirements. Fourth, many rates are already competitive. Price competition may intensify and should be monitored. Fifth, a shake-out similar to that which happened in the United States is unlikely. Regulatory reform is not expected to cause disruption in the industry. Sixth, a gradual process of restructuring and consolidation has been under way for some time. This will continue. There is no indication, of which I am aware, that worrisome levels of concentration will develop. Our industry is competitive now and we hope it will be even more competitive in the future.

These predictions are reassuring, but what if the experts are not right? I believe that less regulation and more competition will lead to the lowest possible costs and the best service for our shippers. We are a nation of shippers. Certainly, my region of western Canada is based on our resources, and many men and women who work in those industries depend enormously on the trucking industry as well as rail and air modes of transportation. I am also certain we must preserve a healthy, financially viable trucking industry.

[Translation]

Consequently, the Government of Canada has committed itself under Bill C-18 to monitor diligently the effects of the reform on all modes and to report on its findings every year. Hon. Members are aware that in four years time, in 1992, a thorough review will be made of all reforms, including those involving the trucking industry.

[English]

In addition, bearing in mind the three-year transition period in Bill C-19, the federal and provincial Transport Ministers have agreed jointly to commission a special study of the effects of reform on trucking. The study will be completed in 1990. The Ministers have also agreed to monitor the participation by U.S. truckers in the domestic and transporter markets. This will be done along with existing monitoring of transporter traffic under the Brock—Gotlieb Agreement. That agreement also provides a mechanism for discussing and correcting transporter traffic imbalances.

Perhaps these independent reviews will tell us that our trucking industry is failing and is unable to compete in a free market. I do not believe this will be the case. I know that U.S. participation in Canadian trucking is of concern to many truckers in our country, some of whom have suggested that the new legislation should include specific provisions to restrict entry of U.S. truckers. However, Canadian truckers have been doing very well in competing with U.S. truckers for transporter traffic. In fact, the Canadian share of transporter traffic increased by roughly 10 per cent between 1980 and 1984. That is a very good performance by our domestic trucking industry. U.S. truckers, on the other hand, say they have a few beefs against us. Unfortunately, that is said about every sector these days. U.S. truckers claim that entry restrictions in many provinces remain strict, compared to easier rules in the United States and that entry restrictions vary by province.

The Americans appear not to be happy that close to 1,000—I repeat, 1,000—Canadian carriers have been granted wide-open operating authority in the United States since deregulation in 1980. This is done through one licence issued by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Licences of U.S. truckers in Canada are limited in many respects and they must obtain a licence from each and every one of our 10 provinces. That is not exactly symmetry, is it, Madam Speaker?

In transporter traffic the biggest threat from the United States arises in the long-haul market, as Hon. Members all know. Some U.S. carriers who now interline with Canadian carriers may try to provide single line service. However, U.S. carriers operating in Canada under existing regulations are already trying to do exactly that, so how will this Bill change what is already going on within the existing laws of Canada and the provinces? As I mentioned, Canadian truckers have been successfully meeting the competition. I do not believe these proposed changes to the regulatory environment will make Canadian truckers uncompetitive in transporter traffic.

Madam Speaker, if we are not prepared to offer more or less equal access to truckers in the United States, we must expect U.S. pressure to increase in the years or even in the months to come.

I am told that in the United States, one stroke of the President's pen can eliminate all our Canadian truckers who work down there today. I think this would probably be a disaster for some of the 1,000 Canadian truckers who ply their trade in the United States.

[English]

Unless we provide for roughly equal access for U.S. truckers, we can expect pressure to grow in the U.S. to limit Canadian access to its important market. In our domestic market, a number of American companies have established here under the existing regulatory regimes. They have been good corporate citizens and have the right to compete as well.

For all of these reasons, neither the federal nor the provincial Governments see it as desirable or necessary to legislate barriers to the entry of U.S. truckers. We do not live in a hermetically sealed economy. We have to compete in the world markets, and on that premise we have allowed U.S. truckers to compete within Canada on the basis of being good corporate and individual citizens.

What will be useful is the transition period through to 1991 during which a modified public interest test for entry will continue to apply. This will allow additional time for adjustment to a more competitive environment. Our shippers, almost unanimously, have called on the Government simply to deregulate. "Do not wait", they say. We understand their concerns, but the Government believes that Canadian truckers should have more time to adjust to a more open competitive situation.

We can have both the benefits of a more competitive market and a strong financially viable Canadian trucking industry if we carry out these reforms in the measured way proposed in the Bill now before the House. Some adjustments will, of course, be required. For example, greater opportunities will present themselves for truckers to work out, with their existing and new customers, business contracts specifying whatever combination of service and price is to their mutual advantage.

This flexibility will enable carriers and the shippers' customers to adapt to changing economic circumstances at home and abroad over the years to come without interference from government regulators.

The new Motor Vehicle Transport Act is before us for approval in principle, which I heartily support. I wish to remind Hon. Members that it will be the subject of careful consideration in committee. The Minister of Transport (Mr.

Crosbie) has already indicated that he will be listening to all representations made to that committee. Over-all, I believe that these are the right reforms at the correct time, and the right policies for the correct reasons. They will bring us less but more uniform economic regulation of trucking, rebounding to the benefit of both carriers and shippers, more efficient service, and a safe, financially healthy trucking industry will be encouraged through greater reliance on market forces, accompanied by modern, clear, and uniform safety requirements. All of that will help our producers and shippers to be more competitive in both domestic and international markets. In turn, it will well help consumers, and it will help stimulate economic growth and job creation from one end of this country to the other, from St. John's to Nanaimo to Cambridge Bay.

Mr. Benjamin: While dozens of truckers go broke.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Madam Speaker, today we are studying Bill C-19, an Act respecting motor vehicle transport by extra-provincial undertakings. Significantly enough, this Bill will replace the Motor Vehicle Transport Act of 1953-54. This statute, which relates to the interests of the trucking industry and inter-provincial bus companies, will be replaced by a series of new deregulation criteria which, I might point out, have to do only with the trucking industry. Still I hasten to add that it is too much anyway, for all people affected by this Bill do not want any part of this Conservative initiative.

Considering the uproar triggered by Bill C-18, we would have thought that the Government would have been farsighted enough to appreciate the fact that it had to be extremely careful and hesitant in its attempt to turn the Canadian transport system upside down. No, Sir, the message did not get through! Right on the heels of the mess it created with Bill C-18, here it goes again with Bill C-19 which is no better than the other one. Most regretfully and notwithstanding my deep admiration and esteem for the Parliamentary Secretary, I must say I cannot fathom whatever motive made the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) decide to miss this opportunity to introduce his own Bill. This utterly cavalier attitude on the part of the Minister of Transport is unacceptable. If he really has the interests of his Department at heart, if he feels that legislation before the House is important and deserves priority, he should be right here to defend his own Bills.

He made it a point to stay away from the House throughout the study of and debates on Bill C-18, and now he insults this institution by choosing not to be here to defend this second Bill introduced in the same week.

In my judgment, what needs to be said is that Bill C-19 is bound to have a strong impact on one of Canada's major industry. Indeed figures for last year, 1986, show that this industry did about $8 billion worth of business and had over 50,000 people on its payrolls. Trucks carry about 40 per cent of all goods in Canada and about half of our exports to the United States.

So we are looking at one of the prime movers of the Canadian economy. Like the rest of us this industry had its ups and downs in the early 80s due to the recession, but it managed to pull through and continued to provide thousands of jobs throughout Canada for dedicated workers who have been able to earn quite a decent living thanks to the trucking industry. This is why, as we speak, operators, owners, interest groups and experts in the road transport industry have serious doubts about the changes the Conservative Government seeks to introduce by way of this Bill.

Together let us have a look at the propositions which, according to people who work in that sector, seriously threaten the very survival of hundreds of Canadian road transport companies, not just one or two. The Government is suggesting that we ought to drop the "public convenience and necessity" market criterion. This requirement, I may recall, has been in existence since 1954. It puts the burden of proof on the applicant, which means that if he is to have any chance at all of obtaining a licence, the applicant must prove that the service he intends to provide is absolutely necessary and that the general public will benefit. As a result, only truckers who provide a service for which there is a market can obtain a licence at the present time. The Government, allegedly for the sake of increasing competition, has decided to change all this and to substitute for this criterion the concept of "fit, willing and able". So what exactly does that mean? It means that from now on, the onus will be on existing licence holders to prove that adding a new carrier on a route where the service is already available will be a threat to the economic viability of that service. It will no longer be up to the party who wishes to provide a service to prove that what he is offering is essential. It will be up to the carriers already on the market and who want to prevent new carriers from entering the field to prove there are reasons why they should not do so. This kind of system makes no sense at all, since the parties who must prove that the other guy should not be licenced will be accused of being partial, and there is no way they can then submit evidence that will hold water and be objective, to keep the competitor from entering the market. The difference between the two systems is crystal-clear. Without a formal complaint, anyone who has a truck on four wheels and is willing, fit and able to operate the truck has a very good chance of obtaining a licence. It will be practically automatic. Anyone who wants to drive a truck will be able to get a licence.

I think we should consider the consequences of this kind of situation. The general effet on the Canadian market will be that more carriers will be competing, not for other markets but for the same market. If the purpose was to provide opportunities for expansion, one could consider it useful and appropriate to have more competition, but since it is the same market, the Canadian market, one wonders why the Canadian Government is taking this route. However, the additional competition from a few individuals who get a licence because they have a brand new truck will be negligible compared with the potential attraction of a more accessible Canadian market for the U.S. trucking industry giants who will compete with our domestic trucking industry. We could expect foreign takeovers of Canadian surface carriers to increase rapidly over the next five years.

Look at what has happened in Canada in recent years. Since 1981, operating costs have increased 28 per cent, mainly owing to the taxes on gas and the shockingly exorbitant rates being charged for liability insurance. That is an area the Conservative Government has preferred to ignore. I think the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) should find out as soon as possible what is happening in this area, because liability insurance in this country has become a crushing burden, not only on the trucking industry but on a host of other sectors as well. Municipalities, companies and whole industries are being gouged by the insurance companies. This is a major problem, and although it is not within the purview of the Bill we are considering today, it is a very relevant issue for all these trucking companies.

Because of the increases the trucking industry must cope with and the fact that shipping rates have increased only 5 per cent, the net result or the profit margin, according to figures provided by the trucking industry, is down to 3 per cent. One of the lowest margins since the Second World War! US carriers, with a combined turnover far greater than that of the Canadian industry, could penetrate Canadian markets, lower their rates and absorb a few losses for one, two or three years, after which they could take over Canadian carriers who were unable to hold the distance. That is the danger of introducing this kind of access requirement when we are operating with this very low 3 per cent profit margin in Canada. Canadian carriers would not be able to lower their prices to compete with US truckers.

The Governement of Canada knows that. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) and his predecessor, the present Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), were told as much by the Canadian trucking industry. Absolutely appalling though it may be, both the present Minister of Transport and his Conservative predecessor turned a deaf ear to these representations by the trucking industry.

We are talking about the danger that American companies might invade the Canadian market and impose cut-rate prices. Our main concern is that Combines Investigation Act provisions just cannot put a stop to that kind of competition. A few weeks ago the Conservative Government introduced a competition Bill which, admitedly, is a step in the right direction. But at the time the Official Opposition, the Liberal Party, stated that it was a practically toothless measure unlikely to go far enough to protect Canada's sound competitive market. Well, we now have the proof before us. The competition Bill introduced by the Conservatives a few weeks ago will do nothing to prevent American companies from imposing predatory rates. This is a basic question for us and, when this Bill gets to the parliamentary committee, my Liberal Party colleagues and I will move an amendment to Bill C-19 to make sure that it contains this kind of measure.

As it happens, this was part of the Canadian Trucking Association representations made as early as last December when it voiced its initial reaction to Bill C-19. Here is part of its important statement:

• (1540)

[English]

Competition Act provisions relating to predatory or discriminatory pricing have limited application to transportation. Bill C-19 is silent on the question of predation, meaning that the Canadian for-hire trucking industry is being thrust into a continental market-place increasingly dominated by a handful of billion dollar U.S. general freight carriers with absolutely no safeguards and certainly no assurances that those dominant continental truckers will provide a significant number of jobs in Canada while tapping key industrial markets.

Since July 1985 when the Government released its deregulation policy paper entitled Freedom to Move, four Canadian motor carriers have already been taken over by two major American firms: Akron's Roadway of Ohio has bought Arkena Express Lines of Toronto, and Overland's Yellow Freight of Kansas has bought three regional trucking firms of Windsor in Ontario.

So the process is already under way. It is quite possible, in fact not only quite possible but absolutely certain, according to people who know this sector, that the situation will grow worse and that Canada's trucking industry will be litterally swallowed by American interests.

I just cannot understand how this Conservative Government, stubbornly persevering in this course which is both absolutely pointless and detrimental to Canadian interests, can introduce such a Bill which surrenders outright to the Americans the whole Canadian trucking industry. The Conservative Government is prepared to sacrifice to American interests the jobs of some 50 000 Canadian workers, to pursue this pointless and certainly dangerous dream of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who had no idea of what he was getting into when he agreed to start discussing free trade with the President of the United States.

Concerning the strategy of major American corporations, Mr. Gerry Reimer, vice-president of Reimer Express Lines of Winnipeg said, and I quote:

[English]

American companies can come here and cut rates to smithereens for a year or two and all domestic truckers will be gone.

It is one of the senior officer of a Canadian company who said that, and he is not the only one. Mr. John Kennedy, president of Kingsway Transport of Rexdale in Ontario added, and I quote:

[English]

There is no question deregulation will have a devastating impact on the financial condition of the Canadian motor carrier industry. It will ultimately result in waves of mergers, buy-outs and bankruptcies.

These testimonies are not statements made by Members of the Opposition to embarrass the Government. They were made by people who operate daily in the Canadian trucking industry and who feel their industry being jeopardized by the incompetence and childishness of this Conservative Government. This situation is utterly unacceptable.

To emphasize the seriousness of possible foreign take-overs, I urge the House to compare the difference between the turnovers of some American and Canadian firms. The biggest trucking firm in Canada, or rather Quebec is the Brazeau company with a turnover of $160 million in 1985. Kingsway Transport Limited, from Rexdale, Ontario, one of the biggest trucking firms in Canada, had a turnover of $250 million in 1985. I repeat: The biggest in Quebec, $160 million; one of the biggest in Canada, $250 million. On the other hand, Roadway Express, the biggest trucking firm in the United States, had a turnover which exceeded $4 billion in 1985. It is easy to realize the enormous financial power which huge American corporations can exert. What is likely to happen in Canada is already happening in the United States, and this is a blind and stupid obstination on the part of the Conservative Government that we just cannot understand.

Deregulation in the United States has resulted in increased concentration and brought about, not increased competition, but reduced competition. Well, we suggest that the same thing will happen in Canada. We must stop this slavish and mindless aping of the Americans. What they did failed to benefit the American economy, so why should it benefit ours? There are some eloquent examples. Ever since the 1980 U.S. Motor Carrier Act came into effect, marking the start of deregulation of the trucking industry in the United States, the major companies have been expanding their operations.

In fact, the four giants, which are Roadway Express, Consolidated Freightway, Yellow Freight and United Parcel Services, have increased their share of the U.S. market by 24 per cent. This clearly shows that these companies can, and will, quickly increase their market share. If we open the gates wide as the Conservative Government, in its innocence, intends to do, these companies will come and increase their market share in Canada, gobble up Canadian companies and lay off hundreds if not thousands of Canadian workers who are earning a decent living in the trucking industry in Canada.

It is clear the federal Government is using this Bill to make it easier for these U.S. companies to operate on the Canadian market. When the Government says it wants to increase competition, I think there is a very real risk that most of this competition will not come from other Canadian companies, which would at least be some consolation, but from the U.S. giants, and that Canadian companies that are making a decent profit today will be face with the choice of closing down, laying off their workers or selling out to the Americans.

As the Executive Director of the Canadian Trucking Association, Mr. Ken McLaren, said so eloquently, and I quote:

[English]

Mr. Ken MacLaren said that this legislation, Bill C-19, the one that we are discussing today is like "letting Attila the Hun and Genghis Khan loose to feed on Canadian companies".

I see that the Minister is smiling at this comment, and I can understand him because this situation is one which amuses the Conservatives, but saddens tens, if not hundreds and thousands, of truckers who fear that, because of their irresponsible attitude, the Conservatives run the risk of giving away to the Americans a major Canadian industry. It is a well-known fact that the American companies are bigger and more monopolistic than ours. Indeed, we have to admit that the dynamic infrastructure which links the major American centres and the terminus network put up many years ago by the American companies make for a most effective system. Then, there is the fact that the Americans have a road network of no less than 860 highways linking various American metropolitan markets of over one million inhabitants. How many Canadian centres have a population of over one million? I repeat that there are 860 American cities with a population of about or over one million while we have only three in Canada. It is obvious that the American highway network gives the American companies an edge over the Canadian companies.

In addition, the increased difference between our two taxation systems since the major reform introduced in the United States in 1986 favours the American companies. As we know, American companies pay proportionately lower taxes because of the changes to the rules on vehicle depreciation in the United States. The America pay much lower taxes on gasoline and the American Governments intervene much less often in labour relations. Because of all these factors, it is clear that the American companies are much better off than Canadian companies in the trucking industry. We believe that, in all decency and to be fair to the trucking industry, the Conservative Government has no right to introduce this reform before the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has completed his tax reform and enabled the Canadian trucking industry to compete on an equal footing with American truckers. To proceed now with the deregulation of trucking in Canada when, for the second time, the Minister of Finance is drawing back from the promised tax reform because he does not have enough courage and conviction to go ahead with it is quite unthinkable. In my opinion, to do so would rob the Canadian truckers and that would be unconscionable.

I believe that one of the provinces which could lose a lot under this Bill is Manitoba. Eight of the 14 largest Canadian trucking companies with over 10,000 workers are located in that province. The industry representatives of that province are very concerned and the president of the Manitoba Trucking Association, Mr. Rolly Painchaud, had this to say about the situation:

• (1600)

[English]

Manitoba stands to lose more than most provinces if reform of the trucking industry fails to safeguard domestic routes from competition by giant U.S. firms.

As we can see, the Government was given a warning but failed to take the message seriously, and that is regrettable.

I can see two Members from the Province of Manitoba—the Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Duguay) and his colleague from Winnipeg—behind the curtain of the Conservative lobby. I hope they will take part in this debate and protect the interests of their constituents and their province because Bill C-19 may indeed prove to be very damaging to the Manitoba economy.

[English]

Indeed, I am looking forward to seeing the Hon. Member intervene in this debate and talk sense with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie). This legislation will be murder for the trucking industry in Manitoba. I am looking forward to hearing some of those members of the Conservative Party from Manitoba who have the courage to speak out against this terrible legislation.

Not only do the consequences of deregulation undermine the motor carriers' ability to compete against the Americans, they also put them at a disadvantage with respect to the railway companies because of a provision contained in the other Bill which is part of this diabolical Conservative Government project aimed at revamping the trucking industry, and I am talking about Bill C-18 which will force truckers to play second fiddle to rail carriers. I want to refer to the provisions concerning confidential contracts. The confidential rates mentioned in Bill C-18 will enable CN and CP Rail to hold secret negotiations with the shipper with a view to setting the rates. As a result, the shipper who deals with both companies will be in a position to pay lower freight rates. But this will also force road transport companies to reduce their rates just to remain competitive with railway companies with respect to goods that can be shipped either way. Let us keep in mind that the current trucking industry profit margin is barely 3 per cent. How can any one expect fair competition under such circumstances? It stands to reason that this additional competition from the railways will so squeeze the trucking concerns that here again we can expect to see many of them throw in the towel and sell out to Canadian or foreign interests.

The situation is getting more involved as we look into the safety implications of deregulation. Even with all the indications obtained from the Government, even with all the indications stemming from the American experience since 1980, the Conservative Government has chosen to overlook that aspect. This Tory Government is turning a blind eye and making pious statements that there is no safety problem. They say they will never compromise on safety. But here are the facts: Since the U.S. Motor Carrier Act of 1980 went into force, there has been an 18 percent rise in accidents involving trucks in the United States. And there is no reason to believe the same thing will not happen in Canada with deregulation.

The fierce competition that was experienced in the United States following deregulation brought rates down, and trucking companies were forced to cut their costs. Wages went down, drivers had to work long hours and companies started to skimp on vehicle maintenance work. The result was that seven trucks out of ten were being driven around in the United States with unsafe equipment. And out of those seven trucks, 80 per cent belonged to new entrants on the American market since 1980.

The experience clearly points to the fact that deregulation makes it easier for one-truck, one-driver companies to enter the market and very often skimp on safety in order to be in a better position to compete with larger companies. Furthermore, such competition forces established companies to compromise on safety by reducing maintenance schedules, lenghthening driver working hours and extending the life cycle of pieces of equipment.

I therefore submit that by implementing Bill C-19, the Government is betraying the call of Canadians for greater road safety in Canada. We can easily expect the American experience will repeat itself in Canada and our roads will become less safe because of the Tory Government's irresponsible action.

For quite some time provincial ministers and representatives of the Canadian trucking industry have been asking for the implementation of a national safety code. In addition, they have also asked that it be put in place before or at least upon the Bill coming into force. But we find that to date, the Government has totally ignored those requests from the provincial authorities. The national road safety code would ensure that the American experience would not be repeated in Canada, or at least with the same degree of seriousness as in the United States.

And why such a delay? Because, in fact, the Tory Government that boasted of entertaining good relations in the area of federal-provincial exchanges did nothing in that area. There was a conference where pious wishes were expressed, but there really has been no formal agreement between Ottawa and the provinces. Why such a delay? For those truckers, and for all motor vehicle passengers in Canada, that delay means additional serious risk. I submit that risk should not be taken. There should be no compromise on safety when human lives are at stake because of a desire to enact post-haste deregulation in Parliament. The fact remains that these road transport companies, American mostly, did not respect safety measures and I would be very surprised indeed if in a similar context, without any constraint, Canadian companies would do any better. Had this Government any common sense at all I suggest it would reconsider its structure and its strategy. The fact that the Government is prepared to put an industry which employs 50,000 Canadians through this kind of ordeal, perhaps leading to its demise, proves that it governs in the interest of a very small minority. In one fell swoop it may very well undo the work of several generations of people who built in this country a road transport industry which, besides being strong, happens to be competitive and provides a considerable number of well-paid jobs. In conclusion, Madam Speaker, I will say that this Government is running the risk of undermining all these past efforts only to please the American Government which seeks yet another concession from the Conservative Government in the free trade negotiation process. I think this is quite unacceptable. I think it is absolutely shameful, and the Liberal Party will fight to the end to prevent the Conservatives from crawling once again before the Americans.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria)—The administration—(a) Conflict of interest guidelines. (b) Request for inclusion of punitive measures; the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap)—External Affairs—United States support for Salvadoran Government; the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi)—Immigration—(a) Minister's broadcast interview. (b) Request for apology.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-19, an Act respecting motor vehicle transport by extra-provincial undertakings, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to be the lead-off speaker for the NDP on Bill C-19. However, I must say it is like a time warp for me. As a member of the Ontario Legislature some 11 years ago I was a member of a select committee charged with studying regulation or deregulation of trucking in Ontario. Having gone from that House to this House I now find myself back where I started, debating once again the merits of regulating or deregulating the trucking industry, not just in Ontario this time but across Canada.

That time spent on the select committee gave me a very broad understanding of the industry in Ontario and its importance to the people of that province. We travelled around the province to many communities, in fact many more communities than the committee of this House did in its study of the White Paper Freedom to Move. You will remember that the Standing Committee on Transport went to three communities, Halifax, Winnipeg and Vancouver, and held hearings in Ottawa as well. While I do not remember the number of communities we went to in Ontario during the 1976 hearings, it was considerable. We went through a number of communities in northern Ontario to get a sense of what trucking meant to those towns and villages and the people who reside in them so that we could understand the economic impact of changes in the regulations. Quite frankly, it appears to me that nothing has changed. Trucking is vitally important to them. It is their mainstay and they need the protection of regulation because they will not get any protection through freeing up the industry.

What I would like to do today is give you and Members of this House, and those Canadians who happen to be watching, an idea of the state of the trucking industry in Canada. I will then go into some specific examples of the impact of deregulation in the U.S. on their carriers and workers and communities, as well as the impact in Canada, and my assessment of the over-all impact on Canadians of this particular Bill.

The Canadian trucking industry, for several reasons specific to its structure in Canada, will be particularly hard hit by deregulation. While the devastating impact that deregulation had on the American trucking industry, i.e., massive lay-offs, bankruptcies, increasing concentration, loss of service to the hinterland, and so on, will be repeated in Canada, there is a real likelihood that because of the particular character of the industry here the consequences will be even more severe.

There are three features of the Canadian trucking industry which must be borne in mind when assessing the likely impact of deregulation. First, market size and orientation. Unlike the American market with its demographic concentrations, the Canadian market has only three cities with a population over one million. While the U.S. has 1,722 city pairs with a one million plus population, Canada has only six, with a huge gap between Quebec-Ontario and the west. Without regulation of the trucking industry in a form similar to what we have now there will be little incentive to maintain an east-west transportation system, the historical basis of our economic system.

An individual who is knowledgeable about the trucking industry, in a speech on October 25, 1985, to the Chartered Institute of Transport in Ottawa, Mr. John F. Kennedy of the Kingsway group of companies, gave this impression of the industry in Canada. He said that by the late 1970s it became very evident that while the Canadian trucking industry was trying to follow the growth pattern of its U.S. counterpart, absolutely no thought was ever given to the fact that the Canadian market-place was completely different from that in the U.S. The industry simply failed to recognize that the major distinguishing market characteristic between the two nations is that Canada derives its economic strength from its natural resource base, whereas the United States generates its economic activity predominantly through its manufacturing base. In other words, Canada is mostly a truckload country while the U.S. is largely less than truckload or LTL.

The Canadian trucking industry also demonstrated an over-all lack of perception regarding other significant differences between the Canadian and U.S. market-place which resulted in a massive under-utilization of hundreds of LTL terminal facilities across Canada. To begin with, for-hire trucking in Canada is estimated to be a $6 billion industry consisting of thousands of individual carriers, whereas in the United States the 10 largest carriers alone control close to $7 billion in annual freight revenues. The United States has 42 cities with a population over one million which produces a matrix of 861 major inter-city traffic arteries, whereas in Canada we only have three cities with over one million in population and a linear grid of three major city traffic arteries.

LTL weight expressed as a percentage of total weight is in the 60 per cent to 80 per cent range for most general commodity carriers in the U.S., while in Canada it is rare to find a major carrier which handles in excess of 30 per cent LTL by weight.

A further analysis of class one and two common carriers reveals that 42 per cent of all the freight handled in the U.S. is LTL, whereas in Canada LTL freight represents only 14 per cent of the over-all tonnage handled. The reason for these significant statistics is obvious when one considers that 25 major manufacturing centres in the U.S. provide the hub for all the movement of freight and generally LTL movements move in all directions from these hubs. Canada, on the other hand, has basically two major manufacturing centres and both are situated in eastern Canada. This dictates that the majority of LTL freight moves in one direction, that being east to west, and proportionately speaking there is a much smaller volume of LTL freight moving in the opposite direction.

Given this tremendous imbalance of LTL freight moving between eastern and western Canada, Canadian motor carriers have to maintain a relatively high proportion of truckload freight on eastbound lanes to offset fixed costs, and should the volume of truckload traffic decrease significantly many carriers would have to shut down their operations.

Our present regulatory system, with its control of market entry, pricing and commodity and destination restrictions, has intentionally created a pattern of cross-subsidization of traffic through the encouragement of transportation generalists. To cite an example given by the Canadian Trucking Association, a long-haul trucking company will give up perhaps 10,000 pounds of capacity and $20,000 in costs per trailer to move general freight, for example, manufactured goods, from Ontario to the East or West in order to obtain backhaul which includes significant movement of perishable products such as refrigerated beef or fish. This pattern of accepting less than truckload could only occur where the competition was managed and there was a predictable return on investment, for example, through regulation.

The reduction or elimination of this regulatory control in the industry would encourage the super efficient and the transport specialist to the point of driving the transport generalist out of the market. The generalist would no longer have the incentive to haul LTL. With the demise of cross-subsidization and the generalist goes the historic east-west pattern of transportation. The economic logic of efficiency and deregulation will mean the demise of service for the regions and the smaller communities of the market centre.

That is exactly what we heard in 1976 when we toured northern Ontario. The smaller communities which do not have the volume coming in, let alone going out in terms of manufactured goods, are concerned that through deregulation they will be at the mercy of whichever carrier survives in a cutthroat market. To them deregulation means increased costs and reduced service.

When the United States introduced deregulation in the trucking industry in 1980 it did not have a much larger neighbour nearby with the geographic and economic capacity to enter and predominate in the transport industry, among other things. With all of the upheaval caused by deregulation the U.S. trucking industry did not face the additional distraction of competition from an economically stronger and better prepared international competitor. Canada clearly does.

With the erosion of our east-west trading and transportation systems through the economic logic of deregulation will come the flip side of the coin. The Canadian trucking industry will be beaten in the international competition for the north-south trade. The economic stakes are high. Presently half the value of Canadian-American trade travels by truck. That is one-half the value. This generates $1 billion in carrier revenue of which Canadian carriers reserve half. Loss in jobs, equipment purchase, foreign exchange earnings, and tax revenue and the potential loss for Canada is readily apparent.

In a study the Canadian Trucking Association notes that the impending danger from American competition comes not from Canadian inefficiency but from the inherent advantages enjoyed by the U.S. These advantages include the short haul extension which the Canadian market represents for American truckers. With the purchase or creation of several terminals in Canada the U.S. trucking company has access to the Canadian import and export trade. The reverse is not true.

State deregulation has not occurred to the same degree that is proposed in the Canadian provinces. Combined with the demographic differences, the U.S. trucker will have a much greater ease of entry than a Canadian carrier into the U.S.

The penetration of the Canadian market for the U.S. trucker will invariably mean a turn-around operation close to the border where backhauls are less important. For the Canadian trucker, on the other hand, the long haul means a trip deeper into the U.S. industrial heartland with a greater difficulty of obtaining backhauls to Canada.

U.S. truckers will have a greater ability to grant discounts and contract rates based on volume because more of this international traffic will be included with their domestic traffic. The high degree of American manufacturing and industrial subsidiaries in Canada, whose exports account for 50 per cent of all Canadian exports, will likely favour a single line service to the U.S. American trucking companies will have a distinct advantage in obtaining this trade, in part because of the discounts offered by U.S. truckers to the American parent company as part of an over-all agreement for the continental business of the parent.

In November of 1985 The Globe and Mail reported that U.S. trucking companies are expecting that Canadian trucking deregulation will mean a continental bonanza by giving them unrestricted access to the Canadian market, thus allowing them to offer non-stop Los Angeles to Vancouver or Miami to Toronto service. The Globe and Mail went on to note:

> One area where the U.S. carriers are expected to make inroads is in the business currently going to private carriers. Last year, (1984) Canadian companies did about $5 billion worth of business in their private fleets, but with rates falling, they would be encouraged to shift to for-hire carriers.
> U.S. carriers also expect to take business away from Canadians by signing deals with U.S. parent companies to transport the goods of the parent and its Canadian subsidiaries.
> "That would settle the fate of a lot of things in Canada without Canadian companies getting a kick at the cat", Mr. Cope, (Executive Vice-President of the Ontario Trucking Association) said.

There is clearly the question of the vulnerability of the trucking industry in Canada. Given the likely demise of our historic east-west economic and transport system, weak as it is, and the impending domination of the north-south trade by the American trucking industry, there is a real concern that deregulation will quickly undermine an efficient but fragile domestic industry.

While reliable figures about the structure of the trucking industry and its financial position are not easy to come by, what figures are available portray an industry marked by many small firms and a few very large firms, all operating with a slender profit margin. The majority of the approximately 10,000 trucking carriers in Canada are small one to three truck operations with a small profit margin and an inability to weather a sustained reversal in business fortunes. Even among the very large trucking firms there historically has not been a pattern of large profits. An industry spokesman recently remarked that even in the best of times industry-wide profit levels are only around 3 per cent. In 1984, 22 per cent of companies reporting to the Ontario Trucking Association were still suffering losses.

Although the limited data available on the structure of the industry has not indicated an undue amount of market concentration up until now, the first show of deregulation is already here. In 1985 specifically there were at least four major takeovers and mergers which were triggered in large part by the spectre of deregulation. Reimer Express Enterprises bought Inter-City Truck Lines in April to create one of the largest trucking companies in Canada. In August of that year Dominion Consolidated Truck Lines and Overland Express merged to create the largest trucking company in Ontario. The same month CP Express, Canada's largest road carrier, bought Pickard Moving and Storage. As well, Direct Transportation System was sold to Canadian Motorways, creating what The Globe and Mail described as the biggest shake-up in the industry so far.

The Globe and Mail quoted one industry spokesman as saying that the result of these developments is a concentration of the market in the hands of a few carriers which is inevitable under deregulation. He said that "Eventually, the Canadian market is going to be dominated by five or six big companies, and they are going to fight it out". Another industrial spokesman quoted by the same paper said that his company's decision to merge was influenced by the pending deregulation. He said that "In the United States and Australia large well-financed trucking companies have been the clear winners under a new regulatory environment. We are convinced this pattern will hold true in Canada".

The myth accompanying deregulation is that with the elimination of government's visible hand competition will reign free, the economy will revive, the consumer will again be sovereign, and there will be so many winners that those few losers who fell by the wayside by the process of natural economic selection will be grateful for the chance to be martyrs for efficiency. Indeed, the centrepiece of the statement by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) when he released his Freedom to Move paper was his declaration that the object of deregulation was to promote "flexibility, innovation and competitiveness".

Even if the impact of deregulation in Canada is no worse than what has happened since 1980 in the United States, the trucking industry as we know it will likely be left competitive and more concentrated than before. An American trade journal, Fleet Owner, noted:

> The handful of nationwide LTL carriers is consolidating its hold on the market, as predicted prior to 1980 by deregulation opponents. While some 350, mostly LTL carriers have gone out of business or severely curtailed operations since mid-1960, the industry's 10 largest companies have substantially increased their market share. Last year (1983) those 10 companies controlled more than half of the industry's total profits.

Carrier overcapacity in the United States has become a crippling problem. The executive director of the Independent Truck Owner Operators Association, a strong proponent of deregulation prior to 1980, testified before congressional oversight hearings in 1983. He said, "The effects of the Motor Carrier Act of 1980 on the trucking industry and labour have been disastrous". Both the truck load and the LTL sectors were ravaged by deregulation with "the medium-sized carriers forced out of business through the destructive practices engaged in by large carriers through the use of discounting tactics". He cited academic studies which predicted that after the initial shake-up of the industry has been completed there will be four or five giant nationwide LTL carriers, approximately 20 medium-sized regional LTL carriers and little else.

• (1630)

Let me point out a disturbing aspect of the process we have gone through. The Transport Committee had before it the White Paper Freedom to Move. We were allowed to travel to three Canadian cities to talk to Canadians about what they believe might be the effect of deregulation in their various sectors. However, we were not allowed to go to the United States to talk to truckers, airline officials and government officials to discover from them, first-hand, what the impact of deregulation has been on their industries.

Quite clearly, if we are to copy the rules of the game from the United States, we should at the very least have the opportunity to meet with them and find out how those rules have worked, if they have worked at all.

Let me refer again to Mr. Kennedy's speech regarding the U.S. situation. He said that if there is one particular thing that U.S. truck deregulation has taught us, it is that nothing can be cross-subsidized in the trucking business. There has been a tremendous increase in the number of truckload carriers on the one hand and a heavy concentration of large LTL carriers on the other. The losers are the regional and inter-regional carriers who have mixed truckload and LTL operations.

But at the same time the trucking industry is not the only business sector to feel the consequences of deregulation. The small and medium-sized manufacturing companies that do not have access to the LTL volumes required to take advantage of carrier discounts are left with the burden of having to pay higher freight charges in order to offset the lower rates being charged to ship the larger volume shippers.

He went on to say that the principle of "the larger shipper pays less and the smaller shipper pays more" has some serious implications for all Canadian businesses, not just for Canadian-based trucking companies. I suggest that this applies as much to the smaller communities between major cities as it does to the smaller business operations.

The irony of deregulation is that by opening the doors to unregulated competition, it promotes concentration. In the period following the passage of the Motor Carrier Act in 1980 in the United States, virtually anyone applying for an entry trucking permit received one, I presume as long as they were fit, willing and able. By 1983 there were some 11,000 new carriers competing, setting off rate wars that chopped truckers income by as much as 30 per cent. Thousands of independent truckers, some of whom had enjoyed a stable and prosperous livelihood prior to deregulation, and others who had invested their life savings to grab a share of free enterprise when they thought they heard opportunity knock in 1980, went out of business.

In 1983 The Wall Street Journal estimated that the numbers dwindled from nearly 300,000 to just 100,000 since the late 1970s. Commenting on the fatal price squeeze faced by the small independent truckers, a spokesman for the American Trucking Association said, "A lot of these guys are living off their depreciation. They are in a going-out-of-business sale and they don't even know it".

Accompanying that increasing concentration of the American trucking industry were significant decreases in rates charged and industry profits brought on by deregulation. In 1983, profit levels were less than 3 per cent industry-wide and falling. Despite the ongoing economic recovery, 29 per cent of trucking companies lost money and an industry association estimated in late 1984 that as much as one carrier in five was a potential bankruptcy candidate. I wonder how many are still around.

Aside from bankruptcies, growing concentration, and industrial profit decline, trucking deregulation in the United States meant a sudden increase in truck terminal closings. In the spring of 1980 Philadelphia had 97 truck terminals in operation. By December, 1983, not even three years later, only 68 terminals remained open. In the same period, Boston, Kansas City, Pittsburgh and Cleveland also suffered a double-digit net percentage decline. In Ohio, every major city except Columbus showed a net decline in terminal closings. With these closings came an accompanying loss of terminal-oriented jobs and a reduction of choice of shippers and fee scales. Of course, this means fewer competitors.

The threat posed by deregulation to the Canadian trucking industry will have several dire consequences for Canadian workers in the industry. Clearly, they will be among the most prominent of losers should this Bill be passed. They would face a career spectre of massive lay-offs, a decline of wages and benefits for those who remain, and a deterioration in their safety and working conditions.

There are an estimated 100,000 people working in the for-hire trucking sector, with approximately 80,000 of those classified as employees, that is, workers belonging to, or eligible to belong to unions. Another 285,000 Canadians work in the private trucking sector, driving or assisting in the driving of goods from companies who own the goods such as Steinburgs or Carling O'Keefe. There are no accurate figures on the degree of unionization among the for-hire trucking sector, but it is estimated to be 60 per cent with the Teamsters, CBRT and GW, and BRAC as the predominant unions.

In the United States, deregulation has created a chaotic industrial relations environment, marked most prominently by the disappearance of hundreds of thousands of good paying jobs. It is estimated that over-all in the industry, between 250,000 and 300,000 union members have lost employment in recent years. Thousands more saw a generation of wage increases and working benefits rolled back as the trucking unions, principally the Teamsters, gave concession after concession back to the companies. The initial cause of this supply side industrial relations was the emergence of a large number of non-union carriers freed of the restrictions of market entry and licence limitations. Since the trucking industry is labour intensive, this influx of lower cost carriers knocked the bottom out of the industry's wage structure and employment figures and the industry has been spiralling ever since.

There may be those in this country who believe that a reduction in wages will mean less cost to move goods. They forget, however, that it is those same unionized, decently paid employees who shop in their stores and buy those consumer goods. If they have less wages they will buy less and ultimately the store owner and operators will lose because of that reduction in earning ability. We should keep this in mind rather than assume that lower wages will mean a better situation nationally.

As a consequence, the ability of the trucking unions to ensure adequate working and living conditions for their members has been drastically sliced in the last five years. Wage reductions, wage freezes for extended periods, and deferral of negotiated payments until future dates are now the order of the day. Because of the wage sensitivity of the deregulated industry, a whipsaw effect has emerged; a wage concession in one company brings another, often deeper demand from another, until the cycle comes back to the initiating company that now demands a new wage concession "to remain competitive".

Other ominous emerging trends in the industry bargaining are reduction in holiday and vacation time, health and welfare and pension concessions, erosion of work jurisdiction rules, the double-breasting of unionized and non-unionized subsidiaries, two-tier wage structures, immensely decreased bargaining strength and vigorous efforts by non-union employees to keep unions out. Industry spokesmen in the U.S. have stated that while a smaller, cheaper and tamer workforce was not the primary reason for their support of deregulation, they now recognize it as its greatest blessing.

Meanwhile, thousands of former trucking employees remain on the outside staring in. Despite the proliferation of small, non-union trucking firms, there are not nearly enough jobs to make a serious dent in the unemployed truckers' ranks, even if most of the unemployed would be willing to take trucking jobs that would pay, in many cases, half their former wages and benefits. The U.S. economy has lost productive workers whose consumption needs and wants are a necessary pre-condition for an economic recovery. We certainly do not want that to happen in Canada.

One feared industrial relations consequence of trucking deregulation will be the forced conversion of company drivers into independent owner-operators. Instead of working under a collective agreement with a set wage, set benefits and an agreed upon work schedule, the driver would have to become a "tiny capitalist", with his own overhead, uncontrolled hours, and unstable income and benefit earnings. Not only does the company lessen its wage and compensation costs, but it also destroys the bargaining strength of the unions by making the driver an employee, but by another name.

Aside from massive employment dislocation, trucking deregulation threatens safety on our highways. As in other industries, the regulation of trucking was designed to ensure that the nation receives safe, adequate and continuous service to all at reasonable rates. The issue of safety is tied to the issues of entry ease, level of competition, adequate wage and benefit levels and rate of return.

It is obvious that with the floodgates of comptetion being opened, the scramble for freightloads will force down the already narrow cost margin. Safety in trucking and elsewhere has historically been one of the most expendable items when profits and productivity are threatened. The erosion of trucking safety is a matter which will be very difficult to police in the absence of a regulated and financially stable industry.

Regardless of safety provisions, deregulation brings hazardous road conditions. Carriers who operate on a shoe-string can hardly attend to matters of new tires or brake overhaul when they live, as a vast majority of them will, from shipment to shipment. Trucking companies will stay on the road longer as companies are forced to cut expenses to the bone. The quality of repair work and upgraded equipment will deteriorate in all but the most profitable of companies. Truckers, particularly small owner operators, will drive longer stretches and carry more overweight cargo as freight rate cutting forces them to accept any available assignment, thus increasing the danger to themselves and those with whom they share the highway.

In northwestern Ontario we have a lot of trucks on the road. They are there for a few reasons. From this side of Kenora, the eastern side of Kenora, through to Shabaqua Corners, which is just west of Thunder Bay, there are alternate routes. We have Highway 11 or Highway 17. From Shabaqua Corners to Systonens Corners, there is a single two-lane highway. From Thunder Bay to Nipigon there is a single two-lane highway. They are funnels, if you like, Madam Speaker, where all of the east-west highway trucking must take place. In addition, on all of those highways running through the north-west we have a very large concentration of pulpwood trucks, large trailer trucks hauling the harvest of our forests to the mills which are becoming located farther and farther away.

Over the last couple of years in northwestern Ontario we have had a number of very serious accidents involving pulp transport trucks. A number of lives of innocent people have been lost.

With deregulation there will be many more trucks on the road. There will be greater movement of goods from east to west by road rather than by rail. There is even talk of bringing grain from Manitoba and Saskatchewan to Thunder Bay by truck. As more of these operators, who have a dream and who are supposedly fit, willing and able, whatever that means, go from load to load or contract to contract, they will be cutting corners.

What price will we have to pay on those northern highways for this increased traffic? What will be the pressures on the provincial Government to add to the road capacity and construct four-lane highways across northern Ontario? There will, of course, be pressure on the federal Government from the provinces to do the same thing. The federal Government is already contributing $50 million to upgrade the Yellowhead route in western Canada. There is no reason they would not be expected to pay to upgrade the Trans-Canada Highway through northern Ontario to standards equivalent to that of the prairies and southern Ontario.

I would like to give an example of the difference between regulating safety and the economics of the trade. New pulp truck trailers come with brakes on every set of wheels. There is one axle which is used only at a time when the truck has a load. I have learned through a constituent that the tendency is that when the brakes on that extra axle wear out they are not replaced. It is not required by regulation but is something the manufacturer adds. The operator uses them as long as they work but once they wear out the company cuts the brake cables and does not replace them. That is not against the law. However, it eliminates the truck's extra stopping power. That is the kind of thing which will happen as the trucking companies get squeezed and squeezed because of what will probably be cutthroat competition. They will check the manual and find that they must replace the brakes every 5,000 miles. You can be assured, Madam Speaker, they will not replace them at 4,000 miles even if they are showing some wear because the rules say "5,000 miles". In fact, I would not be surprised if they would wait for 5,020 miles or 5,100 miles before replacing them. They will squeeze those extra miles out. That is what we are concerned about.

We do not doubt that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) believes that safety is the number one criteria, but we must look at the economic factors. First, in this case it is the provincial inspection staff who will be examining the trucks. Certainly, in northwestern Ontario we do not see them often enough. They are not always out there. There are very few of them. What about the truckers who are taking the gamble? They have the bailiff almost knocking on the door and the bank calling every day. They have Esso or Gulf demanding payment of that $4,000 fuel bill. How far are they going to stretch it? What chances are they going to take in order to stay alive in the trucking business? That is what we are afraid of.

We are not against a redefinition of the rules of the road. We recognize that this is 1987 and we have to re-examine all of the rules under which we operate, all the regulations and all the laws. Laws which were written in 1950 do not necessarily apply to the technology of today. We are not against examination of regulation or against bringing them up to the 21st century.

I can give an example, Madam Speaker. The Minister of Transport has announced that effective, I believe, 1989, all motor vehicles which are produced will have to have running lights. That is a very excellent suggestion. It is guaranteed to save lives on the highway. It will reduce the load in our hospitals. That is the kind of work we would like to see done, not creating chaos, not matching the American system, but doing it the Canadian way. We should do it in a thoughtful and knowledgeable way. We should not rush through it.

I think back to the hearings of the Committee on Transport. We had our three visitations. But, as my colleague, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) mentioned, we did not even visit the villages of Montreal and Toronto. We did not go to northern Ontario. We did not go into Saskatchewan and Alberta. We did not go through various parts of Atlantic Canada, or through the Province of Quebec. Had we been able to do so, we might better understand the trucking industry and how it relates to their economy and infrastructure. Those are the kinds of things we should be doing if we truly want to rewrite the rules. We cannot rely just on a philosophical assumption about free enterprise. Second, we cannot allow the bureaucracy to tell us how our country should be run. Third, and most importantly, we cannot allow the United States of America once again to decide what is going to happen in this country.

I spoke the other day on Bill C-18. That is phase one. Bill C-19 is phase two. We have a third Bill coming up which deals with the marine sector. There are three elements in the deregulation move, but it is all part of the grand strategy to almost turn this into the poverty-stricken state of Canada, designated number 50 or number 51 by a little extra star on the bottom of the American flag. That is what we will become. We may still have our Parliament, but their transportation sector will have taken over. Goods will not move east-west, they will move north-south. Eventually grain will not come from western Canada and go through Thunder Bay and out the St. Lawrence, it will go through the United States. The jobs will be down there because it is cheaper.

Canada is important to us. This Bill, together with Bill C-18, is clearly a threat to our autonomy and our life as we know it. Quite frankly, we will not allow this Bill to go forward easily. We will do what we can to convince the Government that it is misguided in this matter.

A number of my colleagues wish to speak on the issue, whether they are from British Columbia and concerned about the movement of containers, wood, and fibre-based products, or from the Prairies and are concerned about manufactured goods coming in from Ontario, and grain, potash, and food products going out. My colleagues from northern Ontario will wish to speak, because of their concern about what this particular Bill will do to their small communities, and to the people who live there. My friends from southern Ontario will wish to speak, particularly the Members from Windsor who recognize the threat of the domination by the United States, and the impact on trucking. My collegue from Quebec will wish to speak about that province and the impact on its economy, and, of course, those of us who are concerned about Atlantic Canada will be speaking. We believe that this Bill is extremely important. We wish to make it clear to the Government that we are not prepared to accept this change in our lifestyle lying down.

[Translation]

Mr. André Plourde (Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup): I want to thank you, Madam Speaker, for this opportunity to speak to Bill C-19 which concerns the trucking industry. Madam Speaker, like all its economic partners, Canada has now entered a new era in the transportation of goods and passengers, which requires a thorough reform of our approach to this industry. All regions in Canada are experiencing major changes in their economic structure, and because of certain new realities, we shall have to change our working habits and consumption, our production methods and what we produce, as well as the way we deal with to various problems.

Canada has gained access to new markets, which is a good thing, but others, some of which were very important, it has lost to its competitors, who for various reasons have been able to charge lower prices for the same type of products. This fierce struggle with our competitors is forcing Canadian entrepreneurs to rationalize their production operations for goods and services. Every penny saved as a result of this rationalization process will help entrepreneurs charge lower prices for goods and services, which will of course benefit the Canadian consumer. However, the decision to help make our prices more competitive with prices charged by foreign producers and suppliers will also help our country improve its trade balance. We must not forget that a large part of our economy depends on the quality of our exports.

In Quebec, the transportation industry has had a decisive impact on the economy of the province. In addition to its role in developing harbour, railway, highway and aviation facilities to open up new territories in the province, Quebec, if we consider its geographic location and the location of Montreal, also plays an important role in distributing goods to the rest of the country. It is that function, Madam Speaker, that is one of the pillars of Montreal's economic development. Efficient transportation functions are imperative in an economy like that of Quebec which exports over 40 per cent of its production. They are also imperative if Montreal and the Port of Montreal are to continue to play a major role in handling container traffic. This efficiency must therefore be maintained and enhanced if we are to continue our efforts to rebuild the economy of Quebec.

I believe the proposed reforms for the railway freight industry and the trucking sector will, and many Quebecers will agree, help to achieve this goal. The major changes which have occurred in the Canadian transport industry in the last 20 years and the deregulation of the industry in the United States in the early eighties convinced the Government and the majority of the people involved in Canada that an in-depth reform of this vital sector of our economy was required. This reform is being carried out by and for Canadians. This is an important point that I wish to emphasize. Following publication of the statement of principle Freedom to Move in July 1985, numerous and detailed consultations took place under the direction of Transport Canada for one year. These consultations and the hearings held by the Standing Committee of the House on Transport throughout Canada led to the development of the major components of this reform. The Government is aware that it must help Canadian businesses in this rationalization process. That is why, since its coming to power, the Government has implemented a series of major economic reforms with the basic objective of bringing us into the modern era and of providing producers of goods and services, businessmen and all Canadian consumers and workers with better adapted and more modern mechanisms to improve their living and working conditions.

Among the reforms considered essential, there is naturally the National Transportation Act and more specifically the Motor Vehicle Transport Act. Following a series of consultations with provincial Governments and in cooperation with industry representatives, it was agreed that the National Transport Act and the Motor Vehicle Transport Act should be amended and that this reform should be in accordance with the conclusions contained in the document signed by the federal and provincial Transport Ministers on February 27, 1985. Some of the basic elements contained in this agreement in principle suggest amendments to extra-provincial trucking regulations on entry and licenses as well as safety throughout Canada.

Madam Speaker, while our Government is aware that we must make our trucking system more efficient, it is not suggesting reforms which could reduce safety standards on Canadian highways. I repeat that the Government is not proposing reforms which might reduce safety standards on Canadian highways. Far from it, Madam Speaker. The Government wants to increase safety on our roads.

Bill C-19 on Motor Vehicle Transport requires that transport services comply with certain basic fitness criteria if they want to obtain a license to transport their goods from one province to another. These criteria include sufficent insurance coverage and compliance with safety standards.

As I mentioned earlier, Madam Speaker, the present federal Government and the provinces are cooperating closely to develop a national safety code for trucking to establish practical standards governing vehicles, drivers, hours of work, road safety and the requirements for accident reports and bookkeeping which the companies will have to meet. This code will provide a complete series of effective standards dealing with the safe use of commercial vehicles.

Most issues that were examined to develop the safety code are nothing new. In fact, the code contains in a comprehensive form all of the regulatory work already carried out by the provinces.

In the area of trucking or motor vehicule transportation of goods, the reforms proposed in the Bill will have very important repercussions and implications in every region. These reforms, Madam Speaker, will allow trucking operators to be more efficient because they will be allowed greater flexibility.

The new statute will provide for the ability to compete and will allow for a series of new alternatives that are better adapted to the needs of shippers, especially as concerns the price-quality ratio of services. Our reforms will enable agressive, ambitious, and competent trucking firms to handle new markets.

Madam Speaker, the legislation will have a tremendous and positive impact on the price of consumer goods since it will encourage reductions in overall transportation costs.

The competitive position of small and medium sized businesses, that are great users of motor vehicule transportation services, will soon improve significantly.

As I pointed out in my opening remarks, this nation's economic prosperity is directly linked with its ability to compete on international markets.

The cost of transporting goods is a determining viability factor for our larger producers and our major industries, including agriculture and manufacturing.

Giving producers and shippers access to lower transportation rates for their products can only widen their markets and create a significant number of jobs. For instance, Madam Speaker, let me quote a few comparative figures as between Canada and our American neighbours who proceeded with reforms and deregulated trucking in 1980.

From 1980 to 1984, employment within the American lease-trucking industry increased 2 per cent. At home in Canada, over the same period during which we maintained the regulatory status quo, that industry experienced a 17 per cent job decline.

All those factors, Madam Speaker, and many others indicate that this Government was right in bringing forward Bill C-19. In Quebec, especially in my constituency of Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup, and in all of Eastern Quebec, I am sure the trucking industry will meet the challenge of a new kind of competition unfettered by unnecessary regulations, and provide customers with good quality services at competitive rates.

The reform of the regulatory framework of the trucking industry will prove to be an important asset for the preservation and reinforcement of the competitive position of the manufacturing industry in Quebec and in the Montreal region where close to 50 per cent of the economic activity of the province is concentrated.

Madam Speaker, the Progressive Conservative Party considers this legislation not only as the outcome of a global philosophy, but also as an instrument of regional economic development. This Government is committed to the long term economic recovery of Canada. Considering the importance of the trucking industry is in a trade oriented economy, there was no choice for the Government but to review its transportation policies. The National Transportation Act and the Motor Vehicle Transport Act are some of the steps that it will be taking to contribute to and build upon the success of that policy. Both legislations give all the parties concerned an opportunity to achieve that goal.

Madam Speaker, as we deal with this crucial matter involving both the safety and the economic and social welfare of every Canadian citizen, we can all look forward to the benefits to be derived from this essential reform.

Mr. Ouellet: Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup (Mr. Plourde) who supports this Government Bill. I find that very surprising as I am sure that prominent leaders of the trucking industry in Quebec must have sent letters to him as they sent letters to every Member of the Governement and Parliament to let them know that they opposed that Bill. I am referring in particular to a letter sent by Mr. Jacques Alarie, Executive Vice-Chairman of the Trucking Association of Quebec who says that a resolution was passed, and was in fact passed unanimously by that Association urging the Government to draft and implement a national highway safety code before phasing out the present Transportation Act; and secondly, to set out immediately the terms of the fitness test and have it come in force at the same time as the regulatory reform.

What is clear, however, is that the Quebec Trucking Association does not want Bill C-19, as long as the Government is not in a position to agree with its request for a national safety code and a fitness test. The Government says that it has initiated talks with the provinces, but it is a well know fact that some Premiers and even some Transport Ministers are opposed to this Federal Government initiative. Consequently, it is far from certain that the Government will be able to reach an agreement with the provinces regarding a uniform national safety code. Accordingly, it would be wise for the Government not to proceed with this Bill before such a code is ready. I would like to know whether the Hon. Member is aware of this representation from the Quebec Trucking Association.

I would like to find out also whether the Hon. Member knows that the Quebec associated carriers have written to the Government about their opposition to Bill C-19 for the following reasons. I am now quoting the Director General of this association who was telling us: "You probably know that the federal Minister of Transport has introduced a Bill to overhaul the National Transportation Act which will affect the Canadian trucking industry. This measure, once passed, will lower significantly the value of our operating licences. Consequently, I would like to propose a way to offset that loss."

How can the Hon. Member support this Bill which contains no provision protecting the value of the operating licences of trucking companies? Is the Hon. Member unaware of these representations or does he refuse to acknowledge them?

Mr. Plourde: Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) must know, and otherwise perhaps I may inform him, that before going into politics, I worked in the private sector for twenty-eight years, and this is also for the benefit of the other Members chatting in the back. I would like to inform the Hon. Member that in Eastern Quebec, there is a lack of trucking services. The Hon. Member for Papineau referred to the national safety code for trucks and buses. I don't see why Bill C-19 shouldn't be adopted before we go on to the national safety code, because what is the use of adopting a Bill on the national safety code if we don't adopt Bill C-19? Besides, the Hon. Member knows perfectly well that most trucking legislation is provincial, and that trucking licences and shipping rates are a provincial matter.

In fact, Bill C-19 sets out clearly that there will be negotiations with the provinces. I may add for the benefit of the Hon. Member for Papineau that in my experience, and I noticed there was a lot of talk about safety in his speech and in the speech by the New Democratic Member, in my experience in the trucking industry, I have yet to know a single private company, either small or not so small, that has neglected the safety factor in an attempt to make more money. I would say the opposite is true. And I don't think we should give Canadians the impression that Bill C-19 is going to destroy the trucking industry in Canada. In fact, the purpose of this legislation, which will apply across this country, is to deregulate the industry and thus give smaller companies a chance to be licenced for extra-provincial trucking.

Mr. Ouellet: Just a very short supplementary, Madam Speaker. The Hon. Member must know a company in his riding, called Anjou Transport. Before the Hon. Member rose in the House to support this Bill, did he consult with this major company in his riding, and what did the company's management have to say about the Bill?

Mr. Plourde: Here again, Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Papineau has not heard the latest news—Anjou Transport no longer exists. It was bought by Cabano Transport interests a few months ago, and I happen to know these people very well, just as I also know Théberge Transport. The Member for Papineau, you will understand that transport deregulation—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. I would ask the Hon. Member for Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup (Mr. Plourde) to address the Chair rather than his colleague. The Hon. Member has the floor.

Mr. Plourde: Madam Speaker, I apologize for this oversight. As I was about to say, on the contrary in the eastern region of Quebec a number of private transport companies have been bought by others, and this is where Anjou's Cabano group comes into the picture, as the Hon. Member said. Madam Speaker, I was going to say that what has been happening in eastern Quebec in recent years is that people like Cabano Transport have been strong enough to buy at least three other companies and, in my estimation, deregulation through Bill C-19 will make that company even more prosperous.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions. Comments. Debate. The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to take part today in the discussion of Bill C-19. I would like first to commend my colleague, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), for the excellent work he has done on behalf, not only of the Liberal Party but of all Canadians who will benefit from his contribution, and for the way he defended them against this Government who never listens to reason, as you no doubt know. I would like to extend my congratulations to the Hon. Member for Papineau. I know that deep down, certain Conservative Members think exactly as I do, but you know how those Members can be partisan at times, Madam Speaker, and I am sure they would like me to send that message for them, since they cannot do it by themselves.

Earlier today the Hon. Member for Papineau asked another Member in this House whether he had been in touch with the various transportation firms in his constituency. This was really a good question, because it is something we should all do when we want to deal with that matter. I myself, today, had an opportunity to have a talk with GTL, Glengarry Transport Limited, in my constituency of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell.

[English]

Glengary Transport has 2,000 employees. It is by far the largest single employer in the constituency that I represent. Not all of its jobs are located in my riding. As a matter of fact, a larger number of them are located in the City of Montreal than in Glengarry, strangely enough. However, this company with its 2,000 employees has 5,000 different vehicle units. It is the seventh largest trucking company in Canada. It is a family-owned busienss. It is not a multinational or anything like that and belongs to the Lefebvre family of Alexandria. We are very proud of the fact that there is such a company located in the constituency that I represent.

[Translation]

I learned from Mr. Pierre Vaillancourt and Mr. Paul Poirier, of Glengarry Transport, today, that 20 to 30 per cent of all their employees could in the end lose their jobs because of Bill C-19. I do not know if you realize it, Madam Speaker, but that is a lot more jobs than were lost for instance in other industries in the Montreal area and elsewhere, and that gave rise to much concern in this House. When I say 30 per cent of 2,000 employees, this means 600 people, whether in the Montreal area, in Western Canada or in my own constituency. We know how much concern was shown in this House when the Gulf refinery employees for instance lost their jobs and Members from all parties rose to comment. I find it rather interesting today to see that Opposition Members rise, but contrary to what happened on other matters, Government Members keep to their seats today, although they could themselves face job losses in their own constituencies because of this legislation.

[English]

One thing Glengarry Transport told me was that according to that company, large U.S. trucking companies would be able to come into Canada under Bill C-19 and lower prices in a predatory fashion, taking over the largest paying runs and abandoning the rest. Of course, many of the small communities would lose altogether the transportation services they have been using.

I find it interesting to note that four trucking companies in the United States have greater revenue than all of the trucking industry in Canada. Those four companies are Roadway Express Inc., Consolidated Freightways, Yellow Freight System Inc. and United Parcel Service which is commonly known as UPS, and together they are larger than the whole industry in Canada. Needless to say, there is a giant of an industry across the border. Other Hon. Members have referred to it this afternoon and it is not just rhetoric, it is fact and well known to all of us.

[Translation]

Considering the many facts brought to light by several Members of this House, including the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), Madam Speaker, we wonder why the Government is proceeding so quickly with deregulating this industry; one reason is that the Government published earlier this year a working paper and decided right away to translate into a legislation the contents of this document.

[English]

The consultation document to which I referred was known as Freedom to Move. The Government produced this paper and sent it off to a parliamentary committee. The committee met briefly, and I say "briefly" because when dealing with something this important we needed to have hearings in all the regions of Canada. Yet we know that the Provinces of Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, Quebec, Ontario, Saskatchewan and Alberta were not even visited by the parliamentary committee, and neither was most of the North. One really must wonder what difference it would have made to the Government if it had let the committee sit another three or four weeks to ensure that the members of the committee were well apprised of all the regional interests and of the opinions of people living in the provinces I named only moments ago.

It is also interesting that the country just to the south of us has recently experienced deregulation. There are some who claim that that was a great thing, but I am not one of them. Surely if it was so great, we should have been able to see what they were doing. Why could we not spend time seeing what they did there in order to gain whatever benefits there were, if there were any, without copying the mistakes, and we know that there were some of them because no legislation is flawless. What would have been wrong with that idea? No, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) wanted a report immediately so that the Conservative Party could say to those people in Canada who are very conservative that it has freed private enterprise. Conservative Members wanted to be able to say that, even though a very large segment of that so-called free and private-enterprise sector did not want to be freer than it was at the time. However, that was the view of the Government.

Madam Speaker, I do not mean to say that it would be impossible to deregulate in any way the trucking industry in this country. Obviously this industry, like others, is changing and from time to time legislation must be amended to reflect these changes.

I am sure that Members from all parties in this House agree that such changes should be included in the legislation passed by the House of Commons. However, why is it so important to proceed that fast?

I think, Madam Speaker, that the Government has passed those bills or has tried to pass them as quickly as possible in order to satisfy a small number of Conservative supporters who definitely wanted to deregulate whatever they could and then brag about having done so.

[English]

I spoke moments ago about the issue of predatory pricing practices that could occur on the part of U.S. trucking companies after deregulation under Bill C-19. It is interesting to note that when the trucking association presented a brief to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), and others on the committee, it stated:

• (1720)

Competition Act provisions relating to predatory or discriminatory pricing have limited application to transportation.

Bill C-19 is silent on the question of predation, meaning that the Canadian for-hire trucking industry is being thrust into a continental marketplace increasingly dominated by a handful of $billion U.S. general freight carriers with absolutely no safeguards and certainly no assurances that those dominant continental truckers will provide a significant number of jobs in Canada while tapping key industrial markets.

Those are not my words, those are the words of people who are in the business. Those are the words of people the Conservative Party is pretending to defend in this House and elsewhere.

If Conservative Members are indeed such defenders as they pretend to be, why do they not realize that this Bill, along with Bill C-18, must go back to a parliamentary committee so it may receive a thorough airing right across Canada? That way, we will know about its possible ill effects and we will be able to improve the legislation and provide a transition period that will ensure that whatever deregulation occurs is done in such a way that it would not harm the industry, the safety of Canadians and the security of Canadian jobs. Surely that is not too much to ask.

In a recent address, the Minister of State for Transport assured the industry that the Government would not sit idly by and allow the industry to go to hell in a hand-basket should the deregulatory process prove to be overly disruptive. If that is the case, why did the Minister or Ministers of Transport not listen? Sometimes we have two Ministers of Transport and sometimes we have only one, depending on whether or not Ministers of State for Transport happen to get fired that particular week. Whether we have one or two such Ministers, the fact remains that they should be able to listen to those concerns and to practise what they preach. They should be able to adhere to the statements attributed to the Minister of Transport.

In conclusion, this Bill in its present form would result in severe damage to the largest employer in the constituency I represent, Glengarry Transport. It would result inevitably in similar damage to other industries as well. I ask the Government to listen to the advice given to the House by the Hon. Member for Papineau who has been speaking very eloquently to us for the last number of days on both transportation Bills. He has been telling us how it should be done and how to do it the right way the first time without listening to idle rhetoric from Ministers who are telling us not to worry because, if the industry goes to hell in a hand-basket, they will pick up the pieces. That is not what the industry or Canadians want to hear. They want us to do it right the first time. Surely that is what we were sent here to do. That is what I ask of my colleagues in this House and surely it is not an unreasonable request.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments.

Mr. Reid: Madam Speaker, I listened with interest to the comments made by the Hon. Member and I sometimes wonder whose book he is reading. In an earlier day the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), as Minister of Transport, was prepared to introduce legislation almost identical to that proposed in Bill C-19. Indeed, he went so far as to say to the provinces that if they did not agree with regulatory reform we must act unilaterally. Something has to be done about the trucking mess we have in the state of Canada today.

Mr. Robichaud: State?

Mr. Reid: The Minister said it was a necessity. Yet now we hear different from Members opposite. If they feel as strongly as they seem to, would they be kind enough to explain the inconsistency?

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, I must say I found it interesting to hear the Hon. Member inadvertently refer to our country as the state of Canada. There is something symbolic in that. I am sure there must be some kind of a subliminal Republican wish on his part; it is not just that his Leader is acting as though he was the president.

Mr. Rossi: The best Prime Minister the United States ever had.

Mr. Boudria: Yes, that could very well be true.

The Member asked me whose book I am reading from. Contrary to most Conservative Members, I usually try to speak what I have on my mind instead of what some speech writer wrote for me. I was sent here to speak for my constituents.

• (1730)

The Hon. Member asks why we do not want any change. I bring to his attention the question of why it is necessary to deregulate so quickly. The Canadian Trucking Association said it is not simply a question of whether U.S. truckers would have a long-term cash flow advantage over Canadian truckers. If the disparity is as great as it appears, Canadian truckers who are serious about long-term participation in serving an integrated continental transportation market-place will increasingly be persuaded to relocate their international operations in the U.S., operating back into this country using U.S. equipment and U.S. employees. The implications of that scenario go far beyond the immediate interests of truckers. I ask the Hon. Member, if it is so great why does the industry not want it?

Mr. Reid: Madam Speaker, I would just like to point out that the state we live in is a state of democracy and we all have the opportunity to express our opinions and take the pulse of the nation.

It is not so long ago that the former Liberal Minister of Transport said that the trucking industry in this country is in a state of turmoil, using the word "state" in a different context. He said the former Government was somewhat inclined to make an investment in a Canadian trucking industry which was operating in major parts of the U.S. It is a two-way street.

The Hon. Member asks what is our hurry. His former Minister of Transport found the trucking industry in such a mess that we have to act and clear it up as quickly as we can. That is what we have been doing ever since we took over the responsible role of Government.

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, if we hear the word "state" mentioned any more often in this House the statue of Mr. Diefenbaker outside is going to start moving and it will not be in a way complimentary to the Hon. Member.

The Hon. Member talks about a two-way street. I wonder if it ever occurred to him that when there is a two-way street both sides should be the same width. That is certainly not the case right now. Surely he knows that depreciation and operating costs in the American trucking industry are different. Their laws are not the same. Yet we want to create a climate in which we will ask the Canadian industry to compete against that. The industry has said it cannot do it. It will have to move across the border and truck back. Surely that is not what we were sent here to do. We are not here to represent the U.S. trucking industry, we are here to represent the Canadian industry. Not too many U.S. truckers voted for me in the last election. As a matter of fact, not all that many voted against me either. There are none in my riding that vote, or most of them do not.

The point is that we have to go back to the drawing board, as the Hon. Member for Papineau said. Let us have hearings across the country. Let us listen to what the people of Canada want and then do what is right the first time instead of messing it up and picking up the pieces the way the former Minister of State for Transport said in his speech not that long ago.

Mr. Cochrane: Madam Speaker, there are two or three parts to my question and the Hon. Member may want to make a little list. He is fairly good at that so he may want to do it that way. This will be sins of the past Government, although I know he does not list those very well.

In 1982 the U.S. Government issued a moratorium on granting licences to Canadian truckers to operate in the U.S. That action was taken because of a lack of reciprocity between the U.S. and Canada. They were issuing licences to Canadian truckers but we were not doing the same thing for their truckers. The moratorium existed for six months and was only lifted when the Brock-Gotlieb agreement was signed. Under its terms the Liberal Government agreed to provide full, fair and equitable opportunities for truckers from both countries to compete for the carriage of international traffic.

Are the Liberals now saying we should go back on that agreement and again keep Americans from getting Canadian licences? If so, what would they suggest be done when the American Government again issues a moratorium and Canadian truckers lose the American business they are now enjoying? What does he suggest be done about the 2,000 licences which U.S.-based carriers have received since 1982? Surely he is not suggesting that we retroactively revoke those licences and ruin those businesses, not to mention the harm that would come to those Canadian shippers relying on those truckers, or the effect it would have on Canadians employed in the industry.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member may want to leave a minute for a reply.

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, I thought it was a filibuster for a while.

The Hon. Member speaks of the 1982 moratorium and he is quite correct. It was interesting to note that it was lifted when an agreement was signed with the full accord of the trucking industry.

I return to the point that I raised with the Member. If this Bill is so great, why is the industry not in accord? The industry is against it. I am not saying that the status must always remain the same. Of course there must be changes. However, we are going at this too quickly and deregulating too much. We are going about this in the wrong way without consultation with and agreement of the industry. We should send it back to committee as the Member for Papineau suggested so eloquently not too long ago.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, Bill C-19 is an Act respecting motor vehicle transport by extra-provincial undertakings. There are several points I would like to make in this debate. As has been pointed out by several speakers, including our own critic on the matter, there are some very serious flaws in this Bill which were created because the Government cut off hearings and would not listen to many people in our country who have knowledge of the transportation industry. The Government insisted on pushing this Bill into Parliament over the objections and unheard arguments of people who are responsible for many sectors of the transportation industry in Canada, particularly the trucking industry.

If this legislation is enacted, it will dismantle a great deal of the legislation that has been built up through generations of often bitter experience. It may well benefit a few shippers or truckers in the short run. However, in the longer run the result will be chaos, rising costs, and the decline of the Canadian industry. Once the Canadian industry has been destroyed we will be at the mercy of a foreign-owned industry, to a far greater extent than we are now.

This Bill needs substantial reconsideration through consultation with those who work in the industry, such as the Canadian Truckers Association. The first aspect is the rather simplistic, even foolish, emphasis on changing immediately from the concept of public usefulness in a crowded jurisdiction to the principle of reverse onus, that is, that you must prove it is not needed, or anyone who can get in. Eventually, if you have a truck and a licence you will be in business.

Roads are provided at public expense and there is a limit to what can be done on them. In Toronto, roads are being continually repaired and sometimes widened to accommodate the growing traffic. If the traffic is allowed to grow without constraint, governments will not be able to keep up with the repair and maintenance of the roads.

The test of public utility has already failed. About 10 years ago the then Conservative Government of Ontario donated to Greyhound Bus some of the gravy runs which had been built up by a publicly owned corporation, Grey Coach, a subsidiary of the Toronto Transit Corporation. Without having done any of the spadework, Greyhound was allowed to take the runs between Windsor, Toronto, Buffalo and Sudbury. It does not have to serve the towns in between. It cut into the best revenues of Grey Coach, which built those runs through public employment and the fares and taxes of the public over several decades. Grey Coach is still obliged to serve the small towns, at a loss if necessary. Greyhound receives the benefit and Grey Coach pays the cost. Canadian workers, farepayers and taxpayers are subsidizing an American corporation due to the generosity of former Premier William Davis to Greyhound Buslines.

We do not want such foolishness to become widespread, as it would through the passage of this legislation. U.S. truckers would have much greater use of Canadian roads than they now have. U.S. trucks would be able to take goods from Toronto through the United States, re-entering at Halifax, Winnipeg, or Vancouver. They would be able to use roads which cost less to build and maintain because of more favourable weather. They would be able to use fuels which are priced lower than the Government prices fuel in Canada. The taxes which they would have to pay would, in many cases, be lower than the taxes charged by provincial Governments in Canada for the maintenance of roads.

In other words, they can travel more cheaply east and west between Toronto and Winnipeg by using American roads. Canadian truckers are not allowed to do that. This Bill gives American truckers freedom to haul Canadian goods over American roads. Canadian truckers, however, have no corresponding right to use American roads and will be at a disadvantage.

As has been pointed out by those concerned with the industry, domestic and cross-border trucking should be dealt with separately rather than with one quick breath, as is attempted here. We should also study what is happening in the United States before we leap into their pattern. Some of the states are having second thoughts about the wonderful dream of deregulation. Their experience has been a sharply rising accident rate since regulations have been weakened. Several states are considering the reintroduction of regulation to a much greater extent than they thought they would need a few years ago. Before plunging into this, we should study what the Americans are doing. We should invite them to come and tell us what they are doing.

My Party wanted to bring experts from the United States, not to tell us what to do, but to tell us what their experience is. The Government, in a curious burst of anti-Americanism, refused to allow an American transportation expert to come to Canada to tell us what is happening in the United States. This anti-Americanism is very curious from the Government of a Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who professes to be such a close friend of the American President. Many people are wondering what uncomfortable truths would have been presented to the committee if American representatives had been allowed to speak. What fear of the truth caused the Government to shut them out? I believe we must look into that.

There are other matters we should consider before allowing such an open door to American trucks to operate in Canada. There must be some system of monitoring the arrangement, yet nothing adequate is provided for monitoring differences or disputes. Nothing is provided for arbitrating disputes. There is no effective declaration of jurisdictional. The Government is in enough trouble over codfish and the question of jurisdiction in the waters off the east coast of Canada. This question could give us the same kind of jurisdiction squabble all along the border with the United States. Nothing is provided to guard against that.

I want to refer to the matter of safety. I believe Members of the House should take very seriously the experience in the United States as reflected by a recent article written in The New York Times. The dateline is December 6 in Atlanta. It points out that there have been 16 deaths in Atlanta as a result of truck related accidents on the freeways in the metropolitan area, which is up from 12 last year. A one-third increase in truck related deaths is cause for concern and something we should not ignore.

The article by Mr. Schmidt goes on to say:

> Partly as a result of deregulation of the trucking industry in 1980, not only are there more trucks but also much larger trucks plying the nation's roads and interstate highways.

Not only more trucks, but bigger trucks will be coming here if we do not pay attention to the experience. He goes on to say:

> Safety experts also say that as competition has increased among trucking companies and independents, so has the tendency among truckers to save time and money by ignoring speed laws, cutting corners on vehicle maintenance schedules and circumventing rules on the number of hours drivers may work without resting.

Deregulation has killed people in the United States. Last year four people were killed who would not have been killed but for the growth of carelessness, negligence and bad maintenance that was promoted by deregulation. They are not the only ones who were killed, but an example of what has happened. The article goes on to give the national picture. The number of accidents in the United States involving interstate trucks rose 23.4 per cent in 1985, from 31,628 to 39,030. In other words, there were 4,500 more accidents involving trucks. Do we want this rate of increase here, by copying their deregulation and allowing those unmaintained, unsupervised trucks free entry into Canada?

Regulations for the training of drivers vary from state to state. They are now belatedly trying to introduce in Congress regulations that will control the competence and the standards expected of truck drivers across the United States. However, that is not yet in place, and in the meantime many untrained drivers could be bringing these 18-wheel rigs into Canada, onto our roads. We should not allow anything so uncontrolled and foolish as that. In fact, before these general safety regulations are put in place the federal Government should exercise its constitutional authority and, in fact, constitutional obligation for safety on extra provincial travel.

There are a number of safety concerns that the trucking industry has asked us to execute. Experience tells us that we cannot expect a busy industry to operate safely on the roads without some rules enacted and maintained by the Government. The trucking industry is asking for such things as audit and inspection criteria nationwide, a procedure for audit of employers' records and record systems which include operator profile and driver profile. It recommends hours of service regulations. This was mentioned in the story in The New York Times from Atlanta. There is insufficient control over the hours of service. Of course, tired drivers are not as safe as well rested drivers. The industry recommends commercial vehicle maintenance standards. Improperly maintained vehicles will come from the United States until some standards are enacted. There should be roadside vehicle inspection. Some provinces provide such inspection more than others. We need a nation-wide system of roadside vehicle inspection.

There should be a dangerous goods trainer inspection course. Cities like Toronto are being put seriously at risk by the trucking through of dangerous loads such as toxic wastes and explosives. Many types of dangerous loads are being trucked close to if not right through residential areas in Metropolitan Toronto. We need stronger regulations to protect people in those residential areas and others. That was shown last year on the Trans-Canada Highway in western Ontario where there was a spill of quite a poisonous substance because there is not adequate inspection and control over the use of our highways by trucks. That is an obligation of the federal Government and Parliament.

Finally, there is absolutely nothing in the Bill to respond to the urgent demand, not only of the trucking industry but many other industries and Candaians for protection against predatory pricing. These mammoth companies in the United States can raid the trucking industry in Canada, cut prices for a year, run Canadian companies out of business, then charge any price they like because they will have what is, in effect, an oligopoly, with the rule of a few large companies.

There is nothing in this legislation that resembles the anti-dumping legislation for manufacturing. That is necessary because experience in the United States shows that predatory pricing destroys the smaller companies. They are the sorts of companies that the Government says it wants to encourage. Small businesses and new entrepreneurs will be wiped out by the big companies if there is no legislation to protect against predatory pricing, rate cutting, or dumping as it is called in international manufacturing.

Many Canadians want to raise these matters in the Standing Committee on Transport. What they have to say is more urgent than ever because of the experience in the United States. They also want the Government to be open enough to the truth to allow witnesses to come from the United States and tell us their good and bad experience with deregulation and let Canadians judge what we want to copy and what we want to avoid.

Canadians want to say a great deal more to this Parliament. They want improvements in transportation legislation. They want, particularly, proper safety legislation and proper protection of Canadian companies against predation from across the border. It is not true that Canadians do not want change. However, they want this Bill to go back to the Committee for hearings throughout the country so that we can get a truly workable transportation Bill.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

THE ADMINISTRATION—CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES. (B) REQUEST FOR INCLUSION OF PUNITIVE MEASURES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the adjournment debate today. You will no doubt recall, Madam Speaker, the famous words written for us by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in the Throne Speech of October 1:

> My Government shares the expectations of all Canadians that public office holders maintain the highest standards of conduct, especially in the area of conflict of interest. It will be considering proposals which reflect the essential considerations of fairness to the office holder and the protection of the public's interest.

They are very nice words which were said in Parliament some four months ago, but nothing has happened. However, that is not the reason I rise today. On October 10 I asked a question in the House. The reason I asked the question was because I was shocked at what I heard in the Speech from the Throne. Only a year before the Prime Minster, in introducing new conflict of interest guidelines, had said: "These guidelines are the best in the western world". Mind you, that was one of the Prime Minister's more humble days. He could have said they were the best in the galaxy. Be that as it may, if they were the best in the western world, why was it that a year later we needed new guidelines?

I asked that question in the House of Commons.

And I ask the following question: "Mr. Speaker, what is at issue here is the credibility of this Government. It certainly is not a joke. If the Prime Minister is unwilling to answer, will the Deputy Prime Minister give us his assurances that the new rules will include punitive measures so there is no repetition of what we have seen so often is the past coming from this Government"?

I was precisely asking the Government to include in the conflict of interest guideline some punitive measures so that Parliament may be assured of the integrity of the system. And punitive measures are necessary, especially with the Tories in power, Madam Speaker.

[English]

On September 9, 1985, the Prime Minister read from a document in the House, which he tabled with a blue ribbon around it. I am sure you remember the day, Madam Speaker. He said:

> It is a great principle of public administration—I could even say an imperative—that to function effectively the Government and Public Service of a democracy must have the trust and confidence of the public they serve. In order to reinforce that trust, the Government must be able to provide competent management and, above all, to be guided by the highest standards of conduct.

Is that not beautiful, Madam Speaker? He also said:

> We have taken great pains to ensure that the new Code leaves no doubt that the ultimate responsibility for the ethical standards of the federal Government rests with the Cabinet and, more particularly, with me.

He said: "with me", Madam Speaker. He said as well, and perhaps that is where the truth is:

> Many of these steps are long overdue, and heaven knows, this Government has had cause to regret their absence. But now they are in place, or in the process of being put in place, and we can look forward together to the dawning of a new day of trust and confidence.

I ask Hon. Members opposite, is it the new day we saw during the last two weeks when we heard of all the sordid affairs? Clearly, the question I asked in this House on October 10 deserves a real reply, not the insignificant nonsense of the reply of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski).

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to address the matter of conflict of interest which has been raised by my hon. colleague. He will know that the conflict of interest guidelines which were instituted by this Government were far tougher than any guidelines instituted by the previous Liberal administration. For comparison, the Hon. Member might want to discuss the matter with Madam Caplan, a former Minister of the Ontario Legislature or perhaps Mr. Fontaine, another former Minister of the Ontario Legislature who had to resign under rather unfortunate circumstances.

When the Hon. Member was in the Ontario Legislature, he succeeded in holding back the Liberal Party from Government. When he left, they formed the Government in Ontario. I think that should be put into the hopper too. The new guidelines do not ask with what law firm your brother-in-law is employed. Perhaps they should, in view of the events during the recent week.

I wish to discuss the Hon. Member's question and response. These guidelines require all federal government public office holders to review their personal interests, and their activities, within the standards of public interest required by the Code, and to file statements indicating their compliance. In addition, those in the most senior and sensitive positions may be required to divest themselves of the interests which they hold through a sale at arm's length, or to give them over to the controlling management of a trustee through a blind, frozen, or retention trust arrangement.

It is up to public office holders to review their assets, activities, and interests on an annual basis. At such time as a new position is accepted, or there is an important change in their personal situation which might have a possible impact on their duties and obligations under the Code, it is up to them to adhere to the strict guidelines in the Code.

I see nothing in conflict with what the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) has said in his answer, nor do I see any conflict when, in the Speech from the Throne, the Government said it was considering new conflict of interest rules. That is something that is in the interest of all Members of Parliament to look at and see how they can be improved. The standards that are asked of us are being widened considerably.

I say without any hesitation, and as a personal statement, that after 10 years of practising as an accountant, and 10 years of practising law, I had no difficulty during any of those 20 years with conflict of interest guidelines, rules, or laws. They were very clear. I say at the same time, and this also is a personal comment, that the net of conflict of interest guidelines which impact on members of the Opposition, members on the government side, and cabinet Ministers is gradually being widened by the media. In this day and age, it is difficult for any Member of Parliament, or any elected representative at the municipal, provincial, or federal level to determine exactly where that conflict of interest line is. It is not black and white any more. I think that is good, and it is healthy because it is in the public interest.

When the Hon. Member calls for an answer to whether we are considering brand new ones—

Mr. Boudria: Sanctions.

Mr. Lewis: There is a sanction. The ultimate sanction for any member of Cabinet is to be asked to resign. That is the political sanction, and it is a sanction which we all understand. It is not easy to live with if you do not know exactly what the guidelines are. I think all Members of the House endeavour to live within whatever guidelines are laid down, or the guidelines that the public expect of us.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—UNITED STATES MILITARY SUPPORT FOR SALVADORAN GOVERNMENT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, on January 29 I raised a question relating to this Government's policy toward El Salvador and to the refugees from that war-torn country. I have received no answer regarding El Salvador.

On Monday of this week the New York Times reported the death of seven civilians in the village of Laguna Seca. They were killed by the Salvadoran air force carrying out that Government's policy of bombing areas where rebels are said to be. They were using, of course, American equipment.

That bombing is part of a recent strategy change by the Duarte Government, and its American advisers. For many years, former Governments relied on death squads and ground-based attacks to attack the rebels, and anyone else who dared to disagree with the Government.

The human rights violations were so blatant and prevalent that Canada ceased bilateral aid in 1981. The election of Duarte as seen by our Government is supposed to mark a return to democracy and to bring a serious decrease in human rights violations. Therefore Canada resumed bilateral aid last year over the objections of many non-governmental organizations and Canadian churches which have experience in Guatemala.

A delegation of prominent Canadians visited El Salvador in November and December to investigate the current situation and to evaluate the role that Canada is playing through its aid and its political support. The report of that mission for peace was not encouraging. It indicated:

> The present reality in El Salvador stands in sharp contrast to the hopes raised with Duarte's election promises, including the now notorious and bankrupt social pact, with its commitment to dialogue, democratic growth and social economic justice. Instead the Government has refused to proceed with dialogue and negotiations, continued repression, reduced social services, and increased pressure on workers and peasants to pay for the war.

They and many other reliable observers report that human rights violations are again on the rise, with assasinations of civilians, captures, disappearances, and the taking of political prisoners all increasing. They point out that selective and deliberate attacks have taken place on human rights organizations through 1986. They point out that the nature of the conflict has changed.

The civil war is now prosecuted under the United States doctrine of low intensity conflict which, in El Salvador, combines a variety of tactics ranging from physical violence, through psychological violence to individuals, to pervasive social control.

Death squads have been replaced by the bombing of villages in an attempt to dry up the sea in which the guerrillas swim. Thousands and thousands of villagers have been uprooted from their homes by the Salvadoran army and herded into refugee camps near the capital city.

Low intensity warfare uses foreign aid, such as Canada's, as one part of the psychological warfare program. Those who watched the CBC show "Man Alive" last night saw the kind of psychological warfare I am talking about—the army dispensing food in villages to the people who are captive there and not allowed to return to their homes, all to the accompaniment of propaganda and American band music. That is the new kind of human rights violation in El Salvador.

That war and the horrors it brings with it are funded by the Reagan administration which provides El Salvador with the highest per capita aid of any country in the world. That aid pays for both the traditional warfare of planes and bombs and for the new psychological warfare. The U.S. provides military advisers, U.S. piloted reconnaissance flights, and advice on how to market the image of the Duarte Government, but behind that image little has changed.

That is the message brought back by many concerned Canadians visiting that country, but the message that this Government gives is one of approval. That is how this Government helps the United States in its psychological warfare, and that is what the proposal to resume bilateral aid would do.

There is a related issue that concerns us as Canadians. The United States has been deporting Salvadorans who fled their war-torn country at a rate of more than 1,000 per year. Some 3,700 Salvadorans await deportation, with 2,300 being coerced into so-called voluntarily returning and another 1,300 awaiting their sentences.

We Canadians like to think of ourselves as a humanitarian people. We have expressed that time and again through our willingness to aid and to assist those in need. Our programs which are run by non-governmental organizations, churches, and other private groups are second to none in the world. We also like to think of ourselves as a peace-loving people, as people who advance the cause of peace wherever possible. Our Government now has the opportunity to recognize and act on those sentiments to act in accordance with the wishes of the great majority of Canadians who have taken the trouble to inform themselves about what is happening in Central America.

There are three things particularly which Canadians are asking the Government to do. First, and most immediate, it should reaffirm the policy of accepting Salvadorans at the border of the United States when they come to Canada to claim refugee status and of examining them according to our laws to see whether we find they are genuine refugees or whether there is any other humanitarian reason for allowing them to stay in Canada. Rather we should do that than to force them to return to the United States in the hope that the United States might not deport them to El Salvador, a country where many of the deportees from the United States have been murdered, according to American evidence.

Second, the Government should publicly tell its special friends in the American administration that Canadians do not support the American war in Central America, that that war should come to a negotiated end.

Third, the Government should end its aid program to El Salvador, the bilateral program, or better, should direct the aid to the people of El Salvador through Canadian non-governmental organizations with experience in the area under terms and conditions that guarantee that there will be no connection, no control, by the Government of El Salvador, no approval of projects by Duarte and no necessity for people in El Salvador to choose sides in this civil war in order to receive aid.

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, as concerns military support and intervention by a third party in Central America, the position of Canada is well-known not only to Members of this House, but also to the governments of the United States, the Soviet Union and Cuba, as well as the countries of Central America. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has stated, we deplore the fact that East-West disputes have spread to Central America and we do not approve of any country providing weapons to any faction whatsoever in the region.

In the case of El Salvador, Canada does not favour a military solution to the internal conflict. We promote a dialogue between the Salvadorian Government and the insurgents and regret that the expected third series of discussions between the two parties did not take place last September. However, we hope that these meetings can be held in the near future. On the other hand, we do not believe that legitimacy is equally shared between both parties. The Duarte Government received the support of the population in the 1984 elections which are considered by both Canadian and international observers as reflecting the will of the people.

The issue of the American policy on refugees concerns only the United States. As for our own policy, as explained by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard), it is determined by the particular concerns and needs of Canada. In the past, there have been consultations between the two Governments on this issue and there is no doubt that the process will continue.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 o'clock pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6:18 p.m.

TOXIC POLLUTION OF NIAGARA RIVER—CLEAN-UP DECLARATION OF INTENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the Declaration of Intent to cut in half the nine tonnes of toxic chemicals flowing into the Niagara River is a good start. However, there are some disappointing aspects to the declaration.

First, there is no commitment to carry the reduction to the logical and safe objective of zero chemicals in the Niagara River as expressed in Article II of the 1978 Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement. Otherwise, the assumption will be made that we are willing to live with the prospect of 4.5 tonnes of toxic chemicals flowing daily into the Niagara River, Lake Ontario, and the St. Lawrence River, for eternity.

Second, the reference to excavation and destruction of the toxic chemicals in dumps lining the Niagara River is only to "review and report in depth—on the state of the new and emerging technologies".

This is a far cry from what the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) said in the House on May 15, 1986, when, in quoting from the work plan "the basic objective is the extraction and destruction of the toxic contents of the dump sites", as reported at page 13317 of Hansard, he led Canadians to believe that extraction and destruction would be part of the clean-up plan. Clearly the effort to clean up the Niagara River has just started and a lot of political will is necessary to do the job properly.

SPORTS

CANADIAN FIGURE SKATING CHAMPIONSHIPS

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the Nepean Figure Skating Club together with the Cities of Nepean and Ottawa has twice in the last decade hosted the World Figure Skating Championships and Skate Canada. That tradition is continuing this week as they host the Canadian Figure Skating Championships which were officially opened by our Minister of Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek). Some 350 volunteers, mostly from Nepean, have been involved in planning this competition. More important, the 241 competitors have competed in local and regional competitions in order to compete in the Canadian Championships.

This year's contest is the largest figure skating competition ever held in Canada. The winners will go on to represent Canada next month in the World Championships and form the core of next year's national team.

Figure skating and amateur sport are healthy in Canada, thanks to Sports Canada's "Best Ever" program, good coaching, and the dedication and skills of our athletes.

BANKS AND BANKING

CANADIAN IMPERIAL BANK OF COMMERCE—CLOSURE OF OFFICES ON QUEEN CHARLOTTE ISLANDS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, once again one of the big five Canadian banks is turning its back on a small Canadian community. I am shocked to learn that the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce is shutting down its last remaining offices in Sandspit and Queen Charlotte City. The Commerce is the last chartered bank on the Islands. This closure will mean the loss of 11 jobs. For small businesses, loggers, and fishermen it means the elimination of access to a financial service.

The Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce is the third largest bank in Canada. In 1985 the Commerce registered a whopping 28 per cent profit increase, the second best increase among the majors. Last year it had a net income of $341 million taken from the pockets of ordinary Canadians like those who live on the Queen Charlotte Islands.

Members of the Liberal Party and members of the Mulroney Conservatives know how wealthy the Commerce is. It gave those two political Parties $35,000 each in 1985. Surely it can afford to put this money to more productive use by keeping these small branches open.

The scheduled date of withdrawal is Friday, March 13. It is like a rerun of a bad horror movie. I call upon the Commerce to place a moratorium on this closure, to meet with local businessmen, workers and their families. The Bank has made a lot of money from the Islands and it is important that the people get some service in return.

HOUSING

NEED FOR RENTAL ACCOMMODATION

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, last year housing starts exceeded all expectations. In fact home builders had their best year since 1978.

The real estate market, particularly in Metropolitan Toronto, has been red hot. Without the housing boom, however, the rental vacancy rate in Toronto presently at an historic low of 0.1 per cent would be lower yet. With interest rates declining and continued economic growth, housing starts in 1987 should be even better than last year. But we need more rental housing as well. The main responsibility for this, of course, lies with the provincial and municipal Governments. However, our Government could help too if the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) would allow rental apartment builders and owners to write off their depreciation against other income as they could prior to 1970.

WINTERLUDE

TRIBUTE TO ORGANIZERS AND INVITATION TO ATTEND

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to remind Canadians that noon today marks the opening of a festival which takes place in the National Capital here in my riding of Ottawa—Vanier. I am referring to festivities which have gained international recognition, Winterlude, organized by the National Capital Commission on the Rideau Canal and the National Capital Region.

As the scene of a wide variety of events, Winterlude offers all National Capital residents and thousands of tourists an opportunity to enjoy winter activities with their families.

On this occasion, I want to pay homage to the many people who worked tirelessly to prepare everything and make sure all facilities are ready so as to guarantee the full success of this Winterlude festival which will rank among the major attractions of the world, Mr. Speaker. Welcome to Winterlude, have fun!

POLITICAL PARTIES

ELECTION OF NEW LIBERAL PARTY CAUCUS CHAIRMAN

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, it is with sadness and regret that I draw to the attention of the House an unbelievable attitude emerging from the Liberal caucus toward the highly regarded Canadian Jewish community. The election of their new Caucus Chairman prompted within one hour—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair is very hesitant to interrupt any statement of a Member and particularly at this time, but I wonder if the Hon. Member could defer the statement, consider his remarks, and perhaps come back on Monday after having given it some very careful consideration. The Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou.

REQUEST FOR HOME DELIVERY SERVICE

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, at least two months ago, the Conservative Government put a stop to installing the so-called superboxes because they were defective.

They were the second version being installed by Canada Post. Both kinds have caused serious problems, and one fatal accident has already occurred.

On July 31, 1986, a six year old boy, Dany Di Pietro of Saint-Louis-de-Terrebonne in Quebec, was killed when a post box fell on top of him.

Instead of insisting on having the mail delivered to these boxes, the Government should let Canada Post deliver the mail to our homes.

Canada Post lettercarriers don't kill but post boxes do!

FORESTRY

SPRUCE BUDWORM INFESTATION IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, a very serious epidemic is sweeping through the forests of central British Columbia and is quickly approaching a crisis situation. Western spruce budworm infested more than 400,000 hectares of prime forest land in 1986 and will infest another 400,000 hectares this year, with another 1.4 million hectares at risk. The potential loss of the forest resource is frightening, but what is even more astonishing is that with an environmentally safe biological control agent available, the British Columbia Government says that it has no money and cannot afford it.

Twenty-one million dollars are required to control this infestation, and with the British Columbia Government now receiving $400 million from the softwood export tax this year alone, how can that Government claim to have no money to combat this threat to B.C.'s forestry resource? I urge the Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew) to intervene immediately in an attempt to bring the British Columbia Government to its senses and to ensure that hundreds of millions of dollars worth of prime British Columbia timber is protected and preserved.

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, there is good news for the unemployed. Yesterday, in a magnificent show of co-operation, Quebec and Ottawa signed a new agreement on employment programs.

Under the agreement Quebec will receive $139 million annually in federal funding. It will be up to the province to approve or turn down the training plans submitted by companies with 200 employees or less. Our Government will take care of the other manpower training projects. It is expected that annually about 90,000 people can be reached under these agreements. It is good news for the people of Quebec.

The Canadian economy has been showing increasing signs of vigour in the last two years. I am thinking of the drop in interest rates, the drop in unemployment, the improved state of our public finances, and so forth.

Mr. Speaker, I would rather not go back to those black days in 1982-83 when the Liberals were in power in Ottawa and interest rates were up to 23 per cent. It was a disaster.

In fact, Canadians are doing pretty well with the Conservatives!

REFUSAL TO ISSUE STAMP COMMEMORATING BICENTENNIAL OF ANGLICAN EPISCOPATE IN CANADA

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, five years ago officials of the Anglican Church of Canada asked Canada Post to issue a commemorative stamp in 1987 to mark the 200th anniversary of the establishment of the Anglican Episcopate in Canada. That request has been refused. It is beyond comprehension, but I speak of it not only because it has given offence to two million Anglicans in Canada but because it is a loss to all Canadians.

The consecration of Charles Inglis as Bishop of Nova Scotia in 1787 was significant not only to members of his church and the people of his province but to all of us. The establishment of a bishopric to serve the English-speaking settlers of Nova Scotia was a sign that those people had sunk their roots in this country and that they were here to stay. It was the beginning of what Canada is today, two traditions living in friendship side by side. What we are as a country today goes back to what those pioneers established, and it is a shame and a loss that this great event is treated as a non-event by Canada Post.

Some of us in this House worry about protecting Canadian culture against the Americans. Who will protect it against Canada Post?

DEPARTMENT OF EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

VACANCIES ON ADVISORY COUNCIL

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to compliment the members of the Canadian Advisory Council to the Department of Employment and Immigration, established in the late 1970s. There will be seven vacancies on that Council by this fall, and by the end of March only six of the 21 members will be women. There will soon be no native Canadian, no advocate for the disabled, no advocate for non-governmental organizations, and no one from Manitoba or Saskatchewan. In addition, there is now no advocate for older workers.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to see equal representation of men and women on the Council. I would like to see representation of native groups. I would like to see representation of the disabled and non-governmental organizations and older workers.

Mr. Speaker, last year we passed employment equity legislation. It is time we had equity on this very important Council. Now is the time to act.

THE SENATE

CALL FOR REFORM THROUGH ELECTION OF MEMBERS

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately Canadians are losing faith in the Senate as an institution and it is high time we made some changes to the outdated manner in which Senators are selected. If we are going to retain the institution the public should decide who holds those much sought-after positions. The only way to restore public confidence in that body is to elect its members. Moreover, a Senator's term should be limited to six years so a broad range of ideas are represented there.

It is very important that different regions of Canada should be equally represented in the Senate. This would not only make the system more fair but it would appear to be more fair than the present system where western Canadians and Atlantic Canadians particularly all too often feel they are shafted in the decision-making process because they do not have many Members either in this House or in the other place.

Over the next two years I hope we will see more changes in the Senate than we have seen in the last 100 years. Unless we do, the public will soon be demanding the abolition of that body rather than its reform.

NEWSPAPER HEADLINES—RCMP INVESTIGATIONS

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, it is my respectful submission that the Government is in trouble. I came to that conclusion when I was reading the newspapers this morning. The headlines today read as follows: "Fourth friend of PM linked to Oerlikon". "PM accused of intervening in lawsuit". "RCMP conducting criminal probe of influence peddling by Tories". "PM to axe error-prone Ministers, insiders say". "Ottawa trying to make us look bad at constitutional talks, Indians say". "Justice Minister misled Canadians on appointment of Lyon, MP says".

It is quite clear that the Government has lost its moral right to govern. It has been plagued by scandals, ministerial resignations, influence peddling, patronage, and corruption. It is rotten to the core. The RCMP are so busy investigating Conservatives that they have no time to investigate murderers, rapists, and bank robbers.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nunziata: I call on the Conservative Government to set up a special unit of the RCMP exclusively to investigate and prosecute Conservatives.

CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT—MINISTER OF TRANSPORT'S MEETING WITH NEWFOUNDLAND PREMIER

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. By now he knows that the Prime Minister's special emissary, the Minister of Transport, after meeting in St. John's, Newfoundland, this morning with Premier Peckford has concluded that meeting in total disagreement with the Government of Newfoundland. What instructions were given to the Minister of Transport for his meeting with Premier Peckford? Was he given the authority to negotiate with the Government of Newfoundland over the Canada-France fish treaty, or was he merely sent to restate the completely unacceptable federal Government position on the Canada-France fish treaty?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Minister of Transport needs any specific instructions when it comes to looking after the interests of Newfoundland and Atlantic Canada. That principle is deeply ingrained in the Minister of Transport.

• (1120)

I can advise the Hon. Member that a meeting did take place. It was very friendly and frank.

Mr. Broadbent: That's not what I heard.

Mr. Mazankowski: Well, it is not what the Leader of the NDP heard, but I just finished talking to the Minister of Transport and I must take him at his word.

Mr. Broadbent: I talked to the Premier.

Mr. Mazankowski: It was a productive meeting. They thoroughly explored the issues involved. It may please the Hon. Member that there are still some areas of disagreement, but it was a good meeting and there will be further meetings to attempt to resolve this very serious issue which the Government and the Minister of Transport take very seriously.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I am beginning to believe that the Minister of Transport needs a life raft rather than instructions during these negotiations in Newfoundland.

REQUEST FOR APOLOGY TO NEWFOUNDLAND CIVIL SERVANTS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, on behalf of the Government, the Minister of Transport, in collusion with the Minister of Fisheries, issued a statement in a telex suggesting that senior Newfoundland government officials were well aware of all of the negotiations with the French leading up to the Paris meeting. Today,

February 6, two Assistant Deputy Ministers from intergovernmental affairs, a Deputy Minister of Fisheries and a Chief of Staff, all civil servants in the Newfoundland Government, signed statements saying that those allegations by the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans are absolutely untrue.

In the face of the statements signed today which arose out of the friendly meeting this morning between the Minister of Transport and the Premier of Newfoundland, is the Deputy Prime Minister, on behalf of the Government of Canada, now prepared to apologize to the officials who were named and who have responded, and to the Government and people of Newfoundland for the attempt to sow confusion and mislead the Canadian public about the process leading up to this Canada-France treaty?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there has been no more confusion on this issue than that which has flowed from the lips of the Hon. Member and his colleagues across the way. They seem to believe that it is in their best interest to create confusion, fear, and anxiety. They think that is the best way in which to gain cheap political points. The fact is that this is a very serious matter which no political Party should seize for political opportunity. Rather, we have an opportunity, at long last, to resolve an issue which has been outstanding for many, many years.

In case the Hon. Member has not been informed, my information is that the word emanating from France is that they sense that they got the short end of the deal and Canada ended up with the better part of the deal. Therefore, notwithstanding the confusion which emanates from the Hon. Member, the agreement is good in that it will set the stage for further negotiations to resolve this longstanding issue.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, the only confusion which reigns in the House obviously emanates from the lips of the Member who has just spoken. He is obviously trying to communicate a message to the Premier of Newfoundland through his attack on the opposition benches. However, on this issue we are strangely in concert.

ALLOCATION OF NORTHERN COD STOCK QUOTA TO FRENCH VESSELS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, is it not true that the decision to give northern cod to the French as part of a Canada-France fish treaty was made in early December and was meant to be communicated to the Prime Minister of France, Mr. Chirac, during his scheduled, but since cancelled, visit to this country in mid-December? Is it not true that one month before the deal was signed the decision had been made in Cabinet?

Humorously enough, the French are even saying now that this is a bad deal. The Newfoundland Government and all of the Atlantic Premiers are saying that it is a bad deal. The fishermen and their unions are saying it is a bad deal. Everyone involved, except Ottawa, thinks this is a bad deal. Therefore, will the Deputy Prime Minister now do the intelligent thing? Will he cut and run, save some face, and cancel this terrible deal now?

• (1125)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member can shout and scream all that he wants. He certainly will not impress me, any Canadian, or anyone else, I believe.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: He can flash all the documents that he wants. The fact of the matter is that the Canadian Government and the Government of Newfoundland are presently sitting down to work this through. We have alluded to the fact that there has been an inadvertent breakdown in the process. We have acknowledged that and have apologized for it. That is not to suggest for one minute that it is not in Canada's interest and Newfoundland's best interest to resolve this deal once and for all.

BRODILAF-HAMA AFFAIR—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF ROLE OF CHIEF OF STAFF AND PRINCIPAL ADVISER TO PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. This morning's Globe and Mail revealed the existence of an influence peddling scheme linked to the Conservative Party and the Government, particularly in the Brodilaf-Hama case. Can the Deputy Prime Minister advise the House concerning the role played in this case by Bernard Roy, the Prime Minister's Principal Secretary and Chief of Staff?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I too get to see newspapers and this morning I read about the case mentioned by the Hon. Member. No political Party is immune from people who abuse the confidence of others. An investigation is under way. Someone has been condemned and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are continuing their investigation. These measures clearly indicate that as far as the Government is concerned there will be no compromise when it comes to public morality.

INQUIRY WHETHER RCMP INVESTIGATION COVERS CERTAIN PERSONS

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): A supplementary for the Minister. The Government may have read newspapers this morning, but I know that Mr. Bernard Roy of the Prime Minister's Office, Mr. Pierre-Claude Nolin who was a PMO special assistant at the time, Mr. Benoît Roberge and Mrs. Camille Guilbault of the Prime Minister's Office have been aware of this case since March 25, 1986. My question to the Minister: Does the RCMP investigation cover these four individuals and their involvement in the Brodilaf-Hama case?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I have just said that public morality is not negotiable. What we are trying to do as a Government is to dismantle this system which the Liberals set up with consummate artistry over the past twenty years.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT—PREMIER'S POSITION—REQUEST FOR RENEGOTIATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the deal that the Government of Canada has entered into with France on a basis that is totally unacceptable to the people of Newfoundland and which changes the fisheries regulations off the coast of that province. Considering that the Premiers of Canada have decided to hold a meeting early next week, I am informed, to express their opposition to the Government of Canada on this important matter, considering that the people of Newfoundland in particular are opposed to the deal, and, perhaps most relevant of all, considering that the Prime Minister of France said in France today that the Government of France is prepared to renegotiate this sell-out of our resources, will the Government of Canada come to its senses and accept renegotiation?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I presume that the Premiers of the other provinces are obviously interested in this issue. I am sure they would be interested in ascertaining all the facts relevant to this particular case and not the facts as presented by one side. We certainly welcome that.

As far as the statements that the Hon. Member alluded to, respecting the President of France—

Mr. Broadbent: The Prime Minister.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Prime Minister of France. I have not seen the comments and I have not been able to look at them in detail. However, it is rather interesting that France does see this as not a very good deal for it. This would only reaffirm the fact that the agreement that was negotiated was probably a good deal for Canada.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO FRENCH PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to send a copy of the words attributed to the Prime Minister of France to the Deputy Prime Minister. He said, among other things, that this deal is clearly creating unhappiness in Canada. He did indeed say that some people in France were unhappy with it as well, which simply proves that this Government has managed to have a deal which is pleasing no one on either side of the Atlantic, and I now use words which have been attributed to the Prime Minister of France: "We should discuss and find a new arrangement". If the Government of France is now responding to Canadian and other pressure, will the Canadian Government do the right thing and renegotiate this deal in our interests?

• (1130)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pretty soon the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party will come around to the fact that this has not been a bad proposal for Canada. We will just wait, because it would not be the first time that happened.

I can only repeat what I said earlier. The Minister of Transport has met with the Premier of the Province of Newfoundland. They had a very frank and productive meeting. There are a number of areas which are of concern to both the Minister of Transport and the Premier of the Province of Newfoundland. However, I believe quite sincerely that those problems can be resolved. We, as a federal Government, are interested in one thing, resolving a longstanding issue and resolving it in such a way that it will be in the best interests of Newfoundland, the Atlantic region, the fishermen of the Atlantic region, and in the interests of Canada as a whole.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister did have a reputation for reasonableness. I talked to Premier Peckford this morning as well, after the meeting. He said his position has not changed one bit. The people of Newfoundland are still totally opposed to this deal. The Premiers of the provinces are going to have a meeting, which has to be seen as highly exceptional. For the first time in my knowledge of recent political history the Premiers have decided to meet on a single issue about which they are critical, and the Government of France has now said it is prepared to renegotiate. Why this stubbornness and inflexibility on the part of the Government of Canada? Why do you not renegotiate?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is not stubbornness and intransigence on the part of the federal Government.

An Hon. Member: It's stupidity.

Mr. Mazankowski: It is not stupidity, either, as suggested by the Hon. Member sitting over there on his seat rather than standing up and asking a question.

Mr. Young: He's up next.

Mr. Murphy: Wait.

Mr. Mazankowski: I am sure that the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party would certainly not expect the federal Government to walk away and say: "Here it is, take it or leave it". We are working with the Province of Newfoundland and with the industry. The discussions are ongoing. Certainly the fact that the French have taken the position they have will be a matter which will be taken into consideration.

AWARDING OF PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACT IN DRUMMONDVILLE, QUE.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns political influence in the awarding of a Public Works contract to Brodilaf. Can the Deputy Prime Minister explain to this House how, and by what process, the Department of Public Works gave a contract in Drummondville to the Brodilaf Company when the officials inside the Department of Public Works had recommended in favour of someone else? Is it a coincidence that this Brodilaf Company is a well known Conservative firm? And how can this kind of abuse of the taxpayers' dollars be allowed to go on?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I answered part of this question earlier. Since the investigation is now underway, I think it would be inappropriate to comment further on this case.

DEPARTMENT'S RECOMMENDATION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, the fact remains that when the contract in question left the staff of the Department of Public Works there was a recommendation in favour of a company known as Hama Inc., and that is supported by a Department of Justice document I have in my hand. I want to know who changed that recommendation? Was it the former Minister of Public Works, the Hon. Member for Joliette? Was it the President of the Treasury Board? Was it the Prime Minister's Office, or the Prime Minister himself? Who did it?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, we have an established bidding procedure, and we act according to that procedure. I said earlier that the Government has no intention of making any compromise with respect to public morality.

ALLEGED ACTION BY PRIME MINISTER CONCERNING CIVIL LITIGATION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. A Tory fund raiser, Walter Wolf, has alleged under oath that the Prime Minister attempted to persuade him, through his lawyer, Michel Cogger, out of pursuing a $300,000 lawsuit against the Prime Minister's old friend and adviser, Fred Doucet.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister undertake to the House to enquire into these very serious allegations and report back to the House at an early date?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Yes, Mr. Speaker, indeed I will and indeed I have. Once again we have some slight inaccuracies in the reporting of this particular issue. I am advised that Mr. Cogger is not the counsel of record in this particular case. I understand that the counsel for Mr. Wolf is the firm of Lang Michener. While that name may not mean anything to Hon. Members of the House, Mr. Jean Chrétien is associated with that firm.

Mr. Gauthier: Oh, come on.

Some Hon. Members: Cheap shot.

Mr. Mazankowski: I thought Hon. Members were asking questions for the purpose of information and I am giving it to them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: It was not intended, Mr. Speaker, as some Hon. Members suggest, as a "cheap shot". I have a tremendous regard for Mr. Jean Chrétien. He has been an outstanding Member of Parliament and an outstanding lawyer. So on that basis the Hon. Member may want to go back and check his facts and the press story. That is the information which has been given to me as of now.

ALLEGED CONTACT WITH MICHEL COGGER

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister has not answered the fundamental question. Did the Prime Minister in fact contact Michel Cogger and attempt to persuade Michel Cogger that in fact the lawsuit should be dropped, and if the lawsuit against Doucet was not dropped, that Wolf's firm would not get any more money? Is that not in fact what happened?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if there was any such conversation, I would submit to the Hon. Member it was a private matter.

ALLEGED INTERFERENCE BY PRIME MINISTER

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister has just admitted in this House that it is a private matter if the Prime Minister of this country places a phone call in which he makes threats about cutting off government business. I have in my hand a copy of the sworn affidavit which is part of the court record which is tabled not by the lawyer, Michel Cogger, but by the lawyer, Michael Eisen, who is the lawyer in question as reported in the story. I ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether he really believes it is appropriate for the Prime Minister of the country to interfere in a lawsuit and use his muscle as the Prime Minister to try to determine a legal outcome?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is making some very serious allegations. I undertook in the earlier question to look into this matter. I have looked into it in a peripheral way and I indicated to the Hon. Member that Mr. Cogger was not the counsel of record in this particular case.

Mr. Gauthier: We knew that.

Mr. Mazankowski: Another firm is involved. I will attempt to ascertain further facts as I look into the matter.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO LAWYER

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, in the deposition, the lawyer for Mr. Walter Wolf, Mr. Michael Eisen, states:

> The legal action commenced by Mr. Wolf was discussed by Senator Cogger, among other things, with Mr. Mulroney in a telephone conversation in or about October of 1985.

If I have been able to ascertain this, I want to know why the Prime Minister is not here in the House to answer questions—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Ms. Copps: —and why the Deputy Prime Minister is trying to stonewall the Opposition with comments about Jean Chrétien and other people who have nothing to do with this case, and hiding behind the process which the Prime Minister has quite clearly abused?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure, but this is a matter which is before the courts and I think—

Mr. Tobin: You should have told that to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Mazankowski: I think it is a matter of sub judice. But if there is any truth to the very serious allegations which the Hon. Member is perpetrating here, these will be matters which will come out in the court proceedings. I would suspect that that would be the most appropriate place for this to be dealt with.

DISTINCTION BETWEEN PRIVATE AND PUBLIC BUSINESS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister and it is along the same lines. Can he explain to us the division between private business and public business in a matter of this sort which certainly involves government business? How does he draw the line? Canadians consider public business to be extremely important and would not want to trivialize this as a purely private affair. Will he explain that division?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I indicated earlier to the Hon. Member, whose question I took in a serious vein, that I tried to answer it to the very best of my ability on the basis of the information that I had. I did undertake to look into it further. But I remind the Hon. Member that this is a matter that is before the courts. If there are allegations that come before the courts, such as those suggested by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East and others, then that is the place where this issue will be fully aired.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. Yes, it is a matter under investigation. But I think we need to understand the nature of the public involvement in this matter. The Deputy Prime Minister has not answered why, if it is a purely private affair, there is an investigation at all. How will he explain this to Canadians, who want an end to these types of scandals and who want to see Government taking the public's business very seriously? How will he cop out on this being purely private? The public's business is at stake. Will he not concede that?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I will not concede, as the Hon. Member suggests, that this is a scandal. This is a matter that is before the courts. I have given an indication that I will look into it further, and I will report in due course.

ENERGY

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE FOR OIL AND GAS INDUSTRY

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. As he knows, the oil and gas industry faces a great many difficulties. It lost 30,000 jobs last year, as well as the depletion allowance. Unemployment figures this morning indicate that in Calgary the unemployment rate is 12 per cent—a jump of 2 percentage points. Does the Minister of Finance have any measures in mind that will help this industry?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think it is quite well understood on this side of the House that the oil and gas industry has been undergoing some difficulties, particularly as the price of oil has dropped over the past year. I am sure the Hon. Member is aware that the oil price has picked up in the last month or so, which will be of some benefit to the industry if that trend continues into the future. We are continually looking at various options that come before us, and we will continue to do so.

THE ADMINISTRATION

ALLEGED INTERVENTION BY PRIME MINISTER IN CIVIL LITIGATION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

I may remind him that Canadians believe everyone is equal before the law. And that is why this morning they were dumbfounded, as I was, when they heard that the Prime Minister personally intervened in a civil case to protect one of his friends and a member of his staff, Fred Doucet.

I am not satisfied with the Deputy Prime Minister's previous answer that this was a private matter. We are talking about the Prime Minister of Canada.

What I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister concerns Government policy. Is it Government policy that the Prime Minister may personally intervene to change the course of civil litigation between two Canadians? That is the question we would like to see answered.

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there is absolutely no evidence of that at all. It is obvious that Mr. Wolf, with the help of the Hon. Member for Hamilton East, is attempting to have this case aired in the court of public opinion. It is a matter that is before the courts. If there are any complaints about it, they will no doubt be fully aired before the courts.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I may remind the Deputy Prime Minister that the case has not yet reached the courts. In any case, the sub judice convention does not apply, according to Beauchesne's, Citation 337 on page 118.

To get back to the Deputy Prime Minister, I would like to ask him quite simply: Is it Government policy that from now on, the politician with the highest position in the country, namely our Prime Minister, may intervene at will in civil cases involving citizens of this country, to protect friends or members of his staff? Is that a new Government policy? Yes or no?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I thought I answered that question. There is no clear and direct evidence of the intervention of which the Hon. Member speaks. If there are any complaints—

Mr. Nunziata: There is a sworn statement under oath.

Mr. Mazankowski: If there are any complaints, such as the Hon. Member suggests, they will be fully aired in a court of law.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): What about government policy?

THE PRIVACY OF A CONVERSATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister. A few minutes ago, he suggested that a conversation with the Prime Minister about the bidding process between the federal Government and private companies was a private conversation. It is unusual, to say the least, for the Government to take that position. I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister to clarify the situation right away. Does the Government believe that kind of conversation is in order? Is it an entirely private matter or is it something that concerns the Canadian public?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, that is not what I said at all.

Mr. Broadbent: It is what you said!

Mr. Mazankowski: No. I said "If there was a conversation—". I do not know whether there was a conversation. I do not know what the conversation was about. I would assume that it was a private matter.

CONDUCT OF PUBLIC BUSINESS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, if the Deputy Prime Minister checks the record he will find out that that is not what he said. I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister this. Since we have had all these scandals and since in the press today we had news or allegations about three more possibly serious violations of public morality, when will integrity become the rule of public business for the Government instead of the exception?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it would help a lot if Members opposite stopped their muck-raking, innuendo—

Mr. Fulton: Blame it on us!

Mr. Riis: It's called truth.

Mr. Mazankowski: —and suspicion that are part and parcel of the whole Opposition's attack.

Mr. Riis: What are you covering up?

Mr. Mazankowski: Members of the Opposition are not interested in constructive proposals or in being constructive. They are interested in character assassination, character destruction, muck-raking, innuendo and suspicion. That is what they are interested in.

CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT—REQUEST FOR CANCELLATION

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. It has nothing to do with innuendo or suspicion. In answer to an earlier question posed by the Leader of the New Democratic Party he said that negotiations were still going on with Newfoundland. We know that that is not so. The Premier of Newfoundland—and it takes two to tango—has said that he will not dance to the Government's tune. We have talked to him. In light of that will the Deputy Prime Minister admit that there are no discussions going on with Newfoundland? Will he now, as the honourable man that he is, take this opportunity, in view of overwhelming public opinion across the country, including the Premiers who have agreed to meet, to cancel this odious deal which smells as awful as fish offal?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member is very sincere in his representation. However, I would simply ask him to reconsider the fact that discussions have gone on this morning and will continue to go on with the Government of Newfoundland in an attempt to address the concerns and some of the disagreements that are inherent within the proposal.

The bottom line of the federal Government is to work toward a permanent solution that would be in the best interests of Newfoundland, the Atlantic provinces and, in particular, the fishing industry. That is our commitment. That is what the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Fisheries are mandated to do. I hope that we might have the support of the Hon. Member in trying to achieve that goal.

PUBLIC OPINION FAVOURING CANCELLATION

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, there is no way that they will ever get support for this deal on this side of the House or anywhere in the province or anywhere in the Atlantic area. Once more I ask the Deputy Prime Minister will he now respond to the overwhelming feeling of people in the Atlantic and across the country? Will he listen, on behalf of his Government, and will he now say that he will cancel that deal with the French?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think I answered that question earlier. I do not want to be flippant, but I just simply want to say that the discussions which are going on with the province, and of course the stated comments by the Prime Minister of France, will certainly be matters that will be taken into consideration as we work our way through this issue.

VIA RAIL

REPORTED REMOVAL FROM SERVICE OF PASSENGER CARS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have another matter to raise with the Deputy Prime Minister which, in my opinion, is not only scandalous but incompetent and bad management. The Deputy Prime Minister knows from previous experience the difficulties VIA Rail is having with old, worn out equipment and an insufficient number of cars. One cannot get a reservation in the spring, summer, fall, or Christmas-time because they are full. Would he explain why VIA Rail has ordered 58 of its passenger cars taken out of service—stripped but not to be cannibalized—sold or leased, and eventually to end up in Mexico?

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the question is a good one. I indicate to the Hon. Member, on behalf of the Minister of Transport, that the deal is not going ahead. It is being reviewed. There is an indication, as the Hon. Member knows, that there is a reduced demand for those cars. He is asking, as is the Minister of Transport, why there is a reduced demand for those cars.

When that is investigated, I assure the Hon. Member that if it is incorrect those cars will not be leased to Mexico. I travel VIA Rail, as does the Hon. Member, and I am fully in support of his concern.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I hope that turns out to be correct and that they will not be disposed of. They will require refurbishing until we can get new cars.

ORDERING OF NEW PASSENGER CARS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister who, I believe, sits on the Treasury Board. If he does not, he should, because he had no success with them when he was Minister of Transport. When will VIA Rail be allowed to place an order for at least 150 new rail passenger cars for transcontinental trains? Since we have been receiving announcements from him and previous Ministers for the last eight years, when will it happen so that VIA Rail can operate efficiently and provide better service to the people of Canada?

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, again the representation is a good one. The matter is being considered presently. I can only repeat—

Mr. Benjamin: Every year.

Mr. Kilgour: We restored 21 per cent of the service which was removed by the previous Government. We on this side of the House believe in VIA Rail. The Deputy Prime Minister and members of our caucus travelled from sea to sea looking into the VIA Rail problem. I can assure him that we believe in it and will do our best to make it viable.

CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT—ALLOCATION OF QUOTAS OFF NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Newfoundlanders can take comfort in the fact that Atlantic Canadians and Canadians from coast to coast are supporting their claim that they have been treated unfairly with regard to the Canada-France deal on fish. The Deputy Prime Minister will know that in the Province of Nova Scotia, in an area known as 4VN, the Sydney Bight, that stocks are declining. In fact, the Minister of Fisheries has cut the quota by almost 20 per cent. The Premier of Nova Scotia and the Minister of Fisheries are outraged that 1,200 metric tonnes have now been given to France. Will the Deputy Prime Minister explain to the House why Newfoundlanders and Atlantic Canadians have to take the brunt of the incompetence of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and the Prime Minister? Why?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member would allow me to take that question as notice and have the Minister of Fisheries respond to it when he returns to the House on Monday.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I will accept the Deputy Prime Minister's undertaking. However, on another matter, if the Prime Minister of the country can call to support a friend who is involved in a legal action, surely to God the Deputy Prime Minister—and I ask him—will give an apology to the four individuals who were named by the Minister of Transport—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member rises on a supplementary question, but it would seem to be another subject. I would ask him to raise the matter at another time, when it is the issue of his question.

REQUEST THAT AGREEMENT BE RENEGOTIATED

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the people of Newfoundland, the Government of Newfoundland, the Atlantic Premiers—and now all Premiers in Canada—and the Prime Minister of France have said that this is not a good agreement. The Prime Minister of France says "We have to find another solution". I ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether the Government is not now prepared to recognize that the deal is a bad one for all concerned and to sit down to begin to renegotiate one which is acceptable to the people of Newfoundland.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, that is a similar question which has been asked on two or three different occasions, and I think I have answered it. To state it simply, the Minister of Transport has met with the Premier of the Province of Newfoundland. There will be ongoing meetings and discussions. As I indicated earlier, the comments by France will certainly be taken into consideration as we try to work our way through this issue.

POSSIBLE REQUEST BY PREMIERS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Deputy Prime Minister who said that the question has been asked before. If it is asked by the Premiers of Canada when they meet, will the Government then agree to cancelling the deal and sitting down to negotiate one which is acceptable to the people of Atlantic Canada?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, that is a rather hypothetical question. We certainly do not have any difficulty with the Premiers meeting, but we would certainly hope that the Premiers, when they meet, will ascertain all the facts surrounding this issue. Obviously there are two sides to this issue, and we would certainly be prepared to provide the Premiers with all the information relevant to the background to this deal—how it came about and what are our bottom-line goals and objectives in reaching an agreement over a long-standing issue that other Governments feared to challenge over the years.

LABOUR RELATIONS

WORKER'S PAY CHEQUES—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION CONCERNING CERTAIN DEDUCTIONS MADE AT SOURCE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. On July 7, 1986, Judge John White, a Justice of the Ontario Supreme Court, ruled that under the Rand formula, union dues deducted from each worker's weekly paycheque were to be used exclusively for union business. It is common knowledge that the socialists opposite use these funds to finance the party. It is also a fact that the decision will be appealed. Meanwhile, will the Minister demand that the socialists put in trust the funds belonging to Canadian workers and the deduction of which is being questioned?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that is a very interesting suggestion. I am not sure of the jurisdiction of my Department in that regard, but I will certainly look into it and get back to the Hon. Member.

ALLEGED ACTION OF PRIME MINISTER CONCERNING CIVIL LITIGATION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the conduct of the Prime Minister. I have a transcript of the proceedings of the Examination for Discovery where Mr. Walter Wolf, in referring to Mr. Fred Doucet, said the following under oath: "He went to" the "Prime Minister" to "complain that I took legal action against him."

Q. How do you know that?

A. Because the Prime Minister called Mr. Cogger and gave him shit.

Q.—

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is in some difficulty with the particular question, although the Hon. Member is quoting from a document which is now in the public domain and was clearly referred to in the press this morning. The Chair has a problem. If the evidence from a court case is going to be used extensively as the preamble for a question, it does create some difficulties. I point out also that that is a statement by somebody about something. There has to be some limit, I think, on the extent to which Hon. Members are wont to read the testimony itself. I think the Hon. Member has laid sufficient groundwork for the question. I would ask him to get on with his question.

• (1200)

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, while the Government maintains that the conduct of the Prime Minister is a private matter, we in the Opposition maintain that the Prime Minister's conduct is public in nature.

I would like to put the question again to the Deputy Prime Minister. In view of the evidence given by Mr. Walter Wolf, under oath, would the Deputy Prime Minister not agree that it is improper and inappropriate for the Prime Minister of Canada to intervene in a private civil suit in order to assist a friend of his?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would be very reluctant to take any action on any interpretation placed upon anything by the Hon. Member. I think if he is really honest and serious about this issue, there is clearly no evidence to support the interpretation that he has placed with respect to the involvement of the Prime Minister.

I find it absolutely regrettable, Mr. Speaker, that in a case that is being considered as a civil court case the issue should be heard and considered in the newspapers and on the floor of the House. It seems to me that the most appropriate place for this issue to be resolved is in the courts.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER MAKE PUBLIC STATEMENT

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, this issue goes to the root of the administration of justice in Canada. In view of the statements made by the Deputy Prime Minister and in view of the serious nature of the allegations made by Mr. Wolf under oath, will the Prime Minister today make a public statement to clarify his involvement in this public case?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, what does go to the basic root of the Canadian justice system is the element of fairness and the presumption of innocence until otherwise proven guilty.

TRADE

LUMBER EXPORT CHARGE—USE OF PROCEEDS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade. Would she explain to this House why the $400 million that is to be raised through the export tax for British Columbia is not tied into the federal-provincial reforestation agreement which would require those dollars to be spent on reforestation in British Columbia by law? Surely by December 30 that Minister, above all others, knew in her dealings with the Premier of British Columbia, Mr. Vander Zalm, that he was a snake and unlikely to spend those dollars on reforestation.

Mr. McDermid: You do so well until you get to those cheap shots.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry the Hon. Member diluted the very good point he was making by a rather dismal and atrocious comment. I think if he would rephrase his question in a more parliamentary manner, I could answer it.

Ms. Mitchell: You are not the Speaker, Pat.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must advise Hon. Members that the time allotted for Question Period has expired. It is time to move on.

STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER—AFRICAN VISIT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to address to the Government House Leader on a matter of the business of the House. Some days ago, before the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) returned from his trip to southern Africa, it is my recollection that the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) undertook, on behalf of the Prime Minister, that once he returned he would make a statement to the House. The Prime Minister has been back for several days. He has been in the House and he still has not made a statement. Will this promise be kept or is it to be added to the list of unkept promises that is growing every day?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is true that I gave an indication that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) would be making a statement later this week. It still is the intention to have such a statement. I am sure the Hon. Member appreciates that the Prime Minister has been preoccupied with a number of other matters. I think it was the intention of the Prime Minister to await the return of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). We will certainly be in touch with the representatives of both Parties so that they will have ample notice before such a statement is made.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, for about the fiftieth time, I guess, I have the honour and duty to present a petition from your friends and my friends in Senior Power Inc., people from Regina, Oxbow, Alameda, Redvers, Wawota and Alida and Glen Ewen in Saskatchewan who humbly petition this Parliament that the proposed measure to amend the Patent Act will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs and that the proposals of the federal Government will result in higher costs to the provincial Government drug plans, and they petition the Parliament of Canada to reject these proposals which they believe will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

TRANSPORT—ECONOMIC REGULATORY REFORM

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): I have a further petition, Madam Speaker, from residents of Paddockwood, Christopher Lake, Prince Albert, Spruce Home in Saskatchewan in which they submit that in their opinion transportation is a natural monopoly without economic regulation and that economic regulatory reform or, in other words, deregulation of the dimensions proposed by Bill C-18 will create unnecessary chaos in the transportation industry leading to unnacceptable reductions in safety standards as well as deterioration in the quality, type, frequency of service, and your petitioners humbly pray that the House of Commons will have Bill C-18 withdrawn.

RIDEAU HALL—PUBLIC'S ACCESS TO GROUNDS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, I have the duty and the honour to present some 30 petitions from constituents and from Canadian tourists to the national capital who would like to avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right to present a grievance common to your petitioners. A decision to close Rideau Hall grounds was made by the National Capital Commission, the Department of Public Works, the RCMP and the office of the Governor-General, without prior notice, and the closure of this attractive and tranquil park affects thousands of visitors to the capital from across the country who held Canada's uniquely accessible Rideau Hall as a symbol of the trust, openness and democracy of which Canadians are so justly proud, and area residents from the entire National Capital Region who have used and enjoyed the grounds of Rideau Hall, recognizing the security concerns that prompted the closure decision, cannot accept a blanket closure of the 120 acre park to public access, the undersigned, and there are thousands of them, Madam Speaker, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to open that decision for consultation by a group of citizens representative of the large and growing opposition, in order that a modus vivendi be created that would satisfy both the Government and the public.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by residents of Winnipeg, The Pas, and Flin Flon, Manitoba. The residents of those communities express their opposition to the Government's intent to change the Patent Act related to prescription drugs. They believe this will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs and they believe that it is yet another example of the Canadian Government's concession to the United States at the expense of average Canadians in the free trade negotiations. Therefore, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject this proposal which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I have a petition from a number of Canadians who are praying and calling upon Parliament to reject the proposals to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs since these proposals will increase prescription drug costs for Canadians and they humbly pray that the House of Commons react to their plea.

Mr. Malone: Madam Speaker, the last Hon. Member who put a petition before the House did so as I think it appropriately ought to be done. Those presenting petitions previously have been doing what I believe is not appropriate in the Parliamentary process, that is, they have been using the presenting of petitions as an opportunity for debate and they have been placing within the presenting of a petition a position of argument.

The whole history of Parliament has been that an Hon. Member presenting a petition is to cite its title and a sentence or two about its subject matter and then to resume his or her seat. It has not been to use the process of placing petitions before the House as an opportunity to engage in debate. I think it is only appropriate that that tradition of Parliament be respected.

Mr. Murphy: Madam Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. This is not the first time a member of the Government has tried to tell the Speaker how to allow petitions to be presented. There was an attempt by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) to insist that he see petitions before they were presented in the House. I think the point is that people are allowed to make a short explanation of the petition. None of us have made any attempt to make long, drawn out introductions and we have followed the rules of this House quite well.

Mr. Mazankowski: Madam Speaker, with all due respect to the Hon. Member, never at any time did I insist on seeing all the petitions that were presented. I asked if they were deposited at the Table so one could see them. The Hon. Member is just perverting the facts.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I do not know if the Hon. Member was aiming his remarks at my presenting of petitions today but I took exception to them. Over 1,000 people took the time to sign the petitions I presented and they wanted them presented individually. I presented all 30 of them with names attached at one time. I think it is an unconscionable accusation to make of people who want to use their right to present petitions in the House. I cannot understand it.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) made what I think is a quite justifiable comment. I know all Hon. Members who are presenting petitions do feel quite strongly about those petitions, but I would ask them to keep their presentations short and according to the rules. The Chair can be lenient, but I think, as there are many petitions to be heard today, it would be helpful for the House and for the Chair if the presentations were to be kept very short and close to the rules.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I will attempt to follow the recommendations of my hon. friend from Crowfoot by simply reading the title and two of the sentences in the lengthy petition. It is my pleasure to present, pursuant to Standing Order 106, three petitions, but my remarks will only reflect one of them. The petitions come from Quebec, British Columbia and the Province of Alberta. This particular petition simply says in its title that the petition of the undersigned residents of Canada who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners and in the certain assurance that your Honourable House will therefore provide a remedy, we humbly sheweth, and the first sentence is that the federal Government's proposal to change the Patent Act relating to presecription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. Again, following the advice of my hon. colleague, the second sentence of many is that the proposed measure will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis. The petitioners are simply asking the Government to remove this legislation from the books so that this rise in prescription drug prices will not occur.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I too have a number of petitions all dealing with the same subject. These petitions have been certified correct as to form and content and are signed by residents of such cities as Ottawa, Kent, Orleans, Calgary and the Province of Saskatchewan. The petitioners all exercise their undoubted right to present a petition to Parliament and state that the federal Government's proposal to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers. They petition the House of Commons to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

REQUEST THAT CANADA POST PLAN BE REJECTED

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Madam Speaker, I have three petitions. One is from the Montreal area, one from the town of Sainte-Julienne and the last one from Saint-Jacques. In all three cases, the undersigned petitioners state that Canada Post's new corporate plan is creating two classes of citizens with the installation of permanent super-boxes in urban and rural areas; that closing rural post offices will deprive Canadians of a unique federal presence and reduce this vital service in rural regions; and that the rate increase, especially for second-class mail, will jeopardize the continued distribution of many weekly and regional newspapers, magazines and religious publications.

Wherefore they humbly pray that Parliament reject Canada Post's plan and urge the Corporation to deliver the mail to all Canadian taxpayers, without exception.

LOW-LEVEL FLIGHTS AT ARMED FORCES BASE AT GOOSE BAY

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to present to the House, in conformance with Standing Order 106, a petition certified correct as to form and content from a number of Canadians who are concerned that the present training of pilots of NATO countries in low-level flights at the Canadian Forces Base in Goose Bay, Labrador, disrupts the lives of many native people. Since it is their view that hunting, fishing, tourism and mining could provide more stable, healthy and peaceful employment, the petitioners call upon Parliament to ensure that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) ends all low-level flight training at the Goose Bay Canadian Forces Base and that he ceases negotiations with NATO for the establishment of a larger base there.

DECOMMISSIONING OF LIGHTHOUSES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I have a number of other petitions certified correct, pursuant to Standing Order 106, in form and content. These petitions are almost entirely from British Columbia and concern the proposal to close six West Coast light stations and to reduce the strength to a single light-keeper and an additional five. Many mariners are deeply concerned about the effect this will have on the loss of local weather services and assistance for search and rescue and they are concerned that many of these lighthouses in the remote part of British Columbia will be unmanned. The petitioners call upon Parliament to revoke the Transport Canada directive immediately and request that a complete and thorough public inquiry be held in the Province of British Columbia into the need for manned light stations on the West Coast of Canada.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, I have three petitions, all of which have been certified under Standing Order 106, and they are on the same subject but from different localities. The petitioners appeal to the federal Government to withdraw its proposed changes to the Patent Act. They are very concerned that there will be an increase in drug prices for Canadian consumers and the proposed measure will unfairly hurt Canadians whose health needs require prescription drugs. It will result in higher costs to provincial Government plans and is another example of Canadian Government concessions to the U.S. in the free trade negotiations.

• (1220)

The first petition is from petitioners in Nepean, Ontario, and Squamish, Burnaby, North Vancouver and Vancouver, British Columbia. The second petition on the same subject is from residents of North Vancouver, Delta, Burnaby, Surrey, and Richmond, British Columbia. The third petition is from a number of residents in Newboro, Ontario, who are also very concerned about this Bill and ask that it be withdrawn.

DECOMMISSIONING OF LIGHTHOUSES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Madam Speaker, I have three petitions all of which have been duly certified by the Clerk. The first relates to the elimination of personnel at lighthouse stations on the British Columbia coast. The petitioners point out that the savings from this elimination will be negligible and there will be an increased risk to life as well as a loss of weather services. They call upon Parliament to revoke this directive immediately and request a complete and thorough public inquiry in the Province of British Columbia into the need for these manned lighthouse stations on the West Coast.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): The second petition relates to changes proposed for the Patent Act which will increase the price of prescription drugs, imposing an unfair hardship on seniors and provincial medicare plans and pharmacare plans. They call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices.

LOW-LEVEL FLIGHTS AT ARMED FORCES BASE AT GOOSE BAY

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): The third petition relates to low-level flights at the Goose Bay Labrador Canadian Forces Base which disrupt the way of life of native people there and represent a provocative and aggressive war-fighting action in view of the practising of low-level flights into eastern Europe. They call upon Parliament to ensure that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) end all low-level flight training at that base and cease negotiations with NATO for the establishment of a larger Base there.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, I have two petitions, both duly certified by the Clerk of Petitions as being in the proper form. One is from a number of residents of Sorrento, British Columbia. They oppose the Government's proposal to change the Patent Act which would in their opinion cause an increase in the price of prescription drugs. That would unnecessarily hurt Canadians who live on low incomes and it would also be a further concession to the Americans' point of view on free trade. The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which they believe will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

LOW-LEVEL FLIGHTS AT ARMED FORCES BASE AT GOOSE BAY

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): The other petition is from a number of residents of White Rock, Castlegar, South Slocan, Cache Creek, Trail, New Westminster, Richmond and Kelowna, British Columbia. They are concerned about the present Canadian Forces Base at Goose Bay and its training of NATO pilots for flights into eastern Europe by using the hills of the Goose Bay area for low-level flying practise in a way which disrupts the people there and constitutes a provocative and aggressive war-fighting action. They request Parliament to ensure that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) end all low-level flight training at that Base and cease negotiations with NATO for the establishment of a larger base there.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I have a petition from people in North Vancouver, Burnaby and Delta, British Columbia, in which they ask that the federal government proposal to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs be withdrawn. They say it will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. In other words, they do not want the Government to cave in to the multinational drug lobby and I would like to table this petition.

RIDEAU HALL—PUBLIC'S ACCESS TO GROUNDS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Madam Speaker, I rise today on a serious issue of concern to people from Dorval, Montreal, Toronto, Ottawa and other places. Their concerns relate to the decision to close the Rideau Hall grounds. The decision was made by the National Capital Commission, the Department of Public Works, the RCMP and the office of the Governor General without prior notice. The closure of this attractive and tranquil park affects thousands of visitors to the Capital who hold Canada's unique and accessible Rideau Hall as a symbol of the trust, openness and democracy of which Canada and Canadians are so justly proud. Area residents have used and enjoyed the grounds of Rideau Hall and they recognize the security concerns which prompted the closure decision. However, they cannot accept a blanket closure of the 120-acre park to public access. Therefore they humbly pray and call upon Parliament to open that decision for consultation with a group of citizens representative of the large and growing opposition in order that a modus vivendi be found to satisfy the needs of both sides. I am going to table about 25 petitions in that regard.

REQUEST TO WITHDRAW TARIFF ON ENGLISH LANGUAGE BOOKS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): As you well know, Madam Speaker, I have previously presented my serious concerns about the book tariff and I continue to urge the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to take this into consideration. I now have before me—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. This is the time for petitions. I do not think the Hon. Member wants to be urging the Minister to do something when she should be telling us about the petitions.

Mrs. Finestone: Madam Speaker, it was because he is present in the House and I thought he might listen to this petition. I will direct the petition to you with the hope that other ears of importance are listening.

The Government of Canada has imposed a retaliatory tariff on imported books in the English language which has limited access by Canadians to literature. It is a tax on reading. The tariff has had little negative effect on the publishing industry in the U.S., yet it has penalized Canadian consumers, book publishers, sellers, distributors and Canada's culture. There has been a serious drop in the number of units sold, particularly those of children's books. Rising book prices have placed a strain on the book acquisition programs and policies of our nation's public and specialized libraries. Therefore the undersigned pray and call upon Parliament to rescind this tariff which threatens irreparable harm to the Canadian book industry and compromises federal policy on cultural industries in respect of free trade negotiations. I table about 300 names in that regard.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I wish to table a petition signed by residents from my constituency of Winnipeg North Centre. They indicate that the federal Government's proposal to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drug prices will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers. They call upon Parliament to reject those proposals immediately.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): At this time I wish to bring to the attention of Hon. Members that the time recorded under Bill C-19 in today's projected Order of Business is wrong. The time remaining for debate is six hours and 42 minutes.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties and I think you will find a disposition to pass the following motion unanimously. I move:

That, notwithstanding any Standing Order and further to the order of this House adopted on Friday, January 30, 1987, when the Minister of Finance has completed his presentation of the Budget on Wednesday, February 18, 1987, the House shall immediately revert to introduction of Bills in order to provide for the introduction of the Bill respecting borrowing authority, and the House shall then resume consideration of Ways and Means proceedings No. 10.

Motion agreed to.

ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway) moved:

That the first report of the Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources, presented to the House on Wednesday, November 5, 1986, be concurred in.

He said: Madam Speaker, this being my motion, I would like to speak on it. The first report of the Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources, presented to the House on November 5, 1986, dealt with the consideration by the committee of a number of Order in Council appointments. That was a first because it came under the new rules of Parliament which allow MPs to consider government appointments. The committee was particularly concerned with the appointment to the Atomic Energy Control Board, the National Energy Board, and to the Chair and Presidency of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. I think you have a copy of the report on file.

I have moved to debate the report because I am concerned that the Government has been blocking a debate on the nuclear industry in Canada. The previous Conservative Prime Minister, the Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), promised in 1979 that there would be an inquiry into the nuclear industry. He had perhaps started to move toward that, but was not around long enough to have a national public inquiry. There have been provincial inquiries on the nuclear industry, but never a national inquiry.

The national Government is deeply involved in atomic energy through the Atomic Energy Control Board which regulates the nuclear industry and to which some of the appointments were made. It is involved in Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, the Government Crown corporation which manages and develops atomic energy in Canada, including the Candu reactor and the new facilities 220 meters beneath the Canadian Shield in Manitoba which I had the honour of visiting last week. They are experimenting there with the disposal of high level nuclear waste, meaning those from nuclear reactors. The Government is also involved in Eldorado Nuclear.

I look more dishevelled than usual this morning, Madam Speaker—

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): No, no.

Mr. Waddell: The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) says I look my normal dishevelled myself. I had to get up very early this morning in southern Ontario and drive the beautiful 300 miles from Port Hope, Ontario, to the gentle atmosphere of Question Period in the House of Commons where we considered more scandals.

I was in Port Hope last night to hold an inquiry on behalf of the New Democratic Party into the nuclear industry there. Last night we heard from people who are concerned about the low level waste disposal, that is, all the nuclear waste which was mined in the past through refineries and by Eldorado Nuclear in Port Hope, Ontario. Port Hope is about 120 kilometers east of Toronto. I heard from 13 people representing unions, government bodies, industry and from ordinary people who live there regarding their concerns about nuclear waste. It is a big concern in the country. The Government of Canada is deeply involved in that.

This is an opportunity for the House to consider the appointments which were approved by the Energy, Mines and Resources Committee of the House of Commons. We in the NDP were particularly concerned with one appointment which was not made. It was the very shameful treatment of a prominent Canadian, Ursula Franklin, a distinguished scientist from Toronto. She was appointed to the Atomic Energy Control Board by the former Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The appointment was suddenly revoked.

I see the Hon. Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney), the former Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, in the House. I hope she will take part in this debate. The Hon. Minister is a good friend of mine in many ways. She has done some good things in her career. However, I suggest to her that this will go down as a black mark. Perhaps it was not entirely her fault, but she appointed Ursula Franklin to the Atomic Energy Control Board and then that appointment was revoked because—

Miss Carney: She wouldn't sign the security oath.

Mr. Waddell: No, it was not because she would not sign the secrecy oath, it was because she raised the question of the nature of the secrecy oath. I will not go through this in debate today, but I went through it chapter and verse in letters that were sent.

The fact is that Erik Nielsen, the then Deputy Prime Minister and other people in the atomic energy establishment realized that the Hon. Minister had actually appointed someone who had an open mind about the nuclear industry and who would not be, if you will pardon the expression, a patsy for the atomic energy establishment. It was a good appointment of a distinguished Canadian, a prominent woman scientist, and it was shamefully revoked because Ursula Franklin had asked about the nature of the security oath. She did not say that she would not sign an oath. She did not say that she would not take the oath.

The Government revoked that appointment and the position was open for a year and a half. In the committee report to the House which we are now debating it is indicated that Mr. Robert N. Farvolden was appointed as a member of the Atomic Energy Control Board to replace Miss Franklin.

Quite frankly, I am surprised that more Conservative Members did not take up the cause of the shameful treatment of a prominent Canadian woman. I thought some female members of the Government would have raised this question, but they let it slip by.

I have just been informed that the appointment of Ursula Franklin was revoked before she even requested clarification of the secrecy oath. That is a serious charge. The Government hid behind the letter she had written asking for that clarification, which means the questions of the secrecy provision was a red herring.

Atomic Energy of Canada is very secretive because it was established after the war when we were developing nuclear weapons. The law was set up during the cold war in the 1950s, which means the industry was associated with weapons. There was also the belief that it was necessary to develop atoms for peace, as President Eisenhower said, so that nuclear technology could be used for peaceful purposes rather than for something as horrific as the bombing of Hiroshima and Nagasaki. That secrecy has bedevilled the industry since its development. Only recently have we begun to see Atomic Energy of Canada become more open. In fact, the Government promised to conduct an inquiry into the nuclear industry. However, since the Government has refused to do so and the Liberal Party is totally committed to nuclear energy while ignoring the environmental implications and other questions about nuclear energy today, the New Democratic Party has conducted its own inquiry.

Let me relate what I have learned in the past few days. I visited Port Hope yesterday, where I learned about low-level nuclear waste. Sweden will phase out its nuclear industry in 40 years. I admit that if we take similar action, we must provide alternate jobs for the workers in the industry. Last night I talked to workers in the industry and heard concerns about safety and future development of the nuclear industry. It is projected that nuclear energy will represent about 13 per cent of the energy use in Canada to the year 2000.

When the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) and myself went to Toronto to hold further hearings, we heard from the Samiid people, who are reindeer herders in Sweden. They indicated that they were initially in favour of nuclear power because they did not want the valleys in central Sweden to be flooded. They supported the construction of reactors in Stockholm, especially, because they had faith in the competency of Sweden's technicians. However, the Sami people said that they even felt better when the Swedes told them that—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair has read the report from the committee and finds it difficult to reconcile what the Hon. Member is saying with what is in the report. Perhaps the Hon. Member could make his remarks pertain more closely to the report. It would be helpful to the Chair.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, I am relating what we heard in our nuclear inquiry to the appointments that deal with the Deputy Minister of Energy, the Atomic Energy Control Board, and Atomic Energy of Canada Limited.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Member may want to keep his comments more relevant to the report.

Mr. Waddell: I am saying that Atomic Energy of Canada and the Atomic Energy Control Board are failing to deal with the nuclear problem in this country. That is why I do not like the appointments and how they were made.

Many of these concerns stem from the Chernobyl incident in the Soviet Union where the reactor melted down. This raised many questions about whether it could happen in Canada. The testimony of the Samiid people is important because they were directly affected. They thought they were safe. When the nuclear cloud from Chernobyl came over central Sweden, it happened to rain and it meant the end of their reindeer herds and perhaps the end of their culture. Many of them told us that they wanted to emigrate to Canada because they could no longer raise reindeer. They also told us that if it had not rained, that nuclear cloud would have continued northwest over Canada. Had it rained over part of Canada's vast territory we would have had a similar problem here. We were not informed of this by the Atomic Energy Control Board.

I asked several questions of the Atomic Energy Control Board, including some of these appointees, during the meeting of the Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources of the House of Commons. I asked if Canada is prepared for such an accident and able to monitor radiation as effectively as Sweden.

Miss Carney: Scare tactics.

Mr. Waddell: The Member says they are scare tactics. They are not scare tactics; the people of Canada are genuinely concerned about Canada's ability to do these things. For instance, are there adequate monitoring stations?

Mr. Kempling: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order, just so the Hon. Member will not get off track. That sort of monitoring is done at the Canada Centre for Inland Waters in Burlington, in my riding. I have seen the studies and they are quite complete and exact. I am sure they are available if the Hon. Member wants them.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member will recognize that that is not a point of order, but a matter of debate. He will have a chance to make his point later.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, it is debate but I appreciate the Hon. Member's information in light of the great interest about this across the country. I should advise him that we heard from scientists in Vancouver who told us that they were not satisfied with some of the monitoring. They indicated, in fact, that they had received information from American sources that the Americans had monitored some radiation discharge that we believe should have been detected at Chalk River but was not. People want to know more about these matters and that is why there should be a nuclear inquiry in Canada, as was promised by the Conservatives.

Mr. Donnelly has been appointed President of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. The fact is that Atomic Energy of Canada is bankrupt. The nuclear industry is having difficulty selling CANDU reactors abroad. In order to keep the industry going, it is becoming more involved in irradiation of food which will be a major issue in Canada in the next two years. It is considering proposals for slowpoke reactors, which are small reactors in northern towns. It is considering proposals for high-level waste disposal, a multimillion industry. Atomic Energy of Canada is pursuing these questions without any public input.

Mr. Benjamin: There is no public policy either.

Mr. Waddell: The policy is being created by AECL, not by the Government. Any time we ask questions we hear, "Well, it's nuclear, It's very secret", and we cannot get all the information. What the Government has to do is face this problem. I will give the Government credit in that many Government Members are prepared to deal with it, unlike the Liberal Party, which would not do so and just poured billions of dollars into the nuclear industry. It even established a cartel, and it was so difficult to get information that the then environment critic of the Conservative Party, later Leader of the Conservative Party, later Prime Minister of Canada, the Hon. Member for Yellowhead himself took a lawsuit against Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. That was one of the origins of the Conservative policy to open up the windows. It opened up this tight little group which was spending billions of dollars in taxpayers' money for a policy which was not really debated and sanctioned.

• (1250)

The question is, does Canada want to phase out nuclear power? Does it want to expand nuclear power? Does it want to get into the disposal of waste from all over the world? Does it want to expand its low-level waste techniques? Does it want to be a world leader in irradiation of food or does it want to reject that? This is a country which rejected developing the nuclear weapon. When the history of the 20th century is written, it will include the fact that Canada chose, after World War II, not to develop the nuclear weapon, even though we could easily, have done so. Instead, we chose to develop atomic energy for peaceful purposes.

I will let you wait for our report, Madam Speaker. If I can put a plug in, it will be out, I believe, in the summer, and I hope the Government will reconsider. I say personally to the Minister that that is a shameful way to treat Ursula Franklin. I hope the Government will consider the matter of opening up the nuclear industry and having an enquiry. The country may decide to go pro-nuclear. Let us not close the doors. Right now we are dealing with secrecy on a policy Canadians have not had a chance to debate. Just appointing these people, with a short report by the Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources, is not enough.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, it was with a great deal of interest I listened to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). He indicated in a variety of ways why he was concerned about this particular reference of the committee, particularly the significance of some of the appointments which have been made to these governing committees. As he so eloquently and adequately pointed out, the fact that the Government is proceeding to make these appointments in the traditional fashion, and the fact that they now come before committee, is a very clear indication that the Government is planning to proceed, in this case, with the ongoing support for nuclear energy in Canada.

While the Hon. Member is perhaps not an expert in the field of nuclear energy cycles, he is very well informed and learned when it comes to these topics and I wonder if he could answer a question? Since the Government, through the discussions the Hon. Member has just presented, is obviously in support of continuation of the nuclear policy presently in place, and continues to support the development of nuclear energy, and since the particular task force which he co-chairs has, I presume, heard many, many expert witnesses, can the Hon. Member share with us any appropriate revelations which would indicate at this point a concern, perhaps, with one of the appointments to which he has been referring in his presentation?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair cannot really understand how talking about an upcoming report can be relevant to the report which is today being debated in the House. The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) is really asking a colleague to answer something which would be totally out of order.

The Chair was quite lenient at the start and let the Hon. Member mention the upcoming report and talk about things which really had nothing to do with the nominations which are being debated in the House. Therefore, I would have to rule that question out of order.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I listened with interest to the remarks of my colleague. I have before me the minutes of the committee which considered appointments of certain individuals, and which are reflected in the first report of the committee. The House will appreciate that the examination of appointments relates to qualifications and the ability to do the job, not Government policy. I think that is the difference there. If the Standing Committee was considering under Standing Order 96(3), which gives it the opportunity to investigate Government policy, that would be fair ball, a fair question and fair comment in the House.

I notice the Hon. Member was in attendance at the committee meeting. I know he is very diligent in his attendance at committee. Since the question before the committee was the qualifications and abilitites of the individuals being examined, could he tell me just what part he took in the debate in committee?

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, the fact is that during the appointments of these persons we have no real say in terms of rejecting them. They go through. I will put it this way. I did not feel it was appropriate for us to attack some of these people. Mr. Donnelly, in his own way, sees himself as serving Canada and AECL.

What I am trying to do in using the report is highlight what I consider to be the shameful treatment of an individual. Mr. Farvolden was made a member of the Atomic Energy Control Board instead of Dr. Ursula Franklin. I am trying to bring out why I feel that is unjust. I think this is the place to do that.

Dr. Franklin was appointed by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse). Her appointment was then yanked after the Cabinet learned she was not a wholehearted proponent of nuclear power. Dr. Franklin is a scientist, an Officer of the Order of Canada and a renowned physician. However, she said publicly that she opposed the construction of the Darlington Nuclear Plant. She also said publicly that she wants to revamp the secrecy provisions of the Atomic Energy Control Act. That is why I talked about those secrecy provisions. Because she said that, she in fact had her appointment revoked. My point is that the Atomic Energy Control Board is supposed to be a watchdog over the nuclear industry. Instead, we have appointed people who are not really going to be watchdogs. They are all proponents, as far as I know, of nuclear energy. They are going to continue the secrecy.

I say to the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) that it is shameful that this appointment was revoked. On April 15, the Minister appointed Dr. Franklin to the Atomic Energy Control Board. On April 22, Dr. Franklin received the Minister's letter. On April 22, Dr. Franklin posted a letter of response suggesting that she would like clarification of the secrecy provisions. She did not refuse to accept the appointment. On April 23, before the Government received her letter, Dr. Franklin was informed by telephone from the Minister's office that the appointment was a mistake. She was informed before the Minister received her letter. On May 29, a letter was sent to Dr. Franklin informing her that her appointment was made in error. The Hon. Member heckled during my speech saying, "We didn't put her on there because she wouldn't agree with the secrecy".

An Hon. Member: That is not true.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): When the House rose for lunch, there were three minutes left for questions and comments. The debate was on the motion of the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

[English]

If there are any questions or comments, there being three minutes left in the time allotted?

Mr. Heap: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) to consider the appointment of Mr. James Donnelly, as one of the people we are reviewing today. He worked previously as an executive with Canadian General Electric and the English Electric Company. His whole experience is in the managing of power plants. In others words, he is completely on one side of the question and he has been appointed as Chief Executive Officer and President. I would ask the Hon. Member to comment on the background of Mr. Donnelly, whether or not he is suitable or otherwise to the present balance of opinion on the Board of Directors of AECL.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, of course there is no balance of opinion on the board, it is all nuclear. If people who are proponents of furthering the nuclear industry, which American commentators have said is an almost bankrupt industry, are appointed to the board of AECL then there will really not be any opposing views, especially when combined with the secrecy provisions associated with the industry. What we will have as a result is an industry that is out of control, an industry which spends government money with little policy, little direction and very little public input.

When we consider Chernobyl, Three Mile Island and the circumstances surrounding the o-rings in the Challenger we see that the technology is not perfect. We have to be careful. The risk with nuclear power is that it is capable of destroying the whole world as a result of an accident. An accident in Toronto could destroy New York as well as Toronto. This is why we in the NDP, and we think Canadians in general, want to see openness in terms of letting some light and opposing views into this industry.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper).

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to address this question today.

Mr. Dick: Do you know what it is?

Mr. Keeper: I already hear a heckler. I guess he heckles to ensure that I am still awake.

Mr. Murphy: He is a cabinet Minister on his way out.

Mr. Keeper: The Hon. Member asks me if I know what the subject is. I do, which is why I am here in the House this afternoon. However, I am surprised that I have been given the opportunity to speak so quickly. I anticipated that there would be a government Member or a member of the Official Opposition Party who would want to speak, but that is not the case.

Obviously we need a more representative group of Canadians to sit on these various boards which deal with the nuclear industry. We have to open up a debate about nuclear power. We have to bring more points of view to bear on the issue. The committees which now exist are largely closed shops. They are made up of people who, by and large, are already committed to the nuclear industry. It is necessary for us to have some people on these boards and committees who will question some of the fundamental assumptions which underlie the nuclear industry.

When nuclear power first became a possibility it held out the promise of cheaper power. It was said that it would be a real blessing to mankind. With the passage of time we have been able to see the problems asso;ci;ated with nuclear energy, and they are immense. It is my view that one of the critical problems we face is how to dispose of nuclear waste. How can we continue the development of nuclear energy without a real solution to the question of what to do with the waste products of nuclear energy?

This question brings me very close to home because research into the storage of nuclear waste is presently being done in Manitoba. However, Manitobans are afraid that this is not just research, but that it will lead to the province being used as a dump for nuclear waste. Citizens have organized themselves into groups which are lobbying the federal and provincial Governments to ensure that Manitoba does not become a dumping ground for nuclear waste. Not only is there a question concerning what to do with nuclear waste, there is the question of finding some technologically feasible way of dealing with waste. The people of Manitoba have been clear in stating that they do not want this waste dumped in their backyards.

During the election campaign the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised that there would be a public inquiry, a public debate, an examination of the whole question of nuclear energy. That is a promise which we want the Government to fulfil. I think it would do it some good if it were to fulfil it. It would do its credibility some good to live up to that promise. We need a full-scale public debate about nuclear energy. For some time my Party has been calling for a royal commission or a public inquiry into nuclear energy. In the absence of one, members of our caucus have been holding hearings across the country to examine the nuclear energy question.

Serious questions have been raised about nuclear energy. We do not know what to do with the wastes produced by it. The fact is that some of these wastes will last for thousands of years, and others for hundreds—they will all certainly last for generations. And here we are piling up more and more of them while we continue along with the development of nuclear energy. We continue to attempt to sell nuclear plants to other countries to keep the industry alive. Yet we still do not know what to do with the wastes from the process.

We need to re-examine the assumptions that underlie our commitment, the commitment of the Government to the development of nuclear energy. To do that the public must have all the scientific information and all the information with regard to the analyses of various policy options which are before Government. We need a process of education for our people because this question touches everyone.

I believe a royal commission would be a good means by which to do it, a royal commission which could visit, let us say, 80 per cent of the population to hear what they have to say. It could hear the opinions of local experts and citizens on nuclear energy. It is time for us as a nation to rethink one of the options facing us in the nuclear energy industry. Clearly the promise of cheap power is no longer realistic.

Do I see you indicating that I have four minutes remaining, Madam Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): What the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) is seeing is the Chair being rather anxious for him to make a link between the report, which is being debated and talks about nominations, and the nuclear industry. The Chair is rather anxious for the Hon. Member to be more relevant to the debate.

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, do I understand that you are asking me to make a link between my comments about the nuclear energy industry and the report before the House?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Right.

Mr. Keeper: I understand the report concerns nominees to various boards and committees which oversee the Canadian nuclear energy industry. One of the nominees has been involved with the question of nuclear waste, Mr. Robert N. Farvolden. I will refer to part of his professional background. He was appointed to the technical advisory committee on disposal of high level reactive wastes of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. He was involved in designing the experiment which is ongoing in Manitoba.

There is a practice in the country of appointing people who are of one mind and are sold on the nuclear industry to boards and commissions which oversee that industry. That is not a very healthy way in which to approach nuclear power, because there are very serious questions about nuclear power, about our commitment to its development, and about whether we have the technology or capacity to deal with the negative fall-out from nuclear power such as wastes.

These boards must have a more pluralistic membership and must represent not only the point of view of the industry but the public interest and differing perspectives, such as the perspectives of people who are now beginning to question the economic feasibility of nuclear energy, the threat to our survival of not having adequate technology in place for handling nuclear energy wastes, and the fact that we continue to develop, promote, and sell nuclear energy without solving the problem of what to do with the wastes.

Of course the latter question is vital to Manitoba because there is ongoing research there which could lead to it being used as a dumping ground for nuclear wastes. I am suggesting that the boards must be pluralistic and capable of debating the whole question of nuclear energy. That would be the first step.

The debate must be larger than that. It must involve all Canadian citizens. Clearly these boards and committees would not be adequate for that purpose. The debate should be carried on in the country, not just in the committees. In order to do that we must find an appropriate mechanism, and I suggest that it would be a royal commission, something which my Party has suggested for some time now and something which the Prime Minister promised when he was running for office.

Serious questions have now been raised about the nuclear industry. It no longer lives up to its early promises. When nuclear energy was first popularized it was presented as almost free energy or a cheap solution to our ever-growing needs for energy. That image of nuclear energy has been torn apart. We now know that we have very serious problems when it comes to nuclear energy, not only the impact upon our environment and upon the existence of human life but upon our economy.

We once thought that nuclear energy would be cheap. We are finding that it is expensive. We need a debate around the basic assumptions which underlie the Government's commitment to the development of nuclear energy, to its continued use, and to its promotion. This should not only take place in committees appointed by the Government, but also in the country. An informed public will set a wise direction for the country when it comes to nuclear energy. If we continue to promote and develop nuclear energy in the face of these questions, we gamble with generations to come. We in Manitoba are particularly sensitive to that question at this point because the federal Government, through its agencies, is conducting research on the feasibility of storing such wastes in Manitoba.

When people find that a problem is to be dumped on them, obviously they rise up and raise questions. Those questions are being asked in Manitoba, and I want them to be asked in official forums across the country. Not only the committees which regulate the industry should be able to ask those questions; every Canadian citizen should become educated about nuclear energy. On the basis of an educated population we will be able to set a wise direction for the future of nuclear energy and for the future of our energy policies.

Obviously an outcome could be to moth-ball nuclear energy plants. We could say, "Wait a minute, we must find a way of supplying energy for our industries and households in a manner which is healthy for us in the long term".

I am calling for public education on the issue and for the Government to promote such education. The Government cannot make the decisions it must make without being assured that every Canadian, or just about every Canadian, is informed on the issue.

Other public health programs, such as the ones dealing with people who have heart attacks, come to mind. People can be taught very simple methods by which to revive a person until first aid is available. I have heard that in some American cities as many as one out of every four or five people has been taught techniques for dealing with heart attack victims. In that event the whole environment within which this type of occurrence takes place is changed. It is possible to educate the mass public so that the mass public can change the whole environment of public opinion. I suggest that we need to do that with regard to nuclear energy.

A good first step would be for the Government to appoint watch-dogs to the committees which oversee the nuclear energy industry, people with solid scientific backgrounds who would question some of the basic assumptions underlying that industry. The next step would be to follow it up with a royal commission which could travel across the country. Then Canadians could have their say. Public debate could take place and the public would become more and more educated on the issue. We have started that in our own way with a small task force from our caucus.

I want to thank my colleagues for moving this motion today giving me the opportunity to raise questions in this House about the fact that while the Government continues to be committed to the development of nuclear energy and its promotions, it still has not solved the questions of waste. People in Manitoba do not want the province to be used as a dumping ground for nuclear waste.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments.

Mr. Fennell: I am sure the Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) has a question.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member says he is sure that I have a question. I am prepared to sit down and yield to the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell) so he can pose his question. I will not take up his time.

Mr. Fennell: I would like to hear the Member's question, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Waddell: He would like to hear my question now, Madam Speaker. I trust that the Member will have a question to pose. I thank him for yielding to me and I will pay attention to his question when he raises it.

Is the Hon. Member aware that in the Energy, Mines and Resources Estimates for non-commercial operations of AECL, which includes, as defined, the laboratories at Chalk River and Whiteshell in Manitoba—about which the Member is speaking—there is a budget of $255 million for those facilities? Is he aware also that in the Estimates, there are funds provided, and I quote and ask the Member to note the wording, "To demonstrate safe management of radioactive waste and other byproducts"? It is not to find safe management, not to study whether you can find safe management, but to demonstrate safe management. Isn't this the kind of mindset of the atomic industry? It is sort of spending our money to show that there is safe management. In other words, the atomic industry has made the decision already that there will be safe management. Does the Hon. Member realize it needs to have "safe management" so the industry can build more reactors because it is "safe"? How does the Hon. Member feel about that going on in Manitoba with that kind of money? How does he feel about the fact that the Department of Energy in the United States is involved in Whiteshell and is paying some money to get involved in the research? The American Department of Energy is interested because it is interested in disposing of its plutonium which it uses for the nuclear bomb.

Mr. Baker: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. Could you clarify just what are the parameters of the debate on this report? Indeed, appointments were made to the Atomic Energy Control Board, to the National Energy Board, to the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, in fact, to a considerable number of boards. Am I to take it from your silence while discussions are under way in the House, Madam Speaker, that we are permitted to speak on anything during the debate for which the appointed are responsible? I would like that clarified before the Hon. Member answers the question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair would be in a very difficult situation to wonder out loud whether the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) was or was not in the House when the Chair did, on quite a few occasions since the debate, remind Hon. Members to confine their remarks to the report brought to the attention of the House by the motion of the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). Knowing the limitations of the report itself, the Chair has allowed some leeway to Hon. Members, but I have reminded each and every one on quite a few occasions since this morning to try to keep their comments to the report.

I will allow the Hon. Member to answer the question, as I did earlier with another Member from the same Party, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), but I ask the Members to be careful as some questions would automatically be out of order. Let us be careful. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper).

Mr. Baker: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. I am simply raising the point because a new procedure this year is for standing committees to examine appointments of senior positions. This is new in this Chamber. I still do not understand what are the parameters of the debate. If you were to confine yourself to what the report of the committee was then you could only talk about the persons who are named and were found to be competent in the performance of their duties. I was wondering whether or not, if we are permitted to talk about their duties, what the hon. gentleman is talking about would make the foundation of a good debate which would be perfectly legitimate. I am wondering how narrow we are comfined in this debate. Is it just to the persons and their competence, or is it more or less wide open, leaving us to wait for the Chair to bring us to order?

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I am not a member of this particular committee but in the Government Operations Committee we have examined Order in Council appointments. In that committee if you are to examine a candidate for an Order in Council appointment effectively you are not only allowed to look at what his or her qualifications are, what he or she did in the past, because that tells you something about the person's fitness for the job, but you can also examine what the job is. You have to examine people's attitudes with regard to public policy which fall within the jurisdiction of where a person is to be working. If you are going to do an effective job of examining Order in Council appointments then you have to take, shall I say, a Liberal interpretation of the examination process rather than begin too narrow-minded about it.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair does want to thank the Hon. Member for his comments which I think reflect the kind of leniency which the Chair has given this debate so far. I think that all of the different aspects which the Member mentioned would be allowable in this debate, but I will continue to remind Hon. Members if they go completely outside of what is in the committee report and discuss the subject at large. I think this is the right way of allowing Members to address the problem, instead of interrupting constantly. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper).

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, I will seek to link directly the question which my hon. friend asked with the report. My basic comment about these appointments is that these people are all of one point of view on the nuclear industry. They are gung-ho on it and they push the industry. They want the industry to expand. They do not take the kind of care that I would like to see as a Manitoban about nuclear waste. They make assumptions about the safety of the industry. That is the point my hon. friend was raising when he talked about the expenditures that have already been identified in the department. Those expenditures are there, but not to examine whether we presently have safe ways of disposing of nuclear waste or whether a particular method of disposing of nuclear waste, such as the shaft which is being dug in Manitoba, will be safe. It starts out with the assumption that that is a safe method, and that assumption is dangerous. The connection is this assumption that the nuclear industry is safe, as ensured by this group of people who all share the same point of view.

We need to have a more pluralistic approach to nuclear energy in Canada. We must bring into the debate people like Ursula Franklin who was nominated to this board. The Government withdrew that nomination after it discovered that this person would raise real, fundamental questions about the safety and economic viability of the nuclear energy industry.

We need a broader debate on nuclear energy rather than a more restricted approach. The problem up until now is that the debate has been framed in very narrow terms. We need to have the broadest possible debate about nuclear energy, not only in committee and in the country through public inquiries but also in the House.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, I am waiting to hear the question of the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell) who indicated to me that he would put a question or at least take part in the debate. I am still waiting.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member knows very well that that is not a point of order.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, this is a subject in which I have been interested for a good many years, although I have not had much opportunity to study it intensively. As one of the many members of the public, I am very concerned with the quality of management the public receives through the Atomic Energy Control Board from the people who are appointed to it. I am concerned about the people who have been appointed now as reported to us today.

What is needed is a board that will represent the whole range of public interests. We are dealing here not only with one of the biggest industries in Canada in dollar terms but with one of the most controversial sources of energy in Canada and the world. As has been pointed out today and often before, there was the expectation that nuclear energy would be an unparalleled blessing. We were to grow roses in the Antarctic and provide cheap energy and therefore food for everyone in the world. It has not gone that way and the question is why. Many people believe that it is because, as far as Canada is concerned, the wrong people are put in charge of atomic energy.

The fact is that these appointments look like a continuation of the old boys' network. I say "boys" advisedly. I believe all the members appointed were of the male gender. The only one that I have heard of who was refused happened, whether by coincidence or not, to be of the female gender. This is an old boys' network and the pattern set by previous appointments is being continued. The complexion of the board will not be changed at all in that way.

There is a very urgent need for a balance reflecting public concerns on this board, perhaps more so than on other public boards because of the secrecy associated with it. It is very difficult to get answers to controversial questions from members of this board. This has been experienced by the public generally and by Members of Parliament. Therefore, it is even more important that there be people on the board operating within the rules of secrecy who, because of their past commitment and expressed concerns, we know will raise the questions that we believe have not been raised by past members of the board and, in almost all cases, will not be raised by the people who have been reported to us as being on the board today.

I would like to look at the background of some of these members. Mr. Robert Farvolden was appointed to the position of member, Atomic Energy Control Board. We are told that he has a university background and was appointed to the technical advisory committee on disposal of high-level reactor wastes, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, in 1979 and served in that capacity until 1981. Prior to that, he was head of the groundwater division in the Research Council of Alberta. There is certainly something to be said for the need to have on the board a person who knows something about groundwater because that is one of the most critical questions in the treatment of atomic waste. However, this gentleman was on the board's technical advisory committee for two years and, in that sense, already has a close association with the board. To make him a member of the board now will not do very much in the way of bringing in any new range of thought or questioning.

I turn now to Mr. James Donnelly. There is a prize catch. Mr. Donnelly held executive positions with both General Electric Company of England and the English Electric Company and had experience in nuclear power plants and reactor and turbine generator fields from 1954 to 1974.

Let us go into a little more of the detail we were given. Mr. Donnelly was appointed President of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited on February 1, 1978, and that was a reappointment. He has frequently been in the news for taking very controversial positions regarding the sales of atomic reactors. His appointment is a continuation of the leadership that has brought a great deal of criticism on the board already.

In the past, this gentleman was connected with the nuclear power plant reactor and turbine generator fields in England. He was responsible for project management on the Hinkley Point and Sizewell nuclear power station projects in the United Kingdom. He later became general manager of power station projects for General Electric Corporation and then commercial director for turbine generators.

There is no question that Mr. Donnelly has experience in the field. The problem is that his experience is all on one side. He is on the side of making maximum profits out of nuclear energy. That is what his experience has been both in England and in Canada. I would then go on—

Mr. Edwards: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. As I understand it, the purpose of the reform of Parliament was for individual appointments to be referred to Standing Committees for assessment and review. With respect, I think the Hon. Member is in the wrong place to be carrying out that examination. I think it would be more appropriate if he were to reserve this kind of an expression of opinion for the session of the Standing Committee.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, on the same point of order, perhaps I could comment on this as my Party's energy critic, apropos the previous statement made by the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker).

I think Your Honour is right in the way you have tried to define the parameters of debate in a new situation. We must remember that these are committees of this House which deal with business that could be done in this House. However, we have delegated that business to the committee. The procedure is that the committee gives a report back to the House where it can be challenged. Most of these reports go right through, but sometimes they are challenged as my motion today is doing. That gives other Members who are busy with all sorts of other committees the opportunity to debate it in the House. We have the same power as the committee. It can be argued that we have even more power because this is the House. Therefore the Hon. Member has the right to put forward the kind of debate that would go on in committee. The debate in committee would be limiited a bit and Your Honour has limited this debate a bit. I cannot just go off and talk about my nuclear inquiry, as much as I would like to. However, we can deal with the nature of the appointments in relation to these boards, the kind of people and ideas and how they affect the nuclear industry.

Mr. Edwards: Madam Speaker, I was not suggesting that the House of Commons should be limited in any way. Far from it. My point is parallel to the point that if a Bill is before committee it is not appropriate to debate the contents of that Bill. It is my understanding these appointments have been referred to the appropriate standing committee and thus I think it inappropriate to debate the merits of individual appointees at this time.

Mr. Heap: Point of order, Madam Speaker. It is my understanding that this report has been tabled in Parliament. Therefore it is not before the committee in the sense that Parliament would be restricted in dealing with it. I understand that is why the motion of the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) was in order and also why this debate is taking place. I hope the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Edwards) does not believe it is out of order for us to discuss the report of the committee. I thought that is what the rule provided for.

Mr. Merrithew: You just want to filibuster.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The committee has examined the qualifications of the appointees and reappointees. This report has been presented to the House. The motion presented by the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) is to debate the report of that committee. I must rule that the points touched on by the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) were relevant to the report and what is being debated in the House now. The Hon. Member for Spadina has the floor.

Mr. Heap: Madam Speaker, I certainly hope I am able to continue within the rule of relevancy. For that purpose I wish to turn the Hon. Member's attention to Mr. Robert Després, reappointed Chairman of the Board of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. He has some background which seems quite relevant to the concern of the public about atomic energy. The trouble is it is redundant in the sense he has more or less the same background as so many others. For example, after his academic work he was Comptroller of Quebec Power Company. Of course he understands something about the energy industry but from the very specific point of view of those who want to maximize profits. He was subsequently manager of the Quebec regional branch of the Administration and Trust Company. He held a number of other positions, some relating to finance, and then was appointed Chairman of AECL in 1980. He is also a member of the Board of Directors of many companies, including Falconbridge Copper, Domtar and Norcen Energy. In other words, he is very much a specialist from the point of view of the resource industries operating their enterprises for maximum profit.

Let us move to Mr. Andrew Boyd Gilmour. The first thing mentioned in his background is that he was a transportation and supply analyst with Imperial Oil from 1954 to 1959. Then he was supervisor of statistics in the sales Department of TransCanada PipeLine from 1959 to 1967. He joined the National Energy Board in 1967 as a staff member of the economics branch. He continued there largely in economic matters. Again, he has been in the business of concentrating primarily on how to get the most money out of our energy resources. I am sure he does that in a credible and efficient way and that is why he was appointed. I am sure he also gives very little attention to any considerations which would hinder profit, things such as the rights and needs of labour, and public safety. I am sure in his previous work his attitude was that it is his job to make money for the company and someone else's job to look after safety. Those who have had experience with some of these oil and gas companies and their attitude towards the general public can verify that.

Then we come to Mr. Leonard Good. An economist, he joined Energy, Mines and Resources in 1978 as Director General of Special Studies Branch, economic and policy analysis. He continued in the economic field. He is not in private enterprise but he is in Government and very much in that sector which has had a prime responsibility for developing atomic energy since the early 1940s. He was very much involved in the world-wide dilemma over nuclear energy. Can it really be used for peaceful purposes without also promoting its use for war purposes? Or, is the peaceful use of atomic energy to light the houses and industries of Ontario a by-product of the production of nuclear weapons in the U.S. and other countries, including the Soviet Union which shares some of the uranium produced in Canada? We do not really know what Mr. Good's view is on that. I am sorry it was not possible for me to attend the committee that day to question him, if in fact he was there for questioning. This is my only chance to publicly raise the issue.

Then we come to Mr. Arthur Kroeger, a very well-known person. Educated in the University of Alberta and in Oxford in philosophy, politics and economics, he has a broad education. He joined the Department of External Affairs. Most of his appointments were outside the country. One of them was to India. He was secretary to a trade delegation in Geneva following which he was posted to New Delhi for two years. Those are some of the years I believe when India was developing its nuclear industry with Canadian assistance. That eventually resulted in violation of their formal undertakings, in the production of an atomic device. I do not know whether Mr. Kroeger was trying to prevent proliferation when he served in India or whether he was assisting in proliferation, even unconsciously. Later on he was appointed to Washington, from 1968 to 1971. We know Washington's interest in nuclear energy, primarily for producing about 30,000 nuclear weapons. The rest of the nuclear industry is being allowed to go to pot. It is a financial bust, but nuclear weapons charge right ahead. Then he was named Deputy Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Later on he was Deputy Minister of Transport and then Secretary to the Ministry of State for Economic Development. Mr. Kroeger, although he is associated primarily with Government and not private industry, nevertheless has been a key person over many years in that sector of the Government which has developed the present policy and direction of the atomic energy industry and the AECL in Canada.

This is not good enough. There is no one there representing labour. I do not know whether there were previous appointments. I am willing to be told, but I have not heard of a previous appointment of a labour representative to the board. Yet, atomic energy is not produced without workers. Why does a public board appoint only members of Government or executives of the private profit-making and employing industry? Those are the people who decide to build a plant and hire, or lay people off and shut the plant down. The workers suffer the consequences of those decisions, whether in matters of safety or sudden unemployment and a ghost town. Why is the board allowed to be so lopsided? Among these appointments there are only men and only executives of private companies or the Government which has been working in this matter primarily with private companies over the years. Why do we seek only people who have been active for gain in the resource industries rather than people from other sectors to provide balance? Why are there no critics of the nuclear energy industry? Why not Ursula Franklin?

I know Ursula Franklin. She is very active and has strong academic credentials, and strong credentials as a responsible citizen and public figure in Canada, particularly in the City of Toronto. Why was she so suddenly dismissed after receiving a letter from the former Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources saying how delighted she was to confirm her appointment? What happened to that delight?

This is far too one-sided. These appointments reflect a continuation of the old line we have heard for years. People with academic backgrounds are appointed only if they are on the side of the equation interested in making money out of Canada's resources. People with government background who have been appointed are primarily concerned with making money or developing energy resources, particularly atomic resources.

I believe that we must take a fresh look at these appointments in committee. It would be most useful to re-examine these appointments or, at least, for the committee to propose guidelines to Parliament to ensure that any future appointments would be made with the aim of redressing the extreme imbalance which we now have as a result of these six appointments.

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, my colleague has just commented on the nature of the appointments to the board. The appointments were all of people who are sympathetic to the nuclear industry and have been involved in that industry. He mentioned the withdrawal of the appointment of Ursula Franklin. Ursula Franklin was independent of that industry but has a scientific and technical background. Could my friend comment on the advantages which the Government would have obtained had it followed through with the appointment of Ursula Franklin? What advantage could she have brought to the board which the existing appointees, including Mr. Farvolden, the substitute appointee for Ursula Franklin, could not?

Mr. Heap: Madam Speaker, there are three areas in which Ursula Franklin would have been a useful addition to the board. As indicated in her profile in The Canadian Encyclopedia, she is a physicist and educator born at Munich, Germany. She is a specialist in the structure of metals and alloys. In other words, she is a scientist in her own right. She pioneered the development of archaeometry, which applies the modern techniques of materials analysis to archaeology. She was educated at the Technical University of Berlin and did postdoctoral studies at the Universiy of Toronto. She has helped to develop science policy through the Science Council of Canada and the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council of Canada. That is a good profile. I have not read it all. When I was in high school it was jokingly said that girls cannot do physics. Perhaps the problem was that Ursula Franklin does physics too well. Perhaps some people are afraid of having her show them up.

That brings me to my second point. Ursula Franklin also happens to be a member of the Society of Friends. She is a Quaker, a very strong campaigner for peace, as are many other people in this country, including a number of retired officers of Canada's Armed Forces. Campaigning for peace does not mean that she is absolutely opposed to the use of nuclear energy or that she would be in any way irresponsible in her performance on the board. However, she would raise questions about safety and she would be very difficult to flim-flam because of her scientific competence. She would raise questions about what is being done with the waste material which is sent to the United States and is usable for atomic weapons, notwithstanding Canada's boast of being a non-nuclear nation. I wish that she were on the board to raise those questions, and so do thousands of other Canadians.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, I hope Canadians are not confused about the Atomic Energy Control Board, the regulatory body which overseas the nuclear industry, and Atomic Energy Canada Limited, which does development of the Candu reactor and so on. Therefore, it would be appropriate to have a background in engineering if you are appointed to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. One would expect the president to be an engineer. We can see that. However, in a regulatory body such as the Atomic Energy Control Board we need people who do not have blinkers on.

Although Dr. Farvolden has a competent academic background, the fact is that from 1979 to 1981 he was appointed by Atomic Energy of Canada as a technical adviser to the committee on the disposal of high-level reactor wastes. I know the appointees were nominated by Canadian scientific groups, but the fact is that the man is closely associated with atomic energy research. Now he is to be a regulator. Would the Hon. Member not agree that the atomic energy industry in Canada is not really regulated at all because the regulators are all biased?

Mr. Heap: Madam Speaker, I would have no objection to Dr. Farvolden being on the board, even though he had served with Atomic Energy of Canada, if he were balanced by people of a different point of view. I think it makes sense to have the producers of the atomic material represented. I am not concerned about a producer who wants someone with whom he has worked on the Board. The problem is that they all support one side, whether it is the producer, Atomic Energy of Canada or the Atomic Energy Control Board, the so called regulator. In other words, we are putting the fox in charge of the chickens by asking the same people who want a free hand to be judge in their own cause. That is my objection to this list of appointments.

Mr. Keeper: During the Hon. Member's speech he mentioned Dr. Ursula Franklin and not only pointed out her scientific qualifications but the fact that she is a Quaker. I understood that to mean that the regulation of the nuclear industry not only involves scientific and economic questions but moral and spiritual questions. Given the Hon. Member's professional background, would he care to elaborate on that?

Mr. Heap: Madam Speaker, it is interesting that there are, in fact, not only members of churches but members of the clergy of some churches engaged in the atomic industry in Canada and the United States. Ever since the question was raised over 40 years ago with the bombing of Hiroshima, the churches have been acutely concerned about the impact of the nuclear industry on us. They have debated whether God has given humankind the power to destroy not only ourselves but all life. That question is still being hotly searched among all the major denominations. I believe it would be very valuable to have on the board a representative of a group which, for 300 years, has endured persecution for the sake of a strong stand for peace.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker).

Mr. Waddell: A Liberal dares to speak up.

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member says that a Liberal dares to speak in the debate. The reason I decided to say a few words is that this is a typical New Democratic Party flip-flop. Let us consider the motion the Hon. Member has introduced in the House today. He asks that the report of the Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources, presented to the House on Wednesday, November 5, 1986, be concurred in. What does concurrence mean? It means to agree with the report that was presented to the House on Wednesday, November 5, 1986.

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I want to remind my hon. friend that under the rules one must move concurrence in order for a report to be debated. We cannot move non-concurrence. We do not at all like moving concurrence.

Mr. Baker: Now we are getting to the point. They even admit that they are asking the House to concur in something with which they do not even agree. They are asking us to concur with the committee which has examined the qualifications of the appointees and reappointees and finds them competent to perform their duties in their posts. I wish to disagree with the New Democratic Member who moved the motion. I do not understand how the New Democratic Party can say that every one of these people is competent in the positions to which they have been appointed.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I enjoy the eloquence and rhetoric of my colleague but I must say that it stretches even my patience when he attempts to call black white or white black. The Hon. Member clearly knows our position with regard to these appointments. I wish he would respect that awareness.

Mr. Baker: That is not a point of order, Madam Speaker. Now that the NDP has admitted that it does not really believe in the motion it has moved, I will continue to say a few words about this issue.

Ms. Mitchell: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I also enjoy listening to my hon. colleague because he always speaks with deep wisdom and forethought, not to mention the great entertainment aspect. However, the Hon. Member seems to be confused about this motion. Since you are an expert on the House rules, would you clarify that a motion of concurrence in the House is really a motion of non-concurrence?

Mr. Baker: Madam Speaker, that too is not a point of order. I find it amusing to see Members stand up and say that I do not know too much about the rules or procedures. I have been here longer than they. In fact, I am perhaps the only Member in the House who is a former Chief Law Clerk in a provincial legislature.

An Hon. Member: Which one?

Mr. Baker: It is the legislature in which many decisions had to be made on rules of order. It is the legislature in which many very demonstrative people performed. It is the Newfoundland Legislature.

Of course, there is a rule here that the government benches and opposition benches must be separated by two sword lengths. We had to take that rule literally in the Newfoundland Legislature.

The New Democrats have just pointed out that they moved a motion to concur in the committee report but did not agree with it. They have moved a motion to concur in the competence of these people who they do not really believe are competent at all. I raise this matter because it points out that many of the recent rule changes in the House are very confusing. The examination of these appointees is very confusing to me, and I am sure to any impartial observer. Simply because someone has performed a particular function in a company in India or somewhere else does not mean that the person agrees with the company's philosophy today. In fact, a person's experience in that field may make him better qualified to be in his present position, which may be almost the opposite of what he was doing before. I do not believe it is valid for those Hon. Members to use a person's previous function prior to being appointed by Order in Council as a reason to suggest that perhaps the person is not qualified for the job.

As far as competence is concerned, it has been my experience that these people can be very competent but have very little knowledge. I know most of these appointees as a result of my experience in the House. They are very competent, but all of them told me in a standing committee, at one time or another, that the Come-By-Chance oil refinery would never reopen. They said that Hibernia would be on stream by 1982.

Mr. Heap: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We have had some concern expressed today about the rule of relevance. I really do not understand what the Come-By-Chance refinery has to do with these apointments. I always enjoy the words of the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker). I do not always learn very much, but that is all right, I always enjoy listening to him.

I really do not want to discourage the Hon. Member from continuing with his entertainment. However, I do feel that since he himself expressed some concern about the appropriateness of the motion, and since he is a self-confessed expert on the rules of order, it would be appropriate for him to set an example of relevance.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), I am sure, will agree that the Chair showed a lot of leniency towards the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) when he first started with his motion. The Chair feels confident that, given a chance, the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate will find a link.

Mr. Baker: My time is almost up, Madam Speaker. I listened to the Hon. Members from the New Democratic Party talk about nuclear waste and this sort of thing, and I was trying to figure out what that had to do with the motion. The only connection I could see was that there was mention of the appointment of the Chairman of the Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. and an appointment to the Atomic Energy Control Board. Then I looked down through the list of other people and saw the Deputy Minister and the Associate Deputy Minister of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, and I came to the conclusion that if it were relevant to talk about the duties of someone in Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. or the Atomic Energy Control Board, then it would be relevant to talk about anything at all under the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources because we were appointing the Deputy Minister who is the most important person in that Department. That is why it is perfectly relevant for me to point out that these people who represent the Government of Canada and who appear before standing committees, really run the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources just as much as the politicians. The Minister could have some major policy change usually decided outside this Chamber either through provincial-federal relations or an election promise, but beyond that, the people who run the Department are the Deputy Ministers, the Associate Deputy Ministers and those few people at the top. One of these days we will have a Government, very shortly, I think, which will actually run the Departments. Ministers will actually run their Departments.

What amazes me is the record of some of these very competent people. I seek their opinions on a regular basis on the telephone. I seek their opinion as it relates to the prices of gasoline and oil, trying to understand why the Americans pay less for gasoline than we do in Canada. I try to understand why our oil is refined in refineries in Chicago somewhere, which pay less for it than do our refineries in Canada, and which sell it cheaper in the United States. One of the key issues in the Bill on transportation which is now before the House is that the American truckers—

Mr. Heap: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We are not talking about a Canadian board regulating a Canadian industry. I know that at one time Newfoundland was not part of Canada, but the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate should understand the difference between Canada and the United States. There will be another occasion to talk about the transportation industry and perhaps another occasion to talk about the American oil industry. The Hon. Member should stick to the subject we have at hand today.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) had just seen a non-verbal sign from the Chair begging him to stay closer to the point being discussed today.

Mr. Heap: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The point of the Hon. Member for Spadina is well taken.

Mr. Baker: We should really give an honorary appointment to the hon. gentleman for being the deputy to the deputy to the Deputy Speaker in the House.

It is difficult to separate the United States from Canada these days as far as the present Government is concerned. As I was saying, quite often we telephone these people who have received their appointments from the Government. It seems somewhat of a farce for us to be talking about their appointments in the House, or for a committee to be talking about their appointments. We cannot stop the appointments. We cannot recommend that these people not be appointed, because they are appointed. We cannot recommend that their salaries be cut, because their salaries are set by Order-in-Council. We cannot recommend that someone else take their place, because they are already under contract.

So what option does the committee have? I do not know. Here I correct the hon. gentleman from the New Democratic Party, who is a newcomer to the House of Commons, in relative terms, that it is not the only option to the committee to report that everyone was competent. I am sure that if one sought a ruling, one would come up with a ruling to this effect, if one reads Erskine May or Beauchesne. What that Party could do, and I am sure the Chair would agree, is possibly to move a motion that the committee was unable to come to a determination of the competence of the people referred to the committee. If someone in the committee were to move such a motion, that motion would be perfectly acceptable in any standing committee when these appointments were under consideration. I do not think it has ever been tried. However, I pass this thought along to the New Democratic Party. Instead of coming into this Chamber and saying: "We want you to concur with something we do not believe in"—I am being helpful to those Hon. Members, some of them are only new to the Chamber—there is another way around it. The New Democratic Party could move a motion that the committee does not have enough information to come to a conclusion that these people are competent. The NDP could say that it cannot recommend these appointments to the Government. Again, that sounds sort of crazy because they have already been appointed but, I suppose, in greater honesty in the committees, one could say: "Well, we cannot really recommend that these people are competent for the appointments because we do not have sufficient information". I am sure that would be within the rules of the standing committee.

I see that my time is up, Madam Speaker. I would be pleased to answer any questions from the New Democratic Party, if they wish to put them.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, I have just one short comment. I am amazed that the Hon. Member can spend 20 minutes speaking about one word "concurrence" or "concurs". I am glad we did not give him a sentence or a paragraph.

• (1520)

The Hon. Member said that the New Democratic Party flip-flopped on the issue. While we have the chance to ask a Liberal about his Party's position, I wish to ask him if he is aware of the results of a poll that the Gallup people conducted, people whom politicians follow fairly slavishly. The question asked was the following: "At present, very little of the total electricity used in Canada comes from nuclear power generation. What do you think should happen?" The people asked the question could choose one of the following responses. They were: "Should increase"; "Should not develop more"; "Should stop"; and "Don't know". I would like to know the position of the Hon. Member who represents the Liberal Party of Canada. I ask him the question because I have heard many people say that the Liberals do not have any policies. Should we increase nuclear power? Should we not develop more, or should we stop? Or does the Hon. Member not know? Into which category does the Liberal Party fall?

Some Hon. Members: He doesn't know.

Mr. Baker: Madam Speaker, the hon. gentleman asks us to consider the nuclear power plants in Canada. He asks us to look back to consider where the money to build them came from. He will discover that most of the government contributions were federal government contributions. There is no doubt about that. That was the encouragement the federal Government provided to the industry. No matter what sector of the energy industry we consider there has always been cash to encourage someone to do something, whether it be to explore for oil or gas or to put up a nuclear power plant if they so wished. But there was a choice. If one did not want to go with a nuclear power plant then one could go with hydroelectric power.

In the case of Newfoundland what we did, instead of constructing nuclear power plants, was to put the money toward hydroelectric power. I say "we"; it was a decision taken by a Progressive Conservative Government of about 10 years ago. Some provinces took money to put toward nuclear power plants. What I wish to emphasize is that the federal Government always allowed a choice. So when looking at the policy of the Liberal Party one must look to what happened in the past to see that there were choices. Who made the decisions? The provincial Governments made the decisions within their own jurisdictions.

Mr. Waddell: Is that "Don't know" or what?

Ms. Mitchell: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) has belittled the New Democratic Party, and quite unfairly, by saying that we should not be raising the question of who is appointed to the Atomic Energy Control Board because the appointments have already been made. I wish to ask him his personal views on this matter. When I make my remarks later in the debate I will give more details.

Does the Hon. Member really believe we should not be questioning the fact that Dr. Franklin, who is an Officer of the Order of Canada and a renowned physicist in the field of energy, was first appointed only to have her appointment withdrawn? We strongly suspect that there was a connection between the fact that she is known to oppose construction of the Darlington nuclear power plant in Ontario and other controversial matters and her not liking the secrecy of the commission hearings. She would like to see open hearings under the provisions of the Atomic Energy Control Act. Is the Hon. Member saying that we are wrong to question the Government's withdrawal of such a person, presumably because it does not agree with her position? I think it is essential to have a person with this background on the board to give it balance.

Further, does the Hon. Member not think that there should be a woman on this commission? I understand that not one of the other appointees is a woman. I think that women by and large give a slightly different view to the whole question of nuclear power and matters concerning atomic energy because they are concerned about reproduction and their children.

Mr. Baker: Madam Speaker, I am sure that everyone respects Dr. Franklin. The only problem I see is that her name was not mentioned in the list of appointments. Therefore, it is out of order to even bring up the subject.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker: I agree with the Hon. Member when she says that it would be nice to see more women appointed to these positions. I firmly believe—and perhaps I should not go on on this subject—that the most capable people should be appointed. I am sure that whoever made the appointments about which we are talking here today took that into consideration. I would certainly like to see more women appointed to these boards. I have found that, in dealing with some of the top civil servants who are women, they appear to be more straightforward in terms of voicing their opinions and so on. So I have to agree with the Hon. Member in that regard.

The reason I say we should not be discussing it is because we cannot change it. Can you imagine, Madam Speaker, voting on a motion which states that we find these people competent to be appointed? The fact is they have already been appointed. Perhaps the question should be whether or not they were competent enough to be appointed. Perhaps that should be taken into account in the wording of the motion. We cannot change the fact that they have been appointed. So why would this matter be referred to the standing committee? In the beginning the intent was to ensure that there were not political appointments.

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, I have a question for my colleague. We are examining appointments that have been made by the Conservative Government, appointments of people who have come directly out of the nuclear industry. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell), mentioned Dr. Ursula Franklin, a scientist who is independent of the industry. If a Liberal Government were in office—and this is hypothetical—what sort of appointments would it make? Would the Liberals be prepared, as they were not in the past, to appoint people to this type of commission who would question the basic assumptions of the industry? Would they appoint people who would play watch-dog roles for the Canadian public? Would they redefine the whole question of secrecy as it concerns this board? What does the Hon. Member think a Liberal Government would do that would be any different from what the Conservative Government is doing today or from what the Liberals did in the past?

Mr. Baker: Madam Speaker, we have always appointed capable people to positions. Today, we hear a lot of doubt expressed across the country concerning political appointments. It seems that every appointment being made by the Government these days is political. I would like to assure the hon. gentleman that it will not be long now before the present Government will be replaced with a Liberal Government. At that time we will ensure that the people who are appointed are appointed on the basis of their qualifications and their dedication to the people of Canada.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, I had no intention of speaking on this subject today. However, I have learned a great deal since I was asked to participate in the debate, many things about which I had not really thought.

We have been talking about the whole way of appointing people to the Atomic Energy Control board and the way in which the appointment of Dr. Ursula Franklin was rescinded. I should like to review the process which was apparently involved in the appointment of and in the withdrawal of the appointment of Dr. Franklin. She was appointed to the board by the former Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who is now the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney). She is an Officer of the Order of Canada and a renowned physicist. She is also known to have been opposed to the construction of the Darlington Nuclear Power Plant. I must confess that I learned some things about that project this afternoon which I will share with the House later. Dr. Franklin wants to revamp the secrecy provisions of the Atomic Energy Control Act—the meat of the motivations of the Government and the very strange and questionable process related to the appointment.

I believe Dr. Franklin's appointment was rescinded last spring. The Leader of my Party, as well as one of my hon. colleagues, raised questions about the matter in Question Period and in the Adjournment Debate. During Question Period the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) indicated that Dr. Franklin had refused the appointment because she could not agree to the secrecy provisions of the Atomic Energy Control Act. The correspondence to which I will refer in a minute will show that that indeed is not true.

The Government and Cabinet had decided to yank her appointment even before she wrote a letter saying that she had some concerns about secrecy provisions. Furthermore, although she said she had some concerns—and I would hope this is why she was considered for an appointment to the board—she did not refuse to take the oath of secrecy or to serve as a member. She questioned the process and the inappropriate protocol in terms of how she was approached.

The real story is that as soon as Cabinet learned that Dr. Franklin had a certain position on nuclear energy, it decided to remove her from the board after approaching her with an appointment.

A new appointment was made a year and a half after her appointment was withdrawn and after the Minister for International Trade left her former portfolio as Minister of Energy. The position was vacant during that period of time.

We must ask a number of questions. Why did Cabinet veto Dr. Franklin's appointment? We must question the inappropriate approach of the then Minister. However, putting that aside, why did Cabinet veto her appointment? Was there indeed some lobbying behind the scenes by the nuclear power industry? Undoubtedly the industry would present a different position and had a vested interest which would not be the same interest as that of Dr. Franklin.

I should like to document what happened. On April 15, 1985, a letter was sent to Dr. Franklin by the then Minister appointing her to the AECB. On April 22, 1985, Dr. Franklin received a letter from the Minister. On that same day Dr. Franklin posted a letter of response, to which I should like to refer, stating that she would like clarification of the secrecy provisions of the AECB and of the relationship of the board to the public. She did not refuse acceptance of the position in that letter.

On April 23, 1985, Dr. Franklin was informed by telephone by the Minister's office that the appointment was a mistake. What kind of stupid public relations is that, quite apart from the question of qualifications. I cannot believe that the Minister handled an important matter in that way. Dr. Franklin was informed of that on April 23 before the Minister's office actually received her letter.

On May 29, 1985, a letter was sent by the Minister to Dr. Franklin informing her that her appointment to the board by letter was "sent in error".

It was clearly between April 15 and April 23 that Cabinet vetoed the appointment of Dr. Franklin and, as the House will recall, that is when the Minister was away in China. Some hanky-panky was going on. One must be concerned that the Government does not want an appointee on that board with views which question the nuclear energy program or indeed might question the way in which AECB operates. It would be good to know why the Government vetoed the appointment.

The Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) reviewed Dr. Ursula Franklin's excellent credentials as a physicist and as an educator. She helped develop the science policy through the Science Council of Canada and the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council of Canada. She has done many other things. She has been a tireless advocate for Science for Peace and has received worldwide recognition. Indeed these are all to her credit as a scientist and a human being. I am also proud of the fact that she is a woman.

I would have thought that the Government would have welcomed her to the Atomic Energy Control board. Surely we should have an advocate of caution and control in that respect.

As I mentioned earlier, Dr. Franklin is opposed, or certainly questions very strongly, the gigantic nuclear plant in Darlington, Ontario. I learned a lot more about the plant by reading an article which appeared in a December edition of Saturday Night last year. The article indicated that Ontario Hydro continued to build a gigantic nuclear plant at Darlington despite Chernobyl and all the tragedies, fears, and anxieties created by that incident; despite the election of the Liberal Government in Ontario which opposed it; and despite the fact that this power plant might be quite unnecessary. Evidence shows that there is not enough demand for the power from that plant.

I would think, having read the article, that some of our western Members should be a bit concerned. I am not trying to stimulate competition between our regions, but we should be sensible in our planning. Apparently the Darlington plant is the largest construction project of a nuclear generating station now under way in North America. There was—and it is still the case—a striking lack of construction in Alberta at the time the plant was first begun. The article implied that there was a connection, and that nuclear plants around the world have displaced oil-fired plants. I am sure the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) could tell us more about that.

It seems that Ontario now thrives with the help of nuclear energy and it took control of its economy away from the "shieks" of Alberta and Arabia, according to the article. There have been massive shifts in prosperity from western Canada to eastern Canada. That has been a major factor, and the article pointed out that it could not occur without certain costs and risks. They also point out that it is strange that this very massive plant was developed during the period of the Liberal administration despite their opposition prior to being elected. It has also gone ahead despite the terrible disaster last April at Chernobyl and the fact that the power from this plant may not be needed in the future. That is just one example of the questioning raised by Dr. Franklin. You would think that that view should be represented on the AEC Board.

It is very important that there be women on this board. There should be a quality and parity on all boards. I have been corrected that there is another woman on the AECB, Dr. Sylvia Fedoruk, of whom I was not aware. Why is the presence of women on the board important? There are many consumers, Madam Speaker. I tend to feel that women often tune in more to the consumer side of things, particularly the family situation. Mothers are concerned about the next generation and what will lie ahead.

I think of an issue about which I have had many representations through correspondence and calls from people in my riding and from across Canada—I suspect other Members of Parliament have as well—namely, the question of food irradiation. We know that food irradiation is related to nuclear power so it is related to this debate. There are many many questions being raised about this process which is being pushed very agressively by the industry. It is a money saving process for the industry to preserve food in this way. Even more serious is the fact that this process is being approved by the Government. It seems quite ready to allow the irradiation of food products despite the fact that there is a real concern across Canada on the part of consumers and despite the fact that the Government has not called for any consultation on it. There has been no study of the health effects of irradiation. The Government has also not considered things like having warning labels on such products. We feel very strongly that this also is a consumer issue which should be aired. We are concerned that the industry is stepping up the production of irradiated food products and we feel it should be investigated.

There are many other questions that consumers would raise. I think people like Dr. Franklin are the ones to raise these questions. It is not enough for scientists to speak in technical terms to each other. They have to be able to reassure Canadians about what is being done today in the whole nuclear energy field and to be sure that it will be in the interests of future Canadians, not to mention our environment, the protection of workers and the protection of consumers generally.

Consumers want to have general information. For example, where is nuclear waste being stored now? Most of us are vague and worried about that. Consumers want to know what should be done about future nuclear waste. They want to know how important nuclear energy is. We hear debates on this question. Is it essential to go to nuclear energy in the future? We in our Party do not think so, but the Government apparently does. It actively supports the use of nuclear energy. Consumers want to know what the dangers are, not only from waste, but what are the dangers to workers in the field who must be very concerned about hazards. I, personally, and I am sure many of my constituents want to know what Canada is doing to Third World countries by exporting nuclear energy by sending some of these hazards overseas without having all these questions answered.

We feel that appointments to this board should be questioned very seriously and, in particular, we have great concern that Dr. Ursula Franklin's name was withdrawn after having been considered for this job. We feel strongly that her kind of expertise and attitude is needed.

Mr. Redway: Madam Speaker, I have two questions for the Hon. Member flowing out of her remarks. First, with respect to the appointment or non-appointment of Dr. Franklin, I do not claim to be an expert or to have any real knowledge as to what took place concerning that appointment, but the Member indicated that she felt that perhaps the Cabinet had vetoed the appointment of Dr. Franklin. The Member seemed to imply that there was something wrong in the Cabinet vetoeing an appointment on the basis of perhaps a different philosophy from that of the Government. I know that the Member from Vancouver takes part in the parliamentary review process of appointments to boards and agencies which has been set up for the first time in any parliamentary democracy anywhere in the world by our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and I gather that, because she does take part, she thinks there is some merit in having a review process of that sort. As I understand the process, the committee would look at the qualifications of people who are appointed, the philosophy of those people, their positions on the issues, and I would assume that perhaps the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) would have felt that the committee, after reviewing all those things, might be entitled to have veto power over appointments. I gather from her comments that she feels the Cabinet should not have veto power when it disagrees with the philosophy. I gather what the Hon. Member is saying is that she would be opposed to a review committee having veto power over such appointments. I would like her comments on that.

Second, the Member indicated that there should be all points of views reflected on a committee board, all different philosophies and approaches. I would be interested to know, if she were appointing a committee or the board, whether she would make sure that every kind of point of view and philosophy were demonstrated or whether she would feel that everyone should have the philosophy and the position of the New Democratic Party. Particularly with respect to this board, would she feel comfortable having the board at least 50 per cent representative of the nuclear industry?

Ms. Mitchell: Madam Speaker, first, regarding the question about the veto power of the Cabinet, I think the Hon. Member missed the point. I would be glad to show him correspondence that documents the points I raised earlier. The reason we objected was that Cabinet actually gave a false reason. The Prime Minister himself gave a false reason for withdrawing the appointment of Dr. Franklin. Dr. Franklin said very clearly that she would not take the secrecy oath, and the Prime Minister said that that was the reason for the withdrawal. It was a matter of accuracy, and I would think, as a Member from the Toronto region, that my colleague would be looking into that a bit more.

If we formed the Government, of course we would appoint represenative committees. I have done so in my riding. The local advisory council includes representatives from business, labour, community groups and, I am sure, different political Parties. I think any Government would be extremely foolish if it did not have sound representation and affirmative action.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, I have a short comment to make. I think the Hon. Member, who is a good Member, should really look into that appointment. That woman from Toronto was dealt with very poorly—

Mr. Redway: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is my understanding of the provisions in the rules with respect to questions and comments that they are supposed to be directed toward the Speaker, not toward someone who has made a comment or asked a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair is confident that the Hon. Member will ask his questions through the Chair.

Mr. Waddell: I will take that point, Madam Speaker, since it was more like a heckle. We in the NDP have put up a number of speakers on this particular matter. As you know, Madam Speaker, many of us are assigned different areas for which we are critics, and I would like to comment on the speech of my friend, the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell). She is responsible for child care and social policy while I am responsible for energy.

In the beginning of her speech, the Hon. Member said that she has learned a lot today. I simply want to say to her that that was one of the best speeches I have ever heard in this House. I say that sincerely. The Hon. Member analysed this matter so thoroughly and honestly that I wish Hon. Members opposite would think about her remarks and respond to them.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: I know some Hon. Members think this is funny, but we in the NDP believe that the nuclear industry is a serious matter. As well, we feel that the way this woman from Toronto was treated is a serious matter. That is why we do not apologize at all for taking up the time of the House this afternoon to put up speakers through an opportunity given to us to debate the appointments of these men who are all apologists of the atomic industry in which there is no fairness or openness. Some day Canadians will come to that conclusion and will force the Government to open up the process.

Mr. Baker: Madam Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member could elaborate on her feelings on the process of committees examining Order in Council appointments and whether or not she thinks it is a worth-while endeavour on the part of the Government. Is it a good exercise? Does she think that this is the proper mechanism for examining appointments made by Order in Council?

Ms. Mitchell: Madam Speaker, I must say that I have not really been involved in this process too much. I was involved in one committee, the Secretary of State Committee, which dealt with this process. By and large, our concern is that we want to be able to review appointments, but there is not much point in simply reviewing them if there is no way of implementing the conclusions of that review. I would think that the committee should have a fairly strong impact on these appointments and should be able to question them in some instances, as indicated by the Hon. Member earlier.

Motion (Mr. Waddell) agreed to.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I would ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Shall all questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Thursday, February 5, consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie (St. John's West) that Bill C-19, an Act respecting motor vehicle transport by extra-provincial undertakings, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) had one minute remaining in his speech and then there will be a few minutes for questions and comments. Does the Hon. Member for Spadina wish to continue?

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Yes, Madam Speaker. With my remaining minute, I simply want to summarize the main points I was making yesterday. This Bill has not been examined sufficiently. There are all kinds of questions which could be raised by supporters or opponents of the Bill and by supporters or opponents of different interests in the trucking industry and the transportation industry generally. All kinds of questions have been raised but not answered. It is very important that this Bill not pass second reading at this time but that it be returned to the standing committee so that the committee may travel across Canada to hear these different points of view.

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) and I discussed what might be said during this question period about four hours ago and I would like to invite his comments on my remarks. The Hon. Member indicated that jobs would be lost because of this Bill. My understanding is that the U.S. Bureau of Labour statistics show that between 1980 and 1985, U.S. trucking employment increased 22 per cent and wage levels of U.S. trucking employees were 40 per cent higher than average private sector employees despite the U.S. recession in that period.

I would remind the Hon. Member that more than one million of our fellow citizens work in industries that rely heavily on transportation. The people in those businesses in every region of Canada have clearly told us that they need a more efficient and competitive transportation system in order to stay in business and to compete at home and abroad. As those businesses become more competitive, they create more jobs for men and women in Canada.

I would ask the Hon. Member to comment on that and, judging from his speech, I would ask him if he is only interested in protecting existing jobs in the trucking industry. I suggest to him that that policy is doomed to failure. Those jobs will slowly be lost if our resource producers and manufacturers lose markets because of the continuing uncompetitive nature of the Canadian trucking industry. We would then have the worst of all possible worlds. We would lose jobs in the producing industries and in the trucking industry because the producers would ship fewer and fewer goods.

The Hon. Member indicated that Canadian truckers cannot use American roads. I would ask him why he said that and remind him that some 1,000 Canadian carriers now hold licences to operate in the United States. In fact, Canadian truckers have increased their share of the total transborder market by between 8 per cent and 12 per cent between 1980 and 1984, 1984 being the last year for which I have figures. In short, Canadian truckers are already competing very effectively on American roads. How can the Hon. Member say that we will not operate there?

The point raised by the Hon. Member for Moncton (Mr. Cochrane) was that in effect, with the stroke of a pen, we could be denied access to interborder traffic.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. It is with deep regret that I must interrupt the Hon. Member. I cannot allow the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) the right to reply.

It being four o'clock p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

• (1600)

Mr. Kilgour: On a point of order, Madam Speaker. Because I used up the Hon. Member's time I wonder if, by unanimous consent, we might give him two or three minutes in which to reply?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I do not have unanimous consent and I have already called the next order of business.

THE SENATE

SUGGESTED EQUAL PROVINCIAL AND TERRITORIAL ELECTED REPRESENTATION

The House resumed from December 16, 1986, consideration of the motion of Mr. Taylor that, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of introducing the appropriate measures to abolish the Senate and create a new Senate composed of Senators elected by the people of Canada on the basis of equal representation for each province and territory, and to initiate discussions to that end with provincial and territorial Governments at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. Nic Leblanc (Longueuil): Madam Speaker, the motion before the House today seeks the abolition of the Senate and the creation of an elected Chamber where the provinces would have equal representation. It is not the first time a motion of this kind has been before the House of Commons, and the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) is probably aware that a number of interesting proposals have been submitted over the years to make the Canadian Senate more effective and more representative.

Madam Speaker, this afternoon I would like to go over a few of these proposals, starting with the 1972 report of this Parliament's Special Joint Committee on the Constitution of Canada. The Committee suggested that the Governor General in Council should continue to appoint half the senators according to the existing proceedure and the other half from a list of candidates submitted by the provinces. The Senate would have 130 seats, distributed so as to reflect the relative importance of the various regions. Quebec and Ontario would each keep their respective twenty-four seats. Nova Scotia and New Brunswick would have ten representatives, Prince Edward Island would have four, Newfoundland would have six and the remaining provinces would have twelve each. Finally, the territories would have two senators each.

In 1978, the Government of British Columbia suggested that the Senate's principal role should be to make the regions and the provinces participate in the institutional decision-making process. To that end, the Government proposed that appointing senators be left to the provinces and that the resulting delegations be each headed by a provincial Minister. The five regions would each send an equal number of representatives to a Senate that would consist of sixty members.

In 1978, Madam Speaker, it seems the concept of abolishing the Senate and replacing it with a House of the Provinces was very popular. The Ontario Select Committee on Constitutional Reform of the Ontario Legislative Assembly, the Canada West Foundation and the Progressive Conservative Party made proposals to that effect.

The Ontario Select Committee proposed that senators should be appointed by the provincial governments and represent those governments. Potential candidates could include provincial Members, Ministers and the Premier of each province. Representatives of the federal Government could take part in the proceedings of the House of the Provinces by tabling Bills and intervening in the debate on those Bills, but they would not have the right to vote.

The Canada West Foundation proposed that the House of Provinces be made up of provincial and territorial delegations authorized to cast a single weighted vote; the provincial delegations would include provincial Ministers, MLAs and civil servants. In addition, all provincial premiers would be ex officio members of the House of Provinces, each in turn acting as president. For its part the Progressive Conservative Party recommended that the majority of members be delegated by the provincial Governments, the others appointed by the federal Government.

In its 1978 report entitled "Towards a New Canada", the Canadian Bar Association recommended that the Upper House be reformed so as to represent regional interests. The CBA recommended that the members of this House be appointed for specific terms by the provincial Governments, and the federal Government would designate the representatives without voting rights.

In 1979, Madam Speaker, the Task Force on Canadian Unity co-chaired by Messrs. Pepin and Robarts proposed that the second House be known as the Council of the Federation, made up of provincial delegates speaking and acting on behalf of the provincial Governments. The Task Force recommended that a Minister head each delegation, and that federal Ministers be allowed to take part in the debates, introduce and defend their Government's legislative measures before the Council of the Federation, but that they not be allowed to vote. As to the Fédération des francophones hors Québec, in 1979 they recommended the creation of a House of the Federation whose members would be elected.

In its report on certain aspects of the Canadian Constitution—the Goldenberg-Lamontagne report—the Senate Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs recommended that senators continue to be appointed by the federal Government, but that half of them be selected from a list submitted by the provincial or territorial Governments. The main criteria would be to achieve a relative balance in the representation of the various segments of the population, and to take into account the personal qualifications required for effectively discharging the duties of a senator.

In 1980, Madam Speaker, the Constitutional Committee of the Quebec Liberal Party made its own recommendations in a document entitled "A New Canadian Federation". This Beige Paper recommended the abolition of the Senate, urging that the federal Parliament be made up of only one institution, the House of Commons. However, the Constitution would provide for a new intergovernmental institution, namely a Federal Council of provincial delegations acting under the direction of their respective Governments.

Each provincial premier would be de facto head of his provincial delegation, and the federal Government would send non-voting representatives to express its views. Quebec would have a minimum representation equivalent to 25 per cent of the number of council members, and the smaller provinces would be guaranteed fair representation. In addition, the council would reflect Canada's duality through a committee whose membership would be 50 per cent francophone and which would be called upon whenever the Canadian duality might be affected by federal initiatives submitted to the council.

In 1981, the Canada West Foundation revised its position and recommended that senators be elected for limited terms. Their election would take place at the same time as the general national election, and senators would be elected in a province-wide riding through a transferable vote.

Madam Speaker, are you indicating that I have only one minute left? I have finished. Madam Speaker, thank you very much for allowing me to take the floor this afternoon and make these enlightening comments before the House.

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Madam Speaker, I agree with the mover of this motion inasmuch as I believe that we need a second Chamber which will hold the Government more accountable than does the present House of Commons. In making that statement, I realize that perhaps the procedures and customs of this Chamber could be changed to fulfil that need.

The House of Commons is structured on the presumption that it is a law-making body, that it holds the Government accountable to the people for its actions, and that it provides a place for recruitment of people who would form the Government. In other words, when our parliamentary system was created the Government of Canada only had responsibility for very limited activities such as the railway and the post office. At that time the House of Commons was actually initiating its own laws. The elected Members of the House of Commons actually initiated and passed laws for the Government of Canada.

The law-making function of the House of Commons has disappeared. As I see the function of the House of Commons today, it no longer bears any resemblance whatsoever to a law-making body. That is because the Government has become all pervasive. It covers everything in our society. Therefore, laws are being initiated either by the Public Service or by exterior factors such as federal-provincial conferences.

Today one cannot imagine a law passed in this Chamber which was totally initiated in this Chamber. Apart from policies which are established by a political Party running for office and laws brought in because of those public declarations, or because of federal-provincial conferences or any number of exterior factors, there are very few laws which can be categorized as even coming from the Public Service. The law-making function of the House of Commons has deteriorated substantially.

The only other function which the House of Commons has today is to keep the Government of Canada responsible. One wonders whether we even do that today. That is perhaps why this motion is so important. Under our present system, a Minister of the Crown does not have to answer a question and is not expected to know the answer to a question which deals with his Department. Precedent has been set by Speakers' rulings over the years that a Minister should not be expected to know everything that goes on in his Department. That is a matter of custom, a matter of law under the British parliamentary system. The issue of accountability has diminished as far as the House of Commons is concerned.

The House of Commons was created to fulfil one other function. It was originally created to provide recruitment for future Governments.

The original intention for the creation of the House of Commons was that politicians would learn over a period of time and would then become cabinet Ministers or would become skilled enough in the function of law-making and accountability to the people that they would be able to fulfil those functions. That was called recruitment. That has gone out of the window because in the 20th century the average period of time that a Member sits in this Chamber is three to three and a half years. Here today, gone tomorrow. That turnover of Members means that that function of the House of Commons is not being fulfilled at all.

I agree with the motion before the House. I did not hear the Hon. Member's explanation of how the model would be created, but I did listen to several Members speak on this motion the last time it was before the House. One of the Members referred to, although not in these words, the accountability function of the House of Commons, that is, the House of Commons as a group which makes the executive of the Government, who should be responsible for the decisions, but are not, accountable to the people of Canada. That person used the CF-18 contract as an example of how the Government is not being held accountable to the people of Canada. He said that that is why we should have a second Chamber, an elected body of sober second thought, to fulfil the function of accountability.

I will give you one example in which I do not believe that the Members sitting in the Government of Canada, the Cabinet of Canada, were responsible for a government decision. I refer specifically to the recent agreement on fishing signed between France and Canada. I have reason to believe that it was not the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) or the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) who were actually responsible for that signing. However, we have no way of making the Government accountable. There is no mechanism for holding that part of the Government which made the decision accountable to the Canadian people. The law-making function has disappeared because of the complexity of our times. The accountability function has disappeared in this Chamber and the recruitment function no longer applies as a result of turnovers. Therefore, I support the hon. gentleman's Bill as it presently stands and I have other ideas on how to structure the model.

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the motion we are considering today states that we:

—should consider the advisability of introducing the appropriate measures to abolish the Senate and create a new Senate composed of Senators elected by the people of Canada on the basis of equal representation for each province and territory, and to initiate discussions to that end with provincial and territorial governments at the earliest opportunity.

The motion was moved by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), and seconded by the Hon. Member for Prince George—Bulkley Valley (Mr. McCuish).

I believe that the central problem of representative democracy in Canada can be stated in one sentence. It is that two out of three Canadians live in a narrow band between Windsor and Quebec City. That is a demographic fact with which all of us must live.

The biggest problem facing those of us from outside the two central provinces is that we do not believe we are politically equal to those who live in the two central provinces. I believe that applies to those from Newfoundland as much as it does to those from Vancouver Island. It certainly applies to the region of the Prairies where I have lived most of my life.

Recently in Edmonton I gave a speech entitled "Representative Democracy in Canada: Strengths, Problems, and Reform". I pointed that many national institutions do not represent all Canadians with equal vigour. I used the example of The National which appears on our publicly financed television station every night at ten o'clock. I believe some 80 per cent of the budget for that news broadcast is spent within the boundaries of Metropolitan Toronto.

Mr. Redway: You can have it if you want it.

Mr. Kilgour: A Member from Toronto tells me that we can have it if we want it. The point is that those of us who live in the outer eight provinces do want it. It is patently unfair that 80 per cent of that budget should be spent in one city. The National should be renamed "The Toronto News". Those of us who live outside of Toronto, including people in northern Quebec, northern Ontario and Alberta, are not getting adequate representation in a news broadcast that we help to fund just as much as does the Member from Toronto. The point is that this national institution is not perceived to reflect all of Canada as it should.

I will now deal with the Senate. The area in which the most necessary reform still remains is our unloved and unworked Senate, down the hall from us. The Special Joint Committee on Senate Reform reported two years ago that an appointed Senate no longer meets the needs of Canadian federalism. It stated that only an elected Senate can fulfil its principal role, which is that of regional representation. How, in a representative democracy, can 104 men and women who are appointed until the age of 75 perform a dual role with this House which consists of elected men and women? Who are their electors and to whom are they accountable? They are accountable to no one but themselves.

There are 25 million who do not have a cushy, well-paid job with no responsibility. In a democracy, a Senator's job should be important, but there is no responsibility without electors. What do they do at election time? They do not have a meaningful role to play in a democracy, and that is why those of us who feel strongly about this issue believe they should be elected to represent each province equally. We are asked why people from Prince Edward Island should have four or five Senators compared to Quebec or Ontario?

[Translation]

I think it is the same thing in Rhode Island, for instance, or in Vermont, with two senators. People have been laughing about that as well, but the voters in New York are quite prepared to accept the situation to strengthen national unity.

[English]

If Rhode Island can have two Senators, cheek by jowl with New York, why can P.E.I. not have four or five Senators, the same as Quebec or Ontario? That is one symbolic way to show that all Canadians can have a greater stake in our democratic institutions. I suggest that this is a strong argument for having an elected Senate. It works across the border and it can work in Canada. California has a population of 25 million people and is situated next to Nevada, with 1 million to 1.5 million people. New York has a population of 18 million people and is situated beside Vermont, with slightly more than 500,000 people.

The counter argument is often made that a Parliament with two elected Houses cannot be reconciled comfortably with the principle of reasonable government as it has operated in Canada. Surely the answer is that only an elected Senate, with the political clout to dispute, when necessary, the decisions of a government supported by the House of Commons, can satisfy the original intent of the Fathers of Confederation, which is the provision of a Chamber that would balance judiciously the power of the Commons by safeguarding the legitimate interests of the people in the less populous provinces. Who in the House would suggest that the Senate in Australia does not work? While it may not be perfect, it works well there. I suggest it could work well in Canada. Do I see a smile on the face of the Member from Toronto?

Mr. Redway: Indeed you do.

Mr. Kilgour: I hope he will appreciate that we in Alberta and I hope other areas of Canada are deadly serious about this issue.

Since 1982, the method of selection of Senators cannot be altered except by a constitutional amendment approved by Parliament and by the legislatures of at least seven provinces representing at least 50 per cent of Canada's population. I suggest that all of the outer eight provinces could readily be persuaded to support an elected Senate, with perhaps five or six Senators from each province. Indeed, I believe that the Premiers of most if not all of the eight provinces have already indicated support for this.

It has been suggested that Quebec and Ontario would never accept this proposal, but surely the Premier of your province, Madam Speaker, might be persuaded to accept this if Quebec's veto over amendments affecting its legal authority were restored.

Perhaps Ontario legislators could be persuaded to make a grand gesture in the interests of enhancing political equality in Canada on the same basis as representation between New York and Rhode Island, or California and Nevada. One assumes that the Senate itself would have to face the inevitable if all three Parties in this House approved an amendment to this effect. The result, I suggest, would be an improved democracy in which all of us in this country from Nanaimo to St. John's could take greater pride.

I refer Hon. Members to "The Case for an Elected Senate" by Duff Roblin, published in the Canadian Parliamentary Review. There is a real, live, breathing Senator who believes we should have an elected Senate and makes that case eloquently. I may have been a little unkind when I suggested that only a third of the Senators appear to work in our present institution. The heading of a recent article is: "Half of the Senators Missed Most of the Fall Sitting". In fairness to the other House, I should point out that Senator Guy Charbonneau points out that in fact some of these Senators may have been sick. Some of them may have been entertaining foreign dignitaries. I am being a little facetious in paraphrasing his letter. The point is that it is a discredited institution and here is our chance, thanks to the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), to do something to improve Canadian democracy.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, this is not the first time I have had a chance to speak during Private Members' Hour on the reform of the Senate. It seems to me it is getting to be a bit too often. However, I believe there is some purpose in discussing this issue a number of times. I firmly believe that the more we discuss the Senate, the more it comes to light, and the more chance that we will finally abolish the damn thing in the first place. I believe what is happening in this country is that people are becoming sick of the Senate. They are sick of the appointment system and the people who are appointed. They are sick of the inherent conflict of interest which exists among Senators. What the people want to see is the Senate abolished.

Other Hon. Members who have spoken have referred to all the different ideas for reforming the Senate. Some have suggested that Senators should be appointed by the provincial Premiers. Others have suggested that Senators should be elected in each of the provinces by proportional representation. Some Hon. Members talk about it as being a haven, or a way of saving the English-French conflicts in this country. I think those are all laudable suggestions and ideas. However, I think we have to ask why these suggestions are being made. I believe they are being made basically because we know there is no present purpose for the Senate. We recognize there are some very honourable Senators and that there are some individuals in the Senate who have done good committee work, but that is about all they do. I have spoken in previous debates and pointed out that on many days the Senate sits for 45 minutes, sometimes up to two hours and on one or two remarkable occasions, up to three hours. I also pointed out from a month-after-month statistic, that Senators were sitting 10 hours or 20 hours a month, and occasionally they may sit up to 25 hours a month.

Mr. Redway: If you would let us pass more legislation, they would have more work to do.

Mr. Murphy: The Hon. Member to my extreme right says that if we would pass more legislation, they would have more work to do, but the point is that when we pass legislation which is very controversial, after committee study, and in some cases after pre-study, it is passed in the Senate, if the Government wants, in half an hour's time, in any case.

The Hon. Member for Bow River may remember that we sat in committee until August 4 discussing the six and five program. We had a number of witnesses. We sat morning, afternoon and evening in committee on that piece of legislation. The Senate passed it the same evening it was sent to the other place. It is not a matter of what we do in this House. It is a matter of what they do not do in that House. So let us not use that old excuse.

My main point is that every time there is a problem in the Canadian confederacy, someone says we should use the Senate to fix it up. The studies and reccomendations which were made in the late 1960s and 1970s used the Senate to try to deal with the separation problem which existed in Quebec. A lot of the recommendations which came down at that time were put in place to try to deal with the problem of a really strong separatist movement in Quebec. The motions, and a lot of the speeches we hear, try to resolve the feeling in western Canada especially, and in Alberta specifically, that for some reason all the decisions seem to be made in Ontario and Quebec. The Government, whether Liberal or Conservative, always seems to worry about the political base it has in Quebec or in Ontario. As a result, the CF-18 contract did not go to Manitoba and the National Energy Program seemed to be forced upon Albertans. Presumably, the federal Government signed a cod contract with France so it would not have any controversial issues coming up when the Francophone summit takes place in a few months' time. That is a feeling expressed by a number of people who spoke. Every time there is a problem the idea is to use the Senate because it has no purpose at the present time.

When I served on the last joint committee on the role and reform of the Senate, I listened to hundreds of briefs from all across this land. It became very clear that there is no consensus as to what we should do with the Senate. There are arguments for abolition and for an appointed Senate. There are arguments for a Premiers Council. We heard all sorts of ideas. None of them were accepted by any two groups, and none of them, I think, were very practical. The reason they are not practical, and why this particular suggestion is not practical, is that we have not dealt with how the House of Commons is going to relate to this new body. Are we supposed to be elected in the same old way? All the Conservatives vote together when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) says so. The Liberals vote no and we vote yes, no or maybe, depending on what our caucus decides. The Senate is a completely different body. Are we going to talk about the relationships? Obviously, if there is an elected Senate with equal representation from each of the provinces and the two or three Territories, depending on when this motion ever comes to pass, obviously the purpose, the role, the structures of this body would have to change as well. That is a fact of life. We could not have five Senators from Manitoba, presumably representing the three different Parties, taking one position and the Members of the House of Commons taking a completely different position. It just would not work.

I would argue that rather than our spending time debating the reform of the Senate—because it is there and we do not think it is doing anything, and all those other reasons which I think are justified—we should really be looking at the reform of the House. The problems are here. Certainly, the Senate is there and we have no excuse for it, no reason for its existence. However, the problems are really here.

We have the problem of government integrity, regardless of which Party forms the Government of the day. It is the problem of how we make decisions. We automatically support our Party when it is the Government. Therefore, the Conservatives, regardless of where they come from, had to support the Government's decision to put the CF-18 contract in Montreal, despite the fact there was a lower bid, and probably a more technically competent bid, from the Province of Manitoba.

If we had a committee system where decisions of this nature were investigated and where people did not vote always on Party lines, we could reform our own House. We would have more credibiilty, whether we are from Alberta, Manitoba, Quebec, Ontario or from Atlantic Canada. That is what should be happening.

Part of the problem in western Canada is that whether we have Members in the Opposition or on the government side, we assume they are not being listened to. If that is the case, and if government Members do not believe they have any clout in the House of Commons because they do not want to go against the government line, then they have a responsibility within their own caucus and within their own Government, to ensure they are doing the right thing. Presumably, those caucus meetings are not just rubber stamps. Presumably they are a place where real debate takes place. Presumably the men and women in that caucus are honourable people and will take a stand. If they disagree about something on a consistent basis, they will walk out. That is the honourable thing. I have sat in government caucuses. I am not just speaking because I am in opposition at the present time. I have sat in government caucuses in Manitoba. I have seen that Members will oppose Government, and be very vociferous in opposing government decisions. I have seen cases of decisions being turned around to represent all parts of Manitoba because of what happened in the caucus room.

I use Manitoba as an example not only because I am from there and not only because it has a New Democratic Government but because the majority of the seats in its Legislature represent the City of Winnipeg. There are 30 seats for the City of Winnipeg and 27 seats for ridings outside the city. Yet people from smaller areas are able to influence what the Government does because they get up to insist that the Government move in a reasonable fashion.

When we talk about reform let us not spend our time talking about the Senate. Let us talk about what we should be doing in this Chamber and what we should be doing in our own caucus rooms.

[Translation]

Mrs. Anne Blouin (Montmorency—Orléans): This afternoon, Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) is asking us to take a position concerning the abolition of the Senate and its replacement by a Senate elected on the basis of equal representation for each province. Well, before attacking an institution which is so deeply rooted in Canadian history, we would be well-advised to take under serious consideration the reasons why it was established in the first place, and to make sure that the proposed reform will not undermine the orderly discharge of its original duties, however necessary they may still be.

So, what were these duties in 1867? Two objectives of the Fathers of Confederation immediately come to mind. Having drawn inspiration from the House of Lords in England, they wanted to create a Chamber of legislative sober thought responsible for putting the finishing touch to the sometimes hastily adopted House of Commons legislation. Several Members of this House have admitted that, by and large, the Senate has lived up to this challenge.

Another argument justifying the existence of the Senate in 1867 was its function to represent regional interests. Sir John A. Macdonald himself explained how the Senate was created.

It was felt that in order to protect the interests of the regions and to prevent interregional jealousy, it was necessary that the three broad divisions that constituted British North America at the time, namely the Maritimes, Quebec and Ontario, be represented in the Upper Chamber on an equal basis.

Madam Speaker, the Fathers of Confederation wanted to make the Senate similar in structure to what we now have in modern federations like the United States, Australia and Switzerland. With twenty-four senators from each region, the Canadian Senate was supposed to represent the diversity of these regions and provide them with equal power, thus balancing the differences in population reflected in the Lower House.

The concept of representation of regional interests has received somewhat questionable implementation by the present Senate of Canada. Most commentators agree that in recent year, the members of the Senate have not been ardent defenders of regional issues.

However, the regional interests issue alone should be reason enough to consider carefully ways of reforming the Upper Chamber to reflect those interests better than it does now. The motion before the House today indicates that one way would be to elect an equal number of senators from each province.

However, it was not the intention of the Fathers of Confederation to provide equal representation to the provinces; they preferred to speak of regional equality. Shall we follow their example or shall we accept, as requested by the Hon. Member for Bow River, that provinces obtain equal representation? Are the realities so different from one province to the next that they cannot be adequately reflected in the Senate if we apply the principle of regional equality? Before voting on this proposal, we must find answers to these questions.

I said earlier that the Fathers of Confederation had two objectives in creating the Senate: To make it a chamber of sober second thought and to represent the regions. However, for French Canadians at the time, the Senate had a more important purpose. It was to be the protector of the interests of the francophone minority, the key element of the constitutional agreement between the two cultural communities.

Madam Speaker, this is the concept which Georges-Étienne Cartier used to rally Lower Canada to the cause of Federation. Indeed, Quebecers were not alone in giving such an intepretation to the creation of the Senate. George Brown of Ontario recognized it when he said:

> Our friends in Lower Canada have agreed to grant us representation by population in the Lower Chamber at the express condition that they can enjoy equality in the Upper Chamber. We would never have reached an agreement if this condition had not been met.

The guarantees of representation for Quebec in the Senate, as well as the constitutional provision dealing with the use of French in both Chambers, were essential conditions for the entry of French Canadians into Confederation. It is this notion of duality that Francophones wanted to protect and it is this protection that they required from the Senate.

The fact is that we must recognize that the Senate could better meet its responsibilies for representing the two official language communities. If we accept today that this basic notion of duality still deserves to be better reflected in our central institutions and defended by the very mechanism of Parliament, it is important to consider the opportunities provided by the reform of the Senate in this regard.

There is no lack of reform proposals. Indeed, whether they are for an elected Senate, for a Chamber of provincial delegations or for Senators appointed by the central power, several Senate reform proposals would attribute to that institution special powers to defend the rights of the francophone community.

The Federation of Francophones outside Quebec even proposed in 1978 a Senate where both communities would be represented on an equal footing. According to the Federation:

> The Chamber of the Federation should be a privileged forum where both founding nations could meet as equals and develop together the policies of the federal State. The central Government cannot reflect the realities of both founding nations if it is under no obligation to deal with them on a regular basis and make sure that its projects meet the values and priorities of each.

Madam Speaker, this notion that Parliament should respect in its actions the values of our cultural communities can be found in most projects, although with less absolute arrangements. In short, these proposals would give the Senate, in the case of any measure having a special linguistic significance, a right of veto based on the double majority principle.

In 1978, Bill C-60, among others, required that to pass, a linguistic legislation be adopted by a majority of Francophone senators and a majority of Anglophone senators.

In order to further protect the interests of Francophones, the Macdonald Commission report, as well as the report of the 1985 Special Alberta Committee on the Senate Reform insisted that linguistic measures should be approved by a majority of Francophone senators and a majority of the whole Senate.

The same concern exists in all proposals for a Senate made-up of provincial delegations. For instance, the 1980 Constitutional project drafted by the Quebec Liberal Party, the so-called Beige Paper, proposed that a "dual committee" of the new Senate should ratify the initiatives of the Government which are likely to affect the Canadian duality.

Likewise, in 1978, the Canada West Foundation suggested to give the Quebec delegation an absolute veto to protect its unique character in cases of bills affecting culture and languages.

The list of possibilities is quite extensive, Madam Speaker. Over the past 20 years, there have been a great many Senate reform proposals; some of them, among the most interesting, originated in Parliament. The contribution made in 1984 by the Special Joint Committee is, in this regard, worthy of mention.

Under its term of reference, the Committee had to consider first of all the roles a possible reformed Senate could play. I dealt today with two possible roles, consistent with our history and the character of our country. The Committee insisted on the same objectives of regional representation and the need to maintain the dualistic nature of Canadian society.

According to that committee and in the opinion of several Canadians, the House of Commons cannot effectively reflect the regional and dualistic character of our country while carrying its mandate to represent the will of the majority. Now we know how those regional or cultural differences can become the source of tensions and conflicts that tend to question the future of this country.

I have already indicated that the motion introduced by the Hon. Member for Bow River should provide for equal representation from the provinces rather than from the region and I asked that the point be taken in consideration. However, for my fellow French-Canadians and myself, it is also very important to look at the means we could provide the Senate to represent the two language communities and guarantee the rights of the French Canadian minority.

By itself, equal representation from the provinces as proposed by the Hon. Member provides no guarantee for minority representation or protection. Equal representation from the provinces however is no obstacle to better representation from the linguistic communities, provided safety mechanisms similar to those I mentioned earlier are added.

Before the House is called upon to vote on the Hon. Member's motion, madam Speaker, I would ask him to look at the advisability of adding to any senate reform ways of guaranteeing that our linguistic duality, that important reality, will be reflected in that institution.

[English]

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, I have just a few points to make in a debate which has been with us for a long time. It is probable that the debate on Senate reform commenced the day after Confederation. Somewhere in the bowels of Parliament there must be a basement full of studies, report, and recommendations, which were made at one time or another, about our friends down the hall.

The Canadian Senate was established along the lines of the British House of Lords. However, unlike the British House of Lords, which had been in existence for a long time and was based upon aristocratic considerations and land ownership going back to feudal days, our Senate system was put into effect on the spur of the moment. As a result, we have been arguing about it ever since.

Let us look at some of the historical functions which the Senate is supposed to fulfil. Some people would argue that it was set up to represent the various regions of Canada. I do not see how it does that any more than does the House of Commons. If it were established on the American system with equal representation for each province, such as in the idea proposed by the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), that would be a fact. However, it is not. Representation in the Senate is roughly along the lines of representation in the House of Commons—according to population. I do not see how one could argue that the Senate, under present circumstances, represents the various regions of Canada.

If we were to be honest we would admit that the Senate was really established with the idea of protecting property and wealth. Observers going back to the time of Aristotle have argued that the end result of democracy or a democratic system of government on its own, untempered by any other element, is likely to be chaos. Possibly that was in the minds of the formulators of the first Canadian Constitution.

Perhaps the Senate protected the interests of property for a time, but that is certainly not the case today. We still have that archaic requirement that a Senator have $4,000 worth of property, but one does not get very much property for $4,000 today. I do not think we can really argue that point any more.

The third item which comes to mind about historical functions of the Senate is that of the House of sober second thought, the House of reflection. I always thought there was something in that idea until a Friday afternoon when a Private Member's Bill was debated before the House of Commons. Because it was a Friday afternoon, as is the case today, only a handful of Members were present and a Bill to change the name of Dominion Day to Canada Day sneaked by. That was a time when we needed second sober reflection. It had not been looked at, debated properly, or thought about by the House of Commons. However, when I saw the Senators, as a result of impositions placed upon them by the Prime Minister of the day, go along with it—they were told to do it; there was no first thought, second thought; there was no thought at all—I lost any respect I might have had for the view that the Senate provided an opportunity for sober second thought.

However, in my mind the Senate fulfils certain useful functions. It does some excellent committee work. Two immediate examples come to mind—the recent report on the marketing of fish done by the Senate Fisheries Committee headed by Senator Marshall, and a recent report on military transport, which I thought was excellent work. In many of these ways it complements the work of the House of Commons.

It also provides—and this is important in any society—a way of honouring people who have contributed to the life of Canada over the years. It is a way of giving them an honour which does not cost that much. It is important for that to be available to us as a society. It is nice to see people receive the Order of Canada, but this is another way of showing how society appreciates work done over a long period of time by people in various fields. Most often it is politics, but occasionally it is for other good and valid reasons.

It also provides a way—and this is important in society as well—of promoting people out of the way. Sometimes it is necessary to get rid of people who perhaps have done a good job for years and years but must be replaced. We do not want them to be demoted, so we promote them out of the way, and the Senate provides a very good opportunity for doing that. It also provides a reward for Party work. Occasionally appointments are made for rather partisan reasons. I can think of people from this House who were appointed to the Senate to make room for somebody else to run in their ridings.

Another very useful function of the Senate is that occasionally after election to the House of Commons we find that certain regions of the country are not represented at all. Of course this is not the case with the present Conservative Government which received a wide mandate from every region of the country. However, if we look back to the previous Liberal Government, we see that it was unrepresented in the West, and it was useful to have a mechanism whereby it could have someone from western Canada in the Cabinet of the day. The Senate provided a mechanism for that.

It is also useful—and I am thinking now in partisan terms—in that it provides an opportunity to bring to Parliament in its widest sense people who provide useful party functions like that of raising money. One of our Senator colleagues from the other side of the House has recently been in the news quite a bit. I would think that the other members of his Party thought in times past that he served a very useful function of raising money for their Party.

I see that I am out of time, Madam Speaker. In conclusion, I thank the Hon. Member for Bow River for providing this opportunity once again to engage in a debate which has gone on for 100 years. Because we will have to use the amending formula under the new Constitution to change the Senate, it will probably take another 100 years of debate before the issue is finally settled, if at all.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I move:

That the House do now proceed to Orders of the Day.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Lewis) which was agreed to on the following division.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Friday, February 6, consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie (St. John's West) that Bill C-19, an Act respecting motor vehicle transport by extra-provincial undertakings, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Riis: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Orders of the day have been called. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) a point of order before I recognize the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I simply rise on a point of order regarding the business of the House. I would like to seek some indication—particularly when the Government House Leader is in his seat—as to whether or not we will have an opportunity to discuss the concurrence motion regarding lobbying. The feeling was, as a result of the events of recent days in the House and over the weekend, that it was appropriate to spend only two hours this morning discussing the process of lobbying and perhaps offering some suggestions and some potential solutions as to how the whole matter might be handled in the future. I am simply seeking some guidance as to whether we will have an opportunity to discuss this critical committee report some time later this week.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, of course, we will be glad to discuss it. However, we would like to get on with some Government business. There are committees waiting for important Bills which the New Democratic Party refuses to debate. It has been engaged in stalling and procrastination in a very deliberate fashion, undermining, circumventing and subverting the rules of the House. On the one hand, members of the New Democratic Party say they want to debate and then they continually engage in flippant motions and in motions which do nothing but obstruct orderly debate. That is what we are interested in; we are interested in orderly debate and to get the business of the House moving. This Government has a responsibility to govern, and it is governing.

• (1150)

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order with respect to House business. I seek some clarification from the Government House Leader on the Government's position in this regard. Anyone reading the headlines or watching television with respect to reports of what happened at the Tory caucus in Quebec over the weekend would have thought that the issue of lobbying and government integrity, generally, was supposed to be first on the list of government business. Why is the Government House Leader afraid to have this issue discussed today even for two hours? What could be more important than the integrity of this Conservative Government, or lack of same?

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a different point of order, although I share the views just expressed by my House Leader; I think it is terrible to come in and shut off debate.

I want to refer back to the projected order of business for Friday and today. I am sure the Table will listen to me attentively because I think I have a point, that there is something here which is not only confusing but I think a mistake. It was certainly done by someone and I think it was done inadvertently.

On Friday the Projected Order of Business, states that if we get to Bill C-19 there is a 20-minute maximum for all other speakers during the next seven hours and seventeen minutes of debate and speeches are subject to a 10-minute question and comment period. We have had 43 minutes of speech on Bill C-19. Therefore, we knew we had seven hours and seventeen minutes left. In the Projected Order of Business for Monday, February 9, we find that although—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I believe the Chair explained that there was a mistake last week and it was brought to the attention of the House. I refer to page 3193 of Hansard of February 6 wherein the Acting Speaker said:

> At this time I wish to bring to the attention of Hon. Members that the time recorded under Bill C-19 in today's Projected Order of Business is wrong. The time remaining for debate is six hours and 42 minutes.

Mr. Gauthier: I was aware of that, Mr. Speaker, and I thank you for bringing it to the attention of the House. Today we say there are six hours and forty-two minutes left because we had at best possibly 10 minutes on Friday for debate on Bill C-19. I take it also that in that time consideration, the 10-minute period reserved for comments and questions has been included in the total figure given to us today. I want that confirmed because that is an argument which I want to make to the Chair some day, that it should not be included.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is included and I take the Hon. Member's remark as notice.

Mr. Lewis: Before I proceed with my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I would comment to the House that there have been discussions among the Parties as to the most expeditious manner of handling Bill C-19. I think it is fair to say that those discussions were tied into the way the House dealt with Bill C-18. Therefore, I think you would find unanimous consent of the House, Mr. Speaker, for the following motion:

> That Bill C-19, an Act respecting motor vehicle transport by extra-provincial undertakings, not be referred to a legislative committee but be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport upon second reading of this Bill.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, it is true that there have been discussions among the Parties on this matter and there is interest in this particular proposal. However, motions of this type are generally made during Routine Proceedings and the Government itself chose to blank them out. Therefore, I think this motion had better stand while we consider our position.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, there have been some discussions. We were anticipating that the Government would take the opportunity after the weekend, as a result of deliberations which went on late Friday, to use Routine Proceedings to introduce such a motion. that is why I think so many of us, likely including yourself, Mr. Speaker, were surprised when we found we would not be getting to that item today, but moving directly into debate. Therefore, I will have to follow the position taken by the previous speaker that we simply let the matter stand for the moment.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I have had discussions myself with the House Leader of the Liberal Party and with the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). It was my firm understanding from both of those individuals that this motion could be adopted with the consent of all the Parties in the House. With respect, to rise this morning and object because it is not being done under Routine Proceedings, but is being done now, I do not believe is an accurate representation of the understanding we had last week.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I need unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent for the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is a real pleasure for me to participate in this debate. The House will know that this is the fourth day this Bill has been called for debate. Unfortunately, it has been unnecessarily delayed by members of the New Democratic Party.

On Wednesday of last week it was called and a concurrence motion was moved by a member of the New Democratic Party. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that we have no difficulty in debating concurrence motions on committee reports if there has been prior notice and an opportunity for all Parties to inform their spokespersons and for the House to have an informed, lively, intelligent debate. Unfortunately, that did not happen. There was no notice. Therefore, Wednesday was lost.

On Thursday, once again during Routine Proceedings, the New Democratic Party moved concurrence of a report of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. As a former chairman of the Committee on Public Accounts, I can say it is a very non-partisan committee. It works very hard on behalf of the House. Those reports are almost always unanimous, well thought out and a lot of time is taken in their preparation. If we are going to debate those reports, it seems to me only logical that we treat them properly and give everyone notice so we have an informed debate. Once again, there was no notice. At eleven o'clock on Thursday concurrence was moved and we had probably an hour and three-quarters debate on that very important report of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts.

The next thing that happened was debate on Thursday afternoon on this Bill. On Friday, a concurrence motion was moved by a member of the New Democratic Party, the Hon. member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). I think this motion bears an even more intense examination because this was the third time in a row. The report in question was a report of the Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources as to appointments. When one examines the transcript of the committee hearings at which the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway was in attendance one will find that at no time during the proceedings of the committee did the Hon. Member take any part in the discussions with respect to these appointments. However, when the matter came before the House, when Hon. Members were asked to concur in the report of the committee, suddenly the Hon. Member took a great deal of interest in the matter.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is trying to make a procedural point and I am not sure I understand why. It has no relevance to Bill C-19. I wonder if perhaps he could give us his position on the Bill before the House instead of indulging in sarcasm and ridicule the way he is doing right now, which is certainly not relevant to Bill C-19. I would like to know whether the Hon. Member could be asked to speak to Bill C-19.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sure the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary knows what is relevance in the House of Commons and, therefore, is coming to his point.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the members of the Government I would say a strict enforcement of the rule of relevancy would be welcomed by us all.

Ms. Mitchell: How about setting an example?

Mr. Lewis: At any rate, for all intents and purposes Friday was lost to debate and we now have an opportunity to enter into debate. We think that we should have a good day's debate on this important Bill. For that reason, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell):

That this question be now put.

Some Hon. Members: Debate!

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis) was in the process of condemning the New Democratic Party for a motion introduced on Friday and then proceeded to introduce what is in effect a closure motion on the debate. That has become the principle trade mark of the Government. Members of the Government say that they want to give the House more authority. They say they want to give committees more authority. Yet every second motion introduced by the Government in the Chamber is a closure motion. In effect, the Hon. Member has now ended debate with his motion.

He asks that the question be now put. Following speeches that will be given on his motion of closure the Conservatives will use their massive majority once again to shove another Bill through the House of Commons. This brings up the question of the accountability of the Government to the people of Canada. Members of the Government are not accountable for anything they do. I cannot think of one single thing for which the Government is accountable to the people of Canada. For the life of me, I cannot see what the value of the House of Commons is under the present Government. It is muzzling Parliament.

The Government has an agenda upon which it is acting. Sometimes it does not know who makes the decisions. It does not know who it was who ordered the Canadian Embassy and the PMO to sign an agreement with the French. No one knows who ordered the decision to be made. I ask then what is the purpose of the House of Commons under the present Government? No one here can tell me or Canadians what the function of the House of Commons is under the present Government.

In very legitimate terms the House of Commons should be a law-making institution, but certainly not one which just rubber-stamps laws put forward by the Government. The Government has a massive majority and it can move a closure motion whenever it wants. Not one piece of legislation has been originated in the House since the present Government took office. By its own philosophy of the rich get richer and the poor get poorer what the Government has done is gone through a list of legislation that will benefit the powerful in the country. The Bill before us is another example of benefit to the United States truckers and United States carriers of freight. That is all this Bill is about.

What then is the bottom line of the Hon. Member's motion now before the House? We know that the House no longer originates legislation. It does not even talk about legislation. It has no meaning in the legislative process any longer. If it does not do those things then what does it do? It might be said that in Question Period there is some semblance left of making the Government accountable to the people of Canada. But motions of the sort moved by the Hon. Member throw accountability right out the window.

Even during Question Period a Minister is no longer held accountable for his actions. A tradition has developed since this Government took power wherein a Minister does not have to know what went on in his Department or who made a decision in his Department. It is disgusting to anyone who watches and follows the process.

When the Government was elected it promised to bring democracy back into the House of Commons. That was one of the Tory promises set out in the handbook of promises. It was promise number 299. Yet what have members of the Government done? Every second day they introduce closure in order to get their Bills through, Bills which match their philosophy. They refuse to answer questions in the House of Commons. The Parliamentary Secretary has just hammered another nail into the coffin of accountability of the Government to the people of Canada. People are wondering what the function of the House of Commons is. Does it play a recruitment function for future Governments? No, it does not. The turnover in this place is one-third every election. It is no longer a law-making body. So what does it do? It is certainly not accountable to the people of Canada with motions such as the one introduced by the Parliamentary Secretary.

I would now like to deal with why the Government wants this Bill shoved through Parliament. It wants it shoved through Parliament because it opens up, so the Government says, competition in the trucking industry. It says to all truckers in Canada today, "We don't care how much money you spent on your truck and your trucking service, we don't care how much insurance you had to pay, we don't care anything about that, but what we are doing with this Bill is opening up the industry to more competition from the United States".

It is what they call the Freedom to Move philosphy. They are saying let us have freedom to move not only in the private sector, but in the public sector with Crown corporations, with Marine Atlantic, with the ferry boats that go to the different provinces, and with the freight that is moved from one province to another in eastern Canada. Let us allow the carrier to bring up the cost of freight to match his charges. They say to Prince Edward Island or Newfoundland that, "We will jack up the freight charges to pay for the ferry transportation, we will jack up the charges to the people carrying the freight, the truckers, CN, and the people who are driving their cars across to bring it up to a profit-making venture".

If that is done, and when that is accomplished, what is the need of the Crown corporation? What is the need of it, because nobody will be travelling. Obviously, something will have to be done. People will have to start moving, because they certainly cannot afford to live on those islands with the projected increase in freight costs. What will be done with the loss of service along the coastline, with the coastal boat service now having to make money in the Province of Newfoundland, or the bus service that replaced the rail now having to break even across the province? The fact of the matter regarding the bus service is that it has actually been making money to pay for the salaries in Montreal for the past two or three years.

Under this Bill the fittest survive with an influx of competition from the United States. If it was fair competition, it would not be so bad. Where is the competition when gasoline can be purchased for three-quarters or close to half the cost it is on the Canadian side; that is using our oil that the Government has sold cheaper to a United States refinery than to a Canadian refinery? That is the policy of the Government. A United States carrier will start off with cheaper everything. He moves up here and by himself knocks out predatory pricing, and all of the carriers from one end of Canada to the other. That can happen under this Bill.

One wonders who started this Bill. Was it for the free trade negotiators with the United States? Was this another card to remove all the obstacles to all of the trucking companies in the United States so they could move up here and take over the Canadian market? It could be that that is exactly the purpose of this legislation. It is on the free trade table. It is the deregulation of the trucking industry, the rail industry, the airline industry, and of every other industry so that the Americans can take advantage of the market.

That is what the Government has decided to push through Parliament, again using closure and taking away the rights of the Chamber. It must be admitted that at times certain subjects before the House are addressed too thoroughly; sometimes there are too many speakers and the thing goes on and on. But that is the mechanism for the examination of legislation that we have under the Canadian parliamentary system which was borrowed from the British parliamentary system. Bills that drastically affect Canada, that are bad for Canada but for in respect of the Government does not want to face the music in the standing committees, on radio, on television, and in the House day after day, are the Bills that the Government puts through by closure—those are the ones that it shoves through. The Government has been shoving through a lot of Bills, and that means that there have been a lot of Bills that adversely affect Canadians.

With those few words, I am going to conclude my remarks on the motion put forward by the Government. It is typical. I cannot find anything more typical than this motion presently before the House. There is no sense now in talking about Bill C-19. There is no sense going over it. There is no sense going over the clauses, because it all goes out the window. We cannot even talk about what the Canadian Trucking Association has said. It does not matter any more what they told the standing committee, because closure has been introduced. Our time has been limited by this great Government that told us they were going to restore parliamentary democracy. A moment ago, I was looking for that particular promise number 299 in the list of promises that were made. The Government is certainly restoring democracy; it is democracy as they see fit.

The overriding concern and interest of the Canadian Trucking Association, CP Rail, or of the travelling public on an aircraft is that the Government, by an organized and planned initiative, is putting through this Chamber a series of Bills and laws that will mean that the more rural areas of Canada will receive a lesser service than the richer areas of Canada. The philosophy in this country was always that a carrier, whether it was on the road, in the air, or on the ocean, operating under federal and provincial licences had a responsibility to the people who were being served, either with freight or as passengers. The carriers were told that if they were going to go into the big financial markets of central Canada, or of western Canada, or anywhere, then there was a responsibility to serve the less profitable areas. The philosophy was that if you lived in Newfoundland, Ontario, Alberta, or British Columbia, the regulations would be such as to maximize the possibility of equality of service across the country.

We are now seeing a series of Bills that throw this completely and totally out of the window. The Bill presently before the House, on which the Government has imposed closure, will, over a period of time, destroy the trucking industry in this country. Was it great to see deregulation of the aircraft industry with all of those companies competing under deregulation for routes in various parts of this country? Where are some of those companies today, the ones that have not been taken over by the major carriers into complete monopolies? Those areas today are wondering what happened to the jet service that was there a year ago. Now there are two-propeller aircraft trying to serve the area. Where have they gone as a result of competition?

That is what will happen to the trucking industry. The United States trucking firms will come into the country under this Bill. They will be given treatment preferential to that given Canadian truckers, and they will assume the routes and take over. People will say that this is marvellous, we have all these United States truckers here, but Canadians will be laid off, and Canadian truckers will go bankrupt. That is the price they will have to pay for this competition. The United States truckers will not buy our gas or pay the taxes on the gas that they will have to purchase on the Canadian side of the border.

That is my short contribution to this particular Bill and motion before the House. I would encourage all members to vote against the motion introduced by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate my friend from Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) for his very good speech. Since the Hon. Member mentioned this, I wish to ask him a question dealing with those 338 Tory promises which have not been kept. One in particular, regarding transportation, reads:

> Recognize and respond to the special needs of the Atlantic region for better transportation facilities to strengthen the economic base of the entire area and provide jobs both with the transportation sector and in those other sectors which rely on an efficient transportation system to make their products competitive.

That is a Tory promise. Coming from Newfoundland as the Hon. Member does, knowing about the issues of job creation and the high unemployment rate we have had over the years, and knowing the Member for Moncton (Mr. Cochrane) whose concerns we seldom hear about in this House, but knowing what happened in Moncton to the CN shops, could the Hon. Member comment regarding that promise made by the Conservative Government which was not kept and is far from being up to par.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, we had 449 lay-offs in Moncton just last week in rail. We have seen lay-offs and cut-backs with CN Marine. The Government almost got away the other day with laying off 350 people by changes in routes and by changes in the frequency of the ferry boat travelling from north Sydney to Port aux Basques in Newfoundland. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) had to step in personally to put things back the way they were; he had no choice. As to transportation and the fulfilling of that great promise made in the election campaign, what did the now Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) say in St. John's, Newfoundland? He stood up and said, "I am not afraid to inflict prosperity on Newfoundland". What are the Tories doing now? They are inflicting prosperity on France.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker: There is no example that I can think of where the Government of Canada has actually increased employment in transportation or increased the modes of transportation in Newfoundland or in the Atlantic region. The only thing I can see is that the Government created a Crown corporation. That is the first thing the Government did, yet it was opposed to Crown corporations. The Government was going to sell off all the Crown corporations, but it created one in Atlantic Canada called Marine Atlantic. Why did the Government do that? To save $20 million. We can see where the Government is saving it; in people's jobs, salaries, the discontinuation of routes, and in cutting back on what coastal communities the coastal boat will drop in at. All we have seen is a downgrading in service and a complete reversal of what the Government promised before the election. At this rate there is no hope in the world that the Government will receive anywhere close to the votes it got in the last election. In fact, I would say that Atlantic Canada will probably at this rate elect all Conservatives in the next election!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for my colleague. He made a very vigourous attack on the Government's legislation. We appreciate that because this legislation deserves to be attacked. It brings to mind a few words of Jonathan Swift when he described the differences between political Parties as the "big enders and the little enders". He was talking about an egg at that time and it was just a matter of which end you came in on, the big end or the little end. While the Member attacks the impact of deregulation on the trucking industry his colleagues in the Ontario legislature are introducing legislation to do the same thing that the federal Government is doing in this Parliament. Would it make any difference what the Liberals would do if they were in office? Would they follow the lead of their Ontario colleagues? Would it be just a matter of the big enders and the little enders, or do members of the Liberal Opposition have any real commitment when they attack the Government regarding the negative impacts of the deregulation package on the trucking industry?

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, not only will there be no Conservatives elected from Atlantic Canada in the next election, there will be no New Democrats will be elected from Atlantic Canada either in the next election. It was a joke when I said the Conservatives would be elected.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker: The Hon. Member has to remember there is a fellow by the name of Pawley, Manitoba's Premier Howard Pawley. He joined with the Premiers of the other provinces in condemning this Conservative Government for introducing Bill C-19. The Government threatened the provincial Governments and said unless they bring in legislation, then it would bring in legislation to do what the provinces should be doing.

I have just gone over the press clippings. Not only Mr. Pawley but the Premier of Ontario and various premiers are very angry at the federal Conservative Government. All premiers agreed that if they are to do something like this it should be done over a much longer period of time. Actually the Government is out on its own. It is being criticized by Conservative Premiers, Liberal Premiers and New Democratic Party Premiers on this issue of deregulation of the trucking industry. I do not think you can find that any former Liberal Government—and I have been around here awhile—has ever said it would deregulate the trucking industry to the point of what this Bill is outlining to us today.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, is the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) aware that there are 1,000 Canadian trucking companies doing business in the United States? Is the Hon. Member aware of the U.S. Bureau of Labour Statistics which indicates that between 1980 and 1985 U.S. trucking employment increased 22 per cent and the wage levels of U.S. trucking employers were 40 per cent higher than the average private sector employee, despite the U.S. recession at the time? Does the Hon. Member realize that transporter truckers from Canada have increased their share of total transporter traffic by between 8 per cent and 12 per cent between 1980 and 1984, 1984 being the last year for which we have figures? Does he not think that our trucking industry can compete south of the border? Coming from a region that is resource based, does the Hon. Member not have a thought for the shippers, for the men and women who work in our resource industries who need to have an efficient, competitive trucking industry if they are to get their goods to market to keep their own jobs? Not the Member from Gander—Twillingate but the previous speaker for the Liberals told us that these reforms would have a devastating effect on the trucking industry. Can the Hon. Member tell us why the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) when he was Minister of Transport proposed to the provinces the same type of reform that is in Bill C-19? I understand the Member from Fort Garry threatened the provinces that if they did not agree to reform the federal Government would step in and take over regulation of interprovincial trucking.

Mr. Keeper: Repeat that so he can hear it.

Miss MacDonald: They never listen.

Mr. Kilgour: Will the Hon. Member comment on all of the matters that I have raised?

Mr. Baker: I will be short, as you requested, Mr. Speaker, but I would remind the Hon. Member that this is not the United States. Newfoundland is not the State of Maine and Ontario is not the State of Montana. Number one, we are not the United States and we cannot compare the two.

• (1230)

As far as how wonderful competition will be, I wonder if the Government would tell us what provinces are in agreement with it. That is the question.

Mr. Tobin: Ten different sets of regulations.

Mr. Baker: There is a great deal of diversity across Canada while this Bill is being shoved through the House of Commons. The Hon. Member should ask a trucker who has put up his own money for a truck and who pays for his own gas if he is in agreement with this Bill. Of course the Americans are in agreement with this Bill. Perhaps that is the concern of the Government; if the United States agrees, fine, put it through.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order! The period for questions and comments has now expired. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member from Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Gray).

[English]

Mr. Darryl L. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, now back to the real world. I would like to begin by putting a few remarks on the record concerning safety.

Concern has been expressed that reform of economic regulations will affect trucking safety and that somehow the federal and provincial Governments will slacken in their resolve to protect the safety of highway travellers. Nothing could be further from the truth. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) has stated that safety is and will continue to be his first priority. That commitment has been stated in the national transportation policy set out in Clause 3 of Bill C-18 and it has been restated day after day in the operations of the federal and provincial Governments.

As we should all know very well, the provincial Governments already have effective highway safety standards in place. Those standards are vigorously enforced and our highway safety record is very good compared to that of other countries. In ensuring that safe operations continue, our best allies are the truckers. They know that the biggest losers in unsafe operations are the truckers themselves.

Despite the high level of provincial safety regulations currently in place and despite our good record, the federal and provincial Governments are not resting on their laurels. A uniform national safety code for trucks and buses was approved by the federal and provincial Governments in October 1986. This code is a consolidation and an upgrading of the best safety standards in North America. Most of it is already in place in parts or in all of Canada.

Why then are we creating a national safety code? It is because it is something that is long overdue under any regulatory scheme. Under the code, we will be introducing increased uniformity and compatibility into the existing safety regulations for the benefit of the trucking industry and all users of the highways. I think it is important that we in the House should note, without grandstanding and play-acting, that it be clear for all truckers from the East Coast to the West Coast that the Government is very sincere when it talks about safety. We are not reinventing the wheel, nor are we starting from scratch. To even intimate such a thing would be to ignore 30 years of work on the part of the provinces.

There has been some concern expressed by the trucking industry in certain parts of Canada and repeated by Hon. Members opposite that the national safety code will not be completely in place when the new Motor Vehicle Transport Act is implemented on January 1, 1988. Let me inform the House of exactly what is there now and what will be there in the way of highway safety programs and standards for trucks and buses. The following five programs are in place in each and every province: First, driver testing. A driver-licence system which consists of different classes of licences that require periodic testing of truck drivers and filing of medical reports is in existence as well as stringent medical standards for truck drivers and extensive knowledge and skill testing for those who wish to qualify for a driver's licence. Second, driver control. No province allows any driver to hold more than one driver's licence. Truck drivers' licences are downgraded following identification of medical problems. There are demerit point and licence-suspension programs as well as the enforcement of impaired driving laws and rules of the road. Three, vehicle safety enforcement. Vehicle inspection programs are carried out on company premises and on the roadside. Load security compliance is enforced by all but one province and the Territories and weight and dimension limits are enforced at all weigh scales. Four, insurance. All jurisdictions have mandatory insurance requirements. Five, dangerous goods legislation. This is very important for the transportation industry in Canada. Uniform laws and standards are in effect across the country covering vehicles, driver training and placarding.

On or before January 1, 1988, under the uniform code, the following eight new initiatives will be implemented in each and every province. First, the CCMTA single-driver licence concept is an upgrading of existing systems which will enhance enforcement and control. Second, the CCMTA classified driver-licence system will standardize the classification systems presently in place. Third, CCMTA medical standards for drivers will involve minor modifications to the present system. Fourth, CCMTA model regulations for security of loads will see minor modification to existing standards and participation by all jurisdictions. Fifth, training courses for dangerous-goods trainers is a new initiative designed to provide qualified instructors to teach drivers how to handle dangerous goods. Sixth, we will join the Commercial Vehicle Safety Alliance involving inspection and out-of-service criteria. Canada has a Canadian Vehicle Safety Alliance now in place which is similar, but all jurisdictions have agreed to join the U.S. Alliance for North American recognition and uniformity. This involves a roadside inspection system which is reciprocally recognized in each member jurisdiction. Seventh, individual companies had first-aid programs previously but now all but drivers will be required to know first-aid to a national standard. Eighth, the carrier fitness, entry and control criteria complements the entry standards contained in Bill C-19.

I have just described a comprehensive set of minimum and uniform standards which will be in place before Bill C-19 is scheduled to be proclaimed on January 1, 1988, exactly as requested by the trucking industry and by Hon. Members opposite.

This is not all. There is more. The following 10 items will be implemented after January 1, 1988. By October 1988, vehicle maintenance standards will be uniform in all provinces. By January 1989, knowledge and performance tests for drivers will be uniform and standards will be raised. By January 1989, driver-examiner training programs will have uniform standards and will be expanded to provide ongoing training. By January 1989, hours-of-service regulations will be in place in all provinces and legislation for this is required in some provinces. By March 1989, self-certification standards and procedures for training drivers will be uniform in all jurisdictions. There will be two initiatives regarding records systems. By March 1989, operator profiles will be introduced. These will be safety records for each and every company holding a licence. By January 1989, driver profiles will be improved and the system will be made uniform in all provinces. By August 1989, there will be procedures for the audit of employers' records. This new initiative includes a new enforcement procedure. By August 1989, there will be criteria for short-term suspension of drivers' licences. This new initiative is designed especially for impaired drivers. By December 1989, the new enforcement of an interprovincial record exchange will be a tool which will give each province access to the profiles of all trucking companies and drivers. By December 1989, there will be a new enforcement measure for audit and inspection criteria which is aimed at compliance with safety requirements in terminals.

All of these improvements will be in effect before January 1, 1990, a full year prior to implementation of the fitness-only entry test in Bill C-19. I also want to emphasize that the dates I have cited for full implementation mean that all provinces and Territories will be onstream by that date. Many provinces will have many of these items in place prior to those dates and some will even be ready with all elements before January 1, 1988.

This is a dynamic process. There will continue to be improvement to the system beyond 1990. It is completely unreasonable to ask that the safety code be completely in place before economic reform takes place. Some of the items I have mentioned require changes to provincial legislation and, therefore, cannot be proceeded with any faster. It is a red herring to suggest that we should delay economic regulatory reform until all the safety initiatives are in place. In many ways our safety system is far more advanced than that in place in the U.S. As I said earlier, even there deregulation does not seem to have a measurably negative effect on safety.

In summary, it should now be apparent that, as the Minister of Transport has said on many occasions, safety of the transportation system is the number one priority. When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) brought in his economic statement in the fall of 1984, both opposition Parties predicted that hundreds of thousands of jobs would be lost.

My riding was under the thumb of the Liberal Government for almost 25 years. The rules and regulations of the transportation system under that administration did not work for us. There are three types of people in our society who depend entirely on the vast transportation system of our country. They are the consumers, the shippers and the carriers. The opposition Parties continually grandstand and make false predictions. They want to sow fear that things will not work. I can understand the mentality of the Liberal Party in saying that. For 25 years it made things not work.

Transportation is not a political issue. It is crucial to our society. We proved the Opposition wrong on the economy. We have reduced the national deficit while creating over 700,000 jobs. All regions of Canada have benefited. The Government does not believe in grandstanding and sowing fear in the hearts of Canadians. The Government believes in the consultative process and the economic development of the country.

In conclusion, I am honoured to be the vice-chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport to which Bill C-19 is to be referred. The fact that the Government is willing to refer this Bill to that committee and have public hearings shows the Government's openness and willingness to listen to concerned people. The Government wants a National Transportation Act which will allow our consumers, shippers and carriers to compete internationally.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I remind the Hon. Member that the House has not adopted the motion proposed by the Parliamentary Secretary that this Bill be referred to a standing committee. The Bill is still to be sent to a legislative committee. When the Government comes to its senses, stops pushing minorities around, and starts having meaningful debate on Bills, we may be a little more co-operative in terms of adopting such recommendations. Therefore, despite the fact that we would probably favour the referral of this Bill to a standing committee, as is indicated in today's Order Paper, the Bill is to be referred to a legislative committee.

During the last election campaign the Tories made 339 promises. They made a very strong commitment to Atlantic Canada. I would like to read one promise which is pertinent to the area from which the Hon. Member comes and is very important to the communities he represents. The promise was to:

—initiate discussions with the New England states on a joint cost-shared corridor or road system to reduce transportation costs from Atlantic Canada to Ontario and Quebec as well as open up additional business and trade opportunities between Atlantic Canada and the New England states

Is the Member aware of any discussions which have been opened with the New England states about this joint cost-shared corridor or road system? We are now two and a half years into the mandate of the Government. Does the Hon. Member know whether the Government has received representations recently from members of the Tory Party with regard to opening up this corridor to lower costs and make it more feasible for Maritime products to come to the central Canadian market?

Mr. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned in earlier remarks in the House on Bill C-18, one of the problems confronting the Maritime provinces is that they have unequal transportation rights with the New England states. Under the regulations now in place the Atlantic provinces are restrained with regard to container traffic. They are not on the same competitive basis as the New England states. It is important that our transportation regulations be changed in order that they can be on an equal footing with the New England states. Since it has taken 20 years to modify the National Transportation Act, it is absolutely crucial that we are able to compete on transportation costs in order to be on a level footing with our neighbours to the south.

It is a misnomer to speak, as the Opposition does, about deregulation. Fear is being sown that everything will be wide open. The new National Transportation Act will not mean deregulation, it will mean economic regulatory reform. Once we have fair and equitable transportation costs we will be able to compete and succeed.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, is the member aware whether the Atlantic provinces have been consulted? Are they agreeable to having this corridor put in place? In addition to local licences, extra provincial truck licences will be required. Can the member tell me whether all Atlantic provinces have agreed to such an extra provincial truck licence scheme? If so, has this scheme been extended to include the New England states which are involved?

Mr. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) has raised the precise problem with which the country is confronted. In the past we have had different regulations in each of the 10 provinces, the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. That is the fundamental problem which we are confronting with Bill C-19. As mentioned earlier, the provincial Ministers of Transportation have been meeting since October, 1986 in an effort to put together a uniform code. The goal of the Government is to provide for interprovincial trucking rather than requiring goods to be shipped via the United States.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I noted that toward the end of his speech the Hon. Member said he was quite in favour of supporting the motion to send this Bill to the Legislative Commttiee. Is he aware that the motion we are debating now is not to send this Bill to committee but "that the question be now put"? It is a form of closure of the debate.

In light of this re-regulation, as he prefers to call it, does the Hon. Member honestly believe that one hour and 28 minutes of debate, shared equally by the three Parties of this House, is enough time to debate such a dramatic change in the transportation system of this country?

Mr. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I believe there was a motion to refer Bill C-19 to the standing committee. I repeat that, given the grandstanding by the Opposition in the House, the importance of this Bill makes it absolutely essential that Bill C-19—indeed Bill C-18—be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport so that further views and opinions can be heard in public hearings. This will allow Canadians to be duly informed and will ensure that Bill C-18 and Bill C-19 can form a National Transportation Act that will fit the needs of all Canadians.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that the process this House follows, as described by the Hon. Member, is the one to which we always revert. Indeed, the committee stage is where people outside of the House may apply to be heard. However, I wonder whether the Hon. Member perhaps skittered around my question.

It seems to me that if people are to feel comfortable in applying to appear before committees they would want some indication from the Government that they will be heard. The motion we are now debating was placed before the House after one hour and 28 minutes of debate. Does this not leave the impression that the Government is pushing the Bill through to the point where individuals and organizations who are interested in this process will also be limited in their ability to appear before the Standing Committee or any other committee that will be dealing with this legislation?

Mr. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, the opposite is true. The Bill will be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport. Its members have been on that committee for two and a half years and have always been open to public hearings to hear many representations and meet the concerns of the people. As a new Member of Parliament, the openness of the Government to consult and listen to the people since 1984 is completely new. That was not the case in the past.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I cannot help but ask a final supplementary question. If it is indeed the function of the Government to increase consultation with the people, why is it refusing to listen to the Opposition who are the representatives of the people, no less than Members on the Government side? Why is it limiting us to one hour 28 minutes in this debate?

Mr. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, far be it for me to insult the Opposition, but during the debate on Bill C-18 last week I heard the speeches of certain opposition Members. By times, to use a maritime expression, I heard members of the Opposition speak to Bill C-75 when they should have been talking about Bill C-18, and I heard Members talk about referring Bill C-18 to a legislative committee when it was being referred to the Standing Committee.

I believe that the new reform of the House is important because it will allow the Standing Committee on Transport to hear the direct concerns of all those people involved in the transportation industry.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments have terminated. Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the issue we are dealing with here is as old as the country itself: is there any economic reason for Canada to exist? Bill C-18 and Bill C-19 have demonstrated the Government's tendency toward adopting the old laissez-faire economic philosophy that was popular at the time of American independence. The neo-conservatism of those in the current Reagan administration, which the Government of Canada is copying, has led to the philosophy of less government involvement in order to allow free market forces to prevail.

Unfortunately, if Canada indeed lets the free forces of the market proliferate, the market forces in this country will naturally switch from the east-west configuration that we have attempted to maintain since 1867 to a north-south configuration. When we compare our economies, our population, and the political and economic power that goes with their size, eventually the dominating force will come from the south.

We are not only talking about control of the trucking industry or its deregulation, as the Government attempts to say, but the economic future of Canadians. Indeed, will they have an economic future in Canada, where western Canadians and eastern Canadians continue to trade and provide the base on which social interaction can continue? Without social and economic interaction there will eventually be no political interaction. It is absolutely vital to the maintenance of this country that we keep those east-west links at work. The trucking system is only one of the many policies that this country has adopted over the years in an attempt to maintain Canada as a separate and independent nation.

Since I am about to move on to the next portion of my speech, perhaps I might call it one o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When Orders of the Day are called, the Hon. Member will have 15 minutes remaining in his debate, plus 10 minutes for questions and comments.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

THE LATE ARNOLD DAVIDSON DUNTON

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Over the weekend, Mr. Speaker, Canada lost an outstanding Canadian in the person of Mr. Arnold Davidson Dunton who died at the age of 75.

Holder of doctorates in sciences and law, he was directly involved in several aspects of Canadian life and culture.

He was a journalist in pre-war years and worked as a war correspondent from 1942 to 1945 when he was appointed to the management of the CBC.

[English]

In 1963 he accepted the Government's request to serve as Co-Chairman of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism, more widely known as the Laurendeau-Dunton Commission. He was Director and later President of Carleton University, Chairman of the Ontario Press Council, and was involved at many stages of his career with newspapers and publishing. Mr. Dunton played a leading role in maintaining and preserving our cultural identity. Today, on behalf of my colleagues and myself, I wish to pay him the tribute he so richly deserves.

PORNOGRAPHY

CALL FOR REINTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO AMEND CRIMINAL CODE

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, shortly before the House recessed last June, the then Minister of Justice introduced new legislation against pornography. This was in response to an exhaustive study, the Fraser report on Pornography and Prostitution, plus a great deal of input from Canadians in all walks of life.

Unfortunately, the Bill died on the Order Paper as a result of the proroguing of the session. However, we can all be assured that the spirit and purpose of the Bill have not died. My constituents in Fraser Valley East support the Government's initiative in proposing new measures prohibiting pornography and wish to emphasize the importance of this Bill.

I urge the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) to reintroduce the Bill which makes amendments to Canada's Criminal Code, as soon as possible. Laws are society's guide for behaviour and in times like these we need a strong and moral framework by which to live.

AGRICULTURE

INDEXED GRADING OF BEEF PROPOSED

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, beef producers who attended the Canadian Meat Council meeting last Friday believe that the grading system for beef is discriminatory and should be changed. Sometimes beef producers suffer up to 20 cents per pound difference on a dressed weight difference in the prices they receive for A-1 heifers as compared with the price received for an A-1 steer. The price should be indexed for each grade so that the price would reflect the true quality and market value instead of unnecessary items such as gender.

When the grading system for hogs was introduced this gender discrimination was eliminated and the distinction was no longer necessary. Beef producers, from different prospectives, are asking for indexed grading and, in the name of fairness, I believe they should have it.

HEALTH

IMMIGRANT DOCTORS—DIFFICULTY OBTAINING INTERNSHIPS

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, many new immigrants feel they are underemployed, more particularly several medical doctors of Polish origin who are currently fighting for the right to practise their profession in this country. Their qualifications were approved by the Medical Council of Canada. They have successfully completed the evaluation examinations but none are able to practise their skills here because they cannot obtain an internship position which is required by the province in which a physician proposes to practise.

Some of these doctors are now Canadian citizens. They came here as physicians. The national federal authorities have found their qualifications satisfactory. The taxpayers of Canada will not be required to subsidize any additional training. There are numerous rural and remote areas which need a doctor. Surely the provinces can find a place in their internship programs for those who have the skills to provide a service in areas of need.

THE LATE NORMAN MCLAREN

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, this House will undoubtedly echo the homage paid throughout Canada and the world to Norman McLaren whose death late last month in the Montreal region ended a career which gave this film producer, one of the greatest, access to the elite group of men and women who have made a name for themselves in arts, science, politics, or literature.

In 1941, McLaren left his native Scotland at the age of 27 and came to Canada. Since then the National Film Board has been his centre of activities.

Norman McLaren has no fewer than 80 works to his credit at the NFB. Who, in movie houses, in school and on television has not thoroughly enjoyed his short films on Canadian popular songs, and his philosophical productions such as Neighbours, Il était une chaise?

Here is what Montreal Le Devoir journalist Nathalie Petrowski wrote about Norman McLaren last January 31: "He was an artist, a real artist, an artist of a now extinct breed, an artist who was also a researcher ever prepared to question what he had discovered the day before, a patient and passionate man anxious to go to the end, and even further yet, on the other side of things."

With me, this House will certainly want to express its admiration and affection for Norman McLaren, this great artist, this Canadian citizen by his own choice, this citizen of the world, this modest and good man as he was.

DISASTERS

HINTON RAIL DISASTER REPORT—IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Justice Foisy recently reported on the Hinton, Alberta, train disaster. In his report Judge Foisy submitted a number of important recommendations that will strengthen railway safety.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) acted quickly in announcing major reforms to improve and toughen the safety standards of Canada's railways. Not only has the Minister identified longstanding rail safety problems, he has also taken decisive action in requesting a 60-day response from the railways and the rail unions.

As well, new railway safety legislation will be forthcoming. A new transportation accident investigation body will be created. There will be measures taken to deal with those who tamper with railway safety devices. Funds are being made available for implementation of the advanced train control system.

The Minister of Transport should be commended for his prompt and detailed response to the Foisy Report. In so responding he has reaffirmed the primary importance of transportation safety for all Canadians.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

INCREASED DISABILITY BENEFITS—REDUCTION IN PAYMENTS BY BRITISH COLUMBIA GOVERNMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, there is no question that disabled Canadians require greater support from both the federal and provincial Governments. I think we would all agree with that. A positive step was a $151 per month maximum increase to the federal disability pension which began on January 1, 1987. It was a very positive step. It meant a great deal to the disabled of Canada, giving them hope that more opportunities would be made available to them.

These hopes were dashed recently when the Government of British Columbia cut its financial support for the disabled by the same amount as the federal Government increase. The British Columbia Government is actually taking money from the disabled, money from the federal Government which was rightfully theirs.

How low can the provincial Government go? The federal Government actually wrote to the provincial Governments requesting that they pass along this $151 per month maximum increase to the disabled, the people who rightfully deserve it. Yet the Province of British Columbia has agreed to take the money and not allow it to go to the people to whom it was directed.

I encourage the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) to contact his provincial counterparts and encourage them to pass along this much needed increase to the disabled, which was the original intention.

ENERGY

ALBERTA OIL AND GAS INDUSTRY—RESTORATION OF EARNED DEPLETION ALLOWANCE ADVOCATED

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, Alberta needs federal assistance, and it needs it now. There are over 30,000 people in my province out of work due to the drastic fall in oil prices.

Out of 470 drilling rigs, 118 are making hole today. Some 50 per cent of the geophysical contractors are out of work. One-half of the people in the petroleum services industry, such as water-haulers, well-testers, and mud companies are out of work. There will be little or no activity until oil prices stabilize. That will take 10 to 12 months.

Alberta needs a temporary stimulus. I call upon the Government to restore the earned depletion allowance. It should apply to exploration and development expenditures. The write-offs should be deductible against total income of the taxpayer and be allowed to flow through to the investor.

AIR TRANSPORT

DEREGULATION—EFFECTS OF POLICY IN NORTH

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, we have already begun to see the detrimental effects of the present Conservative Government's efforts to deregulate the airline and transportation industries. It is obvious that the increased competition in consumer selection promised by the Tories will not be available to the people of the north.

Even before Bill C-18 is passed we begin to see the effects of this new policy. The buy-out of CP Air by PWA has eliminated a major carrier from the market-place and has seriously decreased the selection available to many Canadian consumers.

Conservative Members assured us that this would not happen. However, in Whitehorse, CP has 10 weekly flights while PWA used to have five. With the purchase of CP by PWA this has all changed. PWA has now announced that it will suspend its service to Whitehorse for the next seven weeks. And we do not know what it will do at the end of this period. So much for added service for Canadian travellers. To allow this de facto monopoly through the PWA takeover of CP makes a farce of deregulation.

The people of northern Canada deserve better than that. For far too long the people of northern Canada have been treated like second-class citizens by the federal Government. Postal service, economic policy, and now transportation policy all show that Conservative policies ignore the real needs of people in rural and northern areas.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT—CALL FOR CANCELLATION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, this month unemployment in Newfoundland is 19.2 per cent. That is up from 18.9 per cent across the province last month. In my own riding unemployment is 26.5 per cent. That is up 4.4 per cent from 22.1 per cent last month.

Is it any wonder that Newfoundland fishermen want and deserve every pound of fish they can get in order to put bread and butter on the table? These tragic numbers speak to the urgent need for the Government of Canada to cancel the Canada-France fishing treaty. They also speak for the urgent need of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to reconsider his view of a few days ago that he would not listen to the views of Canada's Premiers who will assemble this evening to talk about this emergency problem.

It is time to put an end to the family feud in the Conservative Party that is turning the fishermen of Newfoundland into economic orphans. As the Member for St. John's West (Mr.

Crosbie) and the Premier of Newfoundland go through a messy divorce, the victims are the fishermen of Newfoundland and Labrador, and the rest of Atlantic Canada. I again call upon the Government, in particular the Prime Minister, to cancel what is clearly a bad deal for my province and for my country.

ABORTION

ONTARIO REPORT RECOMMENDING ESTABLISHMENT OF CLINICS

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, the Ontario Liberal Government of Premier David Peterson has commissioned a report which recommends that Ontario establish 12 legalized abortion clinics. At a time when the Supreme Court is deciding on the legality of the Morgentaler Clinic, the Ontario Government has already decided on its course of action. This means that Ontario has legally recognized free-standing abortion clinics.

Over 70,000 abortions a year occur in Canada, and they are used primarily as a means of birth control. The Ontario Government is proceeding arbitrarily without consulting the people. So much for the major campaign promise of the Liberal Government to shut down free-standing abortion clinics.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

CALL FOR HALT TO LAY-OFFS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to urge the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté) to assume his responsibilities as the Minister responsible for the Cape Breton Development Corporation. I urge that the Minister exercise his authority and use the provisions of Section 99 of the Financial Administration Act to order the Cape Breton Development Corporation to stop terminating jobs in the Cape Breton Development Corporation. The Minister will know that on April 1, 1987, 240 jobs will be terminated. The Minister also knows that on April 1, 1988, an additional 240 jobs will be terminated. The Minister also knows that 350 people have taken early retirement, and those positions are not being filled by other employees.

I would ask that the Minister responsible immediately order the senior management of that Corporation to stop the job terminations, and to begin negotiations on a new collective agreement which will provide dignity and economic viability to the miners who have worked at the Cape Breton Development Corporation for the last number of years. I urge him to do it forthwith.

TAPING OF TELEVISED MOVIES

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, this past weekend First Choice Superchannel unscrambled their signal as part of a promotional exercise to increase subscriptions. As part of this sales gimmick, they continually suggested to viewers that movies appearing late at night could be taped on VCRs so that they could be enjoyed at a more convenient time. This is a flagrant disregard of the existing copyright law. It directly contradicts the spirit and intent of copyright reform, as put forth in a report from the Subcommittee on Copyright.

I am not naive enough to suggest that the taping of movies does not occur. But it is altogether a different matter when a federally regulated distributor openly suggests on public airwaves that people disregard the law. I am sure that Canadians would not appreciate a public call encouraging shoplifting. In principle it is the same thing. I call upon the CRTC to investigate this matter and take disciplinary action.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

RESUMPTION OF NUCLEAR TESTS BY UNITED STATES

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, on February 3 the United States carried out its first nuclear test of 1987. This test occurred despite the knowledge that the Soviet Union would end its self-imposed, unilateral moratorium on nuclear testing should such an event take place. The Soviet moratorium which began on August 6, 1985, on the fortieth anniversary of Hiroshima, was three times renewed by the Soviets. It appeared that these moves could have been small but significant steps toward a comprehensive test ban treaty to outlaw all nuclear tests, had the American administration responded in kind.

It is indeed unfortunate that mankind is being propelled further into the nuclear arms race due to the regressive notion that nuclear testing can help.

BANKS AND BANKING

FAILURE OF CHARTERED BANKS TO SUPPLY CREDIT CARD INFORMATION TO FINANCE COMMITTEE

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, last June, by unanimous consent, the House established an investigation by the Finance Committee into credit card interest rates in Canada which lasted two months. At the end of its hearings the Finance Committee requested additional statistical information on credit card balances and income from all witnesses. The five large chartered banks have failed to respond to the committee with the information requested. Meanwhile, interest rates have fallen substantially and not one of these five chartered banks has reduced credit card interest rates.

The time for polite requests has ended. At the next full meeting of the Finance Committee I intend to move a motion to summons the material from these five chartered banks and, as part of that motion, to indicate that, if the material is not forthcoming in two weeks, the chief executive officers of the five chartered banks should be brought before the bar of the House of Commons to explain their continuing contempt before Parliament. If there is to be a challenge of wills between the banks and Parliament, let there be no doubt as to who is going to win.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE ECONOMY

SUPPORT FOR GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, I received a good message from my constituents this weekend. Many of them congratulated the Government on the lowering of interest rates and on lowering of the deficit. They wanted me to give the following message to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson): "Keep it up. We like the policies of the Government, and you are going to lead us out of the morass into which the Liberals took us for 20 years".

THE LATE MR. JUSTICE JULIEN CHOUINARD

Mr. Speaker: I want to draw all Hon. Members' attention to the passing of a distinguished jurist of the Supreme Court of Canada, Mr. Justice Chouinard. I would ask that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) be recognized.

[Translation]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, today I would like to pay tribute to the Hon. Julien Chouinard, Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada, who died last Friday. Mr. Justice Chouinard was well-known for his innate sense of justice and equity.

[English]

Born in Quebec City, he attended Laval University and Oxford University. He was a Rhodes Scholar and was called to the bar in the Province of Quebec in 1953. Mr. Justice Chouinard was Deputy Minister of Justice in Quebec from 1965 to 1968 and Secretary General of the Quebec Cabinet for seven years, and served Quebec as Judge of the Quebec Court of Appeal for four years, truly a well loved son of Quebec. Mr. Chouinard was appointed to the Supreme Court of Canada in September, 1979.

[Translation]

He helped draft most of the judgments handed down by the Supreme Court and was a master of the written word.

[English]

Mr. Justice Chouinard's contribution to his province and country was great, and his loss will be felt by the legal community at large.

We mourn the loss of a judge who was truly exceptional. On behalf of the federal Government and of all Canadians, I would like to offer my sincere condolences to Mrs. Chouinard and her children.

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join my Opposition colleagues in paying tribute to the Hon. Julien Chouinard. I have a number of reasons for wishing to make my own contribution this afternoon. Personally, I had the privilege of working with Mr. Chouinard for several years, and Members on this side of the House have other reasons for mourning his loss. In fact, the Leader of our Party was a Rhodes scholar at the time Mr. Chouinard, also a Rhodes scholar, was going to Oxford. When Julien was President of the Junior Law Society of Quebec City, our Party leader was President of the Junior Law Society of Montreal. It is these memories that give us further reason to mourn the passing of a man who served this country so well.

As I said earlier, I worked with him when he was Secretary General of the Cabinet in Quebec City, and I and many Canadians with me are aware of the role he played during that very difficult time in October 1970.

Mr. Chouinard was, as they say in Quebec, "un homme solide", solid as a rock. He was level-headed, intelligent and a hard worker, but also very close to his family and a faithful friend. He had a sense of humour which he sometimes had trouble hiding behind a perpetually serious exterior.

When death comes as quickly as it did last Friday, it comes as a reminder to all of us in the midst of our busy lives that our existence is indeed fragile.

I wish to pay tribute to Mr. Justice Julien Chouinard, to his life and his career, and on my own behalf and on behalf of all my colleagues in the House of Commons, and of the Leader of our Party, I wish to extend to Mrs. Chouinard and all the members of her family our sincerest condolences.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of myself and my colleagues in the New Democratic Party, I also wish to pay tribute to Mr. Justice Julien Chouinard.

At the end of last week, Canada lost one of its most eminent and respected citizens. Mr. Justice Chouinard was for seven years a member of the highest court in the land, the Supreme Court of Canada, after a career in education and the senior Public Service.

• (1420)

[English]

Hon. Members have already spoken of the honour and distinction Judge Chouinard brought to his service not only to the Bench but to the public service of his province and Canada generally.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we deeply regret the loss of this extraordinary man. My colleagues and myself wish to join in extending our condolences to Mrs. Jeannine Chouinard, her son Julien and her two daughters, Lucie and Nicole.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I would ask Hon. Members to join me in the appropriate tribute of one-minute's silence.

[Whereupon the House stood in silence for one minute.]

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT—TERMS OF 1972 TREATY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, last week the Prime Minister attempted to lay the present situation off the coast of Newfoundland and Nova Scotia affecting our proposed agreement or treaty with France on the 1972 Canada-France treaty. I pointed out to him quite clearly that Article 3 of that treaty would have excluded any fishing of cod in the Gulf after May 15, 1986. How does the Prime Minister square last week's statements with what I take to be the official statement made by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans in an official release dated November 26 last? I would like to quote this statement to the House:

> We have told the French that under the 1972 treaty, we have no obligation to provide them with any fish to replace what they have been catching in the Gulf and, specifically, no obligation to provide them with any northern cod . . . The catch in the Gulf of St. Lawrence—is now terminated under the 1972 treaty.

Will the Prime Minister now use this opportunity to readjust the misrepresentations he made to the House as to the effect of that treaty?

Will he say to the House that because of what he has done to the people of the Atlantic provinces, particularly the people and fishermen of Newfoundland, he is ready to annul the agreement with France and renegotiate it, if necessary?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is nothing inconsistent at all with what I have said. I realize that the Liberals find everything funny. This involves the rights of the fishermen of Newfoundland and Labrador. It is not a laughing matter at all; it is very serious. We have indicated very much that the position we hold is, of course, and has been contested by the French. They contend that indeed they have other rights which they want to see exercised. The Government of Canada has historically taken a different position, obviously, and there is nothing at all at variance with what I have said or what the Minister has said in this regard. We have been perfectly consistent throughout the piece, which is a far cry from some of the statements being made by the Opposition on a very sensitive and important matter.

ALLOCATION OF FISH TO FRANCE—MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, what the Prime Minister has said to the House flies directly in the face of the words of the 1972 Treaty and, indeed, the interpretation made of that Treaty by the Minister of Fisheries on November 26.

We can all recall the Prime Minister saying last week in the House, and I want to quote him accurately: "We have not given away a single codfish, not a single one". That is what the Prime Minister said.

Mr. Crosbie: That is exactly right.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister of Transport is getting into this. I can understand his extreme anguish and his extreme embarrassment throughout this entire episode. However, the Minister of Fisheries said—and I commend the statement to the Minister of Transport—on November 26:

> We have offered the French substantial allocations of fish in Canadian waters.

That is a very generous offer to the French. Will the Prime Minister take the opportunity to correct the record, and will he tell us what happened between November last and January to persuade him to sell out the people of Newfoundland?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister has pointed out, there is nothing inconsistent in anything that has been said by members of the Government. In fact, with regard to the statement that not one additional codfish has been granted to France in this matter, that is indeed the case. The question of additional allocations being made to France in 1987 has been fully explained in past exchanges in the House as referring to allocations to which France is entitled under the EEC long-term agreement and other allocations provided for in the ground-fish plan for 1987, that amount to one-half the allocations to which France was entitled last year.

PROVINCIAL PREMIERS' MEETING

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the feeble explanation of the Minister of Fisheries, he has provoked, almost single-handedly, a deep crisis in federal-provincial relations. We have some Premiers meeting in Toronto today. Without in any way yielding federal jurisdiction over the matter—and we do not contest that—would the Prime Minister, instead of trying to save face by holding tough and hanging tough on this agreement with the French, admit that a very grievous error has been made and that the people of Atlantic Canada have been seriously let down? Won't he tell the Premiers that he is willing to listen to them and willing to renegotiate the deal?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to listen to what the Premiers have to say after their meeting. They are entitled under their rules, I suppose, to get together whenever they want, even to consider matters that I suppose are not within their jurisdiction.

My right hon. friend mentions a deep crisis. There is no deep crisis. There is a difference of view involving a Government and the Government of Canada, but the Government of Canada and the Parliament of Canada speak for all Canadians in international matters. We shall not surrender our rights or our jurisdiction. This Parliament shall speak for Canada.

ALLEGED TRAFFICKING IN INFLUENCE NETWORK—ROLE PLAYED BY PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. the Prime Minister. Since he has had the whole weekend to take stock of people around him, can he tell us what role his office played in the affair of the influence trafficking network within the Conservative Party?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, what a statement, and what a disgraceful question! I take the liberty of saying so because the Hon. Member is also supposed to belong to the Bar of Quebec and act as counsel to a Montreal law firm where, I should think, presumption of innocence still exists. This is shameful gossiping about scandals which the Hon. Member will have to withdraw immediately.

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF MONEY DESTINED FOR PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE FUND

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister may feel insulted about everything, but he knows very well that his former associate, Pierre Blouin, was convicted of influence peddling.

How can he justify the fact that, after this conviction, the $50,000 obtained through more than dubious means remained in the fund of the Progressive Conservative Party? Mr. Speaker, Gérald Martineau would not have done worse during the days of Duplessis. I want to know how the Prime Minister, as leader of the Government, can allow his Party to operate with dirty money.

• (1430)

[English]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, what a disgraceful, scurrilous position to be adopted by a Member of this House, a member of the Bar of Quebec who is counsel to a major law firm in Montreal, who repudiates what the Leader of the Opposition quite properly pointed out on November 30, 1984, when the Leader of the Opposition, who is a distinguished counsel in his own right, said:

—and perhaps his own approach to investigations, by re-instating the practice that used to apply in this House, and I believe still should, reflecting the principle of presumption of innocence until proven guilty?

The Leader of the Opposition has restated a historic precept which must be respected by all Members of this House. The Member for Shefford is conducting himself in such a scurrilous manner as to make Joe McCarthy look like a choirboy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister said on the weekend that there is now some need to re-establish moral authority in public affairs in Canada. In that context he also said that he had some specifics in mind and would announce them at the appropriate time. The people of Canada think the appropriate time is now. Would the Prime Minister tell the House what specifics he had in mind, and when he will be announcing them?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that I said on the weekend that we had to re-establish a moral climate in Canada.

Mr. Blaikie: You do, even if you didn't say it.

Mr. Mulroney: I think I indicated that I and all Members of the House would, of course, be troubled by any accusations or any suggestions of impropriety or illegality, whether they involve the NDP, the Liberals, or the Conservatives. I indicated my position with regard to another matter in the House which is that if there has been any violation of the law, whoever is guilty should be put in jail pursuant to due process.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, that is really quite absolutely shocking misconduct by the Liberals. If they think I am going to roll over and play dead for a bunch of hacks, they have it wrong.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Frith: Bye-bye, Brian.

Mr. Rossi: Is there going to be a jail in Port Cartier for all your friends?

Mr. Speaker: I think I should draw attention to something which is self-evident. Unless accusatory questions establish a fact pattern upon which they are to be asked, they invite retorts in defence which can turn into attacks. There are questions which may be asked on issues of concern to all Members in this Chamber. They can be asked in an appropriate way and answered accordingly.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister just made certain observations about the opposition Parties. Six Ministers of the Crown have had to resign under dubious circumstances.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: So much for the Speaker's admonition.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, since Parliament resumed after Christmas there has been information about people who are under investigation by the RCMP, there have been some people who have already been convicted, which we now know about, there have been charges of cronyism and charges of buying of influence—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am trying to indicate that on matters which concern all Members of this place there is an appropriate way to ask questions. This is not an appropriate place to make speeches before the question is asked. I ask the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party to put his question, as I know he can, effectively and succinctly.

Mr. Broadbent: I will take your admonition under these circumstances, Mr. Speaker. Under the present circumstances, in which the public believes something should be done, would the Prime Minister introduce some specific proposals for change of the kind to which he alluded on the weekend, and which the public is demanding, within the next two weeks?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I indicated that we will have an appropriate response which deals with institutions, people, and the conduct of Ministers of the Government. Members on all sides of the House of Commons must be above criticism. Canadians are entitled to the highest standards and we shall work together to ensure that those standards, notwithstanding human imperfections, are achieved at all times. I give the Hon. Member that assurance. However, for someone of his reputation in the area of civil liberties, the preamble of the question contributes to destroying the presumption of innocence.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Mulroney: There were unfounded allegations and the use of personal, unjustified and unsustained attacks trying to put it into a package. I say it is unworthy.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Mulroney: It is unworthy for the Leader of the NDP to be involved in McCarthyism.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I ask Ministers, in responding to these questions, to take into account the same admonishment as I have given to those asking the questions. It is the Chair's place to admonish, if that is indeed necessary.

ELECTORAL PROCESS—DONATIONS TO CANDIDATES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I received no specific commitment on the question I just asked the Prime Minister. There is another area I would like to question him on.

There is an increasing need to continue the reforms which were started in the period between 1972 and 1974 with regard to democratic control over spending as it affects the electoral process. Therefore, will the Prime Minister undertake to ask the Chief Electoral Officer, before May 1 of this year, to bring to Parliament a set of recommendations dealing with such issues as donations, disclosure, and ceilings on electoral financing?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his specific suggestion in this regard. He may have noted some of my comments and concerns earlier. Any Prime Minister or Leader of a Party in Canada is clearly committed to the same premise of the purification and improvement of the process at all times.

I take good note of the suggestion raised by my hon. friend. As my caucus indicated on the weekend, there is a strong view in other areas that we co-operate to make substantial improvements in the laws which govern our conduct as well. I thank my hon. friend for his observation.

BRODILAF AFFAIR—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF ALLEGED POLITICAL INTERFERENCE BY MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and also concerns the Public Works contracts in Drummondville.

I have here a copy of a letter from the Hon. Member for Drummond to the Minister of Public Works, dated March 25 1986, with a request for guarantees or some kind of assurance that Brodilaf would receive the necessary endorsements for putting up a building in Drummondville.

Considering the fact that three copies of this letter were sent to the Prime Minister's Office, how can he tolerate. Political interference by one of his Members even before a call for tenders was made?

• (1440)

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, representations were made to our Department about the qualifications of certain bidders and the merit of certain proposals. The award was made on the basis of merit, having regard to the age of the building, to the location of the building and access to the building. The award was made based on quality and value.

Mr. Boudria: As interesting as that may be, it has nothing to do with the letter from which I just quoted. This is a totally different topic.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF DOCUMENTS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): My supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. I also have in my hand a notice of intent of a lawsuit against the Government by Hama Incorporated, the unsuccessful bidder, concerning this affair. Given that we now have criminal charges, a conviction, serious allegations, and now a lawsuit against the Government of Canada, will the Prime Minister—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's question is almost in order. I bring this to the attention of the Hon. Member who, I know, will co-operate, but also to indicate to other Hon. Members just what the rule is with respect to sub judice. If a question is asked concerning what somebody did on the periphery of a lawsuit, which does not go to the point of whether or not the claim in the lawsuit is justified, that is not sub judice. However, the Hon. Member is getting very close to asking about the lawsuit, in fact, and getting the issue which is in front of the court in front of this Chamber. That is sub judice. I see the Hon. Member indicating to the Chair that he would not have gone that far. Perhaps not, but the Chair cannot always anticipate exactly where the Hon. Member is going.

I want Hon. Members to understand the distinction quite clearly. The Chair is under an obligation to see that distinction or try to head it off if it is being abridged.

Mr. Boudria: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand the distinction you just brought to my attention. Will the Prime Minister table in the House or ask the Minister of Public Works to table in the House all copies of tenders, evaluations and other Public Works and Treasury Board documents pertaining to the award of the Public Works contract in Drummondville? If not, was the Prime Minister serious over the weekend when he referred to this issue of public morality?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am quite prepared to have the Hon. Member review the Treasury Board submission in this particular case and the Treasury Board ruling. It is available through Access to Information but I will make it available at his convenience.

CIVIL LAWSUIT—PRIME MINISTER'S ALLEGED TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It concerns his intervention in the Walter Wolf matter. Will he clarify why he felt it necessary to intervene personally, by communicating with Michel Cogger with respect to a possible settlement of this matter? Furthermore, did he either directly or indirectly, during the course of that conversation or at any other time, indicate that unless Walter Wolf dropped his lawsuit against the Prime Minister's friend, Fred Doucet, he would in fact receive no further federal Government contracts?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I understand that Senator Cogger put out a statement on Friday afternoon in regard to questions that have been raised. He said, first, that I did not initiate the call as the Member suggested. That was the implication of what the Member just said, and that is false, as it is false to suggest that any threats of any kind were discussed. The person with whom I had the conversation, at his initiation, was Mr. Cogger. He states: "In the course of this conversation, which covered several subjects, Mr. Mulroney asked my opinion as to the possibility of an eventual out-of-court settlement of the legal proceedings—". I do not think that is either unreasonable or irresponsible. That is the extent of the involvement.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, in regard to the question of public morality, Canadians want to know when the Prime Minister will stop using the highest elected office in the land as a post for jobs and graft for old friends and cronies of the Prime Minister—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Shields: You are a clown.

An Hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member began by asking a specific question about an alleged conversation. In my view it is peripheral to the main issue of the lawsuit in question and is a question that is allowed. I would ask the Hon. Member to stick to the issue and not begin his question with a speech.

ALLEGED INTERVENTION BY PRIME MINISTER IN LEGAL AFFAIR

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is also directed to the Prime Minister. Does he agree with the Deputy Prime Minister who said last Friday it was only a private matter when a Conservative Minister intervenes personally in a court action and threatens that federal contracts will be cut off the action is not dropped? Is that just a private matter?

[English]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member, who consistently makes eloquent speeches in this Chamber on the need for and the sanctity of individual rights and the presumption of innocence is, with the preamble of his question, right down in the gutter with the rats and the garbage.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: That is an unacceptable position for a Member of this House to take.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Order. Withdraw.

An Hon. Member: Look who talks about civility.

Mr. Mazankowski: The same civility as you project.

Mr. Speaker: I remind Hon. Members that there are many ways to make accusations and both sides are getting as close to them as they possibly can. I would ask everyone to stick to the facts and to the issue. There is an appropriate way to ask questions, and they are allowable. If they are not appropriate then I, on behalf of all of you—because I only administer the rules that we make for ourselves here—must intervene, and I do not want to do that too often.

PRIME MINISTER'S CONDUCT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister and I hope his comments about gutter rats and McCarthyism are not representative of his new civility. Notwithstanding statements last Friday by the Deputy Prime Minister that a telephone call involving the Prime Minister was a private matter, is the Prime Minister now prepared to admit upon reflection that it was inappropriate for him to involve himself, through a telephone conversation or any other way, in a private lawsuit involving a senior adviser of his office and Walter Wolf?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to state that in my absence the Hon. Member made two false statements in her question on February 6 in regard to my conduct. The member said: "—the Prime Minister of this country places a phone call", false, "in which he makes threats about cutting off government business", false. The Member should learn, once and for all in her parliamentary life, to stick to the facts and to use the same degree of fairness in regard to other people that she would want applied to herself and her family.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Copps: If I had to make a judgment about the honesty of the Prime Minister or Walter Wolf, I know who I would choose.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

[Translation]

Ms. Copps: When I spoke, the Prime Minister knew perfectly well I was referring to the depositions that were made at the Supreme Court of Ontario. I would like to ask the Prime Minister once more whether he is now prepared to tell the House that it is inappropriate for a Prime Minister, whatever his political stripe, to interfere with testimony and witnesses, including the matter of 200 offices and the deposition by Walter Wolf, or by any Canadian, for that matter.

• (1450)

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has listened very carefully to the question, and the Hon. Member may want to rephrase the question, but it seems to me that the Right Hon. Prime Minister has taken both of the suggestions and allegations and clearly denied them. There is, of course, a rule in this House which is old and is not often used, that once a question has been answered, it ought not properly to be asked again. A certain amount of latitude has crept in over the years, but perhaps this is a time when all Hon. Members ought to be reminded of it.

Ms. Copps: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to rephrase the question because I think the Prime Minister has already admitted he did participate in a telephone call.

PRIME MINISTER'S ALLEGED INVOLVEMENT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Does the Prime Minister feel it is appropriate, upon reflection—he has had a couple of days to think about this—for the Prime Minister of this country to involve himself in a telephone conversation, or in any other way in a private lawsuit involving a senior adviser in his office and another party who, in this case, happens to be Walter Wolf?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is the Hon. Member's version today. She had a different version on Friday and, consistent with the practice of the Hon. Member for Sudbury, she will have a different one tomorrow. In regard to this House, perhaps I am wrong, but I am informed that the Hon. Member has been aware of this information, which she now alleges is major and important, for nine months. For nine months the Hon. Member remained silent. I have a question. If this matter was so important, why did she not raise it? If so, did she share this information with the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition? And if that was the case, why was action not taken before today?

INQUIRY WHEN PRIME MINISTER WILL DISCLOSE MEASURES TO ENSURE DEMOCRATIC POLITICAL FINANCING

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Still on the subject of democratic political fund raising and similar measures, the Prime Minister has indicated that he had some specific proposals. My question is as follows: Does the Prime Minister intend to act quickly to establish the political morality we need if the Government is to function properly, and when does he intend to disclose the specific measures he was referring to?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I already answered that question.

Mr. Toupin: Mr. Speaker, I will give him a chance to answer a third time. This question is very important to all Canadians. Does the Prime Minister intend to disclose as soon as possible, and he has the power to do so, his specific proposals for democratic political fund raising?

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, if I am not mistaken, substantially the same question was put a few moments ago by the Leader of the New Democratic Party. I answered his question, and the same answer applies to this one.

Mr. Keeper: You didn't answer the question!

HEALTH

NATIONAL DRUG STRATEGY

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In a recent response to a questionnaire, 89 per cent of my constituents felt that drug abuse was a serious problem in Canada, and want strong government action. Could the Minister inform the House of the progress in establishing a national drug strategy to deal with this serious problem?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will recall the statement and commitment made in the Speech from the Throne, which had clearly been signalled by the Prime Minister earlier in his speech in Vancouver. What has happened since the Speech from the Throne is that an interdepartmental committee has been established to co-ordinate not only the efforts now taking place with, for instance, the Solicitor General, the Department of Justice and the Department of National Health and Welfare, but also to put forward other proposals such as education, and Canada signing the International Psychotropic Convention on Drugs in Vienna in June of this year, which was negotiated 16 years ago. Those are, in the time allowed to me, only some of the details being worked on. There are others and we will announce them as they come forward this spring.

GOVERNMENT ETHICS—PRIME MINISTER'S LETTER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has cited me on the presumption of innocence. When it relates to individual responsibility, of course I think everyone in the House is in favour of the presumption of innocence. But that is not what we are talking about here. We are not talking about individual responsibility. We are talking about ministerial responsibility. We are talking about the public administration of this country's business. We are talking about Ministers and how Prime Ministers comport themselves. The burden of proof is on the Government when it comes to public morality, when it comes to public ethics, and when it comes to the administration of the country's business.

I want to recite to the Prime Minister a statement he made in an open letter he gave to all Members of Parliament on September 9, 1986: "The ultimate responsibility for the ethical standards of the federal Government rests with the Cabinet and, more particularly, with me". Does the Prime Minister still stand by that statement? And will he live up to it in his responses to Hon. Members of the House?

to what I think is an important statement, one that all of us ought to struggle every day to seek to achieve. In all walks of life there are difficulties from time to time. My right hon. friend was in this House, I believe, at a difficult time for a Government of which he was a member at that time.

The fact that it happens from time to time in public life does not relieve me or my colleagues of the responsibility of establishing and seeking always to achieve the highest standards of public ethics and morality. Anything at variance with that is completely unacceptable to Canadians and to all Hon. Members of the House. I endorse the indignation of my right hon. friend because the matter at that level is not partisan. It is our commitment to Canadians always to do the very best we can in a very important area.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I cannot quarrel with those words.

OERLIKON AND DRUMMONDVILLE ISSUES—REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Why does the Prime Minister not open the doors on all this mess we have encountered ever since we reassembled here after Christmas and have a public inquiry on the Oerlikon affair and the Drummondville matter? That will clear the air around here because, from the responses which have been given today, this is not going to rest today, tomorrow, or the next day.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition says the matter is not going to rest here. He will have to make up his own mind about the extent to which he wants to pursue the notions now being put forward by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East. In one of the matters which came before us, one of the first things done was the securing of the Minister's resignation and the police inquiry conducted by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, who were appointed.

In regard to another matter which is raised here before the House, there is civil litigation which is ensuing before Canadian courts, by two Canadians. Surely the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is no stranger to these realities. This is the proper way for these matters to be conducted. I think I have set forward my position and the position of all my colleagues in regard to an earlier question.

If, on the one hand, it is profoundly and fundamentally unfair for members of the Opposition to indulge in half-truths and smear tactics, it is also true that the highest standards must be expected of the Government at all times. Notwithstanding the innuendo and half-truth, which are a disservice to the position just taken by the Right Hon. Leader, this Government remains committed to achieving the highest standards that Canadians demand of all people in public life.

Mr. Speaker: I should advise Hon. Members that in view of the fact that Question Period started late we will continue on for a few more minutes.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT—REQUEST FOR CANCELLATION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It has to do with the Canada-France fishing agreement. Today, Premiers from across the country are meeting in Toronto because of the very serious crisis between the federal and provincial Governments. Recognizing the total unacceptability to Newfoundlanders of the recently signed Canada-France fishing agreement, is the Prime Minister prepared to give his commitment that he will scrap the agreement and do it all over again with the full participation of Newfoundland and other interested parties from Atlantic Canada?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, last week the position of the NDP in regard to this sensitive matter was to send in the navy. Today, the position is to unilaterally abrogate an international undertaking.

This is what happens. Members of the NDP look terrific until they have to make a decision. When they are called upon to make important policy decisions they strike out all the time.

Ms. Jewett: You would know all about that.

Mr. Mulroney: The Premiers are meeting. That is their business. They will give us their points of view. The Government of Canada advised by the Minister of Transport, who has represented so well the interests of Newfoundland and Labrador, will continue to represent the interests of all Canadians, including the fishermen of Newfoundland and Labrador.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Prime Minister. The people of Canada expect some action. They expect the Prime Minister and the Government to stand up for the rights of Canadians when dealing with foreign powers. That is what they expect.

The Prime Minister has broken many promises which he made during the last campaign.

Some Hon. Members: Name one!

Mr. Rodriguez: In his refusal to consult to the end with Newfoundland on this treaty he has created a crisis in federal-provincial relations. Will the Prime Minister tell the House and the people of Canada what steps his Government will take to end this crisis in federal-provincial relations?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is the same question. My hon. friend refers to campaign undertakings. I suppose in that campaign if there was one very important formal undertaking made by my Party in regard to Newfoundland and Labrador it was that we would seek to resolve a matter of historic injustice to the people of Newfoundland, namely, the question of the development of the offshore. We have delivered in spades on the offshore to Newfoundland and Labrador. We will do the same in the other matters before us.

FINANCE

BRITISH COLUMBIA GOVERNMENT'S FINANCING ARRANGEMENTS FOR SKYTRAIN PROJECT

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission—Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Given that the Minister has closed a loophole in tax regulations and given that he has made these changes retroactive in relation to the B.C. Government's financing arrangements for SkyTrain, will he explain to the House why this action has been taken when in previous incidents, such as the Gulf acquisition by Olympia & York, the decisions were not retroactive? Is there not a double standard here?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there is a double standard. The double standard is that provincial Governments are supposed to protect the tax system, not take advantage of it. This particular incident was a twisting of the tax Act to use a non-commercial, family trust provision of the Act for commercial reasons to provide tax-free investment income to high-income investors. For a number of months now we have been trying to weed out these types of matters in the tax Act. I would have expected that the Province of British Columbia would have advised me that this was something that was being proposed to it and that it would have asked me to change it before taking advantage of it, and not try to take advantage of it without notice.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT—ALLOCATION OF QUOTA TO FRENCH VESSELS

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. He will know that this year his Government deleted 10,000 tonnes of cod from the Canadian quota, much of it going to inshore plants and inshore fishermen. At the same time his Government allocated $4 million to fishermen and plant workers who did not get enough fish to qualify for unemployment insurance. In light of that painful contradiction, how can the Prime Minister justify the total insanity of giving 3,200 tonnes of fish off the coast of Labrador to the French when the Labrador fishermen are the most vulnerable anywhere in Canada and are struggling for survival? How can the Prime Minister justify that?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member were fair he would tell the House that we have taken a number of steps to deal swiftly with the serious problem in the inshore fishery of Newfoundland. Those steps include full observer coverage on all offshore vessels fishing in the waters 2J+3KL during the first three months of this year, along with other measures.

If the Hon. Member were fair to the House, and as a Member coming from that province he should also know that those stocks far offshore the Newfoundland coast and the Labrador coast are not fished by the Canadian fleet to anything approaching the entire quota because they are very costly stocks to reach. We define them, as we have for many years, as surplus to Canadian requirements.

CATCH TAKEN BY FRENCH VESSELS

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, there is only one stock of fish. The fish caught offshore and the fish caught inshore are the same fish. The Minister should know that.

In light of his press release of January 27, 1987, which states that limited French access to that zone, that is, the northern cod, is a small price to pay to have the boundary dispute resolved, will he not admit that the French are really the pirates of the cod? They have overfished for the last two years. He cannot control them. It is not a small price; it is selling the birthright of Labrador fishermen. Why does the Minister not admit that?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member were fair with the House he would point out that wherever French vessels are fishing in Canadian waters other than the disputed zone they always fish under licence and in full accord with all our regulations and quota limits. So his description of French fishing practices in Canadian waters is not only incorrect, it is most regrettable.

Mr. Rompkey: They have overfished for the past two years and you know it.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—FARM MARKETING BOARDS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. It concerns a public split between two of his cabinet Ministers on the issue of free trade negotiations and farm marketing boards. Last week, on the one hand, the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board said that farm marketing boards will not be on the table for negotiation. On the other hand, the Minister for International Trade said that farm marketing boards will be on the negotiating table and, in fact, are. Will the Prime Minister now clarify for the farmers of Canada which of his Ministers is correct? Are farm marketing boards or the functioning of farm marketing boards on the free trade negotiating table with the United States? Are they there or are they not?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is confusing farm support programs and trade restraints. We have made it perfectly clear that the negotiations are about trade restraints, not about farm marketing boards. I can assure him that the integrity of farm support programs and our system of marketing our wheat are not subjects for discussion in the free trade negotiations.

INQUIRY IF FARM MARKETING BOARDS WILL BE NEGOTIABLE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the Prime Minister. On Thursday the Minister for International Trade said to the House, and to the media outside the House of Commons, that questions related to the marketing of farm products are on the table in the negotiations with the United States. Can the Prime Minister tell us here and now, for the benefit of Canadian farmers who deserve a clear answer from the Prime Minister, whether the farm marketing boards are on the negotiating table, yes or no?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the question is the same in either French or English. My answer is also the same.

Mr. Speaker: I must advise Hon. Members that the time for Question Period has expired. I recognize the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson).

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I was in the House at eleven o'clock this morning with the aim of tabling a committee report. As events unfolded that was not possible. I wonder if Your Honour might seek unanimous consent in order that I may now table a report from the Standing Committee on Public Accounts.

Point of Order—Mr. H. Gray

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

PRESENTATION OF THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the Third Report of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts which deals with the Department of Insurance. While the committee notes the positive response of the Department to the Auditor General's remedial recommendations, the Committee is still concerned about supervision of pension plans and financial institutions. The committee wishes to emphasize the responsibility of the Department in ensuring that the assets and liabilities of all federally-regulated pension plans are actuarially sound, and are audited on a regular basis. Even though the Department has strengthened its supervisory function of financial institutions following recent failures, the Department must still improve its process for monitoring and assessing the financial solvency of the companies it regulates.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, since the House has so generously given my colleague, the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson), unanimous consent to table that report, I wonder if we could revert back to petitions. I have dozens of petitions I wish to table.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure that the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) has noticed that they are not quite as generous on his particular matter.

The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) on a point of order.

POINTS OF ORDER

APPLICATION OF SUB JUDICE CONVENTION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a point of order which arises out of your comments during Question Period with respect to the application of the sub judice convention. During Question Period, I understood you to say that the test of whether a question is consistent with the sub judice convention depends on whether it relates squarely to issues being litigated in a particular case. This is certainly an important test. I raise the point as to whether there is another important test which I respectfully submit you should take into consideration in deciding whether the sub judice convention should be applied when deciding whether a question is acceptable when raised during Question Period.

Citation 335 on page 118 of Beauchesne's states:

> Members are expected to refrain from discussing matters that are before the courts or tribunals which are courts of record. The purpose of this sub-judice convention is to protect the parties in a case awaiting or undergoing trial and persons who stand to be affected by the outcome of a judicial inquiry. It is a voluntary restraint imposed by the House upon itself in the interest of justice and fair play.

I point out in passing that this citation makes it very clear that the convention is there to protect the parties in a case, not other people who may have had some contact with the case either as witnesses, or who have some interest in the outcome, even if it amounts to nothing more than some curiosity about the matter.

I also might say in passing that there seems to be some conflict between citations with respect to the degree to which this convention applies to judicial inquiries.

Citation 338 states:

> (1) Matters before a royal commission are not subject to the convention.

However, the main citation that I wish to bring to your attention in this regard is Citation 337, which is also on page 118 and it states:

> (1) No settled practice has been developed in relation to civil cases, as the convention has been applied in some cases but not in others.

The citation further states:

> (2) In civil cases the convention does not apply until the matter has reached the trial stage.

The source of this citation is House of Commons Debates, February 11, 1976, p. 10844.

As far as I am aware, and if I am wrong in this I am sure I will be corrected, the case involving Walter Wolf and Fred Doucet has not yet reached the trial stage.

Mr. Mazankowski: What is an examination for discovery?

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Therefore, I submit that if the sub judice convention in the terms that you have stated it during Question Period is to apply at all, then it would come into play and is to be applied only once the case reaches the trial stage. I submit that an examination for discovery is not a trial. It is a proceeding before the trial, but it is not the trial.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I ask you to take into consideration the following submission. First, it is not clear that the sub judice convention, no matter how defined, is to be applied at all in any civil case, even at the trial stage. But if it is to be applied, including in the terms which you used during Question Period, then this application does not arise until the trial has actually begun.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I respectfully draw your attention to Citation 339 of Beauchesne's at page 119 in which the learned editor of this volume draws our attention to the report of the Special Committee on the Rights and Immunities of Members which, among other things, recognizes that while "the Speaker should remain the final arbiter in the matter" of sub judice, he "should exercise his discretion only in exceptional cases. In doubtful cases he should rule in favour of debate and against the convention."

Because the matter with respect to the application of the sub judice convention will likely arise again in Question Period and in debate I thought I should take the liberty of making these comments for the purpose of saying first, the convention cannot apply to questions with regard to people who are not themselves parties or litigants in the case in question, and second, the the sub judice convention has not been clearly established to apply at any stage of a civil case, and third, if it should apply then it is only once the trial has begun, and it has certainly not begun in the case of Walter Wolf and Fred Doucet.

Finally, with the utmost respect, I draw your attention once again to what I suggest are the very wise words of the Special Committee on the Rights and Immunities of Members with regard to the degree of restraint a Speaker should exercise in applying the sub judice convention at any time.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great interest to the arguments of my colleague, partly because I never did much litigation myself. I wish to make a couple of points. When reviewing this matter, Mr. Speaker, as I hope you will, it is in the interests of this House and Canadians who are before the court system at whatever level that you take due note of the words "in the interest of justice and fair play". That is what is at issue here when questions are asked.

There is another convention that was not contained in the argument of my hon. colleague, and that is as to what is the main purpose of Question Period. It has always been my understanding that the purpose of Question Period is for the Opposition to hold the Government accountable.

I submit that engaging in an examination of hearsay where an affidavit is filed, or evidence is taken by examination for discovery in which one individual in sworn testimony recounts what one person is purported to have said to another can hardly be referred to as hard evidence. When I went to law school it was hearsay. Whether it was sworn hearsay or not, it was still hearsay. The point here is whether we are putting at risk—I do not know why my colleague from the NDP finds the abuse of justice and fair play so funny. I do not.

Mr. Althouse: I was thinking of when you were in Opposition and some of the justice and fair play we used to see.

Mr. Lewis: If my hon. colleague wants to argue the matter, let him. I suggest he do it. That is what this forum is for.

• (1520)

I think it is a very serious matter to interfere with the court process whether it is a criminal or a civil trial. I appreciate, as my hon. friend has pointed out, that the rules for civil litigation are not hard and fast, but fair play and justice are hard and fast. If for pure political purposes you are affecting the outcome of a criminal trial or a lawsuit in any way, shape or form, I do not think that is right and proper. I do not think my colleagues here want to indulge in that.

I would ask the Chair to look at that and I agree with my hon. colleague that it is something that should be looked at so there is some direction for the House as we go along. I urge that we zero in on the words "in the interests of justice and fair play" and decide whether or not this matter is being brought forward for purely political purposes or whether it is really holding the Government accountable. If that is the case, then I think we have to be sure that we are not tampering in any way with justice and fair play whether the litigant is a litigant in a civil matter or somebody being brought before the courts for criminal prosecution.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) and the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis) for their contributions, and, I think it is appropriate to say, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria). I think he deferred to the caveat the Chair put when he was asking a question and went to some pains to make sure that he did not transgress beyond the stage that the Chair felt it might not be appropriate to go. I want to re-emphasize that the Chair cannot always tell at the start of a question just exactly where that question may lead.

In specific answer to the point raised by the Hon. Member for Windsor West, I think there is something in what he says, that there may be some authorities which indicate a matter is not strictly speaking sub judice until it has reached the trial stage. There is some authority for that. That point was also brought to my attention in a note from the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell. However, what I was hoping to do, and I am sure the Hon. Member for Windsor West knows this, was to alert members to the fact that there is a sub judice rule, and to ask members to be careful not to transgress against it. The Hon. Member for Windsor West and other Hon. Members will note that I have not ruled that a question has yet transcended that position, but I felt it was appropriate to make sure that everybody, as much as possible, understands the problem which the Chair has when these questions get increasingly close to that line.

The other thing I wanted to point out, and I think Hon. Members will agree, and that must also be understood, is that questions that are peripheral to the main issue being tested in the litigation are not necessarily excluded under the sub judice rule. It is important that all Hon. Members realize that, because sometimes there is a tendency for Members on one side to seize too quickly the conclusion that just because a question may concern some actors who may be involved in one way or the other in a lawsuit that it is by its very definition sub judice. I was trying to point out and draw Members' attention to the fact that that is not always so, and that the Chair has to find the middle ground.

I accept with great consideration the comments of the Hon. Member for Windsor West. I hope he will note that as this debate goes on and as these questions may go on that the Chair will try very hard to hew to what is the appropriate rule. I think it is fair to comment that the point which the Parliamentary Secretary makes about the basis for this rule is that concern for justice and fair play must also be recognized in this Chamber. I must point out again that in all these matters, unless Members are cognizant of just those principles, justice and fair play, then sometimes that leads to a situation which may or may not create disorder, but may get very close to it, so the Chair sometimes has to try to move in very gently to keep that from happening. I thank the Hon. Member for Windsor West. The observations are cogent and they are helpful to the Chair.

The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary is rising on a different point of order?

Mr. Lewis: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am. I find your comments quite helpful and I appreciate the argument. I think they are on a good plane.

QUESTIONS IMPUTING MOTIVES

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I want to seek your direction in terms of how one responds on this side of the House. As my colleague across the way was pointing out, I did spend some time in opposition and I appreciate the difficulties one has in drafting questions.

I want to raise a point of order with respect to the questions put by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) who I see is now in the House. I would not for one minute suggest that Beauchesne is up to date on how Question Period should function in this day and age. I would not for a minute suggest that, but because of the way Question Period has evolved in the seven and one-half years that I have been here, I would ask for some direction with respect to Beauchesne's Citation 357(i) which suggests that questions should not contain imputations. Similarly, in Citation 360(5), a question may not:

> . . . reflect on the character or conduct of the Speaker or other occupants of the Chair, Members of either House of Parliament and members of the judiciary.

I appreciate that things become heated in this House, that debate becomes heated. That is what it is all about. Question Period has to be tough and direct. But I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that this afternoon my colleague from Burnaby imputed several motives in his questions and I think went beyond the bounds of dignity and what is required to place a question and hold the Government accountable.

Perhaps when you have an opportunity you could review Hansard, Mr. Speaker, and give the House some direction on that particular subject area of whether or not it is fair to impute motives when one asks questions, to the extent that my colleague did this afternoon.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, in response to the point of order raised by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader and President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis), I would note that one of the citations to which he refers, Citation 360(5), indicates that a question may not, as he pointed out:

> reflect on the character or conduct of the Speaker or other occupants of the Chair, Members of either House of Parliament and members of the judiciary.

As the Hon. Member himself has acknowledged, these rules have to be read in light of the evolving practices and traditions of the House, and surely it is not reasonable to suggest that a member in Question Period may not ask a question which reflects on the conduct of a Minister of the Crown in the course of that Minister's activities vis-à-vis his or her government responsibilities. Surely to suggest that we cannot question the conduct of Ministers of the Crown is reading Beauchesne's Citation 360 in a manner which is not only out of date but which is completely unrealistic.

With respect to the suggestion of imputation of motives, I am not sure to what the Hon. Member is referring. In the initial question I asked, I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) quite specifically to clarify the nature of his intervention in the telephone conversation in question and also to indicate whether or not there had been any suggestion of a withdrawal of a federal Government contract. In a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, I asked the Prime Minister again whether or not he agreed with the comments of his colleague, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) that it was solely a private matter if, in fact, a Minister of the Crown intervened in a manner which had been suggested.

I suggest neither of those questions in any way imputed motives. They certainly asked about the involvement of the Prime Minister, but I suggest they are entirely within the framework and scope of Question Period and that if we cannot ask questions about the conduct of members of this Government, certainly that will significantly stifle an effective and free flow of questions during Question Period.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, with your permission I would like to make some brief comments on the point of order raised by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader (Mr. Lewis). The Parliamentary Secretary has admitted that Beauchesne's is not up to date and that the practice with respect to questions accepted by the Speaker during Question Period has certainly evolved, to use his word, since the edition of Beauchesne's in question was published. That is certainly accurate. The first citation to which he referred is from 1965, and no source is given at all for the second citation although this edition of Beauchesne's was published in 1978.

For some reason or other, the Government seems reluctant to draw attention to the guidelines for Question Period announced in the House less than two years ago by the previous occupant of the chair. Those guidelines may well have some bearing on this to the extent that you, Mr. Speaker, may wish to use them for guidance in the exercise of your discretion over which questions you will accept or not.

In any event, the citations from Beauchesne's about Question Period have not only been overtaken by a later set of guidelines set down by your predecessor but they have been overtaken by dozens if not hundreds of precedents established in this House day after day, week after week by questions asked by members of the Government when they were in opposition. Those questions were accepted by the Speaker without challenge or question and the questions were asked without doubt, shame or reticence of any kind. I say with the utmost sincerity and respect to you, Sir, that those are the precedents that cannot be overlooked in these circumstances.

Surely Beauchesne's Citation 360 cannot be interpreted literally as saying that the conduct of Members of the House who are Ministers cannot be questioned in so far as that conduct relates to their official duties. If that were to be the case, then Question Period as an essential element not only of the House of Commons but of the parliamentary system would be severely undermined and weakened. I would like to think that none of us would want to see that.

Finally, by way of authority, I would like to refer to the remarks of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader during the discussion on the point of order I raised just a few moments ago. He said that Question Period is to hold the Government to account. If that is the case, surely it must mean that one can question members of the Government about their conduct as Ministers. Second, if the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader is correct in saying that questions are not there to impute motives, he should not have said, as he did without challenge from me, that questions cannot be asked during Question Period if they are asked purely for—I think I recall his words correctly—political purposes. If that is not a form of imputing motives, what is?

In conclusion, therefore I think one must tread very carefully before saying that any questions which have some link with an inquiry into the purpose of the conduct in question are out of order because they impute motives. In any event, none of us should be ashamed about being willing to ask questions for political purposes. Is that not the reason for which we are here? We are talking about the operation of the political process which I hope will be exercised with the utmost integrity and trustworthiness. It is the political process that brings us here and it is the political process under which we are operating. Therefore, we should not be concerned if questions are asked for political purposes. I do not say that that necessarily imputes negative motives but I wish the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader would be consistent in his arguments and would recognize that what he is complaining about has, as I said a moment ago, been well established by hundreds of precedents based on questions he and his colleagues asked when in opposition, questions which were readily accepted by your distinguished predecessors.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to thank the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) and the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) for their interventions on this second point of order. The Chair is intrigued by the alleged suggestion that someone in this Chamber might be political. A distinguished former Member of this place is reputed to have said one evening in a moment, I think, of exasperation: "The trouble with this place is it's getting too political".

I think there will always be politics in a political forum like this one. When a suggestion is made that remarks are made for political purposes, I know that there are high political motives and there are perhaps less high political motives. It is for the Chair to decide to which of those two political motives the Hon. Member is referring.

On the question of the ancient or older precepts in some of the books that are sent to guide us, I think it has been made very clear that the Chair tries to take those rules or suggestions into account as a guide, but I think it is also clear to Hon. Members that the Chair has tried to temper those guidelines with the realities of the present situation in the House of Commons and the evolution of our procedures and customs. However, I do not think that anyone means that the conduct of Ministers or of Members, depending on what it is, is something with which the House cannot concern itself. What is key to this is that when questions are asked, Hon. Members should refrain as much as possible from using phrases or words that are accusatory or start off with an allegation relating to the character, honour or motives of any Hon. Member, whether those comments are made in a question or as a part of a reply.

Certainly vigorous and probing questions are completely in order in this place. I hope that I can persuade Hon. Members that I am very cognizant of the fact that that is part of our tradition. At the same time, I would say that the restraint, discipline and skill that is put into questions will probably elicit the information or put forward the position that is required without necessarily invoking a response which creates disorder in the Chamber and then creates a necessity for the Chair to intervene.

I thank all Hon. Members. As I say, we must look at these things as they come before us with a sense of fairness and justice and with a sense of what this place is all about. I think it will be a rare day when the Chair is too surprised that there is some politics in this Chamber.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-19, an Act respecting motor vehicle transport by extra-provincial undertakings, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the motion of Mr. Lewis (p. 3220).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When we recessed at one o'clock, the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) had the floor. He has 15 minutes left plus 10 minutes for questions and comments.

• (1540)

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, just prior to the luncheon adjournment I was about to say that the Canadian trucking industry, for several reasons specific to its structure, will be particularly hard hit by deregulation.

Deregulation has had a devastating impact upon the American trucking industry—massive lay-offs, bankruptcy, increasing concentration, loss of service in the hinterland, et cetera. While that will be repeated in Canada, there is a very real likelihood that because of the particular character of the Canadian industry and the kind of geography with which it is faced, the consequences will be even more severe.

Three main features of the Canadian trucking industry must be borne in mind when we talk about the likely impact of deregulation—market size and orientation, what happens when we have a very large market alongside a relatively small one, and the present vulnerability of the Canadian trucking industry prior to deregulation. All these matters will have an impact upon the effect of deregulation in Canada.

Turning to market size and orientation, unlike the American market with its demographic concentrations, the Canadian market has only three large cities with populations of over one million people. While in the United States there are 1,722 city pairs with one million plus population, Canada only has six such pairings with a huge gap existing between Ontario-Quebec and the far west. Without regulation in the trucking industry in some form similar to what we have now, there will be little incentive to maintain east-west transportation routes and the historic basis of the country will be placed in jeopardy.

Present regulations with control over market entry, pricing, commodity, and destination restrictions have intentionally created a pattern of cross-subsidization of traffic through the encouragement of transportation generalists. For example, someone who wants to participate in the moving of less than fully loaded trucks applies for a licence, obtains a licence, services a particular area, and schedules his routes at well-known times. Thus, shippers and receivers of goods in those areas know when they will receive trucking services. In short, the truck does not wait to be filled before making a run. The reduction or elimination of this regulatory control would encourage the super efficient and the transport specialists to the point of driving the transport generalist out of the market. Along with the demise of the transport generalist would come the demise of a great many small centres which are now providing goods and services to rural and lesser populated areas of Canada. With that goes the whole concept of maintaining east-west links in Canada.

The second aspect of Bill C-19 which I want to discuss, as it has an impact upon the trucking industry, is the size of the American market and our own market. When the United States introduced deregulation in its trucking industry in 1980, it did not have a large nearby neighbour with the geographic and economic capacity to enter and predominate in the transport industry. There was no nation 10 times or 11 times larger sitting just across the border to move in on its markets. With the upheaval caused by deregulation, the U.S. industry did not face the additional distraction of competition from an economically stronger and better prepared international competitor. However, Canada has that problem. We are faced with a neighbouring country which has been involved in deregulation for a number of years. It has consolidated its trucking business to the point where it has three very large companies which have almost taken over the market. It is in a position to treat the Canadian service market as a very small part of its market.

In fact, in the last six years one of the largest companies in the United States has expanded the terminals it services from 154 to some 540 or 550. It has indicated that it could serve most of the Canadian market in which it is interested by the establishment of another five or six terminals in Canada. One only has to look at highway maps of Canada and the United States to realize that that number would certainly be adequate for any U.S. trucking firm to service the most important aspects of the Canadian market. It could run through U.S. routes and take advantage of low cost fuel and low cost equipment. Our truckers estimate that the advantage of being based in the United States, paying U.S. licences, and buying U.S. fuel, amounts to about 10 per cent. That in itself is very difficult to overcome.

In addition, American companies have the advantage of being able to use the terminals they choose to set up in Canada as loss-leaders in order to get rid of existing competition in Canadian markets.

With more than 500 terminals one can readily see that a company, which only wants to expand its market by five or six terminals to get control of most of the Canadian market that might eventually be profitable, is not faced with any risk, even if it cuts prices by 50 per cent or as much as 65 per cent. Indeed, we have seen evidence where some of these companies have moved into new areas and have cut rates by as much as 65 per cent in order to get rid of existing competition and, immediately thereafter, switched to a form of billing more consistent with their pricing elsewhere in the country.

I have pointed out that the access of American companies to the Canadian market was relatively easy because they would only have to purchase a few terminals here. However, Canadian truckers do not have the same market advantage. They are operating in smaller markets and working from six to ten terminals scattered along the Canadian border. For them to penetrate the American market, five or six additional terminals would not do it. They would have to be prepared to expand by much more if they are to seize an important part of the American market, and the costs and risks would be simply too high. On the other hand, the penetration of the Canadian market is relatively easy for U.S. truckers, and Canadian truckers would find it difficult to compete.

The American trucking industry has been preparing for deregulation in Canada or for reregulation, as the Government prefers to call it, by analysing the market. It has also become involved in buying out trucking firms in Canada. A large trucking firm known as Yellow Freight System purchased three fairly substantial trucking companies operating out of the Windsor area in the past year. It now has a virtual stranglehold over that particular marketing operation. That industry has been preparing for deregulation in a way which will eventually make it pre-eminent in Canada as far as trucking is concerned.

As I said, the U.S. trucking industry is dominated by three very large firms—Yellow Freight System,Consolidated Freightways, and Roadway Express Incorporated. We are a little short of absolutely reliable figures about the structure of our trucking industry and its financial position, but available figures portray an industry marked by many small firms and a few very large firms, all of which are operating with a very slender margin of profit. The majority of the approximate 10,000 trucking firms listed in Canada are small operations with one to three trucks. Even among the very large trucking firms historically there has not been a pattern of large profits. An industry spokesman recently remarked that even in the best of times industry-wide profit levels seldom exceed 3 per cent. In 1984, 22 per cent of the companies reporting to the Ontario Trucking Association were suffering losses.

In 1985 there were at least four major takeovers and mergers which were precipitated by companies on the Canadian side attempting to get ready for the competition with which they will be faced from the U.S. side. Reimer Express Enterprises bought Inter-City Truck Lines in April to create one of the largest trucking companies in Canada. In August, Dominion Consolidated Truck Lines and Overland Express merged to create the largest trucking company in the Ontario region. That same month CP Express, Canada's largest road carrier, bought Pickard Moving and Storage. As well, Direct Transportation System was sold to Canadian Motorways, creating what The Globe and Mail referred to as the biggest shake-up in the industry so far.

All of these occurred within a few months of each other. I am sure that had we looked further we would have found even more concentration and mergers taking place. The same pattern emerged in the United States when trucking was deregulated there. I have already pointed out the extent to which that has happened with the domination by three very large firms.

One of the myths which accompanies deregulation is that with the elimination of government's visible hand competition will again be brought into the market. The theory is that the economy will revive, the consumer will again be sovereign, and there will be so many winners that the few losers will be grateful to be martyrs for the sake of efficiency. Indeed, that was the theory for a new world which the then Minister of Transport put forth when he presented his paper, Freedom to Move.

However, some of the trucking companies are less enthusiastic about this. In the U.S. less than 10 companies now control more than half of the industry's total profit. The irony of deregulation is that by opening the doors to unregulated competition concentration is promoted. This is the problem to which I have been alluding throughout my remarks.

One of the arguments which has been used by my colleagues with regard to the Government's efforts to deregulate is with regard to the road hazards which will be created. Even American truckers are admitting that regardless of safety provisions, deregulation brings hazardous road conditions. Carriers which operate on a shoe-string can hardly attend to matters of new tires or brakes overhauls when they live, as a vast majority of them will, from shipment to shipment. Trucking equipment will stay on the road longer as companies are forced to cut expenses for new investments to the bone. The quality of repair work and upgraded equipment will deteriorate in all but the most profitable of companies. Truckers, particularly small owner operator truckers, will drive longer stretches as they search for freight to ship, increasing the danger to themselves and to those with whom they share the highway.

That is what we are concerned about with regard to deregulation, or reregulation, whatever the Government chooses to call it. We think there should be a slow-down in the process to permit better understanding of what has happened in the United States and to give our industry an opportunity to make the necessary corrections to ensure that whatever changes occur in this country can be made with safety and security. We must maintain Canada with an east-west economy rather than a north-south one as this change of regulation tends to encourage.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I listened to my hon. colleague's words of wisdom. They were indeed very informative. While I was listening, I could not help but think of the impact which deregulation would have, particularly on the West Coast. I am particularly concerned about connections to the Port of Vancouver.

Most of the trucking industry in Canada consists of the trucking of resource products, whereas in the United States it consists more of manufactured goods. What does the Hon. Member think the impact may be on east-west transportation, particularly between the prairie provinces, with the transport of grain, and the Port of Vancouver on the West Coast? Will the north-south pull have a real impact on this route? Will deregulated trucking compete with our railways, resulting in our railways not being used as extensively for grain traffic in particular?

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, this concern is often raised. I can speak only from my limited experience with the regulations which apply to raw products in the Province of Saskatchewan. Items such as grain and livestock are not regulated to the same extent as is the trucking of parts and other necessary goods from distribution points to various towns.

The immediate impact on the Port of Vancouver with regard to the shipping of grain or raw material would be almost non-existent since most of that traffic was not particularly regulated beforehand. In my province it is relatively easy to get a licence to move such raw products. It is much more difficult to get a licence to transport goods and services.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, the member who just spoke and I both come from a resource based part of the country where thousands of men and women earn their living by producing products which are exported to other parts of the world, 80 per cent to the markets south of us. The member has repeatedly mentioned the trucking industry in which we on this side of the House have considerable interest, too.

Why do his remarks seem to pay no attention to the workers who create the goods which trucking companies move? Will he not bear in mind the number of people in his province and in mine who work on farms and in potash mines, and who produce pulp and paper, all of which create livelihoods for people in our provinces? I remind him that a number of shippers have been forced to establish trucking companies themselves because of the inadequate service trucking companies have provided under the status quo. That is something we are trying to deal with in this Bill. I would like him to comment on the men and women who work in the industries that create the goods to be shipped.

Is the member suggesting that the laws should be changed so that U.S. trucking companies in Canada that employ Canadians should be barred from Canada? If so, I point out to him that there are over 1,000 Canadian trucking companies in the United States doing business for Canada. He may not know that with virtually the stroke of a pen those 1,000 Canadian trucking companies in the United States could be expelled, which would be a loss to Canada.

I want the Hon. Member to speak particularly about the interests of those who produce the goods that are shipped by the trucking industry. Why did he not mention them in his speech?

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, since I only had 20 minutes, I did not get to that part of my speech. It is my understanding from reading what happened in the United States that many of those companies, which believed it was in their best interests to provide their own trucking companies prior to deregulation, discovered they were forced to abandon those trucking firms because of the extreme competition to expand or maintain their market share after deregulation. Their routes were being invaded by some of the very large companies in an attempt to expand their market share.

For the short run it was actually more costly in many instances for manufacturing companies to use their own trucks to deliver goods because the competition was offering rates that were below the cost of production. I doubt this will continue for many years, but as long as some companies have control of a certain segment of the market, they can cut rates to much less than their real costs in the process of expanding simply to force out any competitors, including some manufacturing firms that had run their own trucking business.

I believe there is enough access to transportation services under our current system. I represent an area that is rather thinly populated and we appreciate the fact that there must be some effective cross-subsidization of the transportation system since there is not enough demand in the small villages and towns that I represent to warrant a full truckload of goods each week or more. We need some regulations requiring service so that heavy goods will be delivered when we need them. We are prepared to pay the higher price for that service.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, why does the Hon. Member believe that Canadians are incompetent to drive trucks, own trucks and own trucking businesses? There are 1,000 Canadians who run trucking businesses in the United States. The Americans have shown that they are incapable of competing in steel, pork, fish, and lumber. Why does he think they are so capable of competing in transportation, particularly when one considers that in this industry an individual can own a truck and, with a little capital, form his own trucking system?

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I hope I did not leave any such impression. If the Hon. Member had listened carefully he would have understood that I said Canadians would be much less competitive than their American neighbours. There will be thousands of Canadians who will be able to compete, just as there are hundreds of thousands of Canadian farmers who can compete with American farmers even when the circumstances for our productive ability are much more difficult than on the other side of the border. We can and will compete, but we will also be laying many trucking firms open to takeover not only by American firms but by Canadian firms. There will be a tremendous shake-down in the industry after these regulations are put into law.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell)—Human rights—U.S.S.R.—Plight of Ioffe family; the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp)—External affairs—Request for reconsideration of decision; the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper)—Supply and services—(a) Awarding of CF-18 fighter aircraft maintenance contract—Technology transfer factor. (b) Request for publication of documents.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-19, an Act respecting motor vehicle transport by extra-provincial undertakings, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the motion of Mr. Lewis (p. 3220).

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, earlier today the Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) and other members told us how undemocratic this debate had become. They said that the Government was trying to quash the debate and was somehow trying to prevent people from speaking. This is what we hear from Members on the other side, who last week engaged in a procedure whereby they moved the adjournment of the House one day after another.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) is using my name in vain, and I cannot believe it. He said that I accused the Government of using procedures that would cut off debate. That is true. The question before the House now is that the previous question be put. That debate will only last as long as we can keep it going. Members on that side will not speak to this question, and the vote will be taken. He is indeed speaking the truth.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that that is not a point of order. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) has the floor.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, that is not even decent debate. There is nothing in the motion that prevents every member in the Liberal Party or the New Democratic Party from speaking. Indeed, every Member of the House can speak once on second reading debate. What is more democratic than that? The Hon. Member does not understand the purpose of this place when he says that this is a form of closure. Surely the purpose of this place is not to filibuster, move motion after motion to hear another member speak, or to move the adjournment of the House at least six times. They cause vote after vote, for no other purpose than to delay the passage of legislation.

We have only passed two Bills since the House commenced after the Christmas adjournment. We have been held up day after day by procedural motion after procedural motion. It is nonsense for the member to suggest that asking the question to be put is somehow limiting debate. There has been ample debate and ample time.

It is time that this Bill is passed and put to a vote, if necessary. I ask whether a vote is necessary because much of the substance of this legislation stems from the theory and concepts developed in the last Parliament, this Parliament and in the Standing Committee on Transport. I suggest that these Bills reflect the views of members of the Standing Committee on Transport as well as members of the previous Government and this Government.

It is nonsense to suggest that there has not been ample debate. The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier is wrong. This Bill reflects the very spirit by which we hope this country can be revitalized, particularly in the transportation of goods. This Bill will provide shippers with the opportunity to compete in the shipment of goods. They will have the right to choose their method of shipping, obtain alternative tenders for shipping from various trucking companies and, according to Bill C-18, from other forms of shipping. It is a Bill designed to enhance the freedom to move. If we can make the freedom to move a real possibility, if we can get rid of the monopolies which have existed, the restrictions and curtailment on freedom of enterprise, then we can open the whole thing up and probably wind up with lower cost goods, more employment and better conditions for all.

I have a petition here from a company in Hinton, Alberta, with respect to the movement of its goods. It talks about the opportunity to move lumber and pulp to its American market by truck if it cannot make a deal with the railway. The company says the railways are effectively a monopoly and giving it the right to engage truckers, gives it the opportunity to break that monopoly. It is important that our various producers have the right to shop around.

Clause 22 of the Bill gives the definition of a public carrier, which is any railway company and any operator of an extra-provincial truck undertaking. Therefore, one of our largest agricultural products, grain, can now be moved by truck under the provisions of this Bill. I am surprised that this has not been recognized by the Opposition. I am surprised those Hon. Members would not realize that under the terms of this Bill, the system is being opened up. Some truckers are upset about this Bill, but they are established trucking companies which have what we call in Ontario a public commercial vehicle licence or a PCV licence, which enables them to have certain monopolies on certain routes.

The theory behind this Bill is that the monopoly age is over. However, the New Democratic Party is today saying that it wants to support the continuation of the monopoly age. The Liberal Party says it wants to support the continuation of the monopoly age. How does that monopoly work? A particular trucking company has a monopoly, for example, with one kind of freight from one shipper to one point, or a Class A situation where it can ship goods of every nature and kind between two cities on a particular highway. The effect of that is to limit the number of people who can engage in shipping goods. When we limit the number of people who can do that, we have a monopoly. When we have a monopoly, those companies can get whatever kind of fare they want for the goods to be delivered, and can charge, generally speaking, what the traffic will bear. That kind of monopoly situation is what this Bill is designed to stop.

There are some problems. For example, a number of trucking companies have capitalized the value of their licences. The capital value of their licences represents a very important item on their balance sheet. They say to us that if we do away with these licences, they will lose the capital value of the licences. However, these licences are monopolies which allow those companies to operate their trucks in a protected fashion. Very much like a railway has a monopoly because it owns the track, they have a monopoly because they own the right to run certain freight down certain highways exclusively. If we want to continue with a society which believes in giving monopolies, then, obviously, the monopoly has a value.

One of the problems we face with this legislation is somehow phasing in the loss of that monopoly to the companies involved. The companies which have capitalized the monopoly in the normal fashion will be able, bit by bit, to write off their goodwill or the value of their licence which will get them the money back in the tax system. However, some companies have not capitalized their licences. They developed the licences a long time ago and they now have a real value but have never been capitalized. Those companies are going to have to accept that if a state gives a monopoly, a state has the right to take that monopoly away. Surely, in a free society, monopolies which have ceased to serve their purpose cease to have any right to be there.

I would have thought that the New Democratic Party would have recognized that monopolies in transportation should not exist. They should recognize that the borders should be open and those people who want to go into trucking should be able to do so as long as they have top-notch equipment and provide a good service. But the New Democratic Party wants to protect the existing situation. Those Hon. Members say: "Don't let it change", which almost defies the logic of a Party which would call itself new and democratic. It is supposed to be new and democratic yet is in favour of monopolies, in favour of the status quo and of ensuring that some people have privileges which others cannot enjoy. That is the position of that Party today.

This House through this Bill throws the light on the situation. It throws open the situation. We are saying: "Look. If you want to get involved in interprovincial trucking, get yourselves some equipment and some local licences and away you go". That kind of freedom will make it possible for shippers to move their goods in a competitive fashion. We say that the greater good is the movement of goods. I say that, Sir, because one of the major problems we face in this country is the problem of regional disparity.

Earlier today the Mayor of Kamloops was in to see me. His Member of Parliament, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), arranged for him to come and see me with respect to a promotion by the City of Kamloops to attract business. The Mayor of Kamloops is a pretty optimistic fellow. He told me that Kamloops had an advantage by being on both the Yellowhead Highway and the highway which passes through Rogers Pass. It has the advantage of the two main Trans-Canada highways as well as the advantage of having both railways go through the town. He said: "We have these advantages and we want to make sure the people of Canada are aware of these advantages". The freedom of movement legislation, the right to be able to provide trucking any way one wants on an interprovincial basis, without the restrictions which did apply, ensures that cities like Kamloops will have a better chance at the business.

One of the problems has always been that the big cities attract the industry. Big cities attract activity because of the cost of shipping goods. If we are going to attack regional disparity, we have to attack the cost of shipping goods. We do not attack that cost by protecting monopolies and vested rights. This Bill is out to get rid of vested rights. It will allow people who want to go into business to do so on their own, to do it the way they want to do it. If we carry on with the present system we will continue to deprive the outreach parts of our nation of efficient cheap transportation.

It was said earlier by my friend from the New Democratic Party that somehow there is cross-subsidization involved. In trucking there is no such thing as cross-subsidization. If money cannot be made running a truck, then it is not run. That is the way it is. There may be cross-subsidization involved in a rail system; but there is no cross-subsidization involved in a trucking system.

Mr. Benjamin: Do you want to bet?

Mr. Blenkarn: If there are no goods, then one does not run a truck. If some people think that that somehow happens, then they really do not understand what is going on. If one runs a truck half full, then one charges for a full truck. The same is true in the case of a truck which is one-quarter full.

Mr. Benjamin: You don't know what you are talking about.

Mr. Blenkarn: A truck is run on the basis of making a profit. It makes a profit either on the trip out or on the trip back. I do not know how many of my friends opposite have been personally involved in the trucking industry as lawyers or business consultants for the industry, but I can assure them that anyone who has talked to people running trucking companies would pretty soon find out that they do not run their companies on the basis of cross-subsidization.

Indeed, the trucking industry is one of the most competitive industries that there is in terms of transportation, largely because relatively small amounts of capital are required to get into the industry. The equipment used is relatively standard. Trucks which are essentially American designed and manufactured are bought and run in a conventional fashion. There is nothing particularly modern, new or different in the industry other than in respect of the quality of the vehicles which are generally available. In general, roads go everywhere. So it is not a question of a person not being able to get into the business because he cannot afford the capital. The capital is relatively easy to obtain. A relatively small amount of money is required as a down payment on a unit. Financing is relatively easy to arrange from banks, trust companies and leasing companies. They can think of many ways in which to finance units. The real question is getting the freight moving, and moving it efficiently. If it is not moved efficiently, then one cannot remain in the business. This Bill removes the burdens, the problems, the regulations and the state-controlled monopolies that prevent the movement of goods.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I have a feeling of sheer amazement as a result of listening to the ignorance of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) concerning the trucking industry.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order.

Mr. Benjamin: I do not need to tell the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) that there are no rules around here about anyone being ignorant. The Minister should know that.

Mr. Nystrom: Otherwise there wouldn't be a Tory in the House.

Mr. Benjamin: The Hon. Member has been talking about monopolies in the trucking business. Does the Hon. Member not realize that there are 2,000 U.S. truckers in Canada, 1,000 Canadians truckers in the U.S., that there are currently 15,000 licences currently out in Canada, 4,000 new or renewal licences are issued every year, and 85 per cent to 90 per cent of the applications for licences, routes and franchises are approved? Can the Hon. Member please tell me and the House how he arrived at this monopoly nonsense in terms of the trucking business?

I want to tell my hon. friend that under deregulation in the United States the six largest trucking companies, which make ours look like peanut operations, control 87 per cent of the traffic. That is where monopoly has come about under deregulation. More truckers have been bankrupted and more mergers and takeovers have occurred than has ever been seen before in the history of the American industry. How does the Hon. Member arrive at his argument concerning a monopoly in the trucking industry in Canada? Will the Hon. Member please explain his remarks, since there are some truckers watching this nonsense of his who are outside waiting for him with a rope?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I enjoy the rope. Perhaps the Hon. Member can tell us how easy it would be for him to obtain a Class A licence to haul goods from Montreal to Toronto or from Toronto to Ottawa and how many people he thinks would oppose him if he were to go before a regulatory body in Toronto.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I did not think I was being asked questions. Would the Hon. Member please answer my question? If I were to apply for a Class A licence to haul goods from Toronto to Montreal I would receive that licence.

Mr. Blenkarn: You would?

Mr. Benjamin: I just told the Hon. Member that 90 per cent of the applications are approved. The Hon. Member does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted that the Hon. Member would be able to obtain a trucking licence with such ease. He must have some interesting abilities which other trucking companies do not have, particularly when one considers the value of these licences as they are traded between companies. The fact is that this Bill takes away the commercial value of licences, which is the real reason the Canadian Trucking Association has its concerns. People have set up the licences as being worth something.

If the Hon. Member thinks for one moment that one can obtain a PCV licence in the Province of Ontario just by winking and nodding, then he is seriously mistaken. When one goes before the transport board in Ontario with an application, one usually takes with one all sorts of collateral materials setting out public necessity and convenience. The moment one arrives before the board one is faced with a battery of 10 or 12 lawyers who represent people who may or may not have an interest in an existing licence but who are there to make sure one does not obtain one's licence. The only way one can obtain a trucking licence is to buy one from someone who has one, which costs a great deal of money. I suppose the New Democratic Party is in favour of monopolies and I understand the Hon. Member's concerns in that respect.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I would be more impressed by the argument of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), who argues that what this Bill attempts to do is to remove a monopoly situation in the trucking industry, if he were able to explain to me why it is that the Government, under Bill C-22, is trying to do exactly what he is saying the Government is not attempting to do with this legislation, that is, create a monopoly in the pharmaceutical industry. Prior to 1969, as the Hon. Member must know, the reason for the high drug prices in Canada—in fact the highest drug prices in the world—was that the multinational corporations enjoyed a monopoly in pricing in Canada. In fact, no less than six federal studies clearly showed that that was the reason for high drug prices. In effect, what was done in 1969 as a result of removing patent protection from brand name manufacturers was to introduce competition in pricing in Canada by allowing generic manufacturers to enter the field. On the one hand the Hon. Member is saying that he is opposed to monopolies, and on the other he seems willing to go along with creating one in terms of pharmaceutical products.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, it is rather humorous that the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) would make mention of Bill C-22 in his remarks when we are talking about highway transportation. The Hon. Member knows perfectly well that Bill C-22 is a Bill that merely gets rid of a situation whereby people can pirate other people's patents. Perhaps the Hon. Member is right. Perhaps we should not have any patent protection in Canada at all. As a member of an international industrial community, we find that we had better protect the interests of inventors.

The problems in Bill C-22 can be taken to the committee. Here we are talking about highway transportation. Because the New Democratic Party cannot find any reason for standing behind the opposition to this Bill, it now brings in Bill C-22. What specious nonsense.

Mr. Garneau: The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) said that this Bill will break down the monopoly in the trucking industry and that trucking licences will disappear. I understand that this Bill will not reimburse truckers for the value of this licence. I wish to ask the Member if this is a precedent for what may happen to the farmers. The Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) suggested on the week-end that the marketing boards for farmers could be put on the table in the negotiations. Should the farmer expect to see the same type of treatment, wherein the milk producer, the chicken farmer, and the egg producer who paid a certain amount of money to buy a quota will see those quotas disappear with no reimbursement in the same manner as the truckers will not be reimbursed?

Mr. Blenkarn: The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) does point out a serious problem that develops when for some reason or another Governments give producers or users in effect a monopoly over a certain service or certain right to produce. A bankable value is built into that monopoly. When government policy changes, or the right to produce is extended, or something else of that nature happens, people then say, "My goodness, that right you gave us that I did not pay anything for originally is now worth something, and you have deprived me of it".

The fact is that the marketing boards themselves that control the food processing, or the food products involved like eggs, chickens, or milk, are all concerned. The farm organizations are concerned about the value of their quotas, and how they will manage to get back to reality. There may have to be a number of actions taken to return to reality. When we wind up with a market sharing milk quota that is worth 90 cents or a $1 a litre, and the right to produce a chicken which is worth $30, then a situation arises where the licence to be in the business is unrealistic, and the Government creates a value that one citizen has over another.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will entertain a supplementary question from the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young), and one from the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). That will be it.

Mr. Young: I have a very brief question for the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). There are two connection points between Bill C-22 and this Bill. Both of them are talking about monopoly situations. Both of them are highway robbery against the Canadian consumer.

Mr. Benjamin: I listened to the Hon. Member in his earlier attempt or failure to respond to my question. In his answer he talked about what was under the control of a province, and not under this Bill. When the Hon. Member talks about licences, does he realize that those who have capitalized their licences are the big trucking companies?

Mr. Blenkarn: That is right.

Mr. Benjamin: They are the ones who will be able to write off the value of those licences, and it will be the little trucker who gets hurt and does not have that type of advantage. Would the Hon. Member explain to the House where this Bill corrects what he is complaining of?

Mr. Blenkarn: I am glad that the Hon. Member now realizes that the licences have a value. In his original question, he assumed that the licences were valueless.

Mr. Benjamin: That is the first time I have mentioned it.

Mr. Blenkarn: We now have two positions from the critic of the New Democratic Party at the same time. The fact is that there are some truckers, not all large ones or small ones, that have capitalized licences, and some that have not. For the past three or four years since people started talking about freedom to move, banks have refused to lend against licence values. People who are in the business have been writing those licence values off. They realized they were not going to last forever. Monopolies cannot last forever unless a socialist Government is in power that would protect them.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are over. The Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud).

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, thank you for giving me the floor on this Bill which is very important for the whole country, particularly so for remote regions such as the Atlantic Provinces.

I feel somewhat restricted in taking part in this debate under present circumstances because the debate is limited. It is just like everything has been decided in advance and we are talking simply to kill some time. However, Mr. Speaker, I will proceed.

Needless to say, Bill C-19 respecting motor vehicle transport by extra-provincial undertakings is at the root of as much reaction and controversy as, and in certain cases even more concern than, Bill C-18, an Act respecting national transportation. Like C-18, this Bill as drafted opens the whole trucking industry to major changes and severe disruptions which might even be likened to an earthquake. This very severe disruption will shake up the industry and, if I still compare it with an earthquake, it will most certainly register between 8 and 9 on the Richter scale. The disruption will be so severe that long-established carriers will come crashing down. Its impact will be such that firms which have been in business for some time will become so weak that they will be easy prey for stronger and larger companies which will buy out or take over smaller concerns no longer able to operate in this new climate of deregulation.

Here we have an industry which is doing $8 billion worth of business and providing employment for over 50,000 people. Through Bill C-19 the industry will be sent on a mad race towards deregulation, which appears to be the answer to everything that ails us. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to imply that every single facet of deregulation is bad, but the way this Government is rushing into this process is alarming and leaves an element of doubt about the Bill.

The first major change brought about by this Bill has to do with the criterion concerning access to the industry, namely the existing public convenience and necessity criterion.

This requirement meant the carrier had to prove the proposed service was necessary and would be of benefit to the public. It will now be replaced by the requirement "fit, willing and able". This new requirement puts the onus of proving the service is not in the public interest on existing holders of trucking licences.

In future, anyone who has a truck and is "fit, willing and able" to go into business can get on the road. Mr. Speaker, your answer to that may be: More carriers will mean more competition and better service, so everybody should be happy. That is how it looks, but the situation contains an element of disaster that may severely affect Canada's industry, because, Mr. Speaker, our industry will be at the mercy of foreign carriers. This Bill will allow U.S. carriers to penetrate our market and take over a large part of the activity in this sector. This of course means less business for our Canadian carriers.

Mr. Speaker, I should add that our carriers will be placed in an entirely new situation with parameters that have nothing in common with the present situation. If we compare Canada's transportation industry with the industry in the United States, we realize that our carriers will have to do battle with the giants, who in addition to the advantages of their size, which is considerable, will not hesitate to use any other means to take over our market. Anyone who is in the business is there to make money and make a profit, and in that case, the end justifies the means.

This Bill will now permit Americans to penetrate our market and to charge predatory rates. By predatory I mean rates below the going rate, rates that do not fully cover the service rendered. In this particular case, owing to the size of the companies, the Americans will be able to charge predatory rates to make inroads in our industry which of course will not be able to survive. Granted, we can survive for a while. Earlier, one member was asking another member here in the House whether he did not have confidence in Canada's industry. That isn't the point, Mr. Speaker. Of course we have confidence in our industry. But conditions will be so different that our carriers will be running into a brick wall.

Although our carriers may be able to fight these predatory rates for a while, we must realize this will weaken them, especially if they have to do so for any period of time. In such a weakened position, they will simply not be able to hold out after a while, becoming in turn the victims of these predatory manoeuvres and on their way out.

Ever since we heard about this Bill and the Government indicated its intention to proceed with deregulation, two Canadian motor carriers have already been bought out by two American giants. On that subject, here is what John Kennedy, president of Kingsway Transport, in Rexdale, had to say:

• (1640)

[English]

There is no question the regulation will have a devastating impact on the financial condition of the Canadian motor carrier industry. It will ultimately result in a wave of mergers, buy-outs and bankruptcies.

[Translation]

And these remarks come from a person who is directly involved in the transportation industry.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like to transport you in spirit to the Atlantic region where the trucking industry had a few comments to make. I am referring to—

[English]

The Atlantic Provinces Trucking Association represents 300 members from the Provinces of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. Some of its views are as follows:

That the national transportation policy adopted by Canada should not be copied from the U.S.A. due to the vast differences in the historical and economic realities of the two market-place structures, including the presence of Crown corporations.

The need to retain some residual economic test that would allow Canadian carriers a "balanced share" of the international traffic as agreed upon by recent agreements between Canada and the United States.

Meaningful safeguards need to be in place to prevent the two railway enterprises from excessive market concentration and dominance.

The APTA also would like to point out that regulatory reform in the trucking industry may have a different impact on carriers in the Atlantic provinces compared to other parts of Canada.

And I could go on like this with other recommendations from this Maritime Association.

[English]

The Atlantic Provinces Transport Association is also concerned with predatory rates set by rail carriers. It is concerned that the two major railway companies in Canada, because of their size, economies of power and financial strength, have the capability to manipulate rates in ways that could drive motor carriers right out of business. The APTA is also very concerned that if the railways are to be given the power to make rates secretly, how is anyone to know whether or not these rates are predatory? They, therefore, urge the Government to require that within Canada all rates be published and be compensatory.

The APTA and the people of the Atlantic area are also concerned about the effects of deregulation on the transport industry and its relation to regional development. This is a very important point.

The Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission, in its submission to the Atlantic Focus Conference, had this to say in paragraph 9:

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, you no doubt remember this conference where all Atlantic Ministers had come to Moncton to hear what Maritime people had to say. And I quote paragraph 9 of their report:

• (1650)

[English]

Canada's national transportation policy, found in Bill C-126 tabled in the House of Commons on June 26, 1986, contains a recognition that transportation is a key to regional economic development. It unfortunately fails to include the second important principle that regional economic development takes precedence over cost recovery when these two principles are in conflict.

Of course, reference was being made to Bill C-126, the predecessor of Bill C-18 and that can also apply to Bill C-19.

That position, Mr. Speaker, is identical with that taken by the Council of Maritime Premiers, which indeed stressed the importance of regional development to the Atlantic Provinces, that is the importance of transportation for regional development. May I quote here, from a submission by the Council of Premiers which is well worth mentioning, the following paragraph:

Since the new legislation does not guarantee that regional economic development objectives in cases of conflict would take precedence over objectives of commercial profitability of a transportation service, we cannot support it. We believe it should contain a clause under which commercial profitability objectives would come second to regional economic development objectives. The federal Government's reluctance to include such a clause up to now is of more concern to us as regards the negative impact of Bill C-18 on transportation services in the Maritime Provinces.

Mr. Speaker, we in the Official Opposition are going to fight to have this included in the Bill. Coming from New Brunswick, I must support the Council of Premiers because I realize that theirs is a wise recommendation to include a clause that would give regional economic development precedence over viability or profitability.

Of course, Mr. Speaker . . . Has my time expired? I have two minutes left. Thank you.

I would be remiss, Mr. Speaker, if I did not refer also to this legislation's impact on employment. You may argue that there will be more carriers, that jobs will be created. Well, that is not sure.

We believe that this Bill will first open the door to concentration, it will lead to a degree of concentration around larger carriers which may not be based in our area. Already, Mr. Speaker, we are starting to feel the effects of deregulation, because indeed last week in New Brunswick we already had massive lay-offs, 449 to be exact, for a total 800 jobs lost within a year.

Mr. Speaker, apparently CN is preparing for privatization and must make all their operations profitable.

This is what happens when you think only of profits and not enough of services and of the special roles that you should play in a community. You look only at profits and if you have to lay off a great number of workers, you do so without thinking of the fact that these people will be without a job. I would like to add, Mr. Speaker, that in a region such as New Brunswick, and especially southeastern New Brunswick, where a 17.1 per cent rate of unemployment was announced last Friday, such lay-offs are disastrous.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my colleague if he has followed the situation in California. That state has now begun to reregulate its for-hire trucking industry, and two of the reasons given for that at the hearings of the California Public Utilities Commission were, first, the increase in predatory pricing, and second, the number of serious safety problems that had developed during the period of deregulation. I would be interested in hearing from the Hon. Member if, in his view, deregulation in Canada might also lead to safety problems and predatory pricing.

[Translation]

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) for her comments and her question. As far as safety is concerned, the truckers and the public are asking serious questions because of reported problems in the United States caused by the fact that, in the race to become more profitable, trucking companies are moving to increasingly large trucks, in fact whole convoys including not only one truck with a box, but perhaps one truck, one box and one trailer, and even three trailers in certain cases, which makes movement on the roads rather difficult and highly dangerous.

In the case of predatory rates, I mentioned in my speech that, as Canadians have smaller companies, they would be at the mercy of the American truckers, who could use predatory rates because of their profit margin. This would enormously weaken Canadian truckers who would end up being so weak that they would be eaten up by the large American companies.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being five o'oclock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--MOTIONS

[English]

IMMIGRATION

ADVISABILITY OF REGULATING PRIVATE IMMIGRATION CONSULTANTS

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of introducing legislation to regulate private immigration consultants with a view to protecting unsuspecting prospective immigrants who seek advice from such consultants who are not subject to any codified regulations.

He said: Mr. Speaker, my Private Member's Motion deals with consumer rip-off by unscrupulous individuals who are running a cash-flow business on the backs of unsuspecting victims. The exploitation of potential immigrants by unscrupulous consultants has been going on, unchecked by any government action, for a number of years. It is getting worse; one can ask any Hon. Member.

A 1981 discussion paper outlined the problem and recommended courses of action. Unfortunately it was left to gather dust, although it contained many excellent ideas. The Department of Immigration has no comprehensive statistics on the number of immigration consultants operating in Canada, the type of service they provide, the fees they charge, or the incidents of misconduct. The Department has none of this information even though it was requested to obtain such in 1981 in a directive from the Minister. I have been told by senior officials of the RCMP that media reports suggesting large scale exploitation are not blown out of proportion and that exploitation by immigration consultants is widespread.

Recently I met with a constituent who was charged $10,000 by a consultant for writing two simple letters. Another prospective immigrant was charged $20,000 for filling out a social insurance application.

Unlike lawyers, immigration consultants are not subject to any regulations. They are not governed by a provincial law society which can expel members for dishonest or exploitive conduct. This is the essence of the problem.

What control is there of immigration consultants? There is hardly any effective control because the Criminal Code does not deal with exploitive or dishonest conduct. It deals only with fraud in the extraction of fees. Almost always, transactions and advice between consultants and clients are oral and behind closed doors. These unscrupulous consultants are fully cognizant of the law and they know the parameters around which they can legally operate.

Prospective immigrants have a particular vulnerability. There is a tendency on the immigrant's part not to report an incident when one has been victimized for several reasons—first, a feeling of general distrust of government officials, perhaps based upon experience in the country of origin; second, the belief that to succeed in an application something more than mere compliance is necessary; third, a willingness to place special trust in an adviser simply because of a shared language or cultural background; and, fourth, simply to avoid making waves for fear of being viewed as a trouble-maker, thereby jeopardizing the potential success of an application.

Obviously not all immigration consultants exploit potential immigrants. Many provide a competent, useful, and necessary service. The discussion paper accurately pointed out that these consultants, more often than not, are the ones who appear before government boards and agencies such as the Immigration Appeal Board. In these cases criminal fraud is unlikely, and there is better opportunity for control by Government.

The present system is not adequate to deal with unscrupulous consultants. The federal Government has the responsibility to initiate legislation or some type of measure to make certain they are brought under control. In the discussion paper and in my conversations with departmental officials and with various ethnic communities, several courses of action have been suggested. Perhaps this type of activity could be left for the provinces to control under existing provincial legislation.

On the surface this may seem like a sufficient solution, but I hesitate to give it my concurrence. First, this is a national problem and I believe a clear national policy is required. Second, the law society has a very limited capacity for enforcement.

The issue of provincial government control brings up the question of the federal Government's constitutional authority to legislate in this field. I understand that the federal Government has jurisdiction to make regulations in the field of immigration consultants. Section 115(1) of the Immigration Act reads:

> The Governor in Council may make regulations requiring any person, other than a person who is a member of the bar of any province, to make application for and obtain a licence from such authority as is prescribed before he may appear before an adjudicator or the board as counsel in exchange for any fee, reward or other form of remuneration whatever;—

The existing power would effectively control any immigration consultant appearing before a federal government board or agency. However, this is not the forum, as I stated earlier, in which unscrupulous consultants operate. The initiative would not go far enough.

Why not establish a federal registry for all immigration consultants operating in Canada, forcing all of them to be licensed. Standards would have to be met and heavy fines imposed for practising without a licence which, coupled with a greater effort by the Government to heighten the awareness within ethnic communities, would mean that all immigration consultants must be registered and must have a licence. We could achieve this buyer beware warning by diverting money already allotted to multicultural advertising.

Enforcement is essential to the success of such an initiative. The federal Government will have to instruct the RCMP to increase its investigation and monitoring activities. More emphasis will have to be placed upon the Enforcement Division within the Immigration Department.

Many caveats are associated with comprehensive licensing. Most obvious is whether the federal Government has constitutional authority. This question deserves serious thought and investigation by the standing committee.

Another concern is cost. How much would it cost to maintain a registry, issue licences, and have enforcement? The registry and licencing would cost nothing because it could be done on a cost recovery basis. Effective enforcement is another matter and it, too, deserves investigation by the committee. Equally important is the problem associated with immigration consultants operating in foreign countries.

In the few moments available to me I have outlined the problems associated with the proliferation of unscrupulous immigration consultants and have suggested a possible course of action. The problem is serious. It may not be in the headlines every day or on the minds of the majority of Canadians, but the activities of unscrupulous consultants are threatening the integrity of the entire immigration system, which will be hijacked by these pirates if something is not done.

If this type of exploitation were occurring on Bay Street or on the stock-market, government action would have been swift and decisive. Yet the problem continues and Governments, both federal and provincial, are silent. I urge that my motion be passed to allow it to be closely examined by the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration so that effective recommendations for action can be presented to the Government.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me today to take part in this debate and to support my hon. friend's motion. I think we could discuss this matter for hours and not get anywhere by 6 p.m.

[English]

In the spirit of the new parliamentary system, I am pleased to say that, with an amendment, we should be discussing the matter in the appropriate committee. Indeed abuses are taking place and something must be done.

For 25 years of my life, I have been involved with all these refugee issues. When I attended Ottawa University, I can remember as their president coordinating students' efforts in welcoming Hungarian refugees.

At the time, I was University President. Later, I became a Member of the House. I can remember during a visit to Vienna seeing all these people arriving from Czechoslovakia. Once more I had done my share either receiving them in Canada or helping groups willing to get involved in these matters. Later on, we could witness the integration of all those refugees into our Canadian society. I do not think that Canada has any lesson to receive from anybody when it comes to its generosity towards the so-called boat people.

[English]

We were away ahead of everyone in receiving these refugees. It is sad that people have the nerve to exploit those who are in the greatest need. They are being abused because they have nowhere to turn and no one to trust. The Hon. Member is absolutely right about that.

• (1710)

When the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) was the Minister responsible for immigration he initiated a major study on immigration consultants. We have a very major report on this question, which I am sure my hon. friend has seen and read. It is a discussion paper of April, 1981, entitled The Exploitation of Potential Immigrants by Unscrupulous Consultants. At that time we already knew that people were being exploited.

We would prefer to have a committee consider this motion rather than the Government in order that progress be made on the issue of exploitation. Way back in 1981 or 1982 the then Minister responsible for immigration initiated a number of steps including a special unit in the RCMP, special information programs, and special steps in the Department. I understand that the Department is, unfortunately, sometimes very reluctant to act in these matters.

In recent months my esteemed colleague and friend, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), has asked questions and given his support to the initiative which the Hon. Member has put forward today. I would be most surprised if members of the third Party in the House were not in agreement with us. I am sure we are all in agreement on the matter which is being put forth for our reflection today. However, it is not sufficient to reflect upon this matter; we want action.

Nothing has changed since the Minister made these studies. We thought that the creation of a special unit in the RCMP may send a message, but the exploiters of those who are in the greatest need still proceed.

Canada is still being built. We are building a little every day. I do not agree with people who say that Canada is an old country. It is a young country which we are building every day. You are contributing in your own way, Mr. Speaker, as is the member who presented the motion. Each government tries to make an imprint. We need immigrants in this country. It is our duty to explain to Canadians that we need immigrants. It is our duty to explain to Canadians that in order to keep Canada as good as it is we need immigrants to ensure that there are enough workers in the country.

The so-called two founding races of this country—if I were an Eskimo or an Indian I would be very nervous to hear Prud'homme talking about the two founding races. Long before my ancestors came to Canada in the 1600s there were already people here. Therefore, I do not like the expression "two founding races". If there are two founding races, they are the Eskimos and the Indians. However, we know that the so-called two founding races, the Anglophones and the Francophones, are diminishing greatly. It is due to new immigrants that Canada is more prosperous and more populous.

Can you imagine what a bad image of Canada these immigrants have when they are exploited by unscrupulous consultants and unscrupulous lawyers? The time has come to study this issue attentively and determine what should be done. We need not study long because we have already done many studies, including those done by the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry in 1981, 1982, and 1983 when he was the Minister responsible.

In conclusion I will say that I am mainly in agreement with this motion, but believe I have to make an amendment. With the consent of my colleague who moved this motion and my esteemed colleague in the third Party, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), which shows very beautiful co-operation this afternoon:

That the motion be amended by deleting the words "in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of introducing" and replacing it with "the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration be empowered to study the advisability of the Government introducing",

I am honoured to present that amendment to Your Honour with the consent of the House. I thank the House for its good intentions.

• (1720)

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to second the amendment moved by my friend, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), as well as to support the motion by the Member for Etobicoke North (Mr. Pennock). I believe that the proposal to empower the standing committee to look into the questions of unscrupulous immigration consultants and to work out means by which their activities can be regulated and hopefully eliminated is long overdue.

Let me note the comments which were made by the Hon. Member for Etobicoke North in his opening statement, as well as before the Committee on Private Members' Business when he appeared there. He stated in November that his staff had spoken with the RCMP to get an idea of the scope of his problem. He said: "We were told that media reports suggesting large scale exploitation were not blown out of proportion. The RCMP claimed that exploitation by immigration consultations was widespread not only in Toronto but right across the country". That is how our federal police force views the problem.

It is deeply disturbing that despite the announcement by the then Minister of Employment and Immigration in 1981, under a former Liberal Government, he was asking the Department to get facts and figures on these abuses, about which many members have learned through dealing with our constituents, no such information has been collected by the Department in the last six or seven years. I believe it is an indication that the Department has failed to take this issue seriously.

I read the discussion paper in 1981. It became apparent that the Department does not want to accept the fact that there is a real problem. The options that were suggested by the former Minister became weaker and weaker as one read through the 1981 discussion paper. Finally, it sounded as though his officials were trying to persuade those who might read the discussion paper six years ago that there was really no problem.

However, as the Hon. Member for Etobicoke North indicates, the number of cases in which people are ripped off by unscrupulous consultants in this country and other countries where it is harder to investigate is legion. Immigrants as well as prospective immigrants are acutely vulnerable to this kind of exploitation.

One of the major activities in my riding office is to handle immigration cases. We attempt to give good and accurate information and we act as advocates, as I am sure do those in the offices of other members. Furthermore, this information and assistance is available for free.

While I do not recall any particular examples of overcharging by consultants, I know that the Immigration Department has put up road-blocks which have been extremely difficult to overcome. We have intervened on behalf of immigrants, sometimes successfully. However, it is clear that the pattern that has been developing is one in which the Immigration Department has been more difficult to deal with in recent years.

I suggest there are a couple of reasons for that. First, the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission has been consistently losing staff as a result of cut-backs by the previous and present Governments. People are short-staffed and working under stress, and their direction may be inadequate.

Second, the attitude of management within CEIC seems to have been that immigration officers should be trying to keep people out rather than helping them to get in. Immigration rules have been tightened, often without notice, making it more difficult for immigration. Consequently, if one does not have a particular angle to get into the country, one's chances of entry are quite limited.

Many people want to come to Canada because they see it as a very fine country. They are prepared to accept the disadvantages of our climate and the 75-cent dollar when they compare our country to most other countries in the world.

The management in the Immigration Department still staffs heavily in Europe but lightly in areas like Latin America and Asia. Management seems to inculcate the attitude that such things as birth certificates and other documents in certain countries should not be recognized. There have been difficulties with legitimate refugees while others who claim refugee status may be more questionable but find it easier to get into Canada.

Finally, prospective immigrants feel vulnerable, fearing that they may ask the wrong question at the local immigration office. I might point out that when I discuss some cases with my staff I feel that we are vulnerable when acting for a prospective immigrant. We are very careful about how we frame our questions, for fear we may give the Immigration Department a piece of information that would allow them to turn down the immigrant. These are examples of problems which make immigrants vulnerable and encourage them to believe someone who promises them miracles for thousands of dollars.

I had an opportunity to read a letter written by the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) in response to a number of questions by our immigration critic, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), about the activities of immigration consultants. I fear that the attitude reflected by the management of that Department has changed little from 1981. There is a Panglossian optimism that is not justified by the facts.

The Minister states that he believes there are grounds for optimism. For example, he refers to a Private Member's Bill in Ontario, but we do not know whether the Bill will pass. Furthermore, as the Member for Etobicoke North pointed out, this is a matter for national action.

The Minister refers to the Department seeking a consensus from the Law Society and other groups with respect to licensing. Many consultants do not want a consensus so they can continue to be unregulated in the kind of rip-offs in which they are indulging right now.

I hope the Standing Committee on Employment and Immigration provides leadership in this area. The Minister admits that despite efforts to get the RCMP to act, he cannot point to a lengthy list of successful prosecutions. He goes on to say that nevertheless, progress is being made and efforts are gaining momentum.

That is clearly not true. The Minister specifically indicates in his letter in January that early optimism about a register is now turning into rejection. This is another question that I believe the committee should study. I congratulate the Hon. Member for Etobicoke North, and while I do not agree with him on every issue, I suggest that he is certainly not only speaking on behalf of his constituents but also on behalf of his colleagues in all Parties. I hope Hon. Members will agree to allow this matter to go to committee before 6 p.m. tonight.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate this afternoon on Motion No. 45, presented by the Hon. Member for Etobicoke North (Mr. Pennock).

Mr. Speaker, to help Canadians understand this afternoon's debate, I think it might be useful to repeat the contents of Motion No. 45 for their benefit.

The motion says:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of introducing legislation to regulate private immigration consultants with a view to protecting unsuspecting prospective immigrants who seek advice from such consultants who are not subject to any codified regulations.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) has proposed an amendment to have this motion referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, for further consideration.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to clarify the scope of this motion, because there are certain people, certain advisers, who take advantage of the naïveté of immigrants who want to enter Canada.

Where this motion refers to consultants, these are people other than lawyers who, for a fee, give advice or represent their clients in immigration cases. I may remind the House that many immigration consultants are competent people and do useful work by providing pertinent advice that is of benefit to their clients. However, since consultants do not have to observe certain standards regarding conduct, fee schedules and knowledge of Immigration legislation and programs, the result has been to attract a certain class of unscrupulous individuals who pass themselves off as immigration consultants.

Mr. Speaker, the 1981 report of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, gives a number of examples. For instance, two sisters had to pay a fee of $14,000 to a consultant who promised to get their sister back to Canada. Fourteen thousand dollars is a lot of money! There were other examples. One consultant demanded $1,000 for representing a foreign national before the Immigration Appeal Board, although his services were of no use to his client. Some people had to spend $1,000 to obtain what turned out to be shockingly little information on how to claim refugee status.

Mr. Speaker, there is a certain degree of vulnerability among immigrants, and it is this kind of abuse that must be dealt with.

Some people are vulnerable because, generally speaking, they are suspicious of public servants and have more confidence in a consultant who speaks the same language or has the same culture as themselves, and they believe that such a consultant can give them a certain advantage. Immigrants to Canada are not suspicious enough, and this leads to abuses.

Very often, such consultants operate openly in Canada or abroad. In Canada, their services range from giving simple advice to representing their clients at hearings or before the Immigration Appeal Board in accordance with the Immigration Act. As an example, we have seen the recent inflow of Turkish citizens claiming refugee status, who had been advised by foreign consultants. As Canada supports immigration, some consultants will have other opportunities to abuse the situation unless our Government attacks this problem.

One possible solution would be to include in the Immigration Act provisions to deliver licences to consultants and regulate their activities. Potential immigrants would tend to go to certified consultants and unauthorized consultants could be sued. However, legislative action does have certain drawbacks. Among other things, we would need to create a mechanism to apply the regulations. This would be one method to deal with the very real problem of unscrupulous consultants who give their foreign victims a very bad image of Canada.

Other recourses are available to immigrants. Of course, they could institute proceedings under a provincial consumer protection legislation or obtain better immigration services. However, court proceedings could create various problems for immigrants.

It is difficult to put together a strong case when clients refuse to testify.

On the other hand, we cannot institute proceedings against consultants operating in a foreign land. There could also be an attempt at solving the problem by increasing the quality of our immigration services to such an extent that seeking advice from a consultant would become an exercise in futility. Among other things, we could make information more readily accessible, increase the availability of staff for consultation purposes, keep NGOs better informed and encourage their participation.

For the time being, people continue to seek advice from consultants; many of them are competent and honest. However, others are taking advantage of their customers. We should also consider the advisability of introducing legislation to regulate private immigration consultants as a means to remedy this situation.

Mr. Speaker, I should like therefore to support motion No 45 moved by our colleague the Hon. Member for Etobicoke North (Mr. Pennock), as well as the amendment just moved by the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme). I indicate my support and wish regulations be enacted to restrain the activities of immigration consultants.

[English]

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased today to rise to support this motion. I am particularly pleased given the fact that this motion has received the support of both the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party. I hope that through actions such as this we can get the equilibrium of the House re-established.

One of the focuses of the debate this week has been ethics, so perhaps I can start off by saying I have a direct conflict of interest with respect to this motion. I have the largest, most populous riding in the country. Something like 60 per cent of my constituency work has to do with immigration. A very good proportion of that 60 per cent has to do with the unscrupulous dealings of immigration consultants. I am very determined to reduce my work-load by seeing this motion passed so that we can put these people out of business.

I want to stress, of course, that there are many competent immigration consultants who provide accurate and helpful advice to their clients. Such consultants make beneficial contributions to the immigration process. My problem is that I hear about these people but do not get to see them. The cases which are handled successfully by these consultants do not end up on my desk.

It is obvious that we have a large number of individuals other than lawyers who purport to be immigration consultants. They enter the field untested as to their knowledge of immigration, with no form of qualifications, and charge fees they themselves set which are beyond those of any sort of professional regulatory body. These fees are not trivial. Sometimes they are in the thousands of dollars. There have been cases where fees are charged into the tens of thousands of dollars.

These so-called immigration consultants offer advice to people, in some cases, which is completely impossible to fulfil. Case after case has come into my office where people have been taken by these so-called immigration consultants for every penny they have, and only when they run out of money does the consultant suggest they see their Member of Parliament to see if he can straighten out the problem.

I have a very direct interest in seeing this motion passed today. Mention was made of the earlier 1981 discussion paper on unscrupulous immigration consultants. I believe it is time to take direct action. I congratulate the Hon. Member for Etobicoke North (Mr. Pennock) for bringing this motion forward because I believe those of us from areas where there is a very heavy immigrant settlement are determined that these unscrupulous practices be condemned and stopped.

Not only do these practices take place in Canada but they also take place abroad. People come to me and tell me they are paying large amounts of money to so-called consultants, often Canadians, who operate abroad in cities such as Hong Kong. They hold out a promise that they have an inside track to our embassies and can get these cases through. As we all know, they do not have these inside tracks. What they do have is the ability to gouge people of large amounts of money and then, after they have taken their money, they just throw them aside.

I want to see the motion passed today. In conclusion, I think that the Hon. Member for Etobicoke North (Mr. Pennock) should be congratulated by the whole House for bringing this motion forward. I hope to see us vote to accept both the motion and the amendment so that speedy action can be taken on this matter.

[Translation]

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate, especially since I have the impression this is a Private Member's motion that has a chance of being adopted. There is a chance it will get things done. That is important. The motion presented by the Hon. Member in the House today concerns a very important matter. It is about immigration consultants. I think all members will agree there is some exploitation going on in this area and that it should stop.

Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to see all Parties expressing the same views and taking the same perspective on a matter of this importance. Previous speakers have testified to the realities of this problem. I know from my own experience that it is a very real problem. Hon. Members have indicated that a report by the RCMP mentioned the problem existed across the country.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to point out that so far, the Department of Employment and Immigration has neglected to collect a body of information on the subject. Because of this, I think it is very important that this House should point out the urgency of the matter and indicate to the Department that the question must be given consideration. I think individual members should point out to the Government that all of us as members of all three Parties want to see some action in this area.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the very existence of these consultants who exploit immigrants indicates a need for information on immigration regulations, information that should be more readily available, not just outside the country but also within our borders. Many of my constituents, many residents do not know all these immigration regulations. There is a real need for information here.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to say that nearly all immigrants in my riding are concerned over the question of family reunions. Immigrants who are in Canada want their relatives in other countries to join them here, and this is indeed a very strong incentive. Everybody can appreciate that. All Canadians can readily understand that immigrants want their relatives to be with them here in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I think that because of such a strong incentive those people can easily be exploited by individuals who are not really interested in the plight of immigrants.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would simply point out that if we want to implement a fair immigration policy, if we want to open our doors to immigrants and protect them from people who exploit their situation, we must have a full employment policy in this country because the more Canadians we have on the unemployment lists the stronger the political pressure to stem the flow of immigrants. This creates a climate such that immigrants find it very difficult to come to Canada, and those who are already here are thwarted in their efforts to have their relatives join them.

In a nutshell, Mr. Speaker, we cannot expect to have a more equitable immigration policy unless we first begin by advocating a full employment policy.

Mr. Speaker, I conclude my remarks by commending my colleague for introducing this motion in the House, a motion which calls for action.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will recognize the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Oostrom) next. I know that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Kilgour) also has a few words to say. I hope Hon. Members will govern themselves accordingly.

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, I am happy indeed to second the motion of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke North (Mr. Pennock). I welcome this opportunity to speak on the matter of unscrupulous immigration consultants. Although they represent a small minority, their actions nevertheless threaten to disrupt the entire immigration process. Not only do they make a mockery of the system and the essential work done by their ethical colleagues, they prey upon prospective immigrants in a merciless fashion. I have seen this happen in my riding of Willowdale.

Immigration clients are, unfortunately, vulnerable for all the various reasons mentioned by my colleague. In desperation and ignorance they often turn to these charlatans as their best hope for obtaining immigrant status. The results for the unsuspecting client can be very serious indeed.

One odious aspect of this exploitation is the cost involved. The victims are powerless and often poor. The fees charged by these unscrupulous consultants are large, sometimes $10,000 and more. Once the fee has been paid, the victim has no recourse under the law if the consultant wilfully fails to provide a service. Many prospective immigrants in my riding do not know that their MP provides this service for free and that he wants to see family reunifications happen as quickly as possible.

While the situation is obviously intolerable, we must nevertheless appreciate that the majority of consultants provide a valuable service. Therefore, we are pursuing several avenues to rid the system of the impostors and to protect potential immigrants from exploitation. The Hon. Member for Etobicoke North is proposing new legislation, but there are other options to be considered as well.

First, the CEIC Immigration Group maintains an active, ongoing dialogue on legal issues and immigration practices and procedures with the legal community. It shares our concern for the increased numbers of unregulated and unscrupulous consultants and is equally anxious to put a stop to them. Out of these discussions have come three principal recommendations that merit serious consideration. Alas, they have inherent problems as well.

To begin with, there is a suggestion that licensing would be an economical and effective method of control. It would seem to be the logical solution, but I can see a couple of complications. Who would be responsible for the licensing? Might not the licence itself become a licence to continue these unscrupulous practices? Certainly, the commission could not take on this role because of the impossibility of being open to accusations of conflict of interest.

The second proposal concerns requiring independent immigration consultants to work for and under the supervision of lawyers. That is a possible solution, but it narrows the definition of "counsel" under the Act to mean legal counsel. Therefore, it restricts the clients' right to counsel. We must not forget that many clients still prefer to have their clergyman, community leader, or other concerned individual present their case at a hearing.

The third major recommendation deals with the importance of educating the public, both here and outside Canada, about proper immigration procedures. The commission recognizes this need and it has increased its public relation campaign to inform prospective immigrants that free counselling is available at all Canadian immigration centres.

Finally, I wish to address my colleague, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke North, and the recommendation that we amend the present legislation or propose new legislation to regulate private immigration consultants. Awarding licences to or regulating a professional group would normally be a provincial matter and not federal, particularly if members of that group are appearing before a federal appeal board. For either level of government in a time of fiscal and manpower restraint the cost of a regulatory bureaucracy is an important consideration. As well, there are hurdles in enforcing more stringent legislation. The RCMP has no jurisdiction to investigate the many cases which arise outside of Canada. The activities of these unscrupulous consultants are often, strictly speaking, not illegal.

I hope that it is apparent to all present that any new legislation would be one of many options, all of which bear important implications. We are all committed to ridding the system of these impostors. The real victims of their unscrupulous behaviour are the immigrants.

I fully endorse my colleague's motion, as well as the amendment made by my hon. colleague for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme). I trust that this evening we will be able to come to a vote and send it to the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration.

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I also am delighted to speak in this debate. If I may paraphrase, the motion and the amendment together basically state that all Parties in this House wish the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration to consider legislation to regulate private immigration consultants with a view to protecting unsuspecting prospective immigrants who seek advice, and so on.

I wish to speak in favour of both the motion and the amendment. Very briefly, I should declare my conflict of interest, as did my colleague, the Member for York—Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan). His riding has about 270,000 people, and my riding has about 120,000. In York-Scarborough about 54 per cent of the people in that constituency have a first language which is not English. Edmonton—Strathcona has about 62 per cent of the people in that constituency who originate from other than France or Britain. Not all are first generation, but a large number are.

I wish to start by making the point that in my view immigration creates jobs, it does not take them away. I am reminded that in York-Scarborough the unemployment rate is now 3 per cent or under. Mississauga also has an unemployment rate of 3 per cent or under. These two areas presently have the highest rates of immigration, and they are the areas in the country which have the lowest unemployment rate.

It seems to me that the point is clear from all objective evidence that newcomers create jobs rather than take them away. As you will recall, that was the experience of Edmonton in its period of boom. The more people that came, the more jobs that were created, the lower the unemployment rate. That is why we are increasing the level of immigration in Canada. We know that immigrants create jobs for services, houses, schools, and all the things that create a healthy economy. They also reinforce the multicultural nature of Canada. Immigration and multiculturalism represent the solution to many of Canada's problems, they do not represent problems to Canada. The independent class of newcomers will be targeted at 48,000 to 55,000, including dependants. I am pleased that the target is increasing this year, and it will increase in the future.

The Government believes in immigration and the arrival of newcomers to Canada. Our birth rate is now between 1.4 and 1.6 per cent. It becomes clear that unless something is done about the birth rate, it will only be a large number of newcomers which will allow us to pay the pensions for the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) and the Hon. Member for York—Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan), or any of the other members or people in this country.

I wish to say that I strongly support the motion. There are many ethical immigration counsellors in Canada, but there are also some unethical ones. We are all trying here today, in a great show of non-partisanship, to get at the unscrupulous ones, whose practices are widely condemned. It is particularly regrettable that these people ply their trade with people who are often vulnerable because of language, or because of economic problems as newcomers, or because of family concern about officials from other countries. Mr. Speaker, you know what the consultants did in Turkey or Portugal. Unfortunately, they have done things outside of Canada which have affected the attitude of many Canadians toward newcomers. We all regret that, which is doubtless one of the reasons we are doing this today.

An obvious way to control unscrupulous consultants is to provide immigration services so easily and so comprehensively that clients will not think that they have to get a consultant. In Edmonton there have been problems with line-ups, and on occasion problems with people being mistreated. There are many immigration officers in Edmonton who are excellent people. They are sympathetic and they understand the tension that the people are under. We wish to make services more accessible.

I would move, Sir, that the question now be put.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is as follows. Mr. Prud'homme, seconded by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), moved:

That the motion be amended by deleting the words "in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of introducing" and substituting the words "the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration be empowered to study the advisability of the Government introducing".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall the amendment carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Prud'homme) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on the main motion, as amended, which reads:

That the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration be empowered to study the advisability of the Government introducing legislation to regulate private immigration consultants with a view to protecting unsuspecting prospective immigrants who seek advice from such consultants who are not subject to any codified regulations.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Pennock), as amended, agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall I call it six o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

HUMAN RIGHTS—U.S.S.R.—PLIGHT OF IOFFE FAMILY

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, in response to my question on January 20, 1987, about Dr. Ioffe, a refusnik, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) said in part and I quote: "It is precisely on individual cases like that that we will find the real test of the intention of the Soviet Union with regard to people in that country who might want to move to freedom".

Yesterday I met Lea Mariasin, her husband Alexander, and their daughter Faina. They first applied to leave Russia in 1974. Lea became ill with cancer in 1981. It took almost six years to convince the Soviets to let her come to Canada where she could receive special medical treatment which is not available in Russia.

We rejoice and give prayerful thanks when a family such as the Mariasins are allowed to leave.

On February 11, 1986, almost exactly one year ago, Anatoly Shcharansky was finally allowed to leave Russia after a 10-year struggle. The release of these high profile refusniks rates favourable publicity for the Soviet Union but it masks the cruel situation which really exists. It is estimated that over 400,000 Jews are being denied their fundamental human right to leave Russia.

The following families have been waiting at least 10 years to flee the tyranny of the U.S.S.R. I will read the surnames: Abramov, Abramovich, Abramovsky, Adamsky, Adzhiashvili, Agranov, Aibinder, Airikyan, Akselrod, Akura, Alber, Alperovich, Aronov, Avadyaeva, Avshalumov, Basman, Bedrin, Belinskis, Belsky, Berger, Berik, Bernshteyn, Berzas, Bezprozvanny, Biniashvili, Blitshteyn, Blokh, Borokhov, Braslavskaya, Braun, Brodetsky, Bromberg, Brondshpits, Bychkov, Chernin, Dashevsky, Daskal, David, Davidovich, Degin, Dorgman, Dubossarskaya, Dunaevsky, Edidovich, Efremashvili, Elistratova, Englin, Esilevich, Etin, Etinger, Evdaev, Faerman, Faermark, Feldman, Finkelshteyn, Flek, Flomenblit, Fradkina, Frelikh, Fridman, Furman, Gaberman, Gak, Gelbart, Gelbrukh, Gendin, Genkina, German, Gersh, Gershkovich, Gitelman, Glikman, Gofman, Goikhman, Goldberg, Goldort, Golfand, Gomelskaya, Gorelik, Goreshnik, Govorkov, Grauer-Slokhovskaya, Grin, Guman, Gurevich, Gvinter, Ilizarova, Inberg, Inditsky, Ioffe, Iosevich, Izakson, Izraileva, Izrailova, Kaganovich, Kalendarev, Kamrash, Karolin, Kats, Katsnelson, Kavkasidze, Kayumov, Kazakevich, Khaikin, Khaimchaeva, Khakham, Khasis, Khizgiyaev, Khmelevsky, Khmelinskaya, Kislik, Klayn, Klich, Knokh, Kogan, Koleminsky, Komissarchik, Konstantinovsky, Kopmar, Korabelnik, Kosharovsky, Kotono, Kotov, Kovalenko, Kovner, Kozanevich, Kozhokin, Kraus, Kremen, Krivonos, Kun, Kurchik, Kuris, Kusaeva, Kushnir, Kvint, Ladyzhensky, Lalmiev, Layden, Leiderman, Lekhtman, Lemberg, Lenskis, Lerner, Leshchiner, Levin, Levit, Liberman, Lifshits, Lukatsky, Lvovsky, Magidovich, Makhlin, Maksimenko, Malamud, Manashirov, Manzhurin, Mardakhaev, Marinov, Markov, Masandilov, Matveev, Matveeva, May, Mayzel, Mendeleev, Meshkauskas, Meylakh, Meyman, Mints, Mirsky, Murat, Natanov, Neger, Newman, Nikulina, Novikov, Novikova, Nudel, Olekhnovich, Oskotsky, Osnis, Ostrovskaya, Ovsishcher, Palanker, Pinkhusovich, Piskarev, Polukhina, Polyakova, Popok, Popovsky, Prestina, Prober, Pyatetsky, Raibshteynas, Raish, Raiz, Rakhlenko, Rakovsky, Rappoport, Ratenberg, Ravish, Reder, Roizis, Rozenberg, Rozenfeld, Rozenshteyn, Rozovskaya, Rubenchik, Rubinova, Rudzevitskaya, Rynsky, Safirshteyn, Sarkisova, Sepiashvili, Serova, Shafir, Shalumov, Shalumov, Shamilov, Shapiro, Shakhnovich, Shakhnovsky, Shchiglik, Sheffer, Shnayder, Shnayderman, Shtilbans, Shurer, Sigalov, Sipel, Slepak, Smelyanskaya, Sobol, Sosna, Strelchik, Surpin, Uchitel, Vaksman, Vaynblat, Vaynshteyn, Vays, Veber, Vodovoz, Volvosky, Yakir, Yakubovich, Yampolsky, Yuriditsky, Zarka, Zeldovich, Zilbert, Zitserman.

How can we trust the Soviet Union regarding peace or disarmament accords if we cannot trust the Soviets to live up to their basic human rights obligations?

Mr. Roger Clinch (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, as was mentioned earlier, on January 14, 1987, officials of the Canadian Embassy in Moscow visited Dr. Ioffe at his apartment to express support for his efforts to emigrate and to check on his state of health. At that time, he appeared to be physically fit and in reasonable spirits. Embassy officials again visited Dr. Ioffe on February 1 at which time he advised them that he had stopped his hunger strike while he awaited a decision on his son's application for emigration.

Dr. Ioffe's case and those of others like him have been raised with Soviet leaders by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and by Canadian officials. We have urged the Soviet Union to adopt a more compassionate approach to Soviet Jewry, including the right to emigrate. It is tragic that Dr. Ioffe should have to resort to a hunger strike to obtain a right provided for in the Helsinki Final Act and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, both of which have been signed by the U.S.S.R.

Dr. Ioffe's plight reminds us that, despite the recent releases of some prominent political activists in the U.S.S.R., there are still hundreds of others who remain in detention for their political beliefs or who are denied permission to emigrate. Canada will continue to monitor the situation very closely and to make every effort on their behalf.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF DECISION

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, on December 16, I questioned the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) regarding the announcement that the Canadian Embassy in Helsinki, Finland, was to be closed to save the Department some money as part of the Government's policy of restraint. I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs the following question:

> Will he reconsider this short-sighted and unfortunate decision which has shocked thousands of my constituents in Thunder Bay, constituents of Finnish Canadian origin who love Canada but who expect to have the services of an embassy when they visit Finland and enjoy the country from which they and their ancestors came?

I could deal critically with the policy of restraint which the Minister gave as his reason for making this decision. The deficit is the result of unemployment and inadequate economic activity in Canada. The Government has chosen to deal with the deficit directly rather than to deal with the causes of the deficit. It has chosen to increase taxes and to cut back on spending. One can only ask oneself whether the result will not be the same result as such policies produced in the past, which was to increase unemployment and the deficit rather than to solve problems.

One could say more on that theme but I would like to deal with the specific decision to close the embassy in Finland because that is the lamentable, short-sighted and unfortunate decision which the Secretary of State for External Affairs has made. I note first that Finnish Canadians represent an important part of the Canadian population. There are, by various counts, either over 50,000 or over 60,000 such citizens in Canada. There are over 60,000 of them if one includes all of those persons who in the 1981 census indicated that they were of Finnish or some other origin as part of their ancestral histories. I note that a substantial part of this population is to be found in the City of Thunder Bay. Thunder Bay is second only to Toronto in its Finnish Canadian population and this population is concerned about the decision the Government has made.

I note that these Finnish Canadians retain links to their homeland, the free country of Finland. They travel there frequently and now find themselves not being able to deal with a Canadian Embassy in Helsinki. Those in Finland who would like to have contact with Canada easily and directly will not have an embassy there with which to deal. This will have serious effects on individuals. There will be inconveniences and expenses involved in travelling to some other city to get in touch, perhaps, with the Canadian Embassy in Stockholm.

For these reasons, and recognizing the difficulties this will impose upon Canadians, I have asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs to reconsider his decision. I note the irony of a closure of the embassy in Helsinki very soon after the Canadian Government concluded a social security agreement with the Government of Finland in order to facilitate social insurance pension concerns for many Canadians.

There are other concerns upon which one could focus as well. The Canadian Department of External Affairs is involved more and more intensively in economic activity, support for trade, support for investment, and other activities. I was struck when visiting Berlin not many days ago to find that the Canadian mission there, which was primarily a mission to the military powers, is primarily involved now in economic matters.

Finland is of enormous interest to us in northern Ontario and in other parts of the country by reason of its forest industries. A conference on small scale forestry, which was organized by one of my constituents not many months ago in Finland, was an expression of this kind of interest. To lose the embassy at Helsinki for these purposes is much to be regretted. I particularly decry it, given the conviction of the preceding Minister of State for Multiculturalism that multiculturalism meant business and that the Department of External Affairs should be supporting that.

There are additional aspects which make this decision lamentable. I look to a letter from the Finnish Canadian Cultural Federation to the Secretary of State for External Affairs to spotlight these. The authors note that Finland has played a prominent and even central part in the negotiations between East and West for universal human rights. This closure at Helsinki suggests that our Government no longer supports little powers such as Finland, which has played so dominant a role in these matters. By closing our embassy in Finland, we are bound to raise speculation in many quarters that Canada's support is not to be taken at its face value. By abandoning our diplomatic post in Helsinki, we are also signalling to the world our indifference to the independence of Finland which is increasingly subject to historically well-known expansionist pressures from the East.

I conclude with the ultimate reason, the first one given by the Federation. I note that Canada is very much dedicated to the United Nations and has played its own large part in UN emergency forces in peace-keeping involvements. The authors note that Finland is a respected partner in the United Nations on whose behalf over 20,000 Finnish soldiers have served in its peace-keeping forces, thus making Finland's relative contribution the largest in the world when compared with that provided by other countries of the United Nations.

We should not be cutting off easy connections with the people of Finland. We should be maintaining all links which an embassy in Helsinki represents. I call upon the Secretary of State for External Affairs again to reconsider the decision and to ensure that our Embassy in Finland remains in active service.

Mr. Roger Clinch (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, the Government's program to reduce public expenditures has impacted severely upon the operations of all Departments, including the Department of External Affairs. It has required the Department to reduce its resources in all parts of the world and to close a number of posts in the United States, Europe, Latin America, the Middle East, Australia, and Africa. It was in the context of this imperative to reduce Canadian operations abroad that the decision to close in Helsinki became unavoidable.

This decision does not reflect in any way a change in Canada's friendly and supportive policy toward Finland. As the Hon. Member said last December, Canadians of Finnish descent have made a significant contribution to Canadian life. The Government will do everything possible to sustain the productive and cordial relations which prevail between Finland and Canada and to support the Finnish Government and people as they make an important, distinctive and independent contribution to the development of peaceful and stable relations among the countries of Europe and around the world.

In addition, through our Embassy in Stockholm, for which the Government will seek non-resident accreditation for Finland and, through various units in Ottawa, the Department of External Affairs will continue to provide services to Canadians with particular interest in Finland.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—AWARDING OF CF-18 FIGHTER AIRCRAFT MAINTENANCE CONTRACT—TECHNOLOGY TRANSFER FACTOR. (B) REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF DOCUMENTS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to address the way in which the Government handled the awarding of the CF-18 fighter contract. The decision came down on October 31, 1986. I want to remind the Government that people in Manitoba have not forgotten this decision. They are still waiting for answers.

• (1815)

There are three aspects to this issue. The first is with regard to the fundamental question of fairness and why the rules of the game were changed at the last minute. This was an open bidding process. Bristol Aerospace from Winnipeg put in its bid and, according to the 75-member panel of government officials which examined the bids, its bid was the superior and least expensive bid. Yet, in the ninth inning of the game the Government changed the rules and said it would not give the contract to Winnipeg, even though it won the bidding process, but would give it to Canadair because of technology transfer benefits. Technology transfer was introduced at the last minute rather than at the beginning of the bidding process. This raised fundamental questions about the fairness of the awarding of this contract and about the integrity of the bidding process.

If the decision of the civil servant panel had been followed, the contract would clearly have been awarded to Winnipeg. As we have said from the beginning, in all justice the contract should have gone to Winnipeg because the Winnipeg company won the bidding process. If the Government did not want to follow a process of open bidding, it should not have started with an open bidding process.

The second aspect of this issue which I want to address has to do with the fact that the Government has said that the offers were very close and there was, therefore, a choice of where the contract should be awarded. In any race between excellent competitors the finish is often very close. That in itself is not a reason for the Government to give the contract to whichever firm it pleased after having entered into a bidding process.

There are a number of matters which have raised questions about whether the bids were in fact close. For example, it was pointed out that Bristol Aerospace in Winnipeg had access to $20 million or $30 million worth of technology which is necessary for working with this aircraft. That technology was not immediately available, without a price tag, to Canadair. In addition, after the contract was awarded it became public knowledge that Canadair was seeking engineers abroad when the necessary engineering capabilities already existed in Winnipeg. That represents an additional cost. We recently heard that the Government is being approached for access to a hangar at the airport in Montreal. That, as well, would constitute a further subsidy. I raise those points because they bring into question whether the bids were that close.

The most important issue is that of how the Government approached this issue. The Government approached the letting of this contract on a win or lose basis. It decided that one city had to win and the other had to lose. It awarded the contract to the city in which it thought there were the most votes and shafted the small guy. Why could the Government not have taken a win-win approach? Why did the Government not allocate this contract on a basis on which both cities could have shared in the work? The repair work under the CF-18 contract is already shared between Europe and Canada so it must be possible to share the work. The fundamental question is why the Government would not approach this in such a way that all the cities involved could have won. If the Government was making a fundamental decision about industrial strategy, we should put all the cards on the table and have a debate about industrial strategy.

The Government has done it to Manitoba. It has recently done it to Newfoundland with regard to fish, and it has done it to B.C. on softwood. It is time for the Government to show some concern about national unity and take an approach to the economy that will give a fair share to all regions of the country.

Mr. Roger Clinch (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, that is what the Government has done and will continue to do. The Government considers all regions and, given the opportunity rather than the rhetoric of the Hon. Member, it will continue to make its decisions based on fairness to all regions of the country.

A decision to award the contract for the CF-18 systems engineering to Canadair was made in the best interests of the nation and of all Canadians. I can assure the Hon. Member that the decision was fully in accord with government policies. The bidding process, the evaluation process and the ultimate decision were all in accord with government guidelines from beginning to end. There was no change; there was no deviation.

The Government's policy on contracting states that all government procurement shall be conducted in a manner to achieve the optimal combination of quality, time and the total life cycle costs of the acquisition; reflect fairness in the spending of public funds; and, when appropriate, relate to national policies and objectives. This basic statement of policy is publicly available and remains unchanged since 1975.

The bidding and evaluation procedures used in the Government, including those followed for the CF-18 maintenance contract, support the achievement of these procurement objectives. All relevant factors must be considered in major procurement decisions. We do not accept the lowest price without due regard to quality and technical competence. We do not look for quality and technical competence without regard to cost. We do not award a contract on other factors such as technology transfer, as in this case, without ensuring that program requirements will not be compromised.

Full competition is the best way of ensuring that we have all the information we need to weigh these relevant factors. Bidders were clearly informed that the lowest bidder might not be accepted. Much has been said about fairness. Would it have been fair for us to award the contract based only on assumptions about the relative costs and technical competence of the bidders? Because the Canadair and Bristol bids were so close, the Government made the choice in the interests of Canada as a whole. This was not contrary to the bidding process, it was not inconsistent with government policy and guidelines, and it was not unfair.

It has been suggested in the House that the Auditor General be asked to conduct a special investigation. Hon. Members will recall the response of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret). The Auditor General is a servant of this Parliament and free to perform his duties as he sees fit. Undoubtedly he will be closely examining a contract as important as this. When he does, the Government will co-operate fully with him, and make all relevant documents available, as we have always done.

Further, it should be emphasized that this contract award was conducted in full conformity with the Government's contracting regulations. Much information has been given to the House and as the President of the Treasury Board indicated, additional relevant information will be made available, as long as it does not contravene the normal practices which are in place to maintain the confidential nature of information given to us by competitors. If the bidders are willing to make the information available, then the Hon. Member will have it. The Minister of Supply and Services (Mrs. Vézina) is pursuing this matter.

DAILY ROUTINE OF BUSINESS—ACCEPTABILITY OF MOTION AT COMMENCEMENT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to see today's Hansard before I brought up a point of order which I think is of some importance to us on this side of the House, and I am sure the Government would concur.

Yesterday at the beginning of the sitting, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister and House Leader (Mr. Lewis) rose in his place to move what we all knew to be a dilatory motion. He moved that we proceed to Orders of the Day. At the time, as far as I know, there was no question before the House to be debated, yet he was allowed to put his dilatory motion and it was voted on and, of course, carried.

I would like to make sure the Chair understands my point. I am not questioning the Chair's acceptance of the motion. What I do question was the Parliamentary Secretary's right to take the floor when there was nothing before us to move a dilatory motion which prevented many of us from tabling petitions and doing the regular things we do under Routine Proceedings.

I would give notice to the Chair today that I would like this matter to be discussed, possibly in the Chamber, so that we do not have a repetition of what happened yesterday, a dilatory motion being used by the Government to do certain things. We all know that the Government has many tools at hand to cut off debate, to adjourn the House or to do all kinds of other things. In my view, the Government is utilizing its powers to push too far the importance of its wish to get the Government's business done, and is using the rules badly in so doing.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I think it is common practice that once prayers are finished, your remark is: "Let the doors be opened". I felt that that was an indication to the House that the business of the House could proceed. Under daily Routine Proceedings, I would suggest, Sir, that a motion to move to Orders of the Day is in order. There does not have to be a question before the House, so I moved at that time to proceed directly to Government Orders in order that the business of the House which had not been able to proceed on three preceding days might proceed.

A comment has been made about the ability of Hon. Members to present petitions. I know that my hon. friend who is a student of the House rules would be the first to tell the Chair that there are two ways to bring a petition to the attention of the Speaker. There is the method used when petitions are presented under the daily Routine Proceedings and there is also the method of tabling petitions, a method which does not require that one stand in one's place to make a lengthy presentation. Many Hon. Members, with the interests of the nation at heart, table petitions in this much more businesslike way. I suggest, Sir, that by moving to Orders of the Day, in no way were we preventing any Member from presenting a petition to the Speaker since there is another method of doing so.

In closing, I would simply say that in my copies of the Projected Order of Business and the Order Paper and Notices, it indicates this day's order of business. I think Routine Proceedings should include the right to make a motion. I suggest that if my hon. friend wants to make the same motion, that we proceed to Orders of the Day, we would be able to assist him in that.

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address the same point. First, I do not want to reflect on the decision the House made yesterday to move to Orders of the Day. It was a House vote and that is fair with me. I also believe the motion moved by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary was perfectly allowable, and that is what the Chair did, it allowed it to come to a vote. Where I differ with my friend across the floor is that I do not believe the motion was made at the right time. If we look, for example, at today's routine of business, it starts with Tabling of Documents. What I say is that no one should be able to make any motion under Tabling of Documents. It is there in the line-up to table documents. The next item, Statements by Ministers, is the same. It is meant for Ministers to make statements. I contend that yesterday, when the Parliamentary Secretary made his motion, he should have made it under Motions because there is such an item in Routine Proceedings.

I would humbly request the Chair to look at this whole area of when motions can be made under Routine Proceedings so we have clear guidelines. We are operating under new temporary rules and I think it would be useful for all Members to know exactly what the Chair considers an appropriate time to move a motion such as that moved yesterday. In my humble opinion the motion was moved at the wrong time. It was moved even before there was anything on the Orders of the Day, even before Mr. Speaker had called the first item of Routine Proceedings, even before Routine Proceedings was uttered by the Clerk at the table. This I believe puts us in an awkward situation, and I would ask the Chair to take it under advisement. I know it may take some time to come to a definite decision on this, but I think it would be appreciated by all members if the Chair conducted such an exercise.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) have an intervention?

Perhaps I could very briefly respond to the point brought forward by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). I thank him for bringing to my attention earlier today the fact that he would perhaps want to raise it.

I listened to the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary and the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault). The matter is not an easy one for the Chair. The Chair has been considering this especially since the use of the Routine Proceedings part of the day has been interrupted by both sides in the last while for purposes which both sides deemed necessary and appropriate. Members may remember that strictly speaking, once upon a time, the use of the motion complained of, if complained of at the time, may probably have been ruled out of order. Whether rightly or wrongly the Chair is not prepared to say at this point. However, there has been a practice going back a number of years which allows that.

The point made is absolutely correct, that the Chair had not called Tabling of Documents yesterday. However, the Parliamentary Secretary was up and the Chair felt he had to be recognized. Today the Hon. Member for Ottawa— Vanier almost got up before the Chair said Tabling of Documents. Members may have noticed that today the Chair hurried with the calling for "Tabling of Documents". However, the matter raised is an important one.

I invited the House Leader for the NDP to make a comment and he may very well want to consider this intervention quietly over the next day or two and make some representations. However, as I say, the Chair is acutely conscious that dilatory motions, and this may not be a dilatory motion, have certainly been made from time to time. I am not imputing motives in any way to any member, but when it suited the convenience or particular tactics in the House, they have been used during Routine Proceedings. Members will remember that the use of dilatory motions in Routine Proceedings was used extensively, and I must say with great skill, some weeks ago, not necessarily by only one side.

I welcome the invitation to the Chair to consider the matter. Perhaps it would be appropriate to consider it in discussion with members of all three Parties. As the Chair has indicated in the past, if it ever came to the point where the Business of the House was too long delayed, which probably would not be in the interests of this place, then perhaps the Chair would have to find a way to rule appropriately and get on with the various matters listed in Routine Proceedings. Happily, because of the great good sense of all members and co-operation between Parties, the Chair has not had to make a hard ruling in that regard. I do not take the invitation of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier and the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques as an invitation to do so, but I do take it as an invitation to consider the practice and I shall do so.

COMMEMORATIVE STATUES

TABLING OF REPORT OF MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if I might just say in rejoinder, sometimes the word "Routine" Proceedings seems like a misnomer. There is far too much excitement to call it "routine".

I have two things to do. First of all, pursuant to Standing Order 67(2), I am pleased to table today two copies in both official languages of the report of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McInnes) to Parliament on commemorative statues to Canadian Prime Ministers and commemoratives to other eminent Canadians.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour of tabling, in both official languages, the Government's response to Petitions Nos. 332-461, 332-493, 332-498, 332-507, 332-509, 332-511, 332-518, 332-560, 332-562 and 332-709.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has a point to make?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I must admit that I have lost track of exactly where we are in the proceedings.

Some Hon. Members: No kidding!

Mr. Lewis: That is all right, it happens from time to time.

Mr. Keeper: Don't tell him.

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest to Hon. Members that there is a certain frankness in the comments of the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary which are pleasing to this place. I called Presenting Reports from Committees. Petitions.

REQUEST FOR REVOCATION OF CHANGES TO UI REGULATIONS—EARLY RETIREES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have here a number of petitions from the ridings of Laval, Sainte-Marie, Saint-Michel, Jonquière, Gamelin and Hochelaga—Maisonneuve, in which petitioners object to the unconscionable action taken by the Conservative Government when it cut unemployment insurance benefits for early retirees. Mr. Speaker, these petitioners are asking the Government to put a stop to this shocking situation and immediately reimburse 35,000 early retirees.

RIDEAU HALL—PUBLIC'S ACCESS TO GROUNDS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and privilege of presenting several petitions which are, of course, correct in accordance with Standing Order 106. These petitioners from the ridings of Ottawa—Vanier, Ottawa—Carleton, Ottawa Centre, Nepean—Carleton, and Ottawa West would like to utilize their right to petition this House as follows. Whereas a decision to close Rideau Hall grounds was made by the National Capital Commission, the Department of Public Works, the RCMP and the office of the Governor General without prior notice, and whereas the closure of this attractive and tranquil park affects thousands of visitors to the capital from across the country who held Canada's uniquely accessible Rideau Hall as a symbol of the trust, openness and democracy of which Canadians are so justly proud, and whereas area residents from the entire National Capital region who have used and enjoyed the grounds of Rideau Hall, recognizing the security concerns that prompted the closure decision, cannot accept a blanket closure of the 120 acre park to public access, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to open the decision for consultation with citizens' representatives of the large and growing opposition in order that a modus vivendi be created that would satisfy both the Government and the public.

REQUEST TO WITHDRAW TARIFF ON ENGLISH LANGUAGE BOOKS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have some petitions to present with regard to the book tariff imposed by the Government. They are signed by petitioners from B.C. and Alberta. They say that whereas the Government of Canada has imposed a retaliatory tariff on imported books in the English language which has limited the access of Canadians to literature and information, and whereas the tariff has little negative effect on the publishing industry of the United States, yet penalizes Canada's consumers, book publishers, booksellers, distributors and Canada's culture, and whereas rising book prices have placed a strain on the book acquisition programs and policies of our nation's public and specialized libraries, the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to rescind this tariff which threatens irreparable harm to the Canadian book industry and compromises federal policy on cultural industries in respect to free trade negotiations.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by a number of Canadian citizens who are indicating to Parliament that the federal Government's proposal to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and that the proposed measures will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis, and that these proposals will result in higher drug costs for Government programs. They say as well that these changes are another example of Canadian Government concessions to the United States at the expense of the average Canadians. These petitioners call upon Parliament to reject these proposals to increase drug prices.

DECOMMISSIONING OF LIGHTHOUSES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by a number of residents of the British Columbia coast who are concerned about Ministry of Transport directions to automate light stations. They believe that this will reduce the weather reporting capability of these stations and, more important, reduce the assistance in search and rescue on a very rugged and remote part of the British Columbia coast. They call upon Parliament to make a thorough and complete public inquiry in the Province of British Columbia into the need for these manned light stations on the West Coast.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition on behalf of a number of western Canadians, pursuant to Standing Order 106. They are suggesting that the Government's proposal to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy the necessary prescription drugs. They are asking the Government to reconsider its decision to proceed with this legislation.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour, under Standing Order 106, to present a petition which has been certified as correct. It is from people from a number of communities in northern Manitoba including Wanless and The Pas. The petitioners express their concern with the federal Government's attempt to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs. They believe that this will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and that it will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. Therefore, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have some petitions from Canadians who point out that the federal Government's proposal to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for consumers, will severely restrict the ability of Canadians to buy the necessary prescription drugs, and will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis. They believe that it will also result in higher costs to provincial government drug plans. They, therefore, humbly pray and call upon the Parliament of Canada to reject the proposals to increase prescription drug prices for all Canadians.

STARRED QUESTION

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if you would be so kind as to call Starred Question No. 61, I will read the answer into the record.

*TRAVEL EXPENSE ACCOUNTS

Question No. 61—Ms. McDonald:

1. Is there a policy of the Government concerning the use by public servants of expense account money for the services of prostitutes or escorts, or the viewing of strippers and, if so, what is it?

2. Are the services of prostitutes and escorts ever allowable business expense deductions under Revenue Canada assessments of personal or corporate tax?

3. Are guidelines provided to public servants and politicians regarding the use of public moneys while travelling on public business and, if so, what are they?

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Treasury Board Secretariat and the Department of National Revenue as follows:

1. and 3. Public servants are subject to a detailed set of guidelines called the "Treasury Board Travel Policy" which clearly establishes their entitlements when travelling on government business.

Travel expenses of Members of Parliament are governed by the authority of the Senate and the House of Commons Act and controlled by the administration section of the House of Commons.

Ministers of the Crown and Parliamentary Secretaries who travel are accountable for their travel expenses, which are reviewed and reimbursed by their department.

2. Only reasonable expenses made or incurred for the purpose of gaining or producing income from a business and substantiated by vouchers may be allowed as business expense deductions pursuant to the provisions of the Income Tax Act. Each case has to be determined from the facts available to the Department of National Revenue.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Monday, February 9, 1987, consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-19, an Act respecting motor vehicle transport by extra-provincial undertakings, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport; and the motion of Mr. Lewis (p. 3220).

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, let me begin my remarks on Bill C-19, the Government's proposed deregulation of the trucking industry, by pointing out that the Government is throwing out the baby with the bath water. The Government could have chosen a number of alternatives to deal with the trucking industry. It could abandon regulation, as it has done with this legislation; it could decide no change is necessary and keep the status quo; or it could have taken a moderate approach to the regulation of the trucking industry and make constructive reforms that could benefit both the shippers and the trucking industry while modernizing the regulatory regime. However, the Government has decided to abandon regulation.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I want to point out that the decision of the Government was to abandon the regulatory system. The Government had several options. It could have decided, as it did, to abandon the regulatory system, or else it could have maintained that the existing system was marvelous and did not require any change or finally, it could approach the regulatory system as in need of reform. For my part, I believe that a constructive reform to update the regulatory system as it applies to the trucking industry would have been the best approach. However, the Government decided to throw away the baby with the bathwater. This is a destructive approach.

[English]

There are three aspects of this Bill on which I want to comment. They are safety, the impact of deregulation on Manitoba, since I am a representative of Manitoba, and the over-all economic impact of abandoning regulation in the trucking industry.

The Government has proposed to remove regulation of the trucking industry to make it a wide open free market in which the strongest will survive and the fastest will win the race. Consequently, truckers will push themselves to the limit and perhaps beyond because they will be living from day to day and load to load. This lack of security will cause them to continue driving even when they are exhausted.

In the United States this question of fatigue has been raised as a result of their experience with a deregulated environment. I have a report by a foundation study on truck driver fatigue and highway accidents which indicates a shockingly high number of fatigue related big truck accidents. Let me cite some of those statistics for the record. First, 60 per cent of the 231 accidents studied involved fatigue. Second, the fatigue factor was shown to be three times greater than accident reports indicated. Third, 49 of the 231 accidents studied involved fatalities; 16 truck occupants and 33 occupants of other vehicles. Fourth, 63 per cent of the truck occupant fatalities occurred in fatigue related accidents. Fifth, 6.5 per cent of the drivers of heavy truck are estimated to be driving more than 16 consecutive hours, which is the equivalent of two eight-hour work shifts. Finally, one out of every three truck drivers is driving beyond the limit of the Federal Bureau of Motor Carrier Safety which is recommended at 10 hours per day.

I am giving these statistics to show that fatigue plays a very significant part in the safety of the trucking industry. It will play an even greater role if the trucking industry no longer operates in a regulated environment. The competition will force truckers to push themselves further while attempting to survive on a day-to-day basis. The approach of abandoning regulation in the trucking industry raises serious questions about safety, which the Government should consider before it proceeds any further with this legislation.

Another aspect of the whole question of abandoning the regulatory regime in the trucking industry has to do with its regional impact. I am particularly concerned about what this means for Manitoba. Manitoba has been hit hard by the Government on a number of occasions. When the Government reduced the transfers for education and health care, provinces like Manitoba were the hardest hit. It is not the first time the Government has taken some action which hurt Manitobans. I would like to read an excerpt from an article in The Ottawa Citizen on October 22, 1985:

> Manitoba stands to lose more than most provinces if reform of the trucking industry fails to safeguard domestic routes from competition by giant United States firms,—

That was said by Rolly Painchaud, President of the Manitoba Trucking Association. Mr. Painchaud went on to say:

Eight of Canada's 14 largest trucking firms are based in Winnipeg and more than 400 local trucking firms employ about 10,000 Manitobans.

He noted that hundreds of jobs could be lost through imprudent regulatory change. We are talking about an industry which employs 10,000 Manitobans in a province with a population of one million people. This is a very significant industry for Manitoba. It affects the employment of a great number of Manitobans. The Manitoba trucking industry is telling us to watch out. It has put out the warning signals. It is saying, "Wake up. If you go ahead with this abandonment of the regulation of the trucking industry, you are threatening jobs which exist in Manitoba". They indicate that hundreds of jobs could be lost to Manitoba.

I wanted to bring those facts to the attention of the Government. While I have not much hope it will listen, we will have at least put it on the record. If the Government does not heed these warnings, then the responsibility is on its shoulders.

Another aspect of the approach of abandoning regulation is the over-all economics. The Government promises a sunny morning in a deregulated environment. It tells us that if we throw open the trucking industry to competition we are going to have a sunny day, the economy is going to boom and there will be more wealth created. However, the reality is quite different. The reality includes aspects of safety, the threat to jobs and a realistic look at what happens when we throw out regulation and leave the trucking industry to an open "Adam Smith" kind of economic environment. What we will have is a David and Goliath situation. David is the Canadian trucking industry and Goliath is the American trucking industry. What the Government is doing is not only putting David up against Goliath, but it is going to take away David's slingshot. It is going to leave David defenceless against the giant Goliath.

To illustrate, let me just say that the experience with deregulation in the trucking industry in the United States has been that large firms have gobbled up little trucking firms and there is increased concentration in the trucking industry. There are fewer firms dominating the market. We predict this will happen in Canada. We will have fewer and fewer large firms dominating the market and the little firms will go out of business and disappear.

At the same time, and this has actually started to happen, Canadians will have no barriers to Americans coming into the Canadian market while Americans continue to maintain significant barriers to the Canadian trucking industry entering into the American market. There is still competition legislation in the United States with which the trucking industry has to contend. In Canada we have very weak watered-down competition legislation. The structures of the American and Canadian industry work in favour of the American industry. There is a much larger population base in the United States and many more urban centres, so there is a vast network of communities which can be a strong base for a trucking industry, whereas in Canada there are only a few large cities and our trade is spread out east to west. When it comes to facing competition in the north-south direction, we are going to be going up against a Goliath. With the Government taking away David's slingshot, we are in serious trouble. Therefore, the approach of abandoning regulation is a dangerous approach for Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to make three points about the decision of the Government to abandon the regulatory system for the trucking industry. This approach will increase the risk of accidents. In an unregulated environment and with open competition, there will be pressure on the truckers to work long hours until they become extremely tired, and tiredness can cause accidents. I have here figures which show that the number of accidents increases with tiredness, and these figures are contained in a document. I believe that an unregulated system will increase the danger of accidents.

In addition, the Manitoba Trucking Association has indicated that the approach taken by the federal Government will affect adversely many workers in Manitoba and that 10,000 jobs are involved in that province. This is therefore a major issue for Manitoba and I would like the Government to realize how this will jeopardize jobs in Manitoba. It is time that this Government realize that Manitoba exists. The Government should take care of the economy of Manitoba, not only of Central Canada. Mr. Speaker, I believe that you are indicating that I have only one minute left.

[English]

I would like to sum up by saying that the Government has chosen to abandon regulation, rather than taking the opposite approach, which would be to examine the present regime of regulation carefully and find out where this system could be improved. In that way we would take into consideration not only the present needs of the trucking industry but the needs of the shippers as well.

• (1150)

We in this Party would not take the position that there is no need for change since, obviously, even the trucking industry and the environment in which it operates changes, including what goes on in the United States industry. In the future we hope that the Government will bring in a regime that will be supportive of our trucking industry, one that will better serve the interests of the shippers as well.

Rather than abandoning regulation the Government should be seeking to improve it. I call upon the Government to back away from the approach of throwing out the baby with the bath water. It should take a constructive approach rather than be blinded by its own ideological commitment to the "Adam Smith" model of the free market.

I hope the Government will take into consideration some of the implications of the approach that I have noted in my remarks, including the questions of safety, the negative impact on the economy of Manitoba and just what type of ruthless competition it will be putting the Canadian trucking industry up against without adequate protection.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal very briefly with the three major thrusts of the Hon. Member's speech and invite his response to the points I hope to make.

With respect to the question of abandoning regulation, the Hon. Member says that we have an ideological commitment to the free market. I take it that is in reference to the Regina Manifesto. It has been a long time since that resolution was passed by the Party which the New Democratic Party succeeds. The fact is we do not live in the 1930s anymore. We live in an increasingly competitive world economy. If the people of Winnipeg cannot get their goods to market then they will not have jobs, their children will not have jobs and the garment industry in Manitoba, for example, will not be able to get its products to wherever it is they are sent. More than 80 per cent of the goods produced in Manitoba are sent to the United States. Many of the Hon. Member's constituents work in the garment industry. If there is not an efficient trucking industry in place to get their products to market then their jobs will be less secure.

Transportation is a vitally important matter for the people of Winnipeg and for those from all parts of Canada. We are trying to do something to make the trucking industry more competitive and more efficient. I remind the Hon. Member that six major companies have their headquarters in Winnipeg.

The U.S. experience, which I mentioned, earlier was that employment increased by 22 per cent after deregulation in 1980 and that trucking employees were 40 per cent better paid than the average private sector employee. With respect to what the Hon. Member was saying about Canadians not being able to compete, does he not realize that Canadian truckers have increased their share of total transborder traffic by 8 per cent and 12 per cent between the years 1980 and 1984? We are able to compete in that market. There are approximately 1,000 Canadian trucking companies which now compete south of the border. We can and will compete. We must compete better.

The Hon. Member mentions the old cliché about regulations. I am told that the CTC publishes regulations virtually as fast as they can be printed. There is a regulation in place which tells railways what their tickets must look like, what size they should be and what type of print they should have. This is the type of nonsense and weight on peoples' backs from which we are trying to get away. We are trying to get away from needless regulations that prevent newcomers to the trucking industry from getting going and providing more vitality to an industry that is vital to Canada.

With respect to the question of safety, the Hon. Member for Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Gray), as reported at page 3225 of Hansard for yesterday, spoke at length about the new uniform safety code. His points are summarized well at the bottom of that page. I assume the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) has not read the Hon. Member's speech or is not aware of what a uniform safety code would do.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, in the time that is left I will try to deal with the few points raised by my colleague. He made reference to the Regina Manifesto. I am proud of the Regina Manifesto, as I am sure are most Canadians. It is an historic document in terms of the evolution of our country. It is because of the people who were in Regina who drafted the Manifesto that we have the type of social policy network which exists in our country today, whether it be with respect to pensions, unemployment insurance or medicare. Those were the fruits of the labour of the Regina Manifesto.

Not only is there the Regina Manifesto to be considered, there is also the history with respect to national policy. In this respect we must consider Sir John A. Macdonald. The first Prime Minister of Canada had a vision of nationhood. He knew that if we were to become a nation and not be swallowed up by the Americans we would have to build an east-to-west economy. He had a national dream. He pursued it and built the railroad across the country from ocean to ocean. He was able to secure British Columbia for Confederation, as well as western Canada. He was a man of vision. What we have today is a so-called Conservative Party that is really a pale copy of the American Republican Party which thinks everything can be reduced to a free market. Members of the Conservative Party fail to put that into the context of nation building. Sir John A. Macdonald would be disturbed if he were to hear the types of speeches that we hear coming from members of the Conservative Party today. What needs to be done is to remind the Hon. Member and his Party that what we are trying to do in Canada is continue the process of nation building which Sir John A. Macdonald started.

The Hon. Member mentioned that we are able to compete with the Americans. Yes, I believe Canadian truckers can compete with American truckers. But we cannot just throw open our borders with no restraints whatsoever. If we do, then what will happen is that large American firms will come here to operate at lower prices. They will gain access to the market. They will drive our companies out of business. We will not have a trucking industry left. So we must have a policy that will support a Canadian trucking industry in order for the industry to be able to compete with very large American firms.

The Hon. Member mentioned safety and something about a uniform safety code. Codes are fine as long as they are effective. But we know that there are codes which are not worth the paper on which they are printed. What I am trying to point out to the Hon. Member is some of the experience with respect to the American situation. The Americans find themselves in a free-enterprise frontier where there is wide open competition. Truckers drive themselves beyond their limits. In this way they become tired and fatigued, and that impacts on safety.

I have tried to point to some of the realities that we would have to face if we were to follow the policies adopted by the Party of the Hon. Member.

• (1200)

Mr. Nystrom: My friend for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) mentioned the Regina Manifesto. The Regina Manifesto had a positive effect on all three political Parties. It has helped to make us different from the United States. It has historically made the Conservative Party more progressive than the Republican Party in the United States.

Mr. Benjamin: Until 1986.

Mr. Nystrom: The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is now trying to change that as he imports Reaganism into Canada. Historically the Manifesto had the impact of driving the Progressive Conservative Party to be more progressive in terms of bringing in CBC, the Canadian Wheat Board, supporting national medical care, supporting Petro-Canada. That has been the tremendous historical value of a democratic socialist party, and a socialist manifesto such as that which resulted in Regina in 1933, one of which all Canadians are proud.

The question I wish to ask is this. I too do not support needless regulations. One concern I have about deregulating trucking as proposed in this Bill is that it may discriminate against rural ridings like mine with small population centres, small towns, small markets, and many miles to drive between one town and another where at times it is difficult to get truckers in to make a profit. It is not hard to make a profit between the big centres, and the golden horseshoe from Windsor to Quebec City. But what happens with this type of Bill to rural Canada, and small-town Canada that does not have the same market clout, the same short distance, or the same short hauls? What happens to those areas with this type of legislation? Perhaps my big city friend from Winnipeg can comment on that.

Mr. Keeper: One of the advantages of coming from Winnipeg is that while it is a city, it is a city of medium size and does not fall into the category of Vancouver, Toronto, and Montreal. Obviously those cities will be well served in a wide open market because they have the population. They can take the risk of having a wide open market. Small towns in rural areas could lose their services if we do not have some system of regulation that indicates that there is not only a need to make a profit, but also a need to provide a service, then rural communities will not be abandoned in the same manner as the Government's move on post offices undermines rural community life.

This whole question of service impacts on Winnipeg in terms of jobs and in terms of service. We are not part of the big population centres of this country, so services for Winnipeg also could be detrimentally impacted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart).

• (1210)

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the Bill before the House today follows another stupid decision by the Government with respect to Bill C-18. Today we are considering Bill C-19, an Act respecting motor vehicle transport by extra-provincial undertakings. Mr. Speaker, the Bill as proposed and also the provisions proposed and adopted through Bill C-18 go against the interests of truckers in Quebec and Canada. We know that under the combined provisions of Bills C-18 and C-19, our Quebec carriers will be subject to unfair competition in railway sector. With Bill C-19, however, the Government is also inviting every single company, even the smallest, across this country and across our regions as some Hon. Members said earlier, not just in our larger urban centres but also in remote areas where competition is already fierce, these people are being asked to compete with the U.S. giants in the industry and the giants in the larger urban centres who are trying to take over the entire trucking industry.

At first glance, the Bill looks very straightforward. It looks like the ideal solution to improve competition. People are being told this will bring prices down and that consumers will benefit. It is the law of the jungle, however. No more and no less. It means that steal a contract from another company, during the first six months the bigger company will lower its rates and make do with less profit. As soon as it has the contract and has eliminated a competitor, a smaller company, one of our remote areas such as Rimouski, for instance, will have lost an industry and lost the jobs of those truckers, and after that, the bigger carrier that will be operating nationwide will charge the rates it wants, which means an increase in the cost of consumer goods distributed by these carriers, and the consumer ends up paying the bill. Because of the resulting lack of competition and the monopoly situation for which the Government will actually be to blame, workers will be at the mercy of a couple of multinationals in the trucking industry. When these workers make demands for improved wages and leave provisions, they will be at the mercy of the people who have the monopoly and who will require them to work overtime without overtime paid. This will lead to utter anarchy, and by that time, thank God, we will have another Government, a Liberal Government, to pick the pieces left by the Conservatives.

Mr. Speaker, Conservative Members would be well advised to read an article that appeared in Le Devoir on Tuesday, March 18, under the headline: "Quebec Truckers Fear Increased Penetration of Quebec Market by U.S. and Ontario Carriers". I think Conservative Members from Quebec would do well, before they hasten to vote blindly, like sheep, in favour of this Bill, to read it first and to consult with the parties concerned like Mr. Jacques Alarie, Executive Vice-President of the Quebec Trucking Association. These people, who are experts and work in the industry, could prove beyond the shadow of a doubt that the Conservative Government would be making a terrible mistake by adopting this Bill and that the consequences would be very serious indeed for the trucking industry and for thousands of related jobs.

Mr. Speaker, do you realize that deregulation, in fact everything that has been happening in the last two years, everything this Government has been doing, has been aimed at abolishing every regulation, framework and protection that existed for our weakest industries? Earlier, the Parliamentary Secretary and all those members and Ministers were saying proudly: We know our truckers. They can compete with the U.S. multinationals. We are not worried. These are the same people who said more or less the same thing with respect to the footwear industry, when the Conservative Government decided to move quotas on shoe imports. And what do we read in today's Journal de Montréal? "Our shoe industry is still in danger." Fourteen months have gone by since this Government did away with footwear quotas, and now the industry has just sounded the alarm. This is not quite what the false prophets of the Progressive Conservative Party had promised at the time, practically swearing on the Bible that the footwear manufacturers in their ridings—the Eastern Townships, Brome—Missisquoi, Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean, Beauce—would be able to face competitors from Italy, Brazil or anywhere, no problem.

Liberal Members, the industry, employers and employees, labour leaders, and all trade unions that protect workers kept telling the Government that it was making a mistake. But the illustrious seer, our beloved Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who gets his marching orders from Washington, replied: No problem, everything will work out.

Fourteen months later, Mr. Speaker, and the footwear industry is reeling. These people do not have land for sale to make a profit!

Mr. Speaker, what we heard about Bill C-19 the day before yesterday and today is a series of rehashed speeches the Conservative Ministers and Members made when they told us they would abolish the footwear quotas. And now we are looking at the results 14 months later. Sheepishly and blindly, the same people are now going to pass this Bill and in another 14 months or two years—thank God, most of them will no longer be here by then—after two more years of the kind of mess we have had they will have harmed the people, plant shutdowns, companies closing their doors because of Bills such as C-18 and C-19, workers losing their jobs. A Liberal Government will replace this Conservative administration, but even with the best intentions in the world and unlike the Tories we will find it difficult to set everything straight and undo the damage. We need look no further than what has been happening since the session resumed, nothing but scandals. Who in this country benefits from this? Who is taking advantage of the economic situation? It would seem that the only ones who do are those who are in orbit around the Prime Minister and who belong to the Conservative Party. So who stands to lose in all this? People in the trucking industry, Mr. Speaker. The Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie is not alone saying this, because I do not claim to be an expert in this field, but the information I have is that Bill C-19 as drafted is dangerous. Should the Government turn down the amendments which will be introduced by our official critic, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) who is fully conversant with this issue, if the Government were to reject these amendments, then the people, road transport experts, transport companies, not only the representatives of the industry but representatives of the employees—

It is a fact that collective bargaining between employees and employers are often a source of conflict. But in the area we are dealing with today, as was the case with the footwear industry, employers and employees, management and unions—it is not everyday that Ti-Louis Laberge will sit together with the boss of such and such company. But in these cases, Ti-Louis Laberge, Gérald Larose and all the others were sticking together, and telling the Conservative Government to protect the defenceless, to stop supporting the strongest. Canadians do not endorse the principle that only the strongest will survive. They are proud and responsible people and in several instances they will even pay more for their goods if they know that they are providing jobs for Canadian men and women.

Canadians and Americans see things differently. I strongly urge Government Members to accurately reflect the views of their constituents. What are those views? Canadians voters feel strongly that Canada should not become another American state. They want to be different from the Americans. Also, they want to hold out what they have achieved which belongs neither to the Conservatives nor to the Liberals. Taxpayers' money belongs to the Canadian people as a whole and the Government must use it for wealth redistribution and regulation purposes. It has always been the understanding with regard to income tax revenues. They have fought for social security, health and medical services, old age security pensions, family allowances, and various regulations aimed at protecting those in need be they individuals, institutions, or industries.

And all the efforts of this Conservative Government over the past two years, namely with Bills C-19 and C-18, beside feathering their own nest, have been to destroy Canada's own identity, what makes Canadian men and women different. How could a Member representing a far away riding where a couple of small trucking firms have a major impact on its community, if only because of the seven or eight jobs they are providing, contrary to a major urban centre like Montreal where seven, eight or ten jobs mean—and the consequences for the development of the area, how could such a member, whatever his political stripe, be blind enough to adopt this legislation without checking first and getting experts' opinion?

I am not asking Progressive Conservative members to rely only on my remarks, but before voting on this bill, to seek the advice of the motor carriers in their areas, as well as employee representatives, and to return not with the status quo, but with amendments likely to improve highway transportation, while protecting of jobs in far away regions, as well as ensuring the survival of small and medium size businesses, making it possible for them to make profits just like giant multinationals, and to create jobs. But at the point where we are now, this is the alarm as sounded by the footwear industry—14 months ago Conservative Members, the Prime Minister and the Government suggested the same thing that the Parliamentary Secretary will be telling me in a few moments, that our industries are capable of competing, that he has seen them and that they are in a position to do so. That is the kind of comments, of suggestions that were made 14 months ago. All Tory Members said our footwear industry was sound. It was capable of coping with competition. But today we have the clear proof that if the Government does not change the quotas, the footwear industry will go bankrupt, consumer costs will increase and thousands of Canadians will lose their jobs.

Mr. Speaker, it is my hope, although I am more or less like any other Canadian—there are not very many people left around who expect anything good from this Government—anyway, even if I am the only one still to be optimistic enough to ask them to wake up and rally, not to indulge in the kind of antics we saw over the week-end, not to gather around Marcel Chaput to get their morale boosted, but perhaps to consult experts in those matters. If their morale is low and they need to have Marcel Chaput around, that is their business. But as far as we and Bill C-19 are concerned, go and talk to the industry. The Hon. Member for Rimouski has in her area people with expertise, ability and experience. Why does the Hon. Member for Rimouski not meet and sit down with two, three or four firms in her constituency, or even set up a regional caucus in order to get the people involved together and finally— not to rise in the House of Commons, I am not asking for that, but to go back to her caucus and her Prime Minister or the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) and tell them: Listen, Jos. Who, you are off the track, because what is at stake here is trucking, and the impact will be negative for us in our area. This is something that can be said, that can be done. I would remind Conservative Members that when their Government wanted to de-index, to cut the 3 per cent indexation of old-age security pensions, all of the Conservative Members were suggesting the whole people were in agreement. But they looked funny at the end when the Prime Minister admitted he had made a mistake. Stop following like sheep. Have some guts, stand up! Because if you do not stand up, there will not even be one of you left out of ten comes the next election. I think this is important. Although the Canadian people no longer have any confidence in anyone in that party, it is my hope that the comments made both by the Opposition parties and owner associations and employee unions will get this Government to listen, for once.

Mr. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member was saying that the Conservatives have been consulting with a certain Marcel Chaput. This is not true, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman in question was Jean-Marc Chaput who preaches hope and confidence, rather than despair like the Liberals.

• (1220)

[English]

I think it is important that all of us recognize the job-creation aspects of this particular Bill and the opportunity it allows us to pass on benefits to consumers. As an Albertan, I am intensely sensitive to the questions of job loss and job creation. Just this morning I received a letter, which is most appropriate, from the vice-president and general manager of Celanese Canada Limited, a company which employs 700 people in the greater Edmonton area. This gentleman, Mr. Ian Brownlie, says:

> There is a real link between lower costs for the manufacturing sector, including transportation costs which is particularly high in Canada, and job creation.
> I am convinced that the better services and lower freight rates resulting from this transportation legislation will benefit the manufacturing sector in job creation and substantially improve Canada's competitive position in the world.

I would appreciate hearing the comments of the Hon. Member on that particular point. Further, Mr. Brownlie suggests that the new simplified procedures for truckers to obtain operating licences will expand the scope of trucking services in Canada and will result in more competitive highway freight rates. The Hon. Member was complaining about truckers in remote areas. I would suggest to him that the simplified procedures for operating licences will give more flexibility and competitiveness to the small operators in small areas and that this reform measure would provide economic and efficient transportation services at the lowest total cost.

Finally, I would like the Hon. Member to comment on the question of safety. As Mr. Brownlie correctly points out, safety is a key requisite and long-standing commitment for his firm. He says:

> My company would have been unable to support this legislation if more efficient economic regulation led to a decrease in transportation safety. But I am confident that will not be the case.
> A new rail safety act and a uniform national safety code for trucking are two measures that will help to ensure that safety of the transportation system remains as the top priority.

The Hon. Member referred to experts in the field. I suggest that in this instance we have heard from an expert shipper. The ultimate expert in this case is the consumer who will know whether or not he or she is being benefited by this legislation. It is clear that the consumers of Canada are demanding the passage of this legislation.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I would like first to apologize if I referred to Marcel Chaput. The Hon. Member is right, Marcel Chaput was not the speaker invited to motivate, to boost troop morale. But knowing this man, I can guess what he told those people: "Listen, be optimistic, the Prime Minister could have moved two penitentiaries, but he only moved one. There could have been 15 scandals, but there were only eight or ten." This is about what he said, but that was the choice Conservative Members made, and I think the majority of Conservative Members were ashamed of that kind of thing.

An Hon. Member: What about the Liberals? Francis Fox?

Mr. Malépart: It hurts, does it not? Because when they shout, it is because it hurts. A good sign.

To answer the specific question concerning the comments of his expert who said this would increase, 14 months ago, the Hon. Member rose—the same kind of situation—to justify removing quotas for the footwear industry.

I would invite the Hon. Member to read today's statements which show that footwear imports jumped to 50 per cent, that 1,500 jobs were lost in 14 months in the Canadian footwear industry and that the market share has declined to 34 per cent. As far as I know, I am sure the cost of footwear has kept going up. Footwear is more expensive. But what we have are imports, and that creates jobs elsewhere while we are losing our own here.

Thus the speech which the Hon. Member has just made did nothing to surprise me, because he has been told by someone to read it. However, if he had gone to the trouble of checking what he said 14 months ago about what his Government has done about quotas on footwear, he would realize today that it was a failure and what he is doing today with Bill C-19 concerning trucking will have the same effects 14 months from now, and I mean a failure such as those we have noted in other areas.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my colleague a question. It is quite a serious one that is raised by many Canadians. When Members of the Liberal opposition criticize the Government, if they were in power, would their policy be much different? Or is it merely that because they are in opposition, they feel that they are there to criticize the Government. I should like to point out that the Liberal Government of Ontario is now also deregulating the motor vehicle transport industry.

I would like the Hon. Member to answer that question which concerns many Canadians.

At the policy level, would there really be a difference if the Liberals were in power or is it merely a matter of image and rhetoric?

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased with the opportunity that is being given to me by the Hon. Member of the NDP to show the difference between Tories, Grits and New Democrats. Of course, if the Liberal Party were in power, a Bill would have been introduced to improve regulations in the trucking industry as in other areas. However, you can be sure that it would be a lot different from that of the Tories. It would not be aimed at removing every protection given to small operators to encourage the wealthier ones.

Moreover, I should point out that we would act quite differently from the New Democratic Party. We would not try to nationalize and to have everyone on the same standing, allowing the the poorer ones to improve their condition, while chopping heads to reduce everyone at the same lower level.

Now, the difference between the Progressive Conservative Party, the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party is that the Liberal Party keeps to the centre, assuming realistic positions which respect the citizenry and do not promote systems just for the sake of it.

Mr. Grondin: Mr. Speaker, my hon. colleague has raised a very important point as concerns the danger that competition from the American giants represents for our trucking industry.

Can my colleague tell me why, in his opinion, the Conservative Government favours our neigbours to the South and tries to give away everything to them?

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, if we look at the career of the Prime Minister before he came here, we find that he was working for an American company at closing down Iron Ore quietly. With this in mind, we find that, since September 4, this Government has bowed down in the case of energy, in the case of FIRA, in the case of lumber, and in the case of the agreement with the French Government on fisheries. We have here an individual and a Government with no backbone who are at the mercy and under the orders of Washington. It is not for nothing that the polls show the lowest rating ever for the Party in power. Canadians like people who can stand up for themselves. There is a good reason why people like Mr. Trudeau or Jean Drapeau had long careers. They were able to show some leadership; they had a strong will and the population was willing to follow their lead.

• (1230)

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, the Government is proceeding in a fashion which, by comparison, makes Liberal arrogance look mild. It is trying to ram through legislation by way of an outrageous abuse of the rules. It is the tyranny of the majority. We had four days debate at second reading on Bill C-18 and we are in only the second full day of debate on Bill C-19 and the Government moves that the question be now put. That is another form of closure.

Mr. Friesen: Should have done it sooner.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, transportation in all modes without regulation is a natural monopoly. The question is not whether we should have regulation, the question is what kind of regulation. As I and my colleague from Thunder Bay—Atikokan said in our minority report on Freedom to Move, entitled Good Regulation: The Real Choice, there is no argument that regulations need to be updated and modernized, obsolete regulations thrown out and new ones in line with today's technology be implemented.

Government Members have been ignoring with arrogance the facts relating to the current state of transportation in Canada and after deregulation in the U.S. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Kilgour) quoted employment figures from the U.S. which would leave the impression that the number of people gainfully employed in trucking there has increased over the past few years. No one we have spoken to can substantiate his claims unless you include in his numbers those of full-time jobs which have become part-time and the number of idle truck drivers who still claim some income from transportation. There has been a great deal of economic activity in the U.S. due to deregulation, but the ill effects should not be ignored because the smallest problems in the U.S. will be felt here in much greater proportion.

If the Parliamentary Secretary wishes to insist that the committee be allowed to travel to various parts of the U.S. in order to view the panacea which he says exist, I will be most pleased. We can look at what is happening in California, Ohio, and Washington, D.C., right now. They are trying to undo deregulation and finding it extremely difficult, in some cases impossible. For example, in California they are now holding re-regulation hearings to try and restore stability, viability, efficiency and economy to the trucking industry in that state. That state handles as much trucking as all of Canada put together. Trucking deregulation there has caused so many economic and safety related problems that it has had to resort to, would you believe, regulating rates in order to compel the industry to behave properly in matters of safety, predatory pricing, and a host of other areas. However, after the damage has been done they have been unable to go back to where they were. They find they cannot go backwards. As much as they want to, they cannot start regulating entry and exit after opening the floodgates. There are just too many licences and they cannot take them back so they have decided to regulate tariffs in order to gain some control over a very badly deteriorating situation.

There is a lesson in that for the Government when it promises to review the situation in three, four or five years. You do not get a second chance. It has to be right the first time and this Bill is dead wrong. I have many articles and studies about deregulation in the U.S. Does the Government side not have a single report which talks about the increase in crashes and traffic deaths? Is the Government really unaware of the bankruptcies and takeovers? It talks as though we were making this all up. Are government Members ill-informed or do they just not want to hear the bad news about what is happening down there?

Yesterday the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) was absolutely amazing. He said under the present licensing system trucking was a monopoly and this Bill would break up those monopolies, and new firms would appear because there is so little capital investment required to get into trucking; "Just a truck", he said. Then he talked about the availability of licences between Toronto and Montreal, as if that was a prime example of what he was talking about. I looked into his example and I wish to better inform the Hon. Member as to the reality of the situation.

I correctly told him yesterday that almost 90 per cent of licence applications are approved under the present regime. Hardly the basis of a monopoly. However, I was wrong when I assumed that a licence for the Montreal-Toronto corridor, which he used in his example, would be just as easily approved. What he could not tell this House is that that corridor already has over 20 Class A licences. Some 20 companies with terminals, yards, maintenance areas and communications equipment are competing in a highly competitive market. To hear him speak one would think there was a monopoly. That shows how badly misinformed he is.

Those Class A licences he talked about are, in the main, less than truckload licences for that corridor. Those are companies which go to a manufacturer or retailer, pick up what they have and return to the yard for unloading, sorting and reloading. That requires a massive investment. For the Hon. Member to suggest that the investment required for that infrastructure is inconsequential is arrogant and ignorant nonsense. He would have any guy with a truck in there skimming off any gravy he could get. A licence between those two points would be opposed because it is so competitive that any more competition would risk the house of cards.

Government Members may be surprised to learn, when they talk about the great things that have happened in the U.S., that with all this claim of more competition there has not been one single less than truckload carrier start up in all of the U.S. since deregulation—not one. It is now concentrated in the hands of a few very large carriers. There have been new names, new takeovers, new logos, but not one single LTL general freight carrier has started up. How many, therefore, is the Government promising us when we start that here? Under cutthroat competition who is going to build those terminals, yards and maintenance facilities in the world envisioned by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South? The answer is no one is going to be stupid enough to do it. If the Government side doubts me, let them insist that the committee travel to the U.S. so they and I can be better informed, if they dare.

I have another example of the Government's Party line differing with reality. There was a comment yesterday about safety codes. There is no safety code, national or otherwise, in trucking. Because the Government has not set it as a priority, for all its talk, there may never be a national safety code.

• (1240)

I am informed that last week in Victoria a meeting of the Canadian Conference Motor Traffic Authority, which is the principal body of provincial, federal and industry trucking agencies, broke up in disgust as they were unable to reach any agreement on vehicle inspections and other safety issues. I am told that there were threats of legal action by some shippers in attendance. The federal Government also participates in CCMTA and, therefore, has no excuse for not knowing that what I say is true.

The Government knows that the trucking industry does not want this Bill with no safety code in place. It also knows that no safety program was to be in place until at least 1989. Now even that date is in doubt. The Government does not realize that if this Bill were delayed it would have more clout with the provinces to standardize inspections. The Government does not understand that there will be a national safety fiasco. Has no one informed the Government that the Americans have already told the Province of British Columbia that they would ignore B.C. inspection regulations as well as those of the other provinces? Why would the Government proceed down such a slippery slope of economic deregulation without cleaning up this mess in advance?

If the Government policy is to deregulate, a national safety code which would be enforced and a national vehicle safety board with the participation of the 10 provinces, the two territories and the federal Government, must be in place before we proceed with this legislation.

I want to dwell for a few minutes on another serious matter. This Bill is not only seriously flawed, but constitutes a breach of the terms of the Memorandum of Understanding on the reform of extra trucking regulation which was agreed upon by the former Minister of Transport and the transport Ministers of the 10 provinces and the two territories. With this legislation the Government has broken an agreement with the provinces and territories. It has violated the federal-provincial consultation which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Government have raved so loud and long that they would enhance.

As one example, according to the Memorandum of Understanding, the question of the entire elimination of economic regulation in favour of fitness only entry tests was to be given further study. There was clearly no agreement to completely deregulate the system after three years, or at any time, nor was there any consensus that the new entry standard was intended to be transitional only. That was not in the Memorandum of Understanding and there was no consensus on it among the provinces and the federal Government. However, the Bill contains automatic sunsetting on this new shifted burden of proof of entry regime which Clause 30 imposes.

As another example of violation of the Memorandum of Understanding between the provinces and the federal Government, Manitoba agreed to sign the understanding on the basis that an interested person would only have to demonstrate that the granting of the application would be potentially detrimental to the public interest. This legislation leaves out the word "potentially". The entry standards document which the council of Ministers adopted provided that an application could be opposed on the grounds that the applicant is unfit, unwilling or unable to operate the undertaking. The Bill has replaced the words "is unfit" with a different criterion. This is like throwing a deck of cards up in the air and hoping that they all land in proper order.

The Memorandum of Understanding used the words "economic or social development", but in the Bill we see "the economic or social development of Canada". Manitoba signed the Memorandum of Understanding on the understanding that the impact of a proposed service upon the economic and social development of Manitoba would be considered by the transport board. The legislation leaves out such words as "or a province" or "or a region of Canada". Those words do not appear in the Bill.

Another area which violates the Memorandum of Understanding is with regard to the national definition of fitness recommended by the CCMTA. The legislation proposes that fitness certificates or licences issued by one jurisdiction to a carrier domiciled in that jurisdiction be recognized by other provinces. That would mean that a carrier which got a fitness certificate in one province could operate in any other province or territory and in the United States. Due to the wording of the Act, a provincial transport board which simply recognized a licence from another province and made no independent assessment of the carrier's fitness would likely be found by a court to be illegally fettering its discretion. One province could have very slack rules on the matter of the fitness and quality of trucks and equipment, on maintenance standard and procedures, and with regard to the number of hours which a driver may drive without rest. The province with the poorest fitness standards could issue a fitness certificate to a carrier who could then operate anywhere else in Canada without having to worry. A province which has good standards could do nothing about that under this legislation. That is another violation of the Memorandum of Understanding. So much for the sound and consultative federal-provincial relations. That is another example of the betrayal by the Government of an understanding which was signed by everyone.

Another issue is that of international trucking and our relations with the United States. There is today a Bill before the U.S. Senate which provides for the levying of heavy vehicle user taxes on all trucks which use the interstate highway system, which is partially financed by the federal authority in the United States. In the case of Canadian truckers, the additional tax will amount to some $700 per vehicle. There is no provision in Canada for an equivalent tax on U.S. trucks coming here. It is another sell-out of the worst kind. The Government is prepared to allow the U.S. trucking industry, which is massive compared to our industry, to come into this country. It will be allowed to operate in this country under a regime that Canadian trucking and railroad companies cannot have in the United States.

Those so-called Canadians sitting over there, sit back and quietly acquiesce to this kind of betrayal of our sovereignty and independence over transportation with the United States. I hope the Government will withdraw this legislation and wait until the national safety code is in place, until there is a national safety board that is functioning with the full agreement of the provinces, and there is a uniform national standard of safety, equipment, maintenance, and work rules that provide for the safer operation of the trucking industry. That should be in place before the Government deals with this legislation which violates a federal-provincial agreement.

Mr. Grondin: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his intervention. In his statement he made a few references to the difficulties or dangers which might result from an invasion of the Canadian road transport industry by the American giant, but his colleague from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) raised the transportation safety problem. Surely my colleague is aware of the fact that State of California authorities are reconsidering their decision to deregulate and now want to restore regulations. This seems to indicate they have gone too far with deregulation, they now want to reverse the process and impose some rules to avoid problems, particularly with respect to safety in the transport industry. I should like to know whether my colleague might not see in this decision of the State of California a very timely lesson for Canada, an indication that we should at least weigh the pros and cons before endorsing a deregulation process which might seriously compromise the whole transportation safety program.

[English]

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, let me refer to what Judge William A. Turkish of the California Board that is holding re-regulation hearings had to say. He said:

—there is a great deal of evidence deregulation and partial deregulation in California have played a role in the increase of truck (accident) rates between 1981 and 1984.

When the truckers testify, as they did in the reregulation proceeding, that they are going out of business in huge numbers and are cutting corners by driving longer hours than is legal, at speeds that are illegal and in vehicles that are not properly maintained, then I'm concerned—and you should be too.

The evidence not only comes from California but a number of other U.S. jurisdictions, including Ohio, which is also considering the same steps. The federal authorities in Washington are also very concerned about what has happened in the trucking industry since deregulation.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I have a number of questions for the Hon. Member. First, what is his opinion about the approximately one million Canadians who work in industries that depend upon transportation? Transportation in Canada is about 1 per cent to 2 per cent more than our sales competitors around the world. Obviously, distance is a factor, but it seems that we must become more competitive in the transportation sector.

With respect to California, it is my understanding that a number of other states have found that economic deregulation has worked very well. However, I will agree that California does have some difficulties.

Third, no one in the United States has dealt properly with safety. The Hon. Member knows that we intend to deal with safety first, within the safety code. That is a very important distinction to be made between our approach and that in the United States.

The Hon. Member mentioned the meeting in Vancouver of the Canadian Conference of Motor Transport Authority. I understand from someone who was there on behalf of the Department of Transport that the meeting went very well and there was agreement on a number of items with respect to safety. He was not aware of any shipper who threatened legal action, and perhaps the Hon. Member could tell us the nature of that claim.

Finally, with respect to the American Senate, we completely agree with the Hon. Member that the $550 per vehicle would appear to violate the Brock-Gotlieb agreement. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) has protested that matter. I understand there was an agreement not to add this type of penalty prior to hearing from the consultative committee, yet the Senate has proceeded, quite improperly. We agree with the Member fully on that point.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary agrees that the Senate in the United States has acted improperly, why not make a reciprocal provision in Canadian law that will serve notice on the U.S. administration and Congress that we will deal with their transporters coming to Canada in the same manner? I have not heard the Minister make a statement on government policy in this area. The Government can send all the letters of protest it wants, they will not be given any attention. The U.S. Congress will act as it pleases, no matter what the U.S. administration or the U.S. President says. It will override vetoes more frequently than before.

Let me comment on the safety code. I have heard intentions and statements that there will be no compromise on safety from the last five Ministers of Transport. There has been nothing but compromises of safety in rail, truck and air transportation. We have heard promises and declarations of good intentions on a national safety code, an accident investigation board, an air safety code, a trucking safety code and a rail safety code. Nothing is in place and there is no legislation before Parliament. The Government is still attempting to draft the legislation, but it cannot get a consensus on trucking from the provinces. I predict that there will not be any such legislation for the trucking industry, let alone air or rail, before 1990 or 1991.

The Parliamentary Secretary stated that there are some one million Canadians who work in industries that are dependent on transportation. I know very few industries that do not depend on transportation. In fact, I cannot think of one that is not dependent on transportation in some form or another. Even the local McDonald's restaurant depends on trucks to bring in supplies. Therefore, what is the relevance of that point?

It is in the worst interests of industry and businesses in Canada if we do not have a transportation system in all modes that is not only competitive, safe and efficient but also economically viable. When there is a system of fly-by-night operators who operate as they please, that will not provide reliable and economic service to shippers and receivers. Unless there are some standards and rules for the transportation industry, the shippers and receivers will be the first ones to suffer.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—POULTRY AND DAIRY INDUSTRIES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Last month Daniel Amstutz, U.S. Under-Secretary of State for International Affairs, said the United States wants sweeping and fundamental changes in how Canada's Farm Marketing Boards operate, in the free trade deal. Last week the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) refused to clarify whether farm product marketing boards were being negotiated in the free trade deal. Yesterday the Minister said that the Canadian system of marketing wheat was not a subject for the free trade negotiations.

However, the Minister has not said that supply management and marketing boards for poultry and dairy products will not be on the table for negotiation in the free trade talks. Meanwhile, reports persist that our Canadian marketing systems will be negotiated away by the Government to the U.S.A. I call upon the Government to make a clear statement that our supply management and marketing board system for the poultry and dairy industries will not be destroyed by free trade.

EDUCATION

LACK OF FUNDING IN NEW BRUNSWICK

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York—Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, the National Conference on Education mentioned in the Speech from the Throne is a major step forward in addressing one of the greatest problems facing our country. At our New Brunswick universities, lack of funding has created a critical situation for our libraries. We have overcrowded classrooms, outdated equipment, insufficient building maintenance, and staff shortages. It can also mean increased tuition fees which are already among the highest in Canada.

In New Brunswick schools we have seen French immersion programs moved from Grade 1 to Grade 4, and our educational system is not able to employ an adequate number of important teaching specialists. If this conference successfully addresses the questions of funding and jurisdiction and provides a continuing vehicle for future input, it will have made an important contribution to Canada's most precious asset, our young people.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY

NATIONAL CITIZENS COALITION STATEMENT CONDEMNED

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, this morning on CBC Radio the National Citizens Coalition was reported as opposing equal pay because: "The reason women are paid less is that married women are less valuable than their husbands. They drop out to raise children and their job skills slip". We deplore this kind of negative stereotyping which denies equality rights for women. Equal pay for work of equal value is a fundamental principle of Canadian justice which is upheld by the Canadian Human Rights Commission. Despite this, married women continue to be exploited in part-time and low paid jobs. This is encouraged by the statements of the National Citizens Coalition.

Many enlightened employers find women who have been homemakers bring organizational and human relations skills to their jobs, and are often more reliable and motivated than younger employees. These qualities should be recognized on job resumés as is done by the City of Vancouver.

We call upon the Minister responsible for the Status of Women to challenge these kinds of discriminatory statements which encourage exploitation of women workers.

ENERGY

OIL AND GAS INDUSTRY—RESTORATION OF DEPLETION ALLOWANCE URGED

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, the unemployment rate in Calgary rose from 10 per cent to 12 per cent last month. Thirty thousand people lost their jobs in Alberta last year because of the slump in the energy sector. Some 50 per cent of the geophysical contractors are out of work.

When the national energy policy was established, the oil and gas industry lost its depletion allowance. It is now the only sector—and I repeat—the only sector in the mining industry which does not benefit from this incentive to explore. To be seen to be fair, we have to restore the depletion allowance to the oil and gas sector of the mining industry.

ACID RAIN

MAPLE TREES—NECESSITY TO COMPENSATE MAPLE SYRUP PRODUCERS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the Agricultural Producers' Union wrote the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), enclosing an invoice for the acid rain devastation of our maple forests. Then the group sent copies of these letters to the members of the Standing Committee on Agriculture and those of the Standing Committee on Environment and Forestry to which the Minister belongs, of course.

Some 10,000 Canadians earn their living in the sugar maple industry. In recent years acid rains have been the source of deterioration of most sugar maples and of healthy trees in maple syrup producing regions. By the same token, the jobs of many Canadians are jeopardized and a major component of Canada's legacy is threatened.

Not only is the Government not prepared to take action and help maple syrup producers, but the Minister of Environment admits he is not aware of the producers' request for compensation to offset their losses.

Acid rains are indeed a problem which the ongoing devastation of Canadian maple forests makes even more obvious.

Time has come for the Conservative Government to assume its responsibilities by once and for all coming to grips with the issue of reducing acid rain producing emissions, and offering to compensate maple syrup producers for the tragic losses they have incurred.

POLITICAL PARTIES

POLITICAL ACTIONS

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, Liberals and New Democrats took a step that may jeopardize our democratic system when they indulged in a series of unfounded attacks against members who are doing their best to attract investment and jobs to their ridings for the benefit of their constituents.

Mr. Speaker, I want to warn the Liberals and the New Democrats against this approach and the methods they are using to destabilize the Government. They should realize that when things get stirred up, events once forgotten may rise to the surface.

Mr. Speaker, I think we should recall that the mother of a very active member opposite was appointed as a citizenship judge in June 1976. I also see the sister of a prominent Liberal who was also appointed as a judge in July 1980, while the brother of another Liberal was appointed ambassador to Mexico and another is a cousin of the former Prime Minister, and so on. These are very competent people whose reputations might be tarnished in the course of an escalating exchange of accusations in the House.

Mr. Speaker, in September 1984, I believed that it was a Member's duty to defend his constituents and improve the economy of his riding, and that the Opposition, through criticism, contributed to the debate on proposed legislation. Unfortunately, we are being stifled by a veritable psychosis of innuendo and partisan revenge. Outside, my constituents wonder what we are doing here and why we aren't discussing the problems of youth and homeless Canadians, all of which puts the political stability of this Government in jeopardy.

SEARCH AND RESCUE

SEARCH FOR VESSEL MISSING OFF VANCOUVER ISLAND

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the vessel Scotia Cape and her seven-member crew remain missing at sea off the northern tip of Vancouver Island. The disappearance of the steel-hulled dragger last seen 13 days ago is a sombre reminder of the peril of the sea, the daily dangers faced by those in the fishing industry, and the need for more search and rescue facilities on the West Coast.

Today, dozens of concerned British Columbians brave the winter Pacific in private aircraft and small vessels in a search for the Scotia Cape. They work with the dedicated people at Victoria Rescue Co-ordination Centre, 442 Squadron at Comox, and the Coast Guard, in this and other search and rescue efforts.

The search for the Scotia Cape is a reminder that decades of Liberal government neglect of search and rescue facilities on our coasts have not been addressed by the Conservative Government. The Coast Guard, Air-Sea Search and Rescue, and volunteers, need more commitment from the Government and more resources to prevent the loss of lives.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

LACK OF FINAL PAYMENT FOR HIGH GRADE WHEAT

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to draw the attention of the House to the basic unfairness in the Canadian Wheat Board's recent statement that there would be no final payment on hard wheat sold during the 1985-86 crop year.

The growers who produced the higher quality wheat are particularly disadvantaged by this move, since the Canadian Wheat Board made a profit of $54 million on the sale of their wheat. Under the pooling system, this profit was transferred to reduce the loss incurred on the sale of lower grades.

Since the higher grade of wheat is produced in smaller quantities, these growers are being penalized twice—once for a lower yield and again by a price that was lower than the one received by the Canadian Wheat Board for their product. All western farm organizations are united in the view that there must be a change in the method of determining final payments made to grain producers in order to ensure that the producers of this high quality grain reap the profits of their labour.

I urge the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) to address this matter, not only on behalf of my constituents but on behalf of all western Canadian grain producers.

RAILWAYS

CALL FOR REINSTATEMENT OF WINNIPEG UNDERPASS PROJECT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, on the weekend there was a tragic traffic accident on the CN main line on Waverley Street in Winnipeg. This accident need not have happened if the federal Government had followed through on a commitment that had been made in 1984 to build an underpass. That was part of a program that was to spend $15 million across Canada. Underpasses were built in the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec under the program, but in Manitoba the program was cancelled.

Once again this is an example of how the Government tends to treat those in the west as second-class citizens. Road safety should not be sacrificed as part of that attitude. I call upon the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) to reinstitute immediately that program so that we will not have future tragic accidents on the Waverley overpass of the CNR.

FORESTRY

NOVA SCOTIA—FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AGREEMENT

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, on Saturday I had the pleasure of joining with the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) and the Hon. Member for South West Nova (Mr. Comeau), in announcing a $38 million forestry agreement with Nova Scotia. Over the next two years the federal Government will commit $22 million as an investment in the forests of Nova Scotia. This is in addition to the $10 million Cape Breton forestry initiative of 1986.

Our Government clearly understands the importance of the forestry industry to Nova Scotia. A healthy forest is essential for a healthy economy. Thousands of jobs depend on the continued good health of the forest industry in Canada. Improved management techniques will result in more jobs per acre, and more money in our economy.

I wish to congratulate the Government for avoiding a lapse between the expiry and the renewal of the agreement. The last time the former Liberal Government caused serious injury to the forest industry of Nova Scotia because of its failure to act in a sensitive manner. We have responded.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

BAND MEMBERSHIP REGULATIONS—DEADLINE FOR IMPLEMENTATION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I must point out the insensitivity of the Conservative Government to the concerns of our native people. Native bands throughout Manitoba and elsewhere are being forced to rush monumental and vital decisions about their futures because of bureaucratically imposed deadlines.

The federal Government has decided that native bands have until June 28 to discuss and implement regulations for future band membership. If this deadline is not met, the Department threatens to impose its own guidelines arbitrarily and remove all degree of choice and decision from the duly elected bands. We must recognize that such decisions are essential to the future of these bands, and cannot be unduly rushed. After the countless delays created by the federal Government, Parliament, and the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs in regard to Bill C-31, it is entirely inappropriate for the Indian bands to be expected to meet this arbitrary deadline.

The actions of the federal Government in this case are especially offensive in light of the slow progress in the implementation of native self-government through our Constitution. The federal Government has abdicated leadership at this crucial time. With the federal Government neglecting its duty to provide leadership in this area, it is ridiculous for the same Government to impose artificial timetables regarding band reinstatement.

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

FINANCING

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Over the weekend, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the socialist Party stammeringly uttered a few incoherent words about his political Party's funding sources.

Mr. Speaker, the leader of the socialist Party should clearly tell the House where his Party gets its funds, and spell out the decisions and measures the socialist Party intends to take in connection with Ontario Supreme Court Justice John White's ruling that workers' dues which, in accordance with the Rand formula, are deducted from the wages of employees who do not belong to the union can only be used for union purposes.

Why does the socialist Party use these funds? It is a question of principle and forthrightness, Mr. Speaker, and the Leader of the socialist Party must shed light on his Party's nebulous sources of funds.

The morality of his Party is at stake. Will the socialist Party refund the money thus unjustly taken from the wages of Canadian workers?

INCOME TAX ACT

CHANGE AFFECTING BRITISH COLUMBIA SKY TRAIN PROJECT

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, Canadians are in favour or closing tax loopholes, but it is essential for the integrity of our tax system that this be accomplished in a fair and orderly manner.

It is unacceptable for the federal Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to legislate retroactively, in the form of a press release important changes to the Income Tax Act, which occurred last week in the case of the British Columbia SkyTrain offering. Canadians, and more particularly the residents of the Province of British Columbia, have a right to plan their tax affairs with the knowledge that the rules will not be changed once the game is over. Canadians also wish to know if—and I stress if—the British Columbia Minister of Finance was correct when he stated that this retroactive change was grossly unfair because the federal Minister of Finance had not objected to three previous uses of the same tax provision.

One can only add, so much for the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) empty promises of "national reconciliation". Surely the provinces deserve better treatment from this Government.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

EXISTENCE OF FOOD BANKS—CONTRIBUTION MADE BY LIBERAL PARTY IN TORONTO

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker. the plight of Canada's hungry is reaching alarming proportions. They are becoming increasingly dependent upon the generosity of food banks across the country. Last year food banks served over 300,000 Canadians.

• (1415)

In Toronto alone more than 61,000 people relied on the 2.1 million pounds of food distributed by food banks, agencies, and churches across the city. Hardest hit by this epidemic are those on welfare, the elderly, and the unemployed. However, it also includes single-mother households and the working poor who, with sky-rocketing housing costs and low wage rates, find it impossible to provide nutritious warm meals for themselves.

Today's line-ups are now as commonplace as the desperation of many in the mid-1930s. In an attempt to sensitize people to this national dilemma, last night the Liberal Party raised approximately $30,000 and 10 vans of food for the daily food bank of Toronto.

However, perpetual hand-outs are not the answer. To combat the crisis of hunger and poverty we need a comprehensive socio-economic policy which will eliminate the humiliating necessity of human beings lining up for their daily bread. Only then will we put the food banks out of business, which is the first priority.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT—FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONSULTATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, let me quote from the Prime Minister in Newfoundland on June 14, 1984. I am using his words: "when Brian Peckford and other Atlantic Premiers sit down with Brian Mulroney to negotiate, they will get a new deal, a fairer deal, and a better deal". I ask the Prime Minister whether the recent deal on cod with France is the style of better deal he had in mind for Atlantic Canada. Doesn't last night's emergency meeting of provincial Premiers fly in the face of his commitment to the country for better federal-provincial relations?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Not at all, Mr. Speaker. I think it indicates the sense of reasonableness which exists even with tensions in our federal state. I think my right hon. friend was referring to a statement that I made in regard to getting a better deal for Newfoundland and Labrador on the offshore which had been paralyzed, the negotiations thereto, for some 15 years by the previous Government. I was making a commitment on behalf of my Party that, if we were called upon to form a Government, we would negotiate a better deal for the people of Newfoundland and Labrador, and by universal judgment that has been the case.

PREMIERS' COMMUNIQUE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister talks about the offshore. I ask him whether or not the fishermen of Newfoundland count equally in that particular purview of the Prime Minister. The emergency meeting last night of provincial Premiers seems to be slightly out of phase with the Prime Minister's commitment to national reconciliation. Does he agree with the words of the unanimous communique of the provincial Premiers last night in Toronto when they said on the cod deal that it "was concluded in a manner which is inconsistent with the basic principles of Canadian federal-provincial relations"?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in regard to the first part of the question, my right hon. friend did not ask about the fishermen. He was making reference to a quote from me that was made with regard to the offshore which we proceeded to deal with immediately, and I have responded to that.

With regard to last night's statement, the provincial Premiers are well entitled to their opinion. I have stated the view of this Government, that Parliament shall speak for the interests of all Canadians. But, in regard to the specific question of process to which this refers, my hon. colleague, the Deputy Prime Minister, has already conveyed the regrets of the Government that that process was deficient, and has called upon the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador to re-engage in intensive consultations with the federal Government and the provinces to ameliorate the situation.

FISHERIES

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT REVISE CANADA-FRANCE ACCORD

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, since the Prime Minister has yet to tell the country why the cod fishing accord is in the interest of Canada, is he prepared to accept the requests of the provincial premiers, either to revise or cancel the accord?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Again the Leader of the Opposition is mistaken, Mr. Speaker. They did not ask that it be cancelled, as far as I know, they asked that it be revised, but not revised in itself.

• (1420)

"—to review the terms of the Canada-France Agreement to ensure that it maximizes Canada's use of this vital fishery resource." My right hon. friend left out a very important aspect of it, thereby distorting the entire meaning of the Premiers' communiqué. In regard to this, we are indeed engaging with the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador and the Governments of other provinces that might be interested in steps to ameliorate the situation.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR CONCLUDING AGREEMENT

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, Canadians have heard over the last couple of days the Minister of Transport, all alone, acting like Mr. T, confronting the self-confessed intellectual terrorist, the Premier of Newfoundland, and I dare say he has been wondering where the rest of his A-Team is. I would ask the Minister or his stand-in to confirm that the most guilty parties in this entire affair are the Prime Minister's Office and the Canadian Embassy in France.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend knows full well that when a decision is entered into, it engages the responsibility of the entire Government. While the Hon. Member may disagree with that and indeed question it at will, it represents a decision of the Government of Canada, freely arrived at. In response to my right hon. friend, we indicated that the matter he raised will be dealt with.

CANADIAN EMBASSY'S INTERPRETATION OF AGREEMENT

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the note verbale from the Canadian Embassy to the Government of France says that these quotas exceed the legal obligations of Canada, that the cod allocations in the Gulf, including those off the Prime Minister's riding, may now be fished outside the Gulf for this year, and that the prohibition against French fishing vessels on the Burgeo Bank has been removed. The last straw is that licence fees have been reduced this year over last year at the request of the French. Does the Prime Minister recall saying in Newfoundland in 1984 that he was not afraid to inflict prosperity on Newfoundland? Under whose direction is the Canadian Embassy in Paris now inflicting prosperity on France? Canadian fishermen are being French-fried.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Time, Mr. Speaker. I will not try to compete with that one. The Leader of the Liberal Party in Newfoundland is in the galleries and I think George is competing for something down there.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, clearly, as I indicated in an earlier response, the action taken was in the interests of the fishermen of Newfoundland and Labrador. That was our principal concern, as our principal motivation in regard to the offshore was the negotiation of an agreement that would allow Newfoundland and Labrador a fair share in the manner in which these resources could be developed. That is exactly what we intended in regard to this. We hope that the ultimate negotiations will not only result in my hon. friend agreeing that that is the case but will meet with the complete satisfaction of the Newfoundland fishermen whose interests we are deeply committed to protecting.

ROLE OF PRINCIPAL SECRETARY TO PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. We have learned today that the Principal Secretary to the Prime Minister had direct discussions with local riding Conservatives about the possibility of a Liberal or a Conservative company being awarded a contract. According to the Prime Minister, is that the proper role of the Principal Secretary to a Prime Minister of Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I think the question of the Hon. Member is rather funny. It seems to me that the statement of Mr. Bernard Roy, who is well known for his frankness and integrity, was clear, absolutely clear. If anyone is aware of facts likely to contradict a statement by such a man, go ahead!

• (1425)

PRINCIPAL SECRETARY'S DUTIES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, part of the statement made by the Principal Secretary to the Prime Minister confirmed he had discussions with Conservatives at the constituency level about certain contract possibilities. My question is straightforward and serious. Does the Prime Minister believe it is the role of the Principal Secretary to the Prime Minister of Canada to be involved in discussions about the submission and resolution of contracts, or should such details not be left to the Departments which have responsibility for contracts in the Government of Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the NDP reveals the very shocking fact that my Principal Secretary had discussions with Conservatives. It is a comment on the poison which has been engendered in the atmosphere of this House that a distinguished parliamentarian would seriously raise a question of this nature. Of course it is the right of a Principal Secretary, or any other Canadian—I assume the Chief of Staff of my hon. friend can deal with members of the NDP and speak to them on a regular basis without there being anything wrong at all. If my hon. friend has anything against a man who has accomplished a great deal in his life I ask him to bring it forward, if he has anything at variance with what Mr. Roy has said.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, we are discussing the role of the Principal Secretary to the Prime Minister. The contract I have referred to has already led to the criminal conviction of one person. That is not in dispute. The Principal Secretary to the Prime Minister has acknowledged being in direct discussions with local members of his own Party about contract procedures. Considering that, is it not the best standards of political leadership in the country for the Principal Secretary to the Prime Minister to stay entirely away from such matters?

If such questions are put to the Prime Minister's Office should they not get a clear message that it is not the role of the Prime Minister nor of his Principal Secretary to deal with contracts, that it is the responsibility of another Department of the federal Government?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the NDP has changed his tune again. My Principal Secretary—

Mr. Broadbent: It is the same question three times.

Mr. Mulroney: The last question dealt with his apprehension and concern that Mr. Roy talked "about contract procedures".

Mr. Broadbent: Yes.

Mr. Mulroney: He is, I suppose, as a Canadian citizen and as a member of the political process, entitled to talk about contract procedures—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: If there is anything shocking in anyone talking about contract procedures—

Mr. Broadbent: Nothing shocking at all.

Mr. Mulroney: If my hon. friend was consistent with the tradition he has long espoused in this House he would state that if Mr. Roy, in the absence of proof to the contrary, spoke about contract procedures, he did so in an entirely proper and correct manner.

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY INTO CERTAIN PRACTICES

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. So far, in the riding of Drummond, a Conservative has been convicted of influence peddling. Yesterday, the Prime Minister's Chief of Staff admitted he had been involved in this matter at least 10 times during the year 1985-1986. We also know that there was political interference with the Public Works documents before the contract was awarded. I want to ask the Prime Minister why he doesn't ask for a public and independent inquiry so as to safeguard the integrity of the public tendering process.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is—it's really a shame to see a lawyer and former Minister make accusations of this kind. It must be a great disappointment to the two Members facing him. He is indirectly accusing my chief of staff. This is a tissue of lies, a base and gratuitous attack, and if the Hon. Member has any facts, I would ask him—

Mr. Lapierre: Yes.

Mr. Mulroney: He says yes. He says he has facts. Well, let him bring those facts to the attention of the House and the police right now if he feels there has been an infringement of the law.

Mr. Lapierre: Well, I would say to the Prime Minister that if he were to make his own enquiries to find out who was involved in this interference, he would be surprised.

• (1430)

[English]

Since his buddies are clearly involved in this mess, is the Prime Minister avoiding a public and independent inquiry just to protect his cronies?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: That's enough.

Miss MacDonald: Come on, Jean.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the question, but I assume it was as slanderous and malicious in English as it was in French.

Mr. Gauthier: That's unparliamentary.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: If you have charges to make, have the courage to get up and make them.

Mr. Speaker: The Prime Minister said that he did not hear the question. As a consequence, he is imagining a question he did not hear. He says that if he had heard the question which he did not hear, it would be as he described it in unparliamentary terms. Under the circumstances, perhaps the Hon. Member could put the question in terms which are so very clear that the Right Hon. Prime Minister will not have to imagine what the question was, or describe what he imagines the question to be.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, I think that if the Prime Minister can comment on a question he did not hear, we can also assume he glosses over facts he prefers not to see.

I want to ask the Prime Minister: Why not have a public and independent inquiry that will show to what extent people in his entourage were involved in this Public Works affair? I want to ask the Prime Minister: If he has nothing to hide, why not have this inquiry?

[English]

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, the sounds in the House prevented me from hearing specifically all of the first part of the Member's last question. I took the liberty of saying what I did because I think that fairness would reveal that a consistent pattern of vituperation and false and misleading statements which are designed to smear innocent reputations has been contained in all of his questions in this area. The Member nodded the last time and said he had facts. Let him produce the facts or withdraw his false and baseless accusations.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DRUMMONDVILLE CONTRACT—ACTIONS OF PRINCIPAL SECRETARY TO PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and is with regard to the awarding of a contract which was not awarded to the lowest bidder, a contract which was not awarded to the group which was recommended by the Montreal regional office.

How can the Prime Minister justify the fact that his Principal Secretary, following a meeting with active members of the Conservative Party from the Drummondville region, personally contacted the Chief of Staff of the Minister responsible for one of the offices and asked that Minister questions with respect to the renewal of the contract for the CIDA building? Does the Prime Minister not recognize that his Principal Secretary has no business involving himself in such a contract but should, instead, be doing the business of the Prime Minister? He should not be getting involved in helping Tories get contracts from Liberals.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think my Principal Secretary has made a pretty clear-cut statement which should banish any doubt in the Hon. Member's mind as to any improprieties and illegalities of any kind with regard to his conduct or that of anyone associated with him in this matter. If, however, my hon. friend has any facts at variance with what I have just said, I think it would be proper and helpful to the House and the country for him to lay them before the House so the public can consider them.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I am referring to the facts given by the Principal Secretary himself with respect to his representations.

P.C. CANADA FUND CONTRIBUTION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, in view of the concerns expressed by the Prime Minister and his Quebec colleagues on public morality, with particular reference to political party contributions, how can the Prime Minister possibly justify the fact that the PC Canada Fund includes $50,000 which was paid by André Hamel on the recommendation of Pierre Blouin in order to get a contract? Does the Prime Minister not think that public morality would insist that that kind of tarnished money be returned and not used for the Conservative Party of Canada?

[Translation]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think that generally speaking, this is being investigated, by the police, and I will wait for the results, if any.

PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACT IN DRUMMONDVILLE—REQUEST FOR PRODUCTION OF INTERNAL CORRESPONDENCE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and is also with regard to the Public Works contract in Drummondville. Yesterday in the House the Minister of Public Works refused to give a commitment that the Public Works staff evaluations, the recommendations and the correspondence would be tabled in this House, offering, instead, to let me see some Treasury Board submissions.

Will the Prime Minister let the House and Parliament see that internal correspondence? Why will he not let us see that? Is it because the staff recommendations were changed, altered, or overturned, or is there something else to hide? Is that why we cannot see that information?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I should make it clear for all Members of the House that the Brodilaf group made the lowest tender in the Drummondville contract. There were other considerations such as moving and fit-up costs. There were additional considerations such as real value, the location and age of the building, and access for the disabled. With regard to all those factors, the Government made a decision to award the contract to the Brodilaf group which had the best tender.

ACCESS TO INTERNAL DOCUMENTS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that the Minister's definition of a best bid and my definition of a best bid are the same. I ask him to table that documentation in the House so that we can judge it.

[Translation]

In the light of the admission that there was some involvement on the part of the Prime Minister's Office and considering the inside information from Public Works that was leaked previously, I want to ask the Prime Minister: What specific security measures were taken to ensure that only authorized officials of the Department of Public Works had access to all the internal documentation? Is he prepared to state that such security measures were taken, and if not, why not? Who saw them?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in the preamble to his question, the Hon. Member said there was involvement on the part of the Prime Minister's Office. That is utterly false.

MINISTER OF TRANSPORT'S FISHING TRIP

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The Minister has confirmed that late last August he went on a fishing trip with the presidents of two airline companies.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Shields: Scandalous!

Mr. Young: Given that the airlines have a special relationship with the Minister's Department, will he not agree that this kind of association flies in the face of the Prime Minister's declaration that even giving an appearance of a violation of the conflict of interest guidelines—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: Get serious.

Mr. Young: For heaven's sake, I am trying to ask a question.

Mr. Cassidy: This is serious.

Mr. Mazankowski: Get serious.

Mr. Keeper: Get civil.

Mr. Speaker: I think the Hon. Member has nearly completed his question.

Mr. Young: I am trying to ask this question in the most civil way I know. I would appreciate if Hon. Members opposite would listen to the question rather than arrive at a conclusion. Would the Minister agree that even giving the appearance of violating the conflict of interest guidelines, as the Prime Minister has already stated, is not acceptable to the House or the people of Canada?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, while I am glad that the Hon. Member has asked the question, I do not agree with the question that he puts. When we are appointed Ministers we do not withdraw from the human race. We are perfectly entitled to meet our friends on social occasions or go on fishing trips with our friends or acquaintances, or to meet people whether or not they do business with the Government. Those friends and acquaintances do not have to withdraw from business or the human race because they happen to know cabinet Ministers. What kind of nonsensical results would that lead to?

I was invited on this particular trip by a person I have known for about 15 years. He invites Liberals on trips and invites PCs on trips, but I do not think he invites the NDP on trips.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Maybe there is a message there.

Mr. Crosbie: He had with him as another guest, Mr. Carty, President of Canadian Pacific. That was the first time I ever met the gentleman. Several months later he wrote a letter to me asking for certain things he thought should be done in connection with a Flying Tiger-CP application. He made two requests to me and I turned down both requests, I suppose because he caught a salmon before I did.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister.

Mr. Shields: I wouldn't if I were you.

Mr. Mazankowski: Forget it.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, for the Prime Minister.

Mr. Mazankowski: Disgusting. It really is.

Mr. Speaker: There seems to be a lot of fishing going on, but the Hon. Member is more than entitled to ask his questions and be heard. The Hon. Member.

Mr. Young: My supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. Will he not agree that when two companies which have dealings with the Department of the Minister of Transport, one to the tune of several billion dollars for building a third terminal at Pearson International Airport, and another approval of a takeover by Pacific Western Air Lines, it at least gives an appearance of a conflict—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Young: —of a violation of—

Some Hon. Members: Come on.

Mr. Young: This is not a humorous question.

An Hon. Member: You are not even funny.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member, like all other Hon. Members, is entitled to ask a question in this place and is entitled to the courtesy of other Hon. Members so that the question can be asked.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I will not restate the question. I will simply say that there is something seriously wrong in the political life of this country in the last several months and Canadians demand an explanation, rather than the hooting and hollering from the other side. That is all I am going to ask.

Mr. Speaker: There does not seem to be a question. The Hon. Minister may want to comment.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there is something seriously wrong in the political atmosphere in this country. No person who cares for his reputation is ever going to go into politics again if this continues. On this particular trip, incidentally, my two sons paid for our share of the trip because they had been so brutalized by the same kind of unfounded accusation earlier that they thought they would protect their old man.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: There is no conflict of interest in this particular trip. I have gone to a Christmas dinner with Pierre Jeanniot of Air Canada. I suppose I should resign because of that, according to the Member for Hamilton East. I went to the Beaver Club annual dinner with the President of CN. I suppose I should resign for that. When I was in Labrador fishing I saw certain members of the Liberal Party fishing there as well, including the Leader of the Opposition, with a businessman for Goose Bay-Happy Valley. I suppose they should be asked to resign for that. Why don't we all resign and give it all up?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Go on.

CANADIAN TRANSPORT COMMISSION

CANADIAN PACIFIC—FLYING TIGERS FREIGHT OPERATION APPLICATION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to Mr. T, the Minister of Transport. It has nothing to do with his fishing trip. He will know that after meeting with the President of Canadian Pacific in Newfoundland last August, Canadian Pacific and U.S.-owned Flying Tigers filed a joint application before the CTC for a common freight operation. Given that such an agreement will circumvent Canadian international agreements and allow American crews to replace Canadian crews, why did the Minister write this letter dated October 21, 1986, to the Vice-President of the Canadian Transport Commission, asking them to rule within a six to eight-week period? Will the Minister kindly explain that to the House?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have no hesitation in explaining to the House that this is a matter that should be decided urgently in the interests of Canadian air policy. I was actually requested by the President of CP to make the decision immediately myself and, if I could not do that, to make an interim ruling so that they could proceed immediately. I turned down both requests. I referred it to the CTC and asked them to try to make a decision within eight or ten weeks because this is a matter of urgency to Canadian Pacific. I acted on the advice and in accordance with the advice of my Department.

I do not act because I know someone or do not know anyone; the people who know me know that no matter how well they know me I will never do anything that I do not think is in the public interest or the best interest of the Department I administer.

COMMISSION'S RECOMMENDATION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I am not questioning who the Minister knows or does not know. Will he confirm that a similar application was submitted on January 12, 1981, which was refused by the CTC? Will he also confirm that the CTC is not providing a ruling or judgment on this application that is before it? Will he explain why this decision is back on his desk for his immediate decision?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the matter is back to me for a decision because they wanted to buck the decision back to me. The CTC has recommended that we proceed positively with respect to the CP—Flying Tiger application. It is recommending it, but saying that the Minister has to make the decision. Therefore, it is back in my corner and I will make the decision based upon all the factors. I will weigh all the arguments put to me by my Department. I will make the decision that seems in the best interests of the Canadian aviation industry and this Government, believe you me.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

REQUEST FOR FINAL PAYMENT TO GROWERS OF HIGH QUALITY WHEAT

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. He knows that the 1985-1986 Wheat Pool account is in a deficit position, owing to losses incurred by the Wheat Board on sales of poorer quality wheat, and further, that a $54 million surplus on sales of higher quality wheat has been used to partially offset that deficit. Since it does not seem fair the the growers of high quality wheat be made to subsidize losses on the sales of poorer grades, will he consider making a final payment of $54 million to the producers of the higher quality grades, high protein and No. 1 and No. 2 hard wheat?

• (1450)

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, this is a difficult issue with no easy answers. I should point out that the size of the over-all deficit in the three pooling accounts amounts to $200 million, which I think gives an indication to everyone of the very difficult international markets we face.

Second, we have widened the spreads to guard against the possibility of that kind of situation developing again in the coming year as well as in subsequent years. Third, I think the Hon. Member and most farmers would agree that the pooling system has served us very well, especially in these very difficult times.

With regard to the Hon. Member's specific question, I will be meeting, as I think the Hon. Member already has today, later on today or tonight with representatives of the wheat growers who are here in Ottawa to discuss this issue.

AWARDING OF GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. During the last election campaign the Prime Minister made a great to-do about the abuse of the previous Liberal administration when it came to contract procedures and cronyism. Now, two and one-half years later, does the Prime Minister believe he has sufficiently improved the situation?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think when people look back on the situation which prevailed in this House and this country politically in 1964-65, or thereabouts, most people would agree it was a profoundly deplorable and unfortunate atmosphere which prevailed. There was unfairness done. If one looks back 20 years one will see an atmosphere prevailing in this House which was characterized by unfairness. In many ways, back and forth, the charges made were baseless and needlessly damaging. They were spread around by the media, having been made in the House without the individuals involved having a chance to defend themselves.

I refer my hon. friend to the same kind of climate which is developing in this House today. It develops fundamentally when we forget to give our colleagues, irrespective of the requirements of intense partisan debate, that to which they are entitled at all times, the presumption of innocence, under our statutes and customs.

If my hon. friend is referring to the climate, I would agree that the climate has deteriorated. I deeply regret that, because while politics has its imperfections—because we are all human beings with our failings—no one ever intended that politics would become a vehicle for political assassination, for character assassination, and for the failure to grant one another the benefit of the doubt, the presumption of innocence. Anything at variance with that is deeply deplorable and I share the profound regret of my hon. friend.

Mr. Riis: The question was about contract procedures and cronyism and the Prime Minister's condemnation of the previous administration, saying he planned to change that. My question was if he felt there had been a sufficient change.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): On the weekend the Prime Minister indicated he was concerned and has specifics in mind in terms of ways and means to improve the situation. Would the Prime Minister indicate to the House, and to the people of Canada, when he plans to make public those specifics, and how soon?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, obviously I made the reference to 20 years ago not to blame anyone. It was simply to point out that I think it was a genuinely regrettable time in our political history. The atmosphere was polluted and the reputations of people were needlessly damaged. My hon. friend asks about the climate which is giving rise to the same kinds of accusations, which no doubt will have the same kinds of hurt, and no doubt, in retrospect, will be viewed as having been needlessly damaging because of the absence of the presumption of innocence. In regard to that I say to my hon. friend that any action which is required to further strengthen our institutions will be endorsed and introduced by the Government.

EMPLOYMENT

FUNDING OF EMPLOYMENT PROGRAMS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Last Friday we learned that the unemployment rate for January increased to 9.7 per cent, with the greatest increases in Alberta and Quebec and improvement only in Ontario. Considering this deteriorating situation, how can the Minister justify the cuts of $200 million in employment programs which he announced on January 30 to the Federal-Provincial Conference of Employment Ministers? Will the Minister recommend that these cuts be rescinded immediately and that new programs to combat high regional unemployment be introduced?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I wish my colleague had asked me this question during the four months before January because then the employment figures were rising constantly. Now referring to a specific month— he is wise and I am sure my colleague will want to wait a little longer.

As to the $200 million, well there was not a $200 million cut-back in the programs. If we take administration costs into account, it would be more like $100 million. I think our Government has shown what it could do over the past two and a half years, creating 675,000 jobs under a Canada-wide economic program. I do not deny that certain regions are experiencing difficulties, but with respect to western Canada more than $2 billion have been invested and this has a positive impact on job creation. Once again I would suggest that my colleague can only dream about having had this kind of results in the past.

INQUIRY IF GOVERNMENT WILL RECOMMEND PART-TIME WORKERS BE ELIGIBLE FOR UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister did not answer my question. The average unemployment rate for last year was 9.6 per cent, and it now stands at 9.6 per cent. Since last week's figures indicate that part-time work is also rising on a continual basis, is the Minister now prepared to recommend that part-time workers as well be eligible for unemployment insurance, as advocated by several commissions?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, if my colleague is going to take this approach, let us do it right. The Hon. Member is referring to the Forget report which supports the payment of unemployment insurance benefits to part-time workers. The Liberal Party will have to make up its mind: either you endorse the Forget report and say so to Canadians, or you do not endorse it, but stop straddling the issue!

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT—MEETING OF PROVINCIAL PREMIERS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday evening the Premiers met in Toronto. That in itself was a very unusual occasion.

An Hon. Member: Not since 1966.

Mr. Rodriguez: Not since 1966. The Premiers unanimously agreed that they should be fully consulted whenever the federal Government enters into an agreement with foreign powers on matters which affect their provinces. Does the Prime Minister agree with the Premiers? Will he pledge to consult with the provinces in the future before entering into such international agreements affecting those provinces?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my friend appears to be astonished at the meetings. Since this Government has come into office, we have annualized First Ministers' meetings. I think it is good for the country and good for the federation. So my friend ought not to be surprised that there are these meetings of Premiers from time to time. I think it is good. The Premiers have asked for a review of the terms to ensure that it maximizes Canada's use of this vital fisheries resource. We are in agreement that we meet with the appropriate provinces to maximize the resource and to be as helpful as we can to the fishermen of Newfoundland and Labrador.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONSULTATION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I might point out to the Prime Minister that this was an emergency meeting called by the Premier of one province who felt that in fact his Government and the people of Newfoundland had been ignored completely and that the federal Government had sold out the shop. In the case of Newfoundland, cod is extremely important to the Newfoundland people. Will the Prime Minister not concede that the process was wrong and give a commitment now that in fact the people of Newfoundland will be consulted right up to the point where ink meets paper? That is what we want to know.

• (1500)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will answer that before my hon. friend expires, who says that we sold out the shop. The fact of the matter is that view is not shared by the Premiers. On the contrary, the Premiers called for the correction of any deficiencies in the process with regard to the terms to ensure that it maximizes Canada's use of this vital fishery resource. We are not in disagreement with that.

My hon. friend, the Deputy Prime Minister, has already conveyed the regrets of the Government in regard to any problems in the process. We will work to ensure that it never occurs again. With the co-operation of the Minister of Transport and the extremely able members of the caucus of the Government from Newfoundland and Labrador we will work intimately with the Government and the Opposition— and with all the people of Newfoundland and Labrador—to get the best possible deal for the fishermen of that province.

SPACE DEVELOPMENT

UNITED STATES SPACE STATION—COST TO CANADA

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister knows that his Government has committed $800 million to the U. S. space station. There is great concern in the United States and abroad that this station may be used for military purposes. There was some confirmation of that last week. In addition, we have learned that the cost is moving from $8 billion to approximately $13 billion. Has the Government satisfied itself as to what the cost implications might be for Canada as a result of this extraordinary increase in the cost of the station? More important, is the Government satisfied that the space station will not be used for star wars research or for any other military application?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have already stated the position of the Government in regard to that matter. In regard to the first part of the Hon. Member's question, there are meetings ongoing at this moment. I will be happy to report to my hon. friend at the end of those consultations.

REQUEST THAT CANADIAN PARTICIPATION BE PLACED ON HOLD

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister undertake to put Canada's participation on hold until the confusion surrounding the purpose and mission of the space station and its cost is clarified?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are moving ahead in consultation to ensure that the objectives are clearly those that are fully endorsed by the Government of Canada. If there is confusion in the process, it is not in the objectives of the Government which we will pursue completely.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last question. The Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East.

REFUGEES

REPORTS OF POSSIBLE ARRIVAL OF TAMILS FROM GERMANY

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Once again we are hearing of a possible influx of Tamils. In light of the rumours that there is a continuing influx of Central American refugees from the United States will the Minister please tell us what we are doing to prevent further abuse of our immigration and refugee policies?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think this is an excellent question. All I can say about rumours concerning a boat load of Tamils is that it is the kind of constant rumours we get regularly from European countries. All we can do for the time being is keep in touch with German authorities particularly in an attempt to be aware of the latest developments. Now, if we hear about it when the boat has already reached Canadian waters or its passengers are on Canadian soil, the usual regulations apply, which means that we do not expulse citizens of Sri Lanka, we automatically give them a permit to stay, as we did last year. However, you know that the Government intends to introduce legislation—very soon, we hope—to clear up this issue and eventually enable us to improve the procedure to handle such cases. I can even say that we are now working on temporary measures to help us get a handle on the problem to which the Hon. Member is referring.

POINT OF ORDER

PARLIAMENTARY IMMUNITY—MEMBERS' RESPONSIBILITIES

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order arising out of Question Period. It surrounds the issue of parliamentary immunity.

I refer Your Honour to Citation 55 of Beauchesne's. I will not read it because the Chair is well aware of it, as are other Members of the House. It deals with a Member's privilege of freedom of speech in the House of Commons and the reality that none of us can be held liable in any court in the land for any statements we make here in the House of Commons. It is probably the most fundamental privilege that we enjoy as Members of the House. It is one that I think all of us have to treat with a great deal of respect and a great deal of reverence since it is the principle upon which we operate in the House.

It is clear that that immunity was established so that we as Members of Parliament would feel free to come into the House and make any statements on any subject that we feel are necessary for the good conduct of the Government and for actions that may affect various regions of the country on issues that we feel are of significance. The whole concept is that we are free to make such statements.

As a result of that, and flowing from that freedom of speech principle, there also comes some responsibility. One of the things that I think is absolutely fundamental to the whole business of parliamentary immunity is that we as Members are responsible for our actions and words in the House of Commons. If Your Honour refers to Citation 359(7) of Beauchesne's he will see that it states:

Point of Order—Mr. Cooper

A question must adhere to the proprieties of the House, in terms of inferences, imputing motives or casting aspersions upon persons within the House or out of it.

The reason I rise is that I believe we as Members have a privilege and a right given to us in the form of free speech that protects us from legal action, but at the same time, as described in Beauchesne's, we have also been given responsibilities. The responsibilities are that we use the privileges with the utmost of caution.

What I ask you to do, Mr. Speaker—and I do not want to catch any particular Members in the net—is review the "blues" for today and have a good look at the facts that I believe were in some of the questions, which cast aspersions and which dealt in innuendo. I believe they are clearly in breach of the traditions as outlined and enlarged upon in Beauchesne's. We have been given a very fundamental privilege. When that privilege is abused and used for political purposes and is not based on fact, but is used simply for making points that can create a headline or score a political point, then I argue that what we are facing is an abuse of a rule that governs us. We are abusing a privilege that we enjoy. I would ask that Your Honour review the "blues" taking into account Citation 359(7).

[Translation]

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak to this point of order. I wanted to refer to comments by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) that accusations were being levelled against certain members of his staff or his entourage. The Prime Minister said it was a tissue of lies.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may refer you to the first questions I asked on Friday, February 6, when I asked whether the Deputy Prime Minister could advise the House concerning the role played—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member probably has something very important to say, but according to the Standing Orders, if a Member has a complaint, he must raise the matter immediately. The Hon. Member referred to something that happened last week.

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, as far as the debate and the point of order are concerned, I am not interested in filing a complaint. I only want to say that today my question, which was quite straightforward, was about the Prime Minister's chief of staff who admitted to having been involved in the matter at least 10 times, and that I got this information from the newspapers which you problably read yourself this morning.

What I find hard to comprehend is the attitude of the Prime Minister and the Hon. Member who raised the point of order, claiming that we made accusations. Mr. Speaker, if we had received satisfactory answers, we would not have had to repeat the question five or six times. The truth of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that it is our duty as Parliamentarians to obtain from the Government the real answers it has a responsibility to provide. Personally, Mr. Speaker, I think the Prime Minister has a duty to reply to the House, and if they want to try to gag us by claiming that we are making accusations every time we ask a question, this is an infringement of our freedom to act as Members of this House. Consequently, I hope the Chair will take the time to read all the comments that were made during this debate. I would like to have the Chair's opinion. However, I think one thing should be clear and that is that we have a basic duty to get at the truth, which is an almost impossible task in this Parliament, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to respond to the point raised by the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper). If the Hon. Member would listen to his own words, they contain the answer to his concerns. I think that I recorded his words accurately when he was referring to the concept of parliamentary immunity. He said that it means Members should be able to come into the House and feel free to make any statements they feel are necessary. If that is the case, surely that freedom cannot be abridged such that Members can only make those statements which are satisfactory to the Government, or which are couched in language that is satisfactory to the Government. That is the clear suggestion with respect to the point he makes.

The citation in Beauchesne's referred to by my hon. friend is a set of guidelines which were set down by the Speaker in 1975 to assist the House in understanding the manner in which that Speaker intended to use the discretion he had with respect to Question Period. As recently as yesterday I pointed out that the guidelines in Beauchesne's have been superseded, not only by later guidelines but more particularly those stated in the House by your predecessor, and also by the hundreds of precedents established by the questions asked by the Conservatives when they were in Opposition, and which were fully accepted by your distinguished predecessors. The language in those questions certainly does not in any way meet a lesser standard, nor is it language that is less vigorous than the language used in the questions put today. I submit that the point raised by the Hon. Member for Peace River has been struck down by the hundreds of precedents established by the language used by the Conservatives when they were in Opposition, and which was accepted by your distinguished predecessors.

Furthermore, I respectfully submit that no guidelines that have been established by any Speaker to inform the House as to how that Speaker will use the discretion he or she may have with respect to which questions are accepted during Question Period can be used, even unintentionally, to limit the rights of free speech that members have in the House, and which have been established under the concept of our parliamentary immunity. This is what the Member for Peace River is inviting you to do. I submit to you that the concept of free speech encompassed in the concept of parliamentary immunity must rise above and supersede any guidelines set down by any Speaker with respect to the discretion that Speaker may wish to exercise with regard to questions to be recognized in Question Period, or during any debate in the House.

I conclude by saying that if the Hon. Member was as concerned as he appears to be about the issue, he would have risen and complained, not just about questions today but more particularly about answers given by his Leader. For example, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in answering a question that, as you pointed out, he said he had not heard, said that he assumed it was slanderous and malicious. In the list of words in Beauchesne's that have been ruled unparliamentary by previous Speakers is the word "slanderous". When the Hon. Member rose, I thought he was going to raise a point of order calling upon his Leader to withdraw the word "slanderous" because it was unparliamentary. If the Hon. Member had done that, then this point of order could have been approached with some degree of seriousness, and perhaps support. Not having done that, with all due respect, I feel that in looking at the merits, the precedents, what the Hon. Member said in his opening remarks that members have to feel free to come in here and speak their minds, and also noting what he did not say, I respectfully submit to you that his point of order is totally without merit.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise to associate myself with the remarks of my hon. colleague, the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper). I do not feel that there is any necessity to respond to the comments of the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre). I do wish to make two points with respect to the comments of the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray).

First, the House Leader for the Official Opposition has zeroed in on freedom of speech. The point made by my colleague was two pronged; there is freedom of speech in Parliament, but there is also a responsibility to use that freedom of speech carefully and responsibly as Members of Parliament. That was the point that my hon. colleague was making. It was probably inadvertent that my colleague from the Official Opposition zeroed in on the words "freedom of speech". My colleague was saying that you cannot have freedom of speech without using it responsibly. That is what we are after, the responsible use of that freedom of speech.

I would welcome comparison during our time in Opposition with the Official Opposition's line of questioning. You will notice that I do not draw the New Democratic Party into this. I welcome comparison at any time of our line of questioning, the breadth of issues, the dealing with regional disparities, and the dealing with social issues because, Sir, I tell the House that I kept records during those days. There is absolutely no comparison between holding a government accountable, which we did, and slander, which is what the Opposition is engaging in on a daily basis.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): I rise on a point of order. It is very clear that the word "slander" is unparliamentary. I call upon the Hon. Member to withdraw that word, especially without your admonition, if he is serious about his remarks of a few moments ago.

Mr. Lewis: At no time today, or at any other time, did I claim that any particular member of the Opposition engaged in a slanderous comment. I said that type of conduct is slanderous.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): The Hon. Member was talking about the conduct of the Opposition.

Mr. Lewis: In general.

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the Hon. Member. I was about to recognize him, and if I do not his words will be lost to us.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): I draw your attention to page 110 of Beauchesne's. According to the debates of the House of Commons on August 8, 1960, p. 7777, the Speaker of the day ruled that the words "slanderous accusations" were unparliamentary. I submit that that seems to be on all fours with the remarks of my hon. friend. If he is so concerned about setting standards in the House, he will set an example and withdraw those words.

Mr. Lewis: One of the oldest maxims at law is you cannot suck and blow at the same time. Earlier in my hon. colleague's comments we were to dispense with all precedent because today was today.

• (1520)

Now—just now—we are to refer to Beauchesne's in support of an argument. My friend cannot have it both ways. I agree that we should be making new precedents now, but let us make them on a level with which we both can agree. Let us not dispense with precedent at one moment and turn around in the next minute and wheel a precedent into the Chamber in defence of our accusations.

All of us must try—and perhaps we are doing it through this debate—to raise the level of debate. We are prepared to go back to look at our "blues", if my hon. colleague is prepared to go back and look at his "blues", to try to raise the tone of debate in the House.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I reluctantly rise to add some comments to a debate which I think is unfortunate. A growing number of Members of the House—perhaps most but not all of them—as a reflection of the people of Canada have been very disheartened at the way in which things have developed over the last number of days and weeks. At times it is impossible to ask the kinds of questions the Opposition ought to be asking of cabinet Ministers, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) because of the need to raise questions regarding abuse or perceived abuse of privileges and of contract procedures by people in the Prime Minister's Office. This does not enable the House to function as it ought to function. It does not enable the Government to function as it ought to function. Quite frankly, we are becoming very concerned.

Things were going very well today. We had a very productive morning in terms of debate. We were looking forward to a productive afternoon. However, a representative of the Government had to rise on an extremely spurious point of order, which I found surprising, because I know how knowledgeable is the Hon. Member when it comes to rules and procedures, and the seriousness with which he normally approaches these matters. But not today. The arguments put forward are not appropriate ones in my humble estimation. I would like to think that we could end this silliness and get on with doing the business of the House and of the country.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has listened carefully to the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper), to the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, to the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre), to the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), and to the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

Perhaps I should deal with the complaint of the Hon. Member for Windsor West during the course of debate in respect of the word used by the Parliamentary Secretary "slanderous". The Chair has not had a chance to review the "blues". It would seem to the Chair that that word was not used against any single member in the Chamber but was used to describe in a generic way some of the questions which have been asked, perhaps some today, perhaps some days ago. I suppose technically it is not a use of the word in an unparliamentary way. However, I note—and I hope the Hon. Member for Windsor West would accept this—that the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary made very clear that he was not referring to any particular Member.

Hon. Members will understand that there are issues being aired in this Chamber which are well noticed by the public, matters of public importance and of importance to every Member of the Chamber. The Chair has tried to ensure that freedom of speech, of which Hon. Members have spoken, especially the Hon. Member for Windsor West who can be quite eloquent on the subject, has in no way been diminished in the Chamber. Perhaps the complaint might be that there has almost been an excess of latitude.

The Chair is part of this Chamber and is bound by the practices to which the Chamber is accustomed. However, the Chair would ask Hon. Members to do the following. As the Chair indicated yesterday, there are appropriate ways to ask searching and vigorous questions. Doing so, those questions may imply criticism and may imply at times grave concern or even outrage. To the degree that skill is used, those questions can be asked in such a way that they do not offend the rules of the House. Nor do they have to invite a reaction which is such that disorder is then in the Chamber and the Chair must intervene. I must thank Hon. Members for having used considerable constraint. Yesterday the Chair had to admonish both sides of the Chamber, yet for the most part those admonishments were accepted.

However, I must come back to one point made by the Hon. Member for Peace River, that is, without in any way infringing upon the right of free speech, this place will only function with a sense of fair play. I do not think I need add anything more to the conversation this afternoon, but I must assure the Hon. Member for Windsor West that under no circumstances is the Chair likely to move in a direction which would in any way, as I think the Hon. Member for Shefford put it, muzzle freedom of speech in the Chamber.

The Chair would ask all Hon. Members on both sides of the Chamber, no matter how important the issue might be, to try to live by something that is not necessarily written in the rule books, that is, fair play, for which we look to guide us in our deliberations.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-19, an Act respecting motor vehicle transport by extra-provincial undertakings, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport; and the motion of Mr. Lewis (p. 3220).

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, it seems evident that the Government is anxious to push Bill C-19 through Parliament with rather unseemly haste. I enter the debate to protest that action on the part of the Government.

Bill C-19, respecting the Motor Vehicle Transport Act, 1986, replaces a very old Act of Parliament, one going back as far as 1953 or 1954. It is quite understandable that an Act of Parliament from the fifties needs to be altered, changed, and updated to meet the demands, requirements, and needs of the eighties, nineties, and into the next century. It probably is, in respect of the needs of the trucking industry, time for a change. However, if it is time for a change, surely Parliament needs time to consider fully all the implications, effects, results, and consequences of this change.

To move that the question be now put is a signal from government Members that they may know enough, or think they do, and that they may have heard enough or think they have. Perhaps they are sufficiently convinced about Bill C-19 to think that no more debate is required. However, Hon. Members of Parliament on this side of the House are saying that that is not so, that we need more time to consider, reflect, examine, and debate the principles of the Bill.

I remind Hon. Members that the Canadian Trucking Association decided it was time to take a new look at the position of the industry regarding motor carrier regulatory reform sometime ago, and it took them a lot of time to arrive at a new policy. In fact, Bill C-19 reflects the culmination of a full three years of tug of war among different interests—the shippers, the truckers, and the Government. It took three years to achieve the policy goals which are now reflected in part in Bill C-19, yet the House began to consider Bill C-19 only last Thursday. On Monday, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader, speaking for the Government, rose in his place after speaking for four minutes to move that the question be now put. Does it strike you, Sir, as being fair that we should be allowed one hour and 28 minutes to debate a Bill whose policy took three years to develop, three years to consider an important issue that has not been changed since the 1950s?

I must make a plea to you, Sir, and to all Hon. Members: we need more time too. Take the pressure off. This House is not a rubber stamp nor is it a sausage factory that drives out Bills on an assembly line. When arguments like mine are made, some Hon. Members say that we should let the Bill go to committee where it can receive in depth treatment and perhaps even be amended. There will be a time, of course, when this Bill will go to committee, but in my view it should not go to committee until its principles are fully understood, fully comprehended and fully appreciated or rejected by the House.

We call second reading of a Bill a routine proceeding, but it should never be so routine that when a major shift in policy occurs and when a new direction is charted, we should not have the time to debate it. I am not opposed to the charting of new courses, far from it, but surely we as parliamentarians must not deal with the underlying principles of the Bill in some kind of a routine, reflective, hurried or pressured fashion. Is it unreasonable for me to propose that, Sir?

Parliaments go back to the time of the Anglo-Saxon kings. Even though they were not as representative as Parliaments are today, we know that the earliest of Parliaments saw themselves as being supreme legislative, administrative and judicial assemblies, and no ancient British king would attempt to legislate without the advice and approval of that assembly. All I am saying is that we need time to consider this Bill. We must remind ourselves in asking for that time that this honourable House has very ancient foundations.

The Crown today is the executive branch of Government, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his Ministers. However, any Member of Parliament may rise to tell the executive branch that it is not to be allowed to take Parliament for granted or to abuse its rights and privileges. Paramount among those rights is the right to debate fully important pieces of legislation such as Bill C-19. I ask you, Sir, does it not sound rather abusive to you to have the first day of debate last Thursday and then on Monday to have an Hon. Member move that the question now be put? It sounds abusive to me.

By putting this motion forward, the Government is preventing a major decision of Parliament from being at least considered. I would like to explain what that major decision could have been, not that it would have been taken by Parliament but at least it could have been considered. That decision is that this Bill be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time six months hence. It is no longer possible to move such a motion. We have been excluded from putting before Parliament that possibility.

A Bill based on a new policy approach which took a full three years to develop by the industry, its clients and the Government working together to replace a policy that goes back as far as the 1950s may very well require at least six months of study. During the February recess of Parliament and the Easter break, we may very well want to talk to shippers and truckers in our regions to ask them if Bill C-19 as they understand it does what they hope it will do. There is very good evidence to suggest that Bill C-19 does not fit the bill of fare and that the degree of consensus that was reached after three years leaves much to be desired, at least insofar as that consensus has been translated into legislation.

The Canadian Trucking Association recently took another very careful look at its position, the position it reached after three years of active consideration. It went through some very serious soul searching and concluded that Bill C-19 is a disaster in terms of a meaningful transitional approach to regulatory reform. It concluded that Bill C-19 does not meet any of the industry's primary concerns. At first the industry thought it did but now it sees that it does not.

The message is clear. This question should not now be put. It should be debated and debated more, and perhaps it should even be set aside for a short period of time. Surely a Government which is as shaky, inexperienced and insecure as this one would not want to force upon the trucking industry an ill-considered package of reforms which may not achieve what is hoped for. There is no disagreement on this side of the House about what is hoped for. What is hoped for is an easy, helpful passage from the excessive regulation we have had in the past to full deregulation. However, we cannot do that without much careful thought.

Would the Government really want to push through this House a Bill which could very well give U.S. truckers an important competitive advantage over Canadian truckers? The U.S. trucking industry already enjoys certain advantages because of U.S. tax reform which we do not have yet and because of lower fuel taxes. Despite Bill C-19 which is now being pushed at us, the industry has already drawn up a new policy position. Parliament needs time to consider that new policy position, so the question should not now be put. We should consider more carefully what has taken place in very recent weeks and days.

The industry is convinced, for example, that Bill C-19, in bringing in a totally new test, will lead to a deluge of early applications. This will swamp the process even before it has been fully tested. The industry is convinced that there will be numerous court challenges drawn out of Bill C-19, and the industry is concerned about problems associated with safety.

Hon. Members will know that in the U.S. motor carrier regulatory reform concerned itself mainly with the economic aspects. As important as they are, the U.S. failed to consider the safety aspects in a comprehensive manner at the same time. They are now paying the price. If we fully deregulate by January 1, 1988, will a new and comprehensive national safety code also be in effect? I doubt it, but Members of Parliament want an answer to that question. No, I say to you that after only one hour and 20 minutes of debate, after only six speakers from this side of the House, it is not the time to move that the question now be put. Bill C-18 requires full and very extensive debate. Following that, rather than sending it to a committee, we may want to put it aside for six months so that Parliament can keep up with developments in this important public policy area.

The industry believes its concerns could possibly be satisfied if Bill C-19 were amended in certain clauses. Particularly bothersome to them is Clause 7. However, the industry has reported that when it approached the Ministry of Transport it received the answer that it was too late to redraft the Bill, it has to accept it the way it is now. So much for the advice we received from Hon. Members that we can send it to committee where it can be examined in depth and perhaps amended. We know the Government's mind is already made up and there will be no amendments. What you see now in Bill C-19 is what you will get at the end of the process. No, this question should not now be put and the Government, in my view, disgraces itself by making such a proposition after such a short time in debate.

The parliamentary committee which examined the Government's document Freedom to Move made certain recommendations. Let me deal with but one area where committee members made recommendations. For example, the committee said that the international aspect of trucking should be treated somewhat differently from the domestic. Nowhere in Bill C-19 will you find that recommendation incorporated. The question should not now be put. We should know why that recommendation was rejected. The Bill calls for deregulation in the trucking industry by January 1, 1988. Many of the provinces, led as they often are by Ontario with two-thirds of the trucking market, want a longer period, up to five years, before the industry is totally deregulated. If they want such a period of grace, I ask all Hon. Members and the Government, why should the question now be put? Surely we want to consider and reflect much more deeply than we have in little more than two hours.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments.

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the Hon. Member's observations on the procedure the Government is using and the turpitude which gives rise to that procedure. The Hon. Member represents a riding which has, with the possible exception of mine, the largest continuous stretch of single trunk highway, and I would like him to comment on the ramifications of this Bill for his riding, in particular the impact on the various communities.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for that question. When I spoke to the House about this Bill I said that what bothered me about deregulation was reflected in Bill C-18. The same principle is in Bill C-19. The outlying regions of the country may find themselves suffering when a position or policy is being pushed which places the emphasis on competitiveness. Sometimes that competitiveness causes those who are in a position to compete to prosper and do rather well. However, if you are out of the mainstream and somewhat apart from the main channels of transportation, you are not in a competitive position and you may suffer.

To support my contention I want to call upon no less a person than the Premier of Manitoba. The words he used could very well be applied to the region of the country I represent. In a speech he gave to an important gathering in his province he said that the federal Government's proposal to deregulate the industry relies too much on competition. Then he made this telling comment. If changes are not made, that is changes in the legislation, the federal Government will reduce the opportunity for economic growth and accelerate the growing opportunity gap between the have and the have-not provinces. I would simply have added between the have and the have-not regions because they exist within a province, and because we have provinces which will be benefactors of a deregulated environment and others that will not.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, the Member knows I have a great deal of respect for his thoughtfulness and integrity. Is he aware that the subject matter of this Bill has been studied for the past seven or eight years? Why does he not have more concern for the men and women who work in the natural resource industries within his constituency and across Canada? Do they not have rights, too? Do they not have the right to have a more competitive and efficient trucking industry to get their products to increasingly competitive international markets?

As the Member knows, there are many jobs involved in our resource industries. Why does he, and members of the NDP, constantly appear to ignore the legitimate interests of the people concerned? Why, for example, have a lot of shippers themselves got into the trucking industry? It seems to me they have done so because they cannot get the efficient trucking service they need right now, which is what we are trying to achieve with this Bill. The present regulatory system is not meeting the needs of shippers. In summary, I am really asking the Member why he says we should continue to abandon the shippers who depend on efficient transportation to get their products to market.

Finally, I said before that there are over 1,000 Canadian carriers competing successfully in the U.S. trucking industry now. Of course, many American companies are competing here. The point is clear that we can compete. Thanks to the Brock-Gotlieb agreement we cannot be banned from the U.S. and we are able to compete in that market. If he could comment in the available time on some of those matters I would be most grateful.

Mr. Penner: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary knows that I, too, respect his judgment and integrity as a parliamentarian and spokesman for the Government. I would just say to him that he did not listen very carefully to all I said. He may want to go back later when it is in printed form and read it. At no time did I ever say we did not need to change a policy that goes back to the 1950s. I said we do need to change it. In fact, he contributed to the argument I was making. He asked whether I was not aware that there had been seven to eight years of study which had gone into the policy that lies behind this Bill. I know, and I stated it in my remarks, that the industry itself, the shippers and the Government had taken a full three years with a lot of tug of war to bring out a policy position. I am only asking whether Parliament should not have a decent period of time to debate this. My hon. friend and I could debate what a decent period of time would be, but surely he would not disagree with me that the question should not now be put on a Bill which was introduced only last week. Surely he would want to hear more about the concerns, such as, for example, what the effects will be in underdeveloped regions like northern Ontario. We can only learn such things during the process of debate. That is what Parliament is all about.

• (1550)

If the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary will look at my remarks very carefully, he will see that I was not opposing the Bill in total. I was simply saying that on such a major new policy direction it is the right, prerogative and need of Parliament to give it full, serious and adequate consideration. I do not think my hon. friend will disagree with me on that.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Grondin) for a question or comment.

Mr. Grondin: Mr. Speaker, my hon. colleague has said that the Government had already made up its mind on what the Bill would contain and on the fact that there would be no changes made. What I want to ask is this: In his opinion, why is the Government refusing to allow a normal debate on this Bill? Has the Government already made a commitment to the American Government or to the American giants? Does the Government have a special interest in shortening the debate?

[English]

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, I hate to admit it, but I think the Hon. Member has asked a question which I, as a member of the Opposition, cannot answer. It is a good question. It is the kind of question which should be put to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie). What lies behind the Government's decision to force a Bill through Parliament as quickly as possible without any likelihood of amendment in committee? What is the Government's motivation?

If I were to speculate on the Government's motivation, you, Mr. Speaker, would probably be on your feet very quickly and say that I was imputing motives and that that is unparliamentary. I would have to agree with you. I honestly do not know why the Government is pushing this Bill through Parliament with such unseemly haste. It makes one suspicious. It worries Members of Parliament and citizens of the country.

We are sent here as representatives to consider fully the implications of legislation which is finally approved by this House. If there are to be negative impacts on certain regions of the country or on certain segments of the industry, particularly the smaller entrepreneurs, surely parliamentarians ought to know all about them before we decide to agree on the principle of the Bill and send it to committee.

I do not think we yet fully understand the principle of this Bill. We do not know what lies behind it. We are quite incapable of learning that in less than two hours of debate. I think the Government is unfair to want the question put so quickly. Much more debate is needed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco)—Medical care—treatment of victims of brain damage; the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus)—Olympics—tickets for hockey final. b) Request that Minister intervene with Olympic Committee; the Hon. Member for St. Leonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano)—Canada Post Corporation—Anticipated increase in postal rates. b) Inquiry why all plans of Corporation not referred to committee.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-19, an Act respecting motor vehicle transport by extra-provincial undertakings, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport; and the motion of Mr. Lewis (p. 3220).

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley—Hants): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to rise to participate in this debate on Bill C-18 with regard to the fundamental reform of transportation in this country. I listened with a great deal of interest to my friend, the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner). I was prompted to rise today because the Member for Cochrane—Superior is one of the more respected Members of this House. He has many years of experience and, at one time in his career, was Chairman of the Canadian Parliamentary Association. In that capacity he was able to visit England from time to time and see the mother of parliaments at work.

He is one of the more restrained Members on the opposition side in terms of rhetoric. He very rarely indulges in hyperbole. He is not like the more dramatic Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) who has been resurrected in opposition. He was quiet as a church mouse at a communion Christmas for years in Government, but has really come alive in opposition with his scintillating questions and sometimes interesting contributions to debate. This is almost a second life for the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate. The Member for Cochrane—Superior is pretty consistent and thorough and fairly steadfast.

I am Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport to which Bill C-19 will, depending upon the will of the House, eventually be referred. Bill C-18 is already before the committee. Being an objective and non-partisan chairman, I am not going to get into the fundamental issues with which that committee will deal. I was, however, rather bothered by a couple of the comments of my hon. friend for Cochrane—Superior. I will develop the chronology of the time taken for debate on Bill C-18 and Bill C-19 and comment on the perhaps unintentional insult by the Hon. Member who is a member of the standing committee.

The Member suggested that because this Bill received second reading in the House there will be no change made to it in committee. As all Hon. Members know, as a new Government we may have had some problems and made some mistakes. However, in this new Parliament there has been a consistent desire for fundamental parliamentary reform from the top to the bottom, including in committee work. I am not going to debate all the areas of parliamentary reform, but for the Hon. Member to suggest that passage of second reading in the House means that the Bill will not be changed in committee flies in the face of his conviction and that of all members who support parliamentary reform.

The Government wants this Bill to be moved from the floor of the House into committee where the meaningful work, with respect, will be done through the presentation of briefs, the hearing of evidence and, based on that evidence, the submission of meaningful recommendations for change. After all, in its report Freedom to Move the committee produced the report entitled: Change, Choice and Challenge.

I agree with members opposite and members on the government side that there are presently aspects of this Bill which must be examined very closely. Members on both sides have pointed out areas in which there should be change when the Bill reaches committee. There will not be one thing changed in the House. There has not been one new argument on this issue since the debate began.

Let us get down to the facts and not stir up a myth that this Bill is being forced through the House. Debates which continue day after day in which everything is repeated ad nauseam turn the public off. The public is not educated by that. Meaningful work in committee will educate the public. My friend knows that the longest debate in the British House of Commons in recent history was a two-day debate on the admission of England to the European Common Market.

With respect to debate on these two Bills, admittedly the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) spoke for part of the day on Friday, December 19. Debate on Bill C-18 was launched on December 19 before the House recessed for Christmas. We resumed the debate when the House reconvened on January 19. The opposition spokesman spoke for a meaningful part of that day. Following the debate on the softwood lumber legislation, we resumed debate on January 27, 28, 29 and 30, as well as on Monday, February 2 and Tuesday, February 3 when there was a motion to extend the hours. The question was finally put early on Wednesday morning.

• (1600)

As the chairman of the committee considering this legislation, let me state candidly that I did not see the necessity to extend hours until four o'clock in the morning in order to put the question. While it was an interesting debate, until that time there had not been a deliberate attempt by the Opposition to prevent the second reading of the legislation. However, the fact is that there had been eight days of debate on Bill C-18. Admittedly, some were not full days of debate.

Mr. Benjamin: Eighteen hours.

Mr. Nowlan: Perhaps some government Members should remember from whence they come because it is obvious that when there is a procedural ambush when the Opposition is not trying to impede the Bill there would be retaliation. We were experts at it when we were opposition and we would have responded similarly and put up obstacles in proper debate. During those extended hours we heard about the great desire to debate and discuss the principles of the Bill.

When we came to Bill C-19 on Wednesday, February 4, the Opposition naturally struck back. After Question Period on Wednesday, there was a motion to concur in a report on the Post Office. On Thursday, February 5, there was a motion to concur in a Public Accounts report in spite of what members said about getting on with debating the principles of the Bill. On Friday, I watched Question Period from my riding in Nova Scotia. At the conclusion of that lively Question Period, lo and behold, the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) moved concurrence in a motion on the energy report from some two years ago. This was done by the Opposition which said we must get on to debate the principles of the Bill.

When I was in opposition I believed that the Government House Leader of the day should have invoked time allocation on many more occasions than the Government was inclined to do because of some mythological fear that the public resented closure on Bills. I suggest that the public resents Bills being debated ad nauseam in this Chamber, when the real work is essentially done in committees.

We want this Bill to go to committee, but the Opposition cannot complain about its being forced through Parliament. There have been three days on which to debate Bill C-19, but on each of those days there was a concurrence motion by the Opposition. That uses the time for the debate on the principles of Bill C-19. Obviously, the Government House Leader would feel thwarted because the opposition tactics were more than retaliation to the extended hours on Tuesday, February 3.

Perhaps I am being too frank in admitting that I thought debate on Bill C-18 was proceeding smoothly. I know that there was almost agreement to proceed with Bill C-18 and Bill C-19 if some conditions were met, so that perhaps we would not be debating that Bill today. I am not responsible for House business, but I am chairman of a committee and do not want to have to deal with a Bill about which there is much bad feeling.

The fact is that after the extended hours on February 3, we were faced with concurrence motions on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, and finally debated Bill C-19 yesterday and today.

There were eight days for debate on Bill C-18 and three days, supposedly, for debate on Bill C-19. However, the majority of that time to debate Bill C-19 was used to debate concurrence motions. Obviously the Opposition showed by its concurrence motions on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday that it was really not interested in debating the principles of the Bill. I understand why the Government House Leader, on this occasion, moved his motion on Monday to get this Bill into the committee.

I have put those chronological facts on the record because this is a very important debate concerning the most fundamental transport legislation since its predecessor in 1966-67. I was a Member of Parliament at that time, and I am glad to see the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) in the House because I heard him refer to that previous great national debate on transport.

When I heard Members speak about the time it took to put Bill C-18 through the formal second reading phase, I referred to Hansard of 1966 and 1967 and the debate on Bill C-231, which was the then National Transportation Bill introduced by the then Minister of Transport, Mr. Pickersgill. That Bill was introduced for first reading on August 29, 1966. Second reading debate began on September 1; debate resumed on September 6 and September 7, and the question was put on September 8. There were four days of second reading debate on Bill C-231, the predecessor to the transportation legislation we are debating today. That vote referred the Bill to the Transport and Communications Committee. The next sitting was not until October 2, due to a parliamentary recess, and the committee eventually reported the Bill on December 6, 1966. During that period from October 6 to December 6, there were 33 meetings of the committee, hearing 73 witnesses and accepting 36 briefs. The committee did not travel. When the committee reported the Bill, it went into Committee of the Whole where, at that time, the meaningful debate occurred. The Committee of the Whole considered that report for 15 days between December 20, 1966 and January 26, 1967. On January 26, 1967, the Bill passed third reading on division. It went to the Senate on January 31, 1967, and after four days of debate it passed third reading. It was referred to the Senate Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, and was given third reading on February 8, without amendment.

The point is that it took four days to debate the principle of Bill C-231, the National Transportation Act of the day. I have already stated that in our modern technology of the 1980s, we have already taken eight days—

Mr. Benjamin: No. Eighteen hours.

Mr. Nowlan: You can use your figures, I will use mine. So the Hon. Member can play with figures. The fact is we have taken parts of the whole eight days on debate on Bill C-18 and we had three days slotted for Bill C-19. There were motions to concur and we were into debate on Monday, February 9, and today. In total, there have been 13 days devoted to Bill C-18 and Bill C-19 and we still have not finished. Twenty years ago they finished in four days. That certainly is an indication of why the Government House Leader can get a little impatient. Frankly, I do not believe he is being unreasonable in moving certain procedural motions in order to move the Bill along.

• (1610)

All Hon. Members who were involved in transport, especially the Hon. Member for Regina West, is aware that the issues in this matter have been around for years. This Bill was not snuck in under cover of darkness so that it caught the Opposition by surprise.

The then Minister of Transport, the now Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), in a memorable speech on February 21, 1985, set out the parameters of reform to the transportation sector of which he wanted Canadians to be aware and respond to. That speech was really the manifesto of this Bill. The gestation period was not carried on behind closed doors. It was done in the public domain, in the light of day. The then Minister of Transport threw out the challenge to Canadians on February 21, 1985, and we are now into 1987. There were consultations after his speech and, finally, on July 15, 1985, the Minister released his Freedom to Move paper, which was the consolidation of many of the things he had heard from interested parties. That Freedom to Move paper was released publicly on July 15, 1985, so that again the public could be involved and they could see how the Minister of the day had distilled the public input and they could see where we were going with the impending legislation. The Freedom to Move paper was not sent back to the bureaucracy behind closed doors. It was referred to the Standing Committee on Transport in October or November of 1985 and the standing committee had hearings across the country. We did not go to every place but we certainly had hearings in Ottawa, Vancouver, Winnipeg and Halifax. We heard from 95 organizations and received 152 submissions in a very active two-month period.

We then perused our report and reported back on our Freedom to Move paper in December. We then went to the North in the spring of 1986, and in June 26, 1986, the Bill was tabled. We then went home for the summer, and the Bill percolated in the public domain. Again there were representations, submissions and consultations. In the new Parliament on November 4, 1986, the Bill came back and, as I mentioned earlier, the present Minister of Transport made the initial speech on December 19, just before we adjourned for Christmas.

I just cannot get too excited, as even the most objective chairman, to the charges from the Opposition that this Bill is being rushed through in unholy haste when the previous Bill, in a Parliament 20 years ago, took four days on second reading. We have already taken parts of eight days and then we had the other five days on Bill C-19, which makes a total of 13 days. The Opposition cannot have it both ways. If it wants to debate the principles of the Bill, why did it, for three days in a row, move concurrence motions? Those Hon. Members stand convicted on their own procedural ploys. That is another reason that this Bill will be better off in committee so that meaningful work can be done.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that in terms of the reform of Parliament in general, and especially in terms of the composition of the standing committee, anyone who suggests in this House that things are not going to change in committee, is insulting the members of that committee who are very conscientious and who will be looking at this Bill with a critical eye. They will be aware of the concerns of Hon. Members, and they are legitimate concerns. I am sure we will present an interesting Bill back to the House and Hon. Members will again be able to speak about principles.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, I have three brief questions to ask the Hon. Member. First, with respect to his chronology on the amount of time given to this debate, is the Hon. Member not aware that Bill C-19, which was first debated last Thursday, is a Bill which contains a very distinct set of issues? These issues have to be considered by Parliament on their own merits. Is the Hon. Member not aware of that?

Second, is the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport aware that when the trucking industry approached the Government of Canada concerning certain changes it thought were necessary, it received, according to its own words, three answers about amendments; first, it is too late to redraft Bill C-19 substantially; second, it is not even worth considering unless there is a consensus at the provincial level in favour of same, and that will not happen; and, third, it cannot consider treating international deregulation separately from domestic out of concern for offending U.S. sensibilities? By the way, that latter recommendation flowed from the committee which looked at the Freedom to Move paper. What credence does the chairman give to that response from the Government of Canada to the industry?

The Hon. Member is obviously very close to the Minister and to the Parliamentary Secretary. In his defence of the work the committee will do, is he now telling the House that there is a very good chance, in fact a likelihood, that Clause 7 of Bill C-19 will be significantly amended because that is the most troublesome part of it? And is there a good chance that Clause 26 will be amended so that it will be extended to the year 1990? Is the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport today making certain announcements which are in fact rather newsworthy in nature?

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question. Because the Hon. Member for Regina West may want to ask me a few questions, I will not be too long in answering. I will take the last question first. Obviously, I am not going to try to anticipate amendments to specific clauses in this Bill. That will depend on the representations we hear. I am saying in a general way, knowing that committee and having participated in the Committee on Transport for many years, that never have I known that committee, especially under the new aegis of reform which has percolated to a point and, frankly, percolated quite a way to this committee, to be immune to very constructive suggestions for change revision. Only time will tell just where all that comes from.

Obviously, I know Bill C-19 is a little more specific than Bill C-18. The fact is that they are both in a deregulatory environment. I heard the Hon. Member say in his own speech that the trucking industry has changed its mind in several ways and has a new proposal. Gosh knows what it may bring in before the committee. It has done a real flip. We could have a debate on principles ad infinitum in the Chamber and, who knows, perhaps the trucking industry will flip again. Let us get it before the committee and pin it down.

The Hon. Member asked three questions but I think, frankly, the three questions are all wrapped up in one issue. I am fully aware that Bill C-18 is a little different from Bill C-19, but the fact is it is reform and change. I think the example of the trucking industry is one of the best examples. The trucking industry itself has done a pretty fundamental switch.

I was going to rebut, in an objective way, a couple of comments made by the Hon. Member for Regina West, since I am the chairman of the committee which has to hear this. Certainly the Hon. Member has raised some very good points. For example, the competitive line rates is a very contentious issue. If it appears that the American railroader is going to come in here and adversely affect the Canadian railroader, obviously the committee will respond positively.

• (1620)

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the chairman of our committee which deals with transportation matters. Is my hon. friend deliberately ignoring the actions of his colleagues on the Government side? On the one hand he says that he did not like what happened last Tuesday.

Mr. Nowlan: That is right.

Mr. Benjamin: He then proceeded to spend most of his time justifying what happened. What I want to know is what choice the Opposition had after his colleagues, the Parliamentary Secretaries, two of them, on the instructions of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski)—the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) was not even around—moved motions with respect to the House sitting extra hours and that the question now be put which, in effect, cuts off debate. I want to tell my hon. friend that we had 17 hours and 58 minutes of debate at second reading on Bill C-18, which is equivalent to four days.

The Library of Parliament has informed us that in 1966 the debate on second reading was eight days and that the committee travelled to 16 locations. If the Library of Parliament is wrong, then so be it, the matter will rest on their heads. But I want my hon. friend to check the figures again.

Will the Hon. Member quit trying to have it both ways? Can he guarantee us that the committee will travel? Does he have any assurance from the Minister of Transport and the Deputy Prime Minister that the committee will hear witnesses? He has told us that the committee will do so many great things. We will not do much just sitting here in Ottawa listening to the big shippers, the bull shippers and the big transportation companies.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I do not know how much time I have to respond, but the Hon. Member has posed some interesting questions. The real one is the last one. I was candid enough to volunteer that I did not like what happened on February 3. I do not think it helped the progress of this important piece of legislation through the House. If I had my druthers I would not have done it that way. I am only the chairman of the committee. I do not run the business of the House. I do not know what else I can say in that regard. I quite agree that it has not helped the atmosphere in the House.

I come to the second point my hon. friend made. I have also used the Library of Parliament in this respect. We had better find out which research person in the Library was used by my hon. friend. He cites the figure of 18 hours. With respect to the transportation debate back in 1966, there were only four days in total spent on second reading. My friend admits that an 18-hour debate is equivalent to four days. I say that it is almost eight days. But that is just playing with figures. Let us assume that his figures are correct. We still have had four days on debate at second reading on Bill C-18. We are now on the fifth day of debate on Bill C-19.

Mr. Benjamin: No, no.

Mr. Nowlan: We are only on the fifth day of debate because members of the Opposition moved motions to concur in reports of committees for three days in a row. If members of the Opposition had been more selective, I do not know that the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis) would have moved the motion that he moved. At any rate, that is the state of the nation in terms of the chronology.

I was hoping to have a meeting of the steering committee today—

Mr. Benjamin: And you cancelled it because the Department and the Minister did not want you to meet.

Mr. Nowlan: I cancelled it because one of the spokesmen from the Official Opposition could not attend. My hon. friend had better restrain himself because we want him to be able to participate in the committee.

Mr. Benjamin: Why don't you resign as chairman?

Mr. Nowlan: The Hon. Member sometimes participates very constructively. He often makes a great deal of input into the proceedings of the committee. As far as I am concerned, the sooner we get this matter off the floor of the House of Commons, the better. We cannot have a meeting of the steering committee on such an important piece of legislation without the spokesman for Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. That is the reason there will be no steering committee meeting today.

I hope that I will be able to have a one-on-one talk with my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Regina West, from whom the only real opposition to getting this matter into committee comes. My friend has a great deal of talent and he is very credible. But he can only hold up the Parliament of Canada so long. I think he had better realize that if he hopes to have the committee travel. The Hon. Member for Regina West knows what I think about the business of travel. There is no way that a committee will travel if we are procedurally ambushed in the House. Where is the give and take?

Mr. Benjamin: You guys ambushed us.

Mr. Nowlan: Let us get this matter out of the House. Hon. Members might be surprised at what we can produce.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I wish the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan) had not taken so long to respond to the questions of my hon. friend. I wanted to ask him the following question in his capacity as Chairman of the Transport Committee. What does he need to make a commitment that the committee will in fact travel? This is a critical piece of information.

I remind the Hon. Member that he reminded us of the length of debate when a similar matter was discussed some time ago. That was after a royal commission had studied the matter for more than one year. No royal commission has studied the matter which is now before us. As a matter of fact, there has been a document produced entitled Freedom to Move. Some people felt that this put down the framework for transportation regulation upgrading for the next few decades and that it would be appropriate to take this document to the people of Canada and hold hearings on it. That is what governments have done over the years on critical matters such as this. In years past governments have actually given matters such as this to royal commissions to travel with around the country and hold dozens and dozens of hearings in every province and every territory and every major metropolitan area. But what did the Government do when it had the opportunity to show how committed it was to receiving public input?

I ask the Chairman of the Transport Committee: Did the committee travel across Canada and hold open public hearings? Well, technically, yes, it did. It held hearings in three centres other than in the capital city. It ignored seven of the 10 provinces of Canada and both of the territories of Canada. In other words, most of Canada was blanked out by the committee. Were the hearings held in two of the largest metropolitan cities in North America and the two largest metropolitan cities in Canada, Montreal and Toronto? No. When a concerned and effective Opposition looks at the track record of the Government to see how committed it is to receiving decent input from those who will be most affected by this legislation, I have to say to the Chairman of the Transport Committee that the track record looks very poor. There has been no indication that the Government is actually serious if we consider the precedents that we have seen thus far.

On many occasions in my position as House Leader for the New Democratic Party I have asked the Government House Leader and his Parliamentary Secretary if the Transport Committee is prepared to travel. After weeks and weeks of asking this same question I have received no answer. Based on what I have seen the Government do in terms of its willingness to travel on critical pieces of legislation, I must say that I do not have any confidence that the Government is serious at this point.

The Chairman of the Transport Committee is a man for whom I have a great deal of respect. He has indicated that we have been dragging out this debate. I want to remind the Hon. Member that I am but the fourth speaker from the New Democratic Party to speak on legislation that will touch every part of Canada, every resource sector and every major manufacturing company in the country.

To give Hon. Members an idea of the scale of the operation we are discussing today, I looked back to see to what extent this industry touches the lives of Canadians. How large an industry is it? If one considers just the for-hire trucking companies, I found out that in 1982, the last time we had a specific figure for the number of trucks and tractors for for-hire trucking, the figure came to 50,600, with an additional 83,000 trailers and other related equipment. That is a massive operation, and that is the for-hire trucking only. The private trucking firms with their own subsidiaries have 481,000 trucks and tractors and another 83,000 trailers. That does not include the hundreds of companies that move household goods across the country or within large metropolitan areas. This massive undertaking includes hundreds of thousands of trucks moving goods in excess of $6 billion in terms of gross operating revenue.

• (1630)

Surely the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport does not feel that having four or five speakers from a political Party is excessive. Surely in his position as Chairman of the Transport Committee he does not think it is unreasonable to entertain the idea of travelling and holding hearings in critical parts of the country. Yet no answers have been received. It perplexes and concerns us, and it makes us feel that perhaps the Government is less than serious about giving sufficient opportunity for the people to be heard who will be most affected by this Bill, and its associate Bill C-18, the deregulation of the transportation industry generally.

At the end of my short presentation during the question and answer period, perhaps the Chairman will take that opportunity to indicate to the House, and to the people of Canada who are concerned about this matter, what his intentions are with regard to receiving input on this critical issue through open hearings in different parts of Canada.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus), made an excellent point in the introduction to his speech last Thursday when this debate started. He indicated that often there is an association with what is happening in our trucking industry in terms of reregulation with what has happened in the United States. This recognizes that over the past few years the United States has gone through the process of reregulation. Yet it is folly to compare what happened in the United States with what happens in Canada. When the United States changed and reregulated its trucking industry, it knew that in the northern part of its country there is a country called Canada which had a relatively insignificant transportation industry relative to that of the United States. It is quite a different matter for Canada. The boundary between Canada and the United States is the longest undefended boundary in the world. When we open it up and welcome American carriers carte blanche, we are inviting a giant into our household. Their ability to move in and take over from existing Canadian systems is obvious. It is inappropriate to compare what has happened in the United States with what is happening in Canada, and assume that what has transpired since the introduction of reregulation will be the same in both countries.

I wish to focus on a number of critical points. Of course, one of them is safety. A number of representatives of the Government, particularly the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Kilgour) has mentioned that there will be a made-in-Canada national safety code that will be in place to bring some comfort. We all agree that if the trucking industry is to be deregulated, many of us have raised concerns that this may mean that the highways will be less safe. Does it mean that trucking companies will be pushed beyond the endurance of their drivers and the reasonable safety of their vehicles? One might ask if we have evidence to suggest that. I say that we have a considerable amount of evidence.

A recent study, which was funded by the American trucking companies, found that about 60 per cent of all the heavy truck accidents involved a fatigued truck driver. The comprehensive study of 231 accidents in six western states involved 39 fatal accidents which claimed the lives of 16 truck occupants and 33 occupants of other vehicles.

The study goes on to state that:

> The surprisingly high percentage of fatigue-related accidents is three times greater than actually reported on the regular accident report forms. A fatigue-related accident was determined when the truck operator drove more than 16 or more consecutive hours per trip.

It is incredible to think that truck drivers would be expected to be responsible for a major rig on the highway for a period in excess of 16 hours. It is not surprising that fatigue would settle in and danger on our highways would be the result.

The report further states:

> One-half of all the truck accidents studied were single vehicle accidents. The second most serious cause of truck accidents was mechanical failure (18 per cent). However, of all mechanical failure accidents, 63 per cent also involved driver fatigue. Thus, fatigue probably prevented the professional drivers from possibly overcoming or safely reacting to a mechanical failure.

The report further states:

> Fatigue accidents are reported to result from deliberate violations of hours of service by truck drivers.

The operative term there is "deliberate violations of hours of service by truck drivers". The report further states:

> One out of every three heavy truck drivers on the highways is estimated to be driving beyond 10 hour per day standard recommended by the Bureau of Motor Carrier Safety. It was also estimated that 6.5 per cent of all heavy truck drivers are driving more than 15 consecutive hours per trip. A small percentage, but if extrapolated to 1.2 million heavy truck drivers on the highway, this is a sizable figure warned the AAA Foundation for Traffic Safety.

It is no secret that one of the spin-offs of the process of deregulation of the trucking industry will be to bring a great deal more competition to our highways. At first glance I suspect that people will say that this is obviously in the best interest of shippers, the Canadian economy, and that it is good news for us all.

The result of this enhanced competition will mean that large, small, and medium-sized trucking companies will be pushing and cutting back on maintenance costs, and perhaps on the concern that they have for their drivers. It is for this reason that we are particularly concerned when the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport states that a made-in-Canada national safety code will be put in place.

In looking at the situation that was in effect in November of last year, for example, the safety initiatives that include the procedure for audit of employers' records, I notice that the Canadian Trucking Association's position is still to be developed. The National Council of the Motor Transportation Authority also states that the procedure is still to be developed. The position of the Canadian Trucking Association and the CCMTA is that the policy for record systems for operator profile or driver profile still has to be developed. I also consider such things as the Interprovincial Record Exchange, and find that that also has to be developed in terms of the view of the Canadian Transport Association, and similarly with the CCMTA which says it still has to be developed.

The only conclusion that can be drawn is that these safety codes and the understandings, which would result in enhanced safety as a result of deregulation, will be determined sometime in the future. They will not necessarily be determined this year, because the dates here indicate the year 1989. We are concerned about these situations when they are brought to our attention. Why does it appear that the Government is so intent on getting this Bill into committee and back into the House of Commons and passed into legislation prior to real consideration being given to the safety factor? I have here a letter that was recently written by the Minister of Highways and Transportation in the Province of Manitoba to the Minister of Transport in Ottawa. In the second paragraph it states that, "I remain of the view that the Bill is seriously flawed and constitutes a breach of the terms of the Memorandum of Understanding on the reform of extra-provincial trucking regulation agreed upon by your predecessor and all provincial and territorial transport Ministers on February 27, 1985."

This raises some serious concerns. Does it mean that once again when it comes to provincial-federal government dealings there seems to have been a breakdown? Here is a Minister responsible for the highways in one of Canada's western provinces saying that in his view the Bill is not only seriously flawed, but also constitutes a breach of the terms of the Memorandum of Understanding that the province and the federal Government had entered into. Then he went on to explain it in some detail. Quite frankly they were quite complicated details upon which I am not in a position to expand. Presumably more learned Members of the House will be able to explain them when the Bill is before the Standing Committee on Transport. I simply use them to point out that again there seems to have been a breakdown in co-operation between the federal Government and the appropriate provincial Government.

Over the course of this very short debate some people have asked why New Democrats seem hesitant about rapid passage of Bill C-19 and why we are listing our concerns very carefully at second reading stage.

I asked myself, as a Member of Parliament, the following question: Who opposes the Bill and who supports it? At the top of the list of organizations opposing the legislation in its present form—and I emphasize that because I assume we can make significant improvements—is the Canadian Trucking Association. If this piece of legislation had been thoughtfully designed and drafted, after appropriate consultation, to improve the lot of transport in Canada, I do not think it would be surprising that the Canadian Trucking Association would support it. However, that Association is opposed to it. I also notice that provincial transport associations are opposed, as is the Province of Manitoba. Other provinces have indicated serious doubts once they had a chance to look at some of the fine points in the legislation. Perhaps that is one of the reasons the Government has decided to proceed with some haste in terms of getting through the legislation. When I find out that all major participants oppose it, I suspect there is a lot more here than what simply meets our eyes as parliamentarians.

I should like to refer to a November article which appeared in The Globe and Mail in which it was reported that United States trucking companies were expecting that Canadian trucking deregulation would mean a continental bonanza by giving them unrestricted access to the Canadian market, thus allowing them to offer non-stop Los Angeles to Vancouver or Miami to Toronto service. The article went on to note that one area where United States carriers were expected to make inroads was in the business currently going to private carriers. In 1984, Canadian companies did about $5 billion worth of business with their private fleets, but with rates falling they could be encouraged to shift to the four higher carriers. United States carriers also expect to take business away from Canadians by signing deals with U.S. parent companies to transport the goods of the parent and its Canadian subsidiary.

We are a Party which has always been concerned about the extremely high level of foreign ownership of our economy, particularly our manufacturing economy, as well as the cash flows and dividend flows which move out of the country as a result of subsidiary branch plant economy in Canada. We now find that trucking companies in the United States will take advantage of the parent company being in the United States and a subsidiary being in Canada to lock up, in a sense, the movement of goods back and forth between the parent and the subsidiary by using their own trucking companies, thereby using American trucking companies.

Mr. Cope, Executive Vice-President of the Ontario Trucking Association, indicated that that would settle the fate of a lot of things in Canada without Canadian companies getting a kick at the cat. This individual in charge of a trucking association in Canada's industrial heartland is concerned that American companies will have advantages which will not exist for Canadian companies.

The end result of the process will inevitably be concentration of ownership in the trucking business. That is what happened in the United States. The Executive Director of the U.S. Independent Truck Owners and Operators Association, a strong proponent of deregulation prior to 1980, testified before congressional oversight hearings in 1983 and said that the effects of the Motor Carrier Act, 1980 on the trucking industry and labour force had been disastrous. The process of deregulation in the United States has been disastrous, in his terms. Both the truck load and the LTL sectors were ravaged by deregulation, with medium-sized carriers forced out of business through the destructive practices engaged by large carriers through the use of discounting tactics. He cited studies which predicted that after the initial shake-up of the industry had been completed there would be four or five giant nation-wide LTL carriers, approximately 20 medium-sized regional LTL carriers, and little else.

It is one more step in the process toward more concentration of the economy being in the hands of fewer players. If the Bill is designed to assist small Canadian trucking companies, and knowing that the experience in the U.S. has resulted in large multinational trucking companies becoming dominant in the market-place, it is fair to think that Bill C-19 is not in the best interests of small Canadian carriers.

I encourage the Government and the Parliamentary Secretary to give the matter a great deal of thought when it reaches committee stage, at which point we will have a chance to bring forward appropriate witnesses to indicate, from their point of view, the effects of the legislation on them.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal with some of the matters raised by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

Dealing with the question of consultation, I should like to indicate that over 500 groups or individuals were consulted during the development of the legislation, many on more than one occasion. For example, there were meetings with the Canadian Trucking Association, to which the Hon. Member just referred, on six occasions and correspondence was exchanged on eight occasions.

Just before Bill C-19 was tabled, my understanding is that the Canadian Trucking Association in effect asked us to go back to square one. As the Hon. Member said, it is opposed to the legislation. The point is that it was consulted over a long period of time, along with many other organizations.

The following highway carriers were consulted: Alberta Gravel Truckers Association, Atlantic Provinces Trucking Association, B.C. Motor Transportation Association, B&M Carriers Ltd., Canadian Association of Movers, Canadian Freightways Ltd., Canadian Council of Motor Transport Authorities, CP Trucks, Canadian Trucking Association, Cavalier Transportation Services Inc., Cement Cartage, Day and Ross, Drury's Transfer, DunSmith International, Edward Lang, Esquire Livery, G.M. We must not lose sight of the fact that the 10 provincial Governments and the two territorial Governments signed an agreement supporting the principles of Bill C-19.

It is true that there has been a change of heart on the part of the Government of Manitoba. Motivation is not a matter in which we get involved here, but it is true that the Government of Manitoba has changed its position. However, I understand that the Bill incorporates the agreement of February, 1985 which was signed by all 10 provincial Governments and the two territorial Governments. Consultation is something on which we cannot be criticized in terms of Bill C-19.

Referring to the question of safety, the Hon. Member referred to a sheet. The sheet from which he was quoting—and I also have it—was provided by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). It is dated November. I understand that significant progress was made last week on some of the matters, not all of them. The important point is that the safety code will come into force in January, 1990, a full year before the fitness-only test comes into effect. Many other things in terms of safety, which is all important, will be done beforehand. There is no comparison between what we are doing in terms of safety and what the United States has done or has not done, I should say.

The Hon. Member comes from a part of the country, as do I, which is resource-based. Many men and women in his constituency earn their livelihoods from shipping timber, mining or other natural products. Who will speak for those men and women? With respect, no one in the NDP spoke for the shippers or for men and women working in the resource industry. Certainly the Hon. Member is not doing it today. I would appreciate hearing his comments.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's last comment was not accurate, but I will not get into debating the inaccuracies or nuances in the comment. However, I should like to provide for the Parliamentary Secretary a letter which was written on February 10, 1987. The letter is from the Canadian Trucking Association and says the following:

> The point that doesn't seem to be getting across in the debate so far is that the reverse onus test is useless so we will have defacto deregulation by January 1, 1988 and there is in fact no National Safety Code. We had people at a meeting of CCMTA last week in Victoria on this along with all other interest groups. Even the shippers agree with us. The fact is that there is a huge lack of consensus as to what should go into a National Safety Code.
> Various provinces want to have different vehicle inspection standards and it is not clear they are prepared to recognize the vehicle inspection standards of adjoining provinces or states. Also, there is no consensus on a national approach to regulating hours of work for extraprovincial truckers. Under the current Canada Labour Code there is minimal enforcement and certainly none for smaller truckers, which is the group that will proliferate after deregulation. Any attempt to suggest that there is presently agreement on a National Safety Code and its contents is extremely misleading.

• (1650)

I think that letter speaks for itself. The whole matter of safety is of grave concern not only to the shippers but to the companies that will be involved in the movement of goods.

I understand that this legislation requires that Canadian buses driving in the United States have American drivers once they cross the border. I understand as well that American buses coming to Canada do not require the same thing. Is there such a difference? Second, could the Parliamentary Secretary, who has been stick-handling this Bill through the House of Commons, indicate if any decision has been made on whether or not the Government plans to allow or encourage the committee responsible for this to travel across Canada to hold hearings in appropriate places?

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I wonder who is asking the questions. I am happy to note the reversal of positions.

My understanding is that there are 1,000 Canadian trucking companies doing business in the United States and for the most part they employ Americans. The American companies doing business in Canada employ Canadians. The Hon. Member has said that when Canadian buses enter the United States, American drivers get on. My understanding is—and please correct me if I am wrong—that it works both ways.

The question of travel for the committee is one that is open to negotiation. Given all of the consultation that has occurred and knowing that the New Democratic Party will oppose this Bill today, tomorrow and six months from now, the committee will not travel and we have yet to be persuaded that it needs to travel given the fact that, as I understand it, something like 60 or 70 people have indicated that they want to give evidence before the committee. As of now, the likelihood of travel is not great. I do not want to encourage the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap into thinking otherwise.

I hope the Canadian Trucking Association did not mean to tell us that the reverse onus test will go into effect immediately. In fact, the reverse onus test will go into effect a year after the safety code comes into effect, and that will occur in 1990.

I have just been handed a note indicating to me that the bus regulation is not being changed by this Bill. The same provisions that are in the present legislation are merely repeated in Bill C-19.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, that is the point that I was attempting to make. Canadian bus drivers who want to go to Florida, Ohio or wherever have to stop and bring on American drivers once they cross the border. An American citizen must drive a Canadian bus in the United States. However, when buses from the United States with American drivers come to Canada, they continue on their merry way into Alberta, Quebec, Ontario or the Northwest Territories. Something is wrong there.

This is simply one example of the point we have tried to make on many occasions. Why is it that Americans can have access to our highway systems but we cannot have the same access to theirs? Again, the Americans come out the winners for whatever reason.

The fact is that large American trucking companies will have full access into Canada in order to compete with our trucking companies, which are by definition significantly smaller. The operations in the U.S. can use parent companies to make deals with subsidiaries in Canada to use only American carriers. We will be blown out of the water, and that is the point we are trying to make.

When we compete head-to-head with a giant and when we have legislation that is biased in favour of that giant at the expense of Canadian carriers, competition will be such that it will simply be impossible for Canadian carriers to compete in this very critical industry. That is why at this stage of the Bill, we are seriously concerned that it is flawed and the Government has not thought it through carefully enough. We want to make the point that when closure is eventually forced upon us and the Bill goes into committee, we will need to hold hearings across Canada so that those affected adversely by this legislation can and will be heard.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have a procedural question. It seems that this question and answer period turned into a debate between the Hon. Member and the Parliamentary Secretary. It would seem to me that that is a departure from past practice. I wonder if you would consider that and perhaps at an appropriate time make a ruling as to the appropriateness of such activity.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member is in fact correct. The Chair was trying to accommodate the House Leader of the New Democratic Party who had made comments and the Chair allowed the House Leader to make another comment, but the Chair recognizes that that was at the expense of the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus).

Is it the wish of the Hon. Member to call it five o'clock?

Mrs. Finestone: I was just going to suggest that we call it five o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall we call it five o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--MOTIONS

[Translation]

RIGHT HONOURABLE LESTER B. PEARSON

STATUE TO HONOUR HIS MEMORY

The House resumed from January 19 the debate on the motion of Mr. Boudria:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of honouring the memory of the Right Honourable Lester B. Pearson by commissioning a statue of him to be placed on Parliament Hill.

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take part in the debate on this motion which I would like to read once more to the House:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of honouring the memory of the Right Honourable Lester B. Pearson by commissioning a statue of him to be placed on Parliament Hill.

The Minister of Public Works (Mr. McInnes), my colleagues of the majority party and myself support wholeheartedly the notion of commissioning a statue to honour the memory of this illustrious Canadian. On January 19, the last time this motion was debated in the House, there was a slight misunderstanding as concerns the position of the members of the majority. I believe that this has now been cleared up and that my hon. friends opposite have had an opportunity to examine the report on statues honouring prime ministers of Canada and other commemorative works, which the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) tabled on behalf of the Minister today.

Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McInnes) has himself pointed out, he requested this report last fall because, in his opinion, an analysis of the policy and the tradition for such works could assist Parliamentarians in the examination of future commemorative projects, especially statues on Parliament Hill. As no new statue had been erected on Parliament Hill for many years, the experience acquired recently in the successful project to erect a statue honouring the memory of Prime Minister Diefenbaker was also an excellent opportunity to initiate a new process for such projects and make an objective examination of the existing situation.

One of the complaints most commonly heard is that often necessary information is not available to Parliament to make enlightened decisions concerning issues it is sometimes called upon to deal unexpectedly. The report tabled by the Minister of Public Works provides information, observations, useful data which, in my opinion at least, deserve our full attention.

Mr. Speaker, we must deal with the motion moved by the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria). I have every intention to support his motion as moved, if such is the desire of Hon. Members opposite. Partisanship should not enter into the consideration of a motion of this kind. The government Members have never intended to stoop to such low tactics.

In view of the information now available, I believe, however, that Mr. Pearson would be bestowed an honour still more worthy of his name if, during the next few weeks, we took the time to ponder upon all the aspects of this project of a commemorative statue. This is not an attempt at delaying or filibustering this project; quite the contrary, as you will see today. However, it is intented rather to consider the matter with all necessary information available for the best possible results.

One of the first points to consider is that Prime Minister St. Laurent's statue was erected, at Prime Minister Trudeau's, own suggestion in front of the Supreme Court building rather than on Parliament Hill. The selection of that particular location is obvious in view of Mr. St. Laurent's fame as a jurist, lawyer, law professor, president of the Quebec Bar and Minister of Justice. Prime Minister Trudeau did not feel at the time, I am sure, that the Supreme Court location was any less prestigious than any other spot on Parliament Hill. He had no intention either, I am sure, of showing disrespect for the late Mr. St. Laurent who was universally cherished.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Pearson had enjoyed a long and prestigious career as a diplomat, first as Under Secretary, and then as Secretary of State for External Affairs. He was also awarded the Nobel Peace Prize because of his immense contribution to world peace and prosperity after World War II. In view of Mr. Pearson's career and the consequent tribute paid to Mr. St. Laurent, I urge Hon. Members opposite to reconsider the idea of dealing rapidly with the motion to put the statue right on Parliament Hill, exclusively. All Members will agree that we should not reject offhand the possibility of having a statue at some other location that would be just as suitable if not more, in front of the Lester B. Pearson Building for instance, the headquarters of the Department of External Affairs which is so capably headed by the Right Hon. Joe Clark.

Mr. Speaker, this is only one example of the aspects we should be looking at. It would seem normal to me that Hon. Members would want to look at all the facts before taking such an important decision. However, were the decision to be made immediately, it would be wise if it did not prevent further consideration of this issue as the Hon. Lester B. Pearson's statue project.

It would be useful, without entailing endless delays, to refer all those questions to a committee of the House. Although it has no direct mandate, the Committee on Internal Economy for instance could in my view be required to look into this or again a special committee might be better suited.

Mr. Speaker, that motion would be greatly improved and much more relevant if the words:

"or in some other suitable location"

—were added to the motion for the obvious reasons I just mentioned. The decision remains with the sponsor, who is here in this House. If the only solution is to pass the motion as it now stands, I will support it and accept this uncompromising situation as I believe will all my colleagues on this side. I would leave the decision to the good judgment of the Hon. Member and his colleagues, who, no doubt, will want to support the motion which is quite sensible, relevant and in keeping with the high ideals of this Government's policy which are now expressed by unreservably approving the motion to commission a statue of the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson.

[English]

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join in this debate on the motion of the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria). I am pleased to have this opportunity because this motion follows on the motion I introduced just two years ago to erect a statue in honour of John Diefenbaker on Parliament Hill. John Diefenbaker and Lester Pearson were great political rivals. Their debates here on the floor of the House of Commons and across Canada on the campaign trail form a lively and colourful part of our nation's history. Their rivalry touched almost every aspect of our politics, Parliament and society. I am told that it even extended to who caught the largest fish in Lake Harrington. As all members know, of course, Lester Pearson was never able to match the four and a half pound trout which Mr. Diefenbaker caught. However, I must say there is a silly but persistent rumour that Mr. Diefenbaker never actually pulled the fish into the boat.

Lester Pearson's outlook on life was profoundly shaped by his upbringing in a religious family, in a manse, his service during the war and his experience as a diplomat. He held a firm belief that Canada could become a great nation, and his efforts as Prime Minister are a great testament to that conviction. His outstanding international experience is widely known. He is perhaps one of the very few Canadians to ever participate in both the League of Nations and the United Nations. He was Canada's Ambassador to the U.S., President of the UN General Assembly, winner of the Nobel Peace Prize, and Canadian Minister of External Affairs. He received over 24 honorary degrees and was known world-wide as a conciliator, and a passionate defender of the peace.

Although he never won a majority Government in the House of Commons, Lester Pearson's record as Prime Minister is remarkable. He established the Canada Pension Plan, the Canada Assistance Program, medicare, a new labour code, a new Bank Act, the Order of Canada, and of course a new flag. His years in office were a time of great change and progress for all Canadians.

Two years ago this month I introduced a private motion to have a statue of the Right Hon. John George Diefenbaker commissioned and placed on Parliament Hill. Subsequently the site for that statue was chosen and the world-renowned artist, Leo Mol, was selected to do the work. Last September 18, some 18 months after the motion was first introduced, the statue was unveiled on a brilliant day here on Parliament Hill. Thousands of Canadians from all parts of the country attended that ceremony.

The committee which established the Diefenbaker statue demonstrated that a coherent and consistent process for the provision of such statues can work and is needed. With the outstanding contributions of the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ravis), Senator David Walker from Toronto, who was the Minister of Public Works in the Diefenbaker Government, and representatives from the Ministry of Public Works, the Department of the Secretary of State, the NCC, and the Speaker's office, we initiated a process which could end the ad hoc approach which has been used for these memorials.

That was precisely the purpose of my motion. It was not my intention to encourage further Private Members' Motions which would simply tread on ground we have already covered. Rather, I introduced the motion to alert Parliament to the problem of how we honour great Canadians like John Diefenbaker and Lester Pearson.

Since John A. Macdonald first recommended a statue in honour of George-Etienne Cartier in 1873, we have never followed a coherent process for statue commemoration. In fact, a motion such as mine had not been considered by Parliament for nearly 20 years because of the disastrous handling of the last two statues which were erected on Parliament Hill. In 1966, the then Secretary of State proposed that statues of four Prime Ministers be commissioned and placed on Parliament Hill. After a year of controversy and conflict, only two of the four statues were completed. The statue of the Hon. Arthur Meighen was placed in storage and is still there. The maquette for the statue of the Hon. R. B. Bennett was lost. All we have are some pictures of the maquette which are not acceptable.

For the next 20 years no action was taken to erect a statue for any other former Prime Minister. That is a sad commentary on the state of how we recognize our national leaders and celebrate our nation's history. When I first proposed my motion I wanted to address this inaction and encourage the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McInnes) to initiate a consistent statue policy. The days of a motion by motion approach to honouring former Prime Ministers must end or it will take us another 20 years just to erect statues for the eight Prime Ministers who have yet to be recognized.

I was pleased that the Minister of Public Works tabled in the House today the report on commemorative statues to Canadian Prime Ministers and commemoratives to other eminent Canadians. Included in the report is a section on how other countries pay tribute to their founders. Perhaps it is time we considered a national statuary hall similar to the one in the United States capital where each province would be allowed to honour its historic figures.

We have the report filed by the Minister and it is now time we started working together to consider these guidelines, instead of further ad hoc measures, in order that John Diefenbaker, Lester Pearson and all our former Prime Ministers can live in lasting memory here on Parliament Hill and in the National Capital Region as well as in our history books.

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I thought there would be general agreement by all Parties to pass this motion immediately. The Hon. Member for Lasalle (Mr. Lanthier) indicated that if the mover of the motion were in agreement, he would like the motion to be amended to include "other suitable sites" for the placement of a statue commemorating the Hon. Lester B. Pearson, but that if Parliament were in agreement, he would be prepared to accept the motion as it now stands. The Hon. Member for Scarborough Centre (Mrs. Browes) is indicating that she as well would agree to accept the motion as it is. I am very glad that Hon. Members opposite are prepared to accept this motion.

I want to say only a few words on this matter. I believe there should be a committee responsible for the placement of statues and other memorabilia on the Hill. I hope that such a committee would consider other distinguished parliamentarians who ought to be honoured. Two such parliamentarians come readily to mind, the first being the first Leader of the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation, which subsequently became the New Democratic Party, J.F. Woodsworth. I think members would also agree that the first woman M.P., Agnes Macphail, should be honoured at some time. I agree that after this Bill is passed, parliamentarians should have a good discussion on the matters which have been raised by my hon. friend.

As my colleagues, the Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) and the Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper), submitted, I think it is entirely appropriate to pass the motion of the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) to ensure that a statue of Mike Pearson is placed on Parliament Hill. I was alive and well, and for part of the time even in this House, when the two great gladiators on the Canadian scene were John Diefenbaker and Mike Pearson. They were dominant figures for over a decade and had many battles. In recent Canadian history it is unusual for two such figures to be face to face for that length of time. For that reason alone, one may like to see them face to face on Parliament Hill.

It was agreed last year, through the passage of the motion of the Hon. Member for Scarborough Centre, that we would commemorate a statue to the memory of the Right Hon. John George Diefenbaker. All Parties agreed to that. I cannot say strongly enough how important it is to have a statue of the Right Hon. Mike Pearson on Parliament Hill as well. It may be necessary to relocate some statues, but there is still room on the Hill. Even the statue of Mr. Diefenbaker could be relocated, but it should remain on Parliament Hill. His great opponent should be located nearby, so they may face each other on the Hill.

I think we all agree on Mr. Pearson's great contributions, although a few have not been mentioned. One of his very great contributions was the development of a spirit of co-operative federalism. Quite frankly, in my opinion he understood Quebec even better than his successor. He established the Bilingualism and Biculturalism Royal Commission. I believe he was the first Prime Minister to be really concerned about election expenses. The Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson did make the proposal to establish the commission on which M. J. Coldwell, among others, served, to examine electoral expenses and contributions to Parties. That is a landmark which we sometimes forget to acknowledge.

• (1720)

In conclusion, I support the motion and I am encouraged by the remarks of our friends opposite today that while they may favour a somewhat different motion, they will support the erection of a statue on Parliament Hill in honour of the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I want to make a brief contribution to this debate. First, I sense that the House will give unanimous agreement to this motion by the Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), which should be welcomed very much. I hope the appropriate action will be taken with the passage of this motion because I agree with the sentiments expressed by the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) that nothing could be more appropriate than to have these two gladiators, as she called them, honoured with statues of both of them on Parliament Hill.

With all due respect to the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam, perhaps I could speak for a younger generation. I was 12 when the Diefenbaker Government fell in 1963. I was actively interested in politics even then and not only remember the night that that Government fell, but I recall that entire period. I believe it is instructive to remind the House of that period in the context of this Parliament. I believe the Prime Minister referred to it today, if I heard him correctly, and it was a time when the two gladiators in their respective Parties were at odds with each other over who would form the Government of Canada.

I suspect that Parliament was viewed then as it is now by many Canadians. Perhaps our agreeing to honour the other of those two Leaders is a reflection of the general view that, with the passage of time, there is a point at which we can put matters into historical perspective. In saying this, I do not in any way diminish the concern which Canadians may have about how the political process has operated recently.

When I first joined the Committee on Parliamentary Reform in the last Parliament, I read, among other research documents, an essay written about Parliament in 1935. This essay was from a book entitled Social Planning For Canada, which is a collection of founding documents for the CCF. That article about Parliament explained that Parliament, which was supposed to be a place for intelligent debate and the real expression of opinion, had fallen into disrepute. It contained a series of criticisms about Parliament which, if the dates and the few references to personalities were removed, could have applied to Parliaments in 1935, 1975, 1985 or, more relevant to the debate today, 1965. Perhaps it is worth reflecting on the fact that Parliament has never been what people have expected. Perhaps it puts into perspective our agreement to erect a statue of Mr. Pearson as well as explaining what is happening in Parliament today.

I also believe that the passage of this motion will represent one small victory for parliamentary reform because it will be another of the few occasions so far when the House has acted within the parliamentary reform Private Members' Business.

In closing, let me support the view that not only those who have been fortunate to become Prime Ministers should be honoured with a statue on Parliament Hill. There are many others, some of whom were mentioned by the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam, who should also be considered as candidates to be honoured. Being the Prime Minister in a Government is not the measure of political achievement. There are many people who have come to this Chamber over the years, either as leaders or Members of Parliament, who have made very significant contributions to the political process and the country, precisely because they did not have the personal ambition to become the Prime Minister of Canada. I believe we have such a person sitting at the Table here every day. We should keep this in mind when we talk about honouring our leaders.

I am pleased to support the motion to honour Lester B. Pearson, who I understand was responsible for introducing into federal politics the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), who celebrates the anniversary of his election to this Chamber today. I look forward to his speech.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, it is truly an honour and a privilege to take part in this debate today, because in about two hours from now, it will be 23 years ago that I became a Member of Parliament for the first time, when Lester B. Pearson was Prime Minister of Canada. I was going to read through all these notes I have in front of me, but with the Chair's permission, I would rather speak from the heart as well as from the mind, something Parliamentarians are often reluctant to do. I see some young Canadians working in the House who will probably be delighted to hear all this and will probably be hearing it for the first time. I have some memories which I would like to share with you today.

[English]

In a couple of hours, it will be 23 years ago that I was elected for the first time to serve in the Canadian Parliament. I want to speak about the man who helped me—some say ensured—that I would be chosen as a delegate in Montreal Saint-Denis to replace the Hon. Postmaster General of the day, Azellus Denis, who is in the Senate. I am told that when I came out of university he helped in my being chosen in a very open and contested nomination. I was chosen and elected.

• (1730)

It is no secret that I have always admired Mr. Pearson. I had known Mr. Pearson since I was a young student. In fact, on January 31, 1958, and I am going by memory now, I was a young delegate for my Party from Quebec, and one of the very few Quebecers for my Party, a Francophone, who supported Mr. Pearson. I was a student escort to Madam Pearson, who is still alive today. Due to her health, she may not be able to listen to our debate, but she is still alive today, I know. I am sure his family, his son, daughter and grandson, who works on the Hill, will be watching. I want to say I had great admiration for that man. I learned a lot from Mr. Pearson. I learned patience and compromise, but the right kind of compromise.

In this country we have people who speak French. I say to my very good friend opposite, we have four million people who speak only French in my province in Canada, nothing else but French, and they claim to be as good a Canadian as anyone in British Columbia, Alberta, the Yukon, Newfoundland and the Atlantic Provinces who speaks nothing but English and who equally believes he or she is a good Canadian.

The spirit of compromise was something Mr. Pearson taught me as a student by the way he lived his life, his reading, his actions in the United Nations. My very esteemed colleague, the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett), sat in the House with me then. We knew who Mr. Pearson was. People may like to read the debates which have taken place recently and compare them with what took place on January 19, 1987 in the House of Commons when my colleague, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), introduced an identical motion to the motion of our hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Scarborough Centre (Mrs. Browes).

I cannot do otherwise but recall the immense courage of Mr. Pearson. Our young Canadians, our new Canadians, should look back to the debate on the Canadian flag we have today, something which everyone takes for granted. It was a passionate debate. True to our principle of British democracy, the British parliamentary system, we debated that issue for months in the House of Commons. People objected passionately to changing the flag. Others, with as much passion, wanted something truly Canadian. They did not want the Fleur de Lis nor the Union Jack. I remember a debate I had with Mr. Diefenbaker. He was ready to compromise by having on the Red Ensign the Fleur de Lis. I remember having said, to his surprise, that I would never accept on my Canadian flag a Fleur de Lis. That was quite a surprise because I was expected to say something else.

We got our Canadian flag. I remember as a fairly new Member of Parliament attending a meeting in Winnipeg when Mr. Pearson spoke for the first time. I remember his wife was there and the beloved Mary MacDonald, principal secretary to Mr. Pearson, along with a couple of other assistants. At the annual meeting of the Royal Canadian Legion he spoke for the first time about a truly Canadian flag. It was not the best of our days. However, the idea took hold and we won. We got our flag. We did not win and we did not lose. Canada won a beautiful flag. It could have been different. Mr. Pearson proposed two blue bars to represent the two oceans. After compromise we ended up with the flag we have today.

I remember also, and this is never mentioned, that Mr. Pearson appointed a Special Committee of the House of Commons on the National Anthem. I had the honour to sit on that committee. The only two members of that committee left are the Hon. Member for Dartmouth—Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) and myself. We sat on the Special Committee on the National Anthem for months. Can you imagine Canadians who are listening—

—who were listening for weeks on end, Mr. Speaker. We were in a room, behind closed doors, with a musician who played us every possible precursor to what would finally be our national anthem. We had people come in and sing us the anthems they wanted to have, safely ensconced behind the doors of certain offices. We even had a bilingual anthem: Ô Canada, My Land ton front est ceint—

[English]

—there was something mixed up in French and English. For months we listened to various versions of the national anthem, I say that to those who sometimes despair of the importance of patience when passions are involved. We recommended the French version, which we had been singing since 1880 in various parts of Quebec. In fact, a granddaughter of Senator Tremblay is a descendant of the person who wrote the words of Oh Canada. We proclaimed Oh Canada as the national anthem on July 1, 1980.

I went past what my dear colleague, the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam, said about the Canada Pension Plan and election expenses. To address myself to the subject directly in the two minutes I have left, I will say I hope that we will pass the motion and erect on the Hill a statue of Mr. Pearson to depoliticize this debate. We should, as was suggested, stop thinking of what we should do in the future. I know for a fact that when they put up the statue of Mr. St. Laurent in front of the Supreme Court of Canada—and this has never been said or written—it was understood that when Mr. Diefenbaker would die, his statue would face the statue of Mr. St. Laurent. The reason the statue of Mr. St. Laurent is positioned in such a way is that there was supposed to be a second statue, that of Mr. Diefenbaker, there.

I believe that if we are to build a country and if we are to teach those who visit the Hill, a statue of every Prime Minister should be here. It does not matter to me if it looks like a series of statues one after another, because as a Member of Parliament, when I walk with students and friends, I want to be able to point to Sir Wilfred Laurier, Queen Victoria, and our different Prime Ministers and explain what Canada is all about. It is as if we were afraid to talk about our country and teach others what Canada is all about. I am not. It is the best country. One of the ways to show that is to teach young Canadians and new Canadians what Canada is all about.

If one were to walk to the back of the Parliament, one would see a statue of Baldwin, but no one would know the meaning of it. When Baldwin was defeated by the Anglophones, he was elected by the French. When Lafontaine was defeated by the French, he was elected by the Anglophones. That is part of our history but no one talks about it. If we could go back to the spirit of what Canada is all about, we would have much less difficulty to explain even what this new Government is trying to do.

It is with great honour on this special day that I say that I hope we pass this motion, that we do not hesitate a moment to erect a statue of the Right Hon. Mr. Pearson, for all the reasons so well expressed by my colleagues. I want to render homage to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie). It is as a result of his hard work that we are debating this issue. I say that because he is one of the Members who sits on the committee which chooses the motions which will be debated by us. I also wish to commend the Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier) who participated, and all the other Hon. Members who took part in the debate.

I hope that in this very difficult time that we seem to be going through we can show Canadians that at times we can unite when there is a good motion put before us. This is a good motion. I would like to see it accepted. I would like to see a statue of Lester B. Pearson erected on the Hill.

After its erection—and this is a suggestion for the Chair—I hope that decisions of this nature will not be left up to the Department of Public Works but, rather, to the Speaker's office. Mr. Speaker is Mr. Canada on Parliament Hill. Such decisions should fall under the auspices of the Speaker's office. It should be that office which decides what will be erected on the Hill. It is our hill, the hill of the parliamentarians. It is parliamentarians who come and go from here. It should be a committee of parliamentarians under Mr. Speaker who decides how to honour Canada's Prime Ministers on the Hill. In this way we can better teach Canadians, young Canadians and new Canadians who come to this country by the hundreds of thousands, about the history of our country. To enrich us and make us better I would like to see us start anew after the erection of this statue. I hope that we will strike a committee under the direction of Mr. Speaker which will consider what we want to do in the future for other Prime Ministers.

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

MEDICAL CARE—TREATMENT OF VICTIMS OF BRAIN DAMAGE

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I should like to thank the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) for his effort to put this matter on the agenda of the Conference of Provincial Ministers of Health. I accept the fact that he only had two short weeks of notice in order to do so.

I am aware of the fact that as a result of that short time frame, the Minister was only able to have the matter put on the agenda in the context of other issues. I am also aware that the other issues were not addressed because there was not time to address them. As a result, I urge the Minister to give the House and Canadians his firm commitment that the matter identified as brain damaged victims will be firmly placed on the agenda of the next health ministers conference.

By that time there will have been adequate opportunity for the Minister's Department to collect or collate data and statistics and to provide an understanding to officials of the urgent need for rehabilitation care facilities in Canada—and we have none—for brain damaged victims. Also it will provide the Minister with an opportunity to urge other provincial Ministers of Health to collect the same kind of data.

I should like to put a few facts on the record in the short period of time available to me in the Adjournment Debate. Dr. John Proud, medical adjudicator for OHIP's Professional Services Branch, admits that there is nothing in Canada to help victims of brain damage whether from accident, which is the majority of cases, or from the sudden onset of a viral attack producing encephalitis, or from a host of other reasons.

Annually between 7,000 and 9,000 Canadians, mostly young men who are victims of automobile accidents, suffer brain damage. Today's advances in diagnosis, treatment, surgical intervention, and drugs have saved from death many people who otherwise, say 10 years ago, would have died. However, they have been saved from death, only to be delivered to acute care hospitals with a developing chronic condition. While we recognize that the acute care phase is essential in order to sustain life and to restore life, we are providing for a life which may in fact be worse than death.

These young people, for the most part, are then warehoused with people who are mentally ill in institutions for the elderly, the dying, and the chronically ill. Many of them are silent and are unable to communicate or to demonstrate their frustrations except through mood swings, sometimes to a degree of violence, all because we do not have rehabilitation facilities in Canada to care for them. However, across the 49th parallel, just a few hours drive, there are scattered throughout the United States 400 institutions of varying degrees of expertise. Many of them are top-flight and can provide such care.

Canada should develop the capacity to have people on staff who have the expertise to manage these cases and to have facilities in place. Surely it is our responsibility for every humanitarian reason to encourage provincial Ministers of Health to let the provincial medical plans, whether in B.C. or Ontario, cover the costs of care in the United States. It is grossly unfair to these families and the victims and it is an insult to our society. I urge that we not confine these people in those kinds of circumstances. They cannot be managed in acute care facilities, so they are shipped out to places in Canada where no benefit is given for treatment.

This is a new area of concern to me. I wish to assure my colleagues that I will follow through with it. While I do not have statistics for my own constituency as yet, I will obtain them. I do not have statistics for British Columbia, my home province, as yet either, but I will obtain them. I want the Minister of National Health and Welfare to know that I will continue unabated to see that this wrong is addressed. I cannot believe that Canada has not taken this forward step in medical care.

I would hope that my concern and the outcry of the families of 9,000 victims each and every year will be answered by provincial Ministers and by the federal Minister of National Health and Welfare. I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to participate in this very brief debate.

[Translation]

Mrs. Monique Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, on January 23 of this year, the Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco) raised in the House the question of treatment in Canada for people suffering from brain damage as a result of trauma or infection. He referred to the case of Sergeant Dan Duggan of the Ottawa Police Department who has suffered serious brain damage as a result of viral encephalitis.

The effect of this illness on Mr. Duggan has been debilitating in the extreme. The Minister sympathizes with his family and realizes that it wishes to obtain for him the kind of medical care that will improve his condition.

Mr. Speaker, it is said that Canada's health system has an international reputation. However, Mr. Duggan's situation makes us realize how far we still are from being able to offer victims of brain damage the specialized medical services their condition requires.

The Minister will therefore ask his Deputy Minister to discuss with his provincial counterparts the question of medical care for victims of brain damage. At the present time, the authority and responsibility for operating and administrating health services comes under the jurisdiction of the individual provincial governments. Reimbursement rates and terms for payment of essential medical services obtained abroad, like the ultra- specialized rehabilitation services being sought by the Duggan family, are subject to interpretation and approval by the provincial plan, which in this particular case is the Ontario Health Insurance Plan.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is clear that the question of treatment and treatment centres for victims of brain damage deserves our attention. It is to be hoped that consideration of this matter by deputy ministers from the Health Department will be a first step towards acquiring a better understanding of the medical needs of these people.

OLYMPICS—TICKETS FOR HOCKEY FINAL. (B) REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTERVENE WITH OLYMPIC COMMITTEE

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak briefly about the question of the 1988 Olympics, the availability of tickets and other matters surrounding that. I raise this matter because I and many Canadians are becoming increasingly worried by the state of affairs surrounding the organization of the 1988 Winter Olympic Games.

We Canadians have a long memory and we remember very well our past experience with the Olympics in Montreal. That fiasco caused Canadians a great deal of embarrassment, not to mention a great deal of money, and we do not want to see it repeated. The Minister's comments and vague reassurances, in this House and in the press, do nothing to satisfy me or the people of Calgary. We remember throughout the Montreal fiasco that both Government and Olympic officials were full of similar assurances.

You can imagine the consternation Canadians feel when we see one high-ranking official after another resigning from the organizing committee, when we read press reports about the secretiveness of the committee, when we see that a full-scale review of the management policies and procedures, and the relationship between management and staff, has to be ordered. We see costs rising, we get confusing and conflicting statements from officials, we see charges of fraud laid against a high-ranking officer of the committee, and then finally we find out that a select group of insiders known as the Olympic family gets the first crack at the best seats. Who are these insiders? It turns out this select group is made up of Olympic officials and other dignitaries from around the globe, of Canadian federal, provincial and municipal officials, and of corporate sponsors.

I do not think any Canadian would object to a certain number of tickets being put aside for official representatives. We recognize that is not only a reasonable thing to do, it is also required as part of the Olympic Charter. However, we have some reservations about the number of ticket requests from various levels of Government. I also have some reservations about the appropriateness of putting aside a substantial number of prime seats for corporate sponsors. It seems to me that corporate sponsorships are undertaken for the commercial advantage of the corporations in question. There is ample financial reward for the sponsors without having to pay them off with an inside track to the best seating. It also begs the question as to the role of corporate sponsors in amateur sporting activities and whether or not the price we have to pay is too high for the benefits received.

I recognize that since this matter was raised in October there have been steps taken to lessen the impact somewhat. Reductions in the amount of tickets requested by insiders and the recent agreement to extend the seating capacity of the Saddledome will certainly help. However, we still have no firm commitment either from OCO or the Minister that the most popular events, the opening and closing ceremonies, figure skating and speed skating events, as well as the hockey finals, will be available to the general public in the same proportion as all other events.

The Minister took great pains to say that 75 per cent of all tickets were available to ordinary Canadians. We know full well that a much smaller percentage, if any, are available for the gold medal finals of those major events. We want to know when the people of Calgary in particular, and Canadians in general, will get these commitments. What about the federal Government's request for tickets? Has it been reduced, following the lead of other levels of Government, to ensure that as many seats as possible will be available to the general public for prime events?

These concerns surrounding ticketing are only the tip of the iceberg. We also have many concerns about other aspects of the organization of the Olympics. We are concerned, for example, about the housing for athletes and officials and the way in which that housing is being provided. We are also concerned about the availability of hotel space and whether or not those same insiders who snapped up the best seats have also snapped up the best available hotel space. We are concerned about financing and just how much public money is actually being spent, both directly and indirectly, for the Olympics. We have environmental concerns about the Mount Allan ski facility. We are concerned about the treatment of the Lubicon Lake Indian Band. The list goes on.

In summary, we in the NDP want to ensure that the 1988 Winter Olympics are a success and accessible to all Canadians, and that it does not follow the example set in Montreal. Vague assurances by the Minister are not enough. We need commitments and we need them now.

[Translation]

Mrs. Monique Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) (Mr. Jelinek) was quite clear when he replied to the question he had been asked on this subject last October 28. Mr. Speaker, I quote the words of the Minister:

> I will stay on top of the issue and make certain that the Canadian public, and indeed the public at large, are treated fairly and equitably.

After this exchange in the House the Minister did get in touch and raised the matter with Frank King, the president of the organizing committee in Calgary.

The Minister stressed the fact that he and the federal Government wanted to make sure that as many events as possible will be open to the public, to the extent of 75 per cent. For your information, Mr. Speaker, the comparable figure at the Los Angeles Olympics was 74 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to add that, in answer to the same question, the Minister had suggested that it might be possible to increase the number of seats in the Saddledome.

It is my pleasure to inform you that this suggestion was accepted as recently as a few weeks ago and that the magnificent stadium will be equiped with 2,600 additional seats.

• (1815)

Thanks to this increased capacity, 91,000 additional tickets will be available for ice skating and hockey competitions.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to emphasize the fact that, as a result of the Minister's suggestion and the co-operation of the city of Calgary and the 1988 Olympic Games Organizaing Committee, this problem was solved.

Finally, I wish to say that these Olympic Games will be the best the world has ever known. We should all fell proud and start promoting our Olympic Games and athletes instead of taking a negative attitude such as Members of the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party want to do.

In my own riding, I can tell you that young Canadians are anxious to take part in these games and will make the necessary sacrifices to achieve this.

CANADA POST CORPORATION—ANTICIPATED INCREASE IN POSTAL RATES. (B) INQUIRY WHY ALL PLANS OF CORPORATION NOT REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, on November 6, 1986, I asked a question to the Minister responsible for the Canada Post Corporation about the 2 cent increase in first class postage rates from 34 cents to 36 cents. For the moment, this increase is due to come into effect on April 1.

During my brief intervention this evening, I would like to point out the major impact that this increase will have on small businesses. According to the information received from the Canada Post Corporation itself, the small business sector is the major user of the postal service and the burden of this increase will be borne by this sector.

The costs of small businesses are always going up. Once more, they will have to pay more to mail their letters, collect their accounts and make their payments. Mr. Speaker, we all realize that we have a major problem. The Canada Post Corporation is having serious difficulties. However, can these problems be solved by systematic increases? Not too long ago, rates went from 32 cents to 34 cents, and one year later, they are going up from 34 cents to 36 cents.

I remember in June 1985, when the Minister in charge of the Canada Post Corporation—which already has had three Ministers in two years—said he would never have approved another increase unless Canada Post Corporation had improved on production. There, Mr. Speaker, lies the problem. To date Canada Post Corporation has shown no sign of improvement. One only has to recall the problem of the superboxes, the way their installation was managed and the waste of money in this whole affair.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, how can we today ask our small businesses to keep paying more for less service? It might be letters that do not arrive on time or with unacceptable delays. This is very easy. All Canada Post has to do is put in an application in the Canada Gazette and 60 days later it has the authority to increase postage rates from 34 to 36 cents. Would private businesses for instance be authorized to increase their rates so easily, Mr. Speaker?

So I feel we have a very serious problem there. The Government, and the Minister in his answer keeps hiding behind the Marchment Report. In the Marchment Report indeed there was a very important recommendation which was ignored. The key to the whole report, the key to any post office reform was to give five more years to Canada Post in order to balance its books. Instead, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) responded very clearly: You will balance your books by 1988. Because of this very specific order of the Minister of Finance, the Canada Post Corporation has increased the price of stamps by 2 cents and the price of all its other services, registration, for instance, by 10 percent. In addition, services have been reduced, superboxes are being installed throughout the country, rural post offices are being closed, and so on.

We now have a new Minister. Late yesterday evening or this morning, he said that what is important is the service and not to reduce the deficit. I hope that we shall learn his true intentions soon and find out whether he will specifically order the Canada Post Corporation to provide home delivery to all Canadians and to maintain the existing level of service in rural areas.

For us, the post is an essential service and it must remain so.

Mrs. Monique Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): A moment ago, Mr. Speaker, my colleague mentioned the Marchment Commission which toured the country.

When the recommendations were made to the Government, there were 29, and the Government has adopted 28 of those 29 recommendations. I should think this would go a long way towards meeting the needs of Canadians.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, my colleague referred to a notice published in the Canada Gazette concerning the increase in first class mail from 34 to 36 cents, a notice which must be posted for 60 days.

Ordinarily, what are the responsibilities of Canada Post management during this period? Ordinarily, they should be listening to what Canadians have to say about this, meet with their clients, and give serious consideration to the views expressed to them. Once this period is over they will be in a position to make a final recommendation to Cabinet.

• (1820)

Canada Post's objective of reaching the operating break even point by the end of the next fiscal year is not an impossible task. The Post Office Department had surpluses in most of the first half of this century, and post offices in other countries record profits. The Government will increase its equity through a capital contribution this year and next. After that, however, the corporation will be responsible for raising its own capital. Operating to make a profit is the most effective way to ensure that Canada Post is efficient and effective.

Canada Post will not reach the break-even point on the backs of its customers, the Canadian public. The corporation is moving to reduce its costs through greater efficiency. This means machine sorting more mail by using modernized and new mail sorting equipment, working with envelope manufacturers to have better standardization in their products, and better mail preparation by large volume mailers who generate the majority of the mail handled. It also means reducing overheads, including reducing the size of the senior executive group and cutting back on costs not related to moving the mail. The corporation is also working to increase its revenues through increased mail volume. In the past four years, volumes have grown by 16 per cent.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

QUESTIONNAIRE FOR EARLY RETIREES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, while the scandals of Quebec Conservative Members are front-page news throughout the country, while these people get together only to try to define a strategy to improve their image instead of putting an end to these scandals, other Members in the Opposition deal with the day-to-day affairs which are of concern to all Canadians, and I am referring specifically to the 35,000 early retirees in this country. This is just another scandal which has prompted the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) to raise the possibility of a repayment.

Mr. Speaker, the very questionnaire which the Minister is about to send to the 35,000 early retirees is a scandal. Four of the questions indicate quite clearly that the Minister has serious doubts about the word of older workers. I hope the Conservatives Members will stop listening to morale booster Jean-Marc Chaput and defend the interests of their constituents as we Liberals are doing, just so they might stand a better chance in the next election.

ANNUAL MEMBERS-PAGES HOCKEY GAME—"GOOD TIME HAD BY ALL"

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, last night the MPs won the annual MP-Page hockey game by a score of 3-0. The MPs had kept the Pages running errands all afternoon and they were tired out. However, the score did not really matter. From the harmonious singing of "O Canada" by the Pages to the finale when 10 Pages overwhelmed our goalie, the one and only "Moe" from Nipissing, sportsmanship and esprit de corps predominated throughout the evening.

The classic game was an excellent example of co-operative federalism at its best. Ministers, ex-Ministers, back-benchers from the three Parties, and Pages from all parts of Canada, skated, stick-handled and body-checked with expertise, but with no malice or ill will. The culmination was a chili con carne feast provided by Ms. Leger. The oratory of Pages Stephanie Windsor and Marc Gervais filled the Press Club with laughter and wit. Every MP went home feeling a new appreciation for the youth of Canada. With young people like our 1987 Pages, Canada is bound to have a great future.

NATIONAL PARKS

PROPOSED SOUTH MORESBY NATIONAL PARK

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the federal Government and the Province of B.C. are locked in a struggle over the boundaries for a national land and marine park in the South Moresby area of the Queen Charlotte Islands. The original owners and occupants of the area, the Haida people, last week adopted a constitution and sovereignty on the Queen Charlottes known to them as Haida Gwaii. They have tried in every way to accommodate the setting aside of South Moresby as a national park. At issue is continued logging on Lyell Island, in particular in the Windy Bay watershed.

In three consecutive federal elections all three federal Parties have endorsed the designation of South Moresby as a national park. The spokespersons on environment for all three federal Parties in this House endorse the inclusion of Lyell Island in the park proposal. Now is the time for Canada's Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to speak out and put forward the few dollars necessary to secure this area for all future generations to share. The will of the Haida people, the will of this House, and the aspirations of the future must be met.

I know you, Mr. Speaker, endorse South Moresby with the inclusion of Lyell Island. I hope the Prime Minister is listening and supports his own Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) in this sacred undertaking.

HEALTH

AIDS DISEASE—PUBLIC SERVICE MESSAGES—SUPPORT FOR CBC APPROACH

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, an article appeared in The Ottawa Citizen last week stating that the CBC intended to questio seriously any public service messages on AIDS which mention condoms if they condone or encourage sexual promiscuity and casual sex. I commend the CBC for taking such a responsible approach to this matter.

As I have stated previously in this House, education has an integral role to play in helping public awareness of this growing epidemic. This is contrary to what the Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) stated that I said to this House. For the record, last week I did state that Bill C-7, passed by the Ontario Liberal Government of Premier Peterson, compounds this very serious problem facing Canadian society.

Again, I must reinforce to the House that we must now realize that 82 per cent of all AIDS cases in Canada originate from the homosexual community. Furthermore, we must do everything we can to help these groups, but at the same time try to convince them that homosexual relationships are unnatural and immoral. Their communities are suffering the consequences, as is all society. I say to my fellow parliamentarians, can we not learn from history that which is most obvious?

ROAD SAFETY

WEARING OF SEATBELTS

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I want to raise the issue of lack of safety for back-seat car passengers as a result of the design of seat belts.

[English]

I have a letter from Mrs. Marilyn Glazer from Vancouver. She says:

I am writing this informally before my anger recedes—I've just watched tonight's CBC production of The Fifth Estate regarding seat-belt injuries. My daughter sustained a broken neck in November as a result of being rear-ended by a drunk. She was wearing a lap belt in the back seat. Her sister and myself were wearing three-point belts in front and walked away from the accident. Chances are she too would have walked away had she had a three-point belt on. The doctor told us that just 50 lbs. more impact and she would have been paralyzed for life.

It disturbs me that the government feels such apathy towards upgrading seat-belt regulations in the back—If government regulations have already required sturdier car backs to accommodate shoulder straps—DO IT. Please help save our children and adults from leading less than a full life—

I have tried to have new seat-belts installed in my new car, but was told that it was against government regulations. Change the law and make it possible to make driving safer.

CHALLENGE '87

PROGRAM'S OBJECTIVE

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I urge my constituents, business leaders, farmers and, of course, students to pick up the challenge of this employment program established by our Government.

I am referring to the Challenge '87 Program which is expected to create more than 90,000 summer jobs for students.

I hope my riding will benefit directly from the funds made available under this $180 million budgetary envelope, as well as from the various programs announced by our Government.

Under this program, Mr. Speaker, the business community is being urged to find suitable jobs for students and train them for gainful employment before they join the labour force. I remind Quebec employers that they have until early March 1987 to obtain application forms at the nearest Canada Employment Centre or Canada Student Employment Centre.

Challenge '87 was designed to help employers achieve this objective and is based on experience acquired over the past two years.

SPORTS

CANADA—U.S.S.R. HOCKEY GAMES—LACK OF GENERAL ADMISSION SEATS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, there is nothing which stirs the emotions of Canadians so much as when our hockey superstars are pitted against those of the Soviet Union, and there is no doubt that millions of us will be glued to our TV sets tonight and Friday to watch this spectacle.

However, not everyone will be happy. There are thousands of those Canadians who would rather be at the games, but they cannot go because only 5 per cent of the seats are being made available to the general public.

What about the rest of the seats? They have once again been gobbled up by those with invitations. They are the elite, the wealthy, those with influence, those with corporate connections, and more than likely there will be a few cronies of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in attendance.

We have become accustomed to such a network of insiders infiltrating the operations of government, and we have seen them snap up the best tickets for the Olympics, but it is getting ridiculous when they try to take over our hockey games. Once again they are partially using public money for their own enjoyment, to the tune of $3.5 million. It is time that the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek) stopped this kind of spending and turned hockey back to the people of Canada.

REFUGEES

CONDITIONS IN LEBANESE REFUGEE CAMP

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, suffering in the world caused by man's inhumanity to man is often so widespread that at times we run the risk of becoming insensitive to individual cases and fail to take action which might go some way toward alleviating the suffering.

I want to draw to the attention of Hon. Members a situation reported in The Ottawa Citizen last Saturday. According to observers at the United Nations, refugees living in the Bourj el Barajneh camp under siege in South Beirut are starving and have been forced to consider cannibalism as a means of survival. If this report is an accurate reflection of the conditions in the Lebanese refugee camp, it cries out for action on an urgent basis.

I call upon the Government today to request that Stephen Lewis, our Ambassador to the United Nations, request an immediate investigation of this situation and ensure that the appropriate international agencies be provided access to determine whether civilians are starving, and to provide food if that is the case.

REFUGEES

TAMILS IN WEST GERMANY—REPORTED INTENTION TO SEEK REFUGEE STATUS IN CANADA

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, there are reports that Tamils who reside in West Germany will be attempting another journey to Canada to claim refugee status. It should be made clear that these individuals are not legitimate refugees, for they already reside in a country which gave them first asylum. Consequently, the Tamils do not have the same status as individuals who flee to Canada directly from a country torn by strife.

There is strong evidence that the Tamils entered West Germany via the safety of Tamil Nadu Province in South India. Canada cannot have our immigration system open to such abuse that it is creating a state of anarchy in the system. Our ability to help genuine refugees is being threatened, since costly social support services are being used to help individuals who make bogus claims. I urge the Government to alter regulations to admit only those who are legitimate convention refugees. Those who lie and cheat do not deserve the humanitarian and compassionate consideration which distinguishes Canada from other nations.

FUTURE OF CANADA PACKERS PLANT IN WINNIPEG

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the meat packing industry has played an important role in the economic well-being of the city of Winnipeg. Recently, as a result of the establishment of a hog processing plant in Neepawa, funded to a large extent by a federal government grant, Canada Packers has announced the lay-off of 450 workers at the Winnipeg plant. It is now considering closing the entire plant unless it can build a new one. That will require financial assistance from the province and the federal Government. I call upon the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté) to give early and favourable consideration to federal support for the rebuilding of that plant.

After two or three questions by the Leader of the Liberal Party, most of which are repetitive, his Liberal colleagues go on in the same vein.

Then come their kissing cousins. The Leader of the Socialist Party repeats more or less what the Liberal Party said, down to the same supplementaries, and so it goes down to the NDP.

Nitpicking questions, questions about personalities, questions about alleged scandals. Meanwhile, across Canada the deficit is going down, the unemployment rate is down, interest rates are dropping and inflation is under control.

If the Opposition wolves are after spicy revelations, they will have to seek them elsewere. We intend to continue governing this country.

RIGHT HON. LESTER B. PEARSON

COMMISSIONING OF STATUE ON PARLIAMENT HILL

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in the House of Commons we had the opportunity to witness a very rare and unanimous vote. Indeed, all Hon. Members joined in supporting my motion to erect a statue in honour of the late Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson, a former Prime Minister of Canada.

I want to take this occasion to congratulate all Hon. Members who participated in the debate yesterday, including the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme)—we were celebrating the anniversary of his first election to the House of Commons at the same time—the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McInnes), and all other Hon. Members on all sides of the House who contributed to making this debate one which was unanimous.

I hope the day will come very shortly when we can all join together outside on the lawn of Parliament Hill in order to unveil the statue in honour of the greatest Prime Minister this country has ever had, the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson.

INCOME TAX ACT

ATTEMPTED USE TO FINANCE BRITISH COLUMBIA SKYTRAIN PROJECT

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, it is inappropriate when companies or individuals try to manipulate the tax system and take advantage of tax provisions that are clearly intended for a different purpose. It is particularly reprehensible when other levels of government attempt to use the tax system so inappropriately. Thus it was with a great sense of disappointment that we learned last weekend that the Province of British Columbia had undertaken a public financing of their SkyTrain project, making unintended use of a special provision in the tax system and thereby striking at the very integrity of the tax system.

I was also amazed to learn that the Province of British Columbia had not followed normal procedures of consultation with the federal Finance Minister (Mr. Wilson) before proceeding. Certainly this leaves the impression of a provincial Government trying to pull a fast, one and demeans government in the eyes of the public. I applaud the Minister of Finance for his quick, decisive action in closing down this blatant misuse of the tax system.

Any similar schemes in the public or private sector must be dealt with severely if the public is to have confidence that our tax system is fair and is fairly applied. Provincial Governments, in particular, are partners with the federal Government in maintaining the integrity of the tax system and should govern themselves accordingly.

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

COMMITTEE HEARINGS ON LEGISLATION AMENDING PATENT ACT

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the attention of the House and all Canadians the important testimony of witnesses before the legislative committee on Bill C-22. While the Government may argue that this Bill is in the interests of all Canadians many of the witnesses stated the exact opposite. For instance, the Ontario Coalition of Senior Citizens Organizations clearly stated in its brief:

> Proposed changes to the Patent Act contained in Bill C-22 will reduce the availability of low-cost alternative generic drugs and that, without competition, brand-name costs are certain to rise;
> Commitments made by multi-national firms for investment and job creation in Canada are unenforceable;
> Canada will never achieve world-class research status in pharmaceuticals without a strong domestic industry, which this bill prevents;
> The legislation can't effectively penalize brand-name manufacturers who fail to follow pricing guidelines;
> Direct payment costs for drugs will rise—

I urge the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr Andre) to withdraw this Bill forthwith.

NORTHERN CANADA POWER COMMISSION

TRANSFER OF YUKON PORTION TO TERRITORIAL CONTROL

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, with the signing a few days ago of the agreement transferring the Yukon part of the Northern Canada Power Commission from federal to territorial control and ownership an important milestone was reached in the assumption of provincial powers and authority by the Government of Yukon. This, of course, was in fulfilment of a longstanding policy of the Conservative Party of Canada.

Yukoners handled the negotiations expeditiously and well. They have wisely chosen to contract out the management of the assets to the private sector.

The federal Government is to be thanked for the generous way in which it wrote off much of Yukon NCPC's accumulated debt so as to leave a viable business operation.

It is important that the same issue as it affects the Northwest Territories be finalized with no more delay.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

PROPOSED PRODUCTION OF TRITIUM BY ONTARIO HYDRO

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, with the active encouragement and financial assistance of the federal Government, Ontario Hydro is currently developing facilities to recover tritium from Canadian nuclear reactors. It is planning to market tritium internationally.

Most tritium that is produced in the world today is used for the manufacture of hydrogen and neutron bombs. The Government may claim that it intends to sell tritium only for civilian use, but, apart from the fact that it is nearly impossible to verify what is eventually done with a nuclear product, Canadian exports would certainly free up huge supplies of tritium for use in weapons production. If the Government allows Ontario Hydro to proceed and to export tritium to countries which have the capability of producing nuclear weapons, then Canada will be responsible for increasing the world's ability to produce nuclear weapons twentyfold.

The Government's policy on tritium makes its commitments to arms reduction seem hollow. It is a policy that can only fuel the arms race. The Government should listen to the majority of Canadians who oppose all nuclear exports, and bring a halt to planning for the production and export of tritium.

FISHERIES

STAND TAKEN BY ST. PIERRE AND MIQUELON COLONY AGAINST MOTHER COUNTRY'S FISHING FLEET

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Today we learned that the Economic Committee of the French colony of St. Pierre and Miquelon has issued an order that no factory trawler from France be off-loaded beyond 100 tonnes of cod fillet in order to prevent overfishing of the Gulf waters by the metropolitan French fleet, and that larger vessels will be refused refuelling. In view of the action taken by the people of St. Pierre and Miquelon will the Canadian Government be prepared to allow those French vessels to refuel in Canadian ports after being refused by the colony of St. Pierre and Miquelon? Will he protect our fishermen in the same way that this tiny colony is protecting its fishermen?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the appropriate context in which the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has posed his question. Of course Canada would not insert itself into the position taken by the French colony of St. Pierre and Miquelon with respect to the fishing practices of French national vessels. However, we will examine very carefully this precedent in the context of my discussions with my colleagues, the Atlantic Council of Provincial Fisheries Ministers, when I meet them next week, as one of the various forms of initiative that our Government might take to continue to maximize the advantage to Canadian fishermen, and those of Newfoundland and Labrador in particular, resulting from those resources which we believe to be ours.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we see a situation in which a small isolated colony of France has shown more guts than a sovereign nation called Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I want to know what action the Government will take to protect our own fishermen who are being overfished by the metropolitan French fleet through the acquiescence of the Government?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition that we need take no lessons from the Government of which he was a part, or led, when it comes to showing guts. For the first time in decades the Government has raised fines, has agreed and undertaken to arm our vessels, increased our surveillance capacity, and even engaged in high seas pursuit of foreign fishing vessels in order to stand up for the rights of Atlantic fishermen. I can assure the hon. gentleman that in this case we will do likewise if such is required.

REQUEST FOR REOPENING OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH FRANCE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in view of the gumption of the people of St. Pierre and Miquelon will the Minister immediately reopoen the negotiations with metropolitan France and seek a renewal of terms from France on the fishing rights in the Gulf, and rehabilitate the Canadian fishermen from all four Atlantic Provinces who have been grievously harmed by the inappropriate negligence of the Minister and his colleagues?

• (1425)

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, if the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition had partaken of the detailed briefings, which all Premiers did on Monday night in Toronto, and which other members of his Party have done, then perhaps he would see the question that he has just asked in a different light. The consequence of the Monday evening meeting was not a request from Atlantic Premiers that the agreement signed with France on January 24 be torn up. I believe that they know more than the Hon. Leader of the Opposition of the potentially more serious consequences for Canada if that were done.

OVERFISHING BY FRENCH VESSELS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the quotas for Canadian fishermen on the East Coast have been substantially reduced in certain sectors this year for the first time in our history, and there is restricted entry for Canadian fishermen to the south coast of Newfoundland. Today in the newspaper the Minister of Fisheries is quoted as saying, "6,400 tonnes (quota) is the historical share to which the (French) fleet is entitled". Is the Minister aware that, according to the official fillet figures of St. Pierre and Miquelon, that entire quota has been substantially overfished by the French fleet? What is the Minister going to do today to stop this overfishing by the French?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): What we are doing today, and the process in which we are engaged as a result of the January 24 agreement, is to find a solution once and for all to the disputed boundary problem which was initially created as a consequence of a treaty that his Government signed in 1972.

I might point out that the historical entitlement of vessels based in St. Pierre and Miquelon is not to be confused with the fishing practices of large trawlers that come from metropolitan France which can only be arrested by way of an international agreement, or force.

NON-ARREST OF FRENCH VESSELS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): The Government is not interested in the prevention of overfishing by the French. It is more interested in the prevention of pouting in Paris. If a Newfoundland boat exceeds its quota, it is arrested. A Nova Scotia boat, a New Brunswick boat, a Prince Edward Island boat, and a Quebec boat will also be arrested. The same applies to the Americans, the Spanish, and the Portuguese. Why are the French boats not arrested for overfishing? Does the Government have Falklands phobia?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): I am sure that the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate must spend his entire mornings practising these neat little couplets that he loves to present, while totally obfuscating the issue in each and every case.

The Hon. Member knows, or he should know, and perhaps he should have another briefing to bring him up to date, that in the disputed zone, under international protocols which his Government entered into in 1984, we are not able to confront France in waters which they claim to be theirs. Until the boundary dispute is resolved by a civilized procedure, which has been set in motion, that practice will continue—unless the Hon. Member is suggesting that we send in the Canadian navy. I hope he is not suggesting that.

FRANCE'S POSITION ON COD ALLOCATION

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The French Government has again shown complete contempt for a Canadian Government that is unwilling to stand up for the rights of Canada. France has said that it will take four times the allocation of cod that has been granted to it by the Canadian Government. I wish to ask the Deputy Prime Minister what action his Government is prepared to take to stand up for the rights of Canadians, or is it simply prepared to let the French Government continue to kick sand in our face?

• (1430)

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the action we are prepared to take is not unlike the action we were prepared to take on another issue, that dealing with the offshore energy problems of Newfoundland and Labrador, where we promised, as the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition indicated yesterday, a fair deal, a new deal, and a better deal for the people of Newfoundland and Labrador. I can undertake to the House that if we do not, by the end of the process set in place, arrive at a fair deal, a new deal, and a better deal for the fishermen of Newfoundland and Labrador, there will be no deal.

Mr. Manly: It had better be a better deal than what has appeared so far.

REASON FOR SIGNING AGREEMENT WITH FRANCE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. When the Minister of Transport, Newfoundland's voice in Cabinet, was asked about the reasons this agreement was rushed through and signed, he said: "I want to find the answer to that myself; I intend to find the answer". Could the Deputy Prime Minister tell the House of Commons and the people of Canada why this agreement with France, which has so many unfortunate complications attached to it, was rushed through without proper consultation?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I might ask why it is that opposition questioners always focus on the negative and do not recognize—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Siddon: —a chance, once and for all, to solve a problem of historical dimension by taking a courageous path supported and totally encouraged and promoted in Newfoundland by the Minister of Transport and his colleagues who will ensure that this will be a better deal for the fishermen of Newfoundland and Labrador than anything achieved in the past.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Fisheries should know that there is a large negative sign in front of the entire Government and that it is bracketed by negatives.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT CANCEL AGREEMENT

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the Government has apologized to the Government of Newfoundland for the process involved in this agreement. Does the Deputy Prime Minister not recognize that a bad process cannot lead to a good conclusion? Recognizing all the wrong processes and conclusions in the agreement, will the Government now agree to cancel it and start over again?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, this "ostrich head in the sand" approach of the Opposition, particularly of my colleague who speaks for the NDP, is at the heart of our problems as a nation. It is high time they stood in the House and offered some positive suggestions, because it is only through making difficult choices, even with their imperfections, that we achieve progress on behalf of the people we represent.

REFUELING OF FRENCH FLEET

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The Minister should know that a modern day "Boston Tea Party" is happening on the tiny islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon. Every last one of the 560,000 people of Newfoundland stand in solidarity with the people of St. Pierre. We are standing up to France and standing up for their inshore fishermen. Will the Minister assure the House of Commons that large factory freezer trawlers which are turned away from St. Pierre will not be allowed to refuel in Canadian ports? Will he give us that assurance?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, as I have already indicated in the House, I will be meeting with my colleagues, the Ministers of Fisheries for the Atlantic provinces, early next week. There is a lot of talk about the failure of the process. I am talking about following the process in an appropriate manner to achieve the kind of result for which the Hon. Member is hoping. However, in the process we are not about to do anything stupid just because the Hon. Member suggests it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tobin: The expert on stupidity speaks. I am tempted to say: "Vive St. Pierre et Miquelon libre", but I will not say it because Charles de Gaulle would not like it.

CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister telling the House of Commons that, when the people on the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon stand up to France and are counted and turn away factory freezer trawlers from those tiny islands, those vessels will be allowed to come into Canadian ports, refuel, and continue to overfish Canadian fish? Is that what he is telling us?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Absolutely not, Mr. Speaker. When the people of St. Pierre and Miquelon stand up to be counted, we will see and we will probably be very, very appreciative of their action.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Siddon: When the time comes we will see just how firm the Government of Canada can be on behalf—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Siddon: I think, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Dingwall: We want Mr. T.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt.

Mr. Rodriguez: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Sit down.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Stand up, John.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt for his help.

Mr. Rodriguez: I am sorry, I was not attempting to take your place, Mr. Speaker.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The French have clearly indicated that they will continue to overfish the stock. They will not abide by the quota we have given them. St. Pierre and Miquelon are small islands. They have clearly indicated the tough position they are prepared to take with the French. Could the Minister tell the House and the people of eastern Canada—the whole country—what specific action he will take, or will he substitute a wishbone for a backbone?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, when the time comes, the Hon. Member and all other Members of the House will witness appropriate and necessary actions on behalf of the fishermen of Atlantic Canada. I cannot help but speculate that opposition Members are somewhat fearful that we might indeed find a solution to this problem; then they would have no more basis for their irrelevant questions.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TAKE ACTION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. We have already given him a proposal, a positive suggestion, to start over with the agreement. I want the Minister to be more specific with the House. Will he wait until there are absolutely no fish left to be fished by Canadian fishermen, or will he start delineating the action the Government intends to take and to send a strong message to France that they cannot overfish stocks belonging to Canadians?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I would hope that the Hon. Member would permit us to wait a day or two, because these French trawlers about which he is concerned certainly would not even contemplate coming to Canadian ports in the foreseeable future. The Hon. Member has indicated that they have offered options. Yes, indeed, Rambo, the Leader of the NDP, offered a solution the other night. Is the Hon. Member suggesting that we move into this disputed zone with a show of force by Canada? Is that what he is recommending? If so, I wish they would declare themselves now.

BRODILAF-HAMA AFFAIR—NEED FOR INQUIRY

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. Yesterday, the Prime Minister asked me for facts. I would like to say that because of political pressure, one bidder, Mr. Michel Côté, withdrew his bid; that according to the Chief of Staff of the Minister of Public Works, the first tender was cancelled because Brodilaf, a Conservative company, did not legally qualify; that one Conservative was convicted of influence peddling and finally, that officials with the Department of Public Works recommended Hama Inc., whose offer was $65,000 lower than the offer made by the Conservative group.

Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister of Public Works: What more does the Government need to realize this was not normal procedure and that a public inquiry is urgently needed?

• (1440)

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, a recommendation was made by the public servants to me as Minister concerning this contract. The proposal was put to Treasury Board for approval and such approval was given. The result was the awarding of a contract to Brodilaf because it represented the best deal in the circumstances.

ALLEGED PRIVILEGED KNOWLEDGE OF CERTAIN FACTS

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary with some more facts for the Minister and the Prime Minister. I have here a document which originates from the office of the Hon. Member for Drummond, dated May 7, 1986, in which he refers to a meeting with Public Works and his scrutiny of studies prepared by their officials. How can the Minister justify a Conservative Member having access to such documents four months before the final decision and the signing of the contract? How can the Government claim everything was above board when there was this kind of political interference?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I have absolutely no knowledge of what documents any Member of this House had relative to this contract. I can say that the contract was awarded on the basis of the principles governing awards of contracts. It was for best value and it received Treasury Board approval. I have reviewed the file and am thoroughly persuaded that the appropriate course of action was followed.

GOVERNMENT INTEGRITY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. It was nice to spend at least a few moments at the beginning of Question Period without talking about scandals. However, the Deputy Prime Minister will know that the people of Canada have made it perfectly clear that they are getting sick and tired of the revelations every day of new scandals and corruption in the Government. I am tired of it—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Riis: —and my colleagues are tired of it.

What concrete steps does the Government plan to take to begin the very difficult process of building credibility and public confidence in the integrity of the Government?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would think that the public are getting a little sick and tired of repeated questions. That question was put by the Hon. Member yesterday and his Leader asked precisely the same question the day before. I would invite him to read Hansard in case he has not done so.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER MAKE STATEMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I wonder why the Deputy Prime Minister does not one day say enough is enough, let us put history behind us and say we are going to turn over with a new leaf by setting an example of a positive approach in this House.

Would the Deputy Prime Minister not agree that it would be appropriate for the Prime Minister of Canada, when he returns to the House, to stand in his place, and make a comprehensive statement outlining the precise steps that he and the Government plan to take to begin the slow process of building confidence in the Government?

An Hon. Member: Eliminate the Opposition.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am rather surprised at the Hon. Member who has distinguished himself in this House for a number of years as a fair-minded individual. I think if the Member really thought about his question he would simply ask himself whether it is fair, day in and day out, to hurl across the floor of the House unsubstantiated allegations, to take part in character assassination and innuendo such as we have witnessed—

Mr. Lapierre: Documented.

Mr. Mazankowski: —and contribute to a very poisonous environment. Where there has been clear evidence of any apparent appearance of conflict or wrongdoing, action has been taken by the Government. So far all we have had are a number of unsubstantiated allegations, with a different version emanating from the Opposition day by day. Every day a new story, a new revelation, and a new version.

DRUMMONDVILLE CONTRACT—AMOUNT OF TENDERS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works and it concerns the Drummondville Public Works contract.

Yesterday in the House of Commons the Minister said, as reported in Hansard:

I should make it clear for all Members of the House that the Brodilaf group made the lowest tender—

How can the Minister reconcile his statement of yesterday with that of his Chief of Staff, Ron Lefebvre, who is reported in today's press as having said that the other bid, the Hama bid, was $65,000 cheaper? Whose version is correct, and why is there such a contradiction?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I indicated that the Brodilaf group made the lowest tender and the amount of its tender was $2,500 lower than the Hama group. But the Department said, as is the course and custom governing contracts of this kind, that it had to factor in the costs of moving from the Hama building to the new premises. Those additional costs had to be considered. Then we had to look at what was the real value for the Government—

An Hon. Member: Tory value.

Mr. McInnes: —what value the Government was going to get, and after all those matters were taken into consideration we made a decision.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INSTITUTE PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, that is exactly the kind of answer that makes Opposition Members ask some very serious questions about this matter. Considering the veil of mystery that shrouds this affair, considering the contradictory statements made by the Minister and his assistants, by other Ministers, by a Member involved in this matter and by everybody else, is the Minister, once and for all, prepared to table in the House all the documents related to this matter, including the Public Works documentation? Finally, is he or is the Deputy Prime Minister prepared to order a public inquiry into this whole affair so that Canadians will know who is telling the truth?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, three days ago the Hon. Member asked me that question. Three days ago I indicated that if he wanted any information relative to this file that I would gladly make it available to him. The invitation still stands and I am prepared to defend any decision relative to the awarding of this contract.

Mr. Rossi: Table the documents.

Oral Questions

PROVISION OF SERVICE

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for the Post Office. Canadians want to know whether we have received from the Prime Minister not only a new Minister for the Post Office but also a new policy. Is the Minister now prepared to set aside the deadline of 1988 for financial self-sufficiency at the Post Office in the interests of good service, and is he ready now to put a stop to the plans of the Post Office to close hundreds of rural post offices?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, let me—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: I would find those congratulations more sincere, Mr. Speaker, if Members would not giggle.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): It is the kiss of death.

Mr. Andre: The Prime Minister has, indeed, given me a mandate to ensure that the progress made in the Post Office over the last few years is carried on, that we address the concerns of Canadians about the service they are receiving and that we do it in a responsible way. We cannot keep asking taxpayers, especially future taxpayers when we are in this deficit situation, to subsidize the cost of delivering the mail today. As I have indicated publicly, service is the first priority of the Government.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): A new beginning.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Minister on acknowledging that service must be the first priority at the Post Office.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CORPORATION'S PLANS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Does the Minister recognize, as was said yesterday, to clear up problems at the Post Office left by Michel Côté that we require—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members will know that in this place we refer to Ministers as the Hon. Minister. Would the Hon. Member please put his question?

• (1450)

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I was just quoting what the Minister said yesterday.

I just want to know whether he is prepared to acknowledge that in order to clear up the mess we require a change in the plans of the Post Office, and not just another pretty face in charge?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it has been a lot of years since I have been called pretty.

I must take exception to the comments made by the Hon. Member about my predecessor who did outstanding work.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: I think it is necessary that all Members recognize that we have a responsibility to ensure that the public gets reasonable service at an appropriate cost, and that the Post Office is run as efficiently and effectively as possible. Great progress has been made in the last two or three years through increased efficiency and lowering the relative cost of delivering letters. I hope we will all be able to co-operate and see that this progress continues and that people get the best service possible as cheaply as possible. I repeat, we cannot keep asking future generations to pay for the cost of delivering our mail today.

SUPERMAILBOXES—REQUEST FOR ABANDONMENT

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. I want to extend my congratulations on his appointment and wish him good luck.

He said yesterday in an interview that postal services are more important than the reduction of deficits. In view of that statement would the Minister immediately abandon the new plan, deliver the mail door-to-door, and scrap the supermailboxes?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I thank the Hon. Member for his expression of good luck. I will need a lot of that, looking back on the political success of past Ministers responsible for the Post Office.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: I was looking at the other side of the House.

Over the years the Post Office had reached a deplorable state. I think considerable progress has been made in the last few years and we want it to continue. There is more to be done. It requires the co-operation of all of us here who are, in the end, answerable to both the clients and the owners of the Post Office, the Canadian public. We cannot, for short-term political gains or headlines, make demands without taking into account the costs and consequences. I repeat: can we keep asking future generations to pick up the cost of delivering the mail today?

[Translation]

RETENTION OF RURAL POST OFFICES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, one might say the more things change, the more they remain the same.

In the same interview the Minister also said that rural postal services would not be reduced.

Can the new Minister unequivocally guarantee that rural post offices as they now exist will not be closed down?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as my predecessor indicated, changes will be made from time to time because of changing demographics, changing patterns and so on. Those changes will be made taking account of the interests of, and in consultation with, the people involved. I think it is very reactionary and wrong to make a demand that absolutely nothing ever change in the way things are done. To bring about improvements requires change. We will do it in a sensitive way which reasonable people can understand, appreciate, and support. That is particularly true in rural Canada.

TARIFFS

TARIFF ON CHRISTMAS TREES IMPORTED FROM UNITED STATES

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Has he given any further thought to the severe economic repercussions which will accrue to the substantial Christmas tree industry of regionally depressed Atlantic Canada if the Americans retaliate against his ill-conceived decision to impose a tariff on the puny number of trees moving from that country to this? What is he doing to ensure that will not happen?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his question. As he is very much aware, we have had a number of meetings with people from the Christmas tree industry, some of them from his province. We have explained what we are trying to do in the action we have taken. I think we are meeting with a good deal of success in achieving our objectives.

TRADE

POTASH—UNITED STATES INDUSTRY'S ANTI-DUMPING POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a serious question for the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday the U.S. potash industry filed an anti-dumping petition against the Canadian potash exporters. The case is based on figures from the U.S. Bureau of Mines on the cost of production in Canada. In light of what happened with shakes and shingles and softwood, and since we have known about the potash threat for some weeks, can the Minister specifically tell the House what action the Government has taken to date in this case which is very important to Canada, and what action will it now be taking to protect jobs in the potash industry, an industry which is important to Canada and vital to Saskatchewan?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister responsible for international trade I might comment on that. We were informed last night about the petition. It is no surprise. Senator Domenici of New Mexico has been threatening this for a long time. We expect to receive a copy of the petition very shortly and we will work as closely as we can to try to help the industry fight that anti-dumping petition.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I want to know from the Deputy Prime Minister specifically what action we will take to fight that petition. In light of the controversy over the export tax on softwood lumber can he assure the House there will be no export tax imposed on Canadian potash producers? Will the Government get off its knees and stand up for Canada and this very important industry?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): Mr. Speaker, what has happened is just another indication of rampant protectionism in the United States. We indicated to the industry that we would be helping in any way we can. Consultations have already begun and we will take the necessary action to protect our industry.

PUBLIC SERVICE

DISMISSAL OF IMMIGRATION OFFICER—REASONS GIVEN BY DEPUTY MINISTER

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the two Ministers responsible for immigration I will address my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. It relates to the firing of John Quigley, an immigration officer in Toronto, after he conferred with a number of Members of Parliament. In his letter of dismissal the Deputy Minister of Immigration writes that one of the reasons for the firing was that "these actions contributed directly to the media attention and political controversy which ensued and which brought into public question the integrity of the Minister."

How can the Government condone the termination of this individual's livelihood in an effort to hide embarrassing information from the public? Why was this person fired when his information convinced the Government to revise its refugee procedures? How can he be fired for being right?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Employment and Immigration I can tell the Hon. Member that, under the Public Service Staff Relations Act, Mr. Quigley has the right to present a grievance against the Deputy Minister's decision. My understanding is that he is exercising that right. I am advised that a grievance will be heard later this week or early next week. I think in the circumstances it would be inappropriate for me to comment in detail.

EXERCISE OF MINISTERIAL AUTHORITY—REQUEST FOR OFFICER'S REINSTATEMENT

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the truth of the matter is that Mr. Quigley is but the first victim of an investigative witch-hunt in that Department aimed at intimidating officials and certain members of the media. Will the Deputy Prime Minister not admit that the firing of this individual, who was cited by the Department as being one of the most effective officers in the Toronto branch, was a flagrant abuse of ministerial authority? Will he not do the honourable and moral thing and reinstate Mr. Quigley immediately?

• (1500)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, without accepting in any way the very serious allegations which the Hon. Member is implying in his question, I will simply repeat that there is a procedure in place. That procedure is very clear. He has exercised his rights under that and it would be inappropriate for me to comment while that procedure is ongoing.

REVENUE CANADA

WORD PROCESSING WORK

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. He will be aware of concern expressed, particularly in Winnipeg in the last week or so, about plans which his Department had to contract out confidential word processing work from the tax data centres. Will the Minister confirm subsequent reports that this plan has now been abandoned by the Government? Will he confirm for the House that the Government no longer intends to carry out such a foolish notion?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I can in fact confirm what the Hon. Member has just suggested. In fairness I would point out that this was a study which was contemplated to improve cost efficiency and service. It did not have implications for either security or job security as many people feared it had.

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the Hon. member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill for a short supplementary question.

DEPARTMENT'S SECURITY MEASURES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister and the Department show the same sensitivity for employee concerns with regard to the Department's plans for new security measures wherein they are contemplating widespread fingerprinting, credit checks, et cetera, of employees? Will the Minister undertake not to do anything unless mutual agreement can be reached between the Department and the union involved in this matter?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I think my colleague realizes that our Department and other government Departments are sensitive to the concerns of their employees. At the same time we must achieve a balance. The Member will remember that there were some concerns expressed recently about the adequacy of security procedures. We will try to strike a fair balance and keep in mind the sensitivities of the employees.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—CULTURAL INDUSTRIES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister for International Trade I would like to direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. As the Minister probably knows, Mr. Clayton Yeutter, the Chief U.S. trade representative, availed himself of a Canadian cultural institution this morning to say once again that he believes that Canadian cultural industries should be on the negotiating table if they have an economic impact.

Is the Government prepared to spend some of the money in its $12 million slush fund for trade information to buy some stamps and send a letter to Mr. Yeutter explaining that our broadcasters, publishers, and distributors are an essential part of our cultural industries and are not open to negotiation?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I think the Prime Minister made our position on that matter eminently clear in his reply to the House the other day when he said it was very inappropriate for Mr. Yeutter to have made those remarks. We have made our position very clear. I am sorry that the Hon. Member still does not understand it.

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the Hon. Member for a short supplementary question.

CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, it is not my understanding that is at issue, it is the fact that Mr. Yeutter has stated clearly that he wants the Canadian Government to define what it means by culture and clarify its position at the negotiating table. Is it not essential when negotiating a free trade deal that your counterpart at the table understands your purposes and position? When is the Government going to clarify its position so that Mr. Yeutter can clarify his ignorance?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Communications assures me that when she completes her information paper on communications and culture she will send the Member the first copy.

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES CANADA

CONTRACT TO SUPERVISE PAROLEES IN TORONTO

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. On September 12, 1986, Correctional Services Canada signed a contract with Exodus Link Corporation to supervise 50 to 80 parolees in a privatized parole supervision facility in Parkdale, without prior consultation with the community or its elected representatives.

In view of the over-saturation of social assistance and rehabilitation facilities in the area, will the Minister respond to the representations of the community and terminate Exodus Link funding until a more suitable location is found outside the boundaries of Parkdale—High Park?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member well knows, as I have explained it to him on a number of occasions, the contract with Correctional Services Canada was for services only. The site selection was the responsibility of Exodus Link as determined by the City of Toronto zoning by-laws. However, notwithstanding that, as a result of the concerns expressed by the citizens in his riding, I took the initiative and reduced by 40 per cent the number of parolees who would be attending at that particular location in his riding.

LABOUR RELATIONS

MAINTENANCE WORKERS' LOSS OF JOBS AT "LA CITÉ DE MONTREAL APARTMENTS"—REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTERVENE

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. Surely the Minister is aware of the fact that the maintenance workers of "La Cité de Montreal Apartments" have lost their jobs after these buildings were sold to private interests. Will the Minister rectify the injustice done to these workers?

Hon. Pierre Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am aware of this case, for I received Mr. Laberge's telex yesterday. We are now examining the situation because legal matters are involved in this case, but I can assure my colleague that I expect to propose solutions in the near future.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart). One question, please.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT WILL MEET REPRESENTATIVES OF EARLY RETIREES AND WHETHER LEGISLATION WILL SOON BE INTRODUCED

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): In the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. I have already asked a similar question and I hope to have an answer today. It has to do with the regulations and the Bill concerning repayments to the 35,000 Canadian early retirees. Can the Minister tell us whether legislation will be introduced very soon, before the 35,000 early retirees get this odious questionnaire? Secondly, can the Deputy Prime Minister tell us whether the Minister of Employment and Immigration or a Government official would accept to meet the representatives of Canada's early retirees who will be here tomorrow to explain their position?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will take notice of the Hon. Member's question on behalf of the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I will convey the information to him.

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the Hon. Member for Drummond for the last question.

INCOME TAX

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO END PRIVILEGED SITUATIONS AND AMEND STATUTE

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. According to statistics released recently by Revenue Canada, 1,830 Canadians with annual incomes exceeding $100,000 did not pay income tax. Does the Minister intend to put an end to situations that create tax privileges and amend the Income Tax Act accordingly, so that all Canadians will be on an equal footing and contribute their fair share?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that is the real reason for the tax reform I intend to announce shortly. It is also why I introduced the minimum tax a year ago. And it is also the reason why this Government has made so many changes in our tax legislation during the past two years.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED LAY-OFF OF JOHN QUIGLEY

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, regarding the Quigley affair, I think this is a violation of the integrity of Members in their role as parliamentarians. If it is true that on Friday, February 6, Mr. Lussier, Deputy Minister at Employment and Immigration, fired Mr. Quigley because he had informed members of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration with respect to existing procedures, it is an act that casts doubts on the integrity of the members of this committee.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member has the floor on a question of privilege, and I would ask Hon. Members to remain silent.

Mr. Jourdenais: Consequently, I want to ask the Chair to determine whether Mr. Lussier, the Deputy Minister, has infringed Members' privileges, and I strongly suggest that the matter be referred to a special committee of the House so that we can obtain further clarification.

• (1510)

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I want to support the remarks made by my hon. friend. One of our responsibilities in this chamber is to the public that elects us, whether it is our constituents or Canadians generally. The ultimate master of this chamber and the bureaucracy is the Canadian public. If Members of Parliament cannot discharge their responsibilities for fear of some negative repercussions, as resulted in the case of Mr. Quigley who is losing his job and being forced onto the unemployment rolls, I humbly submit that that is definitely an infringement on the rights of Members of Parliament. The withholding of information that is valuable and necessary for the Canadian public contradicts the very reason why we are here.

I echo the sentiments expressed by my hon. friend and I hope Your Honour will deliberate on this matter very seriously and render a decision so that we can perhaps have a clear indication of how the Speaker and the House feel about this issue which goes to the very heart of representation in a democratic institution.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I want to add a circumstance that I hope you will take into consideration. It is that the two Members of Parliament who allegedly conversed with Mr. Quigley were at the time members of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration. Therefore, we should take into account that Mr. Quigley was considering that he was giving relevant information to members of that committee who were concerned with the Department which he served. He was not spreading information far and wide, but speaking to those Members of Parliament who were specifically concerned with his activities. I hope that will be considered by Your Honour because it certainly affects the availability of relevant information to members of the committee.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, it would appear that Mr. Quigley was dismissed as a result of allegedly divulging information to the Opposition. The grievance procedure has commenced. It is my submission that the privileges of Members of Parliament are affected because, as you know, there are a number of steps in the grievance procedure. In order for the Government to make its case, or in order for Mr. Quigley to provide a full and complete defence, the evidence of Members of Parliament may be necessary before the grievance committee. I believe it is a breach of our privileges and would affect the workings of Members of Parliament if we are required, either by the Government or by the person with a grievance, to give evidence before a particular grievance committee.

I think it is clear, based on the evidence we have, that the decision to fire Mr. Quigley was not an administrative decision by the Deputy Minister or the Assitant Deputy Minister, but a decision that came from the Minister himself and from the Government. The reason for that dismissal was that Mr.

Quigley embarrassed the Government in a political way. As my colleague, the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) pointed out, as a result of the public service that Mr. Quigley provided to the people of Canada, the system was reformed and made better.

We call into question the reason why Mr. Quigley was fired and ask you to consider the ramifications of this particular case on individual Members of Parliament being required to appear before a grievance committee.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, it states at page 67 of Erskine May Parliamentary Practice, Nineteenth Edition:

> The privileges of Parliament are rights which are "absolutely necessary for the due execution of its powers"(c). They are enjoyed by individual Members, because the House cannot perform its functions without unimpeded use of the services of its Members; and by each House for the protection of its Members and the vindication of its own authority and dignity.

I respectfully submit that if Members of Parliament are impeded in any way from raising issues in the House for fear that those who have, for good reason, given that information to Members of the House would be threatened with dismissal for reporting matters which are wrong, to those who are elected to govern in this country, then parliamentary privileges of this House could have been breached by the action taken by the Deputy Minister, and perhaps the Minister in this particular case.

I hope you will take the time to examine the situation and report to the House whether there is a prima facie case of breach of privileges of the House, as I believe there is, as a result of the action of Mr. Lussier against this employee of the civil service.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I enter into this debate with some hesitation because I think it is very important that Mr. Quigley be able to exercise all of his rights as a former employee of the Government. It is my understanding that he has exercised his right to present a grievance against the Deputy Minister's decision. I suggest, therefore, that it would be very inappropriate for the Government to comment at length at this time.

I suggest that you examine whether or not the rights and privileges of a Member of the House have been breached which, after all, is the purpose of the privilege grievance. As far as we are concerned, we do not believe there has been any breach of the Member's privilege.

Considering that a grievance has been lodged by the said employee, we do not wish to comment any further at this time.

Mr. Speaker: I think a matter of some importance has been brought to the attention of the Chair by the Hon. Member for LaPrairie (Mr. Jourdenais), the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) and the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria). Under the circumstances, I think it would be appropriate if the Chair looked carefully at the representations that have been made.

Of course, the Chair is cognizant of the caveat put forward by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary which was also expressed by the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) during Question Period, that the employee who forms the basis of this question of privilege is presently going through a grievance process. However, it should be noted by the House that the representations made in this particular matter cross party lines most definitely and there is obviously a strong sense of unanimity among Members from different Parties that this is a matter of some considerable concern to the chamber. The Chair will treat it as such and will report back in due course.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I admit once again to being involved in other things, but did my hon. colleague's question of privilege not come up immediately after the tabling of the electoral report for the Province of Alberta? If it did, have we passed by Tabling of Documents?

• (1520)

Mr. Speaker: It may not have been clear to all Hon. Members. The Chair called Tabling of Documents and then recognized the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais), but I am sure it would be the disposition of the House to allow the Parliamentary Secretary to go back to Tabling of Documents if he has documents. I do not see any objection to that.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I have none. I just wanted to determine exactly where we were in the Routine Proceedings. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker: We have been through Statements by Ministers, Presenting Reports from Interparliamentary Delegations and Presenting Reports from Committees.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions which all deal with the same subject matter. They have been approved pursuant to Standing Order 106. These petitions are from residents of such places as Regina, Saskatchewan, Toronto, Ontario, Manitoba,Alberta and British Columbia. There are several hundred names in all. The petitioners state that the federal Government's proposals to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. The petitioners call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

RIDEAU HALL—PUBLIC'S ACCESS TO GROUNDS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, again I have the duty and privilege of presenting petitions signed by about 1,000 constituents of the Ottawa region and elsewhere, visitors to the national capital, who want to utilize their right to present their grievance to this House, namely that the decision to close Rideau Hall grounds was made by the National Capital Commission, the Department of Public Works, the RCMP and the office of the Governor General without prior notice. The closure of this attractive and tranquil park affects thousands of visitors to the capital from across the country who want to have access to Rideau Hall, a unique institution, as a symbol of the trust, openness and democracy of which Canadians are so justly proud, and residents from the entire national capital region who have used and enjoyed the grounds of Rideau Hall and who, while recognizing the security concerns that prompted the closure decision, cannot accept a blanket closure of the 120-acre park to public access.

Wherefore the undersigned petitioners humbly call upon Parliament to reconsider this decision by consulting a group of citizens representing the large and growing opposition in order that a modus vivendi be created that would satisfy both the Government and the public.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present, under Standing Order 106, a petition signed by a number of western Canadians who are very concerned that the federal Government's proposals to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy the necessary prescription drugs. They believe the proposed measure will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis. The petitioners feel the proposals of the federal Government will result in higher costs to various provincial government drug plans as well. Therefore, the petitioners simply call upon the Government to reject the proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

OPPOSITION TO CANADA POST OPERATIONAL PLAN

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I also have the duty to present to the House a petition signed by many of my constituents and others from a number of other ridings. The petition relates to the Canada Post operational plan which, of course, has been strongly denounced.

The petitioners maintain that the new Post Canada operational plan creates two classes of citizens as a result of the installation of permanent superboxes in both urban and rural areas, that the closure of rural post offices deprive citizens from a unique federal presence, and reduces postal services in rural areas. Finally, the increase in postal rates creates a prejudice.

All petitioners humbly call upon this House to urge Canada Post management to withdraw their operational plan so as to guarantee rural postal services, which are essential.

I have another petition concerning the same issue and it has been signed by at least fifty Canadian taxpayers who again strongly denounce the Canada Post operational plan because it is prejucial to many people, particularly those who live in small rural communities.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, another petition signed by Canadian taxpayers from Laval-des-Rapides who also strongly denounce the Government's initiative aimed at closing down a number of post offices and reducing services.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have two sets of petitions I would like to table today, both of which have been certified correct under Standing Order 106. The first petition is actually in two parts. It is from the residents of the community of Thunder Bay as well as Kakabeka Falls and Toronto and Willowdale. The petitioners call upon Parliament to reject the proposals regarding the prescription drug Act and to ask the Government to change its mind with regard to that legislation.

TRANSPORTATION—ECONOMIC REGULATORY REFORM

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, the second petition was forwarded to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). The petition is in respect to the whole question of deregulation of the transport industry in Canada. I am particularly referring to Bill C-18. The petitioners are asking that it be withdrawn and that public convenience and necessity remain as a fundamental factor in the development of transportation policy in this country.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Tuesday, February 10, consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-19, an Act respecting motor vehicle transport by extra-provincial undertakings, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport; and the motion of Mr. Lewis (p. 3220).

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I am quite delighted to rise and speak in this debate. The Bill that we are studying is Bill C-19, an Act respecting motor vehicle transport by extra-provincial undertakings. Significantly enough Bill C-19 will replace the Motor Vehicle Transport Act of 1953-54.

I spoke on Bill C-18 just one week ago. I thought that the Government would have learned from that debate that there are many things wrong with deregulation. During that debate many concerns were raised with respect to safety. Concerns were also raised with respect to corporate concentration and foreign investment. Instead of having learned its lesson the Government has decided to go right ahead and do the same thing in the trucking industry. I think that is highly regrettable.

This Bill will impact on all the people of Canada, not just the Conservative government ideology which is frozen in the mentality that private is best. I strongly urge the Government to rethink this particular piece of legislation. It has taken similar steps with respect to Teleglobe. It should look at issues that are good for Canada, issues which are not necessarily confined to the private sector.

This is a vital and key industry to Canada. I would like to give Hon. Members an example of just how vital the trucking industry is to our country and to our Gross National Product. It is a constantly growing industry. It generates over 70 per cent of total service revenue. The for-hire segment of the industry contributes over $6 billion annually to our Gross National Product. The industry pays salaries to over 90,000 men and women who work in the trucking industry. As the Parliamentary Secretary pointed out in his speech, which was so well prepared by the Ministry, there are between 200,000 and 250,000 people who are involved in spinoffs of this industry. As can be well seen, it is a big industry which touches the lives of many people.

I suggest that every Member of the House has constituents in his or her riding who are touched by every aspect of this Bill. Therefore it is essential that they stand up and speak about what concerns their constituents. Truckers in my riding have spoken to me with respect to this measure, just as people from the railways and airlines came to me to discuss their concerns. Their concerns need to be addressed. If we are to be fair and open spokesmen on their behalf, then we should bring their concerns to the attention of the House.

The meaningfulness of the industry is ignored as a result of the Government's motion which is now before us with respect to the question now being put. That would curtail the debate, something which I think is regressive and repressive. It is an unfortunate circumstance when we are faced with a motion which would muzzle the Members of this House who are supposed to have the right to intervene and speak up and be heard under the provisions of the new rules.

I suggest to Hon. Members that if they stay quiet with respect to this matter they will be counted on the negative side of the ledger. I remind Hon. Members that debating Bills in committee is not enough. In committees we deal with the nitty-gritty. But members of the Government have blocked ears with respect to proposals for amendments which members of the Opposition bring forward. They are nothing but a bunch of sheep who wag their tails and say yes to whatever the Minister wants. That is very sad, but that has been my experience when sitting in at committee hearings. I suggest that this House is the place where people who have concerns about the trucking industry should be expressing them.

Since 1984 regulations concerning the trucking industry have come under the jurisdiction of provincial Governments. There are different regulations in different provinces. There are different requirements with respect to entry for routes, for commodities and for safety precautions.

By way of example let us consider the problems with respect to safety. It is an area in which none of us wishes to compromise. It could be our children, our parents or ourselves who get hurt as a result of a lack of national safety standards. It is unfortunate that there is no clarity and no comprehensive legislation to cover the national safety code which we need. There is a definite and distinct connection between motor carrier deregulation and highway safety. I believe most Members of the House feel as I do, that there can be no compromise with respect to the issue of highway safety and that verbal commitments are just that, verbal commitments. They are not committed to law and they do not have the force of law.

I would now like to refer to the remarks of the Parliamentary Secretary as reported at page 3153 of Hansard. He stated:

> The Bill also provides for further federal-provincial agreements, including the definition of the fitness test and a uniform national safety code.

He went on to state:

> —I believe we have learned a great deal from the U.S. experience with the deregulation of the trucking industry. We have looked at what has worked well, what has not, and considered the profound differences between the two countries. We now have a truly made-in-Canada policy for our trucking industry.

He goes on in his remarks to illustrate how we have become sensitive to the need for the economic deregulation of trucking, to be followed by a reform of safety regulations, which was the American way. He stated:

> —we intend to do quite the opposite because we believe that safety of the transportation system is the number one priority of truckers and all Canadians. The Minister has stated this on many occasions. Consequently, a uniform national safety code has been developed and approved in consultation with the provinces and the trucking industry. This code will be the cornerstone of the new fitness test. The other elements of that test will be insurance and bonding requirements.

I find the Hon. Member's remarks extremely interesting.

[Translation]

I received a letter from Executive Vice President Jacques Alary of the Trucking Association of Quebec Inc. in which he tells me:

> Mrs. Finestone:
> Federal Minister of Transport John Crosbie met with his provincial colleagues in Toronto last October 2. The purpose of their meeting was to decide the future of transport regulations. Our provincial Minister of Transport, Mr. Marc-Yvan Côté, understood and defended the approach recommended by the Trucking Association of Quebec in this case. It is to shun deregulation unless a coherent policy has been implemented and includes:
> 1. An enforced and enforceable standard highway safety code—

[English]

The letter is dated October 9, 1986, and there is still not a national security system or code in operation.

I would now ask Hon. Members to consider a meeting which took place during the week of February 6, 1987, in Victoria. This was a meeting of the Safety Committee of the provinces. It is interesting to note that the provinces seem to be all over the lot with respect to what the costs will be in terms of implementing a national safety code. Most of them do not wish to become involved with the regulations concerning hours of work which are intimately related to safety. If one drives 22 hours a day and sleeps only two hours, one cannot be a safe driver the next day. There is no uniform national vehicle inspection code. Hon. Members will know from the use of their own cars how important it is to maintain a vehicle.

What is not understood by the Government is that there has been a verbal commitment to a national safety code but no action has been taken. Ottawa has little juridical clout which it can use because this matter falls into an area of joint jurisdiction. Until a national safety code is in place it is reprehensible to even consider moving into this area.

I have a copy of an interesting study conducted by Dr. Glaskowsky on the effects of deregulation of motor carriers in the United States. This gentleman is a Professor of Management and Logistics at the School of Business Administration, University of Miami. He has much to say about safety, and I wish to mention a couple of his concerns.

On page 29 of his book he describes what the trucking industry is all about. For the listeners out there, many of us do not appreciate the type of life that truckers face, and the type of stress under which they live. It is not only the small individual trucks that are seen in your ridings in major cities or in small towns, we are also talking about national transportation, and major truckers. My grandchildren used to say, "Gee, grandmother, how many wheels has that one got?" The life of that trucker is very difficult. He is on the road away from home most of the time. There are women who are driving trucks these days. Drivers have to handle a 40 ton tractor-trailer rig in all types of traffic, weather, and roads. Meals are catch-as-catch-can; sleeping accommodations are either "up in the box" in the sleeper cab of the truck, or in a less than plush motel bed on the highway. Over-the-road driving is a very tough life. Those who have not experienced it should be very careful in their assessment of whether the wages are just, and what type of lifestyle it is. In contrasting the life of the trucker with that of the airline pilot or the train operator, the truckers' lives are very difficult.

It may be interesting to take a further look at the situation of safety deterioration as a result of the potential deregulation and increased competition in this field. There is trouble with regard to safety.

Over-the-road tractors in heavy use are driven about 2,000 miles a week, or 100,000 miles a year. In the history of this industry they have a life expectancy of about five years, with a major engine overhaul at the end of three years, giving them an additional life of two years or 200,000 miles operating life. At that point they are generally junked. The "junk it or use it" choice for aging large diesel tractors is today a Hobson's choice with respect to many carriers. Depending on the model, a new over-the-road tractor today costs over $80,000 U.S. That is a large investment. If some spare tires are thrown in, and you have a few trucks, this comes close to a million dollars. A motor carrier strapped for cash in an intensely competitive deregulated milieu or environment, looks for alternatives and ways to cut corners. That is not in our interest. If there are no national safety standards in place, we will have a great deal of trouble.

Pressures are growing for tighter and tighter administration, inspection, and enforcement of safety regulations in the United States. The Parliamentary Secretary who read from notes from the Department of Transport said that they had learned from the American experience. I would suggest that he goe back and look more closely at what is the American experience. Inspection and enforcement is costly. It will certainly cost millions of dollars to have the type of skilled inspectors we will need for the increased numbers of small truckers to make sure that we have safe trucks on the highways under conditions that would be found acceptable. Where transportation operations are concerned, safety does cost money. Corners are being cut by financially strapped carriers, and accident rates are rising. In the United States that was a clearly foreseeable consequence, and one that we should take careful note of before we move into this field, helter-skelter, without giving careful reconsideration to the whole content of this Bill and its thrust. I am not saying that deregulation is bad. I am saying that we must have in place the proper standards of safety before we move. As yet, those are not in place.

According to the study that was done in Miami, highway safety is deteriorating. The motor carrier accident rate per million miles is rising. Equipment is getting older, as many carrier fleets age, and equipment replacement has become financially difficult for many of these carriers. Maintenance is necessarily deferred or skimped by financially strapped carriers. Over-all, many mature more experienced and more highly paid union drivers have been replaced by younger less experienced and lower paid non-union drivers. One symptom of this is the current clamour for a comprehensive national truck driver licensing and record maintenance system in the United States. What has been done here?

Another aspect of safety is the combined overloading and "speeding syndrome" that is clearly associated with this competitive milieu. Deferred maintenance, overloading, and speeding are not new phenomena in the motor carrier industry. It is an offence against common sense to claim that the extremely competitive pressures that will be brought about by deregulation will not result in some operators cutting corners where there is clear though improper, and in some cases illegal opportunity to reduce costs accompanied by a felt need to do so in order to survive. The wish to survive is the strongest of all human instincts. Whether it is personal survival or business survival it has to be taken into account.

The pressure for safe motor carrier operations on the road is less than perhaps it is in respect of air, ocean, or rail transport. But there is no denying that a bad truck accident is serious to the family of the individuals who are impacted upon. It does not matter if it is one person, 100 persons, or 1,200 persons who have been hurt because of poor standards that we are prepared to adopt in a badly perceived procedure toward the Bill.

With respect to the whole safety standard, I have an ongoing and abiding concern that I have tried to express in the House. I strongly recommend that this Bill not be brought to committee until the whole area of national safety standards has been determined, until there is resolution to provincial and federal jurisdiction, and until we know what the content of the national safety standards will be.

I wish to bring to your attention that California is presently re-regulating the deregulated trucking industry. I have an article here with the heading, "California re-regulation: Start of a trend?". Is it the start of a trend? The main reason cited for re-regulating the golden state's trucking industry is that it is a source of concern, and the source of the concern is safety. In spite of continued, strenuous efforts by deregulation advocates, who argue that there is no real connection between economic deregulation and highway safety, California's actions which began in 1986 could be an early indication that it is just not working, and people are concerned. I can only say that I am concerned about the National Safety Code.

I would like to have address the whole area of foreign ownership and corporate concentration and the issues behind it. I think the American experience has something to tell us in that regard as well. Certainly I would like to have a look at the reverse onus of responsibility, which is a divesting of our responsibility. I strongly urge the Government to stop the Bill now and to do its homework. Then it could bring in some normal and proper procedures for the health and safety of the country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Taylor): On questions and comments, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus).

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, you look good there, by the way.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Angus: Could the Hon. Member take a few moments in this question and answer period to give us an indication of how she feels the Bill relates to foreign control of our trucking industries by other countries, particularly the United States? Does she feel that there will be any impact upon our cultural sovereignty because of this move?

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased the Hon. Member raised that issue because the Bill has absolutely no provisions for the setting of any limitation on foreign takeovers of Canadian transportation companies.

Mr. Boudria: It is unbelievable.

Mrs. Finestone: It is unbelievable. The only guidelines are these. All mergers and takeovers over $20 million and over 10 per cent of the voting shares of a Canadian transportation firm will be reviewed by the Governor in Council. All those below those set ceilings will be reviewed in the normal procedure by Investment Canada. The guiding principle in this section is that all investments which have been found or deemed to have been found likely to be of net benefit to Canada will be approved. The major difficulty is that it leaves the acquisitions of over $20 million of foreign investors at the discretion of the Governor in Council.

Unfortunately we have been subjected to a large series of unpleasant events which perhaps allow for meddling and muddling in the affairs of Government. If we can close any loophole and not allow any Minister of the Crown any kind of opportunity to misuse his power, it would be in the best interests of everyone in the House, regardless of which Party is in power. I do not like the idea of leaving that loophole, that there should be this kind of discretion, because there is a potential for patronage and ideology to become very important players in this vital sector of the Canadian economy. My Party and I find it totally unacceptable.

We have supposedly learned a lesson from the United States. Twenty-five per cent is its limitation on foreign ownership of American transportation companies. That is firmly in place. Could we not at least do that within our own Canadian perspective? Do we have no pride of self and no place to allow us to grow as Canadians in our own industry and on our own sovereign ground? It is becoming a little disgraceful.

There is potential for access saturation by American trucks into our country and very little legislation to stop that access. I thank the Hon. Member for asking his question because it is very serious and one of great concern.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the dignity which you bring to the chair. I can only describe the Hon. Member's presentation as excellent. She outlined the critical concerns about the legislation before the House. The Hon. Member will be aware that the legislation does not change a very peculiar situation which exists. When American bus lines come from the United States into Canada and their bus drivers are American citizens, they can drive to Chicoutimi, Banff, Calgary, or wherever. That is fine and probably as it should be. However, the Hon. Member will know that when Canadian bus companies with Canadian drivers go to the United States, they must stop at the border and take on American bus drivers to drive in the United States. Is it not rather one-sided; the Americans gain all and we gain nothing? Does that seem to reflect the general nature of the legislation about which she articulated this afternoon?

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for that question. It seemed to me that the Parliamentary Secretary suggested that there was no change in the new Bill in respect of bus transportation. However, that was no answer. Essentially, if they have been allowed total access and freedom in the territory of our sovereign country, that is fine, but we should have equal access and equal rights.

The problem with the Government is that it has forgotten that we do not kneel down or play dead. We must stand and be counted when it comes to that kind of access.

While I am on my feet I should like to add, if I may, a serious concern, when we talk about foreign takeovers and corporate concentration, about which the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) asked earlier. My concern is best reflected in a study of industry concentration which should be a warning to us. I should like to refer to it, for the information of the House.

In 1978 in the United States, four of the largest interstate carriers had one-fifth of the market for freight. The 10 largest had 39 per cent of the market, and the top 20 had 43 per cent. At that time the percentages already revealed a significant degree of economic concentration, considering that there were nearly 17,000 interstate motor common carriers of general freight in 1978.

Then came deregulation. What was its impact? By early 1985 the amount of interstate traffic carried by the four largest carriers had risen to 35 per cent. That was a 75 per cent increase over their previous 20 per cent share of the market. The 10 largest carriers had 60 per cent, which was a 70 per cent increase since 1978. The 20 largest had 67 per cent of the market, which was a 56 per cent increase since 1978.

The reason for these startling increases in concentration was that many carriers had to go out of business. They could not face the unfair competition and the cut-price rates which were being offered. There was just no ability for the others to survive. In addition, that is one of my concerns.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before recognizing the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Kilgour), I should like to indicate that there is one minute remaining.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I may have erred yesterday. The reverse onus test will come into effect on January 1, 1988.

Mrs. Finestone: That is no good.

Mr. Kilgour: The fitness test will come into effect on January 1, 1991, a year after the safety code is in place.

Referring to the question raised by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) about bus drivers, I have been informed that it is an immigration matter. It varies with the company. For example, Voyageur has an arrangement where some of its drivers drive right into the United States. The drivers of other bus companies which have not made arrangements with Immigration Canada have to get off at the border. I understand that it varies with the company and according to what arrangements they have with Immigration Canada.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary is new in his job, and I am fairly new to this dossier. He talked about reverse onus. I cannot help but respond with the following observation and a sense of caution, because I know he is a cautious man.

He said "I believe" and "as I understand it". He never once said that it was his opinion. It was always as he believed or as he understood. When he talks about reverse onus, whichremoves public convenience and necessity and replaces it with fit, willing and able, there is a great difference. First, one must prove the need to move into a territory and be competitive. The other is everybody for himself and dog eat dog, which leads to conflict with individual truckers, and we are in for real trouble. I think we must be very cautious before we move along that route.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to wrap up this part of the proceedings, that is, the 20-minute maximum for speeches, by saying that I assume later today we will have a vote on the particular Bill.

• (1600)

What I want to do in the time available to me, because I have already had the opportunity to make the lead-off speeches, is to deal in a partial way with some of the reaction, comments and questions that have been raised during what has been a short debate on a very important piece of legislation. First, there is the suggestion that there will be unequal treatment between Canada and the U.S. We are opening up our border to the Americans but they are not doing the same for us. Let me quote from a piece of U.S. legislation:

> (1) Whenever the Secretary of Transportation determines that the government of any country contiguous to the United States, or any political subdivision or instrumentality of any such contiguous country, has engaged in unfair, discriminatory, or restrictive practices with a substantial adverse competitive impact upon United States motor carriers of property with respect to motor carrier transportation within such foreign country or political subdivision or between such foreign country and the United States, the Secretary shall seek elimination of such practices through consultations or other appropriate methods of representation.
> (2) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, when consultations or other methods of representation fail to result in the elimination of the unfair, discriminatory, or restrictive practices specified in paragraph (1), the Secretary may, in consultation with the Secretary of State and the United States Trade Representative,—

We all know who that is:

> —suspend, modify, amend, condition, or limit operations by motor carriers from such foreign country or political subdivision in interstate or foreign commerce within the United States, if the Secretary determines such action is in the national interest.

Clearly, Mr. Speaker, that indicates that if the U.S. Government wished, and if it felt our truckers were taking undue advantage by getting more than what the Americans consider our fair share of the haulage, particularly the back-haul, they could move very quickly to prevent us from having that access. That is one thing I wanted to point out to Hon. Members who have suggested that we have an even playing field. Quite clearly it is not. It is another reason that we should not move forward with this legislation and why it is important that the Bill be sent to the Transport Committee, not just to deal with it in terms of the Bill itself but to re-examine the whole issue.

During the opening remarks of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Kilgour) there was reference to a study, Cubukgil I believe is the name of it. That study confirms what the Canadian Trucking Association and what we have been saying all along. The Canadian trucking industry is highly competitive. The existing regulatory system has evolved to an open system, and rates and profit margins in trucking are as low as they can go without getting into destructive competition. In the meantime, Mr. Keith Thompson, who is the bureaucrat behind this, has been running around telling shipper groups how inefficient for-hire trucking is. It was certainly implied throughout Freedom to Move and ministerial statements that they had to deregulate to save Canadian commerce because of the inefficiency of the transportation system. Having sold Freedom to Move on the basis that the regulated transport sector is inefficient, they now rely on the Cubukgil study to say that the trucking industry is so efficient and so competitive that it will not even notice deregulation and an open border. That is convenient, to say the least, but that does not stop the Parliamentary Secretary from jumping up periodically during the debate shouting "what about the shipper?" In terms of our ability to export et cetera he is trying to have it both ways.

On the question of the reverse onus test, we have said in this House that it is useless and goes well beyond the MOU with the provinces that we will have total deregulation as of January 1, 1988 and the so-called National Safety Code will not be in place for at least another two and probably three years, never mind whether it will be uniform or amount to a code. The assurances of the Parliamentary Secretary that we have learned from the American experience and will avoid the same pitfalls in safety is, in our opinion, quite meaningless.

The Motor Carrier Act of 1980 did not totally deregulate. It also contemplated a reverse onus test. However, that is not what happened because the ICC, Interstate Commerce Commission, lacked the will to use it and was swamped with applications by truckers desperately trying to protect their flanks by getting broad-based authority first, never mind new entrants. There is no reason to expect that the same thing will not happen here.

Another disconcerting note is that just a few weeks ago we were advised by a leading spokesman for the CITL that it had received assurances, from the same Mr. Thompson I spoke about earlier, that the reverse onus test language would not work and was only there because of the pressure from CTA and the MOU requirement.

As for the intervention of the chairman of the Committee on Transport claiming the committee was independent and under the new rules would bring in an objective report, let me add the following comments. The drafters of Bill C-127 and now Bill C-19 did not pay much attention to the standing committee's report on Freedom to Move with respect to the trucking aspect, let alone other areas. For example, the committee recommended strongly that there be something done with respect to international, and went so far as to suggest some sort of bilateral approach. Bill C-19 is silent on that, never mind that the former Minister of Transport had promised the CTA board the same thing. If the committee is independent, how can the Government dictate that it will not travel on such important legislation?

I could go on and on, Mr. Speaker, about specific reactions to comments from Hon. Members in this debate, and perhaps I will for a few moments.

Last spring while the Committee on Transport was still reviewing the general question of deregulation, a letter was sent to the chairman of the committee from an individual in Middleton, Nova Scotia. In the letter he refers to a study done in the State of California, basically warning the chairman as follows, "I can tell you the general consensus you get here is a mirror image of what is already happening in many parts of this country with or without any more deregulation."

Let me read the excerpt from the California study:

A three year study by the California Public Utilities Commission on the condition of the state's general freight and motor carrier industry since the Motor Carrier Act, shows an increasingly over-aged infrastructure. As a consequence of rate-cutting, carriers are no longer able to maintain their equipment or replace it with new, more efficient equipment. Investment funds are no longer attracted to the industry making adequate financing scarce. Drivers are working longer hours and overloading their vehicles. Safety standards have declined and trucking related accidents are on the rise. As a result, the Commission concluded that regulation of carriers engaged in the transportation of general commodities remains in the public interest and is required to reduce or eliminate the destructive impact of rate-cutting.

That was contained in the supplement to the Ontario Trucking Update. We have been saying that all along, Mr. Speaker. We have been warning the Government and the people of Canada that deregulation is not the panacea that people would like to believe. It will not bring about a safer operating environment. Clearly the American experience shows the opposite is true. As we have many more companies in the field and we have that kind of cutthroat competition, looking for that extra nickel, we will see trucking companies stretching their resources to the limit, stretching their drivers to the limit and stretching the equipment to the limit. At some point something will break. Sometimes it will be the rig itself, sometimes the driver, but a lot of times it will be the people in the cars.

The foundation for traffic safety in a memo to the AAA Club executives/safety directors dated October 30, 1985 indicates the results of a study which it conducted. The report is on the foundation study of truck driver fatigue and highway accidents. This is post-deregulation. It says:

The long-awaited report on the shockingly high role of fatigue in big truck accidents is now complete and ready for national distribution. Copy of the report entitled, A Report on the Determination and Evaluation of the Role of Fatigue in Heavy Truck Accidents, is attached for your information.

Several highly significant findings appear in this report:

1. 60 per cent of 231 accidents studied involved fatigue

2. Fatigue factor was shown to be 3 times greater than accident reports indicated

3. 39 of the 231 accidents studied involved fatalities—16 truck occupants and 33 occupants of other vehicles

• (1610)

More than twice as many, Mr. Speaker—the innocent. It continues:

4. 63 per cent of truck occupant fatalities occurred in fatigue-related accidents

5. 6.5 per cent of heavy truck drivers are estimated to be driving more than 16 consecutive hours (that's two eight-hour work shifts)

6. 1 out of every 3 truck drivers is driving beyond Federal Bureau of Motor Carrier Safety 10 hour per day recommendation.

One of every three is being pushed to his or her limit. That is the kind of environment the Government wants to inflict on the highways of Canada. It is being done in the name of free enterprise and less Government, but quite frankly it results in less safety.

It is also being done in a way which will separate the big from the small and the strong from the weak. It will be the small shippers who will not get the big deals. It will be the smaller communities in the regions and hinterlands of this country who will not get the service. The Torontos, Montreals, and perhaps in some cases the Winnipegs and Vancouvers, will benefit, but only in a very narrow sense.

In the air industry we have gone from a multiplicity of carriers to little more than two, and the same thing will occur in the trucking industry. Ultimately the Vancouvers, Winnipegs, Torontos and Montreals will lose because there will be less competition with less rules. There will be nothing to protect the ordinary citizen, the smaller shipper and transporter, from the results of this Bill.

I call into question as well the manner in which the administration, I assume with the sanction of the Government, has handled this. I have a memo dated "1986 07 08" addressed to The Coalition of Concerned Shippers from R. T. Beckwith. He says:

Yesterday, at Keith Thompson's suggestion, I met with him to discuss strategies related to the next move of the Coalition and, at the same time, the CITL.

This is the individual who has the responsibility first to produce Freedom to Move and second to produce the legislation. It now seems he is out there instructing people how to lobby the Minister, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent). These are the suggestions he made:

1. Mr. Thompson suggested that letters should be sent to the Honourable John Crosbie from (a) The Coalition, (b) from each Association and (c) from as many individual companies as we can persuade to do so; similar, but not exactly the same as the one attached hereto, outlining our support in general for the three bills and reiterating our support of the Government in the passage of the bills through parliament.

2. A meeting should be set up at a relatively early date for Coalition members to meet Mr. Crosbie. Realistically, he felt that this can not be done prior to August, as Mr. Crosbie will not be back in Ottawa until July 21 and will want to establish himself in his new portfolio. This in no way should discourage individual associations from arranging meetings with him as well.

3. The Coalition should arrange for a further meeting with the Honourable Don Mazankowski in early fall, possibly in September or October.

4. Meetings should be set up with the Honourable John Turner, Prime Minister Brian Mulroney and the Honourable Ed Broadbent, emphasizing the sales dollars which we represent, as well as job statistics and the fact that we represent both large and small businesses throughout Canada. It will be further necessary to diffuse some of labour's arguments in such a meeting.

Who is running the show? Is the Government so confident about this Bill that it is leaving it open to full and comprehensive review by all and sundry? No, not at all. The Government has the whip out drumming up support from one sector of the country. Is it doing the same thing with the trucking industry? I do not think so. The Government is pitting shipper against trucker and creating a conflict in our economic system. I do not think that is right. If anyone is out there flogging the Bill it should be the Minister or his Parliamentary Secretary. If they have that much confidence in its value let them get out there and talk to truckers, shippers, the small communities, and the provincial Governments who are becoming more and more aware of the Bill's concept and its problems.

Let the committee travel. Let us hear from people in the places affected. Let us go to Moose Jaw, Winnipeg, Thunder Bay and Montreal. When we dealt with Freedom to Move we only went to three communities, Halifax, Winnipeg and Vancouver. We never went to Quebec. We did not go to a total of seven provinces. That is not the way to consult.

The last time a Bill of this magnitude, dealing with transportation, was brought in was 20 years ago. That was after a Royal Commission spent two years studying the concept. Apparently a year of that was on the road hearing from specific interest groups and people who cared about the issue. As a result of that full public consultation the legislation was drafted and brought to the House. There was of course no need for an ongoing debate. We have argued time and time again that there is no need to re-invent the wheel. However, we are not giving the same priority to this legislation and Bill C-18. We are not giving the people of Canada the same opportunity to understand how this Bill will affect them. We may find they might agree with the Government. They may think it is the best thing since sliced bread. However, we will not know until we try. It is regrettable that we are not going to have the opportunity, from what I understand, to get out there, but I encourage the Government to reconsider that element, give us a chance to move across the land with the Bill so that more than just the national organizations have a chance to participate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my friend a question. Before doing so I would like to make a comment. During 20 years as Minister of Highways in Alberta, which also included the motor vehicle branch and transport and highways, I had a lot of experience with trucking hearings and the concept of convenience and necessity. The thing I did not like about convenience and necessity was that if a trucker got a licence to operate on a particular route and the business increased, he would add another truck. If the business increased again, he would add yet another truck. He soon had a monopoly of the business on that route. If an applicant tried to gain entry on that route, the first operator could show that he was already providing the service. I did not like that aspect of convenience and necessity because it kept the new, young drivers out of the business.

• (1620)

Another point about extra-provincial traffic was that if a trucker who received a licence in Alberta to operate extra-provincially wanted to go into Saskatchewan, he had to have another hearing in Saskatchewan. This was costly and time consuming. If he wanted to move into Manitoba he had to have another hearing there. Each of these hearings are expensive because one must bring witnesses and take the time to attend them. Hearings were costing up to $5,000 or $10,000. In order to operate in Ontario or Quebec they had to have additional hearings.

This became so expensive that our truckers could not operate on that basis. We asked the other provinces whether they would permit our trucks to pass through their provinces if we allowed their trucks to pass through Alberta. They said no. We could not get an agreement. Therefore, we went to the American states along the border and secured an arrangement with them which allowed their trucks to pass through Alberta without picking up loads, because many of them wanted to go to Alaska, and our trucks to pass through their states without buying a licence.

Consequently, we were able to build a tremendous business hauling meat, as an example, to Montreal. We could not have operated such a business economically without that agreement. There were no more accidents or safety problems. The truckers did not operate longer hours. They had more work, but it did not operate in the way which is now being suggested.

In summary, the operations were costly. The trucker had to add that to his costs and the shipper had to pay. The shipper had to add that to his costs and the consumer had to pay. It increased costs all across the board. Is it sensible to have all that duplication which will put increased costs on the shoulders of the consumers of Canada?

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the intervention and the question of the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor). I, too, have some history in regulation of the trucking industry. As the Member knows, I was a member of the select committee in Ontario which spent at least six months studying the issue in the mid-1970s. Therefore, I speak from personal knowledge as well.

No one says that every regulation makes sense. We have admitted that. We admitted it in discussions on Freedom to Move as well as in discussions in this House. Quite frankly, there are some dumb regulations.

If a trucker is going from point A to point C, passing through province B, I would say that there is no need to have a licence to travel through, at least in terms of permission to haul. That kind of change makes sense and we would support it. However, my caucus and I are concerned about the impact on the stability.

The Member referred to small companies which get bigger and bigger and have a monopoly. As long as there are rules in place to protect the interests of the consumers, it is a good thing. However, we are worried about something which we have seen happen in the United States. That is, as a result of this Bill and others like it at the provincial level we will end up with such monopolies anyway. In a situation where there are two small operations feeding one town, which can only realistically support one operator, the weaker of the two will go out of business. The stronger operator will still have the monopoly, but this time there will be no rules to protect the consumer from exorbitant rate increases, reductions in service, etcetera. That is why we are taking the position which we are on this legislation.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, during his intervention the Member quoted a letter from concerned shippers. Could he give us an indication of who are those concerned shippers? Is that the group responsible for the few letters of support for this Bill?

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I can advise my colleague and other Members of the House that the Coalition of Concerned Shippers lists as its members the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission, the Canadian Chemical Producers' Association, the Canadian Export Association, the Canadian Fertilizer Institute, the Canadian Industrial Transportation League, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the Canadian National Millers Association, the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association, the Coal Association of Canada, the Council of Forest Industries, the Grocery Products Manufacturers of Canada, the Mining Association of Canada, the Propane Gas Association of Canada and the Retail Council of Canada.

In my mind those groups represent the larger sectors of our economic society. They are not the mom and pop corner stores which we are all concerned about protecting. They are the big folks and they are the ones who support this Bill. They have the volume business. They already have a chance of getting breaks beause of the vast amount of goods which they ship, unlike the smaller concerns which operate less than truckload all the time. We know who this organization represents. We are receiving letters from both small and large truckers and from individual Canadians who are concerned about this legislation.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I would like to pursue one further matter with the Hon. Member. He mentioned that monopolies are possible. It is not only possible, it happens. I can cite the example of the bus service between Calgary and Edmonton. Greyhound operates a bus every hour for 10 hours each day, both ways. No other bus line can possibly get in. Greyhound simply adds more buses and has acquired a complete monopoly. There is no longer even a railway to compete. I have nothing against Greyhound, but I know of two or three other firms which would like to operate as well. They could give equally good service, but they cannot get in because, for one thing, they cannot afford the hearings.

The Member says that it is okay as long as we protect the shippers. I believe that truckers are very responsible people. When they are starting up a business to operate, intra or inter, they must spend a lot of money. A truck is not bought with peanuts today. They must make a big investment. They will not go where there is no business. They will go where there is ample business for two. They will carry out their own feasibility studies before entering that market to determine whether their business will survive. Obviously, no one wants to go bankrupt, but there seems to be a suggestion that truckers will be irresponsible. I believe they are very responsible and will conduct their business accordingly.

• (1630)

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, let me give the Hon. Member an example. The National Energy Board just approved the construction of a parallel pipeline to a plant in southern Ontario. If the Hon. Member compares that to allowing two buses to run in a community that is already served well, I think he will understand the point I am trying to make. We need efficiency of service and quality of service; we do not necessarily need competition to obtain that. We simply need the service and the controls to make sure that people are protected.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The floor will be given on debate to the Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins). It will be the last speech with a 20-minute maximum.

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-19, unlike many Bills that pass through this House, is much more complex than can be seen on the surface.

I believe that monopolies can also exist under deregulation. The well-heeled businesses will survive. It will be very difficult for the smaller firms to combat the larger trucking firms from the United States in a deregulated system under Bill C-19.

Bill C-19 should not be passed into law until Canadian tax reforms have been established. Tax reform and deregulation in the United States took place at the same time and it is believed that the U.S. tax reforms have given the U.S. for-hire trucking industry a competitive advantage over the Canadian industry. The U.S. trucking industry has cost advantages due to less government intervention in labour-management relations, higher tax write-offs related to depreciation, lower taxes on fuel, and lower taxes on the trucking industry as a whole. This already puts the Canadian trucking industry on the defensive.

The Government should not implement this policy unilaterally without giving the Canadian trucking industry some support through lower taxes and lower fuel costs.

Bill C-19 should not be passed until a national safety code is completed, as has been pointed out by almost every Member who has spoken in this debate. Those who say that deregulation is the ultimate achievement of private enterprise are not being straightforward. If we are to operate under a regime which allows anyone to operate a trucking business, we need a safety code and it will be necessary to have an army of officers to enforce the safety rules once they are put in place.

A national safety code would prevent the situation which presently exists in the United States. Since 1980, when the U.S. Motor Carrier Act was passed deregulating the trucking industry, seven out of ten trucks have been taken off the road because of unsafe equipment. Accidents involving trucks have increased by 18 per cent in the United States since 1980. I suggest that it is not simply a trend, or that drivers are more careless, but that it is rather a reflection of the condition of the motor vehicles themselves. This Parliament should look at these statistics very seriously when considering the passage of this legislation.

The competition in the trucking industry will be very severe. Provisions relating to predatory or discriminatory pricing have a limited application to transportation. Bill C-19 is silent on the question of predation. The Canadian for-hire trucking industry is simply being thrust into the continental marketplace that is increasingly being dominated by a handful of billion-dollar U.S. general freight carriers, with absolutely no safeguards and certainly no assurances that those dominant continental truckers will provide a significant number of jobs in Canada while tapping key industrial markets at the same time.

Let me make a comparison between some of the major companies. In 1984, Brazeau Transport in Canada had an income of $165 million. Kingsway Transport Ltd. of Rexdale had $250 million in business in 1985. Roadway Express in the United States had a business turnover of $4 billion in 1985. The deregulation of the trucking industry will allow Roadway to come to Canada to compete against Canadian trucking firms like Brazeau Transport which had an income of $165 million in 1985. What chance will it have to compete?

There is nothing in the legislation to prevent major American trucking firms such as Roadway Express and others from coming into Canada with lower freight rates to drive smaller, less competitive Canadian firms out of business. We have not heard whether the Government will have safety regulations in place to control the major American firms that will come here. We heard what a tremendous thing it was going to be for the Canadian shoe industry when protection was taken off Canadian shoes and the shoe industry was left to compete with everyone on the open market. But what has happened? Over half those businesses have gone down, others are in serious trouble and over half the jobs in the Canadian shoe industry have been lost since that took place.

I have a letter here from a small van line company. It is a family business. It has another major concern. Its concern is what compensation the Government is going to give to existing Canadian businesses when it takes away some of the things the industry now has, some of the assets of the company such as a major name which has been on its doors for years. That name was worth something. The owner paid for that name when he bought the company. Is he going to be compensated for that? We do not know. The letter states:

> As you are also aware, such legislation will severely affect trucking companies across Canada.

This is a family-owned business and the owner is concerned. The letter goes on:

> A critical problem raised by the National Transportation Act is the destruction of value of operating licences and good will which will be caused by the introduction of deregulation.

> The money invested in operating licences over the last 60 or so years since the industry has been regulated represents a sizeable investment in a trucking business. This investment is critical especially in the case of small and medium-size (and largely family-run) companies which represent the majority of the industry in Canada. In these the investment often represents the pension capital of the owners in terms of selling the business. Another problem is that financial planning by the industry will be suddenly and significantly disrupted.
> It is unfair to change the game's rules without compensation when so much capital has been invested by businesses in good faith. In the United States, where deregulation was initiated, tax relief was established along with deregulation.
> Similarly, if the Government is proceeding with similar legislation, we should also receive similar relief.
>
> The existing tax structure was not formulated during a time when deregulation was a consideration and does not provide for the severe impact which deregulation will have on the value of operating authorities.
> Under the current system, the majority of the industry would have little which could be depreciated despite the great losses it would be expected to take.
> Such an oversight would both strike deeply into the heart of the entrepreneurial community the government is trying to foster, and erode its competitiveness with the U.S. carriers especially in a freer-trade economy.

What we are really talking about in this transportation Bill is free trade in the transportation industry. I quote again from the letter:

> The Canadian Trucking Association has presented a number of solutions to the Finance Department. Despite this constructive approach, the industry is having difficulty resolving this matter with Finance.

The industry is having trouble with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). It is obviously not getting a very good hearing. These are the Canadian businesses which are going to be expected to compete with major American companies which already have been given their favours by their own Finance Department in Washington.

I mentioned the fact that trucking accidents in the United States have increased by 18 per cent since 1980. We have to chalk that up to deregulation and the lack of safety enforcement, severe competition among companies operating on small profits, running tires a little longer, letting brakes go a little longer, and who is there to pick up this inefficiency in the industry in the way the company runs its vehicles? This is extremely important, particularly in a country like Canada which has rail lines which have been serving Canadian communities and regions for years. With trucking firms going in and taking away rail traffic, the next thing we know the railway will be gone. We are throwing all that extra traffic onto the highways of Canada. The trucking industry would not be allowed to enter into confidential contracts and would, therefore, be made subject to unfair competition. Industry representatives fear that pressures to reduce rates would greatly weaken several Canadian trucking firms, rendering them vunerable to foreign takeovers.

There is another very important item which must be considered. Since 1981 the costs to a Canadian trucking company have increased by 28 per cent. At the same time, its shipping rates have gone up something like 5 per cent. Today on average, across the Canadian scene, trucking firms are running about a 3 per cent profit spread in Canada. At the same time in the United States, and largely because, as I said, the tax system was changed to accommodate deregulation of the trucking industry, there is a 10 per cent profit spread with trucking firms. That base alone, that is, a 10 per cent spread of profit in the United States, as opposed to a 3 per cent profit spread in the Canadian industry, automatically indicates that the U.S. has greater financial resources to move into Canada and put on the kind of competition against Canadian firms about which I have been speaking.

What about the road system in Canada? We are going to get more trucking firms competing, more trucks on the road. They will be competing against CN and CP. Competition is good as long as it does not destroy the goose which laid the egg in the first place. Here in Canada we have a situation where CN and CP are now about the only facilities which serve some of those communities out there in the regions. If the regions lose the rail service, they lose transportation. Are we going to throw away the capacity of 4,500 railway cars per year which go into one pulp and paper plant in the Ottawa Valley on the Quebec side of the river? Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, those 4,500 carloads of paper going out of there by truck? There are 1,800 carloads of chemicals which go into that same plant. Are we going to put that 1,800 carloads of railway traffic into trucks instead and take it over the roads of Ontario and Quebec?

I think the two provincial Governments will be in a position where they really have to take a very close look at improving the roads at the same time as they are considering deregulation of the transportation industry. I can imagine what would happen in eastern Ontario and western Quebec if that kind of traffic—and I am only talking about one plant here—were thrown onto the roads which are now in existence.

The Consolidated Bathurst Paper Mill receives approximately 4,500 railway cars per year. The company ships out paper in those cars. Out of the number I have mentioned nearly 1,800 of these cars carry chemicals which include chlorine, caustic soda, and bunker oil, to name just a few.

• (1650)

My concern is that if the railroads are allowed to abandon the rail line servicing this mill because of a lack of traffic then we face seeing these chemicals being transported over our provincial highways. Our local fire and police departments would have to be equipped to handle major spills. As traffic would increase, the fire departments would have to take on a different role. No longer would their role be just that of fire-fighting, it would be to handle major chemical spills on highways.

Our roads are already congested with heavy transports. I mention that in regard to the roads in eastern Ontario and western Quebec, which are a perfect example of this. We would be looking at another approximately 14,000 transports a year carrying these goods if the rail line is closed. The CN is talking about closing this rail line.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) is in the House today. I am glad he is here. In answer to a question one day he said to me that no Government would close the main line of the CN, say, from Montreal to North Bay, and that he would be looking into the matter. I will be holding the Minister to that. As these companies come in from the United States, hopefully, Canadian companies will be able to survive and grow bigger to compete with freight rates on lines in Canada. As this happens, we will see the CNR and the CPR before the new transportation authority looking for an opportunity to close up more rail lines. I think it is bad to put all this traffic onto the highways of Canada when the situation can be handled more safely by rail.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question. There has been a considerable amount of discussion with respect to this matter. If one reads through Hansard and the Freedom to Move document one will see that there has been much said about a national safety code. At present there is no such code. Regulations with respect to safety and licensing are different in every province. Does the Hon. Member think it is possible to have a safety code in place by 1989, when this Bill is supposed to come into effect?

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) for his question. It is an important question indeed. What he is really talking about is the co-ordination of safety measures across Canada. Where regional safety measures have been developed over a number of years it is natural for there to be differences in terms of safety precautions in the different provinces. Sometimes the very geography of a particular region of the country causes more emphasis to be placed on one type of safety measure than another.

If one is to co-ordinate the regulations and pick and choose from those which have already been developed by the 10 provinces, then one is talking about a long period of time. I think the Hon. Member has asked me his question tongue-in-cheek. We have seen—and I am sure the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) knows very well today although he did not at first—how easy it is to deal with 10 provincial Governments. That is precisely what will have to take place. Not only will 10 provinces have to be dealt with in terms of reaching some type of agreement, but that will have to be preceded by hearings in order to find out what type of safety measures one is looking for. Witnesses will have to be heard before a committee, be it a bureaucratic committee or a parliamentary committee. Presumably such regulations would be reviewed by a parliamentary committee in the end.

By the time we get around to carrying out all these procedures, and we have been talking about having them in place by 1989, I think that someone in the Government will have to be more decisive and really get on the ball to complete these regulations in short order. We all know how long hearings of this type take. We all know that the matter cannot be settled in one federal-provincial meeting between Transport Ministers at the provincial and federal levels. Undoubtedly, they will all want to meet to review these matters because there is a lot at stake in it for each of them.

Once safety measures are in place, what is the next big issue? It is enforcing them. How will we enforce them? It is something that would be beyond the capability of the present police forces across the country. They are already overloaded with work. There will have to be new officers appointed to handle transportation matters. A new group will have to be created to work with local authorities, or safety inspectors will have to be appointed. There will be many matters to plan and put in place even after we know what it is we have to do.

The Hon. Member's question certainly provokes a great deal of thought. It brings to light many points that have not really been thought of. We can stop and think to make up safety regulations since we know pretty well what is required. However, we all know that administering the laws that are passed in Parliament is quite another kettle of fish, if I may use that expression.

I thank the Hon. Member for his question. It is an important one. Like him, I will be interested in watching the process over the next two years with respect to what will unfold in the area of safety regulations in terms of the deregulation of the trucking industry in Canada.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member mentioned the costs of trucking in Canada being more than double those in the United States. He mentioned that they were 10 per cent in the United States and 28 per cent in Canada. I am not quarrelling with the Hon. Member's figures. One expense which interprovincial truckers have today, which in my view is unnecessary and which adds to the cost of shipping, something which is passed on to the consumer and accomplishes nothing, is the cost of hearings which a trucker has to attend in order to operate. Instead of operating like one nation, we operate like 10 Balkan states. Having one hearing is understandable, but having four, five or six is not. Each one costs thousands of dollars. Each one consumes a great deal of time. These hearings create unnecessary expenses on the part of the trucking industry, costs which are passed on to the shippers and the consumers. This is one area in which we can certainly cut down costs.

Convenience and necessity do not involve safety. The Hon. Member mentioned the figures with respect to safety in the U.S. What are the figures today with respect to safety in Canada? We cannot blame that on deregulation. No one will go out deliberately to have an accident. In my view convenience and necessity have nothing to do with safety. It is the safety rules generally across the nation that will determine the safety and the safety requirements demanded by insurance companies because they have to pay through the nose when truckers do not operate safely. Those are some of the things that will have to be considered.

Mr. Hopkins: I know that the Hon. Member is a pretty good hockey player and he is very good at stick handling. But the Hon. Member lost the puck when I was speaking. I stated that since 1981 there has been a 28 per cent cost increase to trucking firms in Canada. The 10 per cent that I talked about in the United States was not in relation to cost; it was a 10 per cent profit margin that the trucking industry is enjoying across the United States. In Canada there is only a 3 per cent profit margin within the trucking industry.

The Hon. Member said that safety and deregulation cannot be related. Many people, including myself, would disagree with him. There will be severe competition when there are no regulations in place, and there will be more people competing in the field. There is nothing wrong with that, as long as safety regulations are in place, and as long as they are enforced. It must be admitted that when deregulation was introduced in the United States, there was an increase of 18 per cent in accidents. We have been told that some of those are related to the lack of safety of vehicles. The start of this whole business is only the beginning when we talk about deregulation. As I mentioned to the Hon. Member for Prince Albert, it depends on how those safety regulations will be administered, and how well they will be administered. We will have to be on top of this situation when it happens.

The Hon. Member spoke about costs. One thing that has not been sacrificed in the Canadian system to date is the safety measures. The Hon. Member mentioned hearings, and they do cost a lot of money. But when a person has established a trucking firm and has spent a lot of money on equipment and on his business, then at least he has a little security. He must still compete with many other businesses in Canada. That is also good. As far as the deregulation measures are concerned—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Could I ask the Hon. Member to conclude. There is a further question to be put from another Member.

Mr. Hopkins: I will conclude by saying that in the past the transportation industry in Canada has been well served by regulations. I do not think that they should be thrown out the window holus-bolus. When people have spent a lifetime building up their company, they deserve at least some compensation from the Government if those regulations which have served the industry well over the years, are going to be taken away.

Mr. Nowlan: I wish to ask the Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) a question. The Hon. Member is a very throughtful Member. The question of the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), who is a very active and consistent member of the Transport Committee, raised what he has brought up in the hearings on Freedom to Move, which is the objective of removing these 10 regulatory environments and trying to get some type of national environment in order that traffic will be able to flow across the country. At a time when we are having discussions with another country to increase trade and facilities between the two countries, we have the interesting anomaly that in this country we still have the 10 jurisdictions which impede traffic. I do not wish to talk about the safety matter. I know that the Hon. Member did not intend to do it, because he is an even and responsible Member of the House, but the safety bogy is always raised like the goblins at Hallowe'en.

Every Minister of Transport, this Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister who brought in the Freedom to Move paper in the initial Bill, states, and it is also stated in the Bill if the Member would read it, and I know that he has read Bill C-19 from stem to stern, that safety will not be diminished at all. There is a different type of environment for regulation, but there will still be safety.

In terms of the American situation, it does cause concern. Regardless of the profit differential between the two countries, I am sure the Hon. Member knows that the interesting fact is that since deregulation in the United States, there are a thousand licences in the United States from Canadian trucking firms that are doing business there, and they have increased their market there by 8 to 12 per cent since deregulation in the United States. Would the Hon. Member answer this question that he has addressed, as have other Members? If that has happened in the United States with us competing in that larger market—and perhaps because of our dollar differential of 35 to 40 per cent, which certainly is quite an interesting advantage, we have been able to break into that market and increase our share—why should we be extra-concerned that we will not be able to keep our share in our own country?

Mr. Hopkins: I thank the Hon. Member for his question. He is a long-time Member of the House and has served very well many of these transport items.

In my talk I mentioned some of the inequities of the system as it is planned to be introduced into Canada. Why are Canadians doing so well in the United States? One, I mentioned fuel costs. They are already competing down there on a level with the same fuel costs. There is a larger volume of traffic in the United States, and there is more room to manoeuvre. Canadian companies are used to operating in a difficult climate with a greater overhead. When they go to the United States with more traffic, cheaper fuel costs, they are able to compete on an equal basis.

In Canada there are higher fuel costs, competition is in smaller communities without the volume of traffic. Rail lines are now serving certain areas well. When the competition starts in Canada, there will be regional development which is more poorly served by rail lines and by the trucking industry, because they will all try to get into the more crowded urban market of Canada. They will be in much the same environment there to compete as they are in the United States where there is exceptionally heavy traffic.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired. Is there unanimous consent to give the Member two more minutes to complete his answer?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hopkins: In conclusion let me say that I hope that I have given the Hon. Member some food for thought. We can end this debate by saying that, given half a chance, Canadians can compete with anybody. If I were the Hon. Member, I would not put too much emphasis on the free trade talks. If this legislation does not go any better than the free trade talks, we will be in serious trouble.

• (1710)

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak for a few minutes on Bill C-19. Probably a good place to start would be with the statement made the other day by the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse). He suggested that the Government was adopting a laissez-faire philosophy. Obviously that is what the Government is doing in this Bill, in Bill C-18, and in a number of other Bills which it has brought before the House with the intention of opening up a variety of industries to the free market. Basically that is the philosophy of the Government. It is actually returning to a previous structure which existed in the country, that is, a sort of dog eat dog market. The Government is removing protection by deregulating the industry. It will look the other way while industry fights with itself, eliminates itself, and eliminates service to Canadians. It is moving toward having less involvement in the distribution of goods. In doing that, the Government is condemning certain industries in certain parts of the country to a gradual but inexorable death.

If we do not have a transportation structure which allows the hinterland or the more remote areas of Canada to ship whatever goods they produce to market, particularly the central markets of Canada and of the United States with which we do considerable trade, those areas gradually shrivel up and die. A certain amount of this is already going on in remote areas.

Truckers are very concerned about Bill C-19, respecting motor vehicle transport, because they have seen what happened south of the border. Some of the larger and more able companies went into the United States. They have been watching what happened there. They know that there is a possibility, or a fairly good chance, that the same kind of thing will happen in Canada, since we are following the lead of the United States in deregulation. They have watched the devasatation of that trucking industry in many ways and the concentration that has come about to save companies which could be saved.

There have been massive lay-offs in the United States. A large group of truckers or people related to that industry have been laid off. Also there has been a large number of bankruptcies and increasing concentration with small trucking companies being picked up by larger ones and an elimination of competition as a consequence. Also there has been in the United States—and it is likely to happen here—a loss of service to the hinterland.

Although initially there were generally lower prices in the United States, those lower prices have only continued in the corridors between larger centres. More remote areas are being faced with either no service at all or more costly service.

The industry in Canada has developed a great pride in service over the year. It has been proud of the fact that it reached into every nook and cranny of the country and provided service to small communities. With deregulation it will no longer be required to do this.

The present structure is such that, for example, a trucker will go into a smaller community in northern Saskatchewan once or twice a week even if he does not have a full load. Everyone knows that that service is there. It has been suggested that if deregulation is put into effect, there will be no necessity to provide routine service—in other words, service when one needs it—regardless of whether or not the truck is full. I recognize that Canadians pay for that extra service, but they are glad to do it, just to be sure it is there when needed.

That effect of deregulation bothers me most because my constituency is a northern one. Many small communities along the northern portion of my constituency depend upon truck service for their supplies. Having lived in the far North a great deal of my life, I know what can happen if there is no routine service and small communities must depend upon someone deciding to service them when they have a full load. These small communities either end up ensuring that they have supplies on hand at all times or that they have an alternative service in place upon which they can call when regular service, which exists under the present system, disappears.

The effects of the Bill will be felt by many communities which would not mind, at the present time, a little cheaper service but are happy because they have service. If we say to truckers who want to develop a service into a small community that they may do so if they are willing and able and they make a little money, there is always an opportunity to skim the cream. If the industry is deregulated, a trucker can go into such areas to haul large loads and therefore eliminate effective service to persons who have traditionally been served in those communities. This happens even now and it will happen even more if the basis of the trucking industry is ready, willing, and able. It is dangerous.

We should not let the Government reduce service to Canadians as it has done with the Post Office, air travel, and railway service, by the abandonment of rail lines and the elimination of terminals, and as it is now doing in trucking.

• (1720)

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on Bill C-19, especially after certain comments heard in the course of this debate, and I am referring to what was said by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) to my colleague from Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart). These comments concerned the position taken by the Liberal Party, and the question arose whether the Liberal Party was opposed to the legislation because that was its duty as the Official Opposition or whether the Liberal Party was really taking a stand against the deregulation proposed by the Government. I would like to inform the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) that the Liberal Party's position is quite clear compared with positions of the Conservative Government and the New Democratic Party. While the Government side favours privatization, the NDP often takes the middle-of-the road view, which does not necessarily reflect a socialist outlook or a social democratic philosophy.

In the course of my speech, I would like to talk about a rather special situation that exists in the riding of Saint-Maurice, where trucking companies systematically object to deregulation because to them, it means a net loss in the value of their operating licences. On the other hand, our riding has a number of pulp and paper companies which look very favourably on the kind of deregulation proposed by the Government. And that brings me to the issue of the consultation initiated by the Government, which was not complete and very superficial, and on the basis of which the Government introduced a Bill providing for practically unfettered deregulation, which does not sit well with a number of the transportation companies in our area.

Mr. Speaker, I referred to a number of trucking companies that have a problem with deregulation as proposed in the Bill. We have a group here in the riding of Saint-Maurice which in 1986 had a turnover of $18 million, and employs 125 regular employees and 25 casual or part-time workers. Ninety-eight per cent of the company's business consists of bulk shipping and 2 per cent is general shipping. Of course the company has several other branches and one of the companies leases tractors and semitrailers, and here again 98 per cent of tractors and semitrailers are leased to the Asselin group, the name of the company involved, and 2 per cent to other firms.

As I said, the sales figures for 1986 amount to $18 million, and one of the concerns expressed by this company during an address to the Chamber of Commerce is that the most disturbing aspect in the transport industry is deregulation as advocated by this Government. The license value will drop. The Trucking Association of Quebec asks the Government to consider compensation amounting to 1 cent a litre on fuel used by public trucking firms during the five years immediately preceding the year when the new regulation system will be implemented. This way each licensed trucker would be able to submit an annual claim of up to 20 per cent of the tax credits as of the base year, with a limit of seven years. These recommendations were made but the Government did not act on them because there were other recommendations from pulp and paper associations and a number of other very important organizations and groups. They pointed out that the pulp and paper industry strongly supports the early deregulation of interprovincial motor transport and the enforcement of standard provincial standards designed to promote a flexible and profitable interprovincial motor transport industry in Canada.

Obviously, Mr. Speaker, when the Government was confronted with these situations it could have found a formula which would have been an acceptable compromise between extreme positions and which could have led to the kind of deregulation which most Members of the House could have endorsed, but it drew the line and introduced the legislation now being debated in the House. There is a real possibility that deregulation will reduce the value of the operating licences, and hence the book value, of these companies. When we know that many Canadian carriers depend on the value of their licence as security for obtaining bank loans, it means the value of the company will drop with that of the operating licence. Loan opportunities for all Canadian trucking companies will be sharply reduced, and without federal assistance, they will be less able to compete with the big American carriers.

Mr. Speaker, if we look at the Bill before the House today, there is a major problem facing those transportation companies that are not one of our big Canadian carriers. The very basic point being made by these companies is that eventually, they may go bankrupt when the American giants appear on the Canadian market and compete directly with them. The latter companies may take considerable losses for one, two or three years, but they have sufficient assets to be able to absorb these losses, because in any case, they are working from a financial base that is far stronger than that of any Canadian carrier.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Government to postpone consideration of this Bill and to do the consultation that is needed. We know that as far as Bills C-18 and C-19 are concerned, the Government's consultation process was inadequate. Intervenors from the transport sector were ignored or, if they were heard, their claims or comments were not necessarily taken into consideration.

If this Bill is adopted in its present form, one serious consequence will be a substantial reduction in the safety standards applied to the trucking industry. Mr. Speaker, I am sure you realize that if these standards, which were not a major issue in the consultations conducted by the group that travelled across Canada to hear the various intervenors, if these standards are not observed and are not made an integral part of Bill C-19, transportation companies that must cut costs to survive will start cutting back on preventive maintenance. If that happens, we may have a situation practically identical to the one existing now in the United States, especially in the State of California where the number of accidents has increased by 18 per cent in recent years.

Mr. Speaker, I hope consideration of this Bill is postponed and that the Government does not now approve the provisions of Bill C-19.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is as follows. Mr. Lewis, seconded by Mr. Fennell, moves:

That this question be now put.

The question is on the motion of Mr. Lewis.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more that five Members having risen:

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Lewis), which was agreed to on the following division:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I think there could well be a disposition on the part of the House to apply this vote to the next one. Perhaps you might want to see if that is the case.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there agreement that we apply the vote we have just taken to the main motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I think there would be a disposition to do that, and also add the name of the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) to the voting Members as voting with her Party, and my colleague, the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Edwards), as voting with his Party.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Crosbie) which was agreed to on the following division:

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER—AFRICAN VISIT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Parliamentary Secretary with regard to business of the House and, specifically, statements by Ministers. We were under the impression last week that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) would be making a statement as a result of his trip to Africa. Almost a week has passed. Could the Parliamentary Secretary give us some idea of when we might expect to have that statement by the Prime Minister?

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I will make inquiries. I will endeavour to communicate with my colleague with regard to exactly when the statement on South Africa can be made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) if, in fact, there is going to be one made.

PETITIONS

RIDEAU HALL—PUBLIC'S ACCESS TO GROUNDS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have been tabling a series of petitions in the House as fast as people can sign them. This petition is from people of my riding, of the National Capital Region, and also from several tourists who have come to Ottawa. They say that whereas a decision to close Rideau Hall grounds was made by the National Capital Commission, the Department of Public Works, the RCMP and the office of the Governor General without prior notice; and whereas the closure of this attractive and tranquil park affects thousands of visitors to the capital from across the country who held Canada's uniquely accessible Rideau Hall as a symbol of the trust, openness and democracy of which Canadians are so justly proud; and whereas area residents from the entire national capital region who have used and enjoyed the grounds of Rideau Hall, recognizing the security concerns that prompted the closure decision, cannot accept a blanket closure of the 120-acre park to public access; the undersigned, your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to open the decision for consultation with citizens' representatives of the large and growing opposition in order that a modus vivendi be created that would satisfy both the Government's security concerns and the public right to access.

REQUEST TO WITHDRAW TARIFF ON ENGLISH LANGUAGE BOOKS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): I have ten petitions from my constituents and Canadians from across Ontario and several other provinces. These people wish to lay a grievance before the Government and the Parliament of Canada. They state that whereas the Government of Canada has imposed a retaliatory tariff on imported books in the English language which has limited the access of Canadians to literature and information; and whereas the tariff has little negative effect on the publishing industry in the United States yet penalizes Canada's consumers, book publishers and distributors in Canada's culture; and whereas rising book prices have placed a strain on book acquisition programs and policies of our nation's public and specialized libraries; the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to rescind this tariff which threatens irreparable harm to the Canadian book industry and compromises federal policy on cultural industries in respect of free trade negotiations.

Mr. Speaker: Before I recognize the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), perhaps I should comment that today he has reached that significant honour and stage in his life in which he joins some others of us, having passed his fiftieth year. Perhaps we could take judicial notice of the fact that he is no longer "l'enfant terrible" but now a mature and seasoned veteran of this place to whom we look for great guidance.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CNR'S CENTRALIZATION POLICY

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It just goes to show that there is still hope for most of us in this place.

I have the honour and privilege to present a petition that is signed by some 1,500 residents of my home town of Capreol which has a population of 4,000. Therefore, we can see that 1,500 is a significant number of petitioners.

The petitioners in Capreol state that CNR has embarked upon a policy of centralizing railway operations out of smaller railway towns to the major regional headquarters, which is Toronto in our case. The petitioners have also pointed out that the company has refused to provide the public access to any of the conclusions reached through its job rationalization studies.

The citizens also point out that CN has consistently refused to provide any facts, figures, or financial statements to justify its claim for centralization. They point out that centralization is contradictory to present federal and provincial government policies of decentralizing services across the country.

Therefore, the petitioners call upon Parliament to require CNR, a Crown corporation, to end its policy of centralization of railway services, and further call upon Parliament to order a full public inquiry into the company's operations.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure and an honour to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 106 on behalf of a number of Canadians who have indicated their concern regarding changes to the Patent Act. They believe that these changes to the Patent Act related to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy these necessary prescription drugs. They suggest that these proposals by the federal Government will result in higher costs to provincial government drug plans as well.

Therefore, they are calling upon Parliament, especially upon the Government, to reject the continuation of these changes to the Patent Act in an effort to provide fair and accessible prescription drugs to all Canadians.

ELECTIONS, PRIVILEGES AND PROCEDURE

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt) moved:

That the first report of the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure presented to the House on Tuesday, January 27, 1987, be concurred in.

He said: Mr. Speaker, at the outset I want to reassure my colleagues in the House, particularly on the government side, that this concurrence motion in the lobbying report presented by the committee is not any part of a plan to derail the Government's business for this day or for the week. It is not part of any plot or strategy—

Mr. Gormley: That is hard to believe.

Mr. Rodriguez: The Hon. Member opposite says that it is hard to believe. It is not hard to believe because the motion is appropriate.

Let me quote some headlines from Quorum between February 7 and February 9. For instance, the headline in The Ottawa Citizen on February 7 is: "RCMP Probing Tory Influence Peddling". In The Globe and Mail on Feburary 7, the headline states: "Liberals say four of PM's aides may have had role in rental deal". In The Gazette from Montreal, on February 7, the headline is, "PM: We'll win back public's faith". The headline in The Ottawa Citizen on February 9 is: "Letter links ministers, PMO to contract: MP". Another headline in the same paper states: "'I'm telling the truth,' Mulroney's accuser says". Another headline from The Globe and Mail on February 9 states: "Swirl of scandal lends impetus to PM's reform plans". Another headline on February 9 states: "Quebec Tories propose 'Moral Code' for politics". On Monday, February 9, another headline states: "Ban corporate donations, say Quebec Tories". A headline in The Gazette on February 9 states: "Millionaire insists PM interfered in lawsuit".

I point these out because one can even read today's newspaper to see that these are the kinds of headlines being presented to the Canadian public. I believe they create a certain cynicism about Canadian politics in the minds of Canadians.

The reason that the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure studied this whole question of lobbying stems from the whole situation involving Mr. Frank Moores and his setting up of Government Consultants International. Indeed, it was the impetus for the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to declare in August, 1985, following a cabinet meeting in Vancouver, that legislation would be introduced in Parliament. Frank Moores, a former Premier of Newfoundland, had set up this consulting firm. Its purpose was, as it turned out, to peddle influence. We are all aware of the fact that he had been appointed by the Prime Minister to the board of directors of Air Canada. Yet he was off lobbying for other airlines with respect to their dealings with the Government. There was the whole question of his obtaining a fishing licence for someone for a fee. The Prime Minister quite correctly recognized that that kind of behaviour gave the wrong message to the Canadian public. He recognized that it not only was not right but it was not seen to be right, and he promised legislation following the cabinet meeting in Vancouver in late August 1985. He did not leave it at the response to a media question in Vancouver. He tabled a statement in this House on Monday, September 9, 1985, and I will read what he said about lobbying legislation.

• (1120)

The fifth component of this comprehensive approach to public sector ethics is the undertaking of this Government to introduce into the House of Commons, at an early date, legislation to monitor lobbying activity and to control the lobbying process by providing a reliable and accurate source of information on the activities of lobbyists. We will require, among other things, paid lobbyists to register and identify their clients. This will enable persons who are approached by lobbyists for Canadian corporations, associations and unions, and by agents on behalf of foreign governments and other foreign interests, to be clearly aware of who is behind the representation.

I have accordingly asked my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, to prepare, on an urgent basis, legislation to govern lobbying activity.

That was on September 9, 1985. As it turned out, we did not get the promised legislation. However, what we got was a study by the Standing Committee on Elections, Priviliges and Procedure chaired by the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper), and I should add, admirably chaired. We carried out the study of lobbying and we very quickly recognized as we held hearings that there were considerable numbers of Canadian lobbyists. That was the first discovery.

We further discovered that very few of them wanted to have a registry set up. Indeed, Mr. Frank Moores, of Government Consultants International, appeared before the committee and said: "Oh, we do not have a problem with having a register of lobbyists, but we want to keep our clients secret". That was the line that most lobbyists used. They wanted a register of lobbyists but all it would have was the name of the lobbyist, which we would already know. They wanted no information with respect to their clients, the issue they were lobbying, and how much.

We also went to the United States and interviewed lobbyists. There is a system of registering lobbyists in the U.S. not only at the national level but at the state level. We very quickly discovered that while the need to register lobbyists was recognized, in fact there were so many loopholes in the system that an elephant could get through. For example, we discovered that in Washington, while there was a registry of lobbyists, it only covered Senators and Congressmen. The lobbyist registration did not cover lobbying being done with bureaucrats. It did not cover lobbying being done with the staff of Senators and Congressmen. It also excluded the White House.

We also discovered there was no provision for enforcement, there was no system for verification of the registry. Sure, they had to do it, but the clerk who had responsibility for the registry had no power to verify the information in the registry. The clerk certainly had no power to follow up and enforce the registry. There were no sanctions.

We then went to California because we understood that was a state which had very tough lobby registration. We heard witnesses and found out California had gone to the other extreme. It had surrounded its lobbyists legislation with a lot of very finite details which became very cumbersome and indeed very bureaucratic. For example, lobbyists had to declare any expenditure of more than $10. If they took a state legislator out to lunch, they had to take out a little black book and put down the amount they spent for lunch and so on.

Mr. Riis: The result of the McDonald's lobby, probably.

Mr. Rodriguez: Very probably so they could all go and eat at McDonald's, as the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) suggests. We found that was going too far and it could become very bureaucratic and cumbersome.

When we interviewed the lobbyists in California we were told that if we Candians were going to put a lobbyists' registration in place, they would advise us to make it tough and make sure that we get a registry which reflects every aspect of lobbying but without the ridiculous nature of picayune amounts to be registered, and so on. They pointed out the need to cover the sort of indirect lobbying which goes on through mass mailings. They thought we should pay some attention to that. They also pointed out we should ensure we outlawed contingency lobbying which is where a lobbyist will lobby for a contract and if it is successful receives 10 per cent of the value of the contract. They told us to stay away from that.

Of course, the question which came up constantly in our committee was, do we really need this legislation? Do we really need to register lobbyists? Is it that much of a problem? I pointed out the example of Frank Moores. However, there is also a very insidious kind of lobbying which goes on in Canada and touches on Hon. Members of the House. That has to be these friendship associations. There was an article by Linda Diebel which appeared in the The Gazette. It clearly outlines the power and influence that the South Koreans have in our Government. The article points out how powerful the South Korean lobby is. It points out that the South Korean Government has set up a Canada-South Korea friendship association and that a considerable number of MPs belong to it. As a matter of fact, more than one-quarter of Canada's MPs and Senators—a greater number than in any other country's friendship force on Parliament Hill—are members of the Canada-South Korea Parliamentary Association. The honorary president of the organization is the former Minister of National Defence. The Sergeant-at-Arms sits on the board of the association. The Hon. Member for Verdun—Saint-Paul (Mr. Chartrand) said: "They are very nice to you". Of course they are very nice. They are nice because they are trying to make a good impression. They are trying to become friends with Members of Parliament and trying to improve their image. That becomes extremely important when matters such as duties and tariffs on South Korean goods come up for decision making.

• (1130)

A statement made by the South Koreans is important to consider. They said: "Success all comes down to an image, a very good image". Of course they want to push a good image. That is important in the lobbying business because when one impresses legislators with what a good person one is or what a good organization one belongs to then one is more likely to have the ear of MPs when it is needed.

Former Members of the House who were concerned about lobbying had introduced Private Members' Bills concerning lobbying, starting with Mr. Barry Mather of the NDP who introduced a Bill to register lobbyists. The late Walter Baker introduced a Private Members' Bill on the same subject. That cudgel was picked up by James McGrath, the former Member for St. John's East. He introduced a Private Members' Bill, as did I. I introduced Bill C-269 which dealt with the whole question of lobbying.

Having studied the matter very thoroughly and closely, our committee made recommendations. The recommendations of the committee were made public about three weeks ago when we tabled our report in the House. We recommended the adoption and implementation of a system of registration of paid lobbyists. I point out that this was a unanimous report. Members of the committee who represent all Parties in the House agreed that lobbyists have to be registered. We also suggested that the lobbyists organize themselves into an association of lobbyists. We recommended that in addition to the system of registration. They should establish some code of ethical behaviour and police themselves. They should be responsible for their own actions, apart from the registration process that we have recommended. We have recommended that the registration process come under the direction of the Assistant Deputy Registrar General of Canada. We recommended that there be no fee to register a lobbyist and that information about a lobbyist ought to be obtainable on request from the Assistant Deputy Registrar General and that there be a fee to cover the cost of printing information, et cetera.

We believe it is important to know who the lobbyist is and for whom he is lobbying. We want to know the client of the lobbyist and the issue. In other words, we want to know who is doing what to whom. I also wanted to know for how much. But in light of the fact that this was a unanimous report I dropped my demand and went along with the other members of the committee for the sake of unity. After a period of two years we are prepared to review the legislation and see how it is working. At that time we might make a recommendation with respect to how much a lobbyist is being paid.

It was also important to know that we could cover the legal profession when members of that profession are acting as lobbyists for their clients. We have made a distinction between that function and the function of lawyers who appear before quasi-judicial bodies such as the CTC or the CRTC in respect of some type of application.

I recommend to all Members that they read the report of the committee very carefully. I call upon the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) and upon the Prime Minister to bring before the House the legislation which was promised in September, 1985. I think Parliament is ready for it. The country is certainly ready for it. Not to bring it forward would be a dereliction of duty.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I enjoyed the speech of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). I must say—and I am sure he will take this in the right light—that his comments today were more temperate than some I have heard before.

I wish to comment on something the Hon. Member said in his opening remarks. He suggested that Mr. Moores and GCI were peddling influence. Perhaps it was just the Hon. Member's use of words, but I hope he understands that influence peddling is a criminal offence. I hope it was an inadvertent accusation on the part of the Hon. Member rather than a deliberate attempt to use the immunities of the Chamber to make that type of statement. The Hon. Member may have his views about the propriety of certain activities. However, I hope he shares my view that we ought to be cautious in terms of the language we use so that we do not make charges that we do not intend to make.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, the Minister said that I was more temperate. I would point out that that is because I am older today.

I did use the words "influence peddling". I can put it in the vernacular used by Mr. Moores' company when it appeared before our committee. The representative of the company who appeared before the committee said that the services of the company were "selective advocacy". I could substitute "influence peddling" for "selective advocacy", and I will put that phraseology in "selective advocacy".

• (1140)

It is also interesting to note that when that company came before us it pointed out very clearly that it has also hired Liberals. It hired not only prominent Conservatives, but it also hired prominent Liberals. One of the dangerous things about this is how it would appear to the public. One fellow who was there representing the company wore his MP's pin. It is obvious that that would give him access to this building, to Members in the House, and possibly to the bureaucracy. So it is impressions that we are dealing with. In fact, the Moores company was formed after the election of the Conservative Government. We also know that Mr. Frank Moores was a big backer of the Prime Minister in his leadership bid. We know that he received the appointment to the board of directors of Air Canada. We also discovered that he was acting as a lobbyist for other airline companies in their dealings with government agencies and quasi-judicial bodies.

I want to point out that the impression is the Hon. Minister's problem and his Government's problem. I am here trying to help them clean up their act so the Government can start rising in the polls. I must be getting old when I reach out to my downtrodden Tory friends and give them a hand up. I moved this concurrence motion to give them a chance to clean up the mess, and here is the Minister accusing me of casting aspersions on Mr. Frank Moores. I would think that he would want to cut him loose. The Minister has a responsibility to tell us when there will be lobbyist registration. The Minister should tell us that, and not quibble over whether it is selective advocacy, or influence peddling. The impression of Canadians is that if you have powerful friends at court, you can get things. That is what the people out there recognize. That is what the Government has to deal with. After all, it is in third place and sinking like a stone.

Mr. Andre: I wish to withdraw my earlier comment about accusing the Member of being temperate. I lost my head there for a moment and thought that the Hon. Member had matured and grown reasonable. I was trying to make the point that one ought not to use, even inadvertently, language that accuses someone of criminal activity, unless the Hon. Member is prepared to back it up. I do not think that making that point as temperately as I attempted to do warranted the outburst of partisanship from the Hon. Member, given that his original remarks were more temperate, albeit from a perspective that I did not agree with every step of the way.

Let us be cautious about our language, and let us not accuse people of criminal activity unless we are prepared to back it up. That simple point should not have brought forward that tirade from the Hon. Member. It is regrettable that he responded in that manner, and then at the end of it all said that it is terrible what the public now thinks of the Government and our institutions, and we have to clean up our act. It goes both ways. You cannot pick up gobs of mud and throw them and then say, "Look at all the mud around". Some of the responsibility has to be borne in that regard. That was my only caution. Let us not accuse people of criminal acts unless we are prepared to back them up with facts.

Mr. Rodriguez: I did not say anything in the House that I did not say in the committee when these witnesses came before it. When I asked the representatives of Frank Moores' firm specific questions about ownership of the company, clients, costs, and the connection that they had with the Conservative Party, they all refused to answer those questions other than to point out that they have also hired Liberals. I said to them at that point, and I said it in the House, that that leads Canadians to come to one conclusion. If it cannot be dealt with out in the open, out in the sunlight, or if it has to be dealt with in the shadows, as the Prime Minister refers to it when he says that it should not be shrouded in mystery, it leads Canadians to come to no other conclusion but that this whole operation is influence peddling. When Canadians see how closely connected the lobbyists are with the Government, that is the only conclusion that they can come to. It is obvious that this is the conclusion they have come to, and the judgment that they have made about the Government.

Instead of quibbling, the Minister should be standing up and telling us when he will bring down the legislation to register lobbyists, and to create transparency in the operation of Government. Some degree of transparency is required. That is one of the advantages of lobbying registration. It does provide a degree of transparency to the Canadian people. The Canadian people have a right to know who is doing what to whom, and I would add for how much. Instead of making fractious comments about my temperance, as the Minister responsible for this legislation he ought to be telling us when he intends to bring forward a Bill.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to take part in this debate, and particularly to follow my good friend from Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). I have had the pleasure of working with him for some time on this particular subject. Through that process I have discovered that he is twice as bright as I am, twice as kind as I am, and he works twice as hard as I do. To top it all off, today I found out that he is twice as old.

One of the things that I find very intriguing about this process that we have just gone through is that we as a committee came up with a unanimous report. As the Speaker and Members of this House well know, that is an unusual circumstance in Parliament, particularly on an issue of such controversy. I went through the whole process and tried to figure out why this group of people would come together with a unanimous report. The first and obvious reason would be that they are all from the same Party, and everyone knows that this is not the case. The second reason would be that the members of the committee are a bunch of docile people. Anyone who knows the membership of this particular committee would know that the Hon. Members for Glengarry-Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), Okanagan—Similkameen (Mr. King), Prince George—Bulkley Valley (Mr. McCuish), and myself do not fit into the docile category. I finally figured out what allowed this group of men to come together with a unanimous report. We all have one thing in common, and that is the fact that virtually every one of us can walk under any table standing up, there is no bending down required. It is the only common bond that I can find through the whole process.

It was a unanimous report. The process took us pretty close to a year, because we discovered as we got into the issue that it was a difficult issue, and one of tremendous complexity. Wheels within wheels are turning in this issue. Another point that came out was that in reality we are dealing with a changing world.

I wish to quote from the report which talks about that changing world that we face. On page 5 of the report, when speaking about the influence of lobbying, it states:

> This influence in Canada has been primarily focussed on the bureaucracy and the executive. However, with the introduction of recent reforms to the committee system and private members' business in the House of Commons it is anticipated that the private Member will increasingly become the target of lobbying efforts.

Under the provisional Standing Orders of the House, standing committees now have unlimited mandates to study matters within their jurisdiction as well as the power and budget to engage the services of professional staff. It is our belief that in addition to all the usual contact points, these Standing Committees may provide a new focus for lobbying activities.

● (1150)

The bottom line is that we found the world of lobbying to be a changing world. It has all sorts of complexities that we want to address. One concern of committee members was that we establish a level playing field. We wanted to make sure that all those involved were playing under the same rules, restrictions and guidelines. That is why we recommended that members of the Canadian Bar and other professionals such as accountants be included in the registration. If memory serves me correctly, when members of the Canadian Bar appeared before the committee, they recommended that if we proceeded with the process of registration they should be included. We of course did that in our report.

My friend from Nickel Belt spoke about our experience in Washington and Sacramento. There is no doubt that those trips had a significant impact on the committee. We got some firsthand experience in that we were able to talk to people responsible for registration as well as those being registered. In addition, and this is something often overlooked when committees travel, members of the committee had the chance to get to know, appreciate and respect each other. The result was the unanimous report which we produced.

One significant thing to come out of the trip to Washington was that we learned there were so many loopholes in the registration process there that you could drive three or four semi-trucks through them side by side without danger of hitting anything or anyone. For example, lobbyists only have to register if they deal with elected representatives such as Senators or Congressmen. Our experience in Canada is that a very significant portion of lobbying in Canada is not done with elected representatives at all but with the bureaucracy, its various officials and staff. That was a very important thing to take note of and address in our report.

In Sacramento we discovered that a great amount of detailed information was required. Strangely enough, the effect of that was that you had such a great amount of information it became virtually useless and almost made a mockery of the process. We wanted to address that as well because we wanted a system which was simple, clean and effective. Yet we learned that even with all that detail there was very little need for a large staff. In other words, all of the necessary machinery for the registration process could be handled by a small group of people. Again if memory serves me correctly, California has a population roughly equivalent to that of Canada.

Mr. Kilgour: It is bigger, 26 million.

Mr. Cooper: So a little bigger than Canada. A very complex registration process requiring a great deal of information, yet a very small staff to handle it. I think that is important because one of the concerns I heard expressed since the report came down is that we have to be careful because this will require a tremendous bureaucracy and all sorts of funding. The reality, given our experience in both Washington and Sacramento, is that this is not the case at all.

Another point that has to be made is that for some reason there is a feeling that lobbying is a dirty word. We in the committee felt nothing could be further from the truth. I would like to refer to the committee report and read one paragraph which I think speaks to this particular issue. Let me quote the following, again from the same page:

Your Committee is impressed with the role that special interest groups or lobbyists play in the dissemination of information on matters of public policy. The lines of communication which are developed by these groups are important in the resolution of government policy.

A critical part of policy development in any government is to accept and even seek out information and views from those affected and the public at large. Lobbyists often present competing views, supply what might be otherwise unavailable information, and propose solutions so government can better assess the implications of proposed policies.

It was very important that we recognized in our report the role and responsibility of lobbyists. The report was not in any way designed to suppress them but, rather, to encourage them and get everyone on a level playing field with a certain amount of openness. That I think does not so much convict the guilty as protect the innocent. That was certainly one of the fundamental principles in the preparation of this report.

Another point which I think is important is that in several interviews after the report was issued the press wanted to know what kind of incidents of wrongdoing we had come up with. What had we seen that was unethical. The reality is that we did not come across that sort of evidence. I think that if all Members were honest, we could say that the issues which have gained some sort of profile in the last little while could probably be counted on the fingers of both hands, if not one hand. My point is this. There have been incidents which have caused the Canadian public concern, incidents involving lobbyists, incidents involving Members of Parliament. However, the reality is that it is a very small number of cases. The vast majority of Members of Parliament are very honest, sincere and hard-working people. That fact crosses Party lines. The same applies to the lobbying industry. By far and away the vast majority of those people are sincere, honest people who do everything in an ethical, honest and sincere way. The point of the registration is to deal with the exceptions and get everyone on a level playing field where they are treated equally, fairly, and where the public can be assured that what is going on is in the public eye, and help eliminate this feeling of things being done behind closed doors or under the table.

I want to look briefly at the recommendations made by the committee. As is apparent to everyone, we recommended the adoption and implementation of a system of registration for paid lobbyists. We also recommended that the Government consult with members of the lobbying industry to discuss the formation of an association of lobbyists in addition to a system of registration. As we said in our report, that would put responsibility for the day to day conduct of the lobbying industry squarely where it belongs, on the industry itself.

Earlier in my comments I referred to the fact that the vast majority of people are clear-thinking, honest and sincere. We want to encourage them.

I see you are giving me a signal that my time is fast running out, Mr. Speaker. I thought I had until about 12.07. Do I have a few more minutes? Then I can make a few more comments. I know the speech is fascinating the whole House.

An Hon. Member: Especially the galleries.

Mr. Cooper: The galleries are really enjoying it. I know the press is watching it with great interest, so I am glad I have a few more minutes.

One of the most important and also most difficult things we had to do in the committee was to come up with a definition of a lobbyist. That is probably at the root of all the work we did. If we had made a mistake in that area, it would have tainted or soured the entire report. What we recommended essentially is that lobbying be defined as attempting to influence either directly or indirectly any Government decision. Let me deal with direct and indirect influence. Direct influence is in the one on one context. Another area becoming quite significant is the indirect category, which is developing in the United States and it seems to be a trend starting here in Canada. I speak of political action committees. They are very sophisticated, highly financed and highly organized lobbying groups that are having a tremendous impact on public policy and decisions. They have traditionally fallen out of the net that would normally be included in a registration of lobbyists, hence our reason for adding the word "indirectly". That point I feel is very important for the Department to pick out from the report.

• (1200)

Included in government decisions are category regulations, laws, policies and contracts. All of those are significant public activity having a direct impact on the Canadian taxpayer and we believe that they should be included in any definition. We recommended that, for the purpose of registration, a lobbyist be defined generally to include anyone who, for compensation—that would either include a person on salary or having a contract—engages in lobbying activities as we have defined them, directed at the executive—and this is very important flowing out of the American experience—the bureaucracy or Members of the House of Commons or Senate or their staff. In other words, Mr. Speaker, we have tried to make sure that we dealt with the Canadian reality and did not mimic the American experience, which we felt had really created a number of holes and opportunities to evade the system of registration.

The information we required was really very simple. My friend, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt, as always with his wonderful way with words, described it very well. We want to know who is doing what, to whom and on what issue, and, as he said, to add for how much. But that is basically it. We wanted to know who the lobbyists are lobbying for or who they are representing and we wanted to know what issue the lobbyists were dealing with. We felt that if those three basic principles were made public in reality, you would have the nuts and bolts of the information that Canadians need to see what kinds of activities are going on and thus get that sense of openness and freedom that is important.

I touched earlier on the administration of the system and how important it was that it not be viewed as a large bureaucracy. We recommended that the Assistant Deputy Registrar General be charged with the responsibility of administering the registry. I want to emphasize again that we should not have a large bureaucracy or one that would require a great deal of expense or one that is complex.

I want to deal with what is happening from here on. The committee worked on the issue for a year. We struggled through it, we found it complex, difficult and we heard a lot of witnesses. We did a little travelling, and we have come up with a report that I think has been well received. It is a balanced report. Over the last couple of weeks I have received mail from a wide variety of people, the Canadian public, lobbyists, lawyers and so on who have indicated to me how pleased they are with the report. They see it as a step in the right direction. Well, what happens from here?

The Minister for Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) is with us in the House today. I am pleased to see him here because it demonstrates his interest in the subject. He is the one responsible for what will happen from now on. We as a committee asked the Minister's Department to draft some legislation flowing out of our report and then to refer it back to our committee. The reason for that is very simple. We want to see that the legislation flowing out of our report is consistent with it. No one is looking for a mirror image, but we are looking for the basic principles that we feel are important. After that, we would ask that the legislation come back to the House and be passed quickly.

A very important part of the report is that the whole issue be checked again in 2 years' time. The issue is complex and we are charting new territory. It is important to review the results, problems and pitfalls that may develop over the next couple of years. This will give us a chance to clean up whatever discrepancies or problems may have been created by the process.

After having talked to the Minister on a couple of occasions and in talking to as many people as I can, my sense is that the Department is giving this report a high priority and that it will be working very quickly to get the matter into a Bill. Further, my indications are that we will be dealing with it again in this House not too far into the future.

I have appreciated the opportunity to speak on this issue, to be part of the debate and to concur in a report of which I am particularly proud, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank each and every Member of the committee who was with me through that process because it has been a very good one, one that has been educational as well as profitable.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I think the Chairman of our committee, the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper) did an excellent job in outlining some of the difficulties that we had concerning registration of lobbyists. One of our recommendations concerned those who initiate and are paid to organize mass mailings, advertising campaigns to disseminate material designed to influence Government through public opinion. Would the Member comment on that as well as on the requirement to register non-profit organizations, volunteer groups and single industry groups, the conditions under which we want them to register their lobbyists?

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, dealing with the non-profit groups, this area caused a great deal of difficulty for the committee because we did not want in any way to appear to be restricting access of the general Canadian public to either their own Members of Parliament or to the Government at large. In this particular circumstance we have asked that groups which are strictly made up of volunteers having no salaries or contracts not be included in the registration. However, if you have a group that is a volunteer organization—let me pick one out of the air, let us say the Red Cross of Canada—which has an official who is paid a salary or has a contract to engage in lobbying—if that person is in part a professional lobbyist and it is part of his job description—we ask that such people be included in the registration. We are trying to get at the "professionals". We are not trying in any way to restrict access, but we are trying to register those who do lobby in a professional capacity.

Regarding what I call the political action committees in the United States and mass mailings, it is difficult to tell where that will go in Canada. We do have a sense that that area will expand. Because that is a professional form of lobbying and activity that, as I mentioned earlier, is highly financed and well organized, we felt that it should be included in the registration. We feel that this may well be something that will happen in the near future. That is why we used the word "indirect" in the report.

• (1210)

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I heard the Chairman of the committee just say that groups like, for example, the Red Cross would be asked to register as a volunteer organization. That response confuses me a bit because on page 4 of the report, the committee says that it has determined that for the present, volunteer associations, single-interest groups and non-profit associations would not generally be required to register. I wonder if the Hon. Member could clarify that for me.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, again, the distinction is the definition of a paid versus an unpaid lobbyist. There are volunteer organizations that have in their employ people who are paid to lobby. That changes the role of those individuals. They then become professional lobbyists.

Let me give two examples that I think will help clarify this situation. Group A is a volunteer organization. No one in that group is paid a salary to do any kind of lobbying. Group B is also a volunteer organization but it employs one individual who may be called a government relations officer or perhaps a chairman who is paid a salary or is on contract. Part of this person's responsibility is to lobby. That individual, because he is paid, would then be included in the registration requirements. The person from Group A, on the other hand, receives no salary or payment for lobbying. That is where we drew the line for those who ought not to be registered.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it a pleasure to participate in this debate and to add a few comments to the very worthwhile comments that have already been made by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) and the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper), the Chairman of this committee which did very excellent work. If you will permit me to make a comment as an aside, Mr. Speaker, I could not help but think, as both Hon. Members commented on the intent, purpose and motivation for this recommendation respecting lobbyists, that we want to see who is doing what to whom, where and when, that that might very well be an accurate description of what a peeping-Tom might say about his motivation.

Mr. Cooper: We will register them too.

Mr. Andre: However, there is not only unanimous agreement in the committee but in the House that registration of lobbyists is an important and timely issue.

The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt has asked that the House move concurrence in the recent report of the committee. Certainly I as Minister responsible for this particular area have no difficulty in supporting that recommendation. As the Registrar General for Canada, I am likely to be responsible and have the responsibility now for creating and maintaining a registration system. The committee has made many valuable recommendations and I am presently working to produce a proposal which takes those recommendations into account wherever possible. I hope to bring that proposal before my cabinet colleagues within days as opposed to weeks or months. From that process, hopefully legislation will flow to be presented to the House in relatively short order.

The principles about which the committee talked and the principles dictating our work in the Department and before Cabinet are openness, clarity, public access and administrative simplicity. We want there to be openness because, while peeping-Toms or voyeurs are in certain circumstances engaging in activities which are improper, when it comes to government activities, a degree of voyeurism is necessary. We want to strike a balance between satisfying the necessity of openness and not imposing on the system a degree of openness that makes it impossible for it to operate. Some activities must go on with the blinds pulled, not that they are scandalous, immoral or improper but just because they cannot be conducted in public. That is a simple reality. I think the committee came as close to striking that balance as it could in identifying the need to register paid lobbyists and not other lobbying activity.

We are all exposed to lobbying. Lobbying is what makes the system run. Without lobbying, we could not function because, brilliant as we all are, every single idea or suggestion we articulate does not spring into being in our own minds as a result of some genetic process. We learn from people who come to us with ideas, suggestions and recommendations. That is an important part of the democratic process. Indeed, lobbying is the essence of democracy. We want to ensure that that continues. On the other hand, it is important that the public believe that what is going on is not improper and that people are not improperly enriching themselves or improperly gaining access which others cannot gain.

Having said that, I would like to voice some caution. When we concentrate entirely on process, we tend to forget that ultimately, it is the results that count. It is possible to get a good idea from a very bad source who passed that idea on with very poor motives. However, it is possible to use that idea and come up with a final result that is proper. We must remember when it comes to things like government contracts, for example, that the test should be whether or not the contract is right, the taxpayers get full value for the contract, and in fact it was the best deal that could have been made in the circumstances. That is the real test and that is what we must remember.

We are here as trustees of the taxpayer. Our object is to ensure that the taxpayer gets full value. While process is important and while respect for the process is also important, we ought never, as sometimes we come close to doing, say that it does not matter that the decision was right and that the taxpayers got full value, the thing is bad and condemned because involved in the process were people who put forward suggestions or lobbied on the basis of how much was in it for them. That causes us to say that we cannot accept the results.

I do not want to digress too much into current situations and circumstances, but the 150 public servants involved have said that the decision which was made was the best possible decision. The military and public servants in DSS and other Departments involved have said that the Low Level Air Defence system bought from the Oerlikon team was the best system technically, was the cheapest, and had the best industrial benefits and highest Canadian content. It was the best decision according to all the people involved. I am talking about public servants rather than the political people involved. The losing bidders have said publicly that the system was fair. They recognized that they were beaten in a competition by the Oerlikon group. The best decision for the taxpayers of Canada is now being cast in disrepute because some suggest that there was some lobbying in the process, some of which was illicit.

I raise this because I happened to be the Minister responsible for the Oerlikon contract at the time. I am aware of some of the lobbying which took place. The fact is that the process was impeccable. The decision taken was the right decision. Subsequent dealings by Oerlikon with others are now the subject of police investigations, as they ought to be. However, we ought not to get carried away in our analysis. In fairness, we should be able to separate these considerations and recognize that, in the final analysis, our responsibility is to ensure that our decisions are right. However, in order to maintain the support of our democratic system, the public must be aware and must understand that there is nothing happening which should cause them fear. That is why the registration of paid lobbyists is an important initiative which we are undertaking.

I am sure we will be able to produce legislation which will be satisfactory to all sides, but that is not without its problems. A company located in Ottawa which wants to do business with the Government does not need a paid lobbyist because its representatives can phone or drive over to meet with officials. Representatives of companies in Toronto or Montreal may have to take a plane ride, or they may send salesmen to make those trips. However, if you are in Calgary, Vancouver, or Halifax, and are of such a size that sending a salesman to Ottawa to do business is a significant expenditure, you may be tempted to hire an agent, as some companies do. According to this, that agent would have to be registered.

We then get into an equity situation. Does every salesman of every company have to register? I do not raise that as an insurmountable problem, but only to illustrate that we must draw a line. Every time a line is drawn there are people who fall just on one side of the line. They wonder why they are affected while the fellow right next door, who is not that dissimilar, is not affected. As I said, that is not an insurmountable obstacle, but I wanted to bring it to the attention of the House because the legislation which is brought forth will have to deal with such issues.

The committee recommended, quite properly, that there be significant penalties for violations. One would ask what a significant penalty is. Do we say that they cannot talk to anyone in Government for the rest of their life? Do we put them in jail? Do we impose a fine? That is another challenge which we will meet. I simply raise it as an issue which will have to be dealt with.

What about investigations? Do we want a system whereby people respond to complaints, or do we invest whoever is charged with the registration with investigatory powers? Do we want a system of licence numbers wherein every time a public servant makes contact with someone from the outside world they must ask whether they are getting paid and what their licence number is? I am told that in my Department that would represent 30 or 40 sheets of paper a day. If we multiply that by the size of the Government, I do not know what it would mean administratively. We must look into that in order to develop a system which is administratively simple. We are struggling with that issue. The House may be sure that we will come up with a recommendation.

I do not want to take too much more of the time of the House. The debate which has gone on for months, indeed years, is reaching its climax. The legislation will be brought forward in very short order. We hope that with the passage of that legislation we will all contribute toward elevating the reputation of the process and the system to a level above that to which it has fallen in recent times. It has fallen to such a degree that we are all tarnished, those who are the recipients of the targeted mud and those who are the throwers, because in the process we all end up muddy. The country is damaged as a result.

Again I would like to acknowledge publicly the excellent work done by the committee under the chairmanship of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Peace River. Unanimous reports are few and far between in this institution and when we get one we want to act on it. That is the intent of the Government.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, the Minister used as an example a company in Ottawa wanting to bid on a contract, as compared to a company in some other part of the country. He said that the company outside of Ottawa may hire an agent. The agent, of course, is covered by our registration proposal. We would also cover the company in Ottawa. At page 214 of the report we say: "Employees or officers of nongovernmental business organizations, nonprofit organizations, volunteer groups, single interest groups and foreign nationals who, for pay or other benefit, perform duties which, from time to time, include lobbying". Therefore, I can tell the Minister that we recognized the problem and tried to cover it with that.

We place the responsibility for enforcement firmly in the lap of the Assistant Deputy Registrar General. He will be empowered to check the files for deficiencies. We also say that he should be given investigatory powers and should receive complaints and enforce compliance. If he finds a deficiency or noncompliance, he must take the appropriate action, which would be to refer the matter to the appropriate authorities. The use of similar statutes, sanctions and punishments would also be set out in the Bill. We hope the appropriate sanctions will be in the Bill, such as banning them from registering.

Of course, that raises the very important question referred to by the Minister: what does the bureaucrat or MP do when someone phones to make an appointment to talk about a certain contract or project? Perhaps the onus could be put on the bureaucrat, MP or Senator to inquire first as to whether the lobbyist is registered. I do not know how this could be done, but it is something the Minister may consider. Possibly a phone call to the Assistant Deputy Registrar General could confirm the registration since there are also time limits within which they must register and deregister. This places some onus on the individual MP and the bureaucrat to make sure that they protect themselves by determining if the lobbyist is indeed registered.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I agree with the comments made by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt. However, in terms of that onus, while we will meet it somehow, the concern is not to create a torrent of paperwork within some registry.

Personally, I see delegations and people in my office here as well as in Calgary. I see people in other parts of the country as a result of my travels on behalf of my Department. It is sometimes difficult to draw the distinction between what is lobbying and what is not and when we should check.

We are considering a variety of ways to deal with this problem in a way that will be administratively simple. This will take some time, but as usual, when we talk about general ideas and try to make them law, questions such as these with which we must deal inevitably arise.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Prior to resuming debate, the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper) wishes to make a point of order.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, if you were to ask, I believe you will find that there is unanimous consent in the House to revert back to presenting reports from standing and special committees.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there such unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

ELECTIONS, PRIVILEGES AND PROCEDURE

PRESENTATION OF THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to table the third report of the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedures.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

ELECTIONS, PRIVILEGES AND PROCEDURE

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Rodriguez that the first report of the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure be concurred in.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to make a few comments in this very important debate. I have read and studied the report of the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure, chaired very ably by the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper). As the Minister stated, the report was unanimous, which is not a frequent occurrence in the House of Commons and its associated committees. I want to commend members of the committee and the Chairman on an excellent report which outlines very precisely and succinctly what needs to be done, as a result of a very thorough evaluation.

I cannot think of a more appropriate moment than now to discuss and hopefully take quick action on a very specific set of recommendations for one initiative that may in fact bring back some sense of reason, credibility and respect, not only to this institution but to public institutions generally and, perhaps most important, to the Government of Canada.

In the last few hours I have reviewed a number of headlines which remind us just how significant and important it is to get on with the recommendations in this report. For instance, one headline states: "Letter links Ministers, PMO to contract". This refers to the allegations of influence peddling and the involvement of Ministers of the Crown and members of the Prime Minister's Office in manipulating contracts through the system.

Another headline refers to the swirl of scandals surrounding various contracts that had been let, and the fact that many of them were not going to the lowest bidder, but appeared to be offered as a result of political involvement by certain lobby groups or individuals.

Another headline quotes the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), who said just a few days ago that the Government had a grave problem of the public's perception of his Government's morality.

Indeed, we are discussing the morality of the Government itself in terms of how it deals with the letting of contracts, how the tendering process is set up and who uses certain influence in manipulating these contract procedures that result in a certain political outcome.

Another press clipping comments on the influence peddling charges against a certain Member of Parliament. Another headline refers to influence peddling in the awarding of a contract for the construction of a federal museum in Hull, Quebec. A headline from yesterday states: "RCMP Probing Tory Influence Peddling". This refers to people within the Prime Minister's Office.

Another headline in The Gazette in Montreal states: "Millionaire insists PM interfered in lawsuit".

We need not spend more time reminding ourselves of how complicated and confusing the situation has become. That is why I believe today's debate is most appropriate and I congratulate the committee members and the Chairman for their unanimous report which perhaps shows the way out of this morass.

I hope the Government will see fit to act now. My colleague, the Hon. Member Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), who began the debate for the New Democrats on this concurrence motion, reminded us that it was way back in September, 1985, when the Prime Minister said: "We will require, amongst other things, paid lobbyists to register and identify their clients". He went on to say that he had asked his colleague, the former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, to prepare on an urgent basis legislation to govern lobbying activity.

Of course, we want to accept the Prime Minister at his word. After all, if we cannot trust the Prime Minister's word, whose word can we trust? We heard the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) indicate that immediately upon his return from Africa the Prime Minister would make a statement on actions that the Government of Canada planned to take. He has been back for two weeks, but there is still no hint of a statement. I noticed today that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader (Mr. Lewis) indicated that perhaps there would be no statement at all. One begins to wonder to what extent we can accept the word of the Prime Minister. He said back in September, 1985, that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am not convinced that the comments on this particular issue are relevant to the report.

Mr. Riis: I appreciate the point, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps I can make this link: When the Prime Minister indicated in September, 1985, that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs would prepare on an urgent basis legislation to govern lobbying activity, we were expecting that such legislation would be on the floor of the House for debate within a matter of weeks or months.

• (1240)

You and I both know, Mr. Speaker, that if we want to avoid dealing with an issue, there is no better way to do that than to send it off to committee for study and after many weeks and months, perhaps we can study and evaluate the report and hopefully the problem will go away, if it is a messy situation. Did the Government bring in legislation on lobbying? No, it gave it to the committee, and what we are discussing today is its excellent report after a thorough examination.

I do hope, as a result of what has happened with the Government over the last few weeks, it will see the appropriateness of taking steps to set the whole process of lobbying right. The Government should not only do it right, but should set it up in such a way that it is perceived to be the right, thorough and just approach to the whole matter of lobbying.

The Minister who spoke previously, of course, is very interested in the generic drug Bill, the changes to the Patent Act which will, in my estimation, give some advantage to the foreign multinationals in the drug business. It is interesting to see who lobbied on behalf of the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada, in other words, the 65 drug companies which wanted to have this change made to the legislation in order to give them, in my opinion, a real edge in the market-place. They hired a firm called Government Consultants International. It is an Ottawa lobbying firm owned by former Newfoundland Premier Frank Moores and Halifax businessman Gerald Doucet. We all know that Mr. Moores had been a strong supporter of the Prime Minister since 1976 when he was one of the leaders of the "dump Joe Clark" movement before the 1983 leadership convention. After the Tories won the 1984 election, he opened up his lobbying firm. Here we have a very influential, well-known, significant Conservative setting up a lobbying firm in Ottawa on contract to the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada to, if you like, Mr. Speaker, peddle its influence with the Government, sell its influence, use its knowledge of various individuals, officials, politicians, and members of the Cabinet, perhaps even people in the Prime Minister's Office or Privy Council Office, to see what it can do on behalf of its clients, the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada, which is made up of 65 multinational drug companies.

When Canadians see this kind of thing happen, they wonder whether or not their best interest will be represented, and this has been the core of discussions and debate which have gone on now both in the House and in the standing committee. I do not believe there is any question in anyone's mind these days that some way to deal with lobbying and lobbyists is not only long overdue but must be done quickly. I would like to read the following from the committee report itself:

> We recommend that lobbying be defined as attempting to influence either directly or indirectly any governmental decision whether it be legislative or administrative.
> We recommend that the act of lobbying government be specifically defined as to include:
>
> (a) attempting to influence the making or amending of legislation or regulations;
> (b) attempting to influence the making or changing of federal policies or programs;
> (c) attempting to influence federal decisions on the awarding of grants, contracts, contributions or any similar benefit;
> (d) attempting to influence federal appointments to boards, commissions and any other public office.
> We recommend that in order to escape the problems which have plagued the United States federal lobbying act, approaches to influence the executive, Members of Parliament, which includes both Members of the House of Commons and the Senate and their staff, and the bureaucracy, be considered to be activities within the definition of lobbying.

I think that is an excellent recommendation. It lays out very thoroughly the process of lobbying which, I might add, has really taken on significant proportions in the last few years. When one looks carefully at the Ottawa phone book one finds various firms opening up. When one familiarizes oneself with the occupants of offices surrounding Parliament Hill, one can see that in the last handful of years, all sorts of agencies and groups have established lobbying offices. They are very upfront. It is an honourable process, whether it is the Canadian Bankers Association, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Canadian Manufacturers Association, or even provincial Governments which now have offices set up so that the concerns of the Provinces of Alberta, British Columbia, and so on, can be watched as the various Bills and policies move through the Government and through the House of Commons.

Obviously, there is now a real need not only to define what we mean by "lobbying", which has been done very well by the committee, but we must also recognize who the lobbyist is. What is a "lobbyist"? We now agree what "lobbying" is. Again, we can take advantage of the excellent work done by the committee. The committee recommended:

> —that for the purpose of registration, lobbyist be defined generally to be anyone who for compensation engages in lobbying activities directed at the executive, bureaucracy, Members of the House of Commons, the Senate and their staff. More specifically it includes:
> (a) those who for compensation represent third party interests directly or indirectly to government including those representing foreign nationals or foreign governments.

It goes on to say it would also include:

> (b) employees or officers of non-government business organizations, non-profit organizations, volunteer groups, single interest volunteer groups and foreign nationals who for pay or other benefit perform duties which may from time to time include lobbying. The organization by which they are employed or with which they are associated should also be required to register.

It also includes:

> (c) those who initiate and those who are paid to organize mass mailing or advertising campaigns to disseminate material designed to influence government through public opinion.

I suppose what comes to mind are those full page advertisements one sees in the National Citizens Coalition attempting to mobilize public opinion to encourage the Government to move or not to move in certain directions. It also includes:

> (d) non-profit organizations, volunteer groups and single interest groups when they retain a paid lobbyist to represent their views to government;

Finally, it includes, and you will appreciate this, Mr. Speaker:

> (e) lawyers, accountants and other professionals when they represent clients in dealings with government primarily for the purpose of lobbying as defined in this Report.

Again, the committee lays out extremely clearly just what a "lobbyist" is. It lists the various categories in terms of fine tuning that definition. I think this is where we are going to run into the greatest difficulty. When the Government brings forward legislation, hopefully, at a very, very early time, the whole matter of registration becomes critical. The committee has recommended:

> —that registered lobbyists be required to disclose:
> (a) their names; firm name, if applicable, and a contact person; addresses and telephone numbers;
> (b) names of clients and their place of business;
> (c) the issue or matter upon which the lobbying activity is to take place;
> We recommend that lobbyists be prohibited from receiving compensation from clients which is contingent in any manner upon the outcome of the lobbying activity.

This is interesting because during committee hearings a number of witnesses thought there would be no problem in submitting their name for a registry but had some reluctance, however, about indicating who their clients were and they were certainly reluctant to disclose the purpose of the lobbying, to say nothing about the moneys involved. However, as the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt pointed out, if we have this list, it is critical that it must be somehow monitored and kept up to date. We have to be able to ensure that the information is current and that it is accurate. We are asking the lobbyists to be quite specific in what it is they are lobbying for. Perhaps they should indicate the amount of money they are being paid for carrying out their lobbying activities.

So there we have it. In committee we had the recommendations of the Government in terms of how to register lobbyists, what the clear definition of lobbyist is and a definition of lobbying. I think that clearly lays out what the Government should do.

As I said at the outset of my remarks, the pall that hangs over this institution, institutions of government generally, and, perhaps most important, the pall that hangs over the Government of Canada must be changed. It must be set aside to enable us all to get on with carrying out the business of Canada. If the Government were to take an immediate initiative and bring forward legislation reflecting the views of this thoughtful committee report, it would be a step forward in terms of clearing the air. It would indicate that the Government is concerned and prepared to take action. We are fortunate in that the Government now has before it such a comprehensive, thorough and thoughtful report on which to base legislation which, hopefully, will ensue quickly.

Mr. Ravis: Mr. Speaker, I am interested in the rather hard-nosed partisan approach the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) takes. It seems to me that we should be given credit for what is happening these days. The fact is that the Government has established this committee to look into this particular issue. Times are changing. I do not think this issue was addressed by the previous administration. The fact is that a committee has been established and the report was brought down just a matter of weeks ago. Why does the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap ask why we have not addressed this issue? We have barely come down with the report. The ink is hardly dry. Yet the Hon. Member suggests that there is a great hurry for us to act. I suggest that legislation dealing with the matter is just around the corner.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question of my hon. friend. He makes a good point. I suspect that the type of issues to which I referred as set out in press clippings from, in a sense, the last few hours, that outline various alleged cases of influence peddling by various Members and government officials and the like is something which has been taking place since the time of Sir John A. Macdonald. Any student of history would be well aware of the long list of scandals that have brought down Governments and changed the course of history. Indeed, one of the themes of defeat of various Liberal and Conservative administrations was with respect to some type of scandal that involved lobbying activities. Quite frankly, if one looks at the record one will see that for years the New Democratic Party and its predecessor, the CCF, have been calling for legislation of this type. We are still calling for it.

The Hon. Member is quite right and I give him credit. The Prime Minister promised that some action would be taken, and a study has now been done. As I said, we have been involved in this business long enough to know that if we want to dodge an issue we have just to study it. That is an acceptable way of dealing with a matter and it gives the illusion that action is being taken. I hope that the Hon. Member is right. I hope that just around the corner there will be legislation introduced. He can rest assured that if the legislation, which is hopefully around the corner, is a reflection of this thoughtful committee report then it will receive speedy passage by members of the New Democratic Party, and I suspect by all Members of the House.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of my hon. friend. An interesting event that took place recently was the introduction of a Bill with respect to the Patent Act concerning prescription drugs. I want the Hon. Member to think about how a lobby register would have helped to make that whole process a great deal more transparent. When the lobbying groups appeared before the committee I asked a standard question of each one. I asked: Was your firm hired to lobby to get changes to the Patent Act concerning prescription drugs? All of them refused to answer. They took the fifth amendment. No one would own up.

I wish to ask the Hon. Member this. If we had had a lobby registration program, does the Hon. Member think that it would have helped in making the whole process of a Bill coming before Parliament a lot more transparent? Would it have put those who oppose such changes on the qui vive as it were, allowing them to make representations to the Government before it actually pushed the Bill through Parliament and before it resorted to using a sort of hobnailed-boot approach in committee with respect to it?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has posed a most thoughtful question. There is no question that there is the view in the country, as the results of recent polls suggest, that by and large Canadians are suspicious of the changes proposed to the Patent Act which are presently before the standing committee. People are under the impression that this measure is not in their best interests and that it is not good legislation in that it will not help Canadians. As a matter of fact, it is specifically designed to help multinational drug companies based in the United States. That is the perception that most people have. As we all know, in the real world perception is critical. A great deal of that perception could have been changed for the better if the lobbying efforts had been up front. I noticed the cynicism in the various media reports which dealt with the acceptance by a former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs of a Liberal Government of a position to head an organization of foreign drug companies operating in Canada. Presumably the cynicism directed at her was because she might use her influence with the bureaucracy and perhaps with her colleagues in other jurisdictions to facilitate the ends of the industry.

I wish to thank both Hon. Members for their interventions. I want to remind everyone that back in the 1960s it was a member of the New Democratic Party, Mr. Barry Mather, who first introduced a Bill on the subject of lobbying. More recently the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt introduced a Private Members' Bill to get this lobbying process under control. The former Member for St. John's East who recently left this House presented Private Members' Bills to establish a system of lobbying. The Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) also has a Private Members' Bill on the subject. There have been all sorts of actions taken over the years in which individuals have said that enough is enough, we have to clear the air. Their actions have said that we must ensure that democracy in Canada is transparent and that the work of government is transparent, honourable and above-board. The only way to ensure those ends is to have a process by which we define lobbying and lobbyists. There should be a register so that everything is above-board and on the table for everyone to see. In this way there will be no suspicion that influence peddling is a reality in the country. The report of the committee suggests that major steps be taken to eradicate such a situation. I only hope that it will be followed up rapidly by legislation.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I wish to clarify the record since comments were made with respect to Bill C-22. I have never personally, and to my recollection neither has my office, been lobbied by GCI on Bill C-22. I have been extensively lobbied by the Canadian Auto Workers, the Liberal Party of Canada and the New Democratic Party which sent out some 300,000 letters, according to the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young). In terms of the public knowing what is going on, I think the public should know I have never been lobbied by GCI or any of its principals. However, I have certainly been lobbied by the NDP and a great many of its sister organizations.

• (1300)

Mr. Riis: I appreciate the intervention by the Minister. Again, I do not want to suggest that the process of lobbying is bad, sinister, or wrong. It is appropriate that it takes place, and it is a reality. We wish it to be done in a manner that everyone understands. Then the rules will be clear concerning who are the lobbyists, the process, the clients, and what constitutes lobbying. I appreciate the intervention and the comments of the Minister. I do not want to suggest the process itself by Members, organizations, or lobby groups is in any way wrong or inappropriate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

REFUGEES

CONDITIONS IN PALESTINIAN CAMPS IN LEBANON

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I am appalled at recent news stories which report that starving Palestinians in the besieged refugee camps of Bourj al-Barajneh and Shatila in Lebanon have requested permission to eat the flesh of dead human bodies in the camps as they have run out of dogs and cats to eat.

An estimated 40,000 Palestinian women, children and elderly are attempting to survive in conditions which defy logic and put in question human compassion. They are being bombarded with missiles and bombs, and they have no food or medicine. The International Red Cross is being prevented from entering the camps. I urge the Canadian Government to do all it can to facilitate the entry of the Red Cross into those camps and provide what relief assistance it can to alleviate the intense suffering of these victims of war.

REFUGEES

PLIGHT OF PALESTINIANS IN CAMPS IN LEBANON

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, my statement supports that of the Hon. Member who just spoke. A tragedy of unqualified proportions is developing in an area already fraught with human misery and political instability. According to authoritative eyewitness accounts, men, women and children have been reduced to subhuman conditions and have had to resort to eating cats, dogs, and rats in order to survive in the besieged Palestinian camps of southern Lebanon.

Since those refugee camps are under the jurisdction of the UN I strongly urge the House and the Government to use our good standing at the UN to request that body to undertake efforts to lift the siege and establish channels to supply humanitarian aid in the form of food and medical supplies to the defenceless victims.

On a larger scale we must intensify our efforts to secure a just solution to the Palestinian question under the aegis of an international peace conference.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADA-INDIA EXTRADITION TREATY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago the Government of Canada signed an extradition treaty with India. The treaty has caused concern and to some extent fear in the Canadian Sikh community since Sikhs believe it may be used in an inappropriate way against members of their community. They wish to be informed how it will be applied in Canada. They wish to be assured that it will not be abused. They wish to obtain guarantees that information about individuals is verified as accurate.

The reason they are concerned is that they have sought, through the leadership of various Sikh organizations and religious leaders from many Gurdwars, to obtain a meeting with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to discuss this and related issues. To date they have not been successful. While the Minister holds meetings with many cultural groups each month, for two and a half years he has refused to meet with representatives of the Sikh community. I urge the Minister to be more open about his dealings with India and agree to meet with representatives of the Sikh community immediately.

EMPLOYMENT

YOUTH—REQUEST FOR MODERATE FUNDING INCREASE FOR CHALLENGE '87 PROGRAM

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State (Youth) (Mr. Charest) simply did not consider the representations made to him by a number of student groups and non-profit organizations anxious to obtain Challenge '87 application forms before the end of 1986. The March 6, 1987 deadline has been announced too late and will certainly make it a lot harder for people who want to promote Challenge '87 or submit applications under this program.

In the case of non-profit organizations, planning is made more difficult because of the late deadline for project approval. As to students interested in participating in the program, again they will have to rush to find sponsors and obtain the required documents in time for the March 6 deadline. There can be only one reason—unacceptable to boot—to justify this situation: less money has been earmarked for Challenge '87 than was the case for Challenge '86, even though the Minister maintains that this year's program has been allotted the same budget as Challenge '86. Where are the $30 million set aside for the 1986 census which made it possible to provide a few more summer jobs for young Canadians?

Since the Minister of State (Youth) has failed to produce the application forms at an earlier date, I would ask him to increase considerably the funds for the Challenge '87 program, if indeed the Minister has confidence in young people, and especially if he does appreciate their employment problems.

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT PERFORMANCE

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the latest economic indicators show that the economy of Quebec is sustaining its upward trend.

Mr. Malépart: Not like the Conservatives!

Mr. St. Julien: Since September 1984, 164,000 new jobs were created in Quebec compared with a total of 40,000 between the elections in 1980 and 1984. The unemployment rate dropped from 12.9 per cent in September 1984 to 10.8 per cent today. Total unemployment has dropped by 54,000.

Last year, housing starts reached their highest level in ten years. In 1986, housing starts increased 27 per cent compared with 1985 and 50 per cent compared with 1984.

The percentage of Quebec families living below the poverty line dropped from 16.8 per cent in 1984 to 15.8 per cent in 1985. In 1985, total sawmill production rose 12 per cent, compared with 1984. During the first nine months of 1986, production was 9.2 per cent higher than was recorded for the same period in 1985.

Mr. Speaker, the economy is in good shape, in Quebec and in Abitibi.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

USE OF LEADED FUEL IN AUTOMOBILES—DANGERS TO HEALTH

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, periodicals and press reports continue to emphasize that lead in the atmosphere, in our waters and in our foods, seriously affects the health of people, particularly our young people. It accumulates in the brain tissues, stunts growth, damages the nervous system, and produces high blood pressure and anemia. And yet we continue to allow one of the greatest lead polluters of all, the automobile, to continue to burn leaded fuel.

Canada allows the use of leaded fuel with an average lead content three times higher than that allowed in the United States and 20 times higher than that allowed in Europe. Let us stop dragging our feet. Hasten the conversion of leaded gas users to unleaded gas. Our health and that of our children is worth a lot more than an outdated automobile.

S. O. 21

IMMIGRATION

ADMISSION OF FAMILY CLASS IMMIGRANTS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, the cornerstone of Canadian immigration policy is the family which assists an immigrant to adapt to Canada and strengthens our country with natural social ties. For many years Canadians have called for a more flexible definition of the family. Many feel painfully deprived when our immigration rules bar all but spouse, aged parents, and minor children.

In 1985 the New Democratic Party convention supported immigration by "all close family members including all children". In 1986 the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration tabled in Parliament unanimous recommendations to enlarge our idea of the family in immigration. It asked for a new classification of "assisted family" to include children or siblings of any age, married or unmarried, more points for close family relationship, and no absolute bar based on employment.

In October the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) said he would open up discussion on assisted family class. I call on him to begin that discussion now so that we may have new rules by the end of 1987.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

PROTECTION OF THE ENVIRONMENT—CONTENT OF DRAFT LEGISLATION

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, Canadians are well aware of the importance of environmental issues to the future quality of life in Canada and on this planet. Residents of Parkdale—High Park feel especially close to these issues. Our proximity to Lake Ontario and the Humber River has made us particularly sensitive to water quality concerns, and we worry about the long terms effects of acid rain, PCBs, and whether the absorption of lead from automobile exhausts will have hazardous consequences for our children.

The draft legislation introduced recently by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) takes a realistic and positive approach to the control of toxic chemicals, sets standards for environmental protection, and takes substantial steps toward addressing the problems of air, land and water quality, providing a blueprint for a better tomorrow.

I urge my colleagues to take this opportunity to work with the Minister to ensure that these proposals become legislative fact, and I invite all Members to join the Government in our fight to protect and enhance the quality of life for future generations.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

ANNOUNCEMENT OF LAY-OFFS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Derek Rance, President of the Cape Breton Development Corporation, on November 26, 1985, said that while coal operations must become more viable, this would not be done at the expense of workers. Seventeen men who are employed at the international coal piers in my riding have been told that their jobs will be terminated by April. They will be added to another 17 who have been laid off indefinitely. Each one of these men has 10 or more years with the Corporation. They have homes and families and have invested a considerable part of their lives in Devco and Cape Breton.

Devco is also proposing to lay off a further 240 people this year and 240 next year. The Government, while claiming to have created hundreds of jobs on Cape Breton Island, is in fact removing thousands. Mr. Rance is operating on instructions from the Government, and these directions should be changed. Lay-offs should not be happening at Devco particularly in light of the recent statements by the Minister of Mines and Energy for Nova Scotia that Nova Scotia would require one million tonnes of additional coal in the future.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

REQUIREMENT FOR MODERN EQUIPMENT

Mr. Terry Clifford (London—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I recently had the pleasure and honour of visiting 312 of my Armed Forces constituents who are stationed at Lahr and Baden Soligen, West Germany. What was so apparent everywhere I visited was the high esteem in which all Canadian Armed Forces personnel are held. What could easily be overlooked, however, is the reputation that Canadian technology is earning. Our research and development, our innovative training installations and programs, and our reputation with NATO countries already training at Goose Bay are just a few examples of this.

We must continue this reputation and we must insist that Canadian industries remain leaders in state-of-the-art equipment required by Canada and other NATO countries. The leaders in this regard will undoubtedly be the fine industries in the riding of London—Middlesex.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ENVIRONMENTAL IMPACT REVIEW OF LOW-LEVEL FLIGHTS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the Federal Environmental Assessment Review process which is going on in Labrador and Quebec with respect to low-level flying has resulted in some interim recommendations. The panel has recommended that the number of low-level sorties flown from Goose Bay not exceed the number flown in 1986 in any year until recommendations of the panel have been received and a decision has been taken with respect to their implementation.

The panel also recommended that DND adopt restrictions on minimum altitudes for certain areas and dates suggested by the panel. These restrictions are to be refined and improved through direct discussions between DND and representatives of the populations involved. It also recommended that DND install and publicize a toll-free number at its military communications centre at Goose Bay so that persons intending to be on the land can inform the authorities at Goose Bay to ensure that they are not over-flown.

I urge the Government, and particularly the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) and the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), to ensure that these interim recommendations are implemented. With respect to Recommendation No. 3, the toll-free number, I also want to say that it is really the responsibility of the military to let the native people know where they will be flying, not the other way around. That is part of the problem.

AEROSPACE INDUSTRY

CREATION OF JOBS IN EDMONTON

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, the aerospace industry is alive and well in western Canada, including Winnipeg. Northwest Industries of Edmonton is truly a success story and continues to show our Government's commitment to advancing our position in high technology and particularly in the field of aerospace.

As a result of the CF-18 contract as many as 125 more jobs will be created in Edmonton. This contract, along with others received, will ensure the continuing growth and expansion of Northwest Industries for at least the next 20 years. This will provide economic strength for Edmonton and expertise for the benefit of all Canadians.

We in Edmonton are proud of Northwest Industries. Over the next two decades Canadian aerospace production levels will continue to grow and we are proud to be a part of this vital industry. Alberta is indeed represented in this growing field and we will continue to be leaders in this technology. The Government is looking after Alberta.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

APPLICATION TO REDUCE BROADCASTING OF COUNTRY MUSIC

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I bring to your attention and to the attention of all Hon. Members an application filed before the CRTC by the Canadian Association of Broadcasters which will, if approved, slash Canadian country music content by 50 per cent—from 30 per cent to 15 per cent. I find this proposal completely unacceptable.

Canadian recording artists depend on air-play royalties for their survival. Without this income those artists could not afford hefty production costs and would have no choice but to abandon their careers. In Prince Edward Island as in many other regions, country music is an important part of our cultural identity.

I have received letters and repesentations from such groups as the Ellis Family Band, The Prince Edward Island Songwriters' Association, and Islander Records, all expressing opposition to this proposal. I trust that the CRTC will heed their advice and reject this ill-advised application.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

PRIMARY OBJECTIVE—MAINTENANCE OF NATIONAL SECURITY

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, five key areas of Armed Forces life have received close scrutiny in recent times. These are the role of women in combat, the exclusion of homosexuals, the continuation of mandatory retirement, the recognition of common-law marriage, and the maintenance of physical and medical employment standards.

• (1415)

It is right that the Armed Forces reflect standards which have been established in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. However, it is absolutely necessary that the Canadian Armed Forces not be required to make changes which could reduce their defence capability. Their primary objective must be maintaining national security. Their task is hard enough without Parliament or Government making it impossible. Our challenge is to balance the rights of the individual and the efficiency of the Forces. Policies announced by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) show that that balance can be achieved with justice and realism.

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE

REQUEST FOR REPEAL OF 30 PER CENT TARIFF ON TREE IMPORTS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, Canadian Christmas tree producers have yet to hear from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) about the 30 per cent duty on U.S. imports.

Last week, following a meeting attended by Canadian and U.S. producers, the American producers decided to take steps to have retaliatory action taken against Canadian imports.

If the Minister of Finance does not take action before March 2, he may be jeopardizing the very existence of a Canadian industry that is worth nearly $90 million, just to punish a U.S. industry that is worth only $3 million.

The 30 per cent countervail on U.S. imports was not a good idea, and the Minister of Finance should withdraw it immediately before the Americans decide to take action themselves by imposing a similar countervail, which will mean hard times and a loss of jobs for Canadian producers.

PENITENTIARIES

RELEASE ON MANDATORY SUPERVISION—INMATE'S REFUSAL TO DISCLOSE ADDRESS

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, The Toronto Sun reports today that a convicted rapist who is about to be released on mandatory supervision refuses to tell Metro Police where he will be living. The police consider this individual very dangerous for, while on a one-day pass in 1980, he committed rape in Montreal. Yet the Warden of Warkworth Penitentiary has the audacity to say that the lack of an address is only a temporary problem. Has this individual lost his sense of responsibility toward Canadians? It seems that convicted criminals have more rights than law-abiding Canadians.

If this individual has no address, he should not be released. Canadians must be protected from the violent elements of our society. I call on the Government to investigate this matter immediately and severely reprimand those individuals who are responsible for this problem.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FISHERIES

SURVEILLANCE OF FRENCH FISHING VESSELS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Yesterday the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans told the House of Commons that he appreciated the action of the people of St. Pierre and Miquelon in standing up to France against France's overfishing. He said: "When the time comes we will see just how firm Canada can be".

Yesterday, in an act of appreciation, the Government of Canada scoured the Atlantic Ocean, spotted not one but six French factory freezer trawlers overfishing, and turned tail and ran. It then spotted one lonely 30-metre boat from St. Pierre and Miquelon and, like a schoolyard bully, sent that boat into port. That happened in my riding.

When will Canada begin treating the factory freezer trawlers from France, which are overfishing by 20,000 metric tonnes of Canadian fish, the same as it treats boats from Newfoundland, the boat from St. Pierre and Miquelon, and boats from the other Atlantic provinces?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Acting Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the time has come. This very day we are advising France that we have reason to believe that they are fishing more than the 6,400 tonnes of cod which they are permitted by us to fish in division 3PS. We are notifying them of that problem this afternoon. We are advising them that it is their responsibility to cease fishing and respect conservation requirements. We are advising them that if they choose to disregard the conservation needs of this fish stock, port privileges will be withdrawn. That is what we are doing in that regard.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: The wet fish trawler, La Goellette, from St. Pierre and Miquelon is, by the way, about 110 feet. It is authorized to fish in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. We have an observer on that vessel and have reason to believe that it has violated its by-catch. It is allowed to catch 1 per cent of fish as a by-catch while fishing for cod. We have reason to believe that it has exceeded that and is violating our regulations. Since we prosecute Canadian vessels for doing this, and did so last year, we are going to prosecute this vessel this year for the same violations if, in fact, it turns out to be true that it has violated our fishing requirements. We will enforce the law as it relates to our 200-mile economic zone.

• (1420)

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, asking questions of this Minister is like participating in an Abbot and Costello routine.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Lou! Lou!

NEWFOUNDLAND REPRESENTATION IN CABINET

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, why has the Government of Canada arrested a vessel from St. Pierre and Miquelon but refuses to stand up to factory freezer trawlers from France? This morning in St. John's, Newfoundland, the Acting Minister of Fisheries released a letter that was written to him by the Prime Minister in which he said: "I want to assure the people of Newfoundland, through you, that they can count on you—I will rely heavily on your advise . . . you are to be fully involved—your counsel will be sought". The people of Newfoundland and Labrador are wondering why, two years after the election, such a letter was necessary? Has Newfoundland had no voice around the cabinet table for the last 24 months? Have you been receiving a cabinet Minister's salary? What have you done to earn it with this Canada-France agreement?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Acting Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman passes on to other topics because he knows that we put some teeth into the enforcement of fishing limits in this country for the first time. We have observers on every foreign vessel that is permitted to fish in our territory. That was not done under the Liberals. We have acquired a twin-engine helicopter for offshore surveillance. That was not done under the Liberals. We armed our patrol boats and we are going to have armed boarding parties. That was not done under the Liberals. The very people who are now so bellicose in opposition were meek and mild little toadies when they were over here in the Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: While I have been around the cabinet table I have been helping to secure the Atlantic Accord for Newfoundland, the Newfoundland offshore development fund—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Crosbie: —I have been helping to secure assistance for the Hope Brook gold mine. I have been helping to get ad hoc assistance for inshore fishermen. I have been arranging the purchase of vessels for the maritime fisheries. I have a whole long list, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: Try again, Tobin.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tobin: I will tell you what was not done under the Liberals. We did not sell out the people of Newfoundland and Labrador because we lacked on backbone. We did not try to make up in volume and bluster what we lacked in courage. That was not done under the Liberals.

CANADA-FRANCE 1972 TREATY—NEWFOUNDLAND PREMIER'S POSITION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, how can the Government continue to insist that the dilemma in which it finds itself, because of a lack of backbone, was caused by the 1972 treaty, when his colleague and friend whom he saw last Friday, the Premier of Newfoundland, said this morning in response to the Prime Minister's letter:

> I am—concerned about the statement in the Prime Minister's letter that appears to imply a link between the 1972 Fishing Treaty and a Canadian obligation to provide cod to France under that treaty. Article 2 of the 1972 Treaty does not obligate Canada to provide cod in any particular fishing zone—

Why have you caved in?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Acting Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I have not received any communciation from the Premier of Newfoundland. Perhaps he is in intimate contact with the Member who just asked the question and has apparently supplied him with some letter or opinion he has given in reply to the Prime Minister's letter. I say that a finer letter was never received by any member of the Cabinet. The Prime Minister has said that the outcome of this whole negotiation must be in the best interests of the people of Newfoundland and Atlantic Canada "or there will be no deal". Eat your heart out!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ALLOCATION OF COD QUOTA TO FRANCE

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, we know from the extraordinary meeting of the Premiers the other day who was not involved in the decision to allocate codfish to the east and northeast coast of Newfoundland. Canadians want to know who was involved in the allocation of a cod quota for the French to the north of Newfoundland off the Labrador coast, for the first time in our history. My question is directed to the Acting Minister of Fisheries. Was he involved in this giveaway and did he notify the Newfoundland Government?

[Translation]

And was the Member for Manicouagan in favour of the quota for his region, which was also handed out to the French?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Acting Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, that is foolishness!

• (1425)

[English]

As to who was involved in those discussions during the period from January 13 to January 16, representatives of the Government of Newfoundland were involved in all the negotiations with France in this matter. It was agreed—and they agreed as well—that Canada should offer at that time 3,000 tonnes of fish to St. Pierre and Miquelon vessels in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, which we have to do under the infamous 1972 treaty entered into by the past Liberal administration, and three thousand tonnes of northern cod in the area of 2GH, which is up at the far end, the line between Labrador and Greenland. That was agreed to by those who were present there to advise, and by the representative of the Government of Newfoundland, who was present as well, three thousand tonnes in 2GH. The subsequent agreement settled on 3,200 tonnes, just 200 tonnes more. So that is the answer to the hon. gentleman's question.

I might say, while I am the Acting Minister, that I agree he is certainly acting.

Mr. Baker: In other words, the Minister is saying he agrees with giving the French a quota for the first time to the north of Newfoundland. Now we also have them with a quota on the west coast of Newfoundland. We have the French fleet on the south coast of Newfoundland. We have the French all around Newfoundland.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): I want to ask the Acting Minister of Fisheries and Oceans a question. We all know he is trying to learn French. Does he not realize that Newfoundland fishermen are not in agreement with his version of French immersion? Why did he agree with this agreement?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Acting Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the farmers who are among us here today will realize what the Hon. Member is immersed in.

[Translation]

You are crazy!

[English]

We are not going to be surrounded on all sides by the French trawlers because, as I have just informed this honourable House, if France chooses to disregard the conservation needs of the fish stocks in 3PS, for the first time, including the last 20 years—and we know who was in power most of that time—we will withdraw port privileges from French vessels. They are already not allowed to trans-ship fish in any Newfoundland port. If the fishermen of St. Pierre and Miquelon need support from us to stop overfishing, they will get that support from us because we have the backbone that the last administration never had.

CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the Canada-France negotiations. I am certain the rest of the country does not find this issue as funny as the government Members in the House.

The Acting Minister of Fisheries claims he is the lead Minister in the negotiations. At the same time the Prime Minister indicates there will be a fully involved Minister from Newfoundland, but the people leading the negotiations will be the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. From the Government's point of view, is it possible for the Deputy Prime Minister to indicate to this House who is responsible for this sell-out?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Acting Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, there is no sell-out. The lead Minister in these negotiations is the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who is always the lead Minister in international negotiations. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and I will be fully involved. There has been no sell-out. There is going to be no sell-out. There is not going to be any buy-out. But one has to wonder what is the policy of the New Democratic Party? We had the Hon. Rambo Broadbent threatening gunboat action. Is that still the policy of the New Democratic Party of this country?

INVOLVEMENT OF PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address the second part of my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Prime Minister indicated that the provincial Governments would be fully involved and consulted in these negotiations. Can the Secretary of State tell the House why the Prime Minister indicated that the Government will still give access to northern cod stocks to France in the agreement, the matter which has so grievously offended the people of Newfoundland and the other Atlantic provinces? Why will this sell-out continue in spite of the Prime Minister's assurance that these people will be listened to?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Acting Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Rodriguez: Crosbie, sit down. Who asked you?

Mr. Crosbie: —the Hon. Member who asked the question must have been away, just as the Secretary of State for External Affairs has been away. We are glad to have him back in the House because of his outstanding performance.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): I'll bet you are!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members opposite do not want to get the answers. They only like to make the innuendoes, the slanders, the assaults, and the travesties.

The answer is that there has been no sell-out. The Government of Newfoundland itself agreed to a 3,000 tonne allocation of northern cod in zone 2GH. There may or may not be any further allocation.

As the Prime Minister has said, there will be nothing further unless France agrees to binding arbitration on the boundary in the disputed zone and unless the problem of overfishing is solved and a reasonable quota agreed upon in zone 3PS on the south coast of Newfoundland. That is what the Prime Minister said. That is what he meant. That is what is going to be done. There will be no sell-out.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONSULTATION

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I suppose my question has to be directed to the Acting Minister of Fisheries. I ask again about the process of consultation with the provinces.

Will the Minister tell the House why the Government is failing to listen to the Premiers of the Atlantic provinces? Why is the Government failing to follow their direction? Can he answer this question in a calm and rational manner rather than acting as lead clown in a circus?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Acting Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, no one will ever accuse the Hon. Member of having the wit to be a clown.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: It doesn't take wit to be a clown.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Tell us all about it, Rambo.

Mr. Crosbie: The Premiers themselves at their conference on Monday in Toronto suggested that the interim agreement, which is the only agreement provided for negotiations, be reviewed. We are arranging that review. The Minister of Fisheries is to meet with the Ministers of Fisheries of the five eastern provinces on Monday in Moncton to have that review. There is a meeting today of officials in Halifax who are starting the review process. We are quite prepared to do what they wish and to review it.

Our Prime Minister has given the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador, the fishing industry, and the union representatives his personal assurance that their participation will be continuous—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Ouellet: What a stupid reaction. Resign!

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): You are just a joke.

Mr. Ouellet: You are a disgrace to the House.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Mount Royal.

Mr. Crosbie: Are there any other questions, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Ouellet: What a stupid Minister. You are a disgrace to Parliament.

Mr. Crosbie: I haven't had a question from you in a dog's age.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask all Members to be quiet enough to enjoy the next question and exchange, which I think will be on a different subject. The Hon. Member for Mount Royal.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SALE OF TELEGLOBE CANADA TO MEMOTEC DATA—SHARE TRADING ON STOCK EXCHANGES

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Privatization announced the sale of Teleglobe Canada yesterday. An unfortunate cloud has now descended with the naming of the successful bidder, Memotec Data. Although Memotec was only advised yesterday that it had won this contract, questionable trading took place on the Montreal and Toronto Stock Exchanges in the week prior to the announcement of the sale.

Will the Minister conduct an immediate investigation with respect to who in the Government, who in the Crown corporations, or who on the ministerial or departmental staff knew the name of the successful bidder and when they knew it? Will the Minister undertake to advise the House of the information she may find?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, under the Canada Business Corporations Act the Director has the responsibility of investigating these matters since Memotec is a federally incorporated company. It is under active investigation and the Director will take the appropriate action if his investigations so lead him to conclude.

KNOWLEDGE OF SALE

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, it is not necessarily a leak that is out there in the general world; there are concerns inside. My supplementary question is again directed to the Minister of State for Privatization. Why did the Minister not hold off the announcement of this sale since the sales on the Stock Exchange were known a week ago? Why did she not allow the investigation to go ahead instead of pursuing the sale and allowing the besmirching of the reputation of a reputable company? Will the Minister, who is supposedly the only knowledgeable person—

Some Hon. Members: Question!

Mrs. Finestone: —about this sale, undertake to find out who, where, when, why and how this information got out? There was trading even before the announcement took place.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, just so that the Hon. Member will understand the procedures that occur around this type of matter, I should explain that it is routine for a stock exchange to conduct an inquiry not after there has been speculative activity but after there has been speculative activity and an announcement. This automatically triggers the investigation which my hon. colleague talked about. Among the matters that will be investigated are the matters about which the Hon. Member has asked.

While this is a routine matter from the position of the stock exchange, and it is done in many cases in which this happens, I take the matter seriously. I asked my Deputy Minister to meet with the President of the stock exchange this morning, which she did. We have been promised that the matter will be expedited. We expect that the results will be announced shortly. They will be undertaking the steps suggested by the Hon. Member. As well, I might say how well received this transaction has been.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION—RAIL PURCHASES BY CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. When the Prime Minister was running for Parliament in the by-election in Central Nova he was reported to have said that Ottawa, and I want to use his exact words, should use its "colossal influence" in the Department of Supply and Services and the CNR to guarantee that the industries of the area, Nova Scotia, benefit. Last weekend the Minister of National Revenue announced to Nova Scotia Tories that CN had agreed to purchase rail from Sydney Steel Corporation. Can the Government confirm this? If it cannot, will it at least make the commitment that the CN will guarantee the purchase of rail from Sysco in order that Phase II modernization can go ahead?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to hear the hon. gentleman's recent interest in this topic. Naturally, CN has agreed to purchase rail from Sysco. CN has been the main purchaser of rail from Sysco for many years. Under our administration of the Government of Canada it will continue to be one of the main purchasers, if not the main purchaser, of rail from Sysco.

I can tell the House that probably today, but certainly within a matter of hours, CN will be entering into a memorandum of agreement with Sysco covering its traditional share of rail requirements for standard carbon rail, low alloy rail and alloy rail, so long as the level of quality, competitive pricing and delivery performance are satisfactory, commencing with the order year that starts August 1. When Sysco meets CN's specifications for head-hardened rail, it will be receiving orders from CN for this type of rail under the same conditions. Prices will be negotiated annually—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

CAPE BRETON LABOUR COUNCIL—REQUEST FOR MEETING WITH PRIME MINISTER

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): My supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Cape Breton Labour Council is very concerned about the Sysco modernization, the Devco lay-offs, and other regional industrial problems in Cape Breton. The Council sent a telegram to the Prime Minister requesting a meeting with him when he is in Cape Breton this weekend to open the Winter Games. Can the Deputy Prime Minister respond to the Labour Council and give the assurance that the Prime Minister will schedule a meeting with the representatives of the workers of Cape Breton to talk about these very serious problems that they are having?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has already heard of the action that has been taken by the Minister of Transport in terms of working out an arrangement for the traditional supply of railway steel from Sysco. I had the opportunity to meet with workers from Sysco, and the related unions in that particular area. They indicated that they would be satisfied with that type of arrangement. I am not aware of the invitation that has been sent. Certainly the Hon. Minister of National Revenue has met with the workers, as has the Hon. Minister of Transport, and myself. I am sure that if the opportunity presents itself the Prime Minister would be prepared to meet with them as well.

Mr. Rodriguez: I will send you a copy of the telegram.

TELEGLOBE CANADA

PRIVATIZATION—INQUIRY IF MEASURES TAKEN TO PREVENT PROFITEERING THROUGH USE OF PRIVILEGED INFORMATION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the privatization of Teleglobe Canada and has to do with the Toronto and Montreal stock exchanges investigation into speculation on Memotec shares. Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Minister whether, before making public the decision to sell Teleglobe to Memotec, she took steps to ensure formally that none of the Government or public service officials who had privileged information had directly or indirectly benefited from such information to buy Memotec shares?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, I do not go around examining public servants all the time to make sure that they are doing their job, because they do their job.

Let me say that the decision on behalf of the Government of Memotec's purchase of Teleglobe was made after the market closed on Tuesday night. The stock exchanges were immediately informed. Up until then, there had been absolutely no decision taken. As it always does, our Department did a very fine job of ensuring that everything was kept very discretely and very securely.

[Translation]

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, if no investigation has been made, no-one can know the truth, so I should like to ask this to the Minister.

[English]

Would the Minister advise the House if she has already transmitted to the Toronto or Montreal stock exchanges a list of the names of all the people in the Government, or the Public Service, who were privy to the information that Memotec was to be recommended as the successful purchaser of Teleglobe?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, I have already told the House that my Deputy Minister is meeting with stock exchange officials to assist in this investigation. She was on the plane this morning by ten o'clock. We will co-operate in every way with the stock exchanges. It is very important that this investigation be completed appropriately.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CENTRAL AMERICA—CANADIAN POLICY ON SALE OF ARMS

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Minister will know that during his absence The Gazette revealed that the airline company, Propair, which at that time was partially owned by the Government of Quebec, played a key role last year in a CIA linked clandestine operation to supply arms to the Contras. We have since had further evidence that a Montreal firm, Trans World Arms, has also been involved in the sale of arms ultimately reaching the Contras.

Has the Minister not made clear what the Canadian Government policy is vis-à-vis Central America? Do businesses and provincial Governments not know what the government policy is? Will the Minister inform the House of his plans to ensure that they understand the policy?

Mr. Speaker: I would ask that Hon. Members ask the question once, and not over again. I would ask that Ministers give their response once, and not over again.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the policy of the Government is very clear with regard to Central America. If the alleged actions occurred, they are against the policy of the Government. Both actions are being investigated by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. When the Solicitor General or I have information to convey to the House on the results of those investigations, that information will be made available in the usual way. I repeat that the actions to which reference has been made, if they occurred, are against the policy of the Government of Canada.

I also wish to say that a letter was sent this morning by the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway which suggested that the Government of Canada had some knowledge with regard to one of those transactions. That insinuation made by the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway is false.

CANADIAN ARMS TRADE

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): The Minister himself said in response to the Special Joint Committee's Recommendation No. 17 that "The Government has the global arms trade under constant scrutiny". Why does the Government not have the Canadian arms trade under constant scrutiny? Will the Minister provide a full public investigation of this trade?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, first, we have the Canadian arms trade not only under constant scrutiny, but it is now operating under a much stricter regime concerning the export and import control legislation than was the case before. The Hon. Member will know that on several occasions I have requested her Party, which has complained about this matter, to make specific recommendations as to ways in which we might tighten that regime.

Mr. Riis: You said to refer it to the committee, Joe.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I have received nothing but silence.

Ms. Jewett: You are avoiding the whole issue.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Because the New Democratic Party does not want to contribute—

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT RESPECT COMMITMENTS CONCERNING EARLY RETIREES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. This morning, we met with representatives of retired members of the Armed Forces and representatives of early retirees in Quebec, who were unanimous in saying that the Conservative Government's decision to cut unemployment insurance benefits for early retirees was unacceptable, unfair and discriminatory. They also reminded us that last year, the Minister of Employment and Immigration announced on December 5 here in the House that the Government would make some changes in this respect. They now want to know why, after two months, the Government has yet to meet its commitment. People have not been reimbursed and no changes have been made.

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Employment and Immigration is well aware of the situation, and he was telling the truth. It is just a matter of time before a response will be forthcoming.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, people are getting impatient. This problem has been with us for a year. It has now been one year since people lost $10,000. It has now been two months since the Government committed itself, and it says we should be patient.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE INTERVENE ON BEHALF OF RETIRED MILITARY PERSONNEL

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): My supplementary is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Representatives for retired members of the military would like to know why the Minister, who is supposed to defend the interests of the Armed Forces, is letting his Government reduce or take away altogether unemployment insurance benefits for people who, as we all know, have to retire from the service at the age of 55, and now when they look for another job, they are deprived of unemployment insurance benefits. Why doesn't the Minister of National Defence defend the members of the Armed Forces here in Canada?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, as I said before, the whole issue is now under consideration, and a response will soon be forthcoming.

HEALTH

REPORTING OF AIDS DISEASE IN MANITOBA AND NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It has come to my attention that all provinces in Canada except Manitoba and Newfoundland are covered under legislation which obligates them to make AIDS a notifiable disease. Even though those two provinces have been reporting AIDS cases to the proper medical authorities they are not obligated to do so by law. Can the Minister tell us when we can expect those two provinces to be covered under the legislation, in the interest of establishing a complete and more effective national AIDS surveillance network?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The question of AIDS being a reportable disease falls within provincial jurisdiction. The Member's information is correct, Newfoundland and Manitoba do not list AIDS as a reportable disease. All other provinces and territories do. While it falls within provincial jurisdiction, the Department of National Health and Welfare and our advisory committee very strongly urge that it be required rather than voluntary.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—REPORTED PURCHASE OF ARMS FOR CONTRAS BY MONTREAL FIRM

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Would he please tell the House what date the Government found out that a Canadian company, Trans World Arms of Montreal, with connections in Miami, acted as an arms broker and bought arms in Portugal which were shipped under forged Guatemalan documents to the Nicaraguan contras?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the RCMP began an investigation in January shortly after the appearance of information and allegations in a Montreal newspaper. The Hon. Member, as well as conveying some false insinuations by letter, has conveyed some information which we have passed on to the RCMP and it will constitute a part of their investigation.

REQUEST THAT MATTER BE RAISED WITH PORTUGUESE AUTHORITIES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, the Minister will find in the information I have sent him that the same kind of forged documents used by Trans World have also been traced to Standford Technologies, the firm of Richard Secord and Albert Hakim who were involved with Lieutenant-Colonel Oliver North. We raised the Propair matter and now the Trans World matter. Is the Minister prepared to go to the Portuguese authorities to get them to provide the Canadian Government with all the files relating to the shipment of arms through Trans World Arms, allegedly to Guatemala but really to the contras?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, let me try to make this as clear as I can. Any Canadian companies shipping arms to those destinations do so contrary to Canadian policy. Whether or not they do so contrary to Canadian law is a matter which will be determined by an RCMP investigation. There is now an active RCMP investigation. If it is consistent with that investigation for me to make the kind of inquiries requested by the Hon. Member, then I shall.

DRUMMONDVILLE CONTRACT—SIZE OF TENDERS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works and concerns the Drummondville Public Works contract. Two days ago the Minister said in the House that the Brodilaf group submitted the lowest tender. He has now been corrected twice, once by his Chief of Staff and again this morning by the Deputy Minister who admitted that the other bid was cheaper. Will the Minister now admit he was wrong and the staff recommendation in favour of the Hama group was changed, either by the Minister or by Treasury Board, in favour of someone else? Will he not admit that only a public inquiry could clear the air in this whole matter?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, this is probably the fifth time the Hon. Member has put that question to me. I have clearly indicated that the tender by the Brodilaf group for rental was the lowest of the two competing bids. I then said, and I repeat, there were other considerations. I made available the 3,000-page file this morning to my learned friend for his scrutiny. I have indicated that I will make that file available to the press. The decision was made on the recommendation of the public servants at head office and approved by Treasury Board. It is the best bargain in the situation.

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION WHY HAMA COMPANY DID NOT OBTAIN CONTRACT

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): This morning, Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Minister of Public Works told us that when the first tenders were called two of the three bidders were withdrawn, leaving only the Hama Company. In the second tender call Hama submitted the lowest bid.

Considering the fact that the Hama Company won twice, Mr. Speaker, how can the Minister explain that the contract was awarded to somebody else?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, while I think two or three different words were used, the question is the same and the answer is the same.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—ADVERTISEMENTS PROMOTING TOURS FROM CANADA

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. What will be the Government's response to the reappearance of newspaper advertisements inviting Canadians to South Africa for brainwashing sessions, in violation of the voluntary sanctions against travel to South Africa?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I regret those advertisements. I regret that some newspaper publishers are prepared to put profit ahead of principle. They are, nonetheless, within the law and we do not intend to change the law in that regard.

Oral Questions

IMPORTATION OF STEEL CASTINGS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister not agree that it is time to impose mandatory sanctions, especially given that situations such as the following have occurred. In January CN and CP received 77,000 pounds of steel castings from South Africa. That purchase not only indirectly supports apartheid, but is at the cost of steelworkers' jobs in this country. Are we going to sacrifice Canadian jobs in support of apartheid or are we going to impose mandatory sanctions so this sort of thing will not recur?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have sanctions with respect to steel. I want to express my appreciation and that of the Prime Minister to the President of the Brotherhood of Railway Transport Workers who has drawn to our attention the fact that the regulations now in place do not deal with the import of castings. That is a loophole in the law and we are going to change it.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry. I would ask Hon. Members to tighten up their questions. We are getting close to the end of Question Period.

TRADE

UNITED STATES PETITION AGAINST CANADIAN STEEL EXPORTS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. As the Minister was probably informed yesterday, a petition was filed in front of the International Trade Commission of the U.S. Department of Commerce against exports of Canadian steel. The petition is totally spurious and based upon alleged exports which Canadian companies like Stelco have not made for the last year or two. Does the Government intend to make representations to the U.S. Government to have that petition rejected outright, based as it is on totally phoney and spurious grounds?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, this is a routine trade action taken by the Americans and it will be dealt with in a routine manner.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would remind the Minister that is the answer she gave on the softwood lumber case. That did not turn out to be too routine.

We now have a petition on potash and a petition on steel. Does this not represent a clear pattern of trade harassment which totally goes against the commitments made by the U.S. Government as far back as the Shamrock Summit and as recently as three weeks ago at the Bush meeting? Can the Government not require the U.S. Government to live up to its commitments to end this kind of trade harassment? The U.S. has the power to reject these petitions outright and right now.

• (1500)

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has finally woken up to the reality of trade harassment. I again remind him that that is the reason we are entering a bilateral trade negotiation with the U.S. He is unhappy with that answer, but we repeatedly say as long as the existing trade remedy laws remain in place Canadian industries will be subject to this kind of harassment.

REFUGEES

SALVADORAN AND GUATEMALAN REFUGEE STATUS CLAIMANTS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Immigration to whom I have given notice. As the Minister knows, the Government is quoted in yesterday and today's papers as seeking methods of dealing with Salvadoran and Guatemalan refugee claimants entering Canada from the United States. Will the Minister assure this House that Salvadorans and Guatemalans from the United States seeking refugee status in Canada will not be stopped or sent back to the United States?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, genuine refugees will not be sent back to face death or torture. However, temporary measures are being examined in order to treat abusers harshly.

DEPORTATION LIST INQUIRY

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister knows, there is no way of telling who is a genuine refugee until he has been examined. Will the Minister say whether these people will be allowed to make their claim in Canada? I am particularly asking whether the Minister will assure this House that the B-1 list or the no deportation list will not be abolished, or that El Salvador and Guatemala will not be removed from the list as a means of preventing them from making their claims.

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, there are a number of temporary measures that are being examined. When appropriate, we will make those known.

PUBLIC SERVICE

DISMISSAL OF IMMIGRATION OFFICER—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of State for Immigration. It concerns the firing of immigration officer John Quigley. It is clear that Mr. Quigley's firing on the evidence of the dismissal letter was politically motivated as a response to the embarrassment that the information caused the Government, and the Minister specifically. Why did the Minister permit Mr. Quigley to be victimized in such a way by the actions of his Rambo-style senior officials simply to protect his own political reputation and that of his Government?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Quigley has a right to present a grievance. That right has been exercised. From what I understand, the grievance is being heard this afternoon.

REQUEST THAT DEPUTY MINISTER ACCEPT GRIEVANCE PRESENTATION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister can make a political decision to fire an employee, he should have the courage to take a political decision to rehire him instead of washing his hands of this affair.

Given that the very first step in the grievance procedure is an acceptance or a rejection by the Deputy Minister, will he not do the honourable thing and order his Deputy Minister to accept the grievance and automatically overturn what is a very outrageous and unfair decision for Mr. Quigley?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, it is inappropriate for me to comment further until Mr. Quigley has his grievance heard today.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Skeena. One short question, please.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

FORTHCOMING FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE—POSITION OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. I am sure he is aware that next month the First Ministers' Conference on the Constitution, aboriginal rights and self-government, will be held. At this point in time it appears that only the lowest common denominator will be the likely result. Will the Deputy Prime Minister today give his assurance that within the next few days the federal Government's position will be released so that the provinces and the public of Canada will have a chance to rally round and see that Canada's first citizens get the kind of consideration they so rightfully deserve at this constitutional conference?

Point of Order—Mr. Riis

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member is fully aware, the ministerial meetings leading up to the FMC will continue and at that time discussions will take place among all participants. What the Hon. Member must remember is that in order to change the Constitution of Canada there is a formula in place that calls for 50 per cent of the population and seven provinces to agree.

Mr. Speaker: Last question, the Hon. Member for Abitibi.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

VILLAGE OF UMUIJAQ'S NEED FOR IMMEDIATE, ADEQUATE POSTAL SERVICE

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post. Mayor Noah Inukpuk and the residents of the village of Umuijaq north of Kuujjuaroapik in Abitibi want to have adequate postal services immediately because they now have to wait for a whole month before getting their mail, including family allowances, old age security pensions, and other important documents.

Here is my question, Mr. Speaker: The Canadian Government is committed to assist the Inuit under the terms of Section 6.4 of the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement, and Canada Post will have to dispatch an official to this village to settle these problems immediately.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the question of the Hon. Member for Abitibi has to do with a very important matter. I got in touch with Canada Post management and was advised that postal services are now provided through an exchange of mail bags in the village mentioned by the Hon. Member. Management are now examining the volume of mail before deciding what kind of services are required in this village. As soon as a decision has been made I will get back to the Hon. Member.

POINT OF ORDER

COMMENT ON MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I know that the Secretary of State for External Affairs would not want to mislead the House inadvertently. He made reference to the fact that he had requested and not heard the New Democratic Party on suggestions for changes to the export of arms. If the Minister refers to his mail of September 29 he will know that he received correspondence suggesting that this whole matter be referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade so that committee members could give the attention that such a topic deserves. I would encourage the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to give that matter some consideration.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in the same spirit of a point of order, sooner or later members of the New Democratic Party will have to accept some responsibility to put forward specific suggestions and not content themselves with empty cant and criticism.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I hate to interrupt this fight between the Conservatives and the New Democrats for third place—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): —but I feel that I should rise on a point of order to ask the Government House Leader to tell us what business he intends to call for the next seven days of sitting time of the House. In particular, does the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) still intend to give a report to the House on his trip to southern Africa, and when will that be?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the order of business for the next few days will be Bill C-38, an Act to privatize Teleglobe, Bill C-21, the Shipping Conference Exemption Act, Bill C-12, amendments to the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act; C-2, Canagrex, and C-6, the Atlantic Accord. We hope that we can have all those through by Wednesday next so we can deal with the Budget with the decks clear.

In so far as the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) statement is concerned, as I indicated last week, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, (Mr. Clark) has just returned today and the Prime Minister has not had a chance to confer with him. After that is done, I would think that an appropriate statement will be made.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Just a moment, please. I will now hear a point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta (Mr. Friesen). After that, the Hon. Member for Drummond (Mr. Guilbault) will have the floor.

POINT OF ORDER

LANGUAGE USED IN HOUSE—MEMBERS' RESPONSIBILITIES

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey—White Rock—North Delta): Mr. Speaker, I raise this point of order with some caution and care because it involves the office of the Chair. You will recall, Sir, that two days ago the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper) raised a point of order regarding the kind of terminology and language used in the House. He urged you at that time to check with Beauchesne, specifically Citation 55 and subsequent citations regarding, again, the kind of language that is used in the House.

• (1510)

Today the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) used the phrase: "besmirching the reputation of a company". I am concerned enough when we use language with respect to each other that does not enhance the conduct of the House. It concerns me even more when innocent citizens and companies outside the House are affected by the language used here.

There has been nothing to indicate that the company in question did anything wrong or that anyone else did anything wrong with respect to that company's operations. Therefore, I think it is not helpful for Members of the House to use phrases like "besmirching the reputation of a company" which in fact then besmirches the reputation of a company. I would ask Your Honour to look at that practice.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the point raised by my hon. friend, if you look at rulings by Speakers as to what language is permissible in the House, you will find language far more colourful—

[Translation]

You will find terms far more expressive—

[English]

—than the word "besmirch". I submit that there is nothing in the precedents on language which is parliamentary or unparliamentary to indicate that the word "besmirch" should be ruled unparliamentary.

If I am not mistaken, the citations on unparliamentary language deal particularly with words or phrases used by Hon. Members with regard to other Hon. Members. Just the other day when I raised the concern that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader had used the word "slanderous" in this House, a word which a previous Speaker had ruled to be unparliamentary, the answer given by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader was that the words were not directed to a particular Member of the House and that it was all right to use a word which was otherwise unparliamentary provided it referred to Members of the House as a group.

I make this point to argue that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader has confirmed what I have just said, which is that, with the exception of certain people referred to by Beauchesne as being members of a protected group including members of the Royal family, judges and one or two other categories, the precedents with respect to unparliamentary language apply not to the public at large, individual members of the public or companies, but rather to Members of this House.

Finally, my recollection of the words used by the Hon. Member for Mount Royal is not that they were in any way an attack on the company in question but a plea to the Government to act in such a way that the conduct of the Government itself or officers of the Government could turn out to besmirch the name of a reputable company, and I do hope that that will not happen. There was nothing I heard in the words of the Hon. Member for Mount Royal that sounded to any reasonable person, if I may say so, as an attack on the company in question.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, very briefly, my recollection of the remarks of the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) is in keeping with the recollection of the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray). The Hon. Member for Mount Royal in no way put into question the integrity of Memotec or in any way besmirched or maligned the name of that particular company. She simply indicated that the Government should have waited before announcing the decision to sell Teleglobe to Memotec until the investigation into the alleged insider trading was complete. I would ask the Hon. Member who raised the point of order to review the "blues". Upon review of the "blues", I am certain he will agree with me that the Hon. Member for Mount Royal in no way called into question the good name of Memotec.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, just as briefly, I would reiterate what I said the other day in support of my colleague. I suggest to the House that our parliamentary privilege of immunity within this House is a time-honoured tradition and in order to deserve it, we have to treat it with respect and not abuse it or hide behind it.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta (Mr. Friesen), who is a senior and very highly respected Member of this House, for bringing the matter to the attention of the Chair. I listened with care to the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), to the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) and to the Parliamentary Secretary.

I think the essence of the complaint made by the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta is that when a question seems to carry an innuendo of wrongdoing, naturally there is a certain reaction from other Hon. Members. I took it that the Hon. Member hoped that all Hon. Members, in asking questions, would at least base their questions on some known facts more than on suspicions. I think that is the point the Hon. Member was making.

I listened with care to the representations of the Hon. Member for Windsor West and the Hon. Member for York South—Weston. According to my recollection of what the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) said, she was not in fact trying to besmirch the reputation of the company but rather to urge the Government to do something so that the company's reputation might not be besmirched. One would probably have to examine exactly what was said, but I think the point taken by the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta is one that the Chair has heard before and is in the interests of fair play.

Of course, I am cognizant of the fact that the Hon. Member for Windsor West is also a very senior Member of the Chamber and has the immediate responsibility of considering the rules and traditions of this place. He speaks eloquently and with authority. I do not think, under the circumstances, that the word "besmirch" is in itself unparliamentary.

I am assisted by the interventions that have been brought before me. I would urge all Hon. Members to take into account what their colleagues have to say. At times, Hon. Members might feel that something does offend or is not as clear as it should be, and I would hope that all Hon. Members keep that in mind in the conduct of their affairs.

There is another important matter to which the Chair has made reference. I recognize the Hon. Member for Drummond (Mr. Guilbault).

PRIVILEGE

THE BRODILAF-HAMA AFFAIR—THE ALLEGED PRIVILEGED INFORMATION ABOUT CERTAIN FACTS

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) informed the House he was in possession of a document, dated May 7, 1986, that came from my office at the House of Commons in Ottawa, a document he showed to the press.

Mr. Speaker, I can prove I was in my riding on May 5, 1986, so I could not have met anyone in Ottawa that day to talk about the Canada Employment Centre in Drummondville, as was mentioned in the document.

I did not draft or sign or send the document referred to by the Hon. Member for Shefford, and I never saw it until yesterday. Legal action will be taken against the person who originated this document and this political smear campaign.

Mr. Speaker, I demand an apology from the Hon. Member for Shefford on the floor of the House, because he has abused his privileges as a parliamentarian to indulge in political smear tactics. If the Hon. Member for Shefford believes I have done something illegal, he should go and prefer charges against me outside the House.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) is away right now and obviously not in a position to speak to a question of privilege.

Normally, the Member who is on the receiving end of this kind of statement is given a chance to reply. However, in his statement the Hon. Member for Drummond (Mr. Guilbault) left out something very important: he did not conclude his statement with a motion.

With respect, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that although the Hon. Member for Drummond made a statement on a matter that is important to him, it is not a genuine question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Chair could comment on this problem. We have a situation where an Hon. Member is the subject of a complaint by the Hon. Member for Drummond (Mr. Guilbault). The former Member is not here this afternoon. In the circumstances, I think the Chair could suggest that Hon. Members postpone debate on this question until tomorrow or some other day, when the other Hon. Member will be in the House. I think the Chair's suggestion should be agreeable to all Members and that it is probably the best thing to do for the time being.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. After listening carefully to the Hon. Member for Drummond, I think it would be in the best interests of all concerned if we knew exactly what the Hon. Member's complaint is about. Apparently, he says the letter that was made public is a letter he did not sign himself and that someone released or signed this letter without his permission. He has not named anyone and has not indicated at all who in his office would have released such a document without his approval. I therefore suggest he clarify the matter so that the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) can be more specific in his reply.

Mr. Speaker: I think the comments made by the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) are very apt. He has raised an important point. Perhaps it would be a good thing if the Hon. Member for Drummond were given a chance to elaborate, just to clarify the point raised by the Hon. Member for Papineau.

The Hon. Member for Drummond (Mr. Guilbault).

Mr. Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I can inform the Hon. Member for Papineau that the document handed round yesterday by his colleague, the Hon. Member for Shefford, has no letterhead, was not signed by me and in fact was signed by no one. And I repeat that the Hon. Member showed the document to the press.

Mr. Speaker: I think that in the circumstances, and consistent with the practice of the Chair, it would probably be better to postpone consideration of this matter until all Members concerned can be present. The question could then be pursued on some other occasion. For the time being, debate on the subject is adjourned.

ELECTIONS, PRIVILEGES AND PROCEDURE

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Rodriguez that the first report of the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure presented to the House on Tuesday, January 27, 1987, be concurred in.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate this afternoon in the motion to concur in the report of the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure dealing with the issue of the registration of lobbyists.

[Translation]

As you will undoubtedly recall, Mr. Speaker, it was on September 9, 1985 that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) tabled in this House a document concerning public sector ethics.

And you will recall that in this document, all wrapped up in a nice blue ribbon, the Prime Minister told us that it was necessary to regain, he said, the respect of Canadians for our Government institutions. If this was true on September 9, 1985, Mr. Speaker, you can imagine what the Canadian Government would have to do today—February 12, 1987—to regain the confidence of Canadians. Here is what the Prime Minister told us on September 9, 1985:

> It is a great principle of public administration—I could even say an "imperative"—that to function effectively the Government and the public service of a democraty must have the trust and confidence of the public they serve. In order to reinforce that trust, the Government must be able to provide competent management and, above all, to be guided by the highest standards of conduct.

My God! Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister was explaining some of the measures he wanted to take to shore up this code of public ethics. He said he wanted, first:

> A new Conflict of Interest/Post-Employment Code for Public Office Holders.

We know what happened to that one.

Then he went on to say:

> Instructions to Ministers imposing specific and strict limitations on the hiring of family members.

Third, he had sent:

> Letters to Opposition Leaders on the subject of ethical standards for MPs and Senators.

You see, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister wanted all Members of Parliament to share the blame equally, strongly hoping he would not have to bear so much of the blame.

Fourth, he said he wanted to establish:

> An experimental program of parliamentary scrutiny of Governor in Council appointments. 5. The registration of lobbying activity.

So he said at the time, and there were two more components in the program of the Prime Minister.

[English]

I will read to you from page 9 of the document of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) of September 9. He said:

The fifth component of this comprehensive approach to public sector ethics is the undertaking of this Government to introduce into the House of Commons, at an early date—

—remember the words "early date", Mr. Speaker—

—legislation to monitor lobbying activity and to control the lobbying process by providing a reliable and accurate source of information on the activities of lobbyists. We will require, among other things, paid lobbyists to register and identify their clients.

This will enable persons who are approached by lobbyists for Canadian corporations, associations and unions, and by agents on behalf of foreign governments and other foreign interests, to be clearly aware of who is behind the representation.

I have accordingly asked my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate affairs, to prepare, on an urgent basis, legislation to govern lobbying activity.

This document is from September 9, 1985. Days and months passed. Just before Christmas, 1986, the then Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs stood up in the House of Commons and informed us that he would table in the House, not a Bill or any other means to control the activities of lobbyists, but the consultation or discussion paper which I have here, entitled Lobbying and the Registration of Paid Lobbyists. The document is quite extensive. It describes different alternatives for registering lobbyists, including the alternative of doing nothing at all. Of course, this was a great disappointment to a number of us who were hoping at the time that we would see early legislation. However, the positive aspect of this report is that the issue was referred to a parliamentary committee. Unfortunately, I have little use for the contents of the report itself because they were not very inspiring for our committeee. However, the issue was sent to the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure in early 1986.

• (1530)

That committee consisted of Members from all sides of the House and I want to give credit to Members from all Parties who were on that committee, under the able chairmanship of the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper). We had extensive hearings in Ottawa, Washington, and Sacremento, California. We heard the opinion of Canadian lobbyists, Canadian pressure groups, ordinary Canadians, as well as Members of Parliament about the question of the registration of lobbyists. In Washington and California we interviewed lobbyists and legislators.

It became apparent from our hearings that lobbyists are seen very differently in the United States than they are in Canada. For instance, lobbyists in Canada will use every trick in the book to call themselves anything but lobbyists. They will call themselves government consultants, consultants in government affairs, public relations personnel, and many other names. In the United States, however, people involved in that profession are very proud to call themselves lobbyists. Indeed, in Washington lobbyists will identify themselves as such, in the phone book and elsewhere.

It was interesting to note that most Canadian lobbyists were reluctant to have a registration system or any system that would impose any burden on them. The few who were in favour, with some exceptions, wanted a system of self-registration that was administered by their profession. However, in the United States most lobbyists thought it was perfectly normal to have a system to register their activities. Indeed, they had no difficulty with the principle that they should register what they do.

Members of the committee asked lobbyists in the United States if they objected to registration. They agreed that they were conducting private transactions on behalf of private corporations, but that their job was to communicate with public officials. They felt that it was only normal in that case that they should be asked to register. Indeed, some of the lobbyists in Washington to whom we talked were actually using the registry in the United States as a form of advertising. They told us that they would use the registry to show potential clients all the customers for whom they had lobbied over the last year, and used it as a tool to show a potential client their efficiency. Needless to say, the different attitude shown by the Americans was fascinating.

Once our hearings were completed outside the country last summer, the committee came back to Parliament and proceeded to draft a preliminary report. Let me repeat that Members on all sides of the House were quite co-operative but, unfortunately, the year progressed quickly and our work was interrupted by the summer recess. Furthermore, the Prime Minister decided to end the session and start afresh—we all know how well that worked—which delayed the committee's work for another month. In November the committee received a new reference and the members of the committee went back to work.

I believe that this unanimous report represents a compromise of members who tempered their views in committee. I sought less than I wanted in the report and probably some Members opposite put a little more in the report than they really wanted.

While a unanimous report is not unique, when one considers that most of us began from very different points of views on the issue of registration of lobbyists, the fact that we managed to reconcile our differences was remarkable. I never thought that Members on the government side who sat on the same committee as the Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) and I could ever agree on the time of day. However, partly because of the good chairmanship by the Member for Peace River, and the co-operation of everyone, we managed to agree on much more than that. Ultimately we agreed on the very substantive report that was tabled in the House earlier this year.

Our report made several recommendations. They include the adoption and implementation of a system of registration of lobbyists. We recommended that the Government consult with members of the lobbying industry to discuss the formation of an association of lobbyists, in addition to the system of registration so that we could have both a system of discipline based on rules set out by the industry while, at the same time, having a registry that we all advocated.

We recommended that there be a definition of lobbying. It was defined as attempting to influence either directly or indirectly any governmental decision, whether it be legislative or administrative.

We recommended a definition of who should be in the category of lobbyists and who should be left out. We made several other recommendations in the report. The time is passing quickly and the report has been in the hands of the Government for almost a month. Given the compromise that all Members made—

An Hon. Member: You are a great one to say that.

Mr. Boudria: The Hon. Member who unfortunately did not participate in the committee may think that the issue is very funny. However, I am not only saying that opposition Members did good work on the committee, I think Members on all sides worked well. Perhaps it was largely due to the fact that the Member in question was not there. In fact, it is probably 90 per cent of the reason why we managed to produce a unanimous report.

However, we also recommended in our report that those who lobbied as volunteers and did not charge for their services should not have to register. We did not want to interfere with anyone's freedom of speech, which is a very important distinction and a concern that was raised by members in that committee. While we wanted those who charge a fee for interfacing with public officials to disclose what they were doing, we were unanimous in our view that we did not want anyone to be precluded from contacting a public official. That is very important to us who are in public office.

I believe if those laws were made too strict, they could affect the very privileges of Members of Parliament to obtain input from the constituencies which we are charged to represent. The privileges of Hon. Members are indeed at the centre of this issue. That is why I think it concerns Hon. members on all sides of the House, and need not be dealt with in perhaps quite as partisan a manner as some other things with which we deal. I have been known to be partisan every now and then myself. I remember well what happened to me last year, and you will probably recall as well, Mr. Speaker. However, I try not to be too partisan when dealing with this kind of issue.

The committee thought that lobbyists should be required to register their names, the names of their firms, the contact person, and their address and phone number. We felt lobbyists should register the name of their client and the client's place of business. The lobbying activities which are taking place should also be registered.

Some of us would like to have gone one step further, and I am one of them, and registered the fee a lobbyist receives for an activity as well as his disbursements. In other words, a person could go to the register and see that one particular lobbyist was lobbying the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) trying to get a concession for such and such an industry, that the lobbyist was paid $10,000 to do this and that he spent half of that wining and dining people. The importance of that is that there would then be a greater level of transparency.

I am not saying that Members of Parliament or cabinet Ministers have no right to meet anyone for dinner. What I am saying is we would create an atmosphere whereby the public would have a right to see who did what to whom, for whom, by whom, and at what cost. That is an important element.

In the State of California, for instance, the legislation governing lobbyists there prevents a lobbyist from entertaining an individual Member of the Legislative Assembly at a cost greater than, I believe, $10 in any calendar month. I think that is just getting a bit carried away. I can imagine a lobbyist taking a Congressman to lunch at a cost of $12.50 and asking the Congressman to give him $2.50 because he is not supposed to spend any more than $10. I think that would be onerous and we do not want the system to be that way.

I think we want the system designed in such a way as to have it simple and acceptable, not only to people in the lobbying business but to Members of Parliament, to people in Government. The system should be easy to work with and one which will not be expensive to operate. The last thing we need is to set up a bureaucracy of a large number of people in order to administer the rules. Having said that, I think the system would be better if we could register the fees.

In closing, I must say that as a compromise our parliamentary committee inserted a provision in our report that in two years time the same parliamentary committee should perform an evaluation of the registry of lobbyists. At that time the committee, while reviewing the registry, could decide to add certain criteria. It is my sincere hope that two years from now, or two years from the passing of the legislation, the parliamentary committee will want to add the fees of the lobbyists in the registry. I think that would make it far more meaningful.

I want to conclude by again congratulating all Hon. Members who participated in the committee from all sides of the House, representing all political Parties, under the chairmanship of the Hon. Member for Peace River, who did a great job of chairing the committee. The challenge is now up to the Government to prepare the legislation and to send it back to our committee so that we can go ahead and do the job.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey—White Rock—North Delta): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to participate in the debate on this particular subject which is so important to the health of this institution. I want to join previous speakers in paying tribute to the chairman of the committee, the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper), who did a very excellent piece of work in bringing about unanimity and consensus in the committee report on lobbying. I know it was not easy. Probably all members of the committee had to make some concessions in order to promote that kind of unanimity.

Having said that, I think it is time to recall the beginnings of this aspect of parliamentary reform, which actually began in the first Speech from the Throne. Our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), as his first order of business, enunciated the need for wide and sweeping changes to the practices within Parliament. He said there should be parliamentary reform and this is one of the reports which has issued from that particular statement of the Prime Minister. I, for one, want to put on the record that our Prime Minister has taken the initiative to begin changing the course of procedure in this Parliament to ensure that it becomes open to the people of Canada, so that all Members of Parliament, particularly the back-benchers, can do the work they were elected to do.

I listened with care to the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) when he spoke this morning. He made two points that were important to him and I think probably to all of us. His first point was that when the Prime Minister made the statement a year or two ago, what he did was ask a committee to do the work.

Mr. Boudria: No.

Mr. Friesen: With respect, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) was not here and I am quoting the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap. He said this morning in debate that the Prime Minister had asked a committee to study the matter of the registry of lobbyists and now, 16 months later, we have the report. It was a complaint on the part of the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap that the Prime Minister did that. I would simply point out that if the Prime Minister had gone ahead on his own initiative and had the PMO do something and then referred it to the House, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap would have complained that the Prime Minister had bypassed Parliament, and that would have been a legitimate complaint. The Hon. Member cannot have it both ways.

In making his second point, the Hon. Member read a list of lurid headlines from the newspapers and said it is time to clean up the act. I would not ask the Hon. Member, as a member of the Opposition, not to criticize the Government. That is his role and that is what provides for good government. However, if the Hon. Member wants the atmosphere of the House to improve, the first thing he can do as House leader of one of the opposition Parties, is give credit where credit is due; for once give total credit to the Prime Minister for having initiated the kinds of reforms which make it possible for the House to do its work.

I was glad the Minister in charge of this legislation was here this morning because he has given his undertaking that there will be legislation as soon as possible to bring about a registry of lobbyists, which is long overdue. Having read the report, I would simply say that while I concur with pretty well everything in it, I myself think it has not really gone far enough.

The first assumption the report makes is that lobbyists, the ones who need to be watched most carefully, are those who are lobbying for some kind of financial or commercial venture. It assumes that most of the lobbying has a financial profit motive involved. To some degree, that is true. I do not think anyone would disagree with that, and it is probably of paramount importance that those lobbyists who are lobbying on behalf of commercial interests be the first to register. I think no one would deny that. However, it is an inadequate assumption that all of the lobbying of consequence has financial motive. There are other motives across the land today which encourage the lobbying of Members of Parliament. Some of these motives are ideological and do not involve money at all.

The report of the committee calls for the registry of those lobbyists who are paid lobbyists. I think all of us understand and accept that. The report goes on to state that there are other groups, single-interest groups, which should be required to register when they retain a paid lobbyist to represent their views to the Government. Those are really the only absolute restrictions the report would place upon lobbyists. To me, that is somewhat restricted. The net is too small in that area because, as I have said, there are groups lobbying members of the Government and members of the Opposition whose motive is not financial gain but ideological. That is fair and right. It is probably the way it should be. However, under the recommendation put forward by the committee they would go unnoticed. It is time to take a look at some of these groups and the lobbying efforts which they carry on.

For example, let us consider a group whose raison d'être is to lobby. That is its full-time operation. It may not send representatives to Ottawa, but it goes about changing public opinion. For better or worse, let us consider the animal rights groups or groups which lobby on the issue of acid rain. The people in these groups have as their raison d'être the changing of public opinion. In effect, they lobby the Government for a change in policy or administration. Is it not time that groups such as this whose raison d'être is to lobby be called upon to register all of their operations?

I am reminded of a group such as the Fraser Valley Peace Movement. I hear reports about this group once in a while, and I do not know if they are true, that some of the group's funding comes from the World Peace Council. I do not know whether that is true, but if it is going to lobby me as a Member of Parliament, or if it is going to lobby members of the Opposition, perhaps it is time for it to declare from where its financial resources come and if, in fact, it does receive money from the World Peace Council. If it receives money from the World Peace Council perhaps it is time for the rest of us to know about it so that we know from where the influence is coming.

What about the ad hoc groups, "the committee to—" and I leave Hon. Members to fill in the blanks, whatever the committee happens to be? Their intention is to change public opinion. That is good. We all need that privilege. We want to protect and enshrine the right to change public opinion.

But there is a sense that the registration of lobbyists is indirectly at least an intention to register motives. What we see from a consideration of this report is that the motives are mostly financial. I am saying that that is not necessarily always the case. Where the motives are financial and taxpayers' money can be misused it is important that those lobbyists be registered. By the same token, and I think some of my friends would agree, there are some things in this life that are more important than money. In a world of ideas and conflicting ideas that issue becomes very important. If we are to exist in a world of conflict here in the House of Commons then we have to know what are the underlying premises. I am suggesting that it would be good for the lobby groups which come to us to register their backgrounds.

There is also another factor involved. It is what I would call either the cross-fertilization of groups or interlocking directorates. We live in an era in which lobby groups spawn. They multiply like rabbits. There is a new group forming every day, depending on the issue of the day. On closer examination one will find that where one parent group contains a board of directors, a board of management or an executive board, one, two or three of those board members will go off and form other groups that have allied goals but different titles. This multiplies the number of organizations, and they all purport to be different organizations. But if one looks at the organizational charts of each of these groups one will find that they are, in effect, one organization.

There is nothing wrong with that except that it creates an illusion. It creates the illusion that there is a growing mass of public concern about an issue, whereas, in reality, the possiblity is that they are the same people multiplying the numbers of organizations. This creates the illusion that more and more organizations which are concerned about a particular issue are being formed. Yet we find on closer examination that they are actually all the same people.

Therefore, if we are to register lobbyists we need to get our mentality beyond financial concerns and look at some of the non-commercial, non-financial concerns that are just as important for the future of our country and the health of our nation. Perhaps it is important for all of those groups which lobby to declare what is their financial base. We have groups which are often funded by the federal Government which are into the whole world of advocacy. They are advocates for particular issues. If one looks at these organizations it is easy to see that they are frequently funded by the federal Government. Should it not be part of the requirement of these lobbyists to declare from where they receive their money and that in fact the federal Government is funding their operations?

There is one final question to which I must confess I have no answer. However, I think it is a growing concern for Members of Parliament. I refer to the lobbying which goes on by mail, not by individual constituents. I think it is right and proper, but more and more often we have briefs sent to us by organizations which never appear before us. I do not know how to handle the situation.

Mr. Heap: Shut down the Post Office. That will fix it.

Mr. Friesen: Yes, that is right. The fact is that these people are lobbying. We want them to do that. It is their privilege and their right. In many cases it is their responsibility to do so. Once we begin the process of registration of lobbyists then the issue begins to multiply. In effect, it tends to become confused.

The final point I wish to mention is with respect to the matter of compliance. I notice that the committee dealt with this issue on page 5 of its report. Where any deficiencies or irregularities are demonstrated it states that the Government should have the power to enforce compliance with the requirements of the register. I do not know how one would go about enforcing compliance. Sometimes these campaigns are single-issue campaigns. The issue arises, an ad hoc committee is formed to deal with it, and before we know it the lobbying is done and the group has dispersed.

The Minister who was in the House this morning indicated that the Government is actively pursuing the recommendations of the committee. I wish to compliment the members of the committee on their work. I urge the Minister to bring forward legislation as soon as possible so that we can have full disclosure as far as possible in terms of lobbyists who appear before us.

• (1600)

Mr. Riis: In his parting comments, my hon. friend indicated that he hoped the Government would take early action on this. We have waited for decades for this piece of legislation that is still only at the study stage. As a member of the Government, would the Member indicate what he might do to ensure that the Government does introduce legislation quickly regarding this critical matter?

Mr. Friesen: The Hon. Member is correct. We have waited for decades, and I wish we had not had to wait. As a matter of fact, my former colleague, the late Walter Baker, was very concerned about this particular issue. He worked on it considerably when he was a Member of the House. I would gladly sit with the Minister's group on the committee and work on the matter of this legislation. I take the Minister's word for it that it will be coming. I imagine that the legislation will be drafted before the summer break.

Mr. Boudria: I have a comment, Mr. Speaker. I listened to the remarks of the Hon. Member. I am sorry to say that his understanding of what we are trying to do in the report that we suggested is totally different from what we proposed to do. We have not expressed ourselves in a manner which is unclear.

Quite obviously we are concerned with the issue of the registration of paid lobbyists. There are several reasons that we are only registering paid lobbyists. I ask the Hon. Member to pay attention to this.

First, on September 9, 1985, the Prime Minister stated in the House: "We will require, among other things, paid lobbyists to register—" That is a quote from the Prime Minister's speech. What the Prime Minister asks us to do is to register paid lobbyists. The Member is asking why do we not register people who are not paid, and all those other things. It is mainly because that is not what his own Prime Minister wanted. That is the first point.

Second, in my view it is improper to ask people who are not paid and who, as volunteers, are seeking to reach public officials, to register or to divulge their source of funding. It interferes with freedom of association. We also have to concern ourselves with that. Our committee listened to those deliberations on both sides of the issue. It is not one Party in this House that had a weird and eccentric view of how those things should be done versus another. It was unanimous in all its respects that we cannot place burdens upon people who are not paid, or interferences in any way, shape, or form for them interfacing with their Members of Parliament or their Government because of freedom of association, and because of the privilege of Members of this House for which all of us collectively on that committee have great respect.

Those are some of the reasons why the proposal was made in that manner. I suggest to the Member that he confer with some of his colleagues from his Party who are sitting on the committee. It is quite obvious to me that it will be very difficult to register lobbyists who are not paid. We have no business asking people how they receive their funding, if it has nothing to do with the purpose of lobbying public officials. If an organization is advocating peace by buying advertisements in the newspaper, surely they cannot be asked where they receive their money. That interferes with their freedom of doing things. In terms of charitable contributions, the provincial government has something to do with the receipts, as does the Revenue Department, but not in terms of us identifying who pays for it before they can associate. That is not right. The Member should reflect upon that, and he will see that that is not a correct way of looking at things. There are enormous repercussions which he should think about seriously, and which I ask him to do in consultation with his colleagues.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On debate, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie).

Mr. Friesen: Sorry, Bill, I have to go to committee, otherwise I would gladly listen to your speech.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): I was going to have something to say about the speech of the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta (Mr. Friesen). The argument that he was making is one that I worry about as a possible extension of the argument that the committee made. It is no secret to those who have paid attention to this issue, that one of the reasons I have expressed reservations on the whole question of registering lobbyists is that it may lead to the very type of world view espoused by the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta. If those recommendations were to be adopted, I would call it a total victory of liberalism. I wonder if the Hon. Member has given any thought to that.

Mr. Friesen: Please expand on that.

Mr. Blaikie: I think I have his attention.

Mr. Friesen: Forget the committee.

Mr. Rodriguez: You did not have to hit him between the eyes to do it.

Mr. Blaikie: If the Hon. Member's views were to be implemented, one of the results would be that the very world of ideas which he talked about—he was correct when he said it was so important to the political process—that very important world of ideas by virtue of the suggestions he made would be reduced to a world of interest. That is to say, to a perfect model of the Hobbesian liberal view of what politics is about. In the final analysis it is not a question of different ideas competing for the public mind and the collective imagination, it is a question of brokerage politics, of the Government playing one interest against the other, and making decisions as to what trade-offs have to be made. In other words, precisely the kind of liberal politics, in the small "l" sense—although the Liberal Party has certainly embodied this type of politics for many years in Canada—that I would have thought the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta would have been critical of.

I find it somewhat surprising that he rose to his feet to suggest that this liberal notion of registering lobbyists be extended presumably to include church groups, and ecumenical coalitions that gather together around certain concerns. I find it surprising that the Member would take the view that these should be treated in the same way conceptually as a paid lobbyist for an oil corporation coming to Ottawa to advocate a certain tax benefit for his or her corporation, or that that should somehow be at the same level as the work of Project North or other groups concerned with those issues which have no immediate or long-term financial self-interest in the measures that they may be asking the Government to implement. In fact, sometimes the case may be that the measures that they are asking the Government to implement impact negatively on their own well-being.

For instance, if non-native southern Canadians come forward and advocate that the Government settle land claims, and the Government return to the native people the lands which in their judgment have been unjustly taken from them, this certainly could not be considered to be in the self-interest of non-native southern Canadians who may have everything to gain in the traditional sense of financial self-interest from the exploitation of those lands, as opposed to turning them over to the self-government of the native people involved. It is a serious philosophical error to lump that type of activity together with the activity of paid lobbyists for multinational corporations, or whatever the case may be. The committee was wise in its unanimous judgment that that not be done.

• (1610)

I know the Hon. Member has to run over to committee, but now he is debating whether to stick around for the question and comment period.

Mr. Friesen: You got it.

Mr. Blaikie: It will be interesting to see what he does.

To be talking about lobbying today is timely. Lobbying has everything to do with the question of morality and ethics in the public sector.

Mr. Towers: There are not too many listening over there.

Mr. Blaikie: That is too bad. I know I have the ear of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight). He was probably interested in what I had to say about land claims.

Mr. McKnight: I want an answer on that.

Mr. Blaikie: There has been a lot of attention paid in recent weeks to the question of political morality as it pertains to the issues which have come before this House. In bringing this up I am not trying to address any particular issue. It is a simple matter of fact that we have had questions before us which pertain to how contracts are awarded, the degree of political influence involved, either at a partisan political level or whatever, in the awarding of contracts, and many other allegations, founded and unfounded, about improprieties on the part of government Members. As we know the allegations have reached as high as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). Therefore it is timely for us to have a debate about how the political process works. Certainly lobbying is one of the main elements in that process. This gives us an opportunity, within the bounds of relevance, to reflect on political morality in general.

Personally I feel that one of the problems with the notion of registering lobbyists is that lobbying has a kind of negative connotation. One reason for that, in my judgment, is that it is associated with American politics and the American model of how the political process works. That is not to say that the committee has not come up with what we hope will be a uniquely Canadian understanding of lobbying. Nevertheless, it remains a fact that lobbying, professional lobbyists, and registration of lobbyists are all associated with the American system. I think there is a danger that this, along with a number of other trends which I may or may not have time to go into, could become part and parcel if we are not wary, that is to say, if we do not adopt the views of the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta, of what I would call the Americanization of Canadian politics.

There are some things we can learn from the American system. I am not completely closed-minded on that. I was part of the committee on the reform of the House of Commons which wanted to invest our committees with more independence. Not independence identical to congressional committees, because that would be impossible as long as we want to maintain a parliamentary system, and I believe we do. Nevertheless, there are things which can be learned. What I am saying is that I perceive on a number of fronts what I would call the Americanization of Canadian politics. I think the Government we have today is a good example of that. Some of the government Members might find that irritating, especially those who consider themselves part of the old Tory tradition which sees Canada as having a unique political tradition apart from the U.S.A. Yet there is this political irony in the air today that the Conservative Party, more than any other Party, has become the leading edge of the Americanization of Canadian politics.

Miss Carney: What ridiculous nonsense that is.

Mr. Blaikie: The Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) has taken the Americanization of Canadian politics to the nth degree. She should be saying the least. She not only believes in the Americanization of Canadian politics, she believes in selling out the whole country.

Miss Carney: Irresponsible statement.

Mr. Blaikie: To even talk about Canadian politics in the presence of the Minister is a mistake. We should be talking about how we can become fully integrated into the American political system.

Miss Carney: You can talk about that, we will not.

Mr. Blaikie: We might even be able to defend ourselves better as the 51st state than we would having the Hon. Minister go to bat for us.

Mr. Friesen: Where does Manitoba borrow its money?

Mr. Blaikie: When I heard a petition had been filed concerning steel exports to the U.S. I had the same thought that I had when I heard about the potash petition. For Heaven's sake, do not send the Minister for International Trade whatever you do, Mr. Prime Minister. In fact we thought of having an emergency motion—

Miss Carney: Tell it to your constituents.

Mr. Blaikie: —where perhaps the whole House could unite together in a common anxiety, that however the Government responded to the most recent protectionist actions south of the 49th parallel—

Miss Carney: Tell it to the IWA.

Mr. Blaikie: —it should not send the Minister for International Trade. She thinks she has a record as a negotiator.

Miss Carney: Your provincial NDP thinks so.

Mr. Blaikie: She can come to an agreement with almost anyone if she is willing to give them exactly what they want.

Mr. Rodriguez: She is a patsy.

Miss Carney: Confusion in the NDP ranks.

Mr. Blaikie: If you are willing to say on the one hand that this is our final offer, but on the other hand if you do not like it a couple of weeks down the road we will make another offer.

Mr. Friesen: Tell that to Jack Munro.

Miss Carney: Tell it to the steel unions.

Mr. Blaikie: I did not mean to be diverted like that by the heckling of the Hon. Minister. However, it gave me a chance to say a few things I have been wanting to say for a while, so I am not all that unhappy about it.

Mr. Thacker: You voted for the Charter.

Mr. Blaikie: The Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker) has a question?

Mr. Thacker: You voted for the Charter and that is what made us more like the—

Mr. Blaikie: The Hon. Member says the Charter has contributed to the Americanization of politics? It definitely has that potential. Even though in the final analysis I voted for the Charter, and one reason I did was that it had a notwithstanding clause. If he checks what I had to say in my first and last speech on the Constitution he will see that the points I am making today I made then. Check the record. I expressed an anxiety at that time about what the Charter could mean—

Mr. Towers: Why did you vote for it, then?

Mr. Blaikie: —with respect to preserving our parliamentary traditions. One of the reasons I was able to vote for it at the time was that it included a notwithstanding clause. That is not the view taken by some of my colleagues. Some people thought the notwithstanding clause was a serious degradation of the Charter. That is not the view I took.

Getting back to the Americanization of Canadian politics—

Miss Carney: Unbelievable.

Mr. Blaikie: —by the Progressive Conservative Party, what I wanted to say before I was so happily distracted by the Minister, is that the Conservative Party has adopted the American view of politics that to the victor goes the spoils, and done so with a passion. That is not to say there was not political patronage before the Conservative Party came along.

Mr. Merrithew: Hardly.

Miss Carney: Think of the NDP Government in B.C.

Mr. Blaikie: God knows we have had political patronage before. However, the Conservatives have made a virtue of what some might argue has at least been regarded as a kind of necessary evil in the political system.

Miss Carney: Be careful.

Mr. Blaikie: Canadians should have been listening a little more carefully to the Prime Minister. Had they listened to what he said before he was elected as Prime Minister they would have heard him say that he was going to reward Conservatives. Their 20 years in the wilderness was going to be overcome by all kinds of rewards and awards and contracts and what not. He would not appoint anyone else until there were no Conservatives left to appoint. These things the Prime Minister said should have been signals to the Canadian public. Perhaps they were. I do not think there was ever a great deal of trust but people were so rightly desperate to get rid of the Liberals that they blinded themselves to the kinds of signals the Prime Minister was sending out about what kind of Prime Minister he would be and what kind of Government we would get.

• (1620)

But this Government has taken that American philosophy of "to the victor goes the spoils" one more step. The Tories said the spoils not only belong to the political Party that happens to get elected but they belong to the personal network of the Prime Minister. That is why Canadians rightly feel, even though we all know that patronage is nothing new, that something new is happening, that some ill-defined line—and I agree it is ill-defined—has been stepped over by the Government. Perhaps that is one of the reasons that there was this urgency in the committee and elsewhere in the House of Commons to try to do something about questions of political morality. Maybe that is why there was the possibility of unanimity within the committee that looked at the question of registration of lobbyists. I do not know, but I do think that it is widely felt both in this House by those who can admit it and by those who cannot that something new, and I would suggest terrible, is happening to our political system when day after day we have to deal with the kinds of things that we have been dealing with for so long now.

I am not concerned personally in the sense that when one enters political life one has to assume that all the traditional cynicism about politics and politicians will be directed at a person as an individual. That is something we all choose to live with when we choose to run. What I am concerned about is that the whole political agenda in Canada is being dragged down. There are things that need to be debated and which need to be paid attention to, things which are very important and which simply cannot get as high on the political agenda as they need to be as long as we are pre-occupied with questions that come as a result of what people in the Government have done. As an Opposition we cannot very well decide to let the Government off the hook. It might only encourage its Members to do other things that are improper. On the other hand, I think that all of us would agree that, because we have to concentrate on these things, it is a disservice to the political process and to things that do need to be addressed.

I realize, Mr. Speaker, that I have not addressed the details of the recommendations of the committee on lobbying and I apologize for that, but only to a certain degree, because sometimes things have to be put in larger perspective, and sometimes the heckling of Members like the Minister for International Trade have to be answered. For that, I hope you will forgive me, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I must say that I enjoyed the speech of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie). Somewhere in it there were a few remarks about the subject, but his speech was more about international trade than it was about the registration of lobbyists. I guess it is normal and understandable that somebody who deals from a socialist perspective would be much more concerned about the registration of lobbyists who deal with commerce since profit is such a dirty word for the socialists.

Mr. Rodriguez: Nonsense.

Mr. Friesen: Hear me out. The Hon. Member over there has been so calm up to now. Please do not get excited now.

Mr. Rodriguez: Don't make ridiculous statements.

Mr. Friesen: I do not know why New Democrats would be so concerned about other lobbyists. It seems to be that what we are talking about is the registration of a pedigree of lobbyists. What are their credentials and backgrounds? We are not talking about their right to lobby. It is not about the free flow of information. I do not understand why the Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill would be implying that any suggestion to register lobbyists who work in a non-commercial area would be an infringement on the flow of ideas or the threatening of a flow of ideas just because you ask people to declare their pedigrees. Let me give an example.

About 40 years ago there was a famous set of hearings heard along the Mackenzie Valley about the pipeline. The Member talked about southerners going up north. In those hearings the Member may recall that one of the people sent up north was a very prominent Member of the NDP working on behalf of the CBC.

An Hon. Member: Give us his name.

Mr. Friesen: What was his name?

An Hon. Member: He doesn't know.

Mr. Friesen: He does not know. He lobbied for a year or more organizing native groups along a certain perspective, a particular point of view, and here you had spontaneous native organizations coming to the Berger hearings. They all said somewhat the same thing. Mr. Berger, the learned judge, conducting those hearings had a learned counsel who was part of his legal staff, who happens now to be the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). Is it any wonder that the outcome of the Berger hearings produced a report that was so parallel to the views of the New Democratic Party at the time? Is that a strange coincidence?

Maybe it would have been helpful at the time when dealing with a non-commercial venture, because we were dealing not only with a pipeline but with the future of the north as the Member said, for all those involved in developing the thought forms and the positions of the people up north—that the people doing that should have registered their pedigree and background.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta makes a very strange argument. First, with respect to the Berger Commission, these were public hearings. These were people who presented their views in public, whereas in general when we are talking about lobbying we are talking about that which is done in private. That major distinction was not made. It was no secret. Maybe the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta just found out, but everybody knew at the time that Tom Berger was a former leader of the New Democratic Party.

I find it interesting that when judges in Canada, most of whom at one time or other were either Liberal or Conservative, make a report, and people criticize it, you hear that it was an independent judicial judgment on the matter at hand, and people say they do not know why Members of the New Democratic Party would want to question the integrity of the judge who made such an austere and wise ruling. When former Liberal and Conservative judges make rulings, we are supposed to regard them with due respect, but when a judge who has a New Democratic Party history makes recommendations which have an affinity for what the New Democratic Party might have recommended, this somehow is political in the worst sense of the word. I think there is an obvious double standard. The Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta believes in that Liberal-Conservative world of his. From his point of view, Liberal-Conservative things are value neutral and are just a fact of life. It is only things outside that world view which are seen to be political.

• (1630)

I have news for the Hon. Member. His views are political. The views of judges who have Liberal and Conservative political histories are political. They are every bit as informed or not informed, as the case may be, depending upon the objectivity of the judge in question, by their political histories, as are judges with NDP histories. I find the Hon. Member's argument to be a good example of the double standard applied to members of the judiciary who have NDP backgrounds. These members are called to account for the things they say that may have political intonations as Mr. Berger was when he made a remark about land claims. Other judges get away with saying all kinds of things and their remarks are not regarded with the same severity.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Hon. Member quite attentively. I wonder how he would categorize the position of Mr. Adam Zimmerman who lobbied very, very strenuously recently on the softwood lumber question while at the same time, as I understand it, he was the Chairman of the Executive Committee of Southam News. Does the Hon. Member see any conflict of interest there?

While he is answering that question, I wonder if he would tell me how he would categorize Mr. Jack Munro, a head of a union, because no doubt he is being paid by his union to lobby.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, if I understand the recommendations of the committee, if Mr. Munro was actively lobbying in Parliament about a particular matter he would have to so register. With respect to Mr. Zimmerman and his connections with Southam News, I did not make any claims about who was a lobbyist and who was not in the softwood lumber deal. My claims were about the nature of the activities of the Minister for International Trade. I hoped that what was evidenced there would not be evidenced down the road with respect to other questions of Canada-U.S. trade.

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could ask the Hon. Member to comment further on the softwood issue. As the Hon. Member will know, the critic for the NDP in the Province of British Columbia supports the negotiated settlement as being the best possible deal under the circumstances. Is the Hon. Member criticizing or disagreeing with a provincial branch of his own Party?

Further, I would ask the Hon. Member to comment on the fact that the leader of the IWA, even today as reported by The Globe and Mail, insists that the negotiated settlement was the best deal, that it maintained our sovereignty, that it kept funds in Canada and that it will have minimal impact on employment. The Hon. Member is out of step with both the union involved and the provincial NDP. Why is the federal Party against its provincial branch and the IWA?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair is not convinced that the first part of the question was relevant. However, I recognize the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie).

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, the Tories cannot have it both ways. Sometimes when we ask questions in the House the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and others—

Miss Carney: Answer the question.

Mr. Blaikie: I will answer the question. Sometimes the Secretary of State is wont to say: "Taking your orders from the CLC again, eh, Ed?" This is the heckling that we have to take from the Secretary of State for External Affairs. That is the wit and wisdom of former Conservative Party leaders. Then when we take a view that is different from that of the trade union movement we are chastised by the Minister for International Trade. The Tories pretend that we do not have a view independent from that of the trade union movement, and then when we demonstrate an independent view they chastise us.

As to the position of the British Columbia NDP, this is a free country. If the members of that Party want to take the view they have taken, that is fine, but we take a different view. We do not take our marching orders from our provincial wings any more than the Prime Minister does. Tories should talk about conflict with provincial wings. What could be more ridden with conflict than the relationship between the Prime Minister and the Premier of Alberta and the relationship between the Prime Minister and the Premier of Newfoundland, just to cite two examples? It does not sit well for the Minister for International Trade to chastise the federal NDP for having an independent view on the softwood lumber agreement. If the B.C. NDP has a different view, that is its right. It is a democratic Party.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine)—Labour relations—Request for explanation concerning certain deductions made at source; the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie)—Revenue Canada. (a) Word processing work. (b) Department's security measures.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

ELECTIONS, PRIVILEGES AND PROCEDURE

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Rodriguez that the first report of the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure presented to the House on Tuesday, January 27, 1987, be concurred in.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to clear the record. I noticed that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) spent a good deal of time defending the legitimacy of a judge who is a member of the New Democratic Party as opposed to a Liberal or a Conservative, and that is fine. I just want to remind the House that I was not referring to Mr. Berger at all in my comments. I was referring to the fact that others paid by the federal Government through its agencies to lobby for a particular position affected the outcome of the hearings. I was not casting any aspersions on Mr. Berger. I never mentioned him except to say that he was the judge who conducted the hearings in question. The outcome of those hearings came about as a result of the lobbying that was done by people paid by the federal Government.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same questionable point of order. The Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta implied that there was a direct relationship between the lobbying done by this person he has refused to name and the outcome of the hearing, implying that Judge Berger did not render an independent judgment of his own on the matters before him. I think that is a serious charge.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: How about resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Scarborough East (Mr. Hicks)?

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to have the opportunity to address this particular motion very briefly. I will take a look at it in a way completely different from that of previous speakers. I must say I have enjoyed today's speeches. At times debate was humorous, at times it was sensible, at times it was intelligent and on many occasions it was completely irrelevant. All in all, it was very enjoyable.

I do not think anyone has yet addressed an over-view of what has been presented today, or the fact that it is this Government that is showing very clearly its policy and philosophy direction by presenting this type of legislation to the House. The next thing I would ask myself is why this legislation was not presented to the House before the Thirty-third Parliament. I think that speaks also to the direction, philosophy and policy of this Government.

We should applaud with great sincerity the work of the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure. A brief reference was made to the Chairmanship of the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper) this morning. I believe that a unanimous report came out of that committee and that is very commendable. It is obvious that the committee worked very hard and that, regardless of what they are saying today in debate, all its members want the same thing.

Special reference was made to the committee's mandate, but I would like to interject here by making clear for the record that the committee's mandate did not result in any way from knowledge of impropriety or illegal conduct in the lobbying industry in Canada. I think it is necessary for us to put that on the record in defence of so many of Canada's companies. In fact, during the course of its hearings the committee did not receive any concrete evidence to that effect. It was found that interest groups or lobbyists often play a very helpful role in the dissemination of information on matters of public policy.

Some very excellent guidelines for registration have already been recommended by the committee. This will certainly not be the final word, but it is an excellent framework. It is an excellent base upon which all of us together can build to put the proper legislation into place. Some of the complexities will be evident in the implementation, but I am pleased to analyse what the standing committee has done. I am pleased that it did not attempt to reinvent the wheel. It analyzed, in fair depth, what has happened in other countries.

In the United States, for example, there is legislation of the lobbying profession under the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act which was enacted in 1946. With regard to the United States it is interesting to note that American efforts to regulate lobbying go back over 130 years when the House of Representatives passed a resolution requiring all lobbyists to register with the Clerk of the House. I am sure many Members of this House do not remember that. It is interesting as well to note that 42 of the 50 states of the United States have lobbying legislation, a great deal of it more stringent than that required at the federal level. The other eight states have rules in place which affect lobbying activity. Some of these states require monthly reports on lobbying activities while others require quarterly information publication. That is how the United States has dealt with this problem over the years.

The situation in West Germany is very interesting as well. In the Federal Republic of Germany the German Parliament, called the Bundestag or the Lower House, determined a need for a lobbyist register in 1981 and the Bundestag's Standing Orders list lobbyist registration requirements as an appendix.

The British Parliament, the mother of parliamentary systems, first examined the possibility of the registration of lobbyists in 1969 and concluded that it was impossible to find a satisfactory basis for a code of conduct since none such existed in the field of public relations generally.

The United Kingdom has two lobbyist associations, the Public Relations Consultants' Association and the Institute of Public Relations. Both groups have adopted their own code of conduct and have the power to expel members who violate it. It is interesting to note that the committee, under the chairmanship of the Hon. Member for Peace River, recommended that a self-regulating association be formed in Canada.

The Government in Australia implemented lobby registration rules by cabinet decision on a 12-month trial basis on March 30, 1984.

Some Members have alluded to what has taken place in other areas. It is extremely interesting and worthwhile for us to consider carefully that which has happened in other countries and the research which was done by the Hon. Members on this committee. Once again I would like to congratulate the members of the committee. I urge all Members of this House to support a Bill in this regard, not only by voting for it when the time comes but by giving carefully considered, ongoing, genuine and practical support for what I know all Members will agree is a very good piece of legislation.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I think it is very useful that we are currently discussing the report of the committee with regard to lobbying. I have not had the opportunity to study the report in depth. I have just been looking over the recommendations. I would like to put a few comments on the record, really more by way of questions which I hope can be answered as we continue to study this very important issue.

I note that the committee recommends "the adoption and implementation of a system of registration of paid lobbyists". It goes on to provide a definition of lobbying which is very broad. It reads in part:

> We recommend that lobbying be defined as attempting to influence either directly or indirectly any governmental decision whether it be legislative or administrative.

The report goes on to say:

> We recommend that the act of lobbying government be specifically defined as to include:
>
> (a) attempting to influence the making or amending of legislation or regulations;
> (b) attempting to influence the making or changing of federal policies or programs;
> (c) attempting to influence federal decisions on the awarding of grants, contracts, contributions or any similar benefit;

The committee, apparently having studied the system of dealing with lobbying at the federal level in the United States, recommends that not only approaches to the executive but also approaches to Members of Parliament be considered to be activities within the definition of lobbying. The committee goes on to recommend:

> —that for the purpose of registration, lobbyist be defined generally to be anyone who for compensation engages in lobbying activities directed at the executive, bureaucracy, Members of the House of Commons, the Senate and their staff.

The report goes on to say:

> More specifically it includes:
>
> (a) those who for compensation represent third party interests directly or indirectly to government—
> (b) employees or officers of non-governmental business organizations, non-profit organizations, volunteer groups, single interest volunteer groups and foreign nationals—

Finally, and this is the aspect about which I particularly want to raise some questions, the recommendation says that for the purpose of registration, "lobbyists" should be defined to include:

> lawyers, accountants and other professionals when they represent clients in dealings with government primarily for the purpose of lobbying as defined in this Report.

All of us in this House have been approached from time to time by lawyers or accountants who express a point of view about legislation or an administrative decision on behalf of a particular client. As well, lawyers, accountants and other professionals will very often approach officials or Ministers, personally or in writing, to make a representation on behalf of a specific client with respect to government policy, legislation or, perhaps most often, to attempt to get a decision favourable to their client when the matter to be decided is within the administrative authority of the government Department or Minister pursuant to specific legislation.

Does the committee intend that each time a lawyer or an accountant writes to a Member of Parliament on behalf of a client to express a view about a specific piece of legislation or an administrative policy that lawyer has to register and disclose the information recommended by the committee report that registered lobbyists be required to disclose? In that regard the report states:

> We recommend that registered lobbyists be required to disclose:
> (a) their names; firm name, if applicable, and a contact person; addresses and telephone numbers;
> (b) names of clients and their place of business;
>
> (c) the issue or matter upon which the lobbying activity is to take place;

• (1650)

Does the committee intend that each time a lawyer or an accountant makes a representation on behalf of a client, say to the Department of National Revenue, with respect to tariff classification, that lawyer or accountant must come within the ambit of the system of registration and disclosure proposed by the committee? If this is what the committee intends, then literally thousands of people will have to register and disclose the information required. Must they do that just once, the first time they make such a representation? Must they do it each time they make a representation for an individual client? The report does not go into this.

Those who prepared the report will say that I have ignored the fact that the recommendation says that lawyers, accountants and other professionals have to register only when they represent clients in dealings with government primarily for the purpose of lobbying as defined in this report. Does "primarily" mean that the main line of work of a lawyer or accountant is to represent clients in making representations, to government or Members, or does it mean that if a lawyer or accountant works almost exclusively for a particular client in making representations, they have to register, but not if they represent a range of clients? Does it mean that if a particular retainer is for the purpose of making a representation they have to register, even though the other work they do for a client does not involve making representations to government?

I suggest that in acting on this report, which is very useful and calls for action on a matter which concerns all of us in the House and increasingly in the country, the committee might well be asked to study the matter further. If we do not want to delay acting on this problem of lobbying, then in making proposals to implement this report the Government and all Parties will have to look at this very seriously.

It is quite easy to see how the recommendations of this report would apply to a major industry association representing a particular industry sector. It is fairly easy to see how the recommendations in this report would apply to a firm of consultants who are based in Ottawa and it is well understood that they would represent a number of clients on a number of different issues in making representations to government. It may well be that there are people who are qualified and hold themselves out as lawyers but are based in Ottawa and work solely or mainly in making representations to government and Members of Parliament about government policy or administrative decisions. I suggest it is fairly easy to see how and why the report of this committee can and should be applied when one looks at the whole government relations area as it is based in Ottawa, the nation's capital.

However, what does the committee intend with respect to lawyers and accountants in thousands of communities across the country who periodically may be called upon by a client, as part of their work, to write a letter to a department expressing a point of view on a Bill or to write a letter to a department making a representation for a certain type of administrative ruling? Are they subjecting themselves to the obligation of registration, and a sanction if they do not? Do their clients then have to have the information disclosed which is called for by the report of this committee?

I stated that I did not have the opportunity to study the report in detail, and have only looked at the recommendations earlier this afternoon. I am concerned that, while I share what I think is a common view in the House, more should be done to have a formal system of registration of lobbyists, and disclosure of their activities and the identity of those for whom they act. Not enough thought has been given to the application of the recommendations in this report to people who are accountants or lawyers, life underwriters, or those in a number of different occupations scattered all around the country.

Is it the intention of the committee that those people whom I have mentioned, scattered all across the country in communities large and small, will have to register and disclose the information mentioned in the committee report? Will there be a situation in which very large companies that have the funds to hire permanent staff who will do nothing but carry on government relations work will not have to register these people or disclose any of the information set out in the report? If so, large private firms which may well be in a position to have an impact that we should know about on government policy or administrative decisions will not be touched by this lobbying registration and disclosure proposal, but a small local business with a handful of employees, which does not have the staff or competency to make representation but must go to its lawyer or accountant, will then be covered by this legislation and will have to disclose the information, even though on an individual basis it will not be considered to have the clout to make an impact on public policy. Yet the large companies in this country will have the budget to hire full-time employees to carry out lobbying, or government relations work, and will not be caught by this measure at all. I believe this is a gap in the proposal that must be considered.

I think it is clear that there is a sentiment in the House, which is reflected by the reference of this issue to a committee, that more must be done to identify those people and the people for whom they work, whose job it is primarily to try to influence government policy and have an effect on administrative decisions. While this consensus is emerging, I do not think it necessarily means that those in the House who form part of that consensus believe that the concept of lobbying is necessarily wrong or harmful. It is part of a free and democratic society that individuals or groups, on their own or through people acting on their behalf, should have the right to petition government and Members of Parliament to express their views about government policy or government administrative decisions. I suppose it is also recognized that this concept, which I believe should be a legitimate part of the political process, can go off the rails, be the subject of abuse and the subject of what may be an improper influence on government policy and decisions. We need a better system in place to deal with this problem.

I think the report is very useful. I do not often commend the Government for very much, especially these days, but I think the Government should be commended for making the time available for this debate. I hope my comments have contributed, not only to the debate but toward working out a valid and effective system to deal with lobbying. It should be a system which recognizes the right of people to approach government. We should not create something so cumbersome and detailed that it may catch tens of thousands of people and subject them to sanctions, when all they are trying to do is carry out their democratic right of approaching Government, while allowing very large firms that may be in a position to have an impact on Government that should be disclosed, to escape completely from the purview of a system of disclosure in the registration of lobbyists.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

NON-SMOKERS' HEALTH ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from January 23, consideration of the motion of Ms. McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood) that Bill C-204, an Act to regulate smoking in the federal workplace and on common carriers and to amend the Hazardous Products Act in relation to cigarette advertising, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak today on this legislation. The whole thrust of this legislation, which is supported by the New Democratic Party, the Liberal Party, cancer societies and anti-smoking groups, is to create a smoke-free Canada by legislating smoking out of Canadian life. But have we forgotten the Charter of Rights, the freedom of choice, the right of the corner store to survive, where some 70 per cent of its income is from confections and cigarettes? Have we forgotten the rights of people to prosper, to work, to raise a family and to be proud? These are the rights of a group of people I would like to address today, the Canadian tobacco farmers. These are people who over generations have developed blow sand into soil and developed a healthy plant from a weed. In most cases they were immigrants who became the proudest of Canadians. No one faulted them back then. They received nothing but praise for their contribution to agriculture and to their country. Tobacco turned into a valuable commodity. Billions of dollars were made and billions of dollars were taxed but those billions of dollars were not for the farmer. Families from all over Canada came to work. Students paid their way through university working in the fields. Cigarette manufacturers developed empires. Wholesalers built businesses. Corner stores flourished, and vending machine operators haven't done badly either.

The industry employs some 62,000 people across Canada. Consumer spending provides over $6 billion to the Canadian economy. Federal and provincial Governments collect over $4 billion a year in taxes. But what about the farmer? He receives six cents out of a $3 package of cigarettes. We have now ascertained that smoking is a health risk. I do not think that finding is questioned any longer in Canada. However, we now have a group in society, once admired for their hard work, dedication, ingenuity, and perseverence, who have all of a sudden become outcasts. No one thought of this problem back then. Farms that at one time were worth $500,000 to $1 million cannot be sold. Their agricultural peers are downgrading these farmers. Society is shunning them. Governments are taxing and legislating them out of business.

In the tobacco growing areas of Canada we have bankruptcies, family breakdowns and suicides. What about those farmers? What about the 2,600 dedicated tobacco farmers in Canada? What does the legislation do for them?

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) is attempting to help. If it had not been for his intervention, the 1985 crop would not have been sold. He provided $90 million in advance crop payments last year, many times what had been provided in the past, and he will be providing $65 million this year. The capital gains exemption, fuel tax rebate and rural transition program are welcome moves.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) provided taxation to fund a REDUX program, some $30 million in last year's Budget. That was the first time the tobacco farmers' plight was ever recognized in a Budget Speech.

The Minister of Agriculture is announcing today the establishment of an alternate enterprise initiative program to assist diversification initiatives in the tobacco growing regions of Canada. It is a program to develop a co-operative approach towards increasing the production and marketing of alternate crops without causing significant disruption to existing Canadian primary production. This $15 million program will focus on the development of new crops, production technologies, marketing and processing opportunities. It is the first part of the $30 million tobacco diversification plan announced in the 1986 Budget. The results of discussions with the industry on the second part should be announced in the near future. I applaud this very positive step developed through co-operation at the federal grower level.

It is obvious that the inevitable is happening. The demand for this product is shrinking fast. Tobacco farmers have been told that their product is not wanted in Canada, but they are also being told, "We do not want you to export health risks to Third World developing nations either". Eighty-six per cent of Canadian tobacco exports go to developed nations headed by the United States, the United Kingdom and Germany. It is hard for the growers to understand why Canada will not support the export of a crop which some other country will then provide.

Alternate crops are being looked for, something to reduce the growers' dependency on tobacco. But what can one grow on 100 acres which will pay a $500,000 mortgage? At the present time much work is being done to research alternate crops, alternate crop processing, and alternate crop marketing. However, time and money are needed and these are two commodities of which they are short. Even with the assistance provided to date by the Government, more than was ever provided in the past, some 500 to 700 farmers will be forced out of tobacco production this year.

I offer, Mr. Speaker, first, that as long as Canadians smoke, let Canadian tobacco farmers have the right to grow the tobacco. Second, as long as we, society, the provinces, and the federal Government, tax and legislate tobacco farmers out of business, we have an obligation to assist them. If my colleague the Minister of Finance does anything with the special tax levied on cigarettes last year to assist these people, I hope he uses it to increase the funds available. Let us provide the tobacco farmers the needed time and money to alter their direction. Sure, they demonstrated and protested. They want to survive. They want the right to do what they trained for and what they do well. I ask my colleagues if they would not fight for their business, home, family, and future if the whole country seemed to be against them? I urge my colleagues on both sides of the House to consider this one comment; do not turn your backs on this group of proud Canadians.

• (1710)

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak to Bill C-204, which is a Bill to regulate smoking in the federal workplace and on common carriers and to amend the Hazardous Products Act in relation to cigarette advertising.

The Hon. Member who just spoke did so very eloquently. He spoke about the needs and, as he sees it, the rights of those 62,000 people who grow, manufacture and retail tobacco in Canada and whose product generates $4 billion in taxes.

Mr. Bradley: The rights of the growers.

Mr. Heap: The Hon. Member spoke about the rights in terms of the Charter. He does not give any clear direction as to what he wants to do with respect to the rights of people who are being adversely affected by the tobacco industry and the use of its products. He has suggested that there is an absolute right to grow, manufacture, sell and smoke tobacco. In fact, he seems to claim that that is a Charter right. I question his reasoning on that point. I do not think there is any such absolute right. There are very few absolute rights.

If we are to talk about rights I say that the right to health is much more fundamental than the right to be a tobacco farmer, a Member of Parliament, or the driver of an automobile which emits lead into the air which pollutes our cities. There are many activities which can be challenged for their effect on other people. The right to pursue them cannot be considered absolute without considering their effects on other people.

The whole reason for the campaign in the matter of smoking is the effect on other people. We are told about the number of people and the number of dollars reflected on the part of growers, manufacturers and retailers. But what has to be weighed against that is the fact that tobacco is associated with more deaths and illnesses than any other single product in our country. Some 35,000 people in Canada die every year from tobacco-related diseases. That is more than the number of people who produce tobacco. I hope the Hon. Member does not seriously argue that 26,000 farmers should be allowed to contribute to the deaths of 35,000 people. By making such an absolute claim to rights that is the logic he is putting forward.

The ill effects of tobacco smoke are a preventable health hazard. Some health hazards are not preventable but this one is. It is estimated that tobacco smoking costs the country $8 billion per year. That is to say, when we reckon the cost of health care for tobacco-related illnesses, the cost of supporting the disabled, the cost with respect to fire damage and the cost of forgone income, it has been estimated that it costs $8 billion to our economy. In other words, that figure is double the $4 billion that we collect in taxes. This figure does not include the costs of pensions to families of smokers who die prematurely from heart disease, lung cancer or emphysema.

I commend the work of the Government in using our tax dollars to assist tobacco farmers to move out of the tobacco industry. Likewise, there should be a move to assist the tobacco manufacturers and the retailers to move into other industries. However, I do not think that the manufacturers are very poor. I think they are among the biggest corporations, if not the biggest monopolies, on this continent, judging by the number of other industries, such as the beer industry, which they buy. I think there may be a need to help the growers, which is being done. There may be a need to help the retailers if, in fact, two-thirds of a retailer's business depends on tobacco, which is not exactly what the Hon. Member said but what he implied. To suggest, and he left this open, that we should hold back on the protection of the health of people is not a reasonable way to balance rights, the right to health against the right to follow a particular occupation which has, unfortunately, been shown to be harmful to other people's health.

What we have here is not a total prohibition of tobacco in Canada. It is not, as the previous speaker said, a smoke-free Canada Bill. It is a Bill to protect people in the workplace against being compelled to breathe other people's tobacco smoke. We have found through the medical evidence accumulated over the years that being compelled to breathe other people's tobacco smoke, second-hand smoke, is a very serious health hazard and causes sickness and even death. We are asking that workers be protected against that within the jurisdiction of the Government.

What we have is a Bill that would provide the following:

> No person shall smoke in any office or other work space provided by an employer, outside of a designated smoking room.

That does not mean no smoking. It means no smoking except where it is permitted by the employer. People who want to avoid smoke are then enabled to avoid it. People have the right to breathe non-poisonous air to the extent that removing tobacco smoke removes a very serious poison from the air.

The Bill goes on in Clause 5 to provide the same freedom on an aircraft, a ship, a railway car or motor vehicle operated under federal transportation legislation. That is to say if people choose to travel they should be able to do so without breathing poison from tobacco smoke.

If the tobacco industry can find customers elsewhere through legitimate means, not poisoning their neighbours at work or in travel, this Bill does not hinder it. However, the Bill does restrict the tobacco industry in one further way. It is in a way with which I have full sympathy. It would amend the Hazardous Products Act so as to forbid the advertising of tobacco. This is done for a very serious reason. Quite evidently, the advertising of tobacco is aimed primarily at young people. Older people are quitting smoking. The tobacco industry is busy recruiting young and inexperienced people by putting up very expensive and alluring ads in the knowledge that if they get a person hooked young he or she will find it very, very difficult to kick the habit in later years. A general finding is that the younger a person is hooked, the harder it is to kick the habit. The advertising is aimed at making it look fashionable, chic, smart and healthy. The industry has even tried to use some of the sports events to advertise the glories of smoking tobacco. That would be restricted by this Bill, and so it should. In other words, people should not be taking advantage, particularly of those who have not reached years of discretion, which is what is being done with tobacco advertising.

• (1720)

I hope that the Members of this House will consider the strong support that this Bill is receiving. The Hon. Member who just spoke referred to that, obviously with the feeling that that represents a danger to the tobacco industry. We should be more concerned in recognizing that that widespread support represents the possibility of health to tobacco smokers, the possibility that at last there will be the necessary public support to enable people to participate in the public life of this country, including work and travel, without being forced to inhale somebody else's tobacco smoke poison. It is a fundamental right that we are asking for all people of Canada to have the choice. If they wish to go away on their own and poison themselves with tobacco, it will still be possible. We are only asking that they should not be compelled to do that so that other people can make money. As it turns out, there are better ways to earn a living.

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful for the opportunity to speak to Bill C-204. Before I rose, I had a problem listening to the debate because of the hacking of a colleague who sits near me—obviously he has a smoker's cough. I wish to do everything that I can to encourage people not to smoke.

Second-Hand Smoke Hurts was the theme for this year's National Non-smoking Week January 15 to 21. National Non-smoking Week is an annual event whereby a nation-wide public education campaign on non-smoking is co-ordinated by the Canadian Council on Smoking and Health. Recent evidence has confirmed that it is not just active smokers who are harmed by tobacco smoke. Damage to health is suffered by all who share indoor space with smokers, particularly when they are exposed to smoke for long periods of time in the home, at work, or in the office. For example, a recent report from the United States' Surgeon General indicated that one hour spent by non-smokers in a smoke-filled room may be equivalent to someone smoking five to 30 cigarettes.

Tobacco smoke exposure presents serious special risks for our children. Parents can play a major role in ensuring a healthy smoke-free environment for their children and themselves by quitting smoking, if they smoke. This will also help to provide a positive non-smoking model for children which will encourage them to remain non-smokers as they grow to adulthood.

A survey conducted in the Department of National Health and Welfare a year ago indicated that more than half of the employees were bothered by smoke and, indeed, an overwhelming majority of those, including the smokers, supported the implementation of a smoking restriction policy. A departmental policy has been in effect for one year and has been enthusiastically received by Health and Welfare employees across the country.

In Canada as a whole, over 65 per cent of the workforce today are non-smokers. Increasingly they are asking for a working environment that protects them from the health hazards associated with involuntary exposure to tobacco smoke. Fortunately, a rapidly growing number of employers in both the public and the private sector are responding by taking steps to restrict smoking at their work sites. While these actions are a good start, much remains to be done to ensure that all Canadian employees enjoy a smoke-free workplace. Restriction of smoking in the workplace is one necessary component of a comprehensive approach to the problem of second-hand smoke.

This past November at an international conference on health promotion, held here in Ottawa, the discussion document Achieving Health for All: A Framework for Health Promotion was released by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp). In that paper the need to create environments that are conducive to health through the advocacy and implementation of healthy public policy was emphasized.

A good example of this strategy is the work at the federal level to develop an integrated tobacco policy. All aspects of tobacco product marketing, including such matters as stronger more visible health warning labels and the possibility of restricting cigarette advertising, are under active review by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The Minister has met with both Canadian tobacco manufacturers and health groups to discuss ways to strengthen or replace the existing voluntary code. This week on the news I heard that The Toronto Star is no longer accepting cigarette advertising. I believe this makes the fourth paper in Canada to do so.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) is studying options to reduce any economic hardships suffered by tobacco growers in response to the slowly declining demand for tobacco products. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) has proposed federal regulations which would eliminate passenger smoking on commercial flights that last less than two hours. Public comment is being invited on these proposed regulations. Air Canada and several regional air carriers, as well as VIA Rail and several inter-city bus lines have recently acted to provide greater protection from tobacco smoke in their vehicles. I am optimistic that transportation companies will be making even greater efforts in this direction in the near future.

Municipal governments have succeeded in limiting smoking in public places in about 40 cities in Canada. Quebec has become the first to enact provincial legislation concerning tobacco smoke in public places. Other initiatives of groups such as the Canadian Heart Foundation, whose smoke-free space for kids program has encouraged more than 400 schools to become smoke-free, should be commended. The work of the Canadian Lung Association, the Canadian Cancer Society, and the Non-smokers' Rights Association in the promotion of smoke-free workplaces should also be applauded. The Canadian Council on Smoking and Health should be congratulated for bringing the important issue of second-hand smoke into public view during National Non-smoking Week.

A major national collaborative initiative to combat smoking is the national program to reduce tobacco use. This is a joint effort of the federal, provincial, and territorial governments together with several major non-government oranizations, including the Canadian Council on Smoking and Health, the Canadian Public Health Association, Canadian Medical Association, Canadian Lung Association, Canadian Cancer Society, Canadian Heart Foundation, and Physicians for a Smoke Free Canada. The goals of this program which was launched in October, 1985 are to protect the health and the rights of non-smokers; to help non-smokers stay smoke-free; and to help smokers wishing to quit smoking to do so. These are laudable goals. The first stage of the program involved the launching of the youth oriented national advertising and promotion campaign using the theme, "Break free for a new generation of non-smokers".

A recent article in The Ottawa Citizen suggested that this campaign is not having an effect among Canadian youth. In fact, this campaign has achieved considerable success in reaching 12 to 17 year olds, the age group where major decisions are being made. Some of the findings from the 1986 evaluation of the campaign, which were misinterpreted in this article, indicate that 57 per cent of 12 to 17 year olds were aware of the campaign, which at the time of the survey had only run for about eight weeks. Furthermore, the intended messages of the campaign were clearly evident to youth who interpreted it as saying, stop smoking now, don't smoke at all, and don't start to smoke. The guide has been produced for use by program members and others at the local level regarding ways in which groups can become active in promoting this program. Initial steps have also been taken to involve the private sector in promoting the non-smoking message.

• (1730)

I got your signal, Mr. Speaker, and realize I only have 25 minutes more so I will hasten to conclude.

I am very pleased by the positive response from many of the companies approached to date, and I urge other businesses to get involved in their communities. Other program activities include the identification of several education programs ranging from prevention of smoking among teenage youth to smoking reduction in the workplace.

In conclusion, the attainment of a smoke-free Canada will be a triumph of Canadians everywhere. I am confident that by the afore-mentioned initiatives and other related activities this goal can be achieved.

[Translation]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have an opportunity this afternoon to speak to Bill C-204. If I appear to be out of breath it is because I got here at the last minute to join in the debate, but I did want to take a few minutes to express support for Bill C-204 introduced by the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald).

[English]

I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) for the effort she is putting into this Bill. I said this to the Hon. Member before, but I know she has, shall I say, much less tolerance for smokers than perhaps some other people do. She has a religious fervour of sorts for this measure she is proposing and I congratulate her for that. I know there are several of us who do not smoke and have smoke puffed in our face quite often. Sometimes, because we are in elected office, we do not dare say anything, but we should on occasion. I know that is not the case with the Hon. Member, so I am told by several people. I will not describe the kinds of meetings where she has told people to butt out, but I am sure some of her colleagues could attest to the fact there have been such occasions. At least so I have heard.

The important point is that we often hear on radio commercials dealing with this subject. I was listening to CKO this morning and there was a commercial from Health and Welfare Canada. It was very well done. It said that if someone was burning trash in their backyard and polluting everyone else, the municipal authorities would fine them. That is quite true in a number of localities. If someone was poisoning the air for someone else we would not put up with it. Yet at the same time many people are smoking and causing that kind of harm to themselves and others around them. The interesting point is that the commercial ends by saying "It is enough to take your breath away". Obviously it is, literally speaking.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I quit smoking myself about fifteen years ago and I can assure you that the presence of smoke around us is becoming ever more difficult to accept despite the fact that some of us do tolerate it, even though we should not. Statistics make it obvious that similar efforts must be made to reduce the number of opportunities people have to smoke, not only to protect their own health but, more important still, the health of people around them.

[English]

There are some diseases which are almost totally and exclusively caused by the fact that people smoke. That is very unfortunate. On the other hand, some people tell us that Governments need the revenue which the tax on cigarette tobacco produces. With those who subscribe to that theory I have to disagree profoundly. First, the health costs associated with the diseases caused by smoking far exceed any revenue the Government could ever hope to generate from the tobacco tax. That has been proven so many times that we need not go into it now in further detail. The other fact is that there is really no price to be put on good health. All of us know, particularly those of us who have had family members get sick, or have been sick ourselves, that we do not know how well we are until we are sick. Then we know just how precious health is. Unfortunately, too many people who smoke do not always give this fact the kind of attention they should.

I have a few small concerns about the Bill. They do not in any way take away from my intention of supporting its general thrust. But I bring to the attention of the House that in my view there should be some sort of exception clauses to make it more realistic and suitable to circumstances. Let us say we are talking about a building with a designated smoking room. Perhaps because of the size of certain buildings there should be some exceptions. I am thinking that it would not be necessary to have a separate smoking area for two people working in an airplane hangar or something like that. There has to be some kind of practical adjustment to make the Bill a little more functional. I want to caution Members of the House that it may require some mild amendments like that, friendly amendments, but that does not take away from the fact that I intend to support the Bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would rather not use up all the time allocated to me today. One of the reasons is that I hope this Bill will be given second reading and sent to a parliamentary committee so that we might make a detailed study and propose certain amendments which might be necessary. In any event, I know other Members intend to express their views on this measure. Therefore I yield the floor to other Members who, I am sure, will also make an important contribution to this debate.

• (1740)

Mrs. Carole Jacques (Montreal—Mercier): Mr. Speaker, cigarette smoking is emerging as a major public health concern for many Canadians probably because smoking can cause illness and shorten our life expectancy and because it is a habit that is difficult to break and becomes addictive. The public is also increasingly aware of the fact that smoking is not only bad for smokers. The latest research has shown that smoke produced by others, known as sidestream or secondary smoke, may be the cause of low birth weight and fetal injury. It can also cause respiratory illness in children and lung cancer in subjects exposed to sidestream smoke for long periods, for instance in the home or at work. As a result of this growing awareness of the effects of smoking, the public wants action to be taken on several issues, including cigarette advertising and exposure to sidestream smoke in public vehicles and at work.

The Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) is to be commended for presenting a Bill whose purpose is to reduce tobacco consumption and protect the public from involuntary exposure to sidestream smoke. I support the spirit and the intent of the Bill, and I would like to start with a few comments on tobacco advertising.

The Association for Non-Smokers' Rights has documented numerous violations of the voluntary code that manufacturers of tobacco products have agreed to apply to advertising and promotion, including advertising tobacco products on billboards and in stores within less than 200 metres of school property.

In 1986, the "Tempo" cigarette ad campaign aroused public concern. In my view, the campaign was clearly directed at recruiting new smokers among Canadian youth, thus violating the voluntary advertising code. The new 15-cigarette Export A pack has also been cause for concern, since the cheaper price makes this product more accessible to young Canadians. Unfortunately, in a declining tobacco market we can expect an increasing number of these questionable advertising and promotion campaigns.

For some time there has been concern that a product as dangerous as tobacco should a subject of promotion and advertizing campaigns, especially since the ad associate tobacco with a healthy, exciting and glamorous lifestyle, make tobacco products more attractive to young people and generally legitimize tobacco use. In fact, a number of Canadian magazines and newspapers, including the Kingston Whig-Standard, the Brockville Recorder and Times, the Globe and Mail and the Toronto Star, are now refusing to accept tobacco advertising because they believe it is unethical to advertise a product that is so clearly hazardous and addictive, and they are to be commended for doing so.

Although voluntary commitments by the Canadian Tobacco Manufacturers Council have been successful in limiting tobacco advertising to a certain extent and have also included the printing of health warnings on cigarette packs and reducing tar and carbon monoxide levels produced by cigarettes, the violations of the Code prove that the self-regulating approach is not ideal. Without provisions for enforcement, manufacturers are under no obligation whatsoever to observe this Code.

The federal Government has met with representatives of the Canadian Tobacco Manufacturers Council with a view to taking stronger action on tobacco advertising and promotion. Of special concern are the issues of lifestyle advertising and promotion aimed at teenagers and adults, the effectiveness of current health warnings, and the effectiveness of current compliance procedures. A number of options are being considered for restricting tobacco advertising, and I am very sure, Mr. Speaker, that this Government will be introducing further measures in the near future.

Another major point is involuntary exposure to cigarette smoke. I think we should realize that more and more, Canadians are demanding smoke-free areas, especially at work, in public vehicles and other public places such as restaurants, hospitals and retail stores.

A good many public and private sector initiatives designed to establish smoke-free areas have made it possible to protect the Canadian public against the hazards of involuntary contact with the tobacco smoke of other people. We should all commend the efforts of Canadians who have taken such initiatives.

As to smoking on public transport systems, several major bus transport companies, including Greyhound, Gray Coach, Voyageur, Canadian Coach and Pacific Coach, now offer services reserved for non-smokers only on many routes. As well, most major cities have banned smoking on municipal buses. Carriers such as Air Maritime, NorOntair, Time Air and Air Nova have flights for non-smokers and, for a few months now, most Air Canada Rapidair flights within the Toronto-Ottawa-Montreal triangle have been reserved for non-smokers. Last month, in response to public pressure, VIA Rail management decided to run cars for non-smokers on all but five of their routes, and all their coaches also have seats reserved for non-smokers. Better still, recently the Minister of Transport announced a proposed regulation to ban smoking on Canadian aircraft on domestic and transborder flights of two hours or less. Mr. Speaker, this measure marks another decisive phase in a series of concerted efforts to protect the travelling public against the hazards of involuntary exposure to sidestream smoke.

More and more employers are establishing policies which restrict smoking in the workplace. For example, Boeing, the Insurance Corporation of British Columbia and a variety of other companies have adopted as their goal a smoke-free workplace and are moving in that direction. Bata Industries Limited has already entirely banned smoking on the job. Municipalities such as the City of Ottawa are banning smoking at work stations and are working toward a complete ban on smoking in the workplace.

According to the Institute for Occupational Smoking Policy at the University of Seattle, employers who allow smoking in the workplace have much higher costs related to employee absenteeism, property damage and maintenance. Employees who smoke spend 6 per cent of their working hours on this ritual. Obviously, every employee who does not smoke on the job is a definite asset to the employer. Banning smoking from the workplace has other advantages as well. Some employers have observed that in addition to protecting their employees against the hazards of tobacco smoke and saving on maintenance costs, the restrictions imposed on smokers at work greatly improved employee morale.

Mr. Speaker, most major cities in Canada impose smoking restrictions in other public areas and gradually pass ever stricter by-laws in this respect.

This year Quebec enacted legislation to restrict smoking in various public places. It is a first at the provincial level. The Quebec legislation has two major aspects. First, smoking is banned or restricted to certain designated areas in government offices, hospitals, schools, public transit vehicles, and many other public buildings. Second, municipalities are authorized to pass additional smoking by-laws applicable to places under their jurisdiction. Quite a few municipal councils have taken this opportunity to adopt even stricter regulations which were not covered under the earlier provisions so as to restrict smoking in public areas, particularly places of work.

The federal administration has also made a special effort to designate rooms where smoking is prohibited in its offices. Considering that employee exposure to the tobacco smoke of others is not in keeping with the over-all objective, which is to maintain a healthy working climate, and that employees want to have much stiffer restrictions in that respect, a number of Departments have decided to restrict smoking in their offices. Among others I might mention the Office of the Auditor General, the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, the Department of National Health and Welfare, Statistics Canada, the National Research Council, the National Library Catalogue Division, and the Public Service Commission. In addition, the National Joint Council, an employer-union organization, is now considering various ways to strengthen the policy governing the use of tobacco in federal workplaces. For example, Mr. Speaker, last week Petro-Canada management announced smoking restrictions in their offices and facilities. Thus the federal administration is making an effort to promote smoke-free workplaces and leading the way for employers who have not yet implemented this kind of policy.

Although the federal Government has already established policies and programs aimed at restricting tobacco use, we can expect to see much more comprehensive measures to protect the public against exposure to the smoke of others, as well as restrictions concerning current tobacco marketing practices.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I rise this afternoon to say two things. First, I fully support Bill C-204 and I commend the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) for daring to be the first elected representative in the history of this place to deal with a danger which has affected us throughout the history of Parliament. Second, let me assure my esteemed colleague and true friend in connection with this and other causes we share that I do not enter this debate as a result of her friendly but forceful persuasion. I support this Bill because of long, bitter and sometimes hilarious experience in the more than a quarter of a century it has taken me to realize that smoking can indeed be dangerous to one's health.

It will come as no staggering surprise to anyone who knows me that I enjoy a pipe. Hon. Members rarely see me without a pipe, unlit but always at hand, even in this Chamber, as a kind of crutch, a prop, or, as the late, great Prime Minister John Diefenbaker used to kid me, "It gives you that something, that sense of sobriety which isn't always present in the journalistic community". The former Right Hon. Member for Prince Albert was correct way back then.

As a Member of this House, I admit that the pipe may provide an image, though not for the reasons Mr. Diefenbaker mentioned. Indeed, as the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood notes with horror at the commencement of every Standing and Special Parliamentary Committee on which we have participated, my pipe sits in an ashtray at the Chairperson's place and invariably she remarks, "You're not going to light that, are you, Mr. Chairman?" The answer has always been no and the answer here, Lynn, is also no.

I guess this is as good a time as any to recount an experience I had in a previous workplace, an experience which seemed very funny at the time to the distinguished person involved but which almost proved to be extremely hazardous to me. The people involved in this episode were my friend, Bob Hull, former Ottawa Bureau Chief of the Windsor Star, myself, then President of the Parliamentary Press Gallery and Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II. The workplace on this occasion in 1973 was Government House. The occasion was an official reception for the media in honour of Her Majesty given by Governor General Roland Michener in the tent room at Rideau Hall.

As executives of the Press Gallery, Mr. Hull and I were among the first to be presented to the Queen and His Excellency and then we were ushered into the elaborately decorated tent room for drinks and chatter until the Royal Party joined us. Bob Hull and I were advised to station ourselves right next to the entrance to the tent room in order to welcome Her Majesty and escort her informally through the growing throng of media people.

Both Bob Hull and I were pipe smokers and, as we lit up and a waiter handed us our drinks, Bob only had time to get out the question, "Now that we've gone through the receiving line and we're all here informally, are we allowed to smoke and drink in front of the Queen? I mean, what do we do if she—" and she did, Mr. Speaker.

Out of the corner of my eye, I was aware that an elegant, diminutive lady, all by herself, was approaching the two of us. Three things happened all at once. I stiffened and whispered to Bob, "Stash it, she's here". My friend found a nearby shelf with an ashtray and was able to dispose of his pipe and his drink in time to fold his hands neatly and say hello to Her Majesty. I was not so lucky. I plunged my pipe into my coat pocket and whipped back my right arm with the drink in my hand and said, without looking, "Here, somebody please take this". Not exactly composed, I then proceeded to join in the conversation with Her Majesty. Suddenly she started to laugh. I know that the British and especially the Royal family have a great sense of humour but I did not recall having said anything that funny or looking particularly funny. And then I smelled it. By now the Queen was in near hysterics as aides materialized out of nowhere asking her if something was wrong. Queen Elizabeth could only get out, through her uncontrollable giggling, "No, not with me, but sir," she said to me, "will you please take that infernal pipe out of your pocket or you'll burn the whole place down". I stabbed my finger into the smouldering pipe bowl, and as the ever-present aide rushed up with a damp napkin to stifle the rising column of smoke, the Queen continued, "And now, look who you just handed your drink to". There was His Excellency, Governor General Roland Michener, standing with two drinks, his and mine, muttering, "It's all right, Geoff, I'm just a supernumerary around here when Her Majesty is around. It's just part of the job".

So many millions of Canadians regard smoking as just part of the job. A number of colleagues from all sides of the House have presented detailed and valid reasons to persuade Canadians to change the way that smoking is considered to be just part of the job.

The first charge that could be levelled at such a piece of legislation as Bill C-204 is that it tramples on the rights of individuals. In my view, this Bill is not interventionist and does not trample on the rights of individuals. The statistics fly in the face of any such argument. Statistics show that smoking is the greatest cause of preventable death. Smoking accounts for almost 20 per cent of Canadian deaths, killing more Canadians than alcohol, car accidents, violence, drugs, suicides and poisoning combined. Smoking kills 32,000 Canadians every year. Four million Canadians will die from the effects of tobacco products and each smoker will die, on average, eight years prematurely.

There is a growing awareness of the dangers of second-hand smoke. A recent Health and Welfare study found that one in five Canadians has a serious medical condition which is aggravated by second-hand smoke. Other Hon. Members have mentioned that those who have asthma, emphysema or heart disease, will substantiate that. Health and Welfare Canada also estimated that 1,050 non-smoking Canadians will die from lung cancer, perhaps one-half of them from second-hand smoke.

With regard to the economic costs of smoking, Health and Welfare Canada estimated that the cost associated with smoking is twice as high as the revenue from tobacco taxation. The Health and Welfare study pointed out that the economic costs of tobacco use in terms of mortality, disability, fire damage, direct hospitalization and physicians' fees is $7.12 billion versus $4.2 billion in economic revenue from the tobacco industry.

By debating this kind of legislation, we are not trampling on people's lives. We are trying to address the case of the majority. Two-thirds of Canadians do not smoke. We are only trying to minimize the effects of smoking on both smokers and non-smokers. I do not think any Canadian would object to that as long as the legislation allows those who wish to smoke to do so. No one is trying to remove that right from those individuals because we do live in a free society.

There is no question that passage of Bill C-204 and the proclamation of this law will be an immensely important signal to employers and to Canadians generally that an official new awareness has dawned concerning smoking in the workplace. The legislation will only be meaningful in the long run in the ways it is followed up in practice.

I wonder if the historic measure the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood is hoping to pass in the very near future will not have achieved its main purpose initially by being simply a clear signal, a symbol, a beacon, if you wish, that employers had better start recognizing the problem of the non-smoker. Sometimes it does not take the force of law to bring about that kind of change, at least in some areas. We have found a simple answer in the Standing Committee on Secretary of State. We simply removed all ashtrays permanently. People do not mind stepping out into the hall to light up. I do not notice fewer passengers flying the one or two-hour non-smoking Air Canada flights since Transport Canada brought in that regulation. Smoking on an aircraft has always been a crazy hazard anyway. Now I sense that folks are beginning to appreciate a smoke-free environment in the air.

In short, and in conclusion, the idea of a smoke-free environment is seeping into the minds of walking smoke stacks such as those we find in this very Chamber. Moments before entering the House I saw my colleague, the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson), sitting all alone in the huge, leather-chaired lobby of the Confederation Building puffing away on his cigarette. He had just decreed a no-smoking rule in his office and had to abide by it with his lonely vigil of the sixth floor of the Confederation Building. If my friend from Western Arctic can respect other's wishes in this workplace, anyone can.

Again, I commend the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood for presenting a basically sound Bill, one that I will be happy to support when this historic measure is brought to a vote.

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

LABOUR RELATIONS—WORKER'S PAY CHEQUES—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION CONCERNING CERTAIN DEDUCTIONS MADE AT SOURCE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, last Friday on February 6, 1987, I stated before the House my concern about the NDP's funding sources. In raising this issue in the House, I referred to a 123-page judgment of the Ontario Supreme Court, handed down on July 7, 1986 by Mr. Justice John White.

In his judgment, Judge White of the Ontario Supreme Court referred to representations that were made before the Court at the request of a teacher at a college in Haileybury, Mr. Mervyn Lavigne. Mr. Lavigne's employer was deducting from his salary the union dues payable by all college employees, in accordance with the Rand formula.

The Rand formula obliges employees who decline membership in the union to pay the same dues as union members. The complainant in this case, Mr. Lavigne, did not object to the Rand formula as such but, under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, he objected to the fact that part of his dues was not used exclusively for union business but for other purposes, including, and that is what is at issue today, contributions to the NDP. Mr. Speaker, it is common knowledge that the NDP gets a significant part of its funds from the unions.

Mr. Lavigne and his counsel argued the case before the Ontario Supreme Court and were able to prove to the satisfaction of the judge that under our Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, unions could not use funds raised in this way from Canadian workers for purposes other than union business.

Mr. Speaker, considering that as a result of the decision by Judge White of the Supreme Court of Ontario, the NDP finds itself in a rather uneasy situation with respect to fund-raising, and also considering that this case will probably go to the highest court in the land, the Supreme Court of Canada, I want to ask today, on the floor of this House, that every Member of the NDP cease to use union funds contributed by Canadian workers to support their party's finances.

To be more specific, Mr. Speaker, I am not suggesting that the NDP pay back to the unions the funds they have in their treasury at this time, but I think party officials would be showing their good faith if they put in trust the funds derived from the contributions referred to in the decision by the Supreme Court of Ontario. These amounts should be held in trust, first to protect our workers, and second, to comply with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

If the leader of the socialist party, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), really wants to be honest and to maintain the reputation for clarity and credibility he wants for his Party, he should immediately explain his position and that of all his colleagues as concerns this illegal use of the money contributed by our workers. What will the socialist party do about this matter?

Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw a parallel between this issue and the fact that, when Canadians, and more particularly Quebecers, they put a deposit on an item which they plan to purchase later from a retail store, our laws require that this deposit be put in trust by the store, even if it is a national chain, to ensure that the consumer is protected. I would like to point out that the retailers comply with this legal requirement and respect Canadian consumers.

Will the socialist party, which, by its own definition, presents itself as a party devoted first and foremost to respect for the consumer, now have the honesty, the straightforwardness and the strength to comply with the ruling of Mr. Justice White of the Supreme Court of Ontario in the Lavigne case and to put the contributions of workers in a trust fund, and most important, not to receive additional amounts from this now contested source? We shall see in coming days what the members of the socialist party do to comply with this principle and the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and to remedy this situation. You can be assured, Mr. Speaker, that if they refuse to clarify their poisition before the Canadian people and this House, we shall draw the inevitable conclusions and propose appropriate action.

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the question raised by the Hon. Member is important indeed. If the Members of the New Democratic Party are following the debate, perhaps they could themselves give their support to a reform of the current system of political party funding, and even consider my colleague's suggestion.

As the Hon. Member very well knows, the Government does not have the statutory authority needed to require labour unions to deposit the dues collected into a trust account. Only the courts may require that. Perhaps Canadian workers could ask that the percentage of their union dues that goes to a political party be deposited into such a trust account, until the courts have ruled on the issue that has been referred to them in Quebec.

REVENUE CANADA—WORD PROCESSING WORK. (B) DEPARTMENT'S SECURITY MEASURES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I am rising as a result of a question that I asked of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay). It concerned reports in the Winnipeg newspapers that Revenue Canada was considering an experiment in contracting out word processing work that, in the opinion of the employees of the Tax Data Centre in Winnipeg, was confidential in nature. They brought this to my attention and the attention of the media. I met with them on Friday, February 6, at which time I learned about the Department's plans to experiment with this contracting out.

Subsequent to some attention being paid to this issue in The Winnipeg Free Press, particularly, there were reports that the Department backed down on its plan to experiment with contracting out. I asked the Minister to confirm that this was the case, which he did. It is a case where, at least in part, one received the answer one was hoping for. In this case, the Department had second thoughts about this kind of experiment. The official reason given was because of the effect on employee morale and the obvious degree to which this experiment was upsetting current employees of Revenue Canada.

I agree with that sentiment. I was dismayed to see that Revenue Canada would not only consider contracting out this kind of work, but would even entertain the idea.

I also raised the question of enhanced security measures at Revenue Canada. It is well known as a result of recent events, including the recent incident in Toronto involving microfiche, that there has been concern about security at Revenue Canada. I do not fault the Government for its concern, but I understand the concern of employees that the new policy, which I understand has been implemented, involves checks on elements of their personal lives about which they obviously feel sensitive.

There is a question of widespread fingerprinting, credit checks, as well as background searches for criminal records and other histories. If these checks must be done, they should be carried out with a great deal of sensitivity, particularly when one considers that many of these employees have worked for Revenue Canada from 10 to 20 years or more. They are concerned that any information that might be gathered in the course of these reliability checks could in fact be used against them when seeking a promotion or other appointments.

It is when they are appointed or promoted to a new position that these checks will come into force. It would be ironic—and I think this is one of the things we are concerned about—if a reliable employee for 10 or 20 years did have something in their past which, according to the new security guidelines, made them a risk, when we already know from their work history they are not, their chances then for promotion or for continuing employment are put at risk. That should not be so because of something which obviously has not had an effect on their reliability and on their trustworthiness as employees. Therefore, I can certainly understand, in the kind of example I have given, about the kind of concern employees may have.

We should also be concerned, even if there is an element of necessity to it whenever Governments feel they have to go to these kinds of measures, which are unprecedented really, to tighten up security. It is certainly regrettable that these kinds of things even have to be thought about. I wonder if the Parliamentary Secretary, or whoever is responding for the Minister, might also indicate on behalf of the Government whether this is part of a larger plan to have this kind of reliability or security check done in all government Departments.

There was also some concern expressed by the Public Service Alliance local with which I met that this was the beginning of a larger plan to do this in all government Departments. If that is the case, what we are looking at is "Big Brother". I know it is 1987, but 1984 is still the symbol of that Orwellian world we all want to avoid.

I would think it would be a Conservative Government, most of all, those who have raised concerns in the past about big Governments and Governments knowing everything there is to know about people, which ought to be more sensitive than perhaps previous Liberal Governments about that kind of information gathering, about widespread fingerprinting and about the kinds of things about which I think the Public Service Alliance people are so rightly concerned.

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his comments. I am sure he knows, as I do, that the Minister takes his comments very seriously. The Hon. Member raised two questions during Question Period on February 11. I will deal with the first question which concerned the proposal by Revenue Canada to review the feasibility of contracting out some word processing functions. The Hon. Member expressed concern that sensitive and confidential taxpayer information would be placed in jeopardy. First, as stated by the Minister, and referred to by the Hon. Member, as a result of further internal review and departmental investigation, the Department is not proceeding with the pilot projects. Second, no plans would have proceeded unless it could be assured that security of taxpayer information is maintained.

In his supplementary, the Hon. Member expressed concern about the Department's change in personnel security screening procedures which include fingerprinting, criminal record checks and credit checks. Revenue Canada has not departed from the government security policy. On the contrary, Revenue Canada fully supports the Government's policy, which was issued in June of 1986. It was the first Department to implement this new policy concerning personnel screening.

The purpose of the Treasury Board policy is to prescribe a security system for the Government of Canada which will effectively protect classified information and other assets sensitive to the national interests from unauthorized disclosure, destruction, removal, modification, or interruption. The policy is also intended to prescribe safeguards for other valuable assets and sensitive information such as tax returns. This is particularly important to Revenue Canada as its declaration of taxpayers' rights states that taxpayers: " have a special right that personal and financial information you provide to National Revenue Taxation will be used only for purposes allowed by law".

Because of the importance of confidentiality concerning taxpayer information, Revenue Canada decided to implement the new policy at an early date. This early implementation did follow consultation between Treasury Board and all Departments and between Taxation and the taxation component of the Public Service Alliance of Canada. Taxation employees were then provided with information concerning the personnel screening part of the Government's security policy.

This program requires all candidates appointed from outside the Department, as well as current employees, when they are promoted, transferred, seconded or assigned positions for more than six months, to be subject to a basic or an enhanced reliability check. This screening program does not apply to employees in their current jobs.

• (1815)

A basic reliability check includes verification of personal data, educational and professional qualifications, and employment, as well as a name check of criminal records. An enhanced reliability check, valid for five years, requires a credit check and a fingerprint check in addition to the elements of a basic reliability check. The type of reliability check or security clearance required for a given position is based upon the level of sensitive information to which the position provides access, and the degree of that access as determined by departmental management. Any information obtained through this process is kept in the strictest confidence by the Department's security directorate.

It should be clear that this policy is not intended to be unfair to any employee. If a reliability check contains any adverse information, the employee will be given an opportunity to explain. If employees are denied an appointment as a result of a reliability check, they may use the current grievance process. A fair balance will be struck between the need to assure the Canadian public that their confidential tax information is protected by loyal and trustworthy staff and the desire to recognize the rights of employees.

DRUMMONDVILLE CONTRACTS—NEED FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Yesterday in my office, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) and I had the visit of the Deputy Minister of Public Works who came, so it seemed, to bring us up to date with these 3,000-odd sheets of information concerning the Drummondville contract. I should like to share the contents of one of the letters contained in this kit. The letter is dated April 24, 1985, relates to a visit to Drummondville, and thus ends very briefly:

Chances are very good that the lease will be renewed at the same place. However, there is political pressure. Manon Lafleur was about to draft her submission to Treasury Board when her boss stopped her because of the aforementioned pressure.

This is one of the documents concerning the Drummondville case which was handed to me yesterday by the Deputy Minister of Public Works.

Mr. Speaker, a public inquiry is needed to shed light on this whole affair and on the scandals of the Conservative Party.

CANADA WINTER GAMES

OFFICIAL OPENING IN CAPE BRETON

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the people of Cape Breton I want to extend an invitation to all Canadians to attend the Canada Winter Games to be officially opened Sunday, February 15. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will be in Cape Breton Sunday to officially open the 1987 Winter Games. These games will be the best ever. Ski events will be held on the slopes overlooking the Atlantic Ocean and adjacent to the beautiful Cabot Trail, which is also in my riding. Other events will be held in industrial Cape Breton.

Cape Bretoners are looking forward to welcoming their Prime Minister to the most beautiful part of Canada. The Canada Games provide a national forum for Nova Scotians to display their cultural richness, uniqueness, and hospitality.

On behalf of the people of my region I congratulate the Minister for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek), the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay), and the Prime Minister, for their continuing support of all Nova Scotians and, in particular, the people of Cape Breton.

EDUCATION

ASSISTANCE FOR OVERSEAS STUDENTS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, Canadians pride themselves on their educational institutions and their commitment to international aid, yet somehow these two concerns do not get together. Canada gives only 1,500 scholarships to students from developing countries, which is less than 1 per cent of our ODA budget. Britain, by comparison, gives 20,000 scholarships.

Of the limited aid we do give, little goes to students from the poorest countries. For those students who do get to come here, there are bureaucratic hassles to endure over visa renewals. Groups assisting international students suggest we could do much more by providing up to 10,000 scholarships, for example, and simplifying bureaucratic procedures.

Most of the non-Canadian students at Canadian universities and colleges are not on scholarships but are paying their own way, aiding the Canadian economy by doing so. Surely we could be doing more to making our post-secondary institutions accessible to those who cannot afford the fees and, in the meantime, winning friends for Canada and partners in our development.

HISTORIC EVENTS

ANNIVERSARY OF INDEPENDENCE OF LITHUANIA

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, on February 16, 1918, Lithuania became an independent democratic nation. Lithuania lost that treasured status in 1940 when the Soviet Union invaded the Baltic States.

Freedom has always been an important aspect of Lithuanian life. In the 1890s, the first Lithuanians to arrive in Canada were refugees from Czarist Russia. In 1945 Lithuanians were fleeing the ravages of two occupiers, the Nazis and the Soviets. Both waves of immigrants from Lithuania have made a significant contribution to the growth and development of Canada.

When at times we take for granted the many freedoms we enjoy in Canada, we need only recall the adversity and strife suffered by Lithuania to appreciate our good fortune as Canadians. It was the promise of freedom and justice which brought Lithuanians to Canada. It is the fulfillment of that promise which makes them proud to be Canadians.

Let us join with them in marking this day as one of special significance for all who value freedom and the pursuit of liberty and justice.

ETHICS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, this Government has now been in office for two years and a few months and I think that the only conclusion one can reach is that it has been a series of scandals. Scandals to various extent, be they incidents of corruption, appointments of friends, contract awards, nepotism, or even in cases of major decisions. For example, Hyundai in Quebec, with a $50 million grant which people were unable—

Mr. Speaker, the situation is such that people even call us to know whether they should fill in Statistics Canada forms because they say: Considering this Government and everything that is going on, should we fill in these forms?

I think it is important and even imperative that the Prime Minister take immediate action to put an end to this series of scandals in an attempt to improve the image of his Government. He has two options: either he gets rid of the incompetent and minor-league people around him, or he simply hands in his resignation if he cannot make people in his Party respect a code of ethics.

HUMAN RIGHTS

U.S.S.R.—DEATH OF CANCER PATIENT GRANTED EXIT VISA FOR TREATMENT PURPOSES

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, Inna Meiman, one of several Soviet Jewish cancer patients whom Montreal physician Dr. Gerald Batist has championed, was finally allowed to leave the Soviet Union after years of trying. She was allowed to leave for treatment purposes only, having to leave behind her husband and son. But the exit visa for treatment purposes really came too late.

Inna Meiman died on February 10, 1987, in hospital in Washington. Her funeral will be held on Tuesday. Her husband and son are still in the Soviet Union.

Benjamin Charny, on behalf of himself and other refusnik cancer patients, sends this message:

> We grieve the loss of Inna Meiman and express support for her husband Naum. The tragedy here is not only Inna's death, but that she had to struggle for so long just to leave the Soviet Union. It seems as though the Soviet authorities waited until her condition became hopeless. We hope the same is not true of us.

The harassment and persecution of prisoners of conscience are serious human rights violations. Denying exit visas to refusniks is also a flagrant abuse of human rights. But it is nothing short of deplorable to deny exit visas to cancer patients seeking medical treatment in the West which is not available in the U.S.S.R.

FISHERIES

PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL HALIBUT REGULATIONS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, in March of 1985 a joint committee of Parliament brought to the attention of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans the fact that the international Pacific halibut regulations were illegal. He did nothing.

The committee called on the Minister on February 6, 1986, to revoke the regulations and have them legally drafted. The committee pointed out:

> We also wish for a formal assurance that, pending the formal revocation of the Regulations, fishery officers will be instructed not to enforce them and that no one has or will be charged for a breach of the Regulations.

Again, the Minister did nothing.

Article III(2) of the Convention as passed by Parliament confers the regulation-making powers on the commission, not on the Minister. Regina v. Feraco, 1965, confirms that regulations made by the Minister in their present form mean that they are null and void.

The Minister has been and is as of this date breaching an international agreement with the United States. From 1959 to 1984 the regulations were passed legally.

Since part of the B.C. halibut fishery begins in two weeks, I call upon the Minister to put in place legal regulations to protect the fishery and the rights of B.C. commercial and sports fishermen.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

AGREEMENT TO CLEAN UP NIAGARA RIVER TOXIC POLLUTION

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to say that on February 4 the principal U.S. and Canadian government agencies responsible for environmental protection signed an agreement for the clean-up of the Niagara River. The agreement calls on the four participating agencies to report to the public every six months on the progress being made to reduce toxic chemicals from entering the Niagara River. Most important, it calls for a target reduction level of 50 per cent for loadings of persistent toxic chemicals from sources on both sides of the Niagara River by 1996. This is a tremendous step forward. I congratulate all parties to the agreement but, in particular, our federal Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) for his leadership.

My constituents will be particularly pleased because, for 20 years, they watched while the federal Liberals did absolutely nothing for the toxic chemical clean-up of the Niagara River. They know they did nothing. That has now changed under this Government.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

AGREEMENT DESIRED BETWEEN UNITED STATES AND U.S.S.R. ON COMPLETE BANNING OF NUCLEAR TESTS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, we are receiving an increasing number of letters and comments on nuclear testing.

As we all know, Canada is against the use of nuclear arms and the testing of such arms on its territory, and this position has been very well received.

Recently, the Soviet Union announced its plan for a moratorium on nuclear testing, for an indeterminate period, which is a step in the right direction.

Unfortunately, and this is the concern raised by my constituents, the United States has not reacted positively to the moratorium proposed by the Soviet Union and is continuing its tests.

In the light of this concern, I sincerely hope that both superpowers will agree on a temporary moratorium on nuclear testing and eventually on a complete test ban.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL ADVISORY BOARD

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced yesterday that the first meeting of the National Advisory Board for Science and Technology will take place next Monday, February 16. The establishment of this board was one of the major initiatives in the October Speech from the Throne. I was a proponent of the creation of such an advisory board and am delighted to see the board become a reality.

The board will be chaired by the Prime Minister. It is comprised of a wide range of qualified scientific, business, labour and professional people. The board will advise the Government on science and industrial technology priorities, and on how such priorities can be implemented.

The creation of this board reflects the Prime Minister's recognition of the strategic national importance of science and technology to the economic future of Canada and to my constituents in Nepean—Carleton.

In my role as Chairman of the Standing Committee on Research, Science and Technology, I look forward to assisting the board in attaining the Government's objectives for progress in science and technology in Canada.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

PROVISION OF SERVICE IN RURAL AREAS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, postal service is a vital link for rural communities in Canada. Rural communities consider access to stamp purchase, money orders, parcel service, et cetera not only a right but an absolute necessity. Green boxes only offer a receptacle for incoming mail, and ignore the necessary service required for outgoing mail.

Recent announcements by Post Office Ministers of the Government to give 90 days for rural residents to be surveyed concerning their options are not real consultation, but an information and public relations exercise to let people know what the predetermined new lowers levels of service will be. The options are either green boxes or complete abandonment of the postal point altogether.

There has been no change in post office policy in rural areas. The existing policy continues. Rural residents served by small postal stations receive no reassurance from the Government's actions and policy on the Post Office.

HEALTH

AIDS DISEASE—LACK OF TESTING OF PROSPECTIVE IMMIGRANTS

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, at the present time anyone suffering from AIDS is not admissible as an immigrant to Canada. Equally, no mandatory testing for AIDS is required of anyone applying for admission to this country. AIDS is a highly infectious disease, and there is great public concern over it. Many provinces are implementing educational programs. Twenty-three per cent of the cases of AIDS in Ontario have involved people originating from outside Canada.

Surely it is reasonable to expect that the Department of National Health and Welfare, and the Immigration Medical Review Board take another look at the requirements for admission to Canada, and assure the public that every reasonable step is being taken to exclude this disease from our country.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

OZONE LAYER—NEED FOR PROTECTION FROM CHLOROFLUOROCARBONS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the ozone layer in the atmosphere protects us from ultraviolet sun rays and possible skin cancer. Chlorofluorocarbons, or CFCs, are substances which remove ozone from the atmosphere, and therefore are dangerous. CFCs are used as propellants in aerosol sprays, in foams for insulation, fast-food packaging, coffee cups, in solvents, in cooking sprays, and in medicating sprays. They are released when foam products decay, and when refrigerants are released in the environment.

The reduction in the ozone layer could increase the rate of skin cancer, reduce production of food crops, and enhance the rate of global warming. Canadians should press the Government to ban the use and importation of products containing CFCs. In the meantime, to be part of the solution of the problem, consumers should stop buying foam products containing sprays which use CFCs, and press manufacturers to stop using CFCs in their products.

CANADA WINTER GAMES

SASKATOON VENUE IN 1989

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, this weekend the opening of the Canada Winter Games in Sydney, Nova Scotia, will unite young athletes from all corners of the country. The event will give the residents of Nova Scotia, and visitors to the Games, an opportunity to experience first-hand the outstanding sportsmanship of young Canadians.

In 1989 the City of Saskatoon will have the opportunity of hosting Canada's Summer Games. It too will be a super event. All three levels of government have contributed $2.5 million toward this project, which will not only boost tourism, but it will subsequently inject $20 million into the economy of Saskatoon.

All volunteers in Sydney and Saskatoon, as well as the Minister of Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek), should be condemned for their efforts in making such events possible. The best of luck must be extended to our athletes in Nova Scotia who share the common characteristic of dedication, and who strive for excellence in their performance. See you in Saskatoon in 1989!

[Later]

Mr. Ravis: Mr. Speaker, I want to retract something I said this morning under Standing Order 21. I want to assure the volunteers of Sydney and Saskatoon, as well as the Minister of Fitness and Amateur Sport, that I commend them, not condemn them. I apologize for that.

Mr. Speaker: It is certainly an intervention on behalf of civility.

BANKS AND BANKING

POOR PERSONS' LACK OF ACCESS TO SERVICES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, banks and other mainstream financial institutions seem to go out of their way to avoid dealing with poor people, according to a study by the National Anti-Poverty Organization. Low-income Canadians are finding that their access to financial services is restricted. Because they are poor, they are unable to obtain services that moderate and upper-income Canadians take for granted. This is not referring to services that could be considered luxuries, but basic services like having social assistance cheques cashed in order to buy food for your family, or obtaining a small loan to replace a refrigerator which has finally given up the ghost.

Mainstream institutions are wary of cashing government cheques, because they fear fraud. Most poor people cannot provide the identification that is needed. The Government should investigate this situation, and make sure all Canadians have equal access to these institutions.

As you said yourself, Mr. Speaker, in the presence of our esteemed Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees), "it was significant that this event took place in the Hall of Honour beneath the Peace Tower".

You have done more for rapprochement and understanding by allowing this event than those with myopic political views.

THE ADMINISTRATION

ETHICS—INQUIRY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER TELEPHONED MINISTER TO OBTAIN CERTAIN EXPLANATIONS

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Last night, the CBC's English network revealed some troubling facts involving another Minister. This time it was the Minister of State, the Member for Joliette, who allegedly attended a fund-raising party where guests paid $5,000 a head, in the hope they would get government contracts. I would like to know whether the Prime Minister has called his Minister since last night. If he did, is he still satisfied that the Minister may keep his seat in the Conservative Cabinet? And if he did not call him, why not?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as far as these allegations are concerned, a number of facts were brought to my attention early in January 1986. I immediately passed on the information to the Secretary to the Cabinet with instructions to ask for a full police investigation by the RCMP. This investigation was conducted and, if I am not mistaken, has led to number of complaints, one concerning a Member of this House. The RCMP is still investigating, and what transpired meanwhile is public knowledge.

PRIME MINISTER'S RESPONSIBILITY TO ASK FOR EXPLANATIONS

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has given us some information, which is quite welcome, but he failed to answer my question. I asked him whether he had been in touch with his Cabinet colleague since last night's broadcast, because Canadians saw this program, Mr. Speaker, and they are all concerned about the integrity of this Government. Is the Prime Minister telling us that he would have acted responsibly by failing to call his Minister to find out exactly what his involvement was in this matter, to find out what happened from the Minister himself?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): The allegations in last night's broadcast are nothing new. These are certain facts that have been investigated, if I am not mistaken, by the RCMP. I decided to call for an investigation after being informed of a number of facts that I found troubling. I immediately gave the information to the Secretary to the Cabinet, with instructions to request a police investigation that I assume included some of the allegations reported last night. This is not new. These were some of the reasons for requesting the investigation.

[English]

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the last revelations are that in July, 1985, a year and a half ago, a number of businessmen were invited to dish out $5,000 apiece to get on the gravy train. That is what we learned last night. Certainly the Prime Minister cannot tell us that there is nothing suspicious about that. Is this not one more reason why there should be a public inquiry, a full public inquiry, into the way the Government is conducting business? Why would the Prime Minister not grant this, if he has nothing to hide?

• (1125)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend asks if we have anything to hide. Perhaps I would ask him to examine my conduct and that of the Government faced with allegations to which he refers having taken place in July, 1985. Whatever transpired in July, 1985, the allegations concerning that were conveyed to me in very early January, 1986. That was a few months later. As these matters surfaced they were brought to my attention.

Immediately these matters to which the Hon. Member refers, which were reported last night, which had taken place, were brought to my attention, I immediately spoke with the Clerk of the Privy Council, Mr. Tellier, and instructed him immediately to order a police inquiry into the allegations to which my hon. friend presumably refers. That full police inquiry initiated by me as soon as I was apprised of the allegations was thorough and exhaustive, as the RCMP always conduct inquiries, and has resulted in a number of criminal charges being laid, including charges against a Member of this House. Therefore, that matter is presently before the courts. Surely in the light of that my hon. friend will agree that the Prime Minister and the Government acted swiftly and properly in the interests of justice.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

CONDUCT OF DEBATE IN PARLIAMENT

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to turn to the subject of capital punishment and ask the Prime Minister to set the record straight on a statement made yesterday in British Columbia by the Minister of State for Science and Technology, who clearly said that an agreement had been reached with the Official Opposition about the way in which the capital punishment debate would be conducted. Would the Prime Minister confirm that there has been no such agreement and that this is nothing but an attempt to implicate the Opposition in the Government's campaign promise?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the precise statement that the Minister of State for Science and Technology was alleged to have made. I can only say that there is a motion that will be introduced. I will be making a statement later on this day with respect to it. I can indicate to the Hon. Member that there has been no agreement with opposition Parties with respect to the timing of the debate or the way in which it proceeds. The resolution will be introduced. It will be there for members of all Parties to examine and, indeed, for the public to examine, after which we will embark upon a debate.

TIMING OF DEBATE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. He has said on a number of occasions that the capital punishment debate would be brought forward at an appropriate time. What is appropriate about this time to bring forward the debate, other than the fact that the Government is perhaps on death row?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Here we go again, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member raises a very important and serious question but he cannot even put it in a serious vein without attaching sleaze and a bit of innuendo to it.

THE ADMINISTRATION

MORAL RESPONSIBILITY OF MEMBER FOR JOLIETTE—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and has to do with the situation of the Hon. Member for Joliette. The Prime Minister indicated a few minutes earlier that, as Prime Minister, he was made aware of this situation one year ago. At the time he had decided to ask the RCMP to investigate. However the Prime Minister can fully appreciate that it is also a question of morality. I should like to ask the Prime Minister if, at the time, he had inquired of the Hon. Member for Joliette concerning his moral responsibility in this field.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I said to my friend that this question which had been raised by another Member is now before the courts. It is therefore very important that we proceed with caution in the comments we make here. I can tell my friend that once the facts had been brought to my attention I immediately referred the whole matter to the Secretary to the Cabinet with instructions to launch a full and immediate police investigation. This investigation led to certain charges being laid. All other persons who might have been involved in this have been, I presume, the subjects of RCMP investigations. Since no charges have been laid against other individuals, I assume that the behaviour of all other Canadian citizens has been considered to have been in accordance with the law at all times. If my friend is referring to another aspect, he is aware of my position and of the statements I made, and he knows what I always expect from my Ministers in this field.

• (1130)

[English]

USE OF PATRONAGE—STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO FORMER MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I am indeed dealing with another aspect of it and that is the moral responsibilities of Ministers of the Crown which the Prime Minister has said on other occasions must be totally beyond reproach. The Minister in question, said not too long before the conversation he presumably had with the Prime Minister a year ago, said the following:

> Patronage—was a tool that was used by the Liberals during their tenure in office and I don't intend to pass up our opportunity.

Those were the words of the Hon. Member for Joliette defending what I would call the lowest form of patronage practice in contracts. He was defending it then as a Minister of the Crown.

Since the Prime Minister has now told us that he was aware in January, 1986, of the allegations made on television last night, did he as Prime Minister ask the Minister at that time if he was living up to his moral responsibilities as a cabinet Minister in the Government of Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend can assume that absolutely. In regard to the statement he made about me being aware of allegations made on television last night, I was travelling last night and I can only assume that the information that was imparted last night on television was in fact related to the matters that gave rise to the police inquiry. I have no reason to believe anything but that. If anyone has any allegations at variance with that, I would be happy to hear them. In regard to the first question, however, obviously.

PAYMENTS ALLEGEDLY REQUESTED FROM BUSINESS PEOPLE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, there are allegations that involved the Minister of the Crown taking part in meetings in which $5,000 was requested from business people, without receipts, clearly including the possibility of influence-buying to put it in its most direct form or, perhaps, in the less legal sense, possibly implicating the Minister in more wrongdoing of the worst kind. When will the Prime Minister speak to the Minister directly about this and report back to the House? When, finally, will he clean up the moral act of this Government?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my friend says that there were allegations made last night against the Minister. First, I understand that those allegations were denied by the Minister. Second, they would have been completely investigated by the RCMP. As a result of that investigation, certain specific charges were laid against individuals and certainly not the Minister.

Surely the Hon. Member is entitled, as we have discussed in the past, to some degree of presumption of innocence. There has been a formal denial by him. There has been a formal police inquiry by the RCMP. Can we not assume that someone is innocent until proven guilty?

This matter is before the courts. It would be completely improper for me to go beyond that except to give my hon. friend the full assurance that (a), on the question of morality, or (b), on the question of illegality, when the facts were brought to my attention, I did not wait for anything. I immediately initiated a full police inquiry which resulted directly in charges being laid. That is the way the Prime Minister of Canada and members of the Government should conduct themselves.

AWARDING OF PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and concerns the same subject. The Prime Minister said that all this is not a new revelation. Indeed, on April 8, 1986, I first asked a question in the House concerning the Public Works contracting procedures which later resulted in the RCMP investigation referred to last night on the television report.

First, does the Prime Minister agree with a statement attributed to the same Minister of May 15, 1986, which is the following: "I certainly don't mind showing my gratitude to people who deserve it." He was referring to the awarding of Public Works contracts. Can the Prime Minister also tell us what bearing this whole affair had on the subsequent removal of that Member of Parliament, the Hon. Member for Joliette, from the Public Works portfolio?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, we have had considerable dialogue about the awarding of Public Works contracts and we have focused on Drummondville. Perhaps the Hon. Member would like to restate the question when he has knowledge that Hana was sole sourced the Drummondville contract originally in 1973, and again there was a renewal of the contract in 1980 without tender, those affairs being under the conduct and direction of that administration.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, if the Minister wants to speak of the Drummondville contract, I would have half a dozen questions to ask him about that at the moment, but we are sticking with this issue. Perhaps he could limit his answers to the subject which is the most embarrassing for his Government rather than weaseling his way out.

INQUIRY IF RECEIPTS WILL BE ISSUED FOR ALLEGED FUNDING CONTRIBUTIONS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, so far, neither the Prime Minister nor the Minister of Public Works have answered questions about the possible involvement of the Hon. Member for Joliette in mysterious fund-raising parties. Could the Prime Minister inform the House whether he has any confirmation that these events did in fact produce the kind of contributions that were mentioned last night? Where did the money go? If part of it went to the Conservative Party, will receipts be issued as required by law?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: These are important matters, as the Chair has said. The Chair is a little troubled by the question. I think, if the Chair heard it correctly, the Hon. Member, who has been asking specific questions in a tightly controlled way, for which the Chair is grateful, was getting very close to charging that the Minister was involved in some wrongdoing. I think he used the words: "the possible wrongdoing of the Minister".

There is a proper provision under the rules of this place if a charge is to be laid. The Chair is concerned that in matters of this gravity, all Hon. Members on both sides of the House should strain mightily, if I could put it that way, to respect the fundamental rule of this place, and that is that if an accusation is to be made, then there is a formal way to make it.

The Hon. Member is asking what the Prime Minister did when the Prime Minister may or may not have heard certain things. In the view of the Chair, that is certainly completely legitimate but I would ask, please, that every respect be given to the rules and to all Hon. Members in this place so that a question does not amount to a charge, no matter how veiled.

[Translation]

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I will rephrase my question. Since according to an article by Canadian Press, the Minister in question admitted he attended the parties that were held to collect $5,000—contributions without receipt, could the Prime Minister inform the House whether the Conservative Party drew any benefit from these funds and if so, will he, as the Prime Minister, take steps to ensure that receipts are issued as required by the legislation with which all Members of Parliament are expected to comply?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister can assure the House that, as soon as he received information that was the least bit troubling on this matter, he made the right decision, I think, by giving immediate instructions to Mr. Tellier, the Secretary to the Cabinet, to ask for a full police investigation. Following this investigation, charges were laid, and today, these matters are before the courts. If there have been any further troubling or unlawful or doubtful occurrences, the RCMP will no doubt inform us accordingly.

CONDUCT OF BUSINESS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. More and more Canadians are beginning to believe the Government is out of control.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Young: The Government may not like it but it is a fact.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is using a preamble to lead to a question but the preamble is so far just a statement of opinion which the Hon. Member has stated as fact. I ask Hon. Members to be careful in preambles. Lay the groundwork for the question, but there is no particular reason to start with an obviously provocative statement.

Mr. Young: I will put it another way. Recent opinion polls have indicated just what I said.

Last weekend the Prime Minister suggested he had some specific proposals that he wanted to bring forward to reassure Canadians that the Government was in control of the situation. On Monday my Leader asked the Prime Minister if he would be prepared to bring those proposals forward in the next two weeks. When can Canadians expect to see these proposals which he indicated last weekend he was willing to bring forward?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have dealt with that very fully in my responses to questions put by other Members. My hon. friend says he believes the Government is out of control and certain consequences will necessarily follow. I know he presumes that, but I should tell him what my mother used to say, that presumption is a mortal sin.

ALLEGATIONS MADE AGAINST MINISTERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, whether or not the Prime Minister wants to agree that Canadians are concerned about this, I think he should listen to the questions being asked. The question is when can we expect the Government to bring forward proposals which will finally, we hope, give some direction toward ending the kind of allegations made against Ministers of the Crown so that in the future Canadians can expect half-decent Government here rather than the kind we are getting?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know when the allegations against Ministers and members of the Government will cease, based as they are in many cases on rumour and unsubstantiated facts. I will point something out to my hon. friend and perhaps ask for his advice in this regard. Here is an article in The Toronto Star of February 11 and the headline says:

RCMP probe allegation top Tory aide sought payoff

After advertising this to, I assume, about 700,000 of their subscribers, the article then says down at the bottom:

Based on the strength of the ministerial denial—

Because it was denied by the Minister:

—and an inability to substantiate the allegation, The Star has decided not to identify the Minister alleged to have been involved.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I agree with you.

Mr. Mulroney: In other words, "we will accuse the entire Ministry but because we have found out it is unsubstantiated and may be absolutely false we will not name the poor bugger we are accusing. We will invite you to smear everyone and assume everyone is guilty"!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ETHIOPIA—IMPRISONMENT OF ROYAL FAMILY FOR PAST 14 YEARS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey—White Rock—North Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Royal Family of Ethiopia have been in prison for almost 14 years. They are aging and some of them are ailing and in poor health. Chairman Mengistu has promised to release them but has taken no action. Canada has provided a good deal of help for the Royal Family should they be released. Would the Prime Minister use his good offices to urge Chairman Mengistu to release the rest of the Royal Family so they can enjoy their remaining years in freedom?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for raising that question. It is helpful that Ethiopian authorities know this is a matter of concern not simply to the Government but to Members of the House of Commons. We are making representations and will continue to do so. If it appears that it would be helpful to intensify those representations, we will intensify them.

INTERPRETATION OF ABM TREATY

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the Secretary of State for External Affairs back in the House and we look forward to a statement on his trip, as well as to a statement by the Prime Minister on his trip to southern Africa.

I want to ask the Minister about statements by Mr. Shultz to the effect that allies should not be criticizing the broad interpretation the U.S. administration wants to put on the ABM Treaty of 1972 in order to permit extensive testing of the star wars technology. Can the Minister confirm a report I have seen that he has written to the U.S. Government with regard to the interpretation of the Treaty and said that his Government, as do we in the Opposition, believes in strict adherence to that Treaty? Would he be good enough to publish that letter so Canadians will see the strong stand Canada should be taking vis-à-vis a treaty affecting the future of all mankind?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that I have written to the U.S. Secretary of State indicating the very grave importance Canada places on the U.S. continuing to adhere to a restrictive interpretation of the ABM Treaty. The Hon. Member will know there are certain conventions regarding the publication of letters which require agreement by both sides. I am not sure that would prevail in this case, but in any event I have just indicated to the Member, the House, and the public, the tone and content of the letter to Mr. Shultz.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): I appreciate the answer, Mr. Speaker. But speaking of Star Wars, there were talks yesterday in Washington about Canadian participation in building a space station.

Could the Minister confirm to the House now that he is satisfied the space station will not be used for military purposes?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am not satisfied with the answer we got from the U.S. authorities. As I said before the Committee, the Canadian Government will insist on the interpretation that was given by the United States Administration when the project was announced. Use for defence purposes was supposed to be very minimal.

THE ADMINISTRATION

ALLEGATIONS MADE AGAINST MINISTERS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. When allegations were made which might involve the Minister of State for Transport the Prime Minister properly began an RCMP investigation and fired the Minister. The case of the Hon. Member for Joliette came to the Prime Minister's attention in January of 1986, but he did not suspend or fire the Hon. Member for Joliette. What is the difference between the two cases?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the difference is that the facts are fundamentally different. I was obviously confronted with two different situations. The response in one was the response I initiated which led to charges being laid against a Member of the House and others. In regard to the second matter, it was my judgment that the action I took was the kind of action which should be taken given the facts brought to my attention. My hon. friend will understand that because of the police inquiry and the possibility of charges I can go no further at this time. However, I think he would agree with the celerity and thoroughness of my response.

• (1150)

DECISIONS MADE BY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, what I am asking the Prime Minister in terms of conflict of interest is whether he would make clear at what point he makes a judgment in these kinds of cases? In the case of the Minister of State for Transport, the Prime Minister undertook an RCMP investigation, had discussions with the Minister, and fired him. I assume he held the same kind of discussions with the Member for Joliette. Will he tell us and the people of Canada what the difference is in these cases, because both involved RCMP investigations and very serious allegations?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question is: when do I make the judgment in regard to these matters? As soon as the facts are brought to my attention. The instant they are brought to my attention I try to assess them and respond immediately with the Secretary of the Cabinet, and the appropriate law officers of the Crown get involved in the matter. I believe that is what a Prime Minister should do and it is certainly what I do.

FOOTWEAR INDUSTRY

REQUEST FOR REINSTATEMENT OF QUOTAS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade, and I would remind her that, when her Government did away with footwear quotas 14 months ago, the Government stated that this decision would not lead to layoffs, that it would even benefit all Canadians since footwear prices would drop in this country. Can the Minister explain why, 14 months after this decision, the footwear industry has lost 1,400 jobs and Canadian consumers are now paying higher prices for shoes?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raises a point that has been occupying me in my representations from the footwear industry this week. Let me point out to him that when the policy was introduced it was anticipated that there would be a surge of imports. We expect that surge to moderate. We are undertaking consultations with some of the countries which supply footwear to ensure that they are being prudent in their exports. However, may I tell the Hon. Member that the weight of the representations made to me by this industry, particularly by the import and retail part of the industry, is that they want us to maintain the present policy. That is our intention.

[Translation]

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, spokesmen for the footwear industry felt quite let down after their meeting with the Minister. Is the Minister prepared to admit today that the decision to abolish quotas is a failure for consumers and Canadian workers in that industry? In addition, could she tell us what she intends to do to stop this hemorrhage, because next year 2,000 more jobs will be lost, footwear imports will flood the market, and prices will keep rising? What will her Government do to stop this haemorrhage in the footwear industry?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I have already established that we are in consultation with some of the countries which supply footwear to ensure that the surge is not extended. May I point out that the retailers and the importers, and some of the footwear producers themselves, are asking us to maintain the present policy. They are pointing out that there is expansion in the industry, new jobs being created over-all, and that Canadian consumers are entitled to a wide range of products, particularly lower cost items.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ARMS SALES TO CENTRAL AMERICA

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I want to welcome him back to the House and say that I, as I am sure all Members, appreciate his travels on behalf of Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: I will not let him off the hook, though, and will come back to my question. It concerns Trans World Arms, the Canadian company in Montreal. A few minutes ago I talked to our ambassador in Lisbon, Mr. Francis, who told me that if a Canadian came to Portugal, a known arms centre, and brokered arms there, it would have nothing to do with the RCMP since it was not breaking Canadian law. Will the Minister reconsider his announcement yesterday of an RCMP inquiry—surely a growth industry in Canada—and seriously consider a parliamentary inquiry as a better vehicle to study Canadian arms sales to Central America?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is an RCMP inquiry because we have reason to believe that there are aspects to this transaction which would require an RCMP inquiry. I am sure the Hon. Member would not want us to take any action that would prevent that from happening. He has made certain allegations in a letter to me that I am prepared to pursue if that pursuit would not interfere with the RCMP inquiry. We are trying to determine that fact.

He has made a suggestion of a parliamentary inquiry. That also may be affected by the ongoing RCMP investigation. Again, I am prepared to look at that, in a reasonable way, and perhaps it might be helpful if the Hon. Member and I, sometime next week, could meet to discuss what we both know about the circumstances.

REQUEST FOR PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, since CBS News in Washington is carrying this Canadian arms connection as a major story, it affects our foreign policy and reputation in the United States. CBS News claims that Mr. Emmanuel Wiegensberg of Montreal, President of Trans World Arms, refuses to answer their questions, specifically the question of the connections of the Canadian firm with Secord-Hakim and Lieutenant-Colonel Oliver North. Will the Minister not agree that a parliamentary inquiry could issue a subpoena and ask Mr. Wiegensberg the key question of who contacted Trans World Arms and whether that person was representative of the U.S. Government in some capacity? Is he prepared to supplement the RCMP inquiry with a recommendation to the powers that be here for a parliamentary inquiry so that the key questions can be answered?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, first, I am not inclined to take an action which would limit the effectiveness of an RCMP inquiry. Second, I have some doubts about the propriety or the wisdom of the precedent of the Parliament of Canada establishing a committee of this Parliament to look into answering questions that Americans want answered but cannot get answered through their own processes. Third, I repeat my willingness to meet with the Hon. Member to discuss what we both know about the circumstances and determine whether there is a view that it might be worth while to pursue some other form of investigation.

EDUCATION

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATIONAL FUNDING

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It concerns the subject of post-secondary educational funding. He will know that this year Established Programs Financing has been limited from the rate of increase of about $700 million. Furthermore, the Canadian Jobs Strategy Program has been disastrous for the funding of community colleges. Third, the Canada Student Loans Program is heaping debts as high as $20,000 on the backs of Canadian students. Why is the Government allowing the serious decline in first-class Canadian universities through this inactivity? More particularly, why is he denying a decent future to young Canadians through government inactivity in this area?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the Government announced a number of months ago major increases with regard to EPF financing. I believe that for the first time in history the federal Government is convening a major forum to discuss the whole problem of post-secondary education, to bring together all of the interested participants. That is the way to approach this, rather than acting unilaterally.

ESTABLISHED PROGRAMS FINANCING

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for that answer, but will he give an undertaking that Established Programs Financing will be on the agenda of that forum, which I hope will be held soon? Will he give an undertaking that the Government will accede to the recommendation of the Canadian Federation of Students and make the Canada Students Loans Program less of a loans program and more of a grant program? Will he give that undertaking?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I don't believe it is appropriate for the Government of Canada to decide unilaterally on the agenda. It will be worked out with all participants. However, I will take those suggestions into account.

SHIPBUILDING

POLAR 8 ICE-BREAKER CONTRACT—TIMING OF ANNOUNCEMENT

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Hundreds of shipbuilders are without jobs in British Columbia. Yesterday Versatile Shipyards laid off 28 management personnel because they have no new contracts. I have asked the Deputy Prime Minister before, and will ask him again when he and his Government will award the long awaited contract to build a Polar 8 ice-breaker, as has been promised? Is the Minister just going to sit there and let our shipbuilding industry die? When are we going to hear the announcement?

• (1200)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member is aware of the restructuring which is taking place within the Versatile organization. That process is still taking place, and until such time as it is concluded, the Versatile Pacific shipyards are not really in a position to undertake this. However, I would hope that in the next two weeks or so many of those elements might be settled and it will then be in a position to make a firm proposal with regard to the building of the Polar 8 ice-breaker. In fact, the Government still remains firmly committed to it.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask Hon. Members to keep their questions short. We are running out of time.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): It sounds very much like the kind of delays we had from the Liberals who also delayed on this Polar 8 ice-breaker.

In 1984, the Prime Minister promised to revitalize the industry. What is he going to do to start on this promise? Is there not something he can do to expedite this? We had the same answers the Minister just gave us several months ago.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): The Liberals were in office for 25 years and all they did was study the prospect of building a polar ice-breaker.

Ms. Mitchell: That is all you are doing.

Mr. Mazankowski: We have made a firm commitment, and I am sure the Hon. Member would understand and realize that, in spite of my desire to move in with both hands to resolve the restructuring, there is a certain process it has to go through. I would ask the Hon. Member to be patient and allow that to take place.

REFUGEES

PLIGHT OF REFUGEES IN SOUTH LEBANON

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Two and a half years ago Canada inspired the world by going to the aid of Ethiopians facing the spectre of starvation. People around the world now seem to be helpless as we see the plight of hundreds of thousands of refugees in South Lebanon. What can Canada do now to help these people find life? What can we do to help the UNRRA supplies get through to them?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the situation of the inhabitants of those camps is appalling. There are limits on what Canada can do. What we are doing is approaching the Amal militia to request them to allow food and health supplies through. We are also approaching the Government of Syria, asking it to use all the influence available to it, to allow health and food and other supplies to go through.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

RETAIL SERVICES—TRANSFER TO PRIVATE SECTOR

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, door-to-door mail delivery has been reinstituted but on Parliament Hill only. Last night all Members of Parliament received a hand-delivered letter from Canada Post in which it said:

> Canada Post will be placing the majority of its retail services into the hands of the private sector. The change will—greatly reduce the cost of maintaining its retail network.

Does the new Minister responsible for Canada Post agree with this privatization, this cut-back of service, which will mean a closure of rural post offices?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I think the honeymoon is over, Mr. Speaker.

On the general question of whether privatization can be beneficial or not, my feeling is definitely yes. In fact I would generally support what has been the view, as I understand it, of many committees of Parliament which have looked at the matter over the years, that in fact through privatization we may be able to have significant increases in service to the public, all the while saving money.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has changed the wrapping on the postal package with the appointment of this new Minister, but the contents remain the same, and we say the contents are unacceptable for delivery and should be returned to sender.

LEVEL OF SERVICE

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Does the Minister really believe that a part-time businessman can provide the same level of service which our dedicated postmasters and postmistresses do in rural Canada?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised at the Hon. Member's interest in the Post Office. I thought for sure he used voice communications for all purposes no matter what the distance.

Yes, I think it is very possible to have improved service if we have a retail postal outlet in a corner store which stays open 12 hours a day, as opposed to a service in a dedicated post office which shuts at 5 o'clock in the afternoon. I think it is very possible to have improved services all the while contracting to the private sector.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

UNITED STATES LOW-LEVEL TRAINING FLIGHTS IN CANADIAN AIRSPACE

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. As the Minister knows, Canadian civilian pilots have been warned to beware of U.S. war planes which are scheduled to start on March 8 low-level flight training from just above treetop levels and upward in Ontario between Sault Ste. Marie, North Bay, and Wawa.

When the request was received, did the Government obtain noise impact and environment impact reports, and did it consult with relevant civilian air service and pilots before giving approval, or was this all left to Major Donald Marsh?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, this is the reactivation of a route which was in service for many years. As a consequence, we already have data with respect to it. There was full consultation with the Department of Transport.

TRAINING OF AMERICAN PILOTS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister tell the House whether this training of American pilots for low-level flight over Canadian terrain, hilly, wooded terrain, as an extension of the routes they use in the United States, is part of the deep strike policy of NATO of attacks into the Soviet Union?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, this is part of the training which is necessary for the U.S. Air Force in order to provide for the defence of the West. I am surprised the Hon. Member would feel that Canada should not shoulder its fair burden of the defence of the West. This is something which is very much in our interests.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Don Valley East. The last question.

REGULATORY REFORM

REVIEW OF NIELSEN TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Privatization, responsible for the status of women and regulatory affairs. The Nielsen Task Force was the most comprehensive review ever undertaken by any Government to assess the size, cost, and efficiency of the federal bureaucracy. Several months ago recommendations emanating from a review of approximately 1,000 programs were assigned to the appropriate committees of the House. Since action on these recommendations was to create a much more efficient Government and significant cost savings, could the Minister give this House a progress report on the results achieved thus far?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, I would be very pleased to give a progress report to the Hon. Member because I think this is one of the most noteworthy achievements of any Government in the history of Canada with regard to government management.

There are a number of elements I would like to point out about regulatory reform. First, this has now commanded ministerial attention, and the attention of a cabinet committee, so it has very strong control because there is a very strong political will to ensure the regulatory environment improves. We have published, as well, a Citizen's Code of Fairness which, I think, is very important. My predecessor, the Minister of Justice, was responsible for introducing that publication.

There are 43 specific reform initiatives, including a working group on drug submissions, reform of the Combines Investigation Act, and there is a publication of a federal regulatory plan. The first one came out on December 15. I know that every Hon. Member of the House has read it from cover to cover.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

STATEMENT BY DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER—FREE VOTE—PROCEDURE

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to inform Members of the House that yesterday I filed with the Clerk a Notice of Motion with respect to capital punishment. The wording of the motion is available to Members on today's Order Paper and Notices. I would like to make it clear at the outset that the introduction of this motion does not indicate that the Government supports or opposes the reinstatement of capital punishment.

The intent behind the motion is to permit a full parliamentary debate to be concluded by a free vote on the capital punishment issue. By a free vote I mean that all Members of the Progressive Conservative Party will be free to vote according to their individual wishes and will not be bound by party discipline.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Of course, the opposition Parties can similarly release their Members if they so choose.

Furthermore, the vote will not be considered a matter of confidence by the Government. If the motion is defeated the Government will not consider it a vote of non-confidence.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made a commitment to Canadians that a free vote would be held on capital punishment during this Parliament. The Government has examined a number of ways of bringing this question forward. We want an open debate and a truly free vote, and a question formulated in a way to leave all stages of disposition in the hands of Members of the House, outside of the restrictions of the Standing Orders on Private Members' Business.

This issue is a matter of national importance and one that a majority of Canadians want Parliament to consider. It should be debated openly and voted upon in a free manner without impeding the independence of Members of Parliament. We believe the motion introduced today meets those goals.

It is our intention to permit the motion to stand on the Order Paper for a period of time to allow those interested parties in the public to make representations to their Members of Parliament. Indeed, I would expect all Canadians to make their views known through letters, briefs or meetings, or any other form of representation to Members on all sides of the House.

The motion seeks the opinion of the House with respect to the reinstatement of capital punishment. If the motion is defeated, then the matter will end there. If the motion is supported, then the motion will establish a parliamentary committee to prepare and introduce appropriate legislation. While such a practice is permitted under Standing Order 107, it is clearly not a common one. I would remind the House that the McGrath Committee in recommendation 4.12 of its third report stated:

> We recommend wider use of parliamentary committees to review draft legislation, to conduct general inquiries when policy choices have not yet been made, and to bring in draft Bills.

In keeping with that recommendation, the motion has been drafted to ensure that all Members of Parliament have the opportunity to have input into the legislation, should the House choose to support reinstatement. This goes to the heart of our efforts to increase the role of the private Member with respect to public policy issues.

As one who has participated in a previous debate on this important issue, I recognize that it is a most difficult and emotional question. I trust that all Members will accept the importance and seriousness of this issue and approach the matter in a thoughtful and reasonable manner. The Government wishes to have a frank debate, a full debate, and a constructive debate. I trust that all Members will examine the question in that spirit.

The motion as presented is amendable. The Government has presented a motion which we feel will leave the House free to shape its decision. The motion now belongs to the House and its Members. The issue is theirs to decide.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, capital punishment is indeed an important and serious issue. We in this House and in the country have been expecting the Government to act on its commitment to introduce a debate on which there will be a free vote with respect to this subject. There is great interest in it. There is also passion.

There are those who feel strongly that the sanctity of life prevents the use of capital punishment by any Government. There are others whose concern with crime and social order lead them as passionately to believe that capital punishment should be reinstated. I call upon both these groups on both sides of the issue to recognize the extent to which they are being manipulated and abused by this callous and hypocritical Government which introduces this motion at this time.

Mr. Gauthier: For two-and-a-half years you did nothing!

Mr. Kaplan: To take an issue as important and serious as this and introduce a motion at this time marks a new low in the performance of the Government. I hope that Canadians will not forget that.

The Government has indicated that the vote is to be a free vote. Yet the motion put forward in the name of a Minister of the Crown supports the principle of capital punishment. I know that in places in the country where the Government can advance its interests by putting this issue forward as a motion of the Government, that is what it is; it is a motion of the Government which supports the reinstatement of capital punishment.

Like the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), I participated in a number of debates on capital punishment. They are not cool, rational or dispassionate discussions. I object strongly, as do members of my Party, to the establishment of a committee which will travel and hear public opinion, which every Member of this House believes has already been heard. Members have made up their minds on this question. The establishment of a committee with a mandate to travel only indicates the attempt of the Government to divert attention from an issue about which opinion is largely settled. No good purpose will be served by the creation of such a committee, other than to create passion, emotion and pressure on all Members of Parliament to vote in one way or another. In any event, this will only distract attention from the most incompetent and perhaps immoral Government in the history of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kaplan: The Government has hit a new rock bottom with the timing of its motion and the method by which it proposes to proceed.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, it is certainly interesting to see the Government promoting the possibility of greater importance for private Members. It is astonishing to see that the Government does not want to take any leadership. It does not even have an opinion on this most crucial question of life and death which is involved in the issue of capital punishment.

One wonders why capital punishment should be treated as a moral issue, as if there were not other moral issues that we have been addressing, such as poverty and environmental pollution. These are also moral issues. I do not see why this moral issue should be treated in a different fashion from other deeply moral issues that we consider from time to time in the House.

The Government is keeping a promise it made in the election campaign. I remind the Government that it also made promises to the arts community with respect to funding, and to students with respect to education, not to mention the sacred trust regarding social programs. The Government promised scientists funding for basic scientific research. These were some of the promises it made.

Yet what is the Government's priority? The Government wants to keep its promise in an area which it knows is highly charged and at a time when its own credibility is sorely at risk. The Government does not look good on account of influence peddling, corruption charges and investigations. But it certainly looks good when murder and capital punishment are being discussed. This is a cheap way for the Government to make itself look good when its own reputation is very much at stake.

• (1220)

The questions as put in the government order are loaded questions. They do not deal with the real issues. If we must have a debate on this subject, I would prefer that the real questions at stake be those before us, namely, the morality of the state in taking life, the effectiveness of capital punishment as a deterrent, the effects in other countries after the elimination of capital punishment, the number of mistakes made in the execution of innocent persons wrongfully convicted of murder and the establishment of the impact upon society generally if capital punishment is reinstated.

I would prefer to see this subject put in a more positive way, if the Government feels it has to keep this promise, of all its promises. Canada has abolished capital punishment, with other enlightened countries. Why not put the question in a positive way, that we will continue this enlightened policy of abolition of capital punishment, and let those who wish to return to the dark ages vote against enlightenment.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I understand that in reply to a statement there can be the recognition of more than one speaker from each Party. I wish to participate in this series of interventions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that there is not unanimous consent.

Ms. Mitchell: That's free speech, that is what you are advocating!

INTERPARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION

PRESENTATION OF THIRTEENTH REPORT OF CANADIAN NATO PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 101, I have the honour to present to the House the thirteenth report in both official languages of the Canadian NATO Parliamentary Association.

The report pertains to the participation of the Hon. Member for Northumberland—Miramichi (Mr. Jardine) in meetings of the North Atlantic Assembly's Sub-committee on Defence Cooperation of the Political Affairs Committee.

PETITIONS

RIDEAU HALL—PUBLIC'S ACCESS TO GROUNDS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have approximately six petitions from constituents and visitors to the national capital who wish to present a grievance.

[Translation]

With respect to what is known as the Rideau Hall grounds, these people say that the decision to close Rideau Hall grounds was made by the National Capital Commission, the Department of Public Works, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and the office of the Governor General without prior notice; that the closure of this attractive and tranquil park affects thousands of visitors to the capital from across the country who held Canada's uniquely accessible Rideau Hall as a symbol of the trust, openness and democracy of which Canadians are so justly proud; and that area residents from the entire national capital region who have used and enjoyed the grounds of Rideau Hall, recognizing the security concerns that prompted the closure decision, cannot accept a blanket closure of the 120-acre park to public access.

Wherefore the undersigned petitioners humbly call upon Parliament to open the decision for consultation with citizens' representatives of the large and growing opposition in order that a modus vivendi be created that would satisfy the Government and the public.

[English]

CANADA POST—OPPOSITION TO REMOVAL OF LETTER BOXES

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition, which has been duly approved by the Clerk of Petitions, from a number of residents of North Vancouver, Burnaby, and other areas of British Columbia. The petitioners are concerned about the cost-cutting measures of removing letter drop boxes that people use to mail their letters. This began in Toronto, but it is now being implemented in other cities. The petitioners of Vancouver are protesting against this measure. They point out that it causes a great inconvenience, particularly to the elderly and to young children. Therefore, the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that Canada Post replaces the mailboxes that have been removed, and that it consult with the residents of the affected communities before it removes these boxes, and other services in future.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): I have a further petition from many residents of Vancouver, and other areas nearby. The petitioners object to the Government's proposal to change the Patent Act regarding prescription drugs. The petitioners believe this will raise the prices of prescription drugs, and it will bear particularly hard on people of low or fixed income. They believe it is a mistaken example of Canadian concessions to the United States in the free trade negotiations. Therefore, they call upon Parliament to reject these proposals on the ground that they will increase drug prices for Canadians with no compensating benefit.

LOW-LEVEL FLIGHTS AT ARMED FORCES BASE AT GOOSE BAY

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Finally, I have a petition from residents of Vancouver, and areas nearby regarding the low-level flight training of pilots of NATO countries at the Canadian Forces Base in Goose Bay, Labrador. The petitioners say that it disrupts the way of life of the people, it is not the most satisfactory available form of industry for earning a living and it is a provocative and aggressive war-fighting action that tends to endanger world peace. Therefore, the petitioners call upon Parliament to ensure that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will end all the low-level flight training at the Goose Bay Canadian Forces Base, and cease negotiating with NATO for the establishment of a larger base.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions to present. The first petition is signed by a number of people from my home constituency of Prince Albert. It calls upon the Government to ensure that it knows what it is doing as far as the increase in prescription drug prices is concerned. The petitioners call upon the Government to reject the proposals which would increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

LOW-LEVEL FLIGHTS AT ARMED FORCES BASE AT GOOSE BAY

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): The second petition is a plea from people of Canada to pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) end all low-level flight training at the Goose Bay Canadian Forces Base, and cease negotiations with NATO for the establishment of a larger base. The petitioners do not recognize the low-level flight training as a defensive measure in Canada, and recognize it as endangering world peace.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have petitions from residents of Canada pointing out that the low-level flight training of pilots of NATO countries at the Canadian Forces Base at Goose Bay, Labrador disrupts the way of life of many of the native people living there. Hunting, fishing, tourism and mining can provide more stable, healthy, and peaceful employment than can the Goose Bay Canadian Forces Base. The petitioners therefore call upon Parliament to ensure that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) end all low-level flight training at Goose Bay, and cease negotiations with NATO for the establishment of a larger base.

STRIKING

CONCURRENCE IN TWELFTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, if the House gives its consent, I would move that the twelfth report of the Striking Committee, presented earlier this day, be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Does the Hon. Member have unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties, and I think Your Honour would find unanimous consent to pass the following motion:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Does the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have the unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Teleglobe Canada

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

TELEGLOBE CANADA REORGANIZATION AND DIVESTITURE ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization) and Minister responsible for the Status of Women) moved that Bill C-38, an Act respecting the reorganization and divestiture of Teleglobe Canada, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

She said: Mr. Speaker I welcome this opportunity to introduce the legislation respecting the reorganization and divestiture of Teleglobe Canada, the international telecommunications carrier, authorizing the Government to sell the Crown corporation to Memotec Data Inc. in Montreal.

The transaction is particularly exciting because the dynamic entrepreneurship of Memotec is thus allied with Teleglobe's experience, technology and market access. The resulting combination will certainly attract the attention of the Canadian business world in the years to come.

[English]

The privatization of Teleglobe is an important milestone for the Government's privatization process which is itself an integral part of our plans to ensure more prudent management of the whole public sector, including both government Departments and Crown corporations.

Better government management has been a central element of our agenda for economic renewal, an agenda described in the November 1984 document, A New Direction for Canada. The agenda is pragmatic, coherent, and responsible. It is working and it is working well, to the benefit of Canadians.

Our policy recognizes that Crown corporations have played a central role in Canada's economic life. In the main they have served Canadians well, but few Canadians understand just how extensive our network of Crown corporations has become. In 1984 we inherited a vast collection of corporate holdings. Together they employed over 200,000 people, almost as many as in the federal Public Service.

Our policy is to manage better all Crown corporations, to wind down those entities which are no longer required, and to privatize on a case by case basis those Crown corporations where the public interest can be better served through private ownership with public regulation as and when required. This policy is consistent with Canada's traditionally pragmatic approach to public ownership.

We are all prepared to use public ownership when we see it as the best way to serve the public interest. We should all be equally willing to move away from public ownership when that too is in the public interest.

Therefore the Government's approach is sensitive and pragmatic. It is evident that many of the leading spokespersons on the other side of the House are still wrapped up in the ideology of the 1950s and 1960s and are not aware of how far we have progressed since then.

Essentially the legislation places Teleglobe Canada on the same basis as CP Rail, Bell Canada, CTV, CHUM, or any other of our privately owned, publicly regulated companies.

Some have said that Teleglobe is profitable, a crown jewel, and because it is profitable we should not divest the company to the private sector. Our answer to this plea for the status quo is a simple one. As the late David Lewis once reminded doctrinaire socialists, "you don't have to own an industry in order to have some control over it". Crown ownership is not necessary for Teleglobe to serve the public interest.

In many ways Crown ownership is inhibiting to corporations. For example, Teleglobe is a well managed and profitable company, but it is extremely restricted in what it can do. It cannot be entrepreneurial. It cannot move into new ventures built around its own technological sophistication and its link to international markets. This synergy is precisely on what Memotec proposes to build to develop new products, expanded markets, new exports, and ultimately more jobs for Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Bill before the House is only a means to an end. That end is a privatized, dynamic and growing Teleglobe. The means are perhaps less exciting but just as important. The Bill describes the structure of the transaction, clarifies policies, identifies employee benefits and authorizes the sale.

[English]

Clauses 1 through 3 of the Bill are simply definitions. Part II, Clauses 4 through 6, is more substantive. These clauses provide for the creation of a new company organized under the Canada Business Corporations Act. The new Teleglobe will take over the assets of Teleglobe in exchange for securities. The securities, including shares representing 100 per cent of the new Teleglobe, will be sold to Memotec. The only major asset not to be transferred to the new Teleglobe will be the cash on hand in Teleglobe at the time of the sale. This is expected to be approximately $102 million.

We also believe it is sound public policy to ensure that Teleglobe remains Canadian owned and Canadian controlled. Accordingly, foreign ownership will be limited in Part II of the legislation. Non-resident ownership of Teleglobe will be restricted to 20 per cent. Non-resident telecommunications carriers will be totally excluded from Teleglobe's ownership now and in the future. Subsidiaries and affiliates of such non-resident telecommunications carriers will be similarly excluded with specified exceptions.

In addition, limitations are established on the extent to which domestic telecommunications carriers can own shares in the new company. This is designed to prevent the carriers from acquiring effective control of the new company.

[Translation]

The third section of the Bill, clauses 7 to 12, provides that the new corporation has an obligation to provide public telecommunications services such as co-ordinating telecommunications services between Canada and places outside Canada with the telecommunications services of other countries, making use of developments in cable and radio transmission or reception for public telecommunications services between Canada and places outside Canada, and conducting research and development for the purpose of improving telecommunications services.

Teleglobe will be designated to represent Canada in international agreements such as Intelsat, Inmarsat and the Commonwealth Telecommunications Organization, and under Section 15 of Part IV it will also be subject to Government policy directives for a narrow range of national security, foreign relations and international communications policy considerations. But perhaps more important than what the company must do is what it may do. It will not be restricted as to its mandate. It will in the future be free to pursue new business opportunities. This section also designates that the headquarters of the new company shall be located in Montreal.

Part IV of this Bill deals with Teleglobe's regulatory framework by empowering the CRTC to regulate its telecommunications business. By bringing the company under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission, we will ensure that rates and other conditions will be both fair and reasonable into the future for both users and Teleglobe itself. Consumers will benefit from average reductions on overseas telephone charges exceeding 13 per cent in 1988. That will be good news for those many, many Canadians with relatives overseas. More important, the consumer interest will be protected into the future by the CRTC, a protection not present now under Crown ownership.

Later sections of the Bill, namely sections 28, 29 and 30, provide for a transitional regulatory regime to be established immediately. It is under this regime that the Government will require Teleglobe to reduce its rates, and will establish the rules by which rates will be regulated until the end of 1991. The Government will also ensure that Teleglobe remains as Canada's "single-interface" for overseas telecommunications for at least five years. This does not, of itself, provide complete protection for Teleglobe. Some critics have suggested that the telephone companies might attempt to route overseas traffic by way of the U.S. to bypass Teleglobe. However, even if they were to do this, those under federal regulation would require CRTC approval of their actions. It is the policy of our Government that, to the greatest extent feasible, overseas telecommunications shall be provided over Canadian-owned and Canadian controlled facilities. I should say, in fairness as well, that the telephone companies have said publicly that it is not their intention to bypass Teleglobe.

Part V, Sections 19 through 22, provides for the sale of Teleglobe. Let me clarify once again the financial implications of this. As Hon. Members know, the gross proceeds of the proposed sale to be received by the Government are $608.3 million, composed of $488.3 million from Memotec, an estimated $102 million in accumulated cash in Teleglobe at the time of the sale, and a special dividend of $18 million in December, 1987. Direct costs are estimated at $7 million, and a contingency reserve of $10 million has been created.

On the accounts of the Government of Canada, the only entry with respect to Teleglobe is a loan for approximately $2 million. Therefore, the impact on the deficit, on the consolidated revenue account, will, in total, be $608.3 million, minus the costs, the contingency reserve and the loan, for a final total of $589.3 million.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. McDougall: Let me also take this opportunity to clarify some further misconceptions that have arisen with respect to this sale. The securities to be sold to Memotec will, at the date of closing, be on the books of Teleglobe—and I do hope the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) is writing down these numbers—at a value of approximately $378 million. Therefore, the sale price represents a premium of $110 million. That is not, by anybody's measure—even the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway—a fire-sale.

Mr. Waddell: It is being sold for $350 million.

Mrs. McDougall: But the Opposition is correct in one respect. We could have structured this transaction to get a higher sale price, but only if we had been prepared to sacrifice the interests of Canadians by allowing higher overseas telephone rates, or allowing the new buyer to charge monopoly rates, or if we had been prepared to allow foreign bidders who might have bid higher. The Opposition may want Canadian consumers to pay higher phone rates to support monopoly profits, they may want foreign ownership, but this Government does not, Mr. Speaker.

The final substantive part of this Bill is Part VII, Sections 24 through 33. I have already described the interim regulatory regime. Much of the rest of this part is concerned with the provisions we are making for employees.

[Translation]

In legal terms, these clauses provide that all collective agreements will remain in force and they also provide for the transfer of pension plans.

A number of benefits and numerous guarantees are included in the sale of Teleglobe to Memotec, more specifically:

continuity of bargaining agreements;

creation of a new pension plan for present Teleglobe employees that is comparable in every detail to the plan now in force in the Federal Public Service;

within six months, the opportunity for Teleglobe employees to purchase five per cent of Teleglobe's shares at 90 per cent of the price paid by Memotec, through interest-free loans repayable over five years;

a long-term share purchase plan at a later date;

eligibility of the employee share ownership program for the purposes of the Quebec Stock Savings Plan, if possible; and maintaining the corporation's headquarters in Montreal, as I mentioned earlier.

[English]

This is yet another item to add to the mounting pile of evidence that all points to the fact that privatization is a good deal for employees as well as for everybody else. Take, for example, the sale of de Havilland to Boeing. We all remember the cries of anguish from the Opposition benches during the sale of de Havilland to Boeing and the Opposition's predictions of doom and gloom and the sky falling in. But we hear nothing now from these particular "Chicken Littles" because the sale has been good for de Havilland. It has been good for the Canadian aircraft industry. It has been good for Canadian workers. The sale has been held as a natural partnership by industry experts around the world.

Mr. Waddell: Maybe we should have sold this to a foreign company. Be consistent.

Mrs. McDougall: Consistency is the hobgoblin of little minds, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. McDougall: Some may ask why the Government did not choose a broad public share issue as a vehicle for Teleglobe's privatization. It is a valid question that certainly deserves an answer. The answer is that we are pursuing privatization on a case by case basis. An in this case, it was our judgment that a strong and dynamic major shareholder will help guide the company during its transition from public ownership to private ownership with regulation. We believe that Memotec will ensure an exciting future for this company. The public interest will be better served by having Memotec establish how it will operate Teleglobe and then go with a public share issue which is already part of its permanent refinancing plan. While a strong majority shareholder is desirable in the case of Teleglobe, public share issues directly by the Government may well be more appropriate for other privatization candidates.

• (1250)

Of course, we fully expect opposition Parties to say otherwise about the benefits of privatization, to take all positions and, like Stephen Leacock's famous horsemen, to ride madly off in all directions. For example, Liberal Members will conveniently ignore the fact that when they were in Government they presented legislation to privatize Teleglobe. I invite Canadians to compare their current rhetoric with their position while in office as enunciated by the former Minister of National Revenue when he introduced Bill C-25, the Bill respecting the Canada Development Investment Corporation, the holding company for many Crown corporations, on May 28, 1984. At that time, the Liberal Government adopted the following position:

> A second function of CDIC is to privatize... In its divestment activities, CDIC is to ensure that sales are made according to commercial standards, so that the public realizes a fair return from assets which are sold. CDIC has made initial assessments of the prospects for commercial sale of certain of the assets including consideration of market conditions and timing factors.

Despite these intentions, it was not until this Government came to power that any action was taken. Let Canadians judge the current credibility of the Official Opposition in light of its own statements.

Of course, there is always the NDP. According to the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway, the NDP is, "Not necessarily against privatization. The NDP are not saying that in every case we should not privatize; we are saying you have to have sound economic reasons for it". Of course, in this case, we have sound economic reasons.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in the light of these official positions, this Bill should rally the unanimous support of all Parties.

[English]

A privately owned, publicly regulated Teleglobe will be able to meet public policy objectives even better than a Crown corporation. Not only will we continue to enjoy first-class overseas telecommunications, but this sale will bring additional benefits to Canada through greater consumer protection, broader business opportunities for Teleglobe and the freeing up of scarce public resources to do the things that Canadians want this Government to do. I look forward to the support of the entire House in proceeding with this legislation.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I was listening with great interest to what the Minister said. I just want to make sure that I address some of those issues.

It is a pleasure for me to speak to Bill C-38, an Act respecting the reorganization and divestiture of Teleglobe Canada.

[Translation]

Nonetheless I find it regrettable that the Minister, giving her views in the speech she has just made before us in the House, would imply that the sale of Teleglobe was in our best interest and because a Crown corporation cannot operate in a certain financial circle from which society can profit. The proof is that it is a corporation which has always been profitable—

Mr. Lanthier: Not enough.

Mrs. Finestone: I regret that the Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier) does not believe it was profitable, because figures indicate that it is a very profitable corporation, well managed, managed by Canadians here in Montreal. And I think we do have some pride at home.

The reason why I am disappointed , and I even think that the remarks of the Minister are somewhat shameful, is that the sale was made for ideological principles, not on the basis of the sound operation of a corporation, because if it were in the interest of all Canadian men and women the Government would have kept this magnificient small corporation in the public sector as a source of funds paid every year into the public treasury. It did not cost us a cent, Madam, and it is very important to understand that. Indeed, it was built with the money of Canadians, for Canadians, and in the interest of all Canadians.

An Hon. Member: That again.

Mrs. Finestone: No! No! It is somewhat different. I hope, because if she accused us, as Liberals, of having projects in May 1984 to privatize certain Government instruments, it is true, but we are not—

[English]

—frozen in the philosophy of Conservative thought that wants to sell at any price. One should sell when it is indicated that something is well worth selling.

Some Hon. Members: It is.

Mrs. Finestone: Yes, you need good economic reasons and you didn't have any. Teleglobe is a very good Crown corporation that produces well and is well administered. That is what we need. We need annual profits going into the general revenue fund of Canada from this corporation.

Teleglobe was established as the Canadian Overseas Telecommunications Corporation, the COTC, in 1950, with a legislative mandate to provide overseas telecommunications services for Canada and to participate on Canada's behalf in various international communication organizations such as the CTO, Intelsat, Inmarsat and ITU. The facilities the corporation took over were those of the Canadian international operations of Canadian Marconi Limited and Cable and Wireless Limited.

Two purposes were alluded to in the parliamentary debates on the Act which established the COTC. The first was that Canada had made a commitment during the 1945 Commonwealth Telecommunications Conference to public ownership of the providers of overseas telecommunications services. Second, it was felt that national security related overseas telecommunications facilities would be promoted by public ownership. Here, rather than promoting through public ownership, we have sold the furniture to pay for the rent.

Since 1950, international telecommunications demands have expanded enormously because of the economic growth and rapid technological developments which have resulted in higher quality and lower priced services. Teleglobe has also grown rapidly and profitably. Nevertheless, the corporation, with over $200 million in annual revenues, remains a relatively small player in the Canadian telecommunications scene, accounting for only approximately 3 per cent of the Canadian market.

Financially the corporation gives an impression of strength and security. It has assets of $574 million and profits of over $40 million per year. The corporation has benefited from the policies of the Government which, until recently, required minimal dividends although corporate income taxes have been paid. The result has been that retained earnings have been rather large in proportion to the fixed capital stock of the company as compared to other telecommunications companies.

I would like to give an over-view of the attempts to sell Teleglobe. To date, the Government has engaged in a series of unco-ordinated initiatives and conflicting statements in its attempt to sell off Teleglobe Canada. The Government's actions with respect to this privatization can be summed up in one word, bungled. Permit me to review the Government's actions to date.

The former Industrial Expansion Minister was an early proponent of privatization. Remember his list of fire sales, Nordair, Northern Transportation Company Limited, Canada Development Corporation, de Havilland Aircraft of Canada Limited, Pecheries Canada Incorporated, CN route, Canadian Arsenals Limited, Canadair Limited and Nanisivik Mines Limited. The total Crown assets sold amounted to $883 million.

• (1300)

As I said before, we sold most of those corporations and many of them could have been profitable right where they were. While I am pleased some of them were sold, to say the least, we have to judge them case by case. I was pleased to hear the Minister say that, and that she might plan to do it that way in the future. It is too bad she did not use that yardstick in this particular instance.

Teleglobe Canada was the apple of the eye of the former Minister responsible for industrial expansion. It was a Crown corporation about which very few Canadians knew anything. It is said that in the fall of 1984 the Minister invited the former Minister of Communications and a senior official in his office to dinner. Somewhere, so the story goes, between the fish and the meat the Teleglobe sale was proposed. Immediately the official protested. There was no policy framework in which the sale could take place, he said. Without a national telecommunications policy debate, which was being planned, he said the whole bidding process was bound to get fouled up. Maybe he was thinking back to a report commissioned by the Conservatives when in opposition, although never released, which advised that Teleglobe should only be sold after a White Paper on telecommunications policy had been debated. The official must have had a crystal ball because he was certainly right. We have no national telecommunications policy and we are still in the process of meeting with our provincial counterparts to build one; co-operative federalism and national reconciliation.

Let us take a few moments to review what has happened in the two and a half years since that meeting. On August 1, 1985, then Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion announced that the Government was proceeding immediately with the privatization of Teleglobe. He stated that the bidding procedure put in place on that date was designed to provide all serious potential purchasers a fair opportunity to acquire Teleglobe. By letter dated September 9, 1985 Dominion Securities Pitfield, the Government's financial advisor, wrote that all bidders would be advised by October 30, 1985 whether their respective offers were acceptable and that an agreement of purchase would be signed by December 15, 1985.

In a subsequent letter dated September 11, 1985 the date for advising bidders of the acceptability of their offers was changed and they were told an agreement of purchase for Teleglobe would be signed by January 15, 1986. That was great financial management and certainly gave the businessmen a sense of confidence.

If that was not enough confusion for prospective purchasers, Dominion Securities issued a further letter dated November 12, 1985 stating, "The timetable for the sale of Teleglobe has been delayed by the temporary unavailability of the Minister responsible." As a result, they were compelled to advise that the date for the sale was being pushed back once again.

All through the spring of 1986 rumours persisted that the Government would be announcing the successful bidder for Teleglobe, but no such announcement was ever made. Then in November, 1986, almost one full year after the deal was supposed to close, what does the Government announce? It said the bidding process for Teleglobe will start all over again with new rules. Is that what the former Minister meant when he said the Government would proceed immediately with the sale of Teleglobe? Was that government policy and was it changed en route? Is that what the Minister meant when he said the bidding procedure would be fair to all parties? I suggest the Government not only changed the rules in the middle of the game but also changed the game itself.

How can we expect taxpayers to have confidence in the Government given the behaviour it has demonstrated in its management? It is no wonder that newspaper headlines in The Globe and Mail read, "Teleglobe Canada sale is act first, think later", or that The Financial Post labelled its headline, "Bidding chaos for Crowns", or most recently an Ottawa Citizen story was headed, "A privatization shambles".

The Minister alluded to the fact that the sale of Teleglobe would free up funds for other government activities. I find that rather strange in light of the fact that Teleglobe paid money to the Government every year and it certainly was not costing the Government any loss of revenue. What was the price to be paid for Teleglobe? The Government points out that the sale will result in a one-time reduction of the federal deficit. What the Government fails to indicate is that in 1985 Teleglobe wrote a cheque to the Government of Canada in the amount of $108.1 million. I call that a rather sizeable sum. I would not mind a cheque like that to help us move forward. Then what happened? In 1986 the company issued another cheque for $80 million. Can you tell me how that is costing the Government money? That is a very nice return to the people of Canada for the faith they had in investing in a well organized and well run public corporation. Teleglobe has been a profit generator for the Government in the past and there is every indication that that pattern would have continued in the absence of privatization.

I do not think privatization at any cost or keeping a company in the public sector at any cost is the right philosophy. We need a middle of the road, well balanced point of view which is not ideologically frozen to the left or right. That is why the Liberals were good Government and why we saw this country grow and prosper.

Mr. Beatty: That is why you were thrown out.

Mrs. Finestone: Certainly there has been enormous expansion in the telecommunications field over the history of our Government. I wish I could say the same for the present Government. Had we wanted Teleglobe to develop its research and development, manufacturing and marketing, it could easily have been done through enlargement of its mandate.

You have indicated the House will now recess for lunch, Mr. Speaker. I will return and further address my ongoing concerns over the privatization of Teleglobe. Let me just say that, despite the ideological bent of the Government and its decision to sell Teleglobe, I am pleased to see that Memotec Data of Montreal was the winner. It is a Cinderella story and I am pleased they were able to prevail. I compliment the Minister and CDIC on their choice. I will finish my remarks after lunch.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will look forward to that. The Hon. Member will have 23 minutes left when we come back at 2 o'clock.

At 1.10 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. When the House rose at 1.10 p.m., the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) had the floor.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, when the House rose for lunch, I believe I was reviewing the chronology of this divestiture. On November 19, 1986, the Minister of State for Privatization (Mrs. McDougall) and the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) announced that the final bidding stage for Teleglobe Canada would take place. Bidders were asked once again to submit bids by January 9. On December 19, the Minister of State for Privatization tabled in the House draft legislation for the divestiture of Teleglobe. On December 30, the Government rejected a proposal from the telecommunications companies Bell Canada, BC Tel and others, which would have allowed them to purchase 40 per cent of Teleglobe Canada.

On January 9, the last day for the receipt of bids, CDIC had seven bidders for the purchase of Teleglobe. On January 19 a story appeared in The Financial Post about the bidders for Teleglobe. Included in that list of bidders is Memotec Data Incorporated. On January 27, the CDIC board met with the various bidders and, at the conclusion of that meeting, the management of CDIC was instructed to correspond through Dominion Securities with each of the bidders to allow them to reconsider their bids.

On January 30, Mr. David Torrey of Dominion Securities sent a letter regarding the revision of bids with particular reference to by-pass, pursuant to a directive from the board of CDIC. It is interesting to note that not all the bidders changed their bids.

It should be noted that on February 2 there was no significant activity on the Toronto stock-market and some activity on the Montreal stock-market. Tuesday, February 3, was the due date for revised bids for Teleglobe Canada.

On Thursday morning, February 5, the CDIC board conducted a telephone conference call to consider the revised bids. In a memorandum to the Minister dated February 5, the board stated that it had considered all the bids for the sale. Following the conference call, it sent a very detailed letter to the Minister advising her that the bids it considered acceptable were from Caisse dépôt, City Financial Corporation, Gordon Investment Corporation, Intercity Gas Corporation, Memotec Data Corporation, and Power Corp. of Canada. The summary of the bidders' material was attached to the letter. The board also acknowledged that the bid from Canadian Telecom Carriers was determined to be non-compliant with the terms and conditions and their bid was conditional upon modifying three conditions of the government guidelines for the divestiture of Teleglobe Canada. Therefore, that bid was rejected.

Finally, the board suggested to the Minister that of the three highest bids received, Memotec was the first at $488.3 million. The CDIC board unanimously recommended Memotec Data as the proper company to be considered for the divestiture, or privatization, of Teleglobe. There was a halt of trading of Memotec shares on the stock-market.

A very interesting article appeared in The Toronto Star on Feburary 6. It reported the previous day's activity on the Toronto Stock Exchange and questioned why some concern had been manifest on Thursday, February 5.

Late in the afternoon of February 10, the Minister of State for Privatization informed Memotec that it was the successful bidder. All that activity on the stock exchange took place the week before the successful bidder was advised late in the afternoon on February 10.

The Minister announced at a noon hour press conference on February 11 that Memotec was the successful bidder for Teleglobe Canada. Trading in the stocks were halted for a short period of time. Philosophically I did not agree with the sale of Teleglobe, because I think it was a good and substantial company producing well with fine management, good employees and an ability to give money back to the federal coffers. Nevertheless, I did rejoice in learning that this small company had beat out some of the giants. It seemed like a very happy Cinderella story. Therefore, it was quite sad that an unfortunate cloud had now come over the head of the successful bidders.

I asked some questions in the House. At one point the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) decided not to answer my question, but answered a question outside of what I was asking. I particularly wanted to know if the Minister would conduct an immediate investigation into who in the Government, in Crown corporations or on the ministerial or departmental staff knew the name of the successful bidder and when did they know that? The Minister was as concerned, I think, as I was about this particular matter. However, what she was not able to explain was that when she knew the successful bidders, and when she knew there was some unusual activity in the stock market, why she did not stop the announcement of the sale of Teleglobe until that matter had been cleared up. I am sorry that did not take place. It would have been much better had that been done, and she could have then put her own investigation into place and this would never have become the kind of public issue which puts a cloud over this exciting moment in terms of the history of this company.

• (1410)

I was not happy that we have another blunder in the ongoing saga of the selling off of our Crown corporations. You must remember, Mr. Speaker, that the Canadian Development Investment Corporation is an agent of the Government and is part of the procedures which have to be taken into consideration as well, and it did send the very important letter to the Minister on February 5.

The Minister talked about the price to be paid for Teleglobe. I think I said to the Minister that because we had such a profitable company, the question of the dollars was not significant. It is a one-shot deal to wipe out a part of the deficit which the Government is well intended towards reducing. However, is that the best way to reduce it? If the Government intends to sell off its Crown jewels to reduce the deficit it will soon run out of assets. I think that is very serious. Frankly, what we are looking at seems to me to be sales which will yield short-term gain at the cost of long-term pain to our federal Treasury. Therefore, I am not particularly pleased about that and I think we are going to have to look into it a little further.

With respect to the tariffs to which the Minister alluded and the fact that she has directed, through the memorandum of sale, that there be a reduction of 13.5 per cent, it had been suggested that Teleglobe's tariff was too high, and that was the prime reason for the privatization. In a brief presented to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) in August, 1986, by the Teleglobe Technical Supervisors Association, Local 1653, and the Canadian Overseas Telecommunications Union, quite the contrary was revealed. The brief stated:

> Our tariffs are a matter of bilateral international agreements and we must often acquiesce to the traffic structure of the overseas partners, the foreign administrations, even though Teleglobe is capable of operating profitably with lower rates.
> In the case of telephone traffic, Telecom Canada receives an average of 50 cents on a dollar per conversation-minute. However, this and other problems can easily be resolved by making Teleglobe subject to CRTC regulations. Privatization is certainly not necessary to accomplish these ends.

With respect to those rates, on November 19, 1986, when the Minister of State for Privatization and the Minister of Communications announced that the Government would be proceeding with the final bidding stage in the privatization of Teleglobe Canada, it was suggested to Canadian consumers that, as a result, rates would be reduced. The Minister of State for Privatization said:

> Canadian consumers and business users will benefit through reductions in overseas phone rates of at least 13 per cent on January 1, 1988, with further rate reductions likely in subsequent years. Telex charges would also fall by 10 per cent on the same date.

But this was a planned reduction. It was going to happen anyway. We did not need the privatization and divestiture for this rate reduction which will enable all Canadians to make long distance phone calls to their aunts, uncles, or friends at reduced rates. Canadians love to phone across the world because we are such an interesting mutlicultural society and come from so many areas of the world. This reduction could and would have been in place and did not require selling off this asset in order to accomplish that goal.

The Standing Committee on Communications and Culture was told when Mr. Jean-Claude Delorme, the President of Teleglobe Canada appeared before us that:

> The corporation was giving consideration to a plan that consisted of a number of phases. We were considering collection rate decreases of the order of 10 per cent in 1988.

When asked whether there were further projected declines for 1988 into 1989 and 1990, the President indicated yes, but would not elaborate on what those planned reductions were. Therefore, the question of rates would have been resolved in any case.

Let us look at the monopoly status. In Bill C-38, as well as when the Minister of Communications and the Minister for Privatization announced the final round of bidding at that marvelous press conference, we were told that Teleglobe would have a monopoly staus for five years. After that date there would be no assurances that Teleglobe would continue to have such status. I must say, I am concerned about that.

When Mr. Delorme appeared before the Committee on Communications and Culture he said:

> If Teleglobe is not a monopoly under the present circumstances, its viability is in serious jeopardy. By that I mean we receive our traffic and therefore our revenues from two pipelines: The Telecom Canada Pipeline, which is basically the telephone pipeline, and the CN-CP pipeline, which is telex and telegraph. We do not have access to the subscribers.

Therefore, if it were to become permissible tomorrow for anyone to operate a network similar to or in competition with that of Teleglobe, then I believe the existing carriers would probably be the first candidates. And obviously, and naturally, they would seek to route their traffic via their network rather than ours. That is the reason why I say that without the protection of what we have called, in our jargon, "the single interface policy", Teleglobe's viability is in real jeopardy.

This is not me, Mr. Speaker, and it is not the Opposition who are telling the Government. This is the President of Teleglobe Canada giving a report to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture, and he has serious questions. If the Government is such a good consulting mechanism, why does it not listen to the President who has had years of experience in developing a profitable company which brings very fine revenue into the coffers of this country, and recognize that without a regulated monopoly the potential for the development of this company may be seriously in jeopardy? I will examine this issue with the Minister very carefully when the Bill gets into committee. I believe this to be one of the two major flaws in the Bill, and I really regret that decision.

With respect to by-pass, because that also relates to the fact that this may not be a regulated monopoly five years down the road, if we look at November 19 of last year, when the Minister of State for Privatization reopened the bidding process for Teleglobe Canada, I indicated at that time that there did not seem to be any method by which we could prevent carriers from by-passing the Teleglobe system and by transmitting information to our neighbour to the south, the United States, and then using the American systems, which are considerably cheaper for transoceanic communication. There is the theory of the magnitude and economies of scale which come into play in terms of the American scene. The population of Canada is one-tenth the population of the United States. I think we do well, given that consideration.

• (1420)

The Government has taken some steps to demonstrate that carriers will not be able to by-pass the system. Under the Radio Act, the Telegraphs Act and the Railway Act the Government, we are told, will exercise its existing powers to ensure that Teleglobe remains the sole Canadian operator of facilities to provide Canada—overseas telecommunications services for a period of at least five years.

As well, under Section 64(1) of the National Transportation Act the Governor in Council is given statutory authority to vary or rescind any order or decision of the CRTC. I hope that will be enough. However, we can re-verify that when the Bill is considered in committee.

The participation of the carriers leads me to another concern, that is, the lack of participation of the telecommunications carriers in the ownership of Teleglobe. We have been told that the Memotec bid makes no provision for the domestic carriers to own a portion of Teleglobe. I find that particularly distressing as these same carriers supply 70 per cent of Teleglobe's traffic. The November 19 guidelines for bidding provided that no more than 40 per cent of Teleglobe could be owned by telecommunications carriers. On December 29, 1986 CDIC received a bid for 40 per cent of Teleglobe from Canadian Telecom Carriers International Incorporated. It was determined to be non-compliant because it was conditional on modifying three conditions of the government guidelines for the divestiture of Teleglobe.

Having been rebuffed in their initial efforts, the telephone companies joined the bidding group that included the Caisse, other pension funds and Spar Aerospace Limited of Toronto. That bid also failed. I sincerely hope that some way will be found by the new owner, Memotec, to integrate part of the telecommunications carriers into the new Teleglobe.

My last point deals with the workers. It must be remembered that since 1979, when privatization was first advocated by the short-lived Conservative Government, all employees have been living in an atmosphere of fear and uncertainty. They operate under the continual stress of adapting to the volatile technological change that is always present in the telecommunications industries. But being asked to assume this additional stress over the last seven years can easily be perceived as indicative of the insensitivity of the present Government toward the employees of Teleglobe. I have been told that many employees have opted for early retirement, more out of fear and uncertainty than from personal desire.

Over the past year I have been in constant contact and have had the opportunity to meet and come to know many of the employees of Teleglobe whom I found to be highly organized, articulate, informed and sensitive to the important issues surrounding the privatization of a company in which many have invested their whole lifetime. I strongly believe that if it had not been for their strong voice, their futures might be less secure than they are today.

Clause 15 of Bill C-38 gives the Governor in Council, on its own or at the request of the CRTC, the power to give policy direction concerning any matters within the jurisdiction of the CRTC, and the CRTC shall give effect to the policy directives which are issued by Order in Council. I hope that these issues will be addressed in what will be an amicable way around the table as we sit down to discuss them in the legislative committee. I am looking forward to the study of Bill C-38 at which time we will examine it more closely, with particular reference to the conditions of sale and the valuation studies for the deal.

I take this opportunity to congratulate the Minister of State for Privatization for her handling of the sale. I sincerely hope it will go well. It certainly has been the best of the procedures to date in terms of the divestiture of our assets.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise as the NDP's privatization critic, the only male critic in this area. I mention that because the tone of the debate thus far has been so good and so positive. I hope I will not spoil it.

Since we have become so complicated in our analysis of this Bill I would like to state what the Bill is all about. We are dealing with Bill C-38 which deals with the privatization—the selling by the Government—of a Crown corporation called Teleglobe Canada. Teleglobe has the responsibility for all overseas telecommunications entering and leaving Canada. So if one phones one's grandmother in Scotland or one's grandmother in Italy the calls must go through Teleglobe. These communications include telephone, telegraph, cable and telex communications. Teleglobe is a joint owner of submarine ocean cables and telecommunications satellite systems. Thus Teleglobe has an effective monopoly in Canada on all overseas telecommunications. In what a great Canadian, Marshall McLuhan, called the global village, overseas telecommunications are really very important. That is to say, the world has shrunk and we all live in the same village. That is why this is an important Bill.

I will not mince words. I think that the Government is selling off a crown jewel to a little known private company at a reduced price, a fire sale price. I think that the deal is bad.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada is going to sell a very profitable company to a small little-known company. I did not hear . . . Memotec, a small Montreal company.

[English]

That is not to say that it is a bad company, but it is a small company. It is like a minnow swallowing a whale.

The Minister anticipated my speech by saying that I wanted to maintain the status quo. In this particular case I admit that I am for the status quo. In British Columbia we have an expression which I believe was borrowed from Saskatchewan farmers. There are many retired farmers from Saskatchewan who live in British Columbia. It is 10 degrees or 12 degrees above zero in British Columbia today while it is 40 degrees below zero here with the wind-chill factor. The expression is, when something works, why fix it?

In the Minister's own words at the press conference she held the other day she said that Teleglobe had good management, that it is a well run corporation and making money. Then why sell it? In 1983 Teleglobe had profits of $53.23 million. This is money that went into the coffers of the Government of Canada. In 1984 the profits for the company were $41.17 million, while 1983 was a better year with profits of $54.6 million. This is a company which made $53 million in profits. It has good management, according to the Minister, and it is well run because of its good employees. It also has a good reputation. Why are we selling it?

• (1430)

An Hon. Member: Because we have a deficit.

Mr. Waddell: An Hon. Member states it is because we have a deficit. One way to pay the deficit would be to take the $50 million profits for the next few years and apply it to deficit reduction. The profits could be used in the company. Do not sell the company at a fire sale price for a short term cash amount to temporarily reduce the deficit. In the long run the deficit could be reduced by keeping the company. I again ask why the Government is selling this company. The answer is that it is an ideological decision. The Government is following the trend of the Reagan administration and the Thatcher Government to privatize, sell off Crown corporations, and deregulate.

When the Government in the United States deregulated nursing homes it produced scandals in the treatment of older people. The deregulation of the airlines produced problems with respect to service for consumers. When transportation was deregulated, it was not the ordinary person who benefited, but big business interests and usually friends of people in Government. Everybody knows that this particular Government has a lot of strange friends in the business community. This decision is ideological, it is based on a theory and not on practicality.

The Minister quite rightly said that we in the NDP are not against privatization per se, but there must be a practical reason for selling a Crown corporation. For example, if there was bad management in the Crown corporation, it did not have sufficient money, or there was no public policy reason for keeping the corporation, then maybe it could be sold to the private sector. We are not being ideological about this and blanketly saying that it should not be sold, but there has to be a good reason for selling it.

I wish to give an example of what I mean by public policy. Everybody knows about Petro-Canada, the government oil company. It seems to me that when a company is out there with the big sharks, the international companies, or the oil industry, scrambling around to find energy security and supplies in a world oil crisis—we had two crises in the 1970s and we will have another one in the 1990s—there should be a window on the industry, and a government corporation in place like Petro-Canada. It would be foolish to sell off Petro-Canada and the role that it plays in the exploration of oil. For example, if we need to explore the tarsands the Government could direct that company to develop the tarsands, or Hibernia. It does not have to be done alone, it could be done in co-operation with private Canadian companies. That is a public policy purpose for having a Crown corporation.

The Government spent $886 million to buy the Gulf gas stations for Petro-Canada. I have not heard all of the arguments on this issue, so I am not coming to a firm conclusion. But one might argue that it is not a matter of public policy for the Government to own gas stations, that it may be better for small business people, community people, co-ops, or a small city. For example, in Flin Flon, Manitoba the co-ops took over gas stations. There may be no public policy argument for the Government owning gas stations. It may come as a surprise that someone from the NDP would be saying that, but it has to be looked at in that manner. In my view, there are public policy reasons for keeping Petro-Canada as an element in finding oil, and the oil plays in Canada.

What is the public policy argument for selling this corporation? Before I try to answer that, I wish to say that I think the onus is on the Government to show us why it is selling a company that is well managed, profitable, and which is giving good service. Another way it could be advanced is by saying that from a public policy point of view we believe that it should be in the hands of the private sector. What are some of the most important areas of life in the modern world that Canada must deal with? I would think that energy is important, and we have Petro-Canada. Transportation is important, and we have Air Canada. Communications are vital, and we have Teleglobe. Do we want the control of all of our communications to be given up to the private sector? My answer to that is no. So from a public policy point of view it should be kept in the public sector.

I wish to reiterate what I have stated. I do not think that all companies need to remain in the public sector. There could be room for privatization. The argument has to be made, and the onus is upon the Government. It has to tell us whether it is a practical reason. I do not see it here. Is there a public policy reason? I cannot see it here.

As the Minister has said, we can regulate. We will sell it to the private sector and we will regulate the company by using one of our regulatory agencies, like the National Energy Board, the Canadian Transport Commission, or the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission. In looking at the history of regulation, the problem is that the regulators have not been very strong. They tend to get in bed with the regulated. As a lawyer, I have appeared before every regulatory agency in Canada, and in my view there is not a strong regulatory system. As a matter of fact, the companies that are being regulated are pushing the regulators around, or there are weak regulators. The cable industry is a good example. So it is not good enough to say that we can regulate.

The Minister said that Crown corporations had a central role, and they have served Canada well. I ask again, why sell this corporation? I listened to the Minister's speech very carefully. It was a good speech. This Minister is a good speaker, and a good debater.

Miss Carney: A good Minister.

Mr. Waddell: Well, we will see if she is a good Minister. The proof of the pudding will be in the eating and we will see whether she can do her job successfully. So I will suspend my judgment in that particular matter, for what it is worth.

I followed the Minister's speech very carefully, as I am sure you did, Mr. Speaker. The Minister said that Teleglobe was well managed and profitable, but it was limited. Why is it limited? She did not say why it was limited. If it is limited by law, the law can be changed. If it is limited by a mandate that has been given to it, the mandate can be changed. We should be looking at the mandate given to Crown corporations. They should be given a specific mandate, and then made accountable to Parliament and the Canadian people. But that is a reform of a Crown corporation, not a reason to sell it.

The Minister finally said it was the synergy. I notice that this was the same word that was used at the press conference the other day by Mr. Mackenzie, who is the President of Memotec, the company that is buying Teleglobe. I thought that was the key, so I asked a page to get me a dictionary. Being a traditionalist, I got it from the former Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre, Mr. Knowles, who is at the table today. He sent me The Oxford Illustrated Dictionary, an older dictionary. I looked up the word "synergy" in that dictionary, and it defined synergy, synergetic or synergism as co-ordination in the action of muscles, organs, or drugs. I do not know how drugs could get into the debate, so that could not have been the definition.

• (1440)

Then I thought, given that the Minister is a trendy person from Toronto, that it was one of these new Toronto yuppie words and that I had better get a modern dictionary. Therefore I got the Webster's Thesaurus—

Mr. Dick: Are you filibustering?

Mr. Waddell: No. I looked at the word "synergy", and it listed: "co-acting, co-active, coefficient, conjunct, synergetic". That did not help me. Finally I went to the Webster's Dictionary.

Mr. Dick: Do you want me to send over Winnie the Pooh for you to read?

Mr. Waddell: I suggest that the Hon. Member should look at Webster's. I looked in it for the word "synergy" and discovered that it came from the Greek word synergos which meant working together or, broadly speaking, combined action or operation. I concluded that it was magic, that the Minister was hoping that this synergy or this magic in the private sector would somehow work. That does not make much sense. There is no reason for the Government to sell the company other than pure Conservative ideology.

The company is being sold to Memotec Data Incorporated which is a small Montreal-based data processing communications company. The Government claims to have sold the company for $608.3 million. However, when we analyse the sale carefully we find that the most Memotec will pay is $488.3 million for the company. Memotec is to pay $488.3 million to the Government for Teleglobe, and the Government is to get $102 million in accumulated cash out of the company, plus an $18 million dividend, for a total of $608.3 million. The latter payments cannot be considered part of the purchase price because they represent funds already in government hands, held by the Crown corporation.

It is also understood that as part of the $488.3 million purchasing price Memotec has said it will assume Teleglobe's debt liabilities which amount to $143 million. If this is the case, and it was not denied by the Minister in her speech—indeed, she confirmed it—the Government will only receive $345 million for Teleglobe, as no actual funds will be paid for the debts. In other words, the company will pay $345 million and will assume the debts. That is private sector accounting, and I challenge any Tory Member to refute that. If the Government is to become involved in privatization or the private sector, let it use some of the accounting methods of the private sector.

They do not have to take money out of their pockets to pay for the debt, they just assume it. The company is in fact paying $345 million for Teleglobe. I would suggest then that the Minister start out her career as privatization Minister by telling us the truth and telling us what is the actual sale price.

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) has just accused the Minister of State for Privatization (Mrs. McDougall) of not telling the truth, which is unparliamentary. I would ask him to withdraw that totally unparliamentary remark, which is unusual for a Member of his character to use.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If the Hon. Member said it directly, I wish he would withdraw it.

Mr. Waddell: Of course I would withdraw it, Mr. Speaker, if it fell to the ears of the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney) that I was in any way suggesting that the Minister of State for Privatization was trying to do this, perhaps inadvertently. I would certainly withdraw that totally, if that were the impression left.

Let me suggest that the figure is $345 million. Let me also suggest that it is a leverage buy-out, as it is called on the stock exchange. This minnow which swallowed the whale—Memotec which swallowed one of the crown jewels of the Government, the company being privatized, Teleglobe—in fact used what is called leverage buy-out. In other words, it went to the National Bank of Canada and borrowed $345 million, and then it will give it to the Government to buy Teleglobe.

How will it pay back its bank? It will use the revenues from Teleglobe, that $50 million per year. That is called a leverage buy-out. There is nothing behind Memotec. To put it more accurately, there is not that kind of money behind Memotec. It is risky business to do that, in my view. As long as the cash flows keep coming, there is no problem. However, what happens if there is a strike or some problem with telephone companies? What would happen if telephone companies suddenly found ways to reroute calls through the United States? In that event the new Teleglobe, the privatized Teleglobe, could go belly-up. The Government should not assume that particular risk. I am informed that $345 million has been confirmed by the President of Memotec and that the debt has been assumed. I think my figures are right. It is a leverage buy-out and it puts the company at risk. Quite frankly, it is a serious matter.

The Minister said that it was good for the employees.

[Translation]

Recently in this House I asked a question to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) concerning the employment situation at "La Cité" in Montreal—I think it was "La Cité", a co-operative housing unit in Montreal—the Government of Canada sold this building to private sector interests and two days after the sale some employees lost their jobs.

[English]

I think they were janitors and they were simply canned or laid off. How soon the Minister forgets. The case of "La Cité" is conveniently forgotten. I know the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) is trying to remedy the situation. I give him credit for that. He told me that he had a meeting with Louis Laberge, President of the Quebec Federation of Labour, and that he was trying to remedy the situation. It was a privatization situation, and the employees were thrown out on the street.

I have some concern that the employees in this particular case be protected. I am concerned that their pension plan be protected. Apparently it will be, but perhaps the pension plans of new employees will be different or will not be as good as the pension in the public sector. I point out that the record of the private sector in employing and dealing with women in terms of certain benefits is not as good. I ask the Minister of State for Privatization, who is also responsible in the Government for the status of women, to consider these questions in terms of privatization.

In the documents provided with the Minister's package announcing the sale no reference was made to the book value of Teleglobe. The company's book value is reported to be anywhere between $300 million and $450 million. Furthermore, its sale value is much higher, as it has an extremely good profitability picture.

When the Hon. Member for York—Peel (Mr. Stevens) was the Minister responsible for the sale of Teleglobe, British Telecom reportedly made a bid of $750 million for the company. That is a heck of a lot less than the $345 million selling price. I know the Minister of State for Privatization could say to me, "Well, would the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) want us to sell Teleglobe to a foreign country?" She is proud that Teleglobe is not going to a foreign country. But then the Minister cites, in about the next paragraph of her speech, the fact that de Havilland was sold to Boeing and it is doing great. She cannot have it both ways.

I cite this figure of $750 million to show British Telecom's projections that the company was worth a heck of a lot more than the Government sold it for. The Government, by all analysis and by all accounts, thought Teleglobe would bring in at least $600 million, and it was expected that that price would be achieved. Sadly the Government has let the company go for almost half of that $600 million. The $600 million mark also explains why the Government has tried in its press kit, and press bumph, to create the impression that the company has been sold for $600 million. I said, and I will say it again, that that is not an auspicious start for a Minister who showed such great promise in the area. In my view, we should have more accurate figures.

We are completely opposed to the sale of Teleglobe because the company has been a consistent money maker. It is a monopoly and it will continue to be one. It occupies the field of communications where there is a legitimate public policy interest to be protected. It adds insult to injury to receive the paltry sum of $350 million for such a lucrative company, so valuable to the people of Canada. This is a fire-sale. Memotec is a company with reported revenues in 1985 of just under $17 million. Compare this to the revenues of Teleglobe—I am not talking about profits, I am talking about the revenues—which were $678 million in 1985. A minnow is swallowing a whale and there are some risks to it.

Mr. Lanthier: You used to say that about Bombardier.

Mr. Waddell: I do not think Bombardier is a minnow.

Mr. Lanthier: It was.

Mr. Waddell: We will see.

Mr. Lanthier: Yes, we will see.

Mr. Waddell: The Government of Canada should not put Teleglobe at risk. That is a real problem.

There is another problem, Mr. Speaker. Memotec's purchase has been clouded by the possibility of trading irregularities in its shares. On February 5, the day that Paul Marshall, Chairman of the Canada Development Investment Corporation, advised the Minister that Memotec had won the bid, its stocks jumped by $2.38 a share to a value of $13 a share on the Toronto Stock Exchange. Shares had previously sold for $10.60 a share. Not a bad little coup for some people who made money on those shares.

Share trading was halted that day but resumed the next day. More than half the number of the total number of shares traded in 1986 were traded in the next two days. People have asked whether insider trading took place.

I phoned a journalist in British Columbia from The Vancouver Sun and asked him to make some comments about Teleglobe. I had a lot of information, but there were only two comments from the journalist. First, "We are not really interested in the sale of Teleglobe in British Columbia". I found that strange. British Columbia is still in Canada. It may be because The Vancouver Sun is the only major newspaper without any correspondent or columnist here in Ottawa. I consider that a real shame for my city.

The other comment, and I will pass it on to Hon. Members, was, "Did the Prime Minister's friends have any access to the shares? Did they have consultants", and there is no evidence of that and I am not alleging anything. But it is sad that people have that reaction.

There are some problems with the sale of the shares and we should not be debating this Bill today. It is too soon to bring the Bill before the House. We do not have the proper documentation and the circumstances concerning the sale are being examined right now by the Toronto Stock Exchange. We should be waiting, because there is no great hurry on this Bill, until we get the report from the Toronto Stock Exchange. Since the company is going for $350 million and the debt has been restructured, we should be waiting until we get better and more accurate figures from the Government. We will have something to say about that later on.

There has already been debate by my friend in the Liberal Party on monopolies and the by-pass matters. I will not go into that, just to say that the Government is not doing the consumer any big favour, and it could be doing damage.

Canada does have international obligations. We are party to the Intelsat Treaty of 1964 which deals with telecommunications satellite traffic. My speech is being heard and seen in my office in British Columbia. It is being beamed out to space then coming back. I hope nothing is lost in the transmission.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: Teleglobe is part of that. I am worried that the Government is privatizing part of its responsibility for international affairs. I say that seriously and I will pursue that part in committee. Teleglobe will now represent Canada on the Board of Governors. I know there are provisions in the Bill to deal with that, but this is a very strange situation with Canada giving up part of its foreign affairs in a crucial area. Australia, New Zealand, France, West Germany, Italy, Norway and Sweden all have Government controlled overseas telecommunications systems. In the United Kingdom, even the British Government, after having done a major privatization of British Telecom, has retained just slightly under 50 per cent ownership with a controlling interest. That is not the case in Canada.

Let me summarize matters, Mr. Speaker. Teleglobe has proved itself to be an effective money maker. That is undeniable, and the Minister had admitted that. It has proved itself to be among Crown corporations what one calls a crown jewel. Why sell it? Teleglobe has proved to have good management. Why sell it? It has proved itself to have given good service to Canadians. Why sell it? Other countries have either controlling interest or full ownership of international telecommunications systems. So why sell? Teleglobe has been sold for about half of what we thought it would sell for. Why sell it for half? What is the hurry? What are the real reasons for selling the company? I am looking, but I cannot find the reasons. I am not saying ideologically that we should not sell the company because it is a Crown corporation, but give me the practical and the public policy reasons. We are selling it because it is synergy—man! What is this synergy, this magical term? Will it increase the profit? What is it? Maybe some Conservatives Members will deal with it in their speeches. I would like to nail this synergy down and find out how magical it is to convince a Government to sell a company.

The long range outlook is that the company will stay a monopoly beyond the five-year guaranteed monopoly. There is simply not a demand in Canada to have another overseas telecommunication service. The company effectively is a utility, like Ontario Hydro. Therefore, it should remain in public hands, in my view.

• (1500)

Despite the fact that under the sale, the Government will be able to give directives to Teleglobe for a narrow range of national security, foreign relations and international communication policy considerations, in a broader sense Teleglobe will be in a conflict between the broad policy international objectives of the Government and the profits of its shareholders, both of which are quite legitimate interests. This company will now be a hybrid and will be in a position of conflict.

There are inherent contradictions in the act of selling the company. Because it is a monopoly service, the Government does not want to sell it to the telephone companies and increase their already existent monopolies. By not selling it to the telephone companies, the company decreases its market value due to the spectre of the bypass of calls through the United States raised by the telephone companies. The upshot is that a lucrative, world-class Crown corporation is being sold for a song to a private company that will be able to maintain it as a cash cow in a guaranteed and protected monopoly environment.

What kind of business sense does the Government have? Why is it selling this corporation? I can find no public policy reason for it and I can find no practical reason for it. That is why we in the NDP will oppose this Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The first three speeches have now been completed. Under Standing Order 55(2), we are now entering the third phase which provides for 20-minute speeches plus 10 minutes of questions and comments.

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to be able to speak in support of the privatization of Teleglobe Canada, the latest transaction in the privatization process. The Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) spoke of the criteria for the sale of Crown corporations. I think those criteria were put very plainly in a document dated August 18, 1986, which stated the following:

> The May Budget outlined the basic principles the Government is following to carry out its privatization initiative: to be sensitive to the concerns of management and employees in corporations considered candidates for sale; to consider the impact of privatization on consumers and market competition; to consult with provincial Governments; to avoid selling at distress prices for the sake of privatization; to follow commercial objectives when considering stages of privatization where there may be periods of mixed, private and public ownership; and to examine all related policy and financial considerations on a case-by-case basis before considering the privatization of any given corporation.

I think that that is very plainly and well put. As the Minister stated, the Government is proceeding on pragmatic case-by-case basis to privatize Crown corporations for which Crown ownership is no longer necessary to achieve a public policy purpose, and it is structuring these transactions in a way that maximizes future benefits for taxpayers, employees and the companies themselves.

The Opposition's tactic is to criticize these initiatives as ideological obsessions. However, Canadians know better than to believe this kind of rhetoric. The Canadians who most support privatization are those with knowledge of the performance of companies that have already been sold.

The Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway asked over and over: "Why sell it, why sell it, why sell it?" Let us talk about why we want to sell Crown corporations and let us see what a review of past privatizations reveals.

Crown corporations that have been privatized are doing much better in the private sector than they were under government control. Benefits have accrued not only to the corporations per se but also to the management and the employees, and that was one of the Government's stated objectives. Commercial benefits can be identified because of greater freedom to compete, easier access to financial markets, and expansion of markets internationally and through joint ventures. Privatization has given these corporations the opportunity to provide better and more services to customers, to attract new customers and, in certain circumstances, to lower the cost of services.

New alliances of parent corporations and Crown corporations have enhanced technological know-how. For example, de Havilland has benefited from privatization in terms of its commercial orientation. With less bureaucratic red tape, management has become more aggressive and more private-sector oriented.

Happily, in a number of cases, the employees are the ones who are benefiting the most from privatization. Again, I would return to the question of the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway: "Why sell it, why sell it?" I know the Hon. Member is very interested in workers, and if privatization will benefit the employees, that should be a good reason to sell it.

Let us take a look at some specific cases. As Hon. Members know, the Northern Transportation Company Limited was mandated to provide reliable and comprehensive marine transportation and related services on a profit-oriented basis in the North. The Government sold this company in July of 1985 to an Inuit development corporation and it is, of course, run by the Inuit. The purchase price was $27 million. More important is what has happened since that time.

I believe it is true to say that the Northern Transportation Company Limited was well run before privatization, but it was not as aggressive as it could have been. Even though the corporation's mandate was to provide economic, reliable and comprehensive marine transportation and related services on a profit-oriented basis in northern Canada and the Arctic, the Government was careful not to compete in other activities related to marine transportation in the North. Now, the new owners of the corporation see some possibility of expansion in the offshore and in eastern Arctic supply work. As they become more involved in northern development, the corporation will be able to diversify its activities. Presently, it intends to take a lead role in the north warning system.

Very often the Government will restrict the operations of a Crown corporation in order that it does not get into direct competition with other corporations in the same sector. This was true for NTCL which has now been given more freedom to compete more aggressively. The corporation is now transferring its services in the eastern Arctic area and is also entering into joint venture for the north warning system. The new flexibility given to the corporation by the privatization will serve to make it more efficient. Wider services are provided in more areas and the corporation is more able to meet local concerns. I also understand that the corporation is exceeding its own business plan. Why sell? Privatization has been good for this company, and I am sure Hon. Members are interested to know that it has been very good for the native people of the North.

What about de Havilland? Hon. Members will recall the political posturing of opposition Parties during the debate on the privatization of de Havilland to Boeing Corporation, a Seattle-based company with plants in Winnipeg and Arnprior. We have heard little since from Members of the Opposition because they do not want to bring de Havilland's success to the attention of the public.

The purchase of de Havilland Canada by Boeing has been hailed as a natural partnership by industry experts around the world. The Boeing Company has customers all over the world and more foreign customers are now looking at de Havilland products. As regional carriers become more sophisticated and solidify their links with larger airlines, the new alliance is expected to create opportunities for both companies to meet the needs of a broader base of customers in a rapidly changing and evolving market-place.

On a personal note, the regional airline on which I travel, Air Ontario, has eight Dash-8s on order. Soon I will be flying back and forth on Dash-8s. Of course their order book is so heavy we will have to wait a while for ours.

• (1510)

The new partnership has enhanced de Havilland's ability to compete in a highly competitive market and provided some joint venture possibilities. The company recently signed an agreement with Short Brothers PLC of Northern Ireland, a maker of small commercial planes, to explore collaboration on a new short-haul aircraft to add to their line.

These are all very good signs, of course. Yet even better news is the fact that the major beneficiaries have been the employees. The previous speaker asked, why sell? Not only do the employees have better job security but their number has increased since the acquisition from 4,005 in January, 1986, to 5,204 in October, 1986. The privatization of de Havilland has meant jobs and more jobs in Winnipeg and Downsview. As a matter of fact, some 800 new jobs. That is why there is good reason to sell.

Let us look at the record of another company, a holding company for the fish processing corporation, Les Pêcheries Cartier Inc. As Members know, that holding company was sold for $5 million to the Prudel Agrifood Corporation in April of 1986. The privatization of that company gave it greater commercial freedom by allowing it to enter into contracts with foreign enterprises. For example, a contract has been signed with Danish and English companies for the distribution of fish products. The corporation will also be expanding its marketing into the U.S. The privatization has given more freedom to the corporation and access to more and better fish markets. Pêcheries Canada was able to negotiate a line of credit one week after the agreement was signed. Before privatization it had been struggling for months to increase its line of credit. With privatization it was able to lower the cost of service through cost control, particularly administrative costs. On the other hand, the company has responded better to the needs and expectations of its customers, and its employees have once again benefited a great deal. Why sell? Because it is good for the employees. They now have better job security and longer periods of work because of the greater demand in this very seasonal industry for fish products.

Those are three case studies on privatization, three very different companies handled on a very pragmatic, case-by-case basis, by this Government. They are proof that privatization means more jobs and a bright future for the employees, not to mention the taxpayer or the companies themselves. I am confident that history will repeat itself in the case of Teleglobe under the leadership of Memotec.

I would like to spend my few remaining minutes today to talk about the specific issue before this House this afternoon, the sale of Teleglobe to Memotec. Teleglobe is an important company in the Canadian telecommunications industry. Through Teleglobe our principal communication links with countries outside North America have been assured. These services are vital today and will become even more so as Canada's dependence on foreign trade continues to grow. As well, the social importance of Teleglobe cannot be ignored. The company provides the Canadian people with communication links with the rest of the world. For the many thousands of new Canadians this link with family and friends back home cannot and must not be ignored. Consequently, the Government of Canada is using this legislation, policy statements, regulatory powers, and other mechanisms to ensure the continuation of Teleglobe's vital service.

We will not allow the made-in-Canada telecommunication functions of Teleglobe to be altered or challenged. Given Teleglobe's international responsibilities this legislation will allow the Government of Canada to issue policy directives to the company within a narrow range pertaining to national security, foreign relations and international telecommunication policy matters. Teleglobe will continue to act as a signatory to Intelsat, Inmarsat, and the Commonwealth Telecommunications Council. Our Government will retain its responsibilities and obligations as a party to these agreements. As well, the legislation subjects Teleglobe to federal regulatory authority given the vital importance of the industry to all Canadians.

The Government is committed through this legislation to ensuring that telecommunication services to all parts of Canada be provided by Canadian-owned and controlled companies as much as possible. Our Government will exercise its powers under existing legislation to ensure that Teleglobe remains for at least five years the sole authorized Canadian company in the provision of Canada-overseas telecommunications. We will ensure that Canadian domestic and international telecommunication traffic be routed through Teleglobe facilities. It is a long-standing policy of this Government that Canadian domestic and international telecommunications be carried on Canadian facilities.

As Teleglobe is a vital and viable company, Crown ownership is no longer considered necessary for the achievement of public policy purposes. The best possible terms have been found, private ownership combined with public regulation will provide significant benefit to all Canadians. Rate reductions are one of the first benefits. Overseas phone rates will fall by at least 13 per cent in January of 1988, with further reductions likely. The benefits to Teleglobe and its employees are immeasurable. The company will now have new opportunities to expand and grow through an ability to pursue new business opportunities. Given the history of past privatization efforts by this Government we have every reason to expect that many new jobs will be the result of this sale. Additionally, tax dollars used for Teleglobe will now be freed up for other priority initiatives of our Government.

In the bidding process a number of restrictions were put on interested companies. First, provision was put into place to ensure effective Canadian control at all times. Total non-resident ownership is restricted to 20 per cent. As well, to restrict domestic telephone companies from gaining control of Teleglobe they are restricted to acquiring a maximum of 40 per cent of the company initially. It was essential that some company shares be made available to employees through a share purchase plan. As well, after a period of adjustment for the new owners, the Government will take steps to ensure that some shares in the company will be sold publicly. It is nice that the employees can participate in this very successful company and own a piece of it. That is another reason that it is so very good for employees. As well, any successful bidders had to ensure that employee concerns would be addressed. Memotec has met and in some cases exceed the Government's expectations with respect to the future of the employees.

Memotec has agreed that the headquarters of Teleglobe will remain in Montreal, and it has agreed to continue existing collective agreements. It has agreed not only to provide pension coverage which meets existing industry standards for new employees, but to continue coverage for existing employees in a plan equivalent to what they now enjoy as federal government employees. In addition, the employee share purchase plan to which Memotec has agreed exceeds our requirements. The company is offering employees a 5 per cent share in the company at 90 per cent of the relevant purchase price with a five-year interest-free loan. What more could be asked to ensure the security of these employees?

• (1520)

The Government has made every possible effort to ensure that the sale of Teleglobe does not interfere with the national telecommunication network which our Government realizes is of such importance to all Canadians. Teleglobe cannot cease business or amalgamate without the approval of the House. CRTC approval is necessary for transfers of effective control or the disposition of substantive amounts of assets of this company. If Teleglobe contravenes these conditions, the CRTC has the authority to force the disposition of the offending shares.

Along the same lines, the Government has taken special care to ensure that telephone communication companies will never be in a position to control Teleglobe.

Since they are compatible industries, it is obvious that telecommunication companies of Canada must be represented on the board of directors of Teleglobe. This legislation guarantees them a continued representation proportionate to their holdings, but is limited to a maximum of one-third of the total membership of the board. Additionally, as a further precaution, officers of Teleglobe cannot be officers of either the telecommunication companies or their affiliates.

Please do not get the idea that Teleglobe will have its hands so badly tied that it cannot move. The Government has set down minimum requirements. These requirements are essential if they are to ensure that all Canadians have access to the same levels of service they are currently enjoying. Beyond these, Teleglobe is free to enlarge, expand, and grow as its own business interests dictate.

Clearly the sale of Teleglobe is a good deal. These are enormous benefits. This sale will provide enormous benefits to everyone.

Mr. Ravis: Mr. Speaker, I enjoyed the speech given by the Hon. Member for Sarnia—Lambton (Mr. James), in which he made a number of interesting points. I want to comment on his speech as well as that of the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) with respect to why Crown corporations should be sold.

I come from Saskatchewan where Crown corporations have been plentiful over the years. I believe the people of Saskatchewan have learned a very interesting lesson about Crown corporations. During the last provincial election in Saskatchewan the CBC conducted a poll of 1,600 people. It asked their opinion of Crown corporations and whether the Government should be involved.

Teleglobe Canada

Since Saskatchewan has had a number of socialist Governments in the past, I expected that the number of those opposed to Crown corporations would be low. However, 76 per cent of those questioned responded that they did not wish the Government to be involved in Crown corporations. Furthermore, in a poll conducted during the last federal election in 1984, a large percentage—I believe 50 per cent or 60 per cent—had the same opinion. I suggest that a consensus is beginning to develop against the Government investing in these activities where there is a major risk to taxpayers' money. Perhaps the best example I can give is the Potash Corporation of Saskatchewan which has hundreds of millions of dollars at risk in a market that is very volatile at the moment. In fact, that corporation is losing literally millions of dollars every year. I believe these risks should be left to the private sector.

I am sure there is a cross-section in the Hon. Member's riding that is representative of all three Parties and the people of Ontario. Do his constituents believe that the Government should be involved in this kind of activity which risks their funds, in spite of the fact that this Crown corporation was making money, as indicated by the Member for Vancouver—Kingsway? I suggest that regardless of whether it is making money we should not be risking public funds.

Mr. James: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for his support. When I have talked to my constituents about the objectives of the Government and our principles on the privatization initiative, I have found them to be very supportive. I began my speech by mentioning those principles, and I believe the majority of my constituents support privatization.

I come from an area that is very private enterprise oriented, in which there are multinationals in the hydrocarbon energy field. Privatization is very beneficial to employees in my area because of the operations there. I believe this is a good deal about which they would be very positive. I am sure they are applauding it at home this afternoon.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, perhaps you can help me. I can comment on the Member's speech, which was very good and thorough, but I cannot comment on a comment. However, considering that the Hon. Member followed with a reply to the comment, can I comment on his comment?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would appreciate it if the Hon. Member would stop trying to confuse the Chamber and would ask his question or make his comment. Then we can settle it at that point. It has been a great Friday the thirteenth, and it is almost Valentine's Day. Let us not confuse the whole issue.

Mr. Waddell: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I did not realize that it was Friday the thirteenth. Now I am worried. I would offer you a valentine but I do not want to be misinterpreted since you are a Member from Alberta.

Canadians may say in a public opinion poll that they favour privatization. However, if they are asked if they favour reduction of service, they will say no. If they are asked if they favour bad health standards, they will say no. If they are asked if they favour poor deals for the employees, they will say no. If they are asked if they favour giving Crown corporations to big business so they can make a big buck, they will say no. My point is that it depends on the question.

I did not ask the Hon. Member for Sarnia—Lambton (Mr. James) why the Government wants to sell all Crown corporations. I wanted to know why it is selling this Crown corporation, since it is profitable, well managed, and has a good service. I do not see any reason why the Government is selling it, other than for ideological purposes.

The Hon. Member mentioned the employees. Is he aware that Fred Pomeroy, President of the 40,000-member Communications and Electrical Workers of Canada, says that the sell-off serves the interest of neither taxpayers nor employees. How can the Member say that the employees believe this is a benefit?

• (1530)

Mr. James: I thank the Hon. Member for the question on Friday the 13th. I think the Hon. Member will know that TPF&C limited did an evaluation, and in connection with the pension plan—and I know the Hon. Member is very interested in that—the company proposes:

> —to provide a pension plan which is identical in all respects to the Public Service Superannuation Act (PSSA). This design is not typical of the industry. Contributory plans exist in the industry but the PSSA differs in two respects: it has a higher employee contribution rate and full automatic indexation.
> The value of the plan, in terms of employer provided pension, is at least equal to the industry norm. In the context of higher inflation, it would have more value.
> A last point: if a PSSA type of plan were adopted, this would obviously minimize the transition and implementation tasks.

The evaluation speaks very highly of the pension plan and it was done by a reputable company. It is the ideology of the Government to privatize, and this has been substantiated by many people. It is said that Government does not do very well in the business of the private sector and that Government cannot run things as well as the private sector. Privatization, we think, will reduce the size of Government. I know the Hon. Member would like to see that happen. We have talked about making more room for private sector initiatives. We think that taking these corporations out of government hands and into private initiatives will allow the private sector to grow and become more competitive. I think the Hon. Member would have to agree that any time the Government is involved, there are a million rules and regulations and bureaucrats who are always asking for 14 or more reports. Any time Government has any part of business, it tends to make it less flexible. What the Hon. Member wants is the very same thing I want, more jobs, better working conditions for employees, more opportunity for advancement and all of those good things.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I have just a very short question. I would like the Hon. Member to answer the question put by his colleague a few moments ago. Does the Hon. Member for Sarnia Lambton (Mr. James) agree with the same principle of getting rid of Crown corporations when the Crown corporation we are talking about is a very profitable one? Does the Hon. Member think that the same principles he enunciated a moment ago would apply whether the Crown corporation was profitable or whether it was a drain on the federal Treasury? Could the Hon. Member address that question?

Mr. James: Mr. Speaker, I think again we have to go back to the principles we have set out as a Government, and I enunciated them previously. It has nothing to do with whether or not the company is profitable. Certainly, we would be suspect in trying to sell a company which was not very profitable. I think someone could then say it was a fire sale or looked like a fire sale. It is important that the company is profitable and doing well so we can get the best price possible. Some people have quoted $750 million when they did not have to be too serious and it was a foreign investor. That is easy to say. It is the same as the New Democrats being in Opposition, they can say all sorts of things because they do not have to follow through. The same goes for the Liberals.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret but the Hon. Member's time has expired. The period for questions and comments has now terminated. Debate.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I join in this debate on the matter of the privatization principle itself and, of course, the specifics of the sale of Teleglobe which is proposed and is up before Parliament for approval, and the bargain basement rates which have been permitted in this sell-out of a very important Crown corporation. I would like to quote the Communications and Electrical Workers of Canada as they look at this issue. It has an Ottawa by-line:

> For sale: One world class telecommunications company. Provides a vital Canadian presence in international communications. An impressive track record of efficiency and productivity. Consistently one of the most profitable corporations in the country.
> Must sell quickly as present owner getting out of business. Will sell to highest bidder. No preconditions. Contact Mulroney and Company, House of Commons, Ottawa.

This is not quite the advertisement the Minister put in the newspapers, but I think it is very much the sense of the approach of the Government to the sale of Teleglobe. If we look at the concerns of the employees, the people who have made this a very profitable company, we find that in this case the Communications Workers of Canada have urged that any privatization decision be put on hold until the completion of the former Minister of Communications announced review of the national telecommunication policy. The suggestion is, and I think it is very reasonable, that the privatization of a particular company in the telecommunication field should not be looked at alone, but should be looked at in the context of a national policy on telecommunications, a national policy which we do not have at present, and is a question of some speculation.

[Translation]

Teleglobe Canada is a Crown corporation whose responsibility is to ensure the transmission of international telecommunications in Canada. These telecommunications are made mostly through telephone, cable distribution, and telex transmissions. Teleglobe is active co-owner of intercontinental submarine cables and satellite communications systems. Throughout this country, overseas telephone calls account for 85 per cent of its revenues.

Teleglobe Canada had demonstrated its obvious profitability. Why should we sell such a Crown jewel? That is the question which a good many Canadian men and women are asking.

In the long run Teleglobe will probably remain a monopoly beyond the five years it will be guaranteed. The demand in this area of overseas telecommunications is simply non-existent. This company is not just a profitable concern but it should remain part of the public sector.

Although the Government will provide directives for tightening national security in connection with external relations and for international telecommunications policies, Teleglobe Canada will to a considerable extent be in a conflict between policy-dictated objectives on the one hand and the normal considerations of a business that is supposed to make a profit, on the other. That is the case at Intelsat.

There are some very definite contradictions, down to the actual conditions of sale. Just because this is a public service that has a monopoly in its field, the Government did not want to sell to another telephone company, claiming that this would further enhance an existing monopoly. However, not selling to another telephone company means the market value of the company drops, owing to fear that the company's further development could be delayed. This puts downward pressure on the sale price. In the final instance, a profitable Crown corporation with an international reputation has been sold for a song to a private company that can use it as a source of funds to protect it against other monopolies on the market. What kind of deal does the Government think it is making?

[English]

Teleglobe has always been a money-maker. Its profit has improved considerably over the years. With respect to its profits, its net income after taxes in 1985 was $53.2 million. In 1984 the company's profit was $41 million-plus. In 1983 the profit figure was $54.6 million. In 1982 it was $47 million. In 1981 it was $36 million. In 1980 it was $35.9 million. In 1979 it was nearly $20 million. In 1978 it was $14.5 million. In 1977 it was $14.9 million. In 1976 it was $12 million, and in 1975 it was $11 million. The company has had consistent and sizeable profits over the years. In recent years its profits have been substantial when one takes into consideration the size of the company. It is known as the jewel of Crown corporations.

Teleglobe Canada

In their original approach to privatization the Conservatives' idea was to make a package of companies, including some that they wanted to get rid of because they were not doing well. To sweeten the package the idea was to include Teleglobe because it is such an attractive company. That was the first reason for putting Teleglobe on the block. We have now gone by that point. The other companies have not been sold, or they will be sold separately. In this case Teleglobe has been put on the block by itself.

The Government wishes to sell Teleglobe to Memotec Data, a small Montreal-based data processing and data communication company. The Government claims that the sale price is $608.3 million. Estimates of the company's worth are certainly around that amount. Given its continued profitability some people might think it is worth even more. However, no one is suggesting that anyone is paying too much by having to pay that amount of money for the company. The figure of $608 million is an exaggeration. It makes the price look a lot better than it is in fact. When one looks at the terms of the sale more carefully the total begins to diminish. It goes down to a considerably more modest sum.

Memotec is to pay $488.3 million to the Government for Teleglobe. The Government will receive $102 million of accumulated cash from the company, plus $18 million in dividends. That is what brings the total up to $608.3 million in total. However, the figures with respect to the dividend and the money in the accumulated cash account are not really part of the purchase price since this is money which the Government already has. It is money already in the hands of Teleglobe. This is a sort of a buying-out of oneself. It is not a genuine transfer of money from a private company to the Government. It is not looking after the interests of taxpayers by getting a good price for this jewel of Crown corporations.

As part of the $408.3 million purchase price Memotec has said that it will assume Teleglobe's debt liabilities which amount to $143 million. If this is the case then the Government will only be receiving $345 million for Teleglobe, since no actual funds will be paid for the debt. Memotec has said that it plans to raise $345 million through a loan. It will borrow $225 million from the National Bank and raise the additional $125 million through an issue of debentures to institutional investors. This is a situation of a very small company buying a much larger company with not very much money. It is borrowing some of the money and getting the rest out of the accumulated funds of the company. It is not in any sense an infusion of new money from the private sector to purchase and pay a fair amount of money for this going concern.

In the press the sale of Teleglobe has been described as a minnow swallowing a whale. It is remarkable how this very small company should be able to proceed in this fashion. We are all concerned with some of the irregularities that appear to have occurred in terms of the share trading in this stock. There are too many coincidences with respect to the value shooting up very quickly. That has to be a matter of concern as well.

One improvement the Government has made as a result of a criticism of the Bill and its original intentions in selling Teleglobe has been to give better protection to the employees of the company. They have been very clear. Several of their unions have made strong representations with respect to protection of the employees, especially with regard to pension funds.

The employees of Teleglobe have had the benefit of Public Service pensions. It is a good pension plan. The Government's initial position was that the employees of the new corporation would have to accept what the going pension benefit package was in that industry, whereas in fact they had a superior one. I am glad to see that the Government has agreed to ensure that existing employees at least will continue with the superior benefits which they have. Pensions are certainly important for people. We would like to see people have better pension plans, not reduced pension entitlements, especially for those who have fought for them and who have obviously given up collective bargaining to get good pensions. We would rather see more people getting good pensions than fewer. Unfortunately, this will not hold for any new employees of the company. We will have the very unhappy situation of a two-tiered system in which new employees will not be treated as well as previous employees of the company.

The Government has also said it will be introducing legislation to prevent the possibility of telephone companies bypassing Teleglobe and routing overseas telephone calls through the United States overseas telephone systems, which is a deregulated system and one with a larger market. This is important because one of the reasons Teleglobe is reported to have been sold for such a modest price is the alleged threat of bypass by the Canadian telephone companies. If a bypass is permitted then consumers will take advantage of the lower prices through the United States and the company would certainly not survive either in public hands or in private hands. It would not be able to survive that very substantial competition.

So we have a situation in which the company's survival, whether in public hands or private hands, depends on this type of protection. In effect, it has to be a monopoly. It has been guaranteed monopoly status for five years. It seems likely that it will continue as a monopoly after that. The point is that right now it is a monopoly. If it is to continue as a monopoly then it should be treated as one, as a utility. There is a public interest in regulating it very carefully. I suggest that there is a public interest in owning it as a utility which provides a service needed by everyone. It is a service in which the Government has a particular concern in seeing it well handled. I note that other countries have maintained public companies in this domain. There are security reasons for having a single company under public control. This ensures the protection of this extremely important telecommunication link.

[Translation]

Teleglobe is a profitable Crown corporation in an industry that must be regulated by the Government, even after privatization. In other countries, the same service is provided by public corporations. Privatization of Teleglobe is not necessary, useful or sensible.

I also would like to raise some questions about the treatment of employees. The Government has met the demands of employees now working for the corporation, but it has not responded to the demand for justice for all employees with respect to pensions.

Mr. Speaker, I think my twenty minutes are up.

Before concluding, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap):

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-38, An Act respecting the reorganization and divestiture of Teleglobe Canada, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day three months hence."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The motion is in order. On questions or comments, the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia).

Mr. Caccia: I listened with great attention to the intervention by the mover of the amendment. I was particularly intrigued by the motion for a three month hoist. I wish to learn the reasons for this particular motion.

Ms. McDonald: One reason for the three month hoist is that an investigation is currently taking place through the Toronto Stock Exchange. We do not have the results of this investigation, and it seems to be unwise to proceed. We are not clear about the price or the proper value of the stock. This investigation should proceed, and the House should have this information before coming to a decision.

Mr. Baker: I wish to ask the Hon. Member how she feels about the selling price in relation to the profits. The profits of the company have grown in the last few years and this year are up to about $100 million.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, that is a pertinent question. The profits of the company have grown radically over the past 10 years and are substantial profits. It is a most remarkable situation that we have a smaller company with less profit, less revenue, and operations through one of these magnification deals taking over a company which is much more substantial in revenues, profits, and obviously in value.

Mr. Waddell: The Hon. Member is the communication critic for the NDP Party. From a broader point of view, I wish to ask her about the communication policy in terms of letting go a Crown corporation which is engaged in international communications. Could the Hon. Member tell us a little about the importance of the international communication aspect in the modern world, and give us the benefit of her experience in the communications committee, or her knowledge of communications and how important it is in terms of public policy?

Ms. McDonald: Telecommunications is a very important industry. Overseas telephone calls are an important part of life. Our population uses the telephone more than any other population in the world, and telephones are used substantially for overseas communications. Canada has a large number of immigrants who wish to keep in touch with their families. Our telephone patterns are rather different from American patterns where more of the international communications are for business reasons, and rather less for family and social purposes. The pattern in Canada is an enormous amount of use of international telecommunications for keeping families and communities in touch. That pattern is a rather distinctive one, and people want high quality services.

Some countries have gone the deregulation route. For example, Britain has sold its international telecommunication company, however it did maintain a 49 per cent public share. Of course, countries which have permitted private operation are highly regulated. That has been the pattern. If we proceed with this, there would still be a great deal of regulation. So the situation is neither fish nor fowl. If it is a private company, it will have the advantages of a monopoly and those of making a lot of money, yet there will still have to be that protection. It seems it is a little bit unfair that way. A previous Conservative Member talked about the market and conservatism and competition. There is no competition where there is a monopoly. The only manner in which we could have competition is if the calls were placed through the United States. If that happens, the company would fold completely.

So there is a protected market in order for the company to survive, whether it is public or private, yet the company reaps all the benefits of this monopoly without facing real competition. It is protected in this fashion. It seems to me that it is quite fraudulent and hypocritical to talk about conservatism and promoting enterprise. That will not happen, it will continue to be protected. This is phoney politics in trying to protect the virtues of the small entrepreneur out there competing. That will not happen. Telecommunications is a different type of industry, and it is futile to use that model.

Mr. Hawkes: When the Member said hypocrisy and phoney politics, it reminded me of a Party that wallows in the waves of public opinion and whatever is at the peak and is popular. I listened to the particular Member give the House a lecture on the financial aspects of Teleglobe, and it makes me a little nervous. I can believe parrot behaviour where somebody writes something, it is read and understood to that extent because somebody can understand English.

But does the Hon. Member really understand the difference between efficient and inefficient management? There are many monopolies in society. But does the Hon. Member really believe that Government manages things efficiently? If she does, I suggest that the Hon. Member lives in a dream world of some size. But if the Hon. Member wishes us to believe that she cares about the numbers and the profit and loss statements related to Teleglobe, I wish to put this little test to her. If the Hon. Member is sincere and has done her homework, would she tell us in exact terms what the profit of Teleglobe was last year, if the Hon. Member thinks it was so great?

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I already referred to the profits and listed them for a number of years. The Government itself admits, and it is proud of the fact, that Teleglobe is a profitable company, efficient, and well run. The idea that somehow because it is in the public sector it is badly run is ideology and not reality. The reality is that the company functions very well and makes a profit.

I do repeat the accusation that it is hypocritical. The Government does not have credibility; it is reeking of problems, crises, and scandals and it wishes to look as though it were getting on with something. What does it do? It has an ideology, it is performing, it is doing political things, it is privatizing. What is it privatizing? A perfectly efficient, reasonable company in any event and one that will have to be regulated and protected. What utter hypocrisy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 4 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--MOTIONS

THE CONSTITUTION ACT, 1982

RIGHT TO LIFE OF UNBORN HUMAN PERSONS

The House resumed from Monday, January 26, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mitges:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Constitution Act, 1982, to include unborn human persons, and that the Governor General issue a Proclamation under the Great Seal of Canada to amend section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights so that it reads as follows:

"7. Everyone including a human foetus or unborn being has the right to life, liberty and security of the person and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice."

And the amendment of Mr. Domm:

That the motion be amended in paragraph numbered 7 in the English version, by adding immediately after the word "unborn" the word "human".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The last time this motion was debated in the House on January 26, 1987, the following amendment was moved:

That the motion be amended in the paragraph numbered 7 in the English version, by adding immediately after the word "unborn' the word "human".

The Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry) raised a point of order, noting that the English and French versions of the motions were different. The Chair recognized the discrepancy in the two versions, expressed the opinion that it was not merely a matter of printing error, and agreed to examine further the proposed amendment.

Since the last hour of debate, then, the Chair has had the opportunity for a thorough review. The French version of the main motion refers to "l'être humain"; the English version refers to an " unborn being".

The word "human" is missing in the English version, although it is present in the previous phrase which refers to "a human foetus". It seems clear to the Chair that the amendment proposed is designed to rid the motion of the discrepancy between the two versions and is, therefore, in order.

The Chair thanks Hon. Members for their interventions in this matter and appreciates the opportunity to clarify the matter. The question on the amendment has been proposed by the Chair, and debate will continue on the amendment.

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Grey—Simcoe (Mr. Mitges) for introducing his motion which, as Your Honour pointed out, will require a constitutional amendment. The proposal is that Section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights be amended as follows:

Everyone including a human foetus or unborn human being has the right to life, liberty and security of the person and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice.

That is the form of the resolution. I know that some Hon. Members in the House have mentioned that a constitutional amendment is always very difficult, and I would agree with that. However, at the same time I would have to say that that misses the point; that is not the reason the Hon. Member for Grey—Simcoe brought forward the resolution.

If the Hon. Member could get what he wants, that is the protection in our laws of the rights of unborn children, I know he would accept an amendment to the Criminal Code. I think that is beside the point. I think we are here to talk about the principle of the rights of unborn children, to which I would like to address myself.

I hope my own position on the subject has been made very clear. I tried to make it very clear to my constituents in Niagara Falls during the 1984 election campaign. Everything I have done and have said I have tried to make consistent with that. Early in January I was an open line show and someone asked for my opinion on the subject of abortion. I indicated to him, just as I had in the summer of 1984, that I was very clearly opposed to abortion and that I would support resolutions in the House of Commons which helped protect the rights of unborn children.

He asked me on the radio: "Didn't you see that poll which came out recently indicating that most people are in favour of abortions?" I made two points to him which I should like to repeat in the House. I think polls in this area can be very misleading. It depends upon how the question is formulated. The result depends upon the way in which the question is asked. If the wording of the question is changed, the result is different. I do not believe and have never believed that important moral questions affecting the country should be decided on the basis of public opinion polls. As well I indicated to him that it was a deep moral conviction of mine and that it was not something I would likely change very easily.

I read with interest the debate which preceded my speaking on the motion. I noted the very eloquent speech on this particular subject by the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). At one point he indicated to the mover of the motion that probably there would not be a foundation for his view in the Bible, that he would not find it in the teachings there. I am very reluctant to challenge an ordained clergyman on what the Bible says or does not say, but I remember a passage which I heard read out loud in church which I have always thought was very significant.

In preparing to speak to the motion, I decided to try to find it. It is from The Book of Jeremiah. Chapter 1, verse 4, begins as follows:

> Now the word of the Lord came to me saying,
> "Before I formed you in the womb I knew you,
> And before you were born I consecrated you—"

I always thought those words were very significant. I was a teenager the first time I heard them spoken. I thought it very significant that the Bible did not say: "I knew you after you came out of the womb and I consecrated you just at the moment you were born". It seemed to me to be very clear. I believe it is a passage which should be of interest to Hon. Members.

The question of abortion is settled in my own mind for a number of reasons. I suppose all of us bring our upbringing and our experiences of life to our consideration of every moral question. I do that, and one of the reasons I am against abortion is that so often I find the arguments in favour of abortion to be so unsatisfactory.

One argument put forward by those who oppose stricter laws in the area of abortion is that the child should only acquire rights after it is viable outside the womb. With that line of reasoning then it is incumbent upon legislators to determine at what point a child can survive outside the womb. In different jurisdictions we see different determinations of just when that is, whether it is 27 weeks, 24 weeks, or 18 weeks. However, the point I should like to make is that advances in technology make that sort of consideration irrelevant.

We have seen cases again and again where children can survive outside the womb, which point us in the direction that surely human life begins at the moment of conception. That is where medical technology is leading us.

I am struck as well by stories which happen occasionally. I remember one, perhaps six years or seven years ago, about a young woman who was in the hospital for an abortion. All the papers had been signed and sealed, and there was to be an abortion. They took out the child and the child was alive; the child cried. Talk about a moral dilemma! Is that child which just screamed immediately imbued with all the rights and privileges Canadian citizens have taken centuries to acquire, or is it something that can be put in the ashcan? There was a moral dilemma in that hospital operating room. It was resolved in favour of giving life support systems to the child, and the child subsequently died. However, it points out again that surely human life must begin at the moment of conception.

One argument used by individuals in favour of abortion is that they characterize people like myself as not compassionate or not caring. I remember being on the Student Council of Queen's University around 1973. There was a debate about whether the Council should be giving money to an agency which included in its services an abortion referral service. I became involved in an argument with one of the other members. He pointed out the classic case. He said: "What about the woman who has 11 children and finds that she is pregnant again, and her husband is going to beat her if she has any more children? What about her?" I say that my heart goes out to that individual. I am compassionate and caring when I am told that a single, 17 year old girl in Grade 11 finds herself pregnant. That is a tragedy. Both cases are tragedies. However, I say: "Don't compound the tragedy".

One of the arguments I do not buy is the one used by those in favour of abortions, namely, "we want to make sure every child in Canada is a wanted child". That is the biggest joke in the whole issue. Every child born in Canada is a wanted child, if not by its natural parents then by the tens of thousands of Canadians who want to adopt children. I cannot tell you how many times I have been in my law office with young couples who have told me of their difficulties in adopting children. People in tears have told me there is nothing they wanted more than to adopt a child but they could not do so because of the abortion laws. To those who do not want children in Canada I say that there are tens of thousands who do. Why not turn an unfortunate situation into someone else's joy?

Let me say that I am pleased to be associated with the cause of the unborn. It has always been my belief that the more helpless the individual is in society the more likely that his or her rights will be trampled upon and ignored. It is all the more incumbent upon those who are elected to public office to make sure that those rights are not trampled upon and not forgotten.

Some day when our grandchildren or our great-grandchildren read these debates maybe this whole problem will be resolved. It may be that those who flaunt the abortion laws, or those who open up abortion clinics, the Henry Morgentalers of this world, will be the modern day saints of this era. Maybe. But, Mr. Speaker, I do not think so. I do not buy the arguments of those who ask us to relax the laws. I do not believe the laws are tough enough. That is why I support the motion of the Hon. Member for Grey—Simcoe, and regardless of how society will some day conclude this issue, I want to say that I am pleased to stand up for the rights of unborn children. It is what I believe and why I am so proud to support this motion.

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Grey—Simcoe (Mr. Mitges) for placing this important issue of the rights of the unborn before the House of Commons of Canada. I want the Member and the House to know that hundreds of my constituents in Langley, Surrey and Aldergrove have expressed their support for his motion through letters, petitions and telephone calls. I know the debate has raged for many years and has been the source of bitter controversy and division among Canadians, but there is no doubt in my mind that people on all sides of the debate speak from sincere and heart-felt convictions.

Normally when people in debate reach an impasse, we are prepared to agree to disagree and to see if some kind of a workable compromise can be attained with which both sides could live. It is unfortunate but inevitable that in the debate on abortion, compromise is all but impossible. For this debate involves quite literally a matter of life and death. A young life is either snuffed out or allowed to develop. There is no in between or compromise position.

I use the term "young human life" deliberately because that is in the amendment and it is most appropriate. It is unfortunate that so much of the abortion debate has come to focus on terminology. There are those who refer to unborn humans as foetus just to avoid using the term human being, which they feel is inappropriate when applied to a six or 10 week-old child in his or her mother's womb. But whether we use the term foetus or unborn baby, there is no doubt that what we are speaking of is human life, of this there can be no doubt.

I am not interested in getting involved in a numbers game. How many words have been spoken and written regarding the point at which a developing life can be called a human being? Is it six hours or six days? Some say six weeks, others say 16. Others claim that not until the baby is outside the womb can it be called a human being. All have their graphs, charts and doctors' statements to justify their view as though doctors could not disagree as strongly as anyone else on the issue. This is not a medical issue, it is an issue of moral, ethic and cultural values.

The creation of life remains one of the most profound mysteries of this world. Scientists have become better at describing that process and in rudimentary forms science can reproduce it. I have great respect for science, and I am not inclined to belittle the kind of knowledge that it yields, but for all its ability to address the "how" questions, it cannot give us the answers to the "why" questions. Science is no more qualified to pronounce judgment on the value of human life and whether or not it should be compromised than is any field of endeavour.

As my colleague from Grey—Simcoe pointed out in earlier debate, those of us who oppose abortion run the risk of perhaps being labelled as insensitive, as uncaring in regard to the heartbreaking circumstances from which all too often abortions follow. Nothing could be further from the truth, and it is not easy for me to advocate a position which I am aware could make heavier the burden being carried by people who are already heavily burdened.

The prospect of an impoverished unemployed single young woman having to cope with an unwanted pregnancy is terrible and difficult to contemplate. Suffering and misery are things much more easily considered in the abstract than faced as part of daily life and it is likely true that only those who have known it first hand can really understand it. Despite this, it seems to me to be absolutely essential to distinguish between an unwanted pregnancy on the one hand and an unwanted child on the other. At a time when childless couples yearn to share their homes and their love through adoption, I do not believe there is such a thing as an unwanted child. What is unwanted is the fear, the social stigma, the guilt, the economic burden, or just the plain inconvenience that can motivate a mother to terminate the life she is carrying. To this extent the abortion epidemic has its roots in the attitudes and values of society and the often overwhelming pressures they can place on the individual, for which we must all share responsibility.

While the values of our times will determine the course of a new human life, for better or for worse, the changing values of society have no bearing on the intrinsic value of life itself. Once that life is there, it is a fact as real as anything else in the world, and from that moment on at least two human lives are vitally affected by the course which it runs, that of the mother and that of the human infant now developing.

How often we have heard that abortion is a matter between a woman and her doctor, or that it is a medical matter only? These assertions, which are often put forward as though they were arguments merely beg the question. They pre-suppose that the infant human human life is of no intrinsic value and unworthy of consideration. This is precisely the point, however, on which the entire debate turns.

• (1620)

From the moment of conception to the moment of death, life is a seamless development guided by numerous factors ranging from genetic information to the vast multitude of experiences that comprise a lifetime. Whether human life is two weeks, two months or two years old, the spark of life that burns within that infant—that life-giving impulse—is as real, as precious, as miraculous and as sacred as the life within any of us here today.

After witnessing the horrors of this century which has seen so much life destroyed through war, famine and numerous atrocities that Governments and individuals have inflicted upon their fellow human beings, have we not learned that the deliberate termination of innocent life is not just a criminal offence, a contravention of laws? Have we not learned that it is an affront to something even greater, that sacred dimension of life in which human dignity in its most profound sense originates? When all is said and done, we still find ourselves speaking of human life. Whether we approach the question from a religious or a secular perspective, have we not yet learned that it is the most precious of all things?

Our modern-day social consciousness is preoccupied with human rights. We set up commissions and investigative committees, we pass laws and regulations, we create watch-dog agencies to ensure that that these rights are respected. We are rightly concerned with safeguarding the quality and dignity of human life, but our consciousness of the sacred dimension of human life seems to have somehow dissipated. For me, this represents an impoverishment of the human spirit. Although I fully support the motion of my colleague to have the rights of the unborn enshrined in our Constitution—Mr. Speaker, I see you signalling that my time is just about up.

In conclusion, let me say that sitting in the gallery today is my 10 year old son Kraig. On the way here, I said to him: "I'm going to speak about abortion today. What do you think?"

He said: "Well, I think all kids should have the right to live".

I agree with my son's statement. When my son was in his mother's womb, the doctor told us that we may have to consider an abortion. He asked how we felt about that. We said that we must give this child a chance to live. We gave this child a chance to live and we love him. Abortion is not right.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I am also glad to have an opportunity to speak to this resolution. I think it is important that we hear all sides of this extremely important and very emotional subject. I respect very much the views of my colleagues, even though my own may be different.

We are speaking, of course, on Motion No. 37 to amend the Constitution Act, Section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights, so that it reads as follows:

> Everyone ncluding a human foetus or unborn being has the right to life, liberty and security of the person and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice.

This is a very emotional subject and a very personal one. We have very personal and in some cases very religious views on it and I think it is extremely important that we respect the views of others. That is why I believe very much in choice. I think it is important that people make their own decisions on this matter and that we not impose our views on others.

It is clear that the real intent of this proposed amendment is to restrict access to abortions. I am sure the mover of the motion would agree with that. The Hon. Member wants to reverse Canadian Government policy which allows abortion under the Criminal Code when approved by a recognized therapeutic abortion committee of a hospital. The Hon. Member's views on this matter and the views of other Hon. Members go against the views of the majority of Canadians, but that is his right and the right of my colleagues who support his stand. Indeed, during testimony before the Private Members' Business Committee, the Hon. Member who sponsored this motion said that the only circumstances in which a woman should have access to abortion is if it could be proved beyond a reasonable doubt that the death of the mother would result if the procedure were not performed.

Before talking about restricting access to abortions, I believe we should talk about guaranteeing equal access to abortion services to which women are legally entitled under the current law. There are serious discrepancies in access to abortion services across Canada. Not all eligible hospitals have established therapeutic abortion committees and in those that have, the policy varies very much from one to the next. In 1984, of the 244 hospitals with therapeutic abortion committees, 18 did not perform any abortions while another 24 performed very few. As of June 1986, women in Prince Edward Island had no access to services in their province because the only remaining therapeutic abortion committee was dismantled. During the summer of 1986, abortion services in Newfoundland were temporarily unavailable because the only doctor on the Island willing to perform the procedure was on extended sick leave. In Alberta, women must travel long distances to obtain services.

The burden of unequal access to services to which women are legally entitled falls most heavily on rural, low-income women and on poor women who cannot afford to travel and simply do not have equal access. Unequal access means that women must resort to back room abortionists. That is what would happen if this resolution were to go through. I must say that it would not stop abortions, and stopping abortions is obviously the desire and intent of the people who support it. Abortions will continue to occur. That is the reality. However, these abortions would be illegal, back room, dangerous ones which would put the health of women at risk.

Unequal access makes a mockery of equality guarantees enshrined in our Charter of Rights. To further restrict access to abortions by amending the Constitution is, I believe, not the way to achieve what we all want, and I do think we all want to eliminate the need for abortions. Surely this should be our goal.

The prevention of unwanted pregnancies is certainly preferable to abortion. I believe we all agree with that. I would like to state right here that being pro-choice does not mean that one is in favour of abortion. This seems to be interpreted as a pro or anti-abortion issue, and that is not the case at all. I do not know of anyone who is really in favour of abortions. However, being pro-choice does mean that one respects another person's right to make her own decision based on her own circumstances.

I want to stress the point that we must get to work on prevention. Those who feel that there must be a restriction of access to abortion should be the first to work on prevention. If this resolution went through, it would not stop abortions. That is a fact of life. The only thing that will stop abortions is prevention.

Prevention requires birth-control education in schools. The whole scare over AIDS is finally beginning to make many people aware that we need a very positive family-life education program including birth-control information in the schools. We must teach young people to make responsible choices about sexual relationships. We must talk with them openly so that they are aware of the full implications of their decisions and behaviour.

Prevention means increasing funding for groups like Planned Parenthood that promote awareness about birth control and family planning. More effective prevention requires more research into reliable, safe birth-control methods. I was told the other day by an authority that the increase in abortions directly correlates with the failure in birth-control methods. The Government has cut back on research in that area, and that is one area in which funding should be increased. Those who support this resolution should agree with that. Prevention, education and research can reduce the need for abortion. Recent studies, such as those done by Planned Parenthood in Ontario, have demonstrated that public education reduces the unwanted pregnancy rate, particularly in teenagers. We have a very high incidence of adolescent pregnancies, which is a very deplorable trend. Education reduces the number of abortions and does not increase sexual irresponsibility. That is what the study shows.

We talk about prevention but we seem to talk about this question only as it relates to women. Surely men have an equal if not greater obligation to prevent unwanted pregnancies. I wish that were stressed much more.

In cases where unwanted pregnancy does occur we must make sure women have access to safe abortions, if that is the decision. We do not want to impose our decision on anyone. I do not anyway. Surely no Member wants to force desperate women to seek back room abortions with non-medical butchers. It is the basic right of any woman to make the decision about maternity. A decision to have an abortion should be a matter between a woman and her physician. This is not only the position of the NDP; it is the position espoused by the Canadian Medical Association way back in 1971. The CMA also agrees there may be justification for abortions on non-medical, socio-economic grounds. Many feel that the UN definition of health should be used in present laws.

We want to ensure that all children enter this world under the best possible circumstances, wanted and loved and cared for with adequate resources. We want to ensure adequate support services to families before and after they make a choice to have children. These support services must include affordable, accessible and quality child care. Support services must help to relieve the stresses on families which lead to their breakup. Lack of adequate income is a major cause of family stress today and certainly is a major factor in the reason that some women consider abortions. Support services must be geared to the new realities of Canadian families. In many cases both parents work, many families are headed by single parents, and more egalitarian reglationships exist between parents with respect to their parental duties. Let us work on sensible solutions to strengthen families and enable people to make responsible choices about having and caring for children.

It is true that this motion recommends that the Government consider the advisability of amending the Constitution Act. We are therefore not debating an amendment to the Constitution per se. Nevertheless, I think even those who would restrict access to abortion may wonder whether a constitutional amendment of this kind is an appropriate way to proceed. As a Private Members' Motion this proposal will receive a maximum of only five hours of debate. This is a precedent for other constitutional amendments, let us remember. Is this the amount of time we want to devote to such a motion? As it is currently worded, it would not be referred to a parliamentary committee for further study. There would be no opportunity for interested Canadians to be heard on this issue. We know many Canadians feel passionately about the issues we are discussing. Surely they should be heard on this issue.

The Hon. Member who sponsored the motion must also be aware that amending the Constitution is no easy task. Amending Section 7 would require resolution of the legislative assemblies of two-thirds of the provinces representing in the aggregate 50 per cent of the population of Canada. It is clear that regardless of what subject is being considered, if this House is going to recommend that the Government consider an amendment to the Constitution, the supreme laws of our country, five hours of debate during Private Members' Hour is not the way to proceed. Even those who support the intent of the motion must surely have problems with that and also with the wording of the proposal. I hope for that reason alone that they will vote against the motion.

Changing the wording of Section 7 of the Charter has serious implications for legislation already in place and the case law built up around that legislation. For example, the Criminal Code clearly differentiates between a human being and an unborn child. The Code states that a child becomes a human being when it has completely proceeded from the body of its mother. The law has therefore until now selected birth as the point at which the foetus becomes a person with full and independent rights. Changing the wording of the section also has serious implications for other sections of the Charter, other human rights legislation, indeed all legislation which uses the word "everyone". It is clear that amending Section 7 has serious implications for the whole legal framework already in place. For that reason alone, regardless of the position on the substantive issue here, I would hope that my friends will join my colleagues and me in the NDP in voting against this motion.

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for the opportunity of adding a few words in the debate on the motion before us today. I want to commend the Hon. Member for Grey—Simcoe (Mr. Mitges) for the motion he has put forward. It is a very important motion and I agree with its thrust.

The motion would amend Section 7 of the Charter of Rights by defining the word "everyone" in that section. It would include a human foetus or unborn human in the word "everyone" or "person", and therefore having the right to life, liberty and security of person, and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice. It is important that we know exactly who is included when we refer to "everyone" or to a "person". At present there is quite a bit of debate about this subject and our practice now with regard to abortion suggests that an unborn human being or foetus is not a person because we deprive that foetus of the right to life through the procedure of an abortion.

In concluding her remarks the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) said that this is a very important issue and therefore should not receive just five hours of debate. The Hon. Member should perhaps contact the Standing Committee on Private Members' Business, of which I am a member. She would find that this motion has been designated as a votable motion. It will receive up to five hours of debate and then there will be a mandatory vote. That is a new feature in Private Members' Business. Motions or Bills can be designated as votable, as this one today is. If the motion is adopted by the House, it would go to the appropriate committee. It would be studied and then referred back to the House for a further two hours of debate and another vote. To suggest that all we are doing on a very important topic like this is debating it for five hours is incomplete. There is more to come should the House approve the motion.

When the Special Joint Committee of the House of Commons and the Senate was studying the Charter of Rights and amendments to the Constitution in 1981, Mr. Robert Kellerman, legal counsel to CARAL, appeared before the committee and said that in his opinion the majority of Canadians do not believe the foetus to be a human person or included in the word "everyone" as suggested in this motion. Further, he drew attention to the fact that according to his view of the Criminal Code, the foetus only becomes a person once it is independent of its mother; in other words, either prematurely or at the term of the pregnancy when the foetus emerges from the mother's womb and is independent of the mother.

• (1640)

Mr. Kellerman's comments bring us to the fundamental question at hand in this matter. Is the unborn a potential human being, or a human being with potential? Contrary to Mr. Kellerman's view, it is my contention that the foetus is, from conception, a human being with potential.

My comments and consideration of this motion will involve three aspects: medical, legal and social.

I am not a doctor, but I think all of us are capable of learning from what the medical profession can teach us. One fact is that all of the information necessary for the development of each of us as a unique human being is contained in the genetic code that is present in us from the moment of conception. Nothing more ever need be added because the uniqueness of each of us—the colour of our eyes, our size and our various abilities—has already been established at that moment. This is a consideration we must take into account from the beginning.

Let us consider the foetus as a medical patient. As a result of medical treatment of the foetus itself, it is now considered as a patient for treatment. You do not look upon a foetus as a piece of the tonsil that is removed and discarded. It is now possible through operations, such as blood transfusions or corrective surgery while the foetus is still in the womb, to treat the foetus as a unique individual. In fact, medical technology has come to the point where the foetus can be removed from the womb, operated upon, and replaced so it may come to its full term.

It is remarkable that developments of neo-natal technology now allow for the viability of a foetus as early as five months after conception. This is forcing the reconsideration of Canadian legislation as well as American legislation.

American legislation on abortion is based upon a trimester system. In the first trimester, the state has really no interest in the foetus as a human being, but simply treats it as tissue. In the second trimester, the mother's health is a major consideration. In the third trimester the state takes on an interest in the well-being of the foetus due to the argument of viability, that it could now exist on its own outside the womb as a premature child with care in a hospital.

According to Canadian abortion law, it is possible, although not likely, to have an abortion from the time the mother knows she is pregnant and wishes to have the abortion until just before birth itself. Surely we must re-evaluate that, because it is totally unacceptable.

Let us consider what other countries have done. In West Germany in 1975, the Lower Court asked the Upper House and the Supreme Court to look into the question of when a foetus begins the civil right to life. The German Supreme Court was well aware of what Germany had done between 1933 and 1945, when it denied civil rights to certain groups within its society. The court wanted to take special care in responding to this question, to make sure it looked at it carefully. It called together a group of 133 scientists, geneticists, gynaecologists and others from around the world and asked them when a foetus begins the civil right to life. The answer it received is remarkable; first because it was a unanimous response by these 133 people. Second, the answer itself was remarkable: "life in the sense of historical existence of a human individual exists according to definite biological-physiological knowledge, in any case, from the fourteenth day after conception". That is even before a woman knows she is pregnant.

The reason they chose 14 days is because from the first day of conception through to the fourteenth day it is possible for the cells to divide into twins, triplets and so on.

I suggest that when we look at medical considerations we must remember some of these basic facts. All of them militate in one direction, which is that we recognize a foetus as a person having all the rights to life, liberty and security of person, as suggested in this motion.

Let us look at the legal considerations. According to current practice and precedent in Canadian law, a foetus is recognized for the purposes and right to sue for prenatal injury. In other words, a foetus has the right to inheritance and the right to sue for prenatal injury. Since the existing state of the law is that no legal rights attach to any person until that person has been born alive, then surely the right to life is the logical prior right on which all other rights such as the right to sue for prenatal injury depend. We do not give tonsils those rights when they are removed, but the person developing within the mother's womb is given those rights because they are considered a person. That is the purpose of this motion.

Since my time is almost up, let me conclude by quoting Major John Connors, health services consultant to the Alliance For Life. He says:

> Consider, if you will, the stages of life as links in a chain. Canada's pensioners, our infirm and incapacitated, our labour force, our students, our children and, even younger, our babies, are linked together, because all are human whatever might otherwise be their status. So, too, are unborn children a link in the same chain, similarly human and even more deserving of protection because of their vulnerability. Their very weakness dictates their need of the special protection of being named under Section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Human Rights and Freedoms, which we respectfully request include a provision that everyone, from conception to natural death, has the right to life.

That is the specific point that the motion is putting before us. We are dealing with human beings. All the evidence leads to that conclusion. Let us make sure that our actions and our laws do the same thing.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge—Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak with respect to Motion No. 37, which is a genuine attempt by my colleague, the Member for Grey—Simcoe (Mr. Mitges), to extend legal rights, indeed constitutional rights, to unborn people. I must say that I rise with some trepidation because the question of abortion is one of both law and morals.

However, with the election to this Parliament comes the responsibility on each of us to consider these questions, debate them, and indeed change the law at such time as it seems appropriate to the Parliament as a whole.

The alternative is conflict in the streets, as exists in so many countries right now where people are fighting and killing each other because their political process has not worked.

I thank my colleague for bringing this question before us. It is a question that affects our nation greatly.

• (1650)

As you know, Mr. Speaker, under our Criminal Code, a baby is legally a person and, therefore, protected under the law only once it is out of the mother upon birth even though the umbilical cord is not cut. Out-of-womb surgery changed that idea quite dramatically in the minds of many people, in that a child can be taken out of the womb and operated on. During that period it would have all the legal rights the rest of us have. The minute it goes back into its mother, it then loses all of those rights and can be killed by a decision of a therapeutic abortion committee upon application of the mother.

It is very clear that our laws in this area have not kept pace with the advance in medical science. That is why we have an enormous group of people who want to have changes made. The real question is, when does life begin or when does one become human and, therefore, get legal protection of the law?

As with any moral question, the debate is highly emotionally charged. The reason for that is that both the pro-life and the pro-choice groups represent a very important tradition in our country. We have a long tradition on the side of the sanctity of life. We have another long tradition of freedom of choice and the right to liberty and choice. Both of these traditions are part of our western culture, going back many, many years. We cherish both of these values, and that is what makes the issue so difficult and so much of a dilemma.

For myself, I usually start with the United Nations declaration because, I believe, increasingly more and more of our young people especially are seeing the world as an integral whole and the United Nations as a legitimate attempt by society to strike common ground. Therefore, I usually start with the United Nations declaration on the rights of the child, which is a recent document published in 1959. That document states that the child, by reason of his or her physical and mental immaturity, needs special safeguards and care, including appropriate legal protection before as well as after birth.

When does a foetus become a person? Medically we know for certain that from the moment of conception the child bears an undeniable stamp of a separate, distinct person, structurally and totally different from his or her mother, with its own blood system, nervous system and genetic code. We know that four days after conception sex can be determined. Eighteen days after conception the heart tissue begins to beat. In 43 days brain waves can be detected. By the seventh week shape is umistakably human. By 10 weeks the thyroid and adrenal glands begin to function. By 12 weeks a child kicks his or her legs, turns his or her feet, curls and fans toes and so on.

I have canvassed people in my riding very carefully for seven years since becoming a Member of Parliament. I find that the women in my riding separate roughly into three groups. There are a few women, and I must say a very, very few women, who want abortion on demand right up to the moment of natural childbirth. They believe that the day before the natural childbirth, if they do not want to have the child, they do not have to have it. I guess it would be a saline solution which would be injected which would burn the child, bringing on a miscarriage. They strongly feel they should be able to have that. However, that is just a very few women. I find that some women, a considerably larger group, believe that there should only be abortion when the mother is about to die, so it would have to be the absolute life of the mother in juxtaposition with the life of the child, and if there was a choice, the life of the mother should be chosen.

The third group, which is by far the largest group, wants birth control and not abortion. They want more research and development. They want help for young mothers. They want programs so that a pregnant woman could go in and get assistance and aid to carry that child to full term, at which time she can either put it up for adoption or decide to keep it. This group does not agree with abortion on demand. However, they do believe abortion should be available for very young women, for example, in certain instances of incest and rape and certainly in cases where the genuine health of the mother is at stake.

I find that the vast bulk of the people in my riding really fall into that category. They are not solidly pro-choice because they know there is a life there, and they are not solidly pro-life because they do see that in society, whatever its laws and principles might be, there are some situations where they themselves, despite the fact that they are good and honest Christians, Moslems, Budhists, Hindus or whatever religion, would feel that the right of the child sometimes has to give way to the right of the mother.

My own position, when I first addressed the issue superficially and quickly, was clearly pro choice. I believe now that was the easiest decision because, as a man, I have very real and deep reservations on these moral issues which primarily affect women. I think it is impossible for a man to have the sense of the terror a pregnancy can cause in women under certain circumstances. However, I must say, as I studied the issue more, as I read and thought and talked about it, my position changed. Perhaps as I get older and as I read more about the medical wonders performed, and realize just how wonderful the idea of life is, I have tended to become more pro-life than pro-choice. I have no doubt medically that life begins at conception; one cell, which I believe to be "life", divides and human form takes place very quickly. Clearly by 12 weeks it is in advanced human form and, therefore, I believe fundamentally that the current law is, after all, a human idea of the seventeenth century. Our present legal definition is really the seventeenth century legal embodiment of what life is or when life achieves legal protection. With the advance in science that we have achieved we have to bring that legal definition of when a person becomes human up to modern times. It clearly goes back some considerable distance.

I, therefore, believe the solution lies in my colleagues bringing these motions, whether it is to entrench this issue in the Constitution or place it in a Private Member's Bill to amend the Criminal Code. These are all legitimate instances. I think the best way is for a parliamentary committee to study the matter. The alternative is smashing heads on the street, and I do not think that is proper. The committee should review the evidence and hear all sides of the argument and it will have to come down with a compromise, just as the seventeenth century decision was a compromise. We need to strike a compromise for the twentieth century, and certainly into the twenty-first century. I think the rights of the child have to prevail earlier in the pregnancy than they do at the moment.

In terms of principle, I am very much pro-life. I would think a committee, given a practical, hard-nosed approach, would probably come up with a line somewhere of 10 weeks to 12 weeks. Prior to that, the rights of the mother would clearly predominate in choosing between the interests of the mother and the life of the child. After that, I would think the rights would have to extend to the child. We then need the support mechanisms to help that mother carry the child through to term. I know that will not make the pro-life people happy in terms of the extremists or the pro-choice. However, we are not in this totally for principle. I know that if that became the law we would not have 65,000 abortions. There might be 2,000 or 3,000 a year. That, to me, would save tens and tens of thousands of lives, and I could live with that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like each and every Hon. Member to remember their loved ones this weekend and remember that tomorrow is St. Valentine's Day.

The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

Pursuant to Standing Order 36(2), this order shall be dropped to the bottom of the order of precedence on the Order Paper.

It being five o'clock, this House stands adjourned until next Monday at 11 a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

PETITIONS

RIDEAU HALL—PUBLIC'S ACCESS TO GROUNDS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and privilege of presenting a petition signed by several constituents and visitors to the National Capital area. The undersigned wish to present a grievance; whereas the decision to close Rideau Hall grounds was made by the National Capital Commission, the Department of Public Works, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and the Office of the Governor General without prior notice and that the closure of this attractive and tranquil park affects thousands of visitors to the capital from across the country who held Canada's uniquely accessible Rideau Hall as a symbol of the trust, openness and democracy of which Canadians are so justly proud; and whereas area residents from the entire National Capital region who have used and enjoyed the grounds of Rideau Hall, recognizing the security concerns that prompted the closure decision, cannot accept a blanket closure of the 120-acre park to public access, wherefore the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to open the decision for consultation with a group of citizens, representative of the large and growing opposition, in order that a modus vivendi can be be created that would satisfy the Government and the public.

REQUEST TO WITHDRAW TARIFF ON ENGLISH LANGUAGE BOOKS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): I have several petitions with respect to the tariff on books. These are from residents of British Columbia and many of the other provinces across Canada. The petitioners wish to present a grievance common to themselves; whereas the Government of Canada has imposed a retaliatory tariff on imported books in the English language which has limited the access of Canadians to literature and information; and whereas the tariff has little negative effect on the publishing industry in the United States yet penalizes Canada's consumers, book publishers, booksellers, distributors and Canada's culture; and whereas rising book prices have placed a strain on the book acquisition programs and policies of our nation's public and specialized libraries, the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to rescind this tariff which threatens irreparable harm to the Canadian book industry and compromises federal policy on cultural industries in respect of free trade negotiations.

REQUEST FOR COMPREHENSIVE CHILD CARE SYSTEM

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey—White Rock—North Delta): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I have the honour to present a petition which is certified correct as to form and content. The petitioners state that whereas the Conservative Government has recognized at the time of the Annual Conference of First Ministers in November of 1986, that child care is a priority measure, ensuring the support and strengthening of the Canadian family and promoting women's economic equality; and whereas the postponement to March 31, 1987 of the tabling of the report of the Special Parliamentary Committee on Child Care suggests it is possible that the Conservative Government will not set aside funds in its next Budget for the development of adequate child care services in answer to the current needs of Canadian families, your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to negotiate and sign by the end of 1987 a federal provincial agreement which provides a detailed framework for a comprehensive child care system. The petition is duly signed by 31 residents.

RESEARCH—OPPOSITION TO CUT-BACKS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of a number of electors who call upon Parliament to rescind the funding cut-backs to the National Research Council, including all consequent terminations and cut-backs in research activities and to provide funding for the space program from sources other than the NRC budget, or any presently existing scientific programs, in the development of national policy for research, science and technology, based on a target of 2.5 per cent of GNP devoted to research and development.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition from Winnipeg, Manitoba, which calls upon Parliament to reject amendments to the Patent Act which will increase the costs of prescription drugs for Canadians.

I have petitions from Windsor, Ontario which plead that amendments to the Patent Act be rejected by Parliament. There are 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21 petitions in total.

• (1110)

As well, I have another 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15 petitions from Saskatchewan representing some 3,000 people who voice their anger at the Government for tampering with the Patent Act in a way which will increase the price of patent drugs.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

FREE VOTE—PROCEDURE FOR DEBATE

On the Order: Government Notices of Motions.

February 12, 1987—The Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council:

That this House supports, in principle, the reinstatement of capital punishment and directs that a special committee on reinstatement, composed of 15 members, be established, hold hearings and make its final report to the House no later than three (3) months following the adoption of this motion, such report to provide recommendations on:

(a) which offence or offences should carry the death penalty, and in what circumstances;

(b) which method or methods should be used to carry out the penalty of death, and in what circumstances;

That, pursuant to Standing Order 107(1), this special committee be hereby appointed as the committee to prepare and bring in a Bill no later than three months following the adoption of this motion, founded on the committee's recommendations on (a) and (b) above; such a Bill shall be the object of a separate and distinct report of the special committee, and such a report shall be its final report;

That such Bill, when reported from such special committee to the House, be deemed pursuant to Standing Order 107(1) to have been introduced and stand on the Order Paper, in the name of the special committee chairman, for first reading at the next sitting of the House; and that subsequent House stages of the Bill be considered under "Government Orders", with the Bill standing under the heading "Government Business"; and that, when the said Bill has been read a second time, it shall stand referred to a legislative committee;

That the Striking Committee be empowered to name the Members of the special committee, provided that once the Striking Committee report is laid upon the Table, it shall be deemed concurred in;

That the special committee have the power to sit while the House is sitting and during periods when the House stands adjourned;

That the special committee be empowered to report from time to time and send for persons and papers, and to print such papers and evidence from time to time as may be ordered by the committee and to retain the services of expert, technical, professional and clerical staff;

That the special committee be empowered to adjourn from place to place inside Canada and that, when deemed necessary, the appropriate staff accompany the committee;

That a quorum of the special committee be eight (8) members for any vote, resolution or other decision; and that the chairman be authorized to hold meetings to receive evidence and authorize the printing thereof whenever six (6) members are present;

That any substitution of membership on the special committee be made pursuant to Standing order 94(4); and

That, notwithstanding the usual practices of this House, if the House is not sitting when the special committee is ready to issue its final report and the said Bill, the special committee shall present its report and the Bill to the House by filing them with the Clerk of the House provided that the report shall then be deemed to have been laid upon the Table, and the Bill shall then be deemed, pursuant to Standing Order 107(1), to have been introduced at the first sitting of the House thereafter and to stand on the Order Paper in the name of the special committee chairman, for first reading at the next sitting of the House; and that subsequent House stages of the Bill be considered under "Government Orders", with the Bill standing under the heading "Government Business".

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 24(2), this Notice of Motion standing on the Order Paper in the name of the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council (Mr. Mazankowski) stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under Government Orders later this day or at the next sitting of the House.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Friday, February 13, consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-38, an Act respecting the reorganization and divestiture of Teleglobe Canada, be now read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Ms. McDonald (p. 3435).

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, once again I draw to the attention of Hon. Members the usual delaying amendment put forward by members of the New Democratic Party. I would have thought that the New Democratic Party would have gotten its act together sooner and realized that these delaying techniques of motion after motion really do not accomplish anything in the democratic process.

The Bill before us represents the difference in philosophy between the Progressive Conservative Party and the philosophy of the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party. It is our belief that individuals, in their self interest and the combination of individuals working together in their self interest, will do the most good collectively for the development of all people and the development of our nation. It is the belief of members of the Opposition that the state, representing the citizens, is best able to look after the citizens. We have seen how that works in this country and in others. It is clear that the statism advocated by the New Democratic Party, in particular, and sometimes by the Liberal Party, does not work to create the efficiencies required by a nation.

We believe in market competition. We believe that the market creates the most efficient allocation of the resources of the country.

Mr. Waddell: Why are you creating a monopoly here, then?

Mr. Blenkarn: The Member opposite and members of his Party believe in the state. They believe that the state should look after issues. They believe the state can best control things. They believe that the state, through the bureaucrats in the state, can best direct how the efficiency of the market-place or other efficiencies should be directed. We believe that the market-place, represented by entrepreneurship, giving individuals the opportunity to do what they as individuals want to do, and risking their money, creates the greatest advances in science, technology, manufacturing, distribution and trade. That advance is best for us all.

Members opposite believe that we are somehow in a static society and that the pie will never get any bigger. Members opposite believe that the state is the best apparatus of society to divide the pie more equally. Of course, what happens is that the pie becomes smaller and smaller.

• (1120)

We are now considering the Teleglobe Bill. The Opposition says, "Teleglobe is making all kinds of money, why don't you keep it?" They fail to realize that Teleglobe may be making money today, but it requires the continual injections of new entrepreneurial spirit, new technology, and new investment in order to make it grow and be competitive. If Teleglobe stopped growing and doing new things today, in five years Teleglobe would not make any money and it would be out of business. To a large extent, it depends on its cable. How long will cable for the transmission of messages be valued? When will cable cease to be the method of moving communication? Teleglobe has many new things that it must do. It must be entrepreneurial, and venturesome. There is one thing that the state is not, it is not venturesome. What we have to do today is make sure that Teleglobe is a successful company, and is given the opportunity to take advantage of the new technologies, the new outlooks, and the new ways of handling its mandate.

We believe that that can best be done by individual ownership. That is why in this Bill we have made sure that the employees of Teleglobe can buy into the company at a discount. I do not understand the Opposition's mentality when it says that this part of the Bill is wrong. We believe that if individuals own the work within the scope of society, they will have an interest in making sure that we have a free society, because they will have something to protect. When the state owns all of the goods, services, property, and companies then there is nothing for the individual to protect because it is not his. Therefore, we say that this Bill is a watershed type Bill between state ownership and individual ownership.

Mr. Cassidy: You know that you exaggerate.

Mr. Blenkarn: We believe it is important to cut down the size of Government, and we have been successful in cutting down its size. Every time we are able to get the Government out of an activity, we say that the Government is better off. We say that we as Canadians are better off to have these activities in the hands of individuals.

Mr. Cassidy: Getting out of pensions, getting out of medicare, is that what you want to do? Is that the type of policy that you have? Get Government out of helping people, and get equality in this country.

Mr. Blenkarn: My friend says get Government out of helping people, as if Government was important. Does the Hon. Member not realize that people help people? You cannot see Government except in its bureaucracy, its big buildings, its regulations, and its red tape. That is the type of state that they want.

Mr. Cassidy: The Hon. Member favours an end to medicare, an end to pensions. He does not think that we should support post-secondary education.

An Hon. Member: Be quiet, Cassidy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. There will be an opportunity for Members' questions and comments, after the Hon. Member finishes his speech.

Mr. Blenkarn: I really do not mind them heckling me, because they know that we are saying some things that are true. They know that we are cutting them to the bone. They are the new dinosaur party. They believe in big Government, big state enterprises, and the collective, not individual freedom, democracy, private ownership, and freedom of the individual.

Since we have taken office we have accomplished a number of things. We have completed the sale of the Northern Transportation Company Ltd. To a large extent, we have sold and disposed of 23 million shares of Canada Development Corporation. I point out that we sold those for $11.50 a share. The market does not believe that they are worth $11.50 a share at this point, but that was a very worthwhile sale for the people of Canada. We have disposed of Canadian Arsenals Ltd. We have sold the CN Route, which was a losing trucking enterprise, to individuals who think that they can make money at trucking. That will keep more people employed, and it will move goods more cheaply. We have sold Pêcheries Canada Inc., a co-operative, for $5 million, subject to some adjustments. We have sold Canadair to Bombardier. We have sold our interest in Nanisivik Mines Ltd. In this Bill we have sold Teleglobe Canada.

Our aim and objective is to get the Government out of the business field to the greatest possible extent. The Government cannot work in business; it has too many conflicting objectives. When it goes into a commercial enterprise it has the objective of trying to make a dollar. On the other hand, its other objective is to try to make sure that some particular social good is accomplished. When a board of directors has those two conflicting mandates, usually what happens is the corporation does not operate as profitably and as aggressively as it might. Our belief is that if we can get Government out of the issue and, on a tender basis, buy from the private market-place those things that are necessary for the development of the social causes and problems of the country, we will accomplish a great deal more than having the state own enterprises involved.

I wish to address this particular deal for a moment. Some people have said that this is a deal where the minnow swallows the whale. In this case we have a situation where a relatively small company is taking over this company called Teleglobe. It is taking over Teleglobe with some pretty impressive backers. It has the backing of the National Bank, some very successful venture capital companies, the backing of the Caisse de Dépôt et Placement du Québec, and the backing of competent management.

The offer that was made and was examined independently by Dominion Securities, and by a very capable board in the Canada Development Investment Corporation. That board came to the conclusion that the offer by Memotec that we are considering today is an offer that is a good for Canada.

It is a good offer on a number of grounds. First, the price is a pretty fair price. We could have received more for the asset if we had given it to a consortium of the telephone companies in order that they could have preserved their monopoly. We could have given it to CN-CP and they could have put it together and controlled overseas communication. We could have forgotten about the Competition Act, and about the fact that we need new, aggressive action in technology development. Perhaps we could have received more money that way. The fact is that this was the best offer that falls within the concepts of the Competition Act and it is to an independent, separate, new company that, on a new basis, can handle this sale. It is a good transaction as opposed to one that is transferring the activity over to another regulated body, and extending a monopoly position.

Second, the transaction contemplates some competition in the field of transmission. It certainly contemplates that if the licence is to continue, there will have to be a 13.5 per cent cut in overseas telephone rates and a 10 per cent cut in telex rates by 1988. It also contemplates that the charges which the company will be able to levy will have to be no more than 2 per cent above the average rate charged by Bell and BC Tel. There is some real control on the prices the company can charge for its services.

• (1130)

Aside from that type of control, we must remember that we live in an age of increasing technology. Despite regulation, the company will have to be prepared to compete in that new technology. This is a small world, and it is getting smaller. Other countries in the world have satellites, and satellite communication is possible. No matter how hard we try, we are not able to prevent people from using that technology. The CRTC and some people involved in broadcasting would like to prevent people from using a dish to collect television signals. They have not been very successful in that regard. I suggest that they will not be successful as the technology becomes more readily available and more reasonable in cost.

Looking at the whole picture, despite the present monopoly-type arrangement concerning transmission overseas by telephone companies and the like, the company will not be able to maintain that position forever. If the company's rates are not kept competitive, others will install and use communications systems which are more competitive.

The deal must be commended. The Government has been able to ensure that individual employees will be protected, particularly their pension rights. Often we see takeovers of companies where pension arrangements are somehow slithered by and the employees wind up with something very much different from what they had when they were working for their former employer.

Also from the point of view of the employee, this is a situation where in a sense a relatively small company is taking over a relatively large organization. If this were a situation where Bell Canada was taking over Teleglobe, it may well have been a situation where employees could be replaced, or there might be situations of efficiency which would cause the replacement of people. This is a situation where the employees are protected and looked after from a pension point of view and from a job point of view. As I mentioned earlier, even more important, they will be given the opportunity to become more personally involved with the right to buy up to 5 per cent of the stock at a 10 per cent discount.

The Bill should not be delayed. It should be expedited. Is there any reason to hold it up? Is there any real reason to say that the Government must be involved in owning telecommunications? Not at all. Let us get the country back on the free road. Let us get the Bill passed.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I distinctly heard the Hon. Member, who is my colleague on the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, saying some things which I think most of his colleagues in the Conservative Party would repudiate. He was saying "the less government, the better; the less government intervenes in people's lives, the better". He became quite agitated when I suggested that he was advocating the Government get out of medicare, that the Government get out of providing old age pensions for older Canadians, and that the Government, in fact, get out of being involved in a number of different social services which provide the basis for a humane and compassionate society.

I am really rather concerned. We have heard about the re-emergence of a kind of Monday club among back-benchers in the Progressive Conservative caucus. Their feeling seems to be that there is great support out there among the public and that if only these views were to be put to the fore by the Government, somehow their standing in the opinion polls would rise from the current abysmal level of 23 per cent. Perhaps those are the Hon. Member's views. Perhaps he is suggesting or advocating the privatization of medical care insurance and hospital insurance, returning to the situation which exists in the United States where half the people who are homeless are in that situation because they were uninsured and were hit by heavy medical care expenses. This is the kind of dog-eat-dog society about which the Hon. Member seems to be talking.

I should like to ask him to be perhaps more precise and to repudiate those views which I do not think are the views of Canadians as a whole. I certainly hope they are not the views of the Progressive Conservative caucus, even those who subscribe to the punitive Monday club which is being re-established.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, here he is again, the finance critic of the New Democratic Party. He knows he is wrong on the Teleglobe Bill, so he raises a great big ogre indicating the Progressive Conservative Party will somehow interfere with medicare. What absolute nonsense. We are dealing with a commercial corporation which is profiting or in the business of telecommunications, running a cable system across the Atlantic. Suddenly he says, "By gosh, if you do that, you are going to do medicare next". Let us get realistic.

We have a medical care insurance scheme to which the federal Government contributes. It is run on a provincial basis. It is universal and generally applicable. It works well. It has produced medical care and coverage in Canada at a per centage of cost in GNP at less than that of the United States. We would be foolish to change that.

Running the telex across the Atlantic is not a matter which really affects the life, health, or well-being of Canadians. Accept that we want efficiencies, ownership, privacy, available growth in new technology, and the entrepreneurship which we know will build the country. To say that we cannot have those things because somehow they might interfere with medicare is to stretch the imagination far beyond all realism.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment and a question for the Hon. Member. Incidentally, it has been said by many Members in the House that it is always a pleasure to listen to the Hon. Member. Although I do not agree with just about all he said, he is always straightforward and we know where he stands. We all appreciate that.

Let us get down to brass tacks and let me ask him a question to which he can respond very honestly and sincerely. There is an old conservative principle, is there not, that one should not repair something if it is working? The Minister said that the company was well managed and provided good service in an important area. Certainly international telecommunications is an important area in the new kind of world in which we live. It is making $50 million a year for Canadians, which can go toward the deficit. Why are we selling it? What is the reason? In my speech I went through all the reasons which the Minister cited. One was synergy, whatever that is. I concluded that it was some sort of magic. Would he please explain what is this magic? Why is the Government selling a government corporation which is so profitable and well managed? I put to him that it is simply for an ideological reason and that he is the ideologue, not us. We are being practical in this situation. He is supporting the sale of the corporation because he thinks that it is part of the right-wing agenda and that it should be sold on principle. That is ideology, and in this case it is foolish ideology.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I am glad my friend raised this issue. I think it goes to the essence of the reason for the sale. While it is true that the company presently is earning a return based on an amount somewhere between 8 per cent and 10 per cent on the money, and while it is true that that is now a little less than our long term borrowing rate, it is also true that this company is exposed to the greatest change in technology that we are likely to see as the world develops. In our view it is, therefore, important that we have in charge of that technology the most adventuresome, the most aggressive people that we can get to be prepared to invest, take chances and do the things necessary to exploit the oncoming new technologies.

We could keep the company and continue to get, as my friend mentions, perhaps $50 million a year. That would not last very long unless there were some massive changes in the structure and organization of the company in the future. The way to handle a situation like this is to sell when the situation looks good, when the company is making a profit because that is when it will sell and sell for the best price. If we were to hang on and hang on, we might well wind up not having a company to sell. It is far better to sell a profitable company when all is going well.

Mr. Althouse: Would the Hon. Member explain to the House, Mr. Speaker, how this new company, which was established at a very high debt—with a very small company buying a company that had something over $100 million in cash, if the business reports are accurate—carrying the kind of debt load it now carries, will be in a better position to adapt to new technology than the existing company? The new company carries a huge debt load into the operation. The existing company had cash on hand. I fail to see how a debt-ridden company will be more able to provide the kind of new technology than was the existing company.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, what my friend fails to recognize is that the short-term borrowings from the National Bank are short-term borrowings in order for the acquisition to take place. The company obviously cannot go anywhere and carry this long-term debt. Indeed, it is not long-term debt but short-term financing to complete the transaction. The Government of Canada is getting cash. What the Member fails to recognize is that the sponsors of Memotec, a venture capital company, are not there to lever the company up, they are there to sell it off and sell shares to the public and others. I suspect that the company will do that as the transaction proceeds. Obviously, in the Government's sale to Memotec of the assets of Teleglobe, we are not specifying how Memotec does its long-term financing. The company has certainly indicated that it will not be carrying on with the large debt basis that appeared to be apparent in the original offer.

Mr. James: Mr. Speaker, I have a question in connection with something raised last Friday by the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). The Member from Vancouver—Kingsway asked a number of times in his speech why sell Teleglobe? I am a little confused because I know the Member is very interested in workers and employees, as are we all. Would the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) comment regarding privatization in that it encourages individual Canadians to take part in ownership of companies through equity investment? I wish I were an employee of Teleglobe looking at the kind of profit it has; it would be a tremendous opportunity for me. Memotec is offering Teleglobe Canada employees the opportunity to purchase 5 per cent of the equity at a cost of 90 per cent of the price paid by Memotec with the benefit of interest-free loans repayable in five years. I would be interested to hear from the Member from Mississauga South, with the kind of business experience he has, what that will mean to employees.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, it means they are going to make some money, if employees buy stock at 10 per cent below the original price. But they will obviously have to have some imputed taxes on the interest-free loan because nothing is interest free in terms of the taxman. This though is the way things ought to go. It is important in our society that we have as broad an ownership of production and distribution of goods as possible. The more Canadians who are owners, as opposed to tenants, as opposed to just workers for some large monolithic international or multinational corporation, whatever you might want to call it, the better.

Mr. Waddell: I will give you my BCRIC shares. I have six of them.

Mr. Blenkarn: It is imperative in a free society that Canadians have a piece of the action as individuals. In this particular transaction the workers are getting an opportunity directly to have a piece of the action at a discount.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate. The Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker).

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have just a few words on this Bill. My interest was sparked a few moments ago when I heard the hon. gentleman across the way refer to the trans-Atlantic cable, that is the cable that runs across the Atlantic Ocean. This cable takes whatever message you feed into it across the Atlantic. When you pick up your telephone here in Ottawa and you want to call Newfoundland or Nova Scotia, the transmission is carried by Bell Telephone and into the provincial telephone networks across the country. But when you want to call across the Atlantic, the transmission not only goes by Bell Telephone and over the lines of the telephone companies as far as Newfoundland, it is taken over by another company altogether. What we are talking about here is the trans-Atlantic link. We are talking about that owner of the cable, of the transmission across the Atlantic, being passed from Government hands into the hands of the private sector. That is as I understand it.

I am trying to pick some sense out of all the gobbledegook that some members are talking about today concerning financial transactions, shares, profits and everything else. It all boils down to the fact that you have private enterprise taking over a cable that is a monopoly. There is no other transmission from Canada across the Atlantic that I know of. There is in the United States, of course. The hon. gentleman is talking about a telex. That is a hundred years ago.

I rise in the debate because Newfoundland is the key link here. All cables go from Newfoundland across the Atlantic. That is the importance of Newfoundland. When you are talking about the telegraph, that is not the telephone. A hundred years ago or so the telegraph went from Heart's Content, Newfoundland right across the Atlantic over to Great Britain—from Heart's Content next to Heart's Desire next to Heart's Delight, and then the next place to that was where I was born, a place called Green Harbour, Trinity Bay. What is important is that the cable starts from Newfoundland and goes right across the Atlantic. What we are talking about today is not the telegraph but the telephone lines that were put across the ocean. The telephone lines went right across the Atlantic in the year 1956, to my recollection. They came into Clarenville, Newfoundland, and went right across the Atlantic to connect up somewhere in Ireland. We know that the Coast Guard has a ship that does checks on the cable across the Atlantic throughout the year. To my recollection, there is one ship, the Sir Humphrey Gilbert, that does that cable check. It has some pretty sophisticated machinery on board including small mini-subs to check that particular cable.

We are not talking about anything complex. Hon. Members love to make things complex. When she announces a sale, the Minister wants to complicate matters. She does not even mention what is actually being sold to the private sector.

I suppose it boils down to whether or not the Government has a philosophy that the private sector should actually control the only communications monopoly between Canada and the other side of the Atlantic. The Bill boils down to whether or not private enterprise should be able, whenever it wishes after five years, to jack up the rates and do whatever it wants. In the Bill there is a 13 per cent cut, or something like that, along with controlled management of the private sector for the next five years. After five years it is open for the private sector to do whatever it pleases. That is what it all boils down to after reading through all the financial speeches we have heard in the House concerning this Bill.

There is nothing strange about the Government's philosophy to sell Teleglobe, a very profitable outfit. It made $80 million or $85 million, give or take $10 million or $20 million last year. It made $110 million, give or take $10 million or $20 million two years ago. It made over $100 million this year, give or take $10 million or $20 million. The question is not only whether the Government should have sold Teleglobe to the private sector, but if the private sector should have control over the one link across the Atlantic. It also boils down to the sale price.

Let me first deal with the monopoly aspect of this matter. Should the Government have sold this company to the private sector and should the private sector be allowed to control the only link across the Atlantic? The Canadians I know best think it is unfortunate that the communications and telephone system in Canada is, to a very great degree, in the hands of monopolies in each province. When I receive a complaint from a lady who says, "I did not telephone London, England, but I have a bill here from Bell or from Newfoundland Telephone or New Brunswick Telephone or Maritime Tel. I did not make that phone call, but I am being charged for it", what am I supposed to do? The telephone company has a monopoly. It says, "You either pay up or we disconnect your telephone, and if we disconnect your telephone you cannot get one back unless you pay up", and that is for something the lady does not owe. It is her word against the word of the telephone company. That is the danger inherent in monopolies.

If a person had oil delivered to his house and said that he did not receive the particular amount of oil the oil company is charging him for, then he would have a choice. He could go to another oil company. With electricity and telephones, it is different. People do not have a choice.

As far as ordinary Canadians are concerned—and by that, I mean people who do not buy RRSPs—the unfortunate aspect of the monopoly of the telephone company is something to be frowned upon. It is sometimes disgraceful to see how the telephone companies in Canada treat people; it is disgusting. The telephone companies need a lesson in something, I do not know what, because what they say goes whether we like it or not.

I found it strange, and I still find it strange today—perhaps Members of the House can tell me why, because I never could figure out why—that when there was a challenge to the monopoly of Bell Telephone, the Government refused the challenge. I am talking about CN-CP's application for long-distance charges. It was refused because in the United States, where competition was allowed, rates would eventually go up. There appeared to be some unity here in this House. The Bell Telephone unions said that we could not break the monopoly, because if we did Bell employees might lose their jobs. When I think about that poor lady who did not telephone London, England, day but got charged for such a call, I have to say that the monopoly should be broken or the telephone companies should behave themselves and smarten up.

There is a motion presently before the Chamber for a three-month hoist proposed by a member of the New Democratic Party. As I understand it, the motion would allow the securities people to investigate something that has to do with an increase in Memotec's share cost. At least that is what the mover of the motion put as the reason for moving the motion. As far as I could find out, Memotec's stocks appear to have increased dramatically. I suppose this is because of the prospect of its purchasing Teleglobe, this monopoly that goes across the ocean. I suppose any company's stock would increase if it were to take over Teleglobe. I also notice that Memotec is the owner of a company in the United States, or is it the other way around—I do not know which. It appears as if the company has just as many employees in the United States as it has in Canada. It certainly must be a growing outfit if it has that kind of control.

As far as the Bill is concerned, it boils down to whether or not the Government should have sold the company for $488 million when its profits were running to about $100 million a year. Just imagine, Mr. Speaker, if you were able to purchase a company for $488 million while the profits of the company ranged at around $100 million a year. That is quite a remarkable sales contract. That would be something at which one would really have to jump. This is the sort of thing the private sector wants. It can watch the money roll in. Millions upon millions of dollars of profits are guaranteed because the purchaser will get his money back in four and a half or five years anyway, and then the rest of it, those few hundred million dollars a year, is all gravy.

• (1200)

Why did the Government of Canada do this? There is a very good reason. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) wants to stand up in this House on Wednesday and announce to everyone that he has trimmed the deficit down to—notice I say "down to"—$32 billion. Not $32 million or $32,000 or $3,200, but $32 billion. Half a billion for this outfit brings it down to $32 billion. That from a Government that was going to decrease the deficit. We have had the highest deficits in Canadian history since that Government came to power. If you add up the national debt since Confederation who is responsible for over half? That Government over there.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Manly: He says it with a straight face, too.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): He worked on the speech all weekend. Just quiet down.

Mr. Baker: What is true is that if you consider the $32 billion deficit we will hear about on Wednesday. That is the reason for this sale.

The Minister put Fishery Products in the private sector in return for about $100 million. Then we have this sale. In other words, the Government is passing over to the private sector something that should be controlled by the public sector, to some degree. That is the rationale behind the Bill. When Hon. Members are addressing the Bill they should remember that we are talking about communications cables which go across the Atlantic from Newfoundland. That is why this Bill is so important.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments?

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, I was not planning to speak now, but some of the comments by the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) prompt me to respond. Perhaps we should call him the Hon. Member for Heart's Desire. He made a couple of statements which are just so erroneous that we do not want to leave them on the public record uncorrected.

First, I guess he does not understand how the international telecommunications system works. Teleglobe does not bill the customer, it is done by B.C. Tel or Bell Telephone or the Newfoundland Telephone Company. If it should happen that an individual was charged for a call they had not made their redress is to their local telephone company. I have had that experience myself. Contrary to what the Hon. Member says, I can assure him that I have found the telephone companies' customer service departments extremely co-operative. They will go to the extent of phoning the number that you say you did not call in order to check whether a call was made. They will try to track down who might have made the call. I find they really go out of their way to try and make sure people are not incorrectly billed for long-distance calls. It is extremely unfair to cast that kind of aspersion about employees of telephone companies. They are really trying to give good service to the public of Canada.

As well, perhaps the Hon. Member has not read the Bill and is not aware that after five years Teleglobe will be controlled by the CRTC. There will be control over all the rates it charges. It will not be able to charge unfair rates. In fact, there will be greater control than there is now.

Finally we have the comments made by the Hon. Member concerning the deficit. Those comments are just so far out of line they are totally reprehensible. The Hon. Member knows it was his Government that started the galloping spending which eventually hit the Liberal Government like a plague. This Government inherited that situation and for the first time since the Korean War things have been turned around. That was done by this Government. If you look at the record, we actually have for the first time, on the basis of income and spending, a balanced Budget. We are looking forward to Wednesday and hearing about the excellent efforts our Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is making to bring down the deficit started by the Government of which the Hon. Member was a part. The deficit is certainly not the responsibility of this Government.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Belsher: Don't confuse him with the facts.

Mr. Baker: The hon. gentleman says don't confuse her with the facts.

Some Hon. Members: You!

Mr. Baker: I will try not to. As far as the billing issue is concerned, I understand the situation perfectly. The Hon. Member is correct that you are billed by the local company for trans-Atlantic calls. The cable outfit actually takes about 25 per cent. It is 25 per cent originating, 25 per cent carriage, and about 50 per cent on the other end. As to my remarks concerning the telephone companies, I stand by them. I do not think it should be necessary that someone should have to call a Member of Parliament to try and get justice from a telephone company that will not take the trouble to prove that the person incurred a charge. In the cases I have seen it has been the general public who have been right, not the telephone company. There is a lot to be desired from the telephone companies in these matters. I have the cases to prove it and I am sure other Members do as well. In addition, there are people out there who do not call Members of Parliament about things like this. There are people out there who do not call politicians. I do not know many in my area, but there are some who do not do it, but just accept the situation and pay a charge for which they were not responsible. They just let it rest with one little complaint to the telephone company.

So far as control of Teleglobe by the CRTC is concerned, the Hon. Member is absolutely right. In fact, she should have mentioned there is a reduction of, I believe, 13 per cent in charges for five years. However, after the five years that is it. As things stand now it is a Crown corporation. We have control now if we wish to have it. However, we will not have control after the five years are up. It is a marvellous acquisition for Memotec. The company should be congratulated for getting Teleglobe so cheaply. I notice that the Chairman of the Board of Memotec is a fellow by the name of Eric Baker. I would say he is a pretty intelligent fellow and maybe he is from Newfoundland.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) whether baggage isn't lost as often on Air Canada because it is a Crown Corporation. And I may remind the Hon. Member that a monopoly will be regulated by the CRTC. Is he telling us that CRTC regulation of monopoly companies is not a good idea?

[English]

Mr. Baker: I believe I understood the first question was whether or not less baggage is lost on Air Canada because it is a Crown corporation.

Mr. Boudria: So much for eloquence.

Mr. Baker: I do not know. It is an interesting question. The hon. lady is bringing up the whole question of Crown corporations. She firmly believes in the private sector. She is convinced that the Government should have its fingers in absolutely nothing. She believes that everything should be passed over to the private sector.

• (1210)

With regard to the CRTC, as I mentioned earlier, there will be only five years of control by the Government of Canada. After that it is open to the private sector. The Minister would say that it is open to the private sector. In other words, if the costs get too high, Bell Canada or Newfoundland Telephone will put another cable across the Atlantic. I doubt that very much.

Mr. James: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make some comments with regard to the intervention of the Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker). With regard to regulation, I would like to read him some comments by Jean-Claude Delorme, President and Chief Executive Officer of Teleglobe Canada. He said that for Teleglobe the biggest change arising from the sale is impending regulation of its business by the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunicaions Commission. He says that although Teleglobe has never been directly regulated by domestic bodies since its creation in 1949, the change does not worry him. The rules of the game will be different, but they are equipped to deal with it. Regulation means Teleglobe will have to stay within an allowed rate of return on average equity, that is, profit after tax, divided by the total sharehold equity. Mr. Delorme expects that Teleglobe will have to lower the rates it charges to domestic telephone companies and will stay within that ceiling which, in turn, will reduce its revenue. He goes on to say that they are in favour of regulating Teleglobe's rate of return because they believe its rate have been too high.

Kenneth Englehart, chief counsel of the Canadian Business Telecommunication Alliance, said they are in favour of regulating Teleglobe's rate of return because they believe its rates have been too high.

Therefore, the Member for Gander—Twillingate may be slightly misinformed on this situation. We are moving toward regulation where there was never regulation before. There will be a reduction of rates, including reduced costs for overseas telecommunications.

Point of Order—Mr. McKinnon

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I do not know Jean-Claude Delorme, but he would, of course, say that. What would anyone expect him to say? He is obviously going to keep his job with Teleglobe. Jean-Claude cannot really say what is on his mind after Teleglobe has been bought by this private company. That is all we would expect from Jean-Claude. Jean-Claude is on good terms with Eric Baker, the chairman of the company.

With regard to the other comments made by the spokesman for telecommunications, he is going to say that because he represents all the telephone companies which have to pay the rates. We can understand why he is saying that. However, I would be interested to know what he will say in five years when all of these restrictions are removed from Teleglobe, as we know it today. Watch where the rates go then.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for my colleague, the Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker). I would first like to congratulate him on his very excellent remarks. We always hear this calibre of remarks from him.

The Government has a bent toward privatization. I could disagree with the principle of privatization in all cases, but I have a particular problem with this case. The Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) told us earlier that one of the reasons Teleglobe is being sold is to reduce the deficit. What does my colleague think of a Government which not only wants to sell the Crown jewels, but wants to sell them to pay for its maladministration?

Mr. Baker: No comment, Mr. Speaker. I agree with him.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments is now terminated. Before I recognize the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) on debate, I will recognize the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) on a point of order.

TABLING OF PETITIONS—NUMBER OF SIGNATURES

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order which refers to the tabling of petitions. The Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) put on his usual theatrical performance while tabling petitions this morning. He said he was tabling a petition with some 3,000 signatures on it. There were actually 2,049 signatures on it. How long will we have to put up with this gross exaggeration? I admit the NDP are working hard to get these petitions. They are doing a great job of bamboozling everyone and getting them to sign petitions. However, they could be more honest when they table them in the House of Commons. Otherwise, whenever we hear the Member for Windsor—Walkerville quote a figure, we will have to say that he is probably exaggerating by 50 per cent.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

TELEGLOBE CANADA REORGANIZATION AND DIVESTITURE ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-38, an Act respecting the reorganization and divestiture of Teleglobe Canada, be now read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Ms. McDonald (p. 3435).

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-38 is an example of doctrine. It certainly is not an example of good business sense. I am going to uncap some of the arguments which have been put forward by the government side. It must be made clear right off the bat that we are dealing with a monopoly. Teleglobe is a monopoly and under the Tory's proposal it will continue to be a monopoly.

The key argument put forward by Members, such as the Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), is that it is better for a few people to own something than all Canadians. Last year's profit ran close to $100 million. Each of the 25 million Canadians benefited by only a couple of thousand dollars. No one will dispute that. However, the Member for Mississauga and the Government claim that it is better for a few hundred or a few thousand Canadians, who have enough money to buy stocks and participate in a transaction like this, to divvy up $50 million or $100 million among a much smaller and more select group.

That is a doctrinaire argument. It is an argument by the rich for the rich to get richer. It has nothing to do with the significant point that Teleglobe is a monopoly. It was set up, not only to provide cable service, as the Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) said, but to provide satellite communication for Canadians throughout the world. It had set rates.

Government Members are trying to paint the management and workers at Teleglobe as a group of faceless, semi-competent or perhaps incompetent bureaucrats who have no entrepreneurial spirit, do not understand business, do not know how to do anything, and are designed to fail. They say that is why the Government has to get rid of this Crown jewel, one of the most profitable of Canadian Crown corporations.

From time to time we must bare the face of some of the ideologues on the government side. As an example, last week on my way back from British Columbia I met a Tory Member in the airport. I asked whether he was taking the direct flight to Ottawa. He said no, that that was an Air Canada flight and that he only flies CP. I asked him what time he would arrive in Ottawa and learned that he was prepared to spend an extra three hours to get back to work in Ottawa in order to ensure that the money of the people of Canada was spent only in private enterprise.

We must understand that there are a large number of what I would describe as ideologically nose-ringed reactionaries on the government side. This document is clearly doctrine. It is not good business. Let us look at some of the guts of it. Every document put out by the Government says that the Government will get $608.3 million. The fact is that the Government will not get $608.3 million. At most it will get about $345 million. That is a fire sale price. As my colleague, the Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), has said many times, this is "minnow-tec". In 1983, only four years ago, this little teeny company had 30 employees. That is only four years ago.

What is happening only too often in Canada is little teeny companies using extreme leverage in the market-place. They borrow from the National Bank, and from here and there. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South and others say that because of all this entrepreneurial talent which will suddenly be injected, all of this great self-interest going out and fighting for new technology, we will suddenly be in a better position to buy world leading edge technologies in terms of fibre optics and new satellite technologies and so on. Nothing could be further from the truth. That is why the Tories have given over to "Minnow-tec" in this deal another five years of monopoly. The Tories say they are against monopoly, that they want free enterprise in the market-place. What a lot of ballyhoo. The monopoly is being kept 100 per cent intact in terms of this operation.

Is "Minnow-tec" really going to go out there and garner all of these new technologies and bring us into the forefront and actually benefit individual consumers? Nothing could be further from the truth. Its debt load alone means it is going to have to try to get more out of the consumer and less from technology. I think Members of the Government should be more cautious.

I have watched these kinds of deals coming from the ideologues on the right for some time. In my own Province of British Columbia, the former Premier, Bill Bennett, announced he was selling off the entire B.C. ferry fleet because it will be good for British Columbia. He sold it to a private group and leased it back on a five-year basis. We constructed the fleet, we bought and paid for it. Now we are in our second rollover, wherein every five years we buy the fleet back again through this leasing. That is an another example of these brilliant minds, these great business people the Tories hold themselves up to be. Nothing could be further from the truth. The consumers and real owners of those ferries get dinged time and time again, so this little group of free enterprisers, these great free enterprises, can sit at home and put their feet up. They have homes in Miami, Mexico, Europe and the Far East. They have big cabin cruisers, Cadillacs and so on. They are the smart ones who profit from these private deals, and that is what they are.

Almost no one in my constituency buys stocks or RRSPs. Unemployment in my constituency is close to 40 per cent. Members of the Government do not want to talk about that. But where is the Government planning to go? Is it planning to privatize the RCMP, for example, or sell Parliament Hill and lease it back to try to bring down the deficit? Is it planning to sell CN or Air Canada? Where is the Government planning to go? These are the kinds of things which are so important to look at in this debate.

I would like to deal for a moment with the important point made by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway, about a three-month hoist. There has been some jiggery-pokery in the market. That is pretty clear. Everyone has recognized that and an evaluation is being done. Is it proper for the House of Commons to pass into law a sale transaction when there has been jiggery-pokery in the market? What we are asking for is a hoist so we can look at that. I think it is only proper that the House of Commons, the representatives of the Canadian electorate have a chance to look at what actually went on behind the scenes in this transaction. No Member of the Government is saying, obviously, we should not look at the jiggery-pokery, but what they are refusing to do is deal honestly in this debate with what a bad deal this really is.

I can give another example of where Members of the Government try to use double-speak just a little too often. The big oil companies back in the 1970s price fixed. That was pretty clear. A major investigation took place, not just in western Canada but right across the country. The big oil companies fixed, in terms of billions of dollars, the price of oil and gas and home heating fuels purchased by Canadian consumers. Did the Liberals do anything about that? No. Did the Tories do anything about it? No.

It is vitally important that in various sectors there be government owned and operated systems such as Petro-Canada, not just to have a window on the field but to have a hands-on experience with what is really going on so that the consumers can be protected.

I would like to take a look for a few moments at the guts of Teleglobe and what it really means to Canadians. In recent years, 85 per cent of its revenues have come from overseas telephone calls. I think we should look at what kind of money Teleglobe has been making. The Government turned it over for $345 million when it made close to $100 million in profit last year. Teleglobe has been around since 1949. By 1975 it was making over $10 million a year in profit. By 1982, five years ago, its profits were up to almost $50 million. Now it is skating close to $100 million.

What does it do? It handles all overseas telecommunications entering and leaving Canada. That includes telephone, telegraph, cable and Telex communications. Teleglobe is a joint owner of submarine ocean cables and telecommunication satellite systems. In 1985 Teleglobe's revenues totalled $678 million. In the same year, 1985, the total revenues of "Minnow-tec" were $17 million. Memotec began in 1983 with just 30 employees. I have nothing against Memotec. However, when the Hon. Member for Mississauga South and others talk about this new infusion of entrepreneurial spirit from a little teeny company and try to paint Teleglobe as being some sort of dozy bunch of dinosaurs who could not possibly figure their way out of their own office space, it is a totally inaccurate and unfair representation. I think Members of the Government would be wise, when talking about Crown corporations and public servants, to remember that some of the people who are working in the public service, if not most of them, are very dedicated and often work for far less than many of their counterparts do in the private sector.

I think I have dealt effectively with the debunking of the ongoing blather from the Government's side that somehow $600 million is coming in. That is simply not the fact. Less than half that amount is coming in. Members of the Government say we need to get these hundreds of millions of dollars in to take down the deficit. From a straight business perspective, nothing could be further from the truth. Bringing in $300 million in one shot to apply against the deficit is nowhere near as beneficial, in bringing down the deficit, as it would be to keep Teleglobe and have that $100 million year after year going into the general revenues of the Government of Canada to use for other worthwhile purposes.

There are a number of reasons why all Canadians should oppose the Teleglobe sale; first, it has been a consistent moneymaker and, second, it is a monopoly, and a monopoly for good reason. Let me deal for a moment with the press release of the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) because it makes some preposterous points. For example, the news release states:

> Teleglobe Canada will benefit by being able to pursue new business opportunities under skilled private sector management.

It does not bother to add that there will be five further years of absolute and total monopoly. A question which has to be asked when the Government points at Teleglobe and say, "We need new entrepreneurial spirit", is what has gone on for the last two and a half years? The Tories have been sitting opposite for two and a half years and they cannot keep pointing at the Liberals or New Democrats or someone else. The fact is that if there were areas in which efficiency could have been improved, the Government should have dealt with it.

The release goes on to state:

> Consumers will benefit from an average rate reduction on overseas telephone calls exceeding 13 per cent in 1988. Of further importance, consumer interests will be protected into the future by CRTC regulation—a protection not currently present under crown ownership.

I suppose it is a fair statement for the Minister to make, but it is totally erroneous and unrelated to the situation. Teleglobe is completely managed by the Government of Canada, or it was until this point in time. For the Minister to say one of the key reasons for selling it off to the private sector is so it can come under some kind of consumer protection, is tantamount to fraud. Ministers should not go around cooking up reasons that have no foundation whatsoever in fact.

I would now like to return to the purchase price. A monopoly is being sold off. Because it occupies the field of communications, in which there is a legitimate public policy interest to be protected, it should continue to be in the public realm owned by the Canadian public.

With respect to share ownership restrictions, the Government continues to crow about the good price that it received. Of course, it said existing domestic telephone companies could not buy into it because they were monopolies. It is good that it is a monopoly now. Members of the Government like the fact that it is staying a monopoly so that it can set whatever kind of price trends and so on that it wants. However, members of the Government do not want the other monopolies in on it. This is the point at which I say this whole debate comes from a doctrinaire position of the Government. It does not come from a position of good business. I think the Hon. Member for Mississauga South would be the first to admit that. This is not good business, whether we are talking about the national debt, how the money will be applied or even about the future leverage of "Minnow-tec" in the future in terms of buying new technologies.

The Government places the following requirements on the deal. Non-resident companies will be restricted to acquiring 20 per cent ownership of Teleglobe. They are not allowed ever to exert control. Foreign telecommunication companies are permanently barred from ownership of the company, and domestic companies can obtain up to 40 per cent in the near future, but ultimately that can never go above 33.3 per cent. Members of the Government make a big deal about the employees being eligible to purchase 5 per cent of the shares. I hope that a few Conservative Members have heard of things such as co-ops. Five per cent ownership at a 10 per cent discount is not a big deal in my view.

With respect to international obligations, there is something Members of the House should be taking a closer look at. I refer to what is happening in the United States. The U.S., in its so-called striving for more communication and more competition in telecommunications, has decided to renege on its commitment to INTELSAT. INTELSAT is dealt with in Clause 8 of the Bill. Both INMARSAT, which is the International Maritime Satellite Organization, and INTELSAT, which is the International Telecommunications Satellite Organization, were set up to try to assist some of the less developed countries of the world to obtain some type of cross-subsidization in telecommunications. A fixed rate was set under this international agreement whereby the same base rate that is applied in those areas of heavy traffic would be applied to areas of lower traffic, such as in most of the developing world. As the U.S. is backing out of this agreement and starting to put up its own satellites we see this "Minnow-tec" deal coming along. What will it mean? It may well mean that before too long—certainly before the end of its five-year monopoly—"Minnow-tec" will find itself in a conflict of interest situation. How will it deal in the most effective manner for its shareholders, which is its primary role, to ensure that its shareholders are receiving the best type of return from the operation versus that of INTELSAT? The agreement that is set up to benefit other parts of the world is a very good idea in terms of communications in a world so often fraught with all types of violence and confrontations. It ensures that wherever possible there is reasonably good and accessible communications.

Down the road where will our domestic telephone companies go? Will they start buying out part of the link to the U.S. satellite system and get out of INTELSAT? What will that mean to a highly-leveraged operation such as Teleglobe? These are questions the Government does not seem to have addressed itself to, certainly not in debate thus far in the House of Commons.

Let us take a look at what other industrialized countries have done, those which have continued to participate in the international agreement and in the field of overseas communications. Australia, New Zealand, France, West Germany, Italy, Norway and Sweden all have totally government-controlled systems just like Teleglobe. They are not planning to make any changes. The U.K., from which the Government adopted this idea, made a share offering and privatized British Telecom but retained just below 50 per cent ownership. The British Government maintained a 49.9 per cent controlling interest in international telecommunications. The only two main players which are outside of all this are, of course, Japan and the United States, which have both gone to their own privately-controlled telecommunications systems.

There are inherent contradictions in selling a company that is a monopoly and keeping it as a monopoly. The arguments that have been put forward by the Government for not allowing the domestic telephone companies to buy into this company fall by the way when one takes a close look at the deal. Denying monopolies the right to buy a monopoly, thus allowing a small group to set up and maintain a monopoly, is a specious argument. Any Canadian who takes a look at this deal will see that this lucrative world-class Crown corporation was sold for a song. It was sold at far below what anyone would consider to be a reasonable price for such a valuable operation.

I see that I am running out of time and will therefore conclude my remarks. The Government is attempting to paint this sale as the sale of a Crown corporation that does not really need to be publicly owned in order to obtain some money to buy down the deficit. The argument is that private enterprise will be able to run it better. As I have pointed out, because of its highly debt-laden position "Minnow-tec" is not in as good a position to be buying into leading-edge technologies. In terms of protecting Canadian consumers that, again, is unlikely since the monopoly continues. The likelihood of rates coming down when a company with such a huge debt load has purchased a particular Crown corporation is unlikely to occur. I do not see any benefits to Canada's deficit, to the country, to the workers, to consumers or to Canada's international obligations in terms of setting rates around the world.

I conclude by saying that practical wisdom denies this as being a good route to go. Bill C-38 has to be seen as a type of defective doctrine which I think will get the Government into a great deal more trouble.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, the speech by the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) is typical of the kind of speeches he tends to make, full of exaggerations, and in this case, all Government-owned corporations are perfect and any company that has the misfortune to be a private corporation is rejected out of hand. However, he can hardly deny, and as a Quebecer I am proud of the fact, that Memotec, a young and dynamic company, will finally have a chance to compete with the giants and that Quebec workers, who up to now could not own shares in the corporation because it was a Crown corporation, will now be able to do so. The Hon. Member said that 5 per cent was nothing and that we should remember the co-ops. Granted, there is a co-operative movement, but Teleglobe was not a co-operative, it was a Crown corporation. And now Quebec workers will be able to own shares in that Corporation.

Mr. Speaker, he contemptuously tells us that nobody in his riding owns shares. I think he ought to visit a few co-operatives, these people are shareholders. It is co-ownership, and there is nothing criminal about being a company co-owner. He should not show disdain for private ownership because I am sure quite a few of his constituents are proud to own what they have, including the corner store merchant or the owner of a small trucking firm. There must be many of them in his riding. It is rather unfortunate that he would choose not to speak for his constituents who happen to own their business.

I have a question for him. He tells us that a Crown corporation has everything going for it, that a profit-making Crown corporation ought to stay under public ownership. I might remind him about other Crown corporations which at first were operating in the red and which were bought by the Government precisely to set them back on a sound financial track—and Air Canada is a good example. They were to be resold to private interests because that was the purpose of the whole exercise, but they are still Crown corporations. Is Air Canada service better than CP Air's because it is a Crown corporation? A moment ago I asked the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) if Air Canada employees lose fewer pieces of luggage than those of CP Air simply because they work for a Crown corporation, and the Hon. Member for Skeena began laughing and said it was a stupid question. Well, let me ask him this question: Are Air Canada passengers given better service because it is a Crown corporation? Do we really feel like Air Canada owners when our names are taken off a waiting list, because as taxpayers we own the company? No. We are treated like other passengers in a private company. I think the Hon. Member overstates his case because he does not really have strong arguments against this sale, so this is why he exaggerates.

[English]

Mr. Fulton: First, I wish to deal with what I said in my speech. The Hon. Member often takes things out of context, twists them around, and claims that there is exaggeration.

Mrs. Mailly: Give an example.

Mr. Fulton: In relation to the purchase of shares, and RRSPs, I said that in my constituency there are very few people who are in an economic situation where they are able to buy any shares. In looking at the number of Canadians who participate in purchases in the stock market, it is the absolute minority who are involved in that type of transaction. In regard to the 5 per cent that the workers at Teleglobe will be allowed to buy, if that is the sole reason for Bill C-38, I think the Government should withdraw Bill C-38. If that is the only thing that the Hon. Member thinks is good in this Bill, frankly I think the Bill should be redrafted.

Mrs. Mailly: You know it is not the only point, but it is one.

Mr. Fulton: I see nothing wrong with putting forward a special provision for the workers at Teleglobe at the various sites in Canada to have an opportunity to put forward part of their pension funds, or part of their earnings to participate in the company. As a matter of fact, that is good. It gives an incentive to people who are working anywhere in the country to have some direct participation, particularly economic participation in the work in which they are involved.

As to the Member's question on whether CP Air or Air Canada loses more bags, the Hon. Member should phone them and find out. I do not consider it to be part of my responsibility as an MP to answer a government Member about how many bags are lost on different airlines in Canada. That shows the depth of misunderstanding and misapprehension that many Canadians have about Conservative Members. They participate in an important debate on the privatization of the Crown jewel of Canadian Crown corporations, and they want to know how many bags are lost on different airlines. That is a completely erroneous and unfortunate question from a government Member.

Mrs. Mailly: What a cheap reply, just like the speech.

[Translation]

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Hon. Member who has the floor. In connection with statements made by union leaders, by Louis Laberge of the Quebec Federation of Labour—

[English]

Perhaps I can say it in English. Is the member aware that the leader of Quebec's largest labour federation, the Quebec Federation of Labour, said that he believes that Memotec—I know that the Hon. Member calls it "Minnow-tec"—has bitten off more than it can chew with what Mr. Laberge called the suicidal acquisition of the telecommunications giant Teleglobe Canada? Mr. Laberge pointed that out, and he further asked how a firm with assets of $83.6 million can make a $608 million acquisition. Memotec earned $3.32 million or 56 cents a share on shares of $31.6 million in the first nine months of 1986 with 750 employees. Mr. Laberge further pointed out that over the same period Teleglobe had 1,200 employees who helped it make $45.7 million. This prompted Mr. Laberge to compare Memotec to a frog that has just swallowed a bull. Mr. Laberge further stated that then the frog burst but the bull is still there.

The vice-president of the Communications and Electrical Workers of Canada also spoke against this takeover. According to Mr. Rene Roy, the union has not yet received written guarantees. Is the Hon. Member aware that some of the big labour chiefs in Quebec are against this takeover?

I wonder if the Hon. Member could tell us a little about what the B.C. Government tried to do a few years ago when it gave all British Columbians five BCRIC shares at $6 each? Could the Hon. Member tell Canadians about that?

Mr. Fulton: First, I wish to deal with the question from the Member for Vancouver—Kingsway regarding the remarks of Louis Laberge, the head of the FLQ. Mr. Laberge pointed out a real concern that he has as a representative of the workers in the Province of Quebec. Last year Teleglobe's revenue was 40 times the gross revenue of Memotec. We truly are talking about a minnow eating a whale, although Mr. Laberge compares it to a frog swallowing a bull.

The point that I made earlier in my speech is that Memotec will find itself in a lower position in terms of further borrowings to buy world leading edge state-of-the-art technology to further its position in the international communications field. We now find ourselves in a lower position, in terms of financing, and getting ourselves into that market, than we were before this Bill was introduced. If that is the type of leading edge thinking coming from the Conservative Party to take us back to the dark ages of telecommunications rather than encouraging a more vigorous entrepreneurial move into international telecommunications, then this surely is not the trademark for it. This is strictly a situation of doctrine.

I do not wish to spend a lot of time on BCRIC. I am sure that coming from Alberta, Mr. Speaker, even you have heard what a disaster BCRIC has been for British Columbians, all of whom got these marvellous five free shares. I would not be surprised if the Government takes a look at that type of option and throws all the Crown corporations into a bag, shakes them up, and calls it the Progressive Conservative—what would it be called—PCRIC?

Mr. Waddell: Investment gamble.

Mr. Fulton: I hope that day never comes. British Columbians learned the hard way that that type of privatizing for private interests is often not, if not always not in the public interest.

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join in the debate today concerning the proposed reorganization and divestiture of Teleglobe Canada. As the Minister for Privatization (Mrs. McDougall) stated in her remarks, this is but the latest in a series of transactions, part of a process that is an integral part of our comprehensive approach to prudent government management, and one that is now moving into top gear.

When I sought nomination, one of the things that I found most discouraging about what was going on in the Government at that time was that the federal Government had an interest in about 400 private sector activities, not only Crown corporations. With the 400 interests there are 250,000 plus people who work for Crown corporations. I would suspect that many of these people are still working for Crown corporations today.

Others have or will be commenting on the benefits to Canadians which flow from this transaction. I wish to concentrate my remarks on the role of privatization in our economic agenda, and the need to continue this important management process. The privatization policy of this Government has been stated many times. Yet, despite the repetition, the opposition Parties have refused to listen, and they continue to follow their strategy of making privatization a matter of ideology.

• (1250)

In the 10 minutes remaining before the luncheon adjournment I should like to touch on some examples which have nothing to do with ideology but a lot to do with good common sense.

During the 1984 election campaign a poll was taken in Canada. Approximately 60 per cent or more Canadians indicated at that time that they did not want to see the federal Government become involved in more Crown corporations. They wanted to see the federal Government divest itself of those interests.

In October, 1986, not many months ago, there was an election in the Province of Saskatchewan. A CBC poll was taken at the time of 1,600 people in the province. Believe it or not, in the Province of Saskatchewan, with its long history of socialism, 76 per cent of them said that they had had their fill and did not want to see the Government involved in more Crown corporations.

The Saskatchewan Potash Corporation is a prime example to which socialists refer as their flagship. An Hon. Member from British Columbia just talked about Teleglobe being a Crown jewel. Other Members from the Province of Saskatchewan and myself can tell the House that investing literally hundreds of millions of dollars in the potash industry probably resulted in a rate of return to that province in the neighbourhood of 4 per cent or 5 per cent in good times, when in fact the money could have been earning a much higher rate of return for Saskatchewan taxpayers. The Saskatchewan Potash Corporation has turned out to be, not a flagship but a bit of a sinking ship at the moment. It is a very risky business. There were days when money was made in that industry. However today, when prices are down and there is a lot of competition in the industry, we will probably lose $150 million because of that Crown corporation.

This is precisely why Governments, whether provincial or federal, should not become involved in Crown corporations. I say that it should be left to the business sector, to private enterprise. If they want to take the risks and reap the rewards, let them do so. We can take the royalties and the taxes.

I should like to refer to another example. On the late news on CTV on Saturday night I watched a clip from China showing an auction of Crown corporations. They were small businesses, but the point I want to make is an obvious one. China is a country which has had decades of socialism. Many of its Crown corporations have been locked up for three years. They were so inefficiently run that their doors were closed. Even China is starting to recognize that they should be sold to the private sector. Many young Chinese businessmen are interested in becoming involved in revitalizing the companies. As it turned out, there were higher bids than the Government expected. That is how eager the Chinese people were to become involved in these small businesses.

I should like to refer to another example. Recently I had the pleasure of visiting East Africa with the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade as part of our ODA review. As a student I had been to East Africa, 20-some years ago. I must say that it was disappointing to see what has happened to Tanzania over those years. Because of the socialistic experiment there, many sectors of its economy have in fact declined. I should like to refer to a story which appeared on the front page of a newspaper while we were there. It had nothing to do with our visit, but it had a lot to do with the restructuring of its Government and its economy. It was made very clear by the new leader of the country that they must divest themselves of some of their"parastatal" corporations, as they call them, because the management had been so poor and productivity had been so low.

Another example can be found in the United Kingdom where Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher has sold off shares in British Telecom and in British Gas. Just the other night there was talk of doing much the same with British Airways. If it were such a bad investment, why are so many people in Britain rushing out to buy shares? It has been a resounding success. The people of Britain recognize that it is a worthwhile venture in which to invest, and I would suggest that our divestiture of Teleglobe is along the same lines.

Socialists like to use two arguments when it comes to selling Crown corporations. First, if it is not successful, they like to say that the Government should hold on to it and protect the jobs. Can we imagine all the years the Government has held on to Crown corporations to protect jobs? It had nothing to do with good business decisions. It meant that the Government would pump in hundreds of millions of dollars. In fact, if we look at Canadair and de Havilland, it was not millions of dollars, it was billions of dollars to try to keep those companies afloat. Surely to goodness we should not run the country in that manner any longer. We cannot continue to hold on to these companies just to keep those jobs.

The second example used by socialists is that if the Crown corporation is successful we should hold on to it and take all the revenue from it to reduce the deficit. That is contrary to the philosophy of the Conservative Party and of the Government. We made very clear during the last election campaign that we would divest ourselves of Crown corporations which have been nothing but a drain on us for many years. I am saying that the socialists are wrong on both counts.

Referring back to the de Havilland example, not many months ago people protested at the airport in Downsview. They said that they would lose their jobs, that the technology would be moved down to the United States, and that the place would be shut down. At that time 4,400 people were employed at de Havilland, and today it employs 5,200 people. It has hired an additional 800 people because the company which bought de Havilland is putting it on an even firmer footing than it was before. Rather than just maintaining the technology which de Havilland had before, it is bringing in new technology. It is now to put the turbo-prop engine into a water bomber which is probably one of the best water bombers in the world. It is to upgrade that technology, and there are 800 new jobs.

The other example about which I want to talk is Canadair. It has certainly maintained all the jobs. In fact, it has probably added a few. I do not have the latest statistics on that, but I am sure it will be very successful as the years go on.

I fail to understand why the socialists rail away about the idea of the Government of Canada, or any provincial Government in the country, wanting to grab all the resources, take risks with the private sector, and risk the money of private taxpayers. I think Canadian taxpayers have just about had their fill with regard to the mismanagement of many Crown corporations.

I have about another 10 minutes left, but I see that it is almost one o'clock. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, may I call it one o'clock and return to my debate after lunch.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When Government Orders are called, the Hon. Member will have 11 minutes remaining in debate and 10 minutes for questions and comments.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock later this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

WORLDWATCH INSTITUTE'S WARNING ON THREATS TO ENVIRONMENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in its State of the World 1987 Report, the Worldwatch Institute warns that human use of the air, water, land, forests and other life-supporting systems on earth may be pushing nature over thresholds beyond which it cannot absorb further use without permanent change and damage. The result has been contamination of the atmosphere, climatic change, a mass extinction of plant and animal species, the long term prospect of a decline in the quality of life. The most threatening of the threshold crossings are the depletion of the ozone layer, climate change, and the loss of biological diversity.

The report goes on to say that so many natural systems becoming unstable within a short period of time could result in economic and political pressures which, in turn, could overwhelm the capacity of governments and individuals to adjust adequately. Tackling environmental problems of global magnitude transcends national differences and policies. Governments and parliamentarians must move these issues to the top of their agenda in search of answers on which our survival depends.

HERITAGE DAY

NEED FOR NATIONAL COMMEMORATION HOLIDAY

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, today, the third Monday in February, is Heritage Day, a day when we have the opportunity to celebrate the achievements and traditions of Canada.

For many years the Heritage Canada Foundation has campaigned for a national heritage holiday. We need such a holiday to draw our attention, to focus our thoughts on our history, our traditions, on those parts of our past which require our attention today. The buildings, streets, and structures of our unique history define our character. Their preservation is in trust to us, as individuals. We cannot depend entirely on government to define what is worth preserving or to tell us what parts of our past must be erased.

Here in Ottawa we have seen in recent days how important can be the voice of individual Canadians when raised in defence of those small but beautiful parts of our history which official bodies sometimes overlook.

The battle to preserve our past will never be over, Mr. Speaker. Let us create a national heritage holiday to remind us that when we lose our past we lose an important part of what it means to be a Canadian today.

HUMAN RIGHTS

EAST TIMOR—REPORTED MASSACRES BY INDONESIAN FORCES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, since 1975 Indonesia has illegally occupied the former Portuguese colony of East Timor. Amnesty International estimates that up to one-third of the East Timorese have been killed by Indonesian forces. Now there are reports that in August of last year the entire population of the village of Fo-Mano was massacred by Indonesian troops, and yet Canada has been very silent about these abuses.

In 1985-86 Canada provided over $77 million of bilateral assistance to Indonesia. We continue to issue permits for the export of military equipment, and we even sponsored an arms bazaar in Indonesia. This week when the Indonesian Foreign Minister visits Canada would be a good time for us to show that we cared for human rights by speaking out against Indonesia's wrongful occupation of East Timor and demanding that East Timorese be involved in U.N. consultations on their future.

HERITAGE DAY

RESPONSIBILITY TO PROTECT AND ENRICH NATIONAL HERITAGE

Mrs. Anne Blouin (Montmorency—Orléans): Mr. Speaker, today we celebrate Heritage Day, and we have been doing so on the third monday of February since 1973, when a proposal by the Heritage Canada Foundation unanimously received the support of the Members of the House of Commons.

The purpose of Heritage Day is to remind us of the riches of our Canadian heritage. It is a day to reflect on the achievements of past generations.

As the Member for a riding that saw the birth of French Canadian culture in North America, and I am of course referring to the Beaupré Coast and the Île d'Orléans, I would like to take this opportunity to remind all Quebecers and Canadians that in 1986, the historic quarter in Quebec City was added to UNESCO's list of world heritage sites. This official recognition has enhanced Quebec City's international standing, confirmed once again by the success of Rendez-vous '87.

Mr. Speaker, we must remember that it is up to each and every one of us to protect and enrich our common heritage for future generations.

FINANCE

GASOLINE TAXES—OPPOSITION TO POSSIBLE INCREASE

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) recently indicated that higher consumer taxes on gasoline and other petroleum products are again being considered by the Government. Canadians are already paying too much tax on gasoline. In fact, since the Conservatives took office in 1984, gasoline taxes have risen by 10 per cent.

The price of gasoline is now between 35 per cent and 45 per cent higher in Canada than it is in the United States, taking into account the exchange rate. This enormous price difference is hindering the growth of Canada's important tourism industry which employs over 600,000 Canadians. Considering that 74 per cent of Americans travel to Canada by automobile, it is easy to conclude that the price of gasoline is an important factor in their decision to visit Canada and in the length of time of their visits. I urge the Government to think twice before again raising gasoline taxes: think about tourism, and think about jobs, jobs, jobs.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

FIRST MEETING OF NATIONAL ADVISORY BOARD FOR SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, the first meeting of the Prime Minister's newly created National Advisory Board for Science and Technology took place this morning.

Significantly, the board is chaired by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and is composed of some of Canada's leading industrialists and scientists. I am pleased that Dr. Douglas Wright, President of the University of Waterloo, is a member of this prestigious board.

The establishment of the board was one of the major initiatives in the October Speech from the Throne. Pursuant to its mandate, this committee will assess national science and technology goals and policies and their application to Canada's economy. The Government has taken an incoherent set of programs left to us by the former administration and has created an organized science and technology strategy. These measures are designed to place Canada on the leading edge of high-technology competition, thereby maintaining and creating many new jobs and giving us one of the finest standards of living in the world.

SEARCH AND RESCUE

NEED FOR IMPROVED WEST COAST FACILITIES

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the Scotia Cape and seven of her crew members remain missing off the West Coast. Last week I drew to the attention of the House the need for improved search and rescue facilities. I renew that call today and draw to the attention of the House the dedication and bravery of those who continue to look for any sign of the ship and crew.

I take this opportunity as well to call on the Government to initiate long overdue safety measures for fishing vessels. It has been 11 years since British Columbia extended Workers' Compensation coverage to fishermen, yet there are still no federal regulations for safety in the workplace.

In consultation with fishermen and vessel owners, the federal Government should move immediately to establish tests for vessel and load stability, gear inspection, vessel seaworthiness, and other safety regulations. Fishing remains one of the most dangerous occupations in Canada. Federal inspection of vessels and federal safety regulations are long overdue.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

FIRST MEETING OF NATIONAL ADVISORY BOARD FOR SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, another one of the major initiatives announced in the Government's Speech from the Throne has become a reality. The National Advisory Board for Science and Technology is holding its first meeting in Ottawa today. I would like to extend my best wishes to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who will chair this advisory board. I also congratulate Mr. Alex Curran and Dr. Steve Acres, two members appointed to the board from Saskatoon. They bring with them years of innovative experience in the business and scientific fields.

Saskatoon's advanced technology sector which involves biotechnology, electronics, and telecommunications has gained a reputation for excellence world-wide. Indeed, Saskatoon plays a creative role in contributing to the development of science and technology policies. I would like to congratulate the Government for constructing a new national consensus on science and technology, a consensus which will enhance our economy and build upon Canada's competitive strengths.

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES CANADA

OPENING OF PAROLE SUPERVISION FACILITY IN TORONTO

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, one of the many, many promises the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made on behalf of the Conservative Party during the last election campaign was the promise to consult Canadians before taking decisions that would affect their lives. Whether it is a major international fishing treaty or the opening of a halfway house for parolees in Toronto, the record of the Government is an absolute and unmitigated disaster when it comes to consultation.

The Exodus-Link parole supervision facility in Toronto's Parkdale community is a case in point. There was absolutely no prior consultation with the community before the decision was made to locate the centre in Parkdale. For some inexplicable reason, the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) has ignored repeated requests for a meeting with concerned members of the community. As well, very little background information was provided to residents on this experimental correctional project. People in the area are as mad as hell about this facility. They are picketing and signing petitions and threatening sit-ins.

• (1410)

Prior to proceeding with the decision I call on the Solicitor General to go to Toronto, meet with the residents, and listen to their concerns. Consultation would help avoid a needless confrontation.

AUTHORS AND WRITERS

ROBERTSON DAVIES—RECIPIENT OF MEDAL OF HONOR FOR LITERATURE

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise today and advise the House of the great tribute paid in the United States to our great Canadian novelist, Robertson Davies. On February 24, at a dinner to be held in his honour, Mr. Davies, an internationally acclaimed novelist, will receive the 1987 Medal of Honor for Literature from the National Arts Club of New York City. Mr. Davies will be the first Canadian to receive this prestigious award whose previous recipients are a Who's Who of modern letters, including Anthony Burgess, Saul Bellow, and Norman Mailer.

This is a clear indication that Canadian culture is truly coming of age and is not in danger of being overwhelmed by foreign influences. As Mr. Davies himself recently stated, "The world is telling us loud and strong that Canadians have good writers." Robertson Davies has provided many hours of enlightenment and enjoyment to Canadians from coast to coast and readers around the globe. I am sure all Members of the House will join me in congratulating Robertson Davies on this award.

CANADIAN COAST GUARD

AUTOMATION OF LIGHTSTATIONS—CALL FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, coastal residents have taken the Mulroney Government to task for automating West Coast light stations. Pierre Forand, a helicopter pilot and distinguished recipient of the Medal of Bravery, stated in a letter to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney): "I am speaking from firsthand experience when I say that a manned light station provides this coast with a margin of safety that would be dangerously reduced if automation was to take place." Far from waking up and smelling the coffee, the Conservatives plan a further round of de-staffing for Green Island, Ivory, Lucy, and Addenbrook.

The Government and ministerial pencil pushers ignore the valuable work of light keepers. It appears the only thing they know about navigation is how to get to the parliamentary lounge. They argue for cost efficiency, yet ignore the high maintenance cost and frequent failure of automated equipment. They ignore the search and rescue work of lightkeepers because there is no job description for saving lives.

We hear of marine tragedies because of inadequate weather reporting, yet a Department of the Government denied a lightkeeper's request for weather recording equipment. Enough is enough. We must upgrade service instead of denigrating lightkeepers. Once again I call upon the Government to initiate a full public inquiry into the automation of lightstations.

TRADE

INCREASED LUMBER EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, as far as the Canadian lumber industry is concerned, the doom and gloom have become a boom. Just a few weeks ago media pundits and opposition Members were predicting the imposition of the export tax on softwood lumber would mean the loss of thousands of jobs and the closing of hundreds of mills. In fact Canadian lumber sales to the U.S. are more than holding up.

B.C. Forest Products is now predicting that 1987 will be a near record year for earnings. Dominion Bond Rating Service has predicted that "the 15 per cent tax will not be significant relative to over-all earnings through 1988". On top of all that evidence of boom, not gloom, we learn that forest company shares are among the hottest on the stock market. The American demand for housing is up. The sale of new single homes is up. Export of Canadian softwood products south of the 49th parallel is up. As well, a $600 million windfall of reforestation funding is on its way to the provinces.

We hate to disappoint the Opposition but there is no room for doom and gloom in the Canadian forest industry. All that looms is a zooming boom!

POLITICAL PARTIES

EFFECT OF FORMER NDP/LIBERAL POLICIES ON NORTHERN ONTARIO

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, this past weekend the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) was in the riding of Timiskaming. At a dinner gathering of approximately 100 party supporters he took on the Government's financial initiatives and suggested the riding should return a New Democrat in the next election, mentioning that voters should have long memories. The people of Timiskaming do have long memories. This is the same Leader and the same Party of the late 1970s who supported Liberal policies and created severe economic conditions for the people of the North.

The NDP and Liberals supported policies which raised inflation to 12.9 per cent and the interest rate to 22.75 per cent, a far cry from the current 4.2 per cent and 9.25 per cent. Now they want to take from the North the economic benefits of flow through shares. The NDP obviously do not have the foggiest notion of what is happening in or what is needed for northern Ontario.

HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY

SALE OF NORTHERN STORES—END OF AN ERA

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, on March 31 the Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson Bay will no longer be trading into Hudson Bay or its environs.

In the North it is generally supposed that the initials HBC stand for "Here Before Christ", and during the three centuries since receipt of its Royal Charter from King Charles II in 1670 the Bay has been loathed, cursed, applauded and loved, but most importantly, traded with by generations of northerners.

While the Bay will still remain a Canadian institution, business conditions have necessitated the sale, fortunately to an experienced management group, of its northern stores department, together with the disposition of most of its fur operations.

It is sad, Sir, to recall the passing of an era, but maybe the new owners will be able to upgrade the northern stores to modern standards, something which has largely eluded the cash-short Bay.

FINANCE

FOOD BANKS—FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FUNDING

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this is budget week. It is morally repugnant that over 300,000 people in Canada had to line up publicly last year at volunteer food banks across the country for food for themselves and their families.

Does the Minister of Finance intend, on Wednesday afternoon, to announce a plan which will, in the short run, mobilize a fund with the provinces to finance adequately the food banks of Canada? Will he, in the long term, move toward eliminating the need for food banks by, among other things, moving toward a guaranteed national income?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Leader of the Opposition knows full well that we share his concern about the number of people who have lined up at food banks. We have tried very hard to improve that situation. We have increased the child tax credit and accelerated the payment of it. We have introduced a low income refundable sales tax credit.

We are seeing some results. Two hundred and sixty-three thousand Canadians graduated above the low-income cut-off. That is important progress. It is not enough, but it is progress. We are doing things which will continue this progress, and we hope to see further progress when the results come out this year.

[Translation]

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the answer is unacceptable. The gap between rich and poor is widening, especially after this Government's last two Budgets.

GAP BETWEEN RICH AND POOR

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Here is my question for the Minister. Since he increased income tax for individual Canadians by $6 billion in his last Budget, why can't he find enough money to finance the food banks, together with the provinces? And is he going to reverse the trend of his last two Budgets which has been to widen the gap between rich and poor?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition has identified one possible approach to the Budget. He knows full well, as a former Minister of Finance, that I cannot comment on specifics in a Budget. He has neglected to say that we increased the spousal allowance. We have entered into a joint program with the provinces with federal participation of $100 million a year to help train those low-income Canadians who do not have a job today and are on welfare. He also knows that since we have been in office 677,000 jobs have been created. That is the best way that I know of getting people out of poverty.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TAX REFORM INQUIRY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister wants to get specific, he knows that in the last Budget he raised taxes for a person earning $15,000 by an additional $400 per year. At the same time he granted a lifetime exemption of $500,000 to those fortunate enough to earn capital gains.

Is the Minister of Finance really going to wait for a White Paper on tax reform? Is he really going to postpone the issue of tax reform when he should be eliminating the unfairness of the last two Budgets? Is he going to do something concrete on Wednesday afternoon?

• (1420)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, again the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is making very selective use of figures. I would say to him that, yes, tax reform is going to be very important. One of the key considerations we are taking into account as we form the proposals for tax reform is how we can improve the position of those people who are on low incomes, over and above the many things we have done to date. I have enumerated those during the course of this Budget. However, we feel we can do more and that tax reform will provide a very good opportunity for that.

FISHERIES

OVERFISHING BY FRENCH VESSELS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, this morning 7,000 fishermen in Newfoundland, boat owners, received the following letter: "Fishermen who reside in 2G, 2H, 2J and 3K 3L—" that is all over Newfoundland,"—that have fished groundfish using fixed gear will not be eligible to receive groundfish licences for 3PS in 1987".

In other words, the entire south coast of Newfoundland is off limits to Newfoundland fishermen. They want to know when that area is going to be off limits to the French fleet. I ask the Acting Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, in view of the fact that another French factory freezer trawler was turned away this morning from St. Pierre because of overfishing, when is the Government going to live up to what this Minister said in this House on Friday, that he was going to get tough with the French, not with Newfoundlanders? Is this the Minister the Premier of Newfoundland was referring to when he said he was being leaned on from Ottawa? This Minister is certainly up to it.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as for getting tough with the French, or France, the hon. gentleman might have noticed over the weekend that the St. Pierre trawler which was brought into port at our direction has pleaded guilty and has been fined for overfishing. That is an example of being tough.

We have advised France of our policy that we will close Canadian ports if it overfishes in the area of 3PS, which we think it is now doing. That is a lot tougher than the French were used to from the previous administration.

Mr. Broadbent: Holy gee, I can't stand it.

Mr. Crosbie: The NDP can't stand it, it can't stand the truth. That is what the NDP can't stand.

With respect to the notice, alluded to by the hon. gentleman, to Newfoundland or Canadian fishermen about 3PS, that applies to new entrants. If we want the world to observe what we think are safe conservation limits, then we have to observe them ourselves. Therefore, that applies to new entries in 3PS for this particular year.

With respect to "leaning", I believe it is very difficult to lean on the Premier of Newfoundland, he moves very quickly. The hon. gentleman might think there is some reverse leaning going on here—

Some Hon. Members: Time.

Mr. Crosbie: Might the Premier of Newfoundland have made some request of this Government which he thinks might not be accepted, and therefore he is performing a double reverse leap?

FORTHCOMING CABLE TELEVISION PROGRAM IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): This Minister, who says he is not leaning on Newfoundland, is paying for an advertising campaign tomorrow to advertise a province-wide television program tomorrow night coast-to-coast in Newfoundland, starring none other than this Government's answer to "the Incredible Hulk", the Minister of Transport.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker: Is the Minister by chance going to reveal the results of his investigation during this State of the Union Address as to who was responsible for the signing of the most recent Treaty of Paris, to which the Newfoundland Government was not invited?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, with reference to the television show, it is a cable show, News Focus—it is on Tuesday night at 8 p.m. and next Sunday morning at 11.30 a.m.—in which the facts will be given, for example, that cod stocks permitted to France this year have been reduced by 14,000 tonnes, not increased as some people have been claiming. The truth travels slowly but will reach even hon. gentlemen across the aisle in time.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—AUTO PACT INQUIRY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade. The Minister is probably aware that in today's The Financial Post there is an article which states that the United States trade negotiators are preparing a comprehensive package to make changes to the Canada-U.S. automotive agreement, described by one of the spokespersons for the automotive industry in the following terms:

> Under what's being suggested, the auto pact would be not much more than a shell.

Is the Minister aware of this? In particular, is she aware of the proposal to reduce the Canadian content requirement from 50 per cent to 35 per cent?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we have said in the House on many occasions that the Auto Pact is working well and that we do not propose to put it on the table. We have also said that should the Americans have any plans which would increase employment in Canada and be to our benefit, we would look at them. Is the Hon. Member repeating the argument that he has made in the House before in which he has said that the Auto Pact requires major modification and that a systematic and comprehensive revision of the pact is required? Is he making that point again?

POSSIBLE TARIFF REDUCTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister reads the whole speech to which she has referred she would discover that I was talking about increasing the safeguards, not about reducing them, in terms of Canadian interests. I would like to ask the Minister to deal with the future and not the past in this context.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That is as clear as you are on NATO.

Mr. Broadbent: I would be happy to debate that issue or any other with the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Will the Minister check with her U.S. counterparts to see if there is a proposal to reduce the Canadian content requirement to 35 per cent?

Even more alarming, I have learned that one of the related proposals that Mr. Murphy will be putting on the table is to reduce the tariff between Canada and the U.S. in the automotive sector from 9 per cent to 0 per cent. Is the Minister aware of this? If she is aware of it will she comment on the implications of it in terms of investment in Canada?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, Ambassador Reisman is in negotiations today with his U.S. counterpart. I have not been made aware of any of the proposals to which the Hon. Member refers. I can only say that he himself recently said that there is nothing wrong with Ambassador Reisman getting changes to the pact that would increase employment in Canada. Is the Hon. Member changing his mind on that point?

Mr. Broadbent: Instead of reading her briefing notes I wish the Minister would actually listen to the question and answer it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister give us assurances that the Canadian content requirements for investment will not be reduced and that the Government will not sanction cutting the tariff from 9 per cent down to 0 per cent because that tariff mechanism ensures that we get Canadian investment?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I think that if the Hon. Member can read press reports I am entitled to read my briefing notes which, again, specify that the Hon. Member, in the House, has called for a major modification of the pact.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Answer the question.

Miss Carney: I am asking him again: Is he against any provisions in the Auto Pact which could increase employment in Canada?

Ms. Mitchell: Pretty poor, Pat.

Miss Carney: The only people who are bringing the Auto Pact out on the table are members of the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party.

MINISTER'S CAPABILITY TO CARRY OUT FUNCTIONS—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would like to get back to the parties at $5,000 a head attended by the Minister, the Hon. Member for Joliette. The Prime Minister said that he was informed of the facts in January 1986, that he asked the Secretary to the Cabinet to request an investigation by the RCMP, following which criminal charges were laid against a Member of this House. However, we all know that the RCMP has no jurisdiction over who may sit in Cabinet. I therefore wish to ask the Prime Minister whether he acted responsibly and had discussions with the Minister his investigation to determine whether he was still in a position to perform his duties as Minister of the Crown. Will the Prime Minister finally answer this question?

An Hon. Member: No answer.

• (1430)

[English]

An Hon. Member: Silence.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): The Prime Minister has systematically refused to answer this question. Even though the Minister may or may not be the subject of an RCMP inquiry, the Prime Minister still has the responsibility to ascertain whether the Minister has broken the rules of ethics that are expected of Ministers.

I wish to ask the Prime Minister if he has done that, and if he can tell us whether the Minister is still fit to remain in the Cabinet?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): The Hon. Member says that the Prime Minister has systematically refused to answer the question. That is an absolute falsehood. I have answered all of the questions in regard to this matter that were raised on Friday. I indicated then, and I tell my hon. friend now, that pursuant to the complete answers that I provided on Friday, if he has any information other than smear or innuendo that he would like to raise against a Member of this House, let him summon the courage to make a direct accusation and it will be dealt with.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PUBLIC TENDERS—OPPORTUNITY TO AMEND LAW AND REGULATIONS TO ELIMINATE POSSIBLE CONFLICT OF INTEREST AND CORRUPTION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister who ought to know that Canadians want this Government to put an end to every kind of corruption and conflicts of interest.

Can he not find time to broaden the public tender system and eliminate every kind of political pressure on this system? Will the Prime Minister assure the House that the Government will introduce amendments to the legislation and attendant regulations so as to eliminate any possibility of corruption and conflicts of interest?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member has an example of corruption, let her bring it to the attention of the House. I said Friday that after I was made aware of certain disturbing allegations I immediately launched an RCMP investigation. Should the Hon. Member find this unsatisfactory, let her indicate new evidence and, of course, I will act as quickly.

As to the tender call process, as far as I know it was under public service administration, in accordance with the law and management practices. Here again, if the Hon. Member is aware of new facts which contradict what I have just said, she ought to bring them to the attention of this House and I will launch the appropriate investigations.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENTS TO BAN CORPORATE DONATIONS TO POLITICAL PARTIES

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the Prime Minister will not bring more contracts under the system of tendering, so that these types of situations would be less likely to arise. But I have a very specific question about another way that we could head off problems by cleaning up the system and avoiding the temptation that companies have to try to get a contract through influencing a political Party. Will the Prime Minister bring in amendments to the Canada Elections Act to forbid all donations from corporations to political Parties?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member in her first question began by alleging, and suggesting the existence of some corruption. When challenged to produce any evidence, the Hon. Member now shifts the attack to suggest that the corruption is induced by the Canada Elections Act, for which her Party voted in 1974.

Ms. McDonald: My question related to the system of tendering.

Mr. Mulroney: If the Hon. Member is now suggesting that contributions should be eliminated for corporations, that is something that I would be happy to look at. Presumably the Hon. Member would also want contributions banned from unions.

Mr. Broadbent: We will look at both right away.

Mr. Hees: How about that, Ed.

Mr. Broadbent: We will do it tomorrow, both of them tomorrow.

Mr. Cassidy: Do it now. You have opened the doors. Clean up your act.

Mr. de Jong: Go for it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure that all Hon. Members will realize that it is the opportunity for the next Member to put a question.

THE ADMINISTRATION

DRUMMONDVILLE PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACT—TREASURY BOARD APPROVAL

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): My question is directed to the Prime Minister. In the package of information that was given to me last week by the Deputy Minister of Public Works, there is a memo dated March 20, 1986, which states, "As the total annual cost of the submission does not exceed $200,000 the submission does not require Treasury Board approval." This is referring to the Drummondville-Brodilaf affair. It further states that because of the sensitivity of this project "would like to see Minister approve the submission".

My question to the Prime Minister is this. Why was the Treasury Board or the political level involved when there was no requirement to do so? Second, is it not true that the sensitivity referred to in the Public Works internal memo is the political interference by several prominent Tories who wrote correspondence and made phone calls that they should not have made concerning this whole contract?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the reason why the Treasury Board was involved is very simple. The amount of the contract exceeded the limits that were delegated to the Department of Public Works. This was a five-year contract, and the Hon. Member is citing a one-year number. In looking at the contract over five years, it definitely has to be approved by Treasury Board. It was done so following the normal procedures. There is nothing unusual there.

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION CONCERNING BRODILAF-HAMA AFFAIR

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, the officials who wrote these memos must feel they are being attacked by the Minister who is accusing them of not telling the truth in their papers.

On Wednesday and Thursday last week, the Minister of Public Works said in the House—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think that the Hon. Member is suggesting in his preamble that Ministers have not told the truth to public servants. I may have misunderstood it, but I hope that is not what the Hon. Member said.

Mr. Boudria: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but that was not at all what I said. I will rephrase the question.

[Translation]

On Wednesday and Thursday last week, the Minister of Public Works said in the House that all things considered, the Brodilaf bid was the best one. How can the Government reconcile this with what was said by the Hon. Member for Joliette in a letter I have here, and I quote:

These costs amount to over $100,000, and if we consider the economic analysis. Brodilaf's bid is $13,000 higher per year than the bid by Hama Inc.

Mr. La Salle: Insulation costs.

Mr. Boudria: Who was telling the truth? The Hon. Member for Joliette or the Hon. Member for Halifax?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Public Works told the House repeatedly that Brodilaf was awarded the contract because it offered the best value for Canadians. Considering access for the handicapped, the location and parking facilities, the bid was the best value for Canadians.

Mr. La Salle: You are talking through your hat.

Mr. Rodriguez: Watch your heart, Rocky.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

FEDERAL FUNDING

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Despite the fact that unemployment in seven provinces is higher today than it was at the height of the recession in 1981-82, the Prime Minister on the weekend was quoted as telling the Sept-Iles Municipal Council, "that the coming federal Budget will be 'thin' in terms of regional development—"

Why are we receiving such a clear signal from the Prime Minister that little will be done for regional development in the Budget when the message that the Government gave in its Throne Speech last October was, "that regional disparity remains an unacceptable reality of Canadian life"?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member could identify who is alleged to have reported that statement. Perhaps the Hon. Member could tell the House who indicated that. I have often said across the country that one of the problems with our very impressive degree of economic growth where hundreds of thousands of jobs have been created, where interest rates are down, where foreign investment is up, is the fact of imbalance and hence unfairness for some of the regions of Canada. What we are trying to do in the interior of British Columbia, or for eastern Quebec, or Cape Breton, is to equalize opportunities, so that a greater sense of fairness in the distribution of this new wealth and prosperity can be realized.

[Translation]

THE BUDGET AND REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT—UNEMPLOYMENT IN CERTAIN REGIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, the source of the quote the Prime Minister referred to, according to which the Budget would be big on regional development, was the mayor of Sept-Îles, Mayor Dion, who said this after a meeting with the Prime Minister on the weekend. I want to ask the Prime Minister: since the unemployment rate in Sept-Îles is over 15 per cent and the unemployment rate in the riding of the Minister of Finance is only 5 per cent, why is the Prime Minister giving every indication that the Budget will meet the needs of Etobicoke and not of the people of Sept-Îles and all unemployed Canadians in this country?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, they are attacking the people of Etobicoke, and at this point, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out, with respect, the monumental hypocrisy of the opposition Parties. They are right when they refer to an unemployment rate of 15 per cent, in some cases 25 per cent, in the riding of Manicouagan. When the Canadian Government intervened to provide relief for the people of Port-Cartier by building federal facilities, the Opposition complained about the Federal Government's intervention. Today, you are asking me to do more. Hypocrisy is rife among the New Democrats and the Liberals. Let them make up their minds, once and for all.

REFUGEES

INTERNATIONAL CO-ORDINATED POLICY RECOMMENDATION

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In an address to West European countries, including Canada and Australia, Switzerland appealed for the implementation of a co-ordinated refugee policy which would prevent false asylum seekers, a situation which is being aggravated by the Tamils, the Turks, and the Ghanaians. Will Canada participate in the Swiss initiative and formulation of a much tighter refugee policy which will prevent the abuse that has taken place? Could he also tell us whether the Department of National Defence has been asked to survey our coast for any other Tamils coming into the country?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are now witnessing a very large influx of refugees or people claiming refugee status in this country, not only from Sri Lanka but especially from South America. We are now examining the situation and, hopefully, very soon I will be able to implement a number of measures which will allow us, and I stress this, to review the case, not of applicants who legitimately seek refugee status in Canada, but of others who for all sorts of reasons may be abusing the system. And I maintain, as I have been saying for two months, that we expect to introduce legislation in March which will make it possible to consider the whole situation as it has evolved on the international scene in recent months, all the while respecting our principles concerning refugee acceptance.

RAILWAYS

GRAIN FREIGHT RATES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. The Government promised to freeze western grain freight rates in the last general election, and this coming year we will be facing some of the lowest grain prices of the last 50 years. Could the Minister assure western farmers that he will keep the freeze on grain freight rates in the coming crop year?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Minister can assure western grain producers that the rates for moving grain will be kept as low as humanly possible in the coming crop year. We have just received the revised report from Mr. Horner on the whole question of rates for moving grain and various facets of the grain-handling system. That is being looked at now, and an announcement will be made in due course.

REQUEST FOR RETENTION OF FREEZE ON FREIGHT RATES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. There have been reports that in fact the volumes of grain to be shipped will increase the amount to be charged to farmers for shipping their grain by about 50 per cent, from about $6 to $9 per tonne. Is the Minister prepared to bring in legislation or take other action to ensure that the freeze is maintained at present shipping rates?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, whatever action we can take—and I do not believe that a legislative change is necessarily needed—to keep the transportation rate for grain down, we will naturally take. As to what it will finally end up at, it is too early to know.

DEPARTMENT OF EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

CANADA EMPLOYMENT CENTRES—LAY-OFFS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA AND YUKON

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. At a time when the rate of unemployment in British Columbia is among the highest in Canada at 15.3 per cent in January, and when the unemployed need the services of Canada Employment Centres more urgently than ever, the Government has laid off 105 staff members in Canada Employment Centres in the British Columbia and Yukon Territories region. In view of the tremendous hardships these lay-offs have created, both for the unemployed and for the remaining staff, will the Minister act immediately to reverse this stripping of essential services and staff in the Canada Employment Centres?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): In the past few months, Mr. Speaker, the Department of Employment and Immigration has set up what we call a revitalization process. Indeed there was a rationalization of resources, but I am not prepared to admit—First we ought to check the figures the Hon. Member gave concerning British Columbia. According to the information I have the rate of personnel replacement is at least 75 per cent in British Columbia and in other provinces. There have been staff reductions, and services have been combined in certain cases. As I said, we will check the figures, if the Hon. Member does not mind. I am certainly not prepared to admit that the quality of services to Canadians might have been affected by rationalization, either in British Columbia or in the other provinces.

[English]

EFFECT OF LAY-OFFS

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister look into the enormous number of complaints which have come in about servicing and about the very high degree of overtime work which is required of the remaining staff? Before he comes back to me on this, will he also look into the proposal to lay off 132 more staff members, particularly in connection with claims, in 1987?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, 132 lay-offs do not sound right to me because the Department of Employment and Immigration did not proceed with massive lay-offs, except perhaps to replace what we in the trade call undetermined staff, meaning permanent employees. Contract employees are more directly affected. Working conditions are defined at the outset, and many of those people will be reintegrated within employment centres. We will look into this matter, but I think that generally speaking, on the basis of available resources, employment centres offer the same service quality as before.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADA-INDIAN EXTRADITION TREATY

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It concerns the extradition treaty between Canada and India which was recently signed. Canadian Sikhs have been critical of the fact that there was no prior consultation before the treaty was signed. In view of the general promise of the Government to consult with Canadians before decisions are taken, could the Minister explain why there was no meaningful consultation with the Canadian Sikh community prior to his visit to India to sign the treaty?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it has not been the practice under Governments of any Party in this country to conduct consultations of that kind prior to the signing of a treaty of that nature. If there are misapprehensions among members of the Sikh community in Canada with regard to the extradition treaty, I am sure that a careful reading of that treaty will relieve those false apprehensions. That treaty is the first of a new generation of extradition treaties in Canada which incorporate fully the protection set out for Canadian citizens under the Canadian Charter of Rights.

RIGHTS OF CANADIAN CITIZENS

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that the Canadian Sikh community is also concerned about potential abuses of this particular extradition treaty. In view of the Draconian National Security Act of India which permits preventive detention for up to two years without trial or charge, what assurances can the Minister give to the Canadian Sikh community that the extradition treaty will not be abused and that the rights of law-abiding Canadian citizens will be maintained?

• (1450)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think two things would help. One, it would be very helpful if all Members of the House of Commons, knowing the sensitivity that might exist with regard to this treaty, troubled themselves to read it and to ensure that there were no false impressions in the Canadian community as to the implications of the treaty. Our duties certainly should be to create and to calm any fears in the country rather than to excite them falsely.

Two, there are a range of quite extraordinary safeguards in that treaty repeating the language of the Canadian Charter of Rights, guaranteeing that a matter must be brought to trial within six months after an extradition takes effect, guaranteeing the right of the Minister of Justice of Canada, even if the Supreme Court of Canada might decide that an extradition could proceed, to make the decision that extradition would not proceed. There are plenty of safeguards. I hope Members of Parliament will assure citizens of Indo-Canadian origin of that fact.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

FORTHCOMING FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister who in some five weeks will be chairing the First Ministers' Conference on Aboriginal Rights. He will be aware that at meetings preparatory to that conference aboriginal leaders have expressed the concern that the federal Government may not be taking the requisite leadership with the provinces in this the last scheduled conference.

Will the Prime Minister stand in the House today and assure this House and the aboriginal people of Canada that the federal Government will be taking the leadership position, and specifically outline what steps his Government has taken to ensure the success of this last scheduled First Ministers' Conference on Aboriginal Rights?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted to answer that question on a very important issue for a great number of Canadians, the Prime Minister's commitment to this process is one which is well known across the country and in the aboriginal community. The Hon. Member will know that we are engaged now in a series of meetings with Ministers and with representatives of aboriginal groups. The next meetings will take place this Thursday and Friday in Toronto, at which time we will want to examine a very full slate of options with respect to getting a constitutional amendment to articulate the proper hopes and aspirations of the aboriginal people. You can rest assured, Mr. Speaker, that the federal Government is giving leadership and will be working hard to accomplish this end.

CONTENT OF PRESS REPORTS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the Government assure this House and the people of Canada that press reports are false that the Government has a damage control strategy, if the talks should fail, of blaming aboriginal leaders, and that no such strategy is contemplated by the Government?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, only a member of the New Democratic Party would talk about damage control in terms of matters that are to happen in the future. I can assure the Hon. Member, and with every justification, that we are working very hard. I want the Hon. Member to remember one thing. In order to have constitutional change in this country it is necessary to have seven provinces representing 50 per cent of the population in accord with respect to an amendment to the Constitution. We have been working day and night in order to accomplish this constitutional change. We will not be deterred from our objective.

YOUTH

EMPLOYMENT PROGRAMS—GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Youth. Last week the Minister of State for Youth sent us this fancy booklet entitled Hot 100 setting out various government programs for youth, most of which existed prior to 1984. In the Minister's covering letter he said that the booklet is a "clear demonstration of the Government's commitment to youth". How can the Minister pretend that this booklet demonstrates a serious commitment to youth when the youth unemployment rate is 14.4 per cent, and since 1984 the Government has cut over $200 million from youth employment programs? When will the Minister make a serious and real commitment to youth and re-introduce those moneys for a new First Chance program or Katimavik?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth)): First, I would like to say that I had the opportunity to show this booklet to many Canadians last week all over the country, in Winnipeg, Hamilton, and Toronto. The book is very popular.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Charest: In fact, on a lot of days I felt like a Liberal selling my memoirs.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Charest: I also had the opportunity last week to say that what we are trying to implement is very important and fundamental change, that we are fighting the dinosaurs who are fighting for the past—and the Hon. Member wins first prize today.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REQUEST FOR GREATER EFFORTS TO RELIEVE YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, do I understand correctly that the Minister is satisfied with a youth unemployment rate of 14.4 per cent and with his public relations program? If indeed the Minister is so concerned about youth problems, why did he slash this year's Challenge '87 budget to the tune of $30 million?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, in 1983 when the unemployment rate among students returning to school was about 17.9 per cent, his Government spent—

Mr. Allmand: Your program today, what is it?

Mr. Charest: —the Government then in office spent roughly $170 million, whereas we, at a time when the unemployment rate among students going back to school was about 13 per cent last year, will be spending some $180 million this year. There is the difference.

And if my colleague really wants to know, first we did admit in the Speech from the Throne that youth unemployment was too high, despite the fact that it decreased by 4 per cent since we took office and, second, the book was published because a lot of young Canadians have been regularly complaining that federal programs were neither condensed nor accessible. This is the only reason why this extremely popular booklet was published, and I urge all young Canadians to get a copy.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

FUTURE OF RURAL POST OFFICES

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister answering for Canada Post. I have just returned from a small rural community in Alberta called Devon. The people there have a message for the Government, namely, that a post office in a rural community is a part of the fabric of community life and that the planned closures of hundreds of rural post offices will tear up that fabric. When will the Government recognize the role of rural post offices? When will the Government change the post office plan and put a stop to the planned closures? When will the Government stop treating rural Canadians as second-class citizens?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as a rural Member within Cabinet, I can carry that message to the Minister responsible for Canada Post very capably, and I can assure the Hon. Member that I will do that.

[Translation]

DESIRE THAT RURAL RESIDENTS RECEIVE BETTER ATTENTION

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, rural Canadians want more than just words. They want action.

Is the Government prepared to ask the Committee on Government Operations to travel across this country and listen to people in rural areas, and is it prepared to put on ice its plan to close rural post offices?

[English]

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I will pass that representation on to the Minister responsible for Canada Post.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—AUTO PACT INQUIRY

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade. In a report that appears in today's Financial Post it is clear that while Ambassador Murphy has had discussions with Ambassador Reisman from our side, Ambassador Murphy does not intend to present formal proposals until sometime in March or April. If it is not the appropriate time today in this Question Period for the Government to state clearly that Ambassador Murphy really should not bother wasting his time presenting proposals because the Government has absolutely no intention to negotiate any aspect of the auto trade, can we have a clear and unmistakable statement from the Minister on that particular issue that we will not negotiate the Auto Pact?

• (1500)

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has confused two things, both of which have been addressed in the House. He has confused the Auto Pact and automotive trade. We have always said that we have no reason to open up the Auto Pact and that it is working well. We have always said that if the Americans have proposals that would enhance Canadian production, jobs or trade, we would listen to them, but if they would have an adverse effect on our production, we would not be interested. We have also said that the whole issue of automotive trade, which involves many issues outside the Auto Pact, is of course something that is open for discussion. The Hon. Member cannot straddle the fence on this. He must either ask us to put the Auto Pact on the table or stop raising the Pact in this House.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I just want to say to the Hon. Minister that when it comes down to the question of the auto trade in North America, it is the Auto Pact that is at the centre of that trade. If the Minister for International Trade does not understand that, then God help this country in those negotiations.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair tries to be benevolent toward the end of Question Period but I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question and to put it directly.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to put the question again. The Minister for International Trade has just made the shocking admission that they are now prepared to discuss the whole issue of automotive trade. Will the Minister clearly reject, here and now in this House, negotiation of the Auto Pact during the Canada-U.S. free trade discussions? Just say yes or no.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, this is clearly a Liberal-NDP coalition. I cannot be any clearer than to say that we will not propose the Auto Pact but, as Ambassador Murphy says, every time the Liberals and the NDP talk about the Auto Pact, they are doing his job for him.

MINES AND MINING

FLOW-THROUGH SHARES

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines. Last weekend the Leader of the NDP was in my riding. He has always said that he is concerned with jobs, jobs, jobs. Even though members of the NDP are so against flow-through shares and the thousands of jobs they will create and have already created, what representations has the Minister heard across the country from the mining sector and others?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): Mr. Speaker, we were certainly surprised by the tone of the debate of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre who indicated that flow-through shares seemed to benefit only those people who are rich or wealthy. I can tell the House that from representations we have received from the mining community, people in the exploration field, junior mining companies and town councils in the North, it is seen that benefits accrue to the people of the regions of Canada, and we think that is pretty important.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

HIBERNIA PROJECT—FUNDING INQUIRY

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and has to do with the appearance of Premier Peckford on CTV's Question Period program yesterday. At that time the Premier expressed concern that Newfoundland might be retaliated against by the federal Government because of his opposition to the France-Canada fish treaty. Can the Prime Minister give the assurance to the House that the federal Government will not hold back federal money for the Hibernia project because of Premier Peckford's opposition to the France-Canada fish treaty?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry I missed the appearance of Premier Peckford on CTV yesterday.

Mr. Rodriguez: It was very good.

Mr. Broadbent: You can get a re-run.

Mr. Mulroney: I will arrange for a re-run this afternoon. Yesterday I was in Cape Breton, the Government having resolved a very important matter for Sysco involving all Cape Breton Islanders, and I was opening the Canada Games. I think my hon. friend would approve of that.

POINT OF ORDER

ALLEGED MISLEADING STATEMENTS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order arising out of Question Period. I just want to draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall) and the Minister were using Question Period in order to put on the record some misleading statements with respect to the flow-through share question. I will be happy to talk with them about it outside the House but they should understand—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do not consider that to be a point of order.

TELEGLOBE CANADA REORGANIZATION AND DIVESTITURE ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-38, an Act respecting the reorganization and divestiture of Teleglobe Canada, be now read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Ms. McDonald (p. 3435).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When the House rose at one o'clock, the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ravis) had the floor. Would those who are having conversation please go behind the curtains. The Chair would like to hear the speech of the Hon. Member.

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I will take only a few minutes to conclude my remarks. This morning, I had just finished reviewing a number of examples of privatization in Saskatchewan, Canada, East Africa, the United Kingdom and China. I would like to conclude on that point.

I believe that a three-month hoist on this particular issue would be absolutely ridiculous, because stalling the privatization process would mean giving up one of the principal tools available to the Government to reallocate resources to those people in need during this time of high deficits. We know that there are many people across Canada today who are asking for assistance in the area of child care. I certainly understand, as I am sure you do as well, Mr. Speaker, coming from Alberta, the dilemma facing the agricultural sector today because of competition from competitors in Europe and the United States. Many, many other people are asking for some assistance from the Government. It seems to me that it is very important that we allocate our scarce resources as best we can.

The three-month hoist would increase the need for the Government to either cut other vital government programs, raise taxes ever higher or let the deficit become a bigger problem for the next generation. I think it is up to us to face up to the deficit we have today and not to pass it on to our children and grandchildren.

I would like to ask opposition Members where they would cut. Should we allow Crown corporations—and not necessarily Teleglobe which has had a good record—to go on spending more money than they take in or should we call a halt to this process? I would be interested in asking the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) just how many millions the Government has already saved by divesting itself of some Crown corporations over the last two and a half years. I would suspect it is a substantial amount of money.

Mr. Thacker: Hundreds of millions.

Mr. Ravis: Hundreds of millions? That would not surprise me. Perhaps the Opposition's answer is to let the debt spiral continue and forget about deficit control. That would not be surprising because that is the practice they followed for some 15 years when they were in Government. If we followed that practice we know what would happen. The dollar would start to fall like a runaway car going downhill until the brakes were applied. Those brakes would come in the form of higher interest rates which would undo all the good we have achieved to date.

• (1510)

Interest rates are at a 13-year low and the dollar does not need to be propped up as it was during the Liberal years. Then the Government tried to be all things to all people. It tried to keep everyone satisfied by trying to help business corporations who did not make good business decisions. It tried to save people's jobs, not on the basis of sound business practices but very often for straight political gain. I suggest all Canadians want us to stop and think about a new approach to the problems that have developed, at the root of which are the spending and borrowing practices of previous Liberal Governments.

The opposition Parties are being very critical of our divestiture plans. I ask them what is their solution? I am confident that when we hear their alternatives, if there are any, all Canadians will stand behind this legislation and the privatization process.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I look forward to answering any questions from the Opposition or members on the government side.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments?

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Hon. Member a question with respect to the issue of the three-month hoist. The Financial Post reports today that a cloud was cast over the Teleglobe deal when the Toronto and Montreal Stock Exchanges announced they would be investigating the unusually heavy trading in Memotec's shares in the days preceding the Minister's announcement. On February 5, the very day CDIC recommended to the Minister that Memotec's bid be accepted, trading in the stock was suspended because of a $2.38 price run-up. The company then quickly announced its interest in Teleglobe. Given that those investigations are going on, does the Hon. Member not think it would be appropriate to not hurry this thing through but wait for the three months until the investigation has been completed and the dust has settled on this deal?

Mr. Ravis: Mr. Speaker, I certainly am aware of some of the allegations made regarding possible insider trading. At this time no one knows whether information was leaked or whether this trading was purely speculation on the part of some individuals. I would suggest most of those individuals would be traders in the stock market who may have speculated in the other companies who were potential buyers of Teleglobe. I certainly would like to see it cleared up, and the investigation is going on. I suspect it will take a matter of days, not months, until the issue is cleared up. All of these transactions are on computer and I think we will have the answers very shortly.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that answer and I will point out, as the Hon. Member would want me to, that the week before The Financial Post did mention Memotec as a long shot possibility. So people could have speculated on that. However, people are asking me another question, to be quite frank, and I would ask the Member to comment on this.

There are allegations that the Government gave a contract for an employment office in Quebec to its friends, some Conservatives, rather than the Liberal bidder. Quebec businessmen apparently paid $5,000 to attend a party or a dinner around the pool with the Minister who was responsible for giving out government contracts. As a result, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) admitted in the House, a Member of this House has been charged. There are allegations with respect to skimming off money in the Oerlikon deal. I want to ask the Member, how do we know—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Order. You cannot prove that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would hope the Hon. Member would be relevant to this Bill.

Mr. Waddell: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Saskatoon—

Mr. Waddell: Let me finish the question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I thought that was the question.

Mr. Waddell: No, I was just getting to the end of it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All right, the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, the question I am asking is how do we know that there are not some so-called friends of the Government involved in this deal as well? That is the question people are asking me. Would it not be better to have these investigations by the stock exchange completed and the dust settle on this deal so it can be examined, rather than hurrying it through? It was a great surprise to Memotec that they were accepted; would it not be better to wait for three months?

Mr. Ravis: Mr. Speaker, I was wondering when the socialists were going to come up with the muck and it did not take very long. The allegations we have been hearing in this House for the last couple of weeks have been absolutely sickening as far as I am concerned. This is another example of the NDP wanting to take advantage of innuendo, do some muck-raking, and try and make it look like something is going on under the table. On Sunday night, I believe it was, I saw a very interesting documentary on the Global Television Network. It looked at a lot of these allegations. Finally there was an objective view of what has been happening. It is one thing to say that there is an allegation against the Government, but it is another thing to come up with proof. Question Period today was a prime example of people being unable to come up with any specifics, and what the Hon. Member has said is another classic example. The Hon. Member suspects members of the Government may have profited from the Memotec deal. That is absolute nonsense. We should not even be considering that. We should let the investigation by the stock exchanges continue and I am sure the results will be provided in a couple of days.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to make a few comments on Bill C-38, the privatization of Teleglobe, because this is a very important issue for my constituency. We have the earth satellite station in my constituency at Lake Cowichan. I remember visiting the site a few months ago and was very impressed with the technology which represents Canada's share in international satellite communications. The links with other countries around the Pacific are very impressive and up-to-date and it is all there in the earth station at Lake Cowichan.

However, I also met with employees and they were very concerned about the proposed privatization of Teleglobe. They were very concerned about job security, working conditions, pensions and so on. I was very pleased that the Minister gave assurances on Friday that the pension plan would be protected, that the collective agreement was going to be protected, and that the interests of the workers were being looked after in the sale of Teleglobe. That is very important. I am very pleased that this particular concern has ostensibly been looked after. Of course, our representatives on the committee will be studying this protection in some detail when the Bill goes to committee, if the Government pushes it through.

Employee concerns about jobs are very legitimate. There has been a tradition in North America and other western nations of recognizing the rights of capital investment, but we are sometimes rather slow in recognizing the rights of employees to a stake in their jobs. Often their jobs have been sold right out from under them. That has happened in some situations of privatization. It is good that in this particular case the principle that workers have a stake in their jobs was recognized.

While I was pleased that there was that protection for the rights of workers, that does not eliminate my major concern about this Bill which privatizes Teleglobe. It is important to try to see the issue in context, the context basically being the Conservative's ideological fixation with privatization. In the Budget Papers of May, 1985, we read:

> In the process of rationalizing its corporate holdings in the future, the government will adopt a new approach based on the premise that a Crown corporation or other equity investment should be sold unless it is fulfilling a public policy purpose. This way, the government will return to the private sector activities that more properly belong there.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that Teleglobe, which is involved as a vital link in Canada's communications, is fulfilling a vital public policy purpose and that on that basis alone it should not be privatized.

On the next page the paper goes on to say:

> Selling corporate interests will have a number of benefits. It will reduce the size of government in the economy and make room for private sector initiatives; it will improve market efficiency and the allocation of resources; it will improve firm efficiency through market discipline and by reducing political and bureaucratic impediments;

I would like to consider those. It says that it will reduce the size of government in the economy. Certainly Teleglobe is not that large a corporation, but selling it will to some extent reduce the size of government in the economy. We are dealing with an ideology that government involvement in the economy is somehow wrong. We have seen no studies which indicate the optimum size for government in the economy. How much does the Conservative Party want government in the economy to be reduced? What are the advantages of reducing government involvement in the economy? Those questions have not been answered. The Government says it will make room for private sector initiatives. I do not know what private sector initiatives will be involved in the sale of Teleglobe. It is being sold to a small company which is having a great deal of difficulty raising the money to purchase it, even at the fire sale price for which it is being sold.

The paper goes on to say that it will improve market efficiency and the allocation of resources. What market efficiency are we talking about here? We are dealing with a natural monopoly. I do not see any possibility of improving market efficiency by privatizing Teleglobe. With regard to the allocation of resources, I am not sure what that has to do with the sale of Teleglobe.

The paper says that it will improve firm efficiency through market discipline. Again, Mr. Speaker, there is no market discipline in this particular case because we are dealing with a natural monopoly. The Bill itself grants an extension of the monopoly for a further five years, protected by law. Even apart from that protection of law, the nature of the enterprise means that there is not likely to be any competition. Therefore, in effect, there is no market discipline.

The paper also uses the words, "by reducing political and bureaucratic impediments". These are the kinds of code words which the Conservatives sometimes use to talk about the process of regulation. They see regulation as bureaucratic impediment to the proper operation of the market. Yet, at the same time as they are talking about privatizing Teleglobe they say that it will be regulated in the public interest, that it will be under the regulations of the CRTC. On the one hand the Conservative Party is saying that we must eliminate regulations, that they are acting as a strait-jacket for private enterprise, while on the other hand they are trying to assure the Canadian people that although something will be privatized it will be firmly regulated in the public interest. I have some difficulty with that kind of thinking.

As I look at the Government's guidelines, its statement of the purpose of privatization, I see no justification for the sale of Teleglobe, except the ideological one, that they want to reduce government involvement in the economy. It is a straight ideological decision and has nothing whatsoever to do with the pragmatic benefits which would possibly flow from privatization, as they are outlined in the policy paper.

I would like to say a little about the importance of Teleglobe. We are not talking about simply another Crown corporation which we can either have or not have, which does not really matter that much. We are talking about a very important link in Canada's communications industry. Teleglobe has responsibility for all overseas telecommunications entering and leaving Canada. It includes telephone, telegraph, cable and telex communications. It is a joint owner of submarine ocean cables and telecommunications satellite systems. On that basis it has had an effective monopoly on all overseas telecommunications.

Teleglobe has been a consistent moneymaker. It is for that reason that it has been referred to as the jewel of Crown corporations. In 1985 it recorded a profit of $53.2 million. That is money coming into the federal Treasury. The Conservatives are concerned about the deficit, as are we all. In 1985 Teleglobe brought in $53.2 million and that will happen over and over again. The Conservatives are like the rather foolish person in the fairy tale who wanted to kill the goose which laid the golden egg. When we have a revenue producer the Government wants to put it in the private market and let someone else have the revenue rather than allowing it to accrue in the public interest.

In fact, the ideological fixation of the Party which is, unfortunately, in Government at the present time seems to be the mind-set that there is only one thing worse than a Crown corporation that is losing money, and that is a Crown corporation that is making money. We are dealing here with a Crown corporation which is making money, and that is very clearly something the Government cannot stomach. It is something which has to be sloughed off to the private sector at whatever price.

• (1530)

In 1985, Teleglobe's total revenues were $678 million, and I will compare that later with the total revenues of Memotec, the company which is taking Teleglobe over. The former Minister, who had to resign while he is being investigated, was in charge. There was an offer of purchase and sale from British Telecom for $750 million. The Government turned that down, and rightly so. It said it did not want this vital industry to pass into non-Canadian hands, and I agree with the Government there. If it had sold Teleglobe to a non-Canadian company, I would have been very opposed, as would, I am sure, other members of my Party. However, that $750 million was a benchmark of value. It gives us some indication of what other people saw as the value of Teleglobe. But what did we finally receive for Teleglobe when it was sold to Memotec, the minnow which is trying to swallow a whale, as it was referred to by the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell)? The Government is fudging. It indicates it sold Teleglobe for some $608.3 million, but if we look into it a little more closely, we see this is not the case at all. Of that $608.3 million, $102 million is accumulated cash which the company has on hand. There is an additional $18 million dividend. When that is subtracted from the $608.3 million, it leaves $488.3 million which Memotec is reputed to have paid for Teleglobe. Even the amount of $488.3 million does not represent what Memotec is really paying, because in addition it is also taking over debt liabilities which amount to $143 million. What this means very clearly is that the Government will only receive $345 million for Teleglobe as no actual funds will be paid for the debt. The debt is simply something which will be carried on Teleglobe's books.

The Government talks about receiving $608 million for the sale of Teleglobe when in actual fact it will only receive $345 million. I refer again to the statement I made a little earlier that British Telecom was prepared to pay $750 million. Therefore, we have a sale at approximately half of what the Government could have gotten if it had been prepared to sell at the earlier price. The question is, why is the Government making this sale? We cannot see any justification whatsoever for this except that the Government has an ideological opposition to the very idea of keeping Teleglobe in public hands. It wants Teleglobe privatized. We are very concerned about the purchase price.

In addition, we are concerned about the way in which this whole contract was handled. The previous speaker, the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ravis), became a little annoyed with my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway, for asking about the fact that trading had been suspended on Memotec. he said that any question of insider trading was pure speculation. Perhaps it is. Perhaps it is pure speculation. We do not have the facts. There is an investigation taking place and I think we all want to see what that investigation will reveal. There are some very interesting facts which are already known. On February 5, the day the Minister was advised that Memotec had won the bid, the stocks of Memotec jumped by $2.38 a share to a value of about $13 a share on the Toronto Stock Exchange. At that point the trading was halted, but it resumed the next day. More than half the number of the total shares traded in 1986 were traded in the next two days. Naturally, there have been questions raised, and not just by members of our Party and the Liberal Party, there have been very serious questions raised in the financial community as to whether or not there was insider trading. We are suggesting that before the Government proceeds with this sale, which we do not think is a very good sale even on the face of it, it should at least wait until the results of an investigation of Memotec trading has taken place. That is why we are moving that there be a halt put to the passage of this Bill, that the Bill be hoisted for a while.

Certainly, there are a number of issues which I have already delineated. We have very serious concerns about this Bill. The Financial Post has indicated there is a cloud over the deal. When trading in stock has been suspended, when the Government has had a series of scandals and near-scandals and allegations, some of which might not be founded in fact but which are putting a lot of pressure on the Government, I would think the Government itself would want to move as expeditiously as possible to clear up the total atmosphere which is undermining confidence in everything the Government is attempting to do. I would think the Government would not want to push through this particular Bill when all the questions which relate to its conduct in other areas leave the Government under a cloud, and there have been serious questions raised about insider training in this particular area.

In conclusion, I am very pleased that the Minister has indicated there are some guarantees for the pension rights and working conditions of the employees of Teleglobe. I think that is extremely important. I am glad to see that this is being looked after. We will be looking at that in committee to ensure that those rights are protected. At the same time, I cannot in any way give my support to a Bill which is selling off a public asset at a fire-sale price, which is taking a vital link in Canada's communications industry and placing it into private hands, when we do not see any justification for doing so. There is no justification in terms of the Government's own strategy and guidelines for what privatization is all about. I am at a complete loss to understand why the Government is proceeding with this Bill at a time when there is so much concern about the possibility of insider trading and all the other questions being raised about the Government's integrity at the present time.

• (1540)

Mr. Boudria: What integrity?

Mr. Manly: The Hon. Member asks: "What integrity?" The Government owes it to itself and to the Canadian people to begin to clear up some of the question marks regarding integrity. The place to begin is with this Bill. It should not proceed with it but wait until all the questions about insider trading have been cleared up. In this way we can get a real sense of what is happening.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member seems to feel that the price was poor. Why does he feel that a price which is 10 times earnings is so poor? What price does he think a company would normally be sold for? Does the Hon. Member have any evidence from Burns Fry or other brokers or dealers that this price was too low? The after-tax earnings of the company last year were $46 million. For the year ending December 31, 1985, they were $53 million. Why does he think that the price is too low? Has he evidence that says it is too low? Or is it too low because that is the ideology of the New Democratic Party? If that is what we are talking about then why does he not say: "We do not believe in the sale of any company at any time, anywhere. We really believe that the state should own everything"?

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is quite wide off the mark when he suggests that our ideology is that the state should own everything. Of course that is not the situation. We believe that the state should maintain control of vital sectors of the economy, such as Teleglobe, which is an important link in the whole communications industry in terms of Canada's links with other nations.

The Hon. Member asks why I think the price is too low. I pointed out in my speech that there were reports, and I have not heard them denied, that British Telecom was interested in paying some $750 million for the purchase of Teleglobe. That in itself would be some type of a bench-mark of value. That is what a non-Canadian firm was interested in paying for the purchase of the company.

Mr. Blenkarn: Let it be owned by foreigners, the Hon. Member would like that!

Mr. Manly: If the Hon. Member had been here for my speech, Mr. Speaker, he would be clear as to where I stand on that particular issue. I said that I would have opposed the sale to foreigners. Your Honour will recall very clearly that I said that. I underlined the point several times. We would have opposed the sale to foreigners. However, the price that foreigners were willing to pay is an indication of the value of the company.

Another indication of the value of the company is the fact that the Government is fudging the figures with respect to what it is receiving. It says it is receiving some $608 million for the sale of Teleglobe. When that is broken down one sees that Memotec is actually paying some $345 million. It is obvious that the Government is pretending it will receive $608 million. It will actually receive about $345 million. If the Government thought that $345 million was such a great deal then it would have come out and said: "We have made a great deal. We will be getting $345 million for the sale of Teleglobe". Instead, the Government has tried to maintain that it will receive $608 million, which is just not the case.

Mr. James: Mr. Speaker, I think it only fair for the Canadian public to understand that the figures thrown around by the Hon. Member from the New Democratic Party are either somewhat mistaken or the Hon. Member is somewhat confused with respect to them. The Hon. Member seems to think that the $143 million in debt is just rolled away somewhere. If the Hon. Member were to look at accounting principles he would see that they do not allow the subtraction of debts from purchase prices. How he developed in his own mind that that can be done is beyond me. Many people in the business must be laughing up their sleeves at that type of comment.

There is also $100 million in cash which will go to the Government in addition to the $488 million. There is another $18 million in dividends which will flow to the Government. Thus there is no windfall to Teleglobe, something about which the Hon. Member did not think. The Government has covered all the bases. These are additional moneys coming to the federal Government. I merely wanted to set the Hon. Member straight in that regard.

I wonder why members of the socialist Party of our country are so far off base in terms of their colleagues in other parts of the world in which socialist Governments are selling off Crown corporations. They seem to have caught on to the idea that they are certainly anvils around the necks of Government and tend to inhibit free enterprise. I read an article in last Saturday's issue of The Globe and Mail which pointed out that in Spain, where there has been a socialist Government in place since October, 1982, small state-run companies are being offered for sale through the Madrid stock market. As the Hon. Member well knows, there are many other socialist Governments in the world which are selling off companies. It seems that the socialist Party of our country is not on the same wavelength.

I would like to comment on something that was said by a member of the Hon. Member's Party on December 1, 1986, with respect to the second reading of the Canadair Bill. He said:

> We in the NDP are not necessarily against privatization. We are not saying in every case we should not privatize; we are saying you have to have sound economic reasons for it.

There seems to be great confusion within the New Democratic Party about this whole business. I am also a little bit confused by it all. I think members of the Hon. Member's Party are also a little bit confused by it all. I think they should come clean with the Canadian people.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any confusion in our Party with respect to this issue. The only thing we cannot understand is why the Government is proceeding with this sale at the present time.

With respect to the question the Hon. Member raises about accounting principles, I will admit that I am not an accountant. However, I can do my arithmetic, as can the average Canadian. When the Government says it is selling something and that it will receive in the order of $608 million for it and yet the actual money changing hands is about $345 million, the average Canadian can put two and two together to come up with four, not the figure that some fancy accountant might get. The fact is that Memotec will be putting out about $345 million for this company. I think that the Canadian people are getting hosed on the deal.

As far as the situation with respect to other socialist countries selling off some of their Crown corporations is concerned, I think that any socialist Government worth its salt will want to deal with the situation on a case-by-case basis. There are certainly situations in which Crown corporations, or parastatals as they are called in other countries, have reached the point where they are no longer serving a public purpose. In such cases they should be sold. I do not think there is any question about that among members of my caucus. There is certainly none on my part. We are saying very clearly that in the case of Teleglobe it is still serving a vital public purpose, and it should remain in the public domain. The Government is selling it off at fire-sale prices, and pretending that it is receiving more money for it than it actually is.

There are real concerns about the type of trading that has taken place in Memotec's shares that should not be taking place. While the investigation is taking place, the Government should be prepared to put this on the back-burner.

Mr. Greenaway: Can the Hon. Member show us proof that British Telecom offered $750 million for Teleglobe? Is the Hon. Member against a small company like Memotec buying it, or is he against small business? Would he rather have had Bell Canada buy it? It probably would have bought it for $700 million. Then I guess the Hon. Member would have said that there had been a monopoly.

First, where is the proof that British Telecom offered $750 million? Does the Hon. Member have a copy of a letter, or what does he have?

Mr. Manly: I do not have any proof, but I would be interested in receiving all the background documents to see whether there has been that type of offer. It is something that has been reported, that there was an offer of $750 million.

Mr. Blenkarn: Where was it reported?

Mr. Manly: We would like to have all the background information on this matter.

Finally, we are not opposed to the fact that it is being sold to a small company. We are opposed to the fact that it is being sold when it should remain in the public domain. That is our basic concern. This is a vital part of Canada's communications link. The public should retain control of it.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp)—Immigration—(a) Minister's broadcast statements. (b) Content of statements; the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier)—Royal Canadian Mounted Police—(a) Language policy. (b) Request that Government express intentions more precisely; the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald)—Unemployment insurance—(a) Level of benefits. (b) Request that Government categorically reject all benefit reductions.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

TELEGLOBE CANADA REORGANIZATION AND DIVESTITURE ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-38, an Act respecting the reorganization and divestiture of Teleglobe Canada, be now read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendment of Ms. McDonald (p. 3435).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria).

[Translation]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, it is with some hesitation that I rise today to take part in this debate, when I see the Conservatives and the New Domocrats fighting to keep that coveted third place in the public opinion polls. You will agree it is rather interesting to follow this family squabble between the Conservatives and the New Democrats, both of whom want to be second one day, and meanwhile, we Liberals are up front in the polls.

I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate, especially since the Hon. Member for Argenteuil—Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault) is present, just across the way. I must say it is always a pleasure to have the floor when she is there. I would enjoy a chance to listen to her speeches and no doubt that time will come, Mr. Speaker. Nothing is impossible, and I am looking forward to that great moment.

Mr. Speaker, what led to the privatization of Teleglobe? First of all, I think we should recall that on August 1, 1985, the former Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, the Hon. Member for York—Peel (Mr. Stevens), and I must say, Mr. Speaker, it is rather complicated to keep track of all these former Ministers, with all the scandals and the almost perpetual Cabinet shuffle going on.

Mrs. Bourgault: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Argenteuil—Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault), on a point of order.

Mrs. Bourgault: Mr. Speaker, I may remind the Hon. Member, my dear friend and riding neighbour, to speak to the Bill and refrain from mentioning scandals that have no connection with the sale of Teleglobe, and, Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform him that if he wants to hear what I have to say, I will be speaking next.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sure that the Hon. Member will become relevant. The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) has the floor.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I just heard that the Hon. Member will be speaking afterwards, and I am very sorry for you, Mr. Speaker.

Before I was so rudely interrupted, I was saying that this process of privatization started with the Hon. Member for York—Peel (Mr. Stevens), and that is where it links into the discussion. I had some difficulty recalling, because Ministers do change quite rapidly in the present Government, as some of my hon. colleagues across will know.

In any event, I think that it was the Hon. Member for York Peel at that time who was the Minister.

[Translation]

He stated in this House that his Government would immediately proceed with the privatization of Teleglobe. That is what he said on August 1, 1985.

On September 9, 1985, Dominion Securities Pitfield, the Government advisor, wrote that all bidders would be told by October 30, 1985, whether their bid was acceptable and that a sale agreement would be signed on December 15, 1985. That is what the Government said at the time. Let us go on. On September 11, 1985, Dominion Securities wrote to the bidders to inform them that the date of the sale agreement had been put back to January 15, 1986. You know, Mr. Speaker, that the Conservatives cannot do everything in the prescribed time limits. Then, on November 12, 1986, if you will please note—

Mr. La Salle: It is not so bad. We achieved what you never could in less than one year!

Mr. Boudria: I shall listen later very closely to the comments of the Minister without portfolio and Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), the Minister of the Mirabel land corporation, if I may call him that.

Mr. La Salle: Tell me about Mirabel!

Mr. Boudria: On November 12, 1986, Dominion Securities wrote that the sale of Teleglobe had once more been postponed because of the temporary absence of the Minister responsible. We know what happened at the time, and this brings us back to what I was saying earlier. One of the Ministers responsible suddenly became irresponsible, if I may put it that way, and we witnessed one of the numerous Cabinet shuffles of this government. There you have it!

Mr. La Salle: Some Members always act irresponsibly themselves!

Mr. Boudria: Still nothing in the spring of 1986. On November 19, 1986, the Minister of State for Privatization (Mrs. McDougall) this time and the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) announced the final bidding stage for the purchase of Teleglobe and said that bids were to be submitted before January 9, 1987. Again, on December 19, 1986, the Minister of State (Privatization) tabled in the House a draft bill calling for the privatization of Teleglobe Canada. On December 30, 1986—I continue with the chronology, Mr. Speaker, because I feel it is important in this debate—the Government turned down an offer from Canadian telephone companies to purchase 40 per cent of Teleglobe Canada. That was not good enough. The Conservatives felt they had to put everything on the block—because you know Mr. Speaker, being so objective and neutral, that they have this extreme right tendency which compels them to get rid of everything the Government owns, except patronage, of course. On January 9, 1987, Memotec Data made an offer to CDIC for the purchase of Teleglobe Canada. On January 19, in an article, the Financial Post suggested that Memotec could have made an offer for the purchase of Teleglobe.

I am told that it was the first time this dossier had ever been mentioned in public. The House should remember that a few days later, the value of Memotec shares had increased dramatically.

Mr. La Salle: Why don't you talk to us about the Petro Canada shares!

Mr. Boudria: I am not saying there was anything wrong with that, but the Minister opposite has just made a comment which would suggest that there might be something wrong with it. Personally, I could not have made such a suggestion, Mr. Speaker, without being considered overly partisan. But I listen with a certain—

Mr. La Salle: Tell us about Petro-Canada!

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Excuse me for one minute. There will be an opportunity for questions and comments after the debate. I would hope that Hon. Members will wait, and then they can ask the Hon. Member a few questions and comments following his speech. The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Boudria: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate you trying to keep those Tories quiet. Of course, they need your guidance.

On January 27, CDIC had a meeting. It was examining the offers for the sale of Teleglobe. Then we are told that it was instructed to notify the people who were the successful bidders. We are told by David Torrey of Dominion Securities that a letter was received by the bidders describing how the documents in question had been examined. On February 2, 1987, 11,025 shares of Memotec were traded on the Montreal Exchange, and the closing price was $10.25 per share. Previously I have described this as a rather dramatic appreciation of the value of the shares. Quite apart from the fact that there is an ongoing investigation by the securities people into how the value of the shares rose so rapidly, I will not get into the matter at this point.

• (1600)

However there is a message which indicates that surely the purchase in question was a good one for the company. Had it been a bad purchase, the value of the shares would not have skyrocketed. The fact that the value of the shares increased dramatically tells me that the company got a very good deal indeed.

A while ago the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) asked how we knew that it was such a good deal. The proof is in the pudding. When the value of shares increases that fast, everyone who bought shares was of the opinion that it was a good deal. One does not run to buy shares in a company which has just made the worst investment in history. Conversely, one would run to buy shares in a company which just made a real hot deal. Obviously that is what happened in this case. It was a good deal for the company.

I will not deal with the ongoing investigation at this point in time. There are other opportunities to do that, for example, in Oral Question Period and so on. I have been told that the company last year brought a profit of $70 million to the Government and even more the year before. It was sold for a little over $600 million. At first blush that seems to be a rather good deal for the company which made the purchase. Obviously the people who bought shares in Memotec were of the same opinion. Contrary to the Tories who have a bent for selling everything including the Crown jewels, and contrary to our socialist friends who have some difficulty in selling any Crown corporation, we in the Liberal Party are far more pragmatic. We are of the opinion that if a Crown corporation fulfils a policy objective, it should be retained. If we are talking about—

Mr. Blenkarn: What is the policy objective in this regard?

Mr. Boudria: I hear the Hon. Member across the way. We are one of the least densely populated countries on the face of the earth, the second largest country in geographical area. I would think that communications either within the country or with the rest of the world, as they apply to the Teleglobe issue, are important. It is an important issue and an important policy element in order for us, as a society and as a country, to determine how effectively we can liaise and at what cost, and whether or not Canadian taxpayers should have the ultimate right to decide that it should or should not be done.

This morning I listened to the very eloquent remarks of the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins). She asked a question of the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker), and I listened very attentively to what she said. In her remarks she indicated that the Government had to sell Crown corporations because of the fact that we have some financial difficulty and because of the fact that the deficit is high. She did not quite say that it had to be sold to pay off the national debt, but the implication was clearly there that the Government sees what it is doing, the selling of the assets of Canadians to pay for its mismanagement, as being appropriate. It is a little like someone selling the furniture to pay the rent. It is not the correct approach. Perhaps the Government feels that this corporation does not fulfil an important policy objective. By the way, I have yet to see the Government's communications policy. I would like to know what it is and what are its intentions for the long term. The Government should bring forward a policy and say that it is a policy Canadians have discussed. Then, after it had been discussed and adopted, the Government could say that it feels a particular Crown corporation is no longer required to fulfil that policy objective. If that were the case, we could proceed with the sale, provided that we did not give it away, that it was sold at an appropriate price.

I do not think we sold the company for a very high price, but we did not quite give it away, as was suggested by a member of the New Democratic Party. Obviously when one takes over the liabilities of a company, it must be considered part of the purchase cost. However, even taking that into account, we must remember that it was not sold for a very high price. The point I am making this afternoon is that we should have established the communications policy of the Government. Then we could decide whether or not the Crown corporation fulfilled that policy objective, whether or not it was necessary. If the Government indicated that it had a policy and that the corporation was not required to fulfil that policy, perhaps it would have been all right to sell it off. I do not have a mental block about selling everything or not selling anything. However, there are Crown corporations which should be kept by the Government. We should not sell them all because it is the "in" thing to do.

We must remember that a Conservative Prime Minister of Canada, Sir John A. Macdonald, and the other Fathers of Confederation inserted the issue of a national railway in the Constitution. We should also remember that having government corporations or national corporations is not something which should be foreign to Conservative Members of Parliament. It is something that has been with us all along, something strongly supported by past Conservative administrations.

My colleagues in the NDP want to sell hardly anything in the way of Crown corporations. I do not know for a fact that they would not sell anything, but generally they are not in favour of the Government divesting itself of any Crown corporation. However, members on the government side generally want to sell everything, whether or not it fulfils an objective, whether or not it is a good price, and so on, just because they have a bent that it is the correct thing to do.

I say to Hon. Members on both sides of the House that the merits of Crown corporations must be looked at individually. I would say, for example, that Petro-Canada is very necessary, and there are many others. I happen to think that our national airline is a very necessary Crown corporation. Nevertheless, until we determine what is needed in order to fulfil the policy objective of the Government, we should not proceed with the sale of Teleglobe Canada. It is being done in a backward manner. What will happen in a year or two? Will the Government decide that because of some new policy objective we have to buy it back? We do not know. Are we to sell it and then realize that we should not have done so? It will be too late then.

Mr. Blenkarn: Oh!

Mr. Boudria: I hear the Hon. Member for Mississauga South making noises.

Mr. Blenkarn: I was just looking at Bill C-25 in the last Parliament. Maybe you could explain it.

Mr. Boudria: I can't explain Conservative Bills—

Mr. Blenkarn: How about C-25 in the last Parliament?

Mr. Boudria: Right now I am being pertinent and discussing Bill C-38. I know Your Honour would not want me to address Bill C-25 of a previous Parliament. It would be out of order. I have high respect for the rules of the House and for your objectivity and neutrality, Mr. Speaker. I would not want to make mention of the Bill to which the Conservative Member has referred at the moment. With that said, Mr. Speaker, I want to end my remarks on Bill C-38 and remind the Government that it was not elected to sell off the Crown jewels. It was elected to provide good and proper administration for the people of Canada. It is high time that the Government be made aware and that its Members be reminded that they are here to provide good, competent administration—

• (1610)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): We have.

Mr. Boudria: —and not that other stuff.

Mr. Stewart: That is why the interest rate is down.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I had to rise to comment briefly on such an important issue.

The Hon. Member started by saying that a responsible Minister had become irresponsible. Mr. Speaker, may I point out to you that there are Hon. Members who demonstrate their irresponsibility all the time they are in the House.

What I want to suggest about this sale or privatization is that the Government is fulfilling its commitment to give the private sector the place it deserves, while insuring that it is in the best interests of the Canadian people. Our Government had promised that it would give back to the private sector—that it would eliminate this competition from the State which was already very bad under the Liberal Government and which would probably be even worse under an NPD system.

In the circumstances, I think we are meeting the commitment that was made and that we are giving back to the private sector the position it should have been given long ago, and as a result, this country's economic renewal has now been well underway during the last two years. That is something they fail to mention.

Mr. Speaker, it is a matter of philosophy. I want to make this point, because it is a matter of philosophy. It is the philosophy of a party that respects the private sector, and I think that says it all. For instance, Mr. Speaker, and the Hon. Member from Glengarry—Prescott—Russell may remember what I am about to say and even use it as a striking example. When I arrived at Public Works, Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General condemned the Government for refusing to sell property that had been surplus to its needs for many years and was costing Canadians $22 million. I asked my departmental officials to take steps to make the surplus buildings and property available to the private sector. Developers were lining up to buy the unused buildings, the unused square feet the Auditor General had been criticizing and which were costing taxpayers $22 million. In one year, we sold $75 million worth, which generated—this is very important—$2 billion worth of investment by the private sector, created employment and not only made these buildings attractive for municipalities but also created opportunities for developing a number of building complexes that today are the pride and joy of several municipalities.

That is what it means to let the private sector participate for the benefit of the community. That is exactly the principle we are applying in our privatization approach. Some Hon. Members refuse to understand that, since I assume they do have the ability to do so.

Mr. Speaker, that is the point I wanted to make, especially for the benefit of some of our Members here today.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, the Minister has just given us all the reasons. Why is it all right to privatize in some cases while not in others? For instance, he was referring to the Auditor General who agreed and even recommended that certain properties should be sold since they no longer served any Government purpose, and so forth. And he said that in those circumstances, it was a good thing to get rid of them. I agree, I don't query that at all. I never criticized those sales, as the Minister will recall. I was his parliamentary critic for a while, when he was still Minister of Public Works.

Mr. La Salle: Your Government never did.

Mr. Boudria: I did not criticize the principle of the thing. However, Mr. Speaker, when we are talking about the privatization of a corporation with a major national purpose—

Mr. La Salle: I'm all for it.

Mr. Boudria: —the Minister said earlier that the properties in question served no useful purpose and were thus disposed of. Mr. Speaker, he just told us why we should not dispose of this Crown corporation.

Mr. La Salle: We are giving back the private sector its rightful place.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, in the case of a Crown corporation such as Teleglobe, I suggest the Government should have provided us with its plan for the communication industry making it possible for us to determine whether the divestiture of Teleglobe Canada was necessary to achieve these goals. Then, we would be in a position to make a reasonable and sound decision. But no doubt unwittingly, the Minister has just suggested in his reply why it would be illogical to privatize Teleglobe Canada now—

Mr. La Salle: I said it would be logical.

Mr. Boudria: And the same arguments he used to say that it would be logical in certain cases, I can use to demonstrate that it is not in this case, Mr. Speaker. It is definitely not logical.

Mr. La Salle: You will be dishonest to the end!

[English]

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member indicated that he felt that because Memotec shares on the market went up in value after the transaction was completed somehow this was a bad deal. Does he think the Rotary idea of business that a good deal has to be a good deal for all concerned is in itself a bad deal? Is it a bad deal because it is a good deal for Memotec and a good deal for Canada? Or does the Hon. Member think it would only be a good deal for Canada if the Memotec shares had fallen out of bed?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I was not sure whether the Member was trying to get me lost at the seventh or the eighth good deal or bad deal in the preamble to his question. The point I made a while ago, and I will repeat it, is that if there was such a dramatic appreciation in the value of the shares of the company that purchased Teleglobe, then obviously there was a dramatic improvement in the final situation of that corporation because it bought Teleglobe to start with. Obviously if it was such a good deal then one has to conclude that the one selling the company sold it for something less than it was worth. That is only logical, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Blenkarn: Not at all.

Mr. Boudria: If you buy something that is too cheap it is because someone sold it to you too cheap. That is elementary. It cannot be the other way around. The Government could not have gotten 130 per cent of what a company was worth with the company benefiting at the same ratio. It has to be the opposite. If the purchaser bought a company and it was a good deal, it is because the seller sold too cheap. It has to be that way, otherwise it would not make any sense. The Member across I believe is from the accounting world, so he knows how to count.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, it is clear then that the Liberal Member does not really understand business or how deals work at all. A deal can be an excellent deal for both parties. In this case the deal involved payment to the Government of Canada of about $600 million by the time the transaction was wound down. To the shareholders of Memotec, which is a small venture capital company out to explore the reaches of technology, the transaction is also a good deal. It gives that company a base on which to work and to grow, a dramatically strong base. It is a good deal for both. It is a good deal for the employees, for the country, for communications and for competition. Can the Hon. Member tell us why it is a bad deal because it happens to be a good deal for all concerned?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, we have a "good deal member" across the way.

Mr. Blenkarn: You are right.

Mr. Boudria: He is certainly trying hard to make us believe that the Government sold Teleglobe for every cent it was worth, yet the company that bought Teleglobe got a real hot deal judging by the way its shares augmented in the manner they did after the purchase. If the shares of the company climbed 100 per cent, it tells me that the Government of Canada sold Teleglobe for way less than it was worth, otherwise the shares would not have appreciated to start with. It is elementary mathematics. The opposite is incorrect, to say the least.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate. The Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins).

• (1620)

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in today's debate on Bill C-38, the Bill to privatize Teleglobe. It has been very interesting listening to the debate on this particular issue over the last two days. It appears as though the position of the Liberal Party would be privatization if necessary but not necessarily privatization. That would seem fairly consistent with the Liberal Party's position on free trade and NATO. Liberals really cannot make up their minds about their position. Unfortunately, I did not have the opportunity of asking the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) just what the criteria for privatization would be and how the Liberal Party would apply those criteria to the 11 Crown corporations this Government has privatized over the past two years.

I understand that the NDP's philosophy is basically consistent and would appear to be totally against privatization. From listening to the debate, one might feel that it believes that if a Crown corporation is making money, the Government should keep it and should be in the business of making money. As far as the Progressive Conservative Party is concerned, that is just not the purpose of government. We are not in government to run business, we are in Government to govern the country.

Perhaps it would be appropriate to look at the record of privatization. During the 1984 election campaign, I and many of my colleagues heard our constituents say that they felt the Government should get out of many Crown corporations which were more appropriately run by free enterprise. That was certainly my view, and I made a commitment to my constituents that I would work hard to pressure the Government to undertake a program of the privatization of Crown corporations that no longer met a public policy objective.

Indeed, in November 1984, just two months after we took office, a paper entitled A New Direction for Canada: An Agenda for Economic Renewal was published. I am proud to say that this Government has followed that agenda. One of the objectives outlined in it was and remains the improved management of Crown corporation assets.

In the Budget of May 1985, concrete plans were announced for the rationalization and privatization of Crown corporations and other federal investments, such as those mentioned by the Minister earlier including federal buildings, based on the premise that those corporations or investments should be sold or wound up if public ownership is no longer necessary to meet public policy objectives. Our philosophy has been very clear.

In the implementation of that objective, the record is clear. We have already privatized 11 Crown corporations beginning in July 1985 with the completion of the sale of Northern Transportation Company Limited. We have done this in a pragmatic way. In fact, I am sometimes pressured about moving more quickly. We realize, however, that many interests must be met. There are the interests of consumers and there are the interests of employees. That was certainly an issue with respect to the sale of de Havilland. There is also the interest of the public at large. All of those interests are ones with which the Government must deal.

I know that the Minister responsible for privatization has, with her officials, been undertaking a solid program of evaluating each Crown corporation to see whether or not they meet the criteria which have been set and to see if it is time to seek out private owners. We are making considerable progress in this respect. I think that Teleglobe is perhaps the largest such sale to date.

Why do we think it is important to sell back to the private sector these corporations which, in the view of the Government and in the view of the public at large, no longer serve to fulfil the necessary public policy objective? When we sell something back to the private sector, we free it from many of the constraints inevitably involved in Government. These restraints, I know, sometimes frustrate many of us, but they are there. They are necessary for organizations of the Government because there are many considerations which come into account. Crown corporations cannot respond quickly to market initiatives. Of course, in many cases there is a requirement for new capital. New capital would allow a company like Teleglobe to expand, and the Government itself is not an appropriate source for this kind of capital investment. I do not think that is what the taxpayers want the Government to do.

Once a corporation is sold and if it is well operated and soundly managed, it will be able to raise capital for expansion from individual Canadians, pension funds and investors. It will be able to expand and operate in a much more effective and efficient manner, free of the burden of bureaucracy. That of course is what the Government and our Party believe.

We are not alone in this belief. It has been extremely interesting to learn that over the last two years, the philosophy of this Progressive Conservative Government has been shared by many western European Governments, Governments of a variety of political stripes. In Great Britain, the sale of British Gas was a tremendous success story. It was considered to be a rather staid company, but it has now been sold and it is doing tremendously well. The same is true of British Telecom. Of course, very recently the announcement of the sale of British Airways was made. Last night's Venture program on CBC indicated that this announcement was accompanied by fireworks. It reminded me of Expo 86. The announcement was certainly made in a very outgoing way and there was a tremendous response.

It is also interesting to note that in many cases, when Crown corporations are sold to the public, the value of their shares go up very quickly. I think this was a point made by my hon. friend from Mississauga. When a corporation is sold to the public, the public becomes interested and gets involved. In fact, in Britain they are talking about the people's capitalism, the opportunity for the people of Britain to invest and become involved in companies which were formerly controlled by the Government. It has been a very successful venture.

France has followed a similar course. Under the previous socialist Government of France, as I am sure my colleagues in the NDP are aware, the sale of many Crown corporations was undertaken. Many of the largest corporations in the auto glass, chemicals and telecommunication industries were nationalized in 1982 and are now being offered for sale. The present Government of France is carrying on with that initiative as well and it has been very successful.

As my colleague mentioned earlier today, even in Spain with the socialist Government which has been in office since October 1982, some state-run companies are being offered for sale. It is becoming accepted by Governments on both sides of the political spectrum that the Government should get out of running businesses as these businesses may operate much more effectively in the private sector.

I know that my colleagues in the New Democratic Party of Canada simply are not up to date and in tune with global thinking on these issues. That is not surprising because NDP Members are not even in tune with their NDP colleagues in British Columbia on such issues as the 15 per cent export tax on forestry products. Perhaps they should begin to listen to their colleagues around the country and around the world. They might get updated on these issues.

Having discussed the principle of privatization, I would like to turn to the specific project that is at hand, the sale of Teleglobe. Over the last two days, I have not heard very much about the background of Teleglobe. I have a particular interest in it. I am sure my colleagues are aware that the Canadian Overseas Telecommunications Company which was founded in 1949 acquired the assets of Cable and Wireless Ltd. and Canadian Marconi Ltd., both privately-operated British firms. When my father first came to Canada in the early 1900s after serving in the First World War, he worked for Cable and Wireless Ltd. and I remember as a child hearing stories about that company. My uncle worked for them, too. He was in South America. I remember the stories of the laying of the cables across the Atlantic, so I have a kind of special interest in this issue.

• (1630)

In 1949, the COTC was formed, and in 1956 the first long-distance multi-purpose coaxial submarine cable was laid across the Atlantic Ocean between Scotland and Newfoundland. That brought in a new era of long-distance calling. Then the name was changed to Teleglobe. It has been a very successful company performing important service in long-distance telecommunications, working both with the telephone companies in providing the cable and the system for overseas telephone calls, and the telex systems as well. I thought it was interesting that its assets are spread right across the country. It has three major categories of assets. It shares with a number of foreign entities ownership in a number of transoceanic submarine cables most of which form part of the Commonwealth cable system. It also owns approximately 3 per cent of Intelsat which operates communications satellites around the globe. Earth stations operating with the Intelsat system are located in Nova Scotia, Quebec and Vancouver Island. Those are wholly owned by Teleglobe. It also operates international switching centres or gateways in Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver where overseas traffic is routed to and from the networks of Canada's domestic carriers. The company has certainly expanded its operations and performed a very important service, and I would like to congratulate those involved for the excellent service.

My colleague who spoke before me said that this sale is a good deal. It is. It is a good deal for the seller, the buyer, consumers, and the country as a whole. The Toronto Sun is not often complimentary about this Government but even that paper, in its editorial yesterday, said that Memotec appears to be a good deal for both the seller, which is the taxpayer, and the buyers, which are some of biggest pension funds around. The editorial said it was time to applaud a move that will bring major benefits to just about everyone. I think that when you can manage a situation like that it is almost miraculous.

Let me just reiterate some of the benefits. As Chairman of the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the interest of consumers is very near and dear to my heart. This is a particularly good deal for consumers. As you know, as part of the sale of Teleglobe there is an agreement that overseas rates will be reduced by 13 per cent on January 1, 1988, and telex charges will decline by 10 per cent. Those are very significant amounts. Many Canadians call their families and friends overseas. For the average Canadian family who would like to call their relatives or friends on an anniversary, a birthday or even in an emergency, as well as the inevitable long-distance calls at Christmas, this means their 1988 phone bill could fall by around $50. Has anyone thought about that? It is like a tax break. We have many wonderful Filipino Canadians and if they call home the savings will be even greater. These are real savings that Canadians will enjoy as a result of this sale.

That does not even take into account the very positive impact for the small business person operating a telex. I have many business people like this in my own riding, and for them the savings could run in the hundreds of dollars. At the same time we have the assurance for the first time that Teleglobe will come under the jurisdiction of the CRTC. It will be a privately-operated and publicly-regulated company. We know that the company will have to show its costs and will be held to an appropriate rate of return. Consumers will have the opportunity to review those figures at CRTC hearings. Earlier today a Member on the other side of the House said that after five years prices will increase. I would say the exact opposite. For the first time we will have a greater degree of control over long-distance calling and telex rates.

There has been a lot of discussion as well about the sale price. I would like to put the facts on the record. The Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) said when he spoke on the Bill on Friday that all we were getting was $350 million. That is totally wrong. I am not surprised because the Hon. Member is perhaps a bit concerned that his riding is going to disappear under redistribution. Obviously he is trying to make some points in this case. We are getting $608 million cash out of this deal. We are getting the $488 million sale price—

Ms. McDonald: I rise on a rather serious point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member is imputing extremely incorrect motives to the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). She is suggesting that his opinions as to good policy for Canada are determined entirely by the possibility of boundary—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order, it is debate.

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, as I was saying, of the $608 million in cash the Government gets as a result of this sale, $488 million comes from Memotec, $102 million comes from the Teleglobe treasury, plus a $18 million dividend. There has been some question concerning Teleglobe's liabilities. The new Teleglobe is buying those liabilities, and that does not reduce what the Government will receive. I just want to make sure Hon. Members opposite understand that point because it is very important and I am sure none of us would want incorrect information going out across the country.

Another point made earlier in the debate really concerned me. That was made by the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly). He said that Memotec, a very innovative and exciting company, did not have the funding in place. I want to assure him that the funding is certainly in place. As I am sure he is aware, the partners involved are the National Bank, McLeod, Young & Weir, Richardson-Greenshields, and Geoffrion Leclerc, four very sound financial institutions. I can assure him that the Government would not have proceeded with even looking at the offer to purchase unless all of the funds were firmly in place. Therefore, it is not appropriate to suggest that the company did not have the funding in place. I am sure it would be very upset to hear that.

I would like to close with some comments on how this deal is good for the employees. We know that when the sale of de Havilland went through there was a lot of moaning and groaning around the House about its impact. What happened? Five hundred new jobs have been created since that Crown corporation was privatized. I hope the same thing will happen here. I do not know, but we have ensured that the employees will be well looked after. Their pension plan has been established. In fact, the employees will be given the opportunity to purchase 5 per cent of the equity at a cost of 90 per cent of the price paid by Memotec. That is a very good deal. Interest-free loans repayable over five years are available. That is an excellent part of the arrangement. It will give the employees a chance to participate in the management of the company. I am sure it will help the company become even more productive and profitable than it has been in the past.

In fact, as we have said before, this is a good deal for all concerned. My hope is that with the new initiative and the new private owners we will indeed see the company grow and prosper. I am sure there will be new investors and new purchasers of stock. We will be able to look back in another year, two years or five years and say what a marvelous decision it was to put this Crown corporation back into the hands of Canadians. I ask that we move quickly to ensure that this Bill is passed and the sale proceeds in order that that new era can commence.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment to make and a couple of questions to ask of the speaker. On the issue of the treatment of employees the member has said how well protected the employees will be. I certainly concede that there has been considerable improvement as a result of a great deal of protest. I wonder whether the member realizes that the pension provisions as set out in the original terms of the sale would have disadvantaged the employees considerably. I wonder whether she will give a bit of credit to the opposition Parties and the unions for speaking up.

The Member referred to rate reductions. The cost of making overseas calls and telex calls will be reduced. Does the Member not realize that Teleglobe had already planned rate reductions? The company was told to keep that information quiet so that it would look like a benefit resulting from privatization which would make the deal look better.

On the more general point of the rates that are being charged, American companies are presently charging even lower rates for overseas calls. If the Member really wants these rate reductions to be consistent with that, would she not agree to routing all overseas calls through the American companies and not have a company at all? That is one option. In dealing with that question, she will have to come to terms with the fact that if that were to be seriously considered the company would disappear.

The only way in which the company can survive is with a measure of protection. We are not talking about some free enterprise company in the private sector beating all the competition, but about a highly protected company. This makes it quite different from what she is talking about, a thriving private sector as opposed to the public sector. This area will have to be protected if it is going to survive at all. You cannot have it both ways. You cannot talk about the virtues of business competing and bringing rates down, and also about ensuring the company's survival by giving it protection through regulation.

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, on the first point, the Government does listen to all groups. That is vital to governing. We listen to representations made from all quarters. We listen and respond in an appropriate manner. The final arrangements with respect to the protection of pension benefits are improved from what was originally proposed. That is a credit to all who have been involved.

I was a little surprised by the Member's last comment that the alternative would be to leave the market totally open to the U.S. I know of my hon. colleague's very great concern about the protection of Canadian culture and Canadian industry. As my hon. colleagues know, there was a possibility of selling this company to a foreign-owned company. However, we rejected that possibility because we felt that it was in the best interests of Canada that the company remain in Canadian control. In fact, the legislation requires that not more than 20 per cent of the shares can be owned by foreign operations. We think it is important to keep it in Canada.

As the Hon. Member may also be aware, there is also provision that for a period of five years Teleglobe will continue to have sole control of the operations within its area. After that time applications may be made by other companies to enter into this field. The CRTC and the Government will obviously have to make a decision at that time as to whether further competition will be allowed in this field.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a couple of comments and ask a question of the Hon. Member. I think she may be guilty of making some statements which disturb me and could leave misleading impressions with people viewing these debates. I suggest that she should get her facts straight.

I am disturbed by her comments and some of those of her colleagues about the lumber deal. She knows perfectly well that members of the New Democratic Party in British Columbia have been saying for years that it is about time that B.C. started to charge adequate stumpage rates on its forests. They have taken that position consistently for a long time. However, they agree with us that Canada should not be forced into a situation of imposing a lumber tax because of American actions. In effect, we should have the right to be wrong in this country. My colleagues in British Columbia happen to agree with that.

However, now that the Conservatives have fallen into third place in the polls, they seem to be directing their fire toward the New Democrats. I guess they cannot forgive us for moving into the number two position. We are going to go a bit higher, too. That was, perhaps, a digression.

My specific point is that the Hon. Member reiterates that this is a $600 million sale. First, $102 million of the proceeds which the Government is drawing from this sale is money which it has drawn from Teleglobe Canada by means of a cash distribution without the need to sell the company at all. The Hon. Member will, of course, agree with me that that figure is outstanding on the balance sheet of the company. It was cash reserves or reserves in short-term investments and there was no need to sell Teleglobe, but the Government wanted $100 million to bring the deficit down for the Budget of the Finance Minister (Mr. Wilson) later this week.

In addition, as the member knows, there is an $18 million dividend which is also being paid just prior to the sale being consummated. The real question is that of the $142 million in debt liabilities. We have talked to the President of Memotec who has confirmed that as part of the purchase price Memotec is assuming Teleglobe's debt liability which amounts to $143 million. This means that the Government will only receive $345 million for Teleglobe as no actual funds will be paid for the debt. It is simply a transfer of responsibility for the debt from the present owner, the Government of Canada, to the new owner, Memotec. I would like the Hon. Member to confirm that that effectively means that all the cash Memotec has to come up with is approximately $345 million. There is room for misunderstanding here. I would not want the Hon. Member to be guilty of promulgating misunderstanding.

• (1650)

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to get into debate on the lumber deal. There are other venues for discussion on that. I might check with my cohort out in British Columbia to get his view on it.

With respect to the other issue, I have checked with the officials of the Department and they have assured me that what Memotec is doing is buying the shares. They are not buying the assets. They are paying the $488.3 million. That is the actual amount it will be paying for the shares.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments has now terminated. Debate.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to make a few comments on this Bill. I would say quite honestly that I am open to stand corrected on this particular point. I think it is something which will have to be looked into in some detail because the difference of $140 million between what the Hon. Member contends is being paid for Teleglobe and what we think it is, after conversation with the President of Memotec, is a very substantial difference. In fact, it is a very material difference indeed. It concerns me that in the process of privatization, the Government, a bit like its predecessor in office, one might say, is more concerned about the PR value of this particular act of Government than about the real facts.

I have just taken the trouble to look through the information kit which was distributed by the Minister of State for Privatization (Mrs. McDougall) in order to try to get an answer to this particular question. I was concerned when I looked at the notes of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), who, I assure the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins), will definitely be back in the House of Commons after the next election. He may not have the pleasure of her company, but he will be back.

This question is very serious. I was involved as the critic with respect to the privatization of both Canadair and de Havilland, and when we analysed the obligations which were being assumed by the Government, we found in fact that we effectively paid the private sector to purchase and take over those two particular corporations. Then, of course, in the case of Canadair, the Government, by the awarding of contracts, has taken effective action to ensure a better employment base for Canadair. That is good in terms of the aerospace industry and the region of Montreal. However, the Hon. Member's suggestion that this is the virtue of private sector management is a bunch of hogwash. The fact is that government action, in terms of awarding a very important defence contract, has been the key action in securing the fortunes of Canadair, and it is quite possible that if that contract had been awarded to Canadair prior to the privatization taking place, the market value of the company, on its being privatized, would be considerably greater than it was at the time the company was sold.

We are going to have a lot of debate on these issues over the course of the next year or two. I might perhaps just say to those people who have come home from work, or those students who are watching the House of Commons for a few minutes before they turn to their homework or to watching Much Music, that when they hear members of the Progressive Conservative Party talking about the free market system, they should be aware that they are talking about something which makes them feel warm and cuddly. Given their status in the polls these days, the Conservatives have need of something which makes them feel good about themselves. There has not been a lot of good news for them over the course of the last four or five weeks.

The facts are that Teleglobe in being privatized, is certainly, and by no means, going into the free market system. This is a leverage buy-out in which a small company, which has only been listed on the Toronto Stock Exchange a couple of years, is paying a substantial price in terms of its resources in order to take over Teleglobe, but in doing so is being guaranteed by the Government a number of things which will ensure it will not have to function in the free market for at least the next five years, and possibly for some lengthy period of time beyond that. Teleglobe is the only international carrier of communications such as telephone, telex, and those kinds of communications, with Canada. It is a part of international treaties which give Canada access to the Intelsat satellite network. That status will continue for at least the next five years.

Teleglobe will be regulated in its profits. That means two things; first, it will be regulated in terms of not earning too much and, second, it will be permitted to have profits to ensure it does not earn too little. Therefore, in that sense it will not be in the free market. The telephone companies, which I think reacted perhaps irresponsibly, suggested they might find means of bypassing the services of Teleglobe Canada. They have been warned that legislation will be presented and adopted by the Government, presuming it maintains its majority, which will prevent the private sector companies from bypassing Teleglobe and routing overseas telephone calls through the United States. The American Government has effectively sought to break the internationally agreed to monopoly on international telecommunications through Intelsat and is setting up its own satellites in its place, if it can get them up in the air. Teleglobe Canada is also being told it has to maintain its role as Canada's participant in Intelsat so, therefore, it is being maintained in a very much regulated environment.

There is a strong case for Teleglobe staying as a regulated entity. Let us consider the situation in other countries. When the United Kingdom privatized British Telecom, it kept about 49 per cent ownership and a controlling interest in government hands. Then there are countries such as Australia, New Zealand, and France, which now have a Government which is friendly to Prime Minister Thatcher and President Reagan. West Germany also has a Government which is on the right rather than the left of the spectrum. There is Italy, Norway and Sweden. All of these countries with Governments, some of which are to the right, some of which are to the left, have in fact maintained their international telecommunications systems in government control. The British Government has kept British Telecom under government control as well, although just under 50 per cent has been privatized in terms of control. Why is that? I suggest it is because they have seen that there are good and proper reasons, and reasons which must be seriously considered, why one cannot have a totally free market in terms of international telecommunications.

If the Government really wanted to go that route, then Canada should have notified the other signatories that we are withdrawing from the Intelsat Treaty which, among other things, would have meant that we would be contributing, as the Americans are,to a very large increase in the cost of telecommunications for developing countries around the world which benefit from the Intelsat arrangements. We should have decided that we would have given free range to the telephone companies to route their calls through the United States, or through any other means they could find available, to use private sector or pirate satellites as they begin to get thrown up into the ionosphere. That is what the free market would be all about. The Government knows, as we know in this Party—but the Government will not say it and we will—that that kind of situation would have wreaked havoc in terms of any kind of reasonable and fair access to telecommunications for an awful lot of Canadians. Once we did that internationally, very quickly we would face the same kind of pressure to do it nationally as well. The result would be that my constituents in Ottawa Centre would find that their telephone rates to Vancouver, to Toronto to Montreal and abroad might drop quite drastically. They would benefit. However, the people living in Inuvik and up in the riding of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry) and my colleagues from northern Quebec, would have found an enormous increase in the cost of their telecommunications.

We do have cross-subsidization in this country and we need it if we are going to deal equitably in terms of access to communications for every Canadian. I think the Government surreptitiously recognizes that fact but publicly tells us that this is all for the free market. I am suggesting that that is a code word. It is designed to please the people of the National Citizens Coalition. This privatization stuff is only limited privatization and I want to suggest, as my colleagues have suggested, that a company which is earning $50 million a year in profits could be making a substantial ongoing contribution to the cost of government services rather than selling the Crown jewel as we have in this case, for what may be as little as $350 million.

I may wish to continue my contribution to this debate when debate resumes tomorrow.

• (1700)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When the Bill is called tomorrow the Hon. Member will have 10 minutes left on debate and there will be 10 minutes for questions and comments.

It being 5 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--MOTIONS

[English]

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

ADVISABILITY OF ESTABLISHING AN AUTOMOTIVE STRATEGY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of introducing legislation in order to establish an automotive strategy for Canada based on the policy derived from "An Automotive Strategy for Canada", a report by the Federal Task Force on the Canadian Motor Vehicle and Automotive Parts Industries, which would not change the terms or spirit of the Canada-United States Automotive Products Trade Agreement, but would continue to limit the importation of certain motor vehicles and ensure that all motor vehicle manufacturers, who sell motor vehicles in the Canadian market, provide employment and create value within that market, commensurate with the benefits that they derive from it, and be required to produce Canadian content equal to at least sixty per cent (60%) of their sales in Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to bring this motion before the House today. However, it gives rise to extreme disquiet and concern in the automotive communities right across the country. That is what motivates my bringing it forward.

In 1983 we received a report which represented the views of both the unions and the companies within the industry. The report set out the serious future prospects and problems of the auto industry. The report was not acted upon by the previous Government. It went to the next Government, which also refused to act on it. I bring the motion before the House today because, first, it seems to me urgent that the House have a chance to debate what is a dire crisis emerging for the auto industry and, second, because it is a potential solution for the crisis.

We have just finished a series of hearings with representatives from the various parts of the auto industry, including the workers, as well as the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté) who appeared before us this afternoon.

In the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade we have begun to get into the debate. This motion comes at a particularly opportune time in response to some of the feelings and divisions which have arisen in the debate as reflected in the committee. It is now in order to bring it to the floor of the House of Commons.

It is essential that the House and the country understand that we are talking about a crisis, an economic crisis which could cost the country, we have been told in testimony, up to 40,000 direct jobs. The reason for this is that we have created one set of conditions for those companies which have traditionally produced cars in this country. Under the Auto Pact they produce at a value of 60 per cent Canadian content.

However, there is a second set of companies, a set of Japanese and Korean companies, which have not made a commitment to that 60 per cent Canadian value added. If there is a shift in purchases from one set of companies to the other and if there is a set of increased imports by the year 1990, we are likely to see a tremendous over-capacity, perhaps up to three million cars in North America, which will inevitably force companies to start shutting down their operations. This will happen not just in the United States, where Chrysler recently took action, but increasingly so in Canada.

The crisis is there. It is there with respect to the people who talked to us from St. Catharines and from St. Thomas last week. Specifically, they suggested that a shift could be eliminated to the St. Thomas plant and cost within the next three to four months something up to 1,500 jobs just in the one community.

There are solutions. This motion tries to set out some of the solutions, drawing on the 1983 report. First, we must obtain a commitment from the Asian producers so that we have some type of balanced playing-field. We need a commitment to 60 per cent Canadian value added from their plants as well as from the Big Four. Second, in order to reach this commitment we have to be prepared to use, with force, the quotas which are quite legitimately in place for us to use under the GATT. We have to be prepared to say to the Japanese and the Koreans: "If you are not prepared to accept these commitments, which have been accepted by the other companies, then we will have to impose quotas on you".

We have to commit ourselves to the maintenance of the safeguards in the Auto Pact as it stands at the moment. There are many ancillary parts to the auto trade upon which it is impossible to sit down and talk on a bilateral basis with the United States. However, if we get ourselves into a position in which we are prepared to negotiate away that 60 per cent safeguard, then we are committing economic suicide so far as central Canada is concerned.

It is not just central Canada which is concerned. This is a point I want to stress. Throughout the country there are at this stage something close to 450,000 workers who depend on the auto industry. They do not live just in central Canada. They are spread out across the country. They come from all the different sectors of the economy, including the steel, petroleum, plastics, chemical and tire sectors. They form the heart of our economy as it exists across the country. This is not an Ontario issue, or an issue that belongs to Quebec. It is an issue that cuts right across Canada.

• (1710)

In conclusion, we are a small country that faces a very tough world today with respect to automotive competition. In order to succeed in that tough world, we need to have a strategy which is tough and effective, and a strategy which we have tried to outline in this motion today.

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the motion of the Hon. Member who just spoke could be fairly summarized by saying that it calls for an automobile strategy for Canada. It also states that all motor vehicle manufacturers should be required to produce Canadian content equal to at least 60 per cent of their sales in Canada.

The Government is fully aware of the immense contribution that has been made by the Canadian automobile manufacturing industry to the economy of Canada. We know how many men and women work in the industry, and as the Member said, not only in southern Ontario but in other parts of Canada, including Quebec. Indeed, in western Canada we wish we had more manufacturing in that industry.

Our support for an efficient and internationally strong automotive industry has been unwavering. I wish to take the opportunity to tell Members of the House that over the next several months the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté) will be consulting with representatives of the auto industry and labour to examine current and important issues which bear upon the future viability of the auto sector.

[Translation]

As a matter of fact, he has already met with representatives of the Automobile Parts Manufacturers Association, the Canadian Auto Workers, and the Motor Vehicle Manufacturers' Association to begin discussions and explore possible solutions to different concerns identified by the industry. During these consultations, the Canadian content issue in the automobile industry is likely to be raised.

The Government's policy has always been to encourage a higher Canadian content rather than to set a definite percentage based on the automobile industry output. At the international level, any legislation requiring a precise Canadian content would go against our multilateral commercial commitments under GATT. Beside these trade related arguments, to require a certain level of Canadian content would not necessarily guarantee additional permanent jobs which is our main concern. That is the essential. Several factors seem to indicate that such measures would result instead in a reduction of Canada's competition in this industry. The gains made recently by the Canadian Automobile Industry in the areas of productivity and competition stem to a large extent from the individual reaction of each corporation to international competition. The increased competition within the industry has resulted in significant changes in the area of production and finished products, thereby improving Canada's competitive position.

[English]

The industry is undergoing immense structural changes. Around the globe automobile manufacturers and markets have become exceedingly competitive. I regret that the fierce level of world competition has meant that North American manufacturers have lost some of their traditional market share to imported vehicles. The new Asian manufacturers that are now establishing on this continent are bringing additional competitive pressures to bear on the domestic industry.

The Government has taken the position that the automobile industry must adopt new manufacturing technologies which are basic to world cost competitiveness. Therefore, the government policies are meant to encourage the adaptation of the Canadian automotive industry to meet those demands. For its part, the Government negotiated export restraint arrangements with Japan in order to provide the North American producers with a "breathing space". That action also served to prevent the diversion of Japanese vehicles through the United States and into the Canadian market.

The second step, the duty-free status which applies to vehicles currently imported from countries such as Korea and Mexico, was eliminated in the May 1985 Budget. That measure became effective January 1, 1987. The Government has also made efforts to ensure that Canada receives its proportionate share of Japanese investment in North America. Until recently, the majority of North American Asian investment has been made in the United States. Without our share of this new investment, as the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) knows, the Canadian industry would have been faced with the prospect of lagging technological development and, as important, Japanese companies would have been able to import vehicles from their new United States plants, increase their penetration into the Canadian market, and yet make no significant contribution to our economy.

Since 1982, Japanese companies have made large investments in the North American assembly facilities. In Canada, Honda and Toyota have announced Canadian assembly investments amounting to $600 million. The GM/Suzuki project will add a further $500 million of direct investment, and Hyundai is planning to invest $300 million in an assembly plant near Montreal. These projects, and similar ones in the United States, will result in an additional annual production capacity in North America of 2.1 million units, of which some 480,000 units will be produced in Canada. These planned investments in Canada should result in an estimated 5,000 new direct jobs, and at least an equal number of indirect jobs.

In our discussions with Japanese and Korean automobile investors, the Government always stresses the importance of the objectives and performance requirements of the Auto Pact and our desire to have companies that participate in the Canadian market contribute to the Canadian economy. Joining the Auto Pact is not mandatory, but all new entrants including Toyota, Honda, and Hyundai have publicly indicated that they plan to achieve Auto Pact status. It is expected that the GM/Suzuki joint venture will achieve Auto Pact status virtually from the start of production.

Nevertheless, the Government recognizes that, at the start, Asian assembly operations will require less labour and will be more dependent on parts supplied from offshore companies than is the case for the domestic vehicle manufacturers. For this reason, from the beginning, the Government has worked to ensure that these companies maximize Canadian value added in assembly operations with the objective of meeting Auto Pact status within a reasonable time frame.

Developing sound, long-term relationships with suppliers requires a determined effort. Over time, we believe that exciting opportunities for Canadian auto parts companies will arise. Canadian parts companies are well positioned to supply the new assemblers, and the Government is actively supporting Canadian manufacturers in their efforts to identify products and develop links with Japanese, European, and Korean assemblers. Opportunities also exist for foreign assemblers and suppliers to establish parts facilities in Canada either independently, or through joint ventures with Canadian producers. Although actual direct parts investment remains small, Toyota has constructed an aluminum wheel plant in British Columbia. As of this time, Japanese and Canadian parts manufacturers have formed 10 joint venture companies to produce a range of automotive components ranging from instrument panels to seat belts. Canadian companies have also entered into joint ventures with European partners to produce a range of sophisticated parts and components.

It is important to recognize the contribution that North American producers have made to our economy. Over the past five years, these companies have made massive capital investments to improve process technology, and to introduce new product lines while continuing to reduce costs. From 1980 to 1985, domestic vehicle assemblers averaged over $550 million annually in capital expenditures in Canada. American Motors is well advanced in the construction of a $760 million state of the art vehicle assembly plant in Brampton. That plant will have a world product mandate to produce 150,000 intermediate size cars per year. General Motors has chosen Canada as the site for one of its most significant investments—the Autoplex project. This $2 billion investment will produce a new line of GM-10 front-wheel drive cars. Of course GM is also undertaking the $500 million GM-Suzuki project to introduce a new line of small cars. Chrysler and Ford have also made impressive investments in their Canadian operations, directed mostly to robotics and plant automation. These companies are either producing or will produce very competitive products such as the Chrysler Van from Windsor, the Premier from Brampton, and General Motors new GM-10 car from Oshawa.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the auto industry is central to the health of the Canadian economy. One job in every seven is dependent upon the auto industry in Canada. This means that there is no part of Canada which can accept with equanimity any weakness or deterioration in the Canadian auto industry. No matter how remote any part of the country may think it is from those parts of central Canada where most of the automotive assembly or parts plants are found, its health and well-being are in fact linked with the auto industry.

Whether we are talking about the mining of iron ore, the manufacture of steel, textiles, or even forest products, to a very major degree their health and well-being are linked to the health and well-being of our auto industry. This is why it is essential for the Government to have a clear and definite strategy to preserve and strengthen the Canadian auto industry.

One element of the strategy must be to ensure that the Auto Pact and its safeguards are not allowed to be up for grabs in the current United States-Canada free trade negotiations. In spite of questions posed to the Government in the House very regularly, there is still an area of doubt about its real intentions, created by the lack of firmness and precision in the answers given by government Ministers to these questions about whether the Auto Pact is or is not, will or will not be on the free trade negotiating table.

Last Friday, speaking at a University of Windsor seminar, Gordon Richie, chief deputy trade negotiator to Simon Reisman, Canada's representative at the free trade talks, said the following, as reported in the the Windsor Star:

—the Auto Pact isn't excluded by the Canadian Government, as cultural sovereignty and national security matters are.

Everything else, he said, is on the bargaining table, and of the Auto Pact he said: "We're always open to suggestions".

But when asked to state the Government's intentions, Richie replied: "I can tell you my clear understanding, and the mandate governing us in the talks, is we have not raised the Auto Pact, the Americans have not raised the Auto Pact. Neither the Americans nor Canadians have raised the Auto Pact, and for our part we don't see any pressing need for it to be raised".

I repeat, however, Mr. Richie said the Auto Pact was not excluded in advance from the free trade talks in the same way that the Government claims cultural sovereignty and national security matters have been excluded.

The lead story in today's edition of The Financial Post reported that U.S. trade negotiator Peter Murphy appears to be readying himself to propose major changes to the Canada-U.S. Auto Pact, and that he intends to put these changes on the table this coming March. Therefore, we need a clear declaration by the Government, which we have not as yet received, that as part of its strategy to preserve the auto industry, so fundamental to the well-being of the Canadian economy, the Auto Pact will not be on the table and that its safeguards will not be on the table no matter what Mr. Murphy intends to bring forward in March.

There is a risk that the Auto Pact is up for grabs in the free trade negotiations, that the Auto Pact itself or its key safeguards will be traded off, perhaps with the best intentions on the part of the Government, to get something else it considers important to the economy. The risks are there so long as the Auto Pact is on the table, along with everything else which is allowed to be on the table in the free trade negotiations.

There seems to be some pressure growing in the United States for changes to be made to the Auto Pact. These pressures are based upon a very fundamental misconception. Some people in the United States seem to think that the problems they have and the problems they foresee with their auto industry are linked with the operations of the Canada-U.S. Auto Pact.

As part of the strategy which the Government must have to preserve the health of our auto industry, it must make it clear to the United States and its people that any problems they have or they foresee in their auto industry have nothing to do with trade between Canada and the United States in the automotive sector. Instead, that trade, developed and enhanced under the Canada-U.S. Auto Pact over the past 20 years, has helped to build and strengthen the United States auto industry.

We must ensure that the Americans understand that hundreds of thousands of jobs in that country are dependent upon the continued existence of the Canada-U.S. Auto Pact and its safeguards in their current form. If the safeguards and that pact are allowed to be weakened in the free trade negotiations or otherwise, those hundreds of thousands of American jobs are in peril. Their future existence cannot be ensured.

We must also remind the Americans that for 13 years of the 20 years the Auto Pact has been in existence the Americans had a surplus. It is only in the last four or five years that the balance has shifted in the other direction. Surely it is not the American definition of a fair deal to be one in which only the American side can ever benefit. Surely any deals we have with the Americans and with other countries in the world must be deals where both sides win. Surely that is the experience of the Canada-U.S. Auto Pact.

We must ensure that the Americans recognize—and we must recognize it as well—that if there are problems emerging in the auto industries in both countries, they have nothing to do with the Canada-U.S. Auto Pact which, as I said, has worked to strengthen those industries. Instead, they have arisen out of the problems created by the import of cars from Japan and Korea. These problems are also developing, strangely enough and paradoxically enough, from the investments by Japan and Korea in Canada and the United States in new assembly plants. These plants will not be creating the same number of jobs as have equivalent plants built by North American producers, for a simple reason—Japanese and Korean producers in Canada with one exception, have not been compelled by the Government to meet the requirements of the Canada-U.S. Auto Pact when it comes to assembly and Canadian content.

This means that a car produced in one of the new Japanese plants in Canada will be made or assembled primarily from parts imported from offshore, and therefore will not have the same job-creating potential as the same kind of car assembled in a plant built and operated by one of the Big Four.

A pillar of the strategy which the Canadian Government needs for its auto industry is that all those who wish to sell cars in Canada, above perhaps a certain very minimum level, must play by the same rules, whether they are the Big Four North American producers, the Japanese producers, or the Korean producers. They must meet the same requirements in respect of assembly in Canada and of Canadian content. This means basically the rules under which the big four North American producers operate the Canada-U.S. Auto Pact. Those are simple requirements, straightforward requirements and proven requirements, but so far only one of these new Japanese investors is subject to a clear binding commitment to meet those Auto Pact rules, and that is in the General Motors—Suzuki joint venture because of the commitments extracted from Suzuki by the Ontario Government.

This House should agree that our Government insist by force of law that the Japanese and Korean manufacturers, which are building automotive assembly plants here, meet, within a very short and reasonable deadline, the Auto Pact commitments regarding Canadian content and production ratios. If that does not happen, then surely they cannot be allowed to operate in the same way as the North American producers.

We need to have an automotive strategy in Canada. It must have two pillars. First, the preservation of the Auto Pact and its safeguards; second, to all those who wish to sell cars in Canada the extending of the requirements presently imposed only on North American producers for assembly and Canadian content. Failure to do that this will put at risk 40,000 jobs, something we cannot afford to do. Equally important, it will put at risk what I have said is a cornerstone of the Canadian economy, and we cannot allow this to happen. We need a strategy. The elements of that strategy are clear. We must insist that our Government get on with it, put that strategy in place, and make the Japanese and Korean producers play by the same rules as the North American producers in the interests of the workers in the automotive industry but equally in the interests of the entire community, of our country and all those in it.

[Translation]

Mr. Richard Grisé (Chambly): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful for this opportunity to take part in a debate on one of Canada's basic industry, the automotive industry.

The Canadian Government has clearly indicated its support for maintaining a strong and competitive automotive industry in Canada. Indeed, assembly operations and the manufacture of parts and related components rank as the foremost manufacturing sector in Canada, and I am very pleased to represent certain groups, certain regions of the riding of Chambly that are directly involved in manufacturing either parts or related components for the automotive industry. Incidentally, these firms are doing extremely well these days.

In 1985 this sector shipped various products valued at over $42 billion and employed about 129,000 people. According to Canadian steel manufacturers, the North American automotive industry absorbs roughly 35 per cent of their output. The Conservative Government is very much aware of the fact that North American auto plants make a major contribution to Canada's economy and Canadian consumers. The Government is also aware of the fact that the auto makers are becoming part of an ever more international and competitive industry. As a result, unfortunately North American car manufacturers have lost a share of their market to imported products. What is more, new Asiatic manufacturers who open their plants in North America are increasing the pressure on our domestic industry.

However the North American industry is now undergoing major structural changes. Since the industry's evolution has growing international implications, the Government believes that Canada's auto makers must adopt new manufacturing and management techniques if they want to remain competitive on international markets. This is why we tried to give them time to make the transition. Since 1981 we have maintained an export restriction agreement with Japan, and in the May 1985 Budget we announced measures which were to come into force on January 1, 1987 and which were designed to eliminate provisions under which such countries as Korea and Mexico were allowed to export duty free automotive products.

North American companies are adjusting under this pressure, yet they continue to make huge investments to improve quality and introduce new products while reducing costs. From 1980 to 1985, their capital expenditures in Canada averaged $550 million dollars a year. Let us look for instance at General Motors. We are all aware of the important fact that its Boisbriand plant, in Quebec, is still operating at full capacity. General Motors therefore invested in a number of projects, of which the most important is the $2 billion Autoplex program for the manufacture of a new line of front wheel drive vehicles. Chrysler and Ford also invested recently in their Canadian plants, mostly to automatize. Because of this, Canada will be in a good position to manufacture highly competitive cars, such as the American Motors Premier, the General Motors GM-10, and naturally, the Chrysler van which is manufactured in Windsor and already very popular.

As concerns foreign investment, we have tried to guarantee that Canada will have a fair share of Japanese investments in North America which, until quite recently, went for the most part to the United States. Without these investments in Canada, Japanese companies could import vehicles from their new assembly plants in the United States and increase their share of our market without contributing to the Canadian economy.

Since 1982, the Japanese have been spending a lot of money on assembly plants in North America to strengthen their market and minimize the effects of possible trade restrictions. Honda and Toyota plan to invest $600 million to build an assembly plant in Canada. The GM/Suzuki partnership will invest $500 million and Hyundai will spend $300 million for an assembly plant at Bromont, in Quebec. Mr. Speaker, I had the privilege of attending the sod turning ceremony for this Hyundai plant in Bromont. Some 480,000 vehicles will be manufactured in Canada. These investments should create some 5,000 jobs directly, as well as a great number of indirect jobs, especially in the Chambly constituency. If a number of other projects go forward, thousands of additional jobs could be created in Canada.

We recognize that, in the beginning, these plants will use fewer workers and rely more on foreign parts suppliers than their North American competitors. However, we shall try to ensure that these new Canadian companies maximize the Canadian added value of their products and that, by so doing, they get gradually closer to compliance with the Auto Pact. There will be more openings for Canadian parts manufacturers. We know that they will try to determine which products could be supplied to these newcomers and we shall co-operate closely with them in this regard. Until now, certain Japanese and Canadian firms have gone into partnership to manufacture a whole range of products including instrument panels and rubber products. In addition, several Canadian and European companies have co-operated in joint ventures to produce sophisticated parts and accessories.

During our talks with Japanese and Korean car manufacturers, we insisted on the importance of the Auto Pact's goals and performanced requirements. It is important to stress that companies choosing to comply with the Auto Pact derive significant tariff benefits. Although they are under no obligation to comply, financial benefits cannot be ignored in a highly competitive climate. In fact, all new entrants, including Toyota, Honda and Hyundai have announced plans to comply with the Auto Pact.

Up till now, Mr. Speaker, the Government has been applying the general principle of encouraging rather than requiring the establishment of performance levels in Canada. We are not a dictatorial government, Mr. Speaker. Clearly, if we were to enact Canadian content legislation, we would be violating our multilateral trade obligations under the GATT. Not to mention eventual reactions by our trade partners, there is no indication that increased protection would improve the Canadian industry's competitive position or guarantee job creation. In fact, recent productivity and competitivity gains obtained by the Canadian industry largely stem from deep changes companies have been making in manufacturing methods and products, in the face of strong international competition.

Mr. Speaker, we are not convinced that increased restrictions will encourage North American and foreign manufacturers to invest in this country. Rather, the Canadian Government, in co-operation with provinces, will encourage significant automotive investments by creating a stable economic climate and implementing appropriate monetary and fiscal policies.

However, Mr. Speaker, the Government recognizes that the automotive industry is facing new problems that call for novel solutions. In that context, I would like to take this opportunity to inform Hon. Members that the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion has agreed to consult industry and labour representatives on a wide range of matters of importance to the automotive industry.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the Minister recently met representatives of the Automotive Parts Manufacturers' Association, Canadian Automotive Workers and the Society of Motor Vehicle Manufacturers, to examine industry matters, including the one now before the House, and to look for solutions.

It is my belief, Mr. Speaker, that together we can establish policies that will ensure the industry's long-term viability and its contribution to the Canadian economy.

[English]

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I do not think anyone can sit in this Chamber for very long, regardless from what part of Canada he or she comes, before beginning to realize the importance of the auto industry in the Canadian economy. Before very long, he or she will also come to the realize that the auto industry is in somewhat of a crisis.

The importance of this afternoon's debate is that the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) has suggested some ways to resolve this crisis and has pointed to potential solutions. His motion calls for legislation in the spirit of the Auto Pact, legislation which would apply to all automobile manufacturers who wanted to access the Canadian market. For vehicles that would be sold in the Canadian market, there would be a requirement that the manufacturers would have to reach a basic 60 per cent equivalent of Canadian content.

In the last few years, there has been a great deal of legitimate concern about the flood of Japanese and Korean imports. At present, more than 30 per cent of all automobiles purchased in Canada come from these two countries. It is expected that if current trends continue, this figure will increase to between 35 per cent and 40 per cent in two years. These are good cars. They are reliable and serviceable. The problem is that they do not produce Canadian jobs. In fact, as they replace cars that are made under the Auto Pact, they displace Canadian jobs.

Coming from British Columbia where there is an exceedingly high unemployment rate today, I must admit that I am slightly envious of members from central Canada where the unemployment rate is considerably lower. Certainly the Auto Pact has had a good deal to do with the prosperity central Canada is enjoying right now. The motion we are discussing today, however, opens up the possibility that some of this prosperity could be shared by western Canada. Hon. Members who spoke previously already mentioned the wheel assembly plant Toyota is building in British Columbia, but this is minuscule in comparison to the number of cars sold in British Columbia and in comparison to the number of jobs that exist in the auto industry. We would like to see more jobs in western Canada. As a western Canadian, I do recognize the need of people in central Canada to protect the jobs that already exist.

The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor pointed out that while we are in a surplus relationship with the United States, our over-all automobile trade is in a deficit position because of imports from Japan, Korea and Europe. Many of these companies have production facilities in Canada, but these facilities do not reach Auto Pact levels. Although some of them plan to reach Auto Pact levels, there have been no guarantees. It is expected that they will grow to only approximately 25 per cent to 30 per cent of Canadian content by the end of the decade rather than the 60 per cent of Canadian content required.

The combination of productive over-capacity with a rather flat demand will lead to ever-increasing competition in automobile sales. The share of the market covered by companies included in the Auto Pact could shrink to as little as 40 per cent by 1990. That means that an estimated 40,000 direct jobs could be lost. If we include the ancillary industries, it could mean that as many as 130,000 jobs in related industries could be lost. This is something Canada cannot afford, whether those jobs are lost in central Canada, western Canada or wherever.

The answer we have often heard from whatever Party is in power is that voluntary restraints are being negotiated. However, voluntary restraints have not been very helpful in the past. Under voluntary restraints, Japan's share of the market has gone from 18 per cent two years ago to 21 per cent today. Hyundai, a company from Korea, under duty-free access which was in effect a $100-million tax break, now has 8 per cent of the market in Canada. Imports have grown from a value of $332 million in the first half of 1981 to $2.6 billion in the first half of 1986. This gives us some idea of the rapid increase in the problem with which we are dealing.

We need to remember that the automotive sector is the most important part of Canada's manufacturing industry. There is a basic need to ensure that it is not destroyed. A good deal of Canada's economic health depends upon the extraction of raw resources, and in many ways we have a resource-based economy. However, in western and northern Canada, we are seeing the weakness of that kind of an economy. As resources become depleted, world markets become glutted or certain resources become obsolete, the economy that is dependent on those resources will become weak and have little flexibility. There is a need for a strong manufacturing sector that will be able to diversify.

The motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor provides that if companies want to have access to the Canadian market, they will have to pay for it. They will need to pay for it by making a commitment to Canadian content. Sixty per cent of the value of everything sold in Canada will have to have the equivalent of 60 per cent Canadian content value added. This is a way to protect jobs we already have. It is a way to ensure that the prosperity we see in central Canada will remain and also to ensure that some of that prosperity will go to other parts of Canada like western Canada where there are very great needs indeed.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, I will speak for a few minutes and then my colleague, the Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart), will conclude. When speaking of the Auto Pact and the auto industry, Hon. Members seem to view it as a static situation. When the Auto Pact was put in place in 1965, Studebaker and Hudson were in the market. In fact, at one stage Renault had a manufacturing plant in Montreal and Toyota had one in Nova Scotia. They are gone and Toyota of course has recently opened a new plant in the Cambridge area.

• (1750)

The perspective I want to bring to this debate is that we are talking about a global industry. General Motors recently made an agreement with Volvo to produce certain models of trucks and buses in a joint venture. The Chevrolet division of GM imports Suzuki trucks from Japan and sells them through its dealer network. General Motors also sells two or three other automobile models by way of joint venture or direct import from Japan. Everyone is very familiar with the recent deal they made with Suzuki to produce that vehicle in southwestern Ontario. From their perspective it is a global industry. Ford Motor Company recently announced a joint venture with Volkswagen in Brazil. I do not know whether some of that production will come to Canada but I understand Volkswagen will run the plant, Ford will sell the production and have some engineering say so. Ford has a model in its line which was designed by Mazda. It is being produced in Taiwan, shipped to Canada and sold under the Ford name. Ford also brings in a sports car from Germany. Ford is a substantial investor in Mazda, which the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) will be pleased to know.

Chrysler Corporation has an array of automobiles which are either imported from Japan or have Japanese components. American Motors is controlled by Renault. Renault owns Mack trucks, which a lot of people do not realize. White Motor Company is controlled by Volvo. Freightliner is owned by Mercedes Benz. Discussions are under way between a Japanese truck manufacturer and some of the few North American truck manufacturers still in business.

All of these deals have come about for a variety of reasons. Some have to do with development, some with production, and some with service facilities in some parts of the market. Others have to do with common components. By way of example, some European manufacturers are using a common engine block and machining it to their own requirements in order to achieve economies of scale in the casting of engine blocks. Japan is experimenting with a ceramic engine block. There are manufacturers working closely together to produce a common automatic transmission which can be used in small vehicles.

The Auto Pact, when it was crafted by our two Governments, had a little different form than some people believe. On the American side it is a bilateral agreement, while on the Canadian side it is a multilateral agreement. That is why we were able to bring in four cylinder engines from Germany, along with various other components from Brazil, Mexico and other places, to be used in Canadian production. We put them through our manufacturing process, added Canadian content, and then used them domestically and exported them to the U.S.

In my constituency, Tridon Manufacturing has just signed a licensing agreement with a Japanese company to produce windshield wipers. Degguse makes catalytic converters and has just signed a licensing agreement in Japan and Korea, I believe, to produce the ceramic cores for catalytic converters. So as the industry develops it is becoming more and more global in nature and I would not recommend that at this time we put any restrictions on that evolution.

I will stop at this point and yield the floor to my colleague.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like to recognize another member on the other side, so I will give the Hon. Member three minutes or so if he does not mind. Allowing everyone time in one hour is very difficult. I will recognize the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Stewart).

Mr. Ron Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to take part in the discussion of this motion. My friend from Windsor West spoke about the Auto Pact and freer trade with the U.S. I just want to say that remarks like that only play into the hands of Peter Murphy, the American negotiator. The more we talk about the Auto Pact, the more bad publicity we get on the Canadian side. If he was paying attention to what the Minister said earlier he would know that she said the Auto Pact is working well and will not be put on the table. It is as simple as that.

We are well aware of how important the automotive industry is to Canada, particularly Ontario where some 88 per cent of the vehicles are produced. Employment in the industry is at an all-time high with 129,000 workers, compared to about 98,000 in 1982. This Government has made significant progress in increasing productivity and reducing costs. Canadian workers have adapted to the new challenges and are building better cars than ever before.

I agree with my learned friend from Burlington who probably knows more about the automobile business than anyone in this House. It is a global business. The Japanese have made large investments in North American assembly facilities recently, one of which was the new Honda plant in Alliston, Ontario, in my riding. It now employs hundreds. As well, there is a huge Volkswagen plant which was sitting almost idle and it is now going to employ 150 new people. I know the manager of that plant very well and he and the president of the company have vowed to fill that plant with equipment to produce parts in Canada. Mention has also been made of Toyota and the GM/Suzuki project.

This Government recognizes that Asian assembly operations will be more dependent on parts supplied from overseas than our domestic manufacturers, and we hope they will quickly increase the Canadian content both in assembly and through local parts purchase, and do so without legislation.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I very much appreciate the opportunity to say a few words at the end of the hour set aside for this debate. It is clear that I rise to support the motion of my colleague from Essex—Windsor. I come from a community where half the jobs are related to the automobile industry. There are four plants in my riding and it is natural that I should rise to support a motion in defence of the jobs which are so important in my constituency. However, we should not overlook the fact that the automobile industry is largely responsible, far more than the Government, for the degree of economic improvement we have experienced in the last couple of years. While 50 per cent of the employment in my community depends upon the automotive industry, some 130,000 jobs in total depend directly on it, and indirectly some 430,000 jobs across Canada are dependent upon it. It is perfectly clear that Canadians generally benefit from jobs in the automobile industry which, as was shown earlier, is largely attributable to the effects of the Auto Pact signed some 20 years ago.

I was also pleased to hear the intervention of my colleague from British Columbia who recognized that this motion is of benefit to Canadians generally as well as to his own province. If these measures are adopted then not only Ontario and central Canada will benefit, so will the rest of Canada.

Some have called attention to the fact that there was a time when the importation of Japanese cars meant the availability of a high quality, innovative and attractive product at low prices in comparison with the American product. One of the reasons that we have benefited is that in the last couple of years the North American producers who are signatories to the Auto Pact have improved their technology and product to the stage of being of equal quality to Japanese cars. Most important, the manufacturers of those automobiles in this country produce a lot of jobs. They produce three to four times more jobs than the assembly plants now being established here by offshore producers.

• (1800)

The time has come, not to give North American manufacturers any advantage, but to ensure that they will be operating on a level playing field. The Japanese manufacturers, which are establishing assembly-only plants in North America, must be required to play by the same rules. If that is done, Canadian consumers will have good products, whether produced by the big four or the Japanese manufacturers, and Canadian jobs will be maintained. I understand it to be my responsibility and the responsibility of Parliament to act in the interests of the Canadian people.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 42(1) the Order shall be dropped from the Order Paper.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

IMMIGRATION—MINISTER'S BROADCAST STATEMENTS. (B) CONTENT OF STATEMENTS

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to say a little more this evening about a very unfortunate matter which occurred in January and which questions in the House have not resolved. On January 23 The Montreal Gazette published an article quoting a paragraph from a speech given by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) a few days earlier. The speech included the following paragraph:

> A lot of pride, a lot of pride.

That is in reference to his home area. It continues:

> Because it's—a protected francophone enclave. Three hundred thousand—undisturbed by immigration, by the presence by other realities in the country. So it has a purity at the demographic level, at the ethno-cultural level, at the ethno-cultural level especially.

That paragraph aroused enormous reaction in various quarters in this country, to which I can testify. I know that the Canadian Ethnocultural Council has protested this to the Prime Minister's Office and has urged the withdrawal of these words and an apology to those who make up the other realities in the country to which the Minister referred in this political statement.

The intensely regrettable fact is that this was pressed upon the Minister himself. I can say that advisedly. It was pressed upon him to withdraw the statement and recognize how contentious and objectionable it was to many Canadians. That has not been done. For that reason I felt compelled again, after having raised the matter on January 29, to press the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), in the absence of the Minister, to have him withdraw this statement in order to have this expunged from the record. That has not been done.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration should be conscious of the words that he uses, what they evoke, and what the dangers are. I want to address that briefly in underscoring the urgency of such a withdrawal. In the process, I want to demonstrate that this is a shallow view, even of the Minister's own region and of the people of whom he is justly proud.

To talk of a protected francophone enclave is to take a very limited view of the Lac St. Jean-Saguenay region. This is, after all, a region in which British and Anglo Canadian trading interests and forestry interests long had a very, very large role. There was a day when William Price was regarded as the uncrowned king of the Saguenay. With that kind of a reality, surely there are realities to consider in asserting that this is a protected francophone enclave. To talk about it as undisturbed or untouched by immigration involves the question of how to translate deranger.

• (1805)

Surely to speak of it in those terms is to ignore what is true for Canadians generally, that we are first a nation which has grown from immigration. The Minister of Employment and Immigration failed to recognize that fact in talking about an area "untouched by", suggesting that here was a native element, a protected francophone enclave, which was not touched by these other realities. That is exactly what has aroused the fear of so many Canadians as to what the Minister actually meant.

To speak about "pure in population and in culture", if I could paraphrase slightly what the Minister actually said, is most assuredly to talk in terms of race. The intensely regrettable thing is that the Minister had pointed out to him that this was precisely the language which in the Third Reich in Germany was the language of Nazi race legislation to be applied to population as a basis for extermination of the Jews and others.

We do not talk about being pure in population and culture. We want to celebrate the richness of culture. As a sort of concluding note on this plea to the Government and to the Minister himself, I note the fact that the Minister responsible for Multiculturalism in the very week this came up in the House was launching an advertising campaign in which he wanted Canadians to realize that Canada is no longer a nation of two solitudes and the others, but rather a family of all of us. There is the most grievous failing of the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Surely a precise description of one of the solitudes is a protected francophone enclave undisturbed by other realities. It is in the most parochial terms, the worst terms of regional penny politics, to talk about one's home region in that way, especially when one is the Minister responsible for Immigration, instead of celebrating the diversity of the country and enjoying the fact that "francophonia", if I can use that kind of new word for French-speaking Canadians, has been enriched by immigration to this country. In fact, the City of Montreal and the Province of Quebec have had French-speaking elements added to their population and this has enriched society. To ignore that, even if it is in the Lac—Saint Jean—Saguenay region, was an incredible oversight from our Honourable Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Ron Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I regret the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) has chosen such a distasteful approach to such a sensitive matter. I regret that he seems to place the partisan business of trying to score political points above any careful consideration of the matter.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration has already made it perfectly clear to all Hon. Members of the House that the characterization given to his words was not only completely contrary to his intention, but completely contrary to his meaning. What is most important here is that such a characterization of his words is also completely contrary to the Minister's demonstrated beliefs, which all of us on this side of the House know. The Minister's meaning was not misunderstood by any who know him or his work. The Minister also said:

[Translation]

Because of a wrong choice of words, this may and does happen. If I thereby insulted anyone, I am deeply sorry.

[English]

That was clearly understood. The sincerity and convictions of the Minister are beyond question. All of his actions as a Minister of the Crown gives solid support to his words, which I quote from Hansard of January 29 at page 2879:

—I have the highest regard and respect for all immigrants and refugees who have at last reached a country where they can enjoy freedom.

I think all Hon. Members of the House know this to be true and nothing more needs to be said.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE—(A) LANGUAGE POLICY. (B) REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ASSERT ITS POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, in this adjournment debate, I would like to pursue with the House the issue of equitable representation within the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and the manner in which the Official Languages Act is implemented within a national agency that also has a responsibility to reflect the regional interests of this country.

• (1810)

Mr. Speaker, the House will recall that on December 18, I asked the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) when the Government intended to take a firm and public stand on equitable representation, and to quote the wording of my question: "The Government has adopted a passive attitude in this matter, preferring to do nothing. Delighted with this lack of action and leadership, the RCMP is still bent on its decision to reduce from 20 to 14 per cent the proportion of francophones among its regular officers."

Mr. Speaker, in the fall of 1986, in a monthly publication called the Pony Express, RCMP Headquarters announced its decision to reduce from 20 to 14 per cent the proportion of francophones among its regular officers. Mr. Speaker, this 20 per cent figure is not something I dreamed up. In fact, it was set in 1982 by the RCMP and Treasury Board in accordance with the requirements of the Official Languages Act, as a target for 1996. It was a policy agreed on by Treasury Board and the RCMP.

In the fall 1986 issue of Pony Express, we read that this figure would be reduced to 14 per cent, and according to documents we received, this was done with the approval of Treasury Board. When I asked my question, the House will recall that the Minister replied: No, certainly not. There will be no relaxing of the implementation of the Official Languages Act, and these agreements are only preliminary agreements, discussions among officials. There have been no concrete decisions, and no decision will be made without our being involved.

I waited, and the fact is that the Committee on Official Languages to which many Members of this House belong asked the RCMP to appear before the committee, and we had an opportunity to question Commissioner Simmonds of this national police force. It turned out to be a rather tumultuous confrontation, as Hon. Members may recall. It all began with the tabling of a unilingual English document, and one might say the situation was somewhat tense because we had the impressison that it might have been a way to humour us or to challenge us. But I think the commissioner just made a mistake and, finally, the meeting got under way, although the proceedings were not fully productive because the answers were not forthcoming. We could not get the commissioner to say whether or not the RCMP was intent on reducing staff from 20 to 14 per cent, which would create difficulties with respect to fair representation on this police force. It would also eliminate forever the possibility of having a sufficient number of employees and officers which would give Canadians an opportunity not only to work but also to be served in their own language whenever they may have dealings with this police force, the RCMP.

Well, the meeting was not an unqualified success, as we recall. Rumour has it that certain members and the Minister himself was heard to say in public after the meeting that he was getting impatient and wanted the problem to be settled. So I asked him a question here in the House on December 18: What is going to happen, when can we expect to have results, and can you give us dates, some kind of time-frame? The Minister replied the following, as shown on page 2263 of Hansard for December 18, 1986:

I wrote my colleague the Solicitor General on October 22 to ask him to submit to Treasury Board at his earliest convenience the plan which the RCMP meant to follow to implement the Treasury Board guidelines. I was told that it would take a few weeks, and I can accept that.

This was four months ago, Mr. Speaker. When I raised this issue recently in the House, I was told to be patient and that the report was forcoming. We are still waiting for this famous report and we are really impatient to see what will come out of this.

Early in January, an internal note of the RCMP written by Commander J.E. Julien, of Division C in Quebec, to Commissioner Simmonds related certain points and commented on this established policy to reduce francophone participation from 20 to 14 per cent. In this document, Commander Julien wrote, and I quote, that the RCMP was violating the rights of francophones and that francophone officers felt rejected by the anglophone majority. In other words, Mr. Speaker, this document confirmed everything that we already knew, namely that the RCMP was very reluctant to keep its commitments under the Official Languages Act.

We did not have long to wait for all this to be confirmed. The management of the RCMP appeared before the committee and confirmed in reply to my questions to the commissioner that its established policy was still to reduce its francophone personnel from 20 to 14 per cent and even to 12 per cent and that it had no intention of changing the existing training program, in other words, that nothing would change and that, if it did, the change would be to reduce further its commitment under the law.

Mr. Speaker, we advised the Government of the problem last September. Nothing was done. We restated our concerns and expressed our fears publicly, but still nothing was done. Meanwhile, virtually irreversible policies are being developed and we urgently ask the Government to publish as soon as possible the report of the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) which will give us the components of this policy so that we may put an end to this controversy and know exactly where this Government is going after two Throne speeches in which we were promised that something would be done in relation with our official languages. We were told that two years ago and nothing has happened yet. I am asking this Government to act, to do something positive and to publish this long-awaited report.

Mr. François Gérin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I must say that we have no lesson to learn from the Liberals as far as the use of French is concerned. One good example is the use of French in the House of Commons. Under the Liberal Government, in 1983 and 1984, only 8 percent of our proceedings took place in French. Under our Government it has gone up to 20 percent, a meaningful improvement which is not due to the Liberals. That is the result of unrelenting efforts by our Government in this regard.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), I would like to clarify tonight the matter raised by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). First of all, as the President of the Treasury Board already said, the language policy applying to federal institutions is set by the Government and in particular by Ministers of the Treasury Board. One of the purposes of the federal language policy is to ensure the full participation of members of both the French and English speaking communities in federal agencies.

Pursuant to the measures approved by the Treasury Board in order to reach that objective, the affected departments and agencies submit to the Treasury Board annual reports on the progress of implementation of the Official Language policy within their organizations. When the participation rate of one or the other language group departs too much from the percentage of that group in the workforce or the general population, the departments or agencies must state how they intend to reach a more acceptable balance in order to conform to their terms of reference as far as language is concerned.

Mr. Speaker, since language is not a discrimination factor under the Human Rights Act, one cannot use the provisions of Section 15 of that Act, such as the Affirmative Action Program, in order to restore a better balance. In that case, staffing procedures followed by departments must be in line with the Public Service Employment Act and the merit principle must be the determining factor in staffing decisions.

One of the measures Treasury Board would consider acceptable would be for instance for a Department to determine a long term quantitative participation objective. Yet, a set of goals or numerical quotas indicating the number of francophones or anglophones to be appointed to a number of positions over a specific period of time would be considered unacceptable. Likewise, members of an official linguistic group could not be promoted by a department or an organization by means of arbitrary identification of the linguistic requirements of the positions or by imperative staffing methods in order to achieve their long term participation objectives.

Finally, concerning the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, as already mentioned by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), Treasury Board has neither considered nor approved any reduction in the participation objectives of regular officers who have indicated French as their first official language. In this connection, the Treasury Board President has asked his colleague the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) for changes which the RCMP would like to make to its plans regarding the implementation of the official language policy and more specifically concerning Francophone participation. That was in December last.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I indicate that the President of Treasury Board wants to assure the House that the Government is aware of the need to readjust the participation of minority official linguistic communities in certain departments where there are shortcomings. This aspect, like others, is currently under consideration in the framework of the comprehensive review of official language policies. Thank you for granting me extra time, Mr. Speaker.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—LEVEL OF BENEFITS. (B) REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT CATEGORICALLY REJECT ALL BENEFIT REDUCTIONS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, on December 3, I raised an extremely important question regarding the recommendations in the report of the Forget Commission, particularly the fact that women especially would be disadvantaged by the implementation of those recommendations. I asked for an undertaking from the Government that neither Canadian women nor men would be disadvantaged in the implementation of any of the recommendations of the Forget Commission.

The main way in which people will be disadvantaged if the recommendations are acted upon is by the ending of the so-called regional extended benefits part of the program and the replacement of the benefit calculations by the use of the so-called annualization principle for calculating benefits.

The idea is to establish eligibility for unemployment insurance after 10 weeks of work, but the earnings for the payment of UI would be based upon earnings over 52 weeks. Of course that would be very disadvantageous for people in areas of high unemployment, especially Atlantic Canada.

The total savings to the unemployment insurance scheme if these recommendations are acted upon are in the order of $3 billion, or about the amount of money spent for regionally extended benefits and for fishermen's special benefits. Of course this money comes from consolidated revenues, from taxpayers' dollars, not from employer-employee contributions.

Specifically there would be losses of $1 billion to Quebec, $540 million to Ontario, $660 million to Atlantic Canada, and $600 million to the west. All parts of the country would certainly be adversely affected.

Let us look at how people would be hurt if there is action on the recommendations. Benefits would go to 66.6 per cent of the last year's earnings or maximum insurable earnings. Therefore, a person who had worked the entire year before would be fairly well off on unemployment insurance. However, for someone who was unemployed for most of the previous year and only worked 10 weeks, the unemployment insurance benefit would provide only 13 per cent of income replacement. That is very little money. For the worker earning $400 per week with 52 weeks worked in the past year, the UI would be $277 per week. An employee in an area of high unemployment with only 10 weeks of work would only be receiving $52 per week. We are not talking about much income replacement. We are talking more about a welfare scheme in terms of its actual impact. Over 75 per cent of UI claimants have worked fewer than 52 weeks before filing a claim. They are the ones who will be hurt, and there are many such people.

Annualization, even with the 66.6 per cent benefit rate, would actually mean that half of Canada's unemployed would have less than 40 per cent of their week's income replaced by unemployment insurance. These changes mean a starve-out policy for depressed regions and a starve-out welfare program for workers with the least access to new jobs.

• (1820)

Another area of real concern is that women would be hit under annualization. Ironically, while women are supposed to be brought into the system increasingly by including part-time workers, most part-time workers are also seasonal workers. They would be hit as well. The National Action Committee, which wants to speak to the proposals, has been denied access to the committee. It will not have a chance to raise these extremely important issues, and I would hope that would be reconsidered.

[Translation]

We want to see changes which would improve the unemployment insurance scheme and extend its coverage to many more Canadian men and women workers. The NPD wants the inclusion of more workers, especially in areas of culture including the theatre, dancing and music. Artists' associations have been asking for a long time for the inclusion of their members into the unemployment insurance scheme.

The Standing Committee on Communications and Culture has proposed amendments to the tax legislation which would indirectly promote this objective. Unfortunately, neither the Forget Commission nor the Government has directly addressed these concerns, namely, the implementation of measures to give a greater number of Canadians unemployment insurance coverage. In fact, the answer is no. It is not an overly generous system. The measures provided by the vast majority of western industrialized countries are better. The priorities of the NDP are clear and they have been for a long time, since the Party's inception.

In our view, job creation is preferable. Canadians would rather work than collect unemployment insurance. However, an unemployment insurance scheme is absolutely necessary in the present situation. Nevertheless, Canadian men and women have had to wait a long time, for decades, because of resistance on the part of the Conservatives and the Liberals, who have refused to enact such a scheme.

The unemployment insurance scheme is relatively recent, having been established in the forties, and it has been under persistent attack by the private sector since the beginning.

[English]

At the very least the Government ought to respond to the concerns I have raised to ensure that any changes to unemployment insurance are to improve the system, not to cut benefits to workers who still need that unemployment system.

Mr. Ron Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard), I would like to elaborate further on the question asked by the Hon.

Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) on December 3, 1986.

• (1825)

As the Minister indicated, the Government has stated in this House that the purpose of any UI reform would not be to save money on the backs of Canadians. Rather, any reform to the UI program would have as its objective to make the system better. In this regard, it is both reasonable and responsible to consider carefully all recent studies that have reviewed the UI program, such as the Macdonald Royal Commission, the House Commission in Newfoundland and the Commission of Inquiry on Unemployment Insurance.

It is evident from the reactions to these reports that unemployment insurance is important to all Canadians. However, the recommendations of these several studies are not compatible in many instances. In fact, the Commission of Inquiry was not able to arrive at a consensus. For all of these reasons the Government considers it premature at this stage to give assurances on any specific part of the report. I repeat that the Government will be reviewing UI with the objective of improving it, simplifying it and making it fairer. In this regard, the Government is committed to return to the House by May 15 with its plan to modify and improve on unemployment insurance.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to petitions Nos. 332-676 to 332-685.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

ABORIGINAL AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT—SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. André Harvey (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the second report of the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development, which deals with three issues to which, pursuant to Standing Order 99(2), the Committee requests that the Government table a comprehensive response.

COMMUNICATIONS AND CULTURE—FOURTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the fourth report of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture, in both official languages. Our study and recommendations are based on the annual report of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation for 1985-86. Our Committee requests that the Government table a response to this report, pursuant to Standing Order 99(2).

The Committee examined the circumstances that prevented the Auditor General from completing the audit of CBC books. In presenting its findings and recommendations, the Committee wishes to help define solutions to CBC problems.

[English]

The committee's report reaffirms the importance of the CBC in Canadian broadcasting and expresses agreement with the Caplan-Sauvageau Task Force that it is upon the CBC that we must rely for an abundance of compelling radio and television programs by, for and about Canadians.

The committee regards the CBC's accounting problems as a serious matter because they resulted in CBC's management being unable to provide a full accounting to its board of directors and, as a result, prevented the corporation from giving Parliament a reliable account of its expenditures. Our hearings raised issues related to the financial management and accountability of the CBC and, specifically, the role and responsibilities of the CBC's board of directors, its audit committee, internal auditor and president.

Thus the committee recommends immediate amendments to the Broadcasting Act to clarify the role and responsibility of the CBC's board, the audit committee and the internal auditor; to expand on the rights and duties of the Auditor General; and to provide separately for a chairman of the board and a president.

[Translation]

I take this opportunity to thank the representatives of all three parties for their sustained efforts in drafting this unanimous report to the House. The results of our work prove beyond a shadow of a doubt that parliamentary reform is a success.

PETITIONS

CANADA POST—POSTAL SERVICES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, this morning I would like to present to the House a number of petitions from the riding of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell. The petitions are signed by a total of 1,447 people who are from a variety of communities in my riding. I will not recite the petitions in every case, but merely identify the different communities involved in each one.

The petitions ask that Canada Post restore the postal service to which Canadians are accustomed, that it not proceed with the corporate plans to cut back on door-to-door delivery in urban areas, and that it not proceed with the proposed closure of 1,700 rural post offices and the privatization of 3,521 other post offices. They ask that the price of postage not be increased at the same time as Canada Post is reducing its services.

The communities affected in these petitions are the communities of St. Paschal Baylon, Embrun, Bourget, St. Bernadin, Curran, L'Orignal, Hawkesbury, and a number of other villages in the constituency of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, namely, Fournier, Alfred, Dunvegan, Rockland, Apple Hill and Chutes à Blondeau.

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF COMPREHENSIVE FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CHILD DAY CARE SYSTEM

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr, Speaker, I should like to table today some hundreds of petitions from Newfoundland to Victoria, British Columbia, signed by several hundreds of women and parents concerned about child care services.

I should like, Mr. Speaker, if you would allow me, to read at least the introduction of those petitions. They have been signed by women and parents urging the Conservative Governement which has recognized at the time of the annual Conference of First Ministers in November, 1986, that child care is a priority measure ensuring the support and strenghtening of the Canadian family and promoting women's economic equality.

The report postponement of the Special Parliamentary Committee on Child Care suggests that it is possible that the Conservative Government will not set aside funds in its next Budget tomorrow for the development of adequate child care services.

We also pray and call upon the Government to negotiate and sign by the end of 1987 a federal provincial agreement which provides a detailed framework for a comprehensive child care system.

I merely wish to mention it again. Those hundred of names and petitions are from all parts of Canada and I should like to table them to stess to the Conservative government that it should recognize the importance of child care services.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege and honour to present a petition under Standing Order 106 on behalf of a large number of constituents. The petitioners are very concerned with the Government's decision to proceed with changes to the Patent Act which they believe will significantly increase the price of prescription drugs to Canadians, and make it difficult for those people who can least afford it to pay additional costs. The petitioners make the point that this will also add to the cost of provincial drug plans in terms of government pharmacare programs, which are indirectly paid by the taxpayer. The petitioners are asking the Government of Canada to reconsider its decision to proceed with this measure in an effort to keep prescription drug prices to an absolute minimum.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour to present a petition from citizens of a number of communities in my riding, and elsewhere in Canada. The petitioners are from Thompson, Flin Flon, The Pas, Leaf Rapids, and Churchill. In addition, there are petitioners from Calgary, High River, and Ontario. The petitioners express their concern that the Government is going ahead with the attempt to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs. They believe that this will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers, and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy the necessary prescription drugs. The undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

BILL C-39—SECOND READING, REFERENCE TO LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE, COMMITTEE REPORT AND REPORT STAGE DEEMED TO HAVE BEEN ADOPTED

BILL C-75—REFERENCE OF EVIDENCE AND DOCUMENTS TO LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties, and I believe there will be unanimous consent to the passing of the following motion:

That, notwithstanding any standing or special order of this House, Bill C-39, an Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act and to amend the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, the Maritime Code Act and the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act in consequence thereof, introduced on Monday, February 16, 1987, be deemed to have been read a second time, referred to and reported by a legislative committee without amendment, concurred in at the report stage, and ordered to stand on the Order Paper for consideration by the House at third reading stage;

And that the evidence adduced and documents received by any legislative committee of this House in the First Session of the Thirty-third Parliament in relation to Bill C-75, an Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act and to amend the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, the Maritime Code Act and the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act in consequence thereof, be deemed to have been referred to a legislative committee in this present session.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions and deliberations, and I wish to say that the Government has seen the wisdom of removing what we thought was an inappropriate clause establishing user fees. Now that that has been done, we are anxious to proceed with this legislation.

I wish to thank the Parliamentary Secretary for the initiative that the Government has taken to remove this obnoxious clause from the legislation. We are only too willing to co-operate and proceed.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Official Opposition I wish to state that there has been all-Party agreement to the motion that was presented by the Deputy House Leader (Mr. Lewis) on the government side.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Does the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have the unanimous consent of the House to move his motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, Question No. 59 will be answered today.

[Text]

DSS—CONTRACTS AWARDED TO CALGARY BUSINESSES

Question No. 59—Mrs. Sparrow:

In (a) 1983 (b) 1984 (c) 1985 (d) 1986 to date, in how many tenders and for what total sum of money have Calgary businesses been successful with the Department of Supply and Services?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): The number of contracts awarded to suppliers in Calgary are the following:

Year	No. of Contracts	Value $
(a) Jan. 1 — Dec. 31, 1983	5,052	45,281,652
(b) Jan. 1 — Dec. 31, 1984	6,382	68,556,087
(c) Jan. 1 — Dec. 31, 1985	7,154	77,278,137
(d) Jan. 1 — Dec. 31, 1986	6,429	70,379,468

The number of contracts awarded to Calgary suppliers from the regional purchasing office in Calgary did not decrease from 1985 to 1986. However, some contracts from the procurement directorates (headquarters) were not realized in 1986.

[English]

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wish to draw to your attention under Standing Order 64(3)(a) of the House of Commons that questions on the Order Paper that are so designated are to be answered within 45 days.

I wish to bring to the attention of the government side that Question No. 60 standing in my name has been on the Order Paper since December 18, 1986. The 45-day period has long since expired. The Government has breached this Standing Order. I hope the Government House Leader will see to it immediately that this question is answered forthwith, hopefully at the next sitting of the House.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will certainly undertake to investigate and see why the question has not been answered, and bring forward an answer as soon as possible.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions as enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have been answered.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. When the question was originally submitted did it require or request the 45-day response time? Standing Order 64(3)(a) clearly indicates that that request has to be in place in order to expect a response within that period.

Mr. Boudria: The answer to that is yes, and it is so designated on the Order Paper bearing the numeral 2 beside the question which is indicated at the bottom of the Order Paper as signifying a response requested within 45 days. That is, in fact, a question placed under Standing Order 64(3)(a) of the rules of the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

TELEGLOBE CANADA REORGANIZATION AND DIVESTITURE ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Monday, February 16, consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-38, an Act respecting the reorganization and divestiture of Teleglobe Canada, be now read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Ms. McDonald (p. 3435).

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak to Bill C-38, especially since yesterday, my hon. friend from the riding next door, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) who is in the House today, rose in the House to express the hope I would speak to this Bill.

Teleglobe Canada

Mr. Speaker, as you know, I was a Member of the Committee on the Reform of the House of Commons, and at the time I was in the Opposition. Now we all know that the Opposition always criticizes whatever the Government does, but when it forms the Government it insists everything is all right. The Hon. Member will recall that when his Government was in power, it tabled a Bill whose purpose was to privatize Teleglobe Canada. It was a good idea at the time, but today it is no longer a good idea. They are looking for all kinds of excuses to call this a bad idea, because they are now in the Opposition. However, when they were on this side of the House, when they were the Government, there were no objections to selling the corporation. And now we are finally proceeding with privatization, they suddenly come up with all kinds of reasons why it no longer makes sense.

An Hon. Member: What a shame.

Mrs. Bourgault: What a shame indeed. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say, for the benefit of those who are not aware of the fact, that the overseas facilities are located in Weir, in the beautiful riding of Argenteuil—Papineau. Seventeen employees work there in a magnificient setting and excellent working conditions, since they are using the very latest technology which is a real challenge for them. In fact, Teleglobe receives hundreds of Canadian visitors during the summer, who come every year to travel around this beautiful part of my riding. According to the statistics, it seems quite a few of these visitors later decided to buy a lot or a cottage because the area is so beautiful people can't help but invest their money there. I would invite Hon. Members to come and visit. In fact, the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) is familiar with the area because his wife lives nearby.

Mr. Speaker, the Government would have lost its credibility by only selling Crown corporations that were not making a profit. People tend to want to get rid of the bad stuff and keep the good stuff. I believe that if the Government is to be credible, it must sell all Crown corporations according to the schedule agreed on by the Government and the Minister of State (Privatization) (Mrs. McDougall).

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that in most Opposition ridings, constituents agree with our plan to privatize Crown corporations. Mr. Speaker, there are those who object and say: Why sell the one that happens to be the most profitable Crown corporation? Mr. Speaker, simply because Teleglobe has a monopoly on international communications in Canada and because in the long run, a monopoly position can only have an adverse effect on profits and efficiency. We know that in Canada, efficiency and profits are at a very low ebb, and that is not good for our companies.

Furthermore, considering that five years from now, the market will be opened up for competition, it was essential to start by privatizing the existing monopoly. Mr. Speaker, can any business compete with a Government-supported company? Now that Teleglobe has been sold to Memotec, it will no longer pay dividends to the Government, but it will now have to pay federal and provincial income tax as well as all the local taxes, like any other business. I, for one, believe that as a result, there will be a better distribution of the corporation's profits.

There is another objection that is always raised. It is that a country's international communications have strategic importance and thus cannot be sold off to the private sector. Mr. Speaker, a case could have been made during the war, but the argument is no longer valid at this time, when individuals and especially businesses are increasingly using a service that has now become strictly commercial. It is no longer a matter of military considerations. And so, there is no justification for having a state monopoly on what is almost exclusively a telephone service.

What counts for my constituents is lower overseas rates and the knowledge they will be protected from now on by the CRTC. Mr. Speaker, do you think Canadians will buy the Opposition's arguments, especially those made by the New Democratic Party, which would like to see the Government own more, not fewer businesses? Where will the money and the taxes come from? I have some constituents who are saying they wished the tax reform would be put through, because it is getting very expensive to pay for all this. There is no need for that, Mr. Speaker. There is no need for the Government to own private businesses.

This became quite obvious during the electoral campaign. Our constituents gave us a very clear message: Please, get out of private business. See to it that the taxpayers' money is fairly and adequately administered instead of wasting your time with business activities when you are not in competition with the private sector. This is what the Progressive Conservative government has done. We had promised that we would do so and we are doing it.

Do you not think that this is a unique and fantastic opportunity for Memotec, a young and dynamic Montreal business with everything going for it, which did not hesitate to offer more than all the other bidders? This is Quebec entrepreneurship. I congratulate the management and the employees of Memotec on this deal and I am glad to know that big businesses are not the only ones able to purchase Crown corporations and other large companies.

Memotec is certainly not as big as Bell, Power Corporation or other large companies. It is a young, growing business based on risk capital and with serious shareholders, such as the Deposit and Investment Fund, and on the pension funds of public servants financed by the National Bank. Memotec has more to offer and it limits its operations to communications. I am convinced that, with the way Canadian broadcasting and telecommunications are controlled, the risk of conflict of interests in this company will be minimal, I therefore congratulate Memotec. I met its president when the sale was announced and he was very enthusiastic. Naturally, what I was most interested in knowing was whether there would be more jobs in Weir, for instance, in my constituency. Of course, that is what these people want.

In the last two years, I have often visited that part of my constituency and I remember meeting the employees of the company last summer. Naturally, they were a bit worried about losing what benefits they had then if the Government sold Teleglobe. On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, they will now be able to purchase shares at very favourable conditions. They will have a pension plan comparable to the public service plan and their jobs have been guaranteed. Indeed, if I may emphasize this point, under the special provisions related to the workers, Teleglobe employees will continue to come under federal jurisdiction as concerns the Labour Code and all existing collective agreements will continue to apply. As I said earlier, Memotec has offered to current employees of Teleglobe a pension plan similar to that of federal public servants. A special provision has also been made to establish a shareholding plan for employees. This offer involves 5 per cent of shares and provides a 10 per cent discount on the purchase price. Employees who wish to apply can also obtain an interest-free loan. I would like to say that I am happy for the people of my constituency who will be able to benefit from this sale.

Last Sunday, we saw on the French network of the CBC the Gémeaux Awards which reward excellence in radio and television programs. Awards should also be given to private businesses such as Memotec since its partnership with Teleglobe is the best way in my opinion to guarantee a great future for communications in Canada, which will be of great benefit to Canadian consumers.

Mrs. McDougall, in her speech to the House of Commons in February—

Mr. Boudria: Order!

Mrs. Bourgault: stated that, and I quote: "We could have—

• (1120)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I should like the Hon. Member to be aware that a point of order was raised with regard to her using the Minister's name. She should refer to the Minister of Communications, the Minister of State for Privatization, or whatever. I hope she will refrain from using the Minister's name.

Mrs. Bourgault: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State (Privatization) (Mrs. McDougall) commented in debate, on February 13, 1987, and I quote:

> But the Opposition is correct in one respect. We could have structured this transaction to get a higher sale price, but only if we had been prepared to sacrifice the interests of Canadians by allowing higher overseas telephone rates, or allowing the new buyer to charge monopoly rates, or if we had been prepared to allow foreign bidders who might have bid higher.

Mr. Speaker, this Government is more responsible than our Opposition friends suggest we are.

Mr. Speaker, they say this is a Crown jewel that should not be sold to the private sector. As I said, it is just as well in the private sector. Crown corporations are not viable, because they need blood transfusions from Canadian enterpreneurship. Again they say Mr. Speaker, when they are not viable they should be sold, when they are they should be kept.

Mr. Speaker, let us be serious. Any State corporation is restricted because the administrative system is complex. In her statement to the House, the Minister also said Friday last, and I quote:

> In many ways Crown ownership is inhibiting to corporations. For example, Teleglobe is a well managed and profitable company, but it is extremely restricted in what it can do.

This should be repeated!

> It cannot be entrepreneurial. It cannot move into new ventures built around its own technological sophistication and its link to international markets. This synergy is precisely on what Memotec proposes to build to develop new products, expanded markets, new exports, and ultimaely more jobs for Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, each time a Crown corporation must make a decision in this highly competitive world, it becomes unreal. That corporation cannot compete because it has to deal with 10, 20 officials who must then conduct studies on the proposal, submit that to Cabinet, obtain a signature. And while all that is going on, Mr. Speaker, the train has left and the Crown corporation missed it.

This is why those corporations must be transferred to the private sector.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I am very happy as a Quebecer, and more still as a Canadian that this Government chose one of our own companies, that the headquarters will remain in Montreal. As we know, Montreal is going through difficult times, so this further certainly is sure to materialize the areas of communications and aerospace in Montreal. It is my belief, Mr. Speaker, that in the near future, when I go back to Weir—because naturally I would like to reassure my constituents there that I will be going back no later than next summer—there certainly will be corporate developments in Weir and other people in my constituency can get a job in that magnificient industry.

• (1130)

I would therefore invite my Opposition colleagues to exercize caution, especially my friends in the Liberal Party. Because we very well remember at home, and you can bet I will do it, that they initially proposed the sale of Teleglobe, and now they suggest in Opposition this is no longer good.

Mr. Speaker, all this, parliamentary reform is in the air. They say we should support legislation when it is good, and criticize it when it deserves criticism. But right now the Opposition is criticizing across the board—then do not go in depth, they do not even remember what they did when they were the Government. I therefore invite them to be cautions. They should rather be commending this Government for once more having been consistent with its policies, for having sold Teleglobe to a young Quebec corporation with headquarters in Montreal. Mr. Speaker, I say bravo for this Government.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I take for granted that the last remarks made by the Hon. Member for Argenteuil—Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault) to the effect that Members of the Opposition were congratulating the Conservative Government was made in jest, and not seriously. Surely she was trying to play a little Tuesday morning trick on us in the House. We are going to laugh about this, because we know that to congratulate this Government would not be responsible. As a matter of fact, the Canadian people have now other things on their minds beside congratulating this Conservative Government. As you know, they have decided what place or rank they give this Government in public opinion pools and whether or not it deserves such congratulations as those the Hon. Member for Argenteuil—Papineau referred to a little while ago.

In her speech, the Hon. Member was saying that a Crown corporation, in view of its very structure, was unable to compete effectively because, before making a decision, a whole slew of Government officials had to be involved through the chain of command and because of this process, the Government had to divest itself of Crown corporations.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I disagree with her on this. I suggest that the Government should consider the possible divestiture of a Crown corporation only after it has ascertained that it no longer meets its political objectives; in other words, when an industry serves a national policy the preservation of a Crown corporation is necessary to meet these objectives. In such a case, there should be no divestiture. If a corporation is failing, if its structure must be changed, then the Government should change it, but keep it when it serves the public interest.

Therefore, I ask the Hon. Member opposite if under the present circumstances, where the Minister of Communication (Mrs. MacDonald) and her predecessor referred to a new communication policy, it would not have been better to wait and see what this new communication policy was going to be about before deciding what to do with this Crown corporation?

Mrs. Bourgault: Mr. Speaker, my colleague the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) obviously has a job to do as a critic, but I have yet to hear him come up with an interesting proposal or solution. No! My colleague spends his days phoning left and right scrounging for a bit of gossip rather than do the job he should be doing, namely to take a good hard look at bills and attempt to uncover—and that is the role of the opposition—whatever aspect of a bill might be detrimental to Canadians and to raise it before the House in all objectivity so that this or any other Government might reconsider certain clauses which could . . . We do not all claim to have a monopoly on truth. The role of the opposition, rather than chase pipe dreams and scandals, each time my colleague rises . . . And yet he is an intelligent man. But each time he rises, he brings up a scandal. He seems to thrive on scandal. He has nothing else of interest to add.

When I ask him—when you think, Mr. Speaker, that they are the ones who had proposed to sell Teleglobe, it is nonsense. Sheer nonsense! Those Canadians who are watching must wonder what is going on, and rightly so. Before losing the elections, the opposition had introduced a bill regarding the sale of Teleglobe. Having taken power, we conceded that the idea was a damn good one, one of the few good ideas the opposition had come up with, and now they say it is not a good idea any more. Now they say we should have kept Teleglobe.

Now, I ask, when are the Hon. Members of the Opposition going to stop shifting from side to side and focussing exclusively on pipe dreams and scandals?

Mr. Boudria: I would like to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) on a supplementary.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, all that was very nicely put but, as you probably noticed yourself, it did not mean anything. I will repeat my question more slowly for the Hon. Member, so that she can understand it and answer it, because she did not, as you certainly noticed.

I ask the Hon. Member one more time: Given the fact that the Ministers of Communications, the two of them, because as we know Ministers have a tendency to change quite often in the Conservative Party, for various reasons—

• (1140)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would not like the Hon. Member to get the Chair involved in these arguments. I would hope that he would just debate whatever it is he is debating without getting the Chair involved.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I made no reference to the Chair. However, I will take your preventive note under advisement in the event that I would want to do so at some point in the future.

[Translation]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am coming back to the question I was going to ask the Hon. Member for Argenteuil—Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault).

Given the fact that both Ministers of Communications have said in the past that the Government of Canada should have a new communication policy, should we not have waited for that policy to be released before selling this company? That is the question I was asking the Hon. Member previously.

Secondly, does she think it is normal for the shares of the company which acquired Teleglobe Canada to rise so much in the last few days? Is it not proof, for the Hon. Members opposite, that this Crown company has been sold at a bargain price, a price much too low under the circumstances?

Mrs. Bourgault: No, Mr. Speaker, the time had come to sell, although Communication Ministers had stated, as my hon. friend has just mentioned, that it would be better to wait until the policy had been announced. I think this is a responsible Government. Cabinet Members have approved the initiative of the Minister of State (Privatization) (Mrs. McDougall), and that is what is taking place.

The Hon. Member mentioned in his second question that the shares had gone up. I say this is great for Memotec and that corporation's shareholders.

Mr. Boudria: The current shareholders—

Mrs. Bourgault: Why take offence at that? It is only fair that the shares of Memotec, a corporation registered under Quebec's Stock Savings Plan, should fluctuate as the shares of any other corporation. That is normal. They could have gone down in value just as they could have gone up. I assume that the shares of Power Corp. and other tenders went down when the sale was awarded to Memotec. Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should remember that the CDIC had recommended the sale of Teleglobe because this Crown corporation had become obsolete.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member opposite. She said that it was a great thing for Memotec shareholders that their shares had gone up. My question is this: Is it not our duty to protect the interests of Canadian taxpayers, the shareholders of Teleglobe at the time of the sale of this corporation? Have we not been elected by them to sit here and defend their interests? Since the Hon. Member is likely to answer this question in the affirmative, I ask again the Hon. Member opposite: Is it not true that the Government did not get for Canadian taxpayers all the money it could have obtained? If this purchase was such a good deal for Memotec, it certainly means that Canadian taxpayers did not get all they could have had for this corporation. You cannot have it both ways. If it was such a great deal for one, the other obviously did not get enough money.

Mrs. Bourgault: If anybody benefited from this sale, Mr. Speaker, it was the Canadian consumers. The CRTC will now regulate their telecommunication business, they will pay less for their overseas communications, and they will be paying taxes to municipal, federal and provincial governments. A corporation such as Teleglobe which was once justified was now in fact supported by Canadian taxpayers. Now, the Government has collected dividends, and so have Canadian taxpayers. Now the time has come for the private sector to benefit from it, and for this corporation to be regulated, it had to be sold to the private sector.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time for questions and comments has now expired. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) has the floor.

[English]

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I must begin by making a brief comment on the speech of the Hon. Member. She made a great point of the fact that the Government was being responsible by not selling this firm to a foreign company. I must say that those are sentiments with which I agree, but I wonder if this same sentiment applied to the purchase of de Havilland by Boeing which occurred earlier this year. We have seen clear cases of the Government attempting to find a bidder which turned out to be a foreign purchaser. The Government has expressed not only no apology for doing so but pride in managing to attract to Canada a grand foreign firm that would be the salvation of a particular Crown corporation. The Government cannot have it both ways. It must accept either that it considers the ownership of a company to which it is selling a Crown corporation as important or it is not important. It cannot try to play both ends against the middle as evidenced by the Hon. Member's comments.

I would like to try to analyse this sale and show that it is somehow typical and a sign to the country of what privatization Conservative-style will mean. There is a very easy acceptance in Canada that it makes sense to sell off assets which have been built up over many years and which have fulfilled important public purposes for the sake of short-term economic returns. It seems to me that this case gives us very serious pause to reconsider that acceptance. I would hope it will force the Canadian people to raise questions that will affect not only this sale but the entire thrust of the Government's efforts to get rid of what is, after all, the historical legacy the people of Canada have built up over the years.

We must begin by asking if we have here a case of a whale being swallowed by a minnow. An extremely small firm that in its annual revenue had only something in the order of $31 million, which it received during the first nine months of 1986, is purchasing an extremely huge firm. It is purchasing this firm, not with its own money, not with money that it had somehow accumulated through a share issue to Canadians, but with money from bank loans and debentures. That is a very, very profitable way to purchase and take over another company. That is because the profits of the company compared to the actual equity invested are extremely large. It is also an extremely risky way to do a takeover.

• (1150)

This is exactly the kind of predatory takeover which has led people to talk, not about minnows taking over whales but sharks taking over whales. They then carve up the carcass, selling off bits and pieces and generally demolishing the company and its future prospects. I am not suggesting that that will necessarily take place in this case, but it smacks very much of that kind of approach to financing. It is not yet commonplace in Canada and I hope it never becomes commonplace. However, this kind of sell-out is likely to encourage the same kind of thing. It can be very devastating for the private companies who experience it and I regret that is the approach taken.

The second reality we have to deal with is that even in the case of a Crown corporation which was very easy to sell, the Government still could not do it properly and competently. On the very day that the decision, a supposed secret, was announced, the shares of Memotec started to sky-rocket on the stock exchange. They went up a total of $2.38, over 20 per cent. After that Memotec announced it had an interest in taking over Teleglobe. It is very clear that there was a leak of information.

Once more we have gross incompetence demonstrated by the Government in the process it used. That is unfortunately all too typical of the Government. That is the scandal which the Member who spoke previously was unprepared to recognize. It cannot be sloughed off to the side because it involves incompetency and, I must say, dishonesty. Clearly people with insider information bought shares in Memotec when no one else had heard of that little minnow in the economic community. They bought the shares and pushed the price up by 20 per cent and, I suggest, made a tremendous and unconscionable financial killing, I hope it will rest heavily on their consciences in the future. This is a classic case of incompetence of which no Government should be guilty.

We also have to recognize there has been a tremendous effort to throw up a great smoke-screen over the price of Teleglobe so the Government can say it got a tremendous price. It has been suggested that over $600 million was poured into the Government's coffers by this deal. The Financial Post, hardly a paragon of socialist economics, after a careful analysis indicated quite clearly that the price paid is only $345 million. Once again the Government demonstrates not only its incompetence but its congenital incapacity to be forthright with the people of Canada. That is the third reality demonstrated by this sell off.

There has also been the suggestion that this deal provides protection to the consumer. All of us in this place have a tremendous concern about consumer protection. Yet nowhere in this deal is there any evidence of protection for the consumer. We have instead a five-year monopoly given to this corporate minnow so it can make as much money as possible. It is not doing that with its own money but with the bank's money. Memotec will do very well. At the end of the five-year monopoly it will likely sell the company, carve it up and give the various telephone companies a piece. It will have done handsomely without making any contribution whatsoever to the economic prosperity and well-being of Canada.

In addition to the five-year monopoly the Government has promised to bring in legislation to prevent competition involving communication lines running through Canada and those running through the U.S. The Government talks about competition and consumer protection, yet it creates a five-year monopoly and promises to eliminate certain competition through legislation.

• (1200)*

It is not just those of us on the opposition side of the House who raise questions about this sale. The union representing the company in question has suggested that tremendous risk for Teleglobe is embodied in this sale. Again, the minnow swallowing the whale is apt to get indigestion. In addition, there is absolutely nothing in the legislation which demonstrates a guarantee of any sort for the workers in the company that their jobs are in any sense secure. At least there was some suggestion of that in previous privatizations. According to the unions, there is a probability that there will be lay-offs in the future in Teleglobe.

This is privatization Conservative style. It is ill-thought through. It is inconsistent. It is incompetently put into effect. It is dishonest with respect to the price which is actually being announced, and it has established monopolistic, uncompetitive conditions while it trumpets about competition to all and sundry.

That kind of approach has brought the Conservative Party to a position where only 23 per cent of the people of the country are prepared to vote for it. It is unfortunate that a Government which was elected with so much promise should have brought itself to that position, but it is completely and utterly understandable that that should be where it stands when its modus operandi, its approach to even such a simple, straightforward sale as that of Teleglobe, should be so marked by incompetence and lack of thought about what was being undertaken.

We suggest that the Government think again, that it take three months, that it allow itself, as it has claimed is its responsibility, to investigate the insider trading charge which has been made on the various stock exchanges. After such investigation is undertaken and assurances are provided to the workers in this enterprise, the Government should return to the House with a revised Bill with more honesty and more competence than it has demonstrated in this case.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw attention to three points made in the Hon. Member's address. He dwells upon the smallness of the purchaser as if there were something wrong with that. One could infer that he might have been in favour of the purchase had the purchaser been large. I had to wonder whether he would have voted for it if the buyer had been Northern Telecom or some other large corporation. The real test should be the price offered to the public and the ability of the company to pay it. There is a good side to the company being small. Do we not want to give smaller enterprises an opportunity to build themselves up and progress in the interests of Canada?

Second, the Member dwelt upon the leak of information which was supposed to be confidential. He was right to draw attention to that. However, he knows, as we all know, that due process is taking place. This matter is being investigated by the proper authorities. We can expect that when the investigation is complete appropriate action will be taken.

Apposite to that I would like to quote from an editorial in this week's issue of the Toronto Financial Times which refers to the leak of information which was supposed to have been confidential. The editorial writer says: "This doesn't detract from the good sense of the sale". That is the point for us to recognize and stress. This sale serves the interests of the people. With respect to the cash involved, I have different figures from his. I will quote from the February 23 issue of Maclean's magazine as follows:

> The Government picked up $608 million in the deal, $102 million in cash which the telecommunications company had accumulated, as well as $488.3 million from the sale and an estimated $18 million in future income in cash.

These figures are different than mine. It seems to depend, in part, on what paper one is reading. However, I put that into the record.

I ask that the Member and the House see the wisdom of the sale which brings in cash for the taxpayers of Canada to partially finance programs which the Government has undertaken in their names. Finally, this is the kind of sale that the Government was elected to carry out. The Government was elected to privatize Crown corporations and reduce the Government's involvement in business. We are taking this step as part of that mandate. I trust that it will receive the approval of the House, as I am sure it will receive the approval of most Canadians. Indeed, if there is any criticism from the public it should be with regard to why we are not doing it faster and doing more of it.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, if I may, I will deal seriously with the issue of smallness. Of course, it is not the fact that the company happened to be small that is the concern. The concern is that the company happened, because of its smallness, to have to rely very heavily on bank loans in order to take over this company. In short, we have what is commonly referred to in commercial circles as a very highly leveraged company. Such a company has much less flexibility to face the ups and downs of the international business cycle than does a company which, as in this case, had over $108 million in reserves before the sale. That is the crucial difference.

With regard to small companies, it makes far more sense to encourage small companies to expand and to grow by themselves, thereby creating jobs, opportunities and exports, rather than to grow through quite ludicrous takeovers such as this. We have advocated that position quite widely.

My point in stressing the leak was to make what I think must be recognized as the ultimate criticism of this Government. While there are many Canadians who dislike the Government because of scandals, I can honestly tell the Hon. Member that it is my experience from talking to people in my constituency and elsewhere in Canada that those who put their faith in the Government have now withdrawn that faith, perhaps forever. I suggest they have done so because of a sense of incompetence in the Government, and this leak demonstrates such incompetence. I wish the Minister would get up and offer the House an apology for that incompetence in light of what has taken place.

• (1210)

Let me deal with the price. As someone who has worked for Maclean's, I hesitate to say that The Financial Post does have a slightly better grasp of financial figures than Maclean's. If we examine those financial figures in detail, there are two categories included in that $608 million. One category is dividends which could have been paid to the Government at any point. It is incorrect to say that they were received as part of the price. That reduces the price to under $500 million.

The second category is more questionable. It is a loan which was made by the Government to Teleglobe, which Memotec has taken over. Perhaps that should or should not be included in the price, but in any event, it does not mean that that money is suddenly available for the kinds of allocations to programs that the Member discussed. In fact, the $345 million I talked about seems to be the correct figure with respect to money available for allocation to programs.

Finally, the Member suggested that the Government was elected to sell our Crown corporations. I took part in the last election and I do not believe it was a promise that was either widespread or consistently made. In fact, in many cases, the opposite promise was made. Even if it was a promise, it was surely not to sell off our Crown corporations incompetently and at a low price, about which there is a sense of dishonesty. It just confirms to Canadians that the Government cannot be forthright.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time for questions and comments has now expired. Debate. The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) has the floor.

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Under public pressure, Mr. Speaker, I have decided that I too should speak for a few minutes in this debate on Bill C-38 which, as we all know, is aimed at privatizing Teleglobe Canada. First I should like to clear up any misunderstanding on the intentions of the Liberal Party about this question. Earlier the Hon. Member for Argenteuil—Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault) took the floor and made a clumsy attempt to imply that the Liberals wanted to sell Teleglobe when they were in office, but now that they are in the Opposition they have had second thoughts and systematically denounce every single Government initiative. In my book, that is an exaggeration and a subjective interpretation of another Party's intentions. For openers, had the Liberals wanted to sell Teleglobe they would have done so. But they did not, and the best evidence of this is that Teleglobe is still there and still belongs to the Canadian people, and that it is the Conservative Party which is trying to unload this company. Besides, had the hon. Member for Argenteuil—Papineau wanted to be honest she could have said that, at one time, the Liberals did consider selling Teleglobe but changed their mind.

The philosophical approach of the Liberal Party of Canada is not to sell most Crown corporations, but it is not against that either. In fact we believe that selling Crown corporations is something possible and even well-advised in certain cases. We study each case. For example, with respect to Canadair which the Government sold not too long ago, we were in favour of privatization for various reasons which I will sum up briefly. First, because Canadair was producing something, aircraft among other goods. We do not think that the Government has a role to play in replacing the industry to produce consumer goods. Then of course the sale rallied public support in Quebec because Bombardier was the buyer. Most Quebecers agreed with the sale, even including the labour union.

However the situation is altogether different in the case of Teleglobe. First of all, we are talking about a public utility. Teleglobe can be compared with a hydro power company or a public service such as highway and bridge maintenance. Teleglobe is a day-to-day service. Since this service has until now been provided by the Government—indeed, a benefit for Canadian consumers—we see no reason to change anything. Why fix something which runs smoothly? Everybody knows that in Canada you only need to lift the receiver off the hook to be able to talk to the person you are calling. Unfortunately it is not the same thing in all countries of the world. More particularly, international communications networks in Canada are extremely efficient. I simply cannot understand why the Government has decided to sell this company. It will now have to be regulated, yet there was no need for that before since it was a Crown corporation which set its own rates!

[English]

Why should something that is working so well be changed and given away at a price that is shamefully low?

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) stated in his budget speech of 1985 that the Government's philosophy on selling Crown corporations is that Crown corporations without a policy role could be dissolved. Why is the Government selling Teleglobe before the establishment of a national communications policy? It is in clear contradiction with the philosophy previously stated by the Minister of Finance.
