STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

AEROSPACE INDUSTRY

CANADAIR—ABILITY TO CARRY OUT CF-18 FIGHTER AIRCRAFT MAINTENANCE CONTRACT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Winnipeg Free Press reported that Canadair, winner of the CF-18 maintenance contract after serious abuse of the tendering process, is now considering building a $20-million maintenance facility at Mirabel because it says it does not have enough space in Montreal to do the CF-18 work. In other words, after serious doubts were raised as to whether or not Canadair had the needed technology and personnel, we now learn that it does not even have the needed space or facilities to handle this critically important defence contract.

The question is how much will this cost Canadians? At the time the contract was awarded, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) told Canadians that we would not pay another cent for the Government's decision to accept Canadair's bid over Bristol's clearly superior bid. The bill Canadians will now have to foot will run much higher if Canadair seeks government support for this new facility, as a company spokesman anticipates it will.

To add further insult to injury, just last week the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse), in a speech to the Montreal Chamber of Commerce, was quoted as saying the following:

> By deliberately opting for Montreal in aeronautics, the Government is giving back—to the city one of its natural and historical roles—this is the background to the Progressive Conservative Government's decision last year to centre the aerospace industry in the Montreal region.

What does this say about the Government's commitment to other areas where the aerospace industry is important? How many other contracts will be finagled? I call upon the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to repudiate those remarks, and I call upon the Government to examine this tendering process—

Mr. Speaker: I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

CALL FOR EARLY REINSTATEMENT

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, the people I represent are angry about the delays in reinstating capital punishment. It is no wonder. A beautiful teenaged girl from Standard, a married woman from High River, and a high school girl from Okotoks were all brutally assaulted and murdered. Two of them were covered with gasoline and burned, and the other was tied to stones and sent to the bottom of a lake. Now a peace officer has been murdered in cold blood.

More than 70 per cent of the people throughout Canada want the noose returned for those who deliberately plan and then kill another human being. There is no deterrent for planned murder now. Even when murderers are caught, we give them protection in the prisons, food and entertainment that working people cannot afford, and then let them out so that they can do it all over again. Where is the justice?

Our Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) is taking steps to correct this, and the sooner the better. Capital punishment will not stop all murderers, but it will stop a lot, and certainly no murderer will have the chance to murder a second time. I hope that it will soon be well known in Canada that if you deliberately kill another human being, you, too, will surely die.

HEALTH

DIABETES RESEARCH—EFFECT OF CLOSURE OF RAT BIOBREEDING PROGRAM

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, rats are hairy little animals with beady little eyes that people generally dislike. That is the evident depth of thought that has motivated our scientifically incompetent Government to close the unique biobreeding rat program at the Department of Health and Welfare, even though the diabetic rats produced there are indispensable to diabetes research in Canada.

Ideology and incompetence share a happy marriage in the Government. Cut the deficit, privatize the rats, even if it cripples essential Canadian research on the world's third greatest killer of mankind. Thus continues the Government's march to minor league science even in health research.

REUBEN MAYES CHOSEN NFL ROOKIE OF THE YEAR

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise in the House today to draw the attention of Members to the achievements of a Canadian sports hero. The people of my hometown are justifiably proud of Reuben Mayes, a native of North Battleford, who has inspired sports fans in a football career which began with the North Battleford Comprehensive High School Vikings and continued with the University of Washington Cougars.

We all expected great things from Reuben when he was drafted last year as a running back for the National Football League's New Orleans Saints. Last week, by a landslide vote, Reuben Mayes was chosen Rookie of the Year by the Professional Football Writers of America. He rushed for 1,300 yards in his first pro football season and has won acclaim throughout North America.

On behalf of The Battlefords, indeed of everyone in Saskatchewan, I congratulate this distinguished young Canadian, Reuben Mayes, and wish him continued success in what is clearly destined to be a brilliant football career.

AGRICULTURE

DAIRY CATTLE RESEARCH PROGRAM—CALL FOR CANCELLATION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the Tory approach to government is waste, scandal, incompetence, and cronyism, as we have seen during the past week. However, nothing typifies this more than the phoney research project on dairy cattle by Dreamstreet Redgen which will cost the people of Canada $55 million in a Scientific Research Tax Credit. Responsible people in agricultural research, such as Dr. Larry Milligan of the University of Guelph, have condemned the scheme and said that it has to be insanity to allow the Dreamstreet research program to go ahead.

It is really only a scheme to save big corporations millions of tax dollars and funnel millions of dollars from Canadian taxpayers back to the parent Dreamstreet tax shelter in the United States. Somewhere in the Government there is a guardian angel which allows this project to continue. Any honest, responsible Government would have cancelled it months ago.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

CENTRE FOR FRONTIER ENGINEERING RESEARCH—NEED FOR SPECIALIZED LABORATORIES

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Three decades ago, Mr. Speaker, John Diefenbaker struck a resonant chord in the hearts of all Canadians when he evoked his vision of the north. The challenge and vast potential of Canada's frontier regions are as great today as ever.

The Government of Canada has a unique opportunity before it to help this country maintain its status as a world leader in cold weather technology. I am referring to the Centre for Frontier Engineering Research. This remarkable non-profit venture is doing pioneering research on the effects of low temperature environments on materials, design, and technology. This work is vital in increasing the productivity of the petroleum, mining, construction, and shipping industries. By improving our ability to work in cold climates, frontier research is indirectly helping us to reaffirm our sovereignty over the Arctic regions.

In order to further its research, the Centre needs a facility for cold regions engineering research which would include a low temperature structural laboratory and a downhole tubulars laboratory. The private sector and the Government of Alberta support the proposal. The assistance of the Government of Canada can make these specialized laboratories a reality. I urge the Government to support this centre of high technology excellence.

COPYRIGHT ACT

COMPREHENSIVE REVISION URGED

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, Canada's artists have been waiting since the fall of 1985 for action on a new Copyright Act. They are beginning to be very disturbed by rumours that the Government is backtracking on the excellent proposals for reform unanimously made by the Copyright Committee. In effect, we are hearing that there will not be a comprehensive new Act but only some minor plugging of loopholes.

[Translation]

There are rumors that the Government has no intention of including performers' rights in the expected legislation, even though this is a major concern for the cultural community and agencies such as Union des artistes. Painters and other visual artists who are already excluded from copyright also have claims to make.

[English]

The only way for the Government to put to rest these most unfortunate rumours is to bring in a Bill soon with the important and comprehensive recommendations of the copyright committee in it. Canada's creative people deserve no less.

THE ECONOMY

JAPANESE BUSINESS GROUP'S FINDINGS

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, there is in Canada today an improved environment for foreign investment and a strong and co-operative spirit between federal and provincial Governments to encourage such investment. There is an improved labour relations climate. There is an increased emphasis on high technology industries. Are these claims from a Tory election handbook? No, that report card comes from across the Pacific, from the report released yesterday by the highly prestigious Keidanren, Japan's federation of economic organizations, following their 10-day trip to Canada last November when they visited many businesses and Governments across the country.

It has been 10 years since that group previously came to Canada. As a result of their recent visit, Mission Leader Kanao said they have found a new Canada. He predicted that with such improvements in economic and investment conditions there should be an increase of shipments of manufactured goods to Japan, more high technology joint ventures between companies of the two countries, and greater Japanese investment, particularly in Canadian manufacturing. We are honoured that those who have come to Canada with a clear view so quickly appreciate the opportunities available.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

HAMILTON HARBOUR POLLUTION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, once again we see the City of Hamilton shafted by the Conservative Government. Can you imagine, Windermere Basin, part of the infamous Hamilton Harbour, which has been identified as one of the most polluted bodies of water in the Great Lakes, contains levels of hazardous PCBs up to 68 times what is considered safe.

The city, regional and provincial Governments are all prepared to commit millions of dollars for the clean-up, and the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) comes to Hamilton last week and says it is not a federal responsibility. The federal Government has the responsibility to follow up on the International Joint Commission's recommendations to clean up the Great Lakes. By ignoring this desperate situation in Hamilton Harbour he is forcing the people of Hamilton and the Province of Ontario to continue to drink water from Lake Ontario which is unsafe. I call on the Minister, if he is not afraid of the truth, to tell us why he held a private meeting with two Conservative Members of Parliament and ignored the Member of Parliament for Hamilton East in whose riding the Windermere Basin is found.

ECONOMIC GROWTH

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, Canada's economic indicators are looking better with each passing day. On the way up are housing and small business starts, building permits, consumer spending, international tourism, foreign investment, and the value of the Canadian dollar. On the way down are the Bank of Canada rate, the prime lending rate and mortgage rates.

Some of the indicators are nothing short of remarkable. Six-month mortgages are now available at 7.5 per cent, a rate unheard of since the 1960s and a fraction of the 21 per cent and 22 per cent being charged just five or six years ago. Clearly the foresighted actions of the Government deserve some of the credit. Initiatives such as the dismantling of the NEP and FIRA and the establishment of Investment Canada, together with deficit reduction and a spending control policy, have all added up to fiscal sanity and economic growth. We cannot stop now. We must do all we can to ensure that this welcome trend continues and that all regions of Canada benefit.

ENERGY

DEREGULATION OF NATURAL GAS INDUSTRY—EFFECT ON CONSUMERS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, when Canada's Energy Ministers meet this Friday they should look at the Conservative Government's bungling attempts to deregulate the natural gas industry. Canadians will have the dubious pleasure of paying more for their own resources at home than will American consumers of exported Canadian gas.

Beginning February 9, the Manitoba Public Utilities Board will try to find out why Inter-City Gas Corporation expects residential consumers in Manitoba to foot the bill, $60 million a year, for its contract to buy gas from TransCanada Pipe-Lines for $3 per thousand cubic feet. At the same time, TCPL is selling gas in Houston, Texas, for $2.55 per thousand cubic feet.

Deregulation is not helping consumers. Consumers of natural gas in Manitoba and Ontario are paying $125 a year more than they should be. That costs $60 million in Manitoba and $600 million in Ontario. The Energy Ministers of Canada should look at this unfair and unequal situation.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—SUPPORT FROM U.S. PRESIDENT

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, last evening in President Reagan's State of the Union Address he pledged to conclude a "historic" free trade agreement with Canada, their largest international trading partner. This can certainly be seen as a positive indication of the Reagan administration's continued support of a trade enhancement deal.

Canada survives on trade. Over 30 per cent of our national income is generated by exports. As our most important trading partner, 78 per cent of our exports enter the U.S. market and 22 per cent of their exports enter through our borders.

No former Canadian Government has approached this 120-year-old problem in such a spirit of co-operation. Instead of co-operating with our closest and most significant trading partner, the previous administration chose to suffocate measures leading to a comprehensive trade agreement.

The Conservative Government is committed to further negotiate bilateral trade talks with our friends south of the border in order to ensure a framework which will create employment in every region in Canada and enhance our economic recovery.

DISASTERS

PUERTO RICAN HOTEL FIRE—BETTER INFORMATION SOUGHT FOR CANADIAN TRAVELLERS

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, on New Year's Eve a tragic fire at the Dupont Plaza Hotel in San Juan, Puerto Rico, claimed the lives of 96 people, two of whom were from my riding. It is with the greatest sympathy that I express my regrets to their families. The origin of this fire presumably began over a bitter labour dispute between the union and management at that hotel.

I have a recommendation for the Department of External Affairs and the Department of Transport. I suggest to the Ministers that there be regulations requiring airlines and travel agencies to inform their customers of the regions of the world where terrorism or political or labour-management unrest exists. This would provide the Canadian travelling public with invaluable information when deciding where to holiday.

As a precautionary measure, Canadians deserve to be aware of violent disputes, and I strongly urge the Ministers to consider my recommendation.

THE SENATE

CONCEPT OF ELECTED SENATE SUPPORTED

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, a recent survey by the Canadian Press revealed that less than one-third of the 104 Senators attended regular sittings of the Senate during the fall session. This was out of 19 sitting days.

Exceptional circumstances such as ill health are understandable, but such a lack of enthusiasm from this predominantly Liberal body calls for a reassessment of the role of the Senate and potential Senate reform. It is time that serious consideration is given to the concept of an elected Senate, responsible to the voters of Canada for its action or inaction.

The people of my Province of Alberta have long supported the concept of a Triple E Senate, one that is elected, equal, and effective. Many Albertans are impatient for such change as they feel that Alberta's proper place in Confederation can only be enhanced by an elected Senate.

The Senate is indeed a necessary part of our Confederation and its purpose for existence is sound. However, the time has come for Senate reform and the accountability of the Senate to the people of Canada.

FISHERIES

ALLOCATION OF COD FISHING QUOTAS TO FRENCH VESSELS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Last year French fishermen overfished off the coast of Newfoundland by about 21,000 metric tonnes of cod. The Minister may know that that is about nine million codfish. If one stretched those cod end to end, they would form a line from Newfoundland right across the ocean to Paris. Despite that, the Minister has authorized an additional quota of 15,000 metric tonnes. Surely it is enough for his Government to have sold out the forestry workers of Canada to the United States; why did he sell out our fishermen to France?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): First, Mr. Speaker, I am rather surprised that the Hon. Leader of the Opposition did not do his homework or at least read the elements of the agreement that I announced yesterday. We have not offered any additional 15,000 tonnes of cod. In fact these amounts, which are provided for in the long-term agreement with France and the EEC, and as well the allocation in the 3PS area, are contained within the fishing plan which was announced last year, fully discussed and negotiated with representatives of the industry and the Governments of Newfoundland and the other Atlantic Provinces.

• (1420)

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is not what the fishermen are saying, or the Premier of Newfoundland. What the Minister has done is offered this gift to France in order to maintain cordial relations, so called, so that cabinet Ministers can continue to enjoy the cocktail circuit.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REASON FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Why would the Minister cut the Atlantic quota for Canadians by 10,000 metric tonnes and issue those licences to Frenchmen for 15,000?

Mr. Foster: Shame.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): The answer to that, too, Mr. Speaker, is very simple. In fact those licences were only issued so we could keep track of how many French vessels were blatantly overfishing—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Siddon: —in a disputed zone under provisions approved by the Government of which the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition was a part and which he endorsed as Prime Minister when he was Prime Minister for a short while.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister cannot substantiate that one whit.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I am going to try to make some sense out of this. I am going to go to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Mr. Johnston: Good luck.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): May I ask the Deputy Prime Minister to try to get together with us and look at what has happened here? The French Government is claiming in effect the Gulf of St. Lawrence. That is like us claiming the Eiffel Tower. Yet the Government has authorized an adjudication before the World Court, sacrificing our sovereignty and the rights of our fishermen. Will the Deputy Prime Minister not overrule the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and pull us out of this absurd deal with France?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition has asked three questions and made three incorrect statements, which shows how ill-equipped he would he to lead a Government of this country.

An Hon. Member: He has already proved that in the past.

Mr. Siddon: Absolutely, and we will prove it, too.

Mr. McKenzie: We saw what he did in Finance.

Mr. Siddon: The Leader of the Opposition has claimed that France—

Mr. Penner: Get rid of this Minister. He is a disaster.

Mr. Siddon: —lays claim to the Gulf of St. Lawrence. That is pure poppycock. It is not the case. In fact what we are doing by entering into a period of negotiation with France is to find for once and for all a solution to a problem created by a Government of which the Leader of the Opposition was a part.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN MINISTER AND PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, that answer was amusing coming from a Minister who would obviously have trouble walking and chewing gum at the same time.

Atlantic Canadians and, specifically, Newfoundlanders, have been brutally sold out by this Minister, whom they will never again trust. The Minister was sworn to uphold their interests. Why did the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans write to the Prime Minister on June 24, 1986, with respect to these negotiations and say:

I want to assure you that my goal throughout will be to manage our fisheries discussions with the French in a manner that does not jeopardize the cordial relationship between Canada and France—

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Shame!

Mr. Tobin: Who was putting presure on the Minister to go easy with France and brutalize Newfoundlanders?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Shame!

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): You know, Mr. Speaker, as is usual with members of the Opposition, they love to take quotes out of context. If the Hon. Member would wish to read the entire text—

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): We will table the whole letter, don't worry.

Mr. Siddon: —he would realize that the Prime Minister said:

Your comments on the socio-economic importance of the cod fishery and the implications of the French claim are useful. I agree that in dealing with this sensitive issue, we must weigh on the one hand the interests of Canadian fishermen and fishing communities and on the other our bilateral relations with France.

That is a completely responsible statement from the Prime Minister.

Mr. Tobin: Obviously the French hand was a heck of a lot heavier than the hands of the Newfoundlanders which were stretched out asking for help, because you turned us away.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER FROM NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. This morning on VOCM's open-line in St. John's the Hon. Member for St. John's West said with respect to lack of consultation: "I can't see any legitimate defence of the fact that they were not present at this particular meeting. Let's just say that those responsible for this are certainly insensitive to the importance of the issue in Newfoundland and Labrador".

Clearly there is a split in the Cabinet over this issue. Will the Deputy Prime Minister declare this deal null and void, and fire the Minister of Fisheries, or will he leave the Hon. Member for St. John's West with no choice but to resign in protest against this bad decision for Newfoundland?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I am not about to interpret the words of my hon. colleague. However, I can assure the Hon. Member that there is no split in Cabinet over this affair.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Siddon: From day one the Government of the Province of Newfoundland and Labrador, industry representatives, and other Atlantic provinces have known very well—

Mr. Tobin: Are you calling them all liars?

Mr. Siddon: —that our objective is to get France to agree to submit the unresolved boundary dispute to international arbitration so that we can stop once and for all their blatant overfishing of fish stocks which are for the benefit of the fishermen the Hon. Member represents, and which are being overfished to the extent of 20,000 tonnes per year, or $40 million. That is the opportunity we seek to turn to the advantage of Newfoundland, about which the Hon. Member is saying that its Government could not possibly address and that we should not possibly address that challenge.

REQUEST MADE BY NEWFOUNDLAND PREMIER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister on the same subject. I know he has assumed an interest in this subject.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister confirm that the Premier of Newfoundland wrote to the Prime Minister just before Christmas and made it very clear in his letter that the Government of Newfoundland did not want any additional fishing rights given to France in one part of Canadian waters as an attempt to obtain a settlement of the dispute about St. Pierre and Miquelon? Will the Deputy Prime Minister confirm the existence of that letter? Will he tell us how it was possible that the Prime Minister of Canada could ignore such a request?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, of course the Government of Newfoundland does not want additional quotas given up to France in other parts of those waters, in particular the area known as 2J+3KL. But the Government has had to consider the possible advantage of eliminating once and for all the overfishing by France which is extracting from Canadian fishermen some $40 million worth of value per year in exchange for some possible modest offsetting contributions elsewhere.

There is no commitment, and the Government will not make any such commitment between now and the end of the year without the full support of Newfoundland and the industry.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I return to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Minister of Fisheries has just said that a possible modest concession has been made. I point out to him that today the Premier of Nova Scotia said that that possible modest concession will cost Atlantic Canada $200 million. It may be modest to the Minister but it is not modest to the people of Atlantic Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Since the Premier of Newfoundland has opposed this deal, since the Premier of Nova Scotia has opposed it, and since spokespersons for virtually every Atlantic Government are in opposition to it, can the Deputy Prime Minister explain to the House why the Government of Canada made a deal that pleases the people of France but is opposed by everyone in our Atlantic provinces?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Leader of the NDP would want to understand the facts as they are in truth. In fact no fish have been promised to France beyond the end of the present year, and those which have been promised to France within this year fall within the groundfish plan which has been negotiated fully with other Governments.

Mr. Tobin: Bull!

Mr. Siddon: There is a small exception in the area to the very north. Those are surplus cod stocks which have never been fished by Newfoundland and which we do not believe France will fish either.

Mr. Tobin: Come on, what are you talking about?

Mr. Siddon: No commitments have been made. What we have done is we agreed to enter into—

Mr. Tobin: You don't know what you're talking about!

Mr. Siddon: —negotiation of the boundary issue. Those who are unwilling to negotiate are unfit to govern.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT CANCEL AGREEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the Party that now governs made a commitment to provinces all across Canada that when their interests were at stake they would be full participants in negotiations. It was this Government that cut Atlantic Canadian provinces out of the deal completely. That is what this Government has done.

• (1430)

Mr. Broadbent: Furthermore, the Minister has said that there is a surplus of cod. There is not a surplus.

Mr. Speaker: Will the Hon. Member please put his question?

Mr. Broadbent: My question to the Deputy Prime Minister is this. Since this deal that the Government has made is of an interim nature, and is opposed by all the Governments in Atlantic Canada that have spoken on it, and the industry opposes it, the fishermen oppose it, no rational Canadian, except in the Conservative Party, is in favour of it, will the Government now cancel the interim agreement?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, it is the folly of this place and this Question Period that questions of this type are purely designed to distort and exaggerate—

An Hon. Member: Resign!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. Members would expect me to comment that the observations of the Hon. Minister are of great interest to me, but most of the time in this Chamber if those observations have to be made, I have to make them. Will the Minister please answer the question?

Mr. Siddon: I agree with you absolutely, Mr. Speaker, as always.

We have agreed with France to sit down between now and the end of the year and negotiate terms of reference by which the boundary dispute, which is a long and unresolved irritant, would be referred to compulsory third-party arbitration. In exchange, we have agreed to negotiate interim fishing arrangements with France which would help us to curb the overfishing problem.

Mr. Riis: Stop negotiating for us.

Mr. Siddon: Both of those initiatives are to be negotiated by December 31. Both will bring benefit to Atlantic fishermen. If, in the process, the demands of France exceed that which Canadian fishermen and Atlantic Governments can support, there will be no agreement.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

STATEMENT MADE BY PREMIER OF NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Fisheries has said that he has cut back the cod quota for Canadian fishermen in the interests of conservation, then declares the cod surplus and gives them to the French.

An Hon. Member: That is right. Shame!

Mr. MacLellan: The Premier of Nova Scotia has said that Atlantic fisheries will lose at least $200 million. He talks about cordial relations with—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the Hon. Member please put his question?

Mr. MacLellan: Does the Minister say that the Premier of Nova Scotia does not know what he is talking about? Is this cordial relationship being paid for on the backs of Atlantic Canadian fishermen in the amount of at least $200 million?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): I do not intend to comment on the remarks of the Premier of Nova Scotia.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Go ahead.

Mr. Siddon: He also has not had very much time to reflect upon the elements of this agreement.

Mr. Broadbent: Keep going, that's good.

Mr. Siddon: If the Opposition would quit floundering around and listen for a moment—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tobin: You are an expert on floundering.

Mr. Siddon: —I would like to reflect on the comments yesterday of a former Liberal candidate and staffer in Prime Minister Trudeau's office who said:

"The fact that they (the French) put their names on a piece of paper is a great step forward," said Brian Flemming, Halifax lawyer and admiralty law expert.

IMPACT OF AGREEMENT ON CANADIAN FISHERMEN

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): My supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries. Is it true that, in making this agreement with France, the Minister has sold out the Canadian position by creating a floor which will mean that Atlantic Canadian fishermen will never get a fair agreement from the international arbitration?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, that too is a rather senseless question.

Mr. Flemming, the former Liberal candidate and Trudeau staffer, Halifax lawyer, and admiralty law expert, said that:

—the initial loss to Canada may be necessary in order to arrive at a long-term agreement with the French over waters around St. Pierre-Miquelon, where nine French trawlers will operate under Canadian licences.

That was the statement of a former Liberal candidate and staffer—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands.

CANADA-FRANCE RELATIONSHIP

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): My question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries. Premier Peckford has pointed out that granting rights to France for northern cod has created a very unhealthy precedent which will open the way for countries like Spain and Portugal also to apply to have fishing rights in that area.

Considering this and all the other negative aspects of that agreement, the people of Atlantic Canada wish to know why the Minister and the Government are putting the interests of the relationship with France ahead of the interests of the relationship with the Premiers of Atlantic Canada, the people of Atlantic Canada, and the fishing industry of Atlantic Canada?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Again, that is not the case. If we cannot agree to terms of reference to refer the question of the St. Pierre and Miquelon boundary issue to compulsory third party arbitration, and if both Governments cannot agree to fishing allocations during the period when that process is under way, and I might add that if the fishermen and the Governments of Atlantic Canada cannot accept those conditions, there will be no agreement. We will not sell out the interests of Atlantic fishermen for an agreement at any cost.

Mr. Tobin: You have already sold out.

QUOTA OBSERVANCE BY FRENCH TRAWLERS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): I wish to ask the Minister why the Government concluded an agreement with France without ensuring that France would at least respect the quotas that had been established by Canada for its trawlers? Did we receive that type of assurance? If not, why not? If those quotas will not be respected, will this agreement be cancelled by the end of this year?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): The Hon. Member's question indicates his misunderstanding of the situation. What we consider to be illegal overfishing France considers to be its right to fish in an area it claims as its sovereign territory. Thanks to the previous Government, that arrangement was approved.

The Hon. Member opposite and his colleagues seem to say that they would rather fight than negotiate, or they would prefer to see France continue to abuse that resource and take fish and income out of the mouths of Atlantic fishermen. We do not agree. We want to solve this problem once and for all for the benefit of Atlantic fishermen.

An Hon. Member: Stand up for Canada.

NATIONAL PAROLE BOARD

PAROLE GRANTED DRUG TRAFFICKER

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. It concerns the serious allegations that improper political interference was used to obtain parole for convicted drug trafficker, Conrad Bouchard. Will the Minister immediately order a full and complete inquiry to determine whether there was political interference in this matter, and to ensure that the integrity of the National Parole Board has been maintained?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): I can advise the Hon. Member that I first became aware of these allegations on Monday. I immediately contacted the RCMP and the Chairman of the National Parole Board and asked them to look into these allegations. That is presently under way. As a matter of fact, it was under way on Monday.

[Translation]

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, it is very important that the Government should launch an immediate inquiry concerning those very serious allegations.

REQUEST FOR SUSPENSION OF BOARD MEMBER

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): My supplementary question to the Solicitor General is this. Pending the conclusion of this full and complete inquiry, will the Solicitor General suspend National Parole Board member, Louis Laporte, in view of the allegation of Mr. Laporte's involvement in this matter? Can the Solicitor General assure the House today that no Member of Parliament improperly interfered in this particular case?

• (1440)

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, we have a system of justice in this country that a man or people are presumed to be innocent. Immediately upon learning of these allegations on Monday I asked both the National Parole Board and the RCMP to investigate. I think it is only proper and fair that I hear from them in a preliminary way before I take any action.

BANKS AND BANKING

TREATMENT OF LUMBER COMPANIES

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. Is the Minister aware that the federal Government's agreement with the United States on softwood lumber exports has placed the financial arrangements of lumber companies with their banks in jeopardy? The situation is directly caused by leading banking institutions using the abundance of misinformation on Canada's settlement to their benefit. Could the Minister tell the House whether he is prepared to get in touch with the banking institutions and inform them that the agreement between Canada and the United States on the lumber industry is a good one?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: Did you vote yes or no on the Bill?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I want to commend my hon. friend for—

An Hon. Member: Yes or no.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I trust that under the circumstances the Hon. Minister will not be tempted to answer with just yes or no.

Mr. Hockin: No, Mr. Speaker. I first want to commend my hon. friend for being alert to possible problems with regard to credit facilities for this industry. I want to make clear, first of all, that we expect banks to show the same level of reasonableness and fairness to all their customers. If we have specific instances of the kinds of scare tactics which he is mentioning, and if we could have documentation of them, I would like him to bring them forward, because certainly if there has been any instance of breach or violation of law, we will act accordingly.

OPPORTUNITY FOR REFERRAL TO STANDING COMMITTEE ON JUSTICE AND SOLICITOR GENERAL

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. We have a Tory parole commissioner recommended by the Hon. Member for Joliette. We have a Tory lawyer who immediately hires an inmate liberated by that commissioner, after pressure has been put by the same lawyer. My question is this: Is the Minister ready to co-operate fully, not with the RCMP but with the Standing Committee on Justice and the Solicitor General, to investigate on possible corruption and political pressure in connection with paroling in Quebec? Will he co-operate with the Standing Committee?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as I have previously advised the House and the other Hon. Member, these are allegations at this point. I do not know what truth, if any, there is to them. I immediately asked the RCMP and the National Parole Board to look into these matters. That was scarcely 48 hours ago. I think simple justice demands that no action be taken until at least I have some preliminary reports on what action should or should not be taken.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, once again the Government and the Minister do not seem to understand that the role of the RCMP is not to look into this kind of allegation. It is to look into criminal wrongdoing, not political pressure.

REQUEST THAT COMMITTEE MEETING BE CONVENED

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Chairperson of the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General. I would like to ask him whether he is prepared to convene immediately a meeting of the standing committee. Is he prepared to ensure that these very serious allegations of possible political pressure in the National Parole Board in Quebec will be fully investigated by that committee soon?

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge—Foothills): Mr. Speaker, my friend opposite knows that for some seven years he and I have sat together on the Justice Committee, and that the Justice Committee, through its steering committee, will take up any topic any Member of Parliament raises before it. We will give it a full and fair hearing and decide what course of action we will follow at that time.

FORESTRY

FUNDING OF SILVICULTURE RESEARCH IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey—White Rock—North Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Science and Technology. The new softwood lumber agreement between Canada and the United States has provided new funds for the provinces to develop the forestry industry which have not been available to them before. These funds would be very useful to the scientific community to develop silviculture in a scientific way to rejuvenate, particularly, B.C. forests. Would the Minister undertake to discuss with officials in British Columbia ways of establishing, for example, a heritage fund?

Since the scientific community cannot use all the funds quickly and still use them properly in order to rejuvenate B.C. forests would he discuss with B.C. officials the possibility of establishing a heritage fund so that we can have the long-term benefits of these new funds?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend and colleague advances a very interesting proposition. It is certainly worthy of consideration, particularly in a province like British Columbia. As my friend knows, the funds will accrue to the province. I will undertake to discuss this proposition with Premier Vander Zalm and, far-seeing and visionary as he is, I am sure he will embrace the idea.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

THE ADMINISTRATION

OERLIKON CONTRACT—POSSIBLE ROLE OF MR. SAM WAKIM

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Sam Wakim, the close personal friend of the Prime Minister from college days, is back in the news. After delivering the $20 million a year legal business of the Export Development Corporation to his firm in Toronto, and over the Christmas break arranging for two of the partners to become judges of the High Court of Ontario, one of whom was his former campaign manager, he appears to have—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Just a moment.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jelinek: Innuendoes left, right, and centre.

Mr. Speaker: I know the Hon. Member for York Centre has a question. I hope that question will not involve the propriety or otherwise of members of the Bench. I would ask the Hon. Member to be most careful.

Mr. Kaplan: My simple question to the Deputy Prime Minister is to confirm that Sam Wakim, as was mentioned in Shirley Walker's diary revealed before the Parker Commission, arranged a meeting on behalf of Oerlikon to lobby DRIE—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must say to the Hon. Member for York Centre that the Chair is having difficulty here. I know it is appropriate sometimes to lay out some facts upon which a question should be based. However, with respect, the Hon. Member has gone on for a little too long in the preamble, and I would ask him to put his question.

Mr. Kaplan: Can the Deputy Prime Minister confirm, or will he investigate and confirm, that Sam Wakim lobbied on behalf of Oerlikon-Litton for the low level air defence contract with the Department of Supply and Services, or with DRIE, or with the Prime Minister or the Prime Minister's Office?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, here we go again dropping names by the Hon. Member and attempting to smear the character of individuals and engage in innuendo, such as the Hon. Member for Sudbury suggested that no one in the House should do. The Hon. Member makes quite a habit of it. There is a police investigation. If there is any wrongdoing associated with anyone and if he has any evidence that there is wrongdoing, he should tell the RCMP.

CONDUCT OF BUSINESS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, let me simply ask aren't the Canadian people entitled to conclude from the spectacles we have seen and the revelations we have had that to do business with this Government you have to operate through close personal friends of the Prime Minister?

An Hon. Member: Order.

An Hon. Member: Right on.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, that kind of question does not deserve the dignity of an answer. I am surprised that a long-standing Member—

An Hon. Member: A Privy Councillor.

Mr. Mazankowski: —a Privy Councillor and a former Minister—

Mr. Beatty: A former Solicitor General.

Mr. Mazankowski: —a former Solicitor General, would engage in that kind of innuendo and smear.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt.

Mr. Rodriguez: Thank you, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Mazankowski: Smear.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I have got the letters to show you, too.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Do you want to table them, Ray?

An Hon. Member: Ray, go back to sleep.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members and Hon. Ministers will refrain from exchanging suggestions about what each other can do with the time which is available, unless those suggestions are at least sought through the Chair. The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt.

CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and deals with the interim agreement that has been signed between the Minister and the Government of France. The Minister would have us believe from all his answers today that this agreement is a fine one. If it is such a fine one, why did the Minister not consult with the Premier of Newfoundland before he signed it?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I did not characterize the agreement as a fine one.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Siddon: In an issue as difficult as this, sometimes a measured step has to be taken toward a solution. In this case the Government of Newfoundland and the industry were fully involved up until the final occurrence, the final trip to Paris last week. French officials, after reconsidering previous meetings, decided that there was a possibility of concluding an agreement within the terms of reference and conditions which had been agreed to and were well known to the various Governments prior to that date.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, obviously the French Government thinks it was a fine agreement. The people of Newfoundland are sick and tired of this Minister acting like a French poodle instead of a Labrador retriever.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair is not here to keep Hon. Members from being hard on Ministers, but I think one might leave the dogs out of it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I hope this place is not going to the dogs.

ROLE OF NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister. Since in fact the Government of Newfoundland was part of the negotiations up until the last week before the agreement was signed, will the Minister not tell the House why he dropped that input from the people of Newfoundland? Are we returning to the days of the kind of federal-provincial relations which existed under Pierre Trudeau?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I am tempted. I do not know whether I should characterize the Hon. Member as a red snapper or as a fear monger. The fact is that the arrangements under which this agreement was concluded, an agreement which gives nothing away at this point, were fully known to the Province of Newfoundland. My office has been in daily informal contact, and while we can certainly appreciate the basis for Mr. Peckford's reaction we believe that when Newfoundland fishermen have to face a choice between ultimately resolving the boundary question or having this unsatisfactory situation continue, they will weigh the factors and decide to see the boundary issue resolved once and for all.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

OERLIKON LOW LEVEL AIR DEFENCE SYSTEM

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Yesterday in the House of Commons the Minister said that Oerlikon's ADATS missile system was able to shoot down anything that could fly in any weather. In view of the fact that documents I have right here in my hand say that such is not the case, will the Minister rise in the House of Commons to admit that his answer of yesterday was incorrect? Will he instead replace the words he used by saying that this system will shoot down anything that can fly in any weather providing it is not snowy, rainy, cloudy, or hazy outside?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has been a busy boy for the last 24 hours going through these documents. I have the same document as the Hon. Member has. If he will look at the page, he will see that there are two elements to the Low Level Air Defence system, one of which is the ADATS missile and the other of which is the Skyguard gun. The Skyguard gun works in all weather. The system is all-weather operational. It is capable of shooting down anything that can fly in any weather, including the Hon. Member.

EXPRESSIONS OF DISAGREEMENT

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. He will know that the range of the gun is about four kilometres. The Minister's answers yesterday indicated that he wishes to treat concerns about the capability of our Low Level Air Defence system very lightly. It will be no joking matter if this system fails our troops in the field when it is needed most, regardless of weather.

Again, how does the Minister explain Ministers disagreeing with each other, officials disagreeing with each other, and Ministers disagreeing with officials? Who is right? The only reason this is a controversy is because we are hearing all kinds of different answers.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raises the question of whether or not there is any disagreement as to whether it is an all-weather operational system. It is an all-weather operational system. It meets every element of the standards set in the request for proposals, as was fully explained to the Hon. Member in the briefing he received from DND.

The Hon. Member will be aware of the fact that tomorrow the Department of National Defence is offering for all members of the Defence Committee of the House of Commons yet another briefing. I understand the Hon. Member will be present representing his Party, and officials of the Department of National Defence will be delighted to take the Hon. Member step by step through every element of this to demonstrate to him that it is all-weather capable.

MARKETING OF AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS—IMPACT OF FREE TRADE NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. A senior American official, Daniel Amstutz, stated yesterday that the United States wanted basic changes in the operation of our farm marketing agencies. Can the Minister assure the House that no aspect of the operation of those agencies will be involved in the free trade negotiations?

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's question as it provides me with the opportunity to respond. I wish to begin my response by saying that the story to which the Hon. Member referred is a complete misrepresentation of the facts. We recognize, and it has been stated in the House by myself and by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, that of course marketing systems are part of the Canadian fabric. They have been designed and put together in close consultation with all sectors of the industry. They have worked well for producers, processors, and Canadian consumers.

REQUEST THAT MARKETING BOARDS BE PROTECTED

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, given that the SAGIT subcommittee on Marketing Boards has said that these boards should not be touched and that the marketing boards themselves are legal under GATT, will the Minister resist this latest attack on important Canadian institutions by directly communicating with the United States, indicating to the Americans that these will not be put on the bargaining table and that the functioning of these boards will be protected?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member referred to the SAGIT committee. He also referred to the position and recommendations conveyed to the chief trade negotiator on behalf of the SAGIT group. I agree wholeheartedly with the recommendations of the membership of the SAGIT group.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to advise the House that this will be the last question for Question Period. The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis.

IMMIGRATION

INFLUX OF REFUGEES TO QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT AID

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, the Quebec Minister for Immigration and Cultural Communities in Quebec, Mrs. Robic, on a number of occasions has asked the Minister responsible for special help to assist the Quebec Government which is facing an influx of refugees who have taxed to the limit the financial and human resources of that department. After having said that Ottawa was definitely not ready to make any commitment in that respect, is the Minister now in a position to say yes to Quebec?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have said upon receiving successive requests from the Quebec Minister that there were no specific funds in the federal treasury to cover such situations. Quite the opposite! We ourselves have to support extra costs as a Government. I simply said that if there was any leeway in our programs, I would be willing to evaluate them. At any rate, I will be meeting with the Quebec Minister in Montreal by the end of January, I think.

MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question. You will understand that since I have assumed new duties, I must try to find out to whom I should ask questions dealing with immigration.

Yesterday, the Journal de Montréal under the signature of Mrs. Monelle Saindon, reported that the Minister of State for Immigration had announced at the Centre social d'aide aux immigrants in Montreal that he would ask the federal Government to provide some assistance to non-profitable organizations and to the Quebec Government. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know who is the minister responsible for Immigration, either the minister to whom I am addressing my question or the Minister of State for Immigration, and are both ministers working together to have precisely the same view on the same issues and on the same commitments?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Immigration said yesterday, and I am repeating exactly his comments, that he would urge the federal Government to assist charitable organizations dealing with refugees in Quebec. The question asked by my colleague earlier was about some assistance to be provided to the Quebec Governement. I think that the Hon. Member has nothing to fear. My colleague and I are constantly in contact with each other and I think that you now have before you the Minister for Immigration.

ESTABLISHMENT OF INTERNATIONAL BANKING CENTRES—MONTREAL AND VANCOUVER

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in my Budget of last February I indicated that the Government was prepared to facilitate the establishment of international banking centres in Montreal and Vancouver.

At the time, I made it clear that this measure would reflect our desire to promote Canada's trade and economic interests in Europe and the Pacific Rim. I also indicated I would initiate talks with the banking community and the provinces with a view to pursuing this important objective.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform Hon. Members and the House that I intend to present a detailed Ways and Means motion for the purpose of facilitating the establishment of such international banking centres in Montreal and Vancouver.

[English]

In recent weeks and months there has been considerable comment arising out of our proposal, in both financial and political circles. Sadly, much of that commentary has had more to do with pure fiction than with cold, hard facts. So let me set the record straight.

The Government is proceeding with the necessary measures to allow the establishment of international banking centres in Montreal and Vancouver because we feel this very focused incentive will return to Canada some banking activities now being conducted abroad. These activities, which involve loans to and deposits by non-residents, now receive favourable tax treatment for certain transactions in such places as the Channel Islands and Panama. Our actions are aimed at attracting to Montreal business which now normally goes to the Channel Islands. Likewise, business which now originates in the Pacific Rim could move to Vancouver. In other words, we want to attract business that normally would not be conducted in Canada.

Toronto is Canada's largest and most important financial centre. Our actions will not take anything away from that city. We have been careful in developing our proposal not to include banking operations now conducted in Canada which are not tax motivated and which would shift employment from one region to another. Only those banking activities which meet the dual test of attracting business currently done offshore while not displacing business which now exists in Canada are being considered.

It is our intention to further the national interest by strengthening the international competitiveness of our financial institutions, while providing for a reasonably strong presence of our international financial expertise in Montreal and Vancouver.

[English]

In fact, our action will complement the major initiatives which we have taken to enhance the competitiveness of our financial services industries to help the Canadian banking centres compete equally with the Americans, the British, the Japanese, the Swiss and others. We are lifting the shackles on the financial industry with our new regulatory proposals which my colleague, the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin), announced before Christmas.

If there is one region or city which will benefit from this Government's action it is the Province of Ontario and particularly Toronto. Our proposals have sent a strong signal to the world that we believe in Toronto and have confidence in Toronto as one of the world's major financial centres. The vast majority of international business in our financial system is being done in Toronto and this business will continue to be carried out there. Our purpose, therefore, with this new initiative, is to bring new incremental business to Canada, not to move existing business from region to region or leave it offshore.

We will be monitoring the operation of this measure to ensure its effectiveness with respect to these objectives.

By establishing international banking centres in two of this country's major cities, we are sending a message to those who might go to other countries to take advantage of special tax provisions that they now have a second option and that option is Canada.

[English]

We have had extensive discussions with the financial communities, in particular the banking industry in Montreal, Vancouver and Toronto. This Government has been sensitive to the concerns raised by those interested parties. We have listened and now it is time to act. Unlike some of our critics who rely on emotional appeals to a narrow regional point of view without examining the facts, we as a national Government are addressing this initiative for the good of the country as a whole.

Therefore, pursuant to Standing Order 84(1), I wish to lay upon the table in both official languages copies of a Ways and Means motion to amend the Income Tax Act and, pursuant to Standing Order 84(2), ask that an Order of the Day be designated for the consideration of said motion. I am also releasing copies of technical notes to facilitiate the understanding of the proposed legislation.

In closing I look forward to participating in a reasoned consideration of this issue based on a full appreciation of our intentions and the facts.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, once again the Government has managed badly what could have been a good issue. It has created division, set city against city, and apparently needlessly if we accept the Minister's statement of intent today at face value, as of course we do.

• (1510)

The Minister told us today that he is interested in attracting new, incremental business, that he is interested in creating opportunities for Vancouver and Montreal, and that this will not hurt Toronto.

The Minister also talked about "cold hard facts". However, we heard no facts whatsoever in his statement. The Minister made a statement of good intentions. Since he is an honourable man, we will wait to see his good intentions acted upon. But look at what has happened up to now. Expectations have been raised in Vancouver and Montreal. The proposed international banking centre in Vancouver was included in a Regional Economic Development agreement. After having raised expectations, the only activities which will be covered are those concerning loans to and deposits by non-residents. The actual measure is much weaker than the one which the cities had come to depend upon.

Second, the Minister said that the aim is to attract to Montreal and Vancouver certain kinds of business which would not normally be conducted in Canada. However, the Ways and Means motion and the explanatory notes offer us nothing which would limit this tax break. The Minister complains that commentators have "dealt more with pure fiction than cold hard facts". However, the confusion was created by the Minister himself; he refused to allow his department officials to appear at committee before Christmas where they could have given us the facts, if they exist. The only facts which have been made available to the Standing Committee on Finance are two studies which indicate that the revenue foregone by establishing an international banking centre would not be compensated for by the advantages. Presumably, the Minister has other studies. Why has he declined to make them public? We hope that his officials, who are due to appear before the committee at 3.30, will give us this information today.

We presently have no cost-benefit analysis. It is a strange situation for a Minister, who has announced that he is committed to reducing tax expenditures, to tell us that he is going to give tax breaks to foreign banks without telling us what they are in return for. We do not know what the benefits, if any, will be. We still have no economic analysis. We have heard nothing about what kind of retaliation we can expect from other countries due to this very unusual situation which utilizes the national tax and fiscal policy to assist regions.

It is clear that the proposal before us has not been well thought out. If this measure helps Montreal and Vancouver, does not hurt Toronto, and brings new business to Canada which would not otherwise come, we will all be very happy. However, the proof remains to be seen. We still do not know what jobs will be created. We were told last night that Vancouver is very hopeful that new jobs will be created. Other studies have shown that this is highly unlikely.

I trust that the Minister will soon back his statements of good intentions with a very solid cost-benefit analysis which will allow us to reach a realistic conclusion on the value of this measure.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, as an Ontario Member of Parliament, born in British Columbia, who is co-president of our Party's Quebec caucus committee, I believe that I can speak objectively on this proposal.

I am pleased that the Government has brought its intentions forward in a more precise way than it did in the Budget statement of last year which led the Vancouver Board of Trade, which appeared before the committee last night, to believe that it had a commitment, only to learn that that was not the case in the minds of many Members of Parliament. The circumstances under which this statement has been put forward are perhaps a bit bizarre.

The Finance Committee began to study this issue in December. We have made some progress. The Minister accused the Finance Committee of dealing in fiction rather than fact. It is the lack of fact received from the Department of Finance which has heated up this issue and led to unnecessary friction among regions on an issue which is proving to be quite difficult.

As the Minister knows, half of his caucus applauded his statement and the other half left the House of Commons as he delivered his statement. I need not say from where those Members come.

The Minister has made a statement, and it will certainly be helpful to the Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs and the study it is now working on, especially since witnesses for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) are to appear before the Committee this afternoon. I think we will need specific information on the impact in terms of jobs and tax expenditures, to find out whether or not—as it says in a report by Governor Rasminsky and his assistant, Mr. Lawson, who made a study of this question in 1984—there will be a significant loss in terms of foregone tax revenue.

Are we going to see a significant loss of tax revenue or are we not? For the time being, we don't know, and in all the testimony received from the Montreal Chamber of Commerce, the Toronto Chamber of Commerce, and other witnesses, including those from Vancouver, we sense a general mood of uncertainty, and this is partially due to a lack of information from the Minister of Finance and his departmental officials.

[English]

New Democrats have concern, in general and in principle, about new tax concessions being made available, particularly in a year for which the Government has announced major tax reforms. We are particularly concerned because the estimates of tax losses range from an estimate of $1 million per year by the Montreal Chamber of Commerce to estimates from Toronto of very major tax losses.

We will be observing the job impact. The Minister says that he hopes there is a chance to bring back banking activities which are now in tax havens, in le paradis fiscal, as they say in French, such as the Cayman Islands, Hong Kong, and Macao. Will this activity be brought back to Canada, or will we simply transfer activity which is now in Toronto?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I should like to express my belief that all political Parties represented in Canada's Parliament endorse the principle whereby regional expansion incentives can be offered to urge investors to consider regions other than southern Ontario, for instance. And all Parties in office—which means the Liberal Party, the Conservative Party, and our own Party since we have been elected in western Canada—have used various means to promote investments in the manufacturing industry.

Now perhaps this is the first time we have to ask ourselves whether we should actively urge a service industry—international banking—to locate in one or more specific regions of this country.

I can say that in principle, especially these days when the service sector accounts for 70 per cent of our economy, we in the New Democratic Party are not against Government attempts to promote investments in the service industry. But it does not mean that we do not want to scrutinize specific proposals made by the Government.

[English]

In other words, if the regional development incentives are accepted, as they are by all Parties for location of industry, I do not believe we necessarily need to oppose the use of similar techniques for the location of service industries. However, we will have to look closely at the details, and particularly demand that the Department of Finance give us serious cost benefit studies on the tax impact and the employment impact of these particular measures.

PETITIONS

REQUEST THAT RENT INCREASES OVER FOUR PER CENT BE ROLLED BACK

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, this petition is certified correct as to form and content. It is signed by some 282 residents of the Main Square apartment buildings in my constituency. They state that the federal Government and Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation have stated that rent increases in these apartments have been 10 per cent, 10.25 per cent, 10.6 per cent, and 11 per cent for 1986 and 1987 alone. The petitioners call upon Parliament to ensure that rental increases in the Main Square apartment buildings be rolled back to comply with the Ontario provincial guidelines which limit increases to 4 per cent per annum.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and privilege to present a number of petitions today. The first is from residents of the riding of Thunder Bay—Atikokan and, I believe, Thunder Bay—Nipigon, regarding the federal Government's proposal to change the Patent Act for drugs, which these individuals oppose.

I have a petition from an organization called the Concerned Citizens Organization also objecting to the federal Government's proposals which they believe will result in higher cost in provincial Government drug plans.

I have a petition from the Westford and east end and areas of my riding, which is a very old, established working class area, in which the residents suggest that the changes to the Patent Act are another example of the Canadian Government concessions to the United States at the expense of average Canadians.

From the residents of Atikokan, a small community at the western end of my riding, a considerable number of residents have petitioned the House and called upon Parliament to reject those proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

Finally, I have three sets of petitions from all over the riding, including workers at Can-Car Rail who join with other citizens of my riding in opposing the plans by the Government regarding generic drugs.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I want to submit one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten, eleven, twelve, thirteen, fourteen petitions bearing 1000 names from Windsor, Ontario. It is part of thousands of names fixed to petitions in opposition to the Patent Act which reflects a surrender to American interests and an abbrogation of responsibilities to the Canadian people with respect to medical care and drug prices.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 29

CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT—FISHING RIGHTS

Mr. Speaker: Let me advise the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) that I have received his letter in sufficient time. The application is completely in order.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 29 I request the adjournment of the House for the consideration of a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, specifically, the announcement yesterday by the federal Government of an interim agreement with the Government of France concerning additional fishing rights for the French fleet off the coast of Newfoundland.

This unilateral decision by the federal Government has enraged the people of Newfoundland to the extent that calls are coming in from all over the province, many of which are calling for Newfoundland to reconsider its position in Confederation. The Premier of Newfoundland has expressed his outrage at this unilateral action and last night he was joined by the Premier of Nova Scotia who said, "This is the straw that breaks the camel's back", claiming his province will be seriously affected by this agreement, with a net cost to the Atlantic provinces of some $200 million.

Given the fact that such an interim agreement will not be brought before the House of Commons, and given the need to persuade the Government to reconsider this agreement before it is finalized, I believe an emergency debate is required now.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for Oshawa for bringing this matter to the attention of the Chair. The Chair is of the opinion that it is a serious matter of national significance and, under the circumstances, the Chair is prepared to agree that there ought to be an emergency debate under Standing Order 29 on the subject raised by the Hon. Member for Oshawa.

Does the Hon. Member have leave to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 29 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair takes it that there is unanimous agreement in the chamber?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is my obligation to advise all Hon. Members that the emergency debate will commence at eight o'clock this evening.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Tuesday, January 27, consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-18, an Act respecting national transportation, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. Benjamin (p.2756).

Mr. Speaker: Before recognizing the Hon. Member for Bonaventure—Iles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Gray), I wish to inform the House that because of the ministerial statement today, this day's sitting will be extended beyond 6 p.m. by 17 minutes.

Mr. Darryl L. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, yesterday afternoon when I commented on Bill C-18 respecting changes to Canada's transport regulations, I emphasized the fact that the situation in 1987 is not the same as it was 20 years ago, that things have changed. The situation has changed at home, Mr. Speaker, in the United States, in Europe, in Asia—deep changes have been made in market structures and those changes already have an impact here in Canada.

I asked many questions yesterday afternoon, and I will ask another one: In your view, Mr. Speaker, who has been and will remain the best analyst, the best judge, the one person who is best placed to adjust rapidly and efficiently to market changes? I sincerely believe that the best judge, the best analyst is the producer himself, the entrepreneur who must set his prices on the basis of his various costs with respect to manufacturing, delivery, the cost of materials, labour, and taxation. The question therefore is this: are we going to live at all costs within a regulatory framework that is rigid, constraining, outlandish, inadjusted, outmoded and regressive? My submission is: No, Mr. Speaker.

Three vital elements are of concern to me in this matter—the true public interest, absolute security, and the assurance that Canadian businesses from now on will have every opportunity to take their rightful place on the labour market, in the regional transportation market, in national and international transportation.

[English]

It has often been said, in terms of Bill C-18, that safety is a very serious and honest question in the minds of the public. It has been stated by the former Minister of Transport and our present Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) that safety will not be compromised. We have worked in the past, and will continue to work in the future so that safety will not be an issue. Canadians should today and in the future enjoy the peace of mind which comes from knowing that Canadian transportation is one of the safest in the world. We are continually striving to improve our safety programs. Suggestions that the National Transportation Act will jeopardize safety are completely without foundation.

The Government's commitment to safety is also evident in a variety of initiatives with respect to each mode of transportation. For example, in 1985 the Aeronautics Act was amended and strengthened in many respects. The Canada Shipping Act amendments which will improve marine safety will be brought back before the House. A uniform National Safety Code for trucking was approved by federal and provincial Governments in October and a new Railway Safety Act is being developed. Other safety initiatives in the transportation of dangerous goods, in highway programs and in accident investigation are being introduced.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we, as Canadians, are generally an informed, mature, competent nation that is quite capable of deciding by itself what service is best capable of satisfying our needs based on the quality/price ratio, especially in the area of goods and passengers transportation. I find it outdated that in a free country that is highly civilized, technologically well advanced, we should live with a transportation policy that does not serve the interests of passengers, suppliers of goods and services, producers and consumers. Consistent of course with the most basic standards of safety and good social conduct, we must guarantee the free circulation of goods and people, without constraints, hindrance or intervention other than that of the free market, the free choice.

To provide all Canadians, wherever they live, and their communities with an extra opportunity to control their economic and regional development, the new transportation policy will have to stress competition between the various systems of transportation and between competitors within each system. This is what our reform is proposing. Yet, Mr. Speaker, people can still be found who continue to deny this fact, who would like the status quo to be maintained, and who strongly wish things would remain as they are now. Let us ask ourselves whether it is normal for consumers, contractors and passengers, in a country such as ours which relies very heavily on transportation networks, not always to be able to choose the carrier which they feel would provide the best service at the lowest cost.

In the various regions, the spin-offs from our transport reforms on economic development are many, and, in many cases, immediate. Our purpose in freeing the transportation network users from a whole series of constraints is to encourage the most enterprising Canadians to go ahead with the creation of new jobs and the production of consumer goods at competitive prices.

In Canada, the prices of ordinary consumer goods, among others, are closely linked with transportation costs. To limit, through regulation that do not reflect the new realities, the availability of various means of transportation and the free negotiation of rates could only be detrimental to the economic and social development of our country. The user must once and for all be freed from hindrances and obstacles through universal mobility. You know just how much I am dedicated to the promotion of the handicapped. These citizens should be able to avail themselves of the same services as all our other fellow citizens. Like them, from now on, they must be freed from these very hindrances and obstacles.

Mr. Speaker, it is high time the Federal Government made these major and long-awaited changes to the transportation network regulations. These changes are basic and can only be made here, in Parliament, through an amendment to the Act which is 20 years overdue.

The package of proposals found in Freedom to move is the result of a whole series of consultation with those who are directly or indirectly involved in the transportation world in Canada, as well as the Federal and Provincial Governments. These consultations were carried out in all parts of Canada by the Transport Committee.

The results of these meetings clearly show that Canadians want some major changes and a comprehensive reform in our transport system. Our will to change the transport system must be considered in its general context, that is within a comprehensive economic policy under which the "Made in Canada" principle constitutes a priority and is always present.

Let us look more closely at the contents of this Bill. First, I would like to speak about air transport. The situation of air transport in Canada is such that simply to maintain present economic regulations would be a disservice to air carriers, shippers and travellers. We began to make some changes in our domestic air transport policy in 1984 by reducing and simplifying the regulations.

But we could not stop there, Mr. Speaker. A large number of important issues had yet to be settled. We are now proposing to pare down economic regulations to take into account North American realities and specific objectives. These objectives are to improve and, if need be, increase services to the public, and to provide carriers with reasonable opportunities for competition on the Canadian market.

Another one of our objectives is to eliminate eventually needless costs and paperwork for the industry and consumers.

For an air carrier, the test to enter the Canadian transport market will be whether he can prove that he is ready, willing and able to provide a certain service while meeting the related safety and insurance requirements. For all practical purposes, passenger and freight tariff regulations are eliminated. However, in the case of services in a monopoly situation, the new federal control agency will be able to hear the complaints of users from a given region and make a ruling. Otherwise, users will be able to choose the company which provides the best prices and service.

In the regions north of the 55th parallel, our Bill aims at providing more competition for the benefit of residents of these regions while garanteeing essential services in those limited and remote markets. Our Bill also aims at preventing monopolistic prices. Northern communities and all carriers will be able to express their views on the issuing of operating lines to new contractors. Prices and rate increases will still be regulated. The abandonment of any service in the North will require 60 days notice. In other words, Mr. Speaker, everything in our reform has been done to respect the interests of citizens, even and especially if they live in a remote area.

The new legislation provides financial assistance for certain domestic services judged to be essential. To provide these services, we shall proceed by calls to tender whenever possible, as it seems to be the most effective and profitable method.

I would now like to speak about rail transport. I should point out that I have a personal interest in this sector as my father worked for the CN for 33 years. Once more, our Bill contains major reforms that will benefit both carriers and users. The new legislation will for the first time allow shippers to negotiate privately with Canadian railway companies. This means that both shippers and railway carriers will be able to negotiate better rates and better services. This is good news for railway clients but it is also very important for our Canadian railways which will then be able to compete with U.S. carriers for transborder traffic.

For instance, Mr. Speaker, ports on Canada's East coast are a major source of container traffic. The transport sector in the area, however, has a deadly competitor in a network of deregulated carriers that are conveniently located. The container shipping market in Eastern Canada will not survive unless it can truly compete with the American market. And it will survive only if it enjoys the same advantages and is subject to the same regulations on its own terrain. Setting common rates will no longer be allowed, although present protection afforded the Prairie grain shipping network will continue.

There is more good news for shippers. Shippers who have access to only one railway will be entitled to a better deal, Mr. Speaker. Interswitching limits and terminal running rights will be extended. Options are also provided for obtaining competitive line rates for the transport of goods carried by two companies. This is a key element and a crucial one in our railway freight network. All shippers, captive or not, will have access to better mechanisms to settle disputes with the railway companies. The new legislation provides for recourse to the federal regulatory agency which may then proceed by mediation or arbitration.

To deal with the issue of abandonment of branch lines that are losing money, the Government proposes to take a comprehensive approach. Instead of continuing the sterile debate on this matter, we intend to propose some significant new options with a view to improving transport services in areas served by branch lines and, when possible, allow them to be retained.

Under the present system, there is no provision for allowing a third party to acquire railway property and infrastructures and setting up a profitable railway company. As a result, there is no incentive for the other parties to maintain service, at a time when railway transportation over short distances is becoming increasingly attractive, especially in the United States where this new approach has in some cases proved to be very satisfactory.

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to address that part of the proposed legislation which deals with extra-provincial trucking. Over the years, this sector has become an important link between shippers and their markets. Federal and provincial transport ministers are working together to develop a plan for regulatory reform of the trucking industry, the purpose being mainly to standardize provincial regulations across Canada.

Legislative and regulatory reform will provide an incentive for competition, leading to a set of new options for rates and services that will be as close as possible to the real needs of the shippers.

By freeing the trucking industry from its regulatory harness and by allowing healthy competition, this reform will have a direct impact on the price of consumer goods, since overall transport costs will tend to drop instead of increase. There are immediate advantages for the Canadian consumer, for the producer and for jobs.

The new situation resulting from the proposed reform will put small- and medium-sized businesses in a better competitive position, since this sector is necessarily an intensive user of trucking services.

The Government is therefore proposing to amend the Motor Vehicle Transport Act to bring it into line with the provisions of the agreement concluded between federal and provincial Transport Ministers in February 1985.

Thoses changes are included in Bill C-18 which will be more thoroughly discussed in this House. However, it should be acknowledged that Bill C-18 will complete the reform undertaken concerning other means of transportation. The transportation industry is constantly under development, Mr. Speaker. The Government's policy cannot be static. It should be periodically updated and readjusted.

The national transportation policy and the reforms advocated in the new legislation will have to be adjusted. Our bill has anticipated those realities.

Recognizing the need for review and periodic analyses, the legislation introduced in Parliament by the Minister of Transport provides for a comprehensive analysis of the effects of the legislation four years after its implementation.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, let me say that I am proud of the legislation we have introduced. It is one of the major pieces of legislation which this Parliament will be discussing. Seldom do we have to consider reforms whose potential impact and implications that are so large and beneficial to all Canadians.

This Bill, Mr. Speaker, is part of an overall economic policy that is innovative in many respects. I am convinced, and I see that my time is coming at an end, Mr. Speaker, that all Hon. Members will realize the importance of the Bill and that we can discuss it with the utmost equanimity to the greatest benefit of the Canadian people who want to go on unhindered as we all want.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions, comments. The Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud).

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member who just spoke on Bill C-18 represents a remote area, Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine, a riding which is in fact part of the Gaspé area, right in the middle of the Gulf.

Mr. Girard: It is a very beautiful area.

Mr. Robichaud: Yes, I know that area, it is one of the beautiful parts of Canada, just as Westmorland—Kent is. They are somewhat similar.

Mr. Girard: It is right next to us, next to Restigouche.

Mr. Robichaud: I would like to have the opinion of that Member, and I will simply read to him a message from the Maritime Premiers, and I quote:

• (1550)

Following a meeting in Fredericton last week, the Premiers of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and P.E.I. denounced the proposed National Transportation Act, saying it would further widen the economic gap between central and eastern Canada.

The Premiers want Transport Minister John Crosbie, who tabled the proposed legislation in early November, to add a clause ensuring that regional development will take precedence over a profitable transportation service, when the two conflict.

I would therefore ask the Hon. Member for his opinion on that proposed clause to be added to the Bill, which would give regional development priority over profit.

Mr. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend has said, the Gaspé area that I represent is quite distant from here. As I said in my remarks, I sincerely believe that changing existing regulations will increase our opportunities for economic development.

But I should like to indicate to my friend the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud) that I am very much concerned about the regional economic development in both our ridings. Experience has shown that in spite of the fact that they followed these regulations for years, the Gaspé area, the Maritime Provinces, the Magdalene Islands, Newfoundland and the areas north of the 50th parallel, are faced now, in 1987, with the same situation. I would not want to play politics with this, Mr. Speaker, but I cannot help mentioning that the previous Government had had 25 years to change these regulations and look into this problem.

Over the past two years, unemployment rate in my area has come down nearly 10 percentage points. The economy has much improved, thanks to low interest rates and increased employment opportunities. The regional development through Bill C-18 will mean increased competition, which is good not only for carriers, but for users and consumers as well. It is our duty here in the House to improve the situation, and that is what we are going to do.

[English]

Mr. Belsher: I wish to commend the Hon. Member for Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Gray) on his speech on this important subject in Bill C-18, an Act respecting national transportation.

The Hon. Member will recall when he was part of the Standing Committee that was holding hearings for the Freedom To Move exercise that we went though a little over a year ago, that in the Atlantic area we were asked to pay special attention or acknowledge that transportation did play a part in economic development. The Hon. Member talked about this in his question. Does this Bill acknowledge that transportation does have a part to play in economic development?

Mr. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Yes. I had the honour and the advantage of travelling with the Standing Committee. We met many groups concerning regional economic development. In looking at the Bill as proposed in the House, the major premise is to create an efficient transportation system, not a monopoly, but a transportation system that will give opportunity to isolated areas, such as the one I represent, the Maritimes, and the North, and give those areas an efficient transportation system in order that they can compete on a regional, national, and international market. When this is included in this regional development, as I mentioned before, it has not worked. We are attempting to reduce the regulations that we presently have on hand. Any individual who is willing, fit, and able to serve his region, regionally, nationally, or internationally will be able to compete. Regardless of our politics, we all know in the House that a sound economy is the most important factor for the regions and isolated areas.

In this Bill, by reducing the paper work and regulations, and always guaranteeing safety, and as we allow more people to compete and our economy builds up, we can look forward to more regional economic development.

Mr. Angus: The Hon. Member for Bonaventure—îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Gray) is a Vice-Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport, and was a very active participant in the consideration of Freedom To Move, as well as other transport matters. I wish to ask the Hon. Member this. One of the things we heard during our hearings when we travelled in those three centres in southern Canada, then the trip through the western Arctic, was the concern about safety, tied in with the concern about viability of the companies. The former Minister of Transport categorically said that safety would be the number one priority and consideration. I wish to ask the Hon. Member what will be faced by the passenger on the last flight of an airline that is going bankrupt? What type of corners has the owner of that company had to cut in order to keep the plane flying for that length of time? Will he be guaranteed a safe environment, or is there a risk because of the cut-throat nature of the competition, that whether he wishes to or not, the owner will be forced to cut corners?

Mr. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): I appreciate the Hon. Member's question. We have talked at length concerning safety. I believe that in this Bill safety will not be compromised. There is no guarantee when buying a can of beans that if the company is on the verge of bankruptcy there perhaps may be more bacteria in that can of beans.

An agency will be set up to monitor the safety, and all operations of these airline companies. The employees of that agency will continue these check-ups and verifications for all companies. I would assume that, whoever will be hired to work with these safety regulations, if their job is not being done properly, they will be replaced by a more competent person. Personally, I do not feel or believe that safety for any airline, railway, boat, or truck that will travel in this country will be compromised because of this Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: A short question from the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid).

Mr. Reid: In the moment left, may I ask the Hon. Member for Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Gray) what the distinction is between the policy of this Government in its process of deregulation from that of the United States, so that it can be said to be truly a made-in-Canada piece of legislation?

Mr. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): This is a made-in-Canada Bill in the sense that this is economic regulatory reform. I should make this point, Mr. Speaker. We talk about deregulation, and perhaps at times Hon. Members would like to create fear that everything will become wide open. This is economic regulatory reform, not complete and utter deregulation. It is made in Canada in the sense that our economic situation today in 1987 is much better than what the economic situation was in the United States. The United States fully deregulated its transportation industry. This is not the case in this Bill. We look at our provisions for northern and remote areas. In the Alaskan situation, the Americans threw it wide open. We have not done that. We have kept regulations. We are guaranteeing essential services. We are leaving openings for contract to tenders for airline operations. This is truly made in Canada for Canadians to help Canadians from east to west.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate today in the debate on Bill C-18. At the outset I should like to thank the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud) for agreeing to switching positions with me this afternoon.

I came to the House as a new Member in 1984 and I was fortunate enough to be assigned by my Party to the Standing Committee on Transport. It was an interesting experience to take, through a standing committee, a philosophical base, the Freedom to Move paper, to see the reaction from part of the country, to see the legislation which has been drafted, and now to hear the debate. It is not often that within two short years a new Member is able to experience that total process, and I feel pleased to have been part of it.

In preparation for today, I looked at my notes and scanned some of the interventions before the Standing Committee on Transport. As well as understanding more and more of what was happening in the House and in the country—

Mr. McInnes: Just remember Robert Burns.

Mr. Angus: Yes, just remember Robert Burns.

It is clear that the changes to the National Transportation Act are consistent with the philosophy of the Conservative Government. They are consistent with the tack it has taken in a number of areas. Unfortunately that direction leads to the selling off or dismantling of the Canadian economy as we know it today. It is a grand design which will lead to Canadians having less say over what happens and having less benefit from our own work and investment.

Let me briefly list those areas which are part of that grand design, as I see it. There is the whole question of free trade, of having things on the table, under the table, or beside the table. Things are out there for discussion between our neighbours to the south and ourselves. There are items to be negotiated such as the Auto Pact and now marketing boards. We all remember softwood lumber, shakes and shingles, hogs and sugar. There is also the Bill dealing with patent drug legislation, designed to give American multinational companies the freedom to make as much money as they can, with no protection for Canadian consumers. Natural gas is another example; we are under pressure from the United States, and we are deregulating it. Now there are threats by the American Government and its steel industry concerning steel imports to the United States. What will be next? Will it be hydro exports from Quebec, Manitoba, and Ontario? Will it be water? Will that be on the table as well?

One thing which brings that grand design into focus is the impact of the National Transportation Act or the impact of the deregulation prescribed in Bill C-18. In our Canadian nation we work together as much as we can. We trade within and share resources from western Canada with eastern Canada and finished good from eastern Canada with western Canada. We have a road ribbon and a rail ribbon across the country from East to West. It will start breaking down and will be fragmented as we see those ribbons going north and south. We have already seen Canadian specialty grains going from Vancouver to Seattle and then being shipped out. We have seen potash from western Canada entering at the Saskatchewan—U.S. border and being railed to Chicago, bypassing thousands of miles of track and hundreds of miles of water in Canada. We are even seeing iron ore from the Labrador-Quebec area being shipped to the eastern seaboard of the United States and being railed back to Lake Erie for the American steel mills there. That rail ribbon which bound the country together and existed to create a link could be seen as no longer necessary because of north-south links. If Bill C-18 goes ahead, it will be the final icing on the cake. It will not only allow but encourage, because of its structure, that kind of north-south situation.

Quite frankly, CN and CP are as guilty as the Government because they are the ones that bought subsidiaries in the United States. They are railing Canadian products on their own lines through there, doing Canadian workers out of jobs. If we go to this north-south arrangement in trucking—and we are a little fish in a very big ocean in terms of North American transportation—we will find that large American trucking companies will gradually take over our smaller ones. The largest trucking firm in Canada is about one-thirtieth in terms of order of magnitude compared with United States firms. They have the economies of scale and the grid systems. All the hubs are in place. They could very easily come in and out compete with us, driving our Canadian companies out of business. Some Canadian workers may obtain jobs with the new American-Canadian firms, but at what cost? Will it be at lower wages and American rules? That is not acceptable. Our sovereignty is too important to allow that to occur.

In the context of rail and road, people who live in larger centres such as Toronto, Montreal, Winnipeg, Windsor, Vancouver, and other major corridors may do okay because they are major hubs. However, what about the medium sized and very small communities in between? In terms of trucking we have a regulatory system which provides stability. It is stability under monopoly; there is no question about it. There are those people who argue "give us free enterprise, allow the market-place to work, and drag prices down". But what about Terrace Bay, Sioux Lookout, or Atikokan which only have small numbers of consumers? Once the companies have fought it out and there is a winner, we are back to a monopoly situation. However it is a monopoly with a difference; it is a monopoly with no regulations to protect consumers. There is nothing to prevent such a company from jacking up its rates to a point where a town must close.

These are not my comments. During testimony before the Standing Committee on Transport, the Ontario Trucking Association and the National Trucking Association agreed that small communities would suffer, that their service levels would decline, and that costs to consumers would increase.

We are a country of small communities spread across the land. We must recognize that whatever laws are put in place they must be in balance. We must protect the weak at the same time as we provide rules which make sense for the strong. The same applies to rail. We will find situations where rail lines increase the rates to small communities rather than the cross-subsidization which now occurs.

Let me now turn to the air industry, an interesting aspect of transportation in the context of deregulation in that we are already half way into it. Thanks to the previous administration, the air industry no longer has the same restrictions it used to have. The ease of entry and exit has been greatly increased.

There are now a couple of interesting situations. We have turned the clock back to the day when we began to see the need for deregulation in the air industry. At that time, there were two major airlines in Canada. What do we have today? We have two major airlines. The big ones have been gobbling up the little ones and a medium-sized one actually gobbled up a big one. Now we have the Crown corporation, Air Canada, on one end and Pacific Western and CP on the other. I give the few smaller airlines that are left a year to survive before they too are either into some kind of management deal or company-to-company arrangement, or in fact are purchased or taken over by one of the other two.

The difference now is that these takeovers will occur without the rules that have protected consumers and the rules that required cross-subsidization. Lots of money will be made on the Golden Triangle, Toronto-Ottawa-Montreal, and perhaps even the run to Vancouver, but the profits will not be used to subsidize the runs to Thunder Bay, Sault Ste Marie, London, Halifax and any number of medium and small centres. We will be getting chaos.

Let me give the House an example of this. Last week, my office made a booking for a flight out of Thunder Bay for this morning. The person who was supposed to fly to Thunder Bay got to the airport this morning and was told that that flight does not fly any longer. When we checked, we found that that flight had never existed. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, is that increased service for the consumers of Canada? Of course it is not. It is total chaos. That chaos will continue until such time as we decide to reestablish a set of rules.

Fit, willing and able really sounds great, but what it replaces was even better. It replaces public necessity and convenience. Flights were to be necessary for the good of communities and for the good of airlines and they were also to be convenient. In this Government's blind devotion to free enterprise, it is again looking at the United States model. The Government clearly accepted the rhetoric without looking at the facts of the situation there.

During hearings on the Freedom to Move White Paper, we did not hear much about the American situation, primarily because the committee refused to go to the United States to learn of it firsthand. A couple of representations were made to us. One that interested me was, ironically, a presentation made in Halifax by officials from Newfoundland. I say it was ironic because they were telling me, a Member from Thunder Bay—Atikokan, that my neighbour to the South, Minnesota, had experienced a very negative reaction to deregulation in the air industry. We were told that over time, rates went up and service went down. In fact, one community went from having a jet service serving about 60 to 70 people a day to having a little putt-putt serving eight or nine passengers 10 times a day. There is no comparison whatsoever in the quality of service, comfort, noise level and ancillary facilities. Is that the kind of deregulation this Government wants? Does it want to turn a vast majority of our communities into areas served only by small commuter services? I certainly hope not.

One of the great myths of deregulation in the air industry is that there will be all these cheap seats. There were cheap seats for a while but the cheap seats were on the major runs, not the small runs. These cheap seats have gone. The industry itself dropped permanent cheap seats in favour of sporadic cheap seats. With only two competitors and markets that are becoming increasingly monopolized by one of the carriers, the cheap seats will disappear because the consumers will be captive. If they want to fly, they will have to fly with X company or Y company because only X company flies here and Y company flies there. They will spend more time going from terminal to terminal rather than being able to travel in a continuum.It is clearly a myth that there will be cheap seats.

In the United States, rates have gone up approximately 50 per cent, well over the rate of inflation, over the past seven years. Service has gone down and communities are suffering. In Canada, the City of Sault Ste Marie no longer has Air Canada service, nor does the City of London. What is next? What other communities will see a withdrawal of a major carrier? What other communities will go from jet service to prop service, from service four or five times a day to perhaps once a day or even three times a week? No, it does not make sense.

The Hon. Member who spoke previously talked glowingly of the inclusion in the Bill of provisions for the North. There is a very good reason for that. Unlike southern Canada where there is a very clear difference of opinion between transporters and shippers about what should be done, there is almost unanimity in northern Canada. We saw the joyous situation of Chamber of Commerce after Chamber of Commerce telling Conservative members of the committee that they were out to lunch and did not know anything about the North. They told them that they needed regulation in the North because that is the only way to protect the industry.

What would happen if there were to be total deregulation? Rather than having an air industry and all its infrastructure based in the North, southern airlines would come North, skim off the cream in the summer months and desert the North for the winter months.

I give members of the Transport Committee credit. It took a while but they saw the light. They saw that the same rules could not apply in northern Canada. I argue that the same rules cannot apply in Atlantic Canada or the near-North as apply in the Golden Horseshoe of Toronto. We must throw out blind ideology. We must deal with the real Canada, the Canada that stretches from sea to sea and to the Arctic Circle. We are not dealing with the United States of America with its population of 250 million. We are dealing with a very small population spread over a very large land mass.

In conclusion, it is important to Canada that we chart our own future. It is important that we continue our independence and decide what is right for Canada and Canadians, not what is right in the context of our neighbour to the South.

Mr. Gagnon: Mr. Speaker, members of the NDP have stated a number of times that the smaller cities will be discriminated against and that seat sales applying to Toronto, Vancouver and Calgary will not apply to smaller cities like Moncton, Thunder Bay and Windsor. Could the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) explain the latest series of seat sales to places including Sydney and Yarmouth? Fares from Fredericton to Gander are being reduced from $412 to $165; from Saint John's to St. John's, $396 to $158; Frobisher Bay to Hall Beach from $472 to $189; Churchill, Manitoba, to Gillam, from $176 to $88. Possibly the Hon. Member could explain why seat sales are going on and why the NDP maintains the smaller centres will be worse off?

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. The major airlines, in testimony before the Standing Committee on Transport, indicated that the day of cheap seats would soon disappear. I want to make it clear that in my comments I did not name any communities. I recognize there are seat sales in a number of communities in Canada right now, but when those communities are served by only one carrier I doubt very much whether there will be any seat sales.

One of the interesting things about this proposal is that instead of cross-subsidization, where the lucrative routes would help pay for the less lucrative routes, this Bill proposes that the Government subsidize those routes. We have the very interesting situation of the Government proposing more bail-outs at a time when cross-subsidization is working well.

Mr. Brightwell: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member talked about monopoly of the market-place and compares that to the monopoly of regulation. In the free market a new service would spring up as soon as prices went too high. Under regulation someone cannot enter into a market and take a competitive stance. I am amazed that the Hon. Member drew that comparison. He talked about service as if a regulated industry would guarantee service and there would be no foul-ups at the station when he arrived. I am amazed at that also.

How can the Hon. Member say that regulations would guarantee service when 23 of the isolated communities he talked about have lost their service between 1960 and 1984? Secondly, how can he ask his constituents to pay full rates when 80 per cent of his neighbours to the south travel on discounted fares on U.S. airlines?

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I will respond to the latter question first and work my way back up. Quite frankly, my constituents believe in stability, not chaos. They see that there is chaos in the U.S. airline industry. While there may be some seat sales around, the over-all cost of air fares in the U.S. has gone up by about 55 per cent since deregulation, well above the inflation rate.

The Hon. Member made an interesting comment about monopoly of regulation versus the competitive market. That gets back to the question of stability. In northern Ontario an entrepreneur works extremely hard over a number of years to develop new services into communities which did not have air service before. What the Hon. Member is saying, and what this Bill will allow, is that after he has done all that work, developed a clientele, established his base of operations, someone else is going to come in at the last minute and skim off his profits. What happens then? The fellow who established the service and has been reasonably decent about prices and is not gouging the people will be unable to compete. He has an infrastructure in those communities and is not based in a large metropolitan area. His investment is at risk. He will pull out. Then the new guy comes in and how long does he stay? That is the kind of chaos that is possible. In fact, we have seen it and that is why we are fighting this Bill.

Mr. Girard: Mr. Speaker, I wrote my question down so I could get a simple answer instead of having somebody skating around. Has the NDP examined the principle of the new Act where economic regional development is an objective? Could the Hon. Member also explain how the new provision in the Act for non-predatory incentive rates acts against regions of the country? It is a plain and simple question and I want a plain and simple answer instead of a skater.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, even though I live beside the largest skating rink in the world I have never learned how to skate. Let me deal with the objective of the Act. It contains nice-sounding words and they are there because of pressure from the Atlantic premiers.

Mr. Girard: He is skating.

Mr. Angus: However, there is nothing in the Bill to implement them. I challenge the Hon. Member to show me the clauses in the Bill which implement that nice motherhood statement. They are not there.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the NDP says the legislation will provide access and advantage for U.S. railway and trucking companies in Canada which are not available to Canadian railway and trucking companies in the U.S. Would the Hon. Member like to comment on that?

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, during our hearings and in consultation since then with the Canadian Trucking Association, among others, indicated that because of U.S. laws they are unable to operate freely in the U.S. in the same manner in which this Bill proposes to allow all trucking companies to operate in Canada, particularly the Americans. If, as we believe will happen, the American companies begin to not only come into this market and establish some hubs in the Toronto area, for example, and then go from there, given their size—we all know that the larger you are, the better able you are to compete—they will will be able to out compete us. They have economies of scale and a national transportation network in the U.S. What Canadian trucking company will be able to go down and establish a trucking centre in Chicago or farther south? They just will not be able to do so. I do not have the specific numbers, but we have seen a lot of small trucking companies in the American industry go bankrupt because of deregulation. The situation now is that fewer and fewer companies are hauling goods on the highways in the U.S. That is one of the dangers and the Hon. Member should realize that.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I find it almost ludicrous that the NDP does not have any faith in the ability of Canadian business to compete with the U.S. in any field, including trucking.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, if the rules were equal and the companies were the same size, then I would bet my money on a Canadian company. However, they are not and, quite frankly, we will be squeezed out in trucking the way we have been squeezed out in a hell of a lot of other things by the U.S.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Kilgour).

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in fairness to my friends opposite, it is the turn of the Liberal Party if they have a speaker ready to go.

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for giving me this opportunity to deal with Bill C-18, concerning the National Transportation Act, 1986.

This Bill applies to transport by railways, transport by air, transport by water, transport by a commodity pipeline, and transport for hire by an extra-provincial truck or bus undertaking.

It is therefore a Bill which will affect the industry responsible for moving goods, merchandise and of course people from one end of this country to the other, both in the West-East and north-south directions.

Mr. Speaker, that is where this Bill raises its first problem: It will affect differently the various regions of Canada. Its implications on remote areas will certainly be greater and more direct than in the central part of this country and, in many cases, will be negative.

Needless to say, Mr. Speaker, it was felt that the National Transportation Act needed to be looked into and amended for the purpose, of course, of improving and updating it.

The previous Government had recognized that changes were necessary and had proposed a gradual deregulation of the transport industry. Since the enactment of the previous Act in 1967, our economy has of course undergone several changes, which affected the transport industry.

The task of the previous administration, the Government of the day, was to make the legislation more flexible in order to allow the transport industry to better serve the country and the needs of consumers as well as its own. The changes were to occur gradually to allow for a gradual adjustment of the industry. The idea was not to spin the transport industry into a frenzy by introducing major and sudden changes. And that is exactly what this bill will bring about. The entire industry will be turned upside down and will not be given time to adjust.

Of course, the bill has already drawn criticism from the trucking industry, the rail industry, as well as from the air transport industry. And all this is happening because the Government has now decided that it is time for a change. Of course, we agree that changes are necessary, but should we turn everything upside down? Why such haste? Where did the pressure come from? In all sincerity, Mr. Speaker, this is a question we must ask.

I take this opportunity to refer to some comments made by industry representatives. I shall begin with the trucking industry.

• (1630)

[English]

"Domestic truckers will be run off the road by American-based truckers if proposed transport deregulation is adopted by the federal and provincial Governments" industry officials say.

I hear some noises from my colleagues to the right. May I remind them I am merely quoting what was said by people in the trucking industry. I think it would be wise to listen to these people, and I shall continue:

[English]

"It's like letting Attila the Hun and Genghis Khan loose", said Ken MacLaren, Executive Director of the Canadian Trucking Association.

Those were comments by some people in the trucking industry. And now, on the subject of aviation safety, according to the Canadian Aviation Safety Board there have been more accidents involving aircraft since deregulation. I shall continue:

[English]

"Deregulation will hurt us", CPR says.

Being in a terrible hurry to propose these changes, to table the Bill and have it adopted in record time, the Government has failed to give all parties a chance to express their views. Some provinces were not even consulted. The parliamentary committee responsible for considering the Bill did not hold hearings in all provinces, although every province, without exception, will be affected by this Bill. Although hearings were held in four cities, the Government did not do justice to the witnesses and interest groups that came to suggest amendments to the Bill, originally Bill C-126, as you know, Mr. Speaker. And this despite the fact that the Government had promised a new era of consultation, when every action undertaken by this Government would be discussed with the people concerned, people in the industry and people from the various provinces.

Mr. Speaker, we must also consider the impact of this Bill on the transport industry, on services, on employment and also of course on safety, and my list is by no way exhaustive.

Government Members would have us believe that deregulation will bring in more carriers, especially in the air transportation industry. We are told there will be more competition and better rates. However, we can see today that is not the case. We have already seen a trend towards consolidation, and I am thinking of the purchase of CP Air by Pacific Western.

Large companies have purchased shares in small local carriers in order to take over that part of the market, which means that Canadian airlines are eliminating small carriers from this local market. They control that market.

As far as trucking is concerned, Quebec truckers are afraid of an increased penetration by American truckers of the Quebec market.

[English]

Mr. John Kennedy, of Kingsway Transport Limited, says: "A shakeout is developing. There is no question deregulation will have a devastating impact on the financial condition of the Canadian motor carrier industry and ultimately result in a wave of mergers, bankruptcies".

As far as rail transportation is concerned, the major national railways, CP Rail and CN Rail, are against the legislation as proposed.

Let me deal briefly with safety, and I will stick to air transportation. Mr. Speaker, let me quote from the statement made by the Auditor General, Mr. Kenneth Dye :

None of the Transport Canada regions has been able to inspect all the carriers operating within its jurisdiction at least once a year.

We know about the problems already. Then imagine what will happen when we get into the race for privatization. The legislation provides no strict directions as to safety, and for this reason we cannot support any deregulation bill until strict safety measures are in place.

And, already, in anticipation of that deregulation bill, some companies have started making staff changes. I am referring here to New Brunswick where Air Canada has decided to reduce the number of its mechanics at the Moncton, St. John and Fredericton airports. Why is it actually being done? Is it in anticipation of privatization that this staff is being reduced?

In the case of Moncton, St. John and Fredericton, when there is a mechanical failure affecting an aircraft's airworthiness, they will have to call a mechanic from Halifax. They will have to call someone from Halifax and ask him to get to Moncton, St. John, or Fredericton. This requires at least 2 hours in the case of Moncton, and much more for the two other airports, to examine that aircraft before it can resume its flight. Of course, they assure us that passenger safety will in no time be threatened. But for people in New Brunswick this means a service reduction. They will have to wait for that service. This leads me to the question of jobs. In the case I mentioned, three jobs will be lost in New Brunswick. The figure is not that significant. But let me deal briefly with the CN. Because we all know the CN has received from someone higher up the order to prepare for privatization. In its haste to rationalize operations in preparation for privatization, the CN is reducing staff throughout the system, but especially in Moncton. One thousand jobs will be lost. You may ask what the connection is with this Bill. I said earlier that the proposed legislation would have an impact on employment, and this is one example of how certain regions will be affected. I would like to mention one particular weakness in this Bill, and I am not the only one to do so, and that is the absence of a clause ensuring that regional development will take precedence over profits. Mr. Speaker, we believe it is absolutely essential that the new National Transportation Act contain a reserve clause reflecting the essential role played by transport in regional development.

I would also like to take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to bring the following to your attention.

[English]

"Following a meeting in Fredericton, the Premiers of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island denounced the proposed National Transportation Act, saying it would further the economic gap between central Canada and eastern Canada.

The Premiers want Transport Minister, John Crosbie, who tabled the proposed legislation in early November, to add a clause ensuring that regional development will take precedence over a profitable transportation service when the two conflict".

And I would also like to bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, a letter I received from the Chairman of the Premiers Council, which says basically what I said just now, and I quote:

Since the new Act does not guarantee that in case of a conflict, regional economic development objectives will take precedence over requirements that transport services should be a profitable concern, we cannot give it our support.

"We" means the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island.

We believe it should contain a clause that would subordinate the concern for commercial viability to regional economic development objectives. The federal Government's reluctance so far to include such a clause is particularly worrisome when we consider the negative impact Bill C-18 will have on transport services in the Maritime provinces.

We have written to the Hon. John Crosbie about this question and would like discuss the matter with him very soon. We hope that you support our position. Yours very truly.

Even after pressure from the provincial Premiers, the Minister's reaction was certainly not favourable.

I now want to refer to a meeting of the Transport Committee where the Minister himself said that he did not really share the views of the Premiers of the three Maritime provinces who wanted to include in the legislation a provision that in every case would allow one situation to take precedence over another. The Minister of Transport has refused to meet this request by the Maritime Premiers who are genuinely concerned about the threat to their region's economy.

We can say that in its present form, the Bill does not allow for any regional considerations, not even with respect to remote areas.

Mr. Speaker, regulation has helped us deal with a number of problems connected with regional economic development. It is unfortunate that the Minister would rather not include a clause to that effect.

If deregulation paves the way for a highly competitive market, we simply must provide some kind of protection against the loss of services.

Mr. Speaker, such shortsightedness brings Bill C-75 to mind—I will conclude shortly—Bill C-75 which had to do with Canada's merchant marine and whose clause 4 had been the target of witnesses who appeared before the committee. Sure enough, Government Members were not prepared to listen to the objections of the witnesses right until Bill C-75 died on the Order Paper at the end of the previous session, even after a speech of nearly seven hours delivered by my colleague from Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin).

Eventually Government Members rose to voice their opposition to clause 4, so the Minister of Transport agreed to re-introduce the Bill, but without clause 4. Naturally we are pleased that the Minister finally came to his senses in the case of Bill C-75. Mr. Speaker, we hope the Minister will see the light, though it may take him some time, but we will give him all the time he needs because we are going to debate this measure for quite a while yet.

[English]

Mr. Lesick: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud) with great interest. I wish to make several comments and then I will ask him a question. There seemed to be a stressing of profitability, profitability, profitability in his speech. Yet one of the best companies we have in Canada is a private company which has been trying to make money for these many years, that is, Wardair. It is a highly successful company located in Edmonton. It has spread its wings throughout much of the world and is now going across Canada. My first flight on Wardair was 22 years ago. It has been a very safe airline with an enviable record.

I suggest there should be less stress on profitability and more stress on what the airline actually does. There has been a suggestion that the Government has been deaf to representations following the release of the Freedom to Move policy and that attempts to shape and improve the policy were ignored. That is far from the truth. This legislation has been developed in a co-operative effort with the private sector, carriers, shippers, users and communities. More than 500 groups and individuals made representations during this consultative program to which we have listened. The standing committee has listened to the people across the country. In addition, the House, through the Standing Committee on Transport, had a very definite impact on the shape of this legislation. Members of the standing committee include all Hon. Members of the House. The committee had two separate sets of hearings, one hearing on the over-all policy and another focusing on the northern and remote areas of the country. The recommendations were taken to heart and were included in the legislation.

Perhaps the most notable provisions resulting from the meetings of the standing committee were those governing the regulations of northern air services.

In the year 1985-86 there were substantial losses reported. The Hon. Member's colleague, the former Minister of Transport, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), told the Standing Committee on Transport on May 10, 1984:

> It is a sad fact that our regulated industry is in decline. The regulated system we set up to protect a fledgling industry is now clearly hindering progress. Airline losses topped $100 million in 1982.

Would the Hon. Member not agree with his colleague that much of the blame for airline losses must be directed at the excessive amount of regulation burdening the industry and stifling its economic efficiency and growth? Would the Hon. Member also comment on the success of Wardair, a private company, which has made money?

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for his question and comments. He asked me to comment on the profits of Wardair. I have nothing against a company making profits and I congratulate this company on the service it provides Canadians.

The Hon. Member also asked whether I do not find deregulation desirable. I did not say in my speech that it is not. We realized a few years ago that we would gradually have to go to some form of deregulation. I agree that it was absolutely necessary to make some adjustments to the National Transportation Act, but I do have some reservations when the Government wants to turn the whole industry upside down without giving it enough time to adjust.

That is all I wanted to say. Deregulation is desirable, but it should be gradual.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member whether he could explain how the new Bill, in its present form, could affect Canadian National's decision to close down or at least to lay off a large number of its employees in Moncton. Perhaps he could also tell us whether the impact on the situation in Moncton could have both negative and positive aspects.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to answer my colleague's question. CN, as a Crown corporation, has more or less been given a mandate or instructions by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) to prepare for privatization, which means that CN must make itself a profitable concern. And since time seems to be of the essence, they have to cut services which means less work for CN repair shops. And that is exactly what is happening in Moncton. In the rush to rationalize all their operations, they are cutting jobs—1,000 of them. If this Government had any concern at all for regional disparity, it would manage to keep the CN shops open. Mr. Speaker, I would like to compare this situation to the one at the Port of Churchill in Manitoba. According to the Ports Canada authorities, the port at Churchill was not viable, and they decided to shut down the facilities. However, the Minister of Transport intervened, saying that the port must continue its operations because it was one the major industries in that part of the country. Wonderful! So if the Minister is so concerned about regional development, he should do the same for the people of New Brunswick.

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to speak on Bill C-18 which I believe will rank as one of the most important measures passed by this Parliament. It provides a new deal to consumers of transportation services right across Canada, including, of course, my region, which is western Canada.

When we took office two years ago, we found a regulatory regime in the transportation sector that had largely lost touch with changes in our national economy. It was one that frequently frustrated rather than facilitated the efforts of producers across Canada to get their goods to market. While careful regulation is required to achieve important objectives, including regional development and safety, we believe, as indicated in our Freedom to Move paper, that more can be accomplished with less but smarter and better regulation.

After extensive consultation with the public, provincial Governments, the transportation industry, shippers and other interested parties, we have concluded that now is the time to act. Canadians need a revised transportation policy and legislative framework today.

The Acts which are before us today—the National Transportation Act and the Motor Vehicle Transport Act—provide that policy. They will provide for greater reliance on market forces, reduced government interference, and a regulatory process that is both open and accessible. They will promote competition which will result in improved prices and services for both travellers and shippers. They will streamline the remaining regulatory procedures and replace the Canadian Transport Commission with a new national transportation agency. In effect, we are freeing the Canadian economy from the shackles of an over-regulated transportation sector. Too much cement does not the efficient movement of people or goods make.

My comments will focus on the impact of the legislation on Canada's rail system, particularly in western Canada. Everyone in the West should benefit from these initiatives—the primary resource producers and individual employees of lumber mills, potash and coal-mines, and so on, who will have more secure jobs because their products will be moved to market more efficiently, and the railways themselves.

Under the present Railway Act, Canada's railways can set rates collectively. Competition has been stifled, particularly in my region where there is now little incentive to offer lower rail rates or different services to meet the varying needs of shippers. The current system works against the needs of both shippers and railways. The shippers do not get the best service at the best price. Some rail traffic is being diverted from Canada to U.S. railways where deregulation in 1980 resulted in a significantly more competitive rail market. Put simply, it is high time we reformed the regulatory regime for rail.

I would now like to say a few words about the Report of the Commission of Inquiry into the Hinton Train Collision. The report tabled on January 22 made a number of safety-oriented recommendations. As Hon. Members know, our Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) asked CN, CP and VIA to undertake a number of measures. These include the immediate establishment of a policy giving priority to use of units equipped with a reset safety control device as lead locomotives, determining an action plan within 60 days on key recommendations such as hours of work and periods of rest, work scheduling and medical supervision, as well as asking the railways to establish a schedule for implementation of the advanced train control system.

Under this Bill for the first time shippers will be allowed to negotiate confidential contracts with Canadian railways. The key words are "negotiate" and "confidential". Under this legislation a shipper and a carrier will be permitted to negotiate a contract with services and conditions that reflect the shipper's specific circumstances, and with rates tailored to the competitive position of the shipper and the railway. That contract will be negotiated privately, and there will be no obligation to disclose all the terms publicly. In that sense, it is like almost all ordinary commercial contracts. To distinguish it from past practice in the railroad sector, it is called a "confidential contract".

These contracts are the ordinary way of doing business elsewhere. They are long overdue in our transportation sector. For the first time carriers will be able to offer individual shippers special rates or services without making these known to other shippers. That is a major boost to competitive bargaining. To avoid possible abuse, all confidential contracts will be filed with the new national transportation agency. Summaries of the non-confidential aspects of the contracts will be made public, as they should be.

At the same time, we are not forgetting shippers who benefit from existing freight rate provisions. Railways will continue to publish tariffs under the National Transportation Act for shippers who wish to use them.

Our legislation also retains the requirement that all rates charged by railways must be compensatory. That is to say, they must cover the costs directly associated with the services provided. However, there is an important qualifier. Non-compensatory rates may be offered. Where anyone lodges a complaint, however, such rates will be disallowed unless the railway, upon investigation by the new agency, can establish that the rates do not lessen competition and were not put in place for an anti-competitive or predatory purpose.

All parties involved stand to win under these new freight tariff rules. Shippers will negotiate for rates and conditions that reflect particular circumstances. Getting the best service at the best price will help myriad shippers to expand markets, increase production and thereby protect and create new jobs.

Canada's railways will be able to compete more effectively with their American counterparts for transborder traffic. Above all, the Canadian public as a whole will benefit from the job creation arising from a more competitive rail transportation system.

This Bill also takes the historic step of significantly altering the transportation environment for captive shippers, who have long been the forgotten players in our national rail system. Indeed, as a former Crown attorney, they remind me of victims who are all but ignored in our criminal justice system. Captive shippers are those without access to a practical, cost-effective alternative to a single railway carrier. There are captive shippers across Canada, in major urban centres as well as in outlying regions. As an Albertan, I am very well aware that many, if not most, of these shippers are in western Canada. It is no wonder that our reforms here are so strongly supported in my region.

Did you know, Mr. Speaker, that more than half of the railways' revenues come from captive shippers? Among the shippers the most often and most seriously affected are western Canada's major resource industries, including potash, sulphur, coal, petrochemical and forest product operations.

Our reforms to the National Transportation Act address this problem in three ways: through increased inter-switching; through terminal running rights; and through competitive line rates.

At present, the inter-switching of cars from one railway to another at a compensatory rate is guaranteed only within a four-mile radius of the point of interchange. The limitation was established in 1908 to provide for competition between railways within city limits, using London, Ontario, as the Hon. Member for London East (Mr. Jepson), who is in the House, will know, as the model. Despite the phenomenal growth of our cities since that time, inter-switching limits have never been changed to reflect the new realities.

With the reformed National Transportation Act, we are extending inter-switching limits to 30 kilometres. This will benefit virtually every shipper located on a rail siding in an urban area served by two railways. We estimate that there are thousands of such shippers across Canada. To maintain fair competition inter-switching rates will be compensatory.

The second provision in the Bill is with respect to the adoption of terminal running rights. Within 50 kilometres of any interchange point a railway will now have the right to run trains over the tracks of another railway in order to pick up or deliver goods. The second railway will be compensated for the use of its tracks. A minimum three-year commitment to operate this service will be required. To ensure equity the new service must be made available to all shippers on the line, not just the larger, more lucrative ones. The Government cannot take full credit for introducing terminal running rights. These rights were originally proposed to the Government by CP Rail. We recognized the value of the idea and we adopted it. The consultative process does bear fruit.

I would like to give Hon. Members a concrete example of how terminal running rights will benefit the West. There is a large petrochemical complex in the Fort Saskatchewan-Scottford area near Edmonton. Most of that petrochemical complex is now captive to CN Rail. Under the new legislation, CP Rail would be permitted to run its trains on CN's tracks to get to and from the petrochemical complex. Thus, in addition to shipping via CN, the complex will have a viable alternative to ship its products by CP Rail. There will be competition where competition did not previously exist. Competition is good for Canada.

For those shippers who cannot benefit from the new inter-switching limits or from terminal running rights, our new National Transportation Act provides for a concept called competitive line rates. That means that captive shippers will have access to another rail carrier at the closest interchange with that carrier. This will bring the benefits of competition to the shipper by enabling him to use the carrier that offers the best combination of service, routes, and rates, whether it is the local carrier or a competing carrier.

However, to avoid domestic traffic moving over United States' railways where the destination of the goods is within Canada, including traffic to a Canadian port for export, and a competitive Canadian alternative route exists, the shipper must use the Canadian alternative in order to be eligible for joint line rates.

Where the shipper and the carrier cannot reach an agreement, the shipper has recourse to the new National Transportation Agency. We do not expect this safeguard to be used often. Nonetheless it will be important as a means of providing shippers with real clout in negotiating rates.

We expect that the new policy will take relatively little business away from the local carrier. In most cases, the local carrier will offer the best deal, especially since switching costs money. But for the first time, the carrier operating locally will have to compete for the shippers' business. Is that bad in an increasingly competitive world economy?

Competitive line rates will be of particular benefit to large resource shippers in the West. Under the new provisions, a major Alberta sulphur producer now captive to CN Rail would have the opportunity of switching to CP Rail at the nearest interchange about 80 kilometres away. Competitive line rates would apply on that 80 kilometre stretch.

Briefly, this is how the matter would work in practice. The sulphur producer would ask CN Rail to quote a price for moving a shipment from his plant to the docks in Vancouver. Knowing approximately what the competitive line rate would be under the legislation for the movement from the plant to the interchange, he would ask CP Rail to quote a price for moving the shipment from the interchange to the docks. If CN was prepared to match or better the CP rate, plus the rate from the plant to the interchange, CN would retain the business, which is right. If CN were not prepared to quote a competitive rate, it could lose the portion of the movement from the interchange to the Vancouver docks. If CN and the sulphur producer could not reach an agreement on the rate from the plant to the interchange, the producer could ask the National Transportation Agency to set a rate based on a costing formula contained in the legislation.

Competitive line rates have been endorsed by such organizations as the Coal Association of Canada, the Council of Forest Industries—

Mr. Benjamin: Naturally.

Mr. Kilgour: —the Canadian Fertilizer Institute, the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association, the Propane Gas Association, the Canadian Chemical Producers Association, the Retail Council of Canada, and many others. Thousands and thousands of jobs are involved in those industries. These companies generate billions of dollars in sales, and thousands of jobs for Canadians.

The extended inter-switching limits, terminal running rates, and competitive line rates will markedly increase the transportation options available to captive shippers. More shippers will have a choice of carriers. They will have an opportunity to negotiate for the services of these carriers. We are confident that shippers and carriers will sit down and reason together in a businesslike manner to establish mutually beneficial arrangements.

I have referred to large resource producers in the examples, but other shippers will benefit from these provisions. The major resource industries are the backbone of the western economy. When those companies are thriving, the region I represent thrives. In addition to employment opportunities within the resource companies, jobs will be created in hundreds of smaller service companies. Western Canada's small business base will be strengthened and expanded. Quite simply, this legislation will help put more people back to work in western Canada.

I have mentioned that shippers will be able to apply to the new agency for resolution of several important matters. I wish to outline several provisions in the new National Transportation Act that will ensure timely and inexpensive settlement of various private and public disputes. At the request of parties involved in private disputes, mediation services will be provided by the National Transportation Agency. If these fail, final offer arbitration will be available. In such cases, an independent arbitrator appointed by the agency will consider both the carrier's and the shipper's final offers, and will choose one of them, unless the parties have first made alternative arrangements. That offer chosen by the arbitrator becomes the "deal" between the shipper and the carrier for up to one year.

Final offer arbitration is important because it will encourage private settlement of shipper-carrier disputes. Where such private settlement proves impossible, the deal imposed by the arbitrator will at least have been developed by one of the parties involved.

The new Act also features a more effective investigation procedure for matters of public interest. Upon receiving a complaint, the National Transportation Agency will be empowered to inquire into any carrier's rates, acts, or omissions which may prejudice the public interest. In particular, the agency will take into account the new transportation policy set out in the legislation in deciding whether the public interest has been harmed.

May I turn now to the difficult and often controversial issue of branch line abandonment. Our current rail legislation gives the Canadian Transport Commission two methods for dealing with an application for branch line abandonment. The CTC can allow the line to be abandoned, or it can order that it be retained with a government subsidy.

I am pleased to say that the legislation before us today will provide the CTC successor, the National Transportation Agency, with more useful choices when handling applications for branch line abandonment. For example, the new agency will be able to facilitate and approve the sale of a branch line to another operator, in effect establishing a short line operation. It may recommend that Ministers provide financial assistance to shippers, or a provincial Government or others to develop more effective and less costly means of transportation to replace the branch line. The NTA may also recommend that the Minister order one railway company to interconnect its branch line with the lines of another company, thereby providing the opportunity for the branch line to be more competitive. It may decide that the line has the potential to be economically viable and should be retained. It may order that the line be retained with a subsidy for three years, at which time the decision will come up for review. It may simply allow the branch line to be abandoned.

Under the new application procedures, the definition of branch line costs and losses will be changed to ensure that these are limited to costs actually incurred in operating the line in an efficient manner.

The legislation establishes time limits during which the agency must respond to applications for branch line abandonment. A railway will be required to give at least 90 days' notice that it intends to apply for the abandonment of a branch line. Shippers and interest groups will have 60 days from receipt of the application to file objections. The NTA will then have 120 days to make its decision.

Where a branch line is clearly uneconomical and will remain so in the future, the agency will order that the line be abandoned. However, in cases where the line serves a large region of Canada and where its abandonment would significantly hamper shippers, the Governor in Council can order that it be retained with compensation to the railways for their losses on the line.

These new provisions ensure a more flexible and balanced approach to branch line abandonment, and allow for the best possible use of taxpayers' dollars in providing adequate transportation services.

May I make it clear that the new provisions will not affect the prairie grain lines within the permanent grain network.

Mr. Benjamin: You want to bet?

Mr. Kilgour: The current protection from abandonment that these lines have until the year 2000 will be continued under this legislation.

The Government is committed to maintaining a healthy, viable railway industry. That viability is not threatened by this new legislation, contrary to what some people have said, and perhaps will say after I sit down. These reforms do not compromise the safety of the Canadian rail system. Safety remains of paramount concern to the Government. Rather, we are convinced that the legislation will do much to strengthen the industry and the economy of Canada.

The reformed National Transportation Act will now give Canada's railways the opportunity to become more efficient and to compete with other transport modes and with American carriers. It will give primary resource producers and other shippers more and better options for moving their products to market, particularly export markets. It will create employment opportunities for thousands of Canadians in a wide range of occupations from one end of the country to the other.

In short, the legislation contains a signal reform to our rail transportation system across the land, one that is long overdue in a modern, confident industrial democracy like our own.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to the remarks of the Hon. Member, and I have three questions for him. I will try to ask one question now and follow it with two quick ones.

My hon. friend talked about confidential rates for shippers. I presume he meant that it did not matter whether they were close to or far from their markets. Does he believe that a small shipper who might move a few hundred carloads per year will be able to obtain the same confidential rate as a big shipper who moves several thousand carloads of sulphur, potash, or coal per year in competition to the same market?

Does he really believe that the railroads will agree to the same confidential rate for small shippers and big shippers, when we take into account railroad economics, economies of scale, and volumes of shippers? Does he believe for one moment that a small manufacturer of agricultural implements in the Prairies which ships a couple of hundred carloads per year will receive the same kind of deal as Massey-Ferguson or IAC which moves thousands of carloads per year? Would he not agree that in such instances the confidential rate is anti-competitive and discriminatory?

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I most emphatically do not agree with the suggestion of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). If I should turn out to be wrong, I hope the Hon. Member will bring to my attention or to the attention of the Government any case where a small shipper was being penalized in the way he just described.

Mr. Benjamin: It is too late then; he is broke.

Mr. Kilgour: We are trying to give shippers a square deal compared with the two railways which basically carry most of the traffic in Canada. The days are over when CN or CP could say to a small, medium or large shipper of potash, to take an industry in my friend's home province, "You will pay what we want you to pay or you can carry the potash out on your back". That era is at an end.

The whole thrust of those parts of the Bill dealing with the railroads is to ensure that small and medium shippers—in fact all shippers—have a chance to obtain prices other than duopoly pricing by the two carriers. That is the whole object of the exercise, as I hope the Hon. Member knows.

When the matter gets into committee for clause by clause consideration and to hear witnesses, no one will listen more carefully than I will to the concern raised by the Hon. Member. If there is a way to prevent it from happening, again no one will be listening more carefully than I will to how we can ensure that a small shipper is not penalized.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On a short supplementary question, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, that is not what small shippers told us in Atlantic Canada and in Winnipeg in those brief hearings we were allowed to have.

I have another question for my hon. friend. He talked about competitive line rates. The Canadian Trucking Association, both railroads, and some shippers told us—and $750 million of Canadian Pacific revenue is at stake—that under the competitive line rate system bulk commodities, such as the ones he mentioned from his province and mine, would move south across the border to the United States, would travel to Seattle or Tacoma or to eastern and central United States, and would come back into Canada. They told us that the business would be lost to Canadian truckers and railroads and that when dealing with products for export they may well use a U.S. port rather than a Canadian one.

In other words, U.S. railroads and truckers will have access and capacities in Canada which will not be allowed Canadian railroads and truckers in the United States. Even individual states will be able to prohibit Canadian trucking companies and Canadian railroads, let alone the United States administration. That is not a level playing field. Competitive line rates will take traffic to United States transportation systems at the expense of Canadian ones.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, my friend has raised a couple of issues. I will deal with both of them.

On the question of U.S. rail taking traffic away from Canadian carriers, if my memory is correct, between 1980 and 1985 three-quarters of a billion feet or more of lumber in British Columbia moved by truck to the cheaper rail system in the United States and bypassed the rail system in British Columbia. That is a lot of lumber.

If the people who operate small and medium sized mills are so concerned about gouging by the railroads in British Columbia that they are prepared to ship their lumber by truck, as the Hon. Member knows, hundreds and thousands of kilometres to the Washington border to get on a cheaper rail system, that says something about the monopoly or duopoly practices of our two railroads or, in the case of British Columbia, of its three railroads.

Mr. Benjamin: Are you kidding?

Mr. Kilgour: No, I am not kidding.

On the question of trucking, my understanding is that shippers from St. John's to Nanaimo are urging us with a single voice to deregulate trucking. I understand the desire of the trucking industry to obtain the benefits of greater flexibility and competition. Truckers are entitled to some time to adjust to a more open system of competition; I completely agree.

The federal and provincial Governments have agreed with the proposition and have decided to provide for a transition period during which a reverse onus public interest test would apply in addition to the fitness test.

I am convinced that greater opportunities will present themselves where a combination of service and price can be worked out to the mutual advantage of both truckers and shippers. It is the kind of flexibility which is needed and is built into the revised Motor Vehicle Transport Act which we will be discussing perhaps tomorrow or the day after. The legislation will allow truckers time to adapt to changing economic conditions in the industry.

However, I might point out that the study conducted on behalf of the Canadian Council of Motor Transport Administrators has provided a very positive outlook. It concluded that the gradual lessening of regulatory control by the provinces over market entry and trucking rates has already brought about important changes in that industry. The Canadian trucking industry is better prepared for regulatory reform than was the U.S. industry before deregulation.

Are you trying to tell me, Mr. Speaker, that I have run out of time?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) on a question or comment.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, given the fact that the Hon. Member made several references in his speech to how this would assist Canadian Pacific among others, could he respond to the concerns expressed by Canadian Pacific that the legislation, as currently tabled, may have exactly the opposite effect to what was supposed to be the case?

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, with respect, obviously the Hon. Member was not listening to my speech or I misdelivered something. I certainly did not mean to suggest that it would benefit CP.

I worked on a steel gang for CP and on a section gang for CN, so I know the railways from the rail up. The object of the exercise is partly to ensure that the two railways stop exploiting, with a capital E, shippers in any part of the country including urban centres.

Since the Hon. Member was obviously not listening to my speech, I guess there is not much point in repeating it now. Presumably she would not listen if I repeated the portions of my speech which dealt with that.

Ms. Copps: He is avoiding my question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The time for questions and comments has expired. Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, obviously the Hon. Member avoided the question. He did not answer the specific question concerning Canadian Pacific and how the legislation will do the exact opposite to what it is supposed to do. I am sure the Hon. Member would be very happy to answer the question at another time, as opposed to skating and obfuscating.

Nonetheless, at this time I would like to look at this legislation in the light of what it will mean to the average Canadian worker. I am sure there are workers from the rail, airline and trucking industries watching this debate with much interest because they would like to know how it will directly affect their jobs.

In the past couple of weeks, I have had a chance to meet with both airline and rail employees. They have asked me to express in the House of Commons their concern over the difficulties that have already been faced by airline employees because of deregulation and over the difficulties which are currently facing workers in the rail industry. I wish to refer to two specific cases.

There is a major Canadian airport in the City of Toronto. Last week, I had the opportunity of meeting with a number of employees who are extremely frustrated by the attitude of their employer which is attempting in its own way to deal with deregulation on the backs of employees. I refer specifically to Air Canada. I have in my hand a petition signed by several hundred Toronto Air Canada employees who are extremely concerned about the company's attempt to deny workers basic human rights not only under Article 12 of the 1985-87 collective agreement between Air Canada and the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers but also basic human rights under the Canada Labour Code which permits employees to enjoy statutory holidays. Air Canada is attempting to blackmail its employees into giving up statutory holidays by designing a shift system which is so unconscionable that more than two-thirds of all employees employed in the machinists' section at the airport in Toronto will never, ever have a weekend off as of the beginning of this year.

There are 294 employees at the ramp and hangar at the Toronto airport. Under the new scheduling process, only 34 per cent of these workers will have Saturdays and Sundays off. Sixty-six per cent of the employees will never have a weekend off. The reason for this is that the company has made it quite clear to the union that even though this particular scheduling system is not the most effective and efficient one, the company wants its employees to give up their rights to statutory holidays in return for getting some weekends off.

The reason I raise this problem in the context of this massive piece of legislation is that with the introduction of deregulation in airlines, we have had a chance to look at what will happen in the transportation industry. Some of us might be cynical and say: "Well, too bad, these employees should never have weekends off". However, even the Canadian travelling public must admit that the morale of employees is extremely important.

When I met with these workers last week, they revealed to me that the situation in Toronto is getting so desperate that there are in fact breaches of safety. Mechanics at the airport are working on airplanes on which they should not be working specifically because management is telling them that even though they may have up-to-date licences to work on 727s, they will work on DC8s. They must do this even though they have not had the upgrading required for those who have not worked on a particular airplane for three years.

I further heard from these same employees their concern about safety checks on individual planes. These are being done on a rushed basis. Normally, an hour and a half is set aside for an individual safety check. These employees told me that in some cases, mechanics are required to certify three, four or five airplanes in the time it would normally have taken before deregulation to examine one airplane. The Government's claim that safety is not being compromised in rubbish.

In examining the American experience, one finds that the first thing that went after deregulation was safety. In 1979, the American Federal Aviation Administration had 2,000 inspectors monitoring 237 air carriers. In 1984, after the United States embarked on its program of airline deregulation, it had 1,300 inspectors for 407 air carriers, an increase of 70 per cent in the number of air carriers travelling the airways and a decrease of 700 inspectors. This massive cut was made at a time when we were being promised that safety would not be compromised.

This legislation should be thrown out on one ground alone. There is absolutely nothing in it to guarantee the safety not only of airline passengers but also the protection of regions from reductions in service routes, rail line abandonments and other eventualities. There is the question of safety of passengers and there is also the question of job security.

The reason the Air Canada situation in Toronto is so disturbing can be understood after reading statements made by Mr. Claude Taylor and Mr. Pierre Jeanniot in the December 15 issue of the Air Canada employee newsletter. These gentlemen say that they hope they can look back with gentle pride on the hope and caring that members of the Air Canada family have given to many people. According to Mr. Taylor, he is proud of the work employees have done with crippled and sick children, men and women needing temporary homes, young people seeking help for drug or alcohol abuse, and agencies that provide food and clothing for the less fortunate. He is speaking of the Air Canada family.

The Air Canada family includes machinists who are now faced with never, ever getting another weekend off without giving in to the company's demands to give up statutory holidays. Why does the Canada Labour Code designate statutory holidays if companies will subsequently tell their employees that they can never have days off unless they give up their rights under the Canada Labour Code? It is a fraud which I have already brought to the attention of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux). I hope to get a positive response from him. However, I think it relates to this particular debate as well because it is a harbinger of what we may expect after the rail and trucking deregulation which will occur if we accept Bill C-18 in its current form.

I would like to take a few moments to examine the situation of rail employees. In the last week, I had a visit from a group of rail employees from the great City of Belleville. One of these employees had a long history of rail involvement. His father was a railroader, his grandfather was a railroader and he was a railroader. I sympathized with him because my grandfather was also a railroader.

This group showed me figures relating to the repair shop in Belleville showing that from January 1 to October 31 of 1986, the number one car equipment repair shop in the Great Lakes region was the shop in Belleville. That shop was number one in October and September. At the same time as this operation has shown CN that it is viable, economic and is doing the best job of about a dozen shops operating in the Great Lakes region, it is being closed down. These employees have been given their notices and have been told that they can either move to Toronto or another area or quit their jobs. In many cases, these employees have several years of service and are well established in the community of Belleville. They do not want to be put in the position of having to move to Toronto, Fort Erie, Niagara Falls, Sarnia, Capreol, Cochrane or Hornepayne simply because they have to save their jobs. They want to stay in Belleville and were led to believe that if they performed as an efficient operation their site would be saved. However, on January 9, 1987, CN laid off 47 workers in Belleville. Those same workers had several meetings with the local Member and were under the impression as late as the latter part of last year that there would not be lay-offs and they would not lose their jobs because they were productive and operational.

Belleville is a microcosm of what we see happening in Moncton. It does not matter if you are able to justify your existence. It does not matter that I have here a document which shows that the Belleville operation was the most effective and efficient shop for the repair of CN cars in the whole of the Great Lakes region. For Canadian National and the Conservative Government the emphasis on quality and productivity has given way to political considerations.

One reason this Bill in its current form is not supportable is that there is absolutely no guarantee for the many regions. Perhaps Belleville is not as big as Toronto. Perhaps it does not have the political clout some other communities might have. We are only talking about 47 employees here, but they have made their home and their life and put down roots in Belleville. Now they have been abandoned.

In this Bill there is absolutely no guarantee for the workers who have been dealt a dirty blow by CN as a result of this closure, nor is there a guarantee which will protect regions like Belleville and eastern Ontario from reductions in service, routes, and rail line abandonment. At the same time there are no guarantees for passengers.

It seems to me that when you are dealing with a country the size of Canada you have to address the sensitive issue of rail line abandonment. Certainly the Conservative Government, when it was in opposition, made much political hay out of the abandonment of certain responsibilities at VIA Rail. We have to be extremely sensitive that any legislation seeking to amend in a major way national transportation routes has something to protect the regions. It is not surprising there is no such condition in this legislation because I think that over the last two and a half years the Conservatives have demonstrated quite clearly that they are not interested in regional enhancement. They are not interested in ensuring that not only the far-reaching and isolated areas of our country are served by rail, road and air, but so are even the smaller community in provinces like Ontario, communities like Belleville. They are not interested in making sure that a well-operated, functional and effective shop remains open. Their policy is centralization and to give it all to the big at the expense of the lesser areas and regions.

Over the last couple of days we have seen the fishery dispute which we will hear about in an emergency debate tonight. Not only are the Conservatives prepared to sacrifice the regions for the larger centres, they are also prepared to sacrifice Canada when it comes to the interests of other countries, whether it be the U.S. or France. Again in this legislation we see they are not prepared to protect Canadian interests on the international scene. I refer specifically to the absence of any provisions to prevent major foreign takeovers of Canadian transportation companies and routes. The U.S. has a 25 per cent limit on foreign ownership of transportation companies. What do we have in this legislation? The Bill has no provision to limit foreign takeovers of Canadian transportation companies. The only guideline is the fact that all mergers and takeovers over $20 million and 10 per cent of the voting shares of any Canadian transportation firm will be reviewed by the Governor in Council. That does not mean they will set it aside or refuse it. All they will do is review. The only other proviso says that all those below those ceilings will be reviewed in the normal procedure by Investment Canada. It seems to me that in a country as large as Canada, as sparsely populated and with communities dependent either on rail, air or road for the links which keep the country together, it is folly to consider passing a Bill which would permit foreign takeovers of all our transportation companies with no guarantee that the control of our system will remain in Canadian hands.

That does not surprise us in the Opposition because this has been the hallmark of the Conservative Government. A little bit of pressure from France, and the Conservatives sell off our cod stock. A little bit of pressure from the U.S., and they sell off our softwood lumber industry. Are we going to be foolish enough to pass this Bill in its present form, a massive piece of legislation, without providing any guarantees that our railways, which have linked this country from coast to coast and provided the basis for our history, our airlines and our trucking routes as well, have absolutely no Canadian majority ownership? Are we going to see CN or CP sold to the U.S. or foreign multinationals in the same way we saw de Havilland sold to Boeing?

By making some positive amendments to this legislation we have a chance to ensure that Canadian ownership of our transportation industry remains intact. I suggest that this is a critical amendment. It would in some measure allay the fears of those who really do not trust the Conservative Government to protect the interests of Canada when it gets the slightest pressure from outside. Our interests seem to take second place to France or the U.S.

It is totally unacceptable that in this Bill we are willing to put our rail, air and trucking routes up for grabs to the highest bidder. Those bidders may not act in the best interests of our regions. They may not act in the best interests of our consumers. They may not act in the best interests of Canada.

Many Canadians settled from coast to coast as a result of the development of our national railway. It seems to me that in one fell swoop in this Bill, unless we include certain amendments to provide protection against massive foreign takeovers, the national dream that Canada is linked from coast to coast could very easily be sold south of the border. That would simply be another note in the saga of Investment Canada. We cannot allow that, and I think most of us in the Opposition agree that the concerns expressed last week by the rail workers in Belleville or the airline workers at Air Canada are legitimate and valid concerns which must be addressed before we move forward with any wholesale change. It could inhibit not only the protection of jobs but could also inhibit the survival of our very nation, given the transportation infrastructure we have depended upon in the past.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I find it very difficult to understand the position of the Liberal Party on this Bill. Would the Member who just spoke be kind enough to tell us what the position of her Party is? Is it or is it not in favour of it in principle?

Ms. Copps: The current Bill stinks. Is that clear enough?

Mr. Kilgour: Does she know that the Combines Investigation Act and Investment Canada remain in force? The existing legislation does not prevent foreign acquisitions. Could the Member tell the House where she is coming from? Is she opposed to everything in the Bill? What, if anything, does she approve of in the Bill? I do not expect her to speak for her Party. Has she read the Bill?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, with regard to where I come from, I would be facetious if I said that I come from my mother's womb, so I will not. I will say, instead, that I come from Hamilton East.

With regard to the Bill, it is clear that we have outlined major concerns and reservations. In its current form the Bill is completely unacceptable because it contains no guarantees against foreign takeover of our transportation systems. The Member claims to be knowledgeable about this Bill and I am surprised that he is not aware that there are only two conditions in this legislation which govern potential takeovers.

The first condition is that all mergers and takeovers over $20 million and over 10 per cent of the voting shares will be reviewed by the Governor in Council. The second is the normal provisions set out by Investment Canada. I am not surprised that the Member originally referred to that agency as the Foreign Investment Review Agency. He is so out of touch that he does not realize that the first thing his Government did two years ago was to denude completely and take the teeth out of the Foreign Investment Review Agency and replace it with Investment Canada, which we prefer to refer to as "divestment Canada" because it offers no protection to Canadian companies but rather opens us up to takeovers by foreign corporations with very little concern for the Canadian sovereignty which we in the Liberal Party would like to protect.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's remarks. I hope I am right that the Liberal Party has changed its mind as it is obvious that Government Members have. A former Liberal Minister of Transport, Otto Lang, started all of this. When the present Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) was the Minister of Transport and proposed deregulation, the present Government House Leader and Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) and I raised hell about it in the Transport Committee. Has the Liberal Party now changed its mind? Will it agree to fight this legislation?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I am obviously aware of the fact that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) introduced deregulation in the airline industry as the Minister reponsible at the time. It has been made clear by my statements, those of the current transport critic, and those of the former associate critic, the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin), that we have various concerns about how deregulation is affecting safety in the airline industry. Those are legitimate concerns which I believe the Member shared with the Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe when they examined this issue in the Transport Committee. I believe that we owe it to the travelling public, as well as to the employees whose necks are on the line, to do everything possible to guarantee safety in the airways. If that is not possible through the type of deregulation which we have proposed, we will have to back off.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) a question with regard to the rights of the handicapped in this new transportation policy. There is nothing in Bill C-18 which deals specifically with the accessibility, comfort, safety or rate structure for the handicapped on all modes of transportation. I regret that the Government has not seen fit to address that serious problem by setting mandatory minimum safety and access standards for the handicapped and incorporating them in Bill C-18.

Ms. Copps: The absolute absence of any recommendation vis-à-vis accessibility by the handicapped is penny-wise and pound-foolish. The introduction of legislation to mandate accessibility for all future transportation development would address the problem at the source and show the political will to follow up on the commitment we made to the handicapped in the employment equity Bill. For the Government to say that it is seeking employment equity while refusing to incorporate into other legislation the concept of accessibility for the handicapped is to impinge upon the ability of the handicapped to compete equally in the market-place. This is one area in which it should be addressed.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, the previous speaker suggested that our safety would be like that of the United States. She may not be aware that we are hiring more safety inspectors as we gradually introduce economic regulations. She may not recall that this Parliament passed amendments to the Aeronautics Act in June, 1985, to increase air safety standards across the board. She may not be aware of that and of other safety initiatives taken in all modes of transportation.

An enormous amount of effort and concern goes into the issue of safety in our three modes of transportation. We have set up a civil aviation tribunal to hear and determine appeals from administrative decisions quickly and fairly. One hundred additional safety personnel are being put in place across Canada to work in the area of the transportation of dangerous goods. We have very high safety standards in this country.

For example, radar is essential to safe air transportation. Radar systems have undergone radical changes during recent years. We must keep up in this area of technology and are doing so. We have committed more than $800 million to an airport radar modernization plan which covers Canada from coast to coast. That will, of course, increase safety. Our major carriers are in the top range of more than 120 international carriers with enviable safety records. Our record has steadily improved over 20 years.

I will have an opportunity to speak on the issue of the disabled in relation to this legislation in future debate in the House. I believe that is a very important issue and look forward to speaking on it at another time.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Member was listening when I said that I met with mechanics from Air Canada last week. They told me that they are currently compromising the inspection service at Air Canada in Toronto because they are being pressured to ensure the inspection of two, three or four vehicles during the amount of time which should normally be devoted to one vehicle. Second, these same individuals informed me that there are mechanics at Air Canada in Toronto now who are working on planes on which they should not be working. Their expertise is normally on a 727, but they are being asked to work on DC-8s and other airplanes without having the normal refresher course that takes place when one has not worked on a particular aircraft for three or four years. These are two serious breaches of safety which have been brought to the attention of the management and which have been raised on numerous occasions by the workers. They are not getting satisfactory answers but these are safety concerns that must be addressed.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I always enjoy listening to my friend, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps). While I enjoyed listening to her answer to the question asked by my colleague, the Member for Regina West (Mr. Banjamin), perhaps I could translate it into more understandable English. She said that the Liberal Party has one position when in government and another position when in opposition.

I wish she had been here before 1984 when the Liberal Government in fact began the process leading to deregulation. Now that the Liberals are in opposition, they oppose deregulation. It is a somewhat inconsistent position.

I agree with her reference to mechanics. I have talked to mechanics in Vancouver who told me that CP was putting advertisements in newspapers in Los Angeles for mechanics to work in Vancouver. Is the new Conservative deregulation policy to hire American workers to work in Canada when there is so much unemployment here?

The Parliamentary Secretary said that we are protected by Investment Canada from foreign takeovers of Canadian transportation companies. Investment Canada is a toothless tiger which encourages takeovers. One only need look at the case of West Kooteny Power, in which an American utility company is taking over West Kootenay Power, a Canadian power company, to the great opposition of the residents in the Kootenays and the Okanagan Valley.

Investment Canada decided on December 24 to simply roll over and play dead and let the American utility company take over that Canadian company for the so-called benefit of Canada. I suggest that the Parliamentary Secretary's argument is unsupportable.

Like many other MPs, last November I received a letter from the Vice-President of Canadian Pacific Railway in which he stated: "If enacted without change, Bill C-18 would preclude the railways from being genuine and effective competitors in the transportation market-place . . . " and went on to say that: "Bill C-18 would place the integrity of Canada's railway system at risk". Perhaps the Government has made some amendments to the Bill since then in order to meet these concerns because it is a serious criticism, certainly of the Hon. Member's speech in which he said this Bill would help the railways. I hope he will respond to that later in the debate.

I want to make the New Democratic Party position clear. The Bill is anti-competitive and will lead to more monopolies. It is anti-safety and will make our transportation system, especially our airlines, less safe. Third, the Bill is anti-service because it will mean less service than already exists, especially when Canadians have come to appreciate a high standard of service in transportation.

Finally, this Bill is ideological. The Conservative Government is attempting to follow the American example without realizing that there have been faults with the deregulation process in the United States, particularly with regard to safety and service. The Conservative Government has also failed to realize that Canada is different from the United States and cannot simply follow American trends.

The Government is enacting this legislation to increase the wealth of their rich friends in the transportation business, not to help ordinary Canadians who will ultimately suffer. Ordinary Canadians will oppose this type of deregulation when they realize its consequences.

We are not against deregulation that is meant to correct overburdening regulations that are administered by many bureaucrats in Ottawa. However, we do not want the pendulum to swing so far that we have a system in which there are a few companies that operate to make a few of them wealthy while diminishing our safety and service.

This Bill would abolish the Canadian Transport Commission and replace it with a much weaker National Transportation Agency that would have no authority over fares, routes, or entry or exit into the industry. It would probably have far fewer employees than the present CTC.

It would replace public necessity and convenience as the test for entry or exit into the industry, and replace it with a fit, willing and able test. It would make it easier for companies to abandon airline and rail routes, and leave remote communities stranded.

It would end regulatory oversight over fares, routes and schedules except in some remote areas. This Bill would allow rail shippers to strike confidential contracts with individual shippers. It would open entry of U.S. rail lines into the Canadian market.

Several articles have been written about the American system. For example, I refer to an issue of Time magazine on January 12, 1987. The article entitled: "Be careful out there" states:

> The Northwest DC-10 was speeding toward takeoff at Minneapolis-St. Paul International Airport when the warning came from the flight engineer: "There's a whale on the runway!" Another Northwest wide-bodied DC-10 had just left a taxiway and poked its nose into the path of the oncoming plane. "I see it", replied the amazingly cool captain of the departing aircraft. He abruptly jerked his jumbo jet into the air. His wing cleared the fuselage of the crossing plane by a mere 50 feet. There were 501 people on the two jets. They had barely avoided what would have been the world's second worst air disaster, akin to the 1977 collision of two Boeing 747s that killed 582 people on a fog-shrouded runway at Tenerife in the Canary Islands.
> What went wrong under clear skies at Minneapolis last March 31? Two air traffic controllers, sitting side by side in the terminal tower, each failed to realize what the other had done. One had cleared the taxiing plane to cross the runway. The other had told the second plane to roll toward takeoff.

The article goes on to discuss airline safety and states that what many aviation experts fear is that:

> —what is still one of the safest air transportation systems in the world is slipping dangerously as air traffic grows relentlessly through the unfettered competition of deregulation. The experts voice three major concerns: There are not enough controllers, and too many of them have a low experience level.

That is what has happened in the United States. Second:

> We have a lessening of the experience level of flight crews.

That will happen in Canada. Third:

> Some of the most economically troubled airlines are deferring maintenance whenever possible, and a few have been heavily fined by the FAA for violating safety standards. The impacts of these varied trends, says Patricia Goldman, vice-chairman of the NTSB, is that there is a "narrowed margin of safety".

The article goes on to state:

> —the era of do-or-die rate-cutting competition has pressured carriers to slash costs and take risks.

That is an example of what is happening in the United States as a result of the deregulation that our Government is proposing to follow. Carriers are slashing costs and taking risks.

Let us examine how this affects air safety. The Government states that there will be more economic activity and increased participation in a deregulated environment, where the winners will stay and the losers will go. However, what do transportation companies in the United States do when they begin losing? The examples of that are in the United States. They begin to cut corners.

Do you remember Arrow Airlines, Mr. Speaker? That is the airline whose plane crashed near Gander last year with the loss of the lives of so many of those young servicemen. It turns out that the air crew was not rested, that the plane was overloaded and that the plane was not de-iced. It cost $1,500 to de-ice a plane, and Arrow Airlines was having financial troubles. I would not like to take a ride on an aircraft owned by an airline which was close to bankruptcy or in financial trouble in this kind of deregulated environment. Look for the report of the Federal Aviation Association, the FAA, in the United States which will report on the crash of Arrow Airlines. Some of those factors will come to light. That is not the Canadian way. We do not believe in operating in airlines in this way. However, it will become that way if the Government proceeds with this kind of deregulation.

I mentioned the matter of competition and the fact that we could have a few airlines working and the rest of the small airlines being forced out of business. That is what is happening in Canada. We in fact have two airlines, Pacific Western Airlines, which just took over Canadian Pacific, and its host of companies, and Air Canada, which takes 90 per cent of the passenger load. So we have a concentration of power.

I will quote from Business Week on November 22, 1986, with respect to its cover story "Is Deregulation Working?" It talks about People Express which started out with lots of good fares and so on, but is now in fact laying off people, selling the airline and so on:

> It wasn't supposed to turn out quite this way. The great wave of deregulation during the late 1970s and early 1980s was predicated on the belief that replacement of the dead hand of regulation with the invisible hand of the free market would spur competition—

However, the article goes on to say that it has not spurred on competition:

> The market share of the top half-dozen or so companies, which dominate these markets, is growing. "No one realized how rapidly the industries would concentrate," says Washington lawyer Mark Leddy, a former Justice Dept. antitrust official.
> "People are reeling from it."

Let us take my home Province of British Columbia. There is really only one airline flying into Prince George and points north because CP Air has been taken over by Pacific Western and Time Air is part of that group. What will happen is we will have less and less competition and that will mean the freeze-out of small cities which will go from jet service to prop service, to a lesser degree of prop service, to perhaps no service at all. That is a real problem for Canada because we do have such vibrant small communities and that is how we exist.

We will have the problem with our railways as well with lack of competition, concentration, and other groups coming in. We will have the problem of the American railways coming in and seizing goods from eastern Canada and transporting them to Seattle. What will happen to the Port of Vancouver if that happens?

This rosy picture of deregulation is not all it is cracked up to be. Since similar legislation was brought into the United States, 150,000 jobs were lost in the railway sector. People said: "Well, that is good. Maybe jobs need to be lost", but where are these jobs going to be picked up? They tend to be high paying, skilled and semi-skilled jobs which will be replaced with low-paying service sector jobs. That is not the way to have a dynamic economy. There is also great pressure on the workers in the United States to accept poor working conditions. Wages, benefits and safety conditions have all suffered as a result of the single-minded determination of companies to keep costs down at any price. Vancouverites in my home town will likely be forced to pay higher fares, suffer reduced services and face questionable safety when they travel to remote regions of British Columbia. This legislation makes it easy for transportation companies to abandon the less profitable remote areas.

I am energy critic for my Party and I want to make a Canadian comparison because it is an interesting comparison on deregulation. On November 1 of last year the Government deregulated natural gas. Previous to that the price of gas was regulated in Alberta. The commodity price and the transportation prices were regulated by, among others, the National Energy Board. We went to a system in natural gas where we let the market do it. What happened? The big guys benefited. We found the big energy users in eastern Canada could get contracts at $2 a thousand cubic feet for gas, whereas the consumers had to pay $3 a thousand cubic feet. It was not the little guy who benefited, it was the big companies. The Americans benefited. They got our gas at $1.75 a thousand cubic feet. That is an example of monopoly for the little guy, competition for the big guy.

I can summarize by saying that I find this Bill to be anti-competitive, anti-safety and anti-service, following the Americans at any cost without learning what the Americans have suffered as a result of their so-called deregulation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 6.17 p.m., I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock, when the House will proceed with debate on an interim agreement with the Government of France concerning additional fishing rights for the French fleet off the coast of Newfoundland.

At 18.18 p.m. the House took recess.

[English]

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

S.O. 29

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 29

CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT—FISHING RIGHTS

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Leave has been granted to the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) to move the adjournment of the House pursuant to Standing Order 29 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, an interim agreement with the Government of France concerning additional fishing rights for the French fleet off the northern coast of Newfoundland.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa) moved:

That this House do now adjourn.

He said: Mr. Speaker, those most affected by the agreement that was announced yesterday by the Government of Canada are clearly the fishermen, the people in the industry and the Government of Newfoundland. At the same time, those completely ignored in shaping the content of the agreement were the fishermen, the people in the industry and the Government of Newfoundland.

Very clearly, this agreement was designed by the Government of Canada, not to please the people of Atlantic Canada but to please the people of France. The clear intention of the Government was to prepare a document that would serve as the centre-piece for a photo opportunity for the visit to Canada by the President of France in a few weeks from now. That is what it was all about. I say that it is time the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) recognized that he was elected in Manicouagan not Marseille, that he is responsible to the people of Canada and not to the people of France. That is what he should understand.

• (2010)

Mr. Broadbent: Given the nature of this agreement which gives French fishermen access to some 15,000 tonnes of cod that they did not have before, remarkably enough, in precisely the same area as the curtailment to Canadian fishermen of some 10,000 tonnes, perhaps it is legitimate for Atlantic Canadians to ask what type of Government could reach this agreement and make it seriously as a proposal? What could have led to this?

According to the Government, Mr. Speaker, we have this proposal because of a dispute about the boundaries of Saint-Pierre-et-Miquelon. The Government wanted to use this proposal to settle the dispute. The Government of Canada says, and in my view it is right, that Saint-Pierre-et-Miquelon's boundary extends to the 12-mile limit. However, the Government of France wants a zone that is almost as big as Nova Scotia. According to us and according to the Government, international law is on Canada's side. That is our opinion. The French take a different view. We on the Canadian side and at any rate Members in our party are saying we should seek a ruling by an international body, by a third party.

[English]

It seems to us that when there is a dispute over conflicting claims about fishing rights off the coast of St. Pierre and Miquelon, which presumably had been made in good faith by the two governments, that the rational, sensible approach would be to have it resolved by some third party intervention.

I see the Minister smiling over there, and I will come to what I think he is smiling about.

We think that under the circumstances the correct approach would be to try to persuade our French friends that we are right. Obviously, they tried to do the same thing with us. Then we would say, "Well, if you don't agree with our view, which clearly you do not, and we do not accept yours, then if you are good friends and traditional allies, the appropriate thing to do is to have some third party pass judgment on this which is acceptable to both sides." I suspect that the Government will say that is exactly what it tried to do. Our Government will say, "Yes, we wanted to do that, but the French Government refused". Under those circumstances, what does a rational, fair-minded Government with some sense of obligation to its people, and some sense of self-respect do? One of the reasons there are frigates and a naval presence on the coast is to enforce our sovereignty. Not that long ago we chased—

Mr. Crosbie: You are advocating war now. This is something new.

Mr. Broadbent: —we chased a Spanish vessel half way across the Atlantic Ocean in order to legitimize our claim to sovereignty. That is what we did.

Mr. Crosbie: They had no right to be there.

Mr. Broadbent: The Minister who is participating in a Government that has sold out Newfoundlanders is now joking about this. I say to him that a sovereign nation with a sense of respect—

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

An Hon. Member: Sit down.

An Hon. Member: It is not a point of order.

Mr. Crosbie: The rules of this House do not permit an Hon. Member to make false characterizations as to whether a Member is smiling or not smiling, or what he is doing. There has not been a smile on my face. The Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party should stop that kind of low and detestable tactic and stick to his speech. I have not a smile, not a grimace, not a grin, because I am listening to him with disbelief.

An Hon. Member: I think he listened to his Government with disbelief.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure that the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) has a number of interesting points to mention to the House this evening. Perhaps before drawing conclusions too early in the debate the Hon. Member would set out the fact pattern upon which some conclusions might or might not be drawn later.

Mr. Broadbent: If the Minister says that he was not smiling, then maybe it was just the perpetual smirk that is on his face, and I will take back what I said. In looking at the Minister, that is exactly what I thought he was doing. If he says he was not, then I will accept his word for it.

What I will not withdraw is my accusation that he has just participated in the Government decision that has sold out the interests of his own province, and he can reply to that.

Before the Minister rose to his feet I was saying that a Government with a sense of self-respect would have made a serious attempt to negotiate a settlement. We did that. When the French did not accept our arguments, it would have proposed that we refer it to a third party. We did that. If the French do not agree, rather than giving them additional fishing rights somewhere else in our territory, which this Government has absurdly done, we ought to have done with the French what we did with the Spanish trawler not long ago.

Without firing a shot or being in any sense warlike, but in the sense of protecting our own sovereignty, we should have used our Coast Guard in order to enforce our territorial integrity. That is what we should have done.

Mr. Crosbie: What a bluff.

Mr. Broadbent: Oh, what a bluff? This Government does not know what a bluff is. Every time it has a battle with the United States, France, or any other country, it gives in completely to what the other side wants. What I am saying is that ought to have been the next step. I say that with seriousness. I am talking about a well understood and traditional ally of Canada, and also a country with an international reputation for not yielding to anyone in any flexible negotiating way, and there should be no illusions about that.

The French Government might then have seen that we were serious, if we had taken some of their vessels actually under our control to enforce our sovereignty. The French perhaps would have gone very fast at that moment to get an international settlement. That ought to have been the route.

What did this Government do instead? Instead of standing up with some sense of self-respect for our own integrity, the Government said to the French Government, "We will give you some fishing rights in part of our waters, which no one disputes are our waters, and where we have curtailed the fishing rights to our own fishermen for conservation reasons. We will allow you to go into these waters". That is brilliant bargaining. That is what the Government has done.

Mr. Rodriguez: That's tough bargaining.

Mr. Blaikie: Chamberlain diplomacy.

Mr. Broadbent: Not only is it bad in principle as an approach to enforcing our own territorial integrity, it is also in flat contradiction of the wishes of the Government of Newfoundland. After the news of the accord came out yesterday and we raised questions in the House, I phoned the Premier of Newfoundland. I say to my hon. colleagues in the House that I do not claim to have a great deal of expertise in the details of the fishery. I have done some checking, and I hope what I am saying now is accurate. I am totally convinced that what I am saying about the international bargaining process is accurate. I phoned the Premier of Newfoundland and asked him his opinion about what conceivably could lie behind this. I wish to say to my hon. friends on the other side of the House that he was at a loss.

What he did tell me in that conversation was that he, as the Premier of Newfoundland, before Christmas wrote a detailed letter to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the leader of the national Government, which made it very clear from the point of view of the Government of Newfoundland, which is the province most directly affected, that there were to be no additional concessions in terms of fishing rights in any other waters as an attempt to resolve the St. Pierre and Miquelon conflict.

If the Government wanted a co-operative attitude with any Government in the country when the economic foundation of the province was in question, it would listen to the provincial Government of the area. Surely it would do that if co-operation in the federal system means anything. The Premier made clear to the Government of Canada, on a Premier-Prime Minister basis, right before Christmas, that there was to be no concession.

Just before that time the Government of Newfoundland, the industry, and the fishermen were party to ongoing talks and negotiations. Suddenly they were cut out and meetings took place in which they did not participate. Then last week officials from the Department of External Affairs and the Department of Fisheries and Oceans went to France to sign this incredibly unacceptable deal with the Government of France.

It is pretty clear why they were cut out of the negotiations. If the federal Government had continued to have as part of its negotiating team, as it ought to have had in the circumstances, representatives of the Government and people of Newfoundland, it could not have made the kind of deal it did. The federal Government knew that, because the Premier of Newfoundland had made clear to the Prime Minister before Christmas that any new territorial concessions for fishing rights were not acceptable to the Government of Newfoundland, and correctly not acceptable. Giving the Government of France additional territory in one part of the fishery in order to resolve a conflict in another must be about the stupidest kind of bargaining one could ever imagine.

In case one is inclined to think, as some Members on the government side might be, that Mr. Peckford is an aberration who, for whatever reason, has a battle to pick with the Government of Canada, we saw in very vivid form today the reaction of another Premier from Nova Scotia.

Mr. Orlikow: Another Conservative Premier.

Mr. Broadbent: Another conservative Premier who, according to a Canadian Press wire story, found it to be an incredibly unacceptable deal. I telephoned Premier Buchanan as well to try to get from him some rationale about what he thought might have led to this decision. The Premier of Nova Scotia also had no answer about what could cause the federal Government to make such an incredible deal. His rough calculations, according to figures which appeared in the press, were that this would cost the people of Atlantic Canada some $200 million.

We have the Premier of Nova Scotia and his Government opposed. We have the Premier of Newfoundland and his Government opposed. So far as I am aware, any spokesperson for the industry or the unions of the workers directly affected have been totally opposed to the deal.

Mr. Riis: Who supported it?

Mr. Broadbent: That is a good question. The only people who supported it were members of the federal caucus of the Conservative Party, which we can be assured will be a greatly diminished number in about two years from now.

If one asks oneself the question, as one must, how the Government could take this approach and why we ended up in such a deal, one looks for some kind of rationale. I regret to say that the only rationale I could find is that in this tentative agreement with the Government of France we have another illustration of the Government's whole approach to international negotiations. Its approach is to make concession after concession until it has given the other side enough so that it feels overstuffed and then signs an agreement.

I wish I was kidding in this context. I wish my remarks were simply facetious. However, I do not think that at all. I believe that is what the Government has done. It is kind of a Willy Loman approach to international relations—a smile, a handshake, give away what you have and you will get an agreement. As strange as that ought to be to anyone, it is the approach of the Government. We have seen it in the negotiations with the United States.

I ask the Conservative Members, who I agree are paying serious attention to this debate, to think about that. As soon as the Prime Minister came into power, in terms of our bilateral arrangements with our greatest trading partner, the United States, what did he do? The Government gave up FIRA. Then it made concessions on shakes and shingles. Then it caved in on the pharmaceutical industry. Then it caved in completely on the softwood decision. In sector after sector the Government, in terms of getting a free trade agreement with the United States, has been giving the United States everything it could conceivably want, and then some. It followed the same kind of approach with the Government of France by giving it additional fishing rights in one part of our territory as a gesture to obtain an agreement to negotiate settlement elsewhere, not to have a settlement.

Any foolish person can get an agreement with someone else if one gives the other person everything he wants. That is not the way the Prime Minister of Canada ought to be governing the people of Canada. He was elected to govern Canada, not to give Canada away piece by piece.

Obviously members of my Party and the people of Atlantic Canada will be pleased that we have had this debate. Before it is too late, I hope the Government will come to its senses. I hope it will listen to the people of Atlantic Canada. I hope it will listen to the arguments which will be made on the opposition side. I hope it will listen to the Governments of its own Party throughout Atlantic Canada. In short, I hope it will change its mind and tear up this agreement. I hope, just for once, the Government will say no to another country—no to France and yes to Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I think we should compliment the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party for bringing forward this important motion. In the spirit of parliamentary reform, I think it is important that all Members of Parliament have an opportunity to discuss from time to time issues of critical importance to Canada. Indeed this is such an issue.

I was going to say that it is always easy for opposition Members to be critical. It is far more helpful if they come forward with some good ideas, proposals, and solutions to difficult problems with which the Government and previous Governments have wrestled for many years.

Mr. Broadbent: We just did.

Mr. Siddon: I hear the Hon. Leader of the NDP. I was about to compliment him for bringing forward some solutions. The Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party suggested that the time to negotiate has ended. I find that to be somewhat incredulous because Canada has always been a peaceful nation.

The problem we inherited is one which extends back some 450 years in the history of our country and it is not one which suggests a simple solution. In fact we have but three choices to make in the face of this history and a strong claim by France, another country which has been an important building block and an important piece of the history of our country, to perpetual fishing rights within the zone we now claim and have claimed since 1977 as the sovereign fishing domain of Canada primarily.

Of course we are talking about an area in dispute whose boundaries have been interpreted in two different ways—one by Canada to encompass only a 12-mile territorial sea around the Islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon, and a separate claim by the other sovereign nation of France to boundaries extending some 180 miles south of the Islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon and into the mouth of the St. Lawrence estuary.

In that intervening zone, by all principles of international law, the usual undertaking between governments when there is a dispute—and many of these disputes have arisen since the time the Law of the Sea was adopted in the early 1980s—is to agree to avoid physical confrontation which can lead to war by trying to negotiate an acceptable compromise to reflect adequately the interests and aspirations of both nations.

We, as a nation, and all Canadian people, particularly those of Atlantic Canada and the fishermen of Newfoundland and Labrador, feel a very special attachment to the fishery resource which has been part of their history since the first settlers arrived in Newfoundland in the 16th Century and when Jacques Cartier first sailed up the St. Lawrence River and established the French settlements which became Lower Canada.

I was alarmed to hear the Leader of the New Democratic Party suggest that the time for negotiation has run out after 450 years of peace and harmony between our respective countries. Bearing fully in mind the aspirations and the entitlements of the fishermen and people of Atlantic Canada, why it is that the Leader of the NDP says,"Time has run out. We believe the Government of Canada should confront the French, chase them out of Canadian waters, irrespective of history and even, if necessary, confront them with force"? That is a ludicrous proposition coming from a leader of a Party which espouses peace and non-confrontation, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Rodriguez: Why did we do it with Spain?

Mr. Siddon: I would like to explain why this is a ludicrous suggestion. I hope Hon. Members over there will give me as much opportunity to respond, and listen in silence, as I have given them.

We have for the first time in the history of our country reached a point where France has initialled an agreement which does little more than agree to negotiate two parallel agreements between now and the end of 1987, one dealing with the unresolved boundary issue, and a second to establish joint fishing arrangements during that three to four-year period when the compulsory third party arbitration process is allowed to take effect.

I think I heard the Leader of the New Democratic Party say that we should find a third party arbitrator. That has been and must be the objective of the Government of Canada in seeking a permanent and lasting resolution to this problem.

I want to say at the very beginning that I and all of my colleagues, the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), and particularly my colleagues from Newfoundland, understand that to the people of that very beautiful part of Canada there is a feeling about the cod stocks, the groundfish resources of the Grand Banks. It is very close to the hearts of Newfoundlanders and very close to the soul of their province. I want to make it clear before I go into the detail of the agreement that in no way will this Government compromise or diminish the importance of that resource on the Grand Banks of Newfoundland to the continued future and growing prosperity of all of the people in that province whose history is so deeply interwoven with that resource.

We have a problem, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Tobin: Yes, you.

Mr. Siddon: If Hon. Members want to be catty, that is their prerogative. I am trying to be reasonable and informative.

This problem was reinforced in 1972 when the Liberal Government entered into a treaty with France, because there had been some disputation in the 1960s over this issue. That treaty, in Article 2, recognizes the right of French nationals to fish in these waters, that is, waters which we now claim to be Canadian within the 200-mile economic zone. While the French agree that those fishing practices will be subject to possible measures for the conservation of resources, they at the same time insisted and continue to insist in all of the bilateral discussions that have been under way that they have a perpetual right to fish, not only in the waters in the disputed area of St. Pierre and Miquelon but in all of the waters which Canada claims to be there for the benefit and in recognition of the sovereignty of the country and our people who depend on that resource.

Since that treaty was signed in 1972, and I must add, that was a time when Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party were very accustomed to supporting their friends in the Liberal Party, they helped to reinforce this agreement to saddle Canada with a perpetual commitment—

Ms. Mitchell: Don't be catty now.

Mr. Shields: That is the truth coming out.

Mr. Siddon: These Hon. Members did not help to resolve the problem either in 1972 or in 1984 when these same Members of the NDP aided and abetted the Liberal Government of the day under Prime Minister Trudeau. At that time the Liberal Government, through an exchange of diplomatic notes with France in June, 1984, agreed that Canada would turn a blind eye to any fishing practices by French national vessels in the disputed area south of St. Pierre and Miquelon. In other words, the international agreement concerned, by an exchange of diplomatic notes—and Members of Liberal Party opposite were in Government at the time—

Mr. Baker: What were the diplomatic notes?

Mr. Benjamin: That is why the Liberals did not move a motion today.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) has applied today for an emergency debate. The Chair has ruled in favour of that application. I would ask Hon. Members to contain themselves enough so that the debate can in fact continue. The Hon. Minister.

Mr. Siddon: As I was saying, Members of the Government at that time in June, 1984 agreed that French national vessels could be allowed to fish unimpeded in the disputed zone—

Mr. Baker: What do you mean unimpeded?

Mr. Siddon: I could read the language of the agreement.

Mr. Baker: Yes, read the language.

Mr. Siddon: The language of the agreement, confirmed by an exchange of diplomatic notes, is as follows:

Each party in the disputed zone will abstain from regulating fishing vessels flying the flag of the other party in the disputed zone.

Mr. Baker: From boarding.

Mr. Siddon: As a consequence of the inability of previous governments to deal with this problem, we are today faced with a decision taken by the Le Bretagne arbitration. This was another consequence of the dispute settlement provisions of the treaty of 1972. It now allows large factory freezer trawlers, up to the numbers designated in the 1972 treaty, to fish in that disputed zone and be immune from the Canadian regulatory regime. In other words, from France's perspective, that is France's territorial waters and we have no right to enforce or administer fishing quotas in that region.

Mr. Benjamin: Why act like the Liberals?

Mr. Siddon: In that disputed zone, which in fisheries jargon is referred to as 3PS, Canada under the protocols of the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries Organization has established quotas for the present year of 41,000 tonnes of Atlantic cod, and we have generously, for some years, granted to the French national vessels, particularly the vessels of St. Pierre and Miquelon, a quota of 6,400 tonnes for this year. That is not something new. That has been established practice for several years. In return, France believes that that entire quota of 41,000 tonnes is essentially a French quota and has been persistently overfishing that quota. We know from records which have been confirmed that in 1986, France overfished that quota by an amount in excess of 20,000 tonnes of codfish. That overfishing in this disputed zone represents lost income and lost opportunity to the people of Newfoundland and Atlantic Canada amounting to over $40 million of landed value to the fishermen.

The point is that as long as the disputed zone exists and Canada is not able to enforce and manage the fishery in that zone, there will be a blatant abuse of the resource to the detriment of Atlantic Canada and, particularly, the fishermen of southern Newfoundland. Therefore, the Government has three choices. We have been well aware of the particular problems of these three options. We can ignore the situation as it has been ignored for many years. We can face the French in confrontation as the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party has astonishingly suggested or we can try to negotiate a solution which once and for all will eliminate the massive overfishing by France in an area which Canada believes to be its own.

The problem has become particularly complicated this year because, under the provisions of the 1972 treaty, the French national vessels, the so-called metropolitan fleet, were allowed to fish in the Gulf of St. Lawrence for 15 years. Last year they took a quota of 17,000 tonnes. That treaty provision has expired. We have essentially booted those French vessels out of the Gulf and they want somewhere to go. They do not want to go home to France so they have concentrated their fishing pressure on this disputed zone at great risk to the stocks in that area. That is why it is extremely critical that Canada, at this juncture, decide either to negotiate a lasting solution to this problem or to confront these vessels originating from France, even with military force as the Hon. Leader of the NDP has, I believe, so irresponsibly suggested. I think that would be a premature step. Therefore, I want to explain why it is we feel we have taken a major step forward. Then I will talk about the so-called tradeoffs or the price to which the mover of this motion has referred.

We have secured a signed agreement from France, not to take a certain number of fish from Canadian waters or to establish a specific boundary to resolve this problem once and for all, but to negotiate two agreements by December 31, 1987. The first agreement would be to develop the legal terms of reference, or compromis as it is called in diplomatic jargon, under which this issue would be referred to the compulsory third-party dispute settlement provisions under international law. We would celebrate the fact that France has finally come to accept that this important matter must be referred to international dispute settlement procedures.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Siddon: Coupled with the agreement to negotiate terms of reference, France has also agreed to negotiate by December 31, 1987 a set of interim fishing arrangements for the period between 1988 and 1991 during which this dispute settlement process will unfold.

In that context, we have not promised to give any fish quotas away, and it will certainly be an objective of this Government in the negotiation of those interim fishing arrangements for a four-year period to ensure that the French overfishing in the disputed zone is curtailed and curtailed drastically.

Second, it is our objective to ensure that those fishing arrangements and whatever quotas are allocated to France are decided in the context of discussions with the fishermen of Atlantic Canada, with the Government of the Province of Newfoundland and with the industry generally.

I might say that we feel it important to recognize that not one fish has been placed on the bargaining table. We have offered to talk about the possibility of a very modest allocation in the area which is so important and precious to Newfoundland, referred to as the northern cod area or 2J+3KL. I can assure the House that the French have great designs on very large allocations of cod in that alternate location and that the Government will resist any such claim on their part.

We are talking about solving the problem of overfishing to the extent of tens of thousands of tonnes per year. We must put before the people of Newfoundland and Atlantic Canada the question, what is the price they are willing to pay to have the matter resolved? Our commitment to the people of Newfoundland and Labrador is that any price which is too high for Newfoundland and Labrador is too high for Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Siddon: I think, therefore, it is important that our friends and neighbours in France give witness to this debate and the discussions that have been taking place in Canada over the last two or three days. It is important that they realize that the people of Canada, and particularly the people of Newfoundland and Labrador, will not stand for some other significant tradeoff in order to resolve this boundary dispute for all the reasons the Hon. Leader of the NDP and my other colleagues have presented in this discussion.

I will take a moment or so to comment on the remaining matter, which is this supposed allocation of 15,600 tonnes of new fish to get this deal. That misinterpretation and the exaggeration and mischievousness with which it has been used is typical of the disruptive tactics of the Opposition which so often prevent Canada from moving in an orderly way toward a desirable goal. In the year 1987, 15,600 tonnes of Atlantic fish resources will indeed be fished by France under arrangements that have been fully negotiated with all the Atlantic provinces and with the industry, and which are in full accord with our 1987 groundfish plan and our international commitments to France.

Mr. Gauthier: Enough. Enough is enough.

Mr. Siddon: Of that portion, 8,000 tonnes—

Mr. Gauthier: You're way over your time.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) has asked for an emergency debate on a matter which the Speaker thinks is very important. As a consequence, I granted the application. We have listened to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) and, strictly speaking, his time has expired. The Minister has asked to be allowed to speak for a few more minutes. It would seem to me to be reasonable if there is consent. Is there such consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, I will not take too long, but I think it is important that I conclude this information in its entirety. I have a list here of some 15,600 tonnes of allocations which the present Opposition have been bandying about as a giveaway. In fact, the allocations are contained within the 1987 groundfish plan, are fully supported by industry and are fully supported by the provinces. These allocations include the 6,400 tonnes granted to France in the disputed area, part of the Canadian generosity, as France has always been granted that consideration. As well, there are 1,545 tonnes under the long-term agreement which we have with the European Economic Community and even 2,400 tonnes of squid which they have never managed to catch.

There is no giveaway here. There is one exception, and that is that in the very far northern area of 2GH, with full knowledge of all the industry advisers and the Province of Newfoundland, an additional 3,000 tonnes of surplus cod which was never caught by Canadian fishermen or foreign vessels has been made available for 1987 only. That fish will probably not be caught at all because France did not even go into those northern waters last year. I believe it is far better that they go way up north off the shores of Greenland than to fish our stocks off the Grand Banks or in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. That is the only price that has been paid for this year. It is a non-existent price to bring this matter, through the negotiation of these two parallel agreements, to the point where we can resolve the boundary dispute once and for all.

It is important that governments have the courage, from time to time, to negotiate difficult issues of this nature. Leadership demands the courage to negotiate. Opposition amounts to an abdication of that kind of leadership. This deal will be very good for all Atlantic Canadians or we will not proceed as the negotiations unfold. I can assure all Members of the House that the provinces, the industry and the fishermen will be fully involved in all discussions between now and the end of December, 1987.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I am sure this will only take a couple of moments. I do not need 20 minutes to explain why this particular announcement by the federal Government cannot be accepted by Canadian fishermen. It cannot be accepted by anyone who knows anything at all about the issue. It cannot be accepted because the Government has taken fishing quotas from Canadians. We have now discovered that behind the scenes, in secret, the Government has given those quotas to foreign fleets.

Mr. Siddon: Nonsense. Be reasonable.

Mr. Baker: The Hon. Minister is telling me to be reasonable. He should speak to fishermen on the northeast coast of Newfoundland who cannot even get enough fish to feed their families or 10 unemployment insurance stamps for the year—tell them to be reasonable. The Government has licensed 10 factory freezer trawlers from the French metropolitan fleet for the south coast. He has licensed another factory freezer trawler from St. Pierre and Miquelon. He has licensed five wet fish trawlers from St. Pierre and Miquelon to fish on the south coast of Newfoundland. He says they have assigned them a quota of 6,400 metric tonnes. Last year, according to the Minister's figures, those particular boats took 17,000 tonnes in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. The Minister has told us tonight that they took 26,000 tonnes on the south coast of Newfoundland. Therefore, they took 43,000 tonnes.

Mr. Siddon: Quit exaggerating.

Mr. Baker: The entire quota for the south coast of Newfoundland is 41,000 tonnes. The Minister has given the French fleet enough capacity in Canadian licences to overfish the total allowable catch for the entire south coast of Newfoundland.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Baker: As though that were not bad enough, in this agreement with the French the Government has given a quota of what we call northern codstock, 2J+3KL. That is cod fish along the east coast of Newfoundland, the northeast coast of Newfoundland, and off the Labrador coast.

This year the Canadian vessels have had their quotas reduced. The fishermen on the northeast and east coasts of Newfoundland and on the Labrador coast have been told that the amount of fishing to take place there this year must be reduced because the Canadian Government biologists say that the stocks are down.

When the Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) was the Minister of Fisheries in Newfoundland he stood in the Newfoundland legislature and said that the fish stock in 2J+3KL should never be touched beyond the needs of the people who live in the immediate area. He explained that fish migrate. In the winter time they are offshore and they come inshore in the summer time when fishermen can catch them. The federal Government had reduced the quota for that entire area. The fishermen and the companies did not like it, but they swallowed it because that is what the biologists said.

Now the federal Government has turned around and the Minister asks why Newfoundlanders, the fishermen, the workers on the offshore boats, and the fish plant owners are so angry. After having been told that their quota must be reduced, the federal Government has given a quota in that very same area to a foreign nation. One can understand why Newfoundlanders are angry.

As though that were not enough, three weeks ago the federal Government informed boat owners in Newfoundland that they were not allowed to go into the area which covers the entire south coast of Newfoundland and extends out 200 miles. Newfoundland boats are not allowed down there this year. Longliner operators were told that they cannot go back to 3PS this year. They were informed of that three weeks ago. Imagine Newfoundlanders not being allowed to go back to the south coast of Newfoundland.

We have now learned, of course, that the Government has issued all of the factory freezer trawler licences which the French metropolitan fleet wants for the south coast of Newfoundland where the Newfoundlanders are not allowed to go. I am sure you would say to yourself, Mr. Speaker, that that is terrible.

In addition to that, in the great wisdom of the Minister for Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) the Government has told all Canadian fishermen that for the first time in their lives in 1987 they are not allowed to fish on the northern part of the Grand Banks of Newfoundland.

We have the northeast coast of Newfoundland having a quota cut-back for Newfoundland; we have the south coast of Newfoundland where they are no longer allowed to go; now the Government of Canada says they are not allowed to put their boats into the northern part of the Grand Banks. It is incredible. There are no offshore boats allowed either, including from Nova Scotia from where they came before. In 1987, for the first time, National Sea Products, Fishery Products International and every other company cannot go to the nose of the Grand Banks. The Minister says that there is an over-reaction in Newfoundland to these announcements. It is not the French who are down on the nose of the Grand Banks. It is the Americans, and now the Portuguese, the Spanish and the Koreans.

Recently I asked the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and the Deputy Minister why these nations are allowed there when Newfoundland boats are not. The Minister said: "We made the proposal to NAFO, the North Atlantic Fisheries Organization, that all nations should now leave the nose of the Grand Banks for 1987 for conservation reasons". I asked: "Why is the American fleet down there now?" The Minister said: "They are not members of NAFO". I asked why the Spanish and the Portuguese are fishing there, since they are members of NAFO. The Minister said: "They are members of NAFO but they are also members of the EEC, which is a member of NAFO, but the rules of NAFO state that if you object to a motion from another country you do not have to follow that motion". I asked: "Is there any nation other than Canada that is not allowed to go to the nose of the Grand Banks?" He said: "I do not know of any". The Minister then asks why Newfoundlanders are over-reacting to his announcement.

I suggest that not only Newfoundland will over-react as a result of this announcement today by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He talked about the level of the cod allocation for St. Pierre and Miquelon in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, which is along your coastline in Quebec, Mr. Speaker. It is off Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. It is interesting that the Secretary of State talks about legalities when we know from the La Bretagne decision that if one is from France, one need only register the boat in St. Pierre and Miquelon and it is a St. Pierre and Miquelon boat. The Secretary of State stated in his announcement that the level of cod allocation is an exception as it is greater than what Canada's legal obligations require under the 1972 agreement which, by the way, ran out last May. He went on to say:

This exception has been made in order to facilitate resolution of the boundary dispute.

The Government is giving away this fish when Quebecers have been cut back in the Gulf this year, and New Brunswickers, Nova Scotians and Prince Edward Islanders have been cut back. Yet the Minister says that in order to facilitate the resolution of a boundary dispute he has given some to St. Pierre and Miquelon.

I enjoyed listening to the Member for St. John's West in Newfoundland this morning because he was speaking his mind. I am sure he will do so in the House today and deal with the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans.

The point is that the Government is saying that a few years ago the Liberals gave it away and created the problem. The Minister was referring to 1983 and 1984 when there was no overfishing by the French. The fish plants in France opened in 1985. While the document containing the official figures is marked "confidential" by the Department of External Affairs, one can see from these exact figures that the French fleet started overfishing in 1985 and 1986, fishing four times over their quota on the south coast of Newfoundland. Their quota was 6,400 tonnes and the Minister admitted tonight that the French took 20,000 tonnes more than 6,400 tonnes. In other words, they took as much as the Canadian fleet last year. The total allowable catch for the entire south coast of Newfoundland and to the east of Nova Scotia was surpassed by 6,000 tonnes.

The truth can be seen in the first page of the press release today, which I will put on the record to show what a flippant and flip-flop kind of government it is. The press release states:

The two countries have agreed to a meeting of Canadian and French scientists as soon as possible—

That sounds rather impressive. It goes on:

—to undertake a joint assessment of the state of the cod stock off the south coast of Newfoundland—

And then states:

—now being overfished by French vessels: and joint projections of what will happen to the stock if the current overfishing continues.

They will appoint scientists to determine the state of the stock when the Minister says that it is drastically overfished. The only thing that should happen to this agreement is that it be put in the ash can of history where it belongs. The Government should do away with this agreement because it will not be tolerated in Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island or Quebec.

Today, fish companies are barely surviving. According to the recent unemployment insurance report, it is suggested that perhaps fishermen in Atlantic Canada should not receive unemployment insurance because it actually amounts to more than what the average fisherman earns from fishing. It suggests that perhaps another way should be found to support fishermen. That suggests to me and everyone in the Official Opposition that fishermen are not catching enough fish.

It is unacceptable for the Government to pass those fish stocks over to other nations, not only the French, but the Americans as well, without objection. Yet the Government wonders why petitions are beginning to come from Newfoundland and there are suggetions that people will come to Ottawa to tell the Government exactly what they think.

In conclusion, I want to refer to a phone call that I received this morning. It was from a gentleman who asked me if it was true that he will not receive his unemployment insurance cheque on Friday. I asked him if he was a logger who worked at Abitibi-Price. When he replied that he was, I told him that he was correct that he would not get his unemployment insurance cheque on Friday. He indicated that he had heard that the federal Government would deduct all of the vacation pay he received the first week in January but that he received it last year and it did not affect his unemployment insurance. He closed the door, then told me that last week he gave $300 from that cheque to his son who is in university. He will have to ask him how much he has left because his family will need it since they cannot get welfare as a result of the 90-day rule. It is an example of the type of phone calls we receive from our primary producers in Newfoundland.

Some 219 loggers got hit on Friday. Unemployment insurance benefits were removed for a month because of some mistake by the Unemployment Insurance Commission. Fishermen are being discriminated against by government policy. When you contact the Government and ask it to do something about it, it just turns the other way and says what a magnificent deal it has made with some foreign country.

Newfoundlanders are not going to accept this. The fishermen are not going to accept this. We say this House of Commons should not accept this.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I would like to express a word of appreciation to my Leader, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), for initiating this debate and to the Speaker for granting it.

Mr. Crosbie: He is leaving now. He is going early.

Mr. Manly: It is a very important issue. We wanted to bring it before the House, and we look forward to hearing what some of the government Members are going to say, particularly those from Newfoundland and other Atlantic provinces.

There is a great deal of outrage in Atlantic Canada over the agreement signed with France. The outrage is fully justified because this deal represents a betrayal in four different ways. First, it is a betrayal of Canadian sovereignty. Second, it is a betrayal of federal-provincial relations. Third, it is a betrayal of the Atlantic fishing industry. Finally, and most important, it is a betrayal of the fishermen themselves, their families and their communities.

I want to speak just a bit about each of those. First, sovereignty. Ten years ago, in January, 1977, Canada established a 200-mile exclusive economic zone and began to patrol and enforce it. Establishing that zone took international negotiations, and a measure of determination and gumption on Canada's part. About 12 or 13 miles off the south shore of Newfoundland we have the two small islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon.

Mr. Forrestall: You are sure of that?

Mr. Manly: That is according to everything I have read. I have never been there.

Mr. Forrestall: Who wrote your speech for you?

Mr. Manly: You can check and see that the notes are written by hand.

Mr. Crosbie: Go back to sleep.

Mr. Manly: By my own hand. I do my own research on these things, thank you very much. I do not need to have a government flack prepare my speeches for me.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member may continue.

Mr. Manly: Those islands have passed back and forth between Great Britain and France. Finally, with the Treaty of Ghent in 1814, they passed into French ownership. They are one of France's last remaining colonies. They are being treated as a colony and the people of those two islands are not very happy about it.

However, with the establishment of Canada's 200-mile EEZ, France decided it was going to use these islands to establish certain claims. They claimed an area as large as the Province of Nova Scotia. They have attempted to back up their claim with some force. In August of 1983 the French sent a gunboat into that area to establish their claim. They were involved in seismic exploration and of course in blatant overfishing of that entire area. No one in Canada recognizes the claim France has made and no one in the international scene, apart from France, would recognize it has any real validity. Yet what has Canada done? We sent diplomatic notes of protest. The gunboat incident was kind of smoothed over.

Mr. Crosbie: Should we send a gunboat? What would you do?

Mr. Manly: France had indicated it was prepared to push the issue.

Mr. Crosbie: Would you send a submarine or aircraft carrier or what?

Mr. Manly: Overfishing was a constant practice.

Mr. Crosbie: What is your answer?

Mr. Manly: The Conservative critic at the time was very concerned about the question of overfishing. He pointed out that the French had taken two and a half times their quota. He suggested that perhaps the Government should deduct what they had overfished in the past two years from their quota, in succeeding years. That was in 1983. Since then the Tories have come to power and instead of two and a half times the quota they have been allowed to go up to eight times the quota and the Government does nothing about it.

Last June the Minister decided he had to do something, so he issued a warning. He said there were not going to be any more allocations unless foreign nations followed good conservation practices. He said that means good behaviour, not only inside the Canadian zone but also in the North Atlantic Fisheries Organization management area outside the zone. He said we are sending a very clear message to foreign nations. In return for a licence to fish in our waters and permission to use our ports they must co-operate with our conservation efforts and observe the fishing limits that we and NAFO have established. He said he was sending a very clear message. The very clear message given by this agreement is that Canada's interests can be ignored with impunity. That is what France has done and I expect other nations who want to establish their rights in this area will do the same.

Under this agreement the French will continue to overfish. There are absolutely no guarantees that the agreement is going to put an end to overfishing. We licensed nine factory freezer trawlers when it is obvious that one could have taken the total allocation. Why license nine when we knew there was going to be overfishing?

Mr. Broadbent: They asked for nine.

Mr. Manly: We are lucky they did not ask for 20.

What did we get in this deal with the French? We got a vague commitment to submit this to some future arbitration. I think it is very clear from everything said this evening, including what the Minister said, that this is a fundamental betrayal of Canadian sovereignty.

Then we have the betrayal of federal-provincial relations. That is an area into which the Government came with so much hope and so much promise. For a time it even appeared as though the Government was going to deliver better federal-provincial relations. There appeared to be a better climate, a new and better era of consultation. That seems to have gone out the window in the last few months in a number of cases and this is perhaps one of the more blatant ones. When the going got tough, the federal Government jettisoned any consultation with the provincial Government.

Mr. Forrestall: Not so.

Mr. Manly: The Newfoundland Government was involved in the consultations in an attempt to reach a solution to the problem. That Government was aware of the French overfishing and the danger it represented to the stocks. It knew something had to be done and was involved in the consultation. But it did not agree with the approach the federal Government was prepared to take.

As my Leader pointed out, Premier Peckford sent a letter to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in December indicating very clearly that his Government did not want the federal Government to allocate additional areas and additional stocks off the coast of Newfoundland in an attempt to reach an agreement on this. They said that very clearly. Because they took that strong position, the federal Government decided it could only reach an agreement with France by jettisoning the Newfoundland consultation process.

The other Atlantic provinces were also cut out. No wonder we have Tory premiers breaking party ranks. We know there is a fair degree of loyalty to party in Canada. It is not easy for premiers of a party to disagree publicly with their federal counterparts. However, in this case they had no option. In spite of what the Prime Minister said once, these people had no option if they were going to be loyal to their own people and provinces.

We have the Premier of Nova Scotia saying that this deal the federal Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr.Siddon) thinks is so good is going to cost the Atlantic Provinces some $200 million. Obviously the whole federal-provincial relationship has been betrayed and those five provinces in particular have been betrayed. Third, this is a betrayal of the Atlantic fishery. Premier Peckford has spoken about the importance of the Atlantic fishery to Newfoundland. I would like to read from a paper he presented last year:

> On Newfoundland's eastern continental shelf, one of the world's richest marine resources thrives in cold Atlantic waters. The Northern Cod stock is confined to a long, narrow geographic area, extending 1,000 miles along the north and east coasts of Newfoundland and Labrador. For four centuries it has been the basis of settlement and continued development of the greater part of our province. Today it remains our economy's most important resource and the foundation of our fishing industry.
> With Newfoundland's entry into Confederation in 1949, and since the 1977 extension of our 200-mile fishing zone, Northern Cod is now a Canadian resource. We would like all Canadians to understand the importance of Northern Cod to the fishing industry and the national economy.

Unfortunately, this Government does not understand the importance of Northern Cod and the fishing industry to Newfoundland or to the national economy. The growth of factory freezer trawlers meant that in the 1950s more and more foreign vessels were coming in and taking a resource which was primarily Newfoundland's up to that time. Therefore, there was a drop in the catch of Newfoundland fishermen from 160,000 tonnes in 1959 to only 34,000 tonnes by 1974. With the establishment of the 200-mile limit there was a gradual rebuilding of those stocks. The 200-mile limit did not include the northern tail of the Grand Banks and there was foreign fishing in those areas which was still depleting the stocks.

Tom Rideout, the provincial Minister of Fisheries for Newfoundland appeared before the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry of the House on November 4, 1985. He spoke of some of the dangers to the fishery resource of Newfoundland at that time. He pinpointed the danger which would come if we licensed factory freezer trawlers from Canada. Four days later on November 8, the then Minister of Fisheries, the Hon. Erik Nielsen, announced he was licensing three factory freezer trawlers from Canada. That was done in spite of the fact that it was setting a precedent which the French would be sure to follow. Tom Rideout pointed out:

> The treaty between Canada and France specifically says the present vessels operating in Canadian waters—even though some of them have factory freezer capability—that capability will not be utilized; they must continue to fish and operate on an equal footing with Canadian vessels.

Once, however, we licensed the factory freezer trawlers of our own to operate in that area, France was free to move in and do as it wanted. Therefore, we set a very bad precedent.

In September the Minister announced a special research project on Northern Cod. The report on the study of cod stocks was tabled in December. On that basis it makes it very hard to understand why the Minister feels it is necessary that the two countries agree to a meeting of Canadian and French scientists as soon as possible to undertake a joint assessment of the state of cod stock off the South Coast of Newfoundland. Where have our Department of Fisheries scientists been all this time? Do we not have that kind of adequate assessment? Why is that part of an announcement? It sounds as though it might be the one positive thing in this announcement, but in fact it should not have been necessary at all if our Department was doing its job.

The Fisheries Council of Canada is very much aware of the danger to our cod stocks from French overfishing and yet, like the provinces, it has insisted that this problem should not be solved by granting extra concessions in Canadian waters to the French fleet. Again, the Government chose to ignore what the fisheries representatives were saying. It ignored what the union was saying and what the provinces which were involved were saying. There is a betrayal, therefore, of the Atlantic fishing industry.

There is a betrayal of the fishermen themselves, of their families and communities. On December 29, less than a month ago, the Department of Fisheries announced cut-backs in the stocks which Canadian fishermen could take in Atlantic Canada. These are cut-backs our fishermen would not be able to take. Yet last week it was announced the French fleet was going to be able to take an additional 15,000 tonnes.

Newfoundland depends upon the fishery. The fishery is perhaps the most vital resource of that province and the wealth of the fishery belongs to the people of Newfoundland. The Government has a responsibility to look after that wealth. When Newfoundland came into Confederation, it brought that wealth to Canada. The federal Government has a trust and responsibility to the people of Newfoundland for that resource. What have we done with it? We bargained it away. We frittered it away. We turned our back whenever there has been any kind of assault upon it. Newfoundland brought that resource into Canada and into Confederation and we have let it slip away.

One of the most amazing things I heard today was from the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans who said this decision was a unanimous decision by Cabinet. If it was unanimous, we have to ask where the people were who would speak up for Newfoundland? Who was speaking up for the Atlantic fishery? The Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) is perhaps a bit unhappy about that statement, but it was made in this House and we will listen very closely to see what the Minister of Transport has to say about it. I suspect he missed the boat.

We want to emphasize the importance of law in solving problems. We all want to see this matter resolved in some international tribunal. But how do we get France to come to the table? The Minister believes the best way to kill a cat is to choke it with cream. He tried to bribe France.

Mr. Siddon: You would rather shoot them.

Mr. Manly: I do not think we need to shoot people but surely we can demand that other nations show us a little respect. We have done absolutely nothing since this Government has been in power to make other nations respect us; not the United States, not France, nor any other nation.

In conclusion, I would simply like to read some words of Douglas Johnston from his book entitled Canada and the New International Law of the Sea:

> Canada is governed from the centre. The ocean is, literally, peripheral to the perceptions and concerns of Government. Most Canadian decision makers, indeed most Canadians, may view the ocean as a regional matter in the affairs of the state. Yet ocean policy is no less national in significance than agriculture or manufacturing.
> Sadly, there is no guaranatee that Canadians are ready to give the ocean a high priority on the national agenda. Our sentiments turn inward to the national centre.

The ocean should have high priority, and if it is going to have that high priority, it has to have some leadership from the Government. We have not received that from the Minister, nor from the Government. The people of Newfoundland and Atlantic Canada have had enough of this Government. They want to see some leadership. They want to see their resource protected and some future for themselves and for their families.

• (2130)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is a most important topic to be discussed. Rather than deal with the half-truths and the specious comments that have been made to date, I want first to set the background. We are prisoners of our past.

What is the past that now governs what actions we can or cannot take in the matter of France, St. Pierre and Miquelon and their claims of a 200-mile economic zone around St. Pierre and Miquelon territorial boundaries and the right—

Mr. Riis: Is it really a unanimous cabinet choice?

Mr. Crosbie: I do not want to be interrupted, Mr. Speaker, if you do not mind. I am speaking through you, Mr. Speaker, to the people of Newfoundland and Labrador.

On January 1, 1977, a 200-mile economic zone was declared by Canada, and accepted by most of the international community.

On March 27, 1972, a treaty was entered into between Canada and France to govern fishing relations between Canada and France in the waters of Canada. France has historic rights that date back to 1763, I think it is, and the Treaty of Paris. There was a Liberal administration in office at that time. As a matter of fact, when this treaty was entered into the Secretary of State for External Affairs was the Hon. Mitchell Sharp. Believe me, it is this treaty that is at the nub of the problem that Canada has today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: It was only at the end of 1986 that, finally, the French metropolitan fleet no longer had the right to send trawlers into the Gulf of St. Lawrence, our own internal waters, to catch fish under the terms of that treaty. France, today, or St. Pierre and Miquelon, still have the right to send in 10 trawlers to fish in the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

As a result of the ending of the rights of the metropolitan fleet of France, some 17,000 tonnes of fish will come back to Canada this year, fish which can be caught by our own fishermen. This treaty says nothing about quotas. It sets no quotas. But if Canada and France do not agree on the amount of fish to be caught under the treaty, then the French have the right to go to compulsory arbitration if they disagree with the amount allotted by Canada. That is their right under this treaty.

In addition, under the terms of this treaty the metropolitan fleet of France has unquantified rights—unquantified rights—in the Canadian 200-mile zone, in perpetuity, to take fish. If Canada does not allot France a quota then it has the right to go to compulsory arbitration under the terms of this 1972 treaty to have a quota assigned to it. This is a treaty which has no termination date. It is a treaty which was entered into by the Liberal administration of the Government of Canada in 1972, a treaty that will bind us forever, unless the two parties can agree together to terminate it. Under Article 10 of the treaty there is a dispute settlement procedure.

In addition to the agreement of 1972 which governs our situation, there is a long-term agreement with the European Economic Community entered into when? It was entered into in 1982, again under a Liberal administration of the Government of Canada. This agreement is in effect from 1982 until 1987. Under the terms of it the Liberal Government gave a quota to the European Economic Community of 9,500 tonnes of 2J+3KL cod, cod which, today, is sacred to the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker).

Mr. Tobin: Watch your blood pressure, John.

Mr. Crosbie: Of the 9,500 tonnes, the EEC has allocated 7,200 tonnes to Germany, 1,545 tonnes to France and approximately 800 tonnes to England. Luckily for us, that treaty expires at the end of 1987. So let us put those facts in context. That is another Liberal treaty.

Finally, the last treaty I want to mention is an agreement or exchange of notes signed on June 20 and June 28, 1984, when Senator De Bané was Minister of Fisheries and Senator MacEachen—they have both gone to their rewards—was the Secretary of State for External Affairs. That was an exchange of notes in which Canada and France agreed that in this disputed area, known as 3PS, neither country would harass the ships of the other because this was a disputed zone. That is why today when France says it wants nine vessels licensed to fish in this disputed zone, 3PS, we license them.

Why do we license them? Because we want to establish, when this matter goes to arbitration, that it has been accepting licences from us over these intervening years and therefore appears to be submitting to the fact that we have some control or authority over these waters. That is why they get licensed.

In any event, under this exchange of notes we cannot prevent France from fishing in this area. France cannot prevent us from fishing in this area. We have the right to say what the quotas should be in this area. The quota set is 42,000 tonnes for this whole area. We have assigned 6,400 tonnes to France, which is really for St. Pierre and Miquelon, and 35,600 tonnes is available in that quota for Canadians. This is a quota which our scientists say can safely be caught in zone 3PS, the disputed zone.

But the French ignored and are ignoring now the quota. They will not accept the 6,400 tonnes. We cannot force them to accept it. If two sovereign states have a disagreement, they can either reach an agreement between themselves and resolve the disagreement or they can agree between themselves to go to arbitration and have a third party adjudicate the difference of opinion or the dispute and settle it that way. There is only one other way, a third way. That third way is that they go to war with one another. They can attempt to use armed force. One attempts to force the settlement he wants on the other.

There are three possible ways. I was dumbfounded tonight to hear the Leader of the NDP try to grandstand in this House by suggesting that recourse should be had to the third method, the use of force. He suggested that we had chased the Spanish trawler just a few months ago. He presumably meant by that that we should chase out the French trawlers. He suggested that we should use force.

Well, the difference is monumental between the two situations. Clearly, the Spanish trawler was in the Canadian 200-mile economic zone with no right, no claim of right to be there. It was violating international law. But in zone 3PS international law does not recognize as yet either French rights or our rights. So we have no right to chase the French vessels out. We will only have that right if we can get to arbitration, if the French will go to arbitration with us and an impartial third party sets the boundaries, decides what economic zone St. Pierre and Miquelon are entitled to as two small islands within the perimeter of continental Canada and Newfoundland and Labrador. If that occurs and an impartial third party sets the economic zone and the territorial limits of St. Pierre and Miquelon, then of course we could take action and we would have international law to back us up.

Is anyone in the House seriously suggesting—does the Newfoundland Government seriously suggest—that we should use armed force to settle this matter with France? No, they do not. Our adhesion to the United Nations would prevent us from doing so. No civilized state uses force against another civilized state in the present world today to settle these disputes. So we must have an agreement.

What stage are we at now? Up to the present time the Government of Newfoundland has been fully consulted in this matter. So has the industry and the union involved. There is a group of industry advisers, four from the union and the industry and one from the Government of Newfoundland, a group of five, that has been advising the Department of External Affairs and the Department of Fisheries and Oceans which has been consulted all through the piece, with the exception of last week. I for one am not au fait with, nor do I agree with, and I think the Government should apologize for, the lack of including these representatives in the discussions that went on in Paris last week.

• (2140)

Mr. Crosbie: It was unacceptable, as far as I am concerned. But that is a procedural matter.

Mr. Manly: It is more than a procedural matter.

Mr. Crosbie: I am making my view on that clear in the name of proper federal-provincial relations, and in following what has been done to date, these representatives should have been fully involved last week. That was an error. That is the position.

We are trying to get France, a nation of some 40 million or 50 million people, to go to arbitration on the question of St. Pierre and Miquelon. They feel no immediate compulsion to go to arbitration; it is not a pressing matter to them. It is a pressing matter to who? The fishermen of Newfoundland and Labrador, and to the fishermen of the maritime provinces it is a pressing matter. That is why we are anxious to get France to arbitration. But France knows that there is more compulsion on us to do this. They do not care about the fish resource off St. Pierre and Miquelon. They are prepared to sacrifice their own few thousand people in St. Pierre and Miquelon. They do not give a good continental about the people and the fishermen of St. Pierre and Miquelon.

We are doing this for the fishermen and the people of Newfoundland and Labrador, and trying to get this issue settled so we can stop this tragic overfishing in 3PS. A whole series of negotiations broke down in Ottawa in the week ending Friday, January 16. However, they started again last week. By the way, there was consultation. The Government of Newfoundland was informed that this meeting was going ahead, and what types of things might be agreed at the meeting, and they did not agree with it. They have the right to be consulted. They have the right to encourage. They have the right to discourage. They have the right to warn. But we are the Government of Canada that has the responsibility for the external relations of Canada, and we do not intend to abdicate our responsibility as a national Government. So, Mr. Speaker, they did warn. They did not agree with this particular process.

What agreement was reached? All that was reached was an agreement to negotiate. There is no agreement that France will even get a tadpole from 2J+3KL. What was agreed in Paris on Friday and Saturday was that France would engage in negotiations which would start before March 15 for the purpose of concluding an agreement to submit to compulsory third party settlement of the dispute of the maritime claims of the two countries off the coast of St. Pierre and Miquelon in Canada. In return, Canada would engage in negotiations to determine the annual fishing quotas for French vessels in Canadian waters for the period 1988-1991 inclusive while this arbitration is going on, and that those quotas will include cod quotas in NAFO Divisions 2J+3KL. In other words, we are prepared to discuss and engage in negotiations about that. There has been no agreement to do anything in 2J+3KL. There is nothing but an agreement to enter into negotiations.

The proof of that is in Premier Peckford's press release of January 27 where he points out that this is the case, that there is not a binding agreement to go to arbitration. While he is right there, he should not forget the other side of the coin. There is no binding agreement for us to give one codfish, or piece of one codfish in 2J+3KL to France. That is the exact position.

Supposing that we do reach an agreement with France some time between March and the end of the year, it will be an agreement that I will be able to defend in every hamlet and cove of Newfoundland and Labrador. It will be an agreement that I will not be afraid to go and defend in every hamlet and cove in Newfoundland and Labrador. For 20 years I have upheld the rights of the people of Newfoundland and Labrador, and I do not intend to cease now. I do not need lessons from anyone in that direction.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: The Premier of Newfoundland stated that he was displeased with the statement that I made yesterday on this matter. He says my statement that there is no agreement as to what these annual fishing quotas should be, that there is no agreement to give France any quota in 2J+3KL, is contrary to the agreement. I say that it is not contrary to the agreement. That is exactly in accord with the agreement. When the Premier says that he is displeased with me, I say that I conduct myself according to my conscience. Whether Premiers are displeased with me, or Prime Ministers are displeased with me, or opposition Members are displeased with me, I care not a twit, as long as I know that I am behaving in a proper fashion. I am prepared to go back to my own people and ask them whether they are pleased or displeased any time, against anyone, under any circumstance.

I have not too much time left, Mr. Speaker. The Government of Newfoundland and Labrador is making an outcry, and I am sympathetic with their outcry. The more they outcry the more likely it is that the firmer the people will be who are negotiating for us in this matter. I do not want an agreement that is not a good agreement for Canada. It is good for the people of Newfoundland and Labrador to show how they value the Northern Cod. It is our fishing industry, it is our life in Newfoundland the same as the wheat fields are the life of Saskatchewan, or oil and gas might be the life of Alberta. That is why the Government of Newfoundland and the industry and union representatives should never have been left out of this last week.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: It is good for the people of Newfoundland to show their concerns. But I tell the people of Newfoundland now, Mr. Speaker, their interests have and will be observed. There is no agreement damaging to them. I ask the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador, the Leader of the New Democratic Party, and the Leader of the Liberal Party to suggest to us how else they would go about resolving this question. It is all well and good to hear their rhetoric and what they would do, and the terrible things that we are doing when they left us, particularly the Official Opposition, the captive of these three international agreements.

Now the Member for Gander-Twillingate, and the others, have the audacity and the gall to stand up and decry what we are doing in our efforts to solve this situation to help the fishermen and the people of Newfoundland and Labrador. When this matter is concluded, and it is far from concluded, the agreement we reach, if there is an agreement reached, will be one that we can defend in Newfoundland and Labrador, and in every part of Canada, and I and my cohorts here in Newfoundland pledge that, and we will see that any agreement reached is in the interests of our fishermen in our province.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be here tonight to participate in this debate. I have to say at the outset that I am also saddened this evening. The importance to Newfoundlanders of the matter that is being discussed this evening is as important as the last great decision that was taken which affected our province.

That decision was taken in 1948 and 1949 when we decided to join Confederation.

During the course of the Confederation debate one evening in a rowdy chamber much like this one, a very famous, highly honoured Newfoundlander named Gordon Bradley, who was chairman of the commission that discussed Newfoundland's entry into Confederation, or possible joining with the United States, rose and said to Hon. Members who were assembled and were making a great deal of noise: "I remind Members that the eyes and the ears of the people of Newfoundland are upon us this evening." He went on to say: "They are watching us. They are weighing our every word. I warn Members that sometimes we try their patience much too far".

I want to say to the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) that this evening the eyes and ears of the people of Newfoundland were on him. They were watching him. They have been weighing his words. They wanted to know tonight, once and for all, whether or not the Hon. Member for St. John's West was Newfoundland's cabinet representative in Ottawa or Ottawa's apologist in Newfoundland. After this evening we know that the Member is Ottawa's apologist in Newfoundland. The Member cannot make up for in volume, like a wounded bear brawling and bawling, what he lacks in substance in participating in the debate tonight.

I should like to refer the House to a story which appeared in the Times Transcript on December 6 past. It reads:

> Three Atlantic fishermen's organizations told the federal Government in Ottawa Friday not to give in to threats made by France to cancel inter-governmental agreements if the fishing dispute surrounding St. Pierre and Miquelon is not settled to France's satisfaction.
> Gilles Theriault, executive-director of the Maritime Fisherman's Union, reminded Fisheries Minister Thomas Siddon that French cabinet minister Bernard Pons warned publicly that if the fishing dispute is not settled to their satisfaction, it could force the French Government to revise certain economic, cultural and co-operation agreements that exist between the two governments.

They warned that if the agreement was not settled to France's satisfaction, the French could potentially cancel the visit of French Prime Minister Jacques Chirac.

That is what was at stake in this dispute, whether or not the Prime Minister's chance to host the Francophone summit in Quebec City this September, the first time ever in our history, would be put at risk because the Government of Canada stood up for the interests of Newfoundlanders and Atlantic Canadians. That is what was at risk, and the Government of Canada ran with its tail between its legs.

I said that I was sad this evening. In all the years I have watched the Hon. Member for St. John's West in politics, I have not always agreed with him. However, I have always admired that he was prepared to stand and be counted. I want to know on what road the Hon. Member for St. John's West travelled since early this morning when he was on VOCM's open line show in Newfoundland and when he made his speech in the House tonight. The Hon. Member has undergone some kind of dramatic conversion.

This morning, speaking in Newfoundland and talking about the agreement which he defended tonight, the Hon. Member told the people of Newfoundland in respect of the lack of consultation given to the Government of Newfoundland, the union, and the other Atlantic provinces: "I can't see any legitimate defence of the fact that they were not present at this particular meeting, so I can well understand why they should be annoyed and upset with that". That was the Hon. Member speaking this morning in Newfoundland. What else did he say—

Mr. Forrestall: What did he say tonight?

Mr. Tobin: The Member should be quiet, should listen and learn. What else did he say this morning? He said: "Let's just say that those responsible for this are certainly insensitive to the importance of the issue in Newfoundland and Labrador". That is quite a different song than the one the Hon. Member for St. John's West sang in the House tonight.

What else did the Member say about this deal? Speaking on behalf of himself and his two Conservative colleagues from Newfoundland, what did he say about this deal this morning in Newfoundland in front of a different audience than the audience he addressed tonight in the House of Commons? What did he say? He said: "As you know, if we are to have as one of our objectives better and improved federal-provincial relations, which has been one of the hallmarks so far, this is hardly the way to go about it. So to say that the Newfoundland caucus, for example, is upset would be putting it very mildly".

I want to know what kind of placebo, what kind of salutory pill, or what kind of depressant was slipped to the Hon. Member for St. John's West between nine o'clock this morning in Newfoundland when he was outraged in defence of Newfoundlanders and tonight when he appeared in the House like a wounded bear braying in volume, attempting to make up for in volume what he lacks in integrity and backbone to defend the people of Newfoundland. That is what I want to know, and that is what Newfoundlanders want to know.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I know the Hon. Member is making a forceful speech on a matter of great importance to the Hon. Member and also, I think Hon. Members would know, of great importance to the Minister who has just spoken. I would caution the Hon. Member not to go too far in impugning the integrity, motivation, or honour of another Hon. Member.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I would much rather be standing tonight in the House and joining with my fellow Members of Parliament from Newfoundland and with Members of Parliament from Atlantic Canada to ensure that, as we were elected to do, we were representing the interests of our people and seeing a wrong put right. I would rather be standing as one in the pursuit of that goal. I would much rather not be standing here to try to dissemble this patently weak and disappointing defence of a sell-out which was mounted by a colleague of mine from Newfoundland. I would much rather not be doing that this evening. The interests of my region would be served if Members from Atlantic Canada were here and were being heard. That is why we were sent to Ottawa.

In understanding why we were sold down the river, I want to refer to some correspondence which was exchanged between the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) this past summer when Canada's negotiating position was being ironed out. A letter was written to the Prime Minister by the Minister of Fisheries on June 24, 1986, in which the Minister of Fisheries put forward Canada's negotiating position, outlined all the things at stake, and concluded by saying:

I want to assure you that my goal throughout will be to manage our fisheries discussions with the French in a manner that does not jeopardize the cordial relationship between Canada and France—

What did the Prime Minister say about that? What did the Prime Minister say about the livelihood of Newfoundland and the blood which beats through the heart that is Newfoundland? He responded on August 19, 1986 by writing:

I agree that in dealing with this sensitive issue, we must weigh on the one hand the interests of Canadian fishermen and fishing communities and on the other our bilateral relations with France.

Mr. Forrestall: What is wrong with that?

Mr. Tobin: What is wrong with that is that the Prime Minister has said that the fishery in Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, P.E.I., and northern Quebec is nothing but a bargaining chip to be used in setting cordial relations to facilitate cocktail parties between Prime Ministers of respective nations. That is not good enough in Newfoundland; that is what is wrong with that.

Mr. Forrestall: There is imputation of motive—

Mr. Tobin: What we have seen tonight is a Member, a cabinet representative, stand here—

Mr. Forrestall: Very serious charges—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) has been given the floor by the Speaker. During the debate most Hon. Members have listened, not always with great comfort, to what has been said by Members on both sides of the debate but have extended the courtesies which are usual in this Chamber. I would ask that all Hon. Members have regard for that.

Mr. Tobin: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for restoring order to the House. A Member would not have to speak so loudly if he did not have to speak over the sounds emanating, as unintelligent as they are, from the other side of the Chamber.

What has happened tonight? We have had an attempt by the Government of Canada, through the Hon. Member for St. John's West, to placate or to issue a placebo to the people of Newfoundland. He stood in his place and on the one hand issued a gentle slap to the wrist of the Minister of Fisheries, saying that he does not entirely agree that the Minister of Fisheries should have gone to France and dealt with our livelihood without consulting the Premier of Newfoundland. Then, to be sure that he was being properly balanced, as the letter said, "on the other" the Hon. Member for St. John's West went on to tell the Premier of Newfoundland that the Government of Canada has the right to make international agreements. It is not the jurisdiction of the Premier of Newfoundland, and he is not going to be bossed around by the Premier of Newfoundland. I am not in the habit of defending the Premier of Newfoundland because I don't find that attractive. But it is not only the Premier of Newfoundland who finds what has happened distasteful; it is the Conservative Premier of Nova Scotia, who is the Premier of the province of the Hon. Member across the way, the Conservative Premier who today said that this agreement will cost the Atlantic economy $200 million. That is what the Leader of the Hon. Member's Party in Nova Scotia has said, and walking away from the statement will not make it go away, Mr. Speaker.

It is also the Government of Prince Edward Island that finds this deal distasteful. The Government of New Brunswick, and the fishermen's unions in all of the Atlantic Provinces find this deal distasteful. For once, the Premier of Newfoundland, rather than being a voice in the wind, a lonely child putting forward a diatribe that is subscribed to by nobody, finds himself singing in chorus, in tune, with every other Premier and leader in Atlantic Canada. Surely then the Premier of Newfoundland deserves, as Premier, some consideration for the views he has put forth.

This has been a sad day for Parliament and a sad day for Newfoundland when one of our most prominent, one of our better known Members, one of our citizens, the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), when confronted with the choice that all of us face from time to time of standing up and being counted for Newfoundland, of being Newfoundland's voice in these hallowed halls, of being the apologist for Ottawa and Newfoundland, has chosen the latter course. That is a sad day, Mr. Speaker. It will not help the cause of those of us who want to see this deal abrogated.

Today in Question Period I rose in my place and said that the deal should be declared null and void, that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) should be fired because, failing that, the Government would put the Member for St. John's West in the impossible position of having no other recourse or option but to resign his seat in protest. I did not propose it. I suggested that he not be a victim, victim of the decisions of his Government. But tonight he has taken the knife in his hand and has exercised it on himself. It is not his commitment that is questioned by me, by Premier Peckford, by the Opposition Leader in Newfoundland, Leo Barry, or by Premier Buchanan. If he finds the breastplate of honour that he talked about tonight in this House tarnished, it is a wound that is self-inflicted by his performance this evening in this Chamber.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member for Humber—Port-au-Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) quoted from two letters. Would he be willing to table those letters in the House?

Mr. Speaker: I am sure that the Hon. Member will make the letters available to the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly), but there is no provision whereby a private Member can file a document in the House.

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister of External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in this emergency debate.

There are quite a few rumours going around about the agreement signed in Paris on Saturday, January 24, which is aimed at bringing Canada and France closer to the settlement of a boundary dispute and a dispute concerning fishing activities.

I would like to go back to the causes of the disputes, but first I want to say a few words about this agreement, under which both parties are committed to negotiating two new treaties and to setting dates for the start and finish of negotiations. This is an important point that may have been overlooked in all the commotion that followed the release of the news.

Mr. Speaker, I want to stress that the French have not been offered any quotas of Canadian fish that were not first approved by the industry and provincial representatives at meetings held in Ottawa the week before we left for Paris.

The quotas on which agreement was reached were those established with the industry and the provinces, namely, 3,500 tons of cod in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and 3,000 tons of excess cod in NAFO division 2GH off the northernmost part of the Labrador coast. The 3,500 tons of cod in the Gulf represent average landings by Saint-Pierre et Miquelon fishing boats over the last six years in the Gulf. This approach represents the status quo, a solution Canada has been constantly suggesting to France, with the approval of the provinces and the industry. The 3,000 tonnes of 2GH cod off the coast of Labrador, far to the north, are surplus to Canada's needs and according to Government, industry and provincial advisers, constitute a reasonable offer for 1987 to break the deadlock.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Paris agreement was to break a deadlock that was threatening to become a serious obstacle to settlement of the boundary dispute between Canada and France with respect to territory off the south coast of Newfoundland. A settlement is absolutely necessary to establish Canada's control over cod stocks in the region and to stop over-fishing by French vessels. We have broken the deadlock, and the door is now open to negotiations on the two treaties I mentioned earlier, and a negotiated settlement of the boundary dispute and the question of French quotas in Canadian waters for the next four years.

The inclusion of a clause stipulating that quotas to be negotiated with France for the period from 1988 to 1991 would include cod quotas from divisions 2J+3KL of NAFO, in other words, the areas off the east cost and the north coast of Newfoundland and Labrador, has created considerable confusion.

I think we should first understand what the agreement means. Mr. Speaker, this agreement means first of all that the Canadian Government agrees with what France has been repeating for a year, which is that it will not accept the proposed quotas for 1988 to 1991. Consequently, the boundary dispute will not be referred to an international tribunal until the proposed quotas have been changed to include codstock from NAFO divisions 2J+3KL.

As I said before, the French have been insisting on this for a long time. Up to now, we have been able to evade the issue while trying to persuade France to accept 1988-91 quotas that would not include cod stock from divisions 2J+3KL. We now realize, and we admitted as much to the French, that they want to retain their position, and as a result, if we wish to settle this boundary dispute, we will have to grant them cod quotas from divisions 2J+3KL.

We should also realize what is not provided in the agreement. Under the Paris Agreement, the Canadian Government is not bound to offer or to agree to offer the French a given quantity of cod from divisions 2J+3KL, if we do not first agree on quotas for 1988-91. French demands may be too excessive for us to be able to agree on quotas for the period from 1988 to 1991. Consequently, referral of the dispute to an international judicial tribunal would merely postpone a settlement, which is not something we desire.

It is also possible that the question is not referred to an international tribunal for some time. Everything, I repeat, everything is negotiable. Nothing has been concluded with respect to the period from 1988 to 1991. Any quotas that may be offered to France within the framework of an agreement for the period in question will be subject to in-depth consultation with the industry and the provincial governments at all stages of negotiations.

That is the Paris Agreement in a nutshell. The Agreement contains a number of auxiliary provisions, including the following: Pursuant to the agreement, until 1987 vessels from St. Pierre and Miquelon will be allowed to continue fishing in areas immediately surrounding the Gulf of St. Lawrence where they have been operating for several years, contrary to the 1972 agreement under which Canada's fishing activities are restricted to a zone which lies within the Gulf of St. Lawrence. This is a kind of status quo position taken by the Canadian Government.

Finally, the agreement provides that scientists of both countries will meet soon to assess cod stocks south of Newfoundland and the impact continued overfishing by the French might have on these stocks. Hopefully this joint study will produce concrete evidence likely to prompt the French Government to review its overfishing policy and reduce its fishing activities to prevent total stock depletion.

Mr. Speaker, I know that people are very disappointed and that many criticisms are being voiced because nothing has been done under the terms of the agreement to prevent France from overfishing on such a wide scale in waters south of Newfoundland. It is indeed a serious problem. There is no doubt that French fishermen catch about 26,000 tonnes of cod a year—at least 20,000 tonnes over the 6,400-tonne quota which Canada allotted to them in this zone and which amounts to a fair share of the stock traditionally earmarked for France.

Unfortunately, the Government of Canada can do nothing for the time being to reduce this overfishing. We cannot exercise coercion, even if the area is ours, because France claims that a sizeable portion of this zone belongs to its territory. Furthermore, our mutual agreement to refrain from enforcing the rules is the usual approach taken by countries in such situations to avoid any military confrontation that might endanger the fishing fleet at sea.

Since coercion cannot be used, we have done our best to convince the French that their activities off the south coast of Newfoundland are unreasonable ant that their overfishing represents a threat to the livelihood of both Newfoundland and Saint-Pierre-et-Miquelon fishermen who depend on the same stock. These arguments met with no success. The French refused out of hand to reduce their fishing in this area. We know that their own compatriots, the fishermen from Saint-Pierre et Miquelon, have asked for a reduction in fishing by the French fleet and that the French Government has ignored their appeals.

We have not offered and will not offer them the fish they want in sensitive areas like 2J+3KL, to persuade them to reduce overfishing off the south coast of Newfoundland.

We cannot and will not be blackmailed. We shall continue to put pressure on France and demand that it reduce excessive fishing activity off the south coast of Newfoundland and bring its catches down to the fair quota of 6,400 tonnes set by Canada for France in that zone. We shall continue to support the efforts of the people of Saint-Pierre-et-Miquelon to persuade the French Government to take the requested action and we shall reiterate these requests during negotiations from 1988 to 1991 on French quotas in Canadian waters.

Mr. Speaker, we shall not cave on this issue, not in 1987 and not from 1988 to 1991, but we firmly believe that the only way to achieve a final settlement and ensure that a reasonable conservation system is set up for the zones off the south coast of Newfoundland is to settle the boundary dispute in that region. We believe that an international tribunal will confirm Canada's position on the location of the boundary and establish that all major fishing areas come under Canadian jurisdiction and management. Such a ruling will make it possible to eliminate the problem of French overfishing off the south coast of Newfoundland.

Mr. Speaker, we must ask all those for whom fishing by the French in Canadian waters is a crucial issue to be patient and to give us their trust. The Government realizes how important the fisheries are to the people of Atlantic Canada, and we are fully aware that we owe nothing to France or to any country. Although we have certain obligations under agreements concluded with France, and we intend to observe those, the agreements concern fish quotas that are much lower than what France is demanding now. We are forced to make concessions that go beyond the obligations provided for in the agreements in order to be able to bring the boundary question before an international tribunal. Once that question has been resolved, the quotas granted France in Canadian waters will be strictly in accordance with our obligations under the 1972 agreement.

Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of my speech I alluded to the history of this whole question. In fact, our present problem is only one phase, in fact the lastest phase in a long process that started about 400 years ago when Canada was colonized and the French fishing fleet started to work the Northwest Atlantic. During that time, the fisheries gave rise to a number of disputes. The problems arose and were resolved. Treaties were negotiated and later replaced by other agreements.

The latest phase goes back to the end of the sixties when the Government of Canada decided to close the Gulf of St. Lawrence to all foreign fishing fleets, including the French. It was this decision that led to the 1972 fisheries agreement between Canada and France. An important step was taken in 1986 when, in accordance with the agreement, the French metropolitan fishing fleet left the waters of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, never to return.

Mr. Speaker, we must now deal with the repercussions of this decision, since the French, during the fifteen years they were allowed, failed to establish a development plan for their fleet after it left the Gulf. We must now deal with the fallout from this decision, settle the boundary dispute and determine once and for all what real rights France has under the 1972 Agreement.

Mr. Speaker, all this will take a few more years, but I am convinced that, thanks to the Paris Agreement, we are well on our way to resolving all these problems.

[English]

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, in this debate I am not promoting myself as an expert on the Newfoundland fishery. What I do want the people of Newfoundland to understand is that a person from central Canada, from a land-locked riding with no fishery at all, understands and is sensitive to the fact that they have one major resource. I do not bring to this debate the expertise of my hon. friends from Gander—Twillingate or Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe. They have much more knowledge, experience and understanding of the history and sensitivity of the people of Newfoundland to the fishery. However, what I do understand is common sense. I understand the sensitivity of the issue because my riding depends on one resource, nickel. I know how I would feel if the federal Government gave away that resource. How would I feel if nickel were given away to the U.S. or France or some other European power? I know how I would feel, so when I speak in this debate tonight it is from that perspective and understanding.

Tonight in Newfoundland there is great upset and anger.

Mr. McCurdy: Justified anger.

Mr. Rodriguez: Yes, justified anger. I at least recognize that these people understand the fishery. The fishermen are outraged. The Government of Newfoundland, which in a lot of ways is not my favourite kind of Government, God knows, it is a Tory Government, at least knows what is in the best interests of the fishery and Newfoundland. It was elected to look after those interests. It has the mandate. I recognize that the people who run the fishing industry in Newfoundland understand the industry and they are extremely upset at the Government.

What does this say to Canadians in the rest of the country? The signing of this interim agreement speaks volumes to Canadians. It says that the Government negotiated on this issue with the French in the same way it negotiated with the Americans on softwood lumber. In that particular instance the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) said she was eyeball to eyeball with the Americans and they blinked three times. In this instance the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) was eyeball to eyeball with the French and I think he blinked four times. Four times! What did we get out of it? It is not for me to start enumerating what Canada and the French got out of it. The people who know most about the issue, the fishermen, the industry and the Government of Newfoundland, said "We got hosed on the deal".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: I suppose we are pretty lucky we did not have the Minister for International Trade doing the negotiations from the beaches of Hawaii.

An Hon. Member: He was there.

Mr. Rodriguez: Yes, he was right there in the same room with them. That is, after he put everyone else out of the room.

What does this interim agreement say to Newfoundlanders? It says that the Tory Government is saying to the people of Newfoundland, "We do not care two figs about you". After all, that is the same Government which paid Claude Forget $800 a day plus expenses to say that fishermen ought not to get UIC. That is the same sensitive Government. It is significant that Uncle John got on an open-line radio show after Claude Forget brought down his report and said: "Brothers and sisters of Newfoundland, just stay calm, we will never put this into effect".

Mr. Benjamin: John who?

Mr. Rodriguez: The godfather of Newfoundland. He said, "We are not going to put this into effect". Look what happened today. They are even starting to put him on the payroll at radio station VOCM. They think he is on staff because he is in there all the time. There he was again today. What was he saying today? He was saying what an insensitive group of people his cabinet colleagues are. That is what he said, they are insensitive.

Mr. Dingwall: He meant to say incompetent.

Mr. Rodriguez: It goes without saying that if you are insensitive and you are a Tory, you are also incompetent.

What took place today with this interim agreement? We gave fishing rights to France that they never had before. What did we get in return? We got the right to negotiate an agreement. That is what we got! This reminds me of a person in his house at night. He hears a burglar downstairs and goes down. The burglar is taking the cutlery. He says "Take the cutlery and here is the VCR, take that too. Take the TV. Take everything. Take it all".

Mr. McCurdy: Then we will negotiate what you can keep.

Mr. Rodriguez: Then let him go right out the door. That is the Tory version of negotiations.

They can laugh all they want but they missed a golden opportunity to climb back up in the polls. They could have had their own Falklands. They could have called out the fleet. They missed their chance again.

The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans stood up in this House today and said there was unanimity in Cabinet.

Mr. Prud'homme: He is not even here.

Mr. Rodriguez: After that speech he worked himself up so much he had to go out to the radio station. He has an appointment. Unanimity in Cabinet on this deal. That means all of those cabinet Ministers agreed with this interim agreement. They do not care about the people of Newfoundland. The one natural resource which those people brought into Confederation was the fishery. In one stroke of the pen the Government allowed the French fleet to fish more fish off the coast of Newfoundland than all the Canadian fishermen can fish.

Mr. O'Neil: Not true.

Mr. Rodriguez: Get up and make a speech.

Mr. O'Neil: Not true.

Mr. Rodriguez: You will get your chance to make a speech.

Mr. O'Neil: Deal with the facts.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is what happened. I asked myself this question. I have been told that the Government of Newfoundland, the Premier of Newfoundland, the fishermen and the industry were all involved in the negotiations. The agreement with France, which was signed in 1972, came to an end in May, 1986. I wonder why the Premier of Newfoundland, the fishermen and the industry were suddenly cut out of the negotiations in December when it came down to the short strokes.

• (2230)

I understand that the Government wanted to have something for the Premier of France to sign. It wanted to roll out the red carpet, have some champagne, and then have a photo opportunity for His Majesty, the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney). The Government wanted great pomp and ceremony, in Napoleonic style, for the signing of this agreement. Newfoundland had made it quite clear that the French fleet was not to have any access to the northern cod stocks. That position was made very clear to the Government. Therefore, the whole idea was to cut the trouble makers out and have a nice little cabal with the Department of External Affairs and the French negotiators. The Government had a nice little tête-à-tête, a little wine, a little music and, peut-être, a little bit of amour. In the process the people of Newfoundland were shafted in spades.

Mr. McCurdy: I would be embarrassed to be a Conservative.

Mr. Forrestall: I would be ashamed to be one of you.

Mr. Rodriguez: These are the same Tories who were so critical of federal-provincial relations during the Trudeau era. They were to begin a new era. We have seen the new era in the agreement that has been signed.

Mr. O'Neil: It is not an agreement. Produce the agreement.

Mr. Rodriguez: The Conservatives do not give two hoots about involving the leadership in Newfoundland in the fisheries. As far as the Conservatives are concerned, the leadership of Newfoundland does not count. The Tories have three seats in Newfoundland and the people of Newfoundland will give them a lesson in the next federal election.

Mr. O'Neil: You have never been on a boat. You wouldn't know a fish if you slipped on one.

Mr. Forrestall: Stop playing politics.

Mr. Rodriguez: They are all upset, Mr. Speaker. They ought to explain this to Newfoundlanders. As a result of this deal we got better relations with France. I heard the French negotiator on TV tonight. He was not upset at all. He loved the deal. He was asked whether he thought this would stop the overfishing by the French fleet. He said, "No, we have always considered those waters French waters". Big deal, Mr. Speaker. Tough negotiations.

Mr. O'Neil: There is no deal.

Mr. Forrestall: If you don't know what you are talking about, you should sit down and shut up.

Mr. Rodriguez: What has happened here, Mr. Speaker? Why did the Government eliminate the interested parties from the negotiations? As I have said before, it was the Prime Minister's desire to have a showpiece and a photo opportunity. I believe that a second reason is that the Conservative Party has lost touch with the grass roots of this nation. A headline in the Montreal Gazette says that Ottawa sold out the fishermen. However, the Government did not sell out the Newfoundland fishermen at all, it was a giveaway, just as the Government gave away the softwood lumber.

The Premier of Newfoundland is not a New Democrat or a Liberal. He is one of these Tories. In fact, he is so upset that he said: "Apparently when France rattles its sword, Canada bends its knees. It's a terrible situation and they did it behind our backs". We are once again on our knees to make a deal. The Government has all the flexibility of an octopus. It has a wishbone where its backbone should be. Instead of standing up for Canadian rights, the Government has surrendered. It did it on softwood lumber and has done it again with this interim agreement.

Richard Cashin, the head of the fishermen's union in Newfoundland, said that the Tories at the federal level have sold out the interests of the Newfoundland fishermen. If the Government had any self-respect left it would tear up that interim agreement, accord, or whatever they want to call it. That is the only way the Tory Government can attempt to get back into the good graces of the people of Newfoundland.

Mr. Morrissey Johnson (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, after listening to the remarks from both sides of the House this evening the only thing on which I have heard total agreement is that there is extensive overfishing by France off the south coast of Newfoundland, St. Pierre and Miquelon. That is the only thing that has been agreed upon by all Parties this evening.

I wonder how serious opposition Members are about wanting to protect the rights and interests of Candian fishermen to allow them to take more fish to feed the fish plants and give more work to the fish plant workers than they are presently getting. It seems to me that there is great fear on the part of Liberal Members that the Government might be successful in negotiating an agreement with the Government of France. Otherwise, they would be telling us to get on with the negotiations in an attempt to stop the overfishing that is happening off the south coast of Newfoundland. I could say the same thing about the NDP Party. They should also be encouraging the Government—

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, the name of this Party is the New Democratic Party, not the NDP Party. I would suggest that Members of the House at least show that much respect.

Mr. Fennell: He is not in his seat.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member who just rose on a point of order knows that Hon. Members are not recognized unless they are in their seat.

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I apologize if I have offended my colleagues from the New Democratic Party. I remind them that this is the Progressive Conservative Party but I do not object when they refer to me as a Tory.

Mr. Benjamin: The same difference.

Mr. Johnson: I did not heckle anyone when they were speaking this evening, because this is a very sensitive issue in Newfoundland. I believe it is far more sensitive than some Members realize.

The reason that this issue is emotional and that there is such an outcry from people in Newfoundland today is that they are afraid. They are afraid that the Government will do what past Governments have done and give away some of the fish stocks that are so vitally important to the people of Newfoundland.

Mr. Benjamin: Which is what you have done.

Mr. Johnson: That is not what we have done. We have agreed to negotiate. If the Government cannot reach a settlement that is favourable to the people of Newfoundland and Canada, then there will be no agreement.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Johnson: I certainly will not agree to anything that I believe is not in the best interests of the province that I represent, and represent proudly, I might say. I want to assure Hon. Members here tonight that I am not a slave to my Party. I only have obligations to the people who placed their confidence in me when they elected me to come here and represent them. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, and all Members of the Chamber that I will not be satisfied if the agreement that is negotiated is not good for Newfoundland.

We must ask ourselves why Canada has the objective of referring the boundary dispute off the south coast of Newfoundland to an international judicial tribunal for settlement. The answer is easy. Intensive negotiations have been going on since the extension of jurisdiction by Canada and France in 1977. We all realize that St. Pierre and Miquelon are part of France just as Newfoundland is part of Canada. I will not suggest that the French do not have any rights. The fact is that the Government of France is not even concerned about the people of St. Pierre and Miquelon because it is sending its metropolitan fleet to raid the fishing grounds on which its own citizens who live on St. Pierre and Miquelon are vitally dependent. If this Government's initiative can settle the agreement with France to the benefit of Newfoundland, it will also benefit the people of St. Pierre and Miquelon.

Today I heard talk about gunboats, armed patrol boats and so on. During his speech, the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) asked if we are supposed to declare war. We would not declare war because we are too sensible. What are the alternatives? What would members of the New Democratic Party do if they were negotiating on behalf of a union? Would they attempt to arrive at a settlement without talking? When there is a dispute between a company and a labour organization they must sit down and exchange views over the table to hopefully strike an agreement. I believe that is what the Government is attempting to achieve here.

Certainly I have concerns and worries that if this goes to arbitration we may not be as successful as we hope. However, what other recourse is there if we cannot reach an agreement through negotiation?

We are aware of the delays involved before a judgment is rendered when ordinary Canadians go to court. It would not be sensible to expect a settlement before four years if we considered taking this dispute before a world court. That is why the Government has entered into these negotiations.

Earlier, the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) said that we have negotiated away 2J+3KL. That has not been negotiated away, according to what I have seen. We have only agreed to discuss the matter.

The industry and the Government of Newfoundland are aware what happened when the French delegation was in Newfoundland some time ago. I would be the first to express my dissatisfaction with the fact that toward the end of last week communications somehow broke down and the Newfoundland Government and the industry were not completely informed about the progress made by the delegation that went to France to begin negotiations at least. However, that fact cannot change. If I happen to say something in anger about a friend, no matter how many times I apologize the words are said and we do not have the ability to take them back.

The fact is that communication broke down during two or three days, which has resulted in an outcry from Newfoundland. I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I would be disappointed in Newfoundlanders and in the Premier of the province if they were not outraged. I am outraged as well, and expressed as much to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) and the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski). But that is the benefit in belonging to the Progressive Conservative Party. We are not enslaved. We can speak out.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Johnson: I can go to Newfoundland and say that I disagree with what my Party is doing in government. That is freedom and democracy. No one from my Party has ever told me since I came here not to speak up on an issue.

I could take more time to talk about the different zones involved in this issue. It has become so complicated that we can no longer simply refer to the East Coast, West Coast or Gulf of St. Lawrence, but must describe them by names and numbers. Perhaps that would have been unnecessary if our fishing grounds were not raped years and years ago. Fish stocks would still be abundant and available to everyone. The fact is we do not have enough fish to meet our own domestic demands. That is why I am concerned. It is not satisfactory to me to bargain away any of 2J+3KL fish to the French, but we have to ask ourselves if that is the only alternative to stop the overfishing on the St. Pierre Bank, or what is now called 3PS. And if industry and the provinces agree, then we might have to make a sacrifice—and if we have to make a sacrifice, no matter how small it is, it will be too much as far as I am concerned—so we can ensure the fish stocks on the St. Pierre Bank.

At one time the draggers from Burin could go out and the fishermen would not even have a chance to get their rubber clothes off before they were back with a load. That was at a time long gone, but the same thing cannot be said for today. But if we have to make some concessions, and if it is agreed to by the Government of Newfoundland and the Governments of the other Atlantic Provinces, and by the fishermen—in other words, if it is satisfactory to the people of Canada—then I believe it is wrong for the Opposition to do what it is doing. I realize that the Opposition has a role to play and that role is to attack the Government, but somewhere along the line our responsibilty to the people who elected us must come first. That is the reason I say that members of the Opposition should not condemn the Government for everything it tries to do. Opposition Members can say: "What you did was not good enough. We wish you had done better", but they should not condemn just for the sake of condemning. I do not think that is the role of a good opposition Member. But maybe I am wrong. I do not know. I have never been in opposition and I am not looking forward to it, either. Because of what I believe in I can go back and face the people in my riding with the same dignity with which I came here.

The French have taken the position that they will not agree to refer the boundary dispute to an international tribunal in the absence of an agreement on French quotas in Canadian waters for the period from 1988 to 1991, the period required for an international tribunal to determine the boundaries. I am sure that if we were the people seeking jurisdiction over an island belonging to Canada off the coast of France, we would take the same position. That does not mean that the agreement which was signed last week in France is binding on the Government to give fish to France in 2J+3KL. I think members of the Opposition owe it to the people of Newfoundland to enlighten them and tell them the fish are not being given away, it is only up for negotiation in the hope of getting a better deal from the French on their overfishing on the St. Pierre Bank, better known as 3PS.

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the speech given by the Hon. Member for Bonavista—Trinity—Conception (Mr. Johnson). I must say there is no doubt in my mind that the Hon. Member, in his remarks this evening, was quite sincere. That Hon. Member has always demonstrated to this House and to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Oceans that he is quite sincere. However, the Hon. Member is on the government side. I was amused to hear him say he was never in the Opposition. Well, I can tell the Hon. Member, as nice a person as he is, that if the Government continues to make decisions like this, the decision it made on the softwood lumber and other decisions it has made since it became the Government, the Hon. Member will never be in the Opposition. He will never be back in Government. He will not be elected.

One must look at how this situation affects the livelihood of the people in Atlantic Canada, especially those people in the Province of Newfoundland. The fishery, as we all know, Mr. Speaker, is the lifeblood of the people of Newfoundland. That is what they brought to Canada at Confederation. Their past has been the fishery. For the Government and this Minister to make a deal such as this and to have issued licences for nine factory freezer trawlers in 3PS for the metropolitan fleet from France to fish in Canadian waters, is totally intolerable.

Mr. Crosbie: It is your treaty. Come on. Be honest.

Mr. Henderson: It is not our treaty at all.

Mr. Crosbie: Yes, absolutely.

Mr. Henderson: The factory freezer trawlers were no part of our treaty and the Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) knows that, if he wants to be fair. It has nothing to do with the treaty of the past Government.

I must tell the Minister that if he knew anything about the fishing industry at all, he would know the difference between a factory freezer trawler and a wet fish trawler. Exactly the same comparison would be between a Volkswagen and a bus.

Mr. Baker: The Speaker knows.

Mr. Henderson: Yes, the Speaker knows full well.

Mr. Baker: He can give lessons to the present Minister.

Mr. Henderson: There is no question about that. These are very large vessels. They are floating factories. For this Minister to register and licence nine of those vessels to come into Canadian waters just so the Minister, and especially the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), could have some sort of cozy agreement later on with France on other issues, is disgraceful.

Let us look at this agreement, which everyone says is no agreement, and I agree it is not an agreement as such. It is possibly an agreement to negotiate. I do not even see where there is any stipulation by France, even after being given all these rights, that it has even to sit down and negotiate.

It was announced that Canada and France have agreed that the dispute be submitted for binding settlement by an international judicial tribunal subject to the negotiation of a treaty before the end of 1987. What is this negotiation of a treaty before the end of 1987? It is negotiation on the composition of the tribunal and its terms of reference. If they can get that settled, the negotiations will possibly start by March 15, 1987. Canada and France have also undertaken to negotiate before 1987 interim fisheries arrangements for French vessels in Canadian waters for the years 1988-91. It is not only this they are giving away, but they are starting to negotiate an agreement on something from 1988 to 1991, if they can get an agreement to negotiate. It is very confusing, extremely confusing. There is a paragraph at the very bottom of page 1 of this fancy news release from the Government of Canada and the two Ministers. They are the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon). It states:

The two Ministers noted that solid scientific information is the first step toward resolving the overfishing problem.

I ask Hon. Members if they have ever heard anything as silly as that? They have already said that the French have been overfishing by something in the order of 20,000 tonnes. They have been overfishing the quota that was set by the scientists.

On page 2 of this document it states:

The rights of vessels from Metropolitan France to fish in the Gulf of St. Lawrence expired in May 1986 under the provisions of the 1972 Canada/France Fisheries Treaty.

This is the treaty that was signed by the Liberal Government. But it expired in 1986. So what are they talking about? Up until 1985 there had been no overfishing. We know the reason why there was no overfishing. It is because we used to board the vessels. We used to protect our fishery.

On this very subject I would like to quote a question to the then Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Hon. Mark MacGuigan, as reported in Hansard for March 23, 1982, at page 15719. This was a question asked by the Hon. Member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) who is still a Member here, at least for the time being. He asked:

Madam Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I would like to ask the Minister what transpired between Canada and France while two French trawlers were hiding out in St. Pierre following orders from Canadian fisheries authorities to report to St. John's, Newfoundland, for alleged violations of our Canadian Fisheries Protection Act. Will the Minister table copies of the diplomatic exchange which took place between our two countries?

The Minister replied:

Madam Speaker, on Sunday, March 14, Canadian fisheries officers boarded two French fishing vessels in Canadian waters off the coast of Newfoundland and found that their log books had underreported their catches. The vessels initially refused to comply with orders to report to a Canadian port for inspection. Instead, they went to St. Pierre.

Following representations to the French authorities, the vessels proceeded to Halifax where charges are in the process of being laid.

In other words, this was a Government which knew how to negotiate.

Mr. Crosbie: You turkeys, you were the ones who got us into this problem.

Mr. Henderson: Do you know why it knew how to negotiate, Mr. Speaker? Because it negotiated from a position of strength. It was not a weak-kneed Government like this Government.

Mr. Crosbie: You turkeys got us into this.

Mr. Henderson: Yet this Government says that we should give the nose of Grand Banks to the Americans. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker), so eloquently spelled that out earlier this evening.

Mr. Crosbie: That is the first time that he has ever spoken up. Where was he in 1984? Where was he in 1972?

Mr. Henderson: The Government says give everything else to the French, or to the Americans. With respect to the softwood lumber it has said: "Give it to them. Give it to them". With respect to excise tax and codfish, I remember asking the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) when he was the acting Minister of Fisheries if he would intervene and have the Prime Minister intervene in the great Shamrock Summit so that the United States would start to listen and not impose a duty. Oh yes, they would do everything at that Shamrock Summit. He said: "You can depend on the Prime Minister". What happened? On salt cod an 18 per cent duty was levied. That is the type of nonsense that is going on with the Government. Those are the kinds of negotiations it is entering into. It is no wonder that any country can come in and take our fish because the Government will not stand up to them. It immediately puts up the white flag.

A little bit further on in the press release from which I have been reading it states:

The French will also receive in 1987 fishing allocations in Canadian waters outside the Gulf in accordance with obligations under the 1972 Canada/France Treaty and under a separate fisheries treaty between Canada and the European Economic Community.

That is the treaty which expired in May, 1986. The press release goes on:

These allocations are included in the 1987 Atlantic Groundfish Management Plan and total approximately 15,600 tonnes of various species, the same as in 1986.

Let us take a look at what those species are. Let us take a look at what this quota entails. This is the quota that was given to the EEC and taken by the Germans up until last year. That is the same quota that was supposed to come back to our Canadian fisheries. In fact, it was supposed to come back to the fishermen of Newfoundland and Nova Scotia. That is what was given to France. Of course, 6,400 tonnes of cod was also included in the zone 3PS which Canada has established as a French quota for this stock. Mr. Speaker, did you ever hear the likes of it?

The press release goes on:

The level of the cod allocation for St. Pierre and Miquelon in the Gulf of St. Lawrence is an exception to the government's policy against non-surplus cod allocations to foreign fleets, as it is greater than what Canada's legal obligations require under the 1972 Canada-France treaty.

The treaty expired in May, 1986, but the Government still goes along with that and is even giving more. But it does not have to give anything.

The fishermen of the great islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon are asking Canada to live up to its obligations and kick the metropolitan fleet out of the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

Mr. St. Germain: You guys allowed them in there.

Mr. Henderson: There is a Member who does not know anything about fish. He obviously does not know anything about Atlantic Canada or he would not be talking the way he is talking. The first large trawlers that were in the gulf were brought in under the former Government of the present Secretary of State for External Affairs in 1979, with the support of the former Member for St. John's East, who is now the Lieutenant-Governor of Newfoundland.

Mr. Baker: And we know what happened to that Government.

Mr. Henderson: We know what happened. He got his reward. Obviously, the French metropolitan fleet is getting its reward for its overfishing which it does in a careless and reckless way. Its reward is 20,000 tonnes more fish. That is unbelievable. This is all in the name of good bilateral relations.

It is easy to understand why the people of Newfoundland are frustrated. I can understand it very well. They have to sit on their wharves and watch their fish leave their waters on vessels flying foreign flags. I can understand why they would be frustrated, especially when, in many parts of northeastern Newfoundland, they cannot catch enough fish to give them 10 weeks for their unemployment stamps. This Government knows that. The Government knows that as a result of a great deal of prodding by the good Liberal Members of Parliament from Newfoundland who prodded the Government time and time again to put some sort of program in place for Newfoundlanders so that they could make up between six and ten weeks to get unemployment stamps to carry on through the winter. That is what this Government calls constructive internationalism. It is unbelievable.

The old bad days have returned. We are going back to the future of the wild west. Winston Churchill termed this sort of a situation a sheep in sheep's clothing. That describes the Minister exactly. He is a wolf in sheep's clothing. It is so easy for the French to come over and pull the wool down over his eyes.

I sympathize with the Hon. Member for St. John's West because I know that he does not agree with this agreement, or with the fact that the Government did not consult with the Province of Newfoundland in the last number of days. Obviously, they did not consult with him when this decision was made. If they had consulted with him, and he had expressed his feelings about this agreement as eloquently as he did tonight, the Government would have had one of two choices: for the Minister to be removed, or the Hon. Member for St. John's West. The Government would have had no other alternative to stay and support a policy like that.

I know that the Hon. Member for St. John's West knows the fishery, because he is a former Minister of Fisheries in Newfoundland. I know he knows a bit about the fishery. I know that he knows Newfoundlanders. I cannot believe that he would come here and sing one song in Cabinet and sing another song back home. I know that the Minister would not do that. Therefore, this Government did not consult.

I remember very well when the Government took office that it discussed the consultative process and this great new relationship with the provinces which was going to be so good that no more would there be any divisions and differences in policy between the provincial and federal Governments and industry. Consultation with the Government is leading the people on and then telling them at the very end what they will do, and going about and doing it without any respect whatsoever for the consultative process.

I could go on for a while longer, but I have a number of colleagues who wish to speak on this resolution. I move a motion pursuant to Standing Order 9(4)(a):

That the House continue to sit after 12 o'clock midnight for the purpose of considering the adjournment motion now under consideration.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Those Members who object will please rise in their places.

And fewer than 25 Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There not being 25 Members rising in objection to the motion, according to the provisions of Standing Order 9(4)(b), the motion is deemed to be carried.

Motion (Mr. Henderson) agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme).

Mr. Prud'homme: I wish to register for Hansard that the reason there are not 25 Members to object is because there are not enough people present.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Shall we resume the debate? On debate, the Hon. Member for Burin—St. George's (Mr. Price).

Mr. Joe Price (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): I rise tonight to speak with some regret, frustration, and considerable mixed feelings. I have some regret because of the turmoil that this particular issue has created in my province. This agreement, this issue, and the irresponsible comments of some people has raised apprehension in the minds of people in the Province of Newfoundland.

The issue before us tonight is a very difficult and complex issue. For a number of years, governments have tried to resolve this issue with no degree of success. Acting in good faith, the Government has made a bold attempt to resolve this issue in the best interests of Canadians, and in particular in the best interests of Newfoundlanders. That attempt has generated a great degree of apprehension and controversy within my province. I very much regret that.

When the people of Burin—St. George's elected me, they gave me a trust on their behalf to protect the livelihood of their fishery. The events of the past few days have been very difficult for me, and for those people who have put trust in me. They are asking the question why. This agreement struck between the Government of Canada and the Government of France is found to be unacceptable in certain respects by the people of the province, and in some respects it is unacceptable to me.

Before I get into any great detail on this item of controversy, I wish to remind the House why the Government of Canada entered into these negotiations. We do indeed have a serious and deteriorating situation with respect to the French claims and subsequent overfishing in the area known as 3PS. Incidentally, this area lies directly south of my riding. It is an area which contains fish stocks that are very important to the fishing industry, particularly the inshore fishing industry of the riding of Burin—St. George's, and more particularly the area of Fortune Bay and the Burin Peninsula.

There have been ongoing negotiations since 1977 between the two jurisdictions of Canada and France. Those negotiations have been over the claims made by both countries as to which country owns the waters off the south coast of Newfoundland surrounding the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon. The negotiations have centred around where the boundary should lie. That has been going on since 1977 and we have come nine years into that process. We recognize at this point in our history that we have not been able to successfully negotiate a boundary settlement that is acceptable to the Province of Newfoundland, the Government of Canada, or the Government of France. The negotiated boundary is not possible. In these negotiations, the French have insisted on a very large area of jurisdiction for the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon. That position is totally unacceptable to Canada. We are at the stage where we recognize that these negotiations will not be acceptable. The only way to resolve this dispute is by reference to an international judicial tribunal. The need for the determination of this boundary has become far more serious in recent years because of the overfishing effort conducted by the French in the area known as 3PS.

Taking advantage of the fact that we do not have a negotiated settlement, the French have engaged in a massive overfishing effort in this zone. We have heard all kinds of numbers being put forward. The Canadian Government acknowledges the French right to fish in that zone with a quota of some 6,400 metric tons of cod. Last year the French caught 26,000 tonnes of cod. This year they have made it known to various people in Canada that they intend to ignore the quota set for them and indeed will catch some 25,000 metric tons. In fact, I would suggest that the 25,000 metric tons which are being tossed around is a minimum and that it might be more like 40,000 metric tons before the year has ended. That is a totally unacceptable situation in which we find ourselves.

What is the solution? I would hope some members of the New Democratic Party were speaking in jest when they suggested that we send gunboats out there. What a position to advocate! It is one that is totally unacceptable to most rational Canadians.

The reality we must face is that we are into a situation where we have a very rich resource in an area known as 3PS or St. Pierre Bank, and it is rapidly being depleted by overfishing by a foreign country. Because it is an area of dispute, we have no control over this effort by the French Government.

How do we gain control over this very difficult and unacceptable situation? As I said, the only obvious solution to anyone who has studied the situation and has some knowledge of it is that we must obtain a ruling through the World Court. That presents another problem. The only way to accomplish that is if both parties to the dispute agree to make that reference. Canada has agreed in the interests of conservation, of Newfoundlanders, and of the long-term stability of the fishing industry of that province. However, the French have been very difficult on this issue. Essentially, if we want to call a spade a spade, they have been attempting to hold the Government to ransom.

This brings us to the events of the last few days. In its wisdom the Canadian Government decided to enter into negotiations on how we could resolve this boundary dispute by agreeing on a course of action. That course of action resulted in an agreement this past weekend which gives me some cause for concern. I am not disputing the objective of the agreement. I have no quarrel with what it attempts to do. It is attempting to do something which every Member of the House should be willing to support. However, I must ask a question about the agreement—are we putting ourselves in a position of paying too high a price to get this dispute before the courts? That is my basic concern.

I feel that the agreement provides the opportunity to pay too high a price. I am somewhat disappointed and probably disillusioned with the process by which this agreement came about over the weekend. Until some time last week I think the whole process was on track, but from my perspective the events of last weekend got out of hand and the subsequent criticism has taken away from what good this agreement might have been able to do.

While this issue affects other provinces, its primary focus is that of Newfoundland. I think it is a case of bad judgment on the part of the federal Government to not have had representatives of the Government of Newfoundland present during the negotiating process which occurred over last weekend. As I say, it is a case of bad judgment. As a result, we may have rushed into an agreement fraught with danger which could have serious implications for the province and for my constituents. I say "could"; I am not saying that it does. I feel that certain aspects of the agreement, had the Province of Newfoundland been represented, would not have been in it. People who live in the situation, as I have for many years and as have many Members from Newfoundland, would have been able to foresee possible complications which could arise with regard to the agreement.

I want to review very quickly the concessions in the agreement in respect of fish stocks. It says that the French are entitled to an additional 3,000 metric tons of cod in an area known as 2GH, which is in the far North. I do not think we would find anyone who would argue very strenuously against that concession. It is a surplus stock. Presently it is not being harvested by the fishing industry and as such it is not a difficult concession with which to live.

The agreement also stipulates that in the zones 4RS, 3PN, and 4VN the French fleet is entitled to some 3,500 metric tons of cod, and again there is no argument. It is an historical right, particularly for our neighbours who live just off our shores. Although the French Government does not recognize it, the agreement also says that they are entitled in the disputed area to a quota of some 6,400 metric tons. I think that is a fair allocation under the formulas.

There are two other aspects to the agreement. One is access to an area known as the Burgeo Bank. I have concerns about that one. They may turn out to be unfounded. I hope they do. However, for those who do not know, the gulf stocks migrate to the Burgeo Bank and we have just removed, because of the expiry of an agreement at the end of the past year, the French metropolitan fleet from the gulf. We did not renew the agreement. By allowing them access to the Burgeo Bank fishing area which is in the 3PS zone but not in the disputed area of 3PS, my concern is that we have again allowed the French metropolitan fleet access to some gulf stock, which as you, Mr. Speaker, should know and as all Members of this House should know is in serious decline. The biomass of the gulf fishery is declining at a very rapid pace. That fishery, unless the stocks stabilize and start to increase is in great trouble now, but that situation will be aggravated, which is a very serious concern on my part. Many inshore fishermen on the southwest coast of Newfoundland depend entirely on that stock for their livelihood.

The other area this agreement addresses is the area known as 2J+3KL, the northern cod stocks, which is the backbone of the Newfoundland fishery. This area has been in dispute in our provinces for some time. Now there is a possibility provided in the agreement that recognizes the right of access to that stock by the French. That is disconcerting, Mr. Speaker. The agreement does not specify the level of any quota that might be awarded, and that gives me a ray of hope. I have made it known for the past two days that I am not prepared to accept a quota in 2J+3KL that will negatively impact on any fishermen or the Newfoundland fishing industry in general. That stock is the future of the deep sea fishing effort in my province. We will be watching, I say we as Newfoundlanders, the negotiations as they progress if, indeed, they do progress at all. We will not accept any allocation that is not acceptable to each and every Newfoundlander affected.

I do not see and I doubt if you will find a Canadian who can see any surplus fish in that zone in the foreseeable future, Mr. Speaker. There will be none. In fact, we have reduced our domestic quota for 1987, not very significantly but there is a reduction. That indicates a stock with problems. I do not see how the Government or any Government can as a result of that accept the awarding of a quota to a foreign Government. I will not accept that on behalf of my constituents.

As I said earlier, the Government of Canada has acted in good faith. We have one basic objective, a real and admirable concern, and that is to resolve the dispute in 3PS. There is no easy solution to this problem, it has been ongoing for too long. We have to find a solution. Events of the next few months hopefully will give us that solution.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to participate in this debate at this hour of the night. Like my colleagues before me, particularly the Member who just spoke, the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George (Mr. Price), I find the situation of great significance. The significance is not only for the people of Newfoundland, but I believe it extends beyond their boundaries. Indeed it is a Canadian problem affecting Canadians from coast to coast.

What do we have here, Mr. Speaker? What is at stake in this issue? Before one answers those questions one has to examine what has gone on in the past. We have seen the issue of a tariff regarding salt cod, an issue with the softwood lumber and, yes, more recently, an issue with the Christmas tree producers. Now we have this issue of fish. The people of Newfoundland, as evidenced by their Members of Parliament in this Chamber, by provioncial Members of the House of Assembly, and by commentators in that province, agree without qualification that that resource is akin, if you will, to the wheat of the prairie grain farmer, to the oil and gas in Alberta and, yes, to the language in the Province of Quebec. This issue is vitally important to the economic viability and the future of the Province of Newfoundland. No matter how you cut the cards, no matter who cuts the cards, the standard or the test that ought to be used should be an objective and reasonable test. In this instance, as we have seen in the three previous examples, Canadians, Newfoundlanders, and the people of Atlantic Canada have now again received the brunt of the central Government's policies as they relate to fisheries.

We have heard some statements by the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). The French have had treaty rights to Canadian territorial waters going back to 1904 through a convention between the United Kingdom and France. Subsequent to that there was an agreement in 1972. The purpose, or the raison d'être, if you will, of that agreement was to phase out all the French fishing in the gulf. The Member for St. John's West—I do not think he did it intentionally, but perhaps he did it as a defence—did not talk about the provisions in that agreement with regard to reciprocal rights for Atlantic Canadians. He forgot to mention that but went on to talk about the concept of perpetuity. He did not quote the clause in which he substantiates his argument. He said that there is no definitive total allowable catch. On that point he is correct, Sir. But gross negligence is apparent when you listen to the Hon. Member for St. John's West. He refuses conveniently, I might add, to make mention of the fact that on October 9, 1980, there was an agreement between France and Canada with regard to the maximum allowable catch. He would allow the House to believe that there was a major omission in the 1972 agreement, and he is right. However, he should also be candid enough to tell Hon. Members and the people of Newfoundland that that omission was rectified in 1980.

That is one thing, but let us look at the duplicity of both the Hon. Member for St. John's West and, in particular, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon). That is a very strong term to use on the floor of the House of Commons but I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Member for St. John's West says one thing in Newfoundland and another thing in this Chamber. Talking about an obvious, flagrant misuse of documentation, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans produced information in a press release on January 27 which was in contradiction to the private and confidential documentation possessed by the Department of External Affairs. That is duplicity at its worst.

Perhaps the crime in all of this is what the Government promised in 1984. It promised consultation. How many times have we heard government Members say in the Chamber: "We will consult with the provinces, with the working men and women of Canada, with industry and with the various sectors of the economy in order to arrive at public policy in the best interests of all Canadians"?

Tonight Members from the government side have said unequivocally that they are upset because there was no consultation. The Premier of the Province of Newfoundland and others have also echoed that. However, the remedy they wish to invoke now for the people of Newfoundland and Canadians in general is an apology. They want to say: "We are sorry we did not consult with you. We are really sorry. What has gone on is terrible". That is not enough. Conservative Members of Parliament from Newfoundland have a responsibility. They have a majority in this Chamber. They ought to do the proper thing and demand forthwith that this agreement be called null and void and that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans resign.

Let us talk about the process of consultation. There was no consultation. The Premier of the Province of Newfoundland, the former employer of the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso (Mr. O'Neil) and his idol and mentor, said about the Minister of Fisheries and the Government's policies that they are incompetent. What better evidence do you need than to have a provincial Premier of Tory persuasion commenting like that with regard to this particular policy? Why did the Premier say what he did? He said it because there was no consultation, just as there was no consultation in the Province of Newfoundland as evidenced by the statements made by Premier Peckford on behalf of his people.

The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans is not only incompetent, he is insensitive to the vital importance of a resource in the Province of Newfoundland. For those two reasons, he should do the honourable thing and resign from this federal Cabinet forthwith. If the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans is not prepared to do that, let us put this on the line. Let us see where members of the Conservative Party from Newfoundland really stand. Will they say that they will apologize or will they have the intestinal fortitude and guts to stand up for their people and say that they will cross the floor and resign from their Party if this agreement is not called null and void and if the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans does not resign forthwith? We will wait for 72 hours to see what these Members opposite will do. I am afraid that they will follow the likes of the Hon. Member for St. John's West by going down to Newfoundland to cry and wail, only to come back to Ottawa to say that they pulled the wool over the eyes of the people again. That is a shame.

The Hon. Member for St. John's West spoke on the radio and for the benefit of Hon. Members, I wish to let the House know what he said. I have a transcript from the VOCM action line of Wednesday, January 28, 1987. The Minister of Transport said that those responsible for this are certainly insensitive to the importance of the issue in Newfoundland and Labrador. This great paragon of Newfoundland concerns went one step further. He did not stop there. This great eloquent man, a paragon of Newfoundland interests, said that they were to have as one of their objectives better, improved federal relations, one of their hallmarks so far, but that this was hardly the way to go about it.

The Minister of Transport, the Hon. Member for St. John's West, says one thing down there and something different here in Ottawa. Who is the puppet and who is pulling the strings? Is it the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans? Is it the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) or the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who is pulling the strings? Shame on the Hon. Member for St. John's West.

Hon. Members opposite are in disagreement with one another. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso has said that there is no agreement. The Hon. Member for Burin—St. George's has said that there is an agreement. I wish they would make up their minds. Either there is an agreement or there is not. To have an agreement, there must be an intention to sign an agreement. There must be consideration and there must be the signatures of the parties. Do we have that here? One member of the Tory Party says yes and another says no. How convenient for the Tories—excuse me, Mr. Speaker, Members of Parliament of the Conservative Party of Canada—to try to be on both sides of the issue. It is typical of an incompetent, insensitive Government that does not deserve the trust of Canadians to run the administration of this country.

I would like to talk about something else in regard to this particular issue and it has to do with the Prime Minister, or Photo-Brian as he is known in my constituency. Why was this agreement made in secret? Did it have anything to do with the desire of the Prime Minister to have wonderful, glorious, picturesque photo opportunities at the upcoming first Francophone summit in Quebec City? Is that the rationale behind this agreement? If it is the rationale, I challenge the Hon. Member for St. John's West to have the intestinal fortitude to tell the Prime Minister that he is wrong and is not representing the best interests of Newfoundland. The Hon. Member for St. John's West has the habit of saying one thing in St. John's and another in Ottawa. That is typical.

Mr. Crosbie: You do not tell the truth in either place.

Mr. Dingwall: It is typical gross negligence and gross incompetence by Members opposite.

The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans issued a press release. You want to talk about someone not coming clean! Not with Members of Parliament on this side.

Mr. Holtmann: We know you are clean.

Mr. Crosbie: Your head is shiny.

Mr. Dingwall: Not with Members of Parliament on this side but with his own caucus. Do you hear them wailing and crying over there? They are 28 per cent or 29 per cent in the polls and they are gone. Gone. This will help your exit from political life.

Mr. Crosbie: You are gone with the wind, Dingwall.

Mr. Dingwall: The French catch, as indicated in the press release for 1984, was 6,607 tonnes. However, what does the confidential document say to which the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and obviously because he is a privy counsellor, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) were exposed? It says 11,221 tonnes. If that is not duplicity, if that is not double-talk, if that is not misleading members of the Progressive Conservative caucus, I do not know what is. What was the figure used by the Minister in his press release for 1985? It was 6,010 tonnes as of May, 1985. In the secret document that Premier Peckford and Premier Buchanan have yet to see what does it say? This is the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans—

Mr. Henderson: Telling his own people.

Mr. Dingwall: —18,508 tonnes. It is very obvious that we are getting only one side of the story from the Minister. He is refusing to share with his caucus colleagues information germane to this discussion. That is gross incompetence and gross negligence. As I said earlier, it deserves as a bare minimum his resignation from Cabinet as Minister of Fisheries and Oceans forthwith.

Mr. Holtmann: Sit down.

Mr. Dingwall: I will conclude by saying that the Premier of Newfoundland and the Premier of Nova Scotia agree that the Government's handling of this issue—

Mr. Forrestall: That is right, the Conservatives agreed with Gerald Regan who agreed you were an incompetent MLA.

Mr. Dingwall: They both have concluded that this agreement is akin to gross incompetence.

It is one thing for Members opposite to say that, but quite another when provincial Premiers say it. I say to the people of Newfoundland that they have been let down by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The Hon. Member for St. John's West has abdicated his responsibilities as their representative in the federal Cabinet, and I call upon Conservative Members of Parliament from the Province of Newfoundland to demand forthwith the resignation of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. If not, let them sit as independents. Put your money where your mouth is.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Holtmann: From the Prairies.

Mr. Crosbie: Glad to know you are still breathing, Les.

Mr. Benjamin: I will be breathing long after my good friend, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie).

In taking part in this debate, the first thing I want to do—

Mr. Crosbie: Is sit down.

Mr. Benjamin: —is extend my congratulations and respect to the Hon. Member for Bonavista—Trinity—Conception (Mr. Johnson). I thought he spoke from his heart as well as his head.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: He made it plain that he was saying to his own Party and Government: This far and no further.

Mr. Forrestall: That is why we are a great Party.

Mr. Benjamin: Mike, would you get on the list and get up and make a speech?

Mr. Forrestall: We are a great Party.

Mr. Benjamin: You have made four speeches sitting on your ass. Now shut up.

Mr. Crosbie: You are talking through yours.

Mr. Benjamin: Get on the list and make a speech, Mike, I will be waiting to hear it.

Mr. Forrestall: It will be a little bit better and more knowledgeable than the one you have to make.

Mr. Benjamin: The respect and regard I have for my colleagues in this place from all Parties I have not only for the Hon. Member for Bonavista—Trinity—Conception but even for the Hon. Member for St. John's West, who also intimated that he is not completely happy and satisfied with this agreement. I respect and congratulate them for that.

Mr. Forrestall: So do we.

Mr. Benjamin: When you are involved in negotiations, whether it is over a union-management table or a nation to nation table, whether it is international or domestic, you do not offer something in advance. You do not telegraph to your opposite number what you are prepared to give, what lengths you are prepared to go to get them to agree to negotiate or arbitrate. You just do not do that. That is dumb bargaining. I am not suggesting that the labour side or the management side or the government side have not done some dumb bargaining because they have. All that is required here is for the Government to say, "We bargained dumb"—and you do not have to use my words, you can put it in much more diplomatic and statesman-like language than I would use. You do not lay those things out ahead of time. All your opposite number has to do is to sit back and smile sweetly.

The President of France, a Socialist, must be smiling to himself on his way to Canada. The Premier of France, a Conservative, must be laughing all the way over to congratulate his fisheries Department.

Mr. Forrestall: On what basis?

Mr. Benjamin: I hope I am wrong.

Mr. Forrestall: You are.

Mr. Benjamin: However, I expect there will be a ceremony where the agreement which was initialled earlier will be formalized when the President of France gets here. I hope that does not happen. We tipped our hand in these negotiations by having already cut back the quotas of our own fishermen. We did that in consultation with the four Atlantic provinces as part of the management of our fisheries. Having cut back the quotas of our own fishermen, we should have asked France to voluntarily cut back on the amount of fish they are taking. Surely it would have been a proper bargaining position to ask France to cut back in the same proportion as we have cut back our own fellows until we reach an agreement.

• (2400)

The Minister of Transport has said that the Government is trying to get out of something that previous Liberal administrations got us into many years ago. We do not disagree with that. This is an NDP motion rather than a Liberal one. However, there is no excuse for a Conservative Government to practice the supine acquiescence started by the Liberals. There is no damned excuse for sitting back and blaming it on the Liberals. The people of Atlantic Canada believed that the Tories would be different and correct the past errors of omission and commission. The Government gave France the right to fish in a zone where they were never allowed to fish before, unless it was in the 1500s.

Mr. Forrestall: You are playing politics with the lives of our fishermen. That's exactly what you are doing.

Mr. Benjamin: What do you mean I am playing politics?

Mr. Forrestall: You have no regard for them whatsoever.

Mr. Benjamin: For a hundred and some years Atlantic Canada has had nothing but Liberals and Tories, Liberals and Tories, and they have the highest unemployment and the poorest fishermen ever seen in the country. They keep thinking that maybe they will do better next time, but they continue to fail.

Mr. Holtmann: You're going to make it wonderful over there, aren't you?

Mr. Benjamin: We didn't do it to them. It was Liberals and Tories, Liberals and Tories.

Mr. Holtmann: And you are going to make it wonderful.

Mr. Benjamin: Liberals and Tories dictated to those people ad nauseum.

Mr. Holtmann: And you're going to make it wonderful?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Could we listen to the Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

Mr. Benjamin: It is not good enough for Tories to sit here blaming Liberals and Liberals to sit here blaming Tories.

Mr. Holtmann: Where do you fit in?

Mr. Benjamin: We have damn well had enough of that.

Mr. Holtmann: Where do you fit in? You aren't even there.

Mr. Benjamin: We fit in very nicely, thank you.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I ask Hon. Members to have the courtesy of listening to the Member for Regina West.

Mr. Holtmann: Where do you wonderful people fit in?

Mr. Benjamin: We are fitting in nicely, thank you.

Mr. Holtmann: Explain that to the people of Canada. Where do you fit in?

Mr. Benjamin: It is not good enough to sit around blaming the other guys.

Mr. Holtmann: We are waiting with bait on our breath.

Mr. Benjamin: My Leader, who moved this motion which was accepted by the Chair, proposed an alternative solution.

Mr. Holtmann: Oh, wonderful.

Mr. Benjamin: The hon. gentleman whose mouth is open now had his ears closed earlier this day.

Mr. Holtmann: Give us your solution, your wonderful solution.

Mr. Benjamin: The agreement was designed to placate France rather than meet the needs of Atlantic Canada. The agreement gives away fish stocks to France where it has never fished before and is not entitled to in any remote manner. France did not even ask for rights in this area. Why would the Government give France those rights before an arbitrated settlement was reached? It is more dumb bargaining.

Mr. Holtmann: What a wonderful group of people.

Mr. Benjamin: I can tell my hon. friend that a number of us have been on both sides of the bargaining table.

They say that fish is good brain food.

Mr. St. Germain: You haven't eaten any.

Mr. Benjamin: I have listened to my hon. friend opposite and I now know how the good Lord knows where to send the fish. I wonder when he last ate any. When is the last time the Minister of Transport ate any of that good brain food? More important, when is the last time the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) ate any?

Mr. Holtmann: He ate some good fish in Manitoba. I can vouch for that.

Mr. Benjamin: The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans represents part of the Fraser Valley and South Delta where they have Pacific salmon. If he wanted to be a generous Canadian statesman and negotiator, why did he not offer Pacific salmon instead of Atlantic cod to the French? Can you imagine what would have happened to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans if he had told the French that they could have Pacific salmon if they did not mess around in the territory in dispute. The Minister from British Columbia would have been run out of town on a rail and it would have been too good for him. However, he can be generous with the northern cod off Newfoundland. If he were negotiating with the Americans and Japanese for Pacific salmon, would he be equally as generous? I hope my Conservative friends opposite will ask him that.

Mr. Holtmann: So far not too many people have trusted you guys.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I do not pretend to know much, if anything, about fish, other than the ones we have in Last Mountain Lake.

Mr. Holtmann: Then sit down. Sit down if you don't know anything about fish.

Mr. Benjamin: On the other hand, my colleague opposite would not know a bushel of wheat if it hit him in the face and I am sure that he would get up and make a speech on it.

Mr. Holtmann: I am sorry, but I know as much about wheat as you do. Here you are talking about fish. Good for you, you're talking about fish.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, is there a rule that if a Member is going to talk he should be in his own seat?

Mr. Holtmann: There is no rule.

Mr. Benjamin: I am wondering whether you are sure as to who has the floor.

• (2410)

Mr. Speaker: All Hon. Members in the chamber this evening know that the Hon. Member has a great deal of experience in this place. He no doubt asks a rhetorical question but I understand perfectly why it is being asked. The answer, which I had to deal with earlier this evening, is that a Member not in his seat is not entitled to have the floor.

Sometimes it is very difficult to persuade Hon. Members that when they are in someone else's seat they ought also to recognize the fact that they ought not to take the floor in repartee, if I can put it that way, across the aisle. The Hon. Member is absolutely right. If someone is trying to seek the floor from a seat other than that which is their allotted seat in the chamber, of course the Chair cannot recognize the Member. I would advise the Hon. Member who, of course, is a very experienced Member, that perhaps he could continue his debate more effectively if he did not recognize that other Hon. Member either.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I would only say to my friends opposite that I listened carefully to speeches of my colleagues opposite, without interruption. I like to be heckled because it means that in fact they are listening. However, in this instance, they are not listening.

We are aware that it is very difficult to govern this country, with 10 provinces and two territories. Perhaps the worst scenario for any party in power is that many of the provinces are governed by the same party. We appreciate that it can be a difficult situation. However, no matter what the disagreements or misunderstandings with the provinces, the fundamental principle to be held by the national Government and this chamber is that the enhancement and preservation of our sovereignty and independence is inviolate and indivisible. Members on all sides of the House unanimously agree with that principle, even if we may disagree about how to uphold it.

In this case, our disagreement concerns the conduct of international negotiations. While we may disagree on how they are conducted, we do not disagree with their purpose. Our motion simply states that the Government has made a mistake. It should not bargain away the well-being of its own people and the integrity of its own territory in negotiations with other nations.

Perhaps if we were at war or were under extreme pressure such negotiations may be acceptable, but we are dealing with a power that has been friendly for years and allowing it to encroach upon our national integrity and nationhood by providing it with extra quantities of our resources that belong to Canadians. That is why my leader moved this motion, your acceptance of which we appreciate, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker has ruled that this matter is serious enough that the House should take it into consideration and the Government should recognize its importance. The intent of the motion is to suggest that the Government has bargained mistakenly and should reconsider what it has done. Surely the Government should have learned something from its experience with our neighbour to the south during the past 18 months. There will be ample opportunity to discuss those free trade negotiations in the future, but the issue here is the principle of our integrity and sovereignty which all Canadians support.

We are not attempting to criticize any Hon. Member in the Government, but we sincerely felt compelled in the name of sovereignty to move this motion so that the Government would reconsider the issue. After listening to the Hon. Member for Bonavista—Trinity—Conception and the Hon. Minister of Transport, I believe they share that concern. It will be to the Government's credit if it reassesses its action and decides that it was mistaken.

Before the Government proceeds further with this agreement, which has only been initialled, it should listen not only to some of its own members, but to the fishermen and their unions, and the fish plant owners and operators and some premiers. I do not suggest for a moment, however, that the premiers are 100 per cent correct. Surely there is sufficient ground to reconsider reopening negotiations with France.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for his intervention. The Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain).

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission—Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, let me begin by saying that those of us who come from constituencies with fishermen who earn their livelihood from the ocean understand what we are facing here tonight.

Let me also say a few words about Newfoundland members of our Party and their concern, dedication and devotion toward their province. I speak of the Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) who so eloquently put forward the case of Newfoundlanders as it really is. He did not preach fear or use scare tactics, but represented the people of Newfoundland and Canada as he has done so well for so many years.

The Hon. Member for Burin—St. George's (Mr. Price) rose in this House tonight to speak to the plight of those Newfoundlanders who live along the southern part of Newfoundland and who are so impacted by any adjustments made to the Newfoundland fishery. He is concerned, and has a right to be, and he spoke well in this House. He represented Newfoundland proudly.

The Hon. Member for Bonavista—Trinity—Conception (Mr. Johnson) also rose in the House to represent his riding. I was present at a meeting today when he spoke of the ocean and of fishing and of the people of Newfoundland. He is a captain by profession, a man who has lived on the ocean from which he has sought his livelihood.

Mr. Speaker: A skipper.

Mr. St. Germain: A skipper, as you point out, Mr. Speaker. He is a man who understands every problem related to fisheries which affect Newfoundland and other parts of this country. As the Hon. Member pointed out, there is not a family in Newfoundland which has not lost a son, a father or a friend to the ocean. Yet they continue to eke out their existence from the ocean.

Those who spoke before me are very well qualified. They put forward the case of Newfoundland better than anyone could. As I pointed out earlier, Mr. Speaker, they did not rise in this House to preach fear, scare tactics or to malicously attack. They are not fearmongers. They are very, very concerned Members of Parliament from Newfoundland.

The New Democratic Party, the Socialist Party, moved the motion for debate. Its Leader rose in this House and advocated armed insurrection against a friendly nation. He said we may have to resort to a military resolution. The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) called it a friendly power. I do not believe that Canadians, regardless of whether they are from British Columbia, Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, or wherever, would advocate the use of arms. That is the type of rhetoric we have heard here tonight. It is insincerity. It is not that which Canadians want. We are looking at a situation in which our Government has faced the fact that the quotas and very livelihood of some Newfoundland people has been reduced because of overfishing in the oceans which surround them. That is unacceptable. There has to be a resolve. There has to be a method of controlling the fisheries so that we as Newfoundlanders, Nova Scotians and Prince Edward Islanders—we as Canadians—can have first right to the fisheries and do not have to cut back our quotas or allocations. That is the reason it is so important we try to establish some form of agreement with the country of France in dealing with this very important issue.

Let us visualize what will happen if we do nothing and the overfishing continues. As someone from British Columbia, Mr. Speaker, and one who was so involved with the salmon enhancement program on the West Coast, you will know that if a fishery is overfished, the livelihood of Canadians is placed in jeopardy. It is no different on the West Coast than it is on the East Coast. This is the dilemma the people of the East Coast of Canada are facing. This is the reason our Government is attempting to seek a resolve to this situation.

There is no doubt that there is concern in the minds of people on the East Coast tonight. That has been brought on to a large extent by the fear tactics which have been preached here tonight. However, it has been clearly enunciated by Hon. Members that they know of the concerns of Newfoundlanders and those concerns will be attended to immediately and efficiently as those Hon. Members who represent Newfoundland have always done on all issues which come before the House of Commons.

The Hon. Member for Regina West suggested that consultations should take place. I believe there is no government which has consulted more sincerely than the present Government of Canada. That has been a hallmark of this Government and it will continue to be a hallmark. I can think of a multitude of agreements arrived at that the previous administration could never even come close to reaching. For instance, there were the ERDA agreements with the provinces and the Atlantic Accord, which was a favourable agreement for the Province of Newfoundland. But here again we have the rhetoric, the screaming and yelling that no consultation has taken place. Our Government did consult in this case and it will continue to consult with Premier Peckford and the industry. There will be no final decision without the input of the industry and Government of Newfoundland.

I appreciate having had the opportunity to enter into this debate. As I pointed out, it is only those of us who live in and represent fishing communities who can truly relate to the lifestyle of the fishermen. I would just like to reinforce what was said here tonight by the Hon. Members from Newfoundland in their representations, and to tell the people of Newfoundland they have been well represented. None of their fishery is in jeopardy. There will be no agreement unless the agreement is favourable for the people of Newfoundland and for all the people on the East Coast of Canada.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sure the Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain) would not want to leave an erroneous impression with the House that our Leader has been advocating violence, or that anyone in the New Democratic Party had done so.

Mr. Crosbie: You did.

Mr. Manly: That is not what we have been saying in this debate at all.

Mr. St. Germain: That is not a point of order, Mr. Speaker. That is debate.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain) is absolutely correct. The Hon. Member is engaging in debate. However, sometimes the Chair does not know until the debate has commenced exactly what is the purpose of the comment.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérald Comeau (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate this evening and to add a few comments on the debate and the speeches we have heard.

I would like to give a short summary of the three options that Canadians were given this evening.

[English]

First, there was the do-nothing option. This was the option proposed by the Liberal Party. That is what it has been doing for years. France continues to overfish cod stocks off the south coast of Newfoundland, costing the fishermen of Newfoundland something in the order of $40 million per year. Doing this would condemn the south coast fishery to extinction. The French have shown no sign of good management intentions, none whatsoever. Thus, the Liberal option to continue with the 1972 agreement to grant fishing rights was just not acceptable. The 1972 agreement granted the fishing fleet of France fishing rights in perpetuity, which is what we have to live with today. The June, 1984 pre-election Liberal agreement to abstain from regulating each other's fishing efforts was a means by which both countries could turn their backs on what the other was doing. This was not the way to go either. Obviously, the Liberal option is simply not an acceptable choice.

Let us now consider the NDP option. I will not call it the "NDP Party" because the members of that Party become so sensitive and hot when we say that. So I will say it is the NDP option. That option is to send in the gunboats Rambo-style. Their option is a call to war. It was Rambo Broadbent, the Leader of the NDP, who recommended that. It is irresponsible. It is good in that he will hit the national news with it. Rambo Broadbent says: "Let's go to war with France". He will hit the national news for sure with a statement like that. But it is irresponsible to come up with such an option. It is something which we simply cannot accept.

The Leader of the NDP brought up the Spanish trawler confrontation, a completely invalid point. The Spanish were fishing in undisputed Canadian waters. At that time we showed the Spanish how we could get rid of them if they were overfishing in waters which were undisputed. The difference between that case and this case is that France claims the waters off the coast of St. Pierre and Miquelon. Sovereignty over waters that are not internationally recognized to be our own cannot be enforced. Confrontation makes no sense when the possibility of a negotiated settlement exists.

We are not living in the Falklands. Nor are we in Argentina. We cannot send in the gunboats, no matter how attractive it may appear to Rambo Broadbent. I apologize to the sole member of the NDP who is in the House if I have offended his Leader.

The third option is negotiation, something which appears almost foreign to the NDP way of thinking tonight. It is the only reasonable option. It is the only courageous option, an option which the Liberals were afraid to take or even consider. Getting the French to agree to go to international third party arbitration is a major achievement. I might even say that it is a major breakthrough. It is an historic event. This gives us a chance to undo the harm caused by the 1972 agreement and the unholy pre-election 1984 agreement. Negotiations will involve give and take. We should be prepared to pay a small price in order to get the French into arbitration. If we fail, then we will never have full sovereignty over our waters. If we fail to stop the French from overfishing it will continue. The future of the south coast of Newfoundland depends on our coming up with a negotiated settlement.

In the process the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador and the industry have been consulted at every stage. Our Government's first and foremost commitment and obligation is to the people of Newfoundland and Labrador. If as a result of our discussions over the past few months with the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador and the fishing industry it is determined that the cost is too great, then there will be no agreement, and we in Nova Scotia will join with our Newfoundland colleagues in saying that there will be no agreement. It is as simple as that. Both the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador and the industry will continue to be involved in ongoing and continuous negotiations.

I would now like to say a few words about misinformation. I listened tonight to the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) and to the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) who attacked the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). Where were those two Members when the 1972 and 1984 agreements were entered into? Where were they then with their fine rhetoric? In fact, where are they now? I do not even see them in the House after they moved a motion to continue the debate all evening. They are not even here to listen. They had the help of their socialist Rambos, the NDP gunboat diplomacy led by Rambo Broadbent, the Colonel Gaddafi of the NDP. Where are they now? Where were they when the Government was giving fish stocks in perpetuity and signing agreements which turned their backs on overfishing?

I listened tonight to the Hon. Member for Bonavista—Conception—Trinity (Mr. Johnson) and the Hon. Member for Burin—St. George's (Mr. Price). I was proud to listen to their speeches. They are good and fine representatives from Newfoundland.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Comeau: They want to see this issue resolved. They pulled no punches tonight. They knew where they were coming from. They were speaking on behalf of the fishermen of Newfoundland.

With respect to Georges Bank, we sent that problem to third party arbitration. Let me say to Hon. Members that this was a fine agreement. If an agreement cannot be reached by gunboat diplomacy, it sometimes pays to go to negotiation.

I would now like to talk about misinformation. The Leader of the NDP made a fine speech. It was probably written by one of his assistants in order to make the national news. His speech was full of misinformation, as usual. He mentioned the issue of having 15,000 extra tonnes of quota, which is simply not true. I wish he were here to listen to what I am saying now. However, he left just after making his speech. His research assistant who wrote his speech did not do his homework. The 15,000 tonnes was a figure mentioned in the 1987 Atlantic Groundfish Management Plan. All I ask the Leader of the NDP to do is to have his assistant read the plan. It is very simple. It is not a big project, if he can find the time.

I will say this. Rambo Broadbent never lets the facts affect what he has to say. He said what he wanted to say in spite of the facts.

When the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) ran out of things to say he started making up things. He quoted from what he called a secret document. If he were in the House right now I would ask him to table that secret document. If he has one, then he should table it. He should put his paper where his mouth is.

While we are on the subject of Rambos, the President of National Sea raised the rhetoric today to the point of racism. I would like to quote what he said as reported in an article which I read in The Chronicle-Herald today. He said: "I hope the Government gets a lot of votes in Quebec for being so nice to France". Mr. Speaker, you are from Quebec.

and Quebecers had nothing to do with it. The President of National Sea had no business dragging Quebec voters into this affair.

[English]

I wish to apologize on behalf of Nova Scotians, because this was not coming from a Nova Scotian. This is a transplanted Bay Street lawyer who came down to Nova Scotia and who thinks he is speaking on behalf of Nova Scotia. He will pay the price for this type of thing, because he is not speaking on behalf of Nova Scotia. This is not acceptable to the people of Nova Scotia. On behalf of all Nova Scotians I apologize to all Francophones of Canada. Again I say that it was not coming from a Nova Scotian, but a transplanted Bay Street lawyer, a friend of Senator Michael Kirby.

Mr. Crosbie: Machiavelli.

Mr. Comeau: The Machiavelli of Liberal politics, the next campaign chairman for the Liberal Party with Gordon Cummings—

Mr. Forrestall: The next Rainmaker.

Mr. Comeau: The next Rainmaker, of course.

In conclusion, and I will not take too much of the House's time, I would suggest that the fearmongers who stood up tonight and tried to spread fear in the heart of Atlantic Canadians should be ashamed of themselves. I wish to paraphrase my friend, the Hon. Member for Bonavista—Trinity—Conception, that as an Atlantic Canadian I am not afraid to speak on behalf of the fishermen of Atlantic Canada. If I think that the Government is doing something wrong for the fishermen of Atlantic Canada, I am not afraid to stand up and say so publicly. If these members of the Liberal Party from Atlantic Canada were here tonight listening to this, I would challenge them as well. I am not afraid to speak on behalf of Atlantic Canada. I will continue to do so. Like my friend from Bonavista—Trinity—Conception, I have not been told what to say. I am saying what I believe in.

I wish I had the gift of words of my friend who spoke tonight straight from the heart, and that I were able to deliver the type of speech that he gave. But I recommend to Rambo Broadbent, who was not here to listen to the Hon. Member from Newfoundland and the speech that he gave, that he read that speech and learn something about Atlantic Canada, what it means to be an Atlantic Canadian, and what it means to speak on behalf of our people in Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, it is an interesting evening, but I am sure we occasionally wonder why we do this to ourselves and we drag the point on often beyond where it makes sense. Unfortunately, today we have been dealing with a very serious problem through the mechanism of an emergency debate. There is no doubt that at some point a serious problem can always be examined from 500 different directions. Somebody has to grab the thing by the face and begin the process of solving it. It appears that this is what the Government did this week. There really had to be some type of movement toward a solution of the dilemma at St. Pierre and Miquelon.

The Conservative Government has undertaken that task and, for better or worse, we will hopefully move forward to a satisfactory solution for Canadians, or at least an interim solution that will lead us to some form of decent and equitable arrangement where Canadians are not deprived of resources which truly are theirs, and which we all in the House feel belong to Canada.

The issue with St. Pierre and Miquelon extends back to the last vestiges of the colonial process of France. If my history serves me, at the end of the Napoleonic wars France's colonies were stripped and she was left with two small pieces in Canada to exploit our fisheries in St. Pierre and Miquelon. It is unfortunate that we in this generation have inherited that problem which simply will not go away.

We heard the Conservatives blast the Liberals in the House tonight for beginning the process of trying to make some agreements with France. France has fought very hard to maintain its economic stake in the gulf fishery, and to extract the wealth from it. At the time when Canada pushed the 200 mile limit forward there was a need to begin the process of making agreements with foreign nations that fished our Atlantic coast. That process began; the initial agreements were certainly unacceptable. What happened was that is over a long period of time the process has moved forward of trying to limit more and more the incursions by those foreign fleets into areas we claimed. That has been coming about.

As the Liberal Government passed away in 1984, the task of resolving one of the toughest problems in the Atlantic area fell upon the Conservative Government. There were some interesting aspects of it. I happened to be looking over some previous speeches made in this place a year ago about the problem with the factory freezer trawler. At the time, France had very large factory freezer fleet intentions in the area. When we came to the point of moving forward, I would suggest without adequate consultation although others would argue that there was adequate consultation, I found, when reading some old speeches in here, that we had harmed ourselves by moving forward quickly with the factory freezer trawler effort on our part. We had set a precedent where France was entitled to go ahead and do it. Our attempts to seek an arbitrated effort not to have France do it seemed ridiculous after we had approved that technology. Since Canada could use it in our areas, therefore, France reasoned, why should they not be able to? The problem of setting precedents by moving too quickly caused us some problem.

It has been some time now that I have moved into other areas as fisheries critic, but it seemed to me that some time ago Premier Peckford was very concerned about having more access into the northern cod stocks. On numerous occasions he spoke to the Government about the possibility of a mid-shore fleet, a fleet that would be able to move in and begin to harvest that resource and use more of to work for the people of Newfoundland.

It is unfortunate that we find ourselves tonight more than slightly ahead of ourselves and having to seize a very nasty problem and move forward with it, without having dealt with the requests of Newfoundland to move in and harvest those stocks, so that Newfoundland might not feel so completely deprived by this agreement. Had several things moved forward, maybe with a little more caution on the factory freezer trawler issue, maybe with assistance in developing that mid-shore fleet and access to the northern cod stocks, at this time when we find ourselves in need of national consensus to deal with a nation like France, a tough, hard bargainer in any forum, had we taken those types of procedures earlier, we may not have been faced with the potential for a serious split in national consensus that we do need.

To clarify the record, I have known my Leader in this Party for many years. Of all the people that I know who would never recommend an armed intervention in this type of situation, the Member of Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) is the individual. Whether we debate it, or whether it was misunderstood, it is simply not correct to say that.

We have a very difficult situation. In the debate tonight and at other times when looking at some of the ways in which this House operates, one does get a little embarrassed. I must admit that there are times when even I am embarrassed at my own behaviour. We tend to get carried away.

On a serious issue like this, there is a basic need for unity in approach against other nations. There is really a need to attend a process. For Canadians to be effective in the world, there has to be scrupulous attention paid to the process of making sure that consultation has taken place, that the concerns and fears of other people have been examined and dealt with to the greatest degree possible, so that we can all move forward together.

I am certain it is difficult for the Government at this particular point in time to have Premiers in the Atlantic provinces expressing serious concerns on a major initiative which really needs support and unity to deal effectively with them. This will now take its course. The Government has bit the bullet and moved on. For better or for worse, the moving finger having writ moves on.

However, we are faced with many other issues. Recently we in the House debated the free trade problem. There is not consensus in the country on that issue. There will not be unity in facing the United States. There were some serious problems with the softwood lumber deal. In a speech which I made in the House my expression of concern was more that the Premier of British Columbia had undercut a national effort which had gone on for quite a long time. I guess there is a time when there is some need for consensus in an approach to solve an extremely difficult problem. There is a need, on the part of the Government, to go through the process of consultation to ensure that there is a field on which the maximum consensus achievable can be attained. On the part of the Opposition, I think there comes a point, when the country faces another nation in a very difficult situation which is critical for Canada, where we must look at facing it together to the best degree possible.

There are other such areas in British Columbia; this is certainly not the last one to go. I and many people in British Columbia have serious concerns about the Canada-U.S. salmon interception treaty. Most people on the West Coast remember very seriously that the document was pushed forward quickly and without adequate consultation, we feel, in order to be signed at a meeting between the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the President of the United States in Quebec City. There are those people who would argue that it was not done hastily. So be it. However, in the minds of many people it was. What was the motivation which pulled that agreement forward? It seemed to be more the Shamrock Summit than certainly the needs and concerns of the people who would live under its terms.

There is another issue. The St. Pierre and Miquelon dispute is not the last time we will have troubles with our neighbours. I draw to the attention of the House a serious problem with the A-B line bordering the northern part of British Columbia and Alaska. The Americans have claimed an equidistant operation. The old A-B line is not acceptable to them. They would move it out further. It would give them enormous access to Canadian fishery resources. The Americans have issued oil and gas leases on the other side of the A-B line. Canadians, fishermen who live in my constituency, have been arrested by armed American vessels on the other side of the line. They have fished on Canadian charts which show that to be Canadian waters.

Mr. Forrestall: Does that have anything to do with the motion before the House?

Mr. Skelly: That process has begun. The Hon. Member brings me back to the topic at hand. However, I would stress with him that there will be an enormous battle in the House once again unless the process is followed. It is of extreme concern to Canadians what happens in that northwestern corner where the A-B line sits. It is a gate which controls some of the richest fishery resources of Canada. If we do not do it properly, we stand the risk of losing them.

I would urge that the mistakes which have been made—and I use the term "mistakes"—be carefully examined and hopefully not repeated.

I think we have had an extremely vigorous debate tonight. I think the Speaker chose wisely by rating this problem serious enough for an emergency debate in the House. I think there has been a full debate on it. Hopefully the agreements which are put forward with France can be ones in which Canadians have a stake and on which Canadians work together. Hopefully the Government will move forward and try to assist Newfoundland with its very justified concerns. There have been concerns expressed about factory freezer trawlers and about the ability of Newfoundlanders to share in the wealth in those northern stocks. Hopefully they would be listened to and, even though late, there would be an opportunity to move in quickly, not only to bring Premier Peckford on side in seeking a solution, but to deal with the issue of trying to provide for Newfoundland fair and effective access to those resources, so that Canadians living in Newfoundland can be beneficiaries of our resources.

There is much to be done. Hopefully the Government will move forward from here in a positive direction, so that Canadians can back it, to whatever degree possible, in its endeavours to obtain a decent agreement with France.

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, I rise this morning to join with my colleagues from Atlantic Canada and from other parts of this great country to speak on a topic of tremendous interest and importance to the fishing industry and fishermen of Atlantic Canada.

The Canada-France boundary and fisheries agreement which we are debating tonight is really not an agreement. In first year law I was taught that an agreement to agree is not an agreement; it is merely a statement of intention. The Minister made very clear that there was no agreement. He simply said that there was an intention to proceed with a program which should lead to settlement of the dispute over the maritime boundary off the south coast of Newfoundland and St. Pierre and Miquelon and to provide fishing quotas for France for 1988 to 1991 while the boundary is being determined.

The question many Canadians are asking themselves these days is: How is it that France is in our waters? How is it that France has any access to so-called Canadian fish? All Canadians must realize that until 10 years ago these fish were international fish and there was no such thing as a 200-mile economic zone. International law had not evolved to the point where a country such as Canada could declare a 200-mile economic zone, that being 200 miles from the coastline of our country or to the edge of the continental shelf.

Over the last 25 years we have reached the point in international law where coastal states have recognized jurisdiction over certain resources, marine and under the sea bed adjacent to the land. Those rights which Canada has accrue to other coastal states. Whether or not we like it, St. Pierre and Miquelon are part of France and when we speak about them we speak about France. Attached to that land mass are similar rights accorded to France under international law. Of course it is known by Members of the House that France cannot go 200 miles from St. Pierre and Miquelon without intersecting an area which falls within 200 miles of Canada. There we have the disputed zone.

Where will the line be drawn? The international court of justice has a series of rules, some of which are complicated equidistant rules and others which reflect the continental shelf, the land mass, et cetera. Ultimately these boundaries can only be decided in such a forum. Such was the case in the Georges Bank issue which was settled between Canada and the United States.

It was with a view to settling this dispute and exercising some control over the fishing effort of France that Canada has been attempting to strike an accord with France. We want an accord with France because to this point France has exercised no control over its fishing efforts in the disputed zone. France's fishing effort represented a threat to the continued health and viability of the entire Atlantic fishery off Newfoundland. It is with this motivation that Canada moved to negotiate or attempt to reach some kind of accord. From where else does France get its right to fish other than from international law?

There are three principal historical documents on which the French base their fishing rights. First is a 1972 treaty between Canada and France. Second is a 1982 agreement between Canada and the European Economic Community and third is a 1984 exchange of notes between Canada and France of June, 1984. For the interest of all Canadians, these three agreements were entered into by the former Liberal Government. It is, therefore, the ultimate hypocrisy on the part of the Opposition Liberal Party over the last two days to say that it accepts no responsibility for the fishing effort that France has expanded into Canadian economic zones.

The Liberal Party is not being consistent. It is clear that the Liberal Party is not putting the facts before the fishermen of Atlantic Canada. It is clear that the Liberal Party views this dispute or uncertainty as an opportuntity to gain votes, the votes of people who are concerned about their continued economic viability. Fishermen in this country and in Atlantic Canada who expend a great deal of effort and incur great risk to put food on the table deserve more and better. The treatment they receive from the Liberal Party is shameful.

Just what is it that Canada has agreed to do, Mr. Speaker? Canada has agreed to talk. Nothing else. There is no giveaway of cod or any other fish to France. In fact, the record should show that there is more than a 50 per cent reduction in the cod allocation to France for 1987 over 1986. In 1986, French vessels caught 21,000 tonnes of cod. In 1987, that figure will drop to 8,000 tonnes.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. O'Neil: The Opposition accuses us of going easy on France. It is quite the opposite, Mr. Speaker. We hear a lot about a treaty expiring in December 1986. What expired was only the right of French vessels to fish in the gulf region. The treaty itself, signed by the Liberal Party, is a perpetual treaty, a perpetual obligation on the people of Canada and the fishermen of Atlantic Canada to share their fishing resource with a foreign country. We reject that. We also heard earlier in tonight's debate from the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) who selectively quoted statistics and compared apples and oranges. The contrast put before the people of Canada and Members of the House is not valid. It was misleading. It did not reflect the reality in which we find ourselves.

What about France's jurisdictional rights? What were the options? We heard from earlier speakers that Canada had three options, having decided that it wanted to resolve this problem. It could have reached a voluntary accord with France. Our Government tried and, like other Governments, it was unsuccessful. We then decided to pursue the objective of an arbitrated settlement, a third party settlement. What we are talking about tonight is whether or not a mechanism that has been agreed upon will result in a third party settlement.

Most alarming was to hear from the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) that we should have put our war boats in the water and that we should have used military force to deal with this issue. That, Mr. Speaker, is not the Canadian way. I suggest that that is not a route to be followed by any leader of a civilized nation. There are easier, better and more effective ways of solving a problem. There are more mature ways in the international community to resolve a problem than to pursue such aggression. The need for determination of the boundary, as I said, has become serious because of French overfishing in the area.

France has been taking advantage of the fact that the boundary has not been settled. In these circumstances, Canada cannot enforce Canadian fishing regulations in the large area France claims off the south coast of Newfoundland. The French fleets have expanded their fishery in this area to an enormous extent. While the customary share for France of a total allowable catch for cod in the area off the south coast of Newfoundland was 6,400 tonnes in 1986 and is again in 1987, in fact the French fleet caught approximately 26,000 tonnes of cod and had planned to take approximately 25,000 tonnes in 1987. This rate of overfishing produces a total catch of about 60,000 tonnes as compared with a total allowable catch established by Canada of 41,000 tonnes.

This represents a serious risk to the cod stock off the south coast of Newfoundland which is rapidly becoming depleted. The French have taken a position that they will not agree to refer the boundary dispute to an international tribunal in the absence of another agreement. Again, that underlies the whole point that there is no agreement to debate. There is simply a concensus as to a mechanism for resolving a very difficult international problem, and the resolution of this problem has eluded Liberal Governments that have preceded us.

As a Nova Scotian Member of Parliament, I feel that I must respond and I must comment on a press release which was telexed to me from Gordon E. Cummings, President and Chief Executive Officer of National Sea Products Limited.

Mr. Forrestall: He is not a Nova Scotian.

Mr. O'Neil: He is not a Nova Scotian but a resident. He is from Bay Street and is an active member of the Liberal Party. The press release reflects concern about the fishing industry and much concern about the political industry. The telex is really without basis in fact. It criticizes the Government and suggests that the Government of Canada has taken fish from Nova Scotia fishermen. This is clearly not true. The suggestion being put forward is that Nova Scotian jobs will be lost. This is not true, Mr. Speaker. If anything is true, this whole issue indicates the drive with which the Government of Canada is attempting to secure employment for the fishermen of Canada and the fishing processors.

Mr. Foster: He should be asked to resign.

Mr. O'Neil: I would like to join with my colleague, the Hon. Member for South West Nova (Mr. Comeau) in expressing my deep regret upon reading in the provincial newspaper of Nova Scotia that this same Mr. Cummings viewed this communication with the Government of France as an attempt to gain votes in Quebec. What is being said and articulated and I believe what is being revealed is bigotry. Why bring the people of Quebec into this debate as we negotiate with the Government of France? I have the honour to represent an area that has thousands of people who speak the French language. Why were the thousands of Acadians not singled out? This is a reference that I find most objectionable and offensive. It is an attempt to introduce, if you will excuse the expression, Mr. Speaker, a red herring.

When people cannot deal with the facts in a debate, they try to put up straw men. This reference in The Chronicle Herald forces me to conclude that this particular gentleman is unprepared to deal with the facts, that he does not know what the facts are and that those facts do not support the conclusion that he wants to reach in any case.

There may be some legitimate complaints that can be raised about the lack of communication in the last week but let those complaints be complaints about the lack of communication, not an attack on the merits of a worth-while initiative. Let those complaints be recognized for what they are. They are simply a criticism indicating that perhaps there was not sufficient consultation and communication.

I do not believe that it is correct for anyone to suggest that all of this has been a tremendous surprise. Negotiations have been ongoing for months in this entire issue. It was inevitable that a point would be reached as it was on the weekend. The issues and options did not change that much and a choice was made. It was a choice that was on the table for some time.

As I prepare to close, I as other Members of Parliament from Atlantic Canada want to state my commitment to ensuring that the fishing industry, the backbone of the economy of Atlantic Canada, will continue to be well and aggressively represented by Members of Parliament from Atlantic Canada. We will ensure that Members of Parliament in the Progressive Conservative caucus speak with an independent voice and are not trained seals. We were not the ones who sat in this Chamber in 1972, 1982 and 1984 when the federal Government of the day executed agreements with the Government of France and the European Economic Community, agreements that signed away the fishing resource that properly belonged to the people of Atlantic Canada. That is the issue to which the Liberal Opposition must respond but they refuse to address it. In the days that follow, that is the issue that Liberal Members will be forced to address by the people of Atlantic Canada who are listening tonight and hearing the facts. They will want to hear an explanation of the activities of the Liberal Government in those years. They will applaud the efforts of this Government and the Members of Parliament from Atlantic Canada to put behind us those mistakes and to secure for all time and for all Canadians the right to harvest and manage the fishing resource of Canada for the betterment of all Canadians.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton—Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that Members of the House should have a careless disregard for the truth as they speak and present their cases to a national television audience, they hope, and certainly to all Atlantic fishermen in the area. I do not believe that a Party should suggest that a debate go beyond midnight and then evacuate the House. I think that is a fair statement to make and I hope someone in the fishing community of Atlantic Canada is aware that that is what has happened. It is a farcical motion to move if one is not prepared to support it. Obviously the Liberal Party was not prepared to support its suggestion for an all-night debate. Where are they?

I listened to the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) and I must say that in all the speeches I have heard in the House since I came here in 1972, I have never heard a more careless disregard for facts as I did while he presented his case to Canada and the Canadian fishing industry. I wish to address that.

The Hon. Member mentioned surveillance. It was a Liberal Government that made a deal with France that in the disputed area, we would not have surveillance over their boats for the amount of catch they took and they in turn would not have surveillance over ours. That was the Liberal deal with France. The difference was that the Canadian boats that fished within that territory landed at Canadian points and were subject to Canadian quotas. They could not catch beyond that limit. There was no such condition imposed upon the French fleet. They could catch to their heart's content and we had no rights or privileges to surveillance, examination or to board them because we surrendered those rights under a Liberal Government.

If the fishery policy of the former Government was so good, why was the Minister not re-elected to the House of Commons? He was defeated in a fishing community. Following the political map throughout the Gaspé, the Gulf, down the East Coast of New Brunswick, into Nova Scotia and over to Newfoundland, how did it happen that the Liberals lost so many seats to the Conservative Party. If the Liberal policy was so good, why did this happen? Not one former Liberal Fisheries Minister now sits in this House. Two of them had to seek haven in the other place and the third was defeated. One cannot speak very well for one's Party when that is the history of its Ministers.

Hon. Members spoke about surveillance. The Fisheries Committee, including the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) and later the Hon. Member for Egmont, heard Conservative Members emphasize surveillance meeting after meeting. When we pointed out that the herring quota within our own waters had probably been exceeded threefold because of a lack of surveillance, we were mocked. The fact is that those on the coast of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, P.E.I. or the Gulf knew that the quota of herring was being caught threefold and surveillance was not part of the program.

A member of the crew of one of the boats that was supposed to be on surveillance duty in the North Atlantic came before members of our committee and said: "I have been afloat all summer in a fisheries boat which is supposed to be surveilling the catch of the foreign fleets. We have never seen a foreign boat pull its gear from the water so that we could examine what was in that catch. We have never seen a foreign boat come to the mother ship and unload its catch. We have never been permitted to go into a hold of a Russian factory ship to see what was in it". That is the surveillance to which the Hon. Member for Egmont referred. That was a mockery of surveillance.

When surveillance was discussed in committees, I can remember the Hon. Member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) saying repeatedly that within our 200-mile limit, it looked like a city at sea because there were so many lights from the factory boats and their suppliers. Yet, as we were told, we never saw a boat haul in its gear or unload onto the factory ship and we never got into the hold of a boat. The Hon. Member for Egmont says we were doing the surveillance. Then, on top of that, they abandoned surveillance in the disputed territory except for Canadian boats.

The Hon. Member also mentioned the duty on fish. I believe the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate and the Hon. Member for Egmont were on that committee. We had to deal with a very difficult situation in our trade with the U.S. It was pointed out repeatedly that if we established a government-supported company in the fish processing industry we would unavoidably be subject to duty by the U.S. There was no way we could get the Liberal Government of the day to do anything but establish a subsidized company. Yes, duty was applied and the Hon. Member for Egmont says that is all the fault of this Government. That is just another one of the deceptive statements made in this House and we and the people of Canada deserve an apology.

I am sure that viewers did not get a different impression of the statement of the Hon. Member for Egmont than I did. He said the nose and tail of the bank were surrendered by this Government. The facts are that in the negotiations at the Law of the Sea Conference and in the establishment of the 200-mile limit, Canada dropped its right to the ownership of the resource in the coastal waters and under the sea bed. That treaty was approved by coastal states about 30 years ago. The only nation which supported Canada on the 200-mile limit issue was India. They were mad at us because they have a 600-mile coastal shelf and they could not afford, they felt, to surrender any of their rights in that shelf in view of the Coastal Nations Treaty. However, we put it on the table and that is where the fishing privileges on the nose and tail of the bank went down the tube before we even negotiated anything.

We were told by the Liberal Minister of Fisheries that NAFO will look after that. That is the same group that was precluded from the coast of North America, from Florida north, by virtue of the 200-mile limit. The only waters available to an international fishing fleet without regulation are on the nose and tail of the bank. That was surrendered without a fight as we so generously put them on the table to the detriment of the fishing industry. NAFO will not do the surveillance or designate anyone with authority to do the surveillance. It is fished indiscriminately and our efforts to maintain stocks at a reasonable level just cannot be maintained as long as that very fruitful area is left without surveillance and fished indiscriminately. We also gave permits to fish within our 200-mile limits to Cuba. That country already had its own 200-mile limit and in no way needed more fishing territory.

That is the history of the Liberal Party. It was received with great disfavour by the voters who pretty well cleaned the Liberals out in the Gaspé, the east coast of New Brunswick, and a few in Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. That is the reception their policy got and they are trying to say that they looked after the fishermen. The voters did not think so then and they will not think so later. From the abandonment of our fish, to the abandonment of the seal hunt, right straight through to the nose and tail of the bank, the Liberal policy failed and the voters told them so. Any pretense that France has not given up many of its rights or that the treaties are still not in place is just that, a pretense. The only treaty the Hon. Member for Egmont mentioned which is not in force is that part which allowed the metropolitan fleet into the gulf area. That expired in 1986. The rest of the treaty is still in place. They will still fish without surveillance by virtue of a Liberal treaty.

It is a sad day when an issue cannot be debated on its merits and on its truth and when the people of Canada cannot rely on the statements of those who would incite, excite and mislead them. It is a deplorable situation that the Party which did so much of that in this debate has vacated the House to the last man. The Party that moved the motion now has one Member in the House. That is the seriousness with which this debate has been taken. I hope Canadians will note that. Canadians have been misled by their speeches. That is the reputation those two Parties put together for themselves.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, I want to participate very briefly in this emergency debate for really just one reason. I want to give an overview of how I, as a Member from Atlantic Canada, see this issue. Let me begin by saying that Atlantic Canada has a very proud and ancient history. It did not start in 1867 with Confederation. It started centuries before that and very much involved the Atlantic fishery. It very much involved fishermen from France, Spain and Portugal who travelled here at great risk to fish the waters of the North Atlantic. We in Atlantic Canada know the contribution Europeans have made to the Atlantic fishery. We know the history of Atlantic Canada on land and in the ocean. We know the Province of Newfoundland, which is so affected by the issue of stocks in the Atlantic fishery, was founded by those who braved the Atlantic waters in search of fish they needed to feed their people. We know the history and recognize the facts.

Today, in 1987, the fishery is one of the richest resources in the world. In a world starved for protein we now recognize, once and hopefully for all time, the importance of the fish resources of Atlantic Canada. I hope every Canadian from the East Coast to the West Coast recognizes its value just as we recognize the value of the oil resources of Alberta and the grain resources of the prairie provinces. It is in this connection that we must move to protect this resource and preserve it for all Canadians. In order to protect that resource we must recognize the history of all the nations which were involved in the Atlantic fishery, which history extends back 500 years or more. I am sure all Canadians remember the voyage of Christopher Columbus in 1492 which led to the discovery of North America, the voyages of Jacques Cartier and all the other explorers, and the proud history of Newfoundland and Atlantic Canada. This is all part of our heritage and we understand that very clearly in Atlantic Canada.

The historic event which gives rise to the difficulty which we face on the floor of the House of Commons today is the establishment of the 200-mile economic zone. The establishment of that zone is the most important incident which we have to deal with in this context. All those centuries were compressed to result in the imposition of the 200-mile zone. Therefore, those who say that there was a simple solution, that something very simple could have been done to right the problems of 500 or 600 years, are not dealing with reality.

Only 30 years ago the Soviets, for example, plundered the fishery of Atlantic Canada. Many nations took whatever fish stocks they could by whatever methods they could employ. There was absolutely no control on the fish stocks off the Atlantic coast. Only when the economic zone was established in 1972 were we able to get any control over the situation.

It has taken a long process of evolution to get us to this point. As well as recognizing the history, we must recognize what was involved in the dramatic event of the establishment of the 200-mile economic zone. When it was established we all knew that nothing would change overnight. We gained control of the zone through a long process.

The subject of this emergency debate is the participation of France in the Atlantic fishery. We very recently had the same problem with Spain which fished in Atlantic Canada for centuries. Spain is now excluded from the zone through actions of the Government of Canada in order to protect that fish resource for Canadians. We have turned away the followers of Christopher Columbus who fished in Atlantic waters for centuries. We required those fishermen to adhere to agreements established through the European Economic Community.

It is misleading to suggest that it has been a simple process or that there are simple solutions to this problem which has evolved over the centuries. It is an insult to the intelligence of the people of Canada, and particularly the people of Atlantic Canada, to suggest that there is a simple solution, a specific action which can be taken to right the problems which accumulated throughout centuries in relation to the Atlantic Canada fishery. Anyone who has dealt with this issue over any period of time knows that it is a long and difficult process to obtain for Canada complete control of the 200-mile economic zone in Atlantic Canada. That is the ultimate goal. However, people should not be so anxious. It has taken 500 years to get to this point. We cannot overcome those centuries of activity in a decade or two.

When the Liberal Party was in power in Canada it made, at best, slow progress toward attaining total control of the economic zone. We are taking new steps in the process to gain the ultimate goal of total control. In that connection we must recognize that various European countries, particularly Spain, Portugal and France, have fished in Atlantic waters. That must be overcome over a period of time. Some of the specific problems have been dealt with, but the right of France to fish in Atlantic waters has not been overcome.

Particular difficulty arises from the presence of St. Pierre and Miquelon in what would otherwise be our national waters. Everyone involved in the Atlantic fishery knows of the existence of St. Pierre and Miquelon and of the traditional rights of the French to fish in Atlantic waters. The problem is what to do about it. How can the problem be resolved? How can we put in place a mechanism to deal with the problem? We are trying to eliminate the mischief of the rights of four nations to fish in Atlantic waters. In relation to France, that is only one part of the problem.

Those who would make more of it than only an evolution of the problem which has existed for centuries, which has been particularly prominent in the last four or five decades, are not being fair with the people of Canada. They know that there is and has been a problem and that it must be resolved. The question is how to do that. I defy anybody in this House or in Atlantic Canada to deny that there is a problem with regard to foreign intervention in the Atlantic fishery.

The Government of Canada has proceeded on the course of resolution of the problem. To disagree with the specifics of how the Government of Canada has attempted to resolve the problem is only to quarrel with relatively minor details. One must agree that the problem must be resolved in a manner which solicits the concurrence of the international community. It cannot be resolved by unilateral action.

That raises the matter of gunboats. We know that that kind of unilateral action has never in the history of the world resolved any problem. It is very clear, based on the history of Atlantic Canada and its fishery, that there is a problem with respect to foreign participation in the Atlantic fishery. There is a very specific problem with regard to the participation of France in the Atlantic fishery which, in turn, is related to the existence of St. Pierre and Miquelon as a French territory. Everyone recognizes that that is a problem in connection with the traditional fishing activity of France in Atlantic Canada over the centuries.

That problem must be resolved and it is ridiculous for anyone to suggest otherwise. The question is: how does one resolve it? I have yet to hear anyone suggest in the House a way to resolve the problem. I am sure the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) would be amenable to any suggestion from any Member of the House who could tell the Minister how to resolve the problem in a manner that did not involve any concessions on the Atlantic fish stock. No one has made that suggestion, apart from blowing them out of the water. Anyone who has taken that kind of approach has been sunk himself. We know that this is not a solution.

The Government of Canada, following the precedents of international negotiations in the last decade or more, has arrived at what it believes, through the Minister of Fisheries, is a step toward a resolution of the problem. Let the person who has a better solution to the problem come forward and resolve it in another way. However, they must be prepared to take the risk of failure of the solution. That is a risk that falls to us as members of the Government, supporting the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. We recognize that we must take the risk of the failure of the solution that has been proposed. That is the lot of those who govern. However, it is not the lot of those in opposition to take the risk of failure of the solutions that they may propose as alternatives. In short, it means nothing for someone in opposition to say that we should take another course of action than that which we propose. They take no responsibility.

The Minister and the Government have recognized that there is a problem with respect to the Atlantic fishery in relation to the participation of the French in that fishery. A solution has been proposed and the Government of Canada is prepared to take the risk of the failure of that solution. What more can one ask of the Government? I rise in support of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, who has at least proposed a solution to a problem that has existed for more than 500 years and has been present in Atlantic Canada since the very foundation of this country in 1867. It has come to prominence in the decade or more since the establishment of the economic zone.

The case, simply stated, is that there is a problem and the Government of Canada has proposed a solution. It has done so in good faith, to the best of its ability, and the Government is prepared to take the risk of failure of that solution.

Let me conclude by simply dealing with those who would argue that this is not a good solution. I repeat emphatically that no one has proposed another solution. Those of us who were elected by the people of Atlantic Canada have an important duty to represent the best interests of Atlantic Canada and make certain that the interests of the people of Atlantic Canada are protected in this Parliament and in the Government. That is why I take grave and great exception to the remarks of an individual who, in this case, heads National Sea Products, an important fishing company in Atlantic Canada. I am referring to Gordon Cummings and the remarks he made that have been referred to by my colleagues, the Hon. Member or South West Nova (Mr. Comeau) and the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—Highlands—Canso (Mr. O'Neil). Those remarks are to the effect that the Government of Canada has sold out Atlantic Canada. We in Atlantic Canada have supported the Atlantic fishery, and our colleagues in Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick have supported Nova Scotia in the establishment of a factory freezer trawler and other initiatives designed to enhance the Atlantic fishery particularly for the benefit of Nova Scotia. For anyone in the position of a director president of a private enterprise company that has drawn on the resources of the Government and people of Canada to say that there is a sell-out of the East Coast fishery is contemptible in the worst degree. We will not stand for that.

If Mr. Cummings wants to stand before the people of Nova Scotia and seek election to this House of Commons where he can represent the views of Atlantic Canada, let him do so. However, if he is going to stand up and say that we are selling out Atlantic Canada, he will have to answer for it. I can tell Mr. Cummings that when he comes to Ottawa to seek assistance for his company, we are only going to consider the interests of the people of Nova Scotia, the employees of the company and those who are employed in the Atlantic fishery. We will not take that kind of nonsense from a business executive who denies the interest of Atlantic Canada and the people of Atlantic Canada in favour of the profits of his particular company. We are here to protect Atlantic Canada and we will protect it for all the people, but mostly from the Gordon Cummings.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, if my distinguished friend from the great City of Montreal does not want to participate—

Mr. Prud'homme: I did not say that. You continue, I will listen.

Mr. Forrestall: My intention was only to thank the staff and express appreciation for all their efforts. I also want to express appreciation for this motion having come forward this evening. I suggest to the House and my hon. friends from both the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party that perhaps they have now learned a very fundamental lesson about our distinguished Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who talked about parliamentary reform and the rights of back-benchers to make their mark. This has been a free and open debate and I think it has been very enlightening.

I wish only to commend the House for the level of debate and commend those who participated for their thoughtfulness and very deep concern about the issue that is before us. Above all, I want to thank the staff who have been here with us so patiently for these almost six hours.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, of course, I will join with my friend who just spoke in thanking all of the staff and yourself for your patience.

[Translation]

In fact, my main reason for taking part in this debate is that I would like to make a few comments on some of the speeches given in the House this evening.

• (0150)

[English]

I must say, Sir, that having been here since eight o'clock, like those who are still in the House, it is very enlightening for an urban Member of Parliament to get acquainted with a very important issue. I do not want to be facetious, but I will say I was impressed with the speech of the last speaker, the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby), which I listened to on the television in the lobby. I am sorry there were not more Hon. Members in the House because it is a very important issue. We could have learned a lot.

Mr. Forrestall: You were the only Liberal in the House for four hours.

Mr. Prud'homme: If my friend wants to be—

Mr. Forrestall: You were the only Liberal in the House for four hours.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I repeat, if the Hon. Member wants to be disagreeable, as usual, he knows perfectly well that I can be even more so—

[English]

And a lot more than he, I can assure the Hon. Member. I am making comments now and I do not think he should be désagréable, as we say in French. I have shown courtesy to every Hon. Member tonight. I have listened because I am interested. He cannot blame me for being interested in learning about a very important subject. I was present—

Mr. Forrestall: You were not present.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I wish either the gentleman would leave the room or behave, as I know he always does.

Mr. Forrestall: I will come back and challenge you on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: I have been in the House of Commons—

Mr. Forrestall: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. With respect to comments or otherwise of Hon. Members in the Chamber, my distinguished friend has not been here. He has not been in this Chamber. There has not been a member of the Liberal Party in this Chamber for the last three or four hours.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must rule that this is not a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: I will certainly raise a question of privilege. If my hon. friend reads Hansard tomorrow, he will see most likely that I was recorded all night as saying: "Mike, Mike". I was addressing myself to him, asking him to shut up, as I do now. All night I have been here and all night I have listened to every speech, so much so that I will quote from every single one. I intended to say only a few words, but I will now take my 20 minutes and if the Hon. Member keeps interrupting, he will get more.

I was impressed by the speech of the Hon. Member for Halifax West from whom I learned a lot. It gave me great pleasure to listen to the exceptional speech tonight of the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker). He was so good that even the Leader of the New Democratic Party came to shake his hand and congratulate him. Everyone who listened to that Hon. Member, and to the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall), the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin), the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson), and others, was extremely impressed. The Hon. Member for Carleton—Charlotte (Mr. McCain) said we were not present. Well, I must have ears which can hear outside of the House because I listened to his complete speech when he said we were not present. The same applies to the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso (Mr. O'Neil) who said we Liberals participated in the debate tonight strictly for votes. I did not know that Mr. Peckford and Mr. Buchanan were Liberal, unless they switched allegiance today.

An Hon. Member: They were not even in debate tonight.

Mr. Prud'homme: The Hon. Member for Carleton—Charlotte said the Liberals were eliminated and our lack of interest in the fisheries eliminated us. It seems that he is not aware of the results of the last election. We were eliminated almost all across the country, not only in the Maritimes. But it will be interesting for the Hon. Member to know that the place we had the most success was in the Atlantic Provinces. Seven Members were elected. That represents 22 per cent of the Members there. Of the 250 Members left in Canada, we only took 13 per cent, so we did rather well, especially in Newfoundland which is the subject of the debate tonight. Three Members of the Liberal Party were elected out of seven.

The Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso keeps talking. I must say to the Hon. Member who interrupted me earlier—and I have seen so many Hon. Members in and out that we are used to a one-term Member, and I hope that this would not apply to him—that if he keeps being disagreeable, as he seems to be tonight, he may be a one-term Member. Therefore, I do not think we should pay much attention to what he is saying.

The real reason I want to participate has nothing to do, really, with what has been said tonight. I wanted to listen because for so many years I have listened, and this is a part of Canada which is of great interest to me.

I am telling you, Mr. Speaker, that someone is going to get it, and it is not going to be me, if those Hon. Members keep interrupting. I have listened politely for 23 years to arguments. We may disagree but at least we listen to each other.

What is my main motivation?

[Translation]

You know I am a Francophone, a French-Canadian, that my heritage is French and that every time we have a debate in which one of our two mother countries is involved, whether it be Great Britain which gave me its political institutions—

[English]

You may laugh at that if you like.

But my political institutions come from Great Britain, respect them and I think they are probably among the best political institutions in the world. That is what Great Britain means to me. France gave me my cultural blood, what I am today. That is why when we have a debate where either both or one of our mother countries is involved, a debate that might arouse feelings among some people, feelings we would rather not see aroused, we must be very sensitive and realize what the debate is really about. I was delighted to hear one or two Members say that it was not engraved in stone. It was a consensus, not an agreement.

I have been listening very closely, and there is one thing I learned from the debate this evening, and I say this for the benefit of my friends at the French Embassy who will certainly be reading the proceedings. Anyone who knows anything about international politics realizes that this evening's debate will be followed very carefully and read by Ottawa's Department of External Affairs and by the French Embassy to find out what the mood was in Parliament during a debate involving this country and France. I hope they understand it would not have been in the best interests of either Canada or France if either country were to feel it had come out the winner.

I agree with the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) that the problem has been going on for some time. It is very difficult to find a solution. I agree. I learned something from his speech. I am one of those who after 23 years, naively perhaps, still listen to the speeches of these Members because we come from all regions of Canada and we can learn something by listening to others. I did learn something this evening. I am glad to say in French that I did learn a lot from my colleagues from the Atlantic Provinces. But I know as well that if one of the two sides—Canada or Canadians, and the French—were to gain a lot from these negotiations, one or the other will inevitably become quite frustrated. Experience has taught us that all boundary problems are always potentially very dangerous and very explosive because this kind of difficulties can indeed have dire consequences. We know that. There are in excess of 100 boundary problems in the world, Mr. Speaker, in Latin America and in a number of other countries which every time run the risk of witnessing individuals tearing at each other. That is the last thing we want to see happening between Canada and France, obviously.

So this evening I heard something I knew already, but still I listened to all the speeches, I repeat, all the speeches of my colleagues, and we do have a major problem on our hands. It is unbelievable, simply unbelievable.

• (0200)

[English]

It just cannot be that a group of people can be so unhappy. I am talking now about the fishermen in the Atlantic provinces, especially those in Newfoundland. There must be something wrong somewhere. That is why I wish to attract the attention of the House and the attention of the Government to this issue. The Government must be extremely careful.

Yes, it is true that in 1984 Canadians had enough of the Liberal Party. We were severely rejected. But that is democracy.

Mr. Forrestall: Why don't you talk about fish?

Mr. Prud'homme: Canadians made their choice but the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said: "I want to offer you a program on this and that. I want to have a new era in federal-provincial consultations". We were told in 1984 that the Liberals were arrogant. We were told that the Government always wanted to have its way. There may be some truth in that. At any rate, Canadians saw fit to reject the Liberals. But the Prime Minister was elected on something that he keeps repeating. Everyone knows that the Right Hon. Prime Minister is a friend of mine. I would not attack him. But I do remember one thing because I had to face that election. As a matter of fact, it was my best in 23 years, but that is on en passant. It was my easiest election. It seems that that was not the case for some of my colleagues.

The Prime Minister talked about a new era of federal-provincial consultations. So I ask myself: Why is it today that the Premiers of Newfoundland and Nova Scotia are so unhappy? No one can deny us asking that question. How is it that the fishermen of Atlantic Canada seem to be so concerned and so unhappy? Why are we here tonight? Why is it that Members opposite had a chance to participate in this debate? It is because I asked that the debate be allowed to continue. That is why the Hon. Member for Dartmouth—Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) is still in his place. We would have sent him home at 12 o'clock if I had not asked for this extension. I asked for it because I wanted to listen to all of the Members from Atlantic Canada, not only those Members from the New Democratic Party who asked for this debate. I wanted to know where each Member from Atlantic Canada stands on this issue. I wanted to learn what there was to learn for the best interests of the Maritimes. So Members opposite participated. Why should we cut the debate off at midnight when Members opposite may want to put their views to the public?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I think it is my right. Would you kindly ask the Hon. Member to settle down? Indeed, I am about to conclude—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) has the floor. I am sure Hon. Members will listen to him since he has approximately 10 minutes remaining.

Mr. Prud'homme: Truman said something along the lines of: "If you cannot stand my speech, it may not be the best I have made, you have the option to go home". So I suggest that perhaps, Mike—

Mr. Forrestall: I have been here all night.

Mr. Prud'homme: I know. The Hon. Member for Dartmouth—Halifax East has interrupted everyone tonight.

Mr. Forrestall: Except for those who were speaking.

Mr. Prud'homme: And the Hon. Member is still doing it. I am trying to find the riding of the Hon. Member on the seating plan. I know him so well by his first name which is Mike. He is a friend of mine. He does not change, he is always the same. I ask him in the name of our long friendship to be calm for a few more minutes.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say first of all that I greatly admire your patience with the Government's provocation tactics. Of course they aren't used to being on the Government side and since it won't be long before they are back on the Opposition benches, we can't really blame them for taking advantage of some of the trappings of power, and heaven knows some are doing more than their fair share in that area nowadays. Mr. Speaker, I think the subject of this debate is far more serious than we think.

[English]

Politics is like that. We know when it is a serious debate and when it is a frivolous debate.

I wish to conclude my remarks by thanking all the Members who participated tonight. I want them to know that I have learned a great deal. I am very delighted and happy to have listened to them all.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Prud'homme: I wish to emphasize the fact that it is not because some of us come from Montreal or western Canada that we have no interest in what is going on in other parts of Canada. I did not come here as a Quebecer. I came here as a Canadian from the Province of Quebec to participate and learn what is going on.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Prud'homme: I will never neglect the affairs of Quebec, as Members opposite do not want to neglect the affairs of the Atlantic provinces. I thank them for enlightening us.

It seems to me that the malaise is much more profound—

[Translation]

The feeling of unease is far more profound than Members have been willing to admit this evening. And if the effect of this debate was to make the Government think twice to avoid any future problems,

[English]

That is the exact reason why I participate. If there are Canadians from one part of the country who are absolutely unhappy, we know only too well where that will lead. It will lead to confrontation and people coming here to demonstrate on the Hill. I am not predicting the future. It seems obvious to me that that is what will happen. My father always told me when I had an important decision to make to think twice, and then think three times. He said that if no one says a word that means that I would be all right but that if people started quarrelling and if people said: "It cannot be. It cannot be", then there must be a problem. And as the Hon. Member from Halifax says, there is a time when one has to take a decision. I remind Hon. Members that this is not the end of the debate.

I would like for Members from the Atlantic provinces to remember that they were elected under a clear platform of consultation with the provinces. Two Premiers who are not Liberals seem to be extremely unhappy at this time. That is why I asked myself what is going on. Two Conservative Premiers are attacking a Conservative Government. That is quite unusual. It was enough to cause me to reflect. I will not apologize for participating in the debate tonight.

If Mr. Bourassa were to attack the Liberal Government in Ottawa, I would want to know what was going on. We are supposed to at least understand each other. But it seems that there is a great misunderstanding. I want the Government to be extremely careful in this case. No one needs this industry more than the people of the Atlantic provinces need it, in particular the people of Newfoundland. One does not need to come from Newfoundland to understand what the people there are going through.

When there is unemployment in Quebec, I know that there will always be more in the Atlantic provinces. I know that when not everyone is too rich in Quebec that in other parts of Canada there are some who are poorer. I do not want people in one part of Canada to say that the federal Government does not listen. I do not want them to say: "You should see what they do to us. They listen to us even less". That is not good federalism. That is not good understanding. That is not what the Government which was elected by Canadians was chosen to do. They were chosen on a platform of co-operation, listening, and new avenues in Canada. It was supposed to be great, a love-in. It seems the love-in has been broken today, and I want to know why. I thank Hon. Members for their attention. I thank the staff for having stayed so long.

Mr. Pat Binns (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, it is a great privilege for me to rise in the House at this time and to speak after the Hon. Members for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) and Dartmouth—Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall). Those two Members have close to 50 years experience between them in this Chamber. Because of that, they have great knowledge about the institution and the important place it has in the lives of Canadians and of the East Coast fishery. This has been an important debate for the House.

I am pleased to acknowledge that 14 Members on the Government side of the House have participated in the debate, which indicates that this issue is very important to the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada. We have welcomed the debate. In fact, there are Members who may wish to speak after I am finished. I am not sure that will be the case. I notice that there were only 10 speakers from the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party. I will not chastise them for that. It is honourable that they were concerned about the fishery in Atlantic Canada. Sometimes I wonder how far their sincerity carried, because there have been a couple of speeches from Members opposite in which I do not think they mentioned fish in 20 minutes of dialogue. We will forgive them for that.

This debate has been important to Atlantic Canada. It has been important to members of our Party. It has been established beyond a shadow of a doubt that members of the government Party can stand in the House and speak their own minds. They are not told to follow the Party line. If Members on this side of the House have questions, they are welcome to put those questions and challenge policy directions, and to provide direction on behalf of their constituents, their fishermen who are involved directly in the industry, and make sure that we get the best deal for Atlantic Canada.

It could also be for the inland fishery or the West Coast fishery. I mention that because it is perhaps a departure from what the House has seen over the last 25 years when members of the governing Party would follow the direction and policy laid down by the leader and the Cabinet of the day. That was a shame, because the Members were not given the opportunity to speak their own minds, to stand up for their constituents, and to influence government policy in the way Members have done here tonight. The House will function best if that opportunity continues.

In this debate, members of the Conservative Party have put the interests of Canadian fishermen first. They have said that other countries have fished within our territorial waters, and perhaps before they were established as our territorial waters, for hundreds of years. Yet the Government has taken it upon itself to conclude agreements which will establish for all time to come that that resource must first belong to the fishermen of Canada.

The Government has laid out a plan of action that will enable us and our fishermen to benefit from that resource for years to come. Within the next year, the next five years, more and more benefits will flow to the fishermen of Atlantic Canada from our fishing resource and from within the 200 mile limit of the shores of Atlantic Canada. The Government has not been backward in approaching that objective in a deliberate way. There can be differences of opinion in how we achieve that objective. But there can be no question that this Party and this Government has as its objective obtaining the best possible opportunity in the next year, in the next five years, in the next 25 years, and in the next 100 years for the fishermen of Atlantic Canada.

I would only say beware of the sceptics of this plan. There are people who have expressed scepticism from the opposite side. They have listened to the debate and I think that they will conclude, as other Canadians will, that based on the remarks of Members on the government side, that we are proceeding on a course which will offer the best long term opportunities for fishermen in Atlantic Canada.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I wish to close by thanking the staff, yourself, and all of those who have participated in this debate until 2.15 this morning. It is 2.45 a.m. in Newfoundland and I am sure some of our supporters there are watching, and I am sure that they will be very pleased with the strong stand that the government Members have taken. With that, I would conclude the debate.

CITIZENSHIP

FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF DECLARATION

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to ask all Members of the House of Commons and all Canadians to join with me in celebrating the 40th anniversary of Canadian citizenship.

[Translation]

The Canadian Citizenship Act came into force on January 1, 1947. Before that day we could say we were Canadian citizens, but there was no legal definition of this status. In fact, legally, we were British subjects.

[English]

Our concept of citizenship is relatively new and still changing to reflect the realities of this nation. However, I think all Members of this House will agree when I say that three of the fundamental principles of Canadian citizenship are equality, diversity and community. Our Citizenship Act makes equality a basic tenet of the law. It makes no distinction between citizens by birth and citizens by choice, as do many nations. It also treats the citizenship status of women in their own right rather than simply in relation to that of their spouses. The Charter of Rights and Freedoms defines our national commitment to diversity; respect for the heritage and values of the many cultural groups which enrich the Canadian personality. New Canadians are encouraged to retain their heritage when they accept the responsibilities and rights of Canadian citizenship.

Community spirit is that which prompts us to promote the well-being of others and contribute to the growth and expansion of Canada as a whole. Evidence of this can be seen in all regions of the country.

So we do have many reasons to celebrate the 40th anniversary of Canadian citizenship. I urge all Canadians to organize and take part in various activities in their regions. It does not matter much whether it be a festivity, an exhibition or a show, the main thing is to celebrate Canadian citizenship together.

[English]

I hope all Members will get involved, work with groups in their ridings and plan and hold celebrations, particularly during Citizenship Week in April and on Canada Day. As parliamentarians we can teach much and we can learn much about what Canadian citizenship is all about. To assist members my department has produced a planning guide to help community groups organize local events. The guide is available from the Department of the Secretary of State or through the 28 citizenship courts across Canada.

[Translation]

The concept of citizenship may be relatively new in Canada, but it has certainly evolved over time. This being an anniversary year, I intend to introduce amendments to make the Citizenship Act even newer.

[English]

While most of these amendments will be of a housekeeping nature, I believe a preamble to an amended Act would reaffirm the citizenship principles so important to all Canadians. I will be asking Members of this House and groups across Canada to consider what those principles should be since it is very important that Canadians define them themselves.

I hope we will use this 40th anniversary of the Citizenship Act to increase public understanding of, and reaffirm our commitment too, a dynamic multicultural society and a great country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, to be a Canadian citizen is one of the greatest privileges in this world. I know because I became a Canadian citizen. Millions of people in Canada have done so and there are many who are awaiting to attain that privilege. I am sure as well that there are tens of millions of people in this world who would love to be living in this country and have the privilege and honour of being Canadians.

• (1110)

Citizenship is a relatively new concept in Canada. Canadians have had that special privilege for only 40 years. We should be more concerned about recognizing the importance of being a Canadian citizen. We should celebrate when people have the privilege of becoming a citizen bestowed upon them. We should do more to emphasize its meaning and the responsibilities which it entails, not only for those who become Canadians but for those who are already Canadians.

Other nations understand the privilege and importance of being citizens of their country. The bestowing of an honorary citizenship is the highest honour a nation can give. That is why I enjoyed the privilege of working on a resolution of the House of Commons to bestow an honorary citizenship of Canada upon Raoul Wallenberg for his great achievements on behalf of the human race of saving tens of thousands of lives. The highest recognition that Canada could give was for the House of Commons to pass a resolution supported by all Parties to bestow citizenship upon him. No amount of money and no gift could be as meaningful as the gift of citizenship of Canada. Raoul Wallenberg became the first honorary citizen of Canada.

There are two matters which concern me. The first is that many people who are now elderly came to this country, spent their lives building this nation, and raised their families here. They would like to feel that they belong in this country now. They may not have attained the linguistic requirements which were demanded of them in their earlier years and, therefore, did not become Canadians. They would like to become Canadians in their older years but are hesitant. They feel that there are barriers and requirements which they cannot meet. It would be helpful if the Hon. Secretary of State of Canada (Mr. Crombie) would reach out to these people to let them know that they need only present themselves and indicate their love for their country and their desire for citizenship. I know that efforts in this regard would be greatly welcomed by the families of these elderly people who gave of their lives for this country and would now like to have the honour of finally becoming Canadians.

The other matter which concerns me is citizenship court judges. It is sad that we have some negative images of them because of the behaviour of several of these judges. I believe that a great effort should be made to enhance their image, to show the importance of their work, and to accord them the respect that is accorded to other judges. They should be respected so that people can look upon them as friends and people who play their important role in our country. I believe there should be training programs given to new judges to ensure that they conduct themselves in a reputable manner which will give those who are applying for citizenship a good image of our country. We should do everything we can to improve the quality of the service of citizenship judges as well as improving their image in the eyes of those who come before them.

In conclusion, we should think of citizenship in the words of the late President Kennedy of the United States who said those famous words which certainly apply to the people who contemplate their citizenship in Canada. He said: "Ask not what your country can do for you, but what you can do for your country".

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, it is a great privilege to be able to join in this brief discussion on the fortieth anniversary of the Canadian Citizenship Act on behalf of my colleagues in the New Democratic caucus and as spokesperson for multiculturalism in our caucus.

Citizenship represents the personal involvement of members of the Canadian community with the nation. It defines the individual experience of Canadian nationality. The Canadian nation came very slowly to this assertion of its existence as distinct on the face of the globe. It was only in the eightieth year of Canadian Confederation that an Act stated the distinct experience of this nationality. For years preceding, those who had lived in the Dominion of Canada regarded themselves primarily as subjects of the British monarch and members of the Empire, although they did realize that they lived in a distinct country within that Empire that had begun to foster a sense of nationality.

Those who came to Canada from other countries in the years preceding the Citizenship Act of 1947 and were naturalized valued their naturalization papers. However, it was only in that eightieth year that the Canadian Parliament passed an Act which established the reality of Canadian citizenship. It was a citizenship in which all were equal. As the Secretary of State of Canada (Mr. Crombie) has pointed out so well, the act of choosing to come to Canada and becoming a citizen made one as much a member of the family as if one had been fortunate enough to be born into an existing Canadian family and grow up here. There may have been a need for growing in experience, but there was no distinction in law.

As the Minister has also pointed out, the experience of women was a primary and individual experience of Canadian citizenship, whatever the status of their spouses might be. Those realities very well anticipated the sensitivity to equality and human rights which Canadians have been fostering in the past few years.

It is in the context of the development of Canadian citizenship that I value the opportunity to participate in citizenship court proceedings in Thunder Bay. As a Member of Parliament I have had the opportunity to attend a number of times. I regard each of these as a very special opportunity. I join in the experience of watching new citizens swear or affirm, according to their own choice, allegiance to the Queen of Canada and to accept the responsibilities and recognize the rights which they now have as new Canadian citizens. When I have the opportunity, as a Member of Parliament, to speak about the rights and opportunities which they now have to partake in Canadian life. I personally appreciate what Canadian citizenship means.

We have made a commendable advance in Canadian citizenship by expecting all who come to Canada to become citizens in order to vote. The decision to require those who come from the British Isles, the quintessential British subjects, to take out citizenship before they can vote, was the proper decision in an effort to attain full equality.

As we contemplate the provisions of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and explore the implications of diversity for this country, we appreciate the words of Section 27 which say:

> This Charter shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with the preservation and enhancement of the multicultural heritage of Canadians.

I know that citizenship will be developed and experienced by Canadians in recognition of this diversity. We will cultivate this diversity. We will enrich the cultural life of the country with elements from all over the globe. We will strengthen our national life with these various elements of our heritage and our Canadian citizenship will be enriched in the process.

Mr. Speaker: I have been asked by the Hon. Minister to recognize him for a brief additional statement. I think Members will find it appropriate under the circumstances.

CHINESE NEW YEAR

GUNG HAY FA CHOY

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State): Thank you for your indulgence, Mr. Speaker. I know the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) and the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) will join with me and all Members of the House in wishing members of the various Chinese-Canadian communities across the country happy new year today. It is the year of the rabbit, which implies prosperity and success, which we wish them and, indeed, all people in Canada. On behalf of members of the Opposition and members of the Government, I want to say to members of the Chinese community, "gung hay fa choy".

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Secretary of State for his words and certainly would be happy to say that our Party joins with him in wishing the Chinese community a very happy new year.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I believe I have more Chinese Canadians in my riding than any other Member in the House. Therefore, I also want to say, "gung hay fa choy".

While I have the floor, Mr. Speaker, let me point out that 40 years ago I emigrated with my mother from Scotland, my father having arrived here a few weeks earlier. We were among the first to be subject to the new law that the Minister is celebrating on its fortieth anniversary. Forty years ago Scots were not automatic citizens and we had to obtain our citizenship. I recall my mother asking the citizenship officer if we had to swear our citizenship. The officer said: "Mrs. Waddell, you must go through this procedure but we are not asking about your background". My mother said: "You are lucky to have us".

Those who came here 40 years ago, including my family, have contributed a lot to the country. It is a great occasion to celebrate 40 years of equality. We should not forget Robbie Burns Day as well as the Chinese New Year for which I stood to discuss originally.

Mr. Speaker: Of course, the Chair cannot enter into debate. It is perhaps a good thing because I too, in my riding, have a great number of Chinese Canadians. I also wear a kilt.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

STRIKING—TENTH AND ELEVENTH REPORTS OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the Tenth Report of the Striking Committee.

I also have the honour, Mr. Speaker, to present the Eleventh Report of the Striking Committee.

If the House gives its consent, I intend to move concurrence in this report later this day.

COMMUNICATIONS AND CULTURE—THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the Third Report of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture in the two officials languages.

That report is entitled Federal Museum Policy. The committee request that the Government respond to that report pursuant to S.O. 99(2).

Our report on the federal museum policy stems from the consideration of important matters of Canadian cultural policy undertaken by the committee.

[English]

The committee concurs with the recommendation of the National Museums Task Force that new legislation be introduced to establish the four major federal museums as autonomous institutions. The committee feels strongly that the granting programs to non-federal museums should be administered at arm's length, in accordance with the established and well-founded relationship between government and its cultural agencies.

The standing committee also recommends that the administrative costs of the four autonomous federal museums must be kept within the level of financial resources currently allocated to the National Museums of Canada for that purpose.

The federal Government should keep playing a major role in the area of museums, without neglecting to consult the main parties involved. To that end, the Committee recommends that the federal Government develop a new museum policy in consultation with the provinces and the museums community.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank representatives of all parties in this House for their sustained effort in having this unanimous report ready to be presented to the House. I also want to thank all the staff of the Committee for their commitment.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106 I wish to present petitions signed by people from Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia.

Whereas the proposed changes to the Patent Act will affect directly all Canadians who are not protected either by private or governmental medicare programs; and whereas the federal Government's proposal will raise the costs, already high, for provincial health care programs; and whereas the monopolies granted to innovative pharmaceutical companies will prevent competition from generic companies and will result in an increase in drug costs and drug prices and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs; and whereas those changes to the Patent Act are another example of the Canadian Government's concession in the free trade negotiations with the United States at the expense of everyday Canadians, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

REQUEST TO WITHDRAW TARIFF ON ENGLISH LANGUAGE BOOKS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have several petitions which have been certified pursuant to Standing Order 106, signed primarily by people from Ontario who request the Government of Canada to remove its retaliatory tariff on imported books in the English language which has, in their opinion, limited the access of Canadians to literature and information. Whereas the tariff has had little negative effect on the publishing industry in the United States, yet penalizes Canada's consumers, book publishers, book sellers, distributors and Canada's culture; and whereas rising book prices have placed a strain on the book acquisition program and policies of our nation's public and specialized libraries, the undersigned humbly pray and call upon Parliament to rescind this tariff which threatens irreparable harm to the Canadian book industry and compromises public policy on cultural industries in respect of free trade negotiations.

CRIMINAL CODE—ABORTION

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I wish to present a petition from many members of the congregation of the Rothesay Baptist Church in the Kennebecasis Valley region of my constituency in Fundy Royal. They are calling upon Parliament to protect the rights of unborn children of our nation and to prevent the killing of innocent babies by abortion. I should add that this petition has my full and total support.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106 on petitions, I wish to table a petition from residents of the Saint-Zénon region who object to the proposed changes to the Patent Act which, in their view, constitute one more example of concessions detrimental to Canadian consumers made by the Canadian Government to the United States in the free trade negotiations.

I also have a petition from citizens of the Saint-Fortunat region, who object to the proposed changes to the Patent Act because they will directly affect all Canadian men and women who are not covered by governmental or private drug insurance plans.

[English]

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I wish to present two petitions. The first is from residents of my riding of Thunder Bay—Nipigon who protest that the Government's proposals to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drug prices will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. The petitioners are concerned that the proposals of the federal Government will result in higher costs of provincial Government drug plans and represents another example of the concessions of the Canadian Government to the United States in the free trade negotiations at the expense of average Canadians. The petitioners therefore call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

JAPANESE CANADIANS—COMPENSATION

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): I have another petition, Mr. Speaker, from residents of Alberta and British Columbia who assert that the National Association of Japanese Canadians is the only elected national organization of Japanese Canadians with representatives from 15 centres across the country. They remind us that the National Association of Japanese Canadians has held public meetings about redress for the forcible dispossession and reallocation of Japanese Canadians during the Second World War, that the organization has used a national questionnaire to obtain grass roots advice from Japanese Canadians about redress and it has developed a position. The petitioners now urge the Parliament of Canada to deal honourably with Canadian citizens of Japanese descent by entering into negotiations immediately with the National Association of Japanese Canadians.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I just want to underline to the House that we have just passed three motions which were moved by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister, the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis). He does a good job in the House and I just want to make sure we realize that this is the first time in this session that the

The House resumed from Wednesday, January 28, 1987, consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-18, an Act respecting national transportation, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. Benjamin (p. 2756).

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I think I have I think, three or four minutes left from my speech of yesterday. I thought I should return to the House as a matter of courtesy, to make Hon. Members endure another three minutes, and to be available for questioning. Hopefully, there will not be any.

Let me just summarize my objections to this Bill to deregulate transporation. I do not believe Canadians want the Government to control all aspects of their lives. I agree with some Hon. Members of the Government who have said that. However, having said that, I think Canadians need and believe they need strong laws and enforcement to protect their health and safety. This Bill follows blindly the Americans in their deregulation, which has produced some scandals, such as the treatment of older people in nursing homes, in anti-safety measures, anti-health measures and so on, which have come about. If that is what the Government means by "deregulation", I do not believe the people of Canada want it.

Deregulation sounds like a good idea and in some respects it can be. However, with respect to rail or airline safety, I am not so sure it is a good idea. Why should the corporations escape responsibility to the public and public authorities in these particular areas? If we let the large corporations, the large banks, railway companies and airlines operate without regulations, they will find more and more ways to take advantage of both their employees and the ordinary consumer. Government regulation in Canada has ensured that Canadians are provided with services such as transportation and communication at a fair cost. With this kind of Conservative deregulation, corporations may choose to serve only highly profitable areas and wealthy customers, forgetting about the rest of us.

Let me say that I find this Bill anti-competitive, anti-safety and anti-service. I say it is anti-competitive in that we will have a few companies which will have all of the market, or at least most of it. We already have two airline companies which control 90 per cent of the market now. This Bill does not deal with the problem of the lack of competition.

Second, I find this legislation anti-safety. It is easy to see what can happen when we pick winners and losers, when one airline takes over another that is going under. What we see is the cutting of safety measures. I cited the example of the Arrow Airlines case in Newfoundland where they wanted to cut de-icing procedures to save money. They wanted to overfill the plane, and they did overfill it. There was also a bad record in terms of inspections. That is a good example of what happened with the United States in terms of anti-safety.

I cited articles in my speech yesterday from Time magazine and Business Week with respect to the problems of airline safety in the United States where there are overworked controllers. There were also a number of near misses. There are accidents just waiting to happen.

Finally, I would like to deal with the issue of anti-service. Canadians have had pretty good service and now, for what I think are ideological reasons, to follow blindly the United States to be trendy in this area of deregulation, we will in fact see worse service for Canadians. The Government should remember that Canada is different from the United States. We are not the fifty-first state. We have a history of Crown corporations and a history of laws that protect the safety, service and fairness among companies competing for the business of the ordinary Canadian. Canadians will not stand for a system in which the Government changes its policies to follow blindly the Americans simply to feather the nests of its rich friends in the business community. That is what Canadians believe. That is why we will see some opposition to this Bill.

I want to conclude by saying that I think this is a perfect Bill for a legislative committee to study with hearings across Canada. I heard a motion earlier today about a committee travelling to New York, and other committees looking at different aspects of foreign trade. This Bill deals with something which really affects Canadians in their day-to-day lives. I think the Government should allow a legislative committee to travel across Canada and to hold hearings with respect to this particular Bill. If the Bill is as good as the Government says it is, then there is nothing to fear from ordinary Canadians.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I listened intently this morning to the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). Yesterday I had the opportunity of catching a few of his comments on television, although I was not in the House. I was pleased to hear the Hon. Member say this morning that he thought that deregulation could be a very good thing. That statement gave me heart and encouragement. However, I was disappointed in the bulk of the Hon. Member's remarks this morning.

He talked about this legislation being anti-competitive, anti-safety and anti-service. As Hon. Members are well aware, that is certainly not the case. The Bill deals specifically with the question of competition. It does not deal with the question of competition between different modes of transportation, but it deals with trying to promote more competition within each mode. An example of that is with respect to having confidential contracts for rail transportation which will allow for more competition than exists right now. Right now a take-it-or-leave-it situation is being foisted on the public in terms of rail transportation. Once there are confidential contracts and agreements then there will be more competition. I think that is quite clear. I cannot understand why the Hon. Member suggests that this in any way, shape or form is an anti-competitive Bill.

The Hon. Member then went on to say that the Bill is anti-safety.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Does the Hon. Member have a question?

Mr. Redway: Yes, I have a question, which I am coming to, Mr. Speaker.

The Hon. Member says the Bill is anti-safety and cites an example with respect to nursing homes. This legislation has nothing to do with regulating or deregulating nursing homes, so there is no question about that issue at all.

It has been indicated that members of the NDP and the Canadian Labour Congress feel that the deregulation policy in transportation may well affect the employment situation in that sector. Will the Hon. Member comment on the fact that between the years 1980 and 1985, when deregulation took place in the United States, employment in the air transportation industry actually increased by some 9 per cent and employment in the trucking industry actually increased by some 22 per cent, even though the United States was experiencing a substantial recession at that time? Does that not undermine the argument that this measure will have a negative effect on employment in the transportation field?

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I draw the Hon. Member's attention to the December 22, 1986 issue of Business Week, in particular to an article entitled, "Is Deregulation Working? True, Prices Have Fallen but the Top Players May Stifle Competition". Business Week is hardly a socialist magazine. This particular issue talks about the problem with the lack of competition.

I also understand that in the United States there are now fewer air traffic controllers than there used to be, which is one of the problems that country faces. The air traffic controllers are overworked, and some people say underpaid and undertrained. In this respect I draw the Hon. Member's attention to the January 12, 1987 issue of Time in which there is an article on air travel in the United States. The article points out that the number of controllers is down from 16,300 to 14,700 since President Reagan fired striking air traffic controllers. The article points out that only 62 per cent of controllers are qualified at full performance levels versus 80 per cent before the strike. United Airlines Captain Mel Hoagland declares bluntly: "The air-traffic-control system is at the ragged edge of coming unravelled for lack of fully qualified controllers."

We do not want such a system in Canada. We like the Canadian system. We believe in—and do I dare use the word—conserving a good system.

At the beginning of the Hon. Member's comment he said that he was glad to see that I was not against deregulation. I am not against deregulation or privatization per se. I do not want big Government telling Canadians that they have to fill out forms or that it will look after every aspect of their lives. I want ordinary Canadians to have power over their lives. That is what I would like to see. The problem is that we have to be careful in this area.

I tell the Hon. Member that what happens with these types of government Bills is that they shift the power in certain areas in which Canadians want some regulation in safety, health, competition and so on. In those areas Canadians want some regulation. The Hon. Member makes a mistake to follow so quickly the Americans in getting totally rid of regulation. Something which often happens in these cases is that the big guys benefit. They become sort of self-regulated. What they end up doing after some decrease in fares is that they put up the fares because they control the whole market, and they have fewer safety standards.

The Hon. Member should consider the Arrow case. It is a good example of an airline in the United States which, when it was going down, had difficulties in a deregulated environment. It had to cut corners. So they may cut de-icing and save $1,500, take larger loads, or not let their pilots rest. They may cut staff and get more work out of their pilots, or the engineers on a rail train in Alberta. Then accidents happen and people die. Canadians do not want that. That is why they wish to look at this Bill very carefully.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On debate, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Shields).

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to address the House on Bill C-18, an Act respecting national transportation. Once enacted this transportation legislation will serve Canadians and the Canadian industry through a new and exciting era in transportation. Canada has reached a critical juncture in its transportation history. We must now position ourselves to optimize our growth and develop potential to respond to a very competive world economy. Canada's existing National Transportation Act is now some 20 years old. It served Canadians well through the years, but the time has come to restructure our legislative framework to respond to the dynamics of the international business world, and recognize the fundamental changes experienced by our own economy.

We have listened to the strong signals for changes to Canada's regulatory regime which emanate from all factors and facets of the transportation community. These signals call for a major restructuring of our transportation legislation; changes which recognize tremendous competition in international trading markets, changes in the regulatory environment in the United States, and new operating and technological developments in Canada. We cannot afford to stand still. Transportation is a fundamental and critical element of Canadian business. Reforms to our legislation are critical in meeting the real challenges faced by Canadian industry and realizing our country's potential. Bill C-18 will provide Canadian industry with this opportunity.

Bill C-18 is best characterized by the two words competition and opportunity. This legislation will promote greater competition in the transportation industry, an initiative which will translate into better prices and services for Canadian travellers and producers. These objectives are of particular significance to western Canada where transportation costs are of vital importance to the survival of resource industries that are competing in a tough international market.

The Canadian economy is continually exposed to greater competitive forces; competition from our traditional trading partners, and ever increasingly from developing nations of the Third World, and those of the East Bloc. Canadian producers are neither sheltered nor shielded from such competition. Daily our industries must compete with producers benefiting from lower production costs, and in some cases cheaper wages and equipment costs. Canadian producers or shippers are keenly aware of the competitive pressures in the market-place and must either respond to them, or withdraw.

In the interests of promoting a responsive, cheaper, and effective transportation service for Canadian travellers and shippers, an increased degree of competition will be introduced into the Canadian transport industry. Bill C-18 does not represent a three-headed monster formulated to scuttle Canada's transportation system. It is a balanced and reasoned approach to the current situation faced by Canada's carriers, and the users of Canada's transportation service.

In June, 1985 the Government released a discussion paper entitled Freedom to Move. This outlined the Government's perspective on the need for change in the legislation governing all modes of transportation. I wish to quote from that paper:

> We are a trading nation that must export in order to grow and prosper. It is therefore crucial for our economic well-being that we maintain an efficient, responsive and productive transportation system.
> A movement to deregulation has occurred in the United States, Canada's major trading partner. Greatly increased domestic and international competition has become a fact of life for Canadian producers and manufacturers.

On June 26, 1986 the former Minister of Transport, the Hon. Don Mazankowski, introduced two Bills into the House of Commons. Both were designed to introduce greater competition in the transportation industry. I might add that this was the culmination of a great deal of hard work by the former Minister of Transport, and he is to be lauded for this initiative.

This legislative package was aimed at increasing Canada's ability to expand its trade, and thereby increase production and employment. The legislation we are debating today has grown from one of those Bills. It has been refined through the consultative process and revised, where warranted, without sacrificing the principle of increased competition in the transportation industry.

Canada has traditionally been an open economy that is significantly dependent on trade as an engine of growth. In every year from 1980 to 1985 exports ranged around 25 per cent of the Gross National Product. During this period the Gross National Product increased from over $300 billion to over $460 billion, an increase in excess of 50 per cent. In the same period total exports increased from $77 billion to $120 billion, or 55 per cent of the Gross National Product.

While total export growth kept pace with economic growth, the same was not true of exports to particular markets. In current dollar terms, Canadian domestic exports to the United States increased by 92 per cent, but our exports to all other markets combined actually decreased by 7 per cent. We must ask ourselves what happened. The reasons are many. One of the more important factors was the decline in value of the Canadian dollar relative to that of the United States which made us more competitive in the United States' market. Another factor was that the value of the currencies of Canada's competitors declined still further relative to both the United States' dollar and our own.

The Canadian dollar has significantly appreciated relative to other currencies, particularly certain European currencies. For example, our currency appreciated 42 per cent relative to Sweden, 30 per cent relative to Finland, providing those two Scandinavian countries with enormous competitive advantage over Canada, particularly for forest products in European markets. The performance of the Canadian dollar relative to the pound, the franc, and the mark was similar, with the high value of our currency virtually eroding our competitiveness. The recent resurgence of certain European currencies relative to our own is barely sufficient to restore our previous competitive stance.

In short, because of the relative strength of our dollar, Canada faces substantial difficulties in retaining traditional markets, and may experience difficulties in penetrating new markets. It is difficult to remain competitive in world markets when that much ground is lost to competitors on currency exchange alone.

Therefore, Canadian producers must exploit every resource available to them to stay competitive. They must ensure that every aspect to getting goods to market works as efficiently, and I stress, as cost-effectively as possible. This includes the transportation network that links us to those markets.

Clearly we have become far more dependent upon the U.S. market, one of the few major export markets left open to us. In October 1980 the Congress of the United States enacted the Staggers Rail Act of 1980, which radically altered the regulation of railways in that country. That Act encouraged competition between U.S. railroads and stopped the practice of collective pricing by railroads. Confidential contracting for rail services and legalized rebates on published tariffs were introduced and are extensively used. U.S. railroads began to compete vigorously with each other, with trucking, barge and even shipping companies on the basis of price and service. Those able to offer service at the best price prosper at the expense of those who cannot. This has led to a lower level of freight rate.

The Staggers Act had important effects in Canada. First, Canadian railways complained that they were being competitively disadvantaged relative to their U.S. counterparts. Current Canadian legislation did not permit Canadian railways to enter into rebate or confidential contract agreements. Both contracts and rebates were, however, finding their way into Canada via transborder joint through rates with U.S. carriers and U.S. subsidiaries of Canadian carriers. In hearings before the Canadian Transport Commission, Canadian railways claimed to have lost $100 million in revenue due to the competitive disadvantage they suffered vis-à-vis American railroads.

I believe the railways are pleased with the confidential contract provisions of Bill C-18 as they apply to transboarder rates. They will eliminate this competitive disadvantage relative to U.S. railroads and provide our railways with an opportunity to regain ground lost to U.S. carriers.

Recent developments indicate that Canada's railways are overcoming their reluctance to compete for traffic. Markets virtually controlled by one railway will be exposed to competition. I am confident that our railways will respond to the challenge of competition.

Since Staggers, a number of Canadian shippers have become aware of the opportunity to realize savings in transportation costs using U.S. rail carriers to a greater extent and have devised methods to access them.

Canadian shippers are currently pursuing options to truck products to United States carriers for furtherance by rail to U.S. destinations. We have heard of one shipper who has seriously evaluated the possibility of pipelining his product to a U.S. railroad located just south of the Canada-U.S. border, to be loaded on a U.S. railroad for delivery to U.S. destinations. We must recognize that today, under present transportation legislation, shippers are disregarding traditional transportation solutions and devoting much time and effort to develop innovative and competitive transportation systems to get across the Canada-U.S. border. In many cases these solutions amount to a short hauling of Canadian railways.

Why are shippers resorting to these tactics? We have made some comparisons to help explain this phenomenon. I would be the first to concede that these comparisons are rough. Exact comparisons are most difficult with numbers produced under the auspices of two different Governments for two different countries. However, the indications are most clear that Canadian railway pricing has not remained competitive with that of U.S. counterparts.

In the pre-Staggers period from 1978 to 1980, the annual revenue per tonne for major commodities carried by U.S. and Canadian railways increased at virtually the same annual rates; close to 10 per cent in each case. However, in the post-Staggers period from 1980 to 1984, Canadian railway revenue per tonne increased an average of about 7 per cent, whereas in the U.S. railway it increased by only 3.7 per cent, that is, by just over half the average Canadian rate of increase.

For certain commodities the prices paid to move products on Canadian railways have been even higher. Commodities including coal, lumber, wheat, potash, sulphur, wood-pulp, and newsprint experienced an average aggregate revenue per tonne increase in rail rates of over 30 per cent between 1980 and 1984. By comparison, U.S. rail rates increased by just over 15 per cent in the same period.

Since the passage of the U.S. Staggers Rail Act of 1980, United States carriers have had to compete vigorously with each other on the basis of price and service. This has resulted in more competitive freight rates. Many Canadian shippers who must compete in the U.S. market with U.S. producers of the same product are placed at a competitive disadvantage in that market-place because they must pay higher freight rate costs. Clearly, Canadian railways have not operated in a similar business environment as have U.S. railways since 1980. Relatively speaking, this absence of competition has led to significant increases in transportation costs, costs borne by Canadian shippers.

The importance of reducing costs in today's environment is obvious, particularly for those western Canadian resource industries for whom transportation costs represent a large portion of their delivered price. Lower transportation costs are vital, especially for shippers whose traditional markets have tightened up enormously in the last several years. Lower transportation costs are vital to the western economy.

What are the implications of this? This is perhaps best illustrated by what happened in the transportation of lumber, a subject which is of vital importance to Canada and one which has certainly received its fair share of attention recently.

In 1985 Canada exported nearly $4 billion worth of lumber to the United States, supplying about 33 per cent of the total American market. Close to 50,000 Canadians are employed in the softwood lumber industry in Canada. Lumber traffic is also extremely important for the revenue of both Canadian railways. In 1984 lumber accounted for close to 8 per cent of total railway revenues or more than $410 million. Lumber is second only to coal as the largest single revenue contributor to the Canadian railways. A large portion of this total lumber movement originates in western Canada and is shipped by rail to the sunbelt, north central and northeastern United States. Because of the long distance involved, weights, value of product, et cetera, lumber lends itself well to transportation by rail.

Nonetheless, an analysis of western Canadian lumber shipments to the U.S. over the last five years indicates that there has been a continuing and growing shift from rail to truck, which has been both substantial and dramatic.

Lumber is a rail oriented commodity, especially for the major markets of the United States. However, the railway portion of western Canadian lumber shipments to U.S. markets has declined each year since passage of the Staggers Act. In the same period, the proportion of western Canadian lumber shipments shipped by truck to U.S. markets has increased almost threefold, a rather significant change.

How many millions of dollars of forgone railway revenue does this represent? How many railway jobs has this reluctance or inability to compete cost?

I am not suggesting that healthy intermodal competition between motor vehicles and railways be discouraged. However, I am advised that rail has shown a marked inability to compete in some western transportation markets. What has happened to this traffic? A small portion of this lumber is being trucked to destination, some of it to U.S. ports by container. However, the bulk of the tonnage is not trucked to ultimate destinations. The majority of this traffic is only trucked to, or across the Canada-U.S. border to reload centres for U.S. railroad carriers, for onward movement to U.S. destinations. As we can see, just as water always seeks the lowest levels and finds its own way to get there, traffic managers seek the lowest levels of freight rates and, as I have illustrated, a lot of them also find a way to get there.

Intermodal rail competition for these shippers will only be realized through effective competitive rail access provisions. No effective alternatives to these competitive access provisions have been found which will provide competitive rail service to these shippers.

These provisions have been greeted with almost universal approval and support of the shipping community.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, the Government maintains that no carrier need necessarily lose long haul movement if that carrier is willing to price competitively. In other words, if a railway is prepared to be competitive, we are convinced that no other railway will be in a better position to meet that rate than the carrier to which the shipper is captive.

Members will undoubtedly have heard that certain measures in Bill C-18 will expose hundreds of millions of dollars of Canadian freight traffic to U.S. carriers. The key word here is exposure to loss, not necessarily loss. Loss will only occur if Canadian carriers are non-competitive. Is that not the kind of competition Canadian industries face each and every day?

The benefits of increased competition among U.S. railways have been actively sought by Canadian shippers. For many shippers, lower transportation costs are the key to remaining competitive in world markets. It is now time to bring the benefits of increased competition to Canada.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, one of the things people ask is that we be consistent in our approaches. The Liberal Party has some inconsistencies. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) is father of deregulation. He began the process when he was Transport Minister. Last night the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) was totally against, it seemed to me, the process of deregulation and was critical of this Bill. It looks like the Liberals are against the Bill and deregulation. That is an example of inconsistency, but you expect the Liberal Party to be inconsistent in policy.

I have a question for the Hon. Member, who I expect to be consistent in policy. He comes from Athabasca. If I might use the nickname "Syncrude Jack", he has made some statements on Syncrude and his caucus in Alberta has made different statements. This is an issue of regulation or deregulation. Does he believe in a regulated price for Syncrude oil or does he not? Is the Member in favour of helping Syncrude in the expansion of its plant which his Government turned down or is he not? How is the Member consistent in his views on this matter? If he is in favour of helping Syncrude, then he is inconsistent with what he has just said about being for deregulation and letting the market work.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity to answer the Hon. Member's question. There are two points to it, the first being deregulation of oil and natural gas. I think the Hon. Member was trying to tie this to transportation. Second, I do not believe in a regulated oil price. We just got rid of the most onerous piece of legislation perpetrated on western Canada, namely, the National Energy Program. God help us if we ever see anything like that again.

The second part of the Hon. Member's question had to do with advocating assistance to Syncrude, one of the oil sands plants or the automotive industry, I assume. It could be any specific industry where the high cost of production is maybe related to security of supply or security of the nation. Would we be amenable to that sort of thing? Well, those are the kinds of things that will be discussed at an energy First Ministers conference starting tomorrow morning. Let me point out that for the first time in nine years all Energy Ministers from across Canada will be sitting down to work out the very issue that the Hon. Member for Vancouver Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) brings forward.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, some of the New Democratic Party Members have been suggesting that confidential rates are going to be predudicial and detrimental to small shippers. I have a short comment and then I have a question for the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields). Before doing either, I wish to commend the Hon. Member for a very excellent address.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Taylor: It took a lot of preparation and the presentation indicates the supreme effort which the Hon. Member from Athabasca makes on behalf of the people.

Several years ago in Alberta confidential rates for small truckers was permitted. It did not hurt the small shippers. It increased their business. Things were more buoyant and more truckers were able to get jobs. I found that the confidential rates were sensible and excellent for the country. For instance, the other rate was hurting our shippers. When you have a standard rate, you must know that everything is not standard. Some things are bulky, some are light, some are heavy, some are easy to load and some are very difficult to load. Consequently, if you cannot get a confidential rate you hurt the small shipper. I suggest the very opposite to what the NDP Members say. Confidential rates should increase the market and encourage small shippers. I would like the comments of the Hon. Member on this matter of confidential rates.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) for his question. He has brought forward a very important point. Shippers, small and large, will under Bill C-18 be able to negotiate rail prices and services that they do not now have for movement of goods and services. I have an example that clearly illustrates the Hon. Member's question, and it will probably answer it most graphically.

I come from the City of Fort McMurray which is the centre of the oil sands and the oil sands development. When I first moved there 20 years ago the town had around 2,700 people and today it has around 35,000 people. Massive growth took place because of the development of Syncrude and Suncor. There was a lot of movement of goods and services up to and out of Fort McMurray. The one product that comes out of Fort McMurray as a by-product from the development of the oil sands is sulphur. Open sulphur cars are used to move the sulphur from Fort McMurray to the markets, world-wide. Cars holding that sulphur go back to Fort McMurray empty. Young entrepreneurs approached the railroads to try to garner those cars to load black dirt. Can you believe it, Mr. Speaker, Fort McMurray does not have a supply of black dirt for lawns, gardens and that kind of thing? People wanted to move black dirt from sidings on cars just out of Edmonton. They could not get a preferential, confidential rate to move that black dirt north from Edmonton to Fort McMurray. The price was too high because they had to pay the same rate as moving the sulphur from Fort McMurray to Edmonton. The cars went north empty and the people of Fort McMurray did not get their black dirt. That is exactly the kind of thing we will eliminate.

Let me come to the back-haul rate. You can get a back-haul rate which works well. Whitehorse and places like that had difficulty moving empty re-usable beer bottles from communities to the factories where the bottling took place because they could not move them economically before Alberta introduced competitive or confidential rates. Now these communities get good back-haul rates and they have spawned an industry in itself. I hope that answers the Hon. Member's question, which was a very good one.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, is the Hon. Member aware that there are contracts now that could be classified as more confidential contracts after the deregulation of natural gas, that is contracts in the United States? That gas is now being sold in the United States at $1.75 a thousand cubic feet while it is being sold in Manitoba and Ontario for $3 a thousand cubic feet, at a loss really. It means Canadians are paying $125 more a year than they should be paying for their natural gas. It is a loss of $60 million for Manitoba and $600 million for Ontario. Is that an example of what he means by—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Shields: The Hon. Member is bootlegging energy—

Mr. Waddell: It is deregulation of natural gas.

Mr. Shields: We are talking about deregulation of transportation. I talked about two specific cases which I thought would underline what I was saying. The Hon. Member should realize that in the absence of confidential contracts railways are hesitant to offer lower rates to small shippers. Under the present legislation railways cannot offer the very small producer or shipper back-haul rates. That is ridiculous. If they are unable to do that they become uncompetitive.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate.

[Translation]

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a special interest in this Bill because, when I was Minister of Transport, I began to develop new regulations for the transport industry in Canada. At the time, Mr. Speaker, I had recognized the existence of a serious problem, especially as concerns the lack of flexibility in the rules and regulations. There was no competition to help consumers and producers. I agree with the comments of the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) who said that it is a problem to have the railroads fix set prices for small businesses in Western Canada and other regions.

However, I do have some reservations, Mr. Speaker. I believe that it is important to use caution when making changes in our transport system. At the time, I referred a number of questions to committees of the House of Commons for consideration, including safety, labour management relations, and the role of Crown corporations under deregulation.

Mr. Speaker, after the election in 1984, the Conservative Government dropped all the questions that had been referred. This means that the regions, consumers and producers have not had a chance to examine them and express their views on these very important changes.

Mr. Speaker, the Bill is weak because it ignores the concerns and the views of all Canadians.

[English]

There is no question that our transportation system is essential to our health and vitality as a nation. We have always recognized that, with our geography, if we made a mistake in our transportation system we would suffer drastically in our attempts to keep the country together, serve world markets, and develop the dynamism in our economic system that we require. There is no doubt that from time to time major changes have to take place. However, those changes should not be driven by some ideological imperative, but by a clear and careful judgment of what is going to work well.

When I initiated the movement, as the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) said, to change the rules governing airlines, there was incredible opposition from civil servants, the CTC and transportation companies themselves. Everyone said it could not and should not be done. It was a very happy and cosy little club. However, decisions were taking far too long. There was no sensitive response to local conditions. Certainly there was no market-place dynamism which would allow prices to respond to supply and demand.

It is quite true that at that time, in comparison with many other countries, our airline system was in a deep decline. The number of passengers was falling off because we did not have the incentive to broaden the base of people who could afford to fly. The system was catering to the business traveller, Members of Parliament and Senators who do not have to pay for their own tickets because they have expense accounts. For the general public at large air travel was becoming a less attractive option. That is when we brought in a new airline policy, and I would remind Members of the House that that policy is still in place today. The new Conservative Government has not changed it. Legislation is in front of us now, but changes have not been made to break down the regional divisions and allow airlines a much freer pricing system, or elimination of the conditions of licensing which set rigorous requirements on too many air carriers.

We also initiated discussions with the provinces on changing the rules governing trucking. Consensus was reached on the need for changes in this area at a federal-provincial conference in April, 1984. The legislation before us has an important history, a history with which I associate myself. However, I ask why the progress made up to that point in time was blocked. In effect we were deflected away from something that should have had the basic agreement of all political parties. Instead we had a peculiar partisan move. The Government did not want to be associated with the past initiatives of the Liberal Government so the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) said we were going to do it all over again. However, in doing so, some fundamental mistakes were made. Those mistakes have yet to be corrected. They are not corrected in this Bill or in the policies and programs of the Government and that is why there is such great concern.

The NDP ask why the Liberal Party, which advocated the liberalization of transport in 1984, is critical of this Bill. The reason is that this Bill does not reflect the initiatives, objectives and concerns we raised at that time. Simply because you use the word "deregulation" does not mean that is what it is. I think it is quite correct to say that the Government has adopted, without much thought, the style and methods used in the U.S. It does so in almost everything else, so why not in transportation?

Let me pose a key question. Can you have a fully-deregulated system subject to the discipline of the market-place when you have major Crown corporations still occupying a large part of the market? If you talk to those who have gone through the experience of deregulation their answer is no, of course. If you are going to have a free market you cannot have a government-owned enterprise as a major player in that market. You have to decide what you are going to do with it. If not, you have a hybrid system, one which is highly distorted.

The Government opted for full deregulation but we did not. We carefully used the word "liberalization", a word which is far more compatible to our ears, but it also made more sense because it would allow us to maintain the mixed system we have. This Bill proceeds with a full court press on deregulation. The Government is left with the embarrassing problem of what to do with Air Canada, CNR and VIA Rail. You cannot have a Crown corporation funded by the Government under a deregulated system. No one in the Government has faced that issue. I presume that the previous Minister of Transport was about to face it when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that he could not do anything with it. We all know of the great policy analyses the Prime Minister makes. If he gets through one day without changing his mind it is a small miracle.

The fact is that we now have incredible disharmony that is putting the transportation system out of whack and giving all the wrong signals to the market-place. You cannot say that the private sector is going to make the decisions and still maintain total control over Crown corporations. In addition, the Government has imposed a complete set of restraints upon Crown corporations. Over the past two and a half years the Government has refused to come to grips with the essential financial problems of Air Canada and the CNR. This system has no coherence.

The Government wants to keep Crown corporations but will not give them any money to modernize and respond to the market-place. The private operators do not want the Government to do that anyway because it would be unfair to them. They cannot be subject to the discipline of the market-place where they live and die by supply and demand if one of the big players is government-owned and can always bail itself out by going back to the federal Treasury. We have no formula whatsoever to deal with that fundamental problem.

How can the Government pass a Bill to make the market-place supreme without coming to grips with what its policy will be in relation to Air Canada and CNR? Will the Government fund them, keep them, partially deprivatize them? What will the Government do? All we get is a great yawning silence from the benches opposite. To proceed with this legislation and the series of principles behind it without coming to grips with that fundamental issue is a recipe for disaster. It will not be a deregulated market-place driven system. It will be hybrid, distorted, and out of whack. We do not know whether the decisions will be made by public sector signals or market signals.

Another fundamental issue which we began to address in 1984 and which has since been wiped off the agenda is that of how to deal with employer-employee relationships. We carefully examined what had happened in other systems under liberalization or deregulation. The crucial issue for many was how to accommodate that change and still maintain effective, proper employer-employee relations. We seem to be adopting the American model of throwing the workers on the scrap heap. That seems to be the system written between the lines in this Bill because nothing else has happened to make any changes.

For example, in 1984 the previous Government was working with various employee groups to make them partners in certain Crown corporations as an incentive. We had started negotiations with several of the major unions and Air Canada. We believed that was one way of solving the serious problem of dislocation. In addition, the problems of harmonizing union rules, seniority, and providing for certain job guarantees must be dealt with. By treating the workers like scrap the Americans created a total lack of morale and disloyalty in the system. That is why many of those airlines have gone bust. They did not get the productivity, worker involvement, and caring that was required.

In 1984 we gave the simple but important direction that, before proceeding further with any more liberalization or changing of the rules, there must be an agreed upon approach among the unions and employers in transportation with regard to how to deal with worker problems and worker dislocation. Have we heard anything at all from the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux)? Has the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) uttered a—

—a word or made the slightest comment on major problems that would have to be considered? None at all.

[English]

That is because the Government does not have a policy. It does not know what to do. It has not decided how to come to grips with that fundamental issue.

We have two very major and serious problems which require answers before we can proceed with a fundamental overhaul. The Canadian people, particularly those involved in the transportation industry, are without answers to those questions. It is not as though we in the Opposition have not tried to get answers in committee and other places. However, there has been a stone wall, a refusal to come to grips with those problems.

Do the Conservative Members now in the Chamber have answers to these questions? If so, they should put them forward in the House today. Let us hear what the Conservatives want to do about those two issues. If they do not have answers, they had better not vote for this Bill because that is asking for a pot of trouble. I do not say that for partisan reasons. I say that from experience. I have looked carefully at the issues and, having initiated this in 1984, I can say with some credibility that I knew what to expect.

When the Conservative Government took power and said it was going to continue with this initiative I gave a speech to The Financial Post conference and said, "God bless them, I hope they do well". I was not critical, but said that we should wait and see what they do. We have waited two years and they have not done it right. They have not put it together in the right way.

My colleagues have discussed the Government's policy of ensuring that competition is continued by insisting on fair competition between companies. Instead, we have seen an incredible rash of mergers and acquisitions. How is the Government going to support and stimulate the emergence of commuter and regional airlines to serve small communities?

We shifted allocations in the Department of Transport away from some non-essential expenditure to help smaller private Canadian companies buy new equipment to start up new regional and commuter airlines to serve the Maritimes and the north. One of the first acts of this Government was to wipe out that support. It did not give those smaller companies an opportunity to get the new equipment they needed to start competing.

That initiative was not a Liberal bogyman. It had worked well in the American system. When larger airlines evacuated a certain market the American Government assisted smaller companies to start up. In the State of Alaska there was an emergence of a number of new regionally based airlines which have been quite successful. The American Government recognized that in order to make that happen there had to be a kick-start, an initial incentive. We had money in our Budget for that. It was not new money. We had reallocated old expenditures. However, the Conservative Government wiped that out.

The Government says that it wants to bring prices down. If that is the case, why has the Government increased user prices for transportation year after year? Why have airport and airline fees gone up? Why have the costs of using ports and dry docks gone up? Why are public charges to the users of the transportation system being increased when the Government says it wants the private sector to bring prices down. Is it telling the private sector to bring the prices down so that it can grab the surplus amount? Is that a coherent and sensible transportation policy? There are no answers to those questions.

We hear fine rhetoric about competition and productivity, but what about the user fees? If the Government intends to apply user fees, it ought to follow through on the logic, rather than ignore it so that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) can secretly grab more money from the taxpayer. I cannot believe the Government is interested in lower prices and costs when it has added substantial costs to the transportation system over the past two years. That will not wash because the evidence is in every budget that the Minister of Finance brings down.

There is severe criticism of this Bill because its stated purpose is not its intent and it carries the portent of real jeopardy to the transportation system. It will not lead us toward the objectives that we believe were clearly established in 1984.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a comment. Perhaps I may point out again that, unlike what the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) maintained in this debate a few minutes ago, the Liberal Party, the Official Opposition is not against a more flexible system or regulatory framework. In fact, we were the first to look into the matter, and our aim was and still is today to have a regulatory framework that is better adapted to new economic configurations and the changing face of the transport industry.

I want to ask the Hon. Member who, as we all know, was a very competent Minister of Transport and who has always maintained a very keen interest in the subject, to explain two things.

First, according to Bill C-18, the Canadian Transport Commission will be abolished and replaced by a new agency called the National Transportation Agency. The CTC has seven commissioners while the new agency will have nine. I want to ask the Hon. Member whether he or the previous Government, the Liberal Government at the time, had any plans for making such radical changes in the Transport Commission.

Second, would he agree that here lies a very real danger for Canadians and for the whole transportation policy, since by making such radical changes, it will be impossible to establish any continuity between the former Transport Commission and the new agency, which I imagine might cause major safety problems and occasionally even require radical action on the part of the agency? Does he have any thoughts on the subject he would like to share with us, first of all, with respect to regulation, where I believe he agrees with me that we are in favour of greater regulation, provided it is flexible, and does he agree with me that the changeover from the Transport Commission to the new agency might represent a safety hazard for the Canadian public that uses the various transport modes?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to answer my friend the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). A major change has been made with the appointment of the former member for Yukon as president of the Commission. Unfortunately, we will have a president of a new commission when we sit on the Government side. Who knows what will be the answer of the new president?

Mr. Speaker, I do not think there will be a dramatic change in the roles and responsibilities of the new commission, without a new government policy in the area of security, but a policy calling for investing millions of dollars in security for the railway network.

It is not a problem of regulation. It is a problem dealing with a number of railway lines in the downtown district, with the transportation of highly dangerous goods. Also, as indicated in the commission's report, there is a serious problem in the communications system as well as the hiring standards in the railways. It is also a problem of the Government's will to seek a policy change, a change in operating methods for the railways and the airlines.

[English]

I did not refer to the safety problem. However, I could have said that one of the real dominant concerns among Canadians about deregulation is safety and security. I am not fearmongering, it is simply a real concern that the proliferation in the number of carriers creates greater potential for mistakes and accidents.

The commission that studied the Gimli air accident made a number of recommendations for changing responsibility and control in airline maintenance. Virtually none of those recommendations were implemented since they were made a year and a half ago. I do not know what the former Minister of Transport was doing, but he had an opportunity to take serious action on an important report.

There have been recommendations with respect to the whole question of air controllers and responsibilities in the airports. Serious problems relating to training were raised, but there has been no response.

I have already stated the need for introducing a much more efficient and modern system of safety and security in the railway system. While no one denies that it will cost money, the fact remains that it has not been implemented. I suggest that simply changing the name of a commission and appointing a new president who basically does not believe in the operation of that system will not give anyone assurances that a real change has taken place.

Mr. Clifford: Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to question a member of the Opposition, particularly since we have a former Minister of Transport with us this morning. The Hon. Member, who spoke on behalf of his party, said much about policies and is now alluding to safety and the need to communicate. I suggest that it is important to communicate the proper policies, because members opposite apparently are not aware of them.

Many Members opposite have said that the Bill does not contain any provision to prevent situations which could effectively reduce air safety. I would like to hear the Liberals explain that statement because the first provision for obtaining a licence to air service is that the firm must be fit and safe.

The Liberals said that Auditor General Dye stated that Transport Canada has been unable to check all the carriers under his jurisdiction at least once a year. However, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) has repeatedly made the pledge that we will have 100 new inspectors. Does the Hon. Member deny that?

Let me advise the Hon. Member of our response to the question of safety. The Minister made a statement about airport safety systems. He followed that with action and we have changed all the airport safety systems with a new system of bag checking and personal security checks. I believe our record is unblemished in our pursuit of air safety. I question how much members opposite understand these policies and what they are trying to communicate to Canadians.

The Liberals have said that this deregulation will enable foreign interests, namely the U.S., to take over the trucking companies. I think we should point out to the Liberals that the existing legislation does not prevent American carriers from coming into Canada. In fact, there are over 2,000 American carriers in our country. This occurred under the Liberal Government and its regulations.

Perhaps the Hon. Member could shed some light on these two areas since he brought them up; the lack of policy, with which we do not agree, and the lack of safety. Perhaps then he would like to go on and talk about who really did let the U.S. trucking companies into the country.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, in the short time available to me I will attempt to answer those questions, which I think are honest and sincere. Safety is not a matter of a few small changes or announcements by the Minister. I liked the comment of the Democrats the other night in responding to President Reagan. They said: "Actions, not words, are what count". It is very easy for the Minister of Transport to say we are going to do these things. The question is, where is the proof that they are being done? Have they been done? Have the 100 inspectors been added to the Department of Transport? In fact, the number of personnel in the Department of Transport has been cut back. The numbers are way down. There is a shortage of personnel. The regions are being reduced.

Therefore, if the Government is foreseeing a wider range of transport activity and is reducing the capacity to provide for surveillance and maintenance then, of course, we are going to raise the questions. I do not, frankly, give a damn about what the Minister of Transport said. What I want to see in the Estimates book is what in fact he has done. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, he has not done what he said he is going to do. That is the problem.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the time for questions and comments has now terminated.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Kilgour).

Mr. Kilgour: I was getting up to make a comment or ask a question, Mr. Speaker. You say the time has expired?

Mr. Gauthier: He has already made a speech.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is now debate. Does the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary want the floor?

Mr. Gauthier: He has already spoken.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry. The Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid).

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on Bill C-18, recognizing that it is a Bill designed to bring the Canadian transportation industry and Canadian business and commerce into a more competitive mode of operation. I would like to direct the attention of the House to a particular aspect of Bill C-18, the tough watchdog of safety and public interest, the new national transportation agency which is established under the provisions of Part 1 of the Bill. I trust Hon. Members opposite have addressed themselves to Part 1 of the Bill and that particular agency.

As Hon. Members know, this new agency will replace the Canadian Transport Commission, so that it does become a replacement agency, yes, but it will operate in a far different way. It will not be a regulatory body in the sense that the old one was. It will, however, be a transportation ombudsman, a mediator and, as I said before, a public watchdog. Its powers allow it to monitor compliance and establish new regulations if the public interest is jeopardized by unsafe practices or a lack of competition. It will have the ability to make inquiries into complaints, establish competitive line rates, grant entry into markets and provide mediation services to help resolve shipper-carrier disputes.

The over-all intent of Bill C-18 is to reduce the regulatory burden on industry and at the same time deal more quickly and effectively with real problems as they emerge. The new agency is uniquely designed to do that. First, the agency has a wider range of options to deal with complaints and disputes between the various modes of transport. Indeed, the main responsibility of the new agency will be to administer a family of dispute resolving mechanisms contained within the bill itself. These include mediation services, a final offer arbitration service, a simplified procedure for investigating complaints from aggrieved parties. All of these provisions are new. They are all designed to assist industry to operate in an environment which is freer of Government regulation and intervention.

Let us look at disputes between a shipper and a carrier for a moment. The new agency, at the request of both parties, will call in a mediator. If the mediator is unsuccesssful in resolving the dispute, and if the shipper requests it, an arbitrator may be appointed. The arbitrator will then choose between the final offers. We used to do that in the practice of law between disputing parties. We would make our best offer and then let the chips fall where they may. The arbitrator makes his decision and, according to the Bill, that decision must remain in effect for a period up to a year. That is enough to prompt each party to make its best offer and enough to encourage shippers and carriers alike to settle their disputes between themselves and without recourse to the agency. However, the agency is there to do it for them.

The same applies to cargo rates and fares. Under the new rules, carriers will be permitted to establish fares and rates without regulatory approval. However, the provision is there for complaints in case of abuse. Increases in regular passenger fares on monopoly routes can be appealed to the National Transportation Agency. If it is determined that the rates are unfair, are being abused or that the increase is unreasonable, the agency can disallow the new fare and order a reduction, with refunds where practical.

The national transportation agency will be smaller and more streamlined than the old Transport Commission. It will have to adhere to time limits when dealing with complaints and applications for new services. The old Board was never constrained in such a manner and as a result those disputes would drag on and on, which was a disservice, not only to the parties to a complaint but to the users as well.

The size of the agency, along with the time limit, will make it far more responsive to the needs of shippers, users, the industry and the public than was the former Canadian Transport Commission. Further, the new agency is given functions and powers specifically tailored to the Government's new policies and approach.

The agency will be bound by policy directions which may be issued by the Governor in Council. Some Hon. Members opposite may say this is political manipulation. I want to point out that, with the provisions in this Act, nothing could be further from the truth. Any policy direction issued to the new agency must first be presented to both Houses of Parliament. Further, as in the normal course of business in the House, a policy direction might be referred to a committee for detailed consideration. What more could one ask than that?

In addition, under the Bill, no policy direction can have any bearing on any specific case before the agency at the time. Government will not be able to intervene in any case being considered by the agency. The legislation is phrased to prevent this type of interference or intervention. It is a protection from the type of allegation that might be made by Members opposite.

Too often there is a type of regulatory capture between a government body and the industry it regulates. The new agency will be structured on a multimodal basis to prevent that. We are talking about deregulation of all modes of transportation just to prevent that type of occurrence. Agency members will deal with the transportation network as a whole rather than the railway component, the airline component or even a marine component. These are separate entities in themselves. This structure is inherently more fair, as well as being more flexible than that found in most government agencies.

Before closing I would like to make the point that while the Canadian Transport Commission itself will be terminated, the Government intends to draw upon the expertise as presently contained within that body in the staffing of the new agency. This intention was clearly stated in the Freedom to Move document, and I can assure Hon. Members that it remains the policy of the Government. While the headquarters of the agency will be in Ottawa, it may also have regional offices across the country to give closer contact with the users and providers of transportation services.

Bill C-18 is an important part of the Government's over-all program to spur economic renewal and create jobs by removing regulatory obstacles. It is a vehicle whereby the transportation sector can renew and strengthen itself. The new agency will play an important role in this effort. With its new responsibilities and structure, with the time-limit on decisions and with a greater responsiveness to government policy the agency will be well designed to foster the development of a first-rate transportation system throughout our land.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I was wondering if the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid) could elaborate on why he has so much confidence in what will replace the Canadian Transport Commission. It seems to me that the Canadian Transport Commission has operated well over the years. It is not that we have not had our complaints with it from time to time, we have. However, I wonder if the Hon. Member can explain what he means by the ombudsman function of the new agency that is to replace the CTC. It seems to me that one of the features of bureaucracies with an ombudsman function, as opposed to a regulatory function, is that matters often take a very long time to be decided upon, whereas the Canadian Transport Commission now, particularly when it receives complaints related to safety or other operational concerns, has the power to act rather swiftly. Any experience I have had with ombudspersons tells me that will not be the case with that type of function. I would like to hear more from the Hon. Member with respect to why he thinks it is such a great thing. Why does he want to replace a regulatory commission that has a good record with a bureaucracy in which we have no reason to have very much confidence?

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, the type of commission to which the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) refers, the Canadian Transport Commission, is just the type of regulatory commission that takes days on end to resolve an issue. He says that has also been his experience with respect to ombudsmen. I wish to point out to the Hon. Member that he should not be afraid to take a chance. As Samuel Johnson has said, "Nothing will ever be attempted if all possible objections must be first overcome".

I wish to tell the Hon. Member that the streamlining of the new agency will make it accessible to the people involved in transportation. It will make it possible for them to reach early decisions. When we talk about an ombudsman role we are talking about a commission that is prepared to hear complaints, problems relating to rates and entry into markets. For far too long my friend has been dealing with the old types of commissions and the old types of ombudsmen's offices. I suggest he wait to try the new one.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I think we will find, if this Bill is passed and if it becomes law as it is now proposed, God forbid, that many of the people who formerly had complaints about the Canadian Transport Commission and the existing regulatory process will be wishing it back. They will be wishing it back after they have been subjected to the type of process that the Hon. Member has in mind, because that process will be much more subject to the political whims of the day than the process we have in place today.

An area upon which the Hon. Member did not go into great detail, and upon which I would like to know his position, is with respect to whether or not he is supportive of that element of the legislation that calls for mandated joint line rates which will put American railways directly in competition with Canadian railways. Is the Hon. Member aware of the concern expressed by both Canadian National and Canadian Pacific, and everyone else in the railway community, that this could lead to the demise of our railway transportation system? Has the Hon. Member considered that point? If he has what is his position on it?

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, the suggestion made by the Hon. Member is that if we follow the route of Bill C-18 the railways in Canada will reach their ultimate demise. I think that is a completely wrong premise. Frankly, what we want to do is make use of the joint resources of both railways on the northern portion of the North American continent. Given the resources of CN and CP we should be able to come up with a railway mode of transportation as effective, as efficient, as reliable and as responsible as that of the Burlington line south of the border. Obviously, with an intermodal form of transportation capable of fixing rates and linking trucking aspects of transportation with the destinations of railway lines we should be able to put in place a transportation system with both modes of transportation in operation. This will give a complete service to shippers, as well as providing efficient pricing. In this way we can compete completely with the Burlington line across the river. I would support that aspect, even if it comes to an agency consideration of a dispute.

Mr. Gauthier: I think the Hon. Member will agree with me that deregulation does seriously impact on existing carriers and on new carriers. It has created stressful situations in some employee-employer relations, and some concessions are demanded from the personnel of these large carriers. For example, I am thinking of the airline industry where we know that stressful jobs, often insecure positions, lay-offs, and longer hours of work cause human error.

Earlier in my remarks I was referring to the safety angle. First, would the Hon. Member tell me what he thinks about the employer-employee relations? At no place in this Bill are there questions of improving employee-employer relations. Does he agree that we should be concerned and preoccupied with putting something into this Bill which would indicate our will, as the Parliament of Canada, to protect and secure employment for those who may be touched by deregulation? Does the Hon. Member agree with me that there could be some severe or serious security factors involved in this rapid deregulation?

Mr. Reid: I thank the Hon. Member for his question which gives me an opportunity to emphasize that safety is a priority not to be compromised under this Bill or by the Government. We have said that over and over again. One of the reasons that the agency is established is for the specific purpose of monitoring the operation of these different modes of transport from the point of view of safety, security, and the environment. The agency is not there to protect each private mode of transport, or even the public mode of transport from an employer-employee relation. We want to rid ourselves of this type of regulatory process which the old Canadian Transport Commission had in its operations. That is the whole streamlined purpose of this agency. We will limit its operation to the powers as set out in the Act. Safety will be uppermost in one of its terms of regulatory operation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated.

It being 1.12 p.m., I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At 1.12 p.m. the House took recess.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to recall certain facts.

Fact No. 1: The Tory Government rejects the American invitation to take part in the star wars research program.

Fact No. 2: The Tory Government takes away tens of millions of dollars from our research budgets to invest $800 over a 10-year period in the American orbital station program.

Fact No. 3: The Pentagon announces that it will use the orbital station in its star wars program.

Fact No. 4: I raise that inconsistency in a speech which I made in the House of Commons on January 20, and Mr. Jeffrey Simpson of The Globe and Mail goes further in the analysis of the problem the next day, January 21.

Fact No. 5: The Globe and Mail reported last week the comments made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) who said that he was so concerned about the situation that he has written to the American administration.

Mr. Speaker, the Government's position in this respect shows that it is entirely out of control, that it does not know what it is doing, that it is naive once again and is blindly handing over to the Americans the whole area of research and development.

ABORTION

CALL FOR PARLIAMENTARY STUDY

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, the present Canadian abortion law has been in place for almost two decades. During this time hundreds of thousands of abortions have been performed. Many of those unborn children did not pose a significant threat to the lives of their mothers and were aborted for the sake of convenience.

Many Hon. Members of the House agree with me in deploring the over 65,000 abortions performed each year in Canada. In fairness, other Hon. Members of the House do not agree and believe that abortion should be made more available.

Whatever the opinions of Members, they should stand up and be counted on this important issue. Canadians expect their legislators to take up the issue of abortion since the present law satisfies no one. The matter should be studied with the intent of creating a new and better law. Let us at least have the courage to speak freely about this issue.

There are no easy answers in the abortion debate, but we owe it to millions of concerned Canadians to begin asking the questions.

CHINESE NEW YEAR

INJUSTICES SUFFERED BY EARLY CHINESE IMMIGRANTS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of all Members of Parliament and my constituents of Vancouver East, I say: "Gung hay fa choy", Happy Chinese New Year, with good wishes for health and happiness to all Canadians in the Year of the Rabbit.

I was pleased to learn recently that the Minister responsible for multiculturalism has agreed with the Chinese Canadian National Council that an all-Party resolution is needed to acknowledge the early injustices and the racial discrimination which occurred against Chinese immigrants because of the Chinese head tax and the Chinese Exclusion Act.

Some elderly victims who paid this tax are alive today. Their grandchildren recall the many hardships they suffered. These same grandchildren lead their fields in many endeavours. Immigrants come to settle in Canada as equals. By acknowledging these disgraceful injustices and seeking remedial action, all Canadians will be relieved of our collective guilt. We celebrate multiculturalism by celebrating Chinese New Year today.

SUPPORT FOR CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I am standing today in the House to applaud the people of Ontario. Today's edition of The Globe and Mail published the results of a recent poll which indicates that support for the position of provincial Liberals on freer trade is fast dwindling. Nearly half the respondents disapprove of the provincial position.

The facts are clear. Freer trade is an idea whose time has come. Despite the flimsy arguments put forward by the Opposition, the people of our country are throwing their support behind the initiatives of the Government. Perhaps, in light of these recent developments, the Opposition and the Government of Ontario will realize the wisdom of a unified approach to these negotiations.

The President of the United States supports freer trade with Canada. The Canadian Government supports the freer trade initiative. The people of Ontario support this initiative. Perhaps it is time for the Opposition and the Government of Premier Peterson to come over to the side fighting for economic security for all Canadians.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT—REGIONAL MEETINGS SCHEDULED BY LIBERAL CAUCUS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, last evening the Atlantic Liberal caucus met in an emergency session and consulted with our Leader. We wish to announce today that members of our caucus will be visiting various parts of Newfoundland and Atlantic Canada to hold a series of meetings beginning today with interested individuals and groups in the particular regions affected by the Canada-France fishing agreement.

The caucus members will discuss the impact of the arrangement and will consult on appropriate alternatives to the present agreement, which we say is totally unacceptable to the people of Atlantic Canada.

My colleagues from Newfoundland are presently there consulting with affected individuals. We wish to come back to the House with suitable alternatives to what is known as an unconscionable agreement which affects the lives and livelihood of the people of Newfoundland and Atlantic Canada.

GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, a recent Decima poll made public by the Globe and Mail last January 21 indicates that the environment is the first priority of Canadians. The Abitibi—Témiscamingue socio-economic summit has just emphasized that the environment issue is also the first concern of the residents of that region.

Mr. Speaker, such findings are proof positive that for nearly 20 years now Canadian public opinion has been made fully aware of and kept well informed about the damage and negative impact of pollution on human health and the ecology. In the past two years our Government has made firm commitments to reduce this scourge. Last December 18 the Minister of Environment (Mr. McMillan) tabled in the House the proposed Environmental Protection Act, again showing our resolve to fight against polluters in our society. With this measure, Canada ranks first among industrialized nations in the fight against pollution.

INVESTMENT CANADA

WEST KOOTENAY POWER AND LIGHT COMPANY—SALE TO AMERICAN CORPORATION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, more and more Canadians from coast to coast are beginning to ask the question: "Who stands up for Canada?" Who stood up for Canada when our softwood lumber industry came under attack? Not this Government.

Who stood up for Canada when the Reagan administration demanded that Canada change its patent laws on drugs that will inevitably mean higher drug prices for Canadians? Not this Government.

Who stood up for Canada when our agreements with the Reagan administration on acid rain were not lived up to? Not this Government. Who stands up for Canada as French, Spanish, Portugese, American, and Korean fishing fleets steal our fish on the Grand Banks? Not this Government.

And now, Mr. Speaker, the people of southern British Columbia are wondering who is standing up for their interests as a big American corporation is on the verge of taking over West Kootenay Power and Light Company and its water rights to a major western Canadian water system. Why is this Government on its knees watching this potentially disastrous take-over go ahead? Why did the Government give approval through Investment Canada for this take-over before hearings were even completed to hear the views of local residents?

The Government is caving into United States' interests as it sits idly by and watches West Kootenay Power and Light Company fall into foreign hands. The people of central and southern British Columbia will not forget.

BANKS AND BANKING

DESIGNATION OF VANCOUVER AND MONTREAL AS INTERNATIONAL BANKING CENTRES

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, yesterday our Government designated Vancouver and Montreal as international banking centres. But this is actually a tale of three cities: Vancouver, Toronto, and Montreal, and it is an excellent example of how this Government is a Government of all Canadians.

Toronto will continue to be the financial heart of our nation.

Stability, ready access and good economic environment make Montreal an ideal international banking centre.

[English]

And for Vancouver, it means better access to the Pacific Rim market-place.

But this happy tale of three cities has a dark side, Mr. Speaker. The Liberal Premier of Ontario insists that it leads to regional tensions. He has said one might as well move the financial centre in the United States from New York to Des Moines. Vancouver is not Des Moines, Mr. Speaker. It is not a region, it is Canada. Toronto is Canada, and Montreal is Canada.

Mr. Peterson's attitude is typical of the Liberal Party: paternalistic, centrist, and derogatory to western Canada. Western Canadians will never forget the Liberal legacy. We will never forget.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT—GOVERNMENT CONSULTATION CONDEMNED

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, how quickly the Government forgot the word consultation. This week we hear about this agreement that was signed, or is it an agreement? It is an agreement on a program to lead to negotiations to settle a dispute, negotiations not actually to arrive at a settlement of the dispute but negotiations to find out if we can go to arbitration.

The consultation which the Government took on itself has been nothing but a farce. The Government went behind the doors and behind the backs of Newfoundlanders, behind the back of the Premier of Newfoundland and behind the back of the Premier of Nova Scotia. The Government went behind the backs of all of those people in the great Atlantic provinces that have fishing as their lifeblood. I am surprised that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) and all of the other Atlantic Ministers have not really given it to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) in this case. That is why we in the Liberal Party will be going to Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, and other parts of Atlantic Canada to consult so that we can come up with some sort of suitable arrangement.

TRIBUTE TO WORK OF CHINESE IMMIGRANTS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, Chinese Canadians are today celebrating the Chinese New Year of 4685. Canada has benefited immensely from the splendid contribution Chinese Canadians have made to help this country grow and prosper.

My good friend Norman Ho was instrumental in setting up the Scarborough-North York Chinese Business Association which now has several hundred members under its current president, Stephen Chung. On Saturday I will be bringing greetings from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to members of the North York Chinese Heritage Language (Mandarin) School whose president is Mr. Ivan Peng.

My Government is very aware of the many successful businesses started by Chinese Canadians under our entrepreneurial business immigration class. We continue to support enthusiastically and welcome the number of persons of Chinese heritage emigrating to Canada under our Family Reunification Program.

In this Year of the Rabbit I ask all Members of this House to join me in wishing all Chinese Canadians good health, happiness, and prosperity.

ENERGY

SUGGESTIONS FOR FORTHCOMING MEETING OF FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL MINISTERS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, when Canada's Energy Ministers meet here in Ottawa tomorrow they need to work out a planned energy strategy for Canada and not leave it up to the vagaries of the market. They have not asked me, but I see the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) so I will give him my suggestions. First, let us have energy security. The National Energy Board says that in 15 years we will have used up our conventional natural gas and will be importing two-thirds of our oil. Let us get going on one or more of the frontier projects at a negotiated price for the oil.

Secondly, and in the meantime, let us resist the short-term temptation to export oil and gas to beat hell, as we are doing now.

Thirdly, if Canadians are expected to pay more taxes at the pump for energy security, show them that the gasoline prices are fair. Canadians are paying more than Americans now because oil company downstream profits are too high. Use Petro-Canada. Tell the provinces to quit loading on taxes at the pump.

Finally, do not forget conservation. That is really the number one priority.

Those are all my suggestions to the Minister and he can have them free of charge.

TRIBUTE TO JEAN PAPINEAU-COUTURE

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Alas, Mr. Speaker, the labourers hired first are not always properly rewarded. However, the Société de musique contemporaine du Québec will be paying tribute in Montreal tonight to Jean Papineau-Couture, one of the major figures of Canadian contemporary music, on the occasion of his 70th birthday.

A composer, teacher and administrator, Jean Papineau-Couture has devoted his whole life to music, and more specifically to composition and the promotion of Canadian contemporary music, although he had to overcome the public's deep and at times fierce resistance to new sounds and rhythms.

His numerous orchestra, piano, chamber music compositions are evidence of his great command of the musical medium. Furthermore, it is not altogether frequent to see talent associated with commitment, but this creator has worked relentlessly within his own artistic community. A founding member of the Centre de musique canadienne, the Société de musique canadienne and the Société de musique contemporaine du Québec, he has also served as chairman of many organizations and institutions in the cultural field.

Jean Papineau-Couture deserves that we should pay him tribute by joining all those who will attend the concert dedicated to him tonight in Montreal.

IMMIGRATION

REPORTED ALLEGATIONS BY MINISTER

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, during the program La politique fédérale broadcasted on January 17, 1987, on the French network of the CBC, we heard the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) describe his Lac-Saint-Jean region as an area "which has not been disturbed by immigration and which has remained demographically, culturally and politically pure".

I came to this country in 1966 and I do not believe that I have disturbed Canada. On the contrary, I feel I have contributed to its economic, social and cultural development.

As to the Minister's comments on purity, I find them offensive for all Canadians.

An Immigration Minister who makes such remarks should not hold his position.

Thanks to its compassion, generosity and open-mindedness, our country rightly deserved its worldwide reputation, and comments on ethnic purity and the pride to belong to a privileged community are out of place in our society. When a Minister of Employment and Immigration utters them, they are unacceptable. The Minister should resign forthwith, Mr. Speaker!

COLONIALISM

RETENTION OF ST. PIERRE AND MIQUELON BY FRANCE

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, 19th century colonialism appears to be alive and well in North America. India has eliminated Portuguese possession of Goa; Hong Kong and Macao will shortly revert to China; and even tiny Iceland has resolutely and successfully defended its exclusive fishing zones against once mighty Great Britain, but France is allowed to maintain its colony of St. Pierre and Miquelon in the midst of Canada.

Surely this is an anachronism in the third quarter of the 20th century. Worst of all, on the basis of this historic relic, France claims the right to catch tens of thousands of tonnes of Canadian fish. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) should start immediately, and as forcefully as possible, to pursue the termination of French colonialism within Canada's domain.

CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF MINISTER OF TRANSPORT

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, a few months ago the Minister of Transport told Atlantic Canadians that if they compared themselves to people in the Third World they would feel quite lucky in Canada. We should have known at that time that any Minister who had the audacity to make such an outrageous statement would not be representing Atlantic Canadians in cabinet. We know through recent events that the Minister and the Cabinet are in fact now trying to make us a part of the Third World.

Does the Minister of Transport really think that a show of strength by our Coast Guard in patrolling the East Coast is tantamount to, in his words, "going to war"? Why is he promoting the defeatist attitude that we have no choice but to flop over into a deadman's float?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would sooner be afloat than be a goat.

Mr. Kaplan: You are both.

Mr. Crosbie: The Government is bound by an arrangement concluded in the form of an exchange of diplomatic notes dated June 20 and June 28, 1984, with regard to the disputed area 3Ps, pursuant to which each party agreed to abstain from regulating the vessels flying the flag of the other party in that zone.

Our Liberal predecessors, Senators De Bané and MacEachen, and their Government entered into an international agreement which prevents us from interfering with or harassing the vessels of France in that disputed zone.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, this is an inconsistent Minister in an inconsistent Cabinet. The one thing they are consistent about is blaming things on the previous administration. The Government is into its third year. There is only one year left after that. By its record it will then be a previous administration.

MINISTER'S CALL FOR APOLOGY

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): The Minister was not talking about the previous administration last night when he said, "I think the Government should apologize". Who did the Minister have in mind to make that apology? Was it the Minister of State for External Affairs, who is perhaps the most to blame in this issue; the Prime Minister, who does not want to muddy the waters for the French summit; or the Minister of Fisheries, who has been hung out to dry like a codfish on this issue and still thinks he is swimming?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, one thing the previous Government never did was apologize for anything. However, I suggest that they apologize today because it was that Government which entered into agreements in 1972, 1982 and in 1984 which make it very difficult for the Government of Canada to take any firm, effective action today to settle this matter on the East Coast of Canada. They hung us with the dead hand of the past.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate is on his third question. I would ask him to be brief and to the point.

REQUEST THAT AGREEMENT BE CANCELLED

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I will move from the Minister who advocates the deadman's float to the Minister who is a specialist in belly flops. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans said in the Chamber last night: "if the fishermen and Governments of Atlantic Canada do not accept the conditions, there will be no agreement". Will the Minister now own up to his words, because the Atlantic Premiers have said no and the fishermen have said no. Will the Minister honour his words and tear up this record of agreement?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated several times in the House that it is important that all Atlantic Canadians understand that the only agreement is to negotiate the reference of the boundary dispute to compulsory third party arbitration, and to negotiate corresponding fisheries arrangements for the period after 1988. If, in negotiating those two agreements between now and the end of the year, the conditions required by France are unsatisfactory to the fishermen of Newfoundland and Labrador and Atlantic Canada, then there will indeed be no agreement.

ALLOCATION OF QUOTAS TO FRENCH FISHING VESSELS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, Atlantic Canadians, especially Newfoundlanders, are very angry with the Minister because he has given the French fleet extra quotas and licences for factory freezer trawlers just to get the French to sit down and talk about the possibility of negotiating an arbitration case. Now that he has paid part of the ransom to the French for this deal, how much more Canadian fish must he give up in order to get the French even to come to arbitration?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I suggest this question also underscores the regrettable tendency and, I suggest, irresponsible tendency of members of the Opposition to sow seeds of fear, worry and apprehension based on improper and, I suggest, incorrect facts. In this case no additional quotas which are used, contained, and fished by Canadian fishermen will be given to France either in the longer term or in the period of 1987, unless those quotas can be justified and supported by the fishermen of Atlantic Canada.

OVERFISHING BY FRENCH VESSELS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, why did the Minister allow this agreement, if that is what it is, to be signed before receiving any commitment whatsoever from the French Government to stop its blatant overfishing in zone 3PS? Why did he even enter into any kind of agreement until the French stopped that?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, again this illustrates the regrettable misinformation that opposition Members and the Hon. Member in particular are using in order to discredit a very important initiative which will bring significant benefits, if successful, to the fishermen of Atlantic Canada. If these two parallel agreements cannot be negotiated satisfactorily there will be no additional fish granted to anyone other than Atlantic Canada fishermen.

ALLOCATION OF QUOTAS—FISHERMEN'S POSITION

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. He said that there would be no additional allocation of fish to France unless it was acceptable to the people of Newfoundland. Surely it is abundantly clear to the Minister and the Government that this is and will not be acceptable to the people of Newfoundland. Why wait? Why not recognize that fact and tell France that it is an unacceptable deal to the people of Canada, and begin again?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, first let me clear up a misunderstanding. The quotas of cod granted to France in 1987 in Canadian waters are less than half of what they were last year, 11,000 tonnes as compared to over 22,000 tonnes last year. In contrast to the modest reductions of quotas Canadian fishermen are experiencing, the French quotas have been more than cut in half.

The Hon. Member suggests we should capitulate on our attempt to secure a permanent and lasting solution to the boundary question, thereby consigning Atlantic Canadians in perpetuity to seeing their stocks in the area south of St. Pierre and Miquelon overfished indiscriminately by the French. That I would find absolutely unacceptable.

Mr. Manly: That is not what this Party wants. It is not what the Government or the people of Newfoundland want. They want a Government which will stand up for their rights and for the fisheries resource in Canada.

DROPPING OF CONSULTATIONS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): The Minister of Transport last night confirmed that the Government of Newfoundland, the industry representatives, and the union had been involved in consultation up until last week and then they were suddenly cut out. Why did the Minister suddenly drop these people from consultation?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, what the Hon. Member of the Opposition would advocate, as did his Leader last night, is we either walk away from the table and give up, thereby allowing tens of thousands of tonnes of overfishing to continue at the hands of France, or we rattle the sabres and perhaps get into a military confrontation with another friendly neighbour, an historical founding nation of Canada, France. I think it is irresponsible that the New Democratic Party would suggest forceful confrontation in this serious international matter.

APOLOGY TO PEOPLE OF NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

An Hon. Member: Warmonger!

Mr. Manly: When is the Government going to take action on the request—demand, really—from the Minister of Transport that the Government apologize to the Government and people of Newfoundland for the shameful way in which it has treated them in negotiating this deal with France?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would like to indicate to the Hon. Member that I did speak to Mr. Peckford yesterday. I expressed regret for the inadvertent breakdown in communications and in the process—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: —which was established. I expressed my apologies to him, and on behalf of the Prime Minister and the Government of Canada.

APPROVAL OF AGREEMENT

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and it concerns the same subject matter. The Deputy Prime Minister will know that Newfoundlanders are outraged at the way the Government of Canada has failed to represent their interests in its dealing with France on this particular agreement. Would the Deputy Prime Minister inform the House, and the people of Atlantic Canada, and confirm that this decision, this agreement, was not approved by Cabinet but was done by bureaucrats and senior individuals in the Prime Minister's Office? Will the Deputy Prime Minister confirm that?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if one were to use the Hon. Member's interpretation, I suspect that Canadians would translate this into being a bad deal. However, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans has very clearly indicated the process which was established, and the options which were available. When the Minister of Fisheries speaks, he speaks on behalf of the Government.

Mr. Dingwall: It is rather telling that the Deputy Prime Minister refuses to answer that very specific question.

REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): The Deputy Prime Minister is also aware that the consultation process was aborted. The Premier of Newfoundland, the Premier of Nova Scotia, the industry and, more important, the primary producers, are outraged at the failure of the Government to represent their interests. In view of the authority the Deputy Prime Minister has, will he not now demand the resignation of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and rescind this unconscionable agreement?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to inform the Hon. Member that I was advised by the Minister of Fisheries that the Government of Newfoundland was involved in the discussions and negotiations, through its negotiating representative, the Minister of Fisheries, and representatives of the Minister of Fisheries, as well as representatives of the Premier's office.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Why did you apologize?

• (1430)

Mr. Mazankowski: I apologized for an inadvertent breakdown in that process which, in my view, was certainly not deliberate. The fact of the matter is that what we have achieved here is an agreement to negotiate. As the Minister of Fisheries has outlined, as have others in the House, it was the best of the three possible options available to us.

OVERFISHING BY FRENCH FLEET

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, we now know what PC means—Paris Cares.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Shields: Say that again; we missed it.

Mr. Hees: Another rehearsal was needed, John.

Mr. de Jong: You sure have stirred them up.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. It is clear that the Minister has said to the House and in the agreement that all he has is an agreement to negotiate an agreement. That might take four years. The French fleet has been overfishing in Canadian waters. It will continue to overfish in Canadian waters. What does the Minister intend to do about the French fleet's continued overfishing in Canadian waters?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I trust that when the Hon. Member says that he now knows what PC refers to he recognizes that it stands for perfect Canadians?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Siddon: What we have succeeded in doing, after years of inattention to a very costly and serious problem for all of Canada, is to sit down with the Government of France over the next 11 months—

Mr. Riis: No one wants to hear you, Tom.

Mr. Siddon: Then they had better stop asking questions, my friend.

Mr. Riis: On your side.

Mr. Siddon: —and negotiate the terms of reference by which an important costly boundary dispute will be referred to international arbitration over some four years of time and, in parallel with that, to negotiate in turn fishing arrangements which could include measures of control which have never before been achieved to deal with the French overfishing in 3PS. The Hon. Member should celebrate that instead of criticizing it.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the people of Newfoundland, the fishermen, the owners of fish plants, the Government of Newfoundland and the Government of Nova Scotia all think that this is a give-away and a sell-out, what makes the Minister think that he has such a great deal going when he did not even follow the advice and consultation of the parties involved? What does he think he has going?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the essence of political leadership, not opposition mentality, is to have the courage sometimes to stand up and explain a course of action which has not previously been contemplated in the face of carping and unhelpful criticism of the sort we are hearing from opposition Members who would not want the fishermen of Atlantic Canada to be better off than they would have them be and as they have been for many years.

REPORTED INTERVENTION BY MEMBER FOR JOLIETTE

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday the Solicitor General said that no one should ever be in any position to influence in any way any Parole Board hearing. In view of the fact that the Conservative Member for Joliette has intervened in the case of Conrad Bouchard, can the Minister indicate whether he considers the intervention on behalf of the Hon. Member to have been appropriate in the circumstances?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we have here another allegation. I think the Hon. Solicitor General responded to that question quite fully yesterday. Perhaps the Hon. Member might want to reread the answer.

MEMBER'S REPORTED ACTION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, it is not an allegation. The Hon. Member for Joliette admitted today that he intervened on behalf of Conrad Bouchard. I put my question again to the Deputy Prime Minister. Does he consider the Hon. Member's action to be appropriate in the circumstances? Will he indicate today whether any other Member of Parliament intervened in the Conrad Bouchard case?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, such allegations flowing from the lips of the Hon. Member would have to be checked, double-checked, and probably triple-checked before any action was taken.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

PRESS REPORTS OF FUTURE APPOINTMENT

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday the U.S. indicated that the Canadian Wheat Board should be placed on the free trade negotiating table. Today we learned that the Hon. Member for Lisgar is being considered to fill the vacant position on the Canadian Wheat Board. With the present threats to Canada's international markets and the increased need for a strong orderly marketing structure, why is the Government considering making a political appointment of a Member who has in the past been hostile to the Wheat Board and who lacks the necessary expertise to be successful in such a position?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I think this is a classical case of members of the press picking up their own stories and then augmenting them and running with them. This is a story that has been out in the farm press for a month, or maybe six weeks. It seems to me that what we have here is the press sitting around having a discussion, and what they do not understand they attempt to explain to each other. There is absolutely no truth to the rumour whatsoever.

FILLING OF VACANCY

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, we would very much like a clarification of that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hovdebo: Since the Hon. Member for Lisgar has advocated a grain exchange type of marketing system and has called for the closing of Churchill, will the Minister assure us that he, or a person of that type, will not be appointed to fill the vacant position of commissioner of the Wheat Board?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, what I would like to do publicly with regard to some of the Americans' comments on the Canadian Wheat Board is to make an offer to the Americans saying that we would be prepared to start selling some of their wheat. Through the Canadian Wheat Board we have been doing a much better job of selling wheat. It seems to me that both the Americans and Canada would be much better off if they would accept our offer to sell some of their wheat on commission. We would be much better.

Let me say that when we make an appointment to the Wheat Board we will make an appointment that will be in the best over-all interests of the western Canadian farmer who very much depends on this very well run institution.

TIMING OF APPOINTMENT TO FILL VACANCY

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. Will he indicate when he will make an appointment to the Canadian Wheat Board? The position of commissioner has been vacant for some 14 months now. Canadian western agriculture is in the worst crisis since the 1930s with the lowest prices in 50 years. When will the Minister make an appointment? Can he assure the House that he will not weaken the Board by making a political appointment but that he will appoint a qualified person to sit on the Wheat Board?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should know that the Canadian Wheat Board Act calls for a minimum of three commissioners and a maximum of five. Dr. Jim Leibfried resigned a year ago last December, so the Board has been running with four commissioners, which is entirely consistent with the Act.

I might say that in a very difficult world market it has been doing an extremely good job of selling. As I have said before, and I say again, we increased our market share last year and have the prospects of increasing our market share again this year. If he is asking us not to make a political appointment, I take it he is excluding himself from that and taking himself out of the running.

UNITED STATES' EXPORT SUBSIDY PROGRAM

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): The Minister talks about taking people out of this appointment. Will he give a commitment that he is taking the Hon. Member for Lisgar out of the running, because it will be a very divisive appointment with western Canada farm groups, if he proceeds with it.

We have heard about the Minister's fights with the Wheat Board. Will he stand behind the Wheat Board against the United States' subsidy program in its million tonne sale to China, and not capitulate in the manner he did on the Durum wheat sale to Algeria? That is what western farmers wish to know.

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): It is obvious from the import of the question that the Hon. Member knows very little about what goes on in western Canada. First, the offer to China has only been an offer. To date we do not know that it has been accepted. In the meantime, Hon. Members should know that Canada will probably increase the amount of wheat sold to China this year. We did not capitulate in the Durum wheat deal with Algeria. We will probably sell the same amount of Durum wheat to Algeria as we did last year.

The Canadian Wheat Board, with our system of grading through the Canada Grain Commission, is serving Canada extremely well in some very difficult times. We are looking at increasing the amount of grain exported this year, as a result of the manner in which those two institutions operate, and the manner that the Government is supporting those two institutions.

FUTURE OF RURAL POST OFFICES

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, rumours have been running rampant throughout rural Canada that rural post offices are to be closed and that rural mail delivery will be eliminated. These rumours are being spread by the Opposition, and some employees of Canada Post. Rural residents are concerned about these rumours and wish some clarification of the Government's intentions regarding Canada Post's corporate plan.

Will the Minister assure the House and rural Canadians that wholesale closures of rural post offices are not being considered?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): I wish to thank the Hon. Member for his interest in the matter. Earlier in the past month the plan was examined and recommendations issued by a Standing Committee, which recommendations have been implemented in the plan. The facts are quite different from the propaganda campaign calling for a wholesale closure of post offices in rural Canada. The Canada Post Corporation has advised me that it has no intention of closing any rural post offices in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Côté (Langelier): I might add that the Corporation will not start any change in the service before it consults both with the Members and the population. I can assure the Hon. Member that this will happen.

SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH TAX CREDIT

HOLSTEIN CATTLE RESEARCH PROJECT

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Can the Minister explain his Department's uncharacteristic flexibility to Dreamstreet's $22.5 million scientific research tax credit program? This company was doing research to see whether black and white Holsteins would produce better milk, and more milk, than red and white Holsteins. It has been allowed to continue its activities into this taxation year. Why is the Government giving this company such flexibility?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): I appreciate my colleague's interest in this particular matter which is a residue of the infamous SRTC program. As Members realize, I cannot talk about intimate details of any taxpayer's business in the House of Commons any more than to say that in some cases these enterprises are grandfathered out of a sense of fairness. They are scrutinized very carefully by the Department in the interest of the taxpayers of Canada. I will be pleased to give him more information privately, if it is proper.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): My supplementary question is this. The Minister's Department supplied the letter that allowed Dreamstreet to carry on its activities after the Government had announced that it was closing down the SRTC program. Surely the Government cannot have it both ways. It cannot shovel money out under the SRTC program while cutting back on legitimate research through the NRC and universities, and still allow an outfit that is essentially owned by a tax shelter in the United States to grab more Canadian tax dollars.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): I know my colleague does not wish to be unfair. The Government has encouraged research by clarifying the R and D guidelines, and taking other efforts in this regard. I repeat to him that the SRTC program, as his Party and his Leader know, was one of the worst programs ever to be introduced. In the interests of fairness we could not arbitrarily cut it off without giving further assurances in the way of grandfathering some programs. We are making sure in every case possible, including this one, that the effects are monitored closely before it is finally phased out.

NATIONAL PARKS

PACIFIC RIM NATIONAL PARK—OPPOSITION TO TOLL-GATE PROPOSAL

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. The Minister will be aware that Parks Canada plans to install a toll-gate at Pacific Rim National Park in my riding. The local community believes that this will damage the tourism industry, and it will probably not be cost effective due to the remoteness of the area. Why is a toll-gate necessary in the Pacific Rim National Park? Will the Minister reconsider the decision to install that toll-gate?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): There has been in place for a long time a general policy to charge entrance fees at the most heavily patronized national parks. In this case we are applying the policy because the Pacific Rim is one of the most popular parks. The B.C. Government, and the Hon. Member, have made the argument that, because the federal Crown owes the provincial Crown some $25 million in connection with outstanding issues surrounding that park, we ought not to be charging entrance fees until the bill is paid.

In a few days time I will be flying to British Columbia to speak to my opposite number, Stephen Rogers, the Minister of the Environment and Parks, to discuss the question. I will certainly take the Hon. Member's own views into account when I attend the meeting.

CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT—RESPONSIBILITY FOR TAKING DECISION

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and I am simply repeating that of my colleague the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond.

Was the decision concerning the Canada-France agreement on fish stocks taken by Cabinet or by the Prime Minister's Office?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): I thought I had already answered that question. It was a government decision.

Ms. Copps: No, you did not.

[Translation]

Mr. Robichaud: Well then, Mr. Speaker, I shall ask my supplementary question: second verse same as the first! Would the Minister be good enough to answer this question to which we believe he has not given an answer? Was the decision taken by Cabinet or was it taken by the Prime Minister's Office?

[English]

An Hon. Member: Questions ought not to be repeated.

Mr. Mazankowski: This was a government decision.

IMMIGRATION

MINISTER'S BROADCAST STATEMENT

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Minister spoke with pride a few days ago of the purity in population and culture of his region around Lac St-Jean and along the Saguenay River. The question is simple. Will the Minister withdraw these racist comments that he made on behalf of the Conservative Party on the CBC's French language network?

• (1450)

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am appalled that a Member of this House would dare to use for such purposes an issue which has always received great attention in this country.

The Hon. Member should know that I did not at any time refer to immigrant or refugee communities or to any other Canadian cultural community. I would ask my colleague not to indulge in this kind of petty politics.

[English]

REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF COMMENTS

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Does the Minister not recognize that his racist comments were utterly unworthy of Canada's Minister of Immigration and have to be—

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Crosbie: Withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask Hon. Members to restrain their enthusiasm. I think the Hon. Member would know that originally most of our families came to this country from somewhere else, except for our own native citizens, and that to call a fellow Canadian or a fellow member a racist is very offensive. I would ask the Hon. Member to withdraw that.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I withdraw any suggestion that a person is racist. The concern is about comments that have a racist tinge to them.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member can put his question in such a way that he does not offend the sensibilities and the dignity of this place and, for that matter, the concepts of good will and tolerance which are at the basis of our country's success as one of the happiest nations in the world.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is simply whether the Minister does not recognize that these comments can be offensive to Canadians. Does he not realize that to maintain his standing in the Canadian population from coast to coast he needs to withdraw these comments?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will answer in my colleague's first language. I used the French word déranger. It could mean in English disturb, bother, or touch. It meant touch when I said that my region was not touched by immigration. It does not mean that that is a good thing. It means that the region was not touched by immigration. Once again I hope my colleague and hon. friend understands that on such a delicate issue in all communities in the country we do not have the right to use this kind of issue to play politics. I hope he recognizes that I do not have the right to play politics with this kind of issue.

REPORTED ALLEGATIONS BY MINISTER

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I will try therefore in a different and perhaps more relaxed way . . . In the evening of Saturday, January 17, during the program La politique fédérale broadcasted on the French network of the CBC and which was later on the subject of an article published in the Friday, January 23 issue of the Montreal Gazette, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, while referring to the Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean area, commented, and I quote:

—a long time sheltered enclave of some 300,000 Francophones, undisturbed by immigration or the presence of other realities in this country. It is therefore very pure demographically.

I am asking the Minister, and it is not Marcel Prud'homme's habit to indulge in demagogy with Francophone and Anglophone issues, but I wish . . . If you insist, I will let other Hon. Members raise this issue, and you will see that it will be quite different. Let me raise it my way.

How could he reconcile such remarks with his duties as Minister of Immigration? How can the Minister of Immigration say that immigration is disturbing, because this is what I understood in French? I read the English text, and in all honesty to the Minister and these disquieting questions, I went over the French text of the CBC about a dozen times, and that's what I understood it to mean. My question is the same.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration: Mr. Speaker, the French language is such that one could use different words to describe—I insist on the word describe—a situation. It is quite clear in my mind that when I described the community I belong to as not having been disturbed, in view of the importance of my duties, my tremendous respect for the various cultural communities of our country and for this country as a whole which was built through immigration, and the tact with which I now deal with the refugee issue—for instance, I stated just yesterday that this country should forever remain open to Chilean immigrants—how could I on a television program try to describe a community by saying that it has fortunately been sheltered from immigration?

I suggest that I should be recognized consistently in the views I have expressed for the past two years concerning my Hon. colleagues in the House who belong to various cultural communities. I described a community. I indicated that it had not been affected by immigration, which is certainly true considering that it is 99 per cent Francophone.

MINISTER'S ALLEGED REFERENCE TO DEMOGRAPHIC PURITY

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I think that I know Quebec and the Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean area just as well as the Minister. I think everybody will recognize that. But how can the Minister refuse to admit that it was a mistake to talk about—

An Hon. Member: The question!

[English]

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Prud'homme: Perhaps the translation did not reach them yet, but I was just about to ask the question, so be calm.

[Translation]

Why does the Minister not recognize that it was a mistake to talk about demographic purity when dealing with a community or using an expression such as "disturbed by immigration"? Is the Minister at least prepared to recognize that his remarks certainly exceeded his thought, but they were certainly understood to mean—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hope the Minister will make a short reply, and then perhaps we could leave this issue.

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Honourable Member has said that a language is a matter of word interpretation. I suggest again that if his purpose is to have me recognize that I made a mistake, I do not feel it is important. What I consider important again is to repeat in front of the whole nation that I have the highest regard and respect for all immigrants and refugees who have at last reached a country where they can enjoy freedom.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCES CONCERNING SALVADORANS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Considering the fact that Salvadorans are fleeing to Canada from the United States because they are afraid they will otherwise be sent back to Salvador, with its death squads and air raids by government troops, could the Minister give the House the assurance that the Government will allow these Salvadorans to enter Canada so they can claim refugee status and remain in this country, pending a decision on their claims?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that at the present time, and especially at Fort Erie in Ontario and Lacolle in Quebec, we are seeing massive entries of Latin Americans into Canada. Salvador is one of the countries to which Canada does not deport. So basically, anyone from that country who would otherwise be in danger of being deported will not be refused entry by Canada.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UNITED STATES MILITARY SUPPORT FOR SALVADORAN GOVERNMENT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Since the Salvadorans originally fled the bombing of civilian villages by their own Government which was armed by the United States and since the United States is now escalating deportations to El Salvador, will the Government publicly call on President Reagan to cease all military support of the Salvadoran Government and to cease his deportations to that murderous police state? My question is for the Deputy Prime Minister.

• (1500)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): I regret that I missed the question, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps I can take it as notice.

IMMIGRATION

MINISTER'S BROADCAST STATEMENT

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Employment and Immigration who, I think, realizes all parts of the country and all regions are open, without disturbance, to any and all immigrants in Canada. Nevertheless, given that the Minister's declarations sent out a very discomforting and offensive message to all Canadians, will he not do the honourable thing today in the House, because it is a sensitive matter, issue a very clear retraction of the disturbance allegation and apologize for the message that is being sent from one coast to the other concerning people from all backgrounds and all walks of life?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, briefly, I answered that question earlier, but I simply want to add that it is rather problematic to pursue debate on matters that in my view can only add to the controversy that has already done a great deal of harm in this country.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York West. A very short supplementary, please.

REQUEST FOR APOLOGY

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, let me ask the Deputy Prime Minister a question. Here we have an Immigration Minister who refuses to apologize for a very clear and discomforting statement.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Will the Hon. Member please put the question?

Mr. Marchi: Why don't you get up on your feet and ask your own question?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York West, I think, has made his point. I would comment that it would seem to the Chair that the Hon. Minister has tried to say that, whatever his comments may have seemed to be, they were not intended in that way. That I think is the clear meaning of the exchange so far. The Chair would ask Hon. Members to be as careful as they can be. I will recognize the Hon. Member for York West on a very short last question.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, let me ask the Deputy Minister very clearly will he, on behalf of the Government, issue a statement of clarification and apology so that Canadians can re-establish their confidence in an immigration policy which is both fair and progressive for our present day immigrants and immigrants who are going to be landing on our shores tomorrow?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there are any Members in this House who would suggest that there is anyone more sincere than the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: I think his very careful and deliberate replies to the questions raised here, in an attempt to explain clearly any misinterpretation that may have been placed upon them, was done in the best interests in the discharge of his responsibility and in the discharge of his responsibility as a Member of this House.

I would simply invite the Hon. Member, before he starts suggesting that someone should apologize, to read in Hansard tomorrow precisely what the Hon. Minister has said because I think he made a full accounting and a full explanation for what the Hon. Member is trying to allege he said, which is a wrong interpretation.

Ms. Copps: It is on tape.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I do welcome the opportunity to rise on a point of order to ask the Government House Leader (Mr. Mazankowski) what business he intends to call for the next week.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, today we will continue with Bill C-18, the National Transportation Act, then Bill C-19, the Motor Vehicle Transportation Act which will be followed by Bill C-21, the Shippers Conference Exemption Act.

PRIVILEGE

DECISION BY LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE IN ABSENCE OF OPPOSITION MEMBERS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege with respect to a decision made by the legislative committee dealing with Bill C-22.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), who is a long-standing Member of this House, has arisen to address the Chair on a question of privilege. I know that Hon. Members would want to hear his intervention.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I want to raise a question of privilege on a decision made at this morning's meeting of the legislative committee dealing with Bill C-22. At one of the first meetings of that committee, a motion was made by a government Member that a quorum of the committee authorized to conduct the work of the committee should consist of four Members. I moved an amendment, which was accepted, voted on and approved, that among the four Members who would constitute a quorum at least one should be a Member of the Opposition. The two members of the Opposition serving on that committee are the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) and myself.

The committee at a later date accepted a motion that the committee should meet five times a week and that at each meeting the committee should hear three delegations, each delegation to have 45 minutes and not more. The Member from East Richmond and I argued that this was too restrictive, but that motion carried.

This morning the committee met to hear two delegations, first, the delegation representing the Multiple Sclerosis Organization of Ottawa. That Organization had its 45 minutes. Then came the Canadian Chamber of Commerce. After about 40 minutes, the Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond left. I stayed and when I thought 45 minutes had elapsed, I left. Certainly at the least 43 minutes had gone by.

Just let me go back a step, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the committee discussed future witnesses. The Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond proposed that we invite Congressman Waxman who heads up a committee looking into this question in the U.S. House of Representatives and I suggested that we invite a representative of the American Association of Retired Persons. I suggested, and it was agreed, that we find out whether either of these individuals could come and whether we would have to pay their expenses. If we did, then we could discuss whether the committee had the funds. That was the way it was left.

As I said, the Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond left the committee. Then after I left, believing the time had gone by for the delegation, the committee adopted, without the presence of either member of the Opposition, a motion that no invitation be extended to any possible delegation from the United States. I think moving and passing that motion when neither of the Opposition Members were there—and I am one of them—was a breach of my privileges as a Member of this House and of the commmittee.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, it is with unusual reluctance that I rise to make a comment on the question of privilege raised by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). I open with those comments because I am the chairman of the legislative committee on Bill C-22. I will be precise in my comments and I will not in any way enter into the subject area of the debate that is before Members of Parliament at this time because of my role as chairman of the that committee.

• (1510)

As you know, I attempt to chair that committee in the same way you adjudicate in this Chamber. I am a servant of the committee, not its master. The Hon. Member for Dauphin—Swan River (Mr. White) said this morning that I indicated from the Chair that I would have to assure myself we had a quorum. I was informed by the Clerk that the motions previously passed related to having a quorum for the hearing of evidence and that at that time the committee had a quorum with respect to motions. Therefore, when a motion was moved I allowed that motion to stand on the advice of the Clerk. The motion was put, voted upon and passed.

With respect to the question of whether the time for the meeting had lapsed, my stop-watch indicated we had a full 10 minutes remaining in the time for examination of witnesses. So it is inaccurate to say that the time had lapsed.

I set out those facts because they may be germane to a decision you may have to make. I also want to apologize for involving you as the Speaker in what ought to be the internal affairs of the committee itself.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise with great difficulty concerning this issue. What we had decided was that the purpose of the meeting today was to adduce evidence from witnesses who have very strong beliefs concerning this Bill. I notified the Chair that I had to leave the meeting because of a prior commitment. I asked him if he would undertake to obtain certain information from the witnesses and I presume he has done that. However, at no time were we informed up to that point that this would be up for discussion as a procedural matter.

I suggest very humbly that the rules of natural justice have been breached. There was no notice whatsoever. We did not have an opportunity to debate both the procedure and substance of the motion put forward by the Government. Members of the Opposition, whether they be Liberal or NDP, have rights. You would think government Members would want to give us every opportunity, as well as members of their own Party, to discuss the substance of the motion. Yet it was pulled in by members opposite when they knew members of the Opposition were not available. Therefore the motion passed. I find that to be unfair, unreasonable, and a breach of my rights as a Member of Parliament. It is totally unacceptable.

I ask you to reflect on my comments as well as those of my colleagues. We are not here to try and interfere wilfully with the procedures of this committee. However, it has to be said—and I will not say anything about the substance of the motion—that government Members are running roughshod over members of the Opposition. That is not fair.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have two or three points I would like to add to this discussion.

I believe it is appropriate for you to consider that the committee passed a motion on December 11 which said that when the committee meets to hear evidence at least one member of the Opposition must be present. It is very clear that the meeting held earlier today was to hear evidence. There is a long tradition around here that if a committee is considering altering its procedures concerning witnesses, it is a matter to be discussed by a steering committee. That committee then comes to an understanding and takes the motion back to the full committee.

Upon completion of the hearing of evidence members of the Opposition felt that that was the end of business for that sitting and decided to leave. It was at that point, when only government Members were left, that there was a change to the whole procedure regarding witnesses who would appear before the committee.

It is important to recognize that this meeting was called to hear evidence, not deal with the future order of business, particularly when it is on a Bill as serious as this. It seems only fair that a steering committee would examine it first and then make a recommendation for the whole committee to consider, with all members present after being fully notified.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, I was in the committee this morning. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) left early, as he said. I saw him advise the Chair that he was departing and he asked for some information, which I am sure is coming along. The NDP Member on the committee left with, according to my watch, about 12 or 14 minutes still to go.

We had a matter to consider, that being whether or not we would hear certain witnesses. Of the proposed witnesses one was an American Congressman. It is my understanding that we do not appear before American congressional committees as Members of Parliament. I turned down an invitation to appear before the U.S. Senate Finance Committee on the basis that is not our custom, and we felt it was probably improper for a Congressman to appear before our committee. There were three other American witnesses who we just did not feel had any reasonable contribution to make to our committee. Therefore we moved the motion that they not be heard. I do not see anything wrong with that. The committee acted within the rules and I do not believe there is a question of privilege here.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to make some very brief comments about this matter. I hope you will take note of the fact that almost every week there is a point of order or question of privilege raised in this House about what some members think are incidents of unfairness in standing and legislative committees. I invite you, Sir, to determine whether or not the time has come for you to use the broad residual authority, which I submit you have, to ensure that committees operate as fairly as the House of Commons itself with regard to members who are in opposition to the Government, as well as members who support it.

With regard to this particular incident, I believe that the normal practice for making decisions with regard to hearing witnesses would be for the matter to be first considered by the steering committee, on which there are representatives of the opposition Parties, and then considered by the full committee with full opportunity for opposition Members to be present, take part in debate on the motion, and vote on it.

Parliament is a court. It is called the High Court of Parliament. There is a basic principle in the British and Canadian judicial systems. That principle is audi alteram partem, hear the other side. With all due respect to the Government majority on the committee which proposed and voted on that motion in the absence of opposition Members, they did not follow that basic principle.

I respectfully submit that this is a very serious matter and it is not being raised for the first time. There is a pattern developing which, if allowed to continue and solidify, will destroy all claims of value in the changes in the rules with respect to the role of members on all sides of this House in the committee system and in the operation of the House of Commons.

In conclusion, at the very least, at the next meeting of the committee it should agree to revoke this motion and refer the matter to the steering committee for a full and fair consideration such as we are accustomed to in the House of Commons and its committees. If this does not happen, I am sure this matter will reappear before you so that we can again invite you to use that residual authority, perhaps a moral authority, which is very much in existence, to ensure that the House of Commons and its committees operate fairly in the interest of all its members, not only those who for the time being are in support of the Government.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise only two points because I think this matter has been dealt with very well.

It was very awkward for the chairman of the committee because it brings into question the operations of the committee. This is the second alleged breach of privilege in a committee which has been raised this week. I always believed that to exercise privilege one had to be present. If one is prevented from voting or speaking when one is present, that is a breach of privilege. However, if a member of a committee leaves a committee hearing, it is difficult to complain about what took place in one's absence.

In your deliberations on this matter, Mr. Speaker, I ask that you give us some direction as to where a question of privilege must be first raised. In this case should it not be raised at the next meeting of the committee? I believe there are 30 or 35 committees of the House of Commons at this time. If the Chair is to be the first level of appeal for every breach of privilege in those 35 committees, you might find yourself spending a fair amount of time hearing those questions of privilege. I agree that the Chair should be at the appeal level, but I do not think that the House should be the first place where a question of privilege from a committee is raised. I believe that this is a good question of privilege to be raised at the next committee meeting. If one is not successful at that level, one has the opportunity to bring it to the full Chamber.

Mr. Speaker: It is the disposition of the Chair to adjourn this matter at this time without prejudice to the Hon. Member who raised the matter, or to any Hon. Member who wishes to make an intervention when I bring the matter back to the Chamber. The Chair thinks that the Parliamentary Secretary has made an eminently sensible suggestion. What members of the committee do when they reassemble is entirely their own business. However, perhaps something might take place which would make it unnecessary to carry on with this discussion. I am going to adjourn this matter without prejudice to the Hon. Member who has raised it. If the matter is not settled, I will hear from Hon. Members later.

I hope the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) is not rising on the same matter. The Hon. Member will have every opportunity to speak when the matter comes back to the Chamber.

Mr. Ouellet: If it does.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to adjourn the matter at this point. I want to make it clear that I am not adjourning to make a decision. I am adjourning the debate to bring it back at another time, if it is necessary to do so.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-18, an Act respecting national transportation, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. Benjamin (p. 2756).

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, this debate on the new National Transportation Act is very serious.

I am somewhat disppointed with the attention that is being paid to this debate by the media and the public in general. In my view we are debating the very future of our country. We are debating the nature of the transportation infrastructure in Canada. Our transportation infrastructure has always been absolutely crucial to both the nature and the survival of our country. I believe that all Canadians would do well to pay more attention to the debate which is taking place in the House.

I sometimes find it both amusing and disturbing that so much attention is paid to the proposed free trade agreement with the United States and the negotiations in relation to that, a hypothetical situation which is some years in the future. We are debating here and now in this Chamber an issue which could have every bit as serious an impact on the future of Canada. It is at second reading stage in the House of Commons. There is a very real possibility that this legislation will be enacted in the near future. Yet, very little attention is being paid to this while the country wastes its energy speculating about a free trade agreement.

I take this debate very seriously and will comment specifically on things which the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) said when he introduced this legislation on December 19. It was unfortunate that we heard only from the Minister on December 19 and that opposition critics did not get an opportunity to speak until after the Christmas break. That was a very underhanded way to begin such an important debate as this. The Minister said, as reported at page 2318 of Hansard:

• (1530)

Cost efficient transportation will create opportunities for expansion and development in industries across Canada.

At page 2320, the Minister said:

Real jobs will be created or maintained in all regions wherever better transportation service at a better price will make a resource producer, a manufacturer or other business more competitive in the market-place.

These statements simplistically suggest that there are opportunities for Canadian industry, with markets out there waiting to be served, if only transportation costs could be reduced. This is certainly not true in the case of Canada's raw resource and processed resource markets. There is over-all global over-supply in many cases and it has very little to do with transportation costs.

Of course, transportation is a cost and much Canadian production is distant from markets. However, short of giving away transportation, it is difficult to see how markets can be improved in the face of a global glut.

Implicit in the statement of the Minister is the unfounded myth that starving the transportation industry is somehow good for industry. A transportation industry that is starved for revenues, earnings and investment will not be effective for very long.

In the same speech, the Minister said, as reported at page 2319 of Hansard:

—our transportation system has to be efficient, effective and adequate.

If the Government persists in one-way free trade with the United States and gives U.S. railroads the opportunity to cut away at Canadian railways without giving Canada's carriers an opportunity to compete on an equal footing, the system will not be efficient, it will not be effective, and it will not be adequate for very long. It is a classic example of how the practicality of the Bill is out of sync with its objectives and principles. In that respect, I want to expand on the question of how this legislation would affect the relationship between Canadian railways and the United States railways and comment on the whole matter of mandated joint line use. It is of great concern to the railways, not only CN and CP, but to railway workers across the country and all those economically integrated with the railways.

Mandated joint line rates give two alternatives to the railway responsible for originating the traffic in any particular case. Both alternatives are a disincentive to rail investment. They either turn the long haul portion of a movement over to a competitor, or keep that long haul by quoting a rate which may not adequately compensate the carrier for the investments needed to provide the level of service the customer requires.

In either case, the lower revenues would reduce the carrier's ability to make the substantial investment necessary to maintain and renew its plant and equipment and to remain competitive. This financial squeeze would be compounded if the railway is forced to duplicate its rail line capacity by upgrading track to an alternative junction point in addition to maintaining its vital long haul line.

In the short run, rates may be reduced, but the originating carrier service would deteriorate, even in a few years, to an unsatisfactory level.

As I stated, in many cases mandated joint line rates would include one or more U.S. railroads. Since U.S. railroads operate in a lower cost business and tax environment, they can provide a comparable service at a lower cost than their Canadian counterparts. They can also be more competitive because an increasing amount of their back-shopping can be done in economic and labour environments that pay Americans much lower wages than the railway workers in Canada and Canadians generally expect.

If U.S. railroads succeed in capturing transborder traffic from Canadian carriers, Canadian shippers would become dependent on foreign carriers, operating largely beyond the jurisdiction of Canadian law. This could also mean a substantial loss of business for Canadian ports, since the network configuration of U.S. roads means they would take advantage of mandated joint line rates to route Canadian import-export traffic through U.S. port facilities. Canadian shippers could well find the routing and handling of their traffic subject to the dictates of American national interests. It is an example of another sell-out of Canadian interests by the Progressive Conservative Government.

This could be a serious disadvantage for those who compete with U.S. producers for foreign and North American business. Furthermore, with mandated joint line rates, U.S. carriers could effectively eliminate Canadian rail competition for trans-border traffic by cancelling routings.

For example, let us consider a shipment of western Canadian wood pulp destined for the U.S. east coast. At the moment, CP Rail carries the shipment across Canada, handing it over to Conrail at an eastern Canadian gateway, for delivery to New England. With a mandated joint line rate, CP Rail could be required to turn the traffic over to Burlington Northern at the Alberta-Montana border. Conrail would then pick it up at Chicago and haul it to its destination. Clearly it is in Conrail's best interest to cancel its routing via eastern Canada and funnel traffic through Chicago. Currently, Conrail keeps that routing open because CP Rail has other choices. However, if CP Rail's eastern routing is cancelled, the shipper's competitive options would be reduced.

This would result in a massive export of jobs and economic activity to the United States, because of the increased routing of Canadian traffic through the U.S. Obviously, that is not in Canada's best interests. We should be very concerned about the jobs in those areas directly connected with the railway, including the running yards, equipment maintenance, the ports and many others. Thousands of jobs are at stake because the Government is foolish enough actually to contemplate this kind of measure.

A mandated joint line rate would also undermine the economic health of many of the regions in which Canadian shippers operate. I believe that the most detrimental part of the legislation is the mandated joint line use. Our very existence as a country is at stake.

If our railways are forced to cut each other's throat in order to compete not only among themselves but with the American railways, more and more concessions will be demanded from railway workers, safety will be increasingly compromised and other steps will be taken that otherwise would not be necessary if this legislation were not stopped.

I hope Canadians will understand the implications of this legislation. We in the Opposition will do our best to make the public aware of what is happening.

Let me return to the Minister's speech. At page 2321 of Hansard he said:

> The new legislation is not to just create or preserve jobs in other sectors of the economy; it is to help create and maintain jobs in transportation itself. That can only be done if the demands of travellers and shippers increase in a growing economy.

Secure jobs in the transportation industry can only be maintained if the industry is basically sound itself. Therefore, legislation must balance the needs of users of transportation with those of the suppliers of transportation. This Bill is not balanced. It will foster rates that are so low, partly through unequal competition with American carriers, that the viability of Canadian carriers will be put at risk.

One must question whether this is the ultimate goal of the Conservative Government which has talked about privatizing CN? Does it want to so weaken both Canadian railways that at some time it will be able to make the argument that no one railway can stand on its own any longer and there should only be one railway in Canada? Of course, the Conservative ideology is that this one railway should be privately owned so that we would see the fire sale of what was left of CN to Canadian Pacific. One wonders if that is the Government's hidden agenda.

That seems to be the only explanation for the Government's embarking on a regulatory regime that would have the effect of weakening our two national railways to such an extent. Perhaps that is the hidden agenda behind this Bill. No tests have been made of the market impact of the measures in this Bill. The Government is flying blind ideologically. A more measured approach, enabling the impact of certain competitive provisions to be tested, would make a lot more sense than proceeding in the way the Bill is designed.

The Minister also said on page 2232 of Hansard of December 19:

> The most significant new option is to allow the Minister to use moneys, which otherwise would have had to be spent to subsidize the line, to help shippers and communities adjust to alternative services such as trucking.

Here again we see a thrust which began under the Liberals, which is now to be accelerated by the Conservatives, of rail line abandonment. Only now people are to be somehow satisfied that there will be a little fund created to help them make the transition from having rail lines available to using trucks. I am against this on two counts and one is from an environmental point of view. I just spent some time this morning at the meeting of the Special Committee on Acid Rain. We heard how nitrous oxide emissions from heavy duty vehicles are a serious environmental problem. What do you think could be more environmentally stupid, Mr. Speaker, than substituting dozens and dozens of trucks for one train? Yet that is the trend and has been the trend for some time. We are going in exactly the opposite direction we should be if we are trying to reduce the emissions of nitrous oxide and other pollutants which come from internal combustion engines into our environment. This really smart idea of the Liberals is now to be carried out and completed as the final solution by the Conservatives who say: "We have a solution to nitrous oxide emissions. Let us get rid all the trains and let us have trucks going everywhere all across the country. Let us undermine the railways". That does not make any sense to me either environmentally or economically.

It is not going to make much sense to any of those small communities which might be affected. If those residents take a close look at the legislation, they will see that even for those who are in favour of rail line abandonment, which I am not, the new provision is flawed because the full costs of a line are not taken into account in the determination of whether or not it is economical.

Many people who find rail cost accounting complex and confusing might cheer because it raises the economic threshold for abandonment, but it also means that the cost base upon which federal compensation is determined in the event a line is allowed to be abandoned is low. Therefore, the alternative compensation that communities and shippers may see as helping them to make the transition will almost inevitably be inadequate. On page 2323 of Hansard the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) said:

> We do not believe that the railways need a monopoly to be viable or to compete with the U.S. railways.

Railways have not had a monopoly for half a century or more. The 1967 National Transportation Act recognized that. Some people say it was a belated recognition. But no one in the railway industry is asking for a monopoly to stay viable. It has not had a monopoly for ages and it does not want one. However, it does want to be able to compete without its own federal Government tying its hands and opening it up to unfair competition from the U.S. railroads.

The statement by the Minister also raises a broader issue and that is the public policy perception on which this legislation is based. It has been stated frequently by promoters of this Bill that the railways are "fat cats" and that they have been taking advantage of monopoly powers. If that is so, Mr. Speaker, where are the monopoly profits? When Hon. Members rise in the House to complain about corporations making all kinds of money, we do not hear about the Canadian National—or CP Rail, for that matter, as opposed to other dimensions of CP's operation—being cited as one of those "fat cats". In fact, people have been laid off by the tens of thousands over the last 10 years.

The promoters of this Bill have created a bogey man of a monopoly which no longer exists. They have tried to create a perception of railways operating like 19th century buccaneers so that they can justify a piece of flawed legislation which ignores economics and indulges in political wishful thinking.

> The captive shipper and Canada need better service at better prices to meet the ever-increasing rigours of domestic and international competition.

The captive shipper may be in for a nasty surprise. He is like the dog in the old fable trotting across a bridge above a stream with a bone in its mouth. When it sees the reflection of the bone, the dog thinks it is another and better bone. He drops the bone in his mouth and dives for the reflected image and ends up with nothing.

The benefits of having other carriers, in particular, U.S. carriers, may well be the same thing in terms of long-term effect; an illusion, a mirage, a deception perpetrated upon the shippers and Canadians in general by the Government.

The revenue lost to Canadian carriers, combined with the ability of U.S. carriers to control routings, may well make the U.S. carrier the only carrier for all practical purposes. Once the financially drained Canadian carrier ceases to be a competitive option, the U.S. carrier can treat the Canadian shipper however he pleases. The Canadian captive shipper is no better off, in fact, worse off, than he was before. It is this kind of game of illusion which is being perpetrated with Bill C-18, that is, illusory "benefits" which are supposed to increase competition when the end result may be less competition.

On page 2324 of Hansard of December 19 the Minister said that the CTC:

> —is a huge albatross about the necks of those involved in the transportation industry, and has enormous authority.

It may be a big albatross, and a slow moving one, but at least it is an impartial and apolitical albatross. Finally, on page 2324 the Minister says:

> —we will set transportation policy and be responsible for it. We will not slough off responsibility to someone else—
> This is a regime of responsibility .

It is difficult to see, by taking more of the responsibilities of the CTC into the Minister's office, how this will lead either to better decisions or faster ones. One of the most famous railway-related decisions made in this country, which the Conservative Party was against, campaigned against and even reversed when it came into office, was the decision made in the Minister's office over and against a decision made by the CTC, and that was to cancel the VIA Rail routes. That decision was made in 1981. So I ask those Hon. Members who are enchanted by the notion of a new regulatory regime to consider the danger of regulatory decisions by the political whim of the governing Party. I ask them to consider the dangers of that being increased and the danger of the Minister exposing himself to getting loaded down with trivia.

This is a bad Bill. Coupled with a lot of other things this Government has done with respect to Canadian sovereignty, I believe that if this is allowed to go through, along with some of the other things on the agenda, in four, five or six years' time we will not have a country worthy of the name.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, the New Democratic Party and the Hon. Member who just spoke say that the railways do not have a monopoly. Would the Hon. Member say the same thing to the coal producers, the men and women who work in the sulphur industry, the potash industry, located on CP rails? Would that Party seriously suggest that these products can be shipped long distance by truck? If so, I suggest that that Party is out of touch with reality. I find it strange that the New Democratic Party is arguing that shippers should pay higher rates in order to ensure that Canadian Pacific continues to have high profits from captive shippers, men and women in the Hon. Member's constituency, in my constituency and in the constituency of the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer).

Has the New Democratic Party become the spokesman for the CPR in ensuring that the shareholders of the CPR continue to receive dividends on the backs of the Hon. Member's constituency and the people of western Canada? Is that the nonsensical position with which the Hon. Member is trying to con this House?

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to rates which may or may not be charged to coal producers and others by the CPR at this time. That is precisely why we have the regulatory regime that we do. If these people have a complaint as to the fairness of what they are being charged, there are procedures in place for them to be able to make their case. That is as it should be, as far as I am concerned. If we open it up completely to the market-place and permit secret agreements to be reached between the CPR, or the CNR for that matter, and other producers, then we will have a rate system which discriminates against the less powerful producers and creates a hey-day for those who have the required volume to make sweetheart deals with the railways.

I realize it is kind of cute for the Government to get up and point out that in this case the New Democratic Party happens to be in agreement with a criticism made of this Bill by the Canadian Pacific. That is a fact. I can honestly say that it is not something I enjoy. But I prefer the truth over my own personal comfort. It happens to be the case in this case, and it is rarely the case that the CPR is right.

Mr. Kilgour: With all due respect to the Hon. Member who just spoke, the existing regulatory procedures do not work. They have been proven to be inadequate for the late 20th century on many occasions. I will give him an example of that.

Champion Forest Products, along with other pulpwood producers in western Canada, appealed the 4 per cent increase that CN, and I believe CP, put into effect last January 1. They filed their appeal with the CTC on, I believe it was, April 1 of last year. As the Hon. Member may recall, it was mid-December before the CTC came down with its decision. In other words, roughly eight months went by before the CTC made a decision.

Champion Forest Products as you well know, Mr. Speaker, is wanting to put up a $350 million or $400 million expansion to its pulpwood plant in Hinton in western Alberta. In the construction of this project some 400 workers would be employed full-time if that expansion goes ahead. I can tell the Hon. Member that Champion Forest Products is one of the many suppliers and western Canadian shippers which is strongly behind this Bill.

In other words the system has not worked, which is why we will change it to ensure that CP and CN have to negotiate in good faith with small, medium and large shippers on which hundreds of thousands of jobs in western Canada and throughout Canada, both urban and rural, depend. I am surprised that the Hon. Member does not seem to know anything about these issues.

The Hon. Member raised the question of small shippers. I would remind him, because he has not been here, and I should not mention where he has been, that shippers, small and large, will be able to negotiate rail prices and services as they do now with other suppliers of goods and services. Pricing will be open to volume equipment service routing and other considerations. The point is that in the absence of confidential contracts, railways are hesitant to offer lower rates to small shippers where volumes may have a unique movement to offer to the railway which, perhaps, is of benefit to the railway because it fills an empty back haul. The Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) gave an eloquent example this morning of how the men and women of Fort McMurray tried to get a back haul route for the sulphur trains leaving Fort McMurray some years ago and were told that they could not have it.

When our legislation is in place, back hauls will be available to shippers and entrepreneurs in the Hon. Member's riding as well as in mine. With all due respect, the Hon. Member simply does not realize that the economy has changed since the days of the Regina Manifesto. We are trying to get into an era in which we have to compete with Japan and many other countries. The only way we can do that is by getting our goods and services moving with an efficient transportation system which is not captive to an outdated ideology.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Bird's Nest.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I wish you would cut that out.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that I had to say that, I am sorry. There is a problem with that particular part of Winnipeg and I regret that I have said that. I will now refrain from ever saying it again. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I did not know that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Kilgour) was charged with the surveillance of Members of Parliament. He said that he would not mention where I was. If he knows where I was, then that is even more astounding. But I am not sure to what he was referring. The fact of the matter is that I was in Winnipeg for the first few days of this week with the federal NDP nuclear inquiry. If that is something of interest to the Parliamentary Secretary, then perhaps I could brief him on it. In the meantime he would do well to address his remarks to the subject matter.

He mentions, again facetiously, that the economy has changed since the Regina Manifesto. We are talking about amendments to the National Transportation Act of 1967, some 34 years after the Regina Manifesto. I am pointing this out just to show the shallowness and triviality of the type of response we get from the Parliamentary Secretary about a major change to our economy.

With respect to the question of how long it took this particular company to get a ruling out of the Canadian Transport Commission, that is a serious matter. But the disagreement is about whether or not the Government's response to that obvious problem is the right response. In my judgment it is no wonder the Canadian Transport Commission takes as long as it does to come up with judgments because it has been systematically underfunded for years, long before this Government came to power. It has been underfunded in terms of staff at all levels, whether it be in terms of inspectors on the ground looking at safety or whether it be with respect to commissioners and others who have to rule on these types of matters.

In conclusion, in my judgment the solution is not to create a system whereby the pulp and paper will be hauled over American railway lines. If that is the Tory solution, then they can have it. There have to be more creative ways of dealing with the problem than allowing our goods and services to be handled by American railways.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time allotted for questions and comments has terminated. The Hon. Member for Fundy—Royal (Mr. Corbett) on debate.

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, I wish to express my pleasure in being able to debate Bill C-18 today in the House of Commons. I would like to say at the outset that I am much more optimistic about the positive ramifications and benefits that this Bill will have than is the previous speaker. Although I am not surprised, I am disappointed that, indeed, true to tradition, the socialists of the country are knocking the premise of free enterprise and suggesting that indeed we should go for more regulation rather than deregulation.

Today is one of the truly important moments in Canada's history and in the history of transportation in the country. Today, we are debating second reading of a new National Transportation Act and a new Motor Vehicle Transport Act. These Bills are the most fundamental and progressive reforms in transportation legislation that Canada has seen for a good many years.

Two years ago, in the fall of 1984, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) tabled the Agenda for Economic Recovery, the Government's plan for economic renewal, in the House of Commons. An important element of this policy was the return of economic initiative to the private sector and the reduction of government interference and regulation in the business affairs of Canadians.

In July of 1985 the Government put before Parliament the position paper Freedom to Move. It was a carefully thought-out program for the reform of economic regulation of transportation, joined with a reduction in the level of government interference in transportation economic matters.

Throughout the summer and fall of 1985 discussions took place in all parts of the Canadian community with transportation companies, with provinces and with users of transport services—business people, shippers and travellers.

Last fall, the Standing Committee on Transport considered and held hearings on the policy proposals set out in the document Freedom to Move. The committee's recommendations were important in shaping the legislation which is currently before the House.

These Bills are among the most forward-looking and reform-minded legislation I have seen in some time before the House for consideration. They represent the following broad principles. Less regulation and less interference in transportation, which will lead to greater economic growth in all of Canada's regions. Greater reliance on competition and market forces, which will result in lower transportation costs and the services people want, rather than those dictated to them from afar. Users of the transportation system, both shippers and travellers, want a regulatory system that is open, accessible, just, and dedicated to competition and service. I suggest to my hon. friends opposite that those are the cornerstones and the milestones of this entire Act. They are the foundation.

It is of special importance to me, as a Member from Atlantic Canada, to know that this reform will bring benefits to the less advantaged areas of the country, as it will to central Canada. Let me assure you, Mr. Speaker, that it does address that.

Some have tried to make the case that excessive regulation promotes regional development. Nothing could be further from the truth. For too long, Atlantic Canada has paid too high a price for a transportation regulatory system that protects privilege and stifles development. Our growth will best be served by a competitive transportation system that is efficient, and offers the widest range of services at the least cost. We are located far from markets and need the lowest costs possible. We need the type of innovative marketing that a competitive system brings, not rigid regulation. We need services that suit our special needs, not those operated to arbitrary standards set in Ottawa. In short, we in Atlantic Canada need the benefits of competition.

Over the last 20 years, the rapid change in the transportation system has convinced me that the unreasonable economic regulation of carriers, and the counterproductive effect this has had on users, has gone on far too long. The reforms this Bill proposes for Canadian air services are wide-reaching and important. Under the new reform legislation, domestic air carriers can offer services and prices as they see fit, and as the market demands. This will lead to a wider range of less costly services to our citizens. The public will be protected from abrupt cessation of service by a 60-day notice period, and subsidies to preserve essential services. Unreasonable fare increases can also be disallowed or turned back.

This legislation does address the concerns and needs of Atlantic Canada. This Bill will greatly reduce stifling economic regulations. We all know that the Government is committed to air safety, and as other hon. colleagues have already said, safety is the first priority. I am happy to say that steps are already under way to enhance air, rail, truck and marine safety by hiring more inspectors, improving standards, and making legislative safety reforms.

I am convinced that these air transportation reforms will foster a wider range of services in Atlantic Canada at more competitive prices. We all know that some lessening of the regulatory grip has taken place since 1984, and that this has increased the range of air services in all regions while holding down prices, and in many cases reducing them. I am also happy to note that Canadian-built aircraft are being used for many of these new services.

I wish to give some examples of how this has helped my region. For years, residents of Atlantic Canada have rightfully complained about air services in that part of the country. These reforms will address the problem. For example, the new fall schedules for the major airlines show that Saint John, New Brunswick, will continue to benefit from economic regulatory reform. Air Canada's trial Ottawa-Montreal to Saint John service will continue. CP Air has added direct service to St. John's, Newfoundland. Air Atlantic has begun a mid-afternoon Halifax-Saint John run. There are now four mid-afternoon flights between Saint John and Halifax. In addition, Air Bras D'or is flying six days a week from Saint John to Fredericton, St. Leonard and Charlo, as well as to Digby and Halifax. Air Atlantic also operates to Fredericton and Moncton, with new generation Dash-8 equipment providing excellent quality service to these cities. Passengers who are using these services can use CP Air's seat sales and travel bonus programs. These are only the first of many improvements to come.

I wish to turn to the proposed economic reforms for railways. The National Transportation Act of 1967 constrained our railways in competing with each other. This helped no one, and it led to higher freight rates and a lessening of competition. The Government wants to give the railways a chance to compete, a chance to become efficient once again, and a chance to serve Canadians at the lowest possible price with the widest range of services. The rail proposals in the Bill will help Atlantic Canada's economy. There are better interswitching limits, terminal running rights, competitive line rates, and confidential contracts will allow railways to optimize their use of equipment, and give users lower prices. These reforms will help Atlantic Canada get the competitive rail service it deserves. This could mean more jobs at Belledune Fertilizer, and more rail traffic from Brunswick Mining and Smelting. It will mean real rail competition for Miramichi Pulp and Paper, and all the other Atlantic Canadian companies that can use combinations of rail lines to reach their markets.

For the shippers that are unable to get a suitable price from their railroad, I am pleased to see that this legislation offers a powerful set of remedies that restore shippers' rights, and in particular will benefit the smaller, more remote shipper. Voluntary mediation will be available to help resolve disputes. Final offer arbitration will help a shipper with an unresolved complaint against a carrier's tariff gain a speedy, inexpensive end to his case. In those cases of broad public importance, a much improved public interest provision is proposed.

Shippers in Atlantic Canada will benefit from these provisions. Many shippers will be able to use both railways and will benefit from the competition between them to get a better price or better service. Others will be able to use the improved dispute resolving mechanisms to get a better deal. The greater efficiency in railroading which will result from these reforms will help all shippers in Atlantic Canada.

The Government has agreed with the provinces on a national highway safety code that will ensure that all truckers on our highways meet the same high safety standard. The Atlantic provinces will especially benefit from these reforms. By the very nature of our rail system, we have less choice of rail carriers, and have to rely on our trucking industry to give us the range of services we need. We all know that New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island are ready to proceed with provincial legislation that will free up trucking within their jurisdictions. Bill C-18 will give our region the market driven trucking industry that will help us grow and prosper.

I wish to mention that this legislation takes into consideration the regional development needs of my region. Regional development is given prominence in the policy statement of the new National Transportation Act, Section 3. This is a made-in-Canada policy, as we can all see in the special provisions for air transport in the North, the acquisitions section that puts our public interest first in takeovers, the carefully crafted railway provisions, and the staged introduction of trucking reform. The Government is committed to the ERDA programs and the maintenance of the NFRA and ARFAA programs in my region.

In closing, I wish to say that I welcome this legislation and look forward to its passage. I am convinced that it will bring significant benefits to Atlantic Canada, give a much needed boost to economic development in the region, and help create jobs.

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor)—Canada Post Corporation—Rural mail service—Weekly newspaper postal rates; the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell)—Banks and banking—Increases in bank service charges; the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger)—Housing—(a) Co-operative housing—1986 statistics (b) Inquiry whether program will be amended.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-18, an Act respecting National Transportation, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Benjamin (p. 2756).

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte Marie): Mr. Speaker, the legislation now before the House once again results from another decision made by this Tory Government which is influenced by the American Government.

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-18 now before the House is aimed at deregulating air transportation and rail transportation. Bill C-19 which is to be discussed later also has implications along with Bill C-18 concerning road transportation.

At first glance, Mr. Speaker, people might think it is in fact interesting to see changes being made to the transport policy, and the Liberal Party is not opposed to amending the transport policy, but on the other had, we are opposed to the Bill as it is presently submitted to us. And my colleague, our official critic, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) is justified in raising the matter before all Members of this House and the public in general, in criticizing and condemning the attitude of our Tory Government in this matter as in so many others, because the Standing Committee which discussed the whole question, the legislation, the idea of amending or deregulating, did not even have the time to meet and visit with people in Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, Quebec, Ontario, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I think it would be wise to act as a responsible person, to know, to wait for the opportunity to have information, comments, information from all Canadians rather than blindly relying on what a deputy minister, a minister or two and the Prime Minister's Office may have to say. We know who is running this country, Mr. Speaker. Not the Government Members, not the Ministers, not the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), but the Prime Minister's Office and his friends. But this is a case where laughing problems away is not good enough. First, what would be the implications of deregulation as far as air transportation is concerned?

Everyone remembers what happened in the United States some years ago. Even Canadians would say: "This is interesting. People's Express is advertising very inexpensive trips to Florida." People only had to travel to Montreal, to Ste-Catherine Street—they were taken by bus to Plattsburgh, and then instead of getting a hot meal on board the plane to Florida they ate a sandwich on the corner of the table: all this of course was not expensive. What the people did not know is that safety was no longer a priority, there were fewer mechanics to check the aircraft and fewer expert technicians standing by and ready to handle any kind of emergency.

In the early stages it did look rather promising. The first and second years were highlighted by strong competition from a number of smaller companies which opened for business and offered truly competitive fares. So where do they stand now, Mr. Speaker? Prices rose to their previous levels and services are still reduced. People still eat sandwiches on the corner of the table. Far from improving, safety has decreased as a result of deregulation, thousands of jobs have disappeared, thousands of companies went bankrupt.

Mr. Speaker, given that kind of experience we in Canada should have said: Well now, they made a mistake, so we should not do the same thing. No, Sir, our beloved Prime Minister listened very closely when Mr. Reagan said: Mr. Prime Minister, you know what the American Government has done, we have deregulated the industry, you do the same thing.

As if job losses were not enough, Air Canada President Taylor himself warned that the price of airline tickets would not go down. So what benefits does the Government expect from this Bill? It is obvious that consumers and passengers alike do not stand to gain anything at all. There will be more losses in terms of safety and ticket sales. Lots of jobs may be lost. But moreover, because of FIRA and given the Government's propensity for crawling before foreigners in the United States—not to mention France when it comes to fishing—if this Bill ever becomes law any foreign company will be able to buy Air Canada or Canadian Pacific Airlines, or any other Canadian airline for that matter, and Canadians will have lost control over their own air transport system.

For my part, I come from Montreal, which is a large urban centre. Naturally, there will always be transport services to cities like Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto, Vancouver and Calgary. But air services and freight transport will always be important for the remote regions, and small businesses in these regions will suffer because the Conservatives want to deregulate everything so that the law of the jungle, of might versus right, will apply. More is offered to the strongest because he pays more, but less is offered to the weakest because he cannot pay. Mr. Speaker, these measures related to air transport will harm all our remote areas, whether we are speaking about the North Shore and the constituency of the Prime Minister, about the Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean region in Quebec, or about other regions in Alberta, in the Maritimes or elsewhere. They will harm the consumer, cause job losses and jeopardize our sovereignty and our ability to control the operations of our air carriers.

Let us now look at the impact of this Bill on railroads and trucking. The Government will allow railway carriers to sign confidential contracts. What does it mean? At this time, the shippers have contracts with a trucking company employing a number of truckers to deliver their goods across Canada or within a province. The amendments proposed by the Government will allow the CN and CP Rail to do what we call raiding in labour parlance. This means that, after this Bill is passed, when a transport company has such contracts, provides such services, gives work to people and helps remote areas develop their economy, the CN or the CP will hire two or three specialists to call on manufacturers who have their products distributed, and tell them privately: It costs you $100 a unit to transport your product, but I shall charge you $75. A contract is signed under the table and lo and behold, another trucking company goes under. Thanks for the present from the Conservative Government: no more jobs, no more contracts.

Mr. Speaker, that is what is going to happen across this country, in every province, riding and municipality. Could a small trucking company afford to hire the experts and top salesmen it would need to compete with Canadian Pacific or VIA Rail? Do you know a single trucking company with 15 or 20 trucks that would be able to pay someone between $100,000 and $150,000 to come and say: Listen here, you have to compete, I'm going to lose this contract. It is not just the contract, Mr. Speaker. He may go bankrupt and have to leave the business altogether.

Mr. Speaker, I keep saying to myself that nobody on earth, nobody in Canada could possibly suggest anything like that. However, I always forget I am not a Conservative, and that when you are a Conservative, the big guy always wins. It really is too bad because I thought this attitude had gone the way of the dinosaurs. However, we have seen this time and time again, in our fisheries, in the softwood lumber controversy and we are going to see it again in the air, railway and road transportation sectors. Mr. Speaker, for weeks and months people in the marine transportation industry have been lobbying. Employees from the Quebec shipyards at Sorel, Lauzon and Montreal came to see the Ministers of Transport here in Ottawa. They lobbied the Prime Minister for a marine transportation policy for Canada, to protect jobs the way other countries are doing. Nothing has happened. The shipbuilding industry in Quebec will be rationalized. In fact, this will happen across the country, as a result of the absence of a marine transportation policy. Those are the disastrous consequences of failing to have such a policy. Then they go on and apply the same kind of thinking to the air transport sector. Why not spoil a good thing? There are a couple of guys who want to make a buck, and two or three landing strips here and three or four planes there. Sold! After all, they deserve a break.

There is the average person who saves every week for a trip in February or during the summer to visit relatives. There are students who want to increase their knowledge and work all summer to pay for a trip, not to Europe, not even to the United States but to somewhere in Canada. People don't know Canada. Canadians do not know Canada. The impact of the proposed legislation will be such that services will go where the money is. Young people, young workers who may be listening and who don't happen to live in one of the larger urban centres can kiss those trips goodbye. They can wait. If there is time and if there are enough people to warrant sending a plane, they might have a chance, but for the time being, the planes will go where the money is.

This cannot go on. It is just not possible. With 280 or 211 or 210 Conservatives—the way things are going, it's hard to keep track—I can hardly believe they all take the same position on this Bill. It is just not true that the Conservative Member for the Saguenay area is going to accept the Bill on the same terms as a Conservative Member from the Montreal area where people will not be affected as much. There must be somebody in that party who can defend the interests of the average Canadian and the people in his riding.

There are people who have commented on the Bill. I have here letters from the Teamsters Union which operates in the transportation sector. We have CP Rail which is opposed to certain changes. The Canadian Labour Congress has objected vehemently to the consequences this Bill will have. In Quebec we have Transport 2000 Canada, whose national Vice-President, Mr. Guy Chartrand, says that the Bill will not bring about a substantial reduction in air fares in Southern Canada. That is not something the Liberal Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie made up, that was Mr. Guy Chartrand of Transport 2000 speaking. These are experts on transportation. They are dedicated to monitoring everything that relates to the transportation sector in order to protect the consumer, and that includes local, regional and national transportation. They are experts. This is not a partisan statement. These are people who know their stuff. We have the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway and Transport Workers, with 38,000 members. That is a lot more than just 211 or 210 Conservative Members. There are other people in Canada who are knowledgeable and who are saying: Deregulation doesn't make sense.

Mr. Speaker, what is happening today—I think it is important to recall the events that have taken place in the past two years since the Prime Minister's party with the President of the United States in Quebec City. That was where it all started, where the Canadian Government gave it all away. I think that looking back, and I don't blame the Prime Minister—at the time, he thought that by doing his tricks for the Americans he would get a lot in return. The Prime Minister thought: Ronnie, if you're against FIRA, out it goes. No problem, it's as good as done. Trust me, tomorrow I'll get it through the House even if the blues, the reds and the greens are opposed to the idea. I'll get it done. "Tell me what else you want." The Americans were not pleased with our energy policy: "Don't worry, my dear Ronald, I'll give you what you want. Any other request?"

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister crawled on his knees. He had everything right from the start. Here's the only thing our Prime Minister said: "I will negotiate free trade with you, but you will help me get on television", because, for our Prime Minister, it is important to appear on television in the U.S. The only thing Canadians got was to see their Prime Minister on television; as for the rest, we were being conned in every way possible.

This was evidenced by the softwood lumber issue. We cannot blame the French, nor the Germans, nor the Russians. We cannot blame others. They tell each other: "Listen, in Canada, you just call the Prime Minister, and you need give him only two or three slaps on the wrist for him to give in. He's got no backbone, he doesn't stand up. You saw what the Americans did, he gave away everything; and on top of that he imposed a tax and it didn't take long for the Canadian Parliament to launch a debate on the decision taken in the United States to impose a duty. What's more, the Americans will monitor where the money from the softwood lumber tax will go."

The French are as bright as the others. They were quick to realize that since the Prime Minister, the "guy in charge in Canada", had no backbone, why should they not try and get a bigger part of the fisheries? They felt they could get what they wanted. There again other negotiations began in no time. There again, as a consolation prize, our Prime Minister got to appear on television in France. But that does not bring anything to Canadians, and in the Atlantic provinces, as well as in the Gaspé area, in Quebec, once more it will be Canadians, Quebecers, Newfoundlanders who will be penalized in that area.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, we are stuck with a decision and, as we witnessed in the pharmaceutical products issue, it is not by coincidence if the Government is suddenly kowtowing to the multinationals. They say that research is important in the area of pharmaceutical products. But the Government has cut research funding. Why ask the sick to pay for research when the money could have come from elsewhere? No, the truth is that the Government has yielded again on that issue because of pressures exerted by important and powerful people, and it is more of the same in the area of transport.

My time is up, Mr. Speaker. I do hope that the government will listen to the voice of reason, not that of the official Opposition, not that of political parties, but the voice of the Canadian population and that it will act with the care that is expected from a government. Because in the area of deregulation, there is no chance to take. If disaster strikes following irresponsible action, that cannot be repaired.

I call on all Members of the House to be careful and to demand that the Government be careful and slow down the pace of deregulation and make the necessary changes to its Bill.

The Acting Speaker (M. Paproski): Questions and comments. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mrs. Bertrand).

Mrs. Bertrand: Mr. Speaker, I am far from being an expert in that field, but I listened anyway to the Hon. Member from Montréal—Sainte-Marie, who is always acting as a defender of the poor and the needy, give as an example an airline, People Express in fact, and I would ask him by the way, to familiarize himself with the region, because People Express flights did not leave from Plattsburgh, but from Burlington, which is located at the other end of Lake Champlain, quite a distance from there. I am speaking of a company which was most popular. People from Montreal would leave in full busloads, there were line-ups, travelers had to arrive hours in advance, because that airline offered such good service. It must have been safe since so many people dared to use it, and I was among those travelers. As far as in-flight service was concerned, of course there was no tablecloth and no silverware, but we were served a meal and we could travel to New York. That airline was successful as long as its prices were reasonable. Suddenly it changed policy, seeking to attract customers looking for somewhat more comfortable and more luxurious travelling. What happened? It went under. If it had maintained a level of services intended for less demanding customers, it would probably have survived.

So I say again to my colleague who fancies himself as the champion of the needy that he should again today stand up for the consumers.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Hon. Member gave that example. But her example clearly shows that, first of all, she did not realize that when she bought—and she is not without money as far as I know—a ticket from People's Express, this meant the loss of a job elsewhere. She was making other people poor that were not before. And the best proof is that if the company has failed, it is because this could not work, it was a lure to get passengers, a bluff in the first place. What I would like to know is when the Hon. Member who just asked the question boards a plane, whether she knows about safety, if the aircraft is well inspected. Personally, I have had no experience there. When I board a plane I take safety for granted, I assume there were so many mechanics to do repair and inspection work. But the example she just gave I think merely proves that if this had been good, if it had been an effective regulation, it would have benefited consumers. People's Express would still be around. They would not have had to increase their rates. But if they had to increase their rates, and still went bankrupt, it is because this is the law of the jungle, the big fish eats the smaller ones. Certainly we would have had the same result, even with deregulation. The new company that wants to kill Air Canada, to do away with a few thousand jobs at Air Canada, will offer lower rates, but once it gets into a monopoly situation it will act like the financial sharks. You do not know how financial sharks operate. First, they offer a very high discount, but once they have a hold on you, interests go up.

That is the trick, and that is what you clearly proved with your example, that deregulation does not profit consumers because the service which you used no longer exists.

Mr. Grondin: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to point out to the Hon. Member for Brome—Missisquoi (Mrs. Bertrand) that, when you say that Burlington is far from Plattsburgh, you have to remember that it is not really that far by boat since these cities are right across the lake from each other.

I would like to ask a question to my colleague for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart). He spoke about safety earlier and I think that this is an extremely important issue. The Canadian Air Line Pilots' Association has said that safety is mentioned only in passing in the document Freedom to Move and it is simply stated that economic regulatory reform will not be allowed to interfere with safety standards.

For my part, I believe that, in view of all that is happening in the area of transport and the difficulty some companies may have in keeping up the maintenance of all their transport equipment, whether we are speaking about truckers, airlines or railways, if there are no controls or special mechanisms to urge the contractors to apply safety standards, we could have serious problems very quickly and this could lead to serious accidents. I would like to know whether my colleague for Montreal—Sainte-Marie shares my views on the issue of safety.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I believe that the financial aspect is important, but you cannot set a price on the safety of passengers and Canadians generally. I believe that you cannot set a price on human life or on health, and that there should be no competition for markets in this regard. That is quite clear. The Hon. Member referred to experts in this field who have said that this is not covered by the Bill in its present form or by the consultations which have taken place. This is not a statement by a Member of Parliament with no experience or knowledge in this area, but a statement by experts. I would like to give an example to my colleague. In the field of airport security, we all remember that there was some cheap labour, that is people paid less than elsewhere, at Dorval and Mirabel. We recall what were the results of this situation when there was a strike. What happened? It was proven that there was absolutely no security, that the people there were not trained because they were cheap labour. A company had simply hired someone who had not been given any training.

Mr. Speaker, we have seen what can happen and we now have to regulate the transport of toxic materials. Why is it that, when human beings are involved, we say: It is not serious, let us go ahead, let us deregulate, nothing will happen, we shall deal with the problems later. I think that my colleague is right to raise this basic point. In my opinion, all Parliamentarians should consider that if deregulation jeopardizes or threatens the safety of Canadians, that is enough to justify automatic rejection of this Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I shall recognize first the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway), and then the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Kilgour).

• (1630)

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, when I saw the Hon. Member rising to his feet to speak, my ears perked up. While I know that on occasion he likes to take off on flights of fancy and sometimes his facts do not quite add up, I thought maybe this time he would redeem himself. I thought perhaps we would finally hear a well-reasoned and logical speech. After all, he does profess to speak for ordinary Canadians like me and you. However, as he started to speak I heard him say that when deregulation of the airlines had taken place in the U.S. there had been a loss of jobs. You and I are well aware, Mr. Speaker, that when deregulation took place in the U.S. between 1980 and 1985, a time in which a very serious recession took place, indeed it was called the Great Recession, jobs were not lost in the airline industry. There was in fact an increase in employment of some 9 per cent. So right away the Hon. Member started to lose me in his comments.

Then he went on to say that deregulation was the law of the jungle and apparently he did not support it. That brought me back to thinking about the fact that he sat here as a member of the former Liberal Government which started the ball rolling on deregulation of air transportation. Now he stands up here and tells us that he did not support it. We did not hear that at the time. I do not remember his getting up and shaking his fist at his Minister of Transport and stomping out of the Chamber or voting against it and calling it the law of the jungle.

I wonder if the Hon. Member would like to tell us why at the time his Government introduced the first step towards deregulation of transportation he did not make the same sort of speech in the House that he just did. If we look back in Hansard I do not think we will find him making a speech on that subject at all, and very few on anything else.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that we cannot regulate intelligence. The Hon. Member who just spoke did not understand my opening remarks. This is sad, and the best proof is the comment made by a "deregulated" man. Mr. Speaker, this is something. At first, I said: the Liberal Party does not oppose some deregulation; the Liberal Party, and my colleague for Papineau is right in opposing that, and the Hon. Member, if he wants to be honest when talking about creating 9 per cent jobs in the United States, can tell us where all those employees of People's Express are. The Hon. Member forgot to say, if he wants to be honest, that in most competing airlines, employees were forced to accept salary cuts. So the Hon. Member refers to job creation. Speaking as a true Tory, where there is a $15,000 job he says: This fellow earns too much, we are going to cut his salary in half. You will get $7,000, and the other fellow, we will give him $8,000. That is Tory policy.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I believe that in his speech the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) referred to the matter of safety in the various transportation systems in Canada. I think it is very important to stress the fact that special attention was given to the matter of safety all along this reform process. The now Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) and his predecessor very clearly stated that one of the priorities of the reform is agreement over a higher security level for each of our means of transportation. New provisions for the operating of airlines and trucking companies expressly recognized that carriers should meet safety standards, failing which they would lose their operating licenses.

Recent amendments to the Aeronautics Act and the forthcoming adoption, for the very first time, of a National Safety Code, are proof of the Government's unconditional commitment to the trucking industry in this respect. Mr. Speaker, this is very important. Over 30,000 people will be involved and $1.2 billion, nearly one third of the combined budgets of Transport Canada and the CTC, will be budgeted annually for enforcement of the safety code.

The Minister has also announced his plans to hire an additional 100 inspectors who will be working in safety enforcement.

Our regulatory reform, and this is very important, is purely economic and does not in any way affect existing safety measures.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, it was the Canadian Airline Pilots Association that said that deregulation would have a disastrous impact on safety. It is not something I made up myself. It has been said by safety experts in various fields. However, it is possible that with a certain degree of deregulation, if it is done reasonably, carefully and intelligently, if that is not too much to ask of our friends opposite, we could still guarantee a fairly high level of safety. However the Bill in its present form provides no guarantees for this, and the only thing that is clear from this Bill is the Government's ulterior motives, and on the basis of our experience in other areas, this means the big guy always wins, jobs will be lost, and there will be no safety at all in—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member, but the period for questions and comments has now expired. Debate. The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp).

[English]

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to join in the debate on Bill C-18, to speak in support of the motion of my good friend, the Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), which amends the Government motion to read:

> Bill C-18, an Act respecting national transportation, be not now read a second time but that the Order be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Transport.

That is a sound and sensible proposal. The amendment recognizes the fact that that which the Government is putting before Parliament will have enormous consequences. It recognizes that the Transport Committee had inadequate time to consider the proposals of the Government and was not given the opportunity to travel to various parts of Canada to allow Canadians to respond to the Government's proposals. The amendment recognizes that the Standing Committee on Transport did not have the opportunity which a parliamentary committee deserves to explore the possible consequences of the Government's Freedom to Move proposals and recommend sound action to Parliament.

In suggesting that the amendment is sound and that it would be sensible for the Parliament of Canada to have a further opportunity in committee to consider the proposals, it is appropriate for me to provide as justification some defence of it from a consideration of transportation in Canada and North America. The curious thing about this proposal for the deregulation of transportation is that it reeks of commitment to a principle which has not been carefully thought through, the application of which is likely to have very different consequences from those suggested by the Government.

There is certainly a desire by some shippers to have the competitive situation which the Government hopes will result from its proposals. I have received letters and briefs from several major industries operating in northern Ontario and other parts of the country. Those interests think that the change in the regulatory regime prevailing in Canada could be to their advantage. I will not name those interests because what I want to say in considering the validity of that view may well be mistaken by them. I will, therefore, leave them anonymous.

It is sad that far too little is known of the history of transportation in this country, particularly that which occurred 100 years ago. Very few Canadians remember now, if they ever learned, that John D. Rockefeller and his associates built the Standard Oil complex through confidential contracts and even worse practices against their competitors which destroyed competition in the petroleum industry in the American midwest and allowed Rockefeller and his associates to get complete control of it. Rockefeller made secret agreements with shippers and played one off against the other. He also brought pipelines into the system.

If you are able to do those things and are prepared to go even further in the war of competition by attacking your competitors' words, setting them on fire and so on, you can build a great industrial empire. That is exactly what John D. Rockefeller and his associates did. It is an odd thing for a Baptist layman who enjoyed teaching Sunday school to have done, but that is what he did. Rockefeller and his associates did that by making secret contracts with shippers and playing one off against the other. They got rock-bottom prices for moving their products because they guaranteed large shipments. In the process they drove their competitors out of business. It was in that context that the United States Congress moved, about 100 years ago, to establish the Interstate Commerce Commission to ensure that regulation would prevent that kind of cutthroat competition.

It is exactly this kind of concern about what will happen in a competitive regime that members of the Government should have. It is obvious that if controls are removed entirely and you set out to create a competitive mode, you will end up forcing competitors to purchase each other, with the end result of strikingly reducing rather than increasing the number of competitors. There were 13 railways in the United States some years ago and there are now only seven left. The situation in the airline industry has been in the news in the last months. Airline companies, particularly those which offered such great rates not long ago, are going bankrupt. Texas Air has purchased many of them and has become an enormous interest in the United States. Each year there are fewer airlines involved in the industry.

It is all too often forgotten that the endeavour to achieve and maintain a competitive realm is not advanced by allowing businessmen complete freedom to do what they want. That is where the matter of wise regulation comes in. There is an ultimate principle for businessmen that is even more important than competition. It is freedom of contract. It is the ability to buy out anyone and control as much as possible.

It is foolish for anyone to believe that today there is real competition when there are only a handful of companies operating in an industry.

The fact is that there are even fewer companies operating in the rail and airline industries in Canada. Recent events in the Canadian airline industry, with the reduction of scheduled carriers into two groups, is a demonstration of what happens with the removal or predicted removal of regulation and the creation of a supposedly competitive environment. The freedom to buy other companies and reduce competition has left us with two interests. I suggest that the only reason we have two interests in the airline industry and railway industry is that in each case one company is publicly owned. If it were not for Air Canada and Canadian National, what guarantees would Canadians have that the entire airline industry and rail industry would not be controlled by one interest?

The Government should not only be concerned with removing regulations supposedly to advance competition and not give any criteria about how to ensure this new regime will actually maintain competition between companies. Unless it ensures that there is competition law that will provide some protection against the freedom of businessmen to buy and consolidate each other's operations for their own profitability, there will be a movement toward monopolization of the airline and rail industries, particularly if there is privatization. The result will be anything but the desired kind of competition.

There is another fundamental aspect of competition which is all too rarely appreciated. Competition seems attractive to those who want to ship or travel. There is no doubt that shippers are attracted to the possibility of making confidential agreements with their shipping companies in order to reduce their costs and be more competitive. Similarly, seat sales and low air fares by such airlines in the United States as People Express are attractive to Canadians. It has led many to believe that deregulation would result in the same situation in Canada. However, people in the Canadian airline industry do not expect that such bargains will occur in the future since Canadians have already experienced the good bargains that are to be found in the industry. Surely that fact should encourage us to recommend that Bill C-18 be sent to the standing committee for further study.

Setting these concerns aside, what are the consequences of the Government's desired competition to those who provide the important transportation services? There is much doubt that competition will prevail, given the evidence of the consolidation of control and other factors. When there are few shippers, there is far more collusion than control because enterprises exist to make money, not provide the lowest possible cost for the movement of goods and people. The fact that a truly competitive regime could drive profits down to zero or less is of enormous concern to these companies and is exactly the motivation for trying to control a situation the Government has created by removing regulation that was based on sound policy and well established national institutions.

Therefore, let us consider the consequences of such a competitive regime. If one's primary concern is with the enterprise and its shareholders, one will soon worry about inadequate profits in order to maintain the viability of stocks. A supplier of rolling stock to railways or aircraft and various services to airlines will soon consider how to skimp on purchases and keep aircraft flying until they are unsafe. If the Canadian railways thought the old regulatory regime was bad, they will be in a dreadful state as a result of the Government's competition regime.

Companies that are driven down toward the break-even point and below will become the toughest employers the unions have ever seen. The Conservatives may not be concerned that thousands of jobs will be lost, but I would like to be present to keep them honest when they talk to their constituents who have lost their jobs with those companies.

Not only will there be unemployment, wages will be cut, working conditions will suffer and safety will ultimately be in question.

A recent inquiry indicated that the Hinton crash was related to the tiredness of the men working on the trains. Some of us may be aware of the long hours worked by people on our country's aircraft. This legislation leads to grave concerns about health and working conditions and the ultimate safety of Canadians who travel on our airlines and live close to rail lines.

Canadians want to be assured that they can travel safely on our airlines and can safely live next to the railways on which freight travels past their homes.

None of those concerns are alleviated by the Government's proposed competitive regime.

Safety is a legitimate concern because we have already seen in the United States the consequences of flying old aircraft. We know that an Arrow aircraft carried some 200 military personnel to their death in Canada. American companies have had their licences suspended because of unsafe practices. These are some of the consequences of the kind of competition that the Government wishes to introduce.

I see it is five o'clock, Mr. Speaker. I will continue tomorrow.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When Orders of the Day are called tomorrow, the Hon. Member will have three minutes remaining in his speech, plus 10 minutes for questions and comments.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--MOTIONS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before today's Private Members' Business, I would like to inform the House that I have received written notice from the Hon. Member for Etobicoke—Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer) that he is unable to be present in the House on Thursday, February 5, 1987, to move his motion for second reading of Bill C-209 during the hour for Private Members' Business.

It has not been possible to arrange an exchange of positions in order of precedence pursuant to the Special Order of the House agreed to on December 18, 1986. Accordingly, I am directing the Table to drop that item of business to the bottom of the order of precedence. Since notice will thereby be removed, the hour for Private Members' Business will be suspended and, pursuant to Standing Order 39(2), the House will continue with the business before it prior to that hour until the ordinary hour of the adjournment.

It being 5 p.m. the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

RAILWAY ACT

PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE INCREASED COMPENSATION TO VICTIMS OF FIRES

The House resumed, from Thursday, December 4, 1986, consideration of the motion of Mr. Althouse:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of introducing legislation to amend the Railway Act to provide for increased compensation to victims of fires set by railway operations in order to reflect current replacement costs on items lost through property damage.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When the motion was last before the House, the Hon. Member for Cariboo—Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway) had the floor. Since he is not here, I recognize the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I will begin by saying that this is one of the motions selected by the Standing Committee on Private Members' Business to come to a vote in the House. Not wanting to say anything in relation to the merits of this motion, versus other motions, it seems to me that this is a motion which could well be passed by this House in Private Members' Hour. As far as I can tell, it is not a terribly controversial motion, but it is important. We could make some parliamentary history if, at the conclusion of the five hours of debate, or should the vote come sooner, we were able to have a vote on this motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), send it to committee, have it examined and have it come back for passage into law. This is a Private Member's Motion with respect to the Railway Act. It was introduced in the House on October 14, 1986 and reads as follows:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of introducing legislation to amend the Railway Act to provide for increased compensation to victims of fires set by railway operations in order to reflect current replacement costs on items lost through property damage.

Subsection 338(2) of the Railway Act states as follows:

If it is shown that the company has used modern and efficient appliances, and has not otherwise been guilty of any negligence, the total amount of compensation recoverable from the company under this section in respect of any one or more claims for damage from a fire or fires started by the same locomotive and upon the same occasion, shall not exceed five thousand dollars.

The $5,000 limit was first adopted by Parliament in 1903 through the Statutes of Canada, Chapter 58, Section 239 of the Railway Act. Based on price indexes, $5,000 in 1903 would mean approximately $70,000 in 1986, or more precisely, $68,331.

Subsection 338(2) of the Railway Act specifically mentions damage from a fire or fires started by the same locomotive and upon the same occasion. It cannot, nor should it, be understood that only the locomotive may be responsible for starting a fire. In 1903, when this legislation was first drafted and endorsed by Parliament, steam locomotives, which were then in use, were much more likely to start a fire than are today's diesel locomotives. Yet, this is not at all recognized by Subsection 338(2) of the Railway Act.

On the face of it, it seems obvious that some amendment to the Railway Act is in order. This motion in itself would not amend it, but it would certainly be significant if the House were to pass the motion. It is a motion of recommendation, really, to the Government. When I talked earlier about its going to committee, I had mistakenly thought of it as a Bill, but it is actually a motion. If the motion were passed, it would constitute an instruction to the Government to bring in the appropriate legislation. Unless there is someone who seriously wants to argue that the $5,000 limit which was legislated in 1903 should be defended forever and a day, I see no reason why we should not take the opportunity presented to us by the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre. As many people could speak to the motion as would like to speak to it and then we could get on to the business of eventually passing the motion to encourage the Government to act in this way.

I am told that the railways have pointed out, in responding to the existence of this motion, that in the case of liability where there is a claim on the basis of negligence, there is no specific limit under the law in the establishment of a financial settlement. This may be true, but the important thing to remember is that even if this is so, the onus is on the farmer, or whoever lost property as a result of the fire, to establish, according to Subsection 338(2), that the railway was in fact negligent. In addition to the likelihood of its being very expensive, as well as very lengthy, it would be extremely difficult to establish in court negligence on the part of the railway. I need not remind you, Mr. Speaker, that the railway can well afford to wait a long time and may well be in no great hurry to settle any of these court cases. As well, the railway can afford to hire very high-priced lawyers to make its case, while the individual farmer, or a group of farmers, who may be the victims of fire started by trains going through their property, are hardly in the same position.

I believe that what we have before us makes eminently good sense. I would be very surprised if anyone were to speak against it. Perhaps at some future point when the time for debate has expired, we could make parliamentary history and vote, I would hope unanimously, to pass this motion to encourage the Government to respond to this particular need and, in doing so, resound to the clear will and expression of the House in this particular matter.

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the remarks of the Hon. Member. On this issue he makes a good deal of sense. I hope that what I say will neither subtract from nor differ from his remarks drastically. The Canadian Railways in recent years have a safety record second to none. I wonder if you know, Mr. Speaker, that CP Rail has been the safest railway in North America for each of the last four years, while CN Rail has been in the top six for the same period. We have a railway system of which we can be truly proud.

If the Hon. Member thinks it is the regulatory system which has produced that record, I can assure him that what we are doing is not changing the regulatory system. As I have said about 90 times, I think, we are only dealing with economic regulatory reform. We are not dealing with safety reform. There are about 11,000 people working in the Department involved in safety in the three modes of transportation.

The railways built the nation and they continue to perform a vital role in the Canadian economy. The railways are safe indeed and we have an excellent base from which to work. One can never be satisfied that one is doing enough where safety is concerned. Notwithstanding the 11,000 people who work in the area and the more than $1 billion that is being spent on safety in Canada each year at the federal level, there are a number of areas in which legislative changes can help to improve the safety of the system.

Railway safety is regulated through the provisions of the Railway Act. This legislation has evolved from the early days of the Canadian railway system and encompasses a wide range of issues including economic regulation and corporate powers. The safety provisions are in certain aspects outdated and combined with many other non-safety items.

Let me give you an example of that, Mr. Speaker. As evidence of the antiquated aspects of the Railway Act, there are provisions regarding the weight and composition of steam locomotive bells and requirements regarding the oiling of locomotives which became redundant about 100 years ago. Other non-essential items include sections of the Act which specify that telegraph poles should be set vertically wherever possible and that they should be painted in urban areas.

Section 338 of the Railway Act establishes the liability of railway companies for fires started by railway locomotives. Where the railway has used "modern and efficient appliances" and has not otherwise been guilty of any negligence the compensation for property damage by fires started by locomotives is limited to $5,000, which is what the debate today is all about. This section of the Railway Act was first written before 1910 and was subsequently revised in 1919. At the time it was considered appropriate to establish liability for fires in the Act because the early steam engines were prone to setting fires, even when operated with all due regard to safety in accordance with proper operating procedures, and because insurance was not widely held by property owners. Of course, that has long since changed.

It is true that fires still originate on railway property. But if they do they are more likely to be caused by sparks generated by train brakes or by wayside maintenance activities than by locomotives, although diesel locomotives have been known to emit sparks which start fires. Section 338 has been used in a more general sense in relation to fires started by trains, without determining whether or not they originated from the locomotive.

In so far as regulatory control over railway company activities is concerned, Section 221 of the Railway Act gives the Canadian Transport Commission the power to make orders and regulations governing prevention and control by railway companies of fires along railway rights of way.

Section 338 of the Railway Act does not prevent or prejudice any action or claim against a railway company for failure to use "modern and efficient appliances" or for other negligence relating to fires. Therefore, with the exception of this section, there is no legislated limitation on railway company liability.

It is difficult to see any reason why claims for damage caused by fires originating on railway property should not be handled through the courts as civil cases. A person whose property is damaged by a fire started by a railway company should have normal access to compensation through the courts. There does not appear to be any useful purpose served by any exception to this right, as preserved in Section 338.

While the Hon. Member who moved the motion proposes that the maximum level of compensation to victims of fires started by any railway operation, as set out in the Railway Act, be increased to reflect current replacement costs for damaged property, the exception introduced by the Act, regardless of limits on liability, is an anachronism. The Hon. Member's proposal is pertinent in that this section of the Railway Act appears to have outlived its usefulness. Any change should take into consideration the possibility of deleting it in its entirety rather than modifying it as proposed. In any event, it would be preferable to deal with the modernization of the Railway Act in a co-ordinated manner rather than in a piecemeal fashion as entailed by the Hon. Member's motion.

The change proposed by the Hon. Member should be considered in conjunction with a general review of railway legislation, which is presently under way at Transport Canada. In due course, such a review could be laid before the House and Members could then have ample opportunity to examine this amendment, and any other that may be considered appropriate, in the context of a comprehensive legislative proposal.

We now come to the question of how members are to vote on this matter. In the city from which you and I come, Mr. Speaker, about 12 days ago I gave an impassioned plea for having Members vote according to their consciences and the interests of their constituents other than when a question of confidence in the Government is at issue. It would be abjectly hypocritical for me on a motion as tepid as this one to urge government Members to vote against it.

There is no question whatsoever that this motion does not involve confidence in the Government. No Hon. Member in the House would pretend that it did. I would be the worst kind of hypocrite, with a capital "H", if I were to go around asking my colleagues to vote against it. They have heard what I have had to say on behalf, if you like, of the Government, but I have enough respect for them and you, Mr. Speaker, that I would ask them to vote exactly the way they feel so as to be in accordance with their consciences on this matter.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I must say I listened with a great deal of delight to the comments made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Kilgour). Indeed, I found his remarks very encouraging. The type of leadership he has just demonstrated with respect to his position of responsibility indicates that something as positive and contributory as the motion before us ought to be supported by all sectors represented in the House. I am happy to be able to speak to the motion following the Hon. Member. I am very encouraged by his comments.

As he has indicated, at the turn of the century when the Railway Act was being formulated there was the recognition then that with railway locomotives being what they were at the time, spewing out smoke and ash, fires were relatively commonplace as trains moved back and forth across Canada.

In 1903, the Parliament of the day, through the Statutes of Canada, Chapter 58, Section 239 of the Railway Act, indicated that $5,000 would be an appropriate sum to expect a railway to pay if in fact a locomotive caused a fire. I suspect that back in 1903, $5,000 was sufficient moneys to compensate for damages incurred as a result of a fire by a locomotive pulling a train. But if one were to factor in the cost of living and the inflation rate since 1903, I suspect that the figure would be at least close to $100,000, although perhaps not that high. It would be close to $100,000 in order to reflect what would be a typical piece of compensation in an average fire caused by a locomotive. However, as the Parliamentary Secretary has indicated, and as have other Hon. Members, with the change of locomotives to diesel, and in some cases to electricity, fires that are caused by railways today tend to be caused by other means and not necessarily by the locomotive of a train. To confine the compensation offered to fires that are created only by locomotives does not recognize the reality of the changing modes of transportation technology and, quite frankly, the changing realities of our rail system.

We all know, particularly those of us who have rural areas in our constituencies with rail lines running through them—and I am honoured to have both Canadian Pacific and Canadian National travelling through the constituency of Kamloops—Shuswap—that fires are occasionally started by careless personnel and by the malfunctioning of brakes on twists and turns throughout the mountainous region of British Columbia. Sparks can fly off and cause fires. I suppose there are probably other ways of causing fires as well.

What the motion before us does is simply to suggest that in the opinion of this House the Government should consider the advisability of introducing legislation to amend the Railway Act to provide for increased compensation to victims of fires set by railway operations in order to reflect current replacement costs on items lost through property damage.

The motion is a thoughtful one and is to urge the Government to put into motion a process by which this suggestion could be considered. As the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport has indicated, certainly an updating of this section of the Railway Act is in order.

In the case of liability where there is a claim on the basis of negligence, I suspect that a different matter will exist. Then, through due process of the courts, people can pursue justice and expect from the railway a reflection of the case that an individual could then present.

The onus is always on the farmers, or whoever lost property as a result of a fire, to establish that the railway was negligent according to Subsection 338(2). In addition to this process being expensive and lengthy, it would be extremely difficult to establish negligence on the part of the railway in court. Of course, the railway can afford to wait a long time and may not be in a great hurry to settle. The railway can also afford to hire high-priced legal help to present its case, while the individual farmer or group of farmers would not be in the same position.

The need for change is obvious. The appropriate way to proceed would be for the Standing Committee on Transport to seek expert advice on what would be an appropriate compensatory figure, and perhaps an improved process. In that manner, a farmer or group of farmers would be able to expedite a presentation regarding a fire on their property caused by one of Canada's railways.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, when I came to the House tonight, I did not intend to speak on this subject. However, as I listened to other Hon. Members make their comments, the subject aroused my interest and raised my recollection of a rather major fire, probably only one of many major fires that have been the result of railway operations, the Mississauga derailment and the damages that flowed from that incident.

The motion before us this evening states:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of introducing legislation to amend the Railway Act to provide for increased compensation to victims of fires set by railway operations in order to reflect current replacement costs on items lost through property damage.

As I read it, that is an attempt to increase the total amount of damages to be paid on the basis of absolute liability, and not on the basis of negligence by a railway in the event of any fire caused by railway operations.

I have been listening carefully, and I have heard two Hon. Members from the NDP Party talking about fires that may be caused on a farmer's property, or on a farmer's field. But what they have neglected to mention, and to my mind what is more probable in this day and age, is the fire that may be caused in an urban area rather than a rural area. I draw the attention and the recollection of the House to the Mississauga train derailment a few short years ago.

That incident involved a train carrying 14 to 16 different cars containing a variety of hazardous materials. It was travelling from London, Ontario to the marshalling yard in Agincourt, which is part of Scarborough in Metropolitan Toronto. When the train reached Mississauga, there was a derailment of some of those cars. What followed was what the transportation and safety experts referred to as a bleve, which is an explosion of this hazardous material. It hurled a fireball into the air and caused it to ignite and damage property for many kilometres around. I did not bring with me the exact details of the damage caused, or the numbers of people evacuated. My recollection is that the population in that area was evacuated from their houses for a period of up to and in excess of one week for a distance of some 10 kilometres on each side of the railway track.

At that time, that section of the railway track was in a relatively low density area, even though it was in what we might consider to be an urban area. Notwithstanding that fact, the subsequent claims to the railroad as a result of that bleve, the derailment, and the disaster, were in the many millions of dollars. The damages claimed for property damage alone, not for personal injuries, were perhaps in the range of hundreds of millions of dollars.

Immediately after that derailment there was a judicial investigation and inquiry headed by Mr. Justice Samuel Grange of the Ontario Supreme Court. I believe that you were a member, Mr. Speaker, of the former Government which appointed Mr. Justice Grange to head that inquiry. That inquiry resulted in a long list of recommendations on improving railway safety, and many of those recommendations have been carried out. There continues to be a substantial number of derailments of trains that are carrying hazardous materials. On average, after the Mississauga disaster, it was considered that every year within the confines of the greater Metropolitan Toronto area there are at least two derailments of trains with cars carrying hazardous materials. There is every likelihood that there will be another Mississauga train derailment and disaster with property claims in the millions of dollars.

What concerns me about this issue is the fact that if that train that derailed in Mississauga had stayed on the track for a further 20 minutes, it would have derailed in the middle of my own constituency and community. I would have been one of those people evacuated and making the property damage claim, as would many people in my own community. That same rail line which runs through the heart of Metropolitan Toronto abuts on extremely high density apartment buildings and office buildings. The civil defence officials in Metropolitan Toronto have indicated that if the Mississauga train derailment had occurred in the middle of Metropolitan Toronto in one of the high density areas, in no way could there have been an evacuation such as took place in Mississauga. Perhaps as a result of the escape of the poisonous gases, there would have been a substantial number of fatalities.

That is the type of potential situation about which we are talking when we talk about a derailment or a fire caused by a train in this day and age. It may very well involve a spark from a steam locomotive on an historic ride with a load of people who belong to an historic train club. Perhaps that is the sort of thing about which we are talking, but we are also talking about a substantial potential disaster involving millions and millions of dollars.

At present in Metropolitan Toronto there is a task force on rail safety in the greater Metropolitan Toronto area. It was established by the former Minister of Transport, the present Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), some months ago to study the possibility of relocating tracks, re-routing hazardous trains, examining speed limits on railways, and looking at various safety measures which might be brought to bear to try to ensure that something like this does not happen in the future in a high density area. Whether or not that task force is successful in coming up with the answers remains to be seen. The risk of a hazard is still there and may be with us for all time.

In this motion we are saying to the railroads that they would be absolutely responsible for whatever amount of damages may be the result of a fire which has been caused or set by railway operations, that their responsibility would be absolute to the extent of the current replacement costs of the items lost and the property damaged. In a case like the Mississauga one, the railroad would have been absolutely liable, without any question of negligence, for an enormous amount of money. I am no great sympathizer and my heart does not bleed for railways when they cause damage. However, we must bear in mind the consequences of adopting this motion.

What we should be doing—and I hope it was really the suggestion of the Parliamentary Secretary and the suggestion of the House Leader of the NDP—is referring the entire question to the Standing Committee on Transport in order to take a look at the possible consequences. We know that railways would be responsible to the full extent for damages caused as long as it could be established that they were negligent. We should be looking at all the consequences before we decide to nail them with absolute liability for something which might incur a responsibility of some millions of dollars.

I am certainly in support of any move to refer the matter to the standing committee so that all circumstances can be examined.

Mr. Pat Binns (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, like the previous Hon. Member who spoke, I did not anticipate speaking on this debate this afternoon. However, the subject of railways is a very interesting one for all Canadians. It seems as though debate over the last 24 hours has focused on transportation systems. In fact, in the last 30 minutes or 40 minutes we have been talking about boats, airplanes, and trains.

I personally have some sympathy with the content of the resolution because it suggests that adequate compensation should be paid to victims of fires caused by rail use. There is nothing more important to Canadians and to legislators than to see that adequate compensation is paid to innocent bystanders to an act or acts of another party. Of course, this is where this particular motion comes into it. We have a responsibility as legislators to ensure that in matters where health, safety, and so on are concerned, all Canadians are protected adequately under the law.

There are many aspects of such legislation. I am not entirely sure what is intended in the motion. There could be compensation to the employees of the railway. There could be compensation to passengers on the railway. There could be compensation to adjacent property, be they farms, communities, or whatever. We certainly have to look at all those areas.

These are changing times and compensation must be adequate. What was adequate perhaps 10 years or even five years ago would probably not be adequate today in terms of providing for an innocent victim of this type of fire.

I want to address the notion of railways in these changing times. We tend to think of railways as perhaps diminishing in number in most parts of the country except on major lines connecting urban centres. However, another aspect has been developing over the last few years regarding tourism. A tourism association in my constituency has in fact been looking at the possibility of establishing a steam railway as a tourist attraction in the area. Such an operation is not in any way unique. In fact, many steam railways now operate in Canada as well as throughout North America.

In New Brunswick the Hillsboro and Salem line has been in operation over the last few years. It has been a real attraction to that particular area of New Brunswick. I think a steam railway in Prince Edward Island also has the potential of being an attraction to people who visit our island in the summer months. Steam railways have caught on to such an extent that there is an association of North American steam railway operators which meets on a regular basis and is promoting interest in this type of attraction across North America. From what I understand, North Americans are very interested in seeing that bit of history recognized and promoted. People are going out to see those railways. They are becoming involved with them. There is some romanticism involved. I suspect that kind of activity will be around for a good many years to come.

In a motion like this one the matter of liability insurance is something about which we ask ourselves. I know that the operators of many attractions which are serving the public today have had concerns about adequate liability insurance. I am sure railway companies must also be concerned about the cost of liability insurance in relation to the protection they will have to provide for people who may be victims of rail fires or other accidental happenings, whatever they might be. I do not think we could ever resolve that matter on the floor of the House. It would require in depth study by the Government before any final conclusions could be drawn.

The matter of current replacement costs is something which is changing rapidly. I suppose this gives us an opportunity to consider the fact that it is not just current replacement costs for people who might live alongside a railway. We must all look at replacement costs of our own property, and perhaps this is an opportunity to remind ourselves of that fact. Many people today do not carry adequate fire insurance on their dwellings, business operations, or whatever. What might have been adequate three years or four years ago would not come anywhere near replacing the cost of a house today. It is something that is important.

Railways still run across most of the country. There has been some change in usage. We are seeing a return to the romantic notion of steam railways. There is certainly the responsibility of the ongoing major lines. I certainly support the direction of the motion and I want to support the mover and the seconder in having this matter examined further.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to say just a few words about this motion. I appreciate, first, the manner in which the motion has been taken up by several Members of the governing Party, including the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Kilgour). This response to the concern which the motion expresses is appreciated by us in our group and I want to recognize that explicitly.

The comments made by my colleague, the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway), dealing with the potential for various kinds of fires leads me to direct my attention for just a moment to the motion itself in that it does respond to changing circumstances in its way. It looks to legislation to amend the Railway Act to provide for increased compensation to victims of fires set by railway operations in order to reflect current replacement costs of items lost through property damage. That language does generalize the matter a good deal. It recognizes the reality of various kinds of railway operations. As I listen to this very interesting debate I muse over the fact that a clause in the existing legislation begins by saying:

> The company shall at all times maintain and keep its right of way free from dead or dry grass, weeds and other unnecessary combustible matter.

I have driven through northern Ontario along rail lines and looked at the right of ways that have been burned clear. One of the things railways do and are required to do is to keep them clear. There is the possibility for fires to spread from those railway operations. We have an additional factor involved in the risk that property owners run.

I want to note that, as the Hon. Member for York East has suggested, people in the cities and towns face dangers. I might suggest that in addition to farmers there are owners of woodlands traversed by railways which might also experience losses that should be provided for.

The main contribution in my few comments deal with the question of the level of cost that might be considered in this consideration if the motion is carried to a favourable result in our vote this afternoon.

It was suggested by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) that price indices would suggest that the original level of $5,000 might today represent a cost of $68,000. I think that amount is quite inadequate, and a careful comparison of some income figures would suggest that $68,000 or $70,000 is not really the appropriate contempory ceiling that might be put on cases of loss where the railway is not negligent. I note in some material that my friend passed on to me that one of the comparisons that can be made is to the parliamentary sessional indemnity, the salaries, if you will, that Members of Parliament receive. Those were $1,500 in 1905. That means the level was about three and one-third at $5,000 of what Members were paid. If the current level is about $55,000, clearly the appropriate comparative figure as a ceiling on loss in cases where there is not negligence would be into the range of $170,000 or so.

I would like to suggest the possibility that it could be even more than that. My own research into the early industrial history of Canada during those years would suggest that a skilled labourer might well earn something like $500. It could be a bit more than that by the end of the decade, but if one were to take the figure of $500 per year as a skilled labourer's income, I would think that today one might say $30,000 to $35,000 was a fair figure for a skilled labourer to be earning. I am open to correction by others. If then the figure in those days was 10 times that, we would have a basis for urging consideration of a ceiling on these claims where there is not negligence of $300,000 to $350,000. That seems to me to be getting us into the right league, the league which the Hon. Member from York East was pointing to when he talked about the Mississauga derailment.

With these comments on the wisdom of the motion and support on my own part, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier):

> that the motion be amended by deleting the words in "in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of" and substituting the words "the Standing Committee on Transport be empowered to study the advisability of the Government".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall the amendment carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Epp, Thunder Bay—Nipigon) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on the main motion, as amended, which reads:

> That the Standing Committee on Transport be empowered to study the advisability of the Government introducing legislation to amend the Railway Act to provide for increased compensation to victims of fires set by railway operations in order to reflect current replacement costs on items lost through property damage.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, this is Private Members' Hour and we are all here as private members. I would like to put on the record that the only member of the Transport Committee who is in the House right now did not object to the amendment, which means it was agreed to unanimously.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall I call it six o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Since you have called it six o'clock and we have people listed for the adjournment debate, which we call the late show, who are not in the House at this time, could the House just suspend its sitting so that Members who are on the list can proceed?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The first two members, namely, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) and the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell), are here and I am sure the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) will get here.

Mr. Gauthier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are the Parliamentary Secretaries here?

Mr. Kilgour: I will check that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I just want to use this opportunity, since we do have a moment or two, to comment on what has just transpired in the House. This is Private Members' Hour when members of all political Parties have an opportunity to present Bills or motions before the House for due consideration. I think that we have seen an excellent example of the co-operation that individual members can provide for one another. The motion today was moved by a member from one Party and seconded by a member from another and much of the leadership came from the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Kilgour) who indicated his strong support.

The spirit of parliamentary reform particularly, but also the good will of individual members and the willingness to set aside differences at times to work together have been demonstrated conclusively this afternoon, and I think this ought to be commented on.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

CANADA POST CORPORATION—RURAL MAIL SERVICE—WEEKLY NEWSPAPER POSTAL RATES

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, on December 9 last I asked the Minister responsible for Canada Post the following question:

> Has the section of the corporate plan dealing with the disruption of rural mail service and the section dealing with an increase in the rate of delivery of weekly newspapers been killed? Or have they just been given a sleeping pill so that they will later on be able to raise their ugly and cruel heads again?

The Hon. Minister of Regional, Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté) replied:

> I think this matter has indeed been a concern of the Government. Canada Post submitted a plan. Once again it was referred to a committee for study. This Committee studied the matter very extensively. We are waiting for its recommendations, and will respond once we are apprised of them.

My question dealt with two items. First was the matter of rural mail service. The rural people of Canada have never been treated fairly by the Post Office, not when it was a government Department and not since it became a Crown corporation. Rural people pay the most and get the least service. For instance, mail delivery to city homes costs the city home owner nothing. On the other hand, thousands of residents in some cities, towns, villages and hamlets must walk, drive their car, or take a taxi to the nearest post office. Similarly, thousands of farmers and rural residents who do not live on a rural mail route must drive at their own expense to the nearest post office. In both cases they must stand in line at the general delivery wicket or pay for a box. In other words, those who pay the most get the least service.

The corporate plan, if carried out, is even worse as many small post offices will be closed, making it necessary for rural people to drive further and further for postal service. Many of those people are senior citizens. Some are handicapped and unable to drive and will consequently have to depend on others to bring their mail to them. Furthermore, it appears that Canada Post is now planning to close a post office in a town or village x-miles from another post office in another town or village. That is simply not acceptable. When a town or village is incorporated it has its own town council, business facilities and, up until now, its own post office. It is not satisfactory to close one and send these people x-miles into the next town or village.

I understand that in committee the president of Canada Post rationalized the loss of postal services in rural communities by saying that residents in rural centres would be given 90 days notice. Big deal! They do not want notice, they want to keep their post office. I understand that rural routes will continue, but that does not help those who have already been closed. The early ones that were closed should be reopened so that all rural people will be treated fairly.

Canada Post is also trying to reduce its deficit by firing rural people when our rural post offices are already the least staffed. I believe the heads of Canada Post, who are forever trying to or are in fact closing rural post offices, have no idea of the many functions of the staff in our rural post offices. If they think a super mailbox can take the place of a local postmaster or his or her assistant, they are miles away from reality. A super mailbox cannot answer questions or advise the people about rates, schedules or the hundreds of other queries which have to be answered. I am telling Canada Post, deficit or no deficit, that rural Canada wants its post offices and staff retained.

The deficit does not exist because of the operation of rural post offices. It is there because of costs incurred in our large cities and in the size of salaries of top officials whose wages are completely out of proportion to their productivity. Their effort to close our rural oost office is simply a smoke-screen which is not fooling the people and certainly not the rural people of this country. Will putting these people on welfare or UIC reduce the deficit?

I want to say on behalf of the rural people in my riding, and I think in all of Canada, that we do not want our rural post offices closed. We want to retain our mail service and see it improved. Are we, through the back door, trying to kill our towns and villages? Small rural towns and villages are desperately competing with large metropolitan areas. For business to remain viable, good communication service is essential and a post office in an incorporated area is a must. Who among you would open a business in a town or village which did not have a post office? No one. If Canada Post and the Government permit this corporate plan to go into effect with regard to privatizing and closing rural post offices it will be a catastrophe. It could well wipe out any Government that permits it to happen. As one of my rural constituents said to me last week, "it would be political suicide".

The second portion of my question dealt with the corporate plan to increase rates for weekly newspapers and religious magazines. I understand that part of the plan has been cancelled. I want it killed for all time so that it will never again raise its ugly and cruel head. Such an increase is another attack on rural Canada. Many of our rural people do not get the dailies from the cities and depend on their weekly for news, services and other things. Weekly newspapers themselves are having a difficult time surviving and to increase their postal rate would put many of them out of business and thus deny the people a newspaper of any kind. Our weeklies and religious papers are a vitally important part of our communities and we want them retained.

Mail service is a government responsibility. Every Canadian citizen has a right to expect his or her mail to be dispatched and delivered promptly. Deliveries today are far from satisfactory. For example, a letter marked "urgent" left the Post Office in the House of Commons on December 29 and was not delivered to Brampton, Ontario, until January 9, nine working days later. I could have pedalled a bicycle there in less time than that. I get a letter from California in five or even four days. It is high time that Canada Post cleaned up its own backyard, things such as overtime, sick leave, taxi service galore, and learned how to get a letter from one part of Canada to another with dispatch. If they have to go to another country to learn how, so be it. The deficit is not the main problem, the delivery of mail is.

Now that increased rates have been approved, emphasis should be placed on delivering mail. Failure to do so up until now has led to the rise of couriers galore as people and businesses must get their mail delivered promptly. The message I send to Canada Post and the federal Government is: We want our rural post offices retained and improved and we want our mail delivered with dispatch.

Rural Canada has spoken!

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, first, I understand and appreciate the emotional concern about rural post service. I think we all do. The Minister has made it very clear that there will be a cessation, an absolute halt, an end, a stopping—what is another word?

Mr. Redway: Fini.

Mr. Forrestall: —tout fini, to any changes in rural postal services. Should there be need in the wisdom of Canada Post to go on with programs, the instructions to Mr. Lander, president of Canada Post, are that he will advise the Minister responsible in the first instance. In the second instance, he will advise the Member of Parliament directly involved. This is to allow the community to decide what their options are and what is best suited for their purposes. Only after that has been accomplished will the Minister permit Canada Post to make any changes whatsoever.

Where it is deemed necessary and advantageous and in the interests of our rural communities, there will be no change. Understand that, no change. What is going on today in rural Canada is wrong. It is misleading. This overwhelming desire to organize is being misconstrued. There are rumours floating around rural Canada about disastrous things that will happen to Canada Post and rural Canada and they are simply not true. The Minister has been unequivocal and very clear. Nothing will happen. I repeat: Nothing will happen until Canada Post advises the Minister and the local member and until the process of consultation with the community is completed. Nothing will happen. Nothing. You are safe, Mr. Speaker!

BANKS AND BANKING—INCREASES IN BANK SERVICE CHARGES

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, on January 20 I asked the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) about a growing problem of the constituents of my riding with regard to bank charges. The question was with regard to the excessive level of increases, the lack of adequate communication and, in some cases, the arbitrary nature of some of the changes. I do not intend to name the banks individually as I do not intend to make a bank-bashing speech today. However, I do want to share with the House a few examples of what I am talking about.

Last April Bert Newman of Alamosa Drive visited my office to talk about a case which had been very frustrating to him. He had done business with this major Canadian chartered bank for over 40 years. He is now retired. He visited that bank downtown and learned that his account had been charged $225 for the rental of three safety deposit boxes. That was a $35 increase from the previous year, an 18.6 per cent increase in one year. He talked to people at that branch and tried to find out who had made the decision and what was the logic of it. He was totally frustrated. One clerk to whom he spoke did some very convoluted mathematics saying that since he had three deposit boxes, one would divide 18.6 per cent by 3 and it would really be an average increase of only 6.2 per cent. That, of course, was nonsense.

He finally did get a letter from a senior public relations officer of that bank. It did not satisfy him, but it at least outlined some of the policies. That was a case of lack of adequate communication. The banks place posters in branches to advise people, but I do not think that is adequate these days.

Another example is that of Mr. Malcolm Wilkinson of Citation Drive in my riding. He wrote:

> The only way you know when they are increased is when you notice it (if you do) on your account or you happen to pick up a folder on the counter. Mind you, there are always folders of some type or another there so there is nothing special to draw your attention to it.
> The bank drafts I mentioned for £10 each now cost $4.50 each. When I bought them a year ago for Christmas they were $2.50.

That is an 80 per cent increase, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Wilkinson goes on to say:

> Another example of non-communication relates to notice of mailed deposits. All my pensions, annuities, dividends and interest cheques are sent to my bank for deposit. In each case I used to receive a copy by mail of the deposit slip made out by the bank depositing it to my account. This was later changed to mailing the slips for "non-routine" deposits (e.g. quarterly dividends, CSB interest, etc.) and not for "routine" deposits, e.g. monthly pension cheques. Still later they were all discontinued as too costly.
> I happen to agree with the reason for stopping, but in neither instance was advice sent.
> The banks are very arbitrary.

As a third example, Mr. Bernie Segal from Clareville Crescent wrote to me and I would like to quote from his letter as well. He said:

> I find that banks are operating in a usurious and high-handed manner.
> The most recent caper: I have a savings account with—which, among other things, entitled me to make any number of free withdrawals. To my surprise, on two successive months I found a total of $8 removed from my account for "service" charges—a service charge for each personal withdrawal. This was not part of our original agreement, nor was I notified of any change in policy. On complaining, I was advised that signs were posted stating this new policy. I certainly did not notice any such signs! This was ultimately corrected. But a "service charge" for personal withdrawal? What service?

He made several other remarks, but in the interest of saving time I will read his summary. He concludes:

> I submit that one of two remedies is required: either that more competition for banks (and trust companies) be allowed (if necessary, that branches of foreign banks be allowed in unlimited numbers in Canada), or more regulation through the Bank Act.

• (1805)

Those are three instances of concerned residents in my riding. As I said, this is not meant to be a debate or an attempt to bank bash. However, there is a problem. Part of it relates to the introduction of cash dispensing machines. People do not visit their branches as often. Another problem is interbranch banking. I have had an account at a bank in downtown Toronto for over 25 years. I have only been there once in the last two years.

I hope that the executives and the bank association will take this issue more seriously. There is a communication problem and there certainly are examples of excessive rates, when one converts the rates into percentages for such things as NSF cheques.

I will continue an investigation into this matter. I applaud the Minister of State for Finance for the new directions on financial institutions that he introduced last December. I hope that when the thrust of that document becomes legislation it will mean healthier competition in the market-place because I believe that is the real answer, rather than intervention in the market-place. We should open up the competition to a greater level so there will not be as many instances of rate changes that take place rather lock-step with the five major banks.

In closing, I intend to respond as fully as possible to these complaints and honest hours of frustration experienced by most of these people.

• (1810)

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I thank quite sincerely the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell). As he is certainly well aware, the Bank Act does not presently govern the level of banking service charges, although a regulation accepted under this Act requires the disclosure of deposit rates and other terms offered by the banks.

Although the full disclosure of charges and other terms of financial services remain important, the Government is of the opinion that it would not be advisable to introduce detailed regulations to govern the level of costs and banking service charges, in view of the rapid changes which are occurring in the financial service industry and the ever increasing diversity of services to which these regulations would apply.

This is particularly true at this time, considering the new policy of the Government which calls for a tremendous expansion of the services which can be offered by all financial institutions, banks included.

Under such dynamic and variable conditions as those, the best solution would be to allow the forces of the market-place to play to ensure that the service charges are maintained at an acceptable level. As a matter of fact, one of the greatest benefits of the policy described in New Directions for the Financial Sector published by the Government, would be to increase the competition in the financial service industry, thereby ensuring that consumers receive the best possible service at the lowest cost. Within the framework of these reforms, the Government will assess the usefulness of the regulations aimed at protecting consumers, including the current regulation under the Bank Act which requires the disclosure of the terms of deposits and other services. Also, the need to take other steps in view of the increasing role automatic tellers are playing in the provision of financial services, and finally the possible extension of this regulation to other types of financial institutions, in view of the great similarity of services offered by these various institutions under the new policy. The adequate and timely disclosure of service charges and other terms and conditions to consumers of financial services is a major protection measure which not only serves the interest of consumers but contributes also to a greater efficiency and competitiveness within the Canadian financial system.

HOUSING—CO-OPERATIVE HOUSING—1986 STATISTICS—ENQUIRY WHETHER PROGRAM WILL BE AMENDED

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, all is not sweetness and light with the federal Government's co-operative housing programme. The Minister admitted as much in his answer to the question I put to him in December. The House will recall that at the time, I raised the problem of participation by low-income families. Only families with an income of less than $18,000 are eligible for the rent supplement that would give them access to co-operative housing programmes. The rent supplement is a subsidy to ensure that a family does not pay more than 25 per cent of its income on accommodation. However, Mr. Speaker, families whose incomes exceed $18,000—not a spectacular amount, you will agree, since it is the minimum wage—are not eligible for the Conservative Government's rent supplement.

This means that families with incomes between $18,000 and $24,000, the traditional clientele of co-operative housing, are excluded from the programme and cannot even consider the co-operative formula because they would be obliged to pay about 35 or 45 per cent of their gross income on housing costs, which means their remaining income would be totally inadequate to cover the family's other needs.

Mr. Speaker, on December 9 and 10 of last year, press conferences were held in 12 Canadian cities across this country under the auspices of the Cooperative Housing Foundation of Canada. I want to stress the demands made by FECHIM, the Fédération des coopératives d'habitation de l'Île de Montréal, with particular emphasis on the aspect I referred to earlier. These housing co-operatives are asking for additional assistance or a rent supplement for low-income families which would have to spend more than 25 per cent of their income on rent.

I have received about 20 letters from housing co-operative residents in my riding. I think the Parliamentary Secretary has received some as well. Mr. Speaker, the Minister must take action. He cannot ignore this problem, and I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will have some news for us in his speech.

[English]

I would also like to raise another problem relating to co-operative housing, that is the problem of the Cloverdale housing project in the riding of Dollard, which is the riding of the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner). This project has had a very sad history. It is made up largely of residents who are senior citizens, single mothers and welfare recipients. The project previously belonged to a non-profit organization but the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation cancelled its subsidy on New Year's Eve 1986 because the non-profit organization had not submitted reports en bonne et due forme. The project was sold to a private developer on New Year's Eve. Because it is now owned by a developer, the rent subsidies that the residents of the co-operative received for many years are at risk of being eliminated. Furthermore, the sale prevents the residents from turning the project into a co-operative.

The members of Cloverdale Park have called for a public inquiry into the dealings between the former owner of the project and CMHC. They have called for expropriation and transfer of ownership of the project to a co-operative. They have asked that the subsidies that will be saved by the Government of Canada be set aside for new housing co-operatives in the neighbourhood.

I fully support the demands of the residents of the Cloverdale project. I say that a public inquiry is the only method by which the many questions that have arisen out of a project to which many residents have devoted time, sweat and efforts for many years to try to gain some modicum of control over their housing situation will be answered. I believe that their efforts should be supported by the Government which should respond to the request of the residents for a public inquiry and to facilitate by every means possible the efforts of the residents of this project to establish a housing co-operative.

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister Responsible for Multiculturalism): Mr. Speaker, I am also anxious to answer the Hon. Member's question, and I welcome this opportunity to do so, because this has also been a concern in my own riding, since the new system we have now is fairly complex and rather difficult to understand.

Mr. Speaker, I may point out that it is clear from the Hon. Member's remarks he has a poor understanding of the co-operative housing program, which is not really surprising because it is a pretty complex one, and I am delighted with this opportunity to describe the main points of the program and thus provide some clarification of the situation. Unfortunately, since we are not given as much time as the Opposition, I may not be able to answer all these questions, but perhaps I could provide some details on the Cloverdale project.

Hon. Members will probably recall the thorough scrutiny of Canada's housing policy that was initiated in 1985. This was done with the co-operation of all levels of Government, the housing industry and various interest groups including the Co-operative Housing Foundation of Canada. Subsequently, the Government revised all social housing programs in order to channel financial resources to those who are most in need. That was not the case before 1985. We are now helping far more needy families than was the case under previous programs. At the same time, with the advice and guidance of the Co-operative Housing Foundation of Canada, we have restructured the co-operative housing program. This program provides housing security for low-income families. In each housing project, an average of 30 per cent of the total number of units is set aside for families that would otherwise have to spend more than 30 per cent of their income on accommodation.

At its request, we worked together with the Foundation on setting up this new financial instrument. The Foundation made a number of financial assumptions regarding the expected yield on these mortgages, and the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation used these assumptions in preparing its budget for 1986. Unfortunately, the real yield was an average 5 1/4 per cent instead of 4 per cent as had been hoped. Furthermore, capital investment costs rose in some parts of the country. As a result, fewer units were built than would have been the case had the Foundation's assumptions been confirmed.

Mr. Speaker, the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation has not cut its budgets and does not intend to do so. The Corporation continues to support the concept of indexed mortgages as well as the Foundation's efforts to obtain recognition for this concept.

The federal Government is continuing to help low-income families through the co-operative housing program.

[English]

I wish to say a few words on the Cloverdale project which my hon. colleague seems to be very shocked about, and I would too. I am surprised that everybody who has a problem always gives the project or his complaint to the Opposition. He has a very good MP in the Hon. Member for Dollard (Mr. Weiner).

Mr. Berger: He was invited to the meeting, and he did not show up.

Mr. Della Noce: These people are not helping themselves, because they should give it to their MP. If the MP is not satisfied, then please go and see the Opposition.

IMPORTANCE OF AVOIDING CERTAIN PRACTICES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montréal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, in an article written today in Le Devoir and signed by Michel Vastel, we read this statement:

According to experts involved in the Bissonnette and Stevens affairs, the Tories have turned patronage into a system.

Mr. Speaker, every Canadian man and woman who will be reading that article today, and I invite them to do so, will discover not just this rampant patronage situation but also the degree of corruption in which the government is wallowing.

Mr. Speaker, with respect to comments made by business leaders and businessmen to reporter Michel Vastel of Le Devoir, I can confirm that in my riding I have business leaders who have told me just as much.

Mr. Speaker, there are honest Members. I invite all Conservative, Liberal and New Democrat MPs to urge the Prime Minister of Canada to put a stop to that dishonest and hateful practice here on Parliament Hill, in Ottawa.

IMPORTANCE OF CO-OPERATION BETWEEN PRIVATE SECTOR AND DIFFERENT LEVELS OF GOVERNMENT

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, this weekend, the 1987 world speed-skating championships for men and women will be held in my riding at the Gaétan Boucher rink in Sainte-Foy.

Yesterday, I was able to meet with athletes from the seventeen countries represented at the championships. I also met the famous Gaétan Boucher from Sainte-Foy.

This event will be televised worldwide and give millions of people a look at Quebec and Canada. This should have a major impact on tourism.

In conclusion, I also wish to mention the important contribution of the private sector towards financing these championships. Here we see once again the vital co-operation between the private sector and the various levels of government which makes such events a success.

I also wish all the athletes good luck and a pleasant stay here in Canada.

ABORTION

ACCESS TO SERVICES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women has advised the Government that access to abortion services in Canada has deteriorated to the point of crisis.

The lack of abortion services in Canada is becoming one of the major issues affecting women's lives. In 1984, of the 244 hospitals with therapeutic abortion committees, 18 per cent did not perform abortions while another 24 per cent performed very few.

Women of Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland have no access to abortion services in their provinces. In Alberta women must travel long distances and pay large sums of money in order to obtain a service to which they are entitled under our law. The burden falls most heavily on rural and low-income women.

In British Columbia the situation has become highly charged because of a Premier who is intent on imposing his personal views against abortion on British Columbia women, despite our present law.

I urge the Government to heed the three advisory council recommendations: that abortion is a medical procedure that need not be performed in a hospital; that federal and provincial Ministers of Health should approve publicly funded, free standing, reproductive health clinics; and that abortion be removed from the Criminal Code.

MINES AND MINING

INDUSTRY'S CONTRIBUTION TO COUNTRY'S ECONOMY

Hon. Bob Layton (Lachine): Mr. Speaker, our resource industries in Canada have been under fire and pressure for several years. It is often stated that they cannot be depended on for our economic development in the future. However, Canada leads the world in the production of many minerals and the technology to mine them safely.

Mining and processing contributed over $15 billion to our GNP, nearly 80 per cent in foreign exchange last year, and all this in spite of extreme international competition and uncertainties in the markets.

The Mining Association of Canada, representing over 70 companies and 110,000 workers, expressed optimism in its annual review recently published.

Canada will retain its position among the world's largest and lowest cost producers. Growth will be fuelled by new discoveries and new mine developments. We will continue to enjoy the reputation as a stable source of supply, which our foreign markets demand.

The Mining Association of Canada is encouraging better co-ordination and more co-operation among educational institutions, governments, and industry to reach this goal. Such efforts will brighten the future of our mineral industry, of the people who work in it, and all Canadians. Our Government is committed to sharing in this effort.

HEALTH

AIDS DISEASE—SUPPORT URGED FOR EDUCATIONAL PROGRAMS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, AIDS is the most serious health problem facing the country, and the two-pronged approach to eliminating it must include education as well as research. That is why I was so shocked earlier this week when the Premier of British Columbia stated that he felt the best approach was abstinence, and proceeded to suggest that contraceptive education be taken out of the school system.

To his voice was added the voice of the Member for London East (Mr. Jepson) who suggested that the Ontario Government, in embarking upon a public education program in the schools to prevent this life-threatening disease, was in fact contributing to deviant behaviour.

The Government is sending out mixed messages because this week a public education program on AIDS was announced. That program will only spend $600,000 this year and $800,000 next year, at a time when the United Kingdom is spending up to $50 million for education about AIDS.

I ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) to clarify that his position and that of his Government is not the position taken by the Member for London East who naively suggests that the Government of Ontario is guilty of contributing to deviant behaviour by asking for public education in the schools to prevent AIDS.

SOVEREIGNTY

PROTECTION BY PROPOSED POLAR CLASS 8 ICE-BREAKER

Mr. Terry Clifford (London—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, since the trespassing of our waters in August, 1985, by the American Polar Sea, our Government has acted to reclaim our sovereignty.

From the announcement on September 10, 1985, to build a Canadian Arctic class 8 ice-breaker, our Government has acted to provide this sovereignty platform in the Arctic.

Canadians should know that this escort type multi-mission vessel is no ordinary ship. The design specifications are beyond the Beaufort type design and will ensure its ability to go where no ship has gone before. It will carry out scientific studies, escort missions, emergency and logistical support to our remote communities, and provide surveillance of Arctic shipping.

Clearly this initiative will lead to new Canadian shipbuilding technology and new shipping patterns, and this leadership can only enhance our position with our Arctic neighbours.

The Americans have not abandoned the Arctic. Last fall their Congress approved funds for additional ice-breakers. However, we are not standing by. Our ship, the most powerful ice-breaker in the world, will stand for Canada in the Arctic.

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

PHARMACEUTICAL MANUFACTURERS ASSOCIATION—EMPLOYMENT OF FORMER LIBERAL CABINET MINISTER

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the appointment of Judy Erola, the former Liberal Cabinet Minister responsible for setting up the Eastman Commission on Drug Patent Law, as president of the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada, is significant new evidence that the Liberal Party and Liberal caucus are only half-hearted in their opposition to the Tory drug patent changes, acting in response to New Democratic Party leadership on this issue rather than out of any real conviction.

When a prominent and currently active Liberal like Judy Erola signs up to speak for the very people who oppose the position her Party is taking in the House of Commons, it does not take a genius to figure out that the Liberal stance on this issue is mostly pretence rather than substance. But then it was the Liberals who first contemplated making generic drugs more difficult to get, was it not?

Perhaps the substantial financial contributions made by the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association to both the federal Conservative Party and the federal Liberal Party explain not only the Tory position but the luke-warm opposition of the Liberals as well.

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Bank of Canada announced another drop in the bank rate which is now below 7.5 per cent, the lowest it has been since 1973. A drop in the bank rate means that Canada is doing well. And that, because our Government has cut its borrowing needs, reduced pressure on the money markets and increased the confidence of business people and Canadians through its growing control over the deficit.

If we did not have to service and reimburse our national debt of $240 billion which the Liberals spent with the approval of the socialists, our bank rate would be even lower. Canadians would be paying even less for family mortgages, rent and car loans, and business people would be able to borrow money at even lower rates to set up new businesses. Every time the bank rate goes down, it is because Canadians understand our message for prosperity. Every time the bank rate goes down, it costs Canadians less for credit card payments, cars and homes.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

CLOVERDALE PARK HOUSING PROJECT—SALE TO PRIVATE DEVELOPER

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, the residents of Cloverdale Park on the West Island of Montreal, in the riding of the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner), should not have to pay for the mistakes of the Government. On Monday the Minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation will be visiting Cloverdale Park. Some 2,000 residents feel abandoned by the Government because it cancelled an annual subsidy of over $900,000, which allowed the sale of Cloverdale Park to a private developer.

Senior citizens, single mothers, and welfare recipients fear they will be forced to leave their homes because of massive rent increases. I call on the Minister to accept in full the demands of the residents; first, to maintain subsidies for low-income families; second, to guarantee that rent increases will not exceed inflation and, third, to set aside moneys saved from the cancelled subsidy to help these residents form a housing co-operative.

In addition, the residents have called for a full public inquiry and I think that this is the only way to answer many disturbing questions raised by this sale.

CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENTS OF 1972 AND 1982

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, I want to comment on the so-called Liberal fact-finding mission visiting Atlantic Canada. The Liberals are trying to find the facts governing Canada's international fishing obligations to France. Well, it is too late. They were in government in 1972 and 1982 when their Government made deals with France. That was the time to determine the facts. It is the effect of the deals which granted France unlimited access to Canadian fish stocks that the present Government is trying to avoid. The lobster is out of the trap and the Liberals are left behind. Yesterday, this inquiry of theirs consisted of a one-man comedy act with the performer being the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) grandstanding.

If the Liberals were interested in this issue they would have stayed until the conclusion of the emergency debate earlier this week.

The present Government of Canada wants the boundary issue resolved by an international tribunal, and it wants to curtail France's fishing efforts. Nothing—absolutely nothing—has been given away. In fact, in 1987 France's fishing rights will be half of its 1986 rights, a position supported by writers today in The Gazette of Montreal and The Globe and Mail.

DENIAL OF SECOND-CLASS MAILING PRIVILEGES TO CERTAIN PUBLICATIONS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, Beef in British Columbia is a Canadian publication issued by the B.C. Cattlemen's Association dealing exclusively with issues relating to the cattle-ranching industry. The Association has applied and re-applied for second-class mailing status to the federal Government's postal corporation but to no avail. The Association has been turned down time and time again.

We now learn that foreign publications, specifically soft-porn girlie magazines such as Penthouse, Hustler and Playboy receive preferred second-class mail classification status.

The Government's postal corporation discriminates against professional publications such as this, and also against religious publications such as the Presbyterian Record and The United Church Observer, yet gives preferential status to girlie magazines. On this issue the Cabinet should intervene and ensure that, if not a better postal rate, then publications such as Beef in British Columbia should receive at least the same rate as Playboy.

TARIFFS

CALL FOR REMOVAL OF TARIFF ON UNITED STATES CHRISTMAS TREES

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, as you know, Christmas tree growers from Quebec, Ontario, and the maritime provinces recently gathered on Parliament Hill to protest the imposition of a 30 per cent tariff on imports of U.S. Christmas trees into Canada. The growers fear that if this tariff is not removed the U.S. will retaliate, causing economic hardship to thousands of Canadians involved in Canada's $90 million Christmas tree export industry.

After their demonstration they met with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), but I am told that the Minister did not understand and that the Government will not remove this counter-productive tariff.

This ill-conceived tariff should be eliminated immediately. The Government is sacrificing an important Canadian industry and important Canadian jobs. This approach is counter-productive and extremely unfair to Canada's Christmas tree growers.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

OERLIKON AFFAIR—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ESTABLISH PUBLIC JUDICIAL INQUIRY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I will begin by asking whether the Government has resigned, considering that only eight or nine of 40 Ministers are in attendance for the Oral Question Period.

Mr. Beatty: Where is John Turner?

Mr. Kaplan: He is not in the Government, you are.

My question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Official Opposition request for a public judicial inquiry into the Oerlikon affair has rallied strong support from a huge number of editorial writers throughout the country, and serious-minded journalists have reported statements by businessmen who are quite familiar with the Government's toll-gating pay-off scheme. A criminal investigation into the conduct of a Minister and his cronies does not extend to major pay-off issues, so I would ask the Deputy Prime Minister: Does he not realize that the RCMP probe is too restricted and, now that the scheme is headlined in all newspapers, is he not prepared to give us that public inquiry?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, earlier this week the Hon. Member had to withdraw and retract some allegations that he made in this House. Here again he is trying to suggest other forms of innuendo and smear.

However, to get to the base of his question, that has been answered on many occasions. The senior law officers of the Crown have indicated in their best wisdom that it would be inappropriate to run a parallel judicial inquiry while an RCMP investigation is being undertaken. Legal experts across the country are of the same opinion. Even one year ago the Hon. Member himself and his Leader were opposed to the commissioning of a commission of inquiry to investigate these sorts of matters. At that time they were recommending a parliamentary committee.

So, given that assortment of support for the route that the Government has taken, we believe that the Government has chosen the right course of action.

REQUEST THAT RCMP INQUIRY BE ENLARGED

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Against our views, and the views of all the editorialists and journalists, if the Government is determined to limit the inquiry of the RCMP investigation I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister this. The inquiry announced by the Prime Minister in the press release on January 18 refers only to a complete investigation into the property transactions in the St-Jean-sur-Richelieu area linked to the Oerlikon plant. Will the Minister enlarge the inquiry to look at all of the questions relating to the allocation of the Oerlikon contract, including the fact that there are three friends of the Government working in that Oerlikon contract, and to all the circumstances that have been revealed in the House over the last two weeks?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): I find it incredible that the Hon. Member does not read his own mail. The Commissioner of the RCMP, in response to a letter that the Hon. Member directed to the Commissioner, replied, and I quote in part:

—confirm to you that my instructions to our investigators are that they are to examine all aspects, direct and peripheral, of that transaction, to determine if there are violations of the law that should be placed before a court for consideration.

It further states:

—should we come across activity that might be considered unpropitious to good government, even though short of provable criminal conduct, on the part of senior officials, elected or otherwise, it is our responsibility to make our concerns known—in the usual manner.

AWARDING OF CONTRACT TO OERLIKON

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): That letter made it clear that the Commissioner's primary objective was to investigate land transactions.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kaplan: If that is the opinion of the caucus, can I ask the Deputy Prime Minister if it is his understanding that the RCMP is now authorized to examine aspects of the Oerlikon contract that have been the subject of questioning and criticism in the House?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): I wonder if the Hon. Member is aware of the interview given by his colleague, the Hon. Member for Sudbury, who is the defence critic of the Official Opposition, on Question Period on CTV last Sunday where he was asked the question: "Do you have any reason to believe, apart from the land scam itself, that there was anything questionable about the tendering process for the defence contract?" The response was: "No, I do not, Alan. I do know that there have been stories that the competitors also felt that it was a fair process in terms of how the bids came about."

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMISSION OF INQUIRY INTO OERLIKON AFFAIR

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister and it too relates to the Conservative Government code of ethics.

According to a January 1985 Globe and Mail report an advertising contract had been awarded to Mr. Roger Nantel, a friend of the Prime Minister, on condition that some of the profits be paid into Progressive Conservative Party coffers. In his May 24, 1986 article Mr. Pierre O'Neil referred to the existence of a 5 per cent kick-back scheme, and again today we see a similar article in Le Devoir. Will the Government now set up a commission of inquiry into the whole Oerlikon affair? If not I would ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the Government has to hide in this affair.

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): The Government has absolutely nothing to hide. I wish to say to the Hon. Member that my understanding is that Mr. Nantel was quoted as saying if he was good enough to work for a Liberal Government, he surely should be good enough to work for a Conservative Government.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, there is nothing funny about public sector ethics.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

HIRING OF PROJECT MANAGER

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): My supplementary question to the Deputy Prime Minister is again concerning the ethics of the Government.

Can the Deputy Prime Minister explain to the House why it is that Mr. Dugald Buchanan, an engineer with the Urban Transit Development Corporation, was dumped after being hired as a project manager for Oerlikon in favour of Peter Ohrt, a friend of the Prime Minister? Is there not something wrong when qualified people lose their jobs to unqualified friends of the Prime Minister? Does this not prove that there is something wrong with this whole sordid affair, and that we need a public inquiry, and we need it now?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): The only thing that is untoward about this whole mess is the reckless way in which Hon. Members cast innuendo—

Mr. Boudria: I have the letter in my hand.

Mr. Mazankowski: —innuendo, smear, and suspicion, and there is certainly nothing funny about that.

FORESTRY

ACID RAIN'S EFFECT ON GROWTH—REQUEST THAT CANADA-UNITED STATES LUMBER NEGOTIATIONS BE REOPENED

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns reports today of a study done by the Canadian Forestry Service which shows that the growth in the Canadian coniferous forests has been reduced by one-third as a result of acid rain. The Deputy Prime Minister knows that we have just gone through a major negotiation with the United States in respect of our softwood lumber industry. Would the Government be prepared to try to re-open that negotiation on the basis of the new evidence that not only is the United States doing damage to our lumber industry with respect to trade barriers, et cetera, but it is also doing damage to our industry with respect to its continuing inaction on the problem of acid rain? I am wondering whether on that basis the Government is considering re-opening negotiations with the United States on softwood lumber.

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. The report referred to in The Globe and Mail this morning is a preliminary release which was made public last March. It points out that there have been some problems in growth in the forests. However, when we look into it, it could be from many other causes. It could be due to spruce budworm. It could be due to climatic problems. When the study is completed, I think we will find that we will be better able to assess the matter.

Mr. Blaikie: I hope the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary is not doing a Ronald Reagan on us and trying to tell us that these trees are not growing because the climate is cold in Canada, or something like that.

FORTHCOMING CANADA-UNITED STATES SUMMIT MEETING

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct my matter to the Deputy Prime Minister because it is a major bilateral question between Canada and the United States. It is something for which the Government should answer, with all due respect, and not a Parliamentary Secretary.

Does the Government not realize that the acid rain question is also a dimension of the debate about softwood lumber and a very important aspect in Canada-U.S. relations? Does the Government not realize that Canada cannot afford to fail in getting the United States to act on acid rain? What does the Government intend to do, either in respect of softwood lumber, or in respect of the larger question of what the Government of Canada will be asking of the United States of America when the summit comes up in April?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, of course the Government considers the matter of acid rain very seriously. That was the subject of discussions with the Vice-President of the United States last week. Acid rain is and continues to be a high priority. We have expressed our disappointment with the United States in terms of the speed with which it is addressing the problem. I think the message has been heard loud and clear and will continue to be a subject of bilateral discussions, including the discussions between the Prime Minister and the President of the United States when they meet in April.

TRADE NEGOTIATIONS INQUIRY

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Deputy Prime Minister would answer the question about softwood lumber and whether the Government of Canada will make an attempt to connect these two issues in its discussions with the United States. Surely it is very hard to talk about the health of the economy of any particular sector without talking about the environmental basis on which that particular sector exists. Acid rain very much affects forestry in that respect. Will the Government be seeking to re-open negotiations in respect of softwood lumber on the basis of acid rain, either immediately or when President Reagan visits Canada in April?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, of course trade will be among the top priorities as well in the discussions which will be going on and in the ongoing bilateral discussions respecting our desire to achieve a comprehensive trade arrangement with the United States. We are very pleased with the fact that we have registered the importance of this achievement in the minds of the United States, particularly in the minds of legislators, including the President.

I sense that what the Hon. Member is suggesting is that he is now seeing some value in these talks. Throughout the course of these discussions I think that sort of linkage could in fact be made. However, it is certainly part and parcel of the very important ongoing bilateral discussions. Certainly one of those aspects is the desire for Canada and the United States to achieve a comprehensive trade arrangement which would be good for Canadians, good for jobs, and good for the economy.

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday he said that Newfoundlanders were angry because of a little mix-up in telephone calls. The Deputy Prime Minister should know that Newfoundlanders are angry because of this bad deal between Canada and France. Does the Deputy Prime Minister realize that an apology is no excuse for this bad deal?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Members opposite were pressing me for an apology and I indicated that I did apologize. I would also like to say that I have had discussions with the Premier of the Province of Newfoundland, Premier Peckford. Officials and the Minister of Transport are in Newfoundland today in St. John's, if the snowstorm did not prevent them from landing there, to discuss this and other related matters with regard to the desire to resolve a dispute which has existed for many, many years. While the opposition has been very critical of the process we have established, Opposition Members have certainly not come up with any alternatives, other than the suggestion coming from the New Democratic Party that we should go to war.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT CANCEL AGREEMENT

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport has said that this deal is not good enough. The Premier of Newfoundland does not agree with this deal. The fishermen of Newfoundland, whose livelihoods are affected by this deal, say it is not good enough. Will the Deputy Prime Minister have the Government tear up this bad diplomatic deal and replace it with an agreement that will be accepted domestically by Newfoundlanders and Atlantic Canadians?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the course of action that was taken and the proposal offered was made with the best intentions and in the best interests of Newfoundland, the Atlantic provinces and, indeed, all of Canada. Our desire is to try to achieve an arrangement and a settlement that will be in the interests of all Atlantic Canadians and all Canadians.

ATTENDANCE AT FINAL NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister just indicated that, indeed, at the urging of the Minister of Transport he did apologize yesterday to the Premier of Newfoundland. During his response he indicated that there had been an inadvertent breakdown in communications. Yesterday morning, the Minister of Fisheries on a television program indicated that the decision to exclude the Government of Newfoundland, the fishermen, and the fishing industry from the final negotiations was as a result of France demanding it. What is the answer to this question? Did France demand the exclusion, or was there a breakdown in communications at the official level?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member would check the transcript I think he would find that the word demand was not used on that program to which he refers. In fact, when officials of two Governments decide to get together to sit down and sign or initial an agreement on the basis of many negotiations and discussions which have preceded that occasion, if one party or the other requests that only certain persons be present, from a diplomatic perspective I think it is only appropriate that the other party comply. At the same time perhaps Hon. Members could recognize that this agreement is merely an agreement to negotiate two parallel agreements by the end of 1987, both of which will bring substantial benefit to the fishermen and the people of Atlantic Canada.

POSITION OF FRENCH GOVERNMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries. Reports from his Atlantic Canada Regional Advisory Council have indicated that the Government of France, in a sense, demanded that the Government of Newfoundland, the fishing industry, and the fishermen involved be excluded from any final negotiations and that the agreement simply be made between the Government of Canada and the Government of France. Was it France's request that these major players, the people on the receiving end of this decision in a negative way, be excluded, and the Government of Canada agreed to that?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I have no evidence nor am I responsible for the diplomatic relations between our two countries to the effect that any demands, to use that term, were made by France in this matter.

FUTURE OF RURAL POST OFFICES

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Minister in charge of Canada Post said it in this House yesterday:

> The Canada Post Corporation has advised me that it has no intention of closing any rural post offices in Canada.

Any reasonable person would assume from that statement that there will be no closings of any post office buildings nor any reduction in the numbers of postmasters and postmistresses in Canada. If Canada Post told the Minister that yesterday, could the Minister answering for Canada Post today tell us why Canada Post Corporation is telling everyone else today that it intends to go ahead with the closure of 3,500 post offices and intends to pass them over to local businessmen to operate as franchises? Was the Minister playing post office with rural Canadians yesterday? If he was, he will get no kisses for that type of deception.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I think the statement made in the House yesterday by the Minister responsible for Canada Post stands on its own. There will not be wholesale closings or changes made in rural structures or closings of rural post offices. What the Minister has put in place over a 10-year period is a system of consulation which will require Canada Post Corporation to advise the Minister of any plans, and to advise the local Member of Parliament so that consultations with respect to options that are available can be considered.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, with answers like that, he is sure to make the Cabinet.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

STANDARD OF SERVICE

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Let me ask the Parliamentary Secretary in all seriousness another question. Can the Member or any Member in this House imagine being on welfare, on Canada Pension disability, or as a veteran having to walk into a local businessman's shop to ask for his Government cheque over the counter when at certain times of the year he perhaps owes half of that cheque to the local businessman—and that is only part of the story? Does the Parliamentary Secretary believe that a part-time businessman can offer the type of dependable and dedicated service that is given by our post masters and postmistresses?

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I think I can only repeat what I said a moment or so ago. There will be no wholesale or rampant rush to achieve what the Hon. Member is so afraid of. Let me reassure the Hon. Member that that is not going to happen.

OERLIKON LAND TRANSACTION—RCMP INQUIRY

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister. Can he confirm the information that we received from court officials in St. Jean-sur-Richelieu yesterday, namely, that as of yesterday afternoon no such warrants have been executed in the Saint Jean area in connection with the RCMP's investigation of the Oerlikon affair? Will the Minister explain why after two weeks the RCMP does not seem to have taken the basic step in a police investigation? Is this delay what the Prime Minister meant when he said on January 19 that the RCMP investigation would be carried out "immediately and urgently"?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether the Hon. Member is inviting me to interfere with the RCMP investigation or not. I cannot confirm or deny that particular statement. That is a matter strictly within the hands of the RCMP, and the Hon. Member should know that.

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF TWO-WEEK DELAY

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question to the Deputy Prime Minister stems from the fact that a two-week delay is ample time for people to destroy documents which could jeopardize their reputation. Since it is unthinkable that the RCMP should wait two weeks before starting its investigation, if it is planning to act with the swiftness promised by the Prime Minister, does this delay exist because the RCMP is reluctant to get involved in a primarily political matter, or is it because the Government has given explicit instructions to slow down the investigation?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member has some complaint about the way in which the RCMP is discharging its duties and responsibilities, let him make the complaint directly to the RCMP.

Mr. Cassidy: I am making it to you.

FISHERIES

RIGHTS OF FRANCE IN CANADIAN WATERS

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Much has been misreported about the nature of France's fishing rights in Atlantic Canadian waters. Can the Minister tell the House the legal basis for France's fishing effort, and when those rights accrued?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question is that the legal rights for France's fishing effort in Canadian waters flow from history—A treaty which a previous Liberal Government signed with France in 1972; a long-term agreement entered into by a previous Liberal Government with the European Community, including France, in 1982, and an exchange of diplomatic notes entered into by the previous Liberal Government which turned a blind eye to blatant French overfishing in the disputed zone south of St. Pierre and Miquelon.

In 1987 French cod quotas in Canadian waters are to be reduced to half of what they were last year, making a total reduction of 14,000 tonnes, because this Government refuses to continue those kinds of special arrangements which Liberal Governments propagated over the years.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO PRESIDENT OF NATIONAL SEA PRODUCTS

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, the president of National Sea Products has indicated that this arrangement is somehow of special benefit to the Province of Quebec and was designed to garner votes for this Government in that province. Can the Minister outline to the House his opinion of this allegation?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I think that type of allegation is scurrilous and regrettable, and that the president of National Sea Products should pay attention to operating his company.

I repeat the commitment I made in this House during the debate on Wednesday evening on the matter of what the price should be to resolve, once and for all, this important boundary dispute. As reported at page 2811 of Hansard, I said the following:

> Our commitment to the people of Newfoundland and Labrador is that any price which is too high for Newfoundland and Labrador is too high for Canada.

It is high time that all these armchair experts came up with alternative recommendations as Mr. Jeffrey Simpson has suggested this morning, rather than carping and criticizing.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

STATUS OF FRENCH LANGUAGE—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTERVENE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): In the absence of the Solicitor General, Mr. Speaker, I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. The media have reported this morning that "there is a running battle between Anglophones and Francophones in the RCMP". On several occasions I have warned this Government that the RCMP was sitting on a powder keg in the area of official languages.

In a recent letter to Commissioner Simmonds, the Commander in chief of the RCMP in Quebec wrote: "The feeling expressed is one of rejection of the Francophones on the part of the Anglophone majority." A little further, he wrote: "Francophones' participation in the RCMP is marginal."

Instead of allowing this situation to deteriorate, what is the Government going to do today to rectify it?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, this is a matter that falls under the responsibility of the President of the Treasury Board. He is not in the House today. I would be pleased to take the Hon. Member's question as notice and bring it to the attention of the Minister early next week.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT COMMITMENT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, it is not the first time. We have brought this situation to the Government's attention for at least the past four or five months. We have insisted that this is a dangerous situation. Committee members from the Government side even have emphasized that an explosive situation exists within the RCMP. Highly serious comments have been made about this by Hon. Members from both sides of the House. What is the Government going to do today? Will it give the House the assurance that it will put an end to these utterly unacceptable situations which exist within the RCMP?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I understand very clearly the concern the Hon. Member has expressed. He knows very well that the President of the Treasury Board is very concerned about this matter and is very much seized with the issue. He is working on a response to it, and I am sure that when he is back in the House next week he will be able to make some comments in response to the concerns the Hon. Member just raised.

CHARTERED BANKS' INTEREST RATES—SPREAD BETWEEN BANK AND PRIME RATE

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday's welcome drop in the bank rate has meant that as of this morning—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stackhouse: To that good side there is also a flip side. The spread between the bank rate and the prime rate is one-quarter of a percentage point wider now than it was a few days ago, and more than two and a half times wider than it was a year ago. The implications of this are obvious and serious. In view of all this, what moral suasion or other action is open to the Government to induce the banks to narrow the spread between these two rates in order to bring greater benefits to Canadians?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member has observed, the bank rate is at the lowest level it has been in 13 years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): That will obviously lead to more housing starts and more job creation and it is clearly the result of the economic policies that this Government has followed and will continue to follow, to ensure that this record is continued.

The Hon. Member has pointed out that the spread between the prime rate and the bank rate has widened. I should point out that today's rate is about average or perhaps a little higher than average, but the spread has been between one-quarter of 1 per cent and a little over 2.5 per cent in the course of the past little while. We are watching this and hope that competitive pressures in the market-place will respond by narrowing that spread. It is something on which we are keeping an eye, and I very much appreciate the Hon. Member raising the question.

VIA RAIL

NEED FOR NEW PASSENGER CARS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, my question for the Minister of Finance is meant to be helpful to the Minister of Transport, VIA Rail, and all of Canada. Every year for nine years now, announcements from six or seven successive Ministers of Transport have been made about the ordering of new passenger rail cars. I have been advised repeatedly that the road-block is the Department of Finance and the Treasury Board. Will the Minister of Finance see to it that funds are appropriated immediately on a staged basis for the immediate ordering and purchasing of at least 130 new rail passenger cars so that we may put men in Ontario and Quebec to work building them?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much the interest the Hon. Member is showing in this matter. I will discuss it with my colleague, the Minister of Transport, when he returns next week.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, again we have a situation in which a Socialist must teach a Conservative something about sound business practices.

COST OF REPAIRING ROLLING STOCK

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, the taxpayers have already given VIA Rail more money to keep those cars repaired and refurbished than what the new cars would have cost. Would the Minister quit bleeding the taxpayers' money, quit throwing good money after bad and provide the funds for the purchase of new cars? The savings in operating and maintenance costs alone would recover the cost of those new cars in about six or seven years.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I understand very clearly what the Hon. Member is saying about sound business practices. That is what this Government is following. That is why interest rates are down to the lowest level they have been at in 13 years. That is why 666,000 jobs have been created in the past two and a half years. That is why we have seen over 200,000 housing starts over the past six or seven months. Things are going pretty well here, but I appreciate the concern that the Hon. Member has raised today and I will raise it with my colleague, the Minister of Transport, when I see him next.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

EARLY RETIREES—REQUEST FOR REIMBURSEMENT

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): In the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, Mr. Speaker, I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister.

We have learned this morning that the Supreme Court of Canada has unfortunately refused to hear the case of early retirees. The House will know that, in December, the Minister of Employment and Immigration met with representatives of the ARSAC group which represents the 35,000 Canadian retirees whose unemployment insurance benefits have been cut. These people, who unfortunately cannot allege close relationship with the Prime Minister as his friends do and who cannot contribute to the secret fund, would like to know when the Government intends to introduce a bill to reimburse the 35,000 early retirees who were unfairly penalized on January 5, 1986.

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth)): In the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration who is attending a Federal-Provincial conference with his provincial counterparts, Mr. Speaker, I will take note of the question raised by the Hon. Member for Montréal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart). Since he seems to be unaware of it, however, may I tell him that all Canadian early retirees, wherever they may live in this country, can have free access to and conversation with their elected representatives without any constraint whatsoever. Mr. Speaker, any claim to the contrary is simply unfounded.

TIMING OF INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO REIMBURSE EARLY RETIREES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montréal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. The junior Minister from Sherbrooke who has just answered a question is not familiar with the system.

My question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Who in the House determines the order in which bills are tabled? Is it the Deputy Prime Minister or the junior Minister of State from Sherbrooke? Can the Deputy Prime Minister say when the bill to reimburse the 35,000 early retirees will be tabled in the House?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, to use the same term as the Hon. Member for Montréal-Sainte-Marie, the young junior Minister from the Sherbrooke constituency deeply regrets the tone of the Hon. Member's questions. Admittedly, it is well in keeping with the tone which has prevailed these last few weeks. To be objective and to serve the people who sent us to Ottawa, I shall simply repeat that my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, is now attending the Federal-Provincial Conference. I shall respectfully refer the question to him, and he will doubtless wish to reply to it.

DENIAL OF SECOND-CLASS MAILING PRIVILEGES TO CERTAIN PUBLICATIONS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is with regard to the Post Office. I will direct it either to the Deputy Prime Minister or to whomever will answer on behalf of the Post Office today.

The Canada Lutheran has been denied second-class mailing privileges. The Post Office deemed that Canada Lutheran did not have enough religious content. Such magazines as Beef in

B.C., Status of Women News and Radio Guide have also been denied second-class mailing privileges.

Can the Government explain why Penthouse, Hustler, Playboy and other soft porn magazines have their mailing costs subsidized by Canadian taxpayers while a church magazine such as Canada Lutheran is denied that subsidy?

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the broad area raised by the Member is under serious review and consideration. Due to the importance of the question, will he allow me to bring it to the attention of the Minister so that he can reply more fully upon his return next week?

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, that answer is totally unacceptable. Through its post office policy the Government is subsidizing soft porn magazines while denying church magazines that same privilege.

REQUEST THAT COMMITTEE CONDUCT CROSS-COUNTRY HEARINGS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): I will address my supplementary question to the Deputy Prime Minister. Will the Conservative Party not allow the parliamentary committee on the Post Office to travel across the country to hear the criticisms and suggestions of Canadians in order that, through a consensus process, we can develop a plan for the Post Office which Canadians want? Canadians do not want Penthouse and Hustler to be subsidized while church magazines are not subsidized. Canadians do not want superboxes, and they do not want contracting out of rural services. Allow the parliamentary committee to travel.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary undertook to get back to the Hon. Member with regard to the first part of his question. With regard to the second part, there is a process which is normally followed for committee proceedings.

Mr. de Jong: They were muzzled. They won't even meet.

Mr. Mazankowski: These issues are decided at the steering committee level. All items which Members want to pursue at the respective standing committees are considered there. If the Member feels strongly about this particular issue, he should follow that course.

DAY CARE CENTRES

FORTHCOMING BUDGET—INQUIRY CONCERNING ALLOCATION OF FUNDING

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The Budget which will be brought down in February will reflect the real priorities of this Government. I would therefore like the Minister of Finance to tell us whether his Budget will take into account the urgent situation of day care centres and include a special fund for day care. Can Canadians expect new fund allocations in this Budget to meet the pressing needs for day care centres?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is quite aware that I am not able to disclose what might or might not be in a Budget. I am sure she is very much aware of the efforts which have been made by the Prime Minister, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and the Minister of State responsible for the Status of Women. We are consulting the provinces and private sector groups to try to develop a national program on child care. This work will proceed.

TIMING OF GOVERNMENT'S PROVISION OF FUNDS TO ESTABLISH HIGH QUALITY DAY CARE SERVICES

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the Minister for the Status of Women.

We all recall that the Minister needed only a few days to come to the assistance of the failing banks last year.

Can the Minister now tell us how long Canadian families will have to wait before the required funds are provided to develop quality day care services?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, the Government, particularly the Prime Minister, has made a very active commitment to day care. The Minister of National Health and Welfare has said that there will be a commitment by this June. After 25 years of total inaction by the previous Government, this is commendable.

IMMIGRATION

MINISTER'S BROADCAST STATEMENTS

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday the Minister of Employment and Immigration refused to accept my request and that of two other Members to withdraw a highly offensive description of his home region as untouched by immigration and pure in population and culture. I read Hansard carefully as you suggested, Mr. Speaker, and found that the Minister did not follow your lead and that of the Deputy Prime Minister by asserting a true understanding of his region within the Canadian reality.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister act to overcome the regional petty politics of the Minister of Employment and Immigration and ensure that the Minister follows the admirable lead of the Hon. Member for Kitchener on Monday by issuing a full and complete apology for his highly offensive statements?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned earlier, the Minister of Employment and Immigration is presently at a federal-provincial conference. I make no pretence of being objective with regard to my feelings toward the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I think it is generally agreed within this House that the words used by him lent themselves to interpretation. He readily admitted that yesterday. However, no one has ever questioned his intent. We believed that we turned the page on this yesterday. We hoped that the Hon. Member shared that feeling. In the two years during which he has been Minister, the integrity or thoughts of the Hon. Minister on that issue have never been questioned.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, it is a simple fact that the page has not been turned on this. I continue to receive representations demanding more.

CONTENT OF STATEMENTS

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, will the Deputy Prime Minister, as head of the Government in the House today, point out to the Minister of Employment and Immigration that the statements he made a couple of weeks ago are quite contradictory to the campaign which the Minister responsible for multiculturalism launched this Monday which was designed to ensure that Canadians recognize that our society is no longer composed of two solitudes and the others? Will he point out the contradiction between that and the Minister's statements made on Radio Canada?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, the contradiction here is that the Hon. Member would want to flog this issue when it is so evident that there is nothing more to be said. The contradiction which we see is that the Member would want to use this issue for petty politics when it is so important to Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ACID RAIN

INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT COULD NOT CONCLUDE ACCORD SIMILAR TO UNITED STATES-MEXICO AGREEMENT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of the Environment, I shall address my question to the Deputy Prime Minister.

A federal study has revealed today that forest growth in Quebec and Ontario has been reduced by two-thirds because of problems caused by acid rain. We are already aware that the Union des producteurs agricoles is losing $1 million a month because of acid rain.

In view of the so-called special realtionship between the Prime Minister and the President of the United States, why has the Government been unable to obtain an agreement on acid rain similar to the one which was signed today between the United States and Mexico?

• (1200)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member might want to read the answer that I provided earlier to a similar question. The fact is that this is an issue of very high priority and urgency on the timetable of the Government. It was raised with Vice-President Bush. It will be an issue that will be fully discussed with the President when he comes here in April. We have expressed our disappointment about the inaction in the United States and we will continue to press for full compliance of the arrangements that have been made.

Ms. Copps: The fact is that almost two years after the shamrock summit we have had no action on acid rain. At the same time, on this very day, Mexico and the United States have signed an agreement.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. How long is the Prime Minister prepared to drag his feet, pretending to have a special relationship with the United States, while the Canadian environment and economy are put at risk?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member complains about two years of inaction. That is absolutely wrong because there has been action, movement, and progress. It is quite different from the 25 years of inaction from the Government with which she was associated. Nothing was done for 25 years. We are moving ahead, and moving fast.

EFFECT OF CHANGES ON SMALL-BUSINESSMEN

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister responsible for the Post Office. I am sure all Hon. Members would agree that trying to get satisfaction from the Post Office these days is like trying to shovel popcorn against the wind. I have a letter from a fine businessman in Canada who received six days' notice that his boxes were being changed, even though they were only there six months, that the location was being changed and, most important, that his postal code was being changed. This necessitated a great deal of expense for many businessmen, to print new stationery and new policies. What on earth is the Post Office doing to help small-businessmen instead of trying to drive them out of business?

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for bringing this to our attention. He will readily recognize that the situation he has described to the House is not the normal practice. The Post Office advises us that it is very concerned that it remain helpful and not put blocks in the way of small business. I can assure the Hon. Member that the matter is being studied in some depth and I will report to him later.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Vancouver East, one question please.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

RESULTS OF STRESS STUDY

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Will he inform the House what he intends to do in response to a study that was reported today on CBC which shows that young women in the Armed Forces are working under considerable stress? Will he also check into the need for family support services and child care on Armed Forces bases, and will he actively promote these programs?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for her question because it is a very important subject. I am presently looking at the reports which were prepared and have been circulated within the Canadian Forces. We are studying their results and will be looking at what options are open to us.

An interesting element of the summary report is the statement that service males were three times more likely to state that they were bothered by their work environment, and service females reported less job stress than did service males. It is certainly not an excuse for not dealing with stress at any level, whether it is with males or females, but I think that perhaps the report on the CBC this morning did not point out that particular fact.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Laurier, one question.

CLOVERDALE PARK HOUSING PROJECT—SALE TO PRIVATE DEVELOPER

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister who has already taken notice of a similar question. On Monday the Minister responsible for CMHC will be visiting Cloverdale Park in Montreal's West Island. Some 2,000 residents feel abandoned by the Government because it cancelled an annual subsidy, which allowed the sale of Cloverdale Park to a private developer.

Senior citizens, single mothers, and welfare recipients fear that they will be forced to leave their homes because of massive rent increases. Will the Government set aside the moneys that it is saving from the cancelled subsidy and help the residents of Cloverdale Park form a housing co-operative? They should not have to pay a price for the Government's mistake.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to reply to this question on behalf of the Minister. First, I must say that, for one question, it certainly contains a lot of false information. We shall be visiting the projects on Monday. I shall be there, as will the Minister. These are the Cloverdale projects and the Jardins LaSalle in the beautiful constituency of the same name. I am therefore doubly involved. I can tell the Hon. Member that this matter has been under consideration at the Department for six months. I can assure the House that, in accordance with the policy of our Government, the neediest people will be amply protected in this sale, at least for two years. However, I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that as concerns this contract of the previous Government, we are trying to right wrongs for which we are not to blame. I can assure the House that the Minister has the whole matter in hand and that everything will probably be settled within a month.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I advise Hon. Members that this will be the last question. The Hon. Member for St. Catharines.

PETRO-CANADA

INQUIRY CONCERNING POSSIBLE PRIVATIZATION

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Privatization. Will the Government be moving to privatize Petro-Canada as recommended by many, including the Economic Council of Canada, and if so, when?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. There are a number of companies under active review, with no final decisions having been reached. I can assure him that we are examining Petro-Canada very closely.

PRIVILEGE

ALLOCATION OF TIME DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on what is a question of privilege, if privilege is breached when a Member's freedom to speak in this Chamber is inhibited. Yeterday, as happens from time to time, there was a temporary turbulence in Question Period. The result was that only two Conservative Members were recognized in that period. That may not seem a serious matter, but there are about 135 Conservatives eligible to ask questions. Normally they compete for three questions.

Mr. Gauthier: Go behind the curtains.

Mr. Benjamin: Where are you all?

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has patiently heard matters of this nature raised by both sides of the House and from all Parties. I know that Hon. Members will want to hear the Member out.

Mr. Stackhouse: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When the number is reduced it means a loss of a third of our questions. In this Parliament about 45 per cent of the Members have had access to about 15 per cent of the questions.

With respect, I submit that there is no historic basis for the assumption that Question Period must be what at times it becomes, namely, the Opposition laying seige to the corridors of power and the Government trying to keep them out. While that is obviously part of what Parliament is about, Private Members who support Her Majesty's Government are not here just to be spectators.

After vigorous and cogent arguments by Liberal Members of the Twenty-Ninth Parliament, Mr. Speaker Lamoureux recognized the right of government Members to ask questions. I thank my Liberal predecessors and reaffirm their stand, for we too represent constituencies, we too speak for regions, we too advocate causes, we too share the rights that belong to all Members. When that share is reduced, the rights of the House are reduced. I have raised this point not to lay blame but to seek redress.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have a few comments to make about this point of order. It is not a question of privilege because the Oral Question Period is controlled by the Chair and it is up to the Speaker to decide who will be recognized to ask questions. I simply want to say that the Oral Question Period as we understand it lasts only 45 minutes and that it is our only opportunity to hold the Government accountable for its actions as executive.

It must answer the questions put to it by the Official Opposition and the third party in the House. We see this as one of our daily priorities on which we focus considerable attention. Occasionally, Government Members may, probably for political reasons, we might as well admit it, want to have some visibility during Question Period and ask questions. We agree with the Chair and this has always been our position, that on occasion the floor may be given to two or three Government Members. However, Mr. Speaker, they, being Members of the same party in this House, can see the Minister almost daily in the lobby and talk to him, which we cannot, and hear his position on the particular questions that concern them. So this is our opportunity as Members of the Opposition to put questions to the Government. The accountability of this Government depends on it, since it is not the members who support the Government who are going to make it more accountable. It is up to us, Mr. Speaker, and it is an age-old British tradition that the Official Opposition and the other oppositon party ensure the Government is held responsible for its actions.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think the Chair might wish to take this matter under advisement, but I would first like to make a few comments. Our whip, the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), is correct in saying that, traditionally, Question Period has always been reserved for the Opposition. However, we must not see Parliament as consisting exclusively of Question Period. I realize that because of the interest shown by the media, everything seems to focus on Question Period. I believe that the Chair has been entirely correct in what it has done so far. With respect to the first fifteen minutes of Question Period, so far, Mr. Speaker, you and your predecessors have given more attention to Government Members. So if we divide up all the time spent in Parliament, we could conclude that the Government has more than its fair share of the proceedings. However, if we simply take part of the time set aside for debate in the House, I think the Hon. Member might have a case for what he has been saying today.

During the first 15 first minutes, Mr. Speaker, you distribute rather well in favour of the Government's side and we never oppose that. However, from time immemorial Question Period has been reserved for the Opposition in the tradition of the British parliamentary system, which I defend on every occasion because it is one of the great heritages which I as a Canadian have received from the British Parliament. Therefore, by tradition the Opposition must really be able to question the Government. However, during debate the Chair always recognizes many more Members of the Government. Therefore, we have equilibrium. During the first 15 minutes there is a good distribution. I have made the survey myself and I know the Government is favoured in the first 15 minutes. We never oppose that because it makes sense. The Conservatives are more in number. That is what Canadians democratically decided in the last election. Therefore, the Conservatives are given more.

However, Question Period, and I admit it gets more limelight on television, is only part of our deliberations. It is the same in Parliamentary Committee. The chairman distributes the questions according to the proportions of Members. We have the first round of questions between the three Parties and after that more time is given to the Opposition.

With all due respect, I feel Hon. Members will have to go back to the traditions of this House. They are not badly served because the Government side does ask some questions. As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), said, perhaps the Government Members should get together and put questions which are really of great importance, and not just questions here and there of which Ministers are always aware. I do recognize that at times a Conservative Member has a very important question which he or she would like to raise where pre-notice will not be given to the Minister. If Hon. Members would think back to 1984, they will realize that many of the questions put by Members of the Government were questions of which the Minister was aware, were not that important and could have been asked in the lobby, but it is good public politics, and I do not disagree with that, because we are all in politics.

I do not believe my colleague has a very strong point. When we arrive at the Question Period, which is our only opportunity to question the Government, we must abide by the British parliamentary system whereby the Opposition in the House of Commons can ask direct questions. In that respect the British Parliamentary system is much more superior than the Congressional system in the United States.

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to hold up the Minister of State for Privatization (Mrs. McDougall). I understand he is about to make an important announcement in the Chamber about a major change in Government policy. I do not know what it is, but I am very interested to hear what the Minister has to say.

I am almost inclined to agree with the Hon. Member who brought up the question concerning Question Period, because I am confident the Liberals are going to be on the Government side of the House very shortly and perhaps we might be making the same arguments. However, I have to slightly differ with the previous speaker. I agree with him that we follow the British tradition in this House. In London, as you know, Mr. Speaker, questions go back and forth to the Government side, to the Opposition side, to the Government side and back to the Opposition side.

However, we cannot transplant one aspect of the present British system into our system. We would have to transplant the entire system which would mean that Members of the Government would be able to rise and really attack their Cabinet Ministers. More importantly, the committee system would have to be changed in such a way as to give Members of the Government side total authority to originate their own terms of reference and to delve into whatever they want. The focus of attention in the British House is not in Question Period at all. No one knows it is even taking place. It is in the committees. Therefore, we cannot transplant one aspect of the British system into our system. This is the only thing we have left in our system to make the Government at least partially accountable to the people of Canada for its actions. If we take that opportunity away or dilute it, then we destroy our sytsem.

My only reason for rising is to point out that I am afraid that we are going to be on the other side very shortly and we might be making the same arguments.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to repeat the representations of other Hon. Members. They have been excellent. However, I want to add two or three points. Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 55 states:

> The privilege of freedom of speech is—the most fundamental right of the Member of Parliament on the floor of the House and in committee.

I want to remind the Hon. Member that if in fact his privileges have been breached, it would mean that he has been denied the right to speak, the right to ask a question. I submit that that is not the case. He has had, in my recollection, a number of opportunities to raise points on the floor of the House of Commons during Question Period and, as a result of recent reforms, throughout the entire day. We now have an opportunity during debate to ask questions, through the question or statement procedure, so that Hon. Members of the Government, who I might add are the overwhelming numbers when it comes to delivering speeches in the House of Commons—a reflection of the percentages of the three political Parties—can ask questions or make statements. Not only do Members of the Government have ample opportunity to raise points and ask questions of the appropriate Minister, at the end of each speech there is an opportunity to ask questions or make statements, to say nothing of the fact that in committee the overwhelming numbers are from the Government side, where again there is ample opportunity to ask questions of Ministers or representatives from the Ministers' office.

• (1220)

The only point the Hon. Member could make in terms of a breach of privilege is if he had been denied, presumably by the Chair, permission to ask a certain question, which of course was not the case.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has listened carefully to the intervention of the Hon. Member, and to other comments.

Fairly recently the Chair indicated to the House that the Chair is very much aware of the fact that there are a great many Members in this Chamber, many of whom have legitimate and diligent questions to put to the Government. I think the Chair has made it clear that when that is the case, and when it is obvious to the Chair that that is the case, questions have been allowed to members of the government side. I am quick to point out that when those questions are what they ought to be, that is diligent and searching, members of the opposition have not objected, for which I am grateful.

The Hon. Member is understandably concerned that because of attention on the Question Period, and perhaps because sometimes the Question Period does not move as rapidly as I am sure Hon. Members would like because of the length of questions and the length of responses, perhaps government Members are neglected. I will strive to ensure that that is not the case.

However, I want to say to government Members that the Chair is aware that they, too, are here representing constituencies and that they, too, have a right to speak. Hon. Members will have noted that not only has the Chair recognized government Members, whose names were not necessarily on a list brought to the Speaker, who rose and showed to the Speaker that they indeed were seeking recognition on an important matter, but the Chair has also recognized supplementary questions from government Members, as in fact was the case today.

With respect to the other point, Question Period is a unique institution. At its best it is something of which Canadians can be very proud. At its best it is an intelligent accountability session for any Government—at its best. It is not always at its best, as Hon. Members know. But that is my problem and I have to do what I have to do to ensure that Question Period is at its best as often as possible.

The comments of Hon. Members are important, especially the comments of the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), that this is our institution and it has customs and traditions which are unique to us. While sometimes visiting dignitaries from other lands may wonder at the way we meet, usually after lunch, nonetheless it is our institution for better or worse.

The Chair, while recognizing that all Hon. Members have a right to be heard during Question Period, also recognizes that it is very much an accountability session. That is our tradition. I thank the Hon. Member for raising this matter because it is an appropriate time for the Chair to say something about it. I will endeavour to be as fair and as even as I can be, recognizing that Question Period is an accountability session and that there are serious and proper questions coming from government Members. I shall try to see those government Members when those questions arise.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. For the benefit of the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse), there is an ultimate solution if he wants to ask more questions. He could join the Opposition, preferably the Liberals.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I should have known that there was no way we would get through this discussion without some help from the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

PRIVATIZATION

FISHERY PRODUCTS INTERNATIONAL

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to be able to address the House today, and I am delighted to see your honourable self looking so elegant.

I am pleased to make an announcement in the House today on behalf of the Government. The shareholders of Fishery Products International, the Government of Canada, the Government of Newfoundland, and the Bank of Nova Scotia have agreed to proceed with a plan put forward by FPI to return the company to the private sector.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. McDougall: The privatization will include a public offering of shares which will provide an opportunity for all Canadians to participate in the ownership of this company.

The sale of FPI is the culmination of a remarkable success story in Canada's Atlantic fishery. FPI was created in 1984, pursuant to a restructuring agreement between the Governments of Canada and Newfoundland to integrate the operations of several seafood companies into a single new company. A key objective of the agreement was to restore the profitability of the offshore fishery and return the company to the private sector at the earliest possible time.

We believe that the company's records show that the time is now appropriate. The company realized a profit of $46 million in 1986. I take this opportunity to congratulate warmly the workers and management of FPI for their dedication and contribution.

The privatization plan announced today will provide key benefits to the Newfoundland fishery. As part of the privatization plan FPI employees will participate to the extent of approximately $6 million in the share offering. The shares will be distributed on a formula that will take into account salary and years of service. In addition, the employees will have an opportunity to buy shares on an ongoing basis through payroll deduction.

FPI will also continue with its declared corporate policy to share profits with employees. In 1986 the company paid 10 per cent of its pre-tax earnings in cash payments and other benefits to company employees.

In order to favour broad ownership, no individual or corporation in this privatization will be able to own more than 15 per cent of the shares of FPI. The privatization plan ensures that the majority of the members of the board of directors will be composed of Newfoundlanders and that FPI will continue to be a major force in the development of the Newfoundland economy.

It is anticipated that the return of FPI to the private sector will be completed during the first part of 1987, depending of course on market conditions. The net proceeds of this share issue are not certain at this stage, but the Government expects to recoup a substantial portion of our investment, and the corporation will be in a strengthened financial position.

Mr. Speaker, I am very proud to announce this step which makes this company the tenth to be privatized by this Government since 1984. This sale again confirms the commitment of this Government to economic renewal and better management.

The sale of Fisheries Products International demonstrates that our privatization program is well on track. The program is creating new economic opportunities for Canadians and employees. It is conducted in a manner that is sensitive to the needs and interests of all parties concerned.

[English]

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the federal Government has announced to everybody in the fish business that it has taken action in the offshore stocks to conserve the stocks, and to be nice to foreign countries in the offshore. This is mainly an offshore company that we are dealing with today. In one area where this company fishes this year the Government has banned Canadian boats from fishing, an area off the Grand Banks of Newfoundland. This very day the nose of the Grand Banks is being fished by boats from the United States, France, Korea, Spain, and Portugal, but Canadian boats would be arrested if they went into the zone. That is the nose of the Grand Banks of Newfoundland.

The Minister says that the reason Americans can go in is that they are not a member of NAFO. But we say, "Yes, the other countries are members of NAFO." The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) says, "Yes. But in NAFO we have a rule that if a member country objects, in this case the EEC, then they are allowed to go in and fish in that area."

So point one to keep in mind is, we have a section of coastline close to where most of these fish plants are located where Canadian boats are not allowed to even prosecute the fishery, namely, the nose of the Grand Banks, which is the best fishing grounds in the area.

Point two, which everybody in Canada knows about, is the Canada-France agreement, the granting of nine factory freezer trawler licences to the French metropolitan fleet to fish where most of these plants are located, off the coast of Newfoundland.

We would have to say that it is a great time to offer this for public sale, because perhaps next year we would not be able to sell a share. On the stock market today the best buy in the fishery is National Sea Products. Its shares have gone way up. I must admit that part of the reason is that this Government caved in to a request by Mr. Cummings, the President of National Sea Products, to give them a factory freezer trawler licence. Part of the reason then is due to the Government caving in to this company against the wishes of the Newfoundland Government.

When it is all added up, this Government is taking fish away from Canadian companies. There is no future for the inshore-offshore fishery if this Government remains in power, and now the Government is going to offer this company for public sale. Yes, it will be a good sale. I am sure that this company, a portion of which is private, will take advantage of the three factory freezer trawler licences, thereby reducing the number of people working on shore in these plants. The Government has offered these three licences to the company which to date this company has refused to take advantage of.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I wish to begin by saying that, in spite of the Minister's comments, the Government now has privatized 10 Crown corporations. The implication is that there is less federal public ownership in the country than there was at the beginning of the Government's administration. I wish to put on the record that in terms of value there is now more federal public ownership than ever before in Canadian history. There is significantly more than on September 4, 1984. I mention that to keep the record clear, and stop the myth building with this particular announcement today.

Mrs. McDougall: Good management.

Mr. Riis: The Minister of State for Privatization (Mrs. McDougall) states that is good management. It has been said in this case, that that has been the case. Under the private sector they could not make a profit and were unsuccessful. The reason this Crown corporation began was that seven private sector companies went bankrupt. The Government of Newfoundland and the Government of Canada, with assistance from the Bank of Nova Scotia, put together a Crown corporation which has been quite remarkable. In 1984 it lost $35 million after taking over the disastrous situation of the seven companies. But by 1985, as a result of a whole new approach to management, a new approach in terms of its 8,000 employees, and a new approach in each of the 18 fish plants, the losses had fallen to $20 million. As the Minister has stated, in 1986 the profits were in excess of $46 million. This is a real tribute to what the public sector can do in the economy in co-operation with productive employees.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: After the federal Government, on behalf of the citizens of Canada, and the citizens of Newfoundland through their Government, became major players and rescued these failing private sector companies, created employment throughout critical parts of Newfoundland, got everything on a successful path, the Government now decides to abandon it and return to a position in which the sole motive will be profit. Under a Crown corportion there were other aspects in mind. It wanted to create employment, and long-term stabililty to many communities, and that was done. Now with this particular act of privatization the Government is saying that we are going back in time, and it is using a regressive approach. Once again the important thing will not be the future of Newfoundland, the stability of the economy of Newfoundland, the security that it gives to the people of Newfoundland. The only motive that will govern this newly privatized company will be profit.

In closing, I wish to say that in a province of Canada where fishing is the number one industry and touches the lives of every single Newfoundlander, either directly or indirectly, some public participation is a very honourable and useful thing. For that reason, unless we receive substantially more details than these sketchy comments we have heard this morning, we certainly would find it very difficult to support this initiative. The details are non-existent, other than this small sketch, so we will have to look more carefully at this when the details are provided.

THE BUDGET—TAX REFORM

DATE FOR PRESENTATION

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, at this time I wish to inform Members of the Government's plans for comprehensive tax reform, and for a Budget this year.

Members will be aware that the greater part of our pre-Budget consultations with Canadian organizations was concluded just before Christmas. My staff and officials of the Department of Finance have continued to meet with representatives of various groups earlier this month. Formal submissions on tax reform from many of these groups are still arriving. Many of these submissions clearly represent a thorough, conscientious, and detailed effort to deal with tax reform in a realistic way. We are reviewing these submissions in the same conscientious and scrupulous manner in which they were researched and presented. I consider these views an important element of our tax reform planning.

We knew at the start that comprehensive tax reform would be a big job. As Members know, we are examining all aspects of the tax system, personal, corporate, and sales taxes. In light of the guidelines for tax reform that I released in October, and with the benefit of our consultations with many Canadians, we are making good progress toward a comprehensive tax reform proposal. I am now planning to bring forward the Government's proposal for comprehensive tax reform this spring. However, I do not believe it would be appropriate to defer a Budget for that long. I therefore intend to maintain the commitment I have made to put the budgetary process on a regular basis. I will bring down a Budget next month on Wednesday, February 18.

We are making good progress toward a comprehensive tax reform proposal.

Mr. Speaker, I am not planning to bring forward the government's proposal for comprehensive tax reform this spring. However, I do not believe it would be appropriate to defer a budget for that long.

I therefore intend to maintain the commitment I have made to put the budgetary process on a regular basis. I will bring down a budget next month on Wednesday, February 18.

• (1240)

[English]

As I have said in the past, it is sensible to present a Budget annually in February, sensible because regular timing of the federal Budget makes for greater certainty and orderliness in financial planning for the federal Government, for the provinces, for businesses, and for individuals.

Canadians who are planning their financial affairs should be mindful that some income tax changes proposed in the Budget may take effect at midnight the day before budget day, that is, at midnight on February 17.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, Canadians who are planning their financial affairs should be mindful that some income tax changes proposed in the budget may take effect at midnight the day before budget day—that is, at midnight February 17.

[English]

This provision will ensure that budgetary changes apply uniformly to all transactions made on budget day, regardless of where in Canada the transactions take place.

Let me sum up very briefly. I will table a Budget on February 18, and I will be presenting a comprehensive tax reform proposal to the House this spring.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I will table a budget on February 18. And I will be presenting a comprehensive tax reform proposal to this House this spring.

[English]

I would therefore request that, in accordance with Standing Order 84(3), an Order of the Day be designated to allow the presentation of a budget speech on Wednesday, February 18, 1987.

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, on October 23, 1986 the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said the following in the House:

> As the next step in the tax reform process, I intend to issue specific directions for change at the time of my next Budget.

That is another broken promise by the Minister of Finance. On February 18 we will have a Budget and a few months later we may have a tax reform proposal. What will the Budget be? Will it be a "go nowhere, do nothing" Budget, because we will be expecting tax reform in a few months?

In terms of tax reform, the Minister of Finance is not very credible. He announced reform of the manufacturers' sales tax in the Budget of 1985. He was supposed to table a White Paper during the summer. It was postponed. He never tabled it. Then, in 1986, he said that we would have comprehensive tax reform and that it would come in his budget speech of 1987. Now he tells us that there will be no tax reform with the Budget. I do not know what to expect, because he told us on a few occasions that he would table a White Paper on tax reform and never did. After crying wolf on many occasions, I do not know if the wolf will be around this time and we will have a tax reform proposal.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) promised in this House, last October, that he would table a proposal for tax reform. That reform is needed, but we now hear it will again be delayed, perhaps until next spring, and that depending on consultations, we may have to wait until 1988 for a tax reform. Yet, since this Government came to power, it has brought in catastrophic personal income tax increases. The gap has widened between the rich and the poor. Only people with significant capital gains have benefited by means of exemptions. The gap between the Atlantic Provinces and one part of Ontario is widening constantly, and the tax reform that was to bring in certain corrections, introduce a little more justice in our system, is once more delayed.

This proves the Government is not keeping its promises. It is not assuming its responsibilities, and the Canadian economy is going to suffer. And according to the results of the latest Gallup Poll, 60 per cent of Canadians—can you imagine, 60 per cent—believe this Government is mismanaging the nation's economic business. Of course, they come up with figures, statistics, except for one specific region. Mr. Speaker, interest rates should be much lower than they are now, if this Government would stop crawling before the U.S. Treasurer.

[English]

If the Government would not cave in to the U.S. Treasurer we would have an interest rate much lower than it is today. The Minister knows very well that the spread between interest rates in the United States and Canada is much too great. The only reason he is doing that is that he wants to cave in to the Treasurer of the United States, because this guy wants to have the Canadian dollar at a higher level. It is another example of the way the Government mismanages the economy.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, many Canadians will welcome the announcement of the Budget coming down on February 18. However, they will particularly welcome the Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) if in fact it is designed for all of Canada, not just for the ridings in the area of Metropolitan Toronto.

In the Toronto area the unemployment rate is below 5 per cent. I remind the Minister, since I am sure he has not put all the finishing touches on his Budget, that the unemployment rate in Quebec is over 10 per cent in the Maritimes and British Columbia it is over 13 per cent and in Newfoundland it is at 19 per cent. Those Canadians have a right to expect a Budget which will deal with their problems. They need to have employment and some sense that their economic future is secure, and it is not secure under the Government as things stand right now.

I sense and fear that the Budget will in fact do very little, that it will not respond to the problems in our regions, and that with tax reform taken out of it we will in fact have a formality from the Finance Minister and not much else.

In respect of tax reform, I am very concerned that it is now essentially being put back to 1989 or possibly to 1990. Rather than putting in place tax reform which could affect Canadians in their pocketbooks in a very real way before we go back to the polls in 1988 or 1989, the Government appears now to have decided that tax reform will be another election promise, but not put in law by that time.

[Translation]

I am just saying, Mr. Speaker, that bringing forward a proposal for tax reform this spring means any time up to June 21 this year, and then consultations with the Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs. Furthermore, a Bill introduced in the spring of 1988 cannot be adopted until the 1989 fiscal year, which means after the next federal election.

Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the Minister of Finance and this Government have postponed their plans. Now we have good intentions but no action.

[English]

I would suggest that in the Budget itself the Government show ordinary Canadians across the country that it is serious about tax reform and that the Minister of Finance show whose side he is on.

I suggest the Finance Minister could show that by withdrawing the $500 million tax exemption on capital gains and by stopping up corporate loopholes which create an unjust situation across the country. On average, 80,000 companies pay no tax in each fiscal year despite the fact that they are in a profitable position.

• (1250)

Rather than the Finance Minister talking about endless consultations with the provinces and his colleagues, perhaps he should cut through the Gordian knot that is keeping the Government of Canada from taking the first real steps toward a universal program of day care across Canada. My leader has made a proposal and the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) has brought forward a concrete plan for the inauguration of a national day care plan with expenditures of $320 million. That is enough to start to respond to constituents in my riding and across this country, by saying that it is about time we saw this as a national priority and not as something that just belongs to the provinces. It is about time we ensured that men and women who are parents of small children genuinely have access to quality and affordable day care in every part of Canada.

These are things we will be looking for in the Budget. I call on the Minister of Finance not to use this deferral of his announcement on tax reform as a means of preventing tax reform from coming in soon. Canadians need it now.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of tabling the First Report of the Standing Committee on Management and Members Services.

REQUEST TO WITHDRAW TARIFF ON ENGLISH LANGUAGE BOOKS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and the duty to present to the House five petitions from the Province of Alberta, from people who submit that the Government of Canada has imposed a retaliatory tariff on imported books in the English language which has limited the access of Canadians to literature and information, that the tariff has had little effect on the publishing industry of the United States, yet penalizes Canada's consumers, book publishers, book-sellers, distributors and Canada's culture, and that rising book prices have placed a strain on the book acquisition programs and policies of our nation's public and specialized libraries. The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to rescind this tariff which threatens irreparable harm to the Canadian book industry and compromises federal policy on cultural industries in respect of free trade negotiations.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have other petitions dealing with another matter signed by dozens of constituents. They are in order pursuant to Standing Order 106. These petitioners humbly submit that the proposed changes to the Patent Act, which directly affects all Canadians who are not protected by private and Government medicare programs, will raise the costs, already high, of the provincial health care programs. They go on to say that the monopoly granted to innovative pharmaceutical companies will prevent competition from generic companies and will result in an increase in drug prices, that costs will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs, and that the proposed changes to the Patent Act are another example of the Canadian Governments concession in the free trade negotiations with the United States at the expense of every Canadian. They humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have petitions to present pursuant to Standing Order 106. The first one is from residents of my riding of Thunder Bay—Nipigon who protest the federal Government's proposals to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs which they feel will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. They feel that the proposed measures will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on a continuing basis and will result also in higher costs to provincial Government drug plans. They call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

JAPANESE CANADIANS—COMPENSATION

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my second petition is from residents of Regina and Saskatoon in the Province of Saskatchewan and from residents of Alberta who assert that the National Association of Japanese Canadians is the only elected national organization of Japanese Canadians with representatives from 15 centres across the country. They point out that the NAJC has held public meetings about redress for the forcible dispossession and relocation that Japanese Canadians suffered during the second world war, and has used a national questionnaire to develop a position on proper redress. They call on Parliament to deal honourably with Canadian citizens of Japanese descent and to enter into negotiations immediately with the National Association of Japanese Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I recognize other Members with petitions I wish to inform the House that because of the ministerial statement Government Orders will be extended by 26 minutes beginning at 1 o'clock p.m. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone), the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud), the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) and the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) on petitions.

REQUEST TO WITHDRAW TARIFF ON ENGLISH LANGUAGE BOOKS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I rise once again to present petitions. I profit from the presence of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and ask him to listen to the petitioners concerning the tax on reading. I bring to your attention, Sir, that they wish to have this tax removed. They have stated that whereas the Government of Canada has imposed a retaliatory tariff on imported books in the English language which has limited the access of Canadians to literature and information, and; whereas the tariff has little negative effect on the publishing industry of the United States, yet penalizes Canada's consumers, book publishers, booksellers, distributors and Canada's culture, and whereas rising book prices have placed a strain on the book acquisition programs and policies of our nation's public and specialized libraries—I hope the Minister is listening. The undersigned, your Petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to rescind this tariff which threatens irreparable harm to the Canadian book industry and compromises federal policy on cultural industries in respect of free trade negotiations.

I deposit for your information and for your action, Mr. Speaker, 327 names from Nanaimo and Vancouver, B.C., Sydney and Glace Bay, Nova Scotia, Kincardine, B.C., Ontario, various cities in Manitoba including Winnipeg, Lone Butte, B.C. and other towns and cities in the Vancouver area, Edmonton, Red Deer, Alberta, again Vancouver, B.C., Willowdale, Toronto, more from Toronto and Vancouver, B.C., Burnaby, B.C. These people beg you humbly to press for the removal of the tariff on books, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour of presenting petitions from people living in London, Ontario and in Guelph, Oakville and Mississauga, who wish to express their disapproval of the duty imposed on imports of books in the English language. They feel the duty is entirely unfair and amounts to penalizing the book industry, and they want to see this duty removed as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to point out that the duty was imposed at the same time as an entirely unfair import duty was levied on Christmas trees, and I want to take this opportunity to ask the House, with our petitioners, to have the duty on Christmas trees and books removed as soon as possible.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and pleasure to present pages and pages of a petition. Noticing my friend from Victoria who keeps an eye on petitions, I will say that not all the pages are full. There are a number of pages with a number of signatures on them reflecting the concern of individuals from various places in western Canada about the Government's plan to change the Patent Act. They believe that this will see a significant increase in prescription drug prices and will restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs.

REQUEST TO WITHDRAW TARIFF ON ENGLISH LANGUAGE BOOKS

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by citizens of the Province of Ontario who object to the Government of Canada imposing a tariff on imported books. The petitioners express the view that such a decision by the Conservative Government will limit access of Canadians to literature and information. They call upon Parliament to rescind this tariff which threatens irreparable harm to the Canadian book industry and compromises cultural industries in respect to free trade negotiations.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I would also present a petition on behalf of citizens of Thunder Bay who complain about the Patent Act amendment proposed by the Government of the day which, according to these citizens, will unfairly hurt Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on a continuing basis because of the inevitable increasing of drug prices due to the activities of the Government. Therefore, they call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will undoubtedly increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I too have the honour and duty of submitting two petitions to the House. The first is a petition with over 200 names to add to the tens of thousands already submitted. This petition is from Canadians who reside in places in Saskatchewan like Estevan, Elfros, Pangman, Prince Albert, Regina, Saskatoon and many other locations in the province. Since the Government's proposed amendments to the Patent Act will unfairly hurt Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis because of higher prices and because the proposals of the federal Government will result in higher costs to provincial government drug plans, the petitioners humbly pray that Parliament reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices.

TRANSPORTATION—ECONOMIC REGULATORY REFORM

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have a further petition from citizens of Edmonton, Leduc, Beaumont, Jasper and Wetaskiwin. In the opinion of the petitioners, transportation is a natural monopoly without economic regulation and the regulatory reform of the dimensions proposed by the Government in Bill C-18 will create unnecessary chaos in the transportation industry leading to unacceptable reductions in safety standards as well as deterioration in the quality, type and frequency of service. Therefore, the petitioners pray that the House of Commons have Bill C-18 withdrawn and see that the principle of public convenience and necessity remain a fundamental factor in the development of public transportation policy.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, it is my honour to present a petition which has been approved by the Clerk as being in proper form. It is from a number of citizens of Campbell River and St. Catharines. These Canadians complain that the increase in prescription drug prices that they see being caused by the Government's current legislation which is before the committee will be a severe hardship for many Canadians, particularly elderly ones and those on fixed incomes. The petitioners see this as bringing no benefit to Canada but, rather, bringing benefit to the United States and it is a point lost in the free trade negotiations. Therefore, they call upon Parliament to reject these proposals and thereby avoid an unnecessary increase in drug prices.

LOW-LEVEL FLIGHTS AT ARMED FORCES BASE AT GOOSE BAY

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is also my honour to present, under Standing Order 106, a petition from a number of citizens of Cambridge, Guelph and the City of Toronto. These Canadians point out that the low-level flight training of pilots from NATO countries at the Canadian Forces Base at Goose Bay, Labrador, is disrupting the way of life of many native people. Even though it may promise them a few jobs, the petitioners believe that it is more healthy to use the kinds of employment they have been using and can use otherwise, and they point out that the training of these pilots at Goose Bay to fly under radar into eastern Europe is a provocative and aggressive war-fighting action which tends to endanger world peace. Therefore, they ask Parliament to ensure that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will bring to an end all low-level flight training at Goose Bay, Canadian Forces Base and cease negotiations with NATO for the establishment of a larger base there.

STARRED QUESTION

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, would you be kind enough to call starred question No. 62?

[English]

*RURAL MAIL DELIVERY IN LAUNAY, QUEBEC

Question No. 62—Mr. St. Julien:

1. On October 1, 1986, did Canada Post cancel rural mail delivery in concession 4 of the municipality of Launay, in the constituency of Abitibi and, if so, for what reason?

2. Since the route was established and until September 30, 1986, what was the yearly cost of mail delivery?

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): I am pleased to advise the Hon. Member for Abitibi (Mr. St. Julien) as follows:

1. Prior to October 1, 1986, 101 customers were served by the local post office through two different modes: 55 customers directly at the local post office; the remaining 46 customers by a contractor through rural route delivery.

Given the high cost of providing two different methods of delivery to such a small number of customers, a decision was taken to consolidate service to these customers through one delivery method. All Launay Station customers can now access their mail six days per week.

2. At the time the rural route service was consolidated, the service contract cost $5,708, or an average of $124.08 per point of call, compared to the national average cost of $47. In addition, the total number of customers on this rural route was 46, compared to the national average of 225 customers.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION ACT, 1986

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Thursday, January 29, 1987, consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-18, an Act respecting national transportation, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. Benjamin (p. 2756).

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, when we reached the end of consideration of Government Orders yesterday I was debating the ramifications of Bill C-18. I was particularly concerned about the possible impacts of deregulating transportation in Canada. We will surely see some very serious effects on the competitive situation which the Government claims to be seeking. There will be cut-throat competition which will be responded to by a consolidation of control such as we have already seen in airline passenger service. I also raised concerns about the possible impacts of Bill C-18 on safety in transportation in Canada. I was commenting on that in particular when five o'clock arrived.

In concluding my comments this afternoon I would like to relate a conversation I had with a constituent in late November. This constituent is in the trucking business. We were attending a meeting which focused primarily on the threat to rural mail service due to the Government's plans for Canada Post. This man has been in the trucking business for quite some time. He said that he is not looking forward to the near future in the trucking business as deregulation takes effect. He wonders how long the trucking industry will have to put up with slashed tires and rods through radiators. I asked him if that is the sort of thing which happens when things are really open. He said that before trucking in Ontario was regulated there was all too much of that. He expects it will happen again if the deregulation of trucking is carried through. I asked whether he expected that regulation would be imposed once again and he said of course, that it would be impossible to live with this situation in the trucking industry.

I found that to be a very interesting series of observations. This man is trying to earn a living by providing a vital service, the movement of freight by truck. This man is very much aware of what the impacts of this change by the Government may be.

As others have pointed out, we will shift from concern about public necessity and convenience to a focus on the fitness, willingness, and ability of people to carry on in transportation industries. There will always be people willing to enter the business of trucking. There will always be trucks available at low prices. As businesses fail they will be bought up. Some people live with the excitement and romance of trucking, but the frightful necessity of making a living for those who are unable to get other jobs will always be there. They will be willing, but will they be fit and able to follow through?

In the harsh reality of carrying on in the trucking industry lies the ultimate test of how Bill C-18 will work. I do not know whether members of the Government are content to see railway companies go bankrupt. I do not know whether they are bothered by the fact that scheduled air transportation in this country is already controlled by the two groups of companies. That may not bother them very much. However, when they see people and small businesses in their ridings trying to make a living in the trucking industry labouring under these circumstances, faced with secret agreements and everything else that will be possible under Bill C-18, will they be ready to live with that? I think not. Therefore, I support the motion to send this matter back to the Transport Committee for further study.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the remarks of the Hon. Member with regard to a trucker who seems to be fearful of the consequences of this Conservative legislation. I could echo the remarks of the Hon. Member because a number of people involved in the trucking industry have written to me and met with me in my constituency office to tell me the same things which the Hon. Member has been told. The direction of the government regulations could create much turmoil and could provoke bankruptcies in the trucking industry.

Has the Hon. Member been able to ascertain to what extent the Government has been consulting the provinces? As he knows, there has been a shared responsibility between the provincial authority and the federal Government in the field of trucking. Recently I read a statement by the Minister of Transport in the Province of Quebec who was vehemently opposed to the Government going ahead with deregulation prior to an agreement among provinces and the federal Government in this area.

It seems to me that there have been some consultations between the Ministers of Transport of the federal Government and the provinces, but there certainly has been no agreement. I am surprised that the Government is anxious to speed up this deregulation process prior to any type of appropriate agreement being signed by the provincial authorities and the federal Government. Does the Hon. Member have any views in this regard, or any information that he could give to the House?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Member for his very good question because it directly involves the motion we are debating to send this matter back to the Standing Committee. He stated that the Minister of Transport in Quebec has expressed concern about the Government's proposition.

I have a letter dated August 8, 1986 from the Minister of Highways and Transportation in the Province of Manitoba to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie). He expresses concern about the Memorandum of Understanding on the reform of extra provincial trucking regulations which had been debated between the federal and provincial Ministers in February, 1985. He indicates that a number of points in the memorandum had not been acted upon properly and that this Bill has changed criteria without the provincial Ministers having an opportunity to consider this carefully.

His first point, which is quite lengthy, focuses on the expectation of complete deregulation on January 1, 1991, and the lack of appropriate review prior to this deregulation. He makes a number of points about the dangers that should be carefully considered before any such plan is carried through.

In another point he focuses on the matter of fitness, to which I alluded in the last part of my comments. Again, he indicates the concern of the Province of Manitoba about the federal Government's action to press this matter through.

Therefore, we have very real evidence from a couple of provinces that provincial Governments are not in support of the Government's action. Clearly that is an argument for sending the matter back to the Standing Committee on Transport for much more study, as the amendment proposes.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I believe the Hon. Member reflects the position of his Party on a number of issues. One of the New Democratic positions on this Bill is that rail tariffs would increase rather than decrease as a result of this legislation. In fact, between 1980 and 1984 average Canadian rail rates rose at double the average U.S. rates.

With respect to the question of cross-subsidization in air, the Member's Party indicated that a policy of hidden subsidies was better than explicit, direct subsidies. They state that the Bill produces more government subsidies rather than the current cross subsidization. The NDP is essentially saying that service to outlying regions should continue to include large planes rather than the smaller planes such as the DASH-8. Does the New Democratic Party support indirect subsidies? We believe that we should ensure that the costs are known and that the best possible service for a particular route is in place, such as in the Maritimes where there are turbo-props that are increasing service to that region.

The Hon. Member talked about trucking. Prior to this proposed legislation there were about 2,000 U.S. carriers operating in Canada. Current legislation has hardly kept U.S. carriers out.

Is the Hon. Member aware that Canadian railways own five railways in the United States and transfer millions of dollars in business to them, and that 1,000 Canadian trucking companies are operating in the United States now?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. I will let the Hon. Member comment in regard to the question put by the Parliamentary Secretary. We have already exceeded our time.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With the indulgence of the House, perhaps I could take a couple of minutes and conclude my ten minutes for comment. Perhaps the Hon. Member's comments relate to what others have said, because I did not find them particularly germane to my speech.

I am much more concerned about declining revenues for operators in all the various transportation industries than about the cut-throat competitive regime which is likely to result from the application of Bill C-18 and other proposals of the Government. That declining revenue will have serious consequences for shareholders and frightful consequences for their employees as the companies negotiate viciously with them in an attempt to reduce costs. It will have long-term consequences on the ability of companies to maintain their equipment and buy new equipment. Those are the dangers which I fear.

The Hon. Member commented on local air service, which I did not talk about at all. I sugggest that we have been served very well by the existing provisions which focus on public necessity and convenience as a basis for allowing cross-subsidization so that those who operate on lucrative routes have a basis for providing service to other communities where there is much less profitable business. In northern Ontario we are already the victims of Air Canada's anticipation of this deregulation. In Sault Ste. Marie, for example, Air Canada's service has dropped to a lesser quality, although I am not maligning our DASH aircraft and their quality of service. However, it is frequently slower and there are no reasons to be very happy about what will happen under the: "fit, willing and able" provisions. Thank you for your indulgence, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 1.28 p.m., I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1.28 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

[English]

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege today to speak on Bill C-18, an Act respecting national transportation with regard to reregulation of the transport industry in Canada. I speak on this subject with a little background, first as an Atlantic Canadian Member of Parliament, and second, as a member of a Standing Committee on Transport.

In my role as a member of that Committee I had an opportunity to take part in the hearings which were conducted across Canada on the Freedom to Move Paper. In addition, I had a chance to visit northern Canada and conduct hearings with regard to the Freedom to Move Paper and the possible effects of reregulation on the northern part of our country. I also had the opportunity of being sent by the Centre for Legislative Exchange to Washington in order to take a first-hand look at the American experience with regard to deregulation and the ramifications of that action in the United States.

I will attempt today to address the topic from four main points of view; safety, regional development, competition and airline service. Concern has been expressed that the reform of economic regulation will negatively effect transportation safety, that somehow the Government will slacken its resolve to protect the safety of the travelling public. Nothing could be further from the truth. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) has stated that safety is, and will continue to be, his first priority. That commitment is stated under "National Transportation Policy", Clause 3, and that commitment is restated day-by-day in the operation of the Government.

Transportation safety will never be compromised by this Government. Canadians should and will enjoy the peace of mind which comes from knowing that the Canadian transportation system is one of the safest in the world, and that we are continually striving to improve our safety programs. Everything humanly possible is being done to guarantee the safety of passenger travel and of freight transportation. Suggestions that the National Transportation Act will jeopardize aviation safety are totally without foundation. The airline industry has always had safety as a top priority. The Government's regulation and enforcement of safety will ensure that it remains that way.

Anticipating that new carriers will enter the industry, the Government's training, inspection and enforcement programs have been beefed up to respond to this increased activity. The Government's commitment to safety is evident from a variety of initiatives now underway. The Aeronautics Act was amended in 1985. It covers all aviation from weekend pilots to the nation's airlines. The law has been strengthened in the area of airport security, records of pilots and engineers, owner and operator insurance, air worthiness of the equipment, air traffic services and navigational aids, as well as medical records for those holding licences. There are strengthening provisions for penalizing offenders.

In addition, the Government has set up a civil aviation tribunal to hear and determine appeals from administrative decisions quickly and fairly. However, rules and regulations are not enough. Qualified people are needed to enforce them. In spite of over-all Government budgetary constraints, more than 100 additional safety personnel are being put into place across Canada. They will work in aviation, in transportation of dangerous goods, in shipping and in other areas of transportation. Canadian safety standards are high. We have a strong regulatory regime. We have the right people to be aware and fully understand safety requirements.

We have as well a safety infrastructure to keep our ships, railways and aircraft safe. For example, radar is essential to safe air navigation, and radar systems have undergone radical changes during recent years. Canada must keep up with these technological changes and we are doing so. The Government is funding more than $800 million towards an airport radar modernization plan which covers Canada from coast to coast. This will improve safety, convenience and efficiency.

Canada's aviation safety record is outstanding. Our major carriers are in the top range of more than 120 international carriers with enviable safety records. This has steadily improved over the past 20 years. Those who say economic regulation reform and improved safety performance do not mix, can look to the example of the United States. Its regulatory reform was somewhat different but the example bears noting nonetheless.

In the United States, the safety record of the commercial airline industry has improved since it deregulated its industry in 1978. Meanwhile, the number of American carriers has grown from 38 to more than 225. In fact when we had an opportunity to visit Washington and discuss these statistics it was indicated that from the time deregulation began in the United States, when there were approximately 200 million people using the air transportation system, the number grew to over 400 million passengers being conveyed on the nation's carriers in 1983 and 1984. That volume alone would put extra pressure upon the system, but it still responded. An excellent air safety record is still being enjoyed in spite of some of the major situations that have been given so much media attention.

The Government also has important safety responsibilities in other modes of transport. The Canada Shipping Act amendments which will improve marine safety will be brought back very shortly before the House. A uniform national safety code for trucking was approved by the federal and provincial Governments in October. A new railway safety Bill is being developed. Other safety initiatives in the transportation of dangerous goods and in highway programs are being introduced under current safety legislation. Canadians have better service at better prices with the same or greater levels of safety, along with the passing of the National Transportation Act. The Government has not, nor will it ever, compromise safety in any manner or through any legislation.

Another area that has received a fair amount of attention involves regional economic development. I am pleased that the Government understands that an efficient transportation system is needed for enduring regional economic development. The National Transportation Act policy states for the first time—and I emphasize for the first time in legislation—that transportation is a key to regional development. First and foremost the new legislation is directed toward reducing burdensome regulation. This will stimulate competition and create a more dynamic and innovative transportation system. The result will be the best service at the best possible price. That will benefit all regions. Jobs will be created and maintained in all industries in which competitive transportation services are critical to meeting competition, especially foreign competition.

However, that does not mean that the federal Government is insensitive to the special needs for certain transportation services in Canada's regions. The federal Government remains strongly committed to the principles of economic development agreed to by the First Ministers in February of 1985. Those principles reflect arguments made by the provincial Premiers, particularly those from Atlantic Canada, principles which guide all the Government's policies.

The Atlantic Canadian Premiers made a very strong point, not only to the Minister but also to the Standing Committee on Transport, that we must recognize in this legislation that transportation is a key to regional development. This is the very first time that legislation which recognizes that transportation is a key to regional development has been introduced.

Federal transportation programs will continue to benefit Canada's regions. The Maritime Freight Rates Act and the Atlantic Region Freight Assistance Act benefit Atlantic Canada with more than $75 million a year being paid by the federal Government to subsidize transportation costs relevant to Atlantic Canada. The western grain transportation legislation provides transportation assistance exceeding $600 million a year. Furthermore, the federal-provincial co-operation that now exists through transportation ERDAs continues, and will continue, to develop the transportation system in various parts of the country, particularly Atlantic Canada. None of these programs will be affected by the new National Transportation Act, contrary to some of the impressions given by other Members of the House who do not support the progressive legislation put forward in Bill C-18.

I remind all Members that what is needed today to achieve real progress in regional economic development is comprehensive planning and local initiative. Laying rail into remote areas is no longer sufficient to generate permanent and viable jobs. People and their skills, natural advantages and services must all be taken into account. Fortunately, the Government has understood these fundamental facts of life and is acting accordingly.

Co-operation in setting priorities and planning in a comprehensive way is being pursued through the ERDA mechanism and regular meetings of the First Ministers, such as the one held in Vancouver last November. Local input and initiative are being pursued through new approaches, typified by the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced in the last Speech from the Throne and which is currently being put in place to provide some economic opportunities for Atlantic Canada.

As well, the Minister of Transport and the Government have listened and responded to the special transportation needs of northern Canada. In the northern areas of five provinces and the whole of the two territories the new legislation introduces some additional competition but maintains strong safeguards to protect absolutely essential air services and community resupply. In line with the Government emphasis on greater fiscal accountability, transportation assistance directed to regions will be open and above board, not hidden beneath a veil of regulatory decisions. This is the approach of the new National Transportation Act.

Sensitivity to local concerns is reflected in the rail provisions of the NTA. Important benefits are provided to captive shippers. This is particularly important for shippers in Atlantic Canada and in the West, particularly those involved in the resource industry. For the first time the Minister of Transport will be authorized to provide financial support for alternative transportation services to replace rail branch lines that are no longer viable. The new NTA will allow the Government to spend smarter on branch lines. One of the statistics that Canadian National keeps emphasizing to members of Parliamnt is that 33 per cent of its rail trackage in this country generates only 1 per cent of the revenue that that firm takes in. The changes being provided for in the NTA will enable the Minister for the first time to provide some direct financial assistance to enable the railways to look at the best way of providing a service, particularly to those we call captive shippers.

I believe that the Government has shown flexibility and sensitivity in proceeding with this reform of economic regulation. The interests of Canadians of every region will be better served by this balanced set of regulatory reforms.

Concerns have been raised that the legislation provides non-reciprocal access and advantage to U.S. railways in Canada, thereby betraying our independence and, as yelled by the Opposition regularly, a sell-out of our nation. This legislation is not designed to provide U.S. carriers access to Canadian markets but, rather, to resolve the all-pervasive transportation dilemma that has faced Canadian captive shippers for years. This legislation provides these shippers with a choice of competitive routings for the first time. Those shippers need competition to get the best service at the best price. They need that service and price to meet the rigours of international competition. Business people across Canada have told us that they want to finally throw off the burden of being captive to one railway. The core of this issue is that new regulatory provisions will allow competitive forces to be introduced into captive markets. There will be competition where there was none before.

An equitable balance in negotiating rates will be introduced between captive shippers and carriers, something that is absent from the present National Transportation Act. Canadian railways will be forced to compete for the first time for the traffic of captive shippers. I believe they are fully capable of meeting this challenge.

In addition, the Bill contains specific provisions to protect against diversion of Canadian traffic where there exists competitive domestic routes. As far as the lack of access by Canadian railways to U.S. markets goes, nothing could be further from the truth. We still tend to perceive CN and CP as purely Canadian railroads. Because of this their activity in the United States is usually overlooked. In 1984 the combined operations of CN and CP's U.S. subsidiaries would have ranked as the seventh-largest U.S. railroad.

These operations provide Canadian railways with wide access to U.S. markets. Joint traffic agreements with other U.S. railways extend this capability from coast to coast. Both Canadian railways have demonstrated the ability to compete effectively in highly competitive U.S. transportation markets. There is no reason why CN and CP cannot compete just as effectively for Canadian traffic and thereby retain existing market share and possibly regain market share that has been lost in the past.

Another area that I want to address myself to quickly involves the aspect of air service and air service levels. For two years Canadians have received some of the benefits of regulatory reform of air transport implemented on a makeshift basis. Now the Government is placing the freedom to compete in air services on a permanent footing. Opponents of these reforms say that our smaller communities will be cut off from essential services because of the new legislation. That is plain old scare tactics, for which they have become well known.

What is happening in advance of legislation is that air services are balancing out as new opportunities present themselves in different regions. For example, in Atlantic Canada in my City of Moncton, there is now a greater system of air service than there has been at any time in the past. There has been the entrance of two or three new airlines into the market, which are providing improved service to people who at one time were discouraged, particularly in their attempt to go east from Moncton by air. There is a now a renewed faith in these companies and the service that they are providing, and a larger number of people are now using the air services offered by the old air carriers, as well as the new companies that have become involved.

In western Canada when Canadian Pacific Airlines, Air Canada, and Pacific Western reduced or withdrew their jet services in the Vancouver-Victoria market, Air B.C., Time Air, and others, introduced new or increased turbo-prop services into this market. In August, 1983 the market was served by four jet carriers which provided nine jet flights a day, as well as five non-jet flights. Within two years this has increased to seven carriers offering 63 flights daily in that area. The flying time between Vancouver and Victoria by jet was 28 minutes. Today it takes 25 minutes in the Canadian-made de Havilland Dash-8. Realistically, the longer the flight distance between destinations, the faster a jet will cover the distance. A difference of five or ten minutes additional flying time will not turn people away from flying, especially if departure times and connections are more convenient and available to jet services in distant destinations.

In the far north air service is absolutely essential to many communities. In many cases the economics of providing needed services are fragile. Northern air service is a special case for economic regulatory reform, and the NTA addresses itself to that issue.

Over-all the NTA is a balanced package to provide better and more efficient transportation services throughout Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member who has just expressed his views on the Bill, a Member who sits on the Standing Committee on Transport and who, with his colleagues, studied the draft paper tabled by the former Minister of Transport and entitled Freedom to Move. He knows full well that practically all witnesses who appeared at the public hearings of this parliamentary committee were opposed to the Conservative Government's far-reaching deregulation project, and I fail to understand how the Hon. Member can possibly claim in a terse statement that the National Transportation Act introduced by the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) will solve the problem of air transport in the remote regions of the country.

For starters, he would know that the parliamentary committee Members did not travel to the remote regions of the country, therefore they did not gather on the spot the many representations which might have been made to Hon. Members. We did get these representations through the mail and they are against the Bill as drafted. Government decisions with respect to deregulation in Canada's frontier regions will inevitably lead to reduced services or even, in some cases, outright cancellation of existing services in such regions. Yet nowhere in this Bill is there any reference to guaranteed services in remote regions.

Unless I am mistaken, the Hon. Member did say earlier that the proposed legislation deals with such cases. I would ask him to tell me which clause, which line and which page of the Bill contains this guarantee with respect to the maintenance of existing services in remote regions. If the guarantee does exist, where is it? I wish he would tell me which clause of the Bill refers to this.

[English]

Mr. Cochrane: Before I comment on the service provided to the North, the Transport Committee did visit northern Canada and conducted a series of hearings. I will not address myself to the numbers and the Members who were present, but those who were there know where we were. We visited a number of places in northern Canada. If the Hon. Member suggests that these places are not remote, I suggest that we have greater problems than transportation. We visited Resolute, Rankin Inlet, Churchill, Inuvik, Yellowknife, and Whitehorse. We had a chance to talk to the people and hear what they were saying about the industry. They had some fears and apprehension, and that is understandable. But they felt that they had a hearing. When we returned we put some of that information that we had heard into that draft legislation in our response to the Freedom to Move.

Mr. Benjamin: Where?

Mr. Cochrane: We also indicated that there is a concern. For the first time the Minister will have the opportunity to make sure that, if an airline decides to leave a certain location, it has to give notice of the period of time that it is going to vacate. That gives the Minister an opportunity to call for proposals. It also gives him an opportunity, if necessary, to subsidize someone who responds to that proposal call. In this manner, we can guarantee that there will be a service provided. That mechanism will exist. It may not provide existing carriers, it may not guarantee jet service, but nevertheless there is a process there to make sure that we are to provide a level of air service to some of the remote areas in this country that need that air service for the transportation needs of the people, and for the issues of re-supply as it relates to northern Canada.

Mr. Benjamin: I listened with care to the Hon. Member for Moncton (Mr. Cochrane). Early in his remarks he talked about the United States' experience on safety and the volume of traffic. I will provide my hon. friend with a copy of the article from Time Magazine which is entitled: "Be careful out there," and the article from Business Week on deregulation in the United States. As I am sure you are aware, Mr. Speaker, these are not NDP documents or publications.

In discussing the trucking business the article in Business Week states:

> There's no question the big guys are getting bigger and the bottom end is getting squeezed.

In discussing the airlines it states:

> The six largest carriers control 84 per cent of the market—

Prior to that the article states:

> The dimensions of the concentration trend are disquieting.

In regard to railroads it states that mergers have reduced the ranks to six large carriers. The Canadian railway industry ranks number seven in the United States. That means it is the little guy, the small end of the ranks. Those six control 93 per cent of the traffic through mergers, takeovers, and bankruptcies. The articles also discuss safety in the airlines, the railroads, and the trucking companies in the United States. The Hon. Member mentioned Members having been in Washington. I wish to remind the House that that was over two years ago, and it has worsened. I also wish to remind my hon. friend that even then it was admitted that they were desperately short of air traffic controllers and inspectors in all modes of transportation. They are just going through the motions and in Time Magazine they are saying, "Be careful out there."

For one, the Canadian Truckers' Association is asking that all the legislation concerning safety in the trucking industry, railroads, marine, and airlines be put in place.

The safety boards proposed by the Government should be put in place. The multimodal accident investigation board should be put in place. All these things should be done before this legislation is proceeded with. If the Government means what it says about inspection, safety, and security, would the Hon. Member not agree that those things should be in place before starting to deregulate all modes of transportation?

Mr. Cochrane: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that Hon. Members opposite have a hard time remembering where they have been and when they were there. I believe the Hon. Member attended the sessions which I attended in Washington just a year ago, not two years ago.

Mr. Benjamin: It was more than that.

Mr. Cochrane: I think the record will show that I am correct. Nonetheless, we had first-hand exposure to the American industry. When we talk about the safety aspect, we saw two things happening in the United States which have not and will not happen in Canada associated with the NTA. First, the FAA and its director made very clear to us that they had taken a serious cut in the number of people assigned to policing the safety aspects of their industry. That is not happening in Canada. In fact, as I pointed out today, we have added 100 people to our roles.

Mr. Benjamin: You need 300 more.

Mr. Cochrane: We have added 100 people at a time when we have attempted to restrain our budget. We recognized that priority and added 100 people.

In addition, in the United States there was a major dispute with air traffic controllers. Everyone knows what the President did with regard to the air traffic control situation. Everyone knows how unfortunate it was, not only for the workers but for the people using the industry. That is not happening in Canada. We have an excellent air traffic control system. We are spending $600 million to upgrade our radar system. We are adding people to our air traffic control system. We are ensuring that the regulation will be accompanied by a uniform system to guarantee improvement in the materials, facilities, and qualifications of the people assigned to those tasks.

The American example does not relate to the Canadian situation. We are involved in an orderly and progressive deregulation of the transportation industry, consulting with the people, the provinces, the shippers, and the employees to ensure that our record in Canada will stand. We are doing it progressively with a very comprehensive plan.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I have a short question for the Hon. Member. Earlier I asked him to indicate which clause of the Bill deals with a guarantee of continued service in remote areas of the country. He might sound very convincing and strong in his answer, but in reality he did not answer. He gave a long explanation because he knows very well that there is no clause in the legislation which assures continued service in remote areas. It is open season. A company could come in, start to give service, cream the market in the good season, stop operating, and leave the region without any service at all. It will be total chaos unless there are agencies like the CTC to continue to ensure services in these areas. The Government has totally abdicated its responsibility vis-à-vis remote areas of the country. Again I ask the Hon. Member to tell us where in the legislation there is a guarantee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Moncton (Mr. Cochrane) on a succinct rebuttal, please.

Mr. Cochrane: Mr. Speaker, because I do not have a copy of Bill C-18 with me, I am not able to give the Hon. Member the exact chapter. Nonetheless, we recognized that concern when we went into northern Canada. There was an expression of that concern, not only by the people but by the companies providing the service.

There is a process by which the Minister can intervene and give a 90-day notice with regard to service, so basically that should take an area through the winter period. Then the Minister can call for a proposal and not allow the carrier to leave the market until he is convinced that there is a solution. Then he can provide for a supplementary program from the Government in order to subsidize the operation into the particular area.

We feel that process may not even be necessary because companies are operating more efficiently. I think they are enjoying greater respectability as far as the population is concerned. As they build their credibility and reliability, people will rely on them, and I do not think they will encounter economic difficulties in the northern areas.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak to Bill C-18, an Act respecting national transportation. The Bill will have a major effect upon the manner in which goods and passengers are moved by ship, by rail, by airline and through extraprovincial trucking firms which will be allowed to conduct business under the new rules. Everything from foreign ownership of our transportation sector to safety standards and profit margins will be affected by the measures contained in the Bill.

If we were examining a Bill for deregulation which had been put together in an orderly, thoughtful, and careful way, with protection for our Canadian industries, I believe we on this side of the House would be strongly supporting it. However, this is not the case. What we have here—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. If Hon. Members would like to discuss the particular Bill behind the curtains, I would appreciate it very much. I would like to listen to the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone).

Mrs. Finestone: We may share differing points of view but at least we can have the respect to listen.

As I was saying, the idea has good potential and we find the idea acceptable. It is the procedure, the manner, the lack of thoroughness, and the concerns we have which lead us to ask that the Bill go back for reconsideration.

If we take a look at the Bill, we see that what we have is the giving up of a free trade negotiating card. We are jeopardizing our own Canadian markets and our own Canadian jobs. We will really be setting up a unilateral free trade situation with no reciprocal rights. It is absolutely disgraceful.

We have just gone through the whole business of books, drugs, trees, shakes and shingles, softwood lumber, and now we are putting trucking, shipping, and railway lines into jeopardy, and we are not even using it as a bargaining chip. I do not know what is wrong with the planning of the Government, but it is certainly not thinking very far ahead.

I would like to direct my remarks to particular sectors of the transportation industry which will be impacted should our transportation industry be deregulated in the manner outlined and proposed in the Bill. I would like to recommend strongly, at the end of my remarks, that the regulatory framework and the interprovincial agreements need further study, and should be studied, and that the whole matter go back to committee. They should come back with an amended Bill, something of which all Canadians can be proud, safe, and assured.

Let us take a look at the airline industry. The Government spoke of its grandiose plans. I listened to my hon. colleague talk about la situation dans les endroits éloignés. I think there is great cause for concern. When we look at those plans, they often speak in terms of the large corporations involved. We must not for one moment neglect employees in the industry who will be affected if Bill C-18 is passed in its current form.

For example, employees in the airline industry could face large lay-offs and displacement from deregulation. When I make this statement I draw upon the U.S. experience where deregulation was introduced in 1978. It is reported that from 1978 to 1985 approximately 40,000 airline employees lost their jobs. The evidence is there in black and white. This is not fearmongering, this is a reality. Those large lay-offs were as a result of deregulation.

In Bill C-18 we fail to protect the employees of Canada's airline industry. The Bill will not even require airline companies to compensate displaced workers or to give fair warning before lay-off. I do not think that is what Canadians want, and I do not think that is what the Government should be allowed to do.

Mr. Roy Rideout, Vice-President of Canadian Pacific Airlines, has been quoted in the press as saying that Canadians have unrealistic expectations from the Government's plan to deregulate the airline industry. He indicated that these expectations were fuelled by the release of a White Paper entitled Freedom to Move in July 1985 by the former Minister of Transport.

• (1440)

The recommendations set forth in that White Paper have been largely incorporated into Bill C-18. In the course of the past year, the Government has been promoting its Freedom to Move deregulation package by telling Canadians that air fares on Canadian airlines would drop as a result of deregulation. It is difficult to see how air fares will drop when airlines are currently making only very small profits, if any. Prices will only fall in the longer term if there are cuts in the costs of productivity or other overhead expenses. The increased competition which is predicted by the supporters of this Bill could very well lead to a movement toward a "no frills" strategy where safety could easily be compromised.

This brings me to the subject of safety, Mr. Speaker, which is of the utmost importance to all of us, the safety of airline passengers in a deregulated environment. A recent headline in La Presse reads:

[Translation]

More aircraft accidents with deregulation—We can expect the number of plane accidents in Canada to increase, as a result of deregulation and the increased activity in this sector—et cetera, et cetera.

[English]

Looking at one week's worth of press clippings on this subject, you will find that all of them have pointed out the dangers and concerns of deregulation. For instance, we have the headline "Deregulation will hurt us, CP Rail says". Provincial Governments and their experts are very concerned. Industry officials fear that deregulation plans will run Canadian truckers off the road. If this is a Government that is open, listening and busy consulting, it ought to read the newspapers a little more carefully and it should open its ears and listen to what the people are saying rather than going pell-mell from an ideological perspective into deregulation without enough forethought.

With respect to safety considerations to which I was referring, we regret that the legislation contains no safeguards preventing situations that would effectively reduce safety standards in the airline industry. The American experience has shown us that this is a real danger.

Our position is based on four observations. First, deregulation brings on a substantial increase in competition, which in lean and more difficult times leads to few remaining options in cost-cutting strategies. At these stressful periods, a lesser managerial integrity will lead to cost cutting in maintenance, monitoring, inspection and verification of aircraft, perhaps not in our largest and major airline carriers but certainly in the smaller ones. That is of serious concern. Second, deregulation strongly encourages new entries into the market by relaxing the regulations for entry. These new companies often enter with inexperienced and improperly trained employees to maintain aircraft. Third, deregulation impacts on established and new carriers to demand concessions from their employees. These often lead to longer working hours, stress, job insecurity, lower wages and fatigue, all of which contribute to a higher risk of human error. Fourth, in the United States the Federal Aviation Administration, the FAA, in 1979 had 2,000 inspectors monitoring 237 air carriers. In 1984, it had 1,300 inspectors for 407 air carriers. If we are to maintain and improve safety with respect to availability of inspectors, at least that particular point would not be of ongoing concern. We believe that these four situations speak for themselves.

There is no possible way that these direct consequences of deregulation can increase safety standards. They can only act to decrease them. We recommend that before deregulation is allowed to flourish fully in Canada that the federal Government introduce the necessary amendments and measures to protect the traveller from these potentially serious dangers. To compound the problem even more, in his report to the House of Commons for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1985, Auditor General Kenneth Dye stated:

—none of the Transport Canada regions was able to inspect all carriers in its jurisdiction at least once a year.

That means several air carriers in Canada that year went without any inspection whatever. These are not what we call high safety standards, and by no means should deregulation be introduced until strict and unequivocal safety measures are put in place. Any policy which in any minute way puts in peril the safety of the airline travellers in Canada will be vehemently opposed by the Liberal Party in Canada.

One thing that struck me particularly, having spent so many months on the parliamentary committee on equality rights and travelling across this land, listening to the plight of the handicapped in our society, was the lack of any kind of consideration for the accessibility, comfort and safety needs of the handicapped on all types of transportation. I could recount chapter and verse, but I will not go into the details at this time. Let me assure you, Sir, that handicapped people do not have easy access to our planes, trains and buses, something which should be looked at in keeping with the spirit of Section 15, the equality section of our new charter. I believe, and I would hope that having brought this to the attention of the Government, that when this Bill goes for study a proper amendment will be made to this Bill.

With respect to the trucking industry, Mr. Speaker, it is very important to the City of Montreal, as you well know. It is a major transportation centre and it needs to use the trucking industry. It is of considerable concern to me that the federal Government's plan to deregulate the Canadian trucking industry is fraught with many difficulties. A number of trucking firms in Canada have expressed concern that they will be run off the road by U.S. based haulers if this Bill is adopted. Unless deregulation comes gradually, giant U.S. trucking firms could squeeze out Canadian truckers and take over segments of the Canadian market. While listening to my colleague across the way, I was thumbing through a number of press clippings. I came across one observation which really worries me, and I hope it will be taken into consideration. Under the title of "Truckers Warn Province Loser in Deregulation", we find:

> Domestic truckers will be run off the road by U.S. based haulers if a proposed transport deregulation package is adopted by federal and provincial Governments.

It talks about the access which foreign truckers have to our industry through our roads. The Ottawa Citizen reported Ken Maclaren, executive director of the Canadian Trucking Association, as saying:

> Its like letting Attila the Hun and Genghis Khan loose.

If we are going to allow the U.S. trucking industry access to our routes and the right to come approximately 50 miles into our territory, what are we doing so that our trucks can have similar access and fair play on the American side? That is something we must look at very carefully. Certain segments of the trucking industry in Canada are already ailing. Therefore, deregulation comes at the wrong time since carriers are operating under reduced profit margins.

Consider, for example, the problems of many of the trucking firms which have been quoted in these articles. In order to prepare for the changes which will be brought about by deregulation, trucking firms are already scrambling into mergers and acquisitions. In the past year, Reimer Express bought the trucking firm called Inter City. The Brazeau transport group of Montreal bought three Quebec based regional carriers. Canadian Motorways Limited of Winnipeg acquired Direct Transportation System of Toronto. It seems that Canadian truckers are receiving the message that to prosper under deregulation and to compete with the U.S. fleets they must be large operators. The federal Government seems to feel that large, big, equals beautiful and is largely unconcerned about the corporate concentration which will result.

I have a letter from Jacques Alary, the Executive Vice-President of Association du Cammionage du Quebec Inc. He writes of some very serious concerns which I would like to bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, and I hope that you will give them very serious consideration.

Dean Madam:

> On October 2 last year, a meeting was held in Toronto by the federal Minister of Transport, John Crosbie, and his provincial counterparts.
> The purpose of this meeting was to decide on the future of regulation of the transportation industry.
> Our provincial Minister of Transport, Mr. Marc-Yvan Côté, supported the approach suggested by the ACQ.
> It proposes no deregulation without first providing for a comprehensive framework, as follows:
> 1. a uniform transport safety code that is both enforced and enforceable;
> 2. a skills test;
> 4. a formula for amortizing the present value of transport licences;
> 5. special attention to market takeovers through price discrimination.

It will kill competition and cause some concentration.

And he goes on:

> Our provincial Minister, Mr. Marc-Yvan Côté, who defended this position at the meeting, received only partial support from the Ministers from Ontario and Manitoba—

—which means there was no consensus between the various provincial Ministers, because to achieve a consensus, there must be mutual support. In concluding he says:

> We ask you to urge the Prime Minister, Mr. Brian Mulroney, to refuse to consider the Bill to amend the Transport Act as proposed by the Minister of Transport, Mr. John Crosbie, until a consensus has been reached among the various parties concerned, including the trucking industry.
> You will realize that the trucking industry cannot bear an increase of its social and fiscal charges on the one hand, and on the other a deregulation of the freight transportation industry; the fierce competition which would result would destabilize the effectiveness of the industry and jeopardize the proper servicing of various Quebec regions.
> Our industry will not be able to fight off the competition from American truckers who will easily operate along all the lucrative transportation corridors originating from our major urban centres situated only a few kilometers away from their border.
> "My government will again be placing before Parliament measures to give Canadians a more efficient, competitive and safe transport system by relieving the burden of unnecessary regulations in the transportation sector."

That was in Brian Mulroney's Speech from the Throne. And he requests that we reconsider this matter.

I know my time is running short, but I want to address the issue of foreign ownership as the Bill contains no provisions setting limitations on foreign takeovers of Canadian transport companies. The few guidelines that exist are that all mergers and takeovers over $20 million and over 10 per cent of the voting shares of a Canadian transportation firm will be reviewed by the Governor in Council, and that all those below these ceilings will be reviewed by the normal Investment Canada procedure. I believe that is something we should all fear.

I recently received a letter from and had interviews with people from CP Rail, a Mr. Richard Bell and a Mr. Jacques Côté they expressed very serious concerns about CP and CN. Given the time, I would simply say that the management feels we must send this Bill back because there is the potential for a loss of jobs and the loss of contracts to our own Canadian competition. The inevitable conclusion is that there will be very serious suffering for workers.

These workers feel that they are facing extremely unfair American competition. They feel that Bill C-18 would place the integrity of Canada's railway system at risk and that there is no provision in U.S. law that would similarly require American railways to expose their traffic to competition from Canada. We are looking at unfair competition from the American side. I hope we will give this Bill very serious consideration by sending it back to committee.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) has raised a number of points. Her question about the disabled community is well worth answering. I actually worked on the committee which reviewed the human rights legislation a number of years ago.

Mrs. Finestone: One year, that's all. April 17.

Mr. Kilgour: It seems to me that we worked on it earlier as well. The simple answer is that when this measure is passed, it will be subject to human rights legislation. The disabled community will have all of the rights with respect to access and so on that have been built into the human rights legislation which I support fully, as does the Hon. Member. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) has an advisory group on the development of access standards, and these will, I hope, quickly become part of the human rights legislation which will be enforced in the Act.

Regarding the question of safety, Members of the Hon. Member's Party have quoted the Auditor General's report for 1985, noting that Transport Canada was unable to inspect 100 per cent of Canada's air carriers at least once a year. The Auditor General's observation was a fact, although he did not conclude that this was inadequate. One hundred per cent inspection remains a goal, but the primary concern today is to conduct more frequent and intensive inspections of high risk activities and carriers. The number of air carrier inspector positions has been increased by 31 per cent over 1984-85, and steps have been taken to improve the effectiveness of inspection staff.

Please remember, Mr. Speaker, that Transport Canada has 13,000 men and women working on safety every day of every year. The Department's expenditures in that area will be about $1.2 billion this year. The highest priority is being given to safety. The Hon. Member raised a number of other points but I think I should leave time for her if she wishes to reply.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I have a real deep and abiding concern over safety. It is not a partisan concern, because either the Hon. Member or I could be on an aircraft. A recent study indicates that we require a minimum of 300 new inspectors if we are to at least maintain a decent safety record. When will we see these 300 people hired to do a task that must be done?

I am pleased to hear that my colleague has been studying the issue of the handicapped. I am glad to know that there might be some consideration given to that. However, as the saying goes, I'm from Missouri—show me. I would like to know in what clause of the Bill are these provisions and what kind of measures are being taken. I do not simply want goodwill, I want to know where it is written.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I should like to congragulate the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) for her excellent speech, especially that part which she developed about the Government's complete lack of a coherent policy for the Canadianization of the transportation industry. It is clear that the major transportation companies in Canada have traditionally always been Canadian. As a matter of fact, Canada has greatly progressed because of the Canadian Pacific and Canadian National Railways, both having contributed to the tremendous development of our country. When we read this Bill and hear the interpretations and remarks from the officials of both these major companies, we realize that the legislation put forward by the Conservative Government could result in the breaking up of both these great Canadian companies.

Both CPR and CNR officials have publicly stated that they felt unfairly treated by this Bill from a Conservative Government. Well, I know that for lack of time at the end of her speech, the Hon. Member was prevented from telling us what she would have liked to say about the concerns expressed by the railway companies. I think it would be appropriate for her to reflect on these objections which I feel are entirely founded because if, on the one hand, the Government wants to allow major Canadian shippers to move their goods at a lower cost, it would be unfortunate, on the other hand, if this bill killed these transportation companies which move manufactured products in Canada. Because then the manufacturers themselves would be the losers on the long run. And above all is the real danger that big Canadian transport companies might fall into foreign hands. I believe the Hon. Member could shed more lignt on what is being done in the United States in that respect.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I must tell the Hon. Member that he is the expert. As far as I am concerned, I only read and listen closely to witnesses who come and see me at my office. I can assure you that there were many witnesses—they are deeply concerned about allowing Americans to enter Canada with whatever means of transportation. They are governed by rules that are totally different from ours and this gives them a competitive edge. They are not subject as we are to statutes and regulations. So they can come here and sign contracts. They are not in the same competitive situation.

In my view, Mr. Speaker, when you have confidential contracts, you have increased competition and no control over the Americans who enter this country nor over their right to buy out our property, or to take over our routes.

• (1500)

—traffic routes. It is a moment of deep concern. That is why I support the motion to send the Bill back to committee for more study. The concept of deregulation is not a poor one, but it has not been carefully worked out. Our Canadian sovereignty and development should be first and foremost. While we are so busy selling off, deregulating, and allowing access to the United States and other countries, we should think of the social costs of putting our own people out of work. If that were calulated in, what would we end up with?

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, there is no section in Bill C-18 which deals with access. That is covered in the human rights legislation which will apply to this Bill.

With regard to the question raised by the Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet)—

[Translation]

The Hon. Member mentioned competition and I must tell him that in the United States, since deregulation, the number of jobs in trucking and in air transportation has increased rather interestingly.

[English]

This Bill requires three basic criteria to get a domestic air service licence. One of those is the requirement to be Canadian. At least 75 per cent of the voting interests must be owned or controlled by Canadians. Therefore, I think the Hon. Member's fears in that area are unfounded.

With regard to the railways, it is true that they must be viable, and we believe that they will be. However, for too many generations, especially in my part of the country, the railways have been living on the backs of the shippers and producers of potash, lumber, etc. In order to create more jobs in those sectors the railways must stop setting rates at the levels they choose, forcing the suppliers and shippers to pay what the railways can gouge out of them.

We are conscious of the concerns about the viability of the railways and believe they will be met. At committee we will listen to any representations on that issue. We accept, of course, that the railways must continue to be viable, but not to the point of preventing people from the other eight provinces to earn a living. I note that both of the speakers this afternoon are from the inner two provinces. People in the northern regions of Quebec and Ontario have rights too.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will allow the Hon. Member to reply briefly.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member is so comfortable with this Bill, what objection has he to going back to committee and hearing the Premiers of the provinces and leaders of the industry who are not of the same opinion as him, and then revising the Bill? I suggest that that is exactly what he should do.

• (1510)

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, in 1984, we received a very definite message from the population to reorganize the country and our industries, and to give Canadians better equipment for a better living, and I am happy to see that the now Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) was the first to propose a review of the Transportation Act. I would like to commend him, and also to commend a Quebecer who, as Minister of State for Transportation, visited part of the Province of Quebec, listening to the various people involved in transportation—and indeed I attended many of these meetings—and I would like also to commend my colleague for Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan) who, as Chairman of our Transport Committee, also questioned many Canadians throughout the country, from east to west, from north to south. This team produced a document which contains our basic message, Freedom to Move. Before going any further I think I should sum up the principle and main point of our message, of our approach to this issue: Are Canadians there to serve the bureaucrats, or to be enslaved by public servants, legislation and procedural red tape as institutionalized by our Liberal predecessors? Or should it not be the other way around—bureaucrats at the service of Canadians, business people, consumers and buyers?

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the answer to the question is that the bureaucracy is there to serve us. We must be the masters of bureaucrats, not their slaves.

It used to be that management people anxious to improve the services offered by their transport company or to open a new transport business had to meet the requirements of a wide array of legislative constraints. They had to spend as much energy on simply getting permits as they would eventually do on offering their services, so we decided to get rid of this abusive legislation. Our Bill takes three major principles into account. First, the safety of the transport network remains our priority. Second, competition and market forces—words unheard of in Canada a few years ago—have to be the main factors of our approach aimed at providing less costly yet profitable, efficient and adequate transport services. And the third major principle: our policy is based on the fact that transport is a tool for regional and economic development.

The ultimate purpose of our legislation is lower prices for the Canadian consumer, and people have to understand that.

Canadians produce each year $500 billion worth of goods and services, including about $300 billion in goods. We export $120 billion of these goods abroad, including $95 billion to the United States. If our transport deregulation policy results in a lower product cost for Canadians and foreign importers, it will have been a success. I would like to quote a few figures to show the importance of transportation costs in the Canadian production process.

In the case of a resource industry such as agriculture, for instance, when the product gets into the hands of the first purchaser, that is a wholesaler or a secondary processor, transport already accounts for 3.2 per cent; for iron and other mining products, 10.8 per cent, for coal, 9 per cent; for asbestos, 10.3 per cent; for gympsum, 51 per cent, and I believe that most Canadians are surrounded by gypsum, at least in their own homes. In the case of salt, transport accounts for 38 per cent of the cost; for gravel and sand, 26 per cent.

If we look at the manufacturing industry and at the difference made by transportation costs before the products are delivered to the wholesalers, and these figures are to be added to those I have already mentioned, we find transportation costs of 10.9 per cent for sawmills, 5.3 per cent for pulp and paper industries, 5.3 per cent for aluminium ingots, 10 per cent for petroleum and coal products, that is for more of less refined hydrocarbons, 8.5 per cent for fertilizers, and so on.

Mr. Speaker, all that goes to show that transport has a very substantial effect on the cost of our products. That is why we are trying today to lower the cost of our products. We have only to look around us to discover the hidden cost of transport in either longlasting or more perishable consumer products, whether we are speaking about a television set, which contains refined hydrocarbons, plastic items, which contain copper and various other metals, our homes, furniture and light fixtures, the exported fruit we eat, the meat which costs a lot of money to transport, candy, or whatever. Each day, a Canadian family pays maybe 20 or 30 per cent of what it spends on consumer products for transport.

That is why in order to enable private entreprise to be more imaginative and to reduce costs, we will implement and stand up to our deregulation project firstly to reduce costs to the Canadian consumer and, secondly, as I mentioned earlier, we will do so to facilitate our access to the exportation markets. We know that percentages in the costs of an item are all important: 2 per cent, 5 per cent, 7 per cent. And often that narrow percentage is enough to help sell our products abroad. That is why in our belief that private enterprise is inventive enough and can rationalize our means of transportation, we will reduce costs. Consumers will take advantage of reduced transportation rates in relation with the cost of their products.

In the same way, since we have been in power in September 1984, Mr. Speaker, consumers have seen the reduction in the Bank of Canada rate down to 7.5 per cent. This is the first time since 1973. It is embarrassing to say the Liberal administration with the agreement of the Socialists, forced Canadians to pay up to 22.75 per cent interest in 1981. Meanwhile, the Government of Canada was borrowing billions of dollars, and generations of Canadians, we, our children and grandchildren will have to pay. Our transport legislation, however, will make goods cheaper, and that is important. By making goods cheaper, and this is something the Liberals have never understood, we are enhancing our competitive position on export markets, especially in the U.S., which means it is easier to compete and get better orders.

Our Government has given the private sector, the business shakers and movers, the task to make Canadians come out winners in a new world economy where it is becoming increasingly difficult to compete. However, by giving the experts in the private sector the best possible conditions for competing on foreign markets, we will succeed. We will not if we leave it up to the technocrats and the senior bureaucracy who are too far removed from these problems.

In October 1980, the United States passed the Staggers Rail Act. This is a piece of American legislation. The U.S., with its 225 million people and a Government that takes its responsibilities seriously, one of the strongest governments in the world, decided it was time to deregulate the transportation sector. I believe that at the time, our own Government did not realize how important it was to make this adjustment to the economic situation, and during the four subsequent years, our Government never made the slightest move towards deregulation, in other words, towards adjusting to modern production and distribution methods. What results has deregulation had in the U.S.? One important result has been that competition has made goods cheaper. That is what happened in the United States and it will happen here.

Meanwhile, the Canadians under the Liberals did not have an opportunity to compete with the United States. Anything but. The Liberals' failure to act has led to the development of bypass systems in the United States, so that telephone calls from Eastern Canada are routed across the American border and then back on the West Coast. Highway transportation has followed the same route, and the same goes for railway freight. Ingenious Canadians have had to adjust to the U.S. legislation and live with the inaction of the Liberals who were in power at the time. Since 1980 we have been losing our transport companies, while the United States benefitted from the situation. There were many similar developments, Mr. Speaker.

It is high time we amended our transportation legislation. I think one of the main arguments in favour was made in the landmark speech on December 19, 1986 by the Minister of Transport. Mr. Speaker, I shall, if I may, quote the Minister of Transport.

Our regulatory regime today impedes—that is the tendency—rather than supports economic development. It stifles competition in all modes of transportation. It reduces the competitiveness of our producers and the free movement of goods and people. If we do not have an efficient and effective transportation system, everyone who manufactures goods or provides services here in Canada is at a disadvantage compared with his competitors in the rest of the world. That is why these bills are known as the freedom to move legislation. They are meant to send a message to Canadian business and the traveller. We are freeing the transportation sector from the shackles of heavy handed economic regulation.

Mr. Speaker, there are people who are concerned about where this Bill is going, and I heard the Hon. Member opposite speaking earlier about the concerns of the trucking industry. I would like to draw the attention of the House to an independent study on the effects of deregulation on the trucking industry that was ordered by the Canadian Conference of Motor Transport Administrators. The study concluded that gradual deregulation of market access and trucking charges has already brought about significant changes in the industry. The industry is really interested in our legislation.

This Bill will help destroy monopolies. Many people operating in remote areas did not have many outlets for distributing their goods. Our legislation gives them possible solutions. The Bill will prevent price fixing by carriers and secret deals, negotiations between various carriers. It will allow for ad hoc negotiations with each carrier from whatever part of the country, something that was not possible.

The Bill also will allow the integration of the various possible transportation services. In other words, trucking may be used in some areas and integrated with rail transportation. Previously, the legislation would not allow such adjustments, Mr. Speaker.

We will also see to it that changes are made to the Canadian Transport Commission. As we know, the existing legislation requires companies like Canadian National to provide services and make available facilities that are no longer useful to Canadians. That was already true under the Liberals and they never realized it, Mr. Speaker. Do you know that one third of Canada's railroads are used in only 1 per cent of CN's operations, and that another third of Canadian railroads are used only in 9 per cent of CN's operations?

All that means costs. Maintenance of light signals at each intersection, school buses and public carriers stopping at intersections knowing full well there no train ever comes—they have been stopping for years because of this obsolete Liberal legislation. Do you know, Mr. Speaker, that in my constituency there is a track section that has not been used for years? People in those areas have constantly been making representations to have the track removed and the land given back to adjacent owners, so that school buses may cross the track without stopping, etc. And do you know, Mr. Speaker, that despite years of efforts to have that section removed, they never succeeded because of the indifference of our predecessors in this place?

All this means, Mr. Speaker, that consumers will have no reason to fear changes in the services we will be making available to the people. Services will remain the same, the only change will be to the way they are provided. We will simply modernize the way those services are provided.

Mr. Speaker, let me also comment on the Opposition's reaction and position. But first, I have one single point to make, because I had no opportunity for exchange with the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), a Quebecer specializing in economic and financial affairs. I read something amusing, by way of an aside, Mr. Speaker, in this morning's Le Devoir, > Banking centre plan unacceptable, says Raymond Garneau.

I therefore found that very hard to swallow for Canadians. I say to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (M. Axworthy) who is concerned about employment that we have created 666 000 jobs since we came to power and that we shall create more, since we shall give Canadians opportunities to be more productive, to produce more and to sell more abroad.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, our legislation, because it lowers costs for consumers, because it increases our exports, because it makes industrial recovery easier in Canada and because it creates employment for all Canadians, must be passed swiftly and I hope we can count on the support of the Liberals. As for the support of the socialists, forget it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet).

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I would like to follow upon the comments made by the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) who so kindly congratulated the ministers who took part in the preparation and drafting of this Bill.

He stated that we should congratulate the Minister of State for Transport. I would remind him that the Conservatives have been in power for over two years, that the Leader of the Conservative Party has stated before Montrealers that he would give back to Montreal its important status as metropolis of the country, that we have had three successive Ministers of State for Transport whose mandate was to settle the problem of Mirabel and Dorval airports.

Now the first Minister of State for Transport who was Member for Roberval (Mr. Bouchard) had promised that the matter would be settled immediately. He left and was replaced by the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mrs. Blais-Grenier). The latter was more interested in travelling abroad and consequently she got lost somewhere along the Champs-Elysées so that the Dorval-Mirabel problem was never settled.

The third one, the Member for Saint-Jean (Mr. Bissonnette) who was also Minister of State, told us right away that—

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Parliamentary Secretary (Mr. Lanthier) on a point of order.

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, I think the comments made by the Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) are totally irrelevant. The competence of the various Ministers of State for Transport is not being questioned, because some of them were exceptionally brillant. But we are dealing with a bill. Consequently, it may be advisable to stick to the legislation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary does have a point but, I regret, it is debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, it is clear that the Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier) finds my remarks concerning these incompetent Ministers of State embarrassing. In any event, should he so desire, we could exchange correspondence about this. I feel, however, that my question to the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) is quite relevant. He had said that he wanted to praise a Minister of State who had been actively involved in this matter. So, I should like to find out which one. Is it the Hon. Member for Roberval? Is it the Hon. Member for Saint-Jean or is it the Hon. Member for Rosemont? Because the Hon. Member for Saint-Jean, in particular, had indicated that he would quickly settle the Dorval-Mirabel problem.

First, the Hon. Member for St. John's West, in his capacity as Minister of Transport, indicated that he preferred Dorval; then the very same day, the Hon. Member for Saint-Jean, in his capacity as Minister of State for Transport said that he favoured Mirabel.

They met a few days later. They agreed that they both were partly right. They maintained, therefore, the status quo and after two years, they brought forth a solution which is a non solution. This clearly demonstrates the incompetence and short-sightedness of the members appointed to the transportation dossier. We have a Bill which is full of loopholes because five ministers—two Ministers of Transport and three Ministers of State for Transport—were responsible for it and spoiled it.

Therefore, I do not think that the Hon. Member for Lévis should praise anybody. Quite the contrary. He should be embarrassed by some of his colleagues who have been in charge of the transportation dossier in Canada.

Mr. Fontaine: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) is a very crafty politician. He managed to mention specific points during a few minutes. He asked me to which Minister I was referring and to which Minister I wanted to pay homage. To set the record straight, Mr. Speaker, I want to pay homage to the entire Conservative Government team which now administers a country which had been saddled with a $200 billion debt during two decades of Liberal Government. And I want to pay homage as well to the consumers who gave us a mandate to represent them here.

Since the Hon. Member has alluded to the positions of the Ministers of Transport, I take the liberty of quoting from a speech delivered by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) on January 29, 1976. The Hon. Member does not want to say where he stands, he does not want to protect us and help us with this legislation. This was in 1984.

> At the time, Mr. Speaker, I realized there was a serious problem with our transport system, particularly with respect to the rigidity of decisions and regulations.

And there is more. Listen, Mr. Speaker, and Canadians as well should listen to this sentence uttered by a former Minister of the Liberal team:

> There is no competition likely to help consumers and producers.

Have you ever heard such a socialistic message, Mr. Speaker? I will repeat this for the edification of the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet).

> There is no competition likely to help consumers and producers.

This is just another way of saying that our system should ignore competition, that we should get rid of our private enterprise system. Is this the ideology of the Liberals, the kind of principles which translated into a $240 billion debt as a result of the distribution of somebody else's wealth?

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary for the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Lanthier) has the floor.

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, being in the service of the people of LaSalle who travel in great numbers to Ottawa by train, I am concerned about the fact that some railway companies have expressed an intention to cancel some lines. However, since that railway between LaSalle and Ottawa will be useful to me for some 20 more years, I would appreciate if he could give us the assurance here that the Government has taken every step in the Bill under consideration to preserve those railways which are presently in operation.

Mr. Fontaine: I thank the Hon. Member for LaSalle for his question. Mr. Speaker, in the present legislative context, one thing remains unchanged for Canadians, something which in fact was achieved as a result of a project of a Conservative Government and completed in 1886, and that is the Halifax to Vancouver railway. The author of that achievement was Prime Minister Macdonald, an eminent Member of the Conservative Party, as we are indeed, Mr. Speaker. That is a fact, and that railway will remain in operation. All other railways in the country may be reviewed to ascertain the relevance of their costs before the money is spent, something which our predecessors never bothered to do, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. gentleman a question. Early in his remarks he mentioned a trucking association about whose existence I am not aware, unless I misunderstood him. Representatives of the Canadian Trucking Association have met with me, and I have met with a number of people from large, medium and small trucking companies, all of whom have expressed their dismay and fright at this legislation. Could the Hon. Member inform the House which association he was talking about? Where is its head office? Who are the members of it and how many of them are there? Could he provide all of us or some of us with a copy of what it is they had to say?

[Translation]

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to provide an answer for the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). First, the Hon. Member for Regina West, in their usual fashion on Parliament Hill, they take steps in Committees to call witnesses, to have witnesses called in who are supporters of the Socialist spirit. They use those facilities, the standing committees, to help people living in far away constituences get free transportation to Ottawa at the expense of Canadian taxpayers. They are used to hearing very congenial witnesses, because that is their main activity, Mr. Speaker.

If my colleague for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) does not recognize the association, since I identified it in my remarks a few moments ago, he will have no problem finding tomorrow morning in the official report of our debates the references he needs to contact that association, and should he need more information, he is welcome to call me and I will provide him with every possible information.

[English]

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I heard the response of my hon. friend. I was wondering if there is any provision in the rules governing Parliament whereby he could be examined for an extreme case of paranoia.

[Translation]

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I have heard the few comments made by my colleague from Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) and I note regretfully his lack of respect for those people who travel from all over the country in order to appear before our standing committees. I am sure that if my colleague were to review his comments, he would perhaps have the opportunity to apologize to those Canadians who devote some of their time to contribute to the democratic process. No, Mr. Speaker, those are not—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. Excuse me for interrupting the Hon. Member, but we are overtime now. The Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) would like to ask a question of the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine). Will the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) please pose his question?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I am directing my question to my colleague opposite. He knows that on September 25, 1986, VIA Rail stated in a document that it would stop running its trains between Ottawa and Montreal in 1990. This is due, according to VIA Rail, to the new deregulation. Is he in favour of ending rail service between Ottawa and Montreal yes or no, for the implementation of this Bill would mean just that?

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, the question asked by my colleague for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) deals with two issues. First, he asks me to explain my comment about witnesses before the Standing Committee. We have excellent witnesses at both the standing and legislative committees of this House. What I said to the Hon. Members was that the socialist party always does everything in its power to call witnesses who sympathize with its own socialist philosophy. This answers the first point, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) mentioned a piece of railway track in his constituency which he was trying to get rid of, or which his constituents were trying to get rid of. He did not complete his remarks in this area about whether or not they did get rid of this piece of railway track. He mentioned something about buses and cars having to stop at a railway line that was not being used. Did the Hon. Member manage to get rid of this piece of railway track or not?

[Translation]

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, it is effectively a railway section between Saint-Anselme in my constituency and Sainte-Claire. This section is only a few miles long, and pressure has been put on me by the elected representatives of these municipalities to remove the track because there are accidents caused by the mismanagement of the previous Government. This has resulted in some accidents. The track is built on a higher level than the road and cars meet on top of the rise. Accidents have often caused fatalities in these circumstances. I do not want to blame the Liberals for this situation, but these are matters which should be covered by the legislation.

I must point out that I have taken steps to have this track removed to help the people and relieve them of these regulatory constraints on our rural areas which the Liberals had forgotten.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time allotted for questions and comments has terminated. Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell).

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to speak to Bill C-18, and in particular the amendment put forward by my honourable and wise colleague. We feel that this is an important amendment. We do not want a hasty Bill to which a great many risks and unanswered questions are related, a Bill going through committee in too great a hurry. We want more time to study this subject. I think there are many people in Canada who share this concern.

We are concerned about the Bill because it will have a dramatic impact on the Canadian economy, both on consumers and workers. It has not received enough study by us and by those groups. Thousands of Canadian jobs are at risk. I would like to say to Hon. Members that many of these jobs are jobs held by women. It is women who will most likely be the first fired and laid off as we move into deregulation.

Public safety, regional development, vital transportation services and Canadian sovereignty are other matters which we feel are at risk.

• (1540)

The Bill is of particular concern to people in my riding of Vancouver East. There are many transportation workers in this riding. It is the place where many modes of transportation converge, the rail lines, shipping in the Port of Vancouver, and also the airlines. Many of my constituents work in the field of transportation. We are concerned because we believe this legislation could be quite detrimental to the Port of Vancouver, which is struggling to compete with American ports to the south. I will enlarge on this later.

It is also of concern in my riding because of the dangerous situation where the Canadian Transport Commission approved the transfer of dangerous goods. That also has implications.

Transportation is very important to the Canadian economy. We all know the country could not survive without an effective, efficient, and affordable system of all modes of transportation. It is completely basic to bringing together our country.

The Conservative Government has not bothered to do a thorough impact study of what deregulation through this legislation will do to the transportation system. I am not on the committee, but I am sure my hon. colleagues who are will confirm that the Government has not consulted with various groups that will be affected, certainly not widely enough.

In summary, we know that this Act would abolish the Canadian Transport Commission and replace it with a much weaker National Transportation Agency that will have no authority over fares, routes, or entry or exit into the industry. It probably would have far fewer employees than the CTC. There are many concerns that a national body, such as the Canadian Transport Commission that should be dealing with it, requires workers.

It would replace the "public necessity and convenience" which is the test for entry or exit into the industry. This is very critical to Canada, and an implicit part of our national identity and cohesion that we have this criteria of public necessity and convenience as the test for entry or exit into the industry. It would be replaced with something called: "Fit, willing, and able" test. I would like to have more explanation about who is fit, willing, and able? Certainly the Government is not fit willing, and able. I shudder, as do many Canadians, to think of what types of things we are putting into its hands and into the hands of the private industry sector without the type of controls and the over-all planning that is in the interest of all Canadians.

The Act would also make it easier for companies to abandon airline and rail routes and leave remote communities stranded. In British Columbia I have had reports that this has already happened with airlines, and many of the traditional air route schedules have been changed. In the smaller and northern communities, there is not the same type of coverage for essential transportation by air, which is very important to those communities.

The Act would end regulatory oversight over fares, routes, and schedules, except in some remote areas. It would allow rail carriers to strike confidential contracts with individual shippers. It would open the entry of United States' rail lines into the Canadian market. This subject is of great concern to us. I will return to that in a minute.

I fully support my colleague who has proposed this amendment to withdraw the legislation and send it back to the standing committee. We cannot allow such significant legislation to pass without a thorough knowledge of the impact on safety, job loss, and service cut-backs. The Conservative Government—and I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, because I know you represent this Government, and I do not suppose you would agree with this view—is only too anxious to imitate everything that the Americans do, and to do it as quickly as possible. Many Conservatives should be concerned about the effect that this type of imitation or—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I hope the Hon. Member will not involve the Chair in the debate.

Ms. Mitchell: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, you are quite right.

The United States' model of transportation deregulation has been disastrous in many areas. We have received documentation from other speakers of the impact it has had on United States workers. There are concerns from American consumers about the costs and the inadequate services that have resulted. There is also concern from regions of the United States which are not in the central areas, but are off the beaten track. What will happen to some of the smaller communities in remote areas in Canada if we do, which it appears we will, deregulate transportation here?

Ironically, I understand that although the Government is eager to imitate the United States' model in many of these things, government Members who are on the Freedom to Move committee refused to travel to the United States to study this issue, or to bring United States' experts to testify at hearings in Canada. I wish the committee would bring some consumers from the United States, the people who can tell us first-hand about the impact on the lives of ordinary people.

The only hearings on this vital issue took place in 10 short weeks. The only travel was to Winnipeg, Halifax, and Vancouver. I can tell you that not many people in Vancouver were aware and prepared to participate in this important hearing. The hearing in Vancouver took place in one day, and dealt only with vague generalities of transportation regulations. They were very short on the specifics. People in my part of Canada have not had a chance to think about this, much less receive information and look at the issues in an analytical way. This is very typical of the Government. It was also typical of the former Liberal Government. We had hoped that the new Government would end the Liberal tradition of ignoring the West. This is what the Government told us, it was going to make sure that the west was finally a full participant in Confederation, and would no longer be ignored.

I am sure many Members from the west will regret this, but unfortunately the tradition of ignoring the West has continued. It must be embarrassing to Conservative Members of Parliament who are from the west. I know it is for those from British Columbia. Those Members are supposed to represent the West here, have some power and impact on decisions made by the Cabinet and on important portfolios like the transportation portfolio which is vital to western Canada, yet they do not appear to have any influence.

The result of this poor consultation process is poor legislation. That is why we are obliged to oppose it. That is why in this amendment we have asked for a postponement so that there can be more study. It jeopardizes safety, jobs, vital services, regional development and, as I said earlier, our sovereignty. It is unfortunate, because Liberal and Conservative Governments have neglected the importance of revamping transportation regulations over the last 20 years. We would certainly agree that regulations need to be reviewed, changed and improved, but not improved by deregulating and providing a threat in many areas of Canadian life and the economy.

I should like to spend a few moments explaining to my colleagues why the Bill is of great concern to my constituents in Vancouver East and to myself as their representative and as the critic responsible for social policy and status of women.

As I said earlier, a great many people in the riding of Vancouver East are employed in the transportation sector. The Port of Vancouver is Canada's link to the Pacific Rim. It employs thousands of workers directly and indirectly around Vancouver. Every time I return to my riding, I talk with many transportation workers.

We are concerned about a number of things which could have a very negative impact upon the Port of Vancouver. I understand that $3 billion of rail revenues is now involved in east-west traffic and that 70 per cent of it originates in Canada.

I have raised the following issue in the House and have written to the Minister of Transport about it many times. We are very concerned that CN Rail has introduced tariffs which have the effect of diverting freight traffic from eastern Canada, not through the western Canadian transportation system and to the Port of Vancouver, but down to Chicago and from there through the American transportation routes to the Port of Seattle, the Port of Tacoma, and other West Coast ports. This has already started. We are very concerned about it. The Port of Vancouver is very concerned about it as well because it means a great loss of business.

This piece of legislation will encourage more and more of that kind of thing. It will allow U.S. rail and trucking companies to raid the freight traffic of Canadian railways and truckers. They will be able to come in, take over Canadian goods, and transport them through the United States. They will take them south to Conrail and Burlington Northern, and they will take them west to American ports. I am talking about Canadian goods and goods which will eventually come from those ports into Canada.

The new Bill gives much more leverage to U.S. truckers and railways to come into Canada. However, does it provide for the same kind of interchange for Canadian truckers into the United States? Not at all. As I understand it, there are American restrictions which prevent this. It is a good example of the double jeopardy system. Of course it is symbolic in many other free trade negotiations which are not free at all; they are one-sided.

We are also very concerned about the impact of the Bill on western grain transportation administration. When the Act was before the House we pressed very hard for a special amendment to ensure that Canadian grain travelling on Canadian rails went to the Pacific Rim through Canadian ports, the Port of Vancouver and the Port of Prince Rupert. We felt that it was extremely important in that it was part of our national economy and part of our national transportation system.

Now we hear that Mr. Horner, the administrator for WGTA, is trying to remove this particular amendment in order to allow Canadian grain to go out through American transportation systems and American ports. We need a definite answer. I know that officials at the Port of Vancouver, longshoremen, and many others are extremely concerned and worried about it. It would have a tremendous impact upon the Port of Vancouver and would certainly undermine our whole Canadian transportation system. We want to know whether the Bill will override the WGTA and accommodate the people who are trying to take away very important regulations under the Western Grain Transportation Act.

We in Vancouver East also want to know whether the changes to rail regulations will take Canadian goods south of the border to U.S. ports. As I have already said, we believe it will. This trend has already started, and deregulation will facilitate it.

We in Vancouver East and in British Columbia want to know how many jobs will be lost. Many jobs were lost in the United States. We need a feasibility study by the Government and time to do it so that we have some answers. We want to know how the safety of workers will be affected. We want to know whether wages and working conditions will be affected. We need a delay in order to conduct feasibility and impact studies to answer these questions.

We know some of these answers from the experience in the United States. This is why it needs to be studied. We know that similar legislation to deregulate in the United States was brought in and that 150,000 jobs were lost in the railway sector. We also know that rail service to communities off the beaten track suffered. Great pressures were put on workers to accept poorer working conditions and, I am sure, to accept poorer wages and benefits. Safety conditions also suffered.

In Canada 11 labour organizations appeared before the committee that studied the Freedom to Move White Paper and expressed concern over substantial job loss and reduced wages which result from deregulation. My office has contacted labour unions in British Columbia which confirm and share these concerns.

I should like to explain quickly another concern of mine, that this kind of deregulation does not protect communities. If the CTC is removed, as proposed in the Bill, the risk of hazardous goods blowing up in our communities is even greater. I explained recently that the transfer point for dangerous goods was routed into Vancouver East, in the most densely populated part of downtown Vancouver, Chinatown. We do not intend to allow it to stay there, but unfortunately it will be very difficult to get it out of town, where it should be. If we are having difficulty with the CTC, how much more difficult will it be when there is no such organization with the authority?

Finally, I am also very concerned about the impact of deregulation on the jobs of women. I have talked with a number of women who work in the airlines. They are very concerned because they are the ones who are first to go. The majority of workers in the airline industry are women, and it is women who will suffer the job loss. The Canadian airline industry employs 40,000 people, most of whom are women. I also know of women who have families and may be forced by deregulation to move to other communities, especially from smaller communities. We have experienced that already in the interior of B.C. They will be told that they will either move to another area, leaving their families and communities behind, or they will be unemployed. That is the choice they will have. Those who still have their jobs will face lower pay, reduced benefits, less job security, and so on. Women are always the ones who are on the lower end of the job scale in these industries. I challenge the Minister responsible for the status of women in this area. Coincidentally, she is also responsible for privatization. I think there is a real conflict in those roles. Privatization also does away with the jobs of women. I challenge her to conduct a special study of the impact upon women's jobs of both deregulation and the sell-out in privatization of important services which rely upon women in many of the jobs.

I think my time is almost up—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will give the Hon. Member 30 seconds to wind up.

Ms. Mitchell: I appeal to my colleagues, particularly to the Government, to support the amendment to delay the Bill so that there can be intensive studies using the experience of consumers and people who know something about the impact of deregulation in the United States so that we can ensure that we are going in the right direction before we deregulate our transportation industry.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I recognize the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) I would like to inform Hon. Members that on Monday, February 2, when Orders of the Day are called on Bill C-18, there will be 10 minutes remaining for questions and comments if the Hon. Member wishes to take them.

May I remind the House that from now on, under Standing Order 55(2), speeches will be of 10 minutes' duration. The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme).

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, may we dispose of the 10 minute question period today?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): We are going into Private Members' Hour. We cannot do that. The Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Fontaine: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. A few minutes ago, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) said I was a paranoid. According to Petit Robert, this is a very questionable and derogatory term and I feel almost certain the Hon. Member did not really intend that.

Mr. Prud'homme: Read the definition to see if it applies.

Mr. Fontaine: Paranoid, its says here this is related to paranoia!

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. In the spirit of Friday afternoon, I am sure the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) will retract the statement he made calling the Hon. Member paranoid or whatever. I would hope that he will retract that statement.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the Chair or my hon. friend took exception to what I said. I did not say the Member had paranoia. I just wanted him to be examined for a case of extreme paranoia.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: If that offends my hon. friend and the Chair—I have been called a lot worse than that around here and sometimes people might have been right—and if my friend is that thin skinned and feels hurt, I will be happy to withdraw.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 4 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

ADVISABILITY OF ESTABLISHING NATIONAL MORTGAGE CORPORATION

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of establishing, with the provinces, a National Mortgage Corporation, financed through contributions paid into the Canada Pension Plan.

He said: Mr. Speaker, may I note that it is three minutes past four o'clock and the 10 minutes allotted to me will expire at 13 minutes after four o'clock.

The proposal which I have the pleasure of putting forward this afternoon is a proposal to establish a National Mortgage Corporation which would be financed by using the premiums which Canadians pay into the Canada Pension Plan. My intention with this proposal is to have the Government consider the possibility of establishing such a National Mortgage Corporation as a basis for a sound housing policy for Canada.

We have experienced in these last years astonishing fluctuations in interest rates. At the moment I confess, and I do it with pleasure on behalf of Canadian homeowners and buyers, that interest rates are at a very happy level.

Some Hon. Members: Hear,hear!

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): I am always astonished at how members of the Government take credit for good news while never accepting any of the blame for bad news. High unemployment rates in various parts of the country and so on are presumably the fault of the Government too. It is international developments, particularly the difficulties in which the U.S. Government finds itself, that have produced low interest rates. I do not think there is anything the Canadian Government has done that is responsible for the low mortgage rates that prevail these days. That is why I am surprised the Government is taking credit for this particular piece of good news.

Interest rates fluctuated very, very sharply in the first years of this decade. We had rates that were very, very difficult for Canadians to meet. In many parts of the country people lost their homes and had to give up mortgages. It was very difficult for people to enter the housing market, for people to move from being tenants to buying homes. It is in recognition of that kind of problem that I put forward this proposal to put Canadian housing policy on a sound basis to provide funds on a regular basis at steady interest rates, which the Government would set at reasonable levels in recognition of the importance of housing to Canadians. This would have several happy results. It would obviously reduce, if not end, the kinds of disruptions that people experienced in the early 1980s. It would ensure that people were able to finance their mortgages, meet interest payments, pay off the principal and pay off their mortgages. People would be able to keep the homes they were buying. It would make it possible for others to consider buying homes much more easily than is now the case. It would have happy results, not just for those Canadians who want to buy homes, but also for those who are involved in construction and want the jobs, the important good jobs that can be obtained in the construction industry. It was those problems of unemployment that so many of my constituents experienced, which I discovered graphically when I was calling on them in the spring and summer of 1984, that made me think about the possibilities of doing something like this.

It seems to me that it is only by provisions of this sort that we will achieve the kind of regularity of conditions, the predictability of conditions required, to make the construction industry as efficient as it needs to be on the supply side for being able to provide homes, and for contractors to be able to carry on with all the efficiency of regular operations. Only by these means are we going to ensure that Canadians are able to acquire better housing, more space, more comfortable arrangements of which they dream, the kind of living conditions people need to raise families in happy circumstances.

Space makes an enormous difference. The quality of housing needs improvement. By putting the construction industry in Canada on an efficient basis and by putting housing on a sound basis through such means as this, we can make a real contribution to the living conditions of many Canadians.

But how can we do this, Mr. Speaker? That is where the proposal to finance this corporation comes in. It could easily operate within the orbit or under the umbrella of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the Government could consider the possibility of using Canada Pension Plan contributions to provide the capital required. Canada Pension Plan contributions are made regularly by Canadians, generally month by month. They represent a very large in-flow of money. By the end of the current fiscal year, the Department of National Health and Welfare expects that Canada Pension Plan investments will be near $33 billion. That is a great deal of money and is an indication of what might be available if a National Mortgage Corporation were able to use these funds from the outset. But the federal Government agreed with the provinces that the moneys paid in in the various provinces of Canada would be available to the respective province for it to use for its own purposes. In province after province this money has been used for public investment purposes. I have no criticism to make of those plans in any general terms. The social investments of the provincial Governments are certainly important. But there are a couple of aspects of this situation that make this a sound proposal to consider. Provincial Governments could, I think, find their capital needs in the financial markets of our country. We are sometimes told that there are not enough good investment opportunities in Canada for private pension plans. It seems to me that the kinds of blue chip investments provincial bonds represent could be very useful to various financial concerns that manage and hold private pension contributions. To force the provincial Governments to turn to private financial markets in order to finance activities in the provinces could in fact improve things for private pension plans.

On the other hand, if moneys which they presently draw from the Canada Pension Plan investment fund were to be made available to the mortgage corporation, we could achieve something quite desirable for the present Government. We could see these public investments actually made through the mortgage corporation to individual Canadians and groups of Canadians. I would expect that the National Mortgage Corporation would be sensitive to social and co-operative housing needs as well as the desire of individual Canadians to take up mortgages and buy homes. I would like to be explicit in recognizing those possibilities.

One could make the argument that to have the federal Government, through the Canada Pension Plan investment fund or the National Mortgage Corporation, dealing with individual Canadians would be to put them into a part of the financial market in a relatively open way. Capital would be made available and invested in what must surely be the soundest security this country holds. What could be better than mortgages of Canadians from coast to coast who have been regarded as capable of meeting interest and principal payments and are consequently allowed to acquire securities? What could be a sounder investment than that?

On the other hand, Canadians would take out these mortgages with the assurance of having funds available at rates maintained by the Government. It should be possible to arrange the kind of long-term mortgages we used to have within the Canada Pension Plan without having those Canadians who are concerned about the pensions they expect to receive from the Canada Pension Plan being in any way hurt. In fact, these mortgages would be soundly based and there would be two new and different relationships established in two different aspects of the consequences of this proposal. I put this proposal to the House and look forward to the warm response of my colleagues on both sides.

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp), who raises the possibility of establishing jointly with the provinces a national mortgage corporation funded by the contributions to the Canada Pension Plan.

I must thank him for his preamble, first for having applauded the results of our monetary policy that led to such low interest rates, and, second, for having realized this new Government is indeed capable, along with the provinces, of establishing joint programs because the confrontation era has ended, and the era of national reconciliation is upon us. So I must commend him for his remarks in his preamble.

[English]

I can entirely sympathize with the Hon. Member's evident desire to ensure that adequate mortgage funds are available to prospective home owners. One cannot ignore the existence of the very large sums of money belonging to Canada Pension Plan funds. There are two elements to the question: the means of providing mortgage money, and the need for such funds. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has explained the problems in using Canada Pension Plan funds, the administration of which is the subject of a long-standing and successful federal-provincial agreement. I would like to turn from the means of providing mortgage funds to their effective need.

In 1986, the number of housing starts reached 200,000 units, the highest production in eight years. This is another result of our monetary success policy. Simultaneously, we have just experienced a general economic growth, and two years have been outstanding in the housing industry. As we say in Quebec and in French, generally: Quand le bâtiment va, tout va.

Last year, mortgage loans reached a record high, with total residential loans approximating $30 billion, as against $20 billion the previous year. There were mortgage funds to cover all applications, despite exceptional growth in the housing sector—by that I mean mortgage funds available on the market.

Forecasters appear to agree that housing demand will stabilize within a year or two.

In this period of high demand for mortgage funds, there has been no shortage of funds. Besides, we could see the effects because interest rates kept going down at the same rate as the other bank interest rates. The supply probably will go on increasing within the very near future, and there is no indication that we should use funds from the Canadian Pension Plan, even if that were possible.

The current situation is in tremendous contrast with that of 3 or 4 years ago, where there were interest rate increases and instability—the possibility was not assured of obtaining mortgage loans, or at what costs. It was mainly and essentially because this Government has succeeded in bringing interest rates down that housing funds have become easier to get. Not only was money expensive during that unlamented period, but it was more difficult to borrow from the usual financial institutions. Long term mortgages which allowed homeowners to plan their budget for years to come have unfortunately virtually disappeared. However, lower interest rates have brought net benefits to the homeowner. For instance, the borrower who took out, in September 1984, which date will be remembered as the date when our economy was freed, a 25-year $50,000 mortgage at the unthinkable rate of 13.75 per cent for three years had monthly payments of about $578. Two years later, with a 10.5 per cent rate, his monthly payments will have gone down to $464, which represents a saving of about $1,400 a year. Stable and reasonable interest rates, which we now have, are still the best possible guarantee of sufficient residential funding.

To promote this long term stability, our Government recently announced a mortgage-backed securities program to provide a new investment pool for housing. Because of the punctual payments guaranteed by the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the fact that this instrument is about as safe as Government bonds, it will be an attractive instrument of investment for both institutions and individuals. In the case of homebuyers, the program will tend to stabilize mortgage rates and to maintain them at a reasonable level, thanks to a sensible monetary policy such as we have now, and this will bring longer term mortgages back to the housing market. In fact, ten-year mortgages are now becoming available on the Canadian market.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, the desirable objective of funding housing has already been met and the required funds will remain easily accessible in the forseeable future. There is no need to use the Canada Pension Plan or to create a national mortgage corporation for which consumers would eventually pay dearly. Of course, such an organization already exists, but only on paper, and I am talking about the Federal Mortgage Exchange Corporation.

[English]

As the Hon. Member is no doubt aware, that corporation was authorized by Parliament 13 years ago under the Residential Mortgage Financing Act. The desire to stimulate the flow of mortgage funds was similar to the intent of the proposal in Motion M-40. The Government of the time decided not to implement the section of the legislation dealing with the Federal Mortgage Exchange Corporation because it was unnecessary at that time, as it is today. Succeeding Governments reached the same conclusion, even when mortgages were much more difficult to negotiate than they are now. Today such a special mechanism as a mortgage corporation is not only unnecessary but expensive to home buyers, wasteful and possibly damaging to the growing sense of partnership between the Government, the private sector and the provinces.

• (1620)

If mortgage funds became scarce, a situation which is very unlikely to occur in the current climate of confidence among Canadian consumers and investors, and if the housing industry did not fare well, the Government would then have to consider the best way to rectify the situation.

For the time being, at least, I cannot envision the Government of Canada using funds from the Canada Pension Plan. This money is used to finance a good many worthy projects, including financing Government capital cost for which no funds might otherwise be available from the private sector. Even if the provinces showed interest in considering a new agreement, something to which we are always open, we could hardly justify the diversion of Canada Pension Plan funds from its current worthy projects to the benefit of housing when the private sector can have access to all the funds for housing it may need now and in the future, thanks to the climate favorable to investment which exists at last in Canada. I hope that no Government will try to bureaucratize an area which is the exclusive domain of the private sector, for it is an activity for which it is particularly well suited and in which it presently obtains, thanks in part to some encouragement from our Government, unqualified success.

In short, Mr. Speaker, it is well understood that the funds now available are used for other purposes than those of the private sector. Having favoured the development of the economy for over two years now, we will certainly not return to these sad times when the government interfered in the economy and created Crown corporations which cost a lot of money to the Canadian people, created a huge bureaucracy and resulted in a lack of competition which discouraged investors. Now that there is a climate of investment and confidence among Canadians, we do not see the need to establish such a corporation.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I should like to emphasize the fact that we are not dealing this afternoon with the kind of work which the Government is supposed to have done to reduce interest rates. That is not the subject of the debate today.

[English]

We are not here to make long-winded speeches about how good the Tories are. If that were the case, we could adjourn the debate now because there is not much to say on that topic. The only thing which is at the same level as the prime lending rate right now is the popularity of the Government. The debate today is on another topic.

The issues before us this afternoon are, first, whether we want the National Mortgage Corporation proposed by the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) and, second, whether we want it financed by premiums of the Canada Pension Plan. I would like to address mainly the second component. We can discuss whether we want a National Mortgage Corporation on another occasion. However, I have some difficulty with the concept of financing anything else from the Canada Pension Plan.

The Canada Pension Plan is in place in nine of the ten Canadian provinces. The Province of Quebec has its own pension plan which is well run, well managed, and properly invested by and large. However, when the Canada Pension Plan was established as a joint federal-provincial venture for the rest of the country, it was decided that the provinces could borrow funds from the plan for slightly less than the going rate. It was also agreed at that time that any changes to the plan would require the consent of provinces comprising no less than two-thirds of the population. Therefore, even if we did adopt a proposal for change, it would require the agreement of those provinces.

I sat for three and a half years in the Ontario Legislature. At that time I was interested to hear New Democratic Party Members in the House object to the fact that provincial Governments could borrow from the Canada Pension Plan at less than the going rate. I wonder whether it is the position of the federal New Democrats that the funds should be made available to this National Mortgage Corporation at the going rate or below the going rate. If they believe they should be available at below the going rate, that is inconsistent with what I heard some time ago. If they believe they should be available at the going rate, why then would we borrow the funds from the Canada Pension Plan at all?

The idea of taking funds out of the Canada Pension Plan for any other purpose disturbs me. We know that the provinces borrow from the fund. We know that contributions to the fund have been increased dramatically on the pretext that the fund would run dry some time after the year 2000 if they were not. Many Canadians wonder whether that is accurate or if it is only a case of the provincial Governments wanting to be able to borrow more from the plan.

I believe that far too much is taken from the Canada Pension Plan already. The last thing we should consider is borrowing funds from the plan for any other purpose. I wonder about putting funds from the Canada Pension Plan in a mortgage portfolio. If you or I, Mr. Speaker, were to invest funds for a rainy day in a guaranteed investment certificate, we would get a five-year rate of 9.5 or 9.75 per cent. We would get 1 per cent or 2 per cent more if we invested in a mortgage portfolio because it is a riskier business. Because it is riskier, I do not think the premiums of the Canada Pension Plan should be invested in it.

Mr. Nickerson: Now you are talking like a Tory.

Mr. Boudria: I am not talking like a Tory. I am talking like a Liberal. The Liberals created the Canada Pension Plan. Although it has imperfections, it is a good plan. However, we should never put those funds in a mortgage portfolio. That is too businesslike, too Tory-like. Perhaps there is a certain rapprochement of my colleagues in the two other Parties. However, I do not want to get into that.

The point is that if we decide that we want a National Mortgage Corporation, there are other ways to finance it than with Canada Pension Plan contributions. Those contributions are heard-earned dollars of working Canadians. Those funds should be properly invested for our retirement years. The Member who proposed this motion indicated that the provincial Governments are borrowing from this fund and that perhaps that is not the wisest investment of fund contributions.

When I was in the provincial legislature, the Hon. Member's colleagues there used to say the same thing. They said it was unfair for the provincial Governments to borrow at lower than competitive rates. If that is unfair, how is it any fairer to take the funds, at lower than competitive rates, and put them in a new National Mortgage Corporation? If the Member does not believe that the funds should be invested in that corporation at less than the going rate, why use funds from the Canada Pension Plan at all? Presumably we could take funds which are available on the open market.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Now you are talking like a banker.

Mr. Boudria: No, I am not talking like a banker. I am taking the opposite position. The funds that belong to the people of Canada should not go into a mortgage fund. If those funds are not to be left as they are now but invested in some other way, they should be invested without risk because they are for our senior years. They should not be invested in any way by which they could be lost. I believe there is enough risk in lending the funds to provincial Treasuries at this time, particularly when it is a well known fact that most never intend to repay those funds. We should not take any greater risks with the fund and should leave the Canada Pension Plan as it is to ensure that our senior Canadians have those funds when they need them.

• (1630)

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak to the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp). First, my experience in the private sector before coming to the House of Commons was in the area of real estate. I regularly dealt with housing, mortgages and all those things connected with real estate and therefore am quite interested in that part of the motion.

However, the motion also gave me an opportunity to study in more detail the Canada Pension Plan because of the implications on that plan in the Hon. Member's suggestion.

I want to deal with three areas in my remarks today. First, I want to examine the very interesting financial aspects of the Canada Pension Plan. Second, I will talk briefly about federal and provincial jurisdiction over the CPP, and finally, I will speak about some of the implications of putting those funds to other use.

The Hon. Member's motion involves a very interesting concept, and one that I initially found rather appealing. I was tempted to consider the matter further and this led to the research that resulted in some of the information I am giving today.

There is no doubt that housing is very important to Canadians, not only in providing shelter but in providing the economic development that flows from the building of homes. Members will know that when there is building activity in their constituency there are jobs, investment opportunity and a boost to the over-all economy.

While the Hon. Member's objective is good, unfortunately problems develop when one examines the implications of removing those funds from the CPP to achieve that objective. I was extremely interested to learn that the Canada Pension Plan is the largest pension fund in Canada, amounting to some $31 billion. Currently, that money is invested in both provincial and federal government securities and, as the Hon. Member who spoke before me pointed out, the majority of those investments are at slightly below the going market rate. Yet, when we consider that interest rates have ranged from somewhere between 5.3 per cent and 17.5 per cent back from 1966 when the plan was introduced, the over-all weighted average over that time is about 10 per cent. The interest on the CPP fund for fiscal year 1985-86 alone amounted to approximately $3 billion.

There is certainly an impression in my riding, and I believe throughout the country, that much of this money has been frittered away, never to come back to the fund, and that the provinces will not repay the funds, and that as a result of these unusually low interest rates senior citizens and future senior citizens of Canada are being robbed. That is not true. While there is no doubt that the money is lent at slightly below normal interest rates, I am told that if those funds were invested at the going rate, the difference since 1966 would have meant that there would be roughly another three months in benefits in the pool. Presently, we have a pool from interest investments and so on that is equal to approximately five years of the benefits that would have to be paid out. Therefore, when we consider three months in benefits compared to the five years, the return is not much lower than the existing average of the market rate.

Let us deal with the concept of federal and provincial jurisdiction. There is no doubt that the contributions are made on a province-by-province basis and the funds raised in a particular province remain within that province for those who contribute the funds. It is a good plan.

Pension plans were originally a provincial jurisdiction. In order for the federal Government to enter this regime, it negotiated a scheme with the provinces that was comfortable to both. The basic result of this is that the provinces have a right to participate in any decision that would change the way the moneys are spent. It is fascinating the consider the implications of that if we proceeded with the Hon. Member's motion. All of the provinces except Quebec are part of the Canada Pension Plan. Would Quebec, with its own pension plan, be excluded from this National Mortgage Corporation? I am sure Quebecers would like to be part of this scheme because it is for the benefit of all Canadians. In addition to that question, there is the question of shared federal-provincial responsibilities and a requirement for two-thirds or a majority of the provinces agreeing to any decisions made about the plan. The Province of Quebec would have a voice on the question while, at the same time, Quebecers have their own fund which presently amounts to some $10 billion.

The alternative would be to exclude Quebec from any proposal such as this, which I do not think would sit very well with the people of Quebec. Considering that we function as a nation, I do not think it would sit well with the rest of Canada.

Finally, I want to deal with the implications of this motion. A large part of the money invested by the provinces goes to health care and education. They are two very important areas not only to the provinces but to Canadians as a whole. Therefore, we are not dealing with an idle surplus fund, but a fund that is being used by the provinces in many ways, particularly for education and health care. If we were to proceed with the Hon. Member's motion as he has suggested, we may well be robbing Peter to pay Paul. I do not believe that is the intent of the Hon. Member's motion and it is certainly not what any of us in Parliament want to happen.

I repeat that the objective of the Hon. Member's motion is good. The idea of exploring concepts for making better mortgages available to home owners is good. However, the idea fails when we begin talking about taking funds from the Canada Pension Plan and placing them into mortgages and creating a new mortgage corporation. I believe the net impact would be that the provinces would suffer and Canadians generally would suffer. There is no doubt that it would affect education and health care.

When we go back home and talk to our provincial people, we know very well those are two areas which right now are feeling stretched and stressed as it is. Again, I thank the Hon. Member for his motion. It is very thought provoking and I certainly found it enjoyable to work on because it gave me a chance to go back and look at some of the areas I have enjoyed working in and looking at.

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to make a few comments on the motion presented to us by the Member of the New Democratic Party, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp). The Hon. Member has suggested we establish, together with the provinces, a National Mortgage Corporation financed through contributions to the Canada Pension Plan. My first reaction and advice, I suppose, to my hon. friend, would be to follow perhaps the wise advice I am sure has been given to him by some of his constituents, the common sense axiom: "If it ain't broke, don't fix it". I would suggest to the Hon. Member that that is part of what we are looking at today. We have a situation which is working very well and I wonder why we should interfere and perhaps create greater bureaucracy and the many problems attendant to that.

However, I commend the Hon. Member for the intention of the motion. I am very sympathetic to what the Hon. Member had in mind. What he wanted us to do was to look as carefully as we could at every opportunity to see if we could support the housing industry and thereby create decent accommodation within the reach of all Canadians. To that extent, I commend the Hon. Member. As I understand it, if the motion were accepted, it would create a national mortgage corporation which would be akin to the federal Mortgage Exchange Corporation which was provided by the residential mortgage financing Bill. As you know, Mr. Speaker, that Bill became law on December 7, 1973. However, the corporation itself was never established by the Government of that day or by any government since. I admit its projected structure and funding are different from the proposal in this motion. The operation of the federal Mortgage Exchange Corporation of 1973 did not require the concurrence of 11 other Governments or of 11 Governments together. It also did not require, as this motion would, a profound change in the historic agreement which established the Canada Pension Plan.

I am also struck by another fact. As I listened to the Hon. Member presenting his motion, I heard no reference to the Province of Quebec which operates its own pension plan. Therefore, would the proposal ignore the needs of Quebec in stimulating mortgage financing? I am sure the Hon. Member had no such intention.

I honestly do not think the present housing situation requires either a new National Mortgage Corporation, or the establishment of the federal Mortgage Exchange Corporation already authorized by law. Quite simply, the need is not there. There is no need because the private sector, aided by responsible Government fiscal policy, is amply supplying the mortgage market.

Perhaps the most successful of all government policies which affect housing has been the lowering of interst rates over the past two years. Every home owner with a mortgage has gained the benefits of a decline in interest rates of close to 30 per cent. It is money in the bank for thousands of Canadians. These lower interest rates have also made the difference between buying a home now or continuing to wait, hoping for some brighter day in the future. Lower interest rates have created a tremendous stimulation to the housing industry. More and more jobs have been created in the construction industry, in our distant forests, right down to the fast-food outlet down the street.

When this Government came into office in September of 1984, we looked at the monthly payment a person would have to make for a $50,000 mortgage amortized over 25 years. It was in the neighbourhood of $550 to $580 a month. Today it is possible to obtain a six-month mortgage for $50,000 at 7.5 per cent, which means a monthly payment of $366. Those home owners have approximately $200 more in their pocket every month to use for other purposes such as savings.

Last year institutional lenders approved 49 per cent more money for 40 per cent more housing units than in 1984. Although this sharp rise in construction may slow down, the demonstrated availability of ample mortgage money should dissuade us from any expensive new schemes such as this motion, which proposes to involve more government structures in the mortgage market. Even 13 years ago, the Government of that day did not think it necessary to establish a new mortgage corporation. I would submit that in these days such a corporation seems even more superfluous than then.

One of the real differences between the New Democrats and the Conservatives is in the different way we approach such issues. The New Democratic Party constantly looks at how we can create more government, a larger bureaucracy and more regulation. The Conservative approach over the past two years has been the exact opposite. We are trying to lessen the size of government and the size of the bureaucracy, thereby lessening the debt load upon the taxpayers who pay for it. As a result, we have begun to attack government spending and the deficit, thereby strengthening the dollar and lowering interest rates. That is the situation we are in today.

In beginning his remarks, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon mentioned that interest rates are much lower today. Some of my colleagues on this side of the House then applauded. The Hon. Member then chided those Hon. Members, saying: "Don't take so much credit for that. There are other reasons". That is true. There are many reasons. However, I would submit to the Hon. Member that in addition to the reasons he gave, the fact we have some of those lower interest rates today in Canada is because of the very things this Government has done. We have cancelled the National Energy Program which was ruinous to western Canada. We cancelled FIRA. We created Investment Canada. We have taken action to reduce the deficit. We have taken action to reduce government spending. All of these initiatives create a climate for both foreign and domestic investment and lead to the strengthening of the dollar, thereby the lowering of interest rates. I would chide the Hon. Member, as he chided us, by submitting that if he wants to attack us for the problems, he has to give us some credit when things go well.

The ready availability of mortgage funds is no reason for complacency. To provide a new pool for the housing industry, the Minister responsible for CMHC announced last year mortgage-backed securities. This program alone, requiring no new government infrastructure or complicated federal-provincial agreements—which this motion would require—will go far to meet the objectives underlying this motion. It will certainly increase the mortgage funds available and will introduce more stability into the market. The program should usher in a return of longer term mortgages, which will enable home buyers to make sound decisions in their personal financial planning without all the doubts and fears of a fluctuating mortgage market. In fact, just recently, because of the decline in interest rates, a 10-year mortgage is now available.

To make these mortgage-backed securities more attractive to investors, both to institutions and to individuals, CMHC now provides loan insurance to ensure the lender will receive the principal and interest even if the borrower defaults. Further, the investor has a guarantee of punctual monthly payments of principal and interest. These securities will rank with Government of Canada bonds as safe and attractive investments, probably with slightly higher yields.

• (1650)

In looking at the motion which is before us today my first concern is that it is not necessary. Second, it would simply create bigger and bigger government and therefore more costs. Third, it would drive up interest rates again since it would indirectly contribute to the costs of bigger government.

Although the Hon. Member's motion has some laudable and good objectives inherent in it, it is not necessary because the Government's program of fiscal responsibility is bringing about the very situation he desires, that is, making it easier for people to own homes through the lowering of interest rates.

[Translation]

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, allow me to comment on motion M-40 introduced by the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp). In his opinion, the Government should consider the advisability of establishing, with the provinces, a National Mortgage Corporation which would be financed through contributions paid into the Canada Pension Plan.

Before dealing with the motion itself I should like to set it in a proper context, namely the current situation with respect to housing starts and mortgage funding in Canada. Surely we all realize how imperative it is to take every measure required to get rid of any financial obstacle which have an adverse effect on the construction of adequate houses for Canadians.

Right now the housing industry is doing quite well. Housing starts reached 199,785 in 1986, a peak for the last eight years, an increase of nearly 34,000 over 1986 which was shared by all provinces.

These data are both promising and reassuring because this period was definitively not highlighted by huge public expenditures nor by other private sector programs designed to promote home construction. Surveys and resale market indicators attest to a rather strong consumer confidence.

This level of activity is due to a large extent to low interest rates and sustained economic growth. Most forecasters however predict a stabilization of the Canadian economy. According to projections contained in the federal Budget, the rate of growth of the Gross National Product should slow down from 3.7 per cent to 3 per cent in 1987. The most appropriate answer to the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon is to say at a time when housing demand is so strong, almost sudden, one might add, finding mortgage financing is not a problem.

All Members of this House will agree, I believe, with the two following objectives with regard to our public housing policy: first, to provide as much adequate and affordable housing as possible to all Canadians and second, to ensure the good health of the housing industry. For most would-be buyers, a practical financing scheme is almost as important as the price of housing. A healthy housing industry is very important, given its impact on the economy at various levels, from the resource industries to the supply of local services. How then can Government best help to attain these two objectives?

The answer is simple. The Government should go on doing just what it is doing now, that is creating an environment of co-operation with the private sector and encouraging the private industry to provide the funds required to preserve a dynamic housing industry. Those funds can be obtained from savings, with no need to draw from the Canada Pension Plan.

The Government should also attempt by all means to encourage low interest rates. Lower interest rates in the past two years have had a very positive impact on the housing sector. Every household renewing a mortgage since the fall of 1984 did achieve real savings. On a typical $50,000 mortage amortized over 25 years, the savings resulting from lower interest rates between September 1984 and now could easily amount to more than $1,000 per year. This means money in the bank.

Current interest rates, which have not only come down but have also avoided the severe ups and down of a few years ago, are a definite incentive for potential buyers. Housing acquisition is a common social objective from coast to coast. Add reasonable interest rates and it also becomes a good investment. Knowing that when you renew your mortgage a few years from now you will not have to go through a terrible financial crisis makes the whole prospect more appealing.

It is with the goal of further reinforcing that stability in mind that the Minister responsible for the Canadian Mortgage and Housing Corporation introduced the mortgage-backed securities program, which is a new way for the Government and the private investor, big or small, to engage in joint ventures. This program was announced after extensive consultations with lenders, provincial and territorial Governments, consumer associations and the housing industry throughout Canada. In order to promote the productive use of savings for housing, the Government guarantees immediate payment to lenders of principal and interest should the borrower experience financial difficulties. These securities are just as secure as the one already offered by the Government of Canada and their yield is expected to be slightly above similar Government issues.

Let's go back to the motion under consideration. Two things are proposed: A new agency which would provide mortgage loans with funds from the Canada Pension Plan. At this stage, a new agency seems not only superfluous, but it could also be prejudicial. As you know, Mr. Speaker, thirteen years ago, Parliament passed an Act authorizing the establishment of the federal mortgage exchange. However, no government implemented it. The overhead costs would represent a heavy burden that would inevitably be passed on to homeowners. What is more important, it would affect the spirit of co-operation between the private and public sectors that this government promoted with so much success.

Furthermore, the use of the Canada Pension Plan funds would be senseless and potentially detrimental. Supposing even that all the provinces would agree to such measures as would be necessary to allow the use of those funds, which is quite unlikely, we would be diverting funds intended for essential projects such as schools, hospitals and other public works for which there can be no direct loans from the private sector, while leaving no room for savings funds that investors are getting ready to make available on the housing market.

Therefore, I think that even if the motion was moved with the best of intentions, it would not help at all the housing situation in Canada. We can consider ourselves fortunate that such impractical measures turn out to be needless, today as well as in a foreseeable future.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 42(1), this item shall be dropped from the Order Paper.

It being five o'clock, this House stands adjourned until next Monday at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to present a petition, pursuant to Standing Order 106, from a number of Canadian residents who are concerned that the changes to the Patent Act by the federal Government will significantly increase drug prices for Canadian consumers. They believe it will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. They are calling upon the Government to come to its senses and stop the continuation of this Bill changing the Patent Act.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from residents of Winnipeg, mostly in my riding of Winnipeg North Centre, concerning the Government's proposed changes to the Patent Act. They indicate that the federal Government's proposal to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. They add further points and conclude by calling upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

OPPOSITION TO SANCTIONS AGAINST SOUTH AFRICA

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I am presenting a petition on behalf of a number of Canadians who are opposed to the Government's proposal and sanctions against South Africa, claiming that it harms the Canadian economy.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition on behalf of a number of Canadians from my constituency and the constituency of The Battlefords-Meadow Lake who call upon Parliament to reject the proposals which would increase the prescription drug prices for all Canadians and suggest that the proposals presently before the Government will do just that.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present, on behalf of Canadian voters from Montreal, a petition concerning the proposed changes to the Patent Act, which these petitioners say will have a direct impact on all Canadians not covered by public or private drug plans. They humbly pray that Parliament reject these proposals which they say will increase the price of drugs for Canadians across the country.

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, this morning, I have the honour of presenting a petition on behalf of Canadians from Vankleek Hill in Ontario, urging the Government to refrain from adopting the amendments to the Patent Act proposed in Bill C-22. They say this legislation will have a direct impact on all Canadians not covered by public or private drug plans. They also say that proposed amendments to the Patent Act are one more example of the concessions the Canadian Government is making to the United States.

REQUEST TO WITHDRAW TARIFF ON ENGLISH LANGUAGE BOOKS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to table a petition from many Canadians, particularly from Vancouver. The petitioners state that the Government of Canada has imposed a retaliatory tariff on imported books in the English language which has limited the access of Canadians to literature and information, that the tariff has had little negative effect on the publishing industry of the United States, yet penalizes Canada's consumers, book publishers and book-sellers, distributors and Canada's culture, and that rising book prices have placed a strain on the book acquisition programs and policies of our nation's public and specialized libraries. The undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to rescind this tariff which threatens irreparable harm to the Canadian book industry and compromises federal policy on cultural industries in respect to free trade negotiations.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition from Canadians in Montreal who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners, in the certain assurance that your Honourable House will therefore provide a remedy. They humbly declare that the monopoly position granted innovative pharmaceutical companies will prevent competition from less expensive generic drugs, thus leading to an increase in the price of drugs for the Canadian consumer and severely restricting the ability of many people to purchase the drugs they need, that the proposed amendments to the Patent Act will have a direct impact on all Canadians not covered by public or private drug plans, that the Government's proposal will increase the already high cost of provincial health insurance schemes and that the proposed changes to the Patent Act are one more example of the Canadian Government's concessions to the United States in the free trade negotiations, without regard for the well-being of the average consumer. Wherefor the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase the price of drugs for Canadians.

[English]

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present two petitions to the House. The first petition is signed by some 300 citizens of the queen city of the plains, Regina. The petitioners, all of whom are residents of Canada, present a grievance common to them. The petitioners state that the federal Government's proposals to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs, and that the proposals of the federal Government will result in higher costs for provincial Government drug plans. Therefore, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

TRANSPORTATION—ECONOMIC REGULATORY REFORM

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition signed by residents of Calgary, Alberta, another fine city which is next to Regina. The petitioners state that in their opinion, transportation is a natural monopoly without economic regulation and that economic regulatory reform or deregulation of the dimensions proposed by the Government in Bill C-18 will create unnecessary chaos in the transportation industry leading to unacceptable reductions in safety standards as well as deterioration in quality, type and frequency of service. Therefore, the petitioners pray and call upon Parliament to have the Government withdraw Bill C-18 and retain public convenience and necessity as a fundamental factor in the development of transportation policy.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, question No. 47 will be answered today.

[Text]

GRANT TO BAIE VERTE MINES INC.

Question No. 47—Mr. Kaplan:

Did the Government make a grant of $19,200,000 to Baie Verte Mines Inc., as a method of permitting it to repay debts due to the Crown and, if so, for what reason did the Government use this method rather than simply forgiving the debt?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): While the grant has not yet been provided, it is the Government's intention to provide $19,200,000 to Baie Verte Mines Inc. as a method of permitting it to repay debts due to the Crown. This grant item is included in Supplementary Estimates "A" 1986-1987 and parliamentary approval of the payment will be sought in Appropriation Act No. 3, 1986-87.

This method is being used as there is no mechanism through which the debt can be directly forgiven. While the Financial Administration Act does provide for the forgiveness of debts, the appropriate provisions of the Act apply only to Crown corporations. Given this situation, the provision of a grant was deemed to be the appropriate course of action.

It should be noted that the existing situation whereby debts of Crown corporations may be directly forgiven but debts of individuals or privately held corporations may not, was considered to be inappropriate by the Senate National Finance Committee. In its report on Supplementary Estimates (C) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1986 the Committee stated that:

> The Committee believes that under the principle of equity, individuals and private corporations should have the same rights as Crown corporations with regard to write off or forgiveness of debts and that the Government should consider such a change when the Financial Administration Act (FAA) comes under legislative review.

In a subsequent appearance before the Committee (April 23, 1986) the President of the Treasury Board noted that "—the suggestion makes a lot of sense and I plan to review the issue fully. I have instructed my officials to look into this matter and to develop recommendations for the consideration of the Government when the FAA next comes under legislative review."

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION ACT, 1986

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Friday, January 30, 1987, consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-18, an Act respecting national transportation, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. Benjamin (p. 2756),

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) did have the floor for the 10-minute question or comment period. However, since she is not here, we must go to the next person.

I would like to remind Hon. Members that under Standing Order 55(2) we have completed the eight hours of debate. We are now into 10-minute speeches. I must recognize the next speaker from the other Party. The Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins).

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet had the opportunity in the resumption of this Parliament to congratulate you on your job as Deputy Chairman of Committees of the Whole. You conduct yourself very well in the chair and we wish you every success in that role.

I am pleased to rise today to speak on Bill C-18 which deals with the National Transportation Act. It also deals, of course, with the deregulation of the transportation industry. Bill C-18 is primarily designed to revamp the National Transportation Act brought forward in 1967 by the Hon. Jack Pickersgill who was then Minister of Transport in the Government of the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson. I can remember very well as a fledgling Member in those days sitting behind Mr. Pickersgill while he supported his Bill day after day.

I recall having a Parliamentary Secretary come to my riding to speak one night. In those days, of course, the House sat at night, and the House was still in session. While the Parliamentary Secretary and myself were in my riding, a snap vote took place. I was paired, but, unfortunately, the Parliamentary Secretary was not. The Government lost that vote, I believe, by 57 to 55. It was one of those squeakers. When Bill C-18 came up for debate it brought back those old memories. Jack Pickersgill was a very adept and professional Parliamentarian, as we all know.

The cited purpose of this Bill is to increase competition in the transportation sector by removing certain regulations which hinder the ability to compete. That is very serious for the regions of this country. It is certainly one reason I wanted to speak on this Bill on Friday and today. The transportation modes which will be affected by this deregulation are rail, air and trucking. Of course, most of us have received representations from them all.

Every Canadian rail company, commercial airline, private airline owner, extra-provincial trucking firm and parcel carrier will be affected by this Bill in the way they will be allowed to conduct their business. It will be particularly difficult on regional airlines. Again, regional airlines are very important to the regions of this country because they feed passengers and freight into central locations.

Of course, there is something about which we have to be very cautious, and it is one of the major thrusts of this debate. The fact is that in the deregulation of the transportation industry one must always talk about ensuring that safety measures are implemented. We are not absolutely certain that the proper precautions have been taken with respect to the implementation of this legislation.

I remind the House today, and all Canadians, of the Gander air crash in which Arrow Airlines transporting a planeload of American troops home from peace-keeping operations in the Middle East did not use every safety precaution. As a result there was a crash in which many people on their way home for Christmas lost their lives.

This is a serious matter in spite of the fact that the Parliamentary Secretary gets up after each speech and reiterates how the safety measures of the Bill will be implemented and how everything will be fine when they are in place. What will be needed to oversee the transportation industry once all deregulation efforts go into effect is a police force doing nothing else but supervising deregulation and the way in which people treat it.

We have to go one extra step in Canada, something which we have known since Confederation and even before. I refer to the equalization of transportation costs to all parts of the country. The issue is deeper than that, however. It goes to placing transportation facilities at the service of various regions of the country.

I was absolutely astounded to learn what will happen under deregulation. I have received a great many representations from van lines, people who ship by rail, trucking firms and, of course, regional airlines. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) went down to the United States and said that Canada is open for business. It has been said often in conjunction with that statement that we are not up for sale. Yet, when we see what has happened recently in Canada, for example, the 15 per cent tax on softwood lumber, the fishing agreement with France which has devastated the fishermen of the East Coast and now the transportation industry situation, we may very well have large American companies coming in to buy up smaller Canadian firms. These firms will not be absolutely perfect in putting into effect all the safety measures.

Let us deal with one measure of deregulation. There is one thing that the transportation Bill of 1967 did, that is, it ensured a reasonable and fair transportation policy for the regions of Canada. Recently, the CNR came out with what it calls a rationalization program, 1986-1996, concerning the St. Lawrence region. This is the region including Montreal, the Ottawa Valley and areas of northern Ontario. It is a devastating report. It starts off with the following words:

> In the context of the rationalization of our rail infrastructure, some lines have been identified as being potential candidates for abandonment in the coming years. A preliminary plan has been prepared and attached you will find the sections affected.
> Any effort to attract new traffic on these sections is to be abandoned immediately.

So CN wishes to discourage business to make it look as if the railway line is not needed. The report continues:

> For the traffic already on these lines, we must consider either, and preferably, converting this traffic onto the intermodal system, or else, adjusting rates to minimize our present losses.

So if the company cannot discourage traffic on the lines it wants to close down, so says CN, then what it does is simply raise freight rates to the extent that nobody will use them, something which will be devastating to the regions of Canada. The report goes on to state:

> You will shortly be convoked to a meeting in which the particulars of the application of these measures will be discussed in more detail. In the meantime, I would ask you to treat this with discretion.

In other words, "Keep it low-key, fellas. Don't blow the whistle and don't let anyone know what we're planning to do". When I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) a question about this matter one day in the House he belittled my representation and more or less shoved it off to the side as if it were not important. Yet, the document to which I have referred concerns the main line of the CNR from Montreal to Ottawa, up the Ottawa Valley to North Bay and beyond. A major part of it, some 163 miles, is known as the Beachburg Subdivision. This does not only affect the regions of eastern Ontario and western Quebec but it affects other parts of Canada, for example the City of Toronto and the large urban areas of southern Ontario where a great deal of this traffic will be headed if that line is closed down.

The Consolidated Bathurst Paper Mill at Portage-du-fort on the Quebec side of the Ottawa River receives and ships out approximately 4,500 railcars per year. Out of this amount, nearly 1,800 carry chemicals including chlorine, caustic soda, bunker oil, to name just a few. The concern is that if the railroads are looking to all these chemicals being transported over our provincial highways, then with the abandonment of the line servicing this mill it is a certainty that the goods will have to be shipped over the provincial highways. I do not think that the Governments of the Province of Ontario and Quebec have any choice but to enter into this issue to save that CN line and ensure that it stays in place.

Local fire and police departments in the area of this mill are not equipped to handle a major spill of chlorine if one were to occur as a result of a transport accident. Some municipal fire departments have done excellent jobs of upgrading themselves. A great many of them are volunteer fire departments and they still send their members away on courses. They can handle many of these situations. But to put this type of material into these big transports on to highways in eastern Ontario and western Quebec, highways which are already overloaded, is not only unfair to the shippers but to the people of those areas. It will end up costing the two provincial Governments a fortune.

In conclusion, where will these 1,800 carloads go? They will go right through the built-up areas of Canada.

There are a great many things I have to say about the Bill but I see that you are giving me the signal that my time is almost up, Mr. Speaker. I want to say that I will be voting against the Bill because I think it is horrendous. I just wish that the Hon. Jack Pickersgill were back here putting some sanity into Canadian transportation policy.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to take part in the debate this morning concerning an issue that is so fundamentally important to western Canada. I do not think it is any secret that I come from a region of Canada which is very much dependent on transportation. A large part of our industry is based on resource development. Many of the industries in my riding literally end up becoming captive shippers. As a result we are very keenly interested in the Bill which is before us. We feel it is fundamental to the development of the West, especially in terms of its economy. All the grain produced in our area has to be shipped out by rail. There are many difficulties surrounding these shipments. This debate is but a reminder that the number one problem we face in the Peace River country continues to be with respect to transportation.

I would like to give a specific example which illustrates the point I want to make in speaking to this Bill. In my riding I have a large lumber mill, the capacity of which is virtually incredible. It probably ranks as one of the top-producing mills in Canada. The only form of transportation available to this mill is one railway. What is the result of this situation? There is no competition. Thus the bottom line is very simple. The mill pays tremendous prices to ship out its lumber. But does this company have an alternative? The company has to provide a form of competition on its own. It has to truck out large amounts of its lumber, not because it is practical or economical, but because it is the only way there can be any form of competition which allows some leverage to bring down the prices the railway charges. In effect, artificial competition has to be created because of the present National Transportation Act. There is no opportunity for the competition that is so necessary. This Bill starts to deal with and address that problem.

The second item I wish to briefly touch upon, and which I think is very important to western Canada, is the whole issue of western coal. We have talked for some time now in the west about the coal there. It is high quality, low in acid emissions, and it is ideal coal for Ontario Hydro to use in the production of its power.

In today's Quorum there is an interesting article from The Globe and Mail which speaks directly to this issue. I wish to refer to some of the quotations from it, because it illustrates some of the problems that we are facing.

Under the leadership of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), the Government has spent a great deal of time, effort, and energy to bring western coal into Ontario.

Deputy Prime Minister Donald Mazankowski has written a stiff letter to Ontario Premier David Peterson, complaining that the Premier is avoiding a meeting with him to discuss the use of low-sulphur western Canadian coal by Ontario Hydro.

"I have, since last November, been seeking a meeting with you to discuss how we might best proceed on a co-operative basis with this important initiative," Mr. Mazankowski wrote in a letter dated January 29 and obtained by The Globe and Mail.

"Already, this meeting has been postponed twice by your office—

This is a very important issue and we are trying to do it.

The article becomes more interesting, and as a western Canadian I feel it is well and accurately stated that:

The report, which says 13,000 jobs could be created in the next 15 years, $4.1 billion in income generated—

That is, just because of this deal. This is an extremely important decision for western Canada with an impact for the nation.

In addition to that, there is the all-important concern about acid rain. The same report states:

—Ontario Hydro could meet its future acid-gas emission limits "solely by the use of more western Canadian coal"—

There are two options. First, we could create economic activity in Canada instead of in the United States, which is where Ontario Hydro presently gets its coal. In addition to that, an important goal is met, that of reducing the acid emissions in Canada. What is the problem? Why can we not arrange a meeting with the Premier? Why can we not come to some resolution of this issue? Again I refer to the article, this time a quotation from the Ontario Energy Minister, Vincent Kerrio, who said this:

"One major hurdle, however, is the high cost of transporting Western coal to Ontario," he said. "Instead of Mr. Mazankowski laying the blame on us, if he came forward with a strong commitment to moving that product at a reasonable price I'm sure we could do it."

Is that not incredible, Mr. Speaker? The provincial Government of Ontario is asking us to come up with something that will allow the coal from western Canada to be brought into Ontario at a reasonable price, and their federal colleagues are sitting here blocking the very vehicle needed in order to ship this coal into our region.

That is a picture of the type of problem that we have. I am astounded when I see an economic opportunity, an opportunity to reduce acid rain emissions, and what have we got? The two wings of the Liberal Party at loggerheads, at opposite ends of the spectrum on something that is so fundamental and important.

The question is, are the Liberals opposing this Bill because of some clear understanding of some great harm to the Canadian economy, or are they looking at it for some other reason?

If we look behind the scenes and take our memories back to 1983-84, we find something that is very interesting. At that time the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) was a director of CPR. In itself, that is fascinating. His resignation did not take effect until after he was sworn in as Prime Minister, so that carried through his run for the leadership into his time of leading the Party, and then becoming Prime Minister. The Leader of the Opposition presents himself as a Member from western Canada. If he was representing western Canada, he would see the absolute importance of this coal deal. He would see the legislation as an opportunity to deal with that problem. In addition, he would sit down with his Ontario colleagues, namely, the Premier of Ontario, and say, "Sit down. Let's get this ball going." What is he doing?

Mrs. Mailly: He has moved to Toronto. Maybe they will talk to each other.

Mr. Cooper: That is exactly what he has done. He has taken a condominium in Toronto, and maybe the two of them can get together and work out these serious problems.

The truth of the matter is that the Liberal Opposition is not representing western Canada. The time has come for them to do that. He should not be buying a condominium in Toronto, he should be spending more time in Vancouver, Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba, and understanding what is going on there. He should be talking to his provincial colleagues and not representing the CPR, even though he has resigned as a director, but representing the people who have the concerns of western Canada, and their concerns focus on this Bill.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to say a few words on Bill C-18. It is always a pleasure to speak on Bills relating to transportation, particularly because we can look back in our history and recognize the major element that transportation has played in the social and economic structures. We are the second largest country in the world ranking twenty-eighth in terms of population. It is not surprising that transportation has played such a role in the development of Canadian society and the economy.

For the average Canadian thinking in terms of our history, we think of the voyageurs, the fur traders linking up Montreal with Fort St. James in British Columbia. We think of the CPR and the history of railroads and canals in Canadian history. We certainly can recall the role of aircraft, the bush pilots opening up Canada's North.

I could go on, but obviously transportation and the development of transportation in the best interest of Canadians is important. Now that we are debating amendments to the National Transportation Act, we recognize that it is long overdue. It was 20 years ago last year when Jack Pickersgill introduced legislation, the National Transportation Act, that in a sense provided the framework that we have known in Canada for the last two decades. We all recognize that it is time for rethinking, upgrading, and re-examining the various sectors of that Act, and bringing it more in line with the realities of the 1980s in preparation for the 1990s.

This Bill could be called Bill C-18 with a variety of things in terms of title. It does have a title, but I would think that a more appropriate title would be to call this an anti-bill. It is in fact anti-competition. It is anti-regional. It is anti-economic development, particularly in certain regions of Canada. It is anti-Canadian. It is anti-safety. It is anti-service. It is anti-small-business. I could go on with a variety of other categories.

In looking at what this Bill actually does as opposed to the mythology surrounding it, it is quite alarming. In this Bill there is the assumption that we will leave the transportation systems of Canada to the free hand of the market-place. The belief that whatever is the most profitable thing to do is what companies should be permitted to do, and that what makes sense in terms of profit motive is good for Canada goes against the reality of the Canadian landscape. If we say that what is profitable is best, once again the entire emphasis of the transportation system will be focused on the Golden Horseshoe region of southern Ontario or the Toronto-Montreal access. That will be Canada, that is where the transportation system will be most effective and efficient. The rest of Canada will simply be left on the sidelines. That is not what built Canada. That is not what makes Canada today. That is one of the major weaknesses in this piece of legislation. It lacks any framework by which to evaluate the various aspects of the Bill.

What does it do in terms of dealing with matters of safety for workers and passengers? What does it do to create better and improved competition in our economy? What does it do in terms of developing economic growth, particularly in the regions of Canada? Does it assist the fledgling small business sector or small manufacturers, particularly in our regions? Does it promote Canadian participation in the economy? I am afraid that the answer to all these questions is no, it does not.

Consequently, we have a number of concerns regarding Bill C-18. I think it is really a carbon copy of Bill C-126. The old Bill has been simply reintroduced in the House. When the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) introduced the Bill, he was asked in a scrum outside the House, "How is Bill C-18 different from Bill C-126?" He had to admit that he was not aware of any significant changes. He was not aware that it was much different at all.

We know what groups felt about the previous Bill to deregulate the transportation system. We know that the Canadian Trucking Association was against the previous legislation. We know that CN was against the legislation. We know that CP was against the legislation. We know that the Council of Maritime Premiers was against the legislation. We know that the Canadian Labour Congress was against the legislation. Quite frankly the list goes on for a whole page. Witness after witness appeared to speak against the legislation in terms of it being anti-competitive and anti-service. They indicated that it did not promote safety for passengers or for people working in the transportation system and that it did not enhance Canadian participation.

Quite frankly the question is, who supports the Bill? I suppose a few major shipping companies support it. However, do Canadian consumers support it? I, for one, will be very curious to see who lines up during the committee hearings, which will hopefully be held across Canada, to say that this is good legislation.

I should like to refer to a specific point in the legislation. The authors of Bill C-18 seem to understand the devastating impact of deregulation on the northern parts of Canada. Perhaps one should ask, do they really understand? The Bill retains regulation for air travel only for an area called the designated area. In other words, the Bill indicates that it is important to have regulation in a certain part of Canada, that being the northern part of the country. I should say that it is defined as being north of the line drawn from the 50th parallel on the East Coast to the 55th parallel on the West Coast. In this particular area regulation will continue, except for flights from the south to northern destinations as well as trips originating in the North and terminating in the South. These flights are still deregulated.

If it was believed that it was important to maintain regulation in the northern parts of Canada, which includes the northern parts of most provinces and certainly the territories, why was it restricted only to air travel? What about truck and marine traffic in those areas? If it is needed in the northern parts of Canada, what about the other parts of Canada?

In this particular section of Bill C-18 the Government really betrays the reality of the situation. It recognizes how important it is to ensure the economic development of northern Canada and to ensure that the citizens of that part of Canada obtain reasonably competitive rates. Also it recognizes that safety is a factor for workers and for passengers and that it is important to help Canadian companies exist in that milieu. Obviously it felt that regulation was necessary in that part of Canada. However, for the rest of Canada it says no. We will have to explore that distinction as the debate continues.

It is part of the sell-out theme for which the Government has become famous. It sold out the softwood industry. It sold out to multinational drug companies. It sold out the fishing industry. Now it is selling out in the transportation industry. It is part of the so-called free trade discussions which are already well under way. Bill C-18 is simply part of that because it will give United States railways and trucking companies access and advantage in Canada which Canadians will not have in the United States. It gives it all to the American trucking companies and to the American railways, but it does not give the same benefits to Canadian trucking companies and railways. Why would anyone agree with that? That is what the legislation does. It is pro-American and anti-Canadian. For that reason we have some real concerns about it.

We also have concerns when we think of the need for some regulation in the system to ensure that parts of Canada are well served. I remind the House of the 1897 Crow's Nest Pass agreement, which was designed to help western producers; of the statutory grain rates established in the 1920s, again to assist western farmers; of the Western Grain Transportation Act, which was necessary to provide equal opportunities for those in western Canada; and of the Maritime Assistance Act as well as the Atlantic Provinces Freight Assistance Act, which were designed to provide equal opportunities for people in the Atlantic provinces. These pieces of legislation were thoughtfully presented, argued, and adopted in the past because they were deemed to be absolutely necessary. Suddenly, through this intellectual breakthrough, the Conservatives think that they are unnecessary and that we can throw aside all this legislation and let the free hand of the market-place decide.

In closing, when people are seeking lower air fares, they want to go between other places than Vancouver, Toronto, and Montreal. What about Red Deer, Swift Current, Moncton, Sherbrooke, and Brantford? If it is to be simply the invisible hand of the market-place which decides where services will be provided at competitive rates, it will just be between major metropolitan areas in terms of air fares. Those living in smaller cities and towns in rural areas will once again experience discrimination at the hands of the Government.

Mr. Moe Mantha (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I just want to draw to the attention of the House the problem with which I was left when I was elected in 1984. As a result of deregulation under two former Ministers of the Liberal Government, 23 controllers at the air terminal in North Bay were to be uprooted through attrition, or moved to Toronto or Winnipeg. They had mortgages. Their children went to school in the North Bay area. They were totally upset.

I draw to the attention of the House that this problem was started by the former Government under deregulation, and today Liberal Members talk about being against deregulation. It is hard to believe what you hear as a new Member of Parliament. The former Government has left the present Government with this problem. I hope we will be able to do something good and that these controllers will not have to move.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to rise again in the discussion of Bill C-18, because it allows me to dwell a little longer on this party's position on such a basic matter.

Although unbelievably thick, this Bill as it now stands is more amazing because of its shortcomings than because of what it does contain.

Two weeks ago, I rose for the first time in the early stages of the debate on second Reading, and I pointed out to the House that we in the Liberal Party believe this legislation is incomplete. The deregulation principle itself is acceptable, but the way they are going about it is totally unacceptable in our view. For this reason during discussion in committee we will attempt to bring in amendments to provide safety guarantees to certain groups in our society who may be harmed by the Bill as it is now drafted, because we believe specifically that safety at airports is essential, and the Bill does not guarantee the safety of each and every passenger boarding a plane. Despite all this Government's rhetoric, it is clear the Bill has no teeth as far as air safety is concerned, and the same even applies with respect to rail safety, for we must admit there is now a significant increase in the number of rail accidents in Canada. The only thing the Government has been able to do so far is to appoint inquiry commissions which invariably urge the Government to intervene and impose much stricter conditions and a much more appropriate control system. Yet this Bill does not even allude to safety measures.

We would also suggest that the Bill is replete with other flaws. Particularly with respect to air rates, we can see now that one of the priorities advocated by the Deputy Prime Minister and Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) who was then the Minister of Transport and sponsor of the first Conservative Bill on deregulation can be summed up in his words: Thanks to deregulation we will see the rates decline. The fact is that the rates of our Canadian air carriers will not go down as a result of deregulation or this Government measure. There could have been competition in the air, but any such possibility is melting away like snow under the sun. All major air carriers are buying each other out and before too long there will be undue concentration in Canada's air transport business. So how can anyone possibly look forward to healty competition among various companies when in fact Canada will end up with only one or maybe two major air carriers?

As if the situation were not devastating enough, both CP Air and Air Canada presidents stated before the parliamentary committee which studied the Minister's document entitled Freedom to Move that they did not expect to see lower air rates within the next few years. Why? Because the two presidents told us that indeed, owing to market forces and especially competition from foreign airlines—mostly American airlines—Canada's major carriers are feeling the pinch and simply cannot offer lower rates to their clients.

In short, I believe that the Canadian consumers have been deceived because the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) has tried to make the public believe that the rates will decrease substantially because of deregulation. The former Minister of Transport, who is the sponsor of this Bill, was himself forced to admit the truth last June when he appeared before the Committee and was asked for evidence that rates would in fact decrease. He was himself forced to admit that there was no guarantee that his deregulation plan would result in a rate decrease. What is even worse in my opinion is the effect that this Bill will have on employment in the transport sector. The House will recall that the Conservative Government was elected on a platform of jobs, jobs, jobs. Before the last election, the Conservatives were saying: Vote for us and we shall create jobs. Yet, the Bill does the exact opposite of what this electoral promise implied because, if we look at what happened in the United States when the American authorities deregulated the industry, we find that there was a series of layoffs and a major displacement in the air industry. Between 1978 and 1985, some 40,000 workers in the air industry lost their jobs in the United States. This Bill, however thick it may be, contains nothing to protect jobs in the air industry. It contains nothing to force the air carriers to compensate workers who have to move to keep their jobs or to give adequate notice to employees being laid off.

We feel that Bill C-18 will lead to major disruption of the air transportation industry, the trucking sector, and our two railway companies in this country. All intervenors who testified before the Standing Committee of the House of Commons on Transport which examined the Government's paper, Freedom to Move, and I say all intervenors, made it clear to the Conservative Government that this Bill would have serious repercussions on employment levels in the transportation industry in Canada. Mr. Speaker, traditionally, Canada's transportation sector has been among the most fertile and most stable sources of employment in the history of this country. Our country was developed thanks to our ability to improve our transportation modes, including the railways, highways and our aviation industry with its many airports across this country. I think we can say that in the past, thousands of Canadians have earned an honest living, made good wages and enjoyed job security in the transportation sector in Canada. I therefore have no hesitation in saying that the Government's hasty decision to proceed with total deregulation may severely affect the number of jobs available and the job security of those who traditionally earn a living by working for one of our Canadian transport companies.

I find that unacceptable. And that is why I support a suggestion submitted by one of our colleagues who presented an amendment that would send this Bill back to the Standing Committee on Transport with the request that it reassess the entire question, and add firmer guarantees for employment security to the Bill, as of now, if possible.

I know this Bill contains many other deficiencies. Unfortunately, our Standing Orders do not give me more than 10 minutes at this stage. When I next pursue the matter, I will point out all the loopholes and reasons for concern this Bill contains, not only for workers in the transportation industry but for those who enjoy the benefits of our very efficient transport infrastructure here in Canada.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I am a bit disappointed that I did not hear a few more of my colleagues from the government side taking an opportunity to participate in this debate. I extend an invitation to them to enter this debate following my remarks which are limited to 10 minutes. If government Members rise, they may contribute to the public discussion on this very crucial matter. This is an essentially important piece of legislation. I would like to hear the Conservative response to my understanding of the implications of this legislation, and that of my colleagues who have spoken on it. I invite Conservative Members to speak rather than to remain silent, waiting for the negative impacts of this legislation on Canadians.

This legislation is gambling with Canadian interests. It is playing Russian roulette with our economic and transportation needs. The Government is gambling that its approach to transportation will work.

Mr. Blenkarn: Right.

Mr. Keeper: The Hon. Member over there has said that this is right and I hope he rises after I have finished to elaborate. Canadians do not want to gamble with essential services—

Mr. Blenkarn: It was studied by the committee.

Mr. Keeper: It is interesting that the Hon. Member can heckle. I appreciate his capacities in that regard—

Mr. Gauthier: He's got good lungs and that's all he's got.

Mr. Keeper: He has good lungs and I would hope that he would take the opportunity to make a speech and make good use of those lungs so that we may hear his position on the gamble the Government is taking with our need for transportation services and for safety in transportation.

I would like to elaborate a bit on the substance of this issue. It is my understanding that the carrot the Government is holding out to the Canadian public is lower transportation fares; that if the Government moves out of the area of transportation and is no longer a watchdog, we can expect to have lower transportation fares. In fact, by holding out this carrot, the Government has even captivated those who do analyses for the Consumers' Association of Canada, or at least it has up until now.

I heard recently that a representative of the Consumers' Association of Canada has said that while the association agrees with deregulation in principle, if it will mean less competition and only two major carriers in Canada—and it seems to be moving in that direction—then the association has doubts. It has said that if the interests of Canadian consumers will be hurt, it will have to re-evaluate its position on this legislation.

We should remind ourselves that we have already begun to move in the direction of deregulation. When the Liberal Government was in office, it commenced that process, a number of years ago. I think it is worth while to remind Canadians that, while Liberal Members in Opposition may be taking strong stands with regard to deregulation, they started the ball rolling. They started the snowball rolling down the mountain and now it is getting pretty big and scary and they are waking up to the actions they themselves started.

Deregulation has already taken place to a great extent. Under existing legislation, there is a rule that refers to public convenience and necessity and this provides some protection for the public. Even so, the regulatory environment has been loosened up a great deal. While there have been some seat sales, Canadians cannot point to any great nirvana in terms of reduced transportation fares. The Government is simply gambling that its further giant step in the direction of deregulation will result in bargain-basement fares. If it does not work, then we will be paying an enormous price because we could lose Air Canada and we could lose in the areas of safety and service.

Even if the Government's gamble does work, what will we have? We may win on price but is price the only consideration? Is there not a place in transportation policy for considering the value of a service as determined by convenience, availability and safety?

I would point out that there have been a number of disasters in the transportation industry. I think in particular of the Air-India disaster. When transportation companies are put into a deregulated environment in which they take responsibility for safety and security, it is obvious that the price of the ticket is not the only consideration. Safety is an essential consideration as well.

The Government is taking a big gamble on behalf of Canadians. Why does it not put its studies on the table? Why does it not tell us precisely what it expects fares to be if this legislation goes through? Based on our experiences to date, I doubt that we will see the air fare nirvana that the Government has been holding out as a carrot to Canadians. I am afraid we will pay a price in terms of safety and service.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this legislation is very important, because the interests of all Canadians are at stake here. Our transportation system is not just a matter of rates but also of safety and service.

I believe the Government is gambling with the interests of Canadians. It wants to offer Canadians the lowest possible fares for transportation, but it has failed to prove this will indeed be the case, which I doubt it will in the near future.

Mr. Speaker, I know I should finish my speech, and I simply want to say in concluding that Canadians do not want a Government that is taking a serious gamble with their interests. They want a Government that takes a balanced approach to these issues, since there is more involved than just the price of a ticket.

• (1210)

[English]

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I had not anticipated speaking on the question we have before us because I thought the correctness of the legislation would be self-evident to any rational, thinking human being. However, we have just had a demonstration from the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) and the Hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) that perhaps rationale and common sense are not as prevalent, certainly in this House, as I had hoped they would be. I therefore feel compelled to add one or two points.

Is it not self-evident that competition results in the best service for the customer? You do not really have to think about that. All you have to do is go to your local grocery store and then walk across the street to your local post office. Can you not see that the level of service and prices that you get from the grocery store are far better than you get in the post office? That is not because of the people who work there. It is because of the system imposed in the case of the post office when Government is involved in things where it has no real place.

I am not surprised at the arguments we have heard here today. It is typical of the Liberals and their socialist allies to want to control everything. We will decide, they say, where you can fly from and to and what price you will pay. There is no point in leaving that to the open market because we are better than the open market. We are more intelligent than you, the consumer, or you, the provider of service. We the Government should tell you what you can do and what you cannot do. The Liberals and the NDP look upon the providers and consumer of services as some kind of incompetents. They cannot get over the state of mind which says that the Government knows best and can therefore impose its will on all other Canadians.

I do not know, Sir, whether you have ever spent any time dealing with the regulatory process in transportation as it existed in the past. I sat in on ATC hearings and have seen high-powered and high-priced lawyers trying to belittle the applicant concerned. It is a waste of time, money, and human effort which could be better spent on competition rather than trying to beat down some guy in a quasi judicial hearing. Instead of competing in trying to hire the smoothest talking lawyer, they should be improving the service concerned, which is what will happen as a result of the legislation presently before the House.

I was astounded when the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap said that deregulation was against the little guy. It is the very opposite. It is the little guy who will benefit most from deregulation. He is the guy who cannot afford to hire the special consultants and lawyers under the existing system. He is forbidden to get into business right now unless he goes through six months, a year, or two years of judicial proceedings. He cannot even start out. Under the new system proposed by the Minsiter of Transport, using the fit, able and willing criteria, the little guy will be able to get into business where he cannot even get a start right now. In so doing, if you are a big operator in transportation and you are always scared of little guys starting up in competition, that will keep you honest. The big guys are not going to be able to get away with the things they have been getting away with because there will always be that threat of competition. That is the way it should be.

I know, Sir, why the NDP and Liberals want to restrict economic enterprise to a few big organizations in Canada. They do not like little guys. They are scared of thousands of Canadians running around doing their own thing, making their own deals, buying and selling amongst themselves with no Government telling them what to do. I know why they want just a few big corporations in every field of endeavour, whether it be energy or transportation. It is a lot easier to eventually nationalize five or six big companies than it is to take over hundreds or thousands of little guys. That is why they are always arguing in favour of the big corporations. Liberals, in their political philosophy, might not want to take over ownership of the means of production and transportation, but they certainly want to control it. They want to keep that iron grip. Therefore we have the Liberals and socialists together arguing in favour of continued regulation.

I will give you a couple of examples of this. The town where I live is an exporter of arsenic. It is hauled away by truck from the City of Yellowknife down to somewhere in Georgia. It is a hell of a good business for a little trucking company to get into. However, a little trucking company cannot do it because it has to go through several Canadian provinces and several U.S. states to get from the Northwest Territories to Georgia. Only a large international trucking company can bid on a contract like that. What the Government wants to do is have a system where the little guy has a chance to bid on a job like that. At present he is prevented from doing so.

I have seen this in small communities in my riding which have no road access and where somebody wants to start an air service. They want to buy themselves a Cessna 185 or a little Beaver and provide air service where none now exists. If you want to charter a plane you have to pay to ferry it from its original point to where you are, then to where you want to go, and then pay again to ferry it back. I have seen it made impossible for people to start up an air service because existing corporations based in other towns have gone to the ATC and blocked the setting up of an obviously advantageous air service for the people who live in these small communities. We heard examples of towns like Brantford and Red Deer, the kind of medium-sized town not particularly well serviced at the present time. With deregulation it would be a lot easier and simpler for an air carrier to set up in those towns and start servicing them on a regular basis. Deregulation has been put into effect in the U.S. but here in Canada, because we have not changed the legislation, the Government has not been applying the existing law in all its rigour.

I have a few final comments about the north-south line which divides Canada. We will have one system of more or less complete deregulation in the south and a continued form of regulation north of the line. In this respect I believe the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap had a good point. He said if one argues that deregulation is best south of the line, should one not also argue that deregulation is better north of the line? Alternatively, if one is of the other opinion, the same ought to apply.

Why do we need this line? That is a question that troubles me. My opinion is that we do not need that line. I believe that deregulation is best both in southern Canada and in northern Canada. However, I know that a number of operators and municipalities have argued that they want to keep a system in the north for some time, on a kind of experimental basis. If the deregulation works well in the south, then the line can be eliminated later. That may not be bad because in that instance, the reverse onus would be in effect.

In conclusion, I want to go firmly on the record as being in support of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) and the deregulation system for Canadian transportation that he has so wisely brought before the House.

[Translation]

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part today in this debate on Bill C-18, to amend the current national transportation legislation which was first implemented in 1967. I deplore the fact that before introducing this Bill on November 4, the Government chose to ignore the quite legitimate claims of dozens of organizations representing thousands of Canadians.

Again, the Government overlooks the results of a democratic process just as it did in the case of Bill C-22, concerning pharmaceutical products, totally disregarding the recommendations of Professor Eastman. In both cases, Canadian consumers will foot the bill for this Conservative Government's indifference.

I should like especially to emphasize the shortcomings of this Bill concerning the transportation of handicapped people. The House will remember that in 1981, the Special Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped, on which I had the honour to sit, submitted ten recommendations dealing with transportation in Chapter VIII on its Obstacles report.

The two major objectives of the International Year of the Handicapped, I should like to remind the House, were: equality, participation and full integration.

Our report was entitled Obstacles for a precise purpose. Having heard over 600 briefs, we wanted to make the Government and the Canadian public aware of the special needs of the handicapped in each and every area which affects their daily lives, namely, human and civil rights, employment, income, information and communications, housing, independent living, public access to facilities and buildings, transportation, recreation, education, aids and devices, consumerism institutional living, changing attitudes, prevention, research and development, data base development, Native population, international perspective and finally funding and implementation.

I wanted to list the various chapters of this report, Mr. Speaker, to demonstrate the extent of this study which should have been consulted by the Minister responsible for Bill C-18, a legislation aimed at de-regulating the transportation industry.

Chapter VIII of our Obstacles report dealt entirely with the problems associated with the transportation of handicapped in Canada. Here is what Elizabeth Semkiw, from Winnipeg, said:

> Transportation, or rather the accessibility or lack of transportation, has always been the most serious problem handicapped people have had to face.
> Getting to the doctor, to work, or, on very rare occasions, to recreational activities has always been a major obstacle and a source of considerable difficulty and expenditure for the handicapped who, like myself, cannot move around without assistance in an ordinary vehicle.

Then, there is what the Canadian Rehabilitation Council for the handicapped has to say.

> Since the invention of the wheel, humanity has always worked at improving its means of transport. High technology gives more freedom to the non-handicapped and facilitates their movements in their own neighbourhood and beyond. However, for the handicapped, transport still is a major obstacle to equality, participation and integration.

I remind the House that the theme of the International Year of the Handicapped in 1981 was equality, participation and integration plans. How can our handicapped in Canada hope to achieve full participation and integration if they cannot travel with dignity inside their own country? Our fundamental recommendation on which all the others were based was as follows. Before making any change to any Canadian law, the Government must always consult the handicapped about programs and policies which directly affect them.

It is very disappointing, Mr. Speaker, to see that the Government did not consult the handicapped in preparing this Bill. If the handicapped had been consulted and listened to, Bill C-18 would be very different. For instance, it would ensure reasonable access to all modes of transport under federal jurisdiction for the handicapped. The Minister of Transpsort should have developed a national policy on transport for the handicapped before introducing the Bill. As we know, several means of transport come directly under federal jurisdiction, such as air carriers, interprovincial railway services, interprovincial bus services, international and interprovincial ferries and the road cruiser service in Newfoundland.

Had the Government adopted a national transportation policy for the handicapped, the major air, rail and water terminals would be decently accessible to them, especially with respect to washrooms, wickets, baggage registration, restaurants, telephones and drinking fountains, as well as the audio and visual communication and information systems. There are still too many terminals across the land where those essential services are not available, and the Minister of Transport should publish without further ado a scheduling of the projects he intends to implement to ensure reasonable accessibility for handicapped travellers. "Accessibility" means that the person may get aboard and take his or her seat without help. This is too bad, and I regret that the Minister did not take this opportunity when tabling the Bill to make transportation more accessible to the handicapped.

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-18 now before the House, the National Transportation Act, 1986 is a clumsy and incomplete application of the deregulation principle. It is an application copied from the American experience. I have just shown how the Bill has completely ignored accessibility, comfort, safety and rates for the Canadian handicapped. With this in mind, I will ask the House the following question: If the Canadian Government fails to take heed of ensuring accessibility and safety to the Canadian handicapped, is it realistic to believe an American firm will? This legislation brings in long awaited changes on which we are partly in agreement, but as concerns the handicapped, there are still too many shortcomings and deficiencies.

Hopefully, Mr. Speaker, we will have an opportunity to introduce amendments during the parliamentary committee study and, above all, the Minister will look favourably upon them. So I intend to vote against this Bill, Mr. Speaker, but I will support the amendment aimed at withdrawing it and referring the subject-matter to the Standing Committee on Transport.

• (1230)

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on Bill C-18, and the motion, which I support, to send it back to committee so that people who have expressed an interest in having input can do so before it is drafted instead of after the direction is set by the Government.

This Bill is a virtual word-for-word repeat of a Bill which failed in the last Parliament, Bill C-126. We see with this Bill an introduction of an Act by a Progressive Conservative Government to, what it calls, "deregulate" the transportation industry. That is the same Party which appeared to be opposed to the killing of the Crow rate because western Canadians understood what killing the Crow would do to their region. Now the Conservatives have done a complete flip-flop and decided that all transportation matters should be completely deregulated.

What does that mean for a region like western Canada? It means there will no longer be rights to service by rail. The process of getting rid of branchlines will continue at an even faster pace under this Government than happened under the Liberals. Western Canadians will recall that the Liberals closed down some 2,500 branchlines in the course of their mandate. There are about 3,000 that the Conservative Government is proposing to get rid of in its mandate. This is the same Government that on the hustings claimed to be the protectors of farmers' rights to maintain those branch lines and the rights of their communities to have access to the rail system.

What regulation is all about is the right of communities to have access to service. We have used the system of regulation to ensure that when service whether by truck, rail or air, begins in a particular community or area, it will be there for some years to come so that the local community can build its businesses and infrastructure based on the certain knowledge that the transportation service will continue.

I noticed with some interest that the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) talked about the great value of deregulation and permitting companies to come and go at will in providing service to communities. He can take that position quite secure in the knowledge that his area of the country, the far north, will continue to be regulated so that those comunities will know for some time that they will have transportation service available and will not be subjected to the kind of on-again off-again service the smaller communities in my part of the country, the prairies, will find themselves facing.

The only criteria for a company beginning a transportation service to a community is that it prove—and apparently this can be done fairly easily—that it is fit, willing and able to provide a service to that community and it will, with very little to-do, commence the service. On the surface that sounds like the ultimate in free enterprise and good business for small communities. However, most of the communities I represent, and in which I have lived all my life, know that that sort of philosophy does not pan out when one starts getting into cases. The community of Wishart has lost its rail line because it was unable to maintain the interest of the shipper. Under this law, that phasing out process which took three or four years, during which time the community was provided with service, will no longer be available. The service can be withdrawn very quickly by a number of processes, some of which only take 60 days, so that if a railway or trucking company think they are not making enough money providing goods and services in and out of a town like Wishart, they can be gone in 60 days. Under the regulated system, at least the community had an opportunity to go before a branch of the Canadian Transport Commission and argue its case for maintaining the service as long as possible.

We have another process at work with the dropping of the old regulation which required that public convenience and necessity be the basis upon which service was supplied to small communities. That is the move which was made possible under the changes to the Western Grain Transportation Act when it was piloted through this House by the previous Government under the then Minister of Transport, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). These changes permitted a procedure whereby some of the railways could offer to their customers variable rates. This is beginning to be seen in western Canada for what it is worth. It appears to be an opportunity for the grain companies and railways to coalesce and provide a minimum amount of delivery points so that producers have only a few points at which to deliver grain. They propose to use the variable rate procedure as a means whereby higher prices for the final grain product will be offered to producers to deliver to certain designated points. Those higher prices are made possible because the railways have offered a reduced rate to the shipping company. One of the railways states these variable rates are in fact economical for it because it can drop off more cars to these larger points and make fewer stops. Making drop-offs of 10, 20 or 30 cars, reduces its operating costs and, therefore, it can pass the savings on to its customers.

I want to raise the question, Mr. Speaker, that if the railways are finding it costs less and is more convenient to drop off 10, 20 or 30 cars on a siding for a customer, why can they not offer those kinds of rate cuts to the Wheat Board which is, in practice, the actual shipper of the biggest chunk of the grain in western Canada? The Wheat Board allocates the cars and arranges for them to be unloaded, a trainload at a time, at the individual terminal, regardless of who the prior shipper was, and the corrections for the ownership of pool grain, UGG grain or pioneer grain, is taken care of simply by trading paper between terminals. If the railways are arguing they have less cost by dropping off 10, 20 or 30 cars to a shipping point, I would argue that by allowing the Wheat Board to be seen as the shipper, the cars could be loaded faster because they could call on all of the loading capacity of all of the companies at that shipping point to make the load. The unloading is already being done at one terminal and the ownership question is corrected afterward.

I think that some of the arguments being used in proceeding with some of these so-called initiatives do not make sense. Where they do have some economic impact, they are not put into place with the desired rationality. For instance, they do not recognize that the Wheat Board is the major shipper of grains. They do not consider the Wheat Board a shipper because the grain transportation agency has decided it will not permit the Wheat Board to be a shipper, even though the practice and the law states very clearly that it is.

I think all Members of the House and the general public will be opposed to this move by the Government to end regulation, as it calls it, simply because it will effectively end the feasibility and economic viability of a great many small communities in my part of the country, as well as in other parts of the country.

[Translation]

Mr. Richard Grisé (Chambly): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in today's debate on Bill C-18, an Act respecting national transportation, because transport is a major tool to promote business expansion in the riding of Chambly and, of course, the economic development of the entire Montreal region, including the south shore of Montreal. I am pleased as well to join in this debate and share whatever transportation experience I have had over more than twenty years, especially with respect to road transportation in Quebec.

I heard Members of the Liberal Party and our NDP friends say that Canadians will be deprived of certain services as a result of this measure. I should think it will be the other way around because, once this more than 20-year old transportation legislation has been put through the deregulation process, a community or company will be in a position to negotiate more favourable rates for its products, whereas until now producers and companies did not have any leeway since under the law only one carrier was licensed to transport their products at fixed rates in a competition-free market. The producer or company that was saddled with higher shipping rates sometimes had to go through incredible contortions to be able to produce his product and bring it to market to compete, while today, producers, whole communities and our exporters as well will be given a fair chance to negotiate cheaper rates, both for finished products and also for the products they have to modify or process.

Mr. Speaker, under the present legislation, often when people need a shipping licence, they come before the Transport Commission and are told: Sorry, the licence has already been given to a company or several companies, and even if they only provide a service once or twice a week or even once a month, they have that licence. This means other shippers cannot come in because there are already companies who are doing the shipping, often at much higher rates. Under the proposed legislation, Mr. Speaker, a company that is willing to take the initiative and create jobs, a company that wants to set up a new service or improve an existing one, and perhaps charge lower rates, will be given a licence. It will be up to the other companies to ask the CTC for a ruling on whether the new shipper is harming existing companies or the community or the companies concerned.

Mr. Speaker, this Government, whose priority is the development of our economy, has realized the importance of deregulation in the transportation sector. If we want to get ahead, and we are now in 1987 . . . I fail to understand why the members of the New Democratic Party are opposed to a Bill that will in fact protect the consumer. It will protect Canadians. Mr. Speaker, I fail to understand why they object to a Bill that helps the little man. We have always been branded by the New Democrats and the Liberals as a Government that supposedly ignores the needs of the people. Now we are meeting those needs in this National Transportation Act, they object, saying we are not protecting the people and may be protecting one group more than another, although the very opposite is true. We are telling existing companies—I have nothing against the companies operating at this time—they no longer have a monopoly over territory, rates or service. We want to give other companies a chance to say: I'm ready to show what I can do. I want to tender against these people. I want to negotiate.

In the railway sector, companies were limited to certain regions and certain routes by the various railway companies, and the manufacturers using the services of these railway companies could not negotiate rates.

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-18 before the House today will have a major impact on the economy of this country. The safety issue has been raised. Mr. Speaker, as far as Bill C-18 is concerned, we have said we will be even stricter about enforcement of the safety regulations in the National Transportation Act. That is what we intend to do, that is what is in the Bill, and, as the Member representing the riding of Chambly in the House of Commons, a riding that is so important to the economic development of the metropolitan area of Montreal, especially on the South Shore, I welcome this opportunity today to speak to this Bill, to represent the people of Chambly and to thank the Government and private enterprise, because it is with this kind of legislation that we will continue to create employment and develop our economy, not just in our own region but across Canada.

[English]

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak to Bill C-18 and, of course, the motion which would send it back to committee for further study. At the outset I must say that we on this side of the House are certainly not against the principle of deregulation. What we are against is the contents of the Bill, especially as they relate to safety in general, and safety in the air traffic field in particular. I believe we must have some safety safeguards in this Bill to protect the travelling public. We must also have some safeguards to ensure that regional interests are not jeopardized by rail abandonment, or by transportation companies taking over the lucrative routes of the region, and leaving other regions of the country with an inefficient service at a higher cost. This will make some of those regions even less competitive than they are.

• (1250)

Since I come from Prince Edward Island, I wish to briefly touch upon this transportation Bill as it pertains to P.E.I. It goes back a long way to the terms of Confederation in 1873 when the Dominion of Canada was supporting or guaranteeing an efficient ferry service to the mainland that was to be operated continuously winter and summer. Even under those terms of agreement, it was not until 1917, 40 years after Confederation, that service was provided from the island to the mainland that could qualify as an efficient and continuous service in summer and winter. I raise these points, because I think that I can develop a case here in the next few minutes to show you what has gone on in our province and, indeed, what is likely to continue under this Bill.

I have before me a clipping from The Charlottetown Guardian dated Tuesday, March 19, 1940. It is a speech given by a Mr. J. O. Hyndman. You may know some of the Hyndmans who are in Alberta, who are direct descendants of Mr. Hyndman. One of the Hyndman boys was a member of the Alberta Government. He probably still is. The headline states: "P.E.I. Producers Facing Unfair Discrimination". In this article, Mr. Hyndman discusses the Confederation contract. He states:

> Prior to the Car Ferry Service being established by the Borden Conservative Government, Island farmers realized for their field crops only fifty percent of the prices realized by the farmers of the Mainland, according to the Dominion Year Book, on account of our products having to be shipped out, in the Fall months, before navigation closed and our farmers were deprived of the opportunity to take advantage of the Winter and Spring Markets and the prevailing enhanced prices.

That article was printed 47 years ago.

In his speech he mentioned something that is true today, and started in 1984 under this Government. I am talking about the excessive ferry charges. He states:

The Provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick purchase farm products to meet the requirements of upwards of one million people in these Provinces, to the value of over $2 million each month, or approximately $24 million per annum. Prince Edward Island farmers could cater to a large share of this market right at their own door if the excessive Ferry charge equivalent to a tariff between foreign countries was not in effect.

Over the years, we have tried to make this case. Certainly, in the last years I have tried with this Government. Ferry rates are a great detriment to the transportation costs of Prince Edward Island.

Mr. Hyndman further states:

It should be remembered that this Car Ferry Service was bought and paid for by Prince Edward Island when the Province entered Confederation. Compare these excessive charges with the great Canadian Canal System, which required an expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars to construct, and is costing the tax-payers annually, many millions of dollars to maintain and operate, but no toll charge, whatever, is made to Canadian or foreign vessels. Nevertheless, all vessels passing through the Panama Canal have to pay a toll of fifty cents each per registered ton . . .

When we talk about transporation, we should look at transportation as a tool of economic growth. Regions of this country are truly disadvantaged because of their geographic dislocation.

We also should go back to the annual Premiers' Conference held last August in St. John's, Newfoundland. The Premiers adopted the following resolution which emphasizes the role of transportation as a regional economic tool. I wish to read the resolution into Hansard. It should be alluded to when Members are speaking on this important Bill. It states:

Whereas the importance of regional economic development has been agreed upon by all governments, we, the provincial Premiers, call on the Government of Canada to incorporate in the proposed new National Transportation Act, in addition to an objective of commercial viability, the following:

1. Transportation is recognized as a key to regional economic development; and

2. Commercial viability of transportation links must be balanced with regional economic development objectives in order that the potential economic strengths of each region may be realized.

That is the resolution the Premiers put forward in August, 1986 to the federal Government.

I believe the Government should carefully look at that resolution.

What the Premiers are saying, and what transportation companies are saying, is that we must use transportation as an economic tool to development. Some of the regions of this country are disadvantaged because of large geographic areas with small populations which are a long distance from the markets. There must be some type of infrastructure which is looked after from general revenues in order to have comparative costs and equal competitive opportunity with those of other parts of the country. That is what Canada is all about. Therefore, in some of those areas, we must have preferred rates.

In looking at air traffic, we have seen that in the past Air Canada and some of the large carriers had to go to some of those remote areas, and service to those areas had to be subsidized and paid for out of the revenues received from the lucrative areas.

In returning to safety, I hope that when Members of Parliament are debating and discussing this Bill before the House, they talk to some of the people who will be affected, and some of the people who will benefit from the Bill. I talked to a small entrepreneur two weekends ago who told me that he was driving a tractor under a common carrier's name, that he had bought the tractor and was an entrepreneur. Because of deregulation and the strict competition that the big companies will be faced with, they are selling off some of their tractors to the employees. This chap was from Prince Edward Island. He said that we are 650 miles away from Boston. Because we are not covered under any union agreements, we have to drive to Boston. We leave Borden, Prince Edward Island on the last ferry. We drive straight through to Boston. We unload our cargo. Instead of paying the extra cost, we are tempted to sleep in the truck for four or five hours, and drive all the way back.

I contend that those numbers of hours for a truck driver who is driving a heavy tractor with 30 or 40 tonnes in the trailer, will be a severe problem for our highways. Indeed, we may not get the benefits. If there are more accidents on the highways, there will be higher insurance rates. Along with the higher costs of transportation, be it diesel oil, et cetera, the competition will be so stiff that corners will be cut. It will be to the detriment not only of the consumer, and those who are using the service, but in my opinion to the detriment of the travelling public.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will recognize the next speaker, the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo), when Orders of the Day are called after Question Period.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock later this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—ENVIRONMENT CANADA FINDINGS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, here are some interesting conclusions by Environment Canada on acid rain.

The currently planned U.S. clean coal technology initiatives will not provide any measurable reduction in the transboundary flow of U.S. air emissions affecting Canada between now and 1995.

Even after 1995, in the absence of a U.S. acid rain control program, neither the currently planned U.S. clean coal technology initiatives nor existing air pollution control programs will provide any significant reduction in U.S. transboundary air pollution flows for at least the next 25 years.

While about $1.7 billion of the expenditures appear to meet most of the special envoys' technical criteria, the potential reduction in U.S. transboundary flows will be insignificant and will not alleviate the damage being caused in Canada.

Will the Government act on the findings of Environment Canada and request at the next summit that President Reagan impose pollution controls in the U.S. which would protect the Canadian environment? We hope so.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

DENIAL OF SECOND-CLASS MAILING PRIVILEGES TO THE CANADIAN LUTHERAN

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, The Canadian Lutheran, the national publication of the Lutheran Church, is successor to three previous Lutheran publications, all of which enjoyed second-class mailing privileges.

Imagine the shock experienced by Canadian Lutherans after being advised by Canada Post officials that The Canadian Lutheran did not qualify for second-class mailing because it did not contain sufficient material devoted primarily to religion.

In the meantime, under the heading of news or articles of interest to the general public, Playboy magazine found favour with the same officials and received second-class mailing registration.

Clearly these matters involve the exercise of judgment and common sense within existing regulations. These arbitrary and inconsistent decisions are typical of a sick postal administration which seems determined to alienate every Canadian.

I urge the Minister to tell his Canada Post bureaucrats to stop aggravating Canadians and to start serving them.

CANADIAN COAST GUARD

POLAR 8 ICE-BREAKER CONTRACT—ROLE OF FORMER EVALUATION COMMITTEE MEMBER

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, during the Oerlikon affair we learned that officials from the Department of National Defence who worked on the tendering process subsequently left the Department to work for one of the tendering companies, Oerlikon itself. An obvious conflict of interest took place under these conditions.

Now we learn that a member of the government committee which evaluated proposals for the Polar 8 ice-breaker has joined a consortium competing for the contract, taking with him confidential information provided the team by a rival bidder—obviously another conflict of interest.

Peter Hatfield was a member of the committee which evaluated three proposals for the design of the new Canadian Coast Guard ice-breaker. We now find that he was part of a last minute proposal offered by a newly formed consortium on January 15.

This new formed consortium, including proposal evaluation team member Peter Hatfield, had obvious inside information and therefore was in a position to submit a proposal to undercut those previously submitted. This is a blatant abuse of the tendering process and obviously a conflict of interest.

The federal Government ought to take immediate steps to ensure that not only is justice done in this case but that it is also seen to be done.

INTERNATIONAL YEAR OF PEACE

PLEA IN FAVOUR OF PEACE

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to read a letter sent to the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) by Rochebaucourt, Abitibi, fifth grader Sylvie Tremblay, the daughter of Rosaire and Cécile Tremblay, concerning International Peace Year.

Mr. Prime Minister:

I have a request to make to you for International Peace Year. You are aware that children are starving in some countries, that there are poor people and orphans, and that nuclear tests are being carried out by various nations. This is why I would ask you to put a stop to such terrifying things so the world may become a better place to live in. I am asking this not only for myself but for you and everybody else, especially for the love of God.

Please, our earth will soon be fit only for the garbage dump. Something has to be done. Lives are being lost because of that, so put your whole heart into it and please make a plea in favour of peace, agreement, dialogue and love.

You can do that, Mr. Prime Minister. You are not alone, there are a lot of people with you. Invite all world leaders to lend you a hand. Together you will build a better and more promising future for us. This is the nicest inheritance you can leave to us children, your children.

Thank you for your consideration.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT—CALL FOR CANCELLATION

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada has reached an all-time low and an all-time high. It has reached an all-time low in saying to the French that they can come in and rob our bank just so that it proves that it is in fact our bank. It has reached an all-time high because it has never stuck the knife higher in the back of Newfoundland than it did last week when it allowed a foreign country to take the mother lode of a resource which is so important not simply to our main industry but indeed to the life of the people themselves. It strikes a devastating blow at Newfoundland.

Everybody is agreed—the Premier, the fishermen, the Opposition, and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie)—that this deal is pernicious and that it should be cancelled. I call upon the Government to do cancel it.

WILDLIFE

SPECIAL TAX INITIATIVE URGED TO ENHANCE RESOURCES

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, you, Sir, understand and are concerned about the importance of wildlife to Canadians. I have here a plain brown envelope with a note inside to all Ministers which reads:

Dear Minister,

Wildlife related activity in Canada employs about 200,000 Canadians and generates billions of dollars of business activity. It is a renewable resource that needs more money and better management.

Sincerely yours,
Barry

Dozens of wildlife clubs from all over Canada, provincial and national associations have written to me endorsing a special tax initiative to enhance this renewable resource.

[Translation]

The directors of the board of the Quebec Wildlife FeDeration met in Montreal last January 10 and "unanimously agreed to support your project".

[English]

The Government must now accept this idea in principle, react positively to a back-bench initiative, and redeem itself in the eyes of millions of conservation minded Canadians.

When it does, we look forward to co-ordinating national input into the mechanics of its implementation in order to sustain our valuable wildlife resources forever.

HEALTH

AIDS DISEASE—NEED FOR EDUCATION

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, AIDS is fast becoming the most serious health problem that Canada and other countries have faced this century. Canadians, through their federal and provincial Governments, need a real commitment to AIDS research and full public education, including classroom education on AIDS. It will only be through both research and preventive education that we will overcome this peril. Ignorance will never be a prevention or a cure.

The federal Government should take note of the increased commitment by other Governments, notably Great Britain's, to safe sex education and AIDS research. I am relieved that the Premier of British Columbia has at last decided to support classroom education on this and other sex and health issues, although I will not be cheering too loudly until I see if B.C.'s new sex education program is to be comprehensive and, like Ontario's, obligatory.

ENERGY

GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Marcel Masse, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and his provincial counterparts, have demonstrated once more to Canadians that it pays to sit down together and find solutions to the serious energy problems Canada has been facing since the oil market collapsed.

Mr. Speaker, the previous Liberal Prime Minister had insulted his own Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources at the time by secretly signing a national energy agreement without even informing him, thereby contributing to the economic slump in both Western and Eastern Canada.

Mr. Speaker, this Conservative Government respects the provinces' jurisdictions in the area of natural resources, as demonstrated by the many agreements we have signed in this area since our fortunate coming to power.

Mr. Speaker, this Conservative Government prefers consensus and compromise to unilateral and sterile decisions for which the Liberal Government of the time was famous. I am convinced that with the open-mindedness of our Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and the support of the provinces, we will elaborate fair remedies to counteract the effects of the decrease and instability in oil prices.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I will conclude by emphasizing the excellent performance of our Minister during the Question Period program broadcasted yesterday on the CTV network.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

EFFECT OF CUTS IN GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, in the election campaign, 1984, the Conservatives were promising jobs, jobs, jobs, but all we got after the election was a loss of jobs, and broken promises. In my own riding, the Energy, Mines and Resources office has moved to Charlottetown with a loss of 12 jobs. We have seen job losses in Prince Edward Island in the Department of Fisheries. Our customs offices have had cuts in staff. Our wharves are falling down because of lack of funding for small craft harbours.

The long awaited construction of the new combined Mess for Canadian Forces Base Summerside had been delayed several times and has now been placed on the back burner. Our postal service has been cut. Our railways are being abandoned. Our construction industry is suffering as a result of these cuts and broken promises. The only thing the Government is promising the people of Atlantic Canada now is user fees and higher taxes. What a difference two years makes.

Atlantic Canadians will remember this Government when the next election rolls around. They will remember the Tory Members they elected in 1984 to represent their interests in Ottawa who transferred into little sheep. The people will have the last "baa" and will turf out these little sheep.

FISHERIES

OVERFISHING BY FRENCH VESSELS—SUPPORT FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Gerald Comeau (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, in 1972 the Liberal Government signed a treaty which gave permanent rights to French nationals to fish in southern Newfoundland waters. In 1984 the Liberals agreed, in writing, to French overfishing in the same waters.

A number of proposals have been suggested to solve this mess. The Liberal Leader in Newfoundland has suggested that we annex St. Pierre and Miquelon. The NDP leader in Newfoundland, when asked for his suggestion, said: "I don't know, maybe its time to bark at the French". The NDP Leader in Ottawa said we should take military action.

Our Government has suggested the only reasonable course of action to date, not a declaration of war, but to resolve the dispute by arbitration, something the Liberals were not capable of doing.

French quotas in Canadian waters are half what they were last year. What we must do now is come to terms with the French overfishing in disputed waters. We welcome any and all suggestions, short of a declaration of war.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

DENIAL OF SECOND-CLASS MAILING PRIVILEGES TO RELIGIOUS PUBLICATIONS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, when I was at church yesterday morning, and on a number of other occasions over the weekend, a great many people expressed to me their dismay at the fact that under this Government, magazines like Penthouse and Playboy continue to receive higher subsidies than religious magazines like The United Church Observer, The Canadian Lutheran and the Presbyterian Record. Now that this has come to the attention of the public, Conservative back-benchers and the Government, I would hope that we would see some action on this front very soon.

This is not the kind of thing that will have to be before the House for weeks on end before some action can be taken. It is the kind of problem that could be solved through quick action on the part of the Government. I am absolutely positive that there must be a great many back-benchers who find this every bit as appalling as we do on this side of the House and I would hope that very soon this discrimination against religious magazines and in favour of soft-porn magazines will be eradicated.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE REDUCTION BY ONTARIO HYDRO USING LOW-SULPHUR WESTERN COAL

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, is Ontario Premier David Peterson really serious about eliminating acid rain? If so, why has he again postponed his discussions with the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) on the subject of reducing Ontario Hydro's acid-gas emissions by the use of low-sulphur western coal?

If we cannot force the United States to take action, we can at least put our own house in order. A report released last August indicated that acid-gas emissions in Ontario could be cut in half if Ontario Hydro used low-sulphur western coal. The same report went on to say that this would create some 13,000 new jobs in western Canada over the next 15 years. If Premier Peterson is truly concerned about reducing acid rain and if he is serious when he talks about reducing regional differences in Canada, he will have to put his money where his mouth is.

TRADE

CANADA-SOUTH AFRICA—CALL FOR COMPLETE SEVERANCE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I was thrilled as were all other Canadians on hearing some of the statements made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) this weekend with respect to cutting off trade relations with South Africa. I hope he does follow the recommendations of the all-Party committee. When I took an opportunity to examine the facts a little more deeply, however, I saw a Prime Minister who seemed to be talking out of both sides of his mouth.

The fact is that for 1986 trade from Canada to South Africa and Namibia has increased by over 63 per cent. At the same time as the Prime Minister and his colleagues have been talking tough about and to South Africa, companies and Crown corporations in Canada have been increasing trade to South Africa by over 60 per cent. It is shameful and unacceptable. I urge the Prime Minister not only to speak out of only one side of his mouth but also to ensure that the complete cutoff of trade includes comprehensive sanctions involving Crown corporations, government agencies, and the private sector.

EXTERNAL AID

GUATEMALA—SUPPORT FOR CANADIAN AID

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, on February 9 the European Economic Community Foreign Ministers will be meeting in Guatemala to discuss and find solutions to social and economic problems in the region. Guatemala is now ending its second year under a democratic Government. As the largest country in both area and population in Central America, it has the potential to become a stabilizing force there.

A Joint Committee of Parliament on External Relations describes Guatemala as a country that is good for co-operative programs with Canada. Amnesty International, the Contadora Group, and the United Nations have all perceived the improvements in the human rights situation in Guatemala.

When the Presidents of all Central American Governments recently met, Guatemala sponsored the idea of a Central American Government, and the concepts of peace and neutralism were discussed. Canada must restore assistance to Guatemala in order to promote national reconciliation and the participation of citizens in the political process.

DENIAL OF SECOND-CLASS MAILING PRIVILEGES TO CANADIAN PUBLICATIONS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, over the weekend I had the opportunity to discuss with representatives of the B.C. Cattlemen's Association problems they have been having with their publication entitled Beef in British Columbia. During those conversations I was reminded of the fact that they have applied and re-applied for second-class mailing status for their publication which is concerned exclusively with cattle ranching in British Columbia. They reminded me that other organizations such as The United Church Observer have been making similar applications, yet soft-porn girlie magazines from the United States like Penthouse, Hustler, Gallery, Playboy and others get this preferred status and mailing rate.

I call upon the Minister responsible for the Post Office to intervene immediately to ensure that not only do these publications get better rates than Playboy and Hustler but that some preference be given to Canadian publications, and particularly Canadian church publications and those like Beef in British Columbia.

BANKS AND BANKING

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK FAILURE—TREATMENT OF FORMER EMPLOYEES

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the failure and subsequent liquidation of the Canadian Commercial Bank has been very costly and damaging, particularly for the bank's former employees. I am of course speaking of junior and middle-rank employees, not the high-flying top management, some of whom are now involved in unconventional operations in the Caribbean.

The CCB staff to whom I refer received less than one-quarter of the more than $2 million in their pension plan. While this may have satisfied the letter of the law it seems shabby treatment of people who have lost their jobs without notice and in demoralizing circumstances. Moreover, the bank staff have not received a penny of the severance benefits to which they are entitled under the Canada Labour Code. In fact, Labour Canada is preparing to lodge a claim on their behalf.

Surely after the VIP treatment accorded to the nameless uninsured bank depositors the Government can stir itself to deal more fairly and expeditiously with the bank's former junior staff who were also victims.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT—GOVERNMENT DECISION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. When asked whether the cod deal with France was made by Cabinet the Deputy Prime Minister said in this House last Thursday: "I thought I already answered that question. It was a government decision." However, this morning we had the Minister of Transport, the cabinet representative of Newfoundland, in a television interview saying this: "This happened without adequate notice or consultation with the Government of Newfoundland and the industry and, for that matter, myself. If I had been more involved in this matter I think the course might have been quite different".

My question is this. Was the Minister of Transport, as the representative for Newfoundland, involved in that cabinet decision or not? Which is the correct version of the facts?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition pay close heed to the specific words he read into the record. He said: "This happened" on account of, et cetera. The Hon. Minister of Transport can speak for himself but I believe the reference was to the process, not to the specifics of the agreements which were concluded the week before last and which were based on a government decision.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver—Quadra): Mr. Speaker, that is curious because the Minister of Transport said he was not involved. The Deputy Prime Minister said it was a cabinet decision.

CONTENT OF AGREEMENT—REFERENCE MADE BY NEWFOUNDLAND PREMIER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it may be beyond the jurisdiction of the Minister of Fisheries to clarify that particular aspect which is why I put the question to the Deputy Prime Minister, so let us turn to the Minister of Fisheries. Last week he said: "The agreement does not exceed conditions which may have been the subject of extensive negotiations with the Government of Newfoundland". Premier Peckford of Newfoundland responded to that statement on television by calling the Minister of Fisheries a word which you would not permit me to use in this House, Mr. Speaker. In effect he questioned the accuracy of the Minister and his version of events. I ask the Minister, in this case, who is telling the truth?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe my honesty or integrity need be questioned, by implication or otherwise, by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. I made a statement last week to the effect that the conditions on which the agreement was concluded in Paris a week before last had been discussed, although not necessarily agreed to by the Province of Newfoundland, with the industry and advisers and representatives of the appropriate provincial Governments. I stand by that statement.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver—Quadra): Mr Speaker, I am yielding to the authority of the Premier of Newfoundland who is calling the Minister's integrity in question.

• (1420)

NORTHERN COD QUOTA

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the same interview the Premier goes on to say that the only time consultation with Newfoundland occurred was when Tom Rideout, Newfoundland's Minister of Fisheries, was called and asked what Newfoundland's position would be if northern cod was put on the table. According to the Premier: "Tom almost laughed off his chair". Why did the Minister put northern cod on the table with France when the Government of Newfoundland opposed that move 100 per cent? When will he get his act together with his colleagues and with the Premier of Newfoundland, because it is a shambles? Someone is not giving us a correct version of the facts.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, as was explained adequately in the House last week, a telephone call should have been placed to the Premier of Newfoundland at a particularly important moment prior to the delegation travelling to Paris. Let me add that with respect to all of the terms and conditions and the amounts, which do not exceed those allocations provided in the 1987 groundfish plan, I wish the Hon. Leader of the Opposition would get it straight and help project the truth to the people of Canada. All of those amounts have been thoroughly discussed not only by the Government of Canada but with industry advisers and the officials representing the Province of Newfoundland and the other Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Speaker: Before I recognize the Hon. Member for Sudbury, both in the lead question and in the responses by the Minister there has been reference to the truth. The Chair has taken that to mean accuracy. I hope that any questions that follow will be carefully designed to go after facts and accuracy and not impugn in any way the Minister being questioned or, in the Minister's response, the Member asking the question.

OERLIKON CONTRACT—STATEMENTS MADE ON TELEVISED PROGRAM

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Until today, Senator designate Jean Bazin has stated in writing that he had no direct involvement in the Oerlikon file until August 1, 1986. The Prime Minister, in response to a question put on January 20 and reported at page 2449 of Hansard, said:

—Mr. Bazin, as I say, is a lawyer from Montreal who represents clients. I am not aware of that client list but I can tell him that he is not a lobbyist—

Will the Deputy Prime Minister confirm the truth of the statements made in the program This Week In Parliament that the former Associate Minister of Defence had been lobbied as early as March, 1986, at a PC convention by both Mr. Bazin and Mr. Nantel, representing Oerlikon, asking that Oerlikon be awarded that contract, and that that same lobbying effort was renewed at the opening ceremonies of Expo 86 in May, 1986. If that is not lobbying, what is?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure of the precise words that the Hon. Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs used to describe it, but my understanding is that the issue did come up during the course of a visit at these two events and that there certainly was not anything in a formal way that was discussed.

REQUEST THAT SENATOR DESIGNATE BAZIN DELAY SWEARING-IN CEREMONY

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, will the Deputy Prime Minister not agree that that is a form of lobbying? That is the lobby definition made by a recent finding of a House of Commons committee with respect to lobbying in Canada. Will he request the Senator designate to delay his swearing in as a Senator until such time as the RCMP deals with that broader issue for which we have been asking, which is the degree of influence peddling that benefits only a small group of friends of the Prime Minister in this country?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not a lawyer but I know that lawyers make representations on behalf of their clients on many, many occasions. If the Hon. Member is not aware of that, perhaps he might discuss it with his Leader.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

TESTING OF ADVANCED CRUISE MISSILE

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. It has come to my attention through the use of access to information by Project Ploughshares, that there is an internal Defence Department memorandum about proposed tests of the advanced Cruise missile in Canada. As the Minister knows, testing the advanced Cruise Missile, which is the Cruise using what is called "stealth" technology, would give a major impetus to Canada's participation in the escalation of the nuclear arms race. Has the Pentagon asked Canada to test the advanced Cruise missile and, if so, when and what has been Canada's response?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, there is no request before Canada at the present time to test the Advanced Cruise Missile.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, we have learned under the access to information that on April 21, 1986, there was a briefing note—Briefing Note 50—to the Minister of National Defence. It was called "Project Proposal for Captive Carry Tests of the AGM-129 Advanced Cruise Missile". Is the Minister saying he does not know anything about this request to test the missile with stealth technology? Or is he trying to continue the Liberal practice of keeping this House of Commons in the dark on these matters?

• (1425)

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker, my statement stands for itself. As I indicated to the Hon. Member, there is no current request of the Canadian Government to test the Advanced Cruise.

Ms. Jewett: The Minister is saying he does not know what is going on in his own Department. That is what he is saying; he does not know.

WASHINGTON POST NEWSPAPER REPORT

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Has the Minister been informed—does he even read The Washington Post—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Jewett: If the Minister were to read—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will put a question.

Ms. Jewett: If the Minister were to read The Washington Post, or Aviation Week, he will discover that the Advanced Cruise Missile with stealth technology is being developed, that Caspar Weinberger hopes to see it deployed this year, and that Canada has been asked to test it under the Cruise missile agreement. When will the Minister come clean with the Canadian House of Commons and tell us this in fact is the case?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, there is no request before Canada at the present time to test the Advanced Cruise. If one is received, we will consider it in due course. Perhaps when the Hon. Member is finished with her copies of The Washington Post, she can send them over.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT—REQUEST FOR CANCELLATION

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans who has made much of an apology to Newfoundland over not being consulted. The Premier of Newfoundland has thrown that apology back in the face of the Government by saying: "I don't care if you didn't consult me about giving away the shop, you still gave away the shop". I want to ask the Minister, on behalf of the Premier and all inshore fishermen who are severely disadvantaged by this action, will the Minister now, on behalf of the Government, reconsider and cancel this pernicious deal with the French?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, what is so puzzling and what ought to be terribly frustrating for the people of Newfoundland is that a Member of Parliament from Newfoundland would get up and suggest that we should somehow terminate an agreement which is the best news in terms of resolving—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Siddon: —offering a potential path to the resolution of a long-standing problem which is costing the fishermen of Newfoundland and Labrador millions of dollars a year, that is, the unresolved boundary dispute in 3PS, and at the same time, the negotiation of interim fishing arrangements to eliminate, once and for all, the overfishing by France in that disputed zone.

Mr. Rompkey: It is not just Members of Parliament. The Premier of Newfoundland has said it has to be cancelled because, if it is not, it is a disaster for the fishing industry. And he is speaking on behalf of all inshore fishermen and all of the people in that province.

DISAPPROVAL OF NEWFOUNDLANDERS

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): The Minister said on television last week—I heard him—that if this agreement does not meet with the approval of the Newfoundland people, it can be changed. Will the Minister now do the honourable thing and cancel this agreement with the French?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question is, no, because there is no give-away. I wish Hon. Members in the Opposition would stop perpetuating this notion that anything has been given away except a willingness by Canada and France to sit down over the next 11 months of this year and decide what concessions, if any, might be the price to be paid for the referral to compulsory third party arbitration of the long unresolved boundary dispute in the vicinity of St. Pierre and Miquelon. That is the only concession which has been made which is of significant concern. We believe that the consequence will prove to be of significant benefit to Newfoundland and to all of Atlantic Canada.

FRENCH NAVAL VESSELS—REPORTS OF THREATENED ENTRY TO CANADIAN WATERS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. On Friday, Premier Buchanan of Nova Scotia said he had heard reports that the French were preparing to send naval vessels with their trawlers into Canadian waters. Can the Minister confirm these reports? How does he intend to deal with this threat, or is he prepared to act like a wimp again?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that I have heard no such reports. If that is a tactic that France would want to exercise in such a sensitive matter as this, I would find it surprising and regrettable.

OVERFISHING BY FRENCH VESSELS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries. In light of the fact that this agreement does not come to grips with the basic problem of French overfishing in Canadian waters, and in spite of the agreement he has, can the Minister tell the House how he intends to deal with French overfishing in Canadian waters? What specific steps will he take to ensure that this practice does not continue?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, from France's perspective the problem is that those are not Canadian waters.

Mr. Rodriguez: They are wrong!

Mr. Siddon: The French claim those waters for themselves. That very reason dictates the necessary reference to compulsory third party arbitration. There is a dispute which flows from the 1972 treaty between Canada and France. Until those boundaries are resolved once and for all I think it is premature for the Hon. Member to suggest that there is some magic potion to cure this very serious problem.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENTS—ADVERTISEMENT PROMOTING SOUTH AFRICAN TOUR

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. The Prime Minister has promised more sanctions against South Africa and has stated: "every step this Government has taken on South Africa has been pursued to a carefully thought out plan that takes into account all elements". I have here in my hand a copy of a prominent daily Canadian newspaper which carries a one-half page ad promoting a tour to South Africa which appears to be in breach of existing government sanctions. How can these declarations about new sanctions be taken seriously in light of what we see happening this very day in a prominent Canadian newspaper?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think the actions of the Government and, indeed, the actions of the Prime Minister are very clear on this very important issue. The Prime Minister is due to return later this day. He will be making a statement in the House of Commons on his trip. I hope that perhaps the matter that the Hon. Member raises will be touched upon at that time.

[Translation]

CONTENT OF PRIME MINISTER'S FORTHCOMING STATEMENT IN HOUSE

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to learn that the Prime Minister will be making a statement in the House. Perhaps the Deputy Prime Minister could encourage him to tell us, first, how he intends to strengthen existing sanctions, second, which additional sanctions he intends to impose on South Africa, and third, whether diplomatic relations with that country will be broken. Can the Deputy Prime Minister encourage the Prime Minister to include this information in his statement to the House?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what the position of the Liberal Party is with respect to the issue of ending diplomatic relations with South Africa. It might be interesting to know how many versions the Liberals have on that particular issue, as they have so many on other issues.

The Prime Minister has shown leadership not only to Canadians but to the world in terms of Canada's position with respect to South Africa. I am sure the Hon. Member will not be disappointed when he hears from the Prime Minister later this week.

REQUEST FOR IMPOSITION OF MANDATORY SANCTIONS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and it is on the same subject. Does it not seem clear to the Government that in view of these advertisements in The Globe and Mail inviting Canadian tourists to be brain-washed about the advantages of apartheid that it is about time for the Government to impose not voluntary sanctions but mandatory sanctions, sanctions that are clearly and absolutely enforceable?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I thought I answered that question. I thought I invited the Hon. Member to be in the House when the Prime Minister makes his statement. He will be making a statement later on this week. He will be in a better position to respond to those questions than I am, with respect. I hope that he will be patient.

I know the Hon. Member's feeling. He has certainly expressed it very eloquently in the House on many occasions. But, clearly, the Prime Minister of Canada has shown leadership on this issue, and he will continue to show leadership. I hope that he will have the support of the Hon. Member.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is a simple one. We have heard a great deal of eloquence from the Prime Minister. It has been almost two years now since the Prime Minister promised that there would be mandatory economic and diplomatic sanctions. Are you telling this House that tomorrow when the Prime Minister returns he will live up—

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members have used great restraint in not using the word "you". I know that it was only a slip on the Hon. Member's part. I would ask him to put his question again.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I repeat the question with the substitution of "he" for "you".

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Prime Minister has not only demonstrated eloquence in the House, throughout the country and the world, he has also backed it up with action. I think the position of the Canadian Government and the actions of the Prime Minister speak clearly for themselves.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE USE OF LOW-SULPHUR WESTERN COAL BY ONTARIO HYDRO

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Can the Deputy Prime Minister advise the House whether he has been able to arrange a meeting with Premier Peterson of Ontario to discuss with him the use of low-sulphur western coal to reduce acid rain emissions by Ontario Hydro? Will he also advise the House if our Government is prepared to subsidize the transportation of western coal to Ontario?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as of two o'clock this afternoon I had not been able to arrange a meeting with the Premier of Ontario. I am surprised that he has taken such a nonchalant approach to such a very important issue. I am surprised since it is a very important national issue in terms of jobs, economic activity and, above all, the containment of acid rain. I thought he would have been right up front and centre.

With regard to transportation and the prospect of subsidization, perhaps the Liberal Party in Ontario and in Ottawa could get their acts together and pass Bill C-18 which would go a long way in reducing transportation costs for all Canadians.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

SIZE OF DEFICIT—EFFECT OF UNITED STATES LEGISLATION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. He will know how shocked western Canadians were to learn of the $200 million deficit experienced by the Canadian Wheat Board, and how dismayed they are at the cavalier attitude taken by the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board who says that it is simply a unique event. He does not recognize how the U.S. Farm Bill is thrusting prices down. When will the Government take sincerely the free fall that we are now experiencing in grain prices due to the U.S. Farm Bill? When will we create a high priority requirement to meet with the Reagan administration to stop the impact of the Farm Bill? Will we be asking Vice-President Bush to come back to Canada for another earful, this time of good Canadian feed barley?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised to hear the Hon. Member referring to the actions of the Government as being cavalier when we proposed a $1 billion farm aid package for the grain and oil seed producers of Canada. It is the biggest aid package that has ever been proposed in direct response to the difficulties in the international market-place.

The $200 million deficit in the Canadian Wheat Board is a further $200 million that can be added to aid the Canadian grain and oil seed producers.

On the international front, the Hon. Member should be aware that the Prime Minister, the Minister of Agriculture and the Secretary of State for External Affairs dealt with this issue during the GATT process. The Hon. Member is always complimenting the role of GATT in these sorts of matters, which is the mechanism by which it is most appropriately dealt with. I would have thought that we would have had his support in that regard.

• (1440)

REQUEST FOR CANADA-UNITED STATES DISCUSSIONS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

The fact remains that the free fall in grain prices is largely as a result of the United States Farm Bill which ratchets prices down an average of 15 or 20 per cent a year. When will the Government have some sense of urgency to bring that to a halt, and put it on the agenda with the United States before our western grain economy is destroyed? We are talking about the destruction of the western grain economy. It does not behoove the Deputy Prime Minister to treat it in this way when the livelihoods of so many farmers are at stake. Will that matter be raised with President Reagan or the Vice-President to bring to their attention the need for a long-term solution, which means the total abolition of the United States Farm Bill measure?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately the Hon. Member is behind the times. This matter has been raised, it will continue to be raised not only with the United States but with the EEC, and throughout the GATT process.

In addition to that, in the meantime we are trying to cushion the impact of these disastrous prices on the hands of the farmers. There is a price war going on between the United States and the EEC. There are two parties involved. We are addressing this issue on all fronts.

AEROSPACE INDUSTRY

FUTURE OF INDUSTRY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): My question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the continuing concern in Manitoba over discrepancies in statements made by the Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare, and the Hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources over the future of the aerospace industry in Canada.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare has said that the Government was committed to equitable regional distribution. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has said that Montreal will be the centre for the fifth generation of the transport industry. He further said that the Government has deliberately opted for Montreal in aeronautics.

The Deputy Prime Minister is apparently in charge of a committee concerned with western regional development. Could he tell us who is speaking for the Government in this regard, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, or the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this Government is interested in economic growth and the broadening of the economic base in all regions of the country. The manner in which the aerospace contracts were let have taken that into consideration. With regard to the manufacturing sector of the aerospace industry, Montreal is the centre of excellence, having regard to the fact that Canadair, which is now owned by Bombardier, has demonstrated a degree of excellence. With the awarding of the CF-18 contract to Canadair, it will further advance Canadair wherein it will become a leading edge competitor in the manufacturing sector and provide it with world-wide opportunities. Certainly that is good for Montreal. The spin-off benefits will reverberate throughout the country. With regard to the CF-5, Winnipeg becomes a centre of excellence for repair and maintenance. There are other centres of excellence that can be distributed across the region.

GOVERNMENT PLANS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, it is clear from the Deputy Prime Minister's answer that the Government has written Winnipeg off as a future centre for the aerospace industry in this country.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Blaikie: I wish to ask the Deputy Prime Minister when can we see the plan that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources referred to when he was talking about the Government deliberately opting for Montreal and fifth generation technology? Will that plan be made public? At the same time, will the Deputy Prime Minister kindly make public what plans the Government does have, if it has any, for the development of western Canada, particularly Winnipeg?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, CF-18 technology is the latest technology on the boards at the present time. Canada will have the opportunity to use that technology in the manufacturing of airplanes. That should be good for Canada, not only in terms of jobs, but in terms of maintaining its leadership in the manufacturing sector of the aerospace industry.

FINANCE

TAX REFORM—TIMING OF INTRODUCTION

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): My question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It concerns his reneging on his promise to introduce tax reform with the Budget later this month. Since low and middle-income Canadians are now bearing 90 per cent of the $6 billion tax burden imposed by the Minister's last two Budgets, will the Minister say if and when they can expect tax reform and tax fairness?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think that the Hon. Member, rather than criticizing me for a very short delay in the introduction of tax reform, should be saying that is the right way to do it. Canadians do not want speedy tax reform, if it will not be right. We want to get it right. The implementation will not be delayed by the very short delay in the introduction of a White Paper, but I cannot be precise about the exact date of implementation.

EFFECT OF REFORM ON TAX LEVELS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): My supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. In December, 1986, high-income Canadians were relieved of their temporary surtax on income. But the 3 per cent personal surtax which applied to everyone regardless of income level is still in force with no end in sight. Will the Minister assure the House that his promise to reduce tax rates will mean real reductions, not just the cancellation of this surtax?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

CANADIAN JOBS STRATEGY

LAPSED FUNDING INQUIRY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): My question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Minister will know that in the fiscal year 1985-86 there was $374 million in the Canadian Jobs Strategy that was not spent. Has the Minister determined what that figure will be this year in terms of lapsed money for the Canadian Jobs Strategy? If so, does the Minister have plans to redirect those funds into areas or regions of Canada where they are most in need?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take note of the question. I am not in a position to answer today. I will provide an answer during the week.

Mr. Axworthy: That's called a well prepared Minister.

POSSIBLE REDIRECTION OF LAPSED FUNDS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): My supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. When the Minister does report back, would he clearly indicate the process that he has in mind to redirect the lapsed funds for the Canadian Jobs Strategy in this fiscal year to those regions of Canada where the moneys can still be invested in a positive and proper way?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, what I can now say is that the funds allocated under the Canadian Jobs Strategy have been used in such a way that over 600,000 jobs have been created in Canada. I believe that these funds have been used in accordance with our national economic policies. It would be a mistake to believe that jobs in Canada are created exclusively under the Jobs Strategy.

Once more, I am convinced that the Hon. Member appreciates the results we have obtained under the Canadian Jobs Strategy.

FUTURE OF RURAL POST OFFICES

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post. Canadians across our country are gravely concerned about the changes that are possibly happening in rural Canada with the Post Office. At a meeting of Rural Dignity in Agassiz, British Columbia, which was attended by some 600 people, it was reported that in the last two weeks new notices of closures had gone out in eastern Canada.

Will the Minister assure rural Canada that Canada Post has in fact been stopped, and will start to consult with rural Canada as to changes it is proposing for the post offices?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I think I answered that question last week. You will recall that the House created a committee to examine Canada Post's corporate plan, and the committee made several recommendations.

In fact, recommendations 2, 3 and 4 were about closing rural post offices. Last week I gave the House the assurance that there would be no plan for closing rural post offices until the Corporation had provided the necessary information, as recommended by the committee.

• (1450)

OPERATION OF RURAL OFFICES ON FRANCHISE BASIS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, Canada Post is offering a free postcard for letter writing week from February 9 to February 14, and the slogan is: "Write a little love". Perhaps that is why the Minister in charge of Canada Post announced that there will be no closing of rural post offices. He is hoping to get a lot of those postcards of love. How does the Minister explain that Canada Post claims that over 3,000 post offices in rural Canada will close and the service will be passed over to local businessmen to operate on a franchise basis? If that is the case, for this Minister there will be no letters of love. It is one big shove.

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of the Hon. Member I will again read committee recommendation No. 3. It says that before closing any post offices, the Canada Post Corporation should develop more specific guidelines to reflect regional differences and specific needs.

Our answer to that, Mr. Speaker, was that we agreed with this recommendation and with the point raised by the committee. We intend to ensure that Canada Post will act on the committee's recommendations, and last week I gave the House the assurance that we would personally see to it that this would be done.

[English]

WISHES OF RURAL CITIZENS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is saying that if rural Canadians have the program explained to them, they will agree with the closure of the post offices. Does the Minister expect that rural Canadians will agree with the closure of their post offices and having them replaced by part-time businessmen who will operate them on a franchise basis instead of having full-time postmasters and postmistresses? What if they do not agree to having the post offices closed? Will the Government shove it down their throats anyway?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member should look at the details of the corporate plan. Last week, I reassured the House with respect to Canada Post's new policy, and today I can give the Hon. Member the assurance that there will be no closures or service changes at the Canada Post Corporation and its rural post offices until the recommendations proposed by the committee are acted upon. Mr. Speaker, the recommendation referred to a period of consultation with the Canadian people on the post offices that might be affected. The Hon. Member referred to closures, but we, Mr. Speaker, call this a service change.

[English]

RURAL DIGNITY ASSOCIATION—REQUEST FOR MEETING WITH MINISTER

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister. At the same meeting Rural Dignity reported that it has been endeavouring to have an appointment with the Minister. Could the Minister tell us whether he will meet with Rural Dignity?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am of course aware of the existence of this Rural Dignity committee, and I have agreed to meet with its members. According to my agenda, this should be tomorrow or within the next few days.

[English]

REQUEST THAT MINISTER UNDERTAKE NOT TO CLOSE RURAL OFFICES

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to know from the Minister responsible for the Post Office whether the reason he is framing his statements about the Post Office in terms of closures, that there will be no closures without consultation, is simply to give a licence to his back-benchers to say to their constituents that there is nothing to worry about. If that is not his intention, why does he not stand in the House and say without qualification that between now and the next election there will be no closures of post offices in rural areas?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, again, I simply said the recommendations, and I repeat it again, the recommendations made by the committee in December, and in which the Hon. Member had a hand, were to ask Canada Post not to go ahead with rural post office shutdowns without some action being taken by Canada Post. It must be remembered, Mr. Speaker, that what is involved here is service changes. This may mean merging post offices, it may mean providing additional services. And it is definitely our intention that the Canadian people be consulted as well as Members of this House before action is taken. This is all clear and simple, Mr. Speaker.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INFORM HOUSE WHERE AND WHEN POST OFFICES WILL BE CLOSED

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister is not prepared to state that there will be no post office shutdowns, why does he not share with this House Canada Post's plans for privatization, post office mergers and post office shutdowns? Give us definite information: where will post offices be shut down, and when?

[English]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I repeat again, like I said last week, there will be no change in the service before Canada Post proceeds with proper consultation with the population and with Members of the House. That is what I said. That is what will be done for rural post offices.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

SITUATION OF FRANCOPHONES—INQUIRY WHETHER SOLICITOR GENERAL HAS ACTION PLAN

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. I have in my hand a report signed by Assistant Commissionner J.E.L. Julien, commanding officer of "C"Division of the RCMP. The report sent to Commissionner Simmonds describes the unacceptable and indeed regrettable conditions forced by the RCMP upon its French-speaking officers. The Government has been warned on several occasions in this House as well as in committee that it was urgent to remedy the situation. The President of the Treasury Board has admitted it himself when three months ago he asked the Solicitor General to provide him with a plan of action. I should like to ask the Minister where that plan of action is and what he intends to do?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have assured Members of the House on a number of occasions that the RCMP is to comply with the official languages policy of the Government, the same as any other Department, and that it is obligated to comply with any order of the Treasury Board in this regard. As the Hon. Member well knows, the Commissioner will be appearing before the committee tomorrow. I am sure he can address the appropriate questions to him at that time.

REDUCTION IN FRANCOPHONE MANPOWER

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have already done that. I know the Minister to be a reasonable man. He will admit that the point is that the Government must give direction to the RCMP because it is not doing what the languages law requires. The report of assistant Commissioner Julien states that "a feeling of rejection by the Anglophone majority" is felt by Francophones and that "participation by Francophones on the force now is marginal and unfair". Will the Minister unequivocally disavow himself from the Simmonds' policy of reduction in RCMP Francophone manpower from 20 per cent to 12 per cent? Will he disavow that policy today in the House?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, a rose by any other name would smell as sweet. That is the same question he asked the first time and therefore I will give him the same answer. The RCMP will have to comply with the official languages policy of the Government and the use of Francophones within the force. Second, it will have to comply with any order made by the Treasury Board in that regard. I cannot be more clear than that.

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF PATENT AMENDING LEGISLATION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I am sure he will know that a poll published on Saturday indicated that a very substantial majority of Canadians from every region, and supporters of every Party including the Conservative Party, are opposed to the prescription drug legislation. Given the fact that the Government has already been made unpopular as a result of decisions such as the one on lumber and the agreement with France on fish, is it not time that the Government faced up to reality and withdrew a Bill which is so unpopular?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the House has already decided on that issue and supports the Bill in principle, and rightfully so. It will lead to improvement in the health care to Canadians. It will lead to thousands of research jobs. It will enable Canada to participate in the exciting biotechnologies. Frankly I cannot understand how responsible Members of Parliament could in fact say that Canada should opt out of this technology and let the rest of the world do that research. That is just irresponsible and something I would never concur with.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, despite everything the Minister and his supporters have said, does he not realize that according to the poll Canadians believe that they will have to pay higher prices for prescription drugs, that the companies will make much higher profits, and that there will be very little new research done? Given those facts is the Government going ahead with the Bill because it has made a commitment to President Reagan and the United States and it is part of trying to get a free trade agreement? Isn't that the real reason that the Government is going ahead?

• (1500)

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons there might be concern is that the Hon. Member and his Leader have been talking about a Coopers & Lybrand study of $650 million. Coopers & Lybrand wrote to me to say that they had nothing to do with that study and they disavow any claim to it. I can understand why. It is simply a false, phoney figure which the New Democrats, for reasons of their own—and the reasons have nothing to do with informing the public—keep publicizing. If the Hon. Member believes in polls, let him wait a few days for another poll which will show that we are on the right track, exactly where we should be, according to the people of Canada.

THE ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

NUMBER OF FRANCOPHONES—REQUEST THAT MINISTER MAKE INQUIRY

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would like to come back to the Solicitor General concerning the way french-speaking members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are treated. The minister keeps repeating that the RCMP must abide by government guidelines regarding Francophone participation. However, we know through certain documents that some high ranking RCMP officials are attempting to reduce Francophone participation from 20 to 12 or 15 per cent. Can the Minister tell us whether or not he has enquired to find out who is promoting such a pigheaded policy within the RCMP?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can certainly advise the hon. gentleman that I have discussed this matter with the commissioner, that a new plan is in preparation and will be presented shortly to the Treasury Board for its perusal and hopefully its approval.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: That will be the last question. The Hon. Member may ask his question.

REQUEST FOR RESIGNATION OF COMMISSIONER SIMMONDS

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Minister intends to raise the issue with Commissioner Simmonds. I am hardly comforted. This situation is going on while he is in charge. While raising the issue with Commissioner Simmonds, could the Minsiter also ask for his resignation?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am quite satisfied that Commissioner Simmonds has been doing an excellent job for the RCMP and has led the RCMP well during the past 10 years. I can only repeat that a new plan is being prepared and will be presented shortly to Treasury Board, hopefully for Treasury Board's perusal and approval.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-18, an Act respecting national transportation, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. Benjamin (p. 2756).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When the House rose at 1 p.m., the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) had been given the floor.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak for a few minutes on the National Transportation Act. Bill C-18 possibly underlines the need the Government has to establish some kind of credibility. It was an opportunity which the Government could have used, but instead of that the Bill just enhances lack of credibility. Almost every part of the Bill has to be taken separately.

The Government keeps talking about its concern for transportation safety but the Bill itself has no requirement for safety. In fact, there will be a greater possibility of accidents because less time will be spent on safety. When you are trying to make money on a very small margin, you are not going to spend the money on safety.

The Government keeps talking about sovereignty. This Bill will deliver our goods from all across Canada to multinational trucking companies and railways. The Government has also been talking about a philosophy based on competition and that that is the key to the direction it intends to go, but this Bill also lacks credibility in that area. Bill C-18 will decrease the amount of competition available to our transportation system.

I could go on, Mr. Speaker, but in 10 minutes it is probably not possible to list, let alone explain, all of the areas where the credibility of the Government in this subject should be questioned.

For 100 years transportation has been used as an instrument of policy and economic development. Bill C-18 ignores the economic need for some kind of equal transportation costs for all parts of the country. If you have differences in cost for remote areas than for central Canada you are bound to affect the economic development of those remote parts of the country. This Bill discriminates against people, businessmen and producers on the basis of where they happen to live, a 180 degree change in Government policy.

When Sir John A. Macdonald established the transportation policy for Canada he recognized that transportation could be a major factor in how the country developed. Most of us in this Parliament today would not accept as the basis of his decision-making the fact that he thought the western and the eastern parts of the country should supply the raw materials and that the central part, Quebec and Ontario, should do the manufacturing. That is long past. We have had somewhat of a movement on that. My predecessor from Prince Albert, John Diefenbaker, recognized, when he was Prime Minister that transportation could be a major factor in how a country developed. In his vision of the north he used transportation as the basis for development right across the northern fringe of the Prairies, in northern Ontario and Quebec. He based that decision on the fact that transportation is a key element to economic development.

Bill C-18 does exactly the opposite. It shows a 180 degree turn from the idea that transportation should be used or could be used to give all parts of the country the same possible advantage. Consequently, we have a situation now where instead of the Government and the country looking at the more remote areas and saying that is where we need some kind of development, we have a Government which looks at the central part of Canada. It is saying, "If we put in place this economic change, this deregulation of transportation, we will make sure that forever and ever, Canada will continue to develop in the so-called Golden Triangle". Those places from which you and I come, Mr. Speaker, will be at a disadvantage. We will not be able to develop or manufacture goods because we will pay so much more for transportation that we will not be able to compete.

Back in the 1800s, the Government established the Crow's Nest Pass agreement. That agreement was put in place so that products from western Canada could move to the East at a lower rate. It also allowed the transportation of settlers' goods from eastern Canada to the West and assisted in the development of western Canada. In the 1920s, Parliament established statutory grain rates. This put into legislation the kind of structure which allowed the West to continue to develop by allowing the West to deliver its product.

The Western Grain Transportation Act which was passed just a couple of years ago, although many of us disagreed with the approach because we recognized it as a first step in the direction we are moving today, recognized that people in the remote areas should not be penalized because of where they live. Instead of that, and I suppose even because of that, we have taken one more step in the direction begun by the Western Grain Transportation Act, of allowing the undermining of an economic policy which assisted in the development of the regions.

I am not necessarily talking of places as far away as Yellowknife. I am talking about communities like Prince Albert and those in northern Manitoba, the Prairies and British Columbia. These communities will be affected by the transportation structure which the Government is putting in place through Bill C-18.

This Bill ignores the reality of Canada. It fails to take into account Canada's geography and its climate. It fails to take into account the needs of a population that has spread across Canada. If we keep on taking this particular track, we will eventually isolate the remote areas of Canada and we will not have the kind of country that you and I, Mr. Speaker, and most Members of the House feel is the country we have been promoting for so long.

I would like to remind Conservative Members that if we are to work as a nation, if we are to have the kind of nation that we think we should have, a united and forceful nation, we must have a transportation policy which unites the country and allows all areas of Canada to operate without discrimination. This Bill does not allow for that.

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on Bill C-18 and to detail further our party's position on this fundamental question.

Although outwardly the Bill impresses by its bulk, we are more impressed by what it does not than by what it does contain.

Mr. Speaker, this Bill is incomplete. We have already said it is utterly lacking in credible safety guarantees. We have also referred to the lack of restrictions on foreign control of our transportation industry, in the case of the trucking sector. This is a real problem and a pressing one, but unfortunately, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) has chosen to ignore the problem.

Mr. Speaker, we have also pointed to the lack of guarantees for job security. Thousands of Canadian workers are afraid to lose their jobs, and once again, the Minister and the Government have turned a deaf ear. For these reasons alone, this flagrant lack of judgment and sensitivity, the Bill would be a bad Bill and should be rewritten, but there is worse than that, Mr. Speaker. When the Minister of Transport tabled this Bill with its far-reaching reform of our regulatory framework, he failed to consider the humanitarian aspect and include special provisions for the rights of the handicapped.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) raised the issue in the House last Friday. Do you know what the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Kilgour) had to say? That the National Transportation Act will be subject to human rights legislation. Mr. Speaker, that is wishful thinking. This so-called comprehensive reform of the regulatory framework would have been a unique opportunity for any Government with real concern for the rights of the handicapped to enshrine in our transportation legislation provisions governing access, comfort, safety and fare schedules for the handicapped on all transport modes.

Mr. Speaker, above all, the Bill contains no imperative standards for access and safety as applied to the handicapped.

Another major drawback of the Bill is that it contains no reserve clause tying enforcement of the Act to regional development objectives.

Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government has refused to recognize the importance of regional economic development. We feel this position is totally unacceptable and shows a lack of sensitivity to the fact that Canada's population is scattered over a country with the second largest territory in the world.

Mr. Speaker, in its present form, the proposed legislation contains no safeguards against regional reductions in service, abandonment of certain routes and railway lines and other eventualities. Considering the highly competitive market we shall have after deregulation, Mr. Speaker, we feel it is imperative that certain safeguards against loss of services be included.

Despite all the good words and suggestions of a national reconciliation and a new era in federal-provincial relationships, the Conservative Government has once again shown what it really is after. An important resolution is indeed missing from the statement of purpose of the bill, a resolution passed unanimously at the annual Prime Minister's Meeting held in Saint-John's, Newfoundland last August.

Under that resolution, Mr. Speaker, any transportation policy was to have regional development as its main guiding principle. Moreover, last December 3rd, the Atlantic Cabinet declared unanimously that the Federal Government should amend Bill C-18 to state that any objective dealing with regional economic development should take precedence over the commercial cost effectiveness objectives of a transportation service should there be a conflict between those objectives.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that the bill as introduced is incomplete, and that it may have a very negative impact not only on the transportation industry, but also on several other economic sectors. In short, Mr. Speaker, it is an inconsistent piece of legislation quite in keeping with the image of this Conservative Government.

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate and express some of my views after all I heard on this matter in the past few days. Naturally, Mr. Speaker, you will understand that when a society, for some reason or other, stops developing, when a society does not keep up with the day-to-day developments of a situation, one is tempted to say that it is a conservative society. When a party, for some reason or other, cannot keep pace with evolution, when a party does not evolve with circumstances and developments, one could say that it is a Conservative Party. And indeed one of the basic problems that I have noticed in this debate was a very deep misunderstanding of the position of the Liberal Party on this matter by the Government Party. When some Government Members suggested that it was surprising that the Liberal Party did not oppose deregulation, and when some Government Members stressed the fact that the Liberal Party had rather consistently opposed deregulation in the past, I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that they were right . . . If you look at how things evolved and situations developed, you understand that there is an element of logic in the process, and whenever a situation has evolved and given good reasons to make adjustments, I feel the Liberal Party has always been able to adjust and take any corrective action and decision required to help every sector in Canada secure an excellent position.

Mr. Speaker, what the Liberal Party would not accept, however, is a reckless deregulation without due consultation process. One of the basic problems I find, after all the discussions I had and the speeches I heard, is this lack of consultation, this very selective process of consultation which leads to bills like the ones presented by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie).

Last week, I heard my colleague, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), say that a number of provinces were not even consulted on the document Freedom to Move. The Standing Committee, as he mentioned, did not have the time to consult Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, Quebec, Ontario, Alberta and Saskatchewan. I would imagine, Mr. Speaker, that in these provinces there are groups and individuals involved in transportation who should have been consulted or heard, but unfortunately the Government did not do it and, today, we are confronted with a Bill we cannot agree with, as a number of groups have voiced strong concerns about it.

Despite all the objections raised by Liberal Members and others, even Conservative Members, in particular the Chairman of the Committee, about the very short time given to the Standing Committee to study Freedom to Move, the Conservative Party used its majority and went along with the Minister of Transport request for a speedy report. We deplore this decision made by the majority and, in keeping with its responsibilities as Official Opposition in this Parliament, the Liberal Party had to produce a minority report.

One of the basic aspects of the discussions or meetings we have had with interest groups, business people or companies which are opposed to or entertain serious reservations about this Bill is, of course, the role played by transportation in the promotion of employment opportunities, and the fears of these companies with respect to the impact this Bill might have on employment in Canada.

It is likely, indeed very likely that deregulation will be followed by a sharp decline in employment in Canada, and the attendant loss of wages, because we can expect a proliferation of non-unionized job openings on the labour market. Mr. Speaker, it was in 1978 that the Americans began deregulating their air transport industry and, between 1978 and 1982, full-time jobs in American air transport companies decreased by 6 per cent. From 1980 to 1985, 40,000 workers lost their jobs in that sector. We heard as well—and this was underscored last week—that airlines had to shut down because they were no longer subject to regulation. Among others, People's Express went bankrupt and folded their wings. They used to carry a lot of passengers, but deregulation made it impossible for company management to meet their obligations, they just could not survive and decided to declare bankrupcy.

Mr. Speaker, many of us have also raised the question of safety in respect of deregulaition as such. We did refer to safety because the Canadian Aviation Safety Board has raised the matter and stated that deregulation could lead to many accidents and an increased number of accident investigations if the deregulation legislation were to be adopted as it is now.

We have here a statement made by Mr. Bernard Deschênes in an interview reported in La Presse in which he says the Canadian Aviation Safety Board expects to investigate more than a thousand incidents and accidents in 1986. Of course, Mr. Deschênes is not looking forward to that, but it could be expected that the total number of accidents would return to the 700 yearly average after declining to around 500 during the recession. Added to that would then be more than 350 investigations on incidents that could have had serious consequences, whether engine failure, running out of fuel, near collision cockpit trouble, decompression requiring emergency descent, etc.

What we have pointed out last week, Mr. Speaker, is that deregulation will automatically lead to price competition. With this automatic price competition, there will be companies which, in order to stay afloat and go on operating, will try to save on operating costs, and when looking at operating cost reductions, they will automatically reduce certain costs probably in the area of safety. This means we will be faced with the kinds of situations described by Mr. Deschênes, most probably there will be serious problems in the area of safety-inspections or preventive maintenance that used to be done industry-wide for all transportation services in Canada. Then we may experience serious accidents, disasters that will be due to a kind of deregulation that will have failed to include standards, mechanisms or requirements for those carriers to have maintenance or safety standards that are complied with or that require regular inspections.

Mr. Speaker, we are sorry to note that the Standing Committee on Transportation has been given no mandate to deal with safety within the deregulation process. Indeed, many witnesses were amazed to learn that the Committee wanted to make its views known on deregulation without any analysis of safety standards. The Auditor General. Mr. Kenneth Dye, said, regarding the fiscal year ended March 31, 1985, that Transport Canada was not able, in any of the regions, to inspect all the carriers under its jurisdiction at least once a year.

And according once again to the Canadian Air Line Pilots' Association, we have reached the point where safety-related concerns became so pressing last year that the U.S. Transport Secretary ordered a white glove safety inspection.

So, Mr. Speaker, I only hope that before passing this Bill government will make some serious amendments and refer it to a committee.

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, the reforms of the economic regulation of transportation which we are considering are called the Freedom to Move legislation. What does Freedom to Move mean? It means that air travellers will have a wider choice of flights at more convenient times and more competitive prices. It means that all kinds of businesses, including small family concerns, large corporations, and major resource producers in every part of Canada, will have some real alternatives to get their products to market. They will have alternative services from more innovative carriers, offering more pricing options.

What will this mean for individual Canadians? Real jobs will be created or maintained in every region of the country and every sector of the economy because better transportation service at a better, more competitive price will enable our resource producers, manufacturers and other businesses to be more competitive in markets at home and abroad.

During this debate, however, we have heard from members of the Opposition that these reforms are too much and come too fast for our transportation industries to cope. The naysayers on the other side predict devastating effects on our trucking industry. They claim that our railways will no longer be financially viable. In short, if we were to believe them, we would expect that our entire transportation system will be in chaos the day after these reforms are implemented. This will not be the case.

Let me explain why. Of course, there will be some adjustments required on the part of everyone. Neither I nor the Government has ever denied that. However, there will be no dramatic upheavals. Economic regulation has been gradually loosened, and many adjustments have already occurred.

Let us look at the air mode, for example. Regulation was brought in to encourage the establishment of a national carrier, Trans-Canada Airlines, when no private carrier could or would take the risk in the fledgling aviation market. By the end of the 1950s, the market had developed and a second airline, Canadian Pacific, was ready to begin long haul service across the country.

Through the 1960s and 1970s regulation was used to keep other airlines within defined regions of the country. After 1978, however, the market changed significantly as a result of the United States air deregulation. Canadian air travellers began asking for similar benefits, such as lower prices and greater choice of service. Many got those benefits, if they could, by crossing the border to fly on U.S. airlines.

In Canada, regulators began allowing regional carriers to extend their operations and all carriers to introduce innovative pricing practices such as seat sales and advanced booking discounts. Further relaxation of air regulation in recent years has led to new carriers entering the market regionally, such as Air Atlantic, and Wardair which has entered the business nationally. Existing carriers have been allowed to add new routes and introduce more efficient aircraft.

One might ask why we need the reforms in Bill C-18? It is because the existing law has been bent as far as it can. Our airlines can go no further in adjusting to the changing demands of the market without a change in the law. Complying with the bent-over-backward rules is still costly, cumbersome and time consuming. Tomorrow, a different interpretation of the law could send us backwards, not forward to meet new challenges and opportunities for economic growth.

The story in trucking is similar. The provincial boards which regulate extra provincial trucking have been loosening the reins for years, although in different ways and at different paces. U.S. deregulation of trucking occurred in 1980, and many Canadian truckers have since established operations in the United States. Naturally, American truckers would like similar access here.

Transborder competition has been heating up, and our truckers are more than holding their own. Our share has increased by about 10 per cent since 1980.

The new legislation for trucking which is scheduled to be implemented in 1980 according to federal-provincial agreement, contains a three-year transition period. Thus, the impact of the entry test, based on fitness only, will not occur until 1991 and beyond. Is over 10 years of adjustment for the trucking industry an abrupt change? Will it have a devastating effect? I think it will not, but one need not take my word for it.

• (1540)

The federal and provincial Ministers responsible for transportation commissioned a study of the effects of the reforms to which they have agreed and which are before the House. That study, released last November, concluded there would be no great disruption in the industry, no harmful concentration and no loss of service to small communities. It did predict keen price competition and it wisely counselled monitoring of developments, in any event.

The federal and provincial Ministers have accepted the recommendation to monitor closely developments under the new legislation and have commissioned a further study of the effects to be completed before the final phase of the reform becomes effective.

With respect to rail transportation, what we are doing is really the second stage of a process which began in the 1960s. The 1967 National Transportation Act, rate regulation, granted railways the right to set their own rates subject to the very limited rights of appeal. The Americans did not move in this area until 1980, but when they did move, they went further and allowed confidential contracts. Our present reforms are necessary to ensure that our carriers can compete on an equal basis with the American carriers. However, this will not be a sudden change. Canadian shippers have been negotiating with U.S. railways and are already accustomed to this new way of doing business. Similarly, Canadian railways, through their American subsidiaries, are no strangers to these new rules.

The other part of the rail reforms restores stability where an imbalance was created because of the growth in the number of captive shippers since the 1967 Act was passed. This has been a growing problem since the mid-1970s. It is an issue which has been discussed and studied for a number of years. The Government is proposing a solution. Captive shippers have been at a disadvantage for far too long. Now is the time to correct this problem. As I have illustrated, the market-place demands that economic regulation catch up with reality, and our carriers are ready for these reforms.

Regulation of transportation has played an important role in the development of our nation and its economy. Our transportation industry and other industries have matured. The world is a far more competitive place than it was even a few years ago, let alone 20 years ago when transportation regulation was last revised. To meet the challenges of today and tomorrow, our producers must become more competitive and innovative, and transportation services will always be a crucial element in their competitiveness.

No wonder we have asked ourselves seriously what can be done to make our transportation industry more competitive. Extensive consultations on what should be done have been undertaken with shippers, carriers, travellers, Members of the House, provincial Governments and the general public. The answer which has emerged from these consultations is to regulate less and smarter and to let the market forces determine to the greatest possible extent what services are available at what prices, not everywhere, however, and not in all cases. Some areas still need some protection from deregulation.

Therefore, the package of reforms includes some provisions to protect the public interest in certain regions, especially in the North. I appreciate the opportunity to speak on this Bill.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to participate in this debate. I am sorry, however, that Bill C-18, as put forward by the Government, and as praised in those laudatory speeches prepared by the Government Research Bureau or the Minister's office for the Hon. Members taking part in debate, is before us. I think there are a lot of questions government Members should answer before they return to their constituents and tell them what a wonderful idea Bill C-18 is. These are questions which form a core of government policy, where, I think, the Conservative policies are extremely questionable.

What the whole question of deregulation or reregulation, whatever it is the Government says it is doing with Bill C-18, amounts to is the Americanization of transportation regulation in Canada.

I go back to the days of Sir John A. Macdonald who, I think, would be turning in his grave at what his supposed heirs in the Conservative Party are doing after what he wrought, what he thought was important to create. He tried to bring this country together from sea verily unto sea by means of the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Although it was a private enterprise venture, the Canadian Pacific Railway, that band of steel which brought our country together—which was part of the agreement under which British Columbia came into Confederation in the first place—was only created because of public initiative and funding. The land grants made by the Government of Canada at that time, the money which was advanced to the Canadian Pacific so it could complete construction and more or less meet the deadlines agreed to at the time of Confederation, were a sign of the partnership between public initiative and private enterprise which in fact marked a great deal of the construction of this country.

The Americanization of transport regulation means that the Government suggests that competition above all should be what is directing the operations of our transportation industry. I want to suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the problem with that theory is that the population density in the lower 48 states of America is about 25 or 30 times greater than the density of Canada. If one goes east of the Mississippi where the bulk of the population lives, or to the State of California, the population density is even higher. Under those circumstances, it may be possible for the Americans to have a competitive kind of system and for it to work for them. The question is, under the circumstances which are different here in Canada, will it work for Canada?

I think most Canadians are proud of what we have achieved in the area of transportation and communication. We are acknowledged throughout the world as being world leaders. We have two especially effective and efficient railways. One of the areas we lead in terms of a world class industry is the area of communications. Canada has one of the finest airlines in the world. CP Air, which is now owned by Pacific Western Airlines, was not bad, either. We have been good at these things. In fact, Canada has developed one of the most efficient and cost-effective transportation systems in the world. We can ask ourselves the question, having gone that far, if it works then why try to fix it, particularly why try to apply the kind of fix the Government, for ideological reasons, seems to want to apply?

I want to remind Hon. Members opposite that the idea that we can take everything holus-bolus from a neo-Conservative clique which surrounds President Reagan and his friends and input it into Canada is a bunch of nonsense. This is a different country. Our traditions and our geography are different. This country would not exist if we had not defied geography in order to bring the country together, linked East to West, when all the natural channels of water transportation, trade and possibly even community interest in the earlier days, would have run North South.

We have had to use public intervention to get a railway in place. We have had to use public intervention for a national airline. Perhaps my colleagues can remind me of which Party was in power when Air Canada was established.

Mr. Rodriguez: The Conservatives.

Mr. Cassidy: It was the Conservative Party that was in power. Was it the Liberals or the Conservatives, I cannot remember which, that were in power when the Canadian National Railways was created? The Government in power, or its predecessors, was responsible for many of the Crown corporations. It was responsible for the Canadian Pacific and for Air Canada, so it has agreed in the past that public participation makes an awful lot of sense if we are going to have a country at all. Now the Government is turning its back on it.

What will occur? The first thing is that safety is very much at risk with the kind of deregulation which is talked about by the Government. If we deregulate entirely and have no effective means of oversight, then experience shows again and again that we put people's lives at risk, employees' lives at risk and, if Hon. Members opposite want to quarrel with that, I suggest they tell me how it was that the Arrow Airlines crash occurred in Gander, which resulted in the death of 200 or more American forces personnel returning to the United States?

There are great risks with respect to jobs. Hon. Members should know that tens of thousands of jobs in the transportation industry are at risk. They should know as well that the benefits in terms of possible improvements, efficiencies or lower costs will not necessarily flow from that. What may happen is that we may lose jobs. Wages may be crushed downward. We may wind up with a system which is less safe and no more efficient than the one we have right now.

We have been told that we will have cheaper fares and better services. The fact is that that statement is generally applied to one specific sector, that being the air transportation sector. What has happened is that in anticipation of Bill C-18 the airline industry in Canada has been in a wave of reorganization which parallels what has occured in the United States. In the U.S. the budget airlines such as People Express brought down air fares on a certain number of routes over a certain period of time. Those airlines are now being absorbed, taken over or forced into bankruptcy. They could not survive. As anyone who has travelled recently in the United States knows, air travel in that country is now tougher, it takes longer, the equipment is not as good and the fares are high.

I have in front of me a study which was prepared a year or two ago by the ENO Foundation, a business research group in the United States. It looked at air fares in the United States after deregulation. The fact is that in the spring of 1984, after deregulation, the fare per mile varied widely. It ranged from 13 cents a mile for a New York to Norfolk fare, to 53 cents a mile for a St. Louis to Cincinnati fare, even though these two markets are virtually the same distance apart. The escalation in fares has been extraordinarily different. To return to the two examples I just cited, the fare from New York to Norfolk fell by 19 per cent before 1978, while the fare from St. Louis to Cincinnati rose by 231 per cent. The increase in fares between different city pairs in the United States averaged 50 per cent between 1978—before deregulation—and 1984, but it rose in one-third of the cases by more than 120 per cent in six years, an average fare escalation of over 20 per cent per year.

What has happened in Canada? Essentially, we now have two airline groups. We have the Air Canada group and the Pacific Western group, which is made up essentially of CP Air and Nordair. In other words, an oligopoly exists. An oligopoly means two or three competitors—no more. Under those situations competition is not achieved, competition which would result in prices being driven down to the lowest or marginally lowest cost of providing services. In such a situation the two participants shy away from cutting fares too low. Wardair might be able to force fares down occasionally in certain markets. But, essentially, the situation we have now is that the Canadian Transport Commission does not ensure that there is a reasonable set of air fares in place. It does not allow a certain amount of competition in terms of special deals. Nor does it ensure that the regular fares bear some relation to distance travelled. For example, if one travels 200 miles in British Columbia, the fare should be more or less similar for the same distance travelled in Ontario, Quebec and the Maritimes. Instead of that being the case, we now have a situation in which all types of disparities can exist, on the one hand. On the other hand, the situation is that the airlines will conduct their regulation on an internal basis. For what purpose? Mainly for the profit—to maximize their revenues.

The Government has also indicated that it intends, or is very seriously considering, the privatization of Air Canada. This means that Air Canada's commitment, and I think it has maintained it, to be an instrument of public policy will disappear, or virtually disappear. Thus we have two private sector entities dividing the market between them. Frankly, I fear that what we will see in Canada is similar to what has occurred in the United States. There, the initial benefits, if there were any, were very quickly followed by disbenefits, in effect to a situation in which there were no longer any benefits at all.

I see that you are indicating that my time is almost up, Mr. Speaker. I want to say that Bill C-18 will not bring about the type of benefits which government Members have mentioned. It will bring us real costs in terms of lowered safety standards, in terms of lost jobs and in terms of less potential for holding the country together. In accompaniment with free trade it will bring about the danger of further Americanization of our country. I do not want to be nasty to the Americans. I just want to say that we as Canadians have run our country differently. We have values which are different. We want to maintain strength in our regions. We will not be able to do that with free trade, nor with the type of transportation deregulation that is being advocated by the Government in Bill C-18.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-18, an Act respecting national transportation, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. Benjamin (p. 2756).

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my brief contribution to the debate on Bill C-18 will focus on one aspect only, that is, how this legislation will affect—and in many people's minds affect adversely—regional economic development.

It was concern for regional development which first led me quite a number of years ago to consider standing for a constituency and coming to represent an underdeveloped region of the country here in the federal Parliament of Canada in the House of Commons. During that period of time there have been a large number of endeavours to come to grips with the serious problems of regional development in northern Ontario. They have met varying degrees of success. Some attempts have been almost negligible in terms of their effect on the North, and some have had a reasonable amount of measurable positive benefit. However, always standing in the way of effective regional development in northern Ontario has been the transportation problem. It would be much more serious than it is today if we did not have at least some degree of regulation. Very often, it was the regulatory agency which prevented corporations such as Canadian National, for example, from abandoning the region almost entirely. Despite regulation CN has still managed to do rather well in its obvious neglect of this vast resource region that has contributed so much to our federal union.

What is very puzzling about Bill C-18 is that it recognizes in passing that transportation is important to regional development. In Clause 3 of the Bill there is a passing reference to transportation being recognized as a key to regional economic development. However, that is about as far as it goes. Well-informed citizens in the constituency which I represent who see the correlation between development in transportation and development in the region believe that this legislation will act in a contrary way. In other words, instead of assisting and ensuring that development will go forth with transportation as a tool, it will work in a negative way.

I would argue that in Bill C-18 we need much more than a passing reference to the fact that transportation is a key to regional development. We need a policy that is translated into legislation which will ensure that transportation can become a key to regional development.

Since the Government took office, I have become sadly aware that regional development has been de-emphasized. Federal programs for regional development have either disappeared, or the amount of funding to support those programs has declined. What has taken the place of the programs with some muscle has been a proliferation of committees to consider what can be done. In fact, in recent months committees have become the biggest growth industry in northern Ontario. All types of committees are looking at what can be done to get around the fact that our region is in a state of rapid decline.

Although deregulation may have a large benefit for the country in increasing commercial viability and in increasing competition, it cannot be argued by anyone that there will not be certain beneficiaries from deregulation. Never would I stand in my place and argue that we want a totally regulated and controlled society. I am arguing that a certain number of safeguards have to be put in place for regions that are now underserviced, and regions that are blocked from further development because the transportations facilities are not there. This type of emphasis on national competition and commercial viability will push these regions further into the background. They will find themselves much further away from achieving any equity with the rest of the country.

I have listened to a number of speeches from the Opposition, and I am sure that some Hon. Members in the House will say that here is the Opposition once again either whining or creating concerns that are not legitimate. When we express our concerns about how this legislation will affect regional development, we have some strong supporters. Not only opposition Members, but Premiers of many provinces have looked at the legislation along with their advisers and have come to precisely the same conclusion. These concerns have been translated into a number of resolutions put forward by the Premiers gathered together in conference. For example, as recently as November, 1985, when the Premiers met in Halifax, they looked at legislation brought forward by the Government of Canada to deregulate the industry, and they passed this resolution:

> Whereas the importance of regional economic development has been agreed upon by all governments, we, the provincial premiers, call on the government of Canada to incorporate in the proposed new National Transportation Act, in addition to an objective of commercial viability, the following:
> 1) Transportation is recognized as a key to regional economic development—

That is in the Act, the recognition. They further state:

> 2) Commercial viability of transportation links must be balanced with regional economic development objectives in order that the potential economic strengths of each region may be realized.

It is that particular concern that has cast doubt on the effectiveness of Bill C-18 in the regions.

For example, I turn to the neighbour of northern Ontario, the Province of Manitoba, which has much in common with northern Ontario in terms of its economy, and its level of development.

In a speech, the Premier, Mr. Pawley, said "that the federal Government's proposals to deregulate the industry rely too much on competition". He further stated:

> If changes are not made, they (the federal Government) will reduce the opportunity for economic growth and will accelerate the growing opportunity gap between the have and have-not provinces, since the have provinces will be the benefactors of a deregulated environment.

On many occasions in this House we have heard that there is a growing gap, because we are living in a period of restraint and Governments are looking for ways in which to reduce deficits. On many occasions it has been brought to the attention of Hon. Members that there is a gap between those who have and those who have not, and that that gap is growing. This is becoming a characteristic of our society.

Therefore, I do not think that Hon. Members will wish to support a Bill that will enlarge the gap between regions that are underserviced, regions that are underdeveloped, and those regions that have already achieved a very high level of economic prosperity.

Surely the role of the House is to foster national unity. National unity means more than simply calling ourselves Canadians. It means sharing in all the benefits of this great country of ours.

Hon. Bob Layton (Lachine): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address the concerns expressed in this debate regarding concentration of ownership and foreign ownership, especially in the air mode. The charge has been made that the legislation before us will lead, not to greater competition and its many benefits, but to less competition and negative effects on price and service. It has also been alleged that this legislation will result in a massive sell-out to foreigners of our airlines and trucking firms. Such fears of dire consequences are not well founded. A number of carefully planned safeguards will ensure that Canadian consumers and air travellers receive the benefits of competition.

The economic regulatory controls on airlines have already been relaxed as far as possible under the existing law. This has given us more competitive air fares, several new carriers, and better service. Among the new carriers at the regional level are Air Nova, Bras D'Or, and Air Atlantic. Other carriers such as City Express, Time Air, and Air B.C., have expanded their operations considerably.

The new existing regional carriers are providing more frequent service, at more convenient times to small communities across the country. Their service may not always be jet service, which has, in some instances, been replaced, but then jets are not cost-efficient and often no faster on short distance flights.

I would also remind the House that Canadian-made Dash-8s are being used for many of these new services. This means more jobs for Canadians in the aircraft industry.

The alliances being formed between some local carriers and national ones will produce better service for passengers. Flight schedules, baggage transfer, and other operations will be co-ordinated to minimize delays and inconvenience to the travelling public. Price competition continues throughout the system. Seat sales and discount prices based on advanced booking requirements are being offered, not just between major centres but on flights to and from many small communities. My colleagues have cited numerous examples. In other words, there is no evidence that alliances between national and regional carriers are harming competition in any way.

• (1610)

At the national level, as we all know, Pacific Western Airlines has arranged a deal to acquire Canadian Pacific Airlines. I will not comment specifically on this because the proposed acquisition is still under review by the Canadian Transport Commission to determine whether it is in the public interest. Critics of the new transportation policy in Bill C-18 seem strangely reluctant to acknowledge this safeguard in both the existing law and the new Bill.

Let us also acknowledge that Wardair is entering the long haul scheduled service market. In announcing his plans to spend over $900 million on new aircraft, Max Ward has demonstrated his determination to compete head to head with established national carriers. I applaud this demonstration of entrepreneurial spirit. This is precisely what the Government's approach to regulatory reform is meant to achieve.

We should also remember our history. Not too many years ago—and you and I shared this history, Mr. Speaker—there was only one national carrier, Trans-Canada Airlines, which is known as Air Canada today, and a variety of regional carriers held to that role by the regulators. Even today Air Canada still has close to 50 per cent of passenger traffic.

Given the nature of our domestic air market, it is possible that the efficiencies necessary to give travellers the best service at the best price can be achieved only with a relatively small number of healthy competitive national carriers. Whatever the case, I believe that Canadians will be better served in future if, as the policy in Bill C-18 indicates, market forces are the primary determinants in the efficiency and adequacy of service.

In any case there are a variety of safeguards to competition. First, the power now exercised by the Canadian Transport Commission to review mergers and acquisitions in light of the public interest will be continued in the National Transportation Agency. Second, the recently enacted Competition Act provides for review of any transaction which would substantially reduce competition. Third, under the proposed legislation new carriers can enter the market and existing carriers can add new routes much more easily. Finally, as they did in the early 1980s, many Canadians can cross the border to fly on U.S. airlines, perish the thought. In effect, additional competition exists across the border. For all these reasons I am confident that we can have the benefits of regulatory reform and healthy, efficient, and competitive air carriers at both the national and regional levels.

Turning to the trucking industry, I find from an independent, objective viewpoint that the fears being expressed about concentration of ownership are exaggerated. The Canadian Council of Motor Transport Administrators, on behalf of the federal and provincial Ministers responsible for transport, commissioned a study on the effects of the regulatory reforms being proposed. That study was received by the Ministers last October and was released in November.

The conclusion of the independent transportation experts who conducted the study was that some restructuring and consolidation of firms would continue as it had for a number of years, but that concentration would not reach undesirable levels among national carriers. The study also concluded that regional carriers would not be eliminated and that service to small communities would not suffer.

In respect of foreign ownership, I should like to point out that an airline will have to be at least 75 per cent Canadian owned in order to obtain an operating licence for domestic service. This requirement, for those Hon. Members who may wish to verify it, is contained in the definition of "Canadian" in Clause 67 of Bill C-18.

Mergers and acquisitions of Canadian transportation firms by foreigners are also subject to a number of review mechanisms, although those involving small firms are exempt. The Government is not prepared to subject each and every acquisition of a small firm to the bureaucratic burden, delay, and cost of a substantial review when the national interest cannot reasonably be at risk.

The safeguards which exist now and will remain in place include the following. First, under the Investment Canada Act, an acquisition by a foreigner of a Canadian company, including a transportation company, can be blocked if it is deemed not to be of benefit to Canada. Second, a foreign acquisition is subject to review under the National Transportation Act to determine whether it is in the public interest.

This provision of the existing Act is being broadened under Bill C-18. It now applies only to mergers and acquisitions between two transportation companies. In future, it would apply to the acquisition of a transportation firm by anyone, whether or not they are already in the transportation business. Foreign companies and domestic ones are subject to review without distinction.

Third, the recently enacted Competition Act provides for a review of mergers and acquisitions. They may be disallowed if they are found likely to reduce competition to a substantial degree. I understand that the Competition Tribunal has already turned down one proposed merger, although it was not in the transportation field.

With all the safeguards I have described, Canadians can rest assured that neither foreign ownership nor corporate concentration will be permitted to harm the public interest or to jeopardize competition in transportation services.

Under the proposed reforms of transportation regulation, the operation of market forces will bring the benefits of competition to all Canadians—producers and manufacturers, air travellers and consumers—in the form of better transportation services tailored to their needs and at more competitive prices.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to take part in the debate on Bill C-18 this afternoon.

[English]

I listened very attentively to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Lachine (Mr. Layton) who spoke about the issue of foreign takeovers of transportation companies and about reviewing some of these takeovers. I remind him that under the new Investment Canada Act, foreign takeovers of $5 million or less will not be reviewed by anyone. In the transportation industry Canada has a vital interest to ensure that proper reviews of foreign takeovers in our transportation industry are carried out and are blocked when necessary.

I rise to speak in the debate this afternoon principally to talk about the issue of rail deregulation or deregulation of the transportation industry and what it could do to the constituency I represent.

Of course my riding, which is the most beautiful one in the country—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): As is mine.

Mr. Boudria: —is situated east of the City of Ottawa. I notice the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton (Mr. Turner) is heckling at the present time. No doubt he will be interested in the issue which I intend to bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, because his constituency and mine, as well as Stormont—Dundas and other ridings, are affected by the Ottawa to Montreal CN Rail line.

A few weeks ago I had the pleasure of meeting with CN Rail officials, along with my provincial counterpart in the riding of Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry, Conservative MPP Noble Villeneuve, and with municipal officials, local industry representatives, and so on to find out what were the plans of CN Rail for the Ottawa to Montreal line. Perhaps you will wonder, Mr. Speaker, why we chose this particular time to meet with them and what prompted the local community in my riding to want to meet with officials of CN Rail.

On September 25, 1986, a piece of internal correspondence at CN Rail, signed by R. P. Langlois, Regional Manager of Marketing for the St. Lawrence Region, indicated the following to a number of other officials:

> In the context of the rationalization of our rail infrastructure, some lines have been identified as being potential candidates for abandonment in the coming years. A preliminary plan has been prepared and attached you will find the sections affected.

Further he indicated:

> Any effort to attract new traffic on these sections is to be abandoned immediately. For the traffic already on these lines, we must consider either, and preferably, converting this traffic on to the intermodal system, or else, adjusting rates to minimize our present losses.

• (1620)

What we have is an official of CN Rail telling everybody else in the company: "Guys, we have to alienate business from this particular line. We have to discourage new business". Obviously the reason is that if and when CN applies to shut down the line to the Canadian Transport Commission—or whatever its replacement is according to this Bill—CN will have full justification. CN will not have any customers. Why will they not have customers, Mr. Speaker? Because CN intentionally will have done it.

In the event, Mr. Speaker, you are wondering about the if and why about which I was talking a minute ago, I have the attached list to this letter which identifies the Alexandria subdivision. In railway language that means the piece of rail between Ottawa and Coteau junction just west of Montreal. The Alexandria subdivision is listed here from mile marker 15.0 to 72.7, which is 57.7 miles to be shut down. The year identified is 1990. If CN Rail proceeds with what it wants to do, there will be no train, there will not even be a track between Ottawa and Montreal in the year 1990.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): I agree.

Mr. Boudria: This is according to CN's own internal documents which, incidentally, I have shared with the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton because his region is affected as mine is. I know he shares that concern with me.

I have further correspondence from CN Rail which clearly demonstrates that it is the intention of CN to shut down that piece of rail line. What is most offensive to me as a Member of Parliament is to receive a letter from R.E. Lawless, President and Chief Operating Officer of CN Rail, in which he said, on December 4, 1986, describing the plans of his corporation:

> At this time I can advise you, and indeed assure you, that should such a study reveal the need for a change in status, I will see that you are made aware of the situation.

In other words he is saying, "If we have a study and if we decide to shut down the rail line, we will let you know". This was after I had indicated to him that I had a copy of these documents in my hands. You would have thought that at least he would have had the foresight of knowing that to contradict previous documents from his own corporation in such a manner would lead him into some trouble, Mr. Speaker. But for those people at CN Rail that was not apparent.

When we had the meeting to which I was referring a little while ago in Alexandria with officials of CN Rail, the officials described to us that they had to operate under the new climate of deregulation that was coming up. Therefore, they were preparing themselves for it. That is why they had to contemplate what they were going to do next. This was being said at the same time that they were refusing to admit that their internal correspondence was their internal correspondence. They did not acknowledge this, but they told us about the new climate of deregulation which would necessitate all kinds of reviews and studies and this and that and that they would have to shut down, at some point, some parts of the rail line. Officials were doing this while refusing to admit that they had already started the process outlined in the memo I have described and in other internal correspondence of that corporation.

Should this plan proceed, both the deregulation as we know it now and the plans of CN Rail to shut down part of its rail line to accommodate this new deregulated system that we will have, here is what will happen: I have a plant in my riding in Alexandria, Ontario, by the name of Alexandria Moulding. It makes all kinds of fine wooden moulding similar to some of the ones here in this House and elsewhere. Alexandria Moulding employs over 200 people. The plant was in the middle of a $15 million expansion program. Everything is stopped right now until the company can get some clarification as to whether or not there will be a rail line servicing the industry. That is only one industry in my riding. The agricultural community in the constituency that I represent—

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the farmers of my constituency have suffered from the failure this Government to help them and to lobby on the American Farm Bill, because of which Canadian farmers, faced with ridiculously low prices because of the negligence of this Government in its relations with the Unisted States, will lose access to the rail services which they have been using to transport the corn from our region to the Maritimes. What will happen to our industries? What will happen to the farming community in my constituency? Mr. Speaker, those issues worry me. Moreover, at our meeting, the CN representatives admitted that those measures were aimed at accommodating the new climate created by the deregulation brought about by the Conservative Government.

[English]

The other thing that worries me is this whole business of the intermodal system. It means rail traffic is put on the highway. The same plan I have here from CN Rail talks about the fact that west of the City of Ottawa CN will shut down what is known as the Beachburg subdivision in the riding of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins). That means that all the trucks going north to service the pulp and paper industry will be going down the highway. The highway is also subsidized, like the rail line. It is paid for by our tax dollars. Highways will be ruined. Provincial taxes are paying to maintain those roads. And what about the increase in accidents and everything else resulting from shifting rail traffic to the highways?

The Government had better think again about what it is doing. What I see it doing to the constituency that I represent is not right, it is not fair, and I know I am not the only one who does not like it. I see the Member for Ottawa—Carleton across the way, and probably the Hon. Member for Stormont—Dundas (Mr. Warner) has views of his own on the issue. We want the Ottawa to Montreal rail line maintained so that we can have it to service the industries and the passengers of the area that I represent.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say in closing that I believe that the Government should review its deregulation policies. It should ensure that the railroads maintain their tracks so that we can continue to have in Canada fair service for both the industrial and the farming communities, especially in the underprivileged areas, some of which can be found as close as 100 kilometers from the National Capital in my own constituency.

[English]

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I had no intention earlier today to rise to speak on Bill C-18. What bothers me is that the Bill and the policies behind it have been studied to death. They have been before the Standing Committee on Transport on two occasions. The committee has travelled across the entire country.

Mr. Boudria: No.

Mr. Blenkarn: It did a trip through the North. It has made recommendations and gone over the whole philosophy behind Freedom to Move.

Mr. Boudria: The committee went to three Canadian provinces.

Mr. Blenkarn: The policy was discussed in the last Parliament. It has been discussed since this Parliament commenced, and now we wind up with more debate and a resolution suggesting that it go back to the committee again. This is absolutely ridiculous. It is an indication that the opposition mentality of the two Parties that form a corner of the House is one opposed to change. They are stuck in the mud. They say: "Please don't deregulate anything. Please don't change anything. My goodness gracious, let us leave Canada where it was in 1950 or 1940. If we had a railway then, let us keep the same railway. Let us not change anything". I am surprised they allowed longer railway cars and bigger transport trucks. With their mentality, I am surprised that they would even fly on a jet airplane.

• (1630)

The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) said that there can be foreign intervention in a company worth under $5 million. My goodness gracious, that would not even be a down payment on a decent sized airplane. What kind of nonsense is that?

Mr. Boudria: What about the trucking business?

Mr. Blenkarn: Yes, a few trucks can be purchased for that amount, I suppose. Here he is all worried about the trucking business, yet he is saying that this business of PCV licences and preventing a man from buying a truck and carrying freight from one place to another on his own without some provision from some big bureaucrat and some board of transport must stay in place. Opposition Members say: "Let's keep monopolies and make sure that the little guy has not got a chance but only the guys who can afford to buy PCV licences".

Before I came to this place, I can recall appearing before the Highway Transport Board fighting for little guys who had all sorts of letters from people who wanted to use their services. These little guys were trying to prove public necessity and convenience. All the big boys were there with 10, 12 or 14 lawyers at a time. If they did not bankrupt the little guys with legal fees, they destroyed them with one argument after another, proving that it would be against the public interest and convenience to grant these applications. This must stop. The situation has been the same with respect to highway transport, air transport and every form of movement in Canada.

Members of the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party want to preserve the status quo. They do not believe in change, development or anything new. They believe that letting the new guy on the block get into business is wrong. That is the kind of philosophy that Canadians have surely refused.

We are told that intermodal transportation is bad. We are told that using the highways is somehow wrong and that the highways are subsidized by the public. Yes, they are subsidized. They are subsidized by the public paying enormous taxes on gasoline and diesel fuel.

In the Province of Ontario, it was at one time the fuel taxes that built the roads. It is now the fuel taxes that pay for everything else as well. Not only are fuel taxes more than suffficient to cover all of the road maintenance required but they even supply money for hospitals and goodness knows what else including legislators and legislative assistants. Yet the Opposition has the nerve to suggest that the highways are not self-supporting. You and I, Sir, know that right across Canada, the highways are self-supporting because of the taxes charged against those who drive on them. We ought to realize that if the highways are a better method by which goods can be moved from one place to another, they should be used.

The philosophy of this Bill is a philosophy that tells a shipper to do it the way he wants to do it. It tells him that if he can ship it by road cheaper, he should ship it by road; if he can ship it by rail cheaper, he should ship it by rail; and if he can ship it by air cheaper, he should ship it by air. If that guy will not do it for him, he should get someone else to do it. What is wrong with that? What is wrong with giving people freedom? Is there something wrong with freedom that would cause members of the New Democratic Party to say: "No, no, don't give us freedom", or that would cause that great Liberal Party to say: "Freedom is not for us, freedom is for civil servants only"?

Members of the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party are demanding the status quo. They want us to make sure we preserve branch lines that do not work. They are saying: "Make sure that if it went by one trucking company 20 years ago, the same trucking company maintains the monopoly; make sure that if it went by one airline once, that same airline will forever maintain the monopoly". It is a policy of status quo and monopolies. It is a policy of protecting vested interests.

What are those vested interests? We know that the vested interest of the Liberal Party is big business. Only big business contributes to the Liberal Party. Let us talk about the vested interest of the New Democratic Party. As we all know, the New Democratic Party is supported by donations and contributions, forced or otherwise, from the unions that look after the rights of workers working for established companies. The unions do not want any competition. If a new guy on the block comes along and says that he can do it cheaper, that might mean that some of the union members will have to work for the new guy who has not yet been certified. That might mean that the unions might receive fewer contributions. Is that not too bad?

Canadians should be frozen in ice because of the attitude of the New Democratic Party. Where is the "new", where is the "democratic"? Where is the freedom? How is the little guy being protected?

Sir, you and I both know that the New Democratic Party has not had a new idea since 1935. In this particular case, it is doing what it can to prevent the development of this country and to make it more expensive for people to ship coal, potash or lumber. Every time goods are made more expensive, the person buying those goods must pay more for them, or perhaps not even buy them at all. That means that people are put out of work and workers cannot get raises. That means that Canada is not as wealthy as it should be. Members of the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party, through this filibuster, are rising to ensure that Canada is not as prosperous as it could be.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few brief comments on this Bill and I would also like to take issue with some of the drivel, amusing though it was, of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). We should have him here more often to provide a little comic relief. At least he breaks away from the routine speeches prepared by the Tory caucus research branch. On financial matters, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South has occasionally shown some spirit of independence. We certainly did not see that this afternoon while he was speaking on transportation matters.

The Hon. Member first ignored something which he should know since he has been around this place long enough, and that is, that regulatory reform as opposed to deregulation—and there is a difference—in the transportation industry was begun by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), when he was the Minister of Transport.

• (1640)

The Hon. Member talks about new ideas with the notion of making our national transportation system more efficient. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry had already embarked on that course of action and undertaken a reform package when he was rudely interrupted in 1984. However, with what we have seen to date from the Government, undoubtedly we will in due course have the opportunity, the challenge and the responsibility of finishing the job we began in 1984 of bringing a more rational and up-to-date transportation policy to this country. Therefore, when the Hon. Member across the way accuses us on this side of the House of not being prepared to move from the status quo, he is patently abusing his own memory as well as those of us who were here at the time, including you, Mr. Speaker.

We began this exercise but we did it in a sensible, measured way. We began by recognizing that there are a lot of good things in our national transportation system. We began by recognizing that massive deregulation of the kind contemplated in this Bill is not necessarily in the interests of the transportation sector, its users, employees, the regions or the domestic economy.

I have noted that when the Government presents its argument it speaks of course to the benefits of deregulation such as efficiency, profitability and so on. However, one thing we have learned over many years, which the Government has not yet learned, is that every single government program of any kind has costs and benefits. There is an asset side to the balance sheet and a liability side. It is the duty of the Government not simply to promote the benefits of a particular kind of program but to analyse carefully the costs to those adversely affected by a particular program and address that issue in its legislation. Yet the Government has repeatedly failed to do that since it assumed power in 1984, and here we have another obvious example.

A regulatory reform package, or deregulatory reform package, is like any other program. There are sectors and individuals and regions who may benefit and those who may suffer. All the speakers I have heard from the government side have talked about the benefits of the Bill, and only the speakers on this side of the House have said, "Sure, but there are costs and issues which are not being addressed". I am disappointed when my friend, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, for whom I have great respect on some matters, stands up and spouts a lot of drivel about freedom and freedom to move and so on. He knows better than anyone else that a tax program, or any other program for that matter, has costs and benefits. He is the first one in committee to sort them out, but not here. Here he is toeing the Party line.

There are some old sayings that our friends on the other side of the House should pay attention to, some old adages like look before you leap. Another one with which we are all familiar is: do not throw out the baby with the bath water. It seems to me that this Act we have in front of us, this voluminous effort at deregulation, underlines the wisdom of those wise sayings which have been developed over many centuries.

In some respects I suppose one might say that this Bill speaks quite eloquently to the very fundamental difference between a Conservative and a Liberal Government. As I said at the outset, we favoured regulatory reform, and I speak with some knowledge because I had responsibility for regulatory reform. However, we were not speaking of deregulation; we were speaking of better regulation. Sometimes that means a decrease in regulation, sometimes it can even mean an increase in regulation, especially when it deals with the safety and health of the public. However, the Hon. Member seems to suggest that a regulation is some kind of evil. I say to him that if he thinks that, he should never be in Government because it is the Government's duty and obligation to bring forward sensible regulation where the costs and benefits to the various sectors of society have been properly analysed. That is the Liberal approach, but not the Conservative approach. All we hear is freedom and deregulation. That would be like throwing out all the quotas on how many fish you can take out of the lakes. I am sure the Hon. Member would not support that kind of legislation, but that is the way he talks. Everybody should be free, the common property should be there for everyone. If all the fish are gone and all the deer destroyed, so what. That is freedom. Those sectors have to be regulated, and they are, and that is what his job and the job of his Government is.

It is terribly important in this sector that we not get carried away with this ideological thrust and forget that pragmatic common sense must underline this legislation as it does all other legislation. It again reminds me a little bit of the ideological thrust toward privatization. Sure, we had a privatization approach as well. It was a difficult period to privatize companies, but there was no ideology saying, "do not privatize".

Mr. Kilgour: You just did not do anything.

Mr. Johnston: That happens to be wrong and I can prove it to the Hon. Member but, that being said, we did not privatize for ideological reasons, or intended to privatize, I should say, in most cases—

Mr. Blenkarn: What did you ever privatize?

Mr. Johnston: Yet here we have this thrust to privatize at any cost. Some Crown corporations work well and some do not. However, the issue of deregulation is not one of ideology, it is a pragmatic, common sense approach.

I will just make a few other points because you seem to be indicating my time will soon expire, Mr. Speaker. What we have in this Bill is an ideological leaping before you look, leaping, I suggest, into a swamp of alligators for many sectors of the economy, and that gives me great concern. Let me just give you a few examples. There is no question that this will create an integrated free trade zone and save trucking costs both north and south of the border. One thing I cannot understand—and it has nothing to do with the merits or demerits of negotiating a free trade agreement—is why we, along with FIRA, the NEP and everything else, would simply give this away and not make it part of the free trade negotiations if they are going to be carried on. It is a mystery to me. Of course, the whole conduct of the free trade negotiations is shrouded in mystery, and hopefully some day we may learn that they are not as incompetent as they appear to be. However, this seems to me to be just bungling along, once more giving away unnecessarily a chip which could be used to much greater advantage.

If we are going to try to integrate the transportation structures of Canada and the U.S. what about the level playing field? The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has now deferred his tax reform Bill. How on earth can you talk about putting these kinds of measures in effect without knowing what the tax regime is going to be north and south of the border?

You are looking somewhat impatient, Mr. Speaker. I thought I had 30 seconds to go. In any event, I want to make one specific point. As we know, the United States carriers have a major depreciation advantage on heavy equipment. They can write the equipment off over three years, whereas we are looking at seven or eight years. Will that change?

What will be the income of the business transfer tax on Canadian carriers as opposed to that of the Americans? I suggest the Government is moving with undue haste, without having prepared the ground work or knowing where it is going. That is why I find the notion of deregulation particularly offensive. The Government wants to move full speed ahead, damn the torpedoes. There are many torpedoes out there and they will start hitting our fleet soon.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I was intrigued by the comments of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). I suggest they typify the Government's philosophy and objectives. One would have thought that the conservative revolution in North America has reached its end and is beginning to decline. However, when one considers this legislation and the comments made by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South and other Conservative Members, one finds that that ideology is certainly strong in their hearts.

Canadian public opinion and public opinion elsewhere in the world has moved beyond these philosophies, and it is not surprising to see the Government so low in the polls as it continues to hold on to these philosophies which, as Canadians are beginning to realize, are outdated.

It is obvious from listening to the Hon. Member for Mississauga South that he is a typical free enterpriser from the old school, before there were laws controlling pollution, child labour or industry in any way at all. He, like other Conservative Members, is advocating an uninhibited free enterprise environment where anything goes. They believe in ignoring public interest and allowing our transportation system to operate in any way that makes a profit or helps to achieve a profit. The Hon. Member says "correct".

Of course, when considering the Hon. Member's ideology, one must also consider that he comes from the Toronto area where he will not face problems in a deregulated regime. The airlines will not be after his business and he will always have the benefit of seat sales and so on.

However, the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) knows that people from Weyburn, Saskatchewan and other areas in his riding will have greater difficulty in getting the benefit of seat sales because Regina is not as important. While we had difficulties in getting seat sales in Regina in the past, we were able to get some concessions from the major airlines because we live in a deregulated environment in which airlines are supposed to treat Canadians equally, whether they live in a small city like Regina or a larger city like Toronto.

The Hon. Member for Mississauga South does not like that and would rather see people in Toronto, Montreal and other major centres receive all the benefits, while people from smaller cities like Saskatoon and Regina receive no benefits whatsoever. I am surprised that the Member for Assiniboia would even agree with this legislation. He is certainly not acting in the best interests of his constituents and the people surrounding Regina and other smaller cities in Saskatchewan.

It does not make sense that the Government would put forward legislation that would deregulate transportation in this country and allow a dog-eat-dog environment to prevail. Canada has been united despite its vast geography and immense difference in terrain. Our population is scattered, with small communities throughout the country and larger concentrations of population in larger centres. There has been a commitment in Canada, whether there has been a Conservative or a Liberal Government in Ottawa, to provide equality in the treatment of Canadians from coast to coast. Whether Canadians live in smaller or larger communities, they will have the same benefits. However, that will certainly be changed as a result of this Bill.

This Bill also raises the question of variable rates, which is another reflection of the Conservative Government philosophy. The railways want variable rates because it would give them the opportunity to offer lower rates to certain communities and charge higher rates in other regions. Of course, that would encourage trucking because it is cheaper to the railways if farmers truck their grains from the mills to central points which the railways service. Grain farmers in the West will know the consequences of variable rates. Hundreds of miles of rural rail lines will be abandoned, which will mean the end of many smaller towns. It will mean the concentration of resources and facilities in a handful of communities throughout the western prairie region.

Those of us who believe that our country must consist of widespread viable smaller communities have consistently opposed the notion of variable rates. This legislation would allow variable rates in trucking, rail, and air transportation. That is why we cannot agree with it. Our Party agrees that many of the regulations that exist today are outmoded and should be changed through an ongoing process, but the basic philosophy of cross-subsidization should remain in place. Those routes that are profitable, whether in rail, trucking or air transportation, should subsidize and support those routes that are not so profitable. That is how all Canadians can benefit from a modern, efficient transportation system to which all can have access. We do not believe there should be first and second class citizens in this country. Therefore, my colleagues and I are opposed to this legislation.

I am also concerned about safety. I believe I have one minute remaining, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I believe the Hon. Member's time has expired.

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, in the last few days and weeks we have talked about this Bill at length. We well realize that there is a question of representation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to inform the Hon. Member that it is five o'clock. It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--MOTIONS

[English]

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

SUGGESTED STUDY BY STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough) moved:

That the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General be empowered to study and report on the arguments for and against capital punishment giving consideration to allowing the question of capital punishment to come to a free vote in the House.

He said: Mr. Speaker, to get right to the point, I should say that this is not one of my Bills to reinstate capital punishment for planned and deliberate premeditated acts of murder. It is a motion, which I call upon Parliament to endorse, which would allow a special standing committee of this House, namely, the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General, to review the pros and cons of capital punishment and then to bring that report forward to Parliament so that every Member of Parliament, regardless of political faith, would have an opportunity to hear the most up to date information available on both sides of this very controversial issue.

There is no question in my mind that we who support a return to capital punishment have a responsibility to those who do not. These people have been asking for an opportunity to come before a committee of Parliament in order to express their views. Organizations such as the United Council of Churches, the Catholic organizations, the John Howard Society, all those persons who in conscience feel that capital punishment is wrong, would like an opportunity to explain to the elected representatives why they feel that way. If this House denies the right of this motion to be passed, it will deny the right of those abolitionists to be heard.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Domm: I know it is not a conscience issue with the New Democratic Party. It does not have a conscience about capital punishment. Those Hon. Members vote as a Party against capital punishment because they have no freedom of choice. I am talking to the Liberals and the Conservatives now who treat this matter as a free vote, not to the socialists. I am not speaking to the New Democratic Party which knows what is best for Canada regardless of what the Canadian people want. It votes for abolition.

Mr. Riis: What about the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) of Canada?

Mr. Domm: The Prime Minister of Canada—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): What about your Cabinet?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please.

Mr. Domm: I know this is a touchy issue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Yes, and I know it is a touchy issue, but I hope Hon. Members, knowing this is Private Members' Business, will all please let us have a really fine Monday afternoon.

Mr. Domm: I have 10 minutes alloted to me to make my case. There is nothing the New Democratic Party would like better than to make it impossible for me to have my 10 minutes. Those Hon. Members have said in the Committee on Justice and Solicitor General that they will do anything they can to filibuster this issue so it cannot be heard. They are denying those who want abolition the right to appear before a parliamentary committee.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Domm: They are denying these people the right to appear before the Committee on Justice and Solicitor General. Their own Member, who sat on that committee, said it is not a matter of whether the issue is heard or not; it is that he does not wish it to be heard. He does not want to do anything. He wants to shove it under the desk. That is not a democratic system of government.

What we are dealing with today is the question of having the opportunity, if this motion passes, to hear both sides of the issue, both the noisy so called abolitionists over there, and the rest of us. But the New Democratic Party is denying the Canadian people the opportunity to put forward their views before a parliamentary committee because it fully intends to do everything within its power, not only to filibuster a return to capital punishment, because it is the Party's position, but to filibuster the rights of the abolitionists to be heard before a committee of Parliament in order that a decision be made about the pros and cons of the issue.

I have taken up five minutes, and the New Democratic Party has taken up two of those five minutes with their raucous noise. In the remaining five minutes, I would like to document statistics. Neither the Liberals nor the New Democrats have any idea about what is going on with statistics today. I am going to use the most recent report of The Canadian Centre for Justice Statistics here in Ottawa, which was published on January 1. The Liberals denied to the Canadian people all through their terms in office the right to know what is happening in first degree homicides in Canada. I refer to the report put out by Statistics Canada last week which compares Canada with the United States. I would like to draw your attention to the highlights of this report.

Some Hon. Members: Go ahead.

Mr. Nystrom: Read it.

Mr. Domm: If those Hon. Members will be quiet for a moment. If we take the trend, the graph, of first degree homicide in Canada since we abolished capital punishment, we will find that the homicide rate has gone up every year on first degree planned and deliberate murder, and gone down on second degree. In the United States, as compared to Canada, it is just the opposite. Through the Justice Department in the United States, reports have been printed of the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the U.S. Department of Justice in Washington, D.C., which take the same period during which abolitionists maintain that violent crime and murder were on the increase. The truth of the matter is that every year since 1980 in those states which have capital punishment there has been an annual on-graph decrease in homicide rates. From 1980 through until 1984, according to the Justice Department in the United States, as published by the Canadian report I referred to earlier, the United States has had a decrease in homocide rates on an annual basis all through the 1980s, while Canada has had an increase.

First degree homicides in Canada, which have been published now for the first time in 15 years, have gone up every solitary year since capital punishment was abolished in Canada. In the United States, it has gone down every year since capital punishment was reinstated in 1977, after 10 years of court challenges of that law. To add reinforcement to the other side of the story, we can now prove, without any doubt at all, that the figures used by the abolitionists have been dead wrong.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): How would you bring Marshall back?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. This is Private Members' Business. It is Hon. Members' own business, and I cannot hear the Hon. Member speak.

Mr. Orlikow: He is not worth hearing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would hope you would all give him an opportunity to finish his remarks.

Mr. Domm: I guess that because I am starting to show some evidence of what has happened in the past, and the statistics which have been funnelled out by those Hon. Members over the last seven years are in error, they do not even wish to hear it. They have been quoting StatsCan for 10 years since we abolished capital punishment and they have fudged and misled the Canadian people.

Ms. Copps: You have.

Mr. Gauthier: You have.

Mr. Domm: We now have the facts from StatsCan. StatsCan claims that when first degree and second degree homicides are broken down, there is a remarkable increase. This will give, without any element of doubt, some satisfaction to those who argue it could possibly be a deterrent. It does not deter every homicide, but there is a possibility that it deters some. If we go back to the 10 years prior to 1977—from 1966 to 1977 when the United States executed no one because of court challenges—we find during that period that homicides in the United States, not in isolation but on graph, went up 38 per cent. Those figures are from the American Justice Department. If we consider the period of time in which capital punishment was brought back in 1977 through 1985 when there were executions in the United States, we find that, on graph, there was a 23 per cent decrease nationally in homicides. The figures cannot be denied. They are there. They are not debatable. They are fact. But they are whole facts rather than the parts of facts that we have been getting for 10 years.

• (1710)

In conclusion, not only is there new evidence which needs to be heard, but Members opposite can no longer continue to filibuster the right to be heard, the right that these organizations which want to be heard have.

Members opposite are not speaking for the abolitionists when they say that they do not want to be heard. The Catholic Council of Churches has just raised $50,000 in order that it can be heard, because Parliament slammed the door. Members opposite have that on their conscience. As our homicide rate goes up, as the rate of first degree crimes go up and as innocent people, bystanders, shop owners, bank tellers and policemen, are murdered on the streets, Members opposite will have this to carry on their consciences. They cannot look across here and blame us because we can show that it has a deterrent effect.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon we are not talking about first degree and second degree murder. We are talking about first degree hypocrisy on behalf of the Government. In my view, the reason the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) has brought this motion before the House is that he does not believe the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). The Prime Minister made a commitment during the last election campaign—and Members opposite know where I stand—on the issue of capital punishment. However, the Prime Minister, with whom I happen to agree on the issue of capital punishment, made a promise during the last election campaign that there would be a free vote in the House of Commons on the issue.

Here we are about two and a half years after that particular promise was made and we have yet to vote on the subject of capital punishment. I can understand the frustrations felt by the Hon. Member for Peterborough. If he had faith and trust in his boss, the Prime Minister of Canada, he would not be here this afternoon asking the House of Commons to pass a motion to have the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General consider the issue of capital punishment. If he believed the Prime Minister, then he would have patience. He would wait for the Prime Minister to fulfil his promise to have a vote here in the House of Commons.

We on this side of the House understand the frustrations of the Hon. Member, his frustration with the Prime Minister for not keeping his promises. I say to the Hon. Member: "Welcome aboard. We know how you feel because the Prime Minister has made many promises which he has not kept over the last two and a half years". As I look across the great divide here in the House I know that many, many members of the Conservative Party are beginning to lose trust and faith in their own Prime Minister.

Mr. Lewis: Name one.

Mr. Nunziata: We know that Canadians from coast to coast have lost trust and faith in the Prime Minister of Canada. Is it any wonder that he now leads the third Party in the House of Commons?

Enough about the Prime Minister and his promises. If we wait until the Prime Minister keeps his promises, I will be completely bald and you, Mr. Speaker, will be completely gray.

The motion of the Hon. Member for Peterborough reads as follows:

That the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General be empowered to study and report on the arguments for and against capital punishment giving consideration to allowing the question of capital punishment to come to a free vote in the House.

The Hon. Member is an experienced Member of this place. He has been here for a number of years. Far be it for me to educate the Hon. Member with regard to the rules of the House. However, we do not have to empower the committee to study capital punishment. The committee can do so on its own. We do not need the House of Commons to say to members of the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General: "We hereby instruct each and every one of you to study capital punishment". He knows that the committee can undertake such a study on its own.

We must commend the Hon. Member for his commitment to his cause—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): His obsession!

Mr. Nunziata: I suppose at times one could accuse the Hon. Member of being a fanatic about his cause. He is certainly irrational about his cause, as his 10-minute dissertation this afternoon illustrated.

The Hon. Member appeared before the committee. As a member of the Committee on Justice and Solicitor General I listened carefully to what the Hon. Member had to say. Yes, all members of the committee listened to the Hon. Member. The committee is presently in the process of considering whether or not to initiate a discussion, a debate or a study on the issue of capital punishment. The Hon. Member does not have patience, because the committee has yet to decide on this issue.

In his motion he states that the committee should give consideration to allowing the question of capital punishment to come to a free vote in the House. Once again I tell the Hon. Member that I am not here to educate him. But let me remind him that the Prime Minister has already made that promise. So why should the House of Commons be put in the position of having to tell the committee to keep the Prime Minister's promise? It does not make any sense at all.

We are not here this afternoon to study the pros and cons of capital punishment. The Hon. Member knows that. He knows that we are here to discuss his motion. Yet he proceeded to talk about the merits of capital punishment. This is not the time to talk about the merits of capital punishment, whether or not it is a deterrent and whether the homicide rate has increased or decreased since 1976. If the Prime Minister keeps his promise, there will be an opportunity to discuss this matter fully in a reasonable and responsible fashion so that parties on both sides of the subject matter can have an opportunity to air their views.

In my respectful submission, and in conclusion, I say that we know that there are Members of Parliament who have their own causes which they pursue. I say to the Hon. Member that he does an injustice to his own cause by using it to grandstand, to get on a soap-box to talk about capital punishment. What we need is a reasoned debate on the subject. We do not need the Hon. Member for Peterborough to stand high on his horse ranting and raving like a lunatic on the question of capital punishment.

Some Hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Nunziata: In closing, I urge Hon. Members who have some understanding of the processes of the House and who have some concern about this issue to vote the motion down, thus giving the Prime Minister the opportunity to fulfil his promise. I for one will be voting against the reinstatement of capital punishment in Canada. However, I will make my complete submissions when the opportunity presents itself in the House, presumably over the course of this Parliament.

• (1720)

In the meantime, I suggest to the Hon. Member opposite, and all the rest of the Members of his hanging committee, to be patient and to put some trust and faith in their own Prime Minister. I know that it is hard, given his propensity to stretch the truth, given his propensity not to honour each and every commandment, but a time will come for us to vote on the issue in the House.

I would like to thank you, Mr. Speaker, for agreeing with me on this particular subject.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, 11 years ago this House went through one of the most divisive and emotional debates on the subject of capital punishment. What we have seen today from the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) is an attempt to place front and centre on the parliamentary agenda that question which was clearly decided 11 years ago.

I understand the frustration, the anger, and the despair of the Hon. Member in that his own colleagues, in particular the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), have not perhaps moved as quickly on this important question as the Hon. Member for Peterborough would have liked. Surely what we must ask ourselves as a House is, has there been evidence since 1976, since the House took the step of abolishing capital punishment, to suggest that in any way the decision that was made at that time was wrong? I suggest that the answer to that question is very clearly no, that in 1976 the House made the only possible decision on that fundamental question.

The House is not alone in being asked to consider the issue of capital punishment. In 1983, the United Kingdom Parliament was asked to reconsider the decision that was made on the question of capital punishment. The United Kingdom Parliament, dominated by Conservative Members of Parliament, headed by a Prime Minister who strongly supported capital punishment, overwhelmingly voted down the suggestion that capital punishment be reinstated in the United Kingdom.

I wish to quote from Jim McGrath on this issue. He now is serving with distinction as the Lieutenant-Governor of Newfoundland. Last year he said this:

> —does Canada, with its new and enlightened Constitution, want to turn back the clock on progress and be one of the very few democracies to restore capital punishment? Why stop at capital punishment, why not restore corporal punishment? We have to ask ourselves what this would do to Canadian society and to Canadian jurisprudence. Do we as a nation join South Africa, the U.S.S.R., China, and the State of Alabama in imposing the death penalty on its citizens?

That is the question that Jim McGrath asked in 1986. That is the question that we, as Members of Parliament, must address today.

The Hon. Member for Peterborough made some remarks about deterrents, and talked about statistics. We do not have the time to look at the statistics. There are a couple of remarks that I wish to make about deterrents.

It is interesting to note that the President of the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police, Chief Robert Lunney of the Edmonton Police Department, has said this, and I quote: "It is futile to base an argument on reinstatement of capital punishment on the grounds of deterrence". It is also interesting to note that the largest number of deaths of police officers in Canada occurred in 1962, the last year that human beings were executed in Canada.

I mentioned the U.S.S.R. and the fact that the Soviet Union still has the death penalty. It is interesting to quote from an individual who is respected worldwide on this question, and that is Andrei Sakharov, who said:

> I regard the death penalty as a savage and immoral institution that undermines the moral and legal foundations of a society. I reject the notion that the death penalty has any essential deterrent effect on potential offenders. I am convinced that the contrary is true—that savagery begets only savagery.

That, Mr. Speaker, was said by Andrei Sakharov.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Robinson: Let us listen to some of the victims of crime and their families. One of the most powerful statements that was made in 1976 during the debate on capital punishment was by Pauline Maitland, the widow of a police officer who was slain in Toronto, when she said:

> I learned—that the man who killed my husband, P.C. Leslie Maitland, last February 1st, has now been sentenced to death. I would like you to know that the views of myself and my husband's family on capital punishment remain unchanged. We are totally against it. It would not bring Leslie back and it is too easy a way out for all of us. Society condemns murder, but is willing to accept the murder of this man in the name of justice. Please do what you can to prevent this second crime before it is too late. The killing of this man would be completely foreign to all the moral standards of both my late husband and myself.

As my colleague for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) says, then there is Donald Marshall, who served 11 years in prison for a murder that he did not commit. I ask each and every Member of this House, would you be prepared to stand and explain to the family of a man or a woman who was murdered by mistake that we are sorry, an error was made, but we cannot reverse that error?

Mistakes have been made. I have a copy here of a newspaper article with the headline, "Innocent Man to Go Free". This man was cleared of killings after nine years. If we were to reinstate capital punishment in this country, innocent men would not go free, because they would have been sent to their deaths.

The Hon. Member for Peterborough has said that we are not giving the abolitionists a forum. They have raised $50,000 because they wish to speak on capital punishment. I wish to say to the Hon. Member for Peterborough that it is not they who have chosen to speak on capital punishment. It is not the Church Councils that have put capital punishment on the political agenda. It is he and his fellow killers, and they are only responding to a lust for blood and revenge. They have not chosen to spend their money on this important issue; far be it from them to put this on the political agenda. No, Mr. Speaker. Those groups in Canada, including the Anglican Church of Canada, the Baptist Convention of Ontario and Quebec, the Lutheran Church in Canada, the Mennonite Central Committee, and the Pope himself who has spoken out strongly against capital punishment, believe that rather than talking about revenge and lust for blood, we should be talking about preventing violent crime and not contributing to more deaths in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Robinson: The arguments against capital punishment are clear and compelling. We must look at the prevention of violent crime. We must look at the whole question of gun control in our society. We must look at far more effective programs for dealing with young offenders, for pro-active rather than reactive police work, and better trained, better deployed, and better equipped police forces. We must look at profound changes to our prison system. We must work in our communities with organizations such as churches, schools, the labour movement, and others to prevent violent crime.

All of us in the Chamber share the concern for the protection of society. In closing, I wish to quote an editorial from The Globe and Mail on this subject, which I think very eloquently sets out the concern which I and my colleagues have on this issue. It reads:

> It is easy, to the cynical temptingly easy, at time of anxiety and uncertainty over jobs, over the dwindling value of the savings of a lifetime, over Canada's capacity to hold together, to whip up an emotional firestorm that exploits the dark side of the human psyche. This instinct to try to exorcise doubt and fear through the clenched fist, to seek shelter from the unknown in the embrace of a punitive authoritarianism, is as powerful as the urge that sends the lemmings stampeding to self-destruction. And we exploit it at our peril.

• (1730)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before recognizing the Parliamentary Secretary, I see the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) in the Chamber. I would just like to remind him not to involve the Chair in the debate, whether it is Private Members' Business or whatever.

I noticed that in his last sentence, as I was paying attention to the other side, he brought the Chair into the debate. I hope he will not involve himself in that process any more.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to enter into the debate on the motion. My remarks will not be directed strictly to the substance of the motion but rather to the process, because I submit that in any debate about capital punishment the process by which the debate proceeds is vital to a full and fair resolution of the issue.

I respect the views of those who propose and those who oppose this motion and this measure. I also respect their right to speak and represent not only their views but the views of their constituents.

In this matter we must address the following questions. When should the debate take place? Who should participate in the debate? Where should the debate take place—in the House of Commons, in a parliamentary committee such as the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General, or a special committee? Also, should that committee travel?

I suggest that we should look at what the House should debate—a specific motion such as the one the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) brought forward, or a motion which, if successful, would set forth a plan of action to draft a specific Bill? As Members of Parliament we have a responsibility to address process just as seriously as we address substance in this particular matter.

During the last election campaign the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised that a Progressive Conservative Government would allow a free vote on the question of capital punishment. That free vote will be held. However, the first question is when. On September 4, 1984, Canada was beset by economic and social problems. Our Government took action on many fronts. We concentrated first upon Canada's economic problems. Interest rates are down. A Canadian can go out and obtain a mortgage at the lowest rate in years as a result of our action. Unemployment is down. It is not where we want it, but it is down. Investor and consumer confidence are up, to name a few economic indicators. There are still regional disparities, but our solutions are working and we are recovering from the recession.

On the social front, we took tough action on the problems of impaired driving, prostitution, and pornography. I suggest that that was the business the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General should have considered first. The Divorce Act has been revised to bring about realistic and thoughtful solutions to the problems of the eighties. Indian women have regained their rights. We have made significant progress on social issues.

Much has been made about the Government's promises. No Government can possibly be expected to complete action on all its promises and commitments on the first day of its mandate. We have not kept them all but our record is remarkable and responsible.

It would have been irresponsible to launch a full scale debate on the issue of capital punishment before we addressed the major economic and social problems of the day. Progress has been such that we are now in a position to proceed in an orderly fashion to consider the issue of capital punishment. I reiterate that a subject as important as capital punishment deserves a full and fair debate in a democratic society.

My colleague has brought forward his motion. He has other Bills on the Order Paper. No matter where one stands with him on the issue, he is fairly behind a full discussion of the matter. No matter where one stands, whether one is with him or against him, he has never denied the right of anybody to debate the subject.

The question remains: How do we do it? If the question is simply that the House resolves that capital punishment should be reinstituted in Canada and the question fails to pass on a free vote, the matter is resolved. There is no question that the matter is resolved. However, if the question is resolved in the affirmative, what is the next step? I have always said that the debate must be framed so that if the House votes to reinstitute capital punishment we have an orderly process to determine how the specific question is to be answered.

The Government has been considering an appropriate process for some time. The issue for process is not taken lightly by those who favour it on both sides of the House and by those who oppose it on both sides of the House. In the very near future I am sure we will see a proposal for an orderly debate on this important issue.

Every Member of the House, no matter what is his or her position on the issue, owes it to society to debate the issue on as high a level as possible. I suggest that this debate will be the ultimate test of every Member of the House. There will be some Members who will be in the fortunate position where their personal views and the views of their constituents will coincide. There will be others in a position of conflict, and their views will be at odds with those of their constituents. That is a tough position. We all know that as elected representatives.

I take no pleasure at finding my colleagues on all sides of the House in that difficult position, but that is what we are sent here to do. I suggest to Hon. Members of the House that we owe it to each other to be both passionate and dispassionate in this debate; passionate as the Members who have spoken before me have been in their personal views, and dispassionate as we consider the views of others.

This debate will be a great test. It will touch every Canadian—the innocent and the guilty, the judge and the jury, and the Crown and the defence. We will be judged as much by the way in which we reach the decision as on the decision itself. Let us all push ourselves to the limit to be worthy of the right to make that decision and to do it in as calm and as thoughtful a manner as possible.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) with considerable interest. I want to talk about his remarks. His concluding hope was that the type of inquiry implied by the resolution before us would be a dispassionate one, if that is what he is hoping for. I must tell him from my own experience of having debated the subject for a considerable number of times over the years it has been considered and reconsidered by the House that it is a pretty naive hope.

What I visualize and what I would expect this kind of hearing to be, travelling across the country, would be a gathering in each community of people who support capital punishment strongly. Many of them would have victims in their families or might themselves be victims of serious crimes. They would come forward and make their case. The other side, I regret to say, would be for a considerable part no less compassionate and motivated by their own life experiences. I do not mean to regret that; that is just part of human nature. It is part of the human condition to consider a life or death question in very passionate terms.

If the Hon. Member is hoping for a debate free from emotion and free from passion, I have to tell him that he is barking up the wrong tree with this kind of a study. I oppose this resolution. I believe most members of my own Party oppose it. We do not think that this is the time in which the issue of capital punishment should be debated to the extent of animating the passions and feelings of the entire country with a travelling road show of the sort to which this would inevitably give rise.

When the resolution was brought forward on behalf of the Hon. Member in the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General, I was there to vote against it, but opposition Members were not successful in bringing the resolution to a conclusion in the time allocated for its discussion in the committee. That has to make me really wonder what it is the Government has up its sleeve, or if it even knows what it has up its sleeve.

The Hon. Member for Simcoe North set out a list of questions that the capital punishment debate should cover, questions that we should deal with when it is to take place, such as who is to put it into place, whether committees are to be involved in it, what the resolution is to be, what the amendment to the Criminal Code eventually, if it goes that far, is to be. I have to tell the Hon. Member that those are questions the Government should be answering not asking. The Government should not be coming to the House asking us to answer those questions. The Government has made many promises to the Canadian people which have not been kept and, in many cases, phoney excuses have been put forward to justify the breaking of them. For example, "The deficit is higher than we thought; and we cannot keep this promise". I think of the tragic betrayal of the Armenian people of Canada. The Government made one promise during the election campaign and then the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) had the gall to stand before the Armenian community and say that the Tories did not realize when they made the promise, what was involved in keeping it—another promise the Government made and did not keep. Other promises have been backed away from because vested interests have been too tough for the Government to take on. The Tories made a promise that lobbyists would be required to register, that legislation would be brought in. They made a promise that there would be conflict of interest guidelines enforced on Ministers. They made a promise that there would be tighter security of staff working in Ministers' offices. That promise was broken with some excuse or another. What is the excuse for leaving this matter to the back-benchers? None of them have stood up and said, "We are here on behalf of the promise made by the Government that there would be a debate".

Each Member who is committed to capital punishment or any of them who are committed to capital punishment are trying in their own minds to work out some scenario in which they can get the support from the House of Commons and can say that this will be the implementation of the promise of the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney). Where is the Prime Minister? What is his promise? What is it that the Prime Minister had in mind when he made the promise that there would be a debate on capital punishment and there would be a free vote on capital punishment? No one on the government side is in a position to stand up and say that the Prime Minister wants this study to occur or that the Prime Minister has in mind that if the motion carries it will be dealt with in such and such a way.

What I think is that a desperate Government has come to the conclusion that capital punishment is a grabber, which it is, regrettably, as far as public opinion is concerned, and that if the capital punishment issue can be stirred up and can animate and engage the interests of the country, there will be a lot less concern with the subject that Members on this side of the House have been raising in the Question Period and that our constituents, when we go back home, and Canadians, when we travel across the country, have been telling us are the issues about which they really care.

Mr. Gustafson: Talk about the economy.

Mr. Kaplan: I think we should be talking about the way the economy is performing, all right, about whether the Government can be trusted, about whether the country approves of the way the Government awards contracts, about 100 other matters that are more central to the concerns of Canadians, instead of those issues being the issues in the next election campaign. I can see a plot to beguile the Canadian people with the question of capital punishment. I think it is totally unworthy of a Government in a democratic society to seek to divert attention from its own performance and its own record to stir up public opinion on a passionate issue which, after all is said and done, when it is implemented, if it is implemented, will make very little difference to the crime rate in Canada.

Many people on this side of the House want to speak, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Personally, I should like to continue and use up entirely my ten minutes, but it is quite possible, if I allow other Hon. Members to rise, that we may have the chance on our side to continue. To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I wish to express my sincere regrets that the Government, again through one of its promises, uses a very emotive issue to try and distract Canadians from the very serious problems for which the Government is responsible.

[English]

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, this is the kind of debate I do not think any of us relish. It is one that I have been through a couple of times before in this place. I want to say at the outset that I respect my colleague, the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) and those who share his views. I fully respect his right to try to bring before Parliament an issue on which he feels very strongly. I must say to my hon. friend that I think he has, to be as nice as I can about it, misused the desires and the wishes of the church groups and other organizations in Canada who oppose capital punishment. I am not aware of any of them demanding hearings at a special committee or the regular committee in order to discuss the viewpoints and the pros and cons of capital punishment. One thing I am aware of is that if they have raised $50,000, probably a lot more than that, they have raised it to fight just in case some Hon. Members want to return us to the 19th century.

I resent that kind of misuse of the motives, the capacities and the practices of all the church groups, the law societies, other organizations and so forth in using their names as some kind of a vehicle to justify the establishment of a special committee or use a regular committee of the House to discuss the pros and cons of capital punishment. I am not that desperate, Mr. Speaker, for any arguments I try to make on various measures in this place, and I sure as heck would not call upon those who disagree with me as evidence to support my case.

It has been said for decades to all Members of this House from all political Parties and on both sides of any issue that crops up that gathered a lot of public attention—and it has been said to us by many people in our respective constituencies—that you have to vote according to the wishes of your constituents. If all of us were to do that, we would be on one side of an issue one year and on the other side of an issue the next. If we were to do that, all of us would be all over the lot all the time on every issue, humming and hawing. To paraphrase Sir Edmund Burke, we owe our constituents our diligence, our best attention to their opinions and our maximum consideration of their views, but we are not their delegates. We are their representatives and we do not owe them our consciences.

While every Hon. Member has a perfect right to raise a matter such as this individually by way of a motion or a Private Member's Bill, it seems to me that if there is a commitment to change our laws by reinstating capital punishment, surely that is something that is a Government's responsibility. It is not up to a private Member. If the Government wants an expression of Parliament's views, it can put forward a resolution respecting the Criminal Code which would come to a vote that would be free for every Member of the House including members of the Government, i.e., the Cabinet. That would happen if the Government means business. If it is only going through the motions and is saying that there will be some kind of a free vote on the matter some way or another between now and the next election, methinks there is a lack of sincerity somewhere.

I can remember a famous Canadian who was once in this House with whom I agreed not too often but whom I always admired, and that was Mr. Diefenbaker. He always opposed the death penalty. I can recall him regaling us many times with stories of his out in the lobby or up in his office on his birthday. He told us that starting back in the early 1920s, he defended many people who were charged with murder about whom he has said: "I will go to my deathbed still convinced of their innocence".

I, like Mr. Diefenbaker and hundreds of thousands of others, would rather see a thousand guilty men remain in jail than take the chance of seeing one innocent person hang. As good as the courts are, even they make mistakes. With all our human frailties, I would rather see a person convicted of first-degree murder spend the next 25 years in jail than take the chance, no matter how remote it may be, of an innocent person hanging. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), has mentioned Donald Marshall as an example. Had capital punishment still existed, Mr. Marshall would be dead now and pardoned later. Surely no civilized society can countenance that kind of a risk.

Mr. Diefenbaker told a story about his great-grandfather who saw a boy hanged in Upper Canada for picking pockets in 1837. The boy was 17 years of age and everyone gathered for the public execution. Mr. Diefenbaker's great-grandfather said that those Scottish people in North York turned up in large numbers and there was a great celebration. During the ceremonies at the execution, four people had their pockets picked. This simply indicates that the argument that the fear of capital punishment will greatly reduce the number of offences is not completely tenable or indeed tenable at all.

I would like to close my remarks by reminding Hon. Members of something we should all remember. Crime rates invariably go up in direct proportion to rates of unemployment and poverty. When, in a country like this, there are one million more people below the poverty line in the last five years, one can find the origins of crime. People are left with no choice and they act out of desperation. How many Canadians without previous records have been convicted of murder, first or second-degree, after holding up a service station or a convenience store—although that is a little risky nowadays—and out of fright, terror and desperation ending up shooting people?

I am not allocating political blame, but am trying to be as non-partisan as possible. When we do something about the ills of society, the things that lead people to crime, when we put people to work so they may live in some kind of dignity and comfort, when people have reasonably equal opportunities in this dog-eat-dog world of ours, I submit that crime rates will go down and the feelings of those who want to reinstate the death penalty will change remarkably.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes remaining, it will be very difficult to put forward the basic principles that emerge in a debate like this. One principle is the question of the deterrence of capital punishment, and the other is the ethics of a state regulating the behaviour of society at any given time.

I will hardly be able to deal with the first point in the limited time available. I would simply say that so far, all studies produced for those who believe that capital punishment is a deterrent have failed to give that assurance by demonstrating that capital punishment is the answer that will ensure that crime is reduced and society is safer as a result of the imposition of such a measure.

In the United States, capital punishment has been introduced in some states. All studies done there point to the fact that society suffers from the same or perhaps even a greater rate of crime and murders, regardless of whether or not a particular state has introduced the measure of capital punishment.

The question that brings me into this debate is whether or not it is ethical for any state which has been given the responsibility by society to govern to introduce capital punishment and in that manner to reply to a murder in the cold-blooded way of taking another life. The question is whether or not such behaviour on the part of a state is ethical. I would be happy if time permitted me to go into this in greater length, but I would submit that it is definitely not ethical for a state to adopt that method of dealing with murder in a civilized society. I would call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 42(1), the order is dropped from the Order Paper.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

FOOD—IRRADIATION WITH COBALT-60. (B) SCIENTISTS' RESERVATIONS—SAFETY OF PRACTICE

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the issue of food irradiation is one that preoccupies many Canadians from coast to coast. It is best represented by way of an example of a letter I received just two weeks ago from a person in North Vancouver. I will read a couple of paragraphs from the letter just to give the House an indication of the sentiments that accompany this issue. The letter says:

> After learning of arguments pro and con, it is my position that irradiation of food presents potential health hazards that cannot be ignored.
> I am requesting that all proposals and changes to regulations that would allow food irradiation be stopped; that all importation or sale of irradiated food be stopped and that all existing regulations that allow irradiation, importation or sale of irradiated food, be immediately rescinded.

• (1800)

This letter sets the tone for my brief intervention and I am very grateful to see the Parliamentary Secretary here tonight.

You will recall that on November 27, 1986, at page 1595 of Hansard the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) said on this question:

> Mr. Speaker, the process of irradiating certain foods, such as in the treatment of potatoes, onions, wheat, and flour, has been used in the United States for some period of time. It is being used in Canada as well.

As a result of research I conducted since then it turns out that the irradiation of food has been legal in the U.S. for some time but not widely used. Mr. Sheppard, Chief of the Manufactured Food Division of Canada's Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, when he testified in committee on December 3, 1986, in response to the question as to whether or not irradiated food products from the U.S. are imported into Canada, said:

> Spices are irradiated and it is quite possible, although I am not aware of it, that certain American products with irradiated spices are available on the Canadian market.

There are, I am told, some small experimental stations but no commercial food irradiation operations in the U.S. At present there are no regulations governing the importation of irradiated food and, perhaps more important, no practical method to prove that food has been irradiated and with what dose. As to the existence of any irradiated food in Canada, Mr. Paul O'Neill, President of the Atomic Energy of Canada Radio-Chemical Company, testifying in committee on December 11, 1986, said:

In fact, in Canada there really is no plant that is irradiating food products on a commercial basis. One or two may have done some test work, but there is no commercial irradiation of food in Canada at this time.

I am informed that in 1982, the U.S. Food and Drug Administration conducted a review of 441 studies done with regard to the potential toxicity of eating irradiated foods. Only "five studies appeared to support safety". Yet the Minister said on November 27, 1986, in reply to my question:

—it is a safe process within the limits which have been prescribed. All international studies have indicated that.

Some people believe the real impetus behind the irradiation concept is the fact that industrial society now has a fantastic accumulation of radioactive waste from nuclear plants for which no suitable disposal system has yet been found. The radioactive isotope used in food irradiation can be produced in the Candu nuclear reactor. Therefore, not surprisingly, Atomic Energy of Canada is a strong supporter of food irradiation.

• (1805)

I am told that when food is irradiated, unstable secondary products called free radicals are formed within the cells. These free radicals have been found to be a major potential factor in the formation of cancer, heart disease and other degenerative diseases. Destroyed cells putrefy and create toxic products. Muted cells multiply out of control and create malignancies and tumours.

I am told that according to a 1986 publication by the Health and Energy Institute of Washington, D.C., there is evidence suggesting that genetic and reproductive irregularities may be associated with the consumption of irradiated food, that aflatoxins, potent cancer-causing chemicals created by fungi occurring naturally in foods, were produced more abundantly than normal on irradiated foods in several studies; that vitamins A, C, E and especially B, may be destroyed by the process; that amino-acids and fats in foods may also be altered; and that irradiation does not protect food from contamination that may occur after the treatment unless, of course, it is tightly sealed at the time of irradiation. Also, meats must be irradiated in a vacuum since irradiation in the presence of oxygen causes rancidity in fat-containing foods. It states finally, that chemicals called "radiolytic products" are produced in foods by the radiation process. These include formaldehyde, peroxide, and others.

Other interesting aspects relating to food irradiation include the fact that bacteria which cause botulism are highly resistant to irradiation and can proliferate without competition in foods irradiated to get rid of other bacteria. Foods must be exposed to 5,000 to 5 million rads of radiation. Approximately 500 rads over a short period of time is a lethal dose for most humans, raising the question of worker safety in food irradiation plants.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On that note I would like to call upon the Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Roger Clinch (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, as evidenced by the interest expressed by the Hon. Member, food irradiation is also a topic of considerable interest to many Canadians. This House, through the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs, has heard a number of witnesses and has additional meetings scheduled.

Let me reiterate the response made in the House on November 27 by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp). Our concern for safety is overriding and continuing. In this regard, food irradiation has been extensively studied by various agencies world-wide. Within the dose levels that would be used in practice, the process is safe.

The irradiation of some foods has been permitted under the Food and Drug Act for some time. Treatment of potatoes and onions to prevent sprouting, of wheat, flour and whole wheat flour for insect disinfestation, and of spices for microbial control are allowed by the regulation. However, I have been advised that no irradiated food is currently being sold in Canada.

By way of background, the former Government put forward an information letter in 1983, proposing new regulations applicable to the process. The Health Protection Branch of the Department of National Health and Welfare has been reviewing comments received in response to this information letter. A second information letter will be issued in the next calendar year. This second information letter will respond to the comments and concerns that have been expressed by the Hon. Member and other interested parties and will enunciate the Department of National Health and Welfare's final position in this process.

In keeping with the Government's policy of ensuring public input on major regulatory initiatives, there will be a period in which further public comment will be solicited.

There have been many questions raised about the United States Food and Drug Administration's position on food irradiation versus that of Canada. While the United States Food and Drug Administration has recently approved the irradiation of any food item up to an absorbed dose of 1 kiloGray, only those foods listed in Division 16 of the Canadian Food and Drug Regulations may be irradiated and offered for sale in Canada.

• (1810)

In addition to those foods previously mentioned, wheat, whole wheat, flour and spices are also permitted to be irradiated. Any proposals to irradiate additional food items will have to be evaluated by the Health Protection Branch of the Department of National Health and Welfare, irrespective of the applied dose, and only those foods deemed to be acceptable will be added to the approved list. Thus irradiated foods are, and will continue to be, strictly controlled in Canada.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION ANNOUNCED IN SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): I do not know how you feel, Mr. Speaker, but every time I turn on the water tap in my home, I wonder how long I will have the opportunity to drink that water. I wonder just how long that water will be fit for my consumption, for the use of my family and of other Canadians. As I turn on the tap in my home and I see the water flowing into the basin or sink, I cannot help but think of the hideous problem of the chemical dumps along the south side of the Niagara River in the State of New York. I cannot help but think of those four in particular which were formerly owned by Hooker Chemical and now owned by Occident Chemical, the Love Canal, the 102nd Street Dump, the S-Area Dump and the Hyde Park Dump, all of which are seeping slowly through the rocks along the river banks into the Niagara River and filling it with deadly Dioxin as well as other chemicals.

In one area in particular, as you know, Mr. Speaker, there is a sewer which flows from one of these dumps directly into the Niagara River carrying deadly Dioxin. If that continues, it will not be very long before the drinking water in the Niagara River, Lake Ontario and the St. Lawrence River will be destroyed forever. That drinking water is utilized by some six million Canadians who stand to have their drinking water wiped out just like that.

The problem of pollution of the water is only one of the many problems we face in our environment with respect to pollution in general. However, as the Parliamentary Secretary knows, and all Canadians know, the problems of pollution in our environment are not just problems I feel personally, but problems all Canadians feel. In fact in a recent poll, environmental problems were identified as the number one concern of all Canadians.

Bearing that in mind, I know that other Canadians as well as myself and you, Mr. Speaker, were very pleased when in the Speech from the Throne there was a promise to give us some new environmental protection legislation. In fact, I was pleased that shortly after I asked my question of the Minister in the House, he unveiled a draft form of new environmental protection legislation. That set out a number of proposals or principles. First, it introduced the concept of life cycle management of toxic chemicals; second, it would require industry to test and evaluate all new chemicals for environmental or other human health hazards before being introduced into the Canadian market-place; third, existing chemicals would also be more strictly tested and controlled; fourth, the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of the Environment would be authorized to order companies to recall toxic chemicals at their own expense, and fifth, the Ministers would have the power to order industry to clean up environmental spills and to monitor compliance with those orders. In addition, there would also be the power to temporarily shut down any activity which is judged to be dangerous. In addition to all of that, there are new penalties which would impose a maximum fine of up to $1 million and a five-year maximum term of imprisonment as opposed to the present penalties.

• (1815)

The Environmental Contaminants Act provides for a maximum fine of $100,000 and two years imprisonment, while the Clean Air Act provides for a maximum fine of $200,000. In my view those are great improvements. I was delighted to see the draft legislation introduced into the House. However, I was disappointed by the fact that while the legislation deals with what goes on from now on, from the date of the passage of the legislation into the future, it does not deal with cleaning up problems created in the past. It does not deal with cleaning up the toxic chemical dumps to which I have referred. It does not deal with cleaning up the St. Lawrence River, the St. Clair River, Lake Ontario or the Niagara River.

There are a great many problems in our country at this time. We may not be able to force the United States to adopt some environmental protection or to clean up some of the spots in the U.S. which impact on us in Canada. There are also a great many hot spots, a great many environmental problems, in Canada to which we can address our attention and which we can clean up.

As the Parliamentary Secretary is aware, there are a great number of these spots around the Great Lakes. In fact, there are a number of hazardous waste chemical dumps in Canada. The Ontario Minister of the Environment, for instance, has identified the 10 most dangerous and serious of those as being at Sarnia, London, Acton, Tiny Township, Burlington, Streetsville, Oakville, Niagara Falls and Oshawa.

In addition, there are 32 municipalities in Ontario, including three sewage treatment plants in Metropolitan Toronto, which are discharging into the Great Lakes in excess of the levels set out in their operating permits.

There are 45 industries discharging levels in excess of their operating permits—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Parliamentary Secretary—

Mr. Redway: I hope tonight, Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary will give us the answer to the question of dealing with the clean-up of the past as well as the future.

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to compliment personally the Hon. Member who never misses an opportunity to raise the issue which he has brought up this afternoon. He makes his points very forcefully. This is an extremely important issue. It is one that is very important to me and it should be important to all Canadians.

He raises a good point when he says that the legislation fails to look into the past. I recommend that when the hearings are held and the committee work is being done on the Bill that that should be something the Hon. Member could personally look into and see if he can have it remedied.

As Hon. Members are aware, on December 18, 1986, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) tabled a proposed environmental protection Act for discussion purposes. This draft Bill will lead to eventual legislation that will be introduced to Parliament for first reading before the summer recess.

The Minister and the Government are committed to preserving human health and to ensuring the safety and protection of our environment. We recognize that those who make chemicals, those who regulate them and those who use them have a shared responsibility to safeguard our common life support systems from the dangers that chemicals pose.

The proposed environmental protection Act provides for cradle-to-grave management of chemicals from their development, through their manufacture, transport, use and storage, to their release into the environment in such forms as waste or emissions. It emphasizes prevention of harm to the environment and human health. It consolidates the environmental protection provision of the Clean Air Act and certain sections of the Canada Water Act. The proposed Act also includes the section of the Department of Environment Act which allows the Minister of the Environment to establish environmental protection guidelines for federal departments and agencies to use in exercising their mandates.

The consultation and comment period of the draft Bill will run from January 1 to the end of March, 1987. In January, Environment Canada held information sessions on the proposed environmental protection Act which were open to all interested parties. Departmental officials explained the intent and key elements of the draft Bill. In February and March, formal and open consultation meetings will be held to discuss with participants any problems involving the proposed Act and potential solutions, culminating in a national meeting in Ottawa on March 23 and 24. Anyone is welcome to submit comments in writing to the Minister of the Environment during the three month consultation period. All observations and comments will be considered during the drafting of the Bill before its first reading.

• (1820)

In conclusion, I can assure the Hon. Member that the Government has these matters well in hand, and it is moving forward on this issue.

AGRICULTURE—FUEL TAX REBATE—DENIAL TO FARMERS USING VEHICLES ON-HIGHWAYS. (B) REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF REBATE

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my concern is with elements of the federal fuel sales tax rebate program, and follows my questions to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on January 26, 1987.

The federal fuel sales tax rebate program was announced in the Economic Statement of November, 1984. It became effective December 1, 1984. Its purpose was to provide temporary fuel sales tax relief to primary producers, including farmers. It would run from December 1, 1984, to January 1, 1987. That sunset was later extended to January 1, 1988.

The initial sales tax rebate was 3 cents per litre. It was increased to 5.5 cents per litre effective May 1, 1986. It was increased to 6.5 cents a litre on January 1, 1987.

The legislation states that eligible users must use the fuel off-highway for commercial purposes. Use of on-highway or off-highway as a criterion for any type of agricultural program simply flies in the face of the practical facts. Obviously, farmers have to use the highways for the purposes of hauling grain, fertilizers and chemicals, to move machinery, to secure parts and to go for repairs. Some pieces of equipment have multiple uses. Some trucks have attached to them spraying equipment and snowploughs. The point is that whether the farm business is done on-highway or off-highway, it has no relevance to a farming operation, and the drafters of the legislation should know that.

It is interesting to note that the federal excise gasoline tax refund program, which rebates 1.5 cents excise tax per litre on gasoline, is based on fuel used in the course of business, and it excludes fuel used for personal usage.

What should be important is whether the fuel was used in the business of farming. If it was, then it is a legitimate expense for income tax purposes, and I submit that it should be eligible for the fuel sales tax rebate, regardless of whether it is used on the highway or off.

The provisions in the Income Tax Act are one thing, and the criteria for the excise rebate are another. The fuel sales tax rebate provisions are a third item, and supposedly separate and distinct. Yet, in the mind of any responsible person in the business of farming, it is extremely difficult to make that distinction. Surely the answer is to change either the Act, which would be the responsibility of the Minister of Finance, or to change the enforcement procedure, which would be the responsibility of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay).

Earlier, concern was expressed about the procedure to be followed by Revenue Canada in the verification of claims for rebate of the federal fuel sales tax. Finally, in July of 1986 the Minister of National Revenue issued guidelines which were supposed to simplify and reduce the paper burden for farmers.

Revenue Canada advised that for farmers who did not have detailed records for on-highway/off-highway use of fuel, the Department would accept rebate claims for 80 per cent of the fuel purchases only after the claimant had deducted fuel purchases for personal use. In other words, the farmer would first subtract his personal usage, and then be entitled to claim on 80 per cent of what was left, the deduction of 20 per cent intended to cover on-highway usage.

As one would expect, after eliminating their personal usage factor, many farmers are claiming the sales tax rebate on the balance of their fuel, because they have used it in the business of farming, whether on-highway or off-highway. Predictably, Revenue Canada auditors are having a field day. They are inquiring of the farmer as to proof of business use of fuel, whether the farmer has daily mileage records, logs, completed schedules of fuel and gasoline purchases, and vehicle inventory. I have a letter from an excise auditor who wishes detailed descriptions of usage of gasoline or diesel consumed in each vehicle used in the fields, and detailed descriptions of gas or diesel consumed in each vehicle used off the fields.

• (1825)

That may make sense to a Revenue Canada auditor, but it makes no sense whatever on the farm. Unless the farmer can prove that the business fuel was used off-highway, his claim is reduced to 80 per cent. Also he is reassessed for any excess rebate paid, plus interest, plus a penalty, and the resultant hard feelings. The point is that this is being done in the name of a completely artificial and arbitrary standard of on-highway/off-highway which simply has no relevance to today's farming.

The fuel tax rebate program is a good one. I think the farm community is very happy with it. Given the problems facing agriculture, I think the rebate should carry on beyond January 1, 1988. In fact conditions dictate that. I urge the Minister to carry on with the program or to replace it with something similar in his upcoming Budget.

Finally, the farm community likes the fuel tax rebate. All it asks is that the Ministers involved consider either changing the legislation so as to eliminate this inane distinction of on-highway/off-highway as one of the criterion or, in the alternative, that the Minister of National Revenue instruct the field auditors of Revenue Canada to permit farmers to take the rebate on 80 per cent of their total fuel bill, not on what is left after their personal expenses have been taken.

I suggest that either of these changes will enable the Government to say truly that it has effectively offset federal taxes on farm fuels.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): If I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate my colleague, the Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson) who, on the one hand, has presented a very up-to-date view of the issue he has raised and who, on the other hand, has demonstrated ever since he came to the House a deep interest for all matters dealing with agriculture and his sincere interests in the farmers of his ridings and the rest of Canada.

Since 1984, Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government has made major changes to federal consumer taxes, especially those affecting fuel used in farming. If I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like to present a brief summary, somewhat like my Hon. friend did.

In the fall of 1984, the Conservative Government set up a fuel tax rebate program as a response to the special problems primary producers were experiencing. This rebate amounted to 3 cents a litre. Since May 1986, the rebate for farmers is 3 1/2 cents a litre. In addition to that, there is a special 2 cents a litre rebate on excise tax which applied and which, effective January 1987, applies to 3 cents a litre.

Finally, on top of all that, there is a 1 1/2 cent a litre reimbursement of the excise tax which applies to all Canadians, including farmers.

My colleague from Swift Current—Maple Creek is asking that a distinction no longer be made between on-highway and off-highway fuel used for agricultural purposes. In my opinion, his request is justified when we look at it from his own viewpoint. But in a more practical approach, Mr. Speaker, think of the very complex system that would be required to ensure fairness and equity. One might draw a parallel between a farmer who uses his own vehicles and claims the tax rebate, and another one who uses a carrier. Well, would this carrier as well be eligible for the tax rebate? Just to be on the safe side, we would also have to define just what kind of farm commodities can be transported. Mr. Speaker, you can well imagine the forms and red tape—perhaps even a system not quite as fair as the one we have now—we would need to meet the requirements of my colleague.

Moreover, we know that Revenue Canada decided to grant farmers 80 per cent of the tax rebate without asking them to submit any evidence.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I feel the present situation is fair to farmers. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6:30 p.m.

ANNIVERSARY OF 1916 FIRE—SIGNIFICANCE OF MACE

Mr. Speaker: Prior to calling Orders of the Day, may I make the traditional announcement to the House that, in recognition of the seventy-first anniversary of the fire which destroyed the Centre Block on this day in 1916, I would draw to the attention of Hon. Members the wooden replica of the mace on the Clerk's table. This mace was used for many years as a replacement for the original one destroyed by fire.

PETITIONS

MINING EXPLORATION SECTOR—EXISTING SHARE REGIME

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I wish to present a petition signed by 133 petitioners from Val-d'Or, Amos, Preissac, Malartic, Barraute, Senneterre, Dubuisson, Val-Senneville, Duparquet and Sullivan, in the riding of Abitibi, and by myself.

Whereas the Government of Canada made flow-through shares in the mining sector eligible for the purposes of income tax; whereas 133-1/3 per cent of the value of the shares could be deducted; and whereas the people of Canada, as a result of this tax provision, were helping to develop mining exploration, reduce unemployment and develop our northern and remote regions, your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the existing provision for flow-through shares in the mining sector at 133-1/3, for the years 1987-88-89.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition, signed by the required number of people, and which has met the requirements of Standing Order 106. Whereas the proposed changes to the Patent Act will affect directly all Canadians who are not protected by private and Government medicare programs, and whereas the federal Government's proposal will raise the costs, which are already high, of the provincial health care programs, and whereas the monopoly granted to innovative pharmaceutical companies will prevent competition from generic companies and will result in an increase in drug costs and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs, and whereas the proposed changes to the Patent Act are another example of the Government's concessions in the free trade negotiations with the United States at the expense of ordinary Canadians, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

RIDEAU HALL—PUBLIC'S ACCESS TO GROUNDS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I also have several petitions from people in Ottawa, Hull and Newfoundland, in fact, from all over Canada. The undersigned residents of Canada now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners. Whereas the decision regarding the closure of the Rideau Hall grounds was made by the National Capital Commission, the Department of Public Works, the RCMP and the Office of the Governor General without prior notice, and whereas the closure of this attractive and tranquil park affects thousands of visitors to the Capital from across the country who hold Canada's uniquely accessible Rideau Hall as a symbol of the trust, openness and democracy of which Canadians are so justly proud, and whereas an area of residents from the entire National Capital region, who have used and enjoyed the grounds of Rideau Hall, recognize the security concerns which prompted the closure decision, but could not accept a blanket closure of the 120 acre park to public access, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to open that decision for consultation with a group of citizen representatives of the large and growing opposition in order that a modus vivendie be created which would satisfy both the Government and the public.

REQUEST TO WITHDRAW TARIFF ON ENGLISH LANGUAGE BOOKS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I also have a series of petitions signed by the required number of residents and which meet the requirements of Standing Order 106. The petitioners humbly submit that the Government of Canada has imposed a retaliatory tariff on imported books in the English language which has limited the access of Canadians to literature and information and that the tariff has had little negative effect on the publishing industry of the United States yet penalizes Canada's consumers, book publishers, book-sellers, distributors and Canada's culture. The petitioners state that since rising book prices have placed a strain on the book acquisition programs and policies of our nation's public and specialized libraries, they humbly pray and call upon Parliament to rescind this tariff which threatens irreparable harm to the Canadian book industry and which compromises federal policy on cultural industries in respect of free trade negotiations.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table today a number of petitions which have been certified correct pursuant to Standing Order 106. The petitioners' concern regards the proposed changes to the Patent Act in relation to prescription drugs. They are also concerned that these changes will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. They also state that the proposed measure will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis. The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present petitions signed by several hundred residents of Burnaby and other communities in British Columbia who call upon the federal Government to recognize that its proposals to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. They note that the proposed measure will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis. As well, they note that the proposals will result in higher costs to provincial government drug plans. The petitioners call upon the Government to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

LOCAL MEASURED TELEPHONE CHARGES

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by a large number of residents of Burnaby, including, in particular, over 100 residents of 9380 Cardston Court. The petition notes that the telephone is essential for communication and that rental costs must always be affordable. The petitioners note that the telephone pricing scheme known as local measured service, or charging for each local call, means that having a telephone will cost much more per month for most people. Therefore, the petitioners call upon the Government to direct the CRTC to deny to telephone companies such as B.C. Tel the right to charge for each call and to order the retention of the monthly rental for a telephone.

LOW-LEVEL FLIGHTS AT ARMED FORCES BASE AT GOOSE BAY

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by residents of Toronto, North Vancouver and Burnaby who point out that at present low-level flight training of pilots of NATO countries at the Canadian Forces Base Goose Bay, Labrador, disrupts the way of life of many of the native people there. The petitioners note that hunting, fishing, tourism and mining can provide more stable, healthy and peaceful employment than the Canadian Forces Base at Goose Bay. The petitioners call upon the Government to ensure that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) end all low-level flight training at the Canadian Forces Base at Goose Bay and cease negotiations with NATO for establishment of a larger base there.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to present petitions from residents of the Niagara Peninsula, Hamilton and Niagara Falls area as well as residents of communities in Quebec such as Pohénégamook and neighbouring communities who protest the Government's proposals to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs since these proposals will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers, severely restricting the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. They protest that these changes will unfairly hurt Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis. They will also result in higher costs to the provincial government drug plans. Therefore, they humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition on behalf of a number of British Columbians who are concerned that the federal Government's proposals to change the Patent Act related to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. They call upon the Parliament of Canada to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Monday, February 2, 1987, consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-18, an Act respecting national transportation, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. Benjamin (p. 2756)

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-18, an Act respecting national transportation, deals with a number of major concerns which certainly affect my constituency as well as the whole of the country. As is stated in the application clause of the Bill, it applies to transportation by railways, air, water, commodity pipeline and transport for hire or reward by extra-provincial buses and extra-provincial trucking.

Bill C-18 has been touted by the Government as its answer to regulatory problems facing the Canadian transportation industry. It flows from the Government's Freedom to Move document which, as pointed out by my friend, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), is in fact something quite different. In fact, it should be entitled "Freedom to Manoeuvre" since this is really not deregulation at all but reregulation.

On January 29, 1986, just more than a year ago, my colleague from Regina West quoted in the House the following words about the document Freedom to Move:

"a trial balloon of Conservative ideology which solves fewer problems for the transportation industry than it will create. Clearly there are no pressing issues facing the transportation industry which call for actions by the Minister like those proposed in his policy paper". These proposals are for sweeping deregulation where there is no apparent need, and that clearly indicates that the paper is only a knee-jerk regurgitation of similar transportation initiatives undertaken in the U.S. by President Reagan and President Carter.

We have gone over the matter with great care. There have been hearings held and a minority report brought forward by my friend from Regina West. As he has pointed out, Bill C-18 and its pal legislation, Bill C-19, are anti-safety, anti-competition, anti-service, anti-sovereignty and certainly anti-regional industrial expansion. What the House should be doing, and what my Party wants, is considering good regulation since that is the real choice, not this myth about freedom to move.

What is being put forward by government Members in various ways across the country is the myth of lower fares when, in fact, higher industry profits and lower fares were simply a blip in the United States in terms of the type of deregulation which took place in that country. Since 1980, when the U.S. administration brought forward a similar type of deregulation, 40,000 airline workers have lost their jobs, 150,000 rail workers have lost their jobs and one-third of the U.S. truckers have lost their jobs. In total close to 300,000 union jobs have been lost in the United States. Those who have been left in those industries have been forced to take lower wages, work longer hours, and to give up many of the hard won concessions they had negotiated over the last decades when dealing with the industry.

Bill C-18 will directly affect 750,000 Canadian workers, and will indirectly affect every Canadian. There is in the legislation an end to arms-length dealings, which exists to a certain extent in the existing legislation, and the beginning of the politics of the gravy train, particularly for large shippers who will be able to make special deals in relation to this legislation.

I wish to deal for a moment with a meeting I had on Sunday in Prince Rupert with representatives of the CN workers who had expected that there would be more jobs. During the election the Conservatives promised massive infusions of capital into VIA Rail, and that that service would be brought back up to what it should be, with new passenger cars, new locomotives, new stations, and many types of new operations. In fact, the Conservatives have gone exactly in the other direction. In Prince Rupert we expected, and were told by CN public relations people, that there would be new jobs created as a result of the development of the coal port, and as a result of the grain facilities. In fact, something quite different has happened. Now there are only about 100 CN workers left in Prince Rupert. It is now known that 26 of those positions will disappear between November 1, 1986 and May 1, 1987 with more lay-offs, terminations, transfers, and contracting-out to come. The old grain elevator used to handle 600 cars a week. The new elevator handles 1,200 to 1,400 cars. Now there are more and more terminations and lay-offs of workers. Thousands of CN workers have already been lost in this lead-up to deregulation, and thousands more will be cut by these Tory plans.

In Prince Rupert it is worth looking at what the CN is doing as it prepares for deregulation, expecting that the Conservative majority will put it into place. Cars that are in bad order are being put on to the tracks, endangering not only the rail line but automobiles that drive next to that rail line between Prince Rupert, Terrace and on to Prince George. Some VIA employees in Prince Rupert have been transferred, and the rest of the work has been contracted out. Until recently, 11 locomotives were serviced in Prince Rupert, and now there are none. In December a locomotive operating between Prince Rupert and Terrace was checked by car men and was found to have no brakes at all. This is the type of totally unsatisfactory and anti-safety decisions that have been taken by the Government and CN. CN is now paying Prince Rupert Grain to handle the cars that are bringing in grain. There now are inadequate crews to service Fairview and other port facilities, because they have been cut back to one shift a day. There is inadequate checking of cars in places such as the Watson Island pulp mill, because it has been cut to two workers on one shift a day.

In the lead-up to Bill C-18, on December 9 I received a letter from a Mr. Walker, the Senior Vice-President, Western Canada, of CN. I had asked him about lay-offs, contracting-out, and safety matters. On the second page of his letter he states:

> Added to the preceding is the unknown impact of the newly introduced National Transportation Act (N.T.A.). The new N.T.A. will certainly change the way we do business and will affect employment levels.

It is clear that CN knows what will come about as a result of this Draconian and ill-founded legislation brought forward by the Government.

In historic terms, Conservatives always spoke against the Liberals when they were bringing in legislation that the Tories would describe as Trojan Horse legislation where the regulations were not attached. Bill C-18 is a classic example. It is some 370 pages long, but there are no regulations attached. We do not know what the real intention of the Government will be because, as pointed out in the Bill, the regulation-making powers of the NTA are entirely under the control of the Cabinet. It may vary or rescind any decision, order, rule, or regulation of the agency. There goes the possibility of the public having any satisfying opportunity to go before the NTA and have a regulation put in place. If the Cabinet does not like it, on behalf of one of its corporate friends it can be rescinded without coming into the House. The question arises, who will get the special regulations, because they are not in the Bill?

I wish to touch for a moment on the designated areas. Many Canadians are now aware that the Tories—I suppose over dinner with a glass of red wine—took a pen and drew a line across Canada and happened to put it at 55° latitude across British Columbia. In that manner, areas north of that will still have some opportunity for regulation. But where do they put it? It was put a couple of miles north of Prince Rupert, a couple of miles north of Sandspit, a couple of miles north of Terrace, and a couple of miles to the north of Smithers. It has been drawn so as to cut loose those communities that are in need of good regulation in terms of east-west and north-south transit.

In almost all of northern British Columbia we are now in a situation where Pacific Western Airlines has an absolute unrestricted, unfettered monopoly because the whale was eaten by the minnow. Pacific Western Airlines took over CP Air. We already know that the CP-PW group are planning to move some of the 737s into central Canada. This Bill will create a situation where the myth of lower fares will never come to be. We will have less jet service, less direct non-stop service, higher fare schedules, the demise of many CN workers in the rail industry, and a direct negative effect on marine workers. This Bill is a disaster. The effects that have already come, as pointed out in the documentation from CN, makes it pretty clear that a Bill such as this should be formally withdrawn. The public convenience and necessity will not be served in any area of Canada, particularly in rural Canada, by this type of nonsense.

Mr. Paul Gagnon (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to talk about two items in Bill C-18, the representation the Government has undertaken, and how it affects labour.

The suggestion has been made that the Government has been deaf to representations made following the release of the Freedom to Move policy paper. Nothing could be further from the truth. This legislation was developed in a co-operative effort with private sector carriers, shippers, users, and communities. More than 500 groups or individuals were consulted during development of this legislation, many on more than one occasion. The suggestions of those consulted resulted in adjustments and improvements to the original policy, and to the legislation.

In addition, the House, through the Standing Committee on Transport, had a very definite impact on the shape of this legislation. That Committee held two separate sets of hearings, one on the over-all policy, and one focusing on the northern and remote areas. The recommendations emanating from those hearings resulted in a number of improvements and adjustments to this legislation.

Perhaps the most notable provisions resulting from the Standing Committee are those governing the regulation of northern air services. Originally it was proposed that the same regulatory regime would govern all air services. However, representations and recommendations from northerners led to adjustments in this policy in order to provide a modified regulatory regime in the North.

This is not the only example of the effects of representations on Bill C-18. Also, the compensatory rate provisions for railways were added, based upon recommendations from the standing committee and following representations from Canadian Pacific and the Canadian Trucking Association. The terminal running rights provisions originated with Canadian Pacific and were not part of the original Freedom to Move proposals. The details were worked out in consultation with shippers and carriers.

• (1130)

There have been few legislative reforms in Canadian history which have received such extensive consultation. The Government has listened and has adopted many of the suggestions made during the consultations. Whatever the Opposition may say, those are the facts.

I should like to talk about the effect of the legislation on labour. Concerns have been raised that the legislation will have an impact upon labour and employment, a negative one according to the critics. This is simply not true. The Bill will not cost us jobs. Rather, it will help create jobs across Canada.

The new National Transportation Act is a framework for regulatory reform in transportation. It will affect almost every part of the economy. It will stimulate growth and will provide jobs by helping make businesses across Canada more cost competitive. This is a good news Bill for jobs and employment. More than one million Canadians work in industries which rely heavily on rail transportation. These jobs will be more and more at risk if we do not introduce these reforms.

More competitive transportation means a more efficient system for mines, mills, factories, and manufacturers to ship their products to market. As these businesses become more competitive at home and in international markets, they create jobs in Canada. The key is efficient, competitive transportation.

We must be aware of the short and long-term benefits from reducing regulation which tends to stifly employment, restrict growth, impede our export efforts, and limit the choices of shippers, retailers, wholesalers, and consumers. Economic regulatory reform will bring important benefits, including lower unit costs, greater competition, a wider range of services, higher productivity, and new market opportunities. Greater efficiency in our industries will translate into more jobs for Canadians.

I recognize the concern raised about employment in transportation companies. In a more competitive environment, carriers, their employees, shippers, travellers, and Governments will all face adjustments. It will not be business as usual for anyone. The contribution of tens of thousands of workers to the development and operation of our transportation system has been enormous and will be crucial to future success.

In this regard the Government remains committed, as indicated in Freedom to Move, to monitoring the effects of change. Numerous adjustment programs already exist to ease any transitional difficulties encountered by workers. Beyond this, the Government has offered to consult with representatives of both employees and employers in order to determine the measures which may be required. This is a very fair offer, but I expect that there will be very little need for special assistance. The key point, however, is that the removal of unnecessary regulation can help create new jobs in transportation as the demands of travellers and shippers for transportation services increase in a healthy, growing economy.

While our program of regulatory reform differs in many ways from American deregulation, it is worth noting that in the U.S. total airline employment increased by 9 per cent by 1985, that is, 31,500 new jobs in the U.S. airline industry. Similarly, the number of people working in the U.S. trucking industry increased by 285,000 between deregulation in 1980 and 1985. In both countries, Canada and the United States, the railway industry has been losing employment for over 30 years as railways adjust to technological changes and increased competition primarily from trucking.

This is positive legislation. It will help Canadian businesses compete more effectively for markets at home and abroad. The concerns over labour are misplaced, however sincere. The legislation will help create jobs across Canada in all sectors of the economy. It is good news.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am interested in the Bill and I am very happy to have an opportunity to talk about it. I thought I would say a word or two about the spirit in which Members of this place must approach the subject of transportation.

When the present Confederation was established in 1867 it was not the first attempt made to create Canada, to create a country north of the United States; it was the third or the fourth attempt. When the effort was being made, I suppose those who were aware of the failures which had already occurred must have been wondering how long the Confederation established in 1867 would actually last, whether it would be a 10-year wonder or less, as had occurred with some of its predecessors.

One thing which made the present version of Confederation so exciting and attractive that it has endured until today is that it contained a vision of the frontier. It did not just talk about existing colonies and rights and so on in relation to each other. It spoke to the larger vision of a Canada which would run from coast to coast to coast, meaning up into the North. It contained a commitment to those who lived outside the original boundaries of the nation, that they would be brought in and that a way would be found. That way was a transportation solution to bring them into Confederation.

That invitation to those outside, in terms of their opportunities to enter Canada at some point in the future, and to those inside, in the sense of opportunities for them to expand their horizons, to expand their businesses, to work, and to live in the frontiers of the new world, was exciting enough that Canada would hold together and Canada would grow from strength to strength.

As you know, Mr. Speaker—you are an erudite Member of the House—the transportation issue was a key issue. It was never put as a market-place issue. No one ever said that we would see whether transportation could help us in solving the problem and in pulling our country together. The philosophy was that Canada would come to grips with the challenge of transportation and would solve it. No one knew what kind of engineering or financial investment would be required to lay railway tracks from the Atlantic to the Pacific, but they committed themselves to doing it. Canadians were inspired by that. The residents of British North America in this area were inspired by that to build a great country.

There is no doubt that when people look at a problem outside of any market considerations—and transportation policy was looked at outside market considerations—many inefficiencies can be built into it. Over the years we have seen a lot of inefficiency. We have seen some efforts to try to limit the inefficiencies, to try to develop a system which would work like a market and would have some of the discipline of the market even though its fundamental orientation was developed without any consideration of the market at all.

But we are now facing an ideology that really is against the philosophy which built the transportation system of the country, the ideology of deregulation that in the same way, as in 1867, was chosen to ignore the market-place because the goal was to try to build a great country. Today the ideology is the opposite, the ultimate solution being the market-place, and that all of the problems perceived to exist in our transportation system will be eliminated and resolved by a little bit of market discipline.

When you ask average Canadians what deregulation means, some will talk about the bureaucracy. They say we are in favour of deregulation because there are too many bureaucrats in the system, too many decisions being made in too many power centres and the market solution, deregulation, will clean all that out. Some say that, but most people in my experience have two things in mind when they talk about deregulation and say they are in favour of it. First is lower prices. Canadians who favour deregulation are largely under the impression that if deregulation comes into force it will mean that air fares, train fares, bus fares and the cost of shipping freight will go down. They are in favour of deregulation, not because they object to the bureaucracies that are implied by regulation but because they believe having deregulation will mean lower prices.

Second, I believe most Canadians favour deregulation because they think it will give them more choice. They say if we have deregulation then carriers denied access to our home town or our factory to carry our goods or to carry our families will now be able to do so and will not be stuck with just the CNR or Air Canada. These two goals, lower prices and more choice, are what I think most Canadians understand deregulation to mean. When this package is delivererd, if it does not give Canadians lower prices and more choice, then I do not think the kind of support out there for deregulation will continue.

Where did the idea come from that deregulation means lower prices and more choice? As you yourself know, Mr. Speaker, they come from the United States where the experience of deregulation has given those results, not to all Americans, but to a lot of Americans. They found that prices went down and that they had more choice. But, that is not an inevitable result of deregulation. When you look at Canada you see that our country is made up of a huge land mass with small population centres spread throughout it and large population centres clustered along the United States border, and you begin to see the wisdom of the commitment of the Fathers of Confederation and of those who put Canada together in the first place. Transportation is not something you can leave to the market-place if you want to hold the country together and if you want to keep Canadians in contact with their frontier. The sense that all Canadians have that the frontier is available to them in all the different senses of that term is a very important reason that Canadians feel such a strong commitment to their country. Transportation is a big part of it. Deregulation can threaten it.

I want to now look, and I know we do not have much time, at several of the specific provisions of the Bill and explain my concern to you, Mr. Speaker. The Government was asked for commitments as it was putting this program forward, that there would be lower costs as a result and, in the fine print and in the lower key features of the Government's presentation, it has admitted that air fares are already at the level they would be with deregulation. It is not very likely that the introduction of deregulation will result in lower airfares. Why will there be increased service and more choice? Again, there is no commitment at all that there will be increased service and more choice.

The one area that has to concern all Canadians is the question of safety. We know that the Government is not proposing to deregulate safety, although the logic of deregulation should probably lead you to that, but it is another reason that we are so cautious about deregulation as a subject. In the area of safety, unlike the area of fares or route approval where deregulation is to come, we are maintaining regulation, but having deregulation will put pressure on safety. That has been the experience in the United States where deregulation has been under way for a few years already and where we have seen a number of accidents. Some of the factors of those accidents include pressures that result from the market-place working on carriers, and on the membership of unions who make the system work. These kinds of pressures from cost cutting and cost consciousness have had an impact on safety. We in this Party are concerned about that, and we do not think the Government has shown enough sensitivity to it.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to participate in this debate on Bill C-18 because I have been listening to the Government's arguments on why we should support it. I am sure that Members in this House and those who have watched the House on TV recognize that this whole concept of deregulation and the panacea that deregulation brings had its genesis with the Liberal Party when it was in Government from 1980 to 1984. In fact, the Liberals started this worshipping at the altar of setting rates in a competitive market-place. The Tories are now in power. In Bill C-18 which has 200 odd pages—a highly complicated Bill—the Tories are taking the Liberal idea to its ridiculous conclusion. I asked myself the question, why is this Conservative Government madly dashing, in a country with 25 million people, with a geography not to be found anywhere else in the world, with our particular climate and with the pockets of population that we have, to emulate American deregulation taking place south of the border? Why are we trying to copy-cat the Americans in this whole question of deregulation?

Then, Mr. Speaker, I saw the CTV Question Period on October 19, 1986 when the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney), better known as General Custer, had the following response to a question, and that is when I recognized what it was all about. She said that transportation matters were in the ambit of the discussions during free trade negotiations.

That is it, Mr. Speaker. In an effort to get a free trade agreement out of the United States, the Government is prepared once again to put our transportation system on the table. Once again, before we have gotten to a final agreement on free trade between Canada and the United States, the Government is offering up, on the altar of free trade, our transportation system.

We do not disagree that there are certainly changes to be made to the Canadian Transport Commission. Surely we do not disagree that certain changes ought to be made to the administration of the transportation system. We feel we ought to make the transportation system more sensitive to the economic needs of the regions. Certainly there is a need to look at the transportation system in order to ensure that it responds to the needs of Canadians who live in communities like mine, Sault Ste Marie and others across the country. Surely the whole concept behind revamping the system ought to be one of improving service to the people, not only in passenger service but in freight service as well. Yet we find we have difficulty with specific proposals within the Bill.

We have difficulty, for example, with a clause in the Bill that allows for transborder competiton. American carriers would be allowed to come to Canada, do business in Canada and bid on business in Canada. Yet Canadian carriers would not be able to go to the United States to do the same things. To even think that there would be a level playing field in transportation is absolutely ridiculous. The reality is that the largest trucking company in Canada ranks about number 60 compared to trucking companies in the United States. That in fact means that Canadian trucking companies and railways are at a distinct disadvantage.

Already the railway companies are beginning to gear up for the implementation of Bill C-18. For example, the community in my riding in which I live, Capreol, was built on the development of the CNR as a switching centre for northeastern Ontario. Today we have noticed that the CN has been cutting back on its workforce. In fact, it has been cutting back on its workforce in such a way that its commitment to safety is being called into question.

I just received a letter from a constituent who lives in that town. The letter reads:

Dear Mr. Rodriguez:

I am writing about the job cuts affecting the Car Department in Capreol on April 6, 1987.

As you will see in the attached form, on that date, Certified Car Inspectors will no longer be doing Roll-By train inspections in Capreol. This will be handled by Transportation employees.

He goes on to say the following:

Sir, I have spent four years learning my trade and have had to write an exam to receive my certificate (copy attached). Now, in one bold move, the Canadian National Railway will hand this work over to the running trades.

This is the same company, who, in March 1986, shortly after the Hinton wreck, sent out letters to each employee imploring us to work even more diligently in the area of safety. But, since March 1986, we are no longer allowed to do full inspections or Roll-Bys. I believe this severely hinders safety and shows us that CNR is not concerned at all about safety; the bottom line for them is profit!

I think the CNR is receiving that message from the Government. It is receiving the message that safety does not matter, nor does servicing communities and regional development. That will further erode the economic base and viability of communities in northern Ontario.

The same can be said of the airlines. Already Sault Ste Marie and London, Ontario, have lost their Air Canada links. In the Bill there is, for example, a provision for confidential rates. This means that larger producers will get the best rates from the railway companies. Those rates will be held in confidence and there will be no way for the small or medium-sized producers to get the same kind of rates.

The Conservative Government has said that one of the benefits of deregulation will be lower fares. History has shown that in a monopoly capital that is exactly how it works. In the short term, yes, there are lower fares. When there is no referee, everyone will get into the act. Anyone who can go down to the bank to borrow a few hundred thousand or a million bucks can buy a couple of airplanes and get into regional airlines. Then prices get lower in the dog-eat-dog competition. Then they all fall by the wayside and the big fish will eat the little fish. In the long run, prices will go up and up.

The Government must recognize that our railway and airline systems are tools for economic development and for distributing the population of Canada more evenly. The Government is sacrificing those carriers in the mythological proposal that we can compete south of the border and that competition will make us stronger.

I believe the amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) is a very wise one. We should send the subject matter of the Bill to the Standing Committee on Transport for further study and we should scrap the Bill for the moment.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to participate in the debate on this very important Bill, a Bill which does not simply deal with the question of transportation but which, in its implications, goes far beyond merely transportation. The motion currently before the House has been proposed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). It suggests that the Bill be withdrawn and that the subject matter thereof be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport. This motion is most important because it recognizes that there has been inadequate consultation by this Government with the parties, groups and individuals most affected by this important decision.

We have already seen other examples of the failure of the Government to consult with groups affected by decisions that touch their lives. Just recently, for example, we saw the debacle in Newfoundland in which the Government moved ahead to announce a new policy but forgot to consult with the people most affected. That kind of arrogance and insensitivity to the concerns of the people of Newfoundland has been mirrored in the approach the Government has taken in transportation. It is for that reason that at this time the Bill should be withdrawn and the Government should recognize that the people of Canada should be given an opportunity to discuss this issue before it goes any further.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that this Bill is also connected with a program the Government is implementing in another area. I am referring to privatization. Yesterday, the Minister responsible for privatization declared that the Government was very actively considering the case of Air Canada. The Minister told us that she was taking a very close look at the privatization of Petro-Canada as well. Well, I suppose this is the Government's ideology at work in Canada's public sector. However, we in the NDP are not prepared to allow the Government to destroy Air Canada and Petro-Canada and the transportation industry in this country, an industry that is essential in a country like ours.

[English]

I mentioned that this is not just a transportation issue. It touches on a broad range of issues. For example, it clearly affects working men and women. Thousands of jobs are at risk as companies will be forced into throat-cutting competition. We need look no further than immediately south of the border to see the implications of this legislation. It will promote union busting and the destruction of jobs. We have just recently seen the elimination of Red Caps on VIA Rail. For many Canadians, particularly the disabled and senior citizens, the Red Caps provided important and essential service. Yet as part of its drive to cut costs VIA Rail has eliminated that vital service. As one who uses the trains on a regular basis, I find that decision not only heartless but absolutely indefensible from the point of view of service for those people who use the trains.

We are dealing with the issue of safety as well. When transport companies have to cut corners, obviously maintenance and safety are affected. I refer to employee health and safety as well as the safety of those who use the service. We know as well that the implications of this Bill will be particularly hard-hitting on women. Many of the jobs to be eliminated are presently filled by women.

It is a free trade issue as well. The eventual domination of our transportation industry by foreign companies is a very likely outcome of this process. I might note that the process was initiated by the former Liberal Government. The former Minister of Transport, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), was a chief architect of this proposal which would have such destructive implications for communities all across Canada. Small business will suffer from these proposals. Regional expansion will be affected. Certainly the bulk commodity shippers are concerned about captive shipper provisions which may drastically increase their costs.

Members of the NDP filed a minority report to the report Freedom to Move. My colleagues, the Hon. Members for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) and Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) raised a number of very important concerns. They noted that the Government should be planning to provide more safety inspectors in the transportation sector and not cutting back on an already inadequate number. As well, there must be an effective monitoring agency. I have touched on the question of employment. I would underline that we are talking about 750,000 Canadians employed directly or indirectly in the transportation sector. The Government has not done its homework. It has not adequately examined the implications of deregulation on jobs. There have been no impact studies whatsoever. At a time when unemployment in Canada is already far too high, that kind of negligence is completely unacceptable.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this measure will give the U.S. railways and trucking companies easy access to Canada, while there is no reciprocal advantage for Canadian railways and trucking companies in the United States. This is a flagrant betrayal of our independence.

It is not the first time, Mr. Speaker. Once again, the Government is happily selling off part of our national sovereignty, as it has so obviously been doing in the free trade negotiations and the softwood lumber episode.

Mr. Speaker, I just spent two days in the Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean area, where I met people from Chicoutimi, Jonquière, Alma and several other towns in the region. They are afraid. If today, the Government is ready to cave in to U.S. pressure on softwood lumber, they wonder what tomorrow will bring. Will it be pulp and paper? What will it be, Mr. Speaker? This Government is prepared to give up our independence in all those sectors.

Mr. Speaker, if we leave the transportation sector open to free market forces, to free enterprise and competition, carriers will automatically concentrate on the biggest and most lucrative markets, and who can blame them? In other words, peripheral regions and remote areas in Canada's North will have fewer services and fewer opportunities for economic expansion.

[English]

Because my time is limited at this particular juncture of the debate I am just going to touch briefly on a couple of other issues. There is a very real concern that the legislation could have an adverse impact on the disabled. I was a member of the Special Committee on Equality Rights which recommended that the Canadian Transport Commission enforce tough new regulations to ensure accessibility for the disabled to all federally-regulated modes of transportation. This legislation will move back from that important objective. As well, it could have a particularly adverse impact on my Province of British Columbia. The Government has already conceded that regulation is necessary in areas above the 55th parallel. What about the other isolated areas below the 55th parallel? Why does the Government equate Cranbrook with Toronto instead of other areas, for example, north of the 55th parallel? We recently saw Air Canada close its ticket counter in Victoria. We have to ask ourselves what would happen in a deregulated British Columbia.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this Bill ignores the Canadian situation. It makes no allowances for our geography, for our scattered population centres or the rigours of our climate, and it ignores our sovereignty and independence. This Bill wants to hand us over to the invisible forces of the free market, while everybody knows perfectly well these forces will have a very serious and even disastrous impact on the transportation sector across Canada.

[English]

For that reason, we in the NDP will do everything we can to prevent the Government from moving ahead with such a destructive piece of legislation. It not only has an adverse impact on transportation but could directly and vitally impact on the nature and character of this great country. The transportation sector is essential. We must not allow the Government to continue with the steps taken by the Liberals in an attempt to destroy it.

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward—Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I do not see any other speakers rising, and I want to deal briefly with the Bill. In my remarks I want to deal directly with the amendment as printed in the Order Paper:

> Bill C-18, An Act respecting national transportation, be not now read a second time but that the Order be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject-matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Transport.

Indeed, I intend to go a step further because, while no one even remotely suggests this amendment might pass, I am of the opinion that an attempt might be made to have the Bill referred to the Standing Committee on Transport instead of a legislative committee.

I was a member of the Special Committee on the Reform of the House of Commons, better known as the McGrath committee. I can tell you that the recommendations having to do with legislative committees were carefully reasoned after a great deal of study, and in my opinion, at least, legislative committees to date have been working extremely well. In addition, standing committees with their new-found freedom have also, in my opinion, been working well.

I recently read in the press where the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport is reported to have said that his committee was breaking new ground when it dealt with the Port Authority. That is the role of the standing committees. The challenge for standing committees is immense. The possibilities for them are enormous. Why then refer this piece of legislation to a standing committee and break the new rules which have been working so well?

As is done in the normal course of events, there was a chairman appointed according to the new rules when the Bill was first introduced in the House. I am that chairman. While I do not particularly want to chair this Bill for my own sake, I do want it to go to a legislative committee. I have recently been given the job of chairing the legislative committee on Bill C-37 and that may keep me busy for a little while. I have, however, spent the last 14 years involved in the Transport Committee, sitting on it primarily when it was dealing with matters of air and rail, less frequently when it dealt with matters of water transport.

The clerk for the legislative committee on Bill C-18 was appointed at exactly the same time as I. The clerk who was chosen is one of the most knowledgeable in the field of transport. The clerk and I met and jointly requested a researcher who is equally well versed in this field. The researcher has been working steadily since November on the subject matter, preparing material for me as chairman in readiness for the Bill going to committee.

Since the matter is spelled out by the Clerk at the Table each day in the Orders of the Day as follows, "Resuming debate on the motion of the Minister of Transport—That Bill C-18, an Act respecting national transportation, be now read a second time and referred to a legislative committee", there has necessarily been a great deal of correspondence between persons who want to appear before the committee and myself. All of this correspondence has been answered and a list has been prepared.

Although this may be of no major significance, I, as chairman, have discussed the matter with the chairman of the comparable committee in the European Parliament which is dealing with the deregulation of transport. They are now making arrangements to come to Canada, at their expense, to discuss these very important matters on a joint basis with us.

The powers of the legislative committee are set out very clearly in Section 93(8)(a) which says that a legislative committee has exactly the same powers as the old standing committees had in dealing with legislation. The rule spells out clearly what is to be done, how, and when, and when the committee ceases to exist. The persons involved in a legislative committee to deal with Bill C-18 would very likely be the same persons who normally sit on the Standing Committee on Transport who are knowledgeable and familiar with the subject.

Reform, from the election of the Speaker down to the finest detail, in my opinion, has been well received in this House. I think it can be proven by example that the reform conditions have done the House a great deal of good. I see no justification for not dealing with this Bill, which is of major significance to the country, in exactly the same way. I strongly suggest that this is what should happen to it.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to make some very brief submissions on Bill C-18. Bill C-18 is an extensive and comprehensive piece of legislation comprised of approximately 370 pages. The Liberal Party supports in principle the concept of deregulation. However, we do have some very serious concerns about how the Government is proceeding with Bill C-18.

As has been indicated by other Hon. Members in the House, deregulation will affect every Canadian. A number of interest groups, organizations and companies directly affected by deregulation have expressed some very profound concerns with regard to this Bill. I have a number of press clippings which address Bill C-18.

A story in the Montreal Gazette on Tuesday, October 8, 1985, was headlined: "Deregulation will hurt us, CP Rail says". The headline to an editorial in the Winnipeg Free Press reads: "Deregulation dangerous". A story in the Winnipeg Free Press was titled: "Truckers warned province loser in deregulation". The Ottawa Citizen carried an article entitled: "Industry officials fear deregulation plan will run Canadian truckers off the road". The list goes on.

It is clear that the interest groups involved are somewhat concerned about the lack of consultation to date with regard to Bill C-18. The Transport Committee was allotted two months to study Freedom to Move. The committee was unable to visit Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, Quebec, Ontario, Saskatchewan, Alberta and Canada's North. More important, the Standing Committee on Transport has been unable to review airline deregulation in the United States which has been in place since 1978.

Given the implications of Bill C-18 and the effect it will have on Canadians, we believe that we should proceed more cautiously with it. The Bill is primarily designed to revamp the National Transportation Act which was brought in in 1967 by the Hon. Jack Pickersgill who was then the Minister of Transport in the administration of Lester Pearson. The stated purpose of Bill C-18 is to increase competition in the transportation sector by removing certain regulations which hinder the ability to compete. The modes of transportation affected by deregulation measures in this Bill are rail, air and trucking.

Canadians are asking themselves how deregulation will affect them and their families. We are told that as a result of deregulation the prices will be lower. We are also told that consumers will have more choice in modes of transportation.

The United States embarked upon deregulation in 1978. It is important to consider the American experience in addressing some of the concerns which have been raised in Canada. At times there appears to be a desire by the Government to march lock-step with the United States and deregulations there.

With regard to employment, we are concerned that employees in the airline industry will face massive lay-offs and displacement. That seems logical since one of the effects of deregulation will be that transportation companies will be able to cut costs. It seems logical that one of the ways to cut costs is to reduce the number of employees in any particular industry.

Deregulation was introduced in 1978 in the United States. From 1980 to 1985, 40,000 airline employees lost their jobs. What impact will Bill C-18 have on the employment picture in Canada? If the American experience is one we wish to look to, we can expect in Canada a considerable loss of jobs. The legislation contains no provision whatsoever to protect employment in the airline industry. There is nothing in this Bill to bind airline companies to compensate displaced workers or to give fair warning before layoffs.

It is believed that increased competition will lead to the cutting of costs, a movement towards a "no frills" strategy, route abandonment and a greater propensity to failure, all of which will lead to reduced employment opportunities and layoffs. Bill C-18 offers absolutely no provisions to offset the probable negative impact that deregulation would have on labour in the transportation sector, despite the evidence in black and white of the dislocation problems encountered in the United States as a result of deregulation.

At committee stage, when the Freedom to Move paper was considered, we strongly proposed that safeguards be legislated and that new labour management agreements be encouraged. Agreements dealing with security, classification and retraining in the airline industry would also ease the impact of employment loss. The major concern of the Liberal Party is the potential loss of employment here in Canada. We all know that unemployment is one of the biggest problems facing Canadians.

We are also concerned with respect to the issue of safety. We regret that the legislation contains no safeguards preventing situations which would effectively reduce safety standards in the airline industry. The American experience has shown us that this is a real danger. Our position with regard to safety is based on four major observations. First, deregulation brings on a substanatial increase in competition which in lean and more difficult times leads to few remaining options in cost-cutting strategies. In these stressful periods, a lesser managerial integrity will lead to cost-cutting in maintenance, monitoring, inspection and verification of aircraft. Second, deregulation strongly encourages new entries into the market by relaxing the regulations for entry. These new companies often enter with inexperience and improperly trained employees to maintain aircraft. Third, deregulation impacts on established and new carriers to demand concessions from their employees. These concessions often lead to longer working hours, stress, job insecurity, lower wages and fatigue, which are all causes of a higher risk of human error. Fourth, in the United States the Federal Aviation Administration in 1979 had 2,000 inspectors monitoring 237 air carriers. In 1984 it had 1,300 inspectors for 407 air carriers.

In closing, I would like to repeat our concerns. We support in principle the concept of deregulation, but we have some very serious concerns with regard to the method by which the Government is proposing to implement deregulation in the transportation industry in Canada.

Mr. Thomas Suluk (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, I am speaking on this Bill with very short notice because of all the games played by opposition Members. I was slated to speak as early as last December. Unfortunately, because of all the delays, I did not arrive until late last night after having been stuck in the North for a few days because of snowstorms and the lack of some alternative forms of transportation.

One of the reasons I participated in the Standing Committee on Transport is because I wanted to try and focus some attention on the Arctic regions of this country, which are very large, indeed. For example, my riding covers three time zones. It stretches from James Bay to the North Pole, from the southern tip of Baffin Island over past northern Quebec and then stretches over to the Beaufort Sea near the Yukon border.

Naturally, transportation is the key to the development or non-development of the Arctic regions.

I believe the North has the highest rate of transportation costs in the whole country, if not in the whole world. For example, I can travel from Ottawa to a place called Grise Fiord, the northernmost civilian community—there are other communities near the northern tip of Canada such as Eureka and Alert, but they are military—at a cost of $1,700 return. Because the scheduled airlines do not run for two more weeks, in order to visit a place like Grise Fiord I would have to charter back, because one obviously cannot sit for two weeks in a community of 200 in the winter-time with no daylight. I do not believe any parliamentarian would wish to spend two weeks in the northernmost community of Canada with no daylight at all. Therefore, I would have to charter back. It costs over $2,000 for a chartered flight from Grise Fiord to Resolute Bay.

The Northwest Territorial Airways run from Yellowknife, the capital of the Northwest Territories, to Frobisher Bay. Most people of Frobisher Bay—I suppose it is called "Iqaluit" nowadays—feel it might be the next capital of the new Government of Nunavut. However, that is another story, Mr. Speaker. A return airfare from the capital of the Northwest Territories to Iqaluit costs $1,700. For that money one can go from Montreal to Finland, to Leningrad, to Moscow, with the airfare including accommodation, plus meals, I heard, in Moscow and Leningrad.

I have tried to bring to the attention of this House and to the Committee that perhaps it is time the Government took another look at the North with some vision. Quite a few years ago, in the years of the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker, the Government dared to have a vision about the North. Now we have oil develoment in the Beaufort Sea. In fact, most people in the North, politicians included, are fighting over control of the Beaufort Sea. They are all trying to get a share of the revenues. But there are at least three or four Arctic regions for which no one has a vision at all. One is needed.

In the speech I might have read, had I the time, I would have brought to the attention of Hon. Members matters such as the creation of transportation links other than air links. Other links are needed because the terrain is too rugged, too uncertain, too remote and too large for the building of roads. It is just not economical. I am not sure that taxpayers in the south of Canada who pay taxes to keep the North running because it is part of the country know that many people in the North appreciate that. People in small remote communities have told me many times: "If you have an opportunity to talk to southern Candaians, the taxpayers, the Government and its representatives, show them some appreciation for us".

With respect to alternatives to transportation in the North, there are track vehicles. Out of eight, nine and sometimes ten months of the year in the North we have frost, snow, ice and temperatures below zero. In fact, I was in Gjoa Haven this week and the temperature was hovering around minus 42 degrees Celsius. Some planes are not even allowed to fly at certain temperature ranges in the North. But there is an alternative form of travel other than air travel. It is affordable, low cost track vehicles. I do not know why the Government in these many years has not thought to invest perhaps a few hundred thousand dollars in track vehicles. In my region which is called the District of Keewatin there is a Bombardier track vehicle. It provides passenger transport and is owned by a local entrepreneur who operates from communities such as Eskimo Point to Whale Cove to Rankin Inlet, twice weekly at half the cost of air fare. A great many people use it. It is not very comfortable and sometimes it takes all day to get from point A to point B, but it is the only affordable method of travel. Many regions, such as the Baffin region which is mountainous, cannot afford the capital expense of buying vehicles such as this, but Governments can.

With the recent interest in sovereignty in the North and the interest which Canadians have shown regarding the North, transportation will be the key not only to the development of the North but also to the defence of the Arctic region.

I will end my speech here, Mr. Speaker. Had I the time, I would go into such matters as how good this transportation measure will be for Canada. But since I do not have the time I will not go through the motions of saying how good it is.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I listened with a great deal of interest to the Hon. Member's speech. He provided some very insightful comments about the situation in northern Canada. I know that I speak for my Party when I say that we would be quite prepared to give unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member to continue, if he so wishes, in terms of his observations which have been an important contribution to the debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the Hon. Member's motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Suluk: Mr. Speaker, I now have some speech notes which were brought to me from my office. First, perhaps I should ascertain how much time I have.

Mr. Gauthier: A reasonable amount of time.

Mr. Suluk: I thank Hon. Members opposite.

I did not have the opportunity to elaborate on some of the ways in which air transportation has developed the northern part of our great country. There are still some companies in the North which rely on such outmoded planes as DC-3s, the old workhorses of the Second World War. I do not know if they date back to the First World War, but equipment such as that is still being used. There are a few airlines such as N.W.T. Air which use Electra four-engine aircraft. There are airlines such as Nordair which fly from Montreal to places such as Frobisher Bay, Resolute Bay and Nanisivik. Nanisivik is where one of the northern-most mines is located. It contributes to the economy of the North, regardless of whether or not some people from the North say that mining is detrimental to the environment. Their comments also apply to oil development.

Perhaps I should dwell briefly on the alternative forms of travel that are available to the North which have not been utilized over the last few years. In the first speech I ever made to the House I tried to convince parliamentarians and the Government that they should provide some form of subsidy, either by way of subsidy to the airline companies or to the people directly so that they could afford to travel in the North. Air travel is the only way of travelling in the North. I do not wish to say that Canadians, or anyone in the world for that matter, cannot get from point A to point B in the North. Rather, I would say that there are about 25 to 30 remote settlements in the Artic region, not including communities in northern Quebec, northern Ontario, Labrador and Yukon, which have modern airports and modern airstrips. They have all the necessary facilities. They also have regional airlines and charter companies. They do not lack any of those facilities. They do not lack airplanes. What they lack is the ability to travel, and the freedom to travel.

When I was in Gjoa Haven last week I was talking on a local open-line program. One of the questions I received was about Freedom to Move, the deregulation of the airline industry. One of the questions people asked me was why southern Canadians have access to competitive airlines and air fares, but in the North this will not be available? The answer I gave, which is quite true, is that without exception all the northern airlines that made representations to the Standing Committee on Transport said they do not want change, they do not want competition, they do not want anybody else encroaching on their profitable businesses and the monopolies that they have. However, if you travel from Montreal to Frobisher Bay, or from Winnipeg to Rankin Inlet, or from Edmonton to Yellowknife, there will be competition. But there will not be competition within the northern region. That is the concern which I have tried to bring forward.

I know that Canadians and the Government are already paying a lot to keep the North operating. Family allowances are provided, welfare is provided directly and indirectly through the Government of the Northwest Territories. That Government receives its principal operating budget from the federal Government, and directly or indirectly from southern Canadian taxpayers. Not so long ago I expressed appreciation for that.

Canadians also are concerned about the sovereignty of the Arctic regions. Most of us in the North talk about who may be playing tag under the Arctic ice with Soviet and American submarines. Yet Canadian submarines cannot go under the ice because we do not have the long-range capabilities of other nations. The Arctic and the North belong to Canada, but we have to rely on other NATO countries to look after the Arctic regions for us. It is time Canadians woke up to the fact that the North is a very large region.

I do not know whether providing assistance to 17,000 people would be considered a major expense, but nevertheless there are many people in the North who feel that perhaps one day the Government or Canadians may stop looking at them with favour, and one day they might have funding cut off. That is the impression held by some people. They hear on the radio, they watch on television and in the news that governments are making cut-backs, and how they might cut family allowances, and things of that nature. I try to tell them that in southern parts people tend to exaggerate a little. However, that is the nature of politics.

I wish to return to the issue of providing subsidies to airline companies, or the people who travel. If those two are not possible, then perhaps we should turn to some companies in southern Canada, of which there are many, that have done research for defence companies, or for other companies such as those involved in the oil industry, and must have developed vehicles that could operate efficiently, cheaply, and economically in the Arctic regions in the sea ice. Why not utilize what has already been proven to be capable of running in cold regions, and have those vehicles used as alternates to building roads?

Obviously, there are no great riches in the Arctic at the present time. Mines are closing. In my riding, for example, Cullaton Lake is closing, Pine Point is closing, Nanisivik maybe has two years left. In spite of the fact that many Canadians may hear about opposition to development, there are people who rely on employment from those few jobs that the companies provide. It is very expensive to build roads. There are only two or three months of shipping season open in the summertime. In some places ships cannot go at all. For example, a place called Pelly Bay on the north Arctic coast is a small community where, in most decades, the ice never leaves. Icebreakers may be able to go there, but all the houses, all the buildings, all the food,— everything comes by air all the way from Yellowknife. The people in those communities are expected to pay for canned goods, milk, bread, and vegetables, if they are available, with the income received from family allowances or welfare.

Some people may have heard about the high birth rate in the North. That is because people have learned to use family allowances as a means of income, because there is nothing else. The people used to be able to sell fur-bearing animals to the Hudson's Bay Company. In most cases now the Hudson's Bay Company will not take a second look at them. The seal industry in Baffin Island used to provide at least a semblance of independence and some pride, but that too is gone.

I know that Canadians are generous because they provide assistance to starving people in Ethiopia and in other parts of the world. I also know that if Canadians wished, they could provide the necessary services to the people up there.There are not many of them; there are only 17,000 people. In fact, there are about 20,000 or 25,000 people in the whole northern Canadian Arctic region. I know Canadians can be generous. I know the Government can be generous and can overrule some of the strict guidelines which prevent innovative development by providing transportation facilities other than through airlines.

I believe I have sufficiently expounded on what living in the North is like. Perhaps I should mention my experience in a little place called Whale Cove in southern Keewatin, just north of the Province of Manitoba. It faces some of the highest prices of any community in terms of canned milk and bread. I once visited there and proceeded to buy a small box of canned goods and a few other staples. Do you know, Mr. Speaker, that I did not have enough money in my pocket at that time to pay for the box of groceries because it cost over $100? One has to be up there to believe it. One has to go up there to believe some of the unbelievable costs faced by the people there, especially welfare recipients.

I am not talking about territorial and federal Government employees. They have benefits coming out of their ears. In fact many government people are lobbying me now and saying "if you touch our northern benefits and our holidays to the south, we will have a very difficult time". It is very difficult to have any sympathy at all for people who say things of that nature, when one knows that there are people who are trying to live on welfare.

Just a few weeks ago I almost got into trouble with territorial civil servants because I lobbied on behalf of welfare recipients, so that they could receive a portion of their welfare cheques in cash to buy gas and oil to go hunting for a hundred pounds of meat rather than purchasing expensive canned food from the co-op or from Hudson's Bay.

It is difficult for many people to make a living up North, yet civil servants have northern allowances, isolation pay, housing benefits such as staff housing, and goodness knows what else. However, we hear them say that because the Government is going to tax them to make it equitable, they will have a very difficult time. I have a very difficult time believing something like this because I know people who do not have jobs. There are not very many jobs in that region. Most Canadians probably know that. It is very difficult for people who live on welfare, on family allowances, or on old age pensions. They cannot order food from the south as can government employees. They do not have the knowledge and they do not have communication with southern suppliers. Fortunately they can at least get some country food such as caribou and fish. Their livelihood from fur-bearing animals has already been destroyed. We are told that about "fur-made-Canada"; that fur traders who went from the East to the West, to the interior, and to the Arctic regions built this country. Unfortunately, I suppose, the lack of a market for the commodity which built the country is now destroying part of the culture of the northern region.

This is why I have tried very hard to convince the Government and the House to find it in their hearts to provide a small amount of equity and, at the very least, to start research into what alternative forms of travel can be provided for the North.

We all know that travelling by air is very expensive and very difficult, not only for people who must fly but also for those who operate aircraft in minus 40 degree temperatures. They have to heat buildings and to keep their airplanes running. They try to maintain a semblance of happiness for the small flying public who are disappointed many times when airplanes do not arrive because they are frozen solid or fuel lines have been frozen. Those are the kinds of conditions flying companies have to face. I am not saying that they are the culprits.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hesitate to interrupt this eloquent portrayal of the North, which I think has done all of us good. I just remind my colleague that he has been accorded indefinite time. Given what my colleagues and I consider the very great value of this eloquent portrayal of the needs of the North, I hope he will continue until he has finished communicating all he wishes to communicate, and all that I think we need to hear.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I believe the Hon. Member is aware that he has unlimited time.

Mr. Suluk: Mr. Speaker, I was trying to find a way to end my speech, and I was beginning to find that I was digging myself deeper into a hole. I am glad that the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) raised a point of order. It woke me up and brought me back down to earth.

I think I have provided sufficient examples of the situation to Hon. Members. Frankly, my train of thought has been broken, so I will sit in my place and try to collect my thoughts. Perhaps, in a little while, I may be able to ask a question or make a comment. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for according me this time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock later this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF LAY-OFFS AT MONCTON SHOPS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, CN strikes again. I have just heard that more lay-offs have been announced by CN at the Moncton shops. One hundred and sixty-two workers have received their lay-offs effective immediately; 55 are eligible for early retirement, and 232 will be transferred. This makes a total of 449 jobs lost to southeast New Brunswick, and a grand total of 852 jobs lost since September, 1985. It is a darn shame. How can the Government allow this kind of action by a Crown corporation to continue? How can the Government even pretend that it is looking after Atlantic Canada?

[Translation]

With respect to the Atlantic region, Mr. Speaker, the behaviour of this Government is shameful, and it has shirked all responsibilities.

Where are our Ministers? What is their role in Cabinet? Or are they quite simply inert puppets strung up by a heartless Prime Minister, a Prime Minister who could not possibly care less about regional development?

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

INCREASE IN HOMICIDES—CALL FOR DEBATE

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, today we have unfortunately witnessed the tragic murder of yet another Canadian police officer, the second in less than 30 days. Therefore, in light of the 100 per cent increase in police killings since the last execution in 1962, and the 116 per cent increase in homicides for the same period, it has become imperative that Canadians be given the chance for open, honest dialogue on the subject of capital punishment.

The current statistics published on page 18 of a report from the Centre for Justice Statistics shows a comparison with the United States. While American murder rates, since bringing back the death sentence in 1976, have radically decreased, the number of murders in Canada is on the rise. In the United States in 1984 there were 2,320 fewer homicide offences than in 1982. In Canada there were 22 more homicides in 1985 than in 1984. Therefore, while it is obvious that capital punishment will not prevent all homicides, there is clear evidence to support the fact that it could have stopped some, such as serial killers, kidnap killers, hostage taking killers, and planned, deliberate, first-degree murderers.

YUKON

BY-ELECTION VICTORY FOR NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY CANDIDATE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, all Yukoners can be proud of the election yesterday of Danny Joe to the Yukon Legislature for the riding Tatchun. Not only is this a victory for Danny Joe, a hunter and trapper and respected member of the community, it is a victory for the fine work of the New Democratic Government of the Yukon.

Since first elected, Tony Penikett and the New Democrats have reduced unemployment from 18 per cent to 9 per cent. Housing starts are improving, construction is increasing, and all economic indicators are up. This is what Yukoners can expect from a Government that took action to keep the Cyprus Anvil mine running and stepped in to save Watson Lake Forest Products for which it received 100 per cent support from the community.

Not content to rest on an already impressive record, the Government is working to settle land claims and has now embarked on Yukon 2000 to ensure continued economic prosperity.

By electing Danny Joe, the residents of Tatchun have selected an excellent representative, one who will stand up and represent their interests. They have also sent a ringing endorsation of the policies of the Tony Penikett Government, policies that see the Government working together with Yukoners for the benefit of all.

INCOME TAX ACT

DELETION OF SECTION 31 ADVOCATED

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, when are we going to get Section 31 of the Income Tax Act out of our legislation? It is discriminatory, a bane to farmers, an embarrassment to bureaucrats, and is interpreted various ways by the courts.

Farming requires capital. If a farmer borrows the capital from the banks in order to keep his farm going until it makes a profit, he may claim all expenses. But if the same farmer, instead of borrowing the capital, takes another job or position in addition to working on the farm, and then uses his earnings to keep the farm viable until it becomes profitable, he is not considered a farmer under this section and may not claim all of his farm expenses.

Farming, particularly where livestock is involved, is a long-term operation. It takes several years before a farm or ranch becomes profitable. Because of the harassment under this section by Revenue officials, some excellent farmers have become frustrated and sold their holdings, and agriculture has lost valuable farmers.

Yes, I am all in favour of tax reform, but let us clean up our own legislation like deleting Section 31 from the Act. That will be real tax reform.

PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS

ANNIVERSARY OF GREAT FIRE OF 1916—MEMORIAL PLAQUE PROPOSED TO COMMEMORATE EMPLOYEES WHO LOST THEIR LIVES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, 71 years ago on this date a tragic event took place on Parliament Hill when a fire raged through the Centre Block, claiming the lives of seven persons and destroying our Parliament Buildings. One of those who died in the fire was a Member of Parliament. Although a plaque bearing his name is erected in the lobby in front of the House of Commons, there is no mention of the names of the employees who lost their lives.

• (1405)

Since I first came to the House as a Member of Parliament in 1984, I have several times raised the issue that a plaque should be erected to honour those employees who died, not only in order to honour them but to pay tribute to all employees who have helped to make the Parliament Buildings work. As the only former staff member ever to have been elected to the House of Commons, I hope the day will come very soon when we may all join together to unveil such a plaque. Perhaps the same anniversary next year would be the appropriate time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ABORTION

IMPACT ON ADOPTION DELAYS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I am very concerned about the number of abortions performed in Canada and I feel that not enough attention is paid to adoption as a solution to problem pregnancies. The number of infants available for adoption has fallen drastically and the average length of time prospective adoptive parents must wait is now five years.

In 1984-85 the Province of Saskatchewan placed only 137 infants for adoption while there was a waiting list of close to 1,000 families. In British Columbia, the province with the highest abortion rate, the adoption waiting list for the same year listed well over 2,500 families while only 147 healthy infants were placed by that province for adoption.

Clearly there are thousands of Canadian families eagerly awaiting to adopt children. I believe this option is not stressed enough to women seeking abortions. We should work to dispel the myths surrounding adoption and to promote it as the act of love that it most surely is, both on the part of the mother giving birth and on the part of the adoptive family.

ORGANIZATIONS SEEKING MEETINGS WITH MINISTER

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of the House the fact that there are Canadians concerned about rural and urban post office service who are trying to meet with the Minister. For example, CUEPS, the organization that represents suburban Canadians who want fair service like their neighbours receive has been trying to meet with the Minister since last November when he cancelled his meeting with its representatives. These people have a right to have their grievances heard and the Minister has a responsibility to meet with them.

Yesterday the Minister said in the House that he would meet with Rural Dignity, the group concerned with rural postal service. He told the group to come in the next day, thus giving it less than 24 hours' notice. The group could not meet that deadline and he has refused to provide an alternate date. It is time for the Minister to realize that he must have the input of the public if he is to run the Post Office in any decent fashion whatsoever.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

APPOINTMENT OF AMBASSADOR TO EUROPEAN ECONOMIC COMMUNITY

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Government appointed Daniel Molgat as Ambassador to the European Community in Brussels. Mr. Molgat, who was Canada's Ambassador to Spain, will now perform a very crucial role for Canada because the international dispute between the United States and the European Economic Community over grain was settled on January 29, 1987.

Mr. Molgat, a 26-year veteran of Canada's diplomatic service, will bring a wealth of experience to the job, thus ensuring a solid reputation for and protection of Canada's interests. Members of the Opposition should be applauding the appointment of this extremely well qualified individual. Perhaps they are silent because Mr. Molgat is the younger brother of Liberal Senator Gil Molgat. This appointment, along with many others the Government has made, shows the Government's commitment to quality and excellence in selecting individuals to serve Canada.

SOCIAL SECURITY

NEED TO MAINTAIN JOB-CREATION PROGRAMS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the newspaper La Presse has just published five articles which clearly illustrate the catastrophic situation of poor people in Greater Montreal and Quebec generally. These articles indicate that more than half a million people in the Montreal metropolitan area live under the threshold of poverty and have to line up to get a bowl of soup. The articles also point out an 11-year life expectancy gap between the residents of Saint-Henri and those of Mont-Royal.

We are told as well about the appaling living conditions of younger people who, forced to make do with meagre social assistance benefits, must also queue up in bread lines.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, both the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) and the Minister of State (Youth) (Mr. Charest) ought to read these articles if only to appreciate the fact that, contrary to what they claim, instead of slashing into job creation programs—such as community development or Challenge 87 projects—and shifting them onto the private sector, they should continue to fund them in support of charitable organizations which help people get out of their misery.

POLITICAL PARTIES

MR. BROADBENT'S MESSAGE

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, you can imagine my surprise a few days ago when I found in my Jonquière mail box—as many of my constituents did in theirs—a letter entitled "Message from Ed Broadbent, MP for Oshawa".

Mr. Speaker, I want to denounce this initiative on the part of the Leader of the New Democratic Party who uses his privileges for partisan activities to make a phoney survey among Canadians.

Here is the kind of comment to which taxpayers are expected to respond: Yes, I think that a tax reform guaranteeing that each taxpayer pays his fair share is necessary. Low or average income Canadians should not have to bear an unfair tax burden. Can anyone be against that?

Here is another typical question, Mr. Speaker: Yes, I support you when you advocate fair taxation! Mr. Speaker, can anyone be against fair taxation?

This approach must be denounced. It is unbelievable that such questions should even be put to Canadians. It is a waste of public funds, altogether shameful. This phoney survey is so ridiculous that Canadians are not even given an opportunity to say no. I have a copy here, Mr. Speaker.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—DEMAND FOR CANCELLATION

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), recently attended the national convention of the Canadian Paperworkers Union. The delegates asked him to take a message to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) of Canada. I do so on his and their behalf.

More than 10,000 members of the Canadian Paperworkers Union from coast to coast have signed cards to send to the Prime Minister expressing their concern about the Government's free trade talks. The cards say: "No to free trade. Sir, you have no mandate to negotiate our way of life. You have no mandate to negotiate away the jobs of one million Canadian workers. I demand you withdraw from free trade and fulfil your promise of jobs, jobs, jobs."

We in the NDP are proud to work hand in hand with these 10,000 workers and the thousands more they represent. Let us cancel the free trade madness now before we give away any more of our resources.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

PROPOSED FISHING AGREEMENT IN NORTHERN ONTARIO

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, once again in northern Ontario sincere and determined efforts are being made to fashion a fishing agreement with the Indian people of that region. The reaction of some non-native persons to this process is disturbing and, in some cases, disgraceful. Aboriginal rights are recognized in the Canadian Constitution. The most basic and primary of these rights relate to hunting, fishing and trapping. Treaties did not destroy aboriginal rights but confirmed them, and provided for a sharing of natural resources with the newcomers.

The proposed fishing agreement in northern Ontario calls for co-management arrangements for the use and conservation of this resource. It is a reasonable way to proceed. Those who oppose the negotiated approach should consider that the alternative, court action, could lead to a decision upholding an unfettered aboriginal right to fish in traditional territories.

EXTERNAL AID

CANADIAN INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT AGENCY—PURCHASE OF GRAIN TO ASSIST POOR COUNTRIES

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Speaker, it is a cruel irony that in a world where many people still go to bed hungry every night, many countries, including Canada, worry about how to market food surpluses. That is why I was pleased to hear yesterday that CIDA will spend some $450 million on food aid and development over the next two years and that most of the money will be spent on the purchase of grains and oilseeds from western Canadian farmers as part of our contribution to an international world food program.

This is an idea which is already supported by many farmers in the west and indeed all across Canada, who participate in programs like that of the Canadian Food Grains Bank. This particular organization was funded by the Mennonite Central Committee some three years ago and now is supported by six other church organizations. Farmers from across the country contribute grain and money and that is matched or more than matched by CIDA.

While some of CIDA's projects are occasionally and, I think, properly subject to public criticism, I do believe the vast majority of Canadians support this very practical program which ensures that some of our food surpluses are distributed directly to those who need them most.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

BELL CANADA—RATE REBALANCING APPLICATION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, recently the CRTC directed telephone companies to reduce their long-distance rates. Naturally the bulk of the benefits will go to large business corporations. Today, apparently, Bell is going to make an application to the CRTC to permit a rate rebalancing program. That would mean a minimum increase of $1 per month for every home-owner customer of Bell Canada. We oppose such an increase because it will mean the end of the universal telephone service which Canadians have enjoyed. We call upon the CRTC to reject that proposal of Bell Canada.

FORESTRY

IMPORTANCE TO NOVA SCOTIA AND NATIONAL ECONOMY

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, forestry is of special concern to me. As a Nova Scotian, I am very concerned about an industry which directly and indirectly provides jobs for nearly 30,000 Nova Scotians. As a Canadian, I am concerned about an industry which puts $28 billion into the national economy each year and provides 350,000 jobs. With regard to exports, we are all aware of the large amount of money which forest products earn. Last year that amounted to more than $16 billion. According to the Financial Post, that will amount to $17.5 billion this year. That is impressive.

As an M.P. from Cape Breton I can say that we were very pleased that the federal Government invested $10 million in our forests in 1986. Cape Breton is the home of Stora Forest Industries, an important Christmas tree industry.

We are all aware of the importance of a healthy forest industry. The federal Government realizes the importance of forestry to Canadians. Since 1984 national forest renewal spending has more than quadrupled. This kind of commitment is essential if our forest industry is to continue to prosper. I urge the renewal of forestry agreements with Nova Scotia which are due to expire at the end of March.

House of Commons

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ANNIVERSARY OF GREAT FIRE OF 1916

Mr. Speaker: I would like to bring to the attention of all Hon. Members a matter which was raised at the beginning of proceedings this morning, that is, the wooden replica of the Mace which is on the Table today. I make this explanation in the interest of Hon. Members who did not hear it this morning and of the many members of the public who are present, on the suggestion of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister, the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis), following upon the very excellent statement made by the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria).

The Chair believes it is very important that we be reminded of the terrible events of this day, 71 years ago, when the Centre Block of the House of Commons burned. It is in memory of those who lost their lives in that fire, and in memory of those who had the courage and vision to rebuild, that we place the wooden replica of the Mace on the Table on this day each year. I know all Hon. Members would want the Chair to bring that to the attention of the Chamber and the public of Canada.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

OERLIKON AFFAIR—REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Last night on television, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs admitted that Senator Jean Bazin had approached him twice about the billion-dollar contract awarded to Oerlikon: first Montreal, on March 14, and subsequently in Vancouver, on May 1 at the opening of Expo 86. This revelation is a direct contradiction of the previous version of the facts provided by the Government with respect to the role played by this close friend of the Prime Minister. Why didn't the Government tell the truth to start with? Doesn't this convince the Prime Minister that a full public inquiry is necessary to bring to light all the facts connected with the contract and this whole affair?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did not see the report in question, but I can inform the Hon. Member that on Tuesday, January 13, I said that my principal secretary, Mr. Roy, met with Mr. Bazin, and on Wednesday, January 14, 1987, I was informed of the facts by Mr. Roy. That is the information I received and brought to the attention of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, and there is nothing in what was said that would lead me to contradict any part of any of my statements.

• (1420)

SENATOR BAZIN'S ACTIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I refer directly to the role of Senator Jean Bazin. On January 18 Jean Bazin issued a statement through the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations of the Senate with these words: "When the Gestion Farillon file was transferred by Oerlikon Aerospace to the firm of Byers Casgrain, Jean Bazin did not handle this file personally". The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has admitted he was approached twice by Mr. Bazin about the Oerlikon project, long before Mr. Bazin claims he became involved in this file.

Does the Prime Minister really expect Canadians to believe his close friend and political organizer of Quebec was not lobbying the Minister responsible for the awarding of this $1 billion contract? Why does the Prime Minister not allow a full public inquiry so that Canadians can draw their own conclusions about what happened in this whole mess?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think that question was answered yesterday in the House. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs elaborated on it outside the House. It was a conversation en passant. When the defence critic for the Liberal Party was asked on the CTV Question Period program if he had any reason to believe, apart from the land scam itself, that there was anything questionable about the tendering process for the defence contract, he said: "No, I do not". What we are having here is the Liberal Party trying to cast a broad net so it can catch with innuendo, smear, and suspicion any parties which may have had any interest at all in this issue.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We are not basing these questions on innuendo. We are basing them on a statement given to a reputable journalist about the position and connection of Jean Bazin in this contract.

SENATOR BAZIN'S CONVERSATIONS WITH MINISTER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): On January 20 the Prime Minister said in this House: "Mr. Bazin is a lawyer, he is not a lobbyist". Could the Prime Minister, or the Deputy Prime Minister for that matter, tell us what legal issues about Oerlikon were discussed by Mr. Bazin with the Minister for Consumer and Corporate Affairs both at the Tory Convention in March and at the opening of Expo in Vancouver on May 1? Why does the Prime Minister not admit that Mr. Bazin was not acting as a lawyer, he was acting as a lobbyist, and was aware of this file well before he admitted it in that statement from the Senate?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has attended a few cocktail parties in his day, as well as have other Members of Parliament and other Ministers. Quite frankly, I understand the issue was raised as a conversation piece during the course of a cocktail reception. I am sure the right hon. gentleman has raised certain issues which interested him with other parties. What is the most important thing here is the fact that when the Prime Minister was made aware of certain irregularities, he took the position then and there to initiate a police inquiry, to relieve a Minister of his responsibilities, and in doing so he has acted in the public interest.

OERLIKON CONTRACT—TENDERING PROCESS

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister not agree that there are now sufficient grounds to call for a public inquiry, in light of the fact that during the Prime Minister's absence on his trip throughout Africa it has been learned that a former Minister of Defence of his Government had serious misgivings about recommending Oerlikon for the low-level air defence contract on the basis of security and supply, and that the former Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion for his Government, had serious concerns about the economic benefits package which the Oerlikon bid had put forward? In fact we now learn that the former Associate Defence Minister was personally lobbied by Senator Bazin long before he publicly stated he was involved in the Oerlikon file.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think all we know on this side is what the Hon. Member said on Question Period over a week ago. He said he knew of no irregularities whatsoever relating to the tendering process. If there is a serious question outstanding it is why the Hon. Member keeps changing his story. Are we to believe what he said yesterday and this morning, or are we to believe what he said a week or 10 days ago?

The Oerlikon system was best on price by $150 million. It was rated best technically and in terms of do-ability, and rated best in terms of Canadian content. If it is the position of the Liberal Party that Ministers should have overruled the recommendation of the officials who made those evaluations, and awarded the contract to someone else, let us hear that from them.

• (1425)

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, just for the record, I have been very consistent with my side of the story, which is more than I can say for the Government.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Why does he not have the courage to call for a public inquiry so that we can have all of the facts put before an impartial inquiry and so that Canadians can once again have their faith restored in the integrity of the political system which the Government is flouting?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Government has courage. It has acted. It has initiated an RCMP investigation, full and unfettered, notwithstanding the fact that Members opposite would like to interfere and have us interfere in the process.

I might add that yesterday, and last night on television, the Hon. Member made a very strong allegation about there being a short list with regard to professionals and employees that the Oerlikon firm had to hire. Last night when Oerlikon was asked in the company of its attorneys whether or not the Hon. Member was correctly quoted, he undertook to clarify and correct his allegations immediately. We have a news story emanating from this Member every day. As the Minister of National Defence has said, what story are we to believe from him today?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. However, before I ask it I would like to compliment the Prime Minister on his recent visit to the front line states of southern Africa.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I commend him for what he had to say there. In so doing I am sure I speak in this particular instance for the vast majority of Canadians who were pleased to see him doing what he did.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I would now like to come back to domestic matters, something a little different.

While the Prime Minister was away the Government of Canada and the Government of France jointly announced a totally unacceptable deal aimed at resolving the dispute over territorial waters off St. Pierre and Miquelon. I have a copy of a letter sent by the Premier of Newfoundland to the Prime Minister just before Christmas in which the Premier of Newfoundland states: "The Government of Newfoundland would be totally opposed to any proposal to increase the quotas being offered to France".

Given all the options that were open to the Government of Canada why did the Government choose the one option to which the Premier of Newfoundland was specifically opposed?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend for his complimentary remarks. I promise him I will not hold them against him.

Earlier today I had a conversation with the Premier of Newfoundland. Senior officials will be visiting with him on Thursday. The Minister of Transport will be visiting with him as previously arranged on Friday, and we will have conversations later.

Our sole objective in this matter was to achieve a settlement that would improve the fishery for Atlantic Canada in all of its complexity. It is not a simple or easy issue. The spirit that motivated us was exactly the same as the spirit that motivated myself and the Government in regard to settling the Atlantic Accord with Newfoundland, a matter which had festered for some 15 years. We are interested in helping Newfoundland bolster its resources. That is why we have proceeded along these lines.

GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister did not deal with the question. No one has questioned the motive. The motive was to get an accord. That is what the Government of Canada has been pursuing for some time. Giving the French additional fishing rights off the coast of Newfoundland is a strange way of getting an accord.

Did the Prime Minister explain to Premier Peckford why the Government of Canada did just the opposite to what the Premier requested him to do in his letter before Christmas?

• (1430)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think that my hon. friend is in error. This does not constitute a definitive document that will resolve the fishery dispute. What has been negotiated thus far is an undertaking to attempt to conclude an arrangement that may very well resolve the matter as an interim arrangement.

I point out to my friend that what we have achieved does not in any way constitute a definitive resolution of the fisheries dispute. In point of fact, I tell my friend in fairness that an analysis of the document will reveal that in terms of zone 2J+3KL we have not given up a single codfish. All matters are there for discussion by the principal parties. All substantive issues are to be addressed in this negotiation. We can do that consistent with the interests of Newfoundland and Labrador, which have always motivated this Government.

OVERFISHING BY FRENCH VESSELS—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT CANCEL AGREEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): My supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Everyone in Atlantic Canada, and the Government of Canada, knows that the French have been overfishing the stock there for years. Everyone now knows that the Government of Canada has offered an additional 15,000 tonnes of fish to the French. That is the offer.

Mr. Crosbie: Completely untrue.

Mr. Broadbent: I wish to ask the Prime Minister this. Is he now in the process of revising this understanding or agreement? Is he prepared to meet with the request of the Premier of Newfoundland who today at a press conference called upon the Government of Canada to scrap this unacceptable interim agreement?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when I was away I was surprised to hear the Leader of the NDP talking about gunboat diplomacy in regard to this issue. Maybe they will join NATO now.

We have taken a very constructive and mature attitude in regard to a difficult problem. The failure to begin the process of resolving this matter would mean the reversion to the 1972 treaty negotiated by the previous Liberal Government, which document gave the French the unquantified and perpetual right to fish in Canada's 200-mile zone. The French contend that that includes cod in the 2J+3KL zone. It is because of that disaster brought about by a treaty undertaken by the previous Government, and because of the problems in 3PS as indicated by my hon. friend, that a global solution is required.

There are serious problems in regard to that resource in Newfoundland. The option was completely unacceptable. We are now moving ahead to develop this properly in conjunction with the people and the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER SEND DIPLOMATIC NOTE TO PRESIDENT OF FRANCE

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): My question is directed to the Prime Minister. It has to do with the same agreement that was signed by Canada and France on the fishery. It also has to do with the agreement that for the first time allowed the French access to the northern cod stocks. The Prime Minister has stated that this agreement of 1972 has done a lot of things. I wish to inform the Prime Minister, and all Members of the House, that the 1972 agreement ended in May of 1986.

In light of all the matters that have gone on in this deal, will the Prime Minister write a strong diplomatic note to the President and Prime Minister of France to inform them that Canada will not live up to the terms of the agreement that was just signed?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend says for the first time the French will be given authorization with regard to the northern cod. As I understand it, as a result of membership in the European Common Market the French have been fishing this northern cod for many years.

The Hon. Member is waving his head. But I think that is absolutely the case. The problem was brought about by an agreement undertaken by the Liberals. We did not give the French anything, the Liberals gave the French unquantified perpetual rights to fish in a 200-mile zone. It is your disaster that we are trying to correct.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES PRIOR TO SIGNING OF AGREEMENTS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I can understand the frustration of the Prime Minister in this deal, because he has alienated every fisherman in Atlantic Canada, including all the Newfoundlanders.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Henderson: My supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. In the spirit of good, co-operative federalism, will the Prime Minister commit himself today that neither he nor his Government will sign any more bilateral agreements with any country without prior consultation and approval from the provinces where the people and the resources are affected by such agreements?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated the nature of the interim arrangement which allows us to consider the possibility of entering into an agreement. We have not given away a single codfish, not a single one.

Mr. Nystrom: Not one?

Mr. Mulroney: Not one in the contested zone, as my hon. friend knows. He refers to frustration and embarrassment. If anyone is frustrated and embarrassed, it should be the Liberals who entered into this treaty with France which gave perpetual rights, and most embarrassed should be the Leader of the Opposition who was then Minister of Finance in the Government that approved this horrendous document.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POSSIBLE USE OF SANCTIONS BY CANADA

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and it has to do with the same issue.

The Prime Minister's remarks confirm that neither the Liberals nor the Tories are prepared to stand up for the interests of Canada.

Mr. Crosbie: On to the gunboats!

Mr. Rodriguez: There is grave concern in Atlantic Canada and across the country that this Government has an inability to negotiate toughly when it comes to the interests of Canada. Canadians are well aware of the fact that when the EEC countries wished access to Canadian stocks offshore, they were prepared to threaten all types of trade sanctions. I want to ask the Prime Minister this. Instead of buckling under and giving away the store, did the Government consider using the type of sanctions which could have forced France to sit down and accept third party arbitration?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): The NDP is now suggesting in its solution to a difficult, complex, and sensitive issue that Canada declare war on France.

Mr. Broadbent: Oh, come on!

Mr. Mulroney: That Canada indulge in recrimination—

Mr. Keeper: It is better than surrender.

Mr. Mulroney: That Canada indulge in thoughtless counteractions of this type.

We have said that the issue is complex. We have not surrendered a single codfish. We recognize the importance of this to Newfoundland, Labrador, Nova Scotia, and Atlantic Canada. We recognize the imperatives that exist because of the agreement negotiated by the Liberals, the treaty of 1972, to which we would revert in the absence of an undertaking.

I am sure my hon. friend would agree that in this matter the proof of the pudding is in the eating. The Government stood up vigorously and strongly for the farmers of western Canada. We will stand up and defend the interests of the fishermen of Newfoundland and Labrador.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NORTHERN COD STOCKS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Prime Minister one simple question. Is he telling Newfoundlanders, and this House, that the French will not be allowed to take any northern cod stocks under this agreement?

Mr. Crosbie: There is no agreement yet.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I am saying that the French are presently taking northern cod. They have been taking it for many years.

Mr. de Jong: And they will be continuing.

Mr. Mulroney: They have also been overfishing in 3PS. In our judgment there has been a serious depreciation of the stock because of the absence of an interim arrangement and a negotiated settlement. It is because of the extremely damaging consequences that are contained in a possible reversion to the provisions of the 1972 treaty that we have tried in a mature and proper way to negotiate a comprehensive solution to a very difficult matter.

I would hope that my hon. friend would give us support as we try to help the long-term interests of the fishermen of Newfoundland, rather than jingoistic slogans which ill-behoove a socialist who should be standing up for Canada as opposed to taking positions that are no longer acceptable to anybody.

REQUEST FOR RECALL OF CANADIAN AMBASSADOR FROM FRANCE

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I wish to correct the record, because the Prime Minister has misled the House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1440)

Mr. Rompkey: I want to quote from a document issued in 1980 by the Minister of Fisheries which says that the French vessels will be permitted to take, in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, fish until May 15, 1986, and that beyond that date vessels from metropolitan France will no longer be permitted to fish in the Gulf. In view of the legitimate requests of the Premier of Newfoundland this morning as an alternative to this sell-out of the northern cod, will the Prime Minister accede to these four reasonable alternative demands for settling this important issue: first, recall the Canadian Ambassador; second, withdraw port privileges from the French; third, reconsider trade relations; and fourth, reconsider the Prime Minister's role and the Government's role in the Francophone summit? Will he consider those as alternatives?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member talks about misleading the House. His colleague, the Hon. Member for Egmont, misled the House a moment ago by suggesting that the treaty signed by the Liberal Government in 1972 had expired. It has not—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Siddon: Only the French fishing rights in the Gulf have expired.

Mr. Speaker: I know all Hon. Members would want to give the Minister a chance to answer. However, I want to comment on the word "misled". There was no suggestion made on either side that anyone intentionally misled. There is a different view of circumstances and perhaps facts, although that is not as clear as it might be. The Hon. Minister will complete his answer.

Mr. Siddon: To conclude my answer, the rights of the French metropolitan fleet to fish in the Gulf of St. Lawrence expired in 1986. Their rights to continue to fish their quota under the EEC long-term agreement, as accorded by a previous Liberal Government, continue into 1987.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER CANCEL AGREEMENT

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is the Prime Minister of all Canada, including Newfoundland whose people are equal Canadians. Will he give them justice and will he give them equal treatment? Will he now reject the pernicious deal his Government is proposing with the French and accede to the legitimate requests of the Premier of Newfoundland? Will he do that?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I see the Leader of the Opposition is applauding. He should be ashamed of himself, having been part of a Government which gave rise to this cornerstone of difficulty for the fishermen of Newfoundland and Labrador.

I invite my hon. friend to abandon the rhetoric and the slogans, on behalf of the fishermen of Newfoundland and Labrador. He knows full well that it is a complex and difficult issue. He knows full well that we are in the process of resolving the matter properly. I have had discussions with the Premier. The Minister of Transport will be down there as well. I would be interested to know if what he said in his first question is official policy of the Opposition. I would be interested to know if that is what the Liberal Party stands for on this particular issue. We know the NDP's gunboat diplomacy. Now the Liberals are apparently talking about a total rupture of a relationship. What we are doing—

Mr. Rompkey: What did you say to the Premier?

Mr. Mulroney: What will I say to the Premier? Exactly what I have said. The Government and its intentions in this file ought to be judged by our actions in others, including the resolution of an historic and difficult injustice for the people of Newfoundland and Labrador where, after 15 years of heartache and agony, the Progressive Conservative Government resolved the tremendously complex issue of offshore resources in favour of the people of Newfoundland and Labrador. We will work with this same determination to help the fishermen of Newfoundland and Labrador.

INQUIRY WHETHER THERE EXIST TWO CLASSES OF CONSERVATIVES

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister, who informed this House that he took immediate action to obtain the resignation of the Minister of State (Transport), in view of his involvement in the Oerlikon affair. We now know that Mr. Jean Bazin was involved in Oerlikon's business for almost one year, which made him very much aware of Oerlikon's dealings in Saint-Jean. Could the Prime Minister explain why he asked for the Minister's resignation, while Mr. Bazin has now been sworn in as a member of the Senate? Does this mean there are two classes of Conservatives, those who are elected to Parliament and those who are good friends of the Prime Minister?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, that question has been raised in the House on several occasions and it has been answered on several occasions, and the answer is the same.

ROLE OF SENATOR BAZIN

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. With great respect, that question has not been answered and is on the minds of many Canadians. Just how far is Mr. Bazin's immunity going to extend? The Government has refused to delay Mr. Bazin being sworn into the Senate while the Oerlikon affair is being investigated, in spite of his involvement. Can we take it that the Government will also refuse to take action against Senator Bazin if the RCMP establishes that either he or Oerlikon has acted improperly? Is that the position of the Government?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asks how far Mr. Bazin's immunity extends. I suppose it extends to the extent, along with that of other Canadians, of freedom from slurs and presumption of guilt. He has made statements. There is nothing inconsistent at all in what he has said with what is on the public record. The police have been ordered to conduct a full inquiry. Why don't the NDP, in particular the Hon. Member, give people the presumption of innocence, as all Canadians are entitled to, and let the police conduct their full inquiry? If there are any charges or any problems to be dealt with or laid, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police will deal with them properly.

CANADA GAMES

VENUE FOR 1991

Mr. Albert Girard (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport and concerns the Canada Games. The Games have never been done on a rotation basis, and an example of this was when New Brunswick lost to Newfoundland on a bid. Just recently the Canada Games President, Mr. Jack Pelech, stated that it has become a practice for interested communities to have their bids in before the preceding Winter Games. Indeed, the selection has traditionally been announced at the closing ceremonies of the preceding Games. Now Mr. Pelech has announced that there will be a two-month extension so that the community in Prince Edward Island will be able to enter a bid. I should like to know why the Minister is going out of his way to afford special treatment to P.E.I.?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I assume the Hon. Member is referring to the 1991 Games, since the 1989 Games have already been awarded to Saskatoon.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jelinek: The Minister of Justice is happy with that.

If that is so, let me assure the Hon. Member that there have not been and will not be any extensions given. All communities in Canada will have and continue to have equal opportunity to bid for the Games. In any event, a decision on the 1991 Games will be made in the very near future. In the meantime I invite all Hon. Members to come to Cape Breton in the middle of this month and share in the success of the Canada Games in that community.

FISHERIES

FISHING RIGHTS ON GRAND BANKS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, this morning the following fishing fleets were fishing just outside the 200-mile zone on the nose of the Grand Banks of Newfoundland—Mexico, Chile, Portugal, and Spain. France and the United States can come and go as they want. Only one country is not allowed to fish in that zone, on the nose of the Grand Banks of Newfoundland, and that is Canada. Why did the Government bring in such a restriction this year against Canadian fishermen? Was it to impress the international countries of the world? Canadian fishermen are second-class citizens in this country.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, you know that Hon. Members in the House get tired of calling the kettle black. However, in this case it was the Government of which the Hon. Member was a part that agreed to extend Canada's economic jurisdiction only to 200 miles and not to encompass the nose and tail of the Grand Banks, a matter which we are trying to rectify.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to get a sensible answer, so I will move from the fresh—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is moving to his question, and I know Hon. Members will want to hear it.

CANADA-FRANCE FISHING ARRANGEMENTS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, moving from the fresh fish of the Grand Banks of Newfoundland to the Prime Minister fresh out of Africa, does the Prime Minister recall writing a letter to the Minister of Fisheries dated August 29, 11 a.m., 1986? In part it reads:

—in dealing with this sensitive issue, we must weigh on the one hand the interests of Canadian fishermen—and on the other our bilateral relations with France . . . I would be grateful for an update from you and Mr. Clark prior to the next meeting with the French negotiators.

Did the Prime Minister receive that update? If he did, why did he keep it secret from the Minister of Transport and the provincial Premiers? Did he agree with the negotiators during that update?

• (1450)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can understand the shame and the sadness that the Hon. Member must feel being a member of a Party that agreed to this document in 1972, which I table for your consideration, Mr. Speaker.

In regard to updates, of course we were kept advised on a regular basis. The complexity of this issue is known even to my hon. friend. He knows full well how difficult it is in trying to resolve all of the aspects of this in a comprehensive manner. What we have done, as an interim step, in no way compromises anything in Newfoundland and Labrador. Not a single codfish in the contested zone has been affected by the undertakings that have been made. That cod stock now is presently being fished under agreements—

An Hon. Member: 15,000 metric tonnes.

Mr. Mulroney: —made by previous Governments.

Mr. Cassidy: The cod may revolt.

Mr. Mulroney: We are aware—

Mr. Nystrom: It is "cod" awful.

Mr. Mulroney: I realize that the New Democratic Party does not view this matter very seriously, but we take the interests of Newfoundland fishermen very, very seriously. I regret the fact that Members of the New Democratic Party are laughing at a very sensitive issue.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam.

Mr. Crosbie: Where are the gunboats, Pauline?

Mr. Nystrom: Sock it to Crosbie, Pauline.

Ms. Jewett: My question is not for you, Crosbie.

An Hon. Member: The old codfather himself.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

ADVANCED CRUISE MISSILE TESTING INQUIRY

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. Twenty-four hours ago I brought to the Minister's attention the existence of his Department's briefing note No. 50 dated April 21, 1986, concerning a project proposal for testing the Advanced Cruise Missile in Canada.

Mr. Crosbie: Rambo Jewett.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Jewett: As the Minister is aware, "project proposal" is the term used to denote a formal, detailed U.S. request for weapon testing under the Canada-U.S. testing agreement. Now that the Minister knows of the existence of this request from the United States, of almost a year ago, will the Minister tell the House today what Canada's response was to that request? Did we say yes or, as I hope, no?

Mr. Nystrom: Or maybe.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, what I can do is repeat to the Hon. Member what I said yesterday, namely, that there is no current request before Canada at the present time to test the Advanced Cruise.

Ms. Jewett: That is not what I asked.

Mr. Beatty: The Hon. Member says that is not what she asked. She is back from re-reading The Washington Post. I think it is important for her to know that there is no current request before Canada nor are we aware of any prospective need in the foreseeable future by the United States to test the Advanced Cruise. If a request is received, we will consider it.

CANADIAN POSITION

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, this is becoming Orwellian. The Minister is denying the existence of a document secured under the Access to Information Act. He is denying its very existence. It was dated April 21, 1986. He was not then the Minister. Has he consulted his predecessor about the Canadian response to that document since, under the Memorandum of Understanding we have with the United States, a response must be made within 30 days. Will the Minister table the request in the House and table the response?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, on a continuing basis the Canadian Government discusses with other allies various elements of defence policies. It is not appropriate for us to go into those in detail on the floor of the House of Commons.

Mr. Fulton: Testing a Cruise Missile is reasonably important.

An Hon. Member: Boy wonder.

Mr. Beatty: Here again, we get a case, Mr. Speaker, where a Member of the New Democratic Party poses a question and then the great believers in democracy try to shout down somebody giving a response.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: If they would listen, Mr. Speaker,—

Ms. Jewett: I am listening.

Mr. Beatty: The next thing you know they will ask that we send the Coast Guard to Washington for gunboat diplomacy too.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CLEAN-UP OF NIAGARA RIVER AND LAKE ONTARIO

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. Last week the Minister was quoted as saying that there was a good chance of Canada reaching an agreement with the United States this week for a clean-up of the Niagara River and Lake Ontario. The week is growing shorter, Mr. Speaker. Would the Minister please advise the House on a scale of one to ten what the chances are of reaching an agreement this week and whether that agreement will include a clean-up of the chemical dumps on the American side of the Niagara River?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, pollution in the Niagara River is of vital concern to the Government of Canada. Something like 4.5 million Canadians derive their drinking water from that source into which something like a tonne to nine tonnes of highly toxic substances are discharged daily. Tomorrow, in Toronto, there will be an international conference bringing together top experts from around the world to discuss the matter, including the question of excavation along the American side, given that 90 per cent of the toxins are from the United States.

In connection with the conference, I am pleased to tell the Hon. Member and the House that there will be a signing of an international accord by Canada and the United States, the Government of New York and the Government of Ontario, which The Toronto Star, not given to hyperbole in describing the wonderful things that the Government of Canada is doing, has described as a break-through. I cannot tell the Hon. Member anything more than that before the signing, but I think he will share The Toronto Star's high esteem.

COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS—HEARING OF WITNESSES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. He will realize that the Prime Minister has been attempting to foster what he says is better relationships with the United States. Why has the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs issued a directive to Members serving on the legislative committee examining Bill C-22 to prohibit witnesses from the United States, namely, senior citizens' organizations and other groups from appearing and giving testimony on a piece of legislation which has far-reaching ramifications for Canadians from coast to coast?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I issued no such directive. The committee is in charge of its own proceedings. As the Hon. Member indicated at the end of his question, this is legislation which has tremendous impact for Canadians from coast to coast. I find it somewhat surprising that the Liberal Party is suggesting that we should invite American congressmen, American lobbyists, and American representatives of the drug industry to come to Canada to tell us how to frame our law. I would much rather talk to Judy Erola.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the same Minister. Why is the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs afraid to hear representations from various individuals and organizations, such as the United States chairman of the Generic Pharmaceutical Industry Association? What does he have to hide? Why can we not have those witnesses come before the committee, and give testimony so that Canadians can see the deplorable situation in the United States which this Government is trying to copy?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): There is nothing to hide, Mr. Speaker. The legislation is there. If it is looked at objectively by Hon. Members they will see that it is very beneficial to Canadians. It will improve health care for Canadians, create more research jobs for Canadians, and it will enable us to participate in the exciting biotechnologies. Again, I wonder why the Liberal Party seems to think that you have to go to Washington to find out what we should do here in Canada for Canadians.

Oral Questions

WEST KOOTENAY POWER AND LIGHT COMPANY—SALE TO UNITED STATES CORPORATION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister and it concerns a very serious sovereignty issue for Canada and Canadians. He will be aware that the West Kootenay Power and Light Company is being sold to an American company in Kansas City, Missouri. He will realize that the company is involved with hydroelectric generation and water rights on one of Canada's major waterways.

Recognizing the importance of this Canadian sovereignty and that selling the company will be an unprecedented decision on behalf of the Government of Canada, is the Prime Minister prepared to step in and stop this sale before it is too late, and stand up for British Columbians on this very critical issue?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, indeed our decision attests to the fact that the market place did work. The company accepted the best of a series of offers that had been made. I repeat, this has nothing to do with sovereignty, it is just a matter of letting the market place operate and making sure that our rights and resources will be used to the benefit of Canadians. This is precisely what is guaranteed in this decision.

• (1500)

UNITED STATES POLICY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Minister ought to know that Canada is not simply a big cash register. There are other major concerns involved. In communication with the American Embassy this morning, I was told that American policy prohibits a foreign company from owning a utility on a navigable waterway in the United States. Can the Prime Minister explain to the House why the Americans would feel it is so important to maintain sovereignty over their utilities when we in Canada are prepared to sell them out to the highest bidder at any time and at any place?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, again I repeat that the resources involved will remain in Canada and be developed for the benefit of Canadian consumers. The company which gained control will indeed honour this commitment. I want to assure the House that it will do so. Moreover, the regulations governing the use of these resources come under provincial jurisdiction and, right now, the provincial administration involved is determining to what extent Canadian consumers can be sure that the resources will be used in Canada.

REPORTED POSITION OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY ENERGY CRITIC IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan—Similkameen): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs if he believes that Investment Canada was influenced in its decision by the fact that the energy critic for the New Democratic Party in British Columbia made a public statement supporting the sale to the American utility company.

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, that is a very good question, but unfortunately I do not have the answer. I can assure the Hon. Member that market forces—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. One does not always know what is coming in Question Period. I will allow one more question.

OERLIKON AFFAIR—REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and again concerns the Saint-Jean land flip. On January 10, I asked the Prime Minister whether at any stage of the bidding process for the low-level air defence system, Mr. Jean Bazin, or should I say Senator Bazin, had lobbied the Government on behalf of Oerlikon or acted as its representative, and the Prime Minister answered that "he is not a lobbyist". Today, I want to ask the Prime Minister, considering the information we received thorugh the Hon. Member for Calgary-Centre, whether he is prepared to revise the answer he gave on January 20 and admit that a public inquiry is not only desirable but necessary to provide clarification of this whole affair and the involvement of Senator Bazin.

[English]

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, lawyers contact Governments, other officials or other people on a continuing basis on a whole range of matters. It is entirely appropriate that they do so. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition knows full well that it is common practice for lawyers to do that. I am not quite sure why the Hon. Member is alleging some impropriety in a lawyer making a contact on behalf of a firm for which he was working.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville was seeking to attract the attention of the Chair. I notice that he must have had to leave the Chamber. I wonder if someone could advise him that if he has a question of privilege or a point of order, the Chair will of course see him in a moment. However, I have for the moment recognized the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond and he has a point of order which I will hear.

POINTS OF ORDER

COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS—PRIVILEGE—ADJUDICATION BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, last Thursday, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), rose on a question of privilege regarding certain activities that took place during a hearing on Bill C-22 involving amendments to the Patent Act. At that time a number of individuals made some brief interventions, and I wish to quote what you said, Sir, because I am looking for your direction.

As reported at page 2882 of Hansard of January 29, 1987, you said:

> What members of the committee do when they reassemble is entirely their own business. However, perhaps something might take place which would make it unnecessary to carry on with this discussion.
> I am going to adjourn this matter without prejudice to the Hon. Member who has raised it. If the matter is not settled, I will hear from Hon. Members later.

I emphasize that you said "Hon. Members", Mr. Speaker.

When we resumed committee meetings last Thursday, I raised a question of privilege about the conduct of Members opposite. I reserved my right until I had the opportunity to review first hand the transcript of proceedings earlier in the day. Now I have had an opportunity to do so. This morning, I raised a question of privilege which was put before all Members of the committee and it was ruled by the chairman that the chairman could not rule on a question of privilege. I thereafter moved the appropriate motion so that my question of privilege would be referred to the House of Commons for adjudication by you, Sir.

My concern is that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) originally rose on the question of privilege. Since it was voted down by the committee, I wonder if I may now raise this as a question of privilege on the floor of the House of Commons, or if there is some other route I must pursue in order to have my question of privilege at least heard and subsequently adjudicated by you, Sir.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that this matter was raised last week by the Hon. Member and I understand his concern. In speaking to this point of order, I would refer you, Mr. Speaker, to the decision of Mr. Speaker Jerome of April 6, 1976. I appreciate that it was not on exactly the same point the Hon. Member has made, but in his decision, Mr. Speaker Jerome said the following:

> The Speaker does not have the authority to consider appeals made on procedural decisions of a committee.

Reasons given by the Speaker for this are as follows:

> "Standing committees are and must remain the masters of their own procedure".
> For many years in this House the Chair has refrained from sitting in appeal on procedural decisions taken in standing committees.

I appreciate that in this particular decision, the reference is to a standing committee. I know the Chair will realize that at that time standing committees also handled legislative matters. Under parliamentary reform we now have standing committees and legislative committees. We have moved to the point at which there is a panel of Members with expertise in matters of parliamentary procedure, drawn from all Parties of the House, and one would think that, as independence is given to standing committees, and legislative committees have been given the power to sit on a particular Bill, this would reinforce even more the decision of Mr. Justice Jerome, as he now is, who said that committees are the masters of their own destiny as far as procedure is concerned.

• (1510)

I once again raise the spectre of this House intervening as the final Court of Appeal for all procedural questions raised in committee. In saying that I do not shut the door on a very important question of privilege raised by a Member where, for example, he or she was not even allowed in the committee room, where there was a complete and absolute denial of the right of that person to sit and work on the committee. However, I suggest that Mr. Speaker Jerome's decision should be given a great deal of weight when you come down with a decision as to whether or not the Hon. Member should be able to proceed with his point of order.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I want to intervene briefly on this matter. I appreciate the remarks of the Parliamentary Secretary, but I would point out with reference to his citing the decision of Mr. Speaker Jerome that that was prior to the changes which have occurred in our committee system.

As you will recall, Sir, the McGrath committee made a series of recommendations concerning the activities of the standing committees of this House. This House then saw fit to create a new entity, the legislative committee. That is an entirely new and experimental approach. It has been recommended that you select a number of prominent and experienced parliamentarians to chair these legislative committees. I submit that these chairmen are in a sense an extension of yourself, Mr. Speaker. That is why it was suggested that you make the decision about who would act in these committees with the same impartiality that you exercise in your function in the chair.

I know the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) well. I respect him. In fact, I have great admiration for his skill, knowledge and experience in this House. Knowing his great respect for our parliamentary system, I am a little bit surprised at what took place in the committee. I do not want to prejudge him because I was not in the committee when these events took place, but maybe his partisan approach to politics prevailed over his non-partisan approach.

Quite clearly those who are chairmen of legislative committees have to understand that they are to act exactly like you, Mr. Speaker, are supposed to act in the chair, in a non-partisan way. Not only that, but with a certain bias, so to speak, in favour of the minority representation in this House. I think it is encumbent on you as Speaker to make sure that the Official Opposition and the third Party have a chance to express their views and make their points of view known and see that their arguments are heard in this House.

Quite clearly, if this is true for the House of Commons, it is equally true for committee, be it standing or legislative. I hope that in your good judgment you will reflect on that, because it is not the first time opposition Members have complained about some of the decisions arrived at in the standing and legislative committees of this House which do not take into account the proposals put foward by the McGrath committee. Certainly the intention is to allow back-benchers on both sides of the House, not just the Opposition, to play important and constructive roles in our committees. I regret to say that so far we have not seen evidence of government back-benchers taking advantage of the new rules. I do hope that in the near future they will wake up to this new reality.

Above all, I think it is imperative that those you select as chairmen of the committees, acting on your behalf, understand fully their role and their new mandate which is very different from that of previous chairmen of committees of this House. They must behave with more impartiality and independence from government Parliamentary Secretaries or Ministers' assistants who might be giving them orders. I believe this is a matter which should not be perpetuated, it should stop, and the sooner the better for all of us in Parliament.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I raised this matter some days ago. We have had our differences of opinion in the legislative committee concerned. We have had vigorous debates. However, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) and I realize the Government has a majority of the members on that committee, as it does on all committees, and that what it wants to happen will happen. However, we have always assumed that decisions would be made after all members of the committee, particularly those in the Opposition, were made conversant with what the procedure would be. We should have an opportunity to discuss the recommendations proposed.

The day before this committee met and made the decision to which we are objecting the steering committee met and discussed a number of possible witnesses. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond and I each made suggestions dealing with the possibility of inviting to appear before the committee certain American witnesses who could help us in the discussions we were holding. This was not turned down in committee. The Clerk was asked to get certain information as to whether these people would be willing to appear and what costs there would be and report back to the committee. We did not get that report.

The next day the committee met in regular session to hear delegations. As I indicated when I raised this matter, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond left a few minutes early. I stayed. I accept the statement made by the chairman of the committee that he did not know this motion would be brought forward. Had the Hon. Member who moved the motion let me know that he intended to do so I would have stayed, we could have discussed it, and since government Members had the majority they would have passed the motion. We were not made aware that the Hon. Member for Dauphin—Swan River (Mr. White) intended to move that motion. That was wrong. I believe that when the Member for Dauphin—Swan River moved his motion the chairman of the committee should have stood the motion over to another meeting of the committee when members of the Opposition were present.

• (1520)

As I said the other day, I believe that the way the matter was dealt with in committee breached the rights and privileges which the Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond and I have as Members of Parliament.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take too much of the time of the House. However, I believe there are a couple of points which must be made.

Two themes have run through the interventions of Members. The first is that there is a reflection upon the chairman for the way in which he handled this meeting and the meeting flowing out of it where the votes were taken. The second is that the Opposition was suppressed through the handling of this in committee.

I do not believe that anything close to a question of privilege, or even a point of order, exists. It is possible that a grievance exists in this situation, but the House must be mindful of whose grievance it is. In my own committee we have held up meetings while waiting for members of the Opposition in order to get reports approved or motions passed. However, a committee can only postpone its business for so long. It is important to note that members of the Opposition did leave before the end of the meeting. They must take some responsibility for their actions. I do not believe that the committee should be held hostage. It should not have to wait for the return of opposition Members to continue with its business. It is the responsibility of individual committee members to attend committee meetings and conduct business accordingly.

In light of the changes which have been made to the rules concerning committees, it is important that that attitude is protected. All Members must be seen as active members of the committee and must attend meetings so that the committee can perform its work. In conclusion, I do not believe that this is a point of order or that members of the Opposition have a grievance.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments of my colleague from the great province of Alberta. However, I was not raising a question of privilege. I was raising the issue of whether I have the right, as a Member of the House, to raise a question of privilege in view of what Mr. Speaker has said and in view of what has taken place in a legislative committee which is new to the House of Commons.

At the same time, my colleague raised a question of privilege on a previous occasion in this House. I am looking for direction from the Chair. Surely to God, on the substance of the issue, if all that is required for procedural matters at a legislative committee is a slim majority, and a legislative committee requires that one member of the Opposition be present when testimony and evidence is heard, you cannot logically say that the two are not linked and related. There is a consequential effect with regard to the procedure which relies upon and is directly related to the evidence which may be adduced from different witnesses. To me that is the genesis, if you will, of a question of privilege, if you say that I have, at least, the right to raise the question of privilege.

I would not want the Hon. Member opposite to have illusions that members of the Opposition were not present. We were present. We left about 10 minutes before the meeting adjourned, having given notice to the Chair and other members. One must keep in mind that that particular session was advertised solely and strictly as a meeting to adduce evidence from the various witnesses. As you know, as counsel, Mr. Speaker, at no time during the deliberations was any notice given that this matter would be raised, either to myself, the representative of the loyal Opposition, to the representative of the New Democratic Party, or to the chairperson of the committee. As I said earlier today in my remarks before the committee, the Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) said in the press that he did not know of this particular matter.

There are two issues here. The first is whether I have a right to stand and present a question of privilege. Second, if we are to say that procedural matters are not linked to the substantive listening to evidence of various witnesses, it becomes very incredible.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank Hon. Members for their interventions. The Chair has heard sufficient on this issue to try to find a way through these difficulties.

The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond is, in effect, on a point of order, as the Chair suggested that that was the proper procedure. He is seeking counsel from the Chair. His complaint relates to the same committee from which the complaint of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) emanated several days ago, as was pointed out by the Hon. Member. After listening carefully to Hon. Members at that time the Chair decided to adjourn the matter for some time to see whether the committee could resolve the difficulties alleged by certain Members. The Chair must take these interventions as a suggestion that there are still some difficulties in the committee. The Chair will consider what was said a few days ago as well as what was said today and will try to give some guidance to the Chamber.

I would like to suggest—and this is only a suggestion because the Chair is not to interfere with committees—that, if there is a complaint, it should first be taken to the committee through the co-operation of the chairman. I believe that would apply to either a legislative committee or a standing committee. However, as the Chair indicated to the Hon. Member a few days ago, and some weeks ago, and as was pointed out by the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), some of these procedures are new. The legislative committee concept is new. The Chair is concerned that we be very careful not to allow a situation to go from what might be called a strictly procedural point, which clearly would be a matter for the committee to settle itself, to a circumstance which might indeed be a breach of privilege. The Chair must consider that very carefully, because if something is taking place which strikes at the heart of a Member's right to speak, albeit not necessarily a Member's right to always get what he or she wants, that is a very serious area.

Therefore, I will consider the representations made a few days ago initiated by the Member for Winnipeg North, as well as those today initiated by the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond, who properly phrased his intervention as a point of order. Nonetheless, it touches the matters with which the Chair, and all Hon. Members, have to deal. Certainly, in listening to perhaps some of the comments concerning the very respected and senior Member of this House who has taken on the responsibility in this legislative committee as chairman, the Hon. Member for Crowfoot, the Chair did not take any of the comments made to be impugning in any way the good intentions or honour of that Hon. Member.

• (1530)

The Chair will take notice of the matter and will see what can be done to be of assistance to all Hon. Members.

ALLEGED INCORRECT STATEMENT OF MR. KING

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, with reluctance I rise on a point of order to clarify a very serious issue which was raised earlier today when the Hon. Member for Okanagan—Similkameen (Mr. King), through an interjection, indicated that the energy critic for the provincial New Democratic Party did not oppose the sale of the West Kootenay Power and Light Company to an American firm. I want to say that that is blatantly incorrect. It is a falsehood. I simply assume that it was an inadvertent falsehood stated by the Hon. Member in the House at the time.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) rises on a matter of debate. I would imagine it is an argument over something raised in a question by the Hon. Member toward the end of Question Period today. I think I should indicate to the Hon. House Leader for the New Democratic Party, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), that, generally, with the consent of the Opposition, the Chair is prepared to hear Hon. Members from the government side. The Chair would expect and prefer, and I think all Hon. Members would also, when the Chair recognizes someone from the government side, a legitimate question to be raised and not a statement of fact thrown into the debate. I know all Hon. Members would think that this is the appropriate way for the Chair to view these questions. I hope the Hon. Member will accept the Chair's statement that I am determined, as much as I possibly can, to maintain that approach. As I said, sometimes the Chair cannot always predict what the question will be.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-18, an Act respecting national transportation, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. Benjamin (p. 2756).

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, let me at the outset express my disappointment that the Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Suluk) will not continue his discourse of this morning. For my part, and I am sure I am speaking also for all members of our caucus, I consider it to have been a very significant exposition of the character of the North, far beyond the mere issue of transportation.

The Hon. Member talked about how difficult it might be for southerners to live during the winter in the North under circumstances of perpetual darkness. I must say that this must be an experience in a political winter which his Party shares. Perhaps some light was shed upon the Hon. Member's Party, as it was shed upon all of us, with respect to the particular and unique problems of the North. I would like to note, for example, that the North is a part of Canada which bears the same characteristics as the rest of our country at the time it was decided that in order to ensure that, for the sake of east-west communication for the development of this country, there needed to be a transportation system. That transportation system necessitated regulations to ensure that all parts of the country were equally served. What the Hon. Member said was certainly consistent with the need for continued regulation in order to ensure that the public need and convenience of those in the North is indeed served.

Parenthetically, during his discourse, the Hon. Member, I thought, made the imaginative proposal that the character of the North demands a different kind of transportation. He alluded to the need and, indeed, the appropriateness of industry in the South committing itself to some degree to research which would be directed to appropriate forms of transportation in the North. I hope the Hon. Member's Government was listening carefully to this very strong protest in favour of expanded research to meet Canadian needs.

I stand before you, Mr. Speaker, willingly admitting that I, like very many Canadians, do not quite understand this huge piece of legislation in all of its ramifications. The system with which it deals is complex. Beyond all things, it is necessary that the Canadian people have an opportunity to understand the legislation. I think it is most unfortunate that the opportunity in the form of authority to travel for the committee, which would have given the Canadian people an opportunity to understand this legislation, has been denied.

It seems to me to be hurried legislation, legislation that is being rushed through. Perhaps a partial explanation for the rush in getting this legislation through, the reason for refusing the committee an opportunity for adequate consideration, is that the Government does not want the public to understand what it is doing. That is difficult to understand because it claims it is acting in the best interests of Canadians. Surely, a part of acting in the best interest of Canadians is to keep the promises made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to ensure that on every subject on which the Government acts there will be adequate consultation.

When one considers those facts, one wonders whether this is a Bill introduced for the purposes of serving the needs, aspirations and concerns of Canadians or whether it was introduced on the basis of some ideological agenda. We have identified that ideological agenda and it consists of a troika: free trade, deregulation and privatization. On the surface, I think these things are all understood. However, when one considers the pattern of action of the Government, it may very well be that the most fundamental ideology of the Government is Americanization. Without adequate arguments for what is being done, one must look for some model which is being emulated by the Government. Surely, it is clear that what we are doing once more, instead of finding our own way, is to emulate the Americans.

I do not stand before you, Mr. Speaker, to suggest in any way that regulatory reform is not necessary. Like all Canadians, I have had from time to time experiences with our transportation system which I found objectionable. I have seen effects of regulation which I think ought to be changed. I have seen evidence of implementation of regulations which suggests a degree of archaism. We are not suggesting there should be no change. However, we must be concerned about the nature of the change which is occurring, the motivation for those changes and what will be the implications.

The ideology of Americanization must find its models in the United States both for what we should do and what we should not do. When we consider this legislation we must consider the effects deregulation has had in that jurisdiction. When we consider the twin ideological contexts of the free enterprise imperative and Americanization, let us not forget that among the things that those who support the Conservative Party pursue is the maximization of profits and the minimization of costs.

• (1540)

In looking at the implementation of this approach in the United States one will see that one significant element in the equation, called "labour" by economists, is "people out of work" as a consequence of what has happened in the United States. What has happened in the United States has been a vicious attack on ordinary people. There has been a vicious attack on those working in the airlines. Some 40,000 jobs have been lost as a result of airline deregulation. The trucking industry has lost some 150,000 workers as a result of deregulation. One finds a similar number of people have been thrown out of work in the railways. Even those still working have been victimized by a horrendous pressure to concede to the corporations operating the airlines, the trucking system and the railways of that country. There have been tremendous concessions in wages. The first victims in this regard have been women. Unions have found their voices muted on behalf of the working people in many American airlines under deregulation.

Canada is a different sort of country from the United States. We tend to be a little more concerned about the equation involving profit, labour and the consumer. We want to see consumer needs satisfied. Profit is not inappropriate. But it becomes vicious in the way in which it has been pursued under deregulation in the United States.

In examining the present situation I must ask the following serious question. What will be the implications in Canada? The answer has already been provided by CP and CN. They have each suggested that between 10,000 and 15,000 Canadian workers will lose their jobs before 1990. I see nothing in this legislation which addresses that issue. We are not talking about remaining in the dark ages of regulations or even archaic regulations. We are not resisting change where it is appropriate. It is significant to my Party and to the vast majority of Canadians whether or not people will be considered in terms of this legislation. Will people who depend on these industries for their livelihood be considered?

In returning to the reference for the need for regulation in Canada because of the character of our country and the character of the transportation system we need, if one looks to the United States one finds that there are all kinds of people enjoying cheap trips between Detroit and Florida and between New York and Los Angeles. However, if one wishes to fly between Lansing and Grand Rapids, they will have to pay a pretty penny to do so.

We understand that in the North some provisions have been implemented to ensure that regulation establishes that public need and convenience are served. The Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq indicated that these were not sufficient to meet the needs of the North. This raises an additional question. What will be the cost involved in travelling from the North to the South as a result of this legislation?

There are many elements of this Bill about which I have questions. I am not a technologist in the field. I raise these questions as an ordinary citizen and not as a politician. They are questions which have not been answered by the Government. The legislation should cease in its process until the Canadian people understand what the Government is doing.

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the amendment to withdraw Bill C-18, a motion which if passed would prevent it from seeing the light of day.

There are two main issues in the Bill. The first is that the Government brought in the National Transportation Act whose main intent is to make the user-pay. The Government said in Clause 4 of the Bill, which has now been removed, that anyone making or having use of an ice-breaker, or anyone who employs the federal Coast Guard or the federal Department of Transport in any way, should have to pay for that service. The Government has now said that it will take out this clause for the time being. That is the first thing that the Minister (Mr. Crosbie) has said that is unacceptable to members of the Official Opposition. Some of the transportation organizations have said: "That is fine, as long as we are a part of the negotiating process to come up with a new user-pay system".

Obviously what will happen is that those groups which are part of the process in terms of this new user-pay philosophy for the Department of Transport will be the very ones who will be excluded from the rates. In other words, what the Government of Canada has said is: "All right. We will pull back a bit now and we will go into a consultation process with the industry". Who is the industry? Is it the fishermen up on the north coast of Newfoundland? No. Is it the person who lives up in the Northwest Territories? No. Is it someone living in some small community who might need the ice broken out by an ice-breaker or need an ice-breaker to come in to get out his long-liner to go fishing or seal hunting? No. It is not these people. Who are they? Of course, they are members of well-organized groups, the people who have all the money in the world to be able to pay the new rates but who do not want to pay the new rates. Therefore, they say: "We want to be a part of the process so we will agree with the Government's imposition of user-pay as long as it consults". That is not acceptable to members of the Official Opposition. There should be no user-pay in the federal Department of Transport. The Coast Guard should not be allowed to charge people for the use of its ice-breakers and boats for search and rescue, as the Government wants to have it charge a fee. The new system that will come out of Treasury Board as a result of the exclusion of Clause 4 of the Bill will say that anyone who orders a Coast Guard boat for his own personal use or assistance will have to pay a fee.

That means anyone who is 100 miles off the coast of Labrador, say in stormy weather, and whose engine breaks down, will hesitate to phone the Coast Guard to have someone come and tow him in because he will be charged a fee. Safety should not be at stake as a result of the imposition of fees.

The Government has introduced a fee schedule with respect to phone calls to the weather office. In November of 1984 the Government announced that it would institute a charge with respect to placing calls to the weather office. A mariner who wants to check the weather before going out into the Atlantic Ocean will have to pay for his call. Now it is the ice-breakers and the search and rescue boats. The Minister of Transport, the Hon. Member for St. John's West, has declared to everyone that the charge will still be brought in, although it has been taken out of this Bill, but "we will consult before we bring it in". Mr. Speaker, that is not acceptable.

What else is not acceptable? The entire Bill is not acceptable. The philosophy of the Bill is not acceptable. The philosophy of the Bill is user-pay. The hon. gentleman behind me from the New Democratic Party—and I do not know why they call it new, it is not new any more, it should be called the old Democratic Party—

Mr. Belsher: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Does the Hon. Member realize that he is talking about Bill C-75 and not Bill C-18? The Hon. Member seems to be rambling all over creation. Maybe he should return to what we are talking about which is a motion to hoist this Bill for six months.

Mr. Baker: Yes, Mr. Speaker, as I was explaining, and the Hon. Member was not listening, just like all of the PC Members. They never listen. I was explaining that when the Minister introduced this Bill he said he was taking out that clause to have it referred to a committee to re-do it and introduce the same charges through consultation. That is what the Minister said.

Mr. Belsher: That is what you asked for.

Mr. Baker: No, Mr. Speaker, we did not ask for that. We asked that this silly, stupid, ridiculous idea be dropped by the Government. What is it going to do? It is now going to charge for ploughing the street, or ploughing the roads? Is that what it is going to do? It is the same thing as charging somebody by the back door, which is what the Minister of Transport said—

Mr. Benjamin: And breaking your ice.

Mr. Baker: —and breaking the ice. To break the ice in front of a boat is just like charging for a snow-plough in front of a car.

Under this new Bill what will happen? If CN Rail does not break even, just like the Post Office, then the routes will be discontinued. Just imagine, Mr. Speaker, if it does not break even, they will discontinue the rail routes. Using that measurement, airports will be cut out because they do not break even, if the cost is added up. That is the declaration of the Government, if it does not break even—here is Freedom to Move now—"what we will do is to save $20 million a year through CN Marine on the East Coast of Canada". This is a new Crown corporation called Marine Atlantic which this Government created after it came to power. The Government said that through this Crown corporation it will save $20 million on transportation, ships at sea, covered by this Bill. On whose backs is this $20 million being saved? On the backs of people who have to travel from one province to another, and on the backs of those people who have to pay the freight charges from one province to another.

Never before has there been a Government with the audacity to question the Constitution of Canada. At this very minute it has appealed to the Canadian Transport Commission to have the rates increased beyond the ceiling established under the Terms of Union between Newfoundland and the Government across the Gulf of St. Lawrence. In other words, it has applied user-pay. It does not care where you live in Canada, it is user-pay in everything right down the line.

Mr. Fennell: Get on to Bill C-18.

Mr. Baker: That is the philosophy of this Bill presently before the House.

Mr. Fennell: Which Bill?

Mr. Baker: That is the philosophy of the Government. That is why it is the lowest in the polls, and that is why it will stay there. That is why it will form the Opposition after the next election, because people are sick and tired. It does not mind bailing out a bank with a couple of billion dollars for its friends. It does not mind doing that. But at the same time it will sock it to the man living in Newfoundland, and tell him that he has to pay for his ice-breaker service. It will cut this out, cut that out, and cut back on the schedules across the Gulf of St. Lawrence. It will not get away with it. No, it will not. If the government Members were honest, I would not doubt that when the vote is taken on this motion, the six month hoist will be approved, not only by the Opposition but by the government Members.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the amendment moved by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), to have this Bill referred back to the legislative committee rather than dealt with and approved by the majority in the House.

The reason I support that particular amendment is, broadly speaking on the philosophy of the Bill itself, that I disagree with it for many of the same reasons that have already been stated. But for no other reason, I would oppose this Bill because of the way it has addressed the problems faced by the disabled community. This Bill consists of some 179 pages. It is full of legalese, legal clauses, and fancy words. In the entire

Bill there is one small section with a total of 14 words dealing with the problems that a disabled person may have with the transportation system. The clause that I am referring to is tacked on, almost as an afterthought, to the national transportation policy as it is spelled out in the legislation. The clause that I am concerned about is Clause 3(1)(g) where it states that the national transportation policy will exclude or make it discriminatory to place:

> (ii) an undue obstacle to the mobility of persons including those persons who are disabled,

That is all it states. In effect, it is ignoring everything that has been said before 1980, and particularly since 1980, when an all-Party committee of the House of Commons conducted one of the most extensive studies of the problems faced by disabled people in Canada. It came up with a report called the Obstacles Report. The Obstacles Report has been referred to by many disabled organizations in Canada, and around the world this report was acclaimed as being the Magna Carta of the disabled in the 1980s.

In that report the committee made no less than 10 recommendations dealing with the transportation policy for disabled persons. Ever since we have talked about those recommendations dealing with disabled issues, both in the House and in the committee. We have tried to impress upon both the previous Government and the present one that these recommendations were given a lot of thought and a tremendous amount of input from the disabled community and people who shared their concerns, not only about transportation, but a host of other matters of equal concern to a person who is disabled. Both Governments have totally ignored everything that has been said.

Apart from the fact that the Bill does not deal adequately with discrimination against disabled people in our transportation system, it raises a number of other serious concerns. The legislation eliminates the Canadian Transport Commission. In the place of that commission another agency will be set up. It raises a number of questions in this respect. It is my understanding that those concerns have never been addressed by the Government.

What happens to the decisions which were previously made by the Canadian Transport Commission on issues affecting disabled people wherein the commission ruled in many cases in favour of the disabled person? What happens to all those decisions? Will the new board or agency recognize those decisions and consider them to be enforceable? That question has been asked but it has never been answered. No one seems to know the answer.

There is another question to which I would like an answer. This is about all we can ask because we know that the Government has a sufficient number of Members to pass the legislation despite anything the opposition Parties have to say. However, these two questions demand answers. At least 10 per cent of the population in Canada is considered to be disabled in one aspect or another. Not all of them have physical disabilities, but they certainly are disabilities which cause problems for them when they are faced with the Canadian transportation system. For example, the Government has said that it intends to deregulate the air transportation system in Canada. I know what that will mean.

Mr. Benjamin: It already has.

Mr. Young: To some extent, not fully. I was in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick in the month of December and I got the surprise of my life. There were no longer DC-9s or other large jet carriers travelling between Fredericton, Halifax, and Sydney, Nova Scotia. The main means of air transport now are Dash-8 aircraft. In a wheelchair on a Dash-8 aircraft one has terrible difficulties in terms of mobility. The size of washrooms is an important question. If a disabled person is trapped inside an aircraft for an extended period of time, the washroom takes on a different significance than it does for able-bodied persons.

I understand—and it is not spelled out in the legislation—that the regulations flowing from the legislation will make absolutely clear that the discriminatory parts of the legislation will not apply to aircraft with fewer than 60 seats. As we go through the whole process of deregulation, and as air-carriers decide that some routes are not profitable for larger aircraft and replace them with Dash-7, Dash-8, and smaller aircraft, which make it difficult for disabled persons to have mobility on board, disabled persons will no longer be able to claim discrimination against them simply because of their physical disabilities. That troubles me.

What bothers me even more is that the advisory committee on disabled persons, associated with the Minister's Department, is not being listened to when it raises those concerns. As I understand it, for the last two years it has been trying to persuade policy makers to change the regulations so that persons who feel they may be discriminated against under the new legislation would at least have the right to make a presentation to some quasi-judicial body to have the discriminatory clause amended or to force air-carriers to treat such persons as though they were able-bodied Canadians. I think that makes eminent sense.

The present Government has made nice statements about disabled persons, and the previous Government did the same thing. We had the Obstacles Report. They were nice statements which made them look as if they were really concerned about how attitudes are developed toward the disabled Canadian population. Unless something concrete is done about it, all the words are just empty promises and do not mean a thing. This does a real disservice not only to the disabled Canadian population but to the able-bodied population also, because the decisions made by the Government are about the kind of society in which we want to live in Canada. The vast majority of Canadians want to live in a society which treats all of us equally, whether we are disabled or able-bodied.

I see my time is up. I will have a further opportunity to talk on the Bill after the amendment is disposed of.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak on the Bill, and I would move:

That, pursuant to Standing Order 9(4)(a), the House continue to sit beyond the ordinary hour of daily adjournment for the purpose of consideration of second reading stage of Bill C-18, an Act respecting national transportation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will those Members who object to the motion please rise in their places?

And fewer than 25 Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Fewer than 25 Members having risen, pursuant to Standing Order 9(4)(b), the motion is deemed to have been adopted.

Motion (Mr. Lewis) agreed to.

• (1610)

[Translation]

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Could the Hon. Member for Richmond—Wolfe (Mr. Tardif) have a chance to make his speech? Thank you.

Mr. Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in this very important debate. I think this is a very important matter, and I wish to join the previous speakers in supporting the amendment, namely that:

"Bill C-18, An Act respecting national transportation, be not now read a second time but that the Order be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject-matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Transport."

I support this motion without reservation, and I do so for a number of reasons.

First of all, I am not in favour of opposing measures aimed at improving the situation in the transportation industry in Canada. I agree wholeheartedly, Mr. Speaker, that we must modernize and provide a framework and regulations aimed at making the market more competitive. However, I submit, with respect, that the manner in which the Government is trying to achieve this objective is entirely unacceptable, for several reasons.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, the way this Government has been reacting in recent weeks is surprising, to say the least.

First of all, when faced with the fact that it had become impossible to negotiate a decent agreement with the United States, it willingly accepted, without further argument, whatever the United States wished to impose on us. That seems to be the way the United States and in fact this Government are approaching Canada.

Second, this Government seems to be saying that what is good for the United States will be good for Canada. What has produced results in the United States, will, always according to the Conservatives, have positive and beneficial effects on Canada.

I may point out to Hon. Members opposite that this is not, in my opinion, a very sound philosophy and that it is certainly not the way to deal with the administration of this country. I could name a number of reasons, but there are a few that are painfully obvious. Canada's territory is larger than the United States, but on that territory we have only twenty-five million people. There are 300 million Americans, Mr. Speaker. I think this point is particularly relevant to any regulations or legislation like the Bill before the House today. There are other facts and factors. Suppose we consider the situation in the United States, which has over thirty cities with a population of over one million. How does that compare with the situation in Canada? We have only three cities with a population of over one million, so that in Canada, transportation not only has a strategic importance in providing for the movement of goods and people, it is a matter of survival.

Regional expansion depends closely if not exclusively on transportation. Any suggestion aimed at improving this sector gets my full support, but certainly not the way our friends opposite are going about it. It stands to reason that the adoption of this Bill will soon be followed by a price war, which in turn will inevitably lead to lower rates. The free market system will prevail, which is another way of saying that major shippers will undoubtedly expect to make a handsome profit. But at the expense of what or whom? My riding lies in a semirural region where transportation is a key factor and whose economic future is closely linked with transportation issues. Smaller carriers will bear the brunt of this change, they will have to pay the higher prices which will automatically flow from the reductions which major companies will get from trucking firms.

In recent weeks I held consultations with a number of interested people who, I suggest, have every reason to be concerned about this measure, and it is interesting to note how much the views vary from one individual to the next. Still these consultations enabled me to draw two conclusions. First we have the major companies which rely on the transportation system for doing most of their business. They are unanimous: any endeavour aimed at the outright deregulation of the transport industry gets their immediate and full support. Ask them why they endorse complete deregulation and you will not have to wait for the answer: There will be drastic cuts in transportation costs, and this can only be a boost for most companies.

But go and ask the same question to small carriers and small manufacturers, and of course the answer is not quite as definite, a lot more confusing. These people are extremely worried, worried about the next day, worried about the future. I should think there is no inconsistency in the two attitudes, the two answers, or the two reactions I have just described.

First of all, in the case of companies which would not stay in business for long if it were not for the transportation system, the rates they pay now are bound to go down. However, Mr. Speaker, to be economically viable, these companies will have to consider raising their rates to the levels prevailing for other types of transportation, and unfortunately, the people who will suffer will be the men and women who make far less frequent use of those carriers. If we assume that in future, deregulation will be the norm, competition will be fierce and the big guys more likely to survive than the little guys.

But what is the price we will have to pay? What will be the price of this fierce competition among carriers? We can assume there will be lay-offs. Hundreds of employees will be laid off. There will also be an impact on an equally important area, and I am referring to safety. Transport companies will do whatever they can to deliver, regardless of the safety of goods and passengers. What we cannot accept is that this Government appears to be taking its inspiration from what has been done in the United States, while systematically turning a blind eye to the consequences of that policy in the United States. Mr. Speaker, I shall, if I may, give an example that says it all. In the United States, deregulation of the air transportation sector took place in 1978. Between 1978 and 1982, full-time employment with U.S. airlines dropped six per cent. Between 1980 and 1985, 40,000 workers lost their jobs in this industry. That is the obvious result of deregulation, which will lead to unbridled competition, where the big guys will have the best chance of winning, at the expense of the little guys. What will happen in the regions? I think that in the short term, we will see small companies closing or going bankrupt, when they are no longer able to face up to the pressures of competition from the big carriers. This will have a disastrous impact on essential jobs in remote areas and on our regional development policies. Not only will there be no improvement, but we will see a deterioration of the situation which will have a further impact on all jobs related to the industry.

Mr. Speaker, there is another situation that also gives cause for concern. Many carriers have had to invest enormous sums of money to obtain the licence that gives them the right to cover a specific territory. Now this legislation will challenge the whole question of the underlying value of these licences, the result being to undermine considerably the assets of these companies which, I think, should have some protection so they can recover costs incurred when servicing remote areas.

Mr. Speaker, there are other considerations as far as jobs are concerned. In addition to the jobs directly related to the transportation industry, there are also jobs in small and medium-sized businesses that depend on that industry. In concluding, I would like to quote from an editorial that appeared in La Presse, which I think quite accurately summarizes the situation. It reads as follows:

> We have embarked on an era of deregulation in every field; an era of privatization, in Canada and in Quebec; and an era that celebrates free enterprise and free market competition. Granted, we Canadians who depend on the giant next door are not likely to reverse this trend.
> However, we will have to make a choice between what is good for the consumer and what is good for society. Savings to the consumer does not necessarily mean that society will benefit. Let us first see the price we will have to pay.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to comment briefly on the amendment now before the House, an amendment moved by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). The amendment reads as follows:

> "That Bill C-18, an Act respecting national transportation, be not now read a second time but that the Order be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject-matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Transport."

Mr. Speaker, I agree that the order should be discharged and the Bill withdrawn now because it is not good for Canada. We do need a study by the Standing Committee on Transport to assess the impact of the proposed deregulation advocated by the Conservative Party of Canada. This Bill is not good for Canada because our country is made up of many regions which are far removed from urban centres and major markets. I am talking about Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver which are Canada's main markets. It would be difficult to implement deregulation. Besides, I am concerned about questions of service and safety.

• (1620)

—of safety. As I said, I have two major concerns about this Bill before us. My number one concern is safety, and my second great concern is service to Canadians.

I come from the riding of Yorkton—Melville. It is a farm riding and there are a number of small villages, towns, communities and farms there. One of my concerns about a law that would deregulate transportation is that the least populated areas, ridings like mine, will not enjoy the same kind of service that Canadians in large central market-places like Toronto, Vancouver and Montreal enjoy. I believe that Saskatchewan, and particularly ridings like mine, will be the losers if transportation in Canada is deregulated. I believe that once again it is an example of the Government across the way following in the footsteps of Ronald Reagan and the American administration.

I am concerned about deregulation from a service point of view because, year after year, I have seen the CNR and the CPR applying to the CTC to abandon rail lines because some towns are small and their elevators may not be very large compared to those in larger centres. The railways have been doing this in an attempt to centralize things. I have also seen the railways campaigning very hard for deregulation and to get rid of the Crow rate so that they may charge a variable rate or a rate the market can bear. Time and time again, I have seen people in small communities having to band together to fight very hard to keep their grain elevators and rail lines and now even to keep their post offices. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, you have read recent articles in the press, such as the one this morning in The Globe and Mail, which indicates that 188 rural post offices are to close.

[Translation]

We now have a Minister responsible for Canada Post who is anxious to close down a number of post offices throughout Canada. Mr. Speaker, most of these are in small villages and small towns in Canada. There is a parallel to be drawn between post offices and the transportation system in Canada. As a Member from a rural area I am afraid this Bill will lead to a lack of services, and this is why we must fight tooth and nail to prevent the Minister of Transport from pushing this measure through.

And that is not all, Mr. Speaker. The former Minister and Deputy Prime Minister, the former Member for Yukon, Mr. Erik Nielsen, has been appointed Chairman of the Canadian Transport Commission. I am afraid Mr. Nielsen might not remain neutral in his position because he is the man who led the fight for deregulation in Canada. He is the man who forced the Prime Minister of this Government to introduce the Bill. I am wary of Mr. Nielsen acting as referee in a case like this. I am wary because he believes in the private enterprise system, the private sector, and that spells trouble for people of modest means. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) agrees with me, Mr. Speaker, but I happen to know that the Minister of National Health and Welfare is a red Tory.

[English]

He is a progressive, red Tory from Manitoba. If he were Minister of Transport, I am sure he would not present a Bill on deregulation under which some of the small centres in his riding would suffer.

I have here in my hands today an application made to the Canadian Transport Commission by Pacific Western Airlines to suspend services on a temporary basis to Whitehorse in the Yukon Territory, effective March 2, 1987, to April 26, 1987. With the abolition of the Canadian Transport Commission under deregulation, we will see more and more of these moves by airline carriers to abandon services to major regional centres.

Coming from Saskatchewan, I know that people complain that Saskatchewan is getting fewer and fewer flights and fewer and fewer choices because the population is not large. If we have wholesale deregulation, there is a concern that seat sales will not be applicable to places like Regina and Saskatoon in the same numbers proportionally as they will be applicable to Vancouver, Montreal and Toronto because there are modes of competition in the larger centres that do not exist on the Prairies. That will be one of the consequences of deregulation. The service in rural Saskatchewan, northern Canada, the Atlantic provinces and throughout much of Quebec will suffer, but that is the kind of vision the Conservative Party has in mind.

When the Canadian people voted for a change in September 1984, they did not vote for a change that would take us on a wild ride in right-wing Conservative politics imported from the United States of America. They were tired of a Liberal Government and a Liberal Prime Minister but they did not want this Party to go galloping off with Reaganism lock, stock and barrel. Members of our Party will do whatever we can to stop this wholesale deregulation Bill that is before the House today.

I am also concerned about safety. The experience in the United States has been that airline companies and companies in other modes of transportation are trying to cut services and are trying to cut corners in terms of safety as well. They are doing this because they are trying to save money in the dog-eat-dog world of private enterprise. We should not run the risk of jeopardizing safety in airline services or any other services. My twin concerns are service and safety, but I would like to mention one other thing since I have only two minutes to go.

As a prairie Member, I am concerned as well that as we move down the road to deregulation, we will be moving down the road to variable freight rates across the Prairies. In fact, the CNR now has an application before the CTC to move on variable rates. This is a very important issue for western Canadian farmers. If there are variable freight rates, the railways themselves will determine which communities get services and which communities do not. They can charge rates of 20 per cent or 30 per cent higher for communities where they wish to abandon rail lines. If they charge 20 per cent or 30 per cent more to haul grain to a small community, farmers will haul their grain a few extra miles to a larger community, there will be more and more centralization in larger communities and there will be more and more inland terminals and large through-put elevators, thus leading to the abandonment of rail lines in small communities.

I do not think the railways should make that choice. The CPR and the CNR do not run this country. I think we need regulations that will provide service for ordinary people in Canada, whether they live in Toronto, Ontario, or Kamsack, Saskatchewan.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would hate to see any discrimination against Canada's rural population, against the people who live in the Abitibi region in Quebec or in Kamsack or Yorkton or Kindersley in Saskatchewan. With deregulation—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Aylmer, Quebec!

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) is rooting for Aylmer, Quebec, for a community located within a large urban area. And I know why, because the Progressive Conservative Party is in favour of centralization in this country. They are in favour of large urban centres in Canada. I am afraid the Minister, my hon. friend from Saskatchewan, has forgotten his rural roots, because a bill on deregulation would be a bad thing for the people of Saskatchewan, for any town or village, for any riding, for my riding and the riding of the Minister of Justice. And I hope he will soon close ranks with us on this Bill.

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I too should like to take part in this debate on Bill C-

18 concerning transport deregulation. First I want to say that ever since Confederation the various Governments have used the transport systems and regulated them because they were considered as an essential element of the nation. We need only think about the expanse of this country, the many regions, the myriad of small towns and villages. Without a transport system regulation policy it would be difficult to have a cohesive and united country.

The Liberal Party is aware of the fact that our transport industry is not static by any means and that we cannot allow ourselves to disregard the evolution of transport services elsewhere in the world, more particularly in the United States, our major trade partner. However we condemn any move towards hasty deregulation of the Canadian transport industry which would be pushed through Parliament without due public consultation and adequate study by the Standing Committee on Transport.

Mr. Speaker, I was told that during the two months the Standing Committee on Transport was allotted to study the White Paper Freedom to Move it did not have time to travel to Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, Quebec, Ontario, Saskatchewan, Alberta, and Northern Ontario. Not only that, Mr. Speaker, the Standing Committee on Transport could not find time to study the deregulation of the air transport industry which began in the United States in 1978. It is unwise in our view, not to say remiss, to proceed with deregulation in Canada on the basis of a so scanty data base.

Mr. Speaker, despite the objections raised by Liberal Members and indeed a number of Conservative Members, including the committee chairman, because of inadequate time allowed the Transport Committee, Conservative Members supported the report and now we have this Bill. Mr. Speaker, this reminds us of the scenario when the Committee on Government Operations studied Canada Post's corporate plans. The Minister referred them to a committee in order to bring them into full light so that Canadians could understand what those plans were all about, but after one single witness, Canada Post President had appeared for a few days only, Conservative Members in the Committee voted to stop calling in any further witnesses and to submit a report.

Mr. Speaker, that committee was to delve deep into the affairs of the Post Office, and in this case another committee was to lay bare our Canadian transportation system. The conditions were identical, Mr. Speaker—this Government acted in one and the same way, and if we consider the importance of mail delivery in Canada and the importance of transportation, we can conclude that this Government believes in rapid centralization—it wants to make Canada a country of three cities— Vancouver, Toronto and Montreal.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot accept this kind of legislation and the way the Government is ramming it through.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to quote a few extracts from an article which appeared in the June 27, 1986, issue of the Journal de Montréal. That is the date on which the Bill was introduced and presented as a major economic Bill. I quote from this article written by journalist Jean-Denis Girouard.

The new legislation is "one of the key elements of the Government's economic agenda", according to Mr. André Bissonnette, Minister of State responsible for Small Businesses.

Mr. Speaker, it was the Minister of State for Small Businesses who was reported as saying that such a Bill was a key element of the economic agenda. In the same article, and I quote again:

THE LEGISLATION IS NOT UNIVERSALLY PRAISED

The new national transportation legislation is not universally praised. Far from it. It is considered by many as being simply a deregulating legislation which will cause several small transport companies to go bankrupt.

Mr. Speaker, such is the situation. What is the reality of this Bill? First of all, it will jeopardize our small businesses and favour apparently the whole transport operation of a few major corporations; also, in such a great country as Canada, there will be only three cities, that is to say, three major centres of activities with a population of over a million, which will benefit from this transport deregulating program, while all our small communities and towns will be deprived of a service which is essential in our Canadian communication and transportation system.

PRIVILEGE

ABSENCE OF BELLS IN COMMITTEE ROOM TO CALL MEMBERS TO VOTE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Many Members were present at the meeting of a Standing Committee in room 371 of the West Block this afternoon. I see many Members who were there with me. We were not informed of the vote. We did not hear the division bells because there are no bells in that room to inform Members of upcoming votes. I think that this problem could be corrected by the Chair and that this should be done immediately so that Members will have enough time to come to the House when there is a vote.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member is right and the Chair will see to it that this situation is corrected as soon as possible.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

SPACE DEVELOPMENT

ADVISABILITY OF PROMOTING A TREATY FOR PEACEFUL USE OF SPACE

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of drafting and promoting a treaty for the peaceful and non-military uses of space and space based technologies.

She said: Mr. Speaker, when I proposed this motion last fall I was already well aware of Canada's increasing involvement in space activities and shared the growing public concern about the possible uses of space for military rather than peaceful purposes. I have felt strongly for some time that Canada should take a lead in maintaining the frontier of space for peaceful purposes. We have already taken a few steps. For example, there was Canada's participation in the United Nations Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space; Canada's own admirable space related accomplishments; and our longstanding dedication to international co-operation and the strengthening of the body of international law, for example Canada's long and leading role in the Law of the Sea. These provide a real opening for Canada to take further initiatives in securing the peaceful development of the last frontier.

The time is right for someone, and Canada is an ideal candidate, to propose—indeed, to draft and promote—a treaty for the peaceful and non-military uses of space and space based technologies.

Since last fall we have all become aware of U.S. Defence Department plans to use the NASA International Space Station Project for military and, particularly, SDI purposes. Aviation Week and Space Technology magazine reported the following on December 22:

> The U.S. Defence Department has decided to draw formal plans for use of the U.S./international space station for military research—Defence Department officials—assert their right to station based research in light of SDI requirements and Defence Space Policy. NASA officials think the Defence Department will use the station for at least basic research related to SDI as well as other military areas.

I repeat the words "at least basic research related to SDI as well as other military areas". This is dreadful news. It is news that raises the real possibility that Canada will become directly involved in the militarization of space, and directly involved in SDI through our participation in the space station. Therefore, there is now a real urgency to address this question. The Government at the moment is being naive, at best, in failing to recognize what is going on both with the space station plans and with the urgent issue of militarization of space.

In responding to this alarming news of United States military/SDI plans for the space station, the director of Canada's space station project buried his head in the sand and said that Canada would continue to participate "until a possible change in policy regarding its use is substantiated". Certainly, a more decisive approach than this is needed.

The United Nations has already decided "as a matter of priority" to seek ways and means of maintaining outer space for peaceful purposes. Its committee established for that purpose is working for, among other things, the banning of weapons in outer space, including anti-satellite weapons; international co-operation in space exploration; the strengthening of international law and institutions for such exploration; the establishment of a World Space Organization; the development of space law and international agreements; greater governmental co-operation; prevention of growing militarization in space; and high level bilateral negotiations between the superpowers, and multilateral negotiations to prevent an arms race in space.

Canada should take a lead in drafting and promoting a treaty that would draw on the work of this important commiteee of the United Nations. Such a treaty would prohibit weapons in space; it would forestall the deployment of anti-satellite weapons; it would prevent other types of militarization such as military training, research, and experimentation; it would secure space for exciting, challenging, truly international co-operative ventures designed for the benefit rather than the destruction of humanity.

I would hope that such a treaty would create a world space organization that would concentrate on using space technology for peaceful international activities. Such activities would include communication, navigation, and search and rescue—it should be noted, of course, that Canada, the Soviet Union, France, and the United States are already co-operating in the highly successful SARSAT—remote sensing for agriculture and resource management, meteorology and disaster forecasting, and energy, medical, and biological research. These are some of the activities that a world space organization would undertake.

As well as promoting an urgently needed treaty to prevent the militarization of space, Canada should give careful consideration to a three-stage program, which was discussed at the United Nations last fall, for securing international co-operation and the peaceful uses of space, starting with a special United Nations General Assembly not later than 1990, and leading to co-ordination of national space activities, and ultimately to internationalized direction of the peaceful uses and exploration of space by the year 2000.

Last week, with sadness, we marked the first anniversary of the United States space shuttle tragedy. In December, I had the honour of meeting and having a long discussion with the distinguished Austrian Foreign Minister, Peter Jankowitsch, who for some time was Chairman of the United Nations Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space. I wish to quote from his final statement to that committee before he left New York to resume his position as Foreign Minister of Austria. He said:

> The vast benefits that mankind has reaped over past decades from space science and technology, and even more, the tremendous possibilities that still lie ahead, can only lead to one overriding conclusion: the doors to outer space have been thrown wide open and a tremendous job remains to be done. We have created instruments that work, as well as a sense of mission that is quite unique.
> We should re-dedicate ourselves, not only to the peaceful conquest of outer space through human beings and through their minds, through ever newer and ever richer technological accomplishments, but also through an increased measure of international co-operation. If we proceed in this spirit, hardly any sacrifice will have been made in vain.

I hope that other Members will join me in calling on Canada to take the lead at the United Nations, and elsewhere, in this mission of knowledge, international co-operation, and peace.

Space belongs to us all. It is not something that a single nation has a right to exploit for its own purposes, particularly military purposes. All nations must work toward the internationalization of space, and we must direct our efforts to the peaceful and non-military uses of space.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak to the motion presented by the Hon. Member on the other side of the House.

We know that for a number of years, the international community has become increasingly concerned about the possibility of an arms race in outer space. Mr. Speaker, this growing concern reflects an increased awareness on the part of decision-makers and the general public of new technologies of every kind that are making the possibility of using outer space for military as well as for peaceful and beneficial purposes less and less remote.

In fact, since the beginning of the space age, a host of military applications have been developed, mainly for surveillance and communications. The Soviet Union has been one of the leaders in the use of outer space for military purposes. Growing international concern was heightened by President Reagan's announcement in 1983 about a major research program that would examine the feasibility of an ABM defence system, including weapons based in space.

President Reagan's announcement was not the cause of the concern about the military use of outer space although it did much to increase it.

The main multilateral forums before which this issue is dealt with in the context of disarmament and arms control are the First Committee of the UN General Assembly and the Geneva Conference on Disarmament. In 1981, the UN General Assembly started discussing ways to prevent an arms race in outer space. Ever since, this matter has been on the agenda of the First Committee of the UN General Assembly.

During its 1985 session, the Conference on Disarmament agreed for the first time on the terms of reference of a special committee charged with discussing prevention of an arms race in outer space. Mr. Speaker, those terms of reference, which did not include negotiations, were renewed and only slightly modified at the 1986 session.

Canada played an active role in the discussion and debate on this issue at the First Committee and the Conference on Disarmament. At the First Committee of the UN General Assembly, non-aligned countries have traditionally been the most progressive.

At the 1985 and 1986 sessions of the First Committee, the Canadian delegation worked closely with the Western delegations and members of the group of non-aligned countries to achieve a consensus on an appropriate resolution. These efforts have been largely successful so far, and Canada was able to join the other delegations in supporting a resolution that was adopted without dissent.

Whereas the debates of the first commission reflect, at the political level, the significance of various concerns and the national interest, the disarmament commission was the forum for more serious discussions on different legal, technical and political aspects of the use of outer space. Canada's contribution to these debates ranks among the best.

At the 1985 session we presented a working paper which was an in-depth study of current international legislation concerning arms control and outer space. During last year's session we produced a document dealing more specifically with the use of terminology.

Undeniably, our contributions gave a sense of direction to the commission debates and made it a lot easier to make the participants more aware of the complex process involved in drafting international legislation governing military and non-military use of outer space. Canada is hopeful that during the 1987 session which will open soon it will be possible to reach early agreement on a mandate which will pave the way for further studies in this field.

The activities of Canada within these two multilateral key forums attests to the Government's firm commitment to promote the peaceful use of, and the prevention of the arms race in, outer space. The efforts made to this end within these forums should, we believe, support and complement the bilateral discussions held by the United States and the U.S.S.R. in the course of their Geneva negotiations on nuclear and space issues which, as you know, have the same objective. Mr. Speaker, we are confident that Canadians endorse our approach.

• (1720)

[English]

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the spirit of the resolution put forward by the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) and to take serious objection to the gobbledegook we have just heard.

[Translation]

—of the Government spokesman who has uttered a number of meaningless words.

[English]

The fact of the matter is that it is embarrassing and deplorable that a Government could respond to such a resolution with fluffery and without addressing the central issue about which people around the world are deeply concerned, that is, the ongoing development of the Strategic Defence Initiative and the clear determination on the part of the Reagan administration to deploy that system in space at the earliest possible opportunity.

For the Parliamentary Secretary to stand in the House for 10 minutes and not deal with that central issue and pretend somehow that it was an intelligent and rational response could only bring the most anguished cry of shame that the Government ignores a compelling imperative which the country must address—the fundamental problem of how we control that clear determination of our close ally.

I believe this Private Member's Motion represents the concern felt by many Canadians. I see that the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary thinks it is a joke. There are millions of Canadians who do not think the SDI is a joke, but they may think that the Government is a joke. Certainly the polls show that most Canadians think the Government is a joke. The fact of the matter is that this issue is nothing to laugh about. It goes to the very heart of what we as a country are prepared to do to provide a different response to the arms race.

The Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam was quite right in saying that we are at a very important turning point and that all the work done in committees of the United Nations and by others stands as a very feeble defence against the determination of the Reagan administration to proceed.

It was frightening to read the speech of Secretary of Defence Caspar Weinberger as reported in The New York Sunday Times indicating that the intent of that administration was to move toward deployment of the SDI before its term of office is over and to so develop this crazy and wild scheme that successive administrations will not be able to turn it back. I only regret that the chief spokesman for our Government did not try to come to grips with that issue in some sensitive way rather than present the silliness we heard.

For the moment I want to address my remarks to the Hon. Member who presented the resolution before us. I think there is a flaw in the resolution, which does not in any way distract from its spirit or purpose. The resolution itself talks about the militarization of space. We must be careful and clear in recognizing that it is important to maintain certain of the present military aspects of space as a form of detection, surveillance, and verification. If the resolution had talked about the elimination of weapons in space, I think it would have been much clearer.

When the Hon. Member refers to the military use or application of space, I do not believe she is promoting the abolition of various forms of satellites presently used to gain information and which could be and must be used as a way of maintaining stability. In this terrible, maniacal world with the nuclear genie out of the bottle, one of the forces of stability is the capacity of both major nuclear powers to have a fairly clear sense of information about what the other side is up to.

I pose a question which I believe I heard in the Hon. Member's remarks: how do we go from an exchange of the satellite technology which is now used for surveillance and verification into a kind of controlled management outside the capacity of the military, into an internationalization of it, or into space agencies of a domestic kind which must maintain that form of gathering information and therefore must maintain the technology?

For example, in the case of Canada it may be a realistic proposition that we as a country want to develop our own satellite technology as a way of protecting our own sovereignty and of providing an independent form of detection of the various machinations of the superpowers in our own space. Satellite technology may be used as an adjunct to do that. We would not want to give that away, just as I think it would be important for us to contribute. I fully endorse the spirit of the Hon. Member's resolution toward the internationalization of that kind of control. However, it is in a sense a military use of space. The proper definition would be that we do not want to weaponize space or use it for its offensive capability or capacity.

I draw that to the Hon. Member's attention because she was not at a meeting which we had a week or so ago with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). At that time we said it would be very important for the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade to examine carefully the arms control questions relating to space.

For example, it would be very important for us to decide what is the definition of "research" as defined by the Americans when it comes to the ABM Treaty and its use of SDI. We need that kind of expert advice. I think we as a Parliament should proceed with a very careful study of the arms control aspects of space technology as it applies to our own purposes, as it applies to the developments of the superpowers, and as it applies to the potential that we would have to employ this technology in the United Nations or through an international space agency.

It is a case where one must marry the technology to politics. One must marry the philosophy or the morality of the use of space to the increasing and highly complex technology which is being employed. Certainly the thrust of the Hon. Member's remarks that this is not something which must be confined in a secret or covert way inside the Pentagon or the Kremlin is something that other countries can abide or tolerate.

We must have a much broader and open control of management of space technology and use it to provide both stability in the arms race and, hopefully, its eventual elimination. That may mean that we will have to use technology in space and we should not be attempting to eliminate or abolish it. I suppose in a perfect world it could be, but unfortunately once we develop a technology, someone will try to use it. The best way to offset that is to ensure that we have adequate capability of detection, surveillance, or observation of what other countries are doing.

I agree fully with the Hon. Member that the way we do it now is wrong and leads to instability. Where it is particularly wrong is in terms of the initiatives to turn the technology of space into an aggressive offensive weapons system. That is something to which the Government must say no, but it refuses to do so. It must say no to the efforts of the United States to broaden the interpretation of the ABM Treaty, to wit, as we heard President Reagan, after the Reykjavik meeting, say that the United States intended to test and develop space weapons. That was clearly a break with the proper rules and laws of the ABM Treaty.

• (1730)

Ms. Jewett: And ASAT weapons.

Mr. Axworthy: And the ASAT weapons, as well, I agree with the Hon. Member. Why does our Government refuse to speak out on this issue, why does it tend to say that the Americans really are not talking about a broad interpretation? It comes to me as a great regret that we seem to be avoiding coming to grips with the issue, something about which there would be total agreement in Canada. I do not know of any Canadian who wants further weaponization of space. What is the Government hiding from? Why is the Government not prepared to take a firmer, clearer stand on this crucial issue? What is it that we have to lose? Are we afraid that somehow we will once again run counter to the wishes of the Reagan administration? Is that what is holding us up?

Surely, Mr. Speaker, in an issue as crucial and as universal in its application, this is an area where the Mulroney Government can afford to say no for once. It is important that it do that, because as we saw in Reykjavik on this one issue alone, on the ability to come to some decision to halt the development of an SDI program rests the opportunity to move toward the abolition, elimination or reduction of offensive nuclear weapons, if we could get our American allies to agree with us. I think it is important that a country like Canada speak out to provide that persuasion. We can make then a breakthrough for which the world has been yearning for four years. I think we should support the spirit of the resolution, even though I think the wording of it is something that leaves some questions in mind.

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I welcome heartily the introduction of this motion, partly because it focuses the attention of the House on an area of Government that for years has received scant attention, namely, the whole area of External Affairs and the relationship between this country and the rest of the world, and more particularly because it focuses our attention on space. This is surely the avenue for the human race to follow in the future, especially as we approach the 21st century when, as possibly never before, the human race will see an opportunity for the expansion of our life.

I am delighted that the House has a chance to debate the subject of outer space, I hope not, as in the course of the rest of the day, as Government and Opposition, but recalling that this is Private Members' Hour. We are not here speaking as members of the Opposition or members for the Government but, rather, as Members of Parliament sharing concerns that we have as Canadian representatives.

I support the principle of the motion, but I, like the previous speaker, have reservations about the wording. One could infer that there was no such treaty, that there was nothing now in existence and having an effect upon the way in which nations conduct themselves vis-a-vis outer space. The fact is that we have 17 treaties and covenants to which this country has been a party. Canada has given leadership since 1959 when the Committee for Peaceful Uses of Outer Space was first formed by the United Nations and to which since then for almost a generation Canada has been a party. During those years the various countries participating have produced such treaties and covenants as these: the Outer Space Treaty, the Moon Treaty, the ABM Treaty, the two SALT Treaties, the Threshold Ban Treaties, the Peaceful Nuclear Explosions Treaty, the Partial Test Ban Treaty and the Environmental Modification Treaty. We have had an extraordinary, impressive list of international agreements by which the nations of the world have come to grips with this unprecedented challenge, which indicate how Canada and the various Governments are endeavouring, in a responsible, co-operative, way to face the challenge that the development of outer space presents.

I would like to see some attention in this debate focus upon the positive way in which the peaceful uses of outer space can be developed. Let me tell the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) to keep listening. I fully concur with the concern about the demilitarization of space and about the deweaponization of space, but I would like the record of this debate to show some fuller attention given to the technological, scientific, productive development of space, because peace is not simply a matter of excluding conflict, but also a matter of developing the opportunities for the human race to lead a fuller life.

I believe that is what we are doing now and what Canada has in the past two years, endeavoured to do through its international negotiations and activities. We have, for example, entered into a partnership with the United States manned space station project which can be a very productive, salutary, positive development for the U.S. and Canada. We have reached out to Europe in a co-operative venture, being a partner in several programs initiated by the European Space Agency. We have invited other countries to co-operate with us, particularly in the RadarSat remote sensing project which is the chief Canadian effort, the one in which Canadian expertise and leadership can have the most positive, lasting contribution to the world.

Important as the prod, the stimulus and the inspiration of this motion can be to the House today, I believe it is vital that we recognize what Canada has been doing and build on that foundation. I believe that the advent of the Canadian Space Agency announced in the Speech from the Throne that began this session offers us the promise and the expectation of that. That agency can co-ordinate the existing programs. It can initiate new endeavours and thereby offer us an opportunity to develop and progress, which is much needed.

In the remaining time available to me, Mr. Speaker, I want to focus attention on the other dimension of this motion, which is concern about the peaceful use of outer space with particular application to demilitarization and deweaponization, the avoidance of conflict and the avoidance of the use of outer space as a way by which new military power can be asserted by one nation or a group of nations over others. It is vital that we recognize that already in the absence of clear, comprehensive treaties, such as this motion would call for, there is nonetheless some basis in international law that seeks to achieve the objectives which I would believe would be the purpose of the treaty to which the motion refers. For instance, certain military activities in outer space can now be held to be inconsistent with international law, such as interference with space based remote sensors that could be used for military purposes as between the U.S.A. and the U.S.S.R.; the placement of nuclear weapons and other weapons of mass destruction in orbit around the earth and on celestial bodies or in orbit around them; hostile acts through the use of force on celestial bodies and the orbits around them; the placement of military bases and conduct of military tests or manoeuvres on celestial bodies and in orbits around them; the testing of nuclear weapons in outer space; the development, testing, and deployment of space based ABM systems or components; and the military or hostile use of environmental modification techniques in outer space.

It is true that this corpus of international law does not meet all the needs. It certainly does not exclude the challenge which the motion and its proponent addressed namely, the hazard that has been brought before us anew by the possibility of a strategic defence program. We will not be unmindful in debating this, but Canada has decisively refused as a country and a Government to be a party to the research dimension of that Strategic Defence Initiative.

Let us recognize that. We have not refused to recognize the potential validity of SDI in the hands of the United States but we as a country have not participated actively in it. Let us therefore recognize that as we contemplate the possibility of a Strategic Defence Initiative by the United States or its equivalent by the Soviet Union, something which we should not refuse to recognize as being a serious possibility, the world at large faces a previously unknown hazard, and this must concern the House as it must concern the nation. Therefore, I would welcome the prospect envisioned by this motion of focusing anew on the need for further and fuller agreements between nations with respect to the use of outer space for military purposes.

I do not assume that one treaty can be like one magic wand that will remove the danger. Rather, I would think in terms of future agreements building on the foundation I have outlined in these remarks. Whether we are talking about one more treaty, a series of them or amendments to existing agreements, I would hope that we would be committed to the removal of the hazard of destruction to the world that is now before us through the technological use of outer space. I would hope that we would recognize that we have a new frontier and a new opportunity and that we as a human race should be prepared to use it for the future life of man rather than for future destruction.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to have an opportunity to speak on this motion, which asks that we give consideration to enacting a Bill in Parliament that would deal with the peaceful uses of outer space. As the Hon. Member who spoke previously said, as did the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), the motion is useful because many Members on all sides of the House agree with it. I believe it is also needed to enable Parliament to clarify a policy. I believe that that policy has not been clarified. In fact, we need legislation that will follow on such a discussion as this in order to make that policy both clear and firm.

Even with the 17 treaties to which the previous speaker referred, we do not have any democratic control of space. It may be thought that space is too far away from us for democracy to be at issue. However, I would like to give a major example of the way in which our lack of democratic opportunity to control space policy is very destructive.

Last year, the Government undertook to give $800 million to the construction of the space station that was being promoted for $12 billion by the United States. There was no consultation with the people about that. There was no way that Parliament was able to debate that decision on its merits. There was no democratic decision made by the country. In effect, there was a dictatorial decision made by one man, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and those whom he pleased to have with him in his Cabinet. They followed that up by cutting budgets. They slashed the budget of the National Research Council and, after having promised to restore the previous Government's cuts, they slashed the budget for post-secondary education. They slashed money from all kinds of research projects in the arts and sciences, money that would have gone for peaceful purposes as most university funding would go. The decision to do this was made largely without any consultation. There was a discussion of the slashing of the budget for post-secondary education.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): It was not slashed.

Mr. Heap: I hear an Hon. Member saying that it was not slashed, but he knows full well that in terms of actual spending dollars, it was slashed and it was one of the slashes that was made—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minsiter, on a point of order.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to remind the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) that he is going completely against our standing orders at this time. I think that will be obvious from the blues. Even if this is the period set aside for Private Member's Business, normally the Hon. Member should rise to speak either for or against the issue at hand. I fail to see how what he says is relevant. He was talking about cutbacks in education. I let the matter pass for a while, but I think we ought to remind the Hon. Member to get back to the subject.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member will make his comments relevant to the motion presented by the Hon. Member of his own Party.

Mr. Heap: In fact, Mr. Speaker, I have consulted with the mover of the motion on this point. The point I am trying to make, if the majority Party will not, in an undemocratic fashion, take away my right to speak, is that those budget cuts were made to established programs used for peaceful purposes in order to find $800 million for the space station. What is the purpose of the space station? We were told at the time that its purpose was peaceful research. There was an understanding that it would not be used for military purposes. Now the cat is out of the bag, and that undemocratic decision to give $800 million to the space station has been exposed by the American decision to use the space station for purposes of war. In other words, the Americans practised a little deceit for a year, and this Government accepted at face value their vague statement that it was to be used for peaceful purposes. Therefore, because these things have been done in an undemocratic way, the effect is that research for war and SDI in that space station has taken $800 million away from peaceful programs in Canada. That action is highly undemocratic.

If the Government had bluntly told the Canadian people that it wished to give $800 million to star wars by contributing it to the space station, the Canadian people would have objected even more strongly than they did when the joint committee heard people all across Canada tell the Government to stay out of star wars. If the people had been told that star wars would take away money from the NRC, universities and research in the humanities and science, they would have reacted much more strongly.

My point is that we need legislation such as the legislation for which the mover of the motion, the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett), has asked. We need legislation democratically based and passed by this Parliament so that the Government is obliged to follow the principles of it. The Government would not then, I would hope, imagine that it had the freedom to take such an autocratic action as it has taken in the funding of the space station.

As has been pointed out by all three previous speakers, there are many important peaceful uses for research into peaceful activities in space. We need those peaceful activities and the entire world needs them. Yes, I agree with the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry to the extent that one of those activities should be surveillance since there are still warlike activities to be surveyed. However, that should be done through the United Nations. If the space station is to be used for surveillance, it should be directed and controlled by the United Nations, the only international authority that has any standing between the two superpowers that may be engaged in space warfare or war-related space research. Again that should be legislated in this Parliament. That is to say, it should be legislated that our contribution to any space station should be based only on a clear agreement that it would be under the direction of the UN. Therefore, any surveillance of military activities, on the ground or in space, would be carried out for the benefit of all the people of the world. It would not be just for the benefit of the U.S. military, who will of course keep secret any results of military surveillance, military testing, or military uses of the space station they expect us to help pay for. Under the UN a space station would be capable of pursuing to the benefit of all peoples in the world both the broad range of peaceful uses which the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) has read out and the other two speakers have agreed to, but also any necessary surveillance of potential warlike activities. However, that will not happen unless in Canada and other countries democratic legislation such as this motion proposes is adopted in order to control the Governments and their representatives, military representatives above all, who engage in other kinds of adventures in space.

• (1750)

I hope the House will accept in due course the position put forward by the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam and bring this matter to fruition through discussion and a vote in this Parliament.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity today to speak to the motion presented by the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett). This is indeed a serious matter, and I am surprised that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy)—unfortunately he is not in the House to hear what I have to say, and I hope he will be able to read this in Hansard tomorrow—should come here to tell us that the Canadian Government has not taken seriously the issue of the peaceful use of space. I would call that not bad faith but at least gross negligence. Often the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry has given us such a variety of opinions on Canada's role in space agencies or on Canadian defence policy that there is something for everyone. It is difficult to know exactly where he stands or in fact where his party stands on issues of this magnitude. In fact, this lack of focus should not be surprising. We have seen how this kind of attitude put a crushing financial burden on this country, which in thse difficult times makes decisions often far more difficult. Because we have to live with a problematic financial situation, it becomes increasingly difficult to make decisions that require a financial commitment from the Government. I think it was with this in mind that in the past the Government reacted as it did to the issue of the peaceful use of space.

Suggesting, as the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam did just now, that Canadian diplomacy be engaged in vast U.N. manoeuvres—with all due respect—practically ignores the progress accomplished by the community of nations in developing a law of space and especially the problems raised by the use of outer space for peaceful purposes.

Mr. Speaker, I think this underestimates the role of the committee on the peaceful use of outer space and the relevance of the issues it is considering at this time.

Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of our colleagues who sit on the Opposition benches on the other side of the House, allow me to recall briefly how the United Nations have evolved over the nearly 30 years since they first got involved in the great space exploration adventure, the most recent and undoubtedly the most challenging human epic.

Back in 1958, after man put the first artificial satellite Sputnik into earth orbit, the General Assembly of the United Nations established an ad hoc committee of 18 nations which a year later, pursuant to Resolution 1472, became the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space.

So today we are being urged to launch a new study or finalization process which should eventually lead to a treaty on this issue. This may sound just fine at first, but why ignore and forget what has been done in the past and what is still being done today? As I see it, Canada has always been directly involved, and later on in my remarks I will quote a supportive statement to that effect. Members of this House—indeed the Member of our Party who had the floor a few minutes ago raised this issue before the United Nations last year.

Since 1961 the standing committee—now made up of 53 member countries—has represented the interests of humanity and now includes countries which have the technical know-how required to send satellites into orbit or can produce the systems and subsystems carried aloft by modern communications or earth observation satellites. I might also mention the ever larger group of nations anxious to share in the economic, scientific and humanitarian benefits which the peaceful use of outer space has put within our reach.

Under these circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to make a brief review of these questions which are being dealt with by and are of particular interest to the committee. First, the review of the impact of international co-operation in the peaceful use of outer space; the establishment of international co-operation programs which might be carried out under the auspices of the United Nations; the promotion of applied research and the peaceful use of space; the distribution of research information; and the study of legal problems created by space exploration.

That committee is already committed and the Hon. Member would like us to recommit ourselves into another process—but we know how much time and energy are needed to take part in international agencies and how difficult and costly it can be, but just the same we should not hesitate to do so. It is very difficult to reach a consensus, as everyone knows. Imagine what waste of time it would be if we launched into a new crusade to reach the same goals. Of course, we should not neglect, nor forget the Hon. Member's good faith in this process, in the idea she had for putting the motion forward, but I feel that at this time we already have another agency, a committee and we should follow on the course already taken.

The work of the committee in the area of space law is extensive, and it is because of this that we have negotiated and submitted to the U.N. Assembly the following treaties. The treaty dealing with the principles governing actvities of states on atmospheric space exploration and utilization, including the earth and other celestial bodies—I am quoting rapidly, Mr. Speaker, I know my time is going fast, I am already in the atmosphere at least—agreements on astronauts' rescue; the return of astronauts and the return of objects launched into space; the convention on international responsibility for damage caused by space objects; the convention on the registration of objects launched into extra atmospheric space; the agreement on activities of states on the moon and on other celestial bodies. A whole series of treaties on which we worked as a member country of the United Nations, and on which we will keep on working.

It is my view, Mr. Speaker, that Canada has amply done its part, and that this Government's commitment to international agencies and to the Canadian people are in line with what Canadians want.

Ms. Jewett: It is not enough. Question!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-18, an Act respecting national transportation, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the various parties in the House, and I think I can say that there is unanimous consent—even though I only see the House Leader of the New Democratic Party—for a change to be made to the motion and calling for the Bill to be referred to the Transport Committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion moved by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary?

[English]

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I enjoyed my first opportunity to speak so much that I wanted to enter the debate again. I move, pursuant to Standing Order 76(1):

That the question be now put.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what the Government is up to. First it moved to extend the hours and now it is moving to put the question. I wish the Government would make up its mind. It is clear that the Government is showing very little respect for a long-standing tradition in this House. I am sure that even the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader (Mr. Lewis) would admit that Bill C-18 is of major national importance. A look at the record will indicate that this Bill has not been debated to the extent that other Bills of this importance have.

We just voted on a motion for a six-month hoist and were returning to the main motion to debate the Bill in principle. The New Democratic Party and the Progressive Conservative Party have taken greatly divergent positions on the issue of deregulation versus reregulation. There are a great many principles at stake. I am genuinely disappointed in the Government and in the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader.

I am sorry that I must stand here today and criticize the manoeuvres which have been initiated. It was disgraceful for the Parliamentary Secretary to move a motion to extend the hours which could only be defeated by having 25 Members stand. It is particularly despicable to move such a motion between 4 o'clock and 5 o'clock when eight different standing or legislative committees of this House were sitting. There is a total of only 70 opposition Members. With Members of Parliament doing their job by attending committees or doing their job elsewhere in the country, it is very unfair to expect the Opposition to have 25 Members present. That is not the kind of thing one would expect of a person who ran for the position of Speaker on the basis that he would respect fairness, the Opposition, and due process.

We see from this action that the Government does not want to have a debate on this issue because it is vulnerable on it. There could be no clearer indication of the Government's perception of weakness in its position on deregulation than twice moving to stifle debate today. It first thought that if the hours were extended the Opposition might crumble rather than spend the evening in the House of Commons. That was apparently successful with the Liberals because they are not here, with the exception of the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) who is the transport critic for his Party and probably felt some obligation to be here.

However, we did not crumble. We indicated our willingness to debate into the evening and then vote. When the Government saw that that tactic did not work and that it may actually have to debate the Bill, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader moved that the question be now put. What is going on? The only conclusion which one can possibly reach is that the Government has no intention of allowing the type of debate which we should have on this very important issue.

I have spoken to this issue only once. I was hoping to speak to it again tonight. This issue deals with the future of Canada. What could be more important to the very existence of Canada than our transportation infrastructure? Yet, the Government proposes to change that radically through Bill C-18. Bill C-18 would permit American railroads to compete directly with Canadian railroads for Canadian traffic.

I thought it was ironic when the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) spoke earlier today or yesterday about the importance of using low-sulphur coal from Alberta and British Columbia in Ontario. He spoke about the jobs which that would create across Canada. Yet, the Deputy Prime Minister was one of the initiators of this legislation which, if passed, would mean that if we were ever to ship Alberta coal to Ontario it would probably be shipped by Burlington Northern across the northern United States. That would really create a lot of jobs. That makes a lot of sense. Yet, that is the type of legislation we have before us.

It is because this legislation is so important to the future of Canada and because so many of us feel so strongly that the future of our country is at stake that I find this to be one of the most offensive things I have encountered in the eight years I have been here. I cannot remember being as angry or disappointed as I am tonight. When in Opposition, the Conservatives were self-righteous, pontificating and pious about how awful the Liberals were in moving closure and trying to stifle Parliament. We listened to that rhetoric and crap for years. I almost believed them. I almost believed that when they became the Government they would be different.

If government Members had a chance, they would get up and say that we should get this Bill into committee where we can have a rational discussion and hear evidence. That was the argument they used to get Bill C-22 into committee. They are now using every tactic known to prevent that committee from hearing the evidence in full.

• (1810)

A recent example of what I am talking about is the Government's determination to prevent the representative of the American generic drug industry to come before the committee. The Government is using its majority to out-manoeuvre and to stifle the Opposition. We have made some progress with respect to parliamentary reform in procedure, committees and so on. However, all that progress is starting to slip away because of the attitude of the Government. The Government is not satisfied to have 210 or 211 Members. It is not satisfied to know that in the final analysis it will probably get its way. That is not good enough for this Government. It wants to make sure there is not even adequate debate. I hope there are people out there listening, because unfortunately there is no one in the press gallery.

The Government is making a major move on the Opposition on a major piece of legislation and it is all happening, as far as we can tell, with hardly anyone noticing. Some day, a year or two down the road, a lot of jobs will be on the line because of this stupid, ridiculous and un-Canadian legislation the Government is trying to shove down our throats tonight. People will then discover the real consequences of the legislation. We will hear comments such as: "How did that get through? How did we let that go by?" When that happens, we in the New Democratic Party will at least be able to say we did everything we could to ensure it did not go by. If it does get by this House of Commons, it will not be because the NDP did not stand up and say anything about it.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I rise once again to participate in a debate on deregulation and at the same time, it seems, I rise to participate in a debate about parliamentary democracy and about the ability of the people of this country to have an understanding through their legislators of what a particular piece of legislation means. What will it mean to those people in Atlantic Canada, in Quebec and in Ontario? What will it mean to the people living on the Prairies? What will it mean in British Columbia? We have not had that many hours of debate.

An Hon. Member: Twelve.

Mr. Angus: We are now into 10 minute speeches. Hon. Members opposite say we have had 12 hours of debate. The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis) earlier suggested from across the floor that we name a Bill which has had longer debate.

Let me go back into that other Parliament and remind the Hon. Member, because I believe he was here even though I was not, of the debate on the Crow rate. It went on for hours and hours and hours. Days and days were spent debating that very important piece of legislation. Granted, that was for both second and third reading stages. However, in magnitude, if the Crow Bill was extremely important to western Canada, this Bill is even more important. It is a fundamental change in the manner in which we are going to allow our transportation systems to work in this country. It is a fundamental change in our transportation relationships with our neighbours to the south.

One of the realities of this Bill is that instead of our east-west network of transportation components, whether road, rail or air, this Bill will bring about a north-south linkage. Instead of grain moving from western Canada through Thunder Bay and down the Seaway, the principle of this Bill means that grain can move immediately south of the border, because it will be cheaper to do so, then by rail across the United States to ocean-going vessels which will take it to wherever. Some of our potash from western Canada is already being railed into the United States and on to Chicago, and much more will go that way.

The rail and trucking interests in the United States are much larger. They have economies of scale we have not even dreamed of here in Canada. By their very nature they will be able to undercut our industries. Perhaps not tomorrow or the day after the Bill is passed, but there will come a time when those giants in the United States will begin to slowly acquire the assets of our trucking companies and rail lines, if the Government is foolish enough to allow CN to be privatized, and I do not put that past the Government. The Americans will gobble up our transportation infrastructure. The economic stranglehold the Americans already have over some of our sectors will expand into our transportation sector.

This is a Bill about what it is to be a Canadian. It is consistent with the Conservative philosophy, whether it be on free trade, generic drugs or the manner in which we allow the United States to trample us and our resources, for example, our softwood lumber, our shakes and shingles. Perhaps it will be pulp and paper next. And what about the cod being given away to France? You name it, Mr. Speaker, the Government is giving away the store and everything in it. It is saying: "Take the shelves. Take the door". The Government's idea of "open for business" is "up for sale". That is why I think it is important that we should have a full and thoughtful debate in this House.

The people of Canada do not receive Hansard and do not receive a copy of the Bill delivered to their doorstep. Even if they did, they would probably not understand it because it is full of legalese and not written in the language of the ordinary Canadian. We need the medium of the House of Commons debates because there are thousands of people out there who watch us on a regular basis and the media which reports our debates. Debate gives them an opportunity to understand the perspective of the Liberal Party, what the Government's vision is and the perspective of the New Democratic Party. They can then judge the appropriateness of a piece of legislation.

We do not know whether the Government is prepared to give the Committee on Transport, which is rightfully charged with review of the legislation once it passes second reading, the responsibility, if not the right, to travel throughout this country and have a public forum and platform for those who support the Bill, for those who oppose it and for those who are not so sure. These people should be able to come before Members of Parliament and tell us what they think about the Bill. But we do not have that assurance. Our only option, as members of the Opposition, is to do our best to express our fears and concerns in this forum and hope that the people out there are listening and becoming informed.

I understand that in the morning session one of the Conservative Members who represents a vast riding in northern Canada participated in the debate. I had the opportunity of travelling with him during a tour of the Western Arctic where we learned about the realities of the far North. We learned about the dependence upon transportation as a means of communication far beyond what we in southern Canada can really appreciate. The only contact those people have with another community is by air. They are totally dependent upon that contact to bring them food, clothing and an energy source on an ongoing basis. The perception there is that they have been held up for ransom, that the transportation companies have taken advantage of them.

I will give Hon. Members one example. In my caucus as well as in the Transport Committee, I am known as someone who enjoys Coca-Cola. I took a case of Coca-Cola with me from Winnipeg on the northern tour. The Conservative members laughed when I brought the case on the plane. They asked me what I would do with it. I said: "Wait and see".

I paid about 75 cents per can in Winnipeg. I bought it at a corner store, so it was not exactly a bargain basement price. When we got into our first stop in northern Canada, a can of Coke in the pop machine at the airport was $2 per can. I said to my Conservative friends: "I'll sell you a can for $1.50".

On one of our first hearings one of the witnesses who appeared before us was an operator of an airline. He pointed to a can of Coke and said: "You see that can, they blame me for the fact that it costs $2 in a pop machine or in a corner store. I can bring it into this community for $1 a can".

This illustrates that we have to be careful in dealing with the North to understand what the impact of the transportation component is on the economic side while at the same time appreciating the need for the small merchant who has a small volume of sales and who has to earn some money off that can of pop to remain viable in the northern environment.

I would now like to relate to Hon. Members some of the things we encountered on our trip to the North. Something which was made clear to me, and certainly all Conservative members of the committee came away with much the same idea, is that northern Canada is extremely sensitive and fragile. It needs a different set of rules from the rules that are needed in southern Canada. It needs rules to prevent an entrepreneur from southern Canada coming in in the good season, picking off air freight and passenger runs and then at the end of the season returning to the South leaving the locally-based struggling airline to fold or move its operations south. The matter goes beyond getting from point A to point B in terms of passengers or boxes. It means something to the over-all economy of the North and those communities.

I appreciate that my very short time has almost run out. Hopefully, I will have an opportunity at another time to continue my remarks in this debate.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have just been looking about the House of Commons and I do not believe that there is a quorum in the House at the moment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is now a quorum. The Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) on debate.

An Hon. Member: We'll now hear about the TTC.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, Members opposite want to hear about the TTC. At least they know that it is a good example of good transportation legislation which, unfortunately, is not being followed in this Parliament. I would say that in Metro Council in Toronto, on which I served for four years, we did not use this type of tactic of cutting short debate. That is why we have a regulated transportation system that serves the whole of Metro Toronto with the use of a single fare. It works to bring Metro Toronto together instead of dividing it one muncipality from another. Hon. Members opposite think that is a joke. They are very happy to rip apart the transportation system of Canada and split Canada into its separate regions so it can be taken over by their business buddies in the United States.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance on a point of order.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, I think we are here tonight to debate specifically the subject matter on the agenda, and I suggest our colleague should stick to the matter that is before the House.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Spadina has the floor.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I wish Hon. Members would make up their minds. They wanted to hear about the TTC and I was telling them. I was then coming back to discuss this foolish motion that they put forward which is cutting short the debate. The Hon. Member does not even want me to discuss this motion now. He has not made up his mind as to what he wants.

The point I am trying to make is that by cutting short the debate with respect to this transportation Bill, which is needed to make corrections for the growth of transportation in Canada over the last 20 years, and which is being too hastily done, is doing very severe damage to the transportation system of Canada.

There has to be time to hear the different people of Canada, not only the consumers and their needs, but the people who do the actual transportation work, the companies and the workers. That time has not been provided because the Government does not want to face them. The fact is it knows well that there is a rising tide of dissatisfaction with its program of deregulation. There were some people attracted at first by the idea that everybody would have cheap fares to fly to Vancouver, et cetera. The downside of it is now beginning to come out.

We are now learning what is happening in the United States where there is a rising tide of road accidents because truck drivers are being pressured to work 100 hours a week—and that ain't safe. Equipment is becoming worn out. Companies are cutting their maintenance to the bone. Trucks break down on the road and cause accidents. Other equipment breaks down. Companies that rushed in are rushing out again in bankruptcy. It is becoming difficult to find the investment to keep some of these trucking services going. For example, that is what we have heard from the trucking industry in California.

In fact, as reported in an article in The Wall Street Journal, we find that independent truckers who hailed deregulation are reconsidering it as a rate war rages and taxes rise. The article states that many of the nation's—speaking of the United States where they have experience with the type of nonsense this Government wants to ram down our throats—100,000 independent truckers and their organized representatives are calling for some new form of regulating truck rates these days. They want regulation back again. The article goes on to state that most of these latter-day cowboys had applauded vigorously the removal of regulatory restraints in years before. At first a lot of independents thought that regulation looked like the land of opportunity, but it now looks like annihilation.

A similar thing is being said by the spokespeople of the industry in Ontario. The Ottawa-based Canada Safety Council states that it is on the highway where deregulation causes the most mysteries. Of concern is that it may lead to a decrease in safety, such as encouraging people to compete to the extent that a go of it can only be made by working 100 hours a week. The council does not only warn that this could happen; it warns that it has started already by the people who are trying to jump the gun on this Government's foolish deregulating legislation.

The article goes on to state that the statistics are already grim. It states that highway accidents and deaths in Canada have gone up for the first time since 1973 and that bigger and longer vehicles are competing for space on clogged roads. I suppose the Government might suggest building bigger roads, but it will not provide the money to do it. Government spending does not meet the demand for road repairs and construction. More private cars are registered each year, and the number of new drivers is constantly increasing. In other words, the pressure against safety on the road is constantly growing.

The Government has taken measures that will inevitably lead to reducing safety. There will be less control, especially over the largest companies. Of the three to six largest companies in the United States, any one of them could take over most of the trucking in Canada. They probably will not, they will probably divide it up by regions, but they will be able to undercut the rates for Canadian truckers.

This is very serious for the City of Toronto. Members opposite who live in other towns laugh about the TTC. They wish they had as low a fare rate in Ottawa as we do in Toronto, with a better managed system. But Toronto also needs trucking. In Spadina there is a great deal of business. There is manufacturing, retail, wholesale, and a great deal of the entertainment industry. In fact, one of the finest entertainment shops is at Queen's Park.

An Hon. Member: Be careful.

Mr. Heap: Somebody tells me to be careful. I know he is suggesting that we have a finer entertainment industry here.

It does not take as long to get into Ottawa as it can take to get into Toronto. There is a good transportation system in Toronto, good people transportation and a good trucking system. There is a great need to have trucks entering Toronto for industrial uses and other human uses.

If the deregulation drive of the Government wipes out the small and medium-sized independent Canadian trucking companies that now primarily serve areas such as Toronto and southern Ontario, cities like Toronto will be at the mercy of competing cities in the northern United States. The trucking companies that can make all the difference between fair prices and adequate service to Toronto and southern Ontario will be controlled not in Canada, but in the United States.

The Chairman of the Ontario Division of the Canadian Industrial Traffic League has said that highway safety in the free-wheeling atmosphere of deregulation has resulted in 1985 being the worst year in history for air disasters. It is not only trucking, but it is also air travel, which is vital to any large city such as Toronto. Air travel will become less safe, according to those whose business it is to study it independently of the Government.

The Government has refused to allow proper examination of the safety hazards. It has refused to allow proper examination of the unemployment hazards. The Government came in on a promise of jobs, jobs, jobs. In the United States the deregulation drive in the trucking industry alone has destroyed 300,000 jobs. If the Government wishes to destroy the Canadian proportion of that, which is 10 per cent, 30,000 jobs in the Canadian trucking industry, it is doing a great disservice not just to the trucking industry and trucking customers, but to the economy of Canada. We do not need 30,000 additional unemployed, whether they are truck drivers, or others in the industry.

Because of the difference in size between the American and Canadian trucking companies, it will be far more than that 10 per cent, far more than 30,000 people whose jobs will be destroyed as the traffic not only moves south, but is taken over by our neighbours to the south. The Government will have the enduring shame and blame from the Canadian people for having ripped to pieces the transportation system of Canada.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments at this stage. I see that already three or four members of the New Democratic Party have had the floor, while not a single Government member has risen, excepting the Parliamentary Secretary who moved closure. I must say that the Government's decision to put an abrupt end to debate today is typical of this Government's attitude. I would say it is typical of a government that is totally lacking in the tolerance and patience one might expect in a parliamentary debate on a bill as important as the Bill before the House today, and the public should know that what we are dicussing at this time is a major reform of the entire National Transportation Act. In other words, after only a few hours of debate, the Government is asking us to hurriedly disrupt a system that has been in place in this country for some twenty years. It is a system that has proved its mettle, serving the Canadian economy, the people who work in the transportation industry, and the general public that enjoys the benefits of transportation and communications by air, by rail and on our highways. The inability of this Conservative Government to accept a compromise or even consider a position that differs from Conservative dogma is discouraging to say the least.

I think the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) was right to recall the time spent on consideration of the Crow Bill, and the debate in this Parliament at the time the previous Liberal Government wanted to change the legislation by introducing a bill, commonly referred to as the Crow Bill, that would bring about a radical change in the procedure for shipping Western wheat. The Government of the time had the patience to listen, not only to all the Members who wanted to speak in this House, as the debate lasted for months, but also to the views of all interested parties throughout the country. That Government had also accepted suggestions and amendments to its Bill. What strikes us in this case is that the Conservative Government wants to use its overwhelming majority to give a hasty passage to all its Bills and to steamroll Members of the Opposition. Each time that the Government has introduced a controversial Bill, it has quickly imposed closure to put an end to the debate in this House and to prevent others from making constructive suggestions and proposals. What I find extremely disappointing is that the Government is once more imposing closure and rejecting all constructive suggestions made by the Opposition.

In his remarks earlier, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) said that I was one of the only Liberals present this evening. There is a very simple explanation for this. The fact is that we in the Official Opposition have come to the obvious conclusion that the wish of the majority, that is of the Government, is to give this Bill passage this evening. A large number, and even a majority of Liberal Members have already risen in this debate to speak either about the amendment moved by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) or the main motion for second reading. In fact, 18 Liberal Members have already spoken. We shall therefore no longer be speaking this evening. I shall be the only one to rise on behalf of our party to express one last time our objection to the attitude of this Government. It is useless to repeat the same things over and over again. The dice have been cast. The Government has imposed closure this evening and this Bill will receive second reading.

What interests us now, Mr. Speaker, is to prepare for the next stage. The next stage will be the study of this Bill in committee. We therefore deplore that the Government should insist in referring this Bill to a legislative committee. Through representations I have made personally to Government members and also through the Opposition House Leader, we, of the Liberal party, have already asked the Government that this Bill be referred to the Transport Committee rather than a legislative committee.

We hope that the Government will understand that it would be in its own best interest to refer this Bill to the Standing Committee on Transport.

Mr. Kilgour: Just a small point of order, Mr. Speaker, Unfortunately, the Hon. Member was out of the House a while ago when we proposed the amendment to the motion which all Hon. Members wanted. In short, we are now dealing with a motion calling for the Bill to be sent to the Transport Committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) has the floor.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I greatly appreciate this clarification from the Parliamentary Secretary, for I feel it is absolutely essential for this Bill to be referred to our Standing Committee on Transport, because its members have certainly made a name for themselves. There is even a room in this Parliament building which is known as the "Railway Committee Room" which has always been reserved for the Transport Committee. The Standing Committee on Transport is, therefore, the best suited to review this Bill.

The House is aware that the Government had referred the review of its document Freedom to move to that Committee. Hon. Members sitting on that Standing Committee have already heard witnesses about the Government's desire to change substantially the national transportation policy. There have been hearings throughout Canada, so that this Committee is certainly the best suited to continue the work it has already started. I say that we, of the Liberal party, are going to direct our effort to this committee to submit significant amendments, because we feel that this ligislation leaves much to be desired as far as job protection in the transport industry is concerned. There should be job guarantees for men and women who, for many years, have honourably earned a living in the transport industry. We believe there ought to be additional guarantees concerning safety and existing services in the remote regions of the country. We cannot endorse a piece of legislation which would lead to the outright deregulation of our transport industry and deprive certain regions of Canada of the transport services they have grown used to over the years.

Finally, we believe that the law is not clear enough with respect to the handicapped and that, by way of amendments to this law, we ought to ensure that all Canadians, no matter who they are, have every opportunity to use existing Canadian public transit systems.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I can only say on behalf of the Official Opposition that we have to accept the Government's decision to end the debate. We are not opposed to the principle of the Bill, but we are certainly against some of its clauses, and we will try to improve them by introducing specific amendments when the Bill comes up for clause by clause study in committee, very soon, I hope.

[English]

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, this is a rather sad evening. It is actually a very dark day once again for the parliamentary system. We have seen on many occasions where the Conservative Government has taken steps to muzzle Parliament, to cut off debate, or to limit appropriate representation by the duly elected representatives of the people of Canada.

Call it what you like, Mr. Speaker, but once again tonight we are seeing the same type of approach to representative democracy and to the parliamentary system. After less than 18 hours of debate on the floor of the House of Commons, the Government decided to use a procedural manipulation to end the debate at second reading stage.

We must consider that Bill C-18 is probably one of the most important pieces of legislation to have been before the House of Commons in the last number of years because of its implications in terms of directing social and economic policy. Tonight we are seeing a decision of the Government that before the people of Canada involved in the transportation industry fully understand the implications of Bill C-18—what it will do to their industry, to their sector of the economy, and to their region of Canada— to rush and jam the legislation through, to rush and jam it down the throat of the transportation industry.

At a time when the Government is debating free trade with the United States, and while there is an illusion that it will be helpful to us in some way, we see time and time again examples of where the Government of Canada is selling us out to the United States. It is selling out Canadian sovereignty, Canadian workers, and sectors of the Canadian economy to retain a friendly relationship with Ronald Reagan, so that perhaps some kind of free trade agreement will be signed in the months ahead and the "Mulroney" Government can say that it was successful. If the Government were to be honest, it would say that it was successful in selling out Canada.

We can look at many examples. We need not look further than the shake and shingle industry on the western coast of Canada. The Government sold out that industry so that sawmills in constituencies such as mine, which had been productive for years and years, have shut down their operations and are not existing. Thousands and thousands of jobs in the forestry industry have been placed at risk as a result of the sell-out of the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) in the agreement with the United States on the imposition of the 15 per cent tariff. We could stand here all night and list sell-out after sell-out. The Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) is acting like a state governor. As a matter of fact, I think state governors would probably stand up for their rights more than the Prime Minister of Canada has.

Tonight we are seeing here the Government muzzling and stopping debate in the House of Commons on this very critical issue by a procedural manipulation. The Government may feel it can bully the Opposition and use procedural tactics to bully us tonight, but let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, this is a very serious situation. We do not plan to stand passively by and let the Government push this legislation down the throats of Canadians, bully the House of Commons, ignore the Opposition or steam-roller over opposition Members.

The Government might think that those bullying jackboot tactics can be applied in the House of Commons, but the Government is wrong. In the end this thoughtless, senseless, undemocratic move will come back to haunt government Members. In some respects it is like the Americans who use their power and might to bully, but Canadians will not stand for that. At the time of the next election, Canadians will send a very clear signal to Ronald Reagan and the United States administration by electing a Government in Canada that will stand up for the rights of Canadians. That Government will be headed by Ed Broadbent and will be made up of New Democrats.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: The seven or eight Members out of the 200 plus caucus across the aisle laugh. Obviously they have not seen the polls today. The Tories have not noticed where their standing is in the regions of Canada.

I want to register very seriously that the Government may think it is smart and its Members may think they can out-bully the opposition Members, but in the end justice will prevail. The parliamentary system exists on the understanding that the opposition Parties, the duly elected representatives of the people of Canada, have a rightful role in the House of Commons and in the parliamentary system.

Mr. Fennell: We have heard this song before.

Mr. Angus: And you weren't listening then.

Mr. Riis: Tonight the bullying tactics of the Tories might prolong the debate and in a sense bring it to an end, but the people of Canada do not want this debate to end, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Fennell: Yes, they do.

Mr. Riis: The people of Canada do not want this debate to end tonight. The 10,000 workers at CN and CP know that if this legislation goes through, they will be out of work. Ten thousand people will be out of work at CN and CP.

Mr. Fennell: You are a fear-monger.

Mr. Riis: Members opposite know it. They want to end this debate before the reality gets out on to the streets and into the rural areas of Canada. Ten thousands jobs are at risk because of this legislation, and that is just in CN and CP. Those are the direct jobs, Mr. Speaker. You must recognize that in those communities for every one railroader, for every one employee of CN and CP, there is at least another one or two workers who service CN and CP. We are talking about thousands and thousands of people whose jobs are at risk because of Bill C-18. What is the response of the Government? It is to bulldoze the Bill through, to ignore the Opposition and to try to jam the Bill down our throats. That is not going to work. This is just step one of a process.

I recall another abuse of the parliamentary procedures. While Members of the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party were busy working in committees this afternoon representing their constituents, representing critical views on critical issues, the Government thought it would pull a sneaky underhanded ploy. The Tories asked for an extension of hours, knowing full well that members of the Opposition were actively involved in the standing and legislative committees of the House. That is a blatant abuse of the procedures and the committees of the House of Commons. If that is the kind of abuse that this bullying Government wants to perpetuate, it cannot work successfully. It requires co-operation on that side and on this side of the House. We have bent over trying to co-operate, Mr. Speaker. We have co-operated time and time again.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Ms. Mitchell: Sit down and go back to your supper.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis) on a point of order.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I want to inform the House that we were afraid the debate would collapse this afternoon. We extended hours so that we could have a little overtime and so that every Member of the NDP would have a chance to speak.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) has one minute left in his speech.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, my recollection is that a Member for the Government stood and put the question which means to limit debate, that after one round of speakers debate would end. Let us understand what is happening.

In closing, let me say that the legislation before us will open up the railways of Canada to the United States rail companies. It will open up the highways of Canada to the American trucking companies, but the same will not take place in the United States. This door only opens one way, to let in the American trucking companies and the American railroad companies. It does not swing the other way to allow us equal access. This one-sided deal is a blatant sell-out to the United States, simply to enable the Prime Minister of Canada and the President of the United States to maintain this love-in relationship that they have been perpetuating over the last two and one-half years.

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will not be very long because I have only a couple of points to make. I have a list of speakers who have spoken on the previous motion. If my arithmetic is correct, 16 or 17 Members of the New Democratic Party have already spoken.

Ms. Mitchell: We will speak a lot more too.

Mr. Kilgour: The remainder of the NDP Members have not spoken. Looking at those here tonight, most have already spoken, but if they all want to speak again, as they know they can, we will stay until three or four o'clock in the morning to listen to their speeches. With great respect to my friend, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), and he knows he is a friend, they can discuss the motion. There is no restriction on rounds of debate, as I understand it. Every Member sitting on the other side of the House can debate any aspect of this Bill as long as he or she wants. Let us be clear on that, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Papineau on a point of order.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I think that the Parliamentary Secretary who said the motion was introduced by the Government to allow all Members to speak as long as they wish is certainly exaggerating. He knows quite well that each Member is entitled to speak a maximum of 10 minutes and by moving that the question be put, it means that the Members are not allowed now to introduce amendments and speak once on the main motion and again on an amendment.

The government has made sure this evening that the Opposition Members would speak only once for a maximum of 10 minutes. By introducing that motion at the very end of our proceedings this aftrnoon without any previous notice nor any consultation with the parties opposite, it is obvious that several of our colleagues who had other matters to attend to did not expect such a debate this evening and are not here because the House does not usually sit on Tuesday evenings. The Parliamentary Secretary is therefore rather inaccurate when he suggests that everyone is aware of that debate and could have spoken this evening.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I presume the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) is rising on the same point of order.

Mr. Riis: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I think I can resolve this on the same point of order. I have a great deal of faith in the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Kilgour). I know he is an honourable man and a man of his word. I think I recall him saying that we have a chance to speak and that we will have a chance to speak as long as we like. Would the House entertain the suggestion that in recognition of what the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport has offered that we seek unanimous consent to allow Members who wish to make a speech on this issue be allowed to speak as long as they wish?

• (1900)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there such unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. We shall resume debate.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I should not have said that they could speak as long as they wanted. If those on the other side want to speak for as long as they wish I cannot give unanimous consent; but as far as I am concerned, they may speak as long as they wish.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, could we then see if it is the will of the House that Hon. Members feel as the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Kilgour) does, that it is appropriate on this very critical issue facing the country to allow a debate of an appropriate nature and that Hon. Members be allowed to speak as long as they want on this issue?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There was not unanimous consent when I asked. Resuming debate.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I represent part of a city in which thousands of railway workers live and in which there are head offices of many major trucking lines. I have not yet spoken on this debate, not because I am not interested in it but because I am a member of a legislative committee dealing with a Bill to amend the Patent Act as it affects prescription drugs. As determined by Conservative members of that committee in the knowledge that the public does not want the Bill passed, that committee by majority decision has been meeting five days a week, each meeting running for more than two hours. That is where I have been so that I have not been able to speak on this debate. This might have been the only debate on transportation held in this Parliament in which I had not participated in all the years I have been here.

I would like to remind Conservative Members that for 20 of the years I have been in this House they were in the minority. During every one of those 20 years they complained that they were not given adequate time by the then Liberal Government to adequately present the views they held. If Conservative Members look at the results of recent polls they will realize that the chances are that this is a one-term Government. Chances are that come 1988 or 1989, whenever the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) screws up his courage to call an election, they will again be in the Opposition. I would like to remind them tonight that when there is a Government that is not Conservative after the next election, and when Conservatives are again in their usual position of minority and complain that they do not have the time to make a case on whatever subject is being debated, they set this tone for the operation of Parliament. We have a Government with the biggest majority this country has ever seen. The Government calls the agenda. It decides what shall be done. What is it afraid of? Why have we seen again and again motions to cut off debate? Why is the Government afraid?

This country was built on transportation policy. If the Conservative Government headed by Sir John A. Macdonald had not seen to it that we had a railway that extended from the Atlantic to the Pacific there would be no country, because the economic lines of this continent run, not from East to West but from North to South. If the Conservative Government of the time had not bullied, wheedled, cajoled and bribed so-called free enterprisers into building a railway, there would be no railway and there would be no country.

Mr. Benjamin: With the taxpayers' money.

Mr. Orlikow: If I had the time I could spend 10 or 15 minutes sketching out briefly the kinds of inducements, financial and otherwise, given to the organizers of the CPR to get them to do what was necessary at the expense of the people of Canada.

The railways, airlines and trucking companies have been able to establish themselves, to operate and to make a profit in the free enterprise system. That is the purpose for which they were set up. They have been able to do so because there has been planning and regulation. Because the transportation system is in place, people in the hinterlands and slow-growth areas have been able to obtain the kind of services which they could not have obtained otherwise and which they will not obtain in the future if we get rid of regulations and planning and leave it completely to market forces.

This Bill will lead to the railways making their profits if they can make any, in the corridor between Montreal or Quebec City and Windsor. The rest of the country will suffer. That corridor is the area with the high volume and the competition between rail, trucks and shipping. It may even be that cities and towns along the main lines of the railways like Winnipeg, Regina, Calgary and Vancouver will be able to survive. However, deregulation will make life much more difficult and expensive for those who live in areas outside the main corridor.

This may be the only time in the years I have been here that I have found myself in agreement with the CPR. I fought the CPR all my life. The people of Winnipeg know how the CPR has used and misused Canada over and over again. However, a representative of the CPR came to my office yesterday to tell me that this Bill would lead to the American railways virtually destroying the viability of the Canadian railways. We will not agree to that. That is why we will continue to oppose this Bill and Bills like it in every way we can.

We have learned some lessons on ways to oppose Bills from our friends, the members of the Conservative Party, when they were in Opposition. Because we intend to oppose this Bill, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis):

That the debate be now adjourned.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) cannot second the motion because he has already spoken.

Mr. Orlikow: Seconded by the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) then.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Orlikow) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, we now have the attendance and attention of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), which has been very difficult to obtain since he received his portfolio.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Benjamin: We could not find him for the first three months that he held the portfolio. It is nice that he is here for my 10 minutes. He was not here for my opening speech, but I was here for his. Of all the occasions in the House of Commons since 1968, the countless times that I have listened to Conservative Members of Parliament rave and rant at this hour of the night about the tyranny of the majority, talking about my friends to my right—

• (1950)

Mr. Fulton: We do not need friends like that.

Mr. Benjamin: I use the word loosely—the Tories are making the Liberals look like the saints of parliamentary democracy.

An Hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Benjamin: When I think of the occasions when the Liberals moved closure—Mr. Speaker, I wonder if there is a rule that would get all these proctological orifices to keep quiet.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Maybe if we wait for one minute for the Members who are presently leaving to leave, then the Member may start his speech.

Order, please. The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

Mr. Benjamin: I am still not sure if all those orifices I mentioned have left.

I am informed by the Clerk that we have had 17 hours and 58 minutes of debate on second reading of a piece of legislation that is one of the largest items of legislation that any Government has brought into the House over the last 20 years. That is equivalent to four days of parliamentary debate on seconding reading.

I could understand, and I would be hard put to complain about this back-door method of closure, if we had gone 12, 14, or 16 parliamentary sitting days at second reading. I would be hard put to complain about a Government that moved the motions it did today, or brought in a closure motion. But after 17 hours and 58 minutes, the Government hits the panic button. It does not want any more debate, it wants as invisible a production of this legislation as possible.

Many of the corporations and individuals who at first blush supported the Government on Freedom to Move, and supported it on deregulation, have had second thoughts. I have had people coming into my office who normally would not be caught dead in my office, or in the office of any other NDPer. But that has to tell you something, when the Canadian Trucking Association, hundreds of small manufacturers, processors, shippers and receivers, are now a bunch of "yeah-but-ers".

When I was a kid at home and my mother gave us heck for something and we would say, "Yeah-but, yeah-but, yeah-but". Now we have all these outfits, individuals, and corporations that said they were in favour of deregulation and Freedom to Move but—now we have more "yeah-but-ers" running around the country than you can shake a stick at. The Government does not want those "yeah-but-ers" making any more fuss. The Government does not want any more debate in Parliament.

I wish to say to the one-answer-a-day Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Kilgour), please do not come and talk to me any more. Please do not come up and see me behind the curtain any more. Any time that you wish to discuss—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Could I ask the Hon. Member to speak through the Chair, so as not to make it as personal.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I did not want to include you in this diatribe of mine, but I will.

Through you, Mr. Speaker, any time those Parliamentary Secretaries wish to discuss the business of transport legislation, from now on bring it to us in writing with a proposal, and no more weasel words behind a curtain; no more discussions about "how can we handle this with the maximum of co-operation". With the performance, and what the Government has done today, you will rue this day. It will come back to haunt you time and time again for the rest of this Parliament. I promise you.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: The Government is half-way down the road, and the road is getting shorter. Mr. Speaker, would you look at all them ash cans over there! They are so desperate that they will go to these extraordinary lengths to cut off debate after four days of second reading.

Judging from the enthusiasm of my colleagues over the last couple of days, I figured that second reading would be over with by Friday or next Monday. But I will tell you one thing that I am happy about, the Government has done more to charge up the batteries of my colleagues than anything I could have done or said. I do not mind colleagues opposite being stupid. They cannot help it. But it is when they work at it, that is what makes it funny. They are working hard at it.

I wish to say to my hon. friend from eastern Arctic, I listened to his speech today when he was talking about the North, though while he was speaking I was reading my mail. I hope my hon. friend will have a lot of amendments regarding deregulation when the Bill gets to committee. Pacific Western Airlines is pulling out of Whitehorse—deregulation! Every damn jerkwater airline that wants to start up and operate for a few weeks, and then leave a few weeks later, will serve the North. I wish to predict to my friends who come from Sudbury, Timmins, Yarmouth, Charlottetown, Thunder Bay, and Windsor that you are not long for this world with a national airline.

• (2000)

The Government does not want my colleagues or anyone else in the House to discuss these matters any further. By the gods of war, they now have a war. Perhaps some of their colleagues are having fun over at the Press Club as guests of the United States Ambassador. What are they doing? They are celebrating Continental Airlines coming into Ottawa. By the way, the origins of Continental Airlines suit Conservatives. It is the airline which the CIA started during the Viet Nam War, and the Tories think it is terrific.

These guys give away our country. I say to my hon. friends opposite that what they did today has made it worse for the rest of this Parliament, and they brought it on themselves. I say to my hon. friends, particularly to another proctological orifice and to the three Parliamentary Secretaries, that they will rue this day. I say to government Members that they will not hurt Parliament any more nor will they hurt our country any more with stupid legislation which destroys our sovereignty and independence. "You ain't seen nothing yet".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, while I regret that my colleagues on the Liberal side are not standing tonight to fight for the rights of Canadians as are my hon. colleagues in the NDP—

An Hon. Member: The Liberals started deregulation.

Ms. Mitchell: That is true, they started deregulation. I remember it well. I remember when the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) was Minister of Transport and all the things they did to us, particularly those of us in the west, and he represents the west.

I join with my colleagues in saying very loudly that I am sincerely and deeply ashamed of the kind of tactics which the Government has undertaken tonight. It is worse than other stalling tactics or tactics which are just another type of closure. It is worse than the stalling tactics used on other Bills. I agree with my colleagues who have repeatedly said that it is grossly unfair and really very short-sighted, in their own interest, that government Members should be attempting to cut back on the timing of debate on such an important piece of legislation.

There could be no more an important piece of legislation, particularly for western Canada. We are talking about our life-blood. We would not have any western Canada if we had not had an efficient, national, government-controlled transportation system. It is appalling that the Government, by cutting short the debating time on this piece of legislation, is trying to prevent Canadians from learning about the legislation, much less learning about what its likely impact will be on Canadians in all parts of our land. It is covering up a Bill which will undermine our total transportation system.

As one of my colleagues mentioned, I am also appalled that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader, a person who asks for co-operation and repeatedly uses this kind of underhanded tactic, thought he could ask us to support him as Speaker of the House. He is blatantly partisan.

These kinds of tactics undermine our parliamentary system. They undermine the legislative process. They cause disillusionment in politicians, as if we did not have enough problem with public perception. Even worse, they cause public disillusionment with Parliament.

I have spoken on the Bill once before. At that time I was only beginning to talk about its impact on people in western Canada, particularly people in British Columbia and in my riding of Vancouver East. The Bill is anti-competition. It will cut back on rather than open up competition, which is what government Members pretend to think. We know from the American experience that it is a Bill which is very likely to be anti-safety. We know that it is anti-service. Services are likely to be cut back, particularly in remote and northern areas where it is more costly to provide service. It is anti-sovereignty. It gives away the rights of Canadians to control transportation and allows American competition to come in.

In my last speech I gave many examples of how it would have a dramatic negative effect on the Port of Vancouver. Container traffic which should be going through Canada will go through the United States. It will be going south, through Chicago, through the western American states, and through American ports. We have already seen the CNR providing favourable tariffs to encourage this.

We need planned and co-ordinated transportation in Canada which will ensure good service, offer prices consumers can afford, and serve remote and rural areas.

I do not have a lot of time, but I should like to use my remaining time to refer to a special report of the Standing Committee of Council on Economic Development which was given to the Council of the City of Vancouver. It studied the Freedom to Move transportation reforms. A number of speakers addressed the committee, most of whom opposed deregulation. I am sure if they were here tonight that most of them would be saluting us and opposing Bill C-18.

B.C. Motor Transport Association; Canadian Brotherhood of Railway Transport and General Workers, Local 100; Vancouver Centre Provincial NDP Constituency Association; the president of Community Business and Professional Association; Machinists Union; the secretary-treasurer of Pacific Coast Maritime Council; and the Canadian Merchant Marine Association appeared before the Committee. These are all vital union and business associations concerned with transportation, business, and industry in western Canada, particularly in the Vancouver region.

What were they concerned about? They identified a number of concerns. Under this piece of legislation and with deregulation of transportation, railways will have a competitive advantage over motor carriers by negotiating confidential contracts, discounting rates, offering rebates, et cetera, to obtain large shipments. Open borders will permit easy entry to the Canadian market for giant American trucking companies. American trucking companies will offer discounted rates which Canadian companies cannot afford. Shipments through Vancouver would shift to American ports because of lower transportation costs. U.S. manufacturers currently operating plants in Canada to meet Canadian demand without paying import duty would move back to the U.S. if cheaper transportation rates compensated for the import duty.

Thousands of jobs will be lost in all sectors of the transportation industry, with spin-offs into manufacturing and other trades. Thousands of truck companies work under managed competition. Deregulation would lead to considerably less competition, resulting in bankruptcy for many smaller companies. Service to outlying communities will decrease and costs will escalate. The provision of government subsidies where the private sector does not provide adequate service will lead to more political interference than presently exists.

Vehicle maintenance will suffer under deregulation, leading to increased safety hazards on streets and highways. Giant American airlines are going to undercut Canadian domestic carriers, forcing them out of business. We have already seen a complete shift in the relationship between airline companies particularly in western Canada. This is only the beginning. Most of us feel that this will have very questionable effects on consumers. Air and rail service to remote communities will decrease or be terminated. That state of affairs has already started. Abandonment of many existing rail lines will increase shipping costs, with a disastrous result for farmers in outlying areas and small business people. The conditions of safety and seaworthiness for vessels will not be maintained under deregulation. Inspections by the Canadian Coast Guard will be unnecessary. The existing east-west transportation flow across Canada will change to a north-south flow to the advantage of larger U.S. companies.

• (2010)

I could go on and on, but just in summary, Mr. Speaker, most of the speakers who spoke at City Hall in Vancouver referred to the negative impacts of deregulation in the United States which have already been experienced. They suggested that the provincial and the federal Governments should be requested to undertake independent studies of the detrimental effects on employment, wages and working conditions, on trade, safety and on the economic climate before transportation reforms are implemented in Canada. These are very important people who are highly specialized in all modes of transportation. Unfortunately, because the Government is cutting off our time and is referring the matter back to the committee without enough public involvement and is ignoring the amendment which my colleague has presented for a delay so there can be this type of an investigation, the people of Canada will suffer and particularly people in British Columbia. The Government is increasing the suffering by the stance it is taking tonight.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not see a quorum in the House. I call quorum.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Now we do have quorum. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young).

Mr. Lewis: Oh, oh!

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I know that the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) was just kidding. He actually wants to hear the contribution I have to make tonight.

Mr. Lewis: The Hon. Member for the Beaches (Mr. Young) is an expert on transporation.

Mr. Young: Transportation is extremely important to the people of Beaches, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Young: As my colleagues in the House well know, the residents of Beaches have a keen interest on issues of national importance. That is why they sent me here to represent them.

Ms. Mitchell: They had good taste.

Mr. Young: And I am doing a good job too.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Young: I cannot say much less than express deep disappointment at what the Government did late this afternoon by using a procedural tactic to end debate on this very important piece of legislation.

I got thinking about the use of those procedural tactics over the dinner hour and remember the discussions that I had with Members who are now on the government side when they sat in opposition. They decried the use of these same procedural tactics by the then government Members who are now members of the Official Opposition. I am not surprised to note with some interest the silence from the Official Opposition on what the Government did late this afternoon. In fact, I have often thought of my good friend Erik Nielsen. He would comment on what the then Liberal Government would do. Erik had an awful lot to say about the use of these procedural manoeuvres. I think the words he used were "to strangle democratic debate in the House of Commons". I am sure if he were present in the House today he would look with some disdain and disgust on what the Government has just done with this Bill.

Bill C-18 is important for a whole number of reasons that have already been mentioned by my colleagues in the New Democratic caucus. One of the areas of interest on which I touched when I spoke to this legislation this afternoon was the effect it will not have on the disabled community in Canada. The effect of this legislation will be to cause large carriers in the transportation industry, from all the analyses that I have read, to examine those routes in Canada which they deem to be non-profitable because of a low traffic volume. That examination has already happened in some areas of the country that I had an opportunity to visit in December, 1986. I mentioned this afternoon that in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick air transportation from Fredericton to Halifax and from Halifax to Sydney in Nova Scotia, and I believe in other areas where the transportation provided, was DC-9 aircraft. A DC-9 service is no longer available between those major Canadian cities and the Atlantic provinces except in some isolated incidents. What has replaced DC-9s and the larger aircraft in these centres has been the Dash-8 and the Dash-7 aircraft. Anyone who has had the opportunity to fly in a Dash-7 or a Dash-8—and by the way these aircraft are a terrific achievement in Canadian technology—knows that they are not designed to accommodate individuals who may be physically disabled, may lack mobility or may require the use of the wheelchair in order to be as mobile as able-bodied Canadians. That creates a special problem.

While Bill C-18 touches on discriminatory practices against physically disabled Canadians in our transportation modes, what it does not provide very clearly is a mechanism for a disabled individual who feels he or she may be discriminated against by our transportation system, to get a fair hearing before some kind of quasi-judicial body. At the present time, Mr. Speaker, the system is under the Canadian Transport Commission. The Canadian Transport Commission is about to be disbanded under this legislation and another agency is being proposed in its place. What is not clear is whether a new agency will be designed to accommodate any claims of discrimination by disabled Canadians or groups of disabled Canadians. That is something I would strongly urge the Government to take a second look at as we proceed with this legislation. I think it is an important point.

As I understand it, even though we have not seen the regulations, they will specify that the non-discrimination parts of this legislation will only apply to air carriers which have seating capacity on planes in excess of 60 seats. The Dash-8 and the Dash-7 and some of the other smaller aircraft obviously have less than 60 seats. The legislation is saying to anyone physically disabled who happens to live in Sydney, N.S., on Cape Breton Island or in Halifax, N.S. in Moncton, or Fredericton, New Brunswick or some other major centre, that they will be denied quite possibly the opportunity to travel by air once this legislation is passed.

Another major question is one which I raised this afternoon. Some Hon. Members from the government side spoke to me after I had raised it in the House so I think it is worthwhile that I raise it again. There is no indication in this legislation from the Government about what will happen to the decisions that were made previously by the Canadian Transport Commission as they affect disabled individuals. There has been no undertaking to the disabled community that the Government will support and uphold those decisions. That is an area of major concern to anyone who is at all interestsed in human rights and the issues facing the disabled.

You may be interested to know, Mr. Speaker, that the special panel of the air transport committee of the Canadian Transport Commission, on the subject of a special air fare policy for the attendants of disabled passengers and for additional seats for disabled or obese passengers, recently presented a report to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) in which some important recommendations were made. These recommendations would greatly assist those Canadians who may be physically disabled and who are attempting to utilize Canada's public transportation system including air transport.

The report examined Canada's present policy and its recommendations in light of the various interpretations and understandings that have come about in recent years based upon the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The authors of the report felt that to continue to discriminate against disabled travellers would be a direct violation of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I do not think disabled Canadians should be forced into the courts in order to have Governments recognize their right to travel about this country as a Canadian force.

I see that my time is up. I would simply urge members of the Government to take into consideration seriously the matters I have just raised on behalf of disabled people.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On a point of order, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Kilgour).

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, it is not a point of order, it is a very short address, if I am entitled to speak.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member has already spoken in debate so he cannot speak again unless he gets unanimous consent to do so.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I think I spoke on the amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand that the Hon. Member did speak on a point of order. Therefore, he may speak in debate.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) was rising at the same time. I move:

That the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam be now heard.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Robinson) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Resuming debate with the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Kilgour).

[Translation]

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I thank all my colleagues and all the Liberal Members, and I yield—

[English]

Mr. Robinson: Point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) on a point of order.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I believe the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) was rising, and I would move that the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt be now heard.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Kilgour) had already started his speech. He has the floor for debate.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett).

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I was looking forward to listening to the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) since his colleagues have just voted, along with the Liberals, not to hear me at this time. I assume the reason they did so was because they wanted to hear the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona who has apparently got cold feet. He spoke on a point of order and that is all he had to say. He could have taken the floor and, indeed, this whole vote was to enable the Hon. Member to have the floor.

If anything shows the emptiness of the argument of the Conservative Party, it is the unwillingness of the Conservatives to speak in this debate. They do not want to defend this indefensible legislation. That is why the Hon. Member did not take the floor. If he wanted to take the floor, he could have taken the floor. He spoke only on a point of order, as I recall. It was not really a point of order, mind you, Mr. Speaker, but the Chair allowed it as a point of order. We use up the time of the House and then he does not even speak.

This is the third example today of the governing Party of this House to trying to shut off, limit, restrict and end debate on this Bill. I am as angry about the procedure the governing Party is using as my colleagues who have already spoken on what I honestly believe is one of the the most important, if not the most important Bill to come before this House.

• (2110)

The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) pointed out that the length of time spent on debate on this Bill at second reading has been only 17 hours and 58 minutes. That is about four days. I was in the House, as a few other Hon. Members were, in 1964 when we had the flag debate. The flag debate lasted 34 days—34 days—before closure was invoked. The Conservatives were then in opposition. They did not win the point they were trying to make, that is true, which was that we should continue with the Red Ensign rather than have a distinctive Canadian flag. But because they were given that amount of time, 34 days, they did get public discussion going right across the country on a very important matter, namely, a Canadian flag.

Mr. Gagnon: What has this to do with Bill C-18?

Ms. Jewett: What has it to do with Bill C-18? I thank the Hon. Member for his question. The Hon. Member has been sitting right beside me but he does not listen. What it has to do with this debate is that in 1964 on an equally important matter the House of Commons was allowed 34 days to debate it. In that case the public from one coast to the other was heard. People say that we have heard the public. That is not true. There are still many groups in my own constituency who have not been heard. I spent the weekend with several already. There are many more, including a group of disabled people who are extremely concerned about the proposed regulations concerning aircraft with below 60 seats on which there will be no provisions for the disabled. They want to talk to me about that. Many other groups as well have said that they want to talk to me about this Bill. I have assured them, whether they are pro or con, that I will listen to them. I go back to my constituency frequently to hear them.

I have said that there has been less than four days' debate on this Bill and since it is one of the most important Bills to come before the House in this session that we will undoubtedly have another four, five or six days of debate. I am not asking for 34 days of debate. But I have said that we would undoubtedly have another five or six days to debate this Bill on second reading. I have given that assurance to these people. I am sure other Hon. Members have done the same thing. I have given this assurance to important groups in my constituency, and in neighbouring constituencies, which want to talk to me about their concerns with respect to this Bill. They will not now have an opportunity to be heard.

Let us not kid ourselves, the Tories now have every intention of blocking further discussion and really extensive hearings in committee. I do not believe for one moment that they will allow widespread hearings or widespread travel with respect to this matter. They will certainly not hear from any of the people in the United States who have experienced deregulation. They will not listen to them. They will not invite them, and I will bet my bottom dollar on that. We will not hear a word from them.

An Hon. Member mentioned earlier what Sir John A. Macdonald would have thought of this Bill. Indeed, I could not help thinking that myself. What would the Right Hon. Sir John A. Macdonald have thought? Indeed, every Conservative Leader up until the present time, even Sir Robert Borden, would not have liked this sell-out of our sovereignty any better than we do. The Right Hon. John George Diefenbaker in the famous pipeline debate made two fundamental arguments which are really relevant today. One was the procedural one that there was not sufficient debate. Of course, M. J. Coldwell and members of this Party, Stanley Knowles and others, also pressed strongly the fact that the Government was not allowing adequate debate. Not only did the Right Hon. John George Diefenbaker make that argument time and time again, but he also made the very strong point that this was a denial of Canadian sovereignty.

Surely Members opposite have read their Canadian history, or at least their Conservative history. Do any of them remember his speeches about the Texas buccaneers and the taking over of Canada? The consequences of this debate and this Bill, which is being pushed through the House in almost as sad a fashion as that Bill was, will be similar to the consequences of that Bill. There will be an increasing and rapid continentalization of the nation. There will be an increasing and rapid merging of this nation into the great nation to the south.

The new Tories, Mr. Speaker, except undoubtedly for you, have lost the dream that the leaders of that Party had in the past about this country. They do not care about east-west transportation which pulls this country together, as do all methods of communication and transportation. They do not want to see this country become a place where one cares if one lives in Vancouver about what happens in Antigonish. They probably do not even know where Antigonish is if they come from Ontario.

Members opposite will not debate this Bill any longer. They wish to close off debate on it. They have stooped to shocking tactics today on a third occasion. They even told the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona that he could not speak.

Mr. Nystrom: And he listened like a trained seal.

Ms. Jewett: On three occasions they have made it impossible for us to represent the views and concerns of our constituents with respect to this Bill at second reading. Given that this is a transportation Bill, something fundamental to the very nature of Canada, I believe, as a colleague of mine said, they will come to regret this turning away from their own past and this sinking of Canada into the great continent, the fifty-first state. That is what it will lead to. I think they will come to regret it. They will lose the election for other reasons, undoubtedly. But this will be a key reason when that day comes, election day 1988 or 1989.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, in listening to the interventions of my colleagues in the New Democratic caucus, it was brought to my attention how rare the interventions have been from the government side. I would like to remind my colleagues of an event which transpired today which impressed, as I said before, all of us. I refer to the intervention of a member of the Government side who comes from the north. He described with great eloquence the need for regulation and the need for arrangements which ensure that transportation is provided to those parts of the country in which populations are thinly spread out across vast areas. I wish that more members of the Progressive Conservative Party had not only listened to what the Hon. Member had to say, but that they would have taken an opportunity to express their views on this very important issue of transportation.

I sat here this evening and witnessed one of the most ridiculous episodes I have seen since taking my seat in the House of Commons. I refer to someone who suggested that he wanted to participate in the debate and, when given the opportunity, withdrew. This is a Government which I am sure will be known for its perverseness, its perfidiousness and its pitiful incompetence.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCurdy: Worst of all, I think it will be known for having established a new standard of mean-spiritedness. It has been demonstrated tonight, it has been demonstrated in committee, it has been demonstrated to all the people in the country, as well as Members in the House, by the contempt that it has shown for the members, and for the people. The people have been denied an opportunity to have their voices heard, and their spokesmen have been denied a hearing.

• (2120)

When I think about transportation, I think of an incident that was reported to me recently. It turns out that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) had boarded a train, and had found his seat in a compartment. He was witnessed to be anxiously searching through his pockets. As he was busily searching, he could hear the footsteps of the conductor approaching. He became a little more frantic about this. The conductor opened the compartment door and said, "Hello, Mr. Mulroney". He does not obey parliamentary rules, Mr. Speaker. In any event, he recognized him immediately because he was his first cousin. He said, "Mr. Prime Minister, if you have lost your ticket, don't worry about it. We know you. Sometimes we even trust you. If you can't find your ticket now, I am sure it's somewhere. When you get to your destination, at an appropriate time, when you do recover it, just send it on to the head office and everything will be fine". He said, "That is not the problem. The problem is I don't know where I'm going".

This is the type of leadership that has effectively been imposed upon the Party across the way. They do not know where they are going. Now they have introduced legislation on transportation, and the vast majority of Canadians who are in need of adequate transportation services on air and land will not know where they are going.

Why has such a heavy, complex piece of legislation been allowed so little debate? Let us remind ourselves of the efforts of my colleague from Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) to ensure that the committee would travel and hear witnesses and that the people of Canada would have an opportunity to understand what was at stake, and to impose their ideas on what would transpire. Yet all of that was denied. Why? We are talking about a document that is very thick. I would bet money that 99 per cent of the Progressive Conservative caucus, who are able to read, have not read it.

What would motivate this abbreviation of the debate? What would impel this anxiety to be over with it so quickly? It is that they want to keep the Canadian people in the dark. In spite of that, we know what occasions this legislation. As I said earlier today, it is ideology. That ideology has been identified in terms of free trade, deregulation, and privatization. That does not address the question directly. The basic ideology, as my colleague has indicated, is Americanization. That is where they seek their models, and there can be no doubt about that.

We know that the Prime Minister was terribly impressed by being given an opportunity to sing Irish songs to an American businessman who was visiting his home in Quebec, and he has never forgotten that. The Canadian people will suffer from his inability to snatch himself away from what must have been a tremendous impression. If we want to analyse the implications of this Bill, we should look at what has been the effect of deregulation in the United States since 1978.

Earlier I called attention to this free enterprise approach in terms of the maximization of profits and the minimization of costs, and the elimination as much as possible of labour. That has been the result in the United States. We have already been over that. There are other implications with respect to safety. There can be no doubt that the American experience since 1978 has been a severe decrease in the level of safety in all types of transportation covered in this legislation, in the air, on the roads, and on the water. In the United States there has been a terrible record of deterioration in the level of safety.

To pursue the course that is manifest in this Bill is a dangerous thing. It might be a life-threatening situation thing at some point in time. But in terms of the functions of transportation regulation, which is to ensure that affordable transportation is available to all sectors of the country no matter how densely populated or distant, we find in the United States the record that threatens what has been most important to us in terms of transportation regulation. It is the focus on providing services where the market is abundant and profitable, and at the same time depriving smaller centres of transportation in a large measure, and where transportation has been conserved it becomes unaffordable.

In every way there is a threat in this legislation to the people of Canada.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to join in the debate this evening. We will debate this issue at any time, and at any place. We would have preferred to do it in the orderly course of the business of Parliament, but if the Government forces us to do it tonight, we will do it here.

We used to think that the Tories were a principled lot. The principles were mostly the wrong ones, they were misguided, but at least they had principles. This evening we have clearly seen the abandonment and the betrayal of principle by the leadership of the Conservative Party. Unless that bunch of southern Ontario fellows who were chortling earlier this evening have run away with the rest of the caucus tonight and set out to betray historic Conservative principles, and snigger while they are doing it, I really wonder whether their colleagues are with this.

My friend from New Westminster—Coquitlam pointed out a few minutes earlier the way in which Sir John A. Macdonald and the Conservatives had worked in earlier years to create a country on the basis of railway connections. They recognized the importance of railway connections from central Canada across the west to the Pacific coast. They realized the necessity of having these connections, if they were going to be a country. I think back to those days, historians allow themselves that pleasure. I think of the struggle that went on during the 1870s and into the 1880s to ensure that Canada would have the type of railway system that it should have. Conservatives think with a bit of discomfiture even now of the Pacific scandal that can be connected with the events of that day.

We can think of Sir Hugh Allan's endeavours which were caught up in the Pacific scandal as he got involved in support of the Conservative Party in the election campaign of 1872 to ensure that they would return to office and carry through the contract and build the railway line.

• (2130)

The Pacific scandal broke. In those days the Liberals had the great pleasure of driving the Conservatives from power. In fact the Pacific scandal was the happiest event which could have happened to Canada in those days, precisely because Sir Hugh Allan's railway plans did not envision a Canadian railway system to the West. Sir Hugh Allan was involved with Chicago railway interests who thought that even if the West became part of Canada they could still ensure that the products of the west, grain which might be grown there, and other freight from the west could move out through Chicago and into the United States.

The destruction of those plans following the Pacific scandal of 1873 made it possible for others. Of course George Stephen is the great name connected with this and there are others. He became Baron Mount Stephen as a result of his endeavours to organize the Canadian Pacific Railway and the construction of lines across Canada's West to the Pacific coast. This has been celebrated in Pierre Burton's works and in productions by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation based upon some of the great decisions and discoveries of the time, for example, the discovery of Rogers Pass through the mountains. This made it possible to build a railway line in the middle of the Prairies or south of the middle instead of north at the Yellowhead Pass. There was also the great decision to build a railway line around Lake Superior to ensure that even in the wintertime when the lake was frozen it was possible for manufactured goods from the east to move west and for products from the West to move east. Those great decisions were absolutely vital to the creation of a single economy so that other regions in Canada could join in what was happening in the west and Canada could become a prosperous country.

What did American railway men attempt to do time after time, after Sir Hugh Allan's failure in the 1870s and the failure of the Chicago interests? They continued to push railway lines up into Canada. If we look at a map of railway lines across the west and into British Columbia, we see little lines reaching up into Canada.

What do we face now? What is the relevance of what I have been saying about Canadian history in the 1870s, 1880s, and later? The relevance is that there are always American interests who would like to take the cream off the Canadian economy and to leave one region of Canada sitting while they take advantage of whatever happy thing might be happening in another region. The Conservative Government is now proposing provisions for joint line and competitive line rate making. There is the possibility of products being taken out of a Canadian region and into the United States, to be carried off to the East Coast or, for that matter, to the West Coast, leaving much reduced traffic for Canadian railway lines, leaving men and women who want to work the rail lines out of work, and reducing the prosperity in which Canadians from one region to another want to share.

In the area of railways that is a splendid example of how the Government, without regard for Canadian interests, thinks only of an individual complaint in one place or another which could be relieved by sensitive regulation. It is an example of how the Conservative Government is quite prepared to forget Canadian interests nationally and betray the country. That is the tragedy we face.

I should like to refer to the principles of building up the country carried out by Sir John A. Macdonald in his day, through the 1880s, to the beginning of the 1890s and the last great election which he fought in 1891. Others stood for these principles, all the way through to the Government of John George Diefenbaker, in which the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) was one of the most imaginative advisers to the Government in terms of national development. All that has been abandoned.

We see a Government which thinks that private interests should have their own way and that shippers who have some dissatisfaction with the existing system of regulations should be able to break out of it in any way they see fit. It does not have any concern about loss leader rate making which can be carried out without any recognition that in the transportation business, as is true in many other industries, one can afford to run at a loss rather than shut down. It does not really matter as long as they are covering their variable costs; it is still worth getting the business. If one can get that business over hundreds of thousands of miles and get the added economies of scale which that provides, the possibility that American railways will take advantage of the situation in these areas and destroy Canadian traffic is very great.

These are the reasons we think the legislation is so misguided. These are the reasons we wanted the legislation referred back to the Standing Committee on Transport for basic consideration. It is not enough to press ahead with the legislation as it stands with all these dangers in it. We face a transportation industry in which confidential and secret rate making will open possibilities for a few to benefit from the system. That impact, together with American railway lines, will be felt by railway workers across the country. Railway centres from Montreal to southern Ontario, to Thunder Bay, to Winnipeg, and to Regina—every railroad centre across the country—will feel that the impact.

We have already seen large reductions in workforce by CNR and CP Rail. In these circumstances it will not be a simple matter of trying to reduce workforces with business being stable or growing. We will not see railways reducing workforces in an attempt to become more competitive. We will see reductions of workforce as a result of reduced business. In that kind of situation we will find ourselves with a system of regulation tossed out which will be regretted by the Conservatives in their ridings and by Canadians from coast to coast. It is then we will see their commitment to principle and that very few ideas rattle around in Conservative skulls. The idea of deregulation in this case and a couple of others is about all one finds in Tory heads in terms of economic principle. They will be rattling around empty heads, empty ballot boxes, and empty stomachs. They will be rattling around in the thousands of unemployed across the country.

Therefore I call upon members of all Parties to join with us in defeating the Bill so that we can reconsider a sensible kind of order for the Canadian transportation industry.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker).

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I move:

That the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre be now heard.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Robinson), which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

[Translation]

The Honourable Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to point out that I was present but that I refuse to take part in the vote.

[English]

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. At this hour of the day—

Some Hon. Members: It's night!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Could we allow the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) to put his point of order.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, that shows how dumb the Government is. There are 24 hours in the day. At this early hour of the day—

An Hon. Member: Late hour you mean.

Mr. Benjamin: Another proctological orifice. At this hour of the day I think the House would be agreeable that the pages and messengers go home. On a further point of order, we appreciate the arrangements you made at noon hour and supper hour. Could you organize breakfast as well? I would like my eggs over easy.

• (2220)

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Due to unforeseen circumstances beyond my control I was unable to be present at the time of the vote. Had I been here I can assure you, with all the certainty I can command, that I would have voted with my party, especially with my Whip.

An Hon. Member: What about George?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker).

[Translation]

Mr. Desrosiers: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Honourable Member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers) on a point of order.

Mr. Desrosiers: Mr. Speaker, since the comedy goes on, I move the adjournment of the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret. The Hon. Member is right. I cannot accept the motion. I must declare it out of order. The Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker).

[English]

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I certainly appreciate all of the support from the government benches to vote against the New Democratic Party and make them listen to me for a few moments.

This Bill deals with deregulation and I believe its main purpose is to deregulate the transportation industry that is controlled by the federal Government. In the case of Newfoundland, from which the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) comes, deregulation would affect water, air and ground transportation.

The Minister of Transport deregulated water transportation by allowing CN Marine to transport passengers whenever it wants. This meant that it did not have to meet the bus and train schedules and, until the Official Opposition told the Government to control CN Marine, it meant that it took three days for someone to go from Port aux Basques, Newfoundland to Sydney, Nova Scotia.

The Minister and the Government deregulated air transportation by moving the international flights from Gander to the Minister's riding.

The legislation is called "freedom to move". Freedom to move for carriers means freedom to remove service in certain parts of Canada. I am sure the truckers of Canada will not be happy with the Minister of Transport trying to force the provinces to deregulate the trucking industry to allow the entry of American truckers who pay less for gasoline and licences. This will result in unfair competition for Canadian truckers. The principle of the Bill is to leave the regulation of transportation to the market-place. For example, it is to the discretion of the carriers when to pick up passengers from various localities on St. Brendand's Island, Change Islands, Greenspond or Long Island in Newfoundland. If it is not profitable to pick up passengers, they will simply have to wait until spring.

Mr. Nunziata: Or swim.

Mr. Baker: Or swim.

The Government is saying that it will not regulate the air industry and make those carriers travel to the non-profitable routes. The air industry can operate as it wishes, without having to supply service to those who live in extreme rural areas of Canada. These examples represent the Tory philosophy of allowing the carriers in the air, on the ground and on the water to do whatever they please.

Marine Atlantic, for example, which carries passengers and freight from the islands off the East Coast of Canada, is being told that it must make a profit or break even, or it will no longer be given a subsidy. The former Minister of Transport announced that Marine Atlantic would save $20 million. That is why it cut back on the service across the Gulf and went to the CTC to ask for the rate increases in freight charges. The Government said it was cutting back on its subsidies and it must break even and compete with other transportation modes. That only contact between Newfoundland and the rest of Canada, and Prince Edward Island and the rest of Canada must operate like a business. It may not cost anything to go from New Brunswick to Nova Scotia, New Brunswick to Quebec, Quebec to Ontario or Ontario to Manitoba, but it will cost to go from Nova Scotia to Newfoundland, and New Brunswick to Prince Edward Island. The Government will allow the carrier to charge as much as it wants because it must break even or make money. That is the philosophy of the Tory Government and the intent of this Bill.

I do not know anyone who likes this policy. I have read the newspaper clippings and cannot find anyone who agrees with the content of the Bill, except the Minister of Transport, the former Minister of Transport and the rest of the Tory Party. We will not have to put up with that much longer. If the Bill is stalled long enough, it will not be too long before the Government changes and the policy will not have to be enacted.

Most of the provinces disagree with this legislation. The poorer provinces point out that the Bill will profit the have provinces and the have provinces say that they do not like the Bill. I am told that Ontario would profit by some two-thirds from the change in the deregulation of the trucking industry. Ontario is saying that it wants it stretched out from five to eight years. Other provinces are saying that they do not want deregulation at all because it benefits the have provinces.

The trucking companies are opposed because it will allow unfair competition by American truckers. These trucking companies include Day and Ross and Big Wheels competing with Chet's Transport. The American trucking companies will have hundred gallon tanks on the side of their trucks and then travel through Canada without paying a cent in taxes for transporting over the roads in this country. We know the regulations on trucking today. Truckers are penalized for going from province to province and must pay the Department of Finance in the various provinces the taxes they would have paid on gasoline that would have been used if it was bought in that province. Not so under this Bill of deregulation where the federal Government is saying to the provinces, you will deregulate the licencing of the trucking industry and you will deregulate the entire permit-granting privileges of the provincial Departments of Public Works and Transportation.

• (2230)

Those are the few words I had to say about this Bill, Mr. Speaker. I must say I do not know too much about the Bill. I have not examined it in complete detail, but let me say about the railway that the Progressive Conservatives when they got elected said they were going to reinstate all the rail lines which had been lost over the years. They reinstated, for example, the line from Halifax, Nova Scotia and Moncton, New Brunswick, up to Montreal, through the United States. What do they say now? They are saying that unless that line makes money in the next year it is going to have to close down. That is Tory philosophy under deregulation, under user-pay, and the people are saying, you promised one thing during the election campaign and you do just the opposite when you are elected.

Are you indicating I am out of time, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: I am suggesting that the Hon. Member is almost out of time and I know he would want to wrap up his comments and stay within the rules.

Mr. Angus: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Hon. Member's time is coming to a close, I wonder if the House would be prepared to give unanimous consent to allow him to continue?

Mr. Speaker: The Chair always deeply regrets to hear any Hon. Member close off his remarks, but the necessary consent to continue is not there. I will, of course, allow the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) to complete his remarks. I think the disposition of the House is that those remarks should be completed with a certain brevity.

Mrs. Finestone: Levity and brevity.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I had an opportunity, while the Hon. Member was asking if I could be allowed to continue, to read a clause in the Bill—what I mean is the particular clause of the Bill which deals with the National Transportation Agency. I can now see why some people are even more upset than normal about this particular Bill. What is now going to happen to all of those community groups across Canada who had been able to object to the movement of a carrier which was given a federal Government licence to operate in their area? I give you the example of Air Canada. What was contained under the previous Act was a system whereby communities or community organizations could object to the Government if they were receiving poor service from a carrier or if a carrier had changed a route to which the people objected. My colleague is now seeing what I just saw in the Bill, and that is—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member—

Mr. Benjamin: Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will be recognized in a moment. In the meantime, I think the Chair has to suggest to the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) that his time has expired. I do want to share with all Hon. Members the comment of the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) who, when I suggested brevity, suggested levity and brevity. Those are admirable qualities. Unfortunately, I do have to remind the Hon. Member that his time has expired. I will hear other Hon. Members. The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) on a point of order—on a point.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, since the House can do anything by unanimous consent, I would ask the unanimous consent of the House that the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) have another 10 minutes.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has, of course, very succinctly and properly put the general principle that the House can do anything, but that request had been put earlier and I do not think the consent is there. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper).

Mr. Benjamin: A further point of order.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I must say I—

Mr. Benjamin: On a further point of order, with all respect, Sir, when the earlier point of order was raised the Speaker quite properly said the Hon. Member had not finished his time. I was requesting it at what the Chair ruled was an appropriate time to do so.

Mr. Speaker: I think the general sense in the House is that the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate has had a good run at it, and a little bit more than perhaps was legally allowable. However, I think the Hon. Member has finished his remarks. I recognize the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Keeper: I must say I appreciate my colleague's enthusiasm for the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker). I am glad I received some support from the other side of the House so I could rise in this House and address the issue, but that is the last thank you I will be giving to that side of the House.

I am surprised, however, that we have not yet heard from the chairman of the Committee on Transport. This is a very important piece of legislation. I would guess that the chairman of the Committee on Transport might have a few opinions about it and we would be curious to hear whether the chairman is interested in this debate and whether he has the courage to come into this House and tell us what he thinks about this legislation.

Mr. Fulton: Or any of those other Tory Members.

Mr. Keeper: This legislation can be characterized fairly simply. What it is is a going-out-of-business sale. The Government has put a price tag on everything. It knows the price of everything but the value of nothing. What is going out of business? The first thing is the Government on the other side. It is going out of business so fast it is selling everything at firesale prices. If that was all that was happening that would be fine, because most Canadians would celebrate that particular going-out-of-business sale. However, there are some real impacts which this legislation has for the workers at the railroads. They are ordinary Canadians with families, they are people who have a real stake in this country, and they are being sacrificed by this going-out-of-business sale. In addition, the regions of this country, for instance, the north, and those regions which do not fall within the major population centres such as Vancouver, Toronto and Montreal, are being sacrificed by this going-out-of-business sale. Their transportation needs are being sacrificed. There is not only that to consider, but the nation itself is being sold out. The Government has put a price-tag on our nation. It has declared that it is having a going-out-of-business sale.

• (2240)

I now wish to deal with what this anti-transportation legislation means for railroad workers. The Government claims that there will be some benefits as a result of the passage of this legislation. Just what benefits are there in it for the railroad workers? Specifically, what benefits are there in this Bill for the people who work at the Weston Shops in Winnipeg? What benefits are there in this legislation for the workers at CN and CP?

Let us first consider their collective bargaining rights. Once this anti-transportation legislation is put into place raw materials such as coal which must be moved from the west to the east will be carried by American railways which are now operating in a deregulated environment. Once we move into that circumstance one of the negative benefits which will result is that the workers will see their collective bargaining come under threat. Why do I say that? Because the economic environment under President Reagan is an anti-union environment. It is an environment in which large corporations have been encouraged to take on the unions. They have been encouraged to break the unions. That is the type of environment that this anti-transportation legislation will create in the country. That is but one of the negative results the workers who are now working for the railways will see as a result of the Government's legislation. Collective bargaining rights are crucial because without them individuals must negotiate with large corporations.

Also involved in this issue are questions of safety. The standards in Canada will be dragged down to meet those in the United States. Not only is there the issue of workplace health and safety, there is the issue of salaries. Traditionally, it has been a great opportunity to work for a railroad in Canada. They have provided good and steady jobs. They are well paid jobs. With the type of cutthroat competition that this legislation will introduce into the railway system salaries will be driven down.

The workers of Canada will receive nothing but negative results from this legislation. The very security of their employment will be threatened by it. For if we have to move our goods on American railways then on what will our Canadian railroad system survive? I am reminded of recent proposals with respect to moving coal from British Columbia to Ontario so that Ontario Hydro can use a type of coal which reduces acid rain. In this way more employment can be created in our country. That of course assumes that the products are moved by rail. While this legislation will have many impacts, the very major impact will be negative for the Canadian economy, for the railroads and for the people who work for the railroads.

I wish to wind up by saying that this legislation will have very serious implications for the country. We can sum up the implications of this legislation in a historical perspective by calling to mind Sir John A. Macdonald, Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). Sir John A. Macdonald had a vision for Canada. He had a national policy. He knew that if he wanted to tie the country together a transportation and communications system was needed. He had a dream and a vision which he pursued with vigour. Obviously, those of us who have studied our history know that there was a certain amount of scandal involved in the construction of the railway. But then contemporary Canadians would not be surprised that a Tory Government might be involved in the odd scandal. However, one of Sir John A. Macdonald's merits was that he had a dream of nationhood. On that dream he set about building a nation. Tories today have shopkeepers' mentalities. They want to know what price-tag to place on something. They think they are running a corner grocery store and not a country. They are trying to sell out quick because they know that they are going out of business.

In closing, I wish to move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson):

That the debate be now adjourned.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion, which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: I would like to point out that I was present during the vote, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, some people are asking why Parliament is sitting tonight, and it might be very worthwhile to remind Members of the House why we are here. Earlier this afternoon, the Deputy House Leader moved a motion that would dispose of all aspects of second reading stage of the Bill sometime this day. He did this despite the fact that we had spent only 17 hours and 58 minutes on the second reading debate of one of the most important Bills that has faced this session of Parliament. That is why the House is sitting late tonight. It is because the Hon. Member is not respecting the will of Parliament and the Canadian people and is not letting us have a fair hearing on a very important piece of legislation.

When the National Transportation Act was debated back in 1966, this House spent eight long days on second reading stage. After that, the Transport Committee went on the road and spent 16 days travelling across Canada hearing the points of view of ordinary Canadians.

Mr. Benjamin: Sixteen locations.

Mr. Nystrom: My colleague has reminded me that it was 16 locations and perhaps more than 16 days. I find it passing strange to see how members of the Conservative Party are acting now that they are in power when year after year they complained about the Liberal Government imposing closure and cutting off debate. When they are in power, they are worse than the Liberal Party of Canada.

I see across the way the chairman of the Transport Committee, a Member of the House for many years, sitting on his fanny letting the Deputy House Leader push him around like a meek little kitten afraid to open his mouth. He is a pussycat relegated to the back benches. A man who has a lot of experience in this House is now afraid to open his mouth as Chairman of the Transport Committee to speak up for ordinary Canadians and for the Conservative back-benchers who are afraid to say anything because of where they stand in the polls. I thought he was a man of courage. I thought he was a man of conviction. I thought he was a man who would not be pushed around by the Deputy House Leader, but apparently he is.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, I suggest the discussion should deal with the legislation now before the House, rather than with the history of the Canadian Parliament, as the Hon. Member is now doing.

[English]

Mr. Benjamin: Another amateur.

Mr. Blaikie: Why don't you get up and debate this?

Mr. Mazankowski: Why do you keep moving the adjournment of the debate if you want to discuss it so much?

Mr. Blaikie: Do we have to explain it to you?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) has the floor.

Mr. Mazankowski: You made your bed, you have to lie in it.

An Hon. Member: You guys lie a lot.

Mr. Mazankowski: Oh, yeah?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blaikie: The new civility?

Mr. Benjamin: Say goodbye, Maz.

Mr. Nystrom: I never thought anyone could make Erik Nielsen look good.

Mr. Blaikie: It's called the Vegreville salute.

• (2330)

Mr. Nunziata: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It is with considerable regret that I rise on this point of order. Upon leaving the House, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) made what I and other Members consider to be an unparliamentary gesture.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nunziata: I would ask that the Deputy Prime Minister stand in his place and apologize for such disgusting conduct unbecoming the Deputy Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I want to apologize to the House for throwing a kiss at the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The time is getting late. Can we please get back to the debate?

Mr. Benjamin: We have just started.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will give the floor to the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata), as he said, on a question of privilege, but I would ask him if he could possibly make it short so we can get back on debate.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) suggested he blew me a kiss.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blaikie: Politics makes for strange bedfellows.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I did not know he cared!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Could I ask the House to co-operate—

Mr. Benjamin: No!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: —and listen to the speech of the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCurdy: On a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand I have two points of order. The Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr.

McCurdy) first on a point of order, and then the Hon. Member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers).

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order. Anyone who has sat in the House of Commons knows very well that the relationship between the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) and the previous speaker is not such as to motivate a kiss at a distance. It was clear to all of us that the Deputy Prime Minister stuck his tongue out at the Opposition.

Mr. Nunziata: It was a French kiss.

Some Hon. Members: Explain!

[Translation]

Mr. Desrosiers: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers) on a point of order.

Mr. Desrosiers: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to remind my colleagues who are throwing kisses at each other that they are not with the CBC. However, there would certainly be room for them if they want to continue using such language which I find unsuitable for this House.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that Canadian taxpayers are paying for this day and this evening. I hope that the Members of the NDP are aware of that. I would like to remind them of the old saying—I am nearly through, Mr. Speaker—to the effect that an asylum is always well kept up by its own patients.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member.

[English]

I would ask the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) to go on.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: Start again.

Mr. Nystrom: Where was I, Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: In the House of Commons!

Mr. Nystrom: —before we saw the Vegreville kiss?

Mr. Lanthier: Keep on saying nothing.

Mr. Nystrom: I was saying that we have not spent a long time on this very important piece of legislation in second reading, just 17 hours and 58 minutes before the Government brought in closure. It is a shock to hear that from members of a Party who, when in opposition, complained about the Liberal Party bringing in closure time and time again. I remember very well that the Crow debate on second reading lasted 16 or 17 days. The flag debate went on for some 34 days. The Constitution debate went on day after day after day. Yet this debate lasted for some four days before the Government started complaining.

[Translation]

But where are the Members from Quebec? Why do they remain silent in this debate? Where are they? Have they become sheep? We have here one member from Quebec, the only one who has the wisdom to act according to his beliefs, and he will be speaking soon in this debate. But where are the others? Where are the Quebec members who are now in third place in Quebec with only 17 or 19 percent of support? The members of that party are all sheep.

[English]

Some Hon. Members: Keep going.

Mr. Nystrom: I thought someone was getting up on a question of privilege.

Mr. Blaikie: Just another Tory leaving.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, this is a very important legislation. It will allow American truckers and railroads to come into this country and destroy our transportation industry. What it does in the way of deregulation will hurt the western Canadian grain farmer and in effect sell them down the Mississippi River. Where is the Conservative Party when it comes to standing up for Canada? The Conservative Party has an image of this country as branch plant Canada. That is not good enough for me. It is about time we stood up for Canada and created a strong country from coast to coast. Where is the Conservative Party of Sir John A. Macdonald? Where is the Conservative Party which had a national dream?

Some Hon. Members: Dead and gone!

Mr. Nystrom: It was a nationalistic Party. Where is it?

Some Hon. Members: Dead and gone.

Mr. Nystrom: We now have a new conservatism in this country, the republicanism of Ronald Reagan and Margaret Thatcher. Where is the Conservative Party of John Diefenbaker?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: He was not afraid to stand up for Canada against American Presidents when he thought they were wrong as far as the national interests of this country were concerned. Where is the Conservative Party of John Diefenbaker?

Some Hon. Members: Gone.

Mr. Nystrom: More important, where are those Conservative MPs who used to be red Tories like my friend from Assiniboia? Why do they not get up and speak on behalf of Canada and a strong Canadian system of transportation? This Bill discriminates against Saskatchewan and the outlying areas of the country. Where are those Members of Parliament and why do they not stand and speak? Why is the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan), chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport, silent? He used to be known as a man of conviction who would stand up and speak his mind.

Mr. Blaikie: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) keeps putting his notes up in front of the camera. I think that is something the Speaker should condemn. If Hon. Members on the government side are so afraid of what the Opposition is saying that they have to put their papers up in front of the cameras—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: I watched him do it twice and the third time I raised it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I did not see it. The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) has the floor in debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, this is a very important debate. It deals with deregulation of transport in Canada. This is important for the future of Canada and for a region like my own. I represent a rural constituency where it is very difficult to obtain air, road and other transport services, just as in other remote regions of Canada. The only motive is profit. That is why we have to amend the Bill now before the House, Mr. Speaker.

• (2340)

[English]

I have an article from The Globe and Mail. The then President of the CNR predicted that they will abandon branch lines. That is what you get for deregulation. Mr. Bandeen said, "As I see it the railway of the future will not have any branch lines". He said, "Our mandate is to provide efficient, effective transportation service and the only measurement that we know of that performance is that of profit". The current president of CNR has the same motivation. The CNR and the CPR both want to abandon rail lines. If transport is deregulated, rail lines will be abandoned. In my riding many rail lines have been abandoned. If we pass this Bill, I fear for the small communities of the country. I fear for the outlying areas of Canada because there will be a cut-back in service and safety will be jeopardized.

I will end my remarks by saying—

[Translation]

—I urge the members of the Conservative Party not to act like sheep and to take part in the debate because they have been elected by the people of their own constituencies. Now is the time to act and to take part. That is why your Party is now in third place in the polls and you will no longer form the Government after the next federal elections.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will recognize the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) on debate.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I move:

That the Hon. Member for York South—Weston be now heard.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. When the Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) rose the Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) was not rising on debate. The Member for Nickel Belt has the floor for debate.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, this is a sad day for the House of Commons. As I listened to speakers tonight I kept wondering why we are here tonight, why Members of the House of Commons are being put through this process. Why?

Mr. Blaikie: Because Doug Lewis screwed up.

Mr. Rodriguez: You are right. Give this man a cigar. The Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) had no sense of the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: This was the man who put himself forward to be our Speaker, to sit where you speak. You should have seen him oiling his way around the Chamber—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, order!

[Translation]

Mr. Desrosiers: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers) on a point of order.

Mr. Desrosiers: I should like merely to remind my friend the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) that he should mind his high blood pressure. I think that, after his long illness, he should temper somewhat his enthusiasm. We are going to hear him just the same and he may add a few years more to his life. Take it easy and we will listen to you just the same.

Mr. Nystrom: Yes, doctor!

[English]

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should be more concerned about the health of his Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: I think the Government needs a transfusion. Before I was interrupted—

Mr. Blaikie: Rudely interrupted.

Mr. Rodriguez: I would not be so unkind as to use such a nasty word as "rudely". Some of my colleagues may stoop so low, but I would not.

Mr. Benjamin: How about "dumb"?

Mr. Rodriguez: No, that is the word we were applying to the member who precipitated this fiasco, and it is a fiasco. As I was saying, when the Hon. Member for Simcoe North wanted to sit in your seat, Mr. Speaker, he oiled his way around the Chamber. He smiled. He even said hello to me.

Mr. Benjamin: And he wrote to us.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, order!

Mr. Nystrom: He came to see me.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member knows he should not bring the Speaker or the candidates who stood for the Speakership into the debate. I ask him not to do that.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I would not want to do that because the position of Speaker is a very honourable one. We are 30 members of the Opposition on this side of the House. We are debating one of the three most important issues to face this House. This one has to do with the deregulation of the transportation system of the country which will affect regional development and transportation services into the next century. The Member for Simcoe North thinks he knows all the rules of the House. He wants to show his colleagues how to deal with the Opposition. With their 200 members they are going to smash the Opposition. They want to use a sledgehammer on peanuts.

Mr. Nystrom: You're not peanuts.

Mr. Rodriguez: They are trying to squish and squash the Opposition as if we were threatening them. What does the Government have against reasonable debate? We were down to the short strokes. We were down to the 10 minute jobbies. The Member for Simcoe North could not contain his anxiety to show what a very effective Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council he was. He was hoping for a call to Cabinet. After all, they are falling like flies out of the Cabinet.

Mr. Blaikie: Lots of vacancies.

Mr. Rodriguez: That reminds me of that quote from Shakespeare: "As flies to wanton boys, are we to the gods". They are falling and he saw the chance of grabbing one of those plums. He was going to impress his boss, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Mazankowski). As a result, here we are, sitting extended hours. That Member wanted to be our referee.

Mr. Benjamin: Like a skunk in a chicken coop.

Mr. Rodriguez: As a matter of fact, I heard one of his colleagues when I was in the can. I heard a conversation through a closed door. Everyone will recognize him the minute I say this. One Member said, "My son, what are we doing here so late tonight?"

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member is a very experienced Member of Parliament. Could I ask him to get back to the motion.

Mr. Blaikie: The motion is to put the question.

Mr. Rodriguez: The motion is to put the question but I do not happen to agree with that motion. I am explaining why I am not in agreement with it. I am repeating for Hon. Members the kind of discussion that resulted from this fiasco tonight. I did not have my ear to the door, but this chap was saying: "Me son, why are we here tonight? It is that crazy Doug Lewis". He said: "Why do we not just close her up and let the NDPers go home?" I was tempted to shout: "You're right, let's go home", but at that moment there was a flushing sound and I could not be heard.

• (2350)

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: Why are we against this motion? We believe that enough time has not been taken to discuss the principle of this Bill properly.

I do not hobnob with presidents of large companies, so when the superintendent of CPR comes to see me and asks me to oppose a Bill, I suggest that the Tories have this all wrong. It is no wonder the Tories have problems, because not even their friends are standing with them.

The Government wants to send this Bill to a legislative committee. It is not even going to the Standing Committee on Transport—

Mr. Benjamin: It is now.

Mr. Rodriguez: I was looking forward to hearing the chairman of the Transport Committee speak to this Bill. He is a man who has always distinguished himself by his individuality and integrity. He is the type of person the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) needs around him today. I urge him to participate in this debate. When the Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) has snatched away his right to speak, surely that ought to make him furious. Surely he ought to be upset because he was upset about unemployment insurance and the pension matter and about Christmas trees. Every time he spoke up on these issues he was on TV. This is a golden opportunity because there is an audience of millions watching tonight. Yet he stays in his seat.

I hear the Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn).

Mr. Nystrom: He thinks he is the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

Mr. Rodriguez: He is sitting in the Prime Minister's seat. That is the ultimate. I heard his speech on this Bill. I think it epitomizes the philosophy of the Tory Party that it only wants to see the major centres like Toronto, Montreal and Vancouver develop. They are not concerned with centres like Sudbury, Sault Ste. Marie, Yorkton or the hinterlands of this country.

I suggest to those Tories who sit there bleary-eyed that they had better stand up now and speak or this will haunt them for the rest of their lives. They will have nightmares about this night. I ask them to get up and participate in the debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You will certainly recognize as will my hon. friends opposite that the remarkable eloquence of my predecessor is quite extraordinary, something I will readily admit. Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I shall be brief. The Hon. Member for Bellechasse (Mr. Blais) seems quite tired. I think he would prefer to stretch on his bed. That is why I will not unduly elaborate on this matter, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Blais: Go on!

Mr. Toupin: If I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like to divide my remarks on Bill C-18 dealing with deregulation into three major points.

Mr. Blais: You don't know anything about it, for you did not attend a single caucus meeting—

Mr. Toupin: Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I should like first of all to indicate that Bill C-18 does not reflect the Canadian reality, the economic reality—

Mr. Blais: You know something about the Canadian reality? That is not what you were saying.

Mr. Nystrom: Sheep!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please! Two things: First of all, out of courtesy, could the House let the Hon. Member for Terrebonne (Mr. Toupin) make his speech? Second, the Hon. Member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Desrosiers: Out of courtesy, Mr. Speaker, we could let our former colleague, the turncoat, speak. However, what I mean to say is that our dear colleague had failed to show up for a year in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry, I must disallow this as a point of order. I ask the Hon. Member for Terrebonne to continue his remarks.

Mr. Toupin: Mr. Speaker, I note that my former colleagues are quite nervous—

An Hon. Member: Yes, they are nervous!

Mr. Toupin: —or still, as my other colleague would say, I would like to mention, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Blais: We are not used to the sound of your voice!

Mr. Toupin: If my colleagues opposite will give me the chance of course, I would like to point out that my first comments on Bill C-18 concerning deregulation, as I said, did not deal with the Canadian reality from an economic, geographic and demographic point of view.

This Bill is based once again on the American reality and this is why I should like to make a comparison with the forthcoming tax reform in Canada. I sincerely hope that this forthcoming tax reform in Canada which is absolutely essential for the Canadian economy will be based on the Canadian reality and not become a poor imitation of the American reality and legislation.

Secondly, I also want to make the following comments. The effect of Bill C-18 in actual practice will be to reduce competition in Canada. Our smaller carriers, both in Quebec and in Canada, will be affected by the Bill for the benefit of big business. If you will allow me, I would like once again to draw a comparison with the Gulf Canada issue which my colleague opposite must very clearly remember. I should like to say that with the help of the Government of Canada, we have had a speculator, Olympia & York close a viable business in East end Montreal to reduce competition and give satisfaction to oil multinationals. Once again Quebec consumers and Canadian consumers as a whole will bear the brunt.

If Hon. Members opposite dare to suggest otherwise, it will be easy for me to provide evidence, Mr. Speaker, as I did in the past.

My third point is this, Mr. Speaker. Once again, this deregulation bill will have the following implications, including: first, a weakening of our Confederation; second, a greater concentration of transportation activities in the hands of a handful of big corporations. Once more, if I may, I would like to draw a parallel with the Gulf Canada issue and point out that with Gulf's shutdown, the result was a larger concentration in the hands of the oil multinationals, and we can reasonably conclude that in this case again the same thing will happen, a larger concentration among larger carriers and the multinationals in that industry, Mr. Speaker.

What we, in the New Democratic Party, want—Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member opposite has been repeating the word "socialist" for months on end, if not years, without realizing that in Quebec, most people are fundamentally social democrats. What we want, in the New Democratic Party, Mr. Speaker, is a fair and just legislation, a legislation that will allow our smaller carriers, the Quebec and the Canadian SME's, to survive while respecting the Canadian reality on the economic and demographic levels. In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I believe the winner will then be the consumer, both in Quebec and in Canada.

And if I may, I would like to end my speech by quoting the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). I want to tell the Government that the New Democratic Party wants good regulation, because that is the real solution. The New Democratic Party wishes for Canada a viable and economic transportation industry which will meet the needs of Canadians across the land and not only where the market is good and profitable. Finally, Mr. Speaker, I will tell Hon. Members Opposite that the skeptics will be confounded and the incredulous will be convinced.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart). Resuming debate.

The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie has the floor.

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, considering the absence of any comments from the Conservative side and the comments made by the former Conservative Member and brand new NDP Member, I will have to speak to Bill C-18 once more.

Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Members from Quebec were making a spectacle of themselves this evening. It was incredible. They were positively shaking in their boots, Mr. Speaker, when one of their former colleagues had the floor. I can imagine Conservative Members must be terrified there will be more revelations about people who were caught with their hand in the till. And I understand and agree with what was said by the new NDP Member and former Conservative Member regarding the disastrous impact of this Government's closing the Gulf refinery in Montreal East. Mr. Speaker, Bill C-18 will have a disastrous impact on the entire Quebec region, on areas far away from our major urban centres and on the whole country if it is adopted in its present form.

I agree, and my Party agrees with this position, and our official critic, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), who has a lot more experience than some Members of this House, has stated that there will be very serious consequences if we accept the Government's proposal as is.

However, I would like to go back to what was said by the Hon. Member for Terrebonne (Mr. Toupin)—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Excuse me. The Hon. Member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers), on a point of order.

Mr. Desrosiers: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to point out to the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte Marie (Mr. Malépart) that the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) is still paying income tax in the Province of Ontario. I simply want to tell him—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers), this is clearly not a point of order, and I shall therefore ask the Hon. Member from Montreal—Sainte Marie (Mr. Malépart) to continue his speech as if there had been no interruption. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper), on a point of order.

• (2400)

[English]

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, there has been one particular Hon. Member rising on a number of false points of order this evening, at least six of them, and what I would like the Chair to do is give some guidance to the Hon. Member and let him know that if he chooses, he can stand up and participate in this debate—or don't recognize him for points of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order either. The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I shall have the wisdom not to reply to the nonsense of my colleague and neighbour from Hochelaga—Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers), and if, in the future, he prefers to get involved in these issues, I shall invite him to follow my lead and we shall be able to do a lot to help people in Montreal and throughout Quebec, and Canada.

Mr. Speaker, to continue, I would like to reply to my colleague for Terrebonne (Mr. Toupin), who stated, falsely in my opinion, that Quebecers are Social Democrats. If we look at history, we find that Quebecers are liberals, and not only great Liberals in the political sense, but also in the true sense of the word, which means sharing, understanding, defending the rights of middle and low income people and respecting individual freedom and free enterprise.

This gives me an opportunity to explain the difference between the positions of the Conservatives, the NDP members and the Liberals on each of these Bills. In the case of this Bill and others, the Conservatives are for the private sector at any cost, for the law of the jungle, for the law of the strongest against the weakest, and the winners are always the wealthy. If we look at the Saint-Jean business and at other cases, we can see just what is going on and this is not only an empty accusation. There is evidence. However, if we look at the NDP position on other matters which concern us in Quebec, such as pharmaceutical products, we find the complete opposite. We have both extremes. One party is all for the private sector. The bosses are always right and the employees are always wrong. On the other side, we have the other extreme, the NDP members, who say that the union is always right. But we have the voice of wisdom, of the centre, of the middle road, the voice of those whom Canadians have always listened to as they will again when the election come and who defend the interests of real citizens. Whether you are a business or union leader, these two extremes who in this country have the right to defend freedoms, but the Liberal Party is there to fight for rights—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must regretfully interrupt the Hon. Member from Montreal—Sainte-Marie, but the Hon.

Member for Terrebonne (Mr. Toupin) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Toupin: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) is unfairly attacking the New Democratic Party in Quebec with his allegations. I should like simply to remind him that instead of playing partisan politics and expressing his fear of the NDP breakthrough in Quebec, he should behave like a gentleman.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not think that this is a point of order, but rather a question for debate. The Hon. member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie has the floor.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must regretfully interrupt the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie, but the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I should like to know why the Hon. Member is attacking the NDP instead of explaining his own position on deregulation, for the Liberal Party was the first to initiate steps towards deregulation—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I wish all Hon. Members to refrain from using points of order to take part in the debate. There is a debate on, and the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie has the floor.

Mr. Malépart: Being a nervous man, Mr. Speaker, I am all shaken up by the remarks of the Hon. Member for Terrebonne. I am shaken up by the NDP, Mr. Speaker, but I am prepared to confront them about anything anywhere in Quebec. I can say that the Liberal Party puts up an honest fight on behalf of early retirees, but in this case I could mention names. New Democratic Party Members are interested in nothing more than partisan politics when it comes to unionized workers, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure I was a source of division among them.

Mr. Speaker, we are dealing with Bill C-18 and the only reason for this exercise between the Conservative Party, the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party is simply that we want the people who still have the courage to watch our proceedings at this late hour to see the difference between these people. The Hon. Member for Bellechasse (Mr. Blais) would like me to say that the Conservative Party is the Party of patronage and corruption. I will not say that, I know what he thinks, but that is a fact, Mr. Speaker, and I have no intention of raising that issue. Getting back to Bill C-18, Mr. Speaker, air transport deregulation will have very serious consequences such as the privatization of Air Canada. We would let foreign companies create a monopoly and take over all our air carriers. Quite simply, as a result of unfair competition the residents of remote areas such as Bellechasse, Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean, Abitibi and the north shore will be deprived of services because the airlines, more concerned about competition and profitability, will concentrate their operations in densely populated regions.

Second, Mr. Speaker, concerning changes in railway transportation versus motor vehicle transportation, small owners, small truckers once more will be on the losing end. As an example, currently there is a demand for the products of a business, let us say a business in Bellechasse, in the furniture industry, and since the Hon. Member is unable to defend his constituency, Mr. Speaker, we will look after it in preparation for next election. In the constituency of Bellechasse, there are industries that are really profitable, operated by competent workers. Right now, the tourist industry, the trucking industry have offers, markets for delivering goods for those people. With the legislation as it now stands, this means CN/CP will be able to get in touch with those people, hire $50,000 to $60,000-a-year specialists simply to go and steal the customers away from the smaller carriers, to offer rates below the table, and automatically motor vehicle carriers will lose not only their businesses, but truckers will lose their jobs. Those are the implications of the legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I hear Tory Members howling, not to say barking.

An Hon. member: Yapping.

Mr. Malépart: My colleague says yapping. But I think the Hon. Member for Bellechasse, if he is a brilliant man—the current one, we had a better one before, before the 1984 election—but if he is sincere, why does he not rise, Mr. Speaker, why does he not defend the interests of those people? Why is the Member for Abitibi (Mr. St. Julien) or the Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier) not rising Mr. Speaker? Why are the Members of the Laval area not rising, to uphold the interests of those people? Mr. Speaker, is it merely, and I see the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais), because they are only concerned with and interested in one thing, as Michel Vastel stated in Le Devoir, a system of patronage and corruption. Is it their sole concern in their political career?

Mr. Speaker, I see you signalling that I have only one minute left. I should like before concluding to remind Tory Members that they should do their homework and uphold the interests of their constituents, of Quebecers as well as Canadians They could also ask the NDP Members to be more moderate in their action and less ridiculous when dealing with an issue.

Mr. Toupin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Terrebonne (Mr. Toupin) on a point of order.

Mr. Toupin: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) has been telling Conservative Members that they should defend the interests of their constituents. Here is my question: Where was he when the three refineries in East Montreal were closed?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This is not a point of order. I don't think the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) has to answer.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Mr. Gauthier: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, whereas the New Democratic Party has objected to the Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata) being heard, he has gone to bed and I think we would be intelligent people if we did likewise and also went to bed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I think that pretty soon I will go home to bed, but I would like to point out that I am still here and that I did not vote.

Mrs. Bourgault: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Argenteuil—Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault), on a point of order.

Mrs. Bourgault: Mr. Speaker, I just want to say, for the record, that I was unable to be present for the vote, and I also want to inform the House that I would have voted with the Government.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse).

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I move:

That the Hon. Member for Burnaby be now heard.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Both the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) and the Hon.

Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) were rising when the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) made his point of order. However, since they are both from the same political Party, could I ask the Hon. House Leader of that political Party or the Whip of that political Party to agree as to which of the two should speak at this time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, after many, many years of listening to both Hon. Members speak, recognizing their outstanding speaking abilities and knowing their valuable contributions to this debate, I think it is appropriate that Members of the House should decide who they feel would be the appropriate speaker to speak at this time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would one of the two Hon. Members concerned, be it the Hon. Member for Burnaby or the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre, be willing to yield his place to the other at this point?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Then is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion carried. I recognize the Hon. Member for Burnaby on debate.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, it is a sorry night in Parliament when we see the Liberal Party of Canada in bed with the Conservative Party of Canada and the people of Canada are the losers. It took a while to flush the Liberals out. However, when the Liberal Party Whip came marching up the floor of Parliament hand in hand with the Conservative Party Whip, the people of Canada were finally told the truth. There they sit together, the Liberal Party Whip and the Conservative Party Whip, side by side, selling out the people of Canada on a Bill which is of fundamental importance to them.

• (0100)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Robinson: Shame on the Liberal Party of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Robinson: Shame on the Liberal Party of Canada for their collaboration with people who are trying to muzzle Parliament, the Conservative Party of Canada.

We know where this anti-safety Bill came from in the first place. We know it was the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), as the Liberal Minister of Transport, who originated this Bill. Let us also talk for a moment or two about the role of the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council—

Mr. Lewis: Why not?

Mr. Robinson: —the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis). A few of his colleagues, like the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) and some other hangers in the caucus, have a little gallows at the back and they are going to string up that member because of the nonsense he has subjected this Parliament to. Those are the people, and that is the Party, who spoke out against closure when the Liberals imposed it. Some of us remember that night in 1980 when the Liberal Government imposed closure on the Constitution. Some of us remember the storming of the Speaker's chair. Six members of the Conservative Opposition stormed the Speaker's chair demanding to be heard and shaking their fists. The Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) tried to cross the floor, shaking his fists and threatening to assault members on the government side. He had to be restrained by the Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling). That was their view of closure. That was how strongly they felt about closure then.

What about the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski)? What has he had to say about the kind of closure the Government is implementing today on this Bill which is so important to the people of Canada? Here is what he had to say about that closure: "By virtue of a closure motion today we have a further contempt for and erosion of the spirit and privileges of this institution." He said: "I believe tyranny begins when parliamentary debate ends." What a bunch of phonies. What a bunch of hypocrites. What a bunch of double-talkers on that side of the House. When they are the victims of this kind of muzzling of Parliament they are the first to speak out. Yet now we have seen closure imposed in this Parliament with the highest frequency ever. That is to the shame of the Conservative Government which preaches parliamentary reform but muzzles the House.

Mr. Benjamin: Where is the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) now? Remember how you complained, Gordon?

Mr. Robinson: We know about the contempt of the Conservative Government for Parliament. We know of its attempt to shut down not just this House on matters of fundamental significance like this legislation, but we know as well of the contempt shown for committees of this House. The Government shut down the committee which was looking at the postal service. The Government shut down the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General when we tried to look into the waste of $42 million to build a prison in the Prime Minister's riding. That is the kind of contempt the Conservatives have shown for Parliament and the people of Canada. Because of that brazen contempt for Parliament and because of the outrageous denial of the right of Members of Parliament to debate this issue of fundamental significance, I move that the debate be now adjourned.

Mr. Murphy: Point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. My question is to the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). The seconder of the motion may not be someone who has already spoken in debate.

Mr. Murphy: I second it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is the following one. Moved by Mr. Robinson, seconded by Mr. Murphy:

That the debate do now adjourn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

I declare the motion lost.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, this is not so much a point of order as to say that I was in the House, that I did not take part in the vote and that I am not impressed at all by the direction the debate is taking.

[English]

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I am a relatively new Member of the House. I would like to raise a very important point of order. Prior to you calling for the disposition of the matter at hand by a voice vote, as provided for in the Standing Orders, the Whips of the Government Party and the Official Opposition marched from one end of this House to the other as if anticipating a particular procedure. I ask that you consider the ramifications of the willingness, particularly of the Official Opposition, to eliminate further debate on this extremely important matter.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, on a matter that is not a point of order, the Whips come before the Chair when they are ready to indicate that the House is prepared to vote on the matter before it. That is what we did. That is what the Standing Orders require and that is what we did.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, I may remind you that we were in the House. A number of members, including the Member for Montreal—Sainte Marie (Mr. Malépart) and the Member for Grander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker), did not take part in the vote because we figure it is a complete waste of time.

[English]

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, earlier this evening we saw the spectacle of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) blowing kisses to the Liberals. Now that the relationship has been consummated, might I suggest that they formally move to the other side of the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair is, of course, always willing to entertain points of order, as long as they are points of order. I ask Hon. Members to raise what they consider to be real points of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve on a point of order.

Mr. Desrosiers: Mr. Speaker, I think nobody understood what was meant, in either official language. Perhaps you might give me a very special permission to address the House in Italian. There might be some people who would understand us. So, if you will allow me, Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak to our friends of Italian origin, perhaps they will understand more easily.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret—

An Hon. Member: In French!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I thank the Hon. Member for sitting down.

[English]

I will recognize the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) to resume debate.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): I rise on a point of order. I move, seconded by the Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo):

That the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre be now heard.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I know of the influence which the Hon. House Leader of the New Democratic Party has within his Party. I must ask him to try to convince one of his colleagues to yield the floor to the other.

Mr. Blaikie: Let the House decide.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, you are very kind to suggest that I have any influence over what happens within my caucus tonight. I believe it would be recognized that both the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) and the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) are distinguished Members of this House. I believe it is only appropriate that Members of the House decide which Member they would prefer to hear first in debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will try again with the Whip of the New Democratic Party. This is the third time that this has happened tonight. Perhaps the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) will settle the matter for us.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, you recognized, as is your right, the Hon. Member who got up at the same time as the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse). I believe that the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre has expressed his interest this evening, on a continuing basis, to speak in this debate. Since both members have expressed an interest, I believe that the House should make the decision.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe that if you check with your Table officers you will find that it is impossible for a member who rises on a point of order to move a motion. The Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) rose on a point of order and then moved a motion. I suggest to you, therefore, Sir, that the motion moved by the Hon. Member for Churchill is out of order and cannot be put.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) is correct with regard to practically all motions except this one. In this particular case it is allowable. The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if it would be appropriate to seek the unanimous consent of the House to allow the pages to retire for the day.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse).

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have been some time attempting to get the floor of the House. On a number of occasions the Chamber has rejected my efforts to be recognized. I am pleased now that 14 of my colleagues have decided that I should speak.

If there are any people left who are watching television they may be wondering about the procedural activities that have been going on this evening. It began with the Deputy Government House Leader who moved a motion to end the debate this evening, after having extended the hours of the House in an unlimited amount after the normal adjournment. On a number of occasions, as part of showing our displeasure at those activities, members of our group and one or two others in the House have moved to adjourn the debate. The objective is to give the people in the country who object to Bill C-18 a little more time to make their case to the Government. Bill C-18 is the National Transportation Act that has been put forward by the Government to deregulate transportation. Many groups and individuals are opposed to the proposals for deregulation that appear in this Bill, but their message does not seem to have penetrated through the ears of the government Members.

I wish to review the whole process towards deregulation that has been initiated by the Government. It has been an initiative copied from Margaret Thatcher and Ronald Reagan. There were some signals picked up in Canada back in the 1979 election, and the Rhinoceros Party also had a program and a platform for deregulation. It was proposing to take away the tightrope that people were being made to walk, the straitjacket of rules. It was part of their platform to deregulate automobile and highway traffic. It did not want to go too far in one fell swoop, so for a start it was proposing to put the trucks on the left side of the road.

That is about the success that deregulation is having, given the history, the geography, and the social structures that we have in Canada. Deregulation of the air, the ground, and the water has meant less service, more costly service, and less safe serice for a great many small communities outside of the central two provinces, the central triangle from Montreal to Toronto, and the Niagara horseshoe.

When we asked the government Members to defend the Bill, some of them have responded. They talked about competition and what a great thing competition will be when airlines, trucking companies, or other transportation services do not have to go before a regulatory body to get a licence to service certain communities. The Government sees this as a great boon to the consumer. It cites examples in the United States where rates have fallen. In fact, there may be some rates that fall as a result of deregulation. In fact, it may result in lower fares between the large metropolitan areas. Consumers living in Vancouver, Montreal, or Toronto might receive some advantage from deregulation. We are talking about metropolitan areas with several millions of people in them. Most of the Members of this House represent areas that do not have two or three million people. They represent the Atlantic provinces, the prairie provinces, and the hinterland of British Columbia, which is most of British Columbia, and they represent the North. Those areas do not receive any advantage from deregulation. In fact, they will be badly hurt by deregulation.

I speak as a member representing a riding on the Prairies. The type of regulated transport that we have had has served us reasonably well in a small province like Saskatchewan with a large area and only a million people. We have jet service at two of our major cities, Saskatoon and Regina. We have been able to count on DC-9 or 727 service to those cities, simply because in order to hold the licence to transport people from west to east, the airlines have been required to stop at Saskatoon and Regina. The load is never enough to make it economically feasible to make that stop at either Saskatoon or Regina. There are very few times when enough people get off and on to pay for the fuel to lift and take off with the load.

It is not just population movement that is important to the Prairies. Even more important to the farm communities that I represent is that link to machine parts. I do not know if most members realize how vital the supply of machinery parts for combines, tractors, and mining equipment is to the economy of the Prairies. The system that we have developed is that parts are not warehoused on the Prairies—very few parts are kept there. Most of the machinery companies keep their main warehousing of parts right at the factory. They hook into the factory by computer. Even when you go to the smallest of equipment dealers these days, the parts are checked through a computer, and the availability is investigated within the Province of Saskatchewan. If there are no parts there, they immediately go further afield. For most parts they have to go back to the factory. That means a plane with connecting bus service for farmers who are waiting for that part. Generally speaking we can count upon delivery of the part in 24 hours and occasionally in 48 hours. If we are not certain of the air service into those centres and we allow service to occur willy-nilly, with a new operator jumping in at the last minute to provide service, taking away what little patronage exists, to the point where the existing service has to quit, it does not bode well for the security of the farming community, potash miners, uranium miners, or coal miners, for that matter.

It is vital for our communities that we do not have deregulation and we continue with existing regulations which guarantee that small communities or sparsely populated areas obtain service similar to that offered in metropolitan areas. We were able to achieve that in Canada with regulation and, to some extent, with forced cross-subsidization of lighter density centres so that they too could have service, be part of Canada, and participate in our economy.

With deregulation we would be permitting so-called free market forces to proliferate. We would be simply setting up an economic system which guarantees the growth of metropolitan areas and makes certain that rural areas, including most of Atlantic Canada, most of the Prairies, most of British Columbia north, northern Ontario, and Quebec, will no longer be guaranteed those services. People will begin to drift away, and the economy of those regions will suffer. We will end up with very little infrastructure to hold the country together.

Because of the procedures the Government chose to use to force this debate and to force this policy on the country, and because we have been attempting to find ways and means of slowing down the debate to give the Canadian population a chance to get its message through to the Government, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo):

That the debate on this motion be now adjourned.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out that the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) and I are present, but we decided to refrain from voting.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Debate.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, we have learned a couple of things in the debate this evening, first in relation to the inability of the Government to run the affairs of the House of Commons in a reasonable fashion. We learned that the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) took this opportunity after only 17 hours of debate, four short days on a piece of legislation which will affect 750,000 transportation workers, to cut it off. That was enough when the Government wanted to move this off the public agenda so the public would not really know what it was all about. I have taken the time to see the kind of flim-flam that Tory Members of this House are putting out to Canadians. About the only thing consistent in what they are putting out is that this is going to bring about lower air fares. They do not talk about all the negative things that are going to come with deregulation.

The other thing we learned, and I think it is important for Canadians to have learned it today, is that the lemming Liberals have proven once and for all that when their feet are held to the fire on the issue of deregulation in the airline industry, in rail, road and marine transport, they sit on the government side of the fence 100 per cent. We learned that as they supinely acquiesced up the centre of this House this evening. I must say that I will make sure to keep my back to the wall whenever there is a lemming Liberal wandering around in this place during the rest of this Parliament.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fulton: Let me deal for a moment with Bill C-18 because, as most Canadians know, less than a handful of Tories have had the guts to speak to it. Even the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport does not have the guts to get up and say what is good about this Bill. He wants to pretend that it is good, but it is an act of deception by an entire Government. No government Members are rising to talk about what is in the Bill. No government Members bother to go through it and say, well, this will be good for my constituents. We know where this Bill came from. We know those shark-suited suckers from the big corporations were in the Prime Minister's Office. We know they were in the Minister of Transport's office. We know that same crowd with the shark-skin suits and the snake-skin shoes have been hanging out with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). We know about the Oerlikon affair. We know the only way you get the kind of legislation you want is by getting in and cosying up with that so-called Prime Minister. We know how many of those 211 Tories will be left in this House if they are not in the penitentiary in Port-Cartier. They will not be in this House of Commons, that is one thing we certainly know, after the kind of activities they have been involved in.

Let us look for a moment at what has happened in the U.S. The Tories do not like to hear the truth, but there are Canadians out there, 750,000 Canadian workers, who want to know what the effects of this Bill will be. We can look at what is happening in the U.S. We know what the effects of four years of deregulation have been in the U.S. Listen to the howling jackals. Listen to them over there. You give them a few facts and they start to howl. Look at them, they are deranged. The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) is standing around sticking his tongue out and blowing kisses to the Liberals. The Liberals are dragging their bottoms up and down the floor.

What we know is that in the U.S. 40,000 airline workers were jettisoned out the door. Here we have the architects taking the same idiocy from the U.S. Republicans and trying to drag it up here. What happened to rail workers in the U.S? Some 150,000 rail workers were jettisoned out the door. Oh, Conservative Members say, "No, we worry about Canadians". The pathetic Conservatives worry about Canadians. The only thing they are interested in is getting themselves to the trough. That is what Tories are all about in this country.

What about road transportation in the U.S? One-third of the truckers in the U.S. have lost their jobs in four years. What will come out of this kind of legislation is an increase in monopolies. On the north-south routes in British Columbia we have only Pacific Western. These brain donkeys say that there will be more competition. There is already a monopoly on the northern CN line.

• (0240)

The Deputy Prime Minister was part of the troop of Tories which went across western Canada saying they would restore VIA Rail after the Liberals destroyed it for years. Instead, they are leasing cars to Mexico and other countries. They are closing all the VIA stations, throwing shop workers and machinists out of work and laying off red caps across the country. So much for the great Tory promise to bring back VIA Rail.

This piece of legislation is a blueprint for idiocy. It is anti-sovereignty, anti-safety and anti-competition. Everything the Tories claimed to stand for is being jettisoned. The Tories are doing it because Ronnie is doing it and Richard Nixon did it so it must be good. Not a single Tory could stand at a public meeting and debate that which is good in this Bill. They will not get up here. They try to choke off debate. The Member for Simcoe North should hang his head because the debate on Bill C-18 and C-19 is just beginning.

This legislation is a licence to cut service and abandon branch lines. It is a licence for a monopoly everywhere south of 55 in B.C. and in most of the rest of the country. They say that if you live in Dease Lake or Telegraph Creek in British Columbia or in Fort Smith in the Northwest Territories, you will have a little bit of regulation.

Under Bill C-18, if you have a plane, a licence, insurance, and are willing to fly, you can cutthroat on any line you want. In committee, my colleague, the Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus), asked the owner of a small Alberta airline how safe the last passengers on the last flight of a bankrupt airline would be under this legislation. The answer was, "Not safe at all". That is the guts of this Bill in terms of air transport in many small rural areas such as my entire constituency.

I have received a note which indicates that the Chairman of the Transport Committee is interested in joining in this debate this evening. I will certainly be interested to see him get up and howl on his hind legs and tell people in Annapolis Valley why Bill C-18 will be good with regard to rail, rubber, air and marine. As they lose their jobs they will remember that they have the Tories to thank for it. Of course, the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) started this. The Tory excuse for everything is that the Liberals started it and they are just trying to fix it up a little bit.

Let us look at what will happen over-all in air, rail, rubber and marine transport. This is an offer for the lowest possible quality of service for the public at the lowest cost and the highest profit to the corporate interests. Who will really get the benefit? Big shippers will get some benefit. What about small business?

Mr. Benjamin: Bull shippers.

Mr. Fulton: Bull shippers may get a little benefit, but the Tories have probably spoken to them already. Small business will not benefit from this. With regard to individual passengers, we already know that the Tory promise on VIA was nothing. As a matter of fact, we are reverting to the stone age with regard to passenger rail service and airline service.

We want good regulations which will ensure that small communities receive regular quality airline service at a reasonable fare structure. Instead, we will see the total elimination of public convenience. In Clause 4 of the Bill the Government has defined public interest as follows: "public interest that is consistent with" cabinet policy. The Cabinet will decide what is public convenience and necessity for Canada.

This is a sad day on which debate has been choked off by the Member for Simcoe North. He will live to regret it. The Tories will live to regret it. The people of Canada are starting to awaken to the fact that tens of thousands of jobs are on the line as well as the quality of service and their communities. They have been led down a rocky road by a Government that is openly deceiving the people of Canada. It is a sad day.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, we have been around here a long time. We have learned that a Government which forgets the principles on which it based its campaign cannot be trusted. A Government which abandons the principles which are expected of it by the people of Canada will abandon the whole country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hovdebo: One would think that members of the Government would be embarrassed by this farce of a debate. It is a farce because the people of the country are not being informed of what is in this Bill. This is not the only farce which the Government has perpetrated on the people of Canada and this House. In the last few weeks there were hearings on the Post Office which were supposed to inform the people of Canada of what is happening within the Post Office. Instead, the hearings were cut off almost before they began. Even the hearings on patent legislation are being restricted. People who wish to appear at those hearings are not being allowed to do so. This Government spent days telling us how it would allow the people of Canada to be heard. Now it has spent its time in the House restricting the ability of people to be heard in the House. Even the softwood lumber hearings were a farce.

Let us talk about transportation policy. Historically transportation legislation and regulation has attempted to create equality between the regions of the country. That has been the basis of transportation legislation ever since the time of John A. Macdonald and probably before. In the past it gave, to some extent, every area of the country an opportunity to compete in domestic and foreign markets. It attempted to require all Canadians to share in the cost of transporting products to domestic as well as foreign markets. It has done that for the last hundred years. That was the dream of John A. Macdonald. It was the dream of Borden and John Diefenbaker. Obviously it is not the dream of the Government. The political ideology that transportation should become the key to development of the country did not come about inadvertently. It was established by the Leaders of various Parties who believed that a transportation system that united every part of the country was needed to provide equal opportunity for the development of Canada.

• (0250)

Through the years, various Governments have established transportation legislation. This includes the Crowsnest Pass agreement, statutory grain rates, Maritime freight rates, the at and east rates and the Atlantic provinces assistance rates. That legislation was established by Parliaments like this, with parliamentarians who believed it was necessary to have such a transportation policy in order for Canada to become a great country.

That legislation still exists, although legislation such as the Crowsnest Pass rate was changed to the Western Grain Transportation Act. However, those programs which have protected the kind of transportation which has made this country great are now at risk. This Bill is the first step toward eliminating that transportation structure.

The motivation for this Bill is the belief in the supremacy of the market-place. If that ideology is applied to all modes of transportation in Canada, I suggest that those who provide those transportation services will not give the best service unless they must. If the purpose of those in the transportation industry is to make the best possible profit, and there are no regulations to ensure safety, understandably they will make as much money as possible without regard to safety. Furthermore, the carriers will gravitate toward the largest and most lucrative markets, for which they cannot be blamed, as my hon. colleague, the Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) said on several occasions. Therefore, the lack of profitability for regions like Prince Albert and isolated parts of the country will mean declining services. This process began with the previous Government and is being continued by the present Government. Air service in many cities has been cut, but costs remain as high and even higher.

Let us consider rail service. Branch lines have been cut in areas where they are necessary. When a branch line is removed from a farming area, farmers must haul their grain long distances, up to 70 kilometres and more, to rail points. Their farms become less viable and this ensures ultimate failure. In the Peace River area and the Big River area near Prince Albert, farms are becoming less viable because of the greater cost of transportation. This situation will increase if this Bill is passed.

This Bill decimates the service to which we have become accustomed. We will have to pay for that service, yet production in many areas will not support that cost. For example, such a user-pay philosophy in northern Saskatchewan would create a transportation cost that is far greater than it is at present.

Second, this Bill will lead toward the elimination of sovereignty in this country.

Third, no matter how much the Government espouses the philosophy of competition, this Bill will not increase competition but eliminate it in certain areas. If the Government wants to act in the best interests of Canada it will send this Bill back for more study.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the legislation before us this evening is to help increase competition in this country. Events in the last two years have proven that competition is not increasing but decreasing it. Furthermore, the Government has refused to act when competition has decreased. For example, the Government failed to act when Pacific Western attempted to form a joint management strategy with ComAir in northern Manitoba with which it was theoretically competing. As a result of the Government allowing that to happen, northern communities have received less service.

When Pacific Western Airlines decided to take over Canadian Pacific and again reduce the level of competition in this country, the Government refused to act.

What is the purpose of deregulation legislation if the very people who are presently in the transportation industries are reducing the level of service?

The number of carriers and the level of service is being reduced. The Government, which advocates an increase in competition and providing greater options to consumers has proven by its own inaction on the PWA and CP question that it has no intention of really increasing competition in this country.

The net result of this legislation will be a move from public control through government regulation to private control through monopoly. In other words, those who want to use air service, rail service, trucking and other transportation services will no longer have the Government to act on their behalf. There will be private carriers who may take over their theoretical competition and make decisions previously made by the Government.

Currently, PWA competes with CP in the community of Whitehorse. However, what competition exists now that PWA owns CP? Perhaps if there were a Member in the House from Yukon, that Member could speak on this issue. However, since there is not, those people have now had their effective competition destroyed because the Government refused to act.

• (0300)

I have been told that PWA today has actually applied to cancel service to Whitehorse. Why was that done? The reason is obvious. This Government allowed PWA to take over Canadian Pacific and it does not want to compete with its own company.

Ms. Jacques: It is the best Canada ever had in its life.

Mr. Murphy: I hear someone rapping and yapping away. I do not know what she is saying because she will not rise in her place in the House and speak. Let me say that I do not know what she is saying because we cannot hear her, but she is obviously in opposition to my attempt to defend the people of Whitehorse who want to maintain the competition they have at the present time.

Right now this Government has allowed competition to be reduced and this legislation will allow that to happen even more. The attempt by the assistant to the House Leader to cut off the debate today after only 17 hours of debate is a very unfortunate act which will result in less co-operation in this House from now on. I have worked with the assistant to the House Leader before and I have worked with the House Leader and the Government Whip in attempting to ensure some legislation gets through this House in an orderly manner. However, for the Government at the beginning of February to attempt to keep this House going for all hours in order to quickly pass legislation works against the very concept of parliamentary reform. It was an unnecessary and stupid act. It is an act which tells us that the Government of Canada is not concerned with having reasoned debate at reasoned hours when the public is in a position to hear what is going on. This was an unnecessary act, a brutal act against the whole concept of parliamentary reform, and this Government will suffer as a result.

It is ironic that today, February 4, is the two and a half year anniversary of this Government. It is half way through its term and it is certainly a one-term Government. Never in the history of this country have we had a Government which is running in third place. That is because it cannot be trusted to represent Canadians. Does it represent the fishermen in Atlantic Canada? No. Does it represent Manitobans? No. Does it represent Albertans? No. It just ruined the competition in Whitehorse and those Hon. Members sit there and smile. They have ruined parliamentary reform and democracy in this country and they sit here at three o'clock in the morning and pretend that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) are working toward parliamentary reform.

The Government House Leader knows that this kind of thing destroys co-operation among the Parties. He knows this is not the way reasoned debate should take place. He knows that his Government has lost the trust of Canadians. Half way through its mandate and there is no trust in the Government. I heard someone from Alberta saying that is not true. The great debate in Alberta right now is whether it is "Masse" or "Maz, speaking for the Government. Who speaks for Syncrude? Is it the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse)? Is it the Deputy Government House Leader? No one knows. That is the problem faced by the Government.

This legislation is something which was introduced by the former Minister of Transport, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). It was a Liberal attempt to deregulate the transportation industry. Certain Members of the Conservative Party from Atlantic Canada who have not spoken tonight spoke against the actions of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry when he was Minister of Transport in the former Government. They used to rise in this House and say the legislation was no good. When the Liberals introduced this legislation, which would have resulted in less facilities, less transportation and less competition in Atlantic Canada, the Conservatives were against it. Now they are silent. They refuse to work in the interests of their constituents.

An Hon. Member: Murphy, you are a joke.

Mr. Murphy: I do not know which one of the backbenchers made that remark. I am not a joke. It is this Government which is a joke. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, there is no trust that this Government has any sense of fairness. There is no expectation that the Government is going to make sure there is adequate transportation services. There is no trust that the regions will be represented by the Government. There is no trust in the credibility of the Prime Minister. There is no trust that the Government will do anything to protect the interests of average Canadians. Did the Government discuss the fishing treaty with Atlantic Canadians? No. Did it really give Manitobans a fair chance with the CF-18 contract? No. Did it give any sense of fairness to the farmers in western Canada? No.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Murphy: As I said, this Government is half way through its term and I think the motion tonight to cut off debate has proven yet again that Canadians cannot trust this Government, and that will result in the Government losing its mandate as soon as it has the courage to face the public.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We have had a prolonged debate on this issue tonight. We have heard from a great number of Hon. Members. I suggest, in order to expedite the business of the House and get on with debating political issues—we have the motion now—that we vote on the second reading motion at this point.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is as follows: Mr. Lewis, seconded by Mr. Kilgour, moved that the question be now put. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

And the division bells having rung:

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 13(4)(a), and following discussion with the Liberal Whip earlier this day in your presence, it was agreed that the division tonight would be taken tomorrow at 3 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 13(4)(a), I have been requested by the chief Government Whip to defer the division to a later time. Accordingly, the division on the question now before the House stands deferred until three o'clock p.m. later this day, at which time the bells to call in the Members will be sounded for 15 minutes.

It being 3.08 a.m., this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 3.08 a.m.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

STUDY'S DISCLOSURE OF ECONOMIC BENEFITS FLOWING FROM LAW TO CURB ACID RAIN

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the United States' economy would get a multi-billion dollar stimulus if Congress passed a law to curb acid rain, says Management Information Services, a research company in the U.S. The annual net gain to the U.S. economy would range from $7.5 billion to $13 billion. The economy would gain even though such industries as coal mining would probably lose jobs and sales.

The boost would come from spending to clean up emissions from coal-fired industrial and utility boilers. Most utilities that would be affected by acid rain controls are in the Midwest. But the study states that this region would also benefit because it has the basic heavy industry to make much of the expensive emissions cleaning equipment. Across the United States there would be a net gain of 100,000 to 194,000 jobs, depending on the shape of the final legislation.

The acid rain issue in pure dollars and cents may be the language President Reagan and those in Congress opposed to a control program understand. Will the Canadian Government make good use of this information?

NATIONAL PARKS

GRASSY ISLAND NATIONAL PARK—DEVELOPMENT FUNDING

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to urge Parks Canada to confirm the amount of money it will contribute to the development of Grassy Island National Park at Canso. I would also like to know when this money will be flowing.

Grassy Island is the site of North America's first fishing fort. It is situated off Canso, Guysborough County.

In addition to recognizing the historical importance of this site, the development will greatly contribute to economic development in the area. Grassy Island National Park will be a tourist attraction drawing thousands of people into this area. It will greatly enhance attempts to diversify the economic base of the area.

In response to directions from Parks Canada to obtain local funding, I have worked with community groups, the MLA for Guysborough, Dr. Chuck MacNeil, and the Mayor of Canso, Raymond White, to do just that. In this respect we are close to reaching our objective.

I now want Parks Canada to outline the details of its commitment which is to supplement the local contribution and to effect full development of Grassy Island National Park.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

EXTENSION OF SITTING HOURS TO DEBATE BILL C-18

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in the House we witnessed a blatant abuse of parliamentary procedure and tradition when the Government called to extend the hours of debate into the evening and until 3 a.m. in an effort to close off debate on Bill C-18. It knew full well that many members of the Opposition were fulfilling their duties and responsibilities on standing committees or legislative committees, and could not be in the House to oppose this closure tactic when it was introduced by the Government late in the afternoon.

This thoughtless, naive, bullying tactic by the Government flies in the face of our parliamentary reforms. It demonstrates a lack of respect for and appreciation of the role and responsibility of opposition Members, and it shows a disregard and contempt for Parliament, its history, and its traditions.

The Government's thoughtless and crass manipulation of parliamentary procedure encourages divisiveness between Members. This does nothing to encourage or enhance the level of civility in Parliament.

I ask the Government House Leader (Mr. Mazankowski) to intervene immediately to enact changes to the Standing Orders so that this blatant abuse of Parliament does not occur in the future. After all, the Government through its actions and attitudes ultimately sets the tone and mood of the House.

THE LATE NORMAN MCLAREN

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all Members will join me in paying tribute to Canadian filmmaker, Norman McLaren, who died last week at the age of 72. His 45-year career, mostly in the service of the National Film Board, produced over 60 films which stand as international landmarks of our culture. McLaren explored the frontiers of filmmaking. He pioneered a wide range of production techniques, including pixillation, which joins disparate images to create continuous action, and is now in wide use.

[Translation]

Norman McLaren also led the way by developing a technique for direct recording on the sound track. Throughout the world Norman McLaren was awarded more than 200 prizes for his films, including Cannes' Palme d'or, yet he did not seek recognition as a film producer.

[English]

When informed that Neighbors, his hauntingly simple allegory for the nuclear age had won an Oscar he replied, "But who is Oscar?"

For all but two years of his prolific career as a filmmaker, Norman McLaren was a civil servant. As we reflect on his passing and celebrate his work, we have reason to be proud of our National Film Board.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

IDENTICAL SERVICES REQUIRED FOR ALL CITIZENS

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Last Saturday, Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity to attend a Rural Dignity meeting in Agassiz in British Columbia's Fraser Valley East riding. Six hundred people were at the meeting, and their message was loud and clear: We do not want to be consulted only to be told that you are going to close our post offices. What do we want? To be first class citizens. All Canadians want to keep their post offices.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Belsher) was present at the Monday meeting. He asked the question to the Minister and assured us we would be consulted. Consultation is not what people want. Again today we read in the newspapers that the Minister responsible for Canada Post is repeating his promise to consult people before closing post offices. Mr. Speaker, this is ridiculous, an insult to all Canadians. Rural residents will no longer accept to be treated as second class citizens. They want the same postal services throughout Canada.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

LAY-OFFS AT MONCTON SHOPS—CALL FOR EFFORT TO ATTRACT NEW INDUSTRY

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, yesterday CN Rail announced that a further 449 jobs will disappear from the Moncton main shops by year end, 279 of which will be completely lost to the local economy.

The Government must give this matter its immediate attention. I urge that a co-ordinated effort by all government Departments be undertaken to identify and attract new industry to Moncton which will help to offset the CN decision. In addition, CN management must identify these lay-offs as technological, organizational or operational change, not work related, and have appropriate benefits applied.

I would urge that those CN unions that refuse to ratify the special agreement between Canadian General Electric and CN to employ some 578 persons at the Moncton shops, reconsider the decision and its effect on their fellow workers in Moncton. All levels of government, CN, and the unions must live up to their respective responsibilities in an effort to lessen the effects on the Moncton economy.

DISARMAMENT

EFFECT OF RESUMPTION OF UNITED STATES' NUCLEAR TESTS

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the United States exploded its first nuclear test of 1987. In so doing it set back the chance of a comprehensive test ban for at least five years.

The Soviet Union has given notice that its moratorium on testing would end if the United States conducted another test. The Americans have given it every reason to resume testing. They show no interest in serious immediate negotiations to ban nuclear tests.

The Americans used to argue that a comprehensive test ban could not be concluded because it could not be verified. However, when the Soviets became willing to discuss verification, the U.S. shifted ground. It argued that testing was necessary to maintain confidence in its nuclear deterrent.

However, there is another reason. American nuclear tests are also part of the Strategic Defence Initiative. Star wars already threatens the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty, and American deployments are eroding SALT II. President Reagan's reliance on such unilateral action shows that we will have to wait for a change of U.S. administration before any progress can be made toward a comprehensive test ban.

LABOUR RELATIONS

END OF DISPUTE AT PORT OF QUEBEC

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec East): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to announce to the House today that an agreement in principle was accepted by the International Longshoremen's Association this morning at 7.10 a.m., which would end the labour dispute at the Port of Quebec City.

The union executive will present this memorandum of agreement to its members on Friday, in the hope that it will be accepted and that work at the Port of Quebec will be able to start as soon as possible, perhaps this Sunday.

I would also like to take this opportunity to congratulate all those who took part in the negotiations, and who dedicated their time and effort to settling this dispute so that the federal Government would not have to pass back-to-work legislation.

Union representatives and management have taken very seriously the advice of various intervenors in the industry who warned the two parties about the precarious situation in which the Port of Quebec finds itself today, and as a result, the parties negotiated in good faith in order to reach an agreement that would be satisfactory to both sides.

Mr. Speaker, I am confident that the agreement concluded today will be ratified this Friday, which will be very good news for the people of Quebec.

REFUGEES

INTRODUCTION OF NEW POLICY—CRITICISM OF DELAY

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, it is a crying shame that the Government has failed to produce its long awaited refugee policy. Former Ministers of Immigration have promised for two years that the Parliament of Canada would have a new and revamped refugee policy. The last Throne Speech promised that it would be a priority and a commitment of the Government. The current Minister said that last fall was the date. Then he changed his mind and it was to be the end of 1986. Then it was to be the beginning of 1987, and we still have no revamped refugee policy.

Rabbi Gunther Plaut did a landmark report on the current status of refugees in Canada. An immigration committee has studied the matter patiently and has produced a number of reports on the subject. Communities, churches, and various coalitions across the country have mobilized. They are now saying that they are frustrated at the lack of action on the part of the Government in terms of refugee policy.

It is time that we stop promises and rhetoric. The evidence is in. There is a new phenomenon in respect of refugees. We are no longer going abroad to recruit a quota of candidates from refugee camps. People arrive at our shores claiming refugee status. We need a policy which comprehends the new reality and is fair to refugees. Let us have this policy so that all Canadians can be proud of our record in years gone by.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

EXTENDED SITTING—CONDUCT OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY MEMBERS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, the rules of the House have evolved over the years and are designed to give every Member of Parliament and every Party an opportunity to support or oppose any measure through sound debate, showing full respect for the views of others.

Last night and early this morning we saw one of the most disgraceful performances which ever took place in this hallowed Chamber. For nine hours members of the NDP abused the rules and played silly games among themselves. They were so undisciplined that they would not even respect the sensible suggestions made by the Deputy Speaker who displayed remarkable patience and restraint.

During the whole period NDP speakers, instead of dealing with the merits or demerits of the Bill, just spewed hatred and ridicule on the heads of other Members of Parliament.

It was a mockery of Parliament and a complete waste of Parliament's time when so many urgent matters of concern to Canadians need attention. Then, just after 3 a.m., the House Leader of the NDP stood up and moved that second reading of the Bill take place, the very thing the NDP prevented during the whole nine hours. Who can understand a socialist?

SHIPBUILDING

PROPOSED POLAR 8 ICE-BREAKER CONTRACT

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, Canadians generally, and western Canadians in particular, are anxious about the long promised Polar 8 ice-breaker contract. They have been told that the original proposal for a $450 million vessel built to Coast Guard standards was rejected because it cost too much. People recognize that a competing Canadian bid to build a cheaper vessel to commercial standards encouraged that rejection. They became concerned when they heard that the Coast Guard did not like this alternative. They were especially concerned to learn that a foreign company was working to satisfy the Coast Guard.

Western Canadians generally, and Conservative Members of Parliament specifically, became very anxious when they learned that the foreign company had invited Lavalin Inc. of Montreal to serve as project manager for construction of the Polar 8 ice-breaker. Is Montreal to become the ice-breaker design centre of Canada as well as the aerospace centre? Have western Canadian interests in Calgary and Vancouver been bypassed in the competition? The award of the Polar 8 contract is becoming another political football for the Mulroney Government.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

INCREASED DISABILITY BENEFITS—REDUCTIONS MADE BY GOVERNMENT OF ONTARIO

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, last June 26 this House unanimously passed major improvements to the Canada Pension Plan. CPP disability benefits were increased by at least $136 per month beginning in January, 1987.

I rise today to report the theft by the Ontario Government of these disability benefits from the people who all Parties agreed were the neediest in society. When the new increased disability cheques were sent out in January, the Ontario Government, apparently alone among all provinces in Canada, reduced the provincial payments to the disabled by a corresponding amount. Not only does this mean that the disabled in Ontario do not benefit from the disability pension increase, but the richest province in Canada used the money we provided for the poor to reduce its deficit. People could be even worse off because reductions in provincial payment levels could eliminate their provincial drug cards.

The Ontario Liberal Government is a minority Government. This unjustified and miserly action must be reversed. Members of all Parties should contact their provincial counterparts to reverse this heartless action.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT—TERMS OF 1972 TREATY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and relates to his fish deal with France. Yesterday he waved the treaty around. Let me say to him that he is once again playing fast and loose with the facts. Surely there can be nothing more pathetic, Mr. Speaker, than a Prime Minister trying to justify his own actions by attempting to rewrite history.

The facts are these. In 1972 Canada had a recognized 12-mile limit. This treaty by Article 3 would have had the French out of the Gulf under that 12-mile limit by May 15, 1986; last year. In 1977, Don Jamieson, a great Newfoundlander, as the Minister of Transport will agree, negotiated a 200-mile limit. In 1980 Romeo LeBlanc negotiated the French out of that limit by May 15, 1986. What has happened is absolutely the responsibility of this Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Why did the Prime Minister undo the great work of the late Don Jamieson on behalf of Canada and on behalf of Newfoundland?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the treaty has been tabled. It speaks for itself. There is no doubt as to what the treaty contains. It is very clear that in the absence of an interim arrangement there was a reversion to the provisions therein—

Mr. Tobin: Where is the 1980 agreement?

Mr. Mulroney: —which provided, under the Liberals, for unquantified, perpetual rights to the French—

Mr. Rompkey: Not so.

Mr. Mulroney: —to fish in Canada's zone. What we are in the process of doing, with the leadership of the distinguished Minister of Transport who is the representative of Newfoundland and Labrador in the federal Cabinet—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): He was.

Mr. Axworthy: He is in his last term.

Mr. Mulroney: —is a process that will protect the historic fishing rights of the people of Newfoundland and Labrador. We are most of all concerned about the rights of Newfoundlanders before anything else. We have recognized the complexity of this problem, but we know the rights of Newfoundlanders are central to any solution to it.

OFFICIALS' ACTIONS—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is right that the treaty speaks for itself, but he misinterpreted that treaty today. Article 3 makes it quite clear that the French were to be out of the Gulf by May 15, 1986.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1420)

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I am surprised that the Prime Minister did not try to reach back to 1713 to the time of the first treaty on fisheries, the Treaty of Utrecht. The Prime Minister, in dealing with the French, had an option. He could have said no to the French and he did not.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Why did the Prime Minister's officials from his office and the officials from the Department of External Affairs overrule the Canadian negotiators and make a quick sell-out to the French?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in regard to both the preamble and the essence of the question, my right hon. friend knows full well that the information on which he bases his question is completely erroneous. I am being very polite. It is an absolute falsehood. It is false from beginning to end. The fact of the matter is that when confronted with a dilemma we were faced with the sell-out of the Liberal Party, the Government of which he was a member, and I will allow the Canadian people to make up their minds about the true import of a treaty which had grave consequences for the people of Newfoundland and Labrador and Canada. That is why the Government of Canada, in co-operation with the fishermen of Newfoundland and Labrador, is working so hard to get out of this problem created by the Liberals.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER CANCEL AGREEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, that treaty certainly speaks for itself. It does not support the position advanced by the Prime Minister. If the Prime Minister wants to rewrite history and rely on past Liberal administrations, I can tell him that we would not have sold out on lumber, we would not have sold out on the farmers, and we would not have sold out on fish. When will the Prime Minister quit selling out Canadians? Will the Prime Minister cancel the agreement he made with France, today?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting that a former Prime Minister of Canada would allow himself to succumb to such easy and remarkable jingoism as that expressed by him.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: Here the NDP is sending in the navy, and the Leader of the Opposition is repudiating the traditional Liberal position, while the only position the Government of Canada has adopted is one that is desirous of trying, having been stuck with this mess, to help the fishermen of Newfoundland and Labrador out of one hell of a mess that was created by the Liberal Party.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair should observe that long questions invite long replies.

EFFECT OF AGREEMENT ON NEWFOUNDLAND FISHERMEN

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister, the resident expert on jingoism in this House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tobin: I have just come back from a week of travelling the great northern peninsula of Newfoundland, a great, historic fishing area. I want to tell the Prime Minister that the people of Newfoundland—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has a number of ways of telling other Hon. Members things but they are not really in the preamble to a question. I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question. The Hon. Member is very good at doing so and he may do it in a direct way.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, the people of Newfoundland do not want excuses, apologies, or ill-conceived distractions. They want justice, nothing more and nothing less.

Given that this agreement was reached and signed behind the backs of Newfoundland fishermen, how can the Prime Minister insist on imposing an agreement on Newfoundland fishermen that will take bread and butter off their plates, an agreement on which we were not consulted and an agreement to which we will never agree?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, as has been repeated numerous times in this House, the fishermen of Newfoundland, the industrial representatives of Atlantic Canada, and the Province of Newfoundland were fully consulted on all of the elements of the agreement. All of those elements were fully explained to them in detail prior to the conclusion of an agreement which does not give away one codfish to France beyond the present year in which they are fishing according to normal arrangements.

• (1425)

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, to use the Prime Minister's obviously acceptable language, that is an absolute falsehood! It does not give away a single fish, it gives away thousands of metric tonnes of fish they did not have before.

REQUEST FOR CANCELLATION OF AGREEMENT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans not realize that unless this deal is declared null and void he will never again enjoy the confidence of fishermen, and his Government—

Some Hon. Members: Louder!

Mr. Tobin: —will never enjoy the confidence of fishermen? Cancel this deal now.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, this malicious attempt to sow fear and misunderstanding in the hearts of the people of the province which the Hon. Member purports to represent is part of the serious problem we are trying to rectify.

If there was any giveaway one could read Article 2 of the Treaty of 1972 which stated: "In return the Canadian Government undertakes, in the event of a modification to the juridical regime relating to the waters situated beyond the present limits—to recognize the right of French nationals to fish in these waters." That was confirmed by a Liberal Government without terms and in perpetuity.

NEWFOUNDLAND PREMIER'S PRESS CONFERENCE

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have some questions to direct to the Prime Minister on the same subject. They are very direct questions and I will put them in my usual quiet and very precise way.

At a press conference this morning the Premier of Newfoundland, Brian Peckford, is quoted as saying that for the first time in nine years of negotiations Newfoundland has been cut out of the process. He stated further that he believed this was a deliberate action on the part of the federal Government. I want to give the Prime Minister the opportunity to stand and tell the people of Newfoundland, the people of Atlantic Canada, and this House, that he will can this agreement and do it the right way.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the Province of Newfoundland has been cut out of nothing. The agreement signed in Paris two weeks ago provides for a parallel set of negotiations between now and the end of December in which the Province of Newfoundland and all other Atlantic provinces, and the representatives of the industry, will be fully involved. Those discussions commence this Thursday in St. John's.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, at the press conference this morning Premier Peckford pointed out that he has the support of all Atlantic Premiers. He was on the telephone to Premier Getty to call a First Ministers' Conference to indicate their support for the position of Newfoundland with respect to this agreement between Canada and France. This is a major crisis in federal-provincial relations. I ask the Prime Minister, do we really need this kind of conflict? I thought we had left behind the Liberal days of bad feelings between federal and provincial Governments. Is he now prepared to admit that a mistake was made and he will start the process over again?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the sole purpose of this agreement—

Some Hon. Members: Cod!

Mr. Siddon: All varieties of Atlantic fish, if you like—was to protect the interests of the fishermen of Atlantic Canada in the face of massive overfishing by France in the disputed zone known as 3PS, and to bring under control once and for all the French fishing in Canadian waters by negotiating a set of interim arrangements.

• (1430)

As the Prime Minister has said, the Hon. Minister of Transport, who represents the interests of Newfoundland in outstanding fashion in the Cabinet, will continue to represent those interests and ensure that no fish are given up if it will in any way jeopardize the economic status of Newfoundlanders.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Other regions of Canada are starting to recognize that cod is to Newfoundland as wheat is to the Prairies, as lumber is to British Columbia, and as nickel is to the Sudbury area. Does the Prime Minister not recognize that those involved intimately in the exploitation of these resources should be part of the negotiating process from beginning to end?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I share the enthusiasm of the Hon. Member in his defence of the legitimate rights of Newfoundlanders with regard to their resources and their capacity to build their future. That is why one of the first things we did as a new Government was to sit down, on an urgent basis, with Premier Peckford and the Government of Newfoundland, pursuant to good counsel and leadership provided by the Minister of Transport, and negotiate a solution to a historic injustice which had been inflicted upon the people of Newfoundland and Labrador by the Liberals with regard to offshore oil. The Government was motivated by a sense of fairness and openness with regard to the people of Newfoundland.

Mr. Tobin: You sold us out.

Mr. Mulroney: That Newfoundlander over there should be ashamed of himself. He sat in silence—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tobin: You sold us out! Let's go to Newfoundland and debate it.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER CANCEL AGREEMENT

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. He has made much of national reconciliation and co-operative federalism. That is a main plank in the Prime Minister's platform. How can he square those very noble ambitions with the fact that Newfoundland was not consulted about this deal? In fact, the overwhelming opinion in the province, the Atlantic region, and across the country is that this deal smells. If the Prime Minister really wants to treat Newfoundlanders with fairness, as he just said, will he now listen to the very clear voice which is coming from Newfoundland and cancel this deal?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the position taken by members of the Opposition is puzzling in that it seems to suggest that we should not attempt to improve the lot of the fishermen of Newfoundland and Labrador. This agreement does not give away one codfish beyond this year. That is exactly what this agreement is designed to do. Representatives of the Government will be in St. John's on Thursday and Friday and on an ongoing basis to ensure that we look after the interests and rights of the people of Newfoundland above all else.

VIEW OF CONSERVATIVE MEMBER

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans says that Members on this side are speaking with confused voices. A respected member of the Conservative caucus, the Member for Bonavista—Trinity—Conception, a respected fishing captain, speaks for all Newfoundlanders and ourselves when he says "cancel this deal". If the Minister of Fisheries wishes to retain any credibility, he will do just that.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, it is the route of cowards to cancel a deal which grants Canada, Newfoundland and Labrador an opportunity to discuss, in a civilized, helpful way, once and for all, a serious irritant, the resolution of which will bring benefit to the fishermen of Atlantic Canada.

TERMS OF ATLANTIC ACCORD

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is also addressed to the Prime Minister. In his answer to the Member for Nickel Belt he pointed out the Atlantic Accord. Under the Atlantic Accord provincial Governments have a right to be consulted and must be a part of the decision-making process. Why did his Government not do the same thing with regard to the loss of cod?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, there are those who might have criticized any effort to negotiate the Atlantic Accord. In the face of difficult circumstances and much misunderstanding, it is a mark of leadership and courage to sit down, as the Government is doing, to negotiate a lasting, positive and beneficial solution to a problem such as this. This is the essence of leadership, not of opposition.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that former Prime Minister Trudeau could not have said it better.

NEWFOUNDLAND PREMIER'S REQUEST

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): I will address my supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Why is the province not being consulted on this very important issue? Why is he not agreeing to the request of the Premier of Newfoundland?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, as I have said at least twice in the House this afternoon, representatives of the Government and officials of the Departments of External Affairs and Fisheries and Oceans will engage in discussions for a period of several months, starting this Thursday, with a view to resolving, in an amiable, harmonious fashion, a serious problem for which the Opposition offers no solution other than to confront or ignore.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—TERMS OF PROPOSED UNITED STATES STEEL IMPORT LEGISLATION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question, too, is for the Prime Minister. I have in my hand a copy of the U.S. Senate Steel Import Stabilization Act which is currently before the U.S. Senate. It threatens 50,000 Canadian steel jobs. I would like to ask the Prime Minister, given the mess he has made of the fishing deal, given the mess he has made of softwood lumber, given the mess he has made of shakes and shingles, and given the mess he has made of the drug Bill, at the very least will he be prepared to state today that the free trade talks cannot continue as long as this threat to Canadian steel jobs remains on the U.S. Senate table?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, on the contrary, this points out very clearly why we need a comprehensive trade agreement with the United States. The Opposition seems to want to take the cowardly way and walk away from everything. I cannot understand their stand on these issues.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the reference to "cowardly" was made by the Member. I asked the Prime Minister what he thought about the steel issue. He will remember that during the last election campaign he sent a letter to every constituent in the riding of Hamilton East promising that he personally was going to protect steel jobs.

REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF BILL FROM U. S. SENATE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, given that the Prime Minister has already sacrificed shakes and shingles, he has sacrificed lumber, he is sacrificing drugs, will he at the very least—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. The Chair, of course, must sometimes give some latitude on preambles. However, when a second preamble is, for all practical purposes, a complete repetition of the first, I know the Hon. Member would want to put her question.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister let the U.S. Senate know, in no uncertain terms, that this Bill must be pulled from its agenda or we will pull out from the free trade talks?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has been keeping his commitment to the steel industry. We have had quarterly meetings with the United States Government, the latest of which was last Thursday. Those meetings have been very productive. Our steel producers have been restraining themselves on exports. We deal in free trade in steel.

Ms. Copps: You don't have to tell us about steel.

Mr. McDermid: If the Hon. Member will give me a chance, I will respond. We will stand by the program which is in place now. We are fair traders in steel. We do not believe that this Bill will reach a final conclusion in the Senate.

CANADIAN CULTURAL ISSUES

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and is with regard to the free trade talks. Will the Prime Minister tell the Americans that Anne of Green Gables is not a threat to American culture? Will he tell them that even if we beam The Beachcombers reruns to them non-stop that American culture will not be at risk? In short, will he undertake to explain the facts of cultural life to the Americans, that with their population ten times ours the economy of scale is ten times in their favour and the risk is tenfold against us?

• (1440)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I assume the Hon. Member is referring to a comment by Mr. Yeutter. In my judgment, his comments betray a stunning ignorance of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: His remarks are completely insensitive and totally unacceptable to the Government and the people of Canada.

CULTURAL SOVEREIGNTY

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister help put an end to the ignorance of the Americans about what is meant by cultural sovereignty, specifically by naming the cultural industries not on the negotiating table, which are broadcasting, film, music, and publishing? Will he unequivocally state that those industries are not up for grabs?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend will take the opportunity to consult a speech that I made in this regard at the University of Chicago, she will see it indicated among other things that:

> If we and our American partners cannot strike a deal that will achieve these goals, a deal will not be struck. Our political sovereignty, our system of social programs, our commitment to fight regional disparities, our unique cultural identity, our special linguistic character—these are the essence of Canada.
> They are not at issue in these negotiations.

UNITED STATES OFFICIAL'S COMMENTS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. To coin the old expression: "We are looking for action, not words". Will the Prime Minister take action against what he has properly stated as the unacceptable statements by Mr. Yeutter? Is he prepared to send a diplomatic note to the President of the United States protesting the statement by Mr. Yeutter and clearly state, so there is no mistake whatsoever in the administration, that our cultural industries and identity are not negotiable? Will he take that specific action today so that there will be no misapprehension on the American side?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have conveyed that view repeatedly to President Reagan, to the public of the United States, to the administration and, most recently, to Vice-President Bush and Secretary Baker. If Mr. Yeutter or anyone else would care to entertain their own view, I suppose it is a free country. However, our position is very much the one I have stated, from which there has been no change at all. If the Hon. Member wants my view of Mr. Yeutter's comments, I have already given it.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I think the Prime Minister understands full well that Clayton Yeutter is not a private citizen expressing his own view but a senior trade spokesperson for the United States Government. I believe that it requires action on the part of the Government to react clearly and officially to the declaration made by Mr. Yeutter and say that it is unacceptable. It should clearly state all the specific items that we will not negotiate and not put at risk.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what I just said. That is my position and the position of the Government of Canada. It is very clear and has been consistent throughout the piece. Let me quote from an article on December 1, 1986, dealing with this issue and involving my hon. friend. It states:

> "We want to trade around the world with every nation of the world. We don't want to lock ourselves in (with the United States)", yelled Axworthy from one microphone.
> Screamed Johnston from another: "If you want to protect cultural industries, you do so through bilateral agreements with the United States".

That is the position of the Liberal Party. Our position is that they are not up for grabs.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF MINISTER OF JUSTICE AND ATTORNEY GENERAL OF THE PROVINCE OF NEWFOUNDLAND.

Mr. Speaker: I wish to draw to the attention of Members the presence in the gallery of the Hon. Lynn Verge, Minister of Justice and Attorney General of the Province of Newfoundland.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

INCREASED DISABILITY BENEFITS—REDUCTION IN PAYMENTS BY GOVERNMENT OF ONTARIO

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I commend the Minister for recently increasing the CPP disability pension benefits by approximately $140. Unfortunately, the Ontario provincial Government has chosen to be the benefactor of this federal increase by reducing its payments by almost the same amount, thereby negating any benefit to disabled pensioners in Ontario. In fact some of them even risk losing their disabled pensioner's drug card.

Disabled pensioners are frustrated and confused by the Ontario Government's expression of concern for the poor on the one hand, while taking money from them with the other. Will the Minister clarify this for the House?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think it should be clearly understood that on January 1 this year the changes that were brought about by negotiations with the federal Government and the provinces resulted in disability beneficiaries receiving a maximum increase of $150.89 a month. Prior to the implementation of those disability benefits, I wrote to every province indicating that it would be the federal Government's position that, while the provinces have the responsibility of setting social assistance rates, it would be our position that we would expect the amount of increase of disability would be passed on directly to those who needed that benefit, namely, the disabled of Canada.

An Hon. Member: Will you table those?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Yes, I am willing to table those letters. I have had responses from some provinces. I have also said that I would be interested that these people would not lose what is otherwise known as non-financial benefits such as drug cards or health cards.

I say to the Province of Ontario today that I have very clearly expressed that in a letter. I hope it will find its way through to passing on the money to the disabled, as was the intention of Parliament.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—INTRODUCTION OF U. S. STEEL IMPORT LEGISLATION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. He will know that the Bill that has been introduced in the American Senate will have a very negative impact on our steel industry by restricting steel exports to the United States by one-third. Will the Prime Minister indicate if he and his Government are prepared to stand up for the Canadian steel industry and, if so, will he be precise in what steps the Government plans to take?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have very clearly conveyed the views of the Government and the people of Canada on that specific measure, most recently to Vice-President Bush and Secretary Baker. There is no doubt that our view is that this is an unacceptable piece of legislation and ought never to apply to Canada. We are fair traders in steel and this should never impact on us.

Mr. Riis: That response makes me tremble because it is the exact same response the Prime Minister, the Minister for International Trade, and the Secretary of State for External Affairs made in the House when questions were put about the softwood threat. They said that there was nothing to worry about because they made their representations and sent letters. That was exactly what was said over the last few months, and we know what happened to softwood.

CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, in light of how the Government caved in on the softwood issue and the impact it is having on Canada, with the present threat to the Canadian steel industry, what precise steps does the Government plan to take to ensure that this legislation does not proceed through the American Senate?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I already indicated the extent to which we view this seriously and will act properly in that regard.

Mr. Riis: Please don't send Pat Carney.

Mr. Mulroney: My hon. friend raises questions about softwood. I understand that he is from the Province of British Columbia.

Mr. Fulton: You guys were incompetent. Let's get that straight.

Mr. Mulroney: I understand that the Government's position on softwood was endorsed by the IWA, by the Government of British Columbia, by Premier Vander Zalm and many members of the NDP in British Columbia because clearly it was a solution designed to help British Columbians keep money in the pockets of the people of British Columbia—

Mr. Riis: If you acted sooner you would not have needed that silliness.

Mr. Mulroney: —rather than send that money to the United States. You wanted a sell-out to the United States. We are protecting Canadian interests.

OERLIKON AFFAIR—REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Does he not agree that there are sufficient grounds for a public inquiry into the Oerlikon affair in light of recent reports in The Globe and Mail that Raymond Lette of Lette and Associates related to an acquaintance that Oerlikon informed him that the company had been told to deal with Mr. Bazin, a long-time Progressive Conservative and friend of Mr. Mulroney? The source went on to say: "We have been lawyers for Oerlikon for many years and we got this call saying 'Raymond, we are sorry about this but the one time—".

• (1450)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There have to be reasonable limits on Members reading newspapers to each other. The Hon. Member will put his question, please.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, I am just finishing the quote—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member will put his question.

Mr. Frith: Will the Prime Minister therefore grant the public inquiry?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think all Members of the House, and indeed all members of the public, are rather startled at the stunning conversion that has taken place in the mind of the Hon. Member. He was quoted on CTV as saying: "My personal feeling now, Pamela, is that we should probably await the results of an RCMP investigation".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, we have a new position flowing from this Member every day, depending upon which newspaper he reads or what bit of innuendo and flack he can pick up.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to go before a public inquiry—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Frith: —to defend the statements I have made. I have nothing to hide. Is the Government prepared to order a public inquiry into the Oerlikon affair?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think what Hon. Members will be wondering is what set of statements the Hon. Member is prepared to defend. He has been all over the map on this issue so he will have a lot of latitude to defend any one that he may very selectively choose.

INVESTMENT CANADA

SALE OF WEST KOOTENAY POWER AND LIGHT COMPANY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister who, a few moments ago, expressed a willingness or a wish to keep money in the pockets of the people of British Columbia and not send it to the United States. My question is about the potential sale of West Kootenay Power and Light to American interests.

The Prime Minister should know that under American law it would be illegal for a foreign country to take ownership of such an American utility. Will the Prime Minister tell the people of British Columbia why his Government is taking such a donothing attitude on this question? Why does it seem to be misreading public opinion? Will he not admit that if this were a takeover of, say, part of Ontario Hydro or Hydro-Quebec by an American utility there would be a hell of an outcry and the Government would never permit such a thing?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, that question was fully answered in the House yesterday by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. I invite the Hon. Member to read it.

REQUEST FOR RE-EXAMINATION OF DECISION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, since the Investment Canada decision valiantly announced on Christmas Eve, the people of the Kootenays and the southern interior of British Columbia have brought new evidence before the B.C. Utilities Commission, including the fact that the American company was gouging ratepayers at home. Given that this is new evidence that Investment Canada has not heard, is the Government prepared to listen to the people and have another look at this takeover decision?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that the Public Utilities Commission of the Province of British Columbia is looking into this matter and it certainly has an interest. I understand it is a public hearing. I also understand that some members of the New Democratic Party in British Columbia support this issue—

Mr. Waddell: It is not true!

Mr. Fulton: That was a straight lie, and you should not keep saying it.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, that is what the suggestion was yesterday—

Mr. Riis: Well, he lied.

Mr. Waddell: That is a lie. Withdraw!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York Centre.

OERLIKON AFFAIR—ALLEGED CONTRADICTIONS CONCERNING ROLE OF SENATOR BAZIN

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has flatly contradicted what Senator Bazin and the Prime Minister had to say about the role the Senator played in obtaining the contrat for Oerlikon. The Prime Minister and the Senator deny there was any lobbying nor any other activity before August 1, 1986. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, however, has acknowledged that he received representations from Mr. Bazin regarding Oerlikon on March 14 and May 1, 1986. This is a flat contradiction, not of what the media reported but of what they themselves said. So which is the correct version?

[English]

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, my understanding from what the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs said is that the only dealing he had with Senator Bazin was when Senator Bazin was acting in his capacity as lawyer for Oerlikon. Is that inappropriate? I do not know what the Hon. Member is trying to pursue. The question was fully answered yesterday.

Mr. Frith: Have an inquiry.

REPRESENTATIONS TO MINISTER

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is wrong. In his press release Senator Bazin stated that he began his work on August 1. The representations, which the Minister admits he received, were on March 14 and on May 1. I direct my question to the Prime Minister. Which of these versions is correct? Who is telling the truth?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it is abundantly clear that any lawyer has a right to represent his client to the Government or to other people if he wishes. The real issue which is before the House today is which allegation made by the Liberals is the truth and what story do they stand by today.

EMPLOYMENT

WINNIPEG CANADA PACKERS PLANT LAY-OFFS—RETRAINING OF WORKERS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The people of Manitoba are angry with the Government because of the awarding of the CF-18 contract to Montreal instead of Winnipeg. They watched in disbelief the fact that—

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has had some indication from Hon. Members that, perhaps, we are not getting enough questions in during the Question Period. I have to say that part of the reason is that there are long preambles which invite long answers. I would ask the Hon. Member, who I know has an important matter, to put his question.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, as a result of a grant to build a hog processing plant in Neepawa, the Canada Packers plant in Winnipeg will implement a reduction in its staff. It will lay off 450 people on April 1. Since this plant has been in existence for more than 50 years will the Minister instruct his senior officials to meet with the Government of Manitoba, Canada Packers, and the union to see what can be done to help these workers with retraining programs and not just leave them to the mercies of unemployment insurance benefits? Many of these people have worked 20 or more years for the company.

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the question of my colleague is important because it relates to the problem faced by laid-off employees when plants close down.

As a rule Department of Employment and Immigration officers set up an assistance process whenever a large number of workers are to be laid off by a company. I am sure that in this case the Winnipeg employment centres and the Manitoba Government have taken action and are working with us and doing their utmost to establish Government programs or other measures designed to find jobs for the workers laid off by the company involved.

REQUEST THAT DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER HELP SITUATION IN WINNIPEG

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I direct my supplementary question to the Deputy Prime Minister who we understand is in charge of organizing a plan to rebuild the western economy. Is the Minister prepared to meet with the Manitoba Government to discuss what is happening in the city of Winnipeg and to help devise plans jointly so that the manufacturing sector in Winnipeg, which has been so successful in the past, can be revitalized?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's concern. Naturally we will be working with the Government of Manitoba, and all Governments in Canada, to address issues such as the one the Hon. Member has raised. I remind the Hon. Member that our Ministers are meeting with government officials on an ongoing basis. I will certainly take the Hon. Member's suggestion into consideration and follow up on it.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

LAY-OFFS AT MONCTON SHOPS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday CN announced a further downsizing of 449 workers at the Moncton Shops. The Prime Minister is aware that both New Brunswick Ministers have done absolutely nothing on the shops issue, nor has the present Minister of Transport or the previous one who assured us that there would be no massive lay-offs in Moncton. Will the Prime Minister intervene now and instruct CN not to proceed with the massive lay-offs announced yesterday?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there was no new announcement yesterday that announced anything that has not been known since the end of last June. The announcement yesterday was in response to union requests for information about the future of the shops.

The reason that these lay-offs have to go into effect is that two unions, the union of machinists and the union of boiler-makers, continue to be obdurate in preventing Canadian General Electric from going ahead with its plans in the Moncton area which would re-employ 303 employees.

In response to the question for information, CN has given information on how the lay-offs will take place. We regret this. We have done everything we can to ameliorate it. But these two obdurate unions refuse to listen to anyone's pleas in connection with these 303 jobs in Moncton.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent. A short supplementary, please.

REQUET THAT MONCTON SHOPS BE KEPT OPEN

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, what is happening in Moncton now is scandalous and shameful, all the more so because the Government does not want to do anything. If the Prime Minister is sincere when he states that he wants to offset regional disparities in this country, why does he not direct CN management not to transfer it work load to other shops, but to maintain operations at the CN shops in Moncton?

• (1500)

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, at least the Hon. Member should be fair and realize the problem. CN has to stand on its own feet to comply with the directive of past administrations which we continue to apply. It must be allowed to conduct its affairs in a business-like manner. It will still have a payroll of approximately $90 million annually in Moncton. It has just opened the new Maritimes intermodal terminal, which is a $17 million facility.

We will continue to do everything we can with a special $4 million fund that has been provided, including $2 million from CN, to ensure that Moncton continues to expand, and that other jobs are provided.

That is what we are doing. What are you doing?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville. One question, please.

YOUTH

ECONOMIC SITUATION OF THE YOUNG

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Youth). For a year now we have been waiting for the Government's youth policy.

According to yesterday's press reports, if they want to make ends meet, young Quebecers who are unemployed or on social welfare have to act as guinea pigs for Sainte-Anne-de-Bellevue biological researchers. Are we to conclude from these facts that the Government policy is to let young people be used as lab specimens if they want to survive?

Hon. Jean Charest (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the article mentioned by the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville and, like many other people, I deplore the fact that Canadian youths should be forced into such a situation. I would point out that it is the kind of economic problem which dates back to a number of years. Since then we have set up, among other things, an entrepreneurship program, and in the not too distant future I hope that my provincial colleagues and I will be in a position to unveil new initiatives designed to come to grips with youth unemployment problems.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: In view of the time, I did ask the Hon. Member to keep it to one question. A very short supplementary, please.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Is it the response of the Minister of State for Youth to youth who are on social assistance, who are uneducated and unemployed, that they enter into business?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth)): No, it's not. Let me advise the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville that the problems he is referring to certainly did not happen overnight. The Hon. Member knows that. If he is sincere—

Mr. McCurdy: Where is your youth program?

Mr. Charest: Please let me answer.

If the Hon. Member is sincere, he will recognize that the solutions will not come overnight. But this Minister is committed to finding long-term real solutions and getting out of the rhetoric that we have been hearing from the other side of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You have been giving him coaching lessons.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He went to the George Baker school of acting.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty to advise that Question Period has come to an end, and that includes informal questions back and forth.

TABLING OF ORDER IN COUNCIL ON CODICIL BETWEEN CANADA AND FRANCE ON DOUBLE TAXATION AND TAX EVASION

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Chapter 104, Section 11 of the Statutes of Canada 1974-75-76 and Standing Order 67(2), I wish to table, in both official languages, two copies of the Order in Council on the Protocol to the Taxation Convention between the Government of Canada and the Government of the French Republic for the avoidance of double taxation and the prevention of fiscal evasion with respect to taxes on income and capital.

GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre) moved:

That the first report of the Standing Committee on government operations, presented to the House on Monday, December 5, 1986, be concurred in.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise to deal with this motion because I believe the Post Office plan should go back to committee. The report card on this plan given to the Minister responsible for the Post Office has an F on it.

Mr. Marchi: F plus.

Mr. Keeper: F minus. The Post Office plan is a failure, both in its process and its politics. The plan must go back to committee so we can hear witnesses other than the President of the Post Office. The committee must be able to travel and hear the views of ordinary Canadians concerning this plan.

I want to deal with three aspects of the plan. I want to deal with the service implications, the poor service the plan implies. I want to deal with high postal rates. I also want to deal with the undemocratic way in which this plan was developed.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this is not a good plan, in fact it is a failure. It is not good for Canadians. This plan should be returned to committee and the average Canadian consulted. The committee should receive testimony from the public as well as from the Post Office.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on post office services as far as the plan is concerned and on the plan's development strategy.

[English]

People are fed up with the lousy service they get from the Post Office. It has been deteriorating for probably 10 or 20 years under both Liberal and Conservative Governments, and it has to be turned around. People in rural areas feel threatened by the Post Office plan. Their fears are not assuaged by the reassurances that the Minister gives regarding rural post offices. He knows people are worried about the possibility of their post office being closed, but what does he say? He does not stand up and forthrightly say there will be no post office closures and we will improve post office service. What he says is there will be no post office closures in rural areas without consultation. We will hear what you have to say for 90 days. That does not reassure people because their experience with the Post Office has been that it is like talking to a deaf person, or a brick wall; you cannot get information out or opinion in. People have no confidence in a process of consultation involving the Post Office. When they hear the Minister give them assurances of consultation before their post offices close, what they hear is that their post office is going to be closed, because that has been their experience.

• (1550)

The Government plans to close rural post offices. The privatization of rural post offices is referred to as the turnover from the public to the private sector. This will involve a reduction of service. The Government talks of the amalgamation of post offices which will result in the closure of post offices. In fact, the President of the Post Office admitted in the Government Operations Committee that hundreds of post offices will be closed. He would not say when or where. People will not be told until it has already been decided that their post office is to be closed. They will have 90 days to complain about it.

Rather than taking that approach, the Government should consult with people on the over-all policy of the Post Office. The Government should ask people whether they want the national deficit reduced through cut-backs in postal service or whether they want a good postal service.

The supermailbox is the Conservative answer to door-to-door service in suburban communities. It is unjust that some people must use supermailboxes while their neighbours get door-to-door delivery. It is a bull-headed policy which the Government cannot maintain over the long term. It is also politically stupid and insensitive. It is astounding that a Government, which is in third place in some public opinion polls, would alienate its base of support, the people in middle income suburban communities who have paid $150,000 or $200,000 for their homes. Those people pay the same taxes as everyone else but receive less service. In addition to being unjust, that is politically stupid.

After bull-headedly deciding to go ahead with the super mailboxes the Government mounted a $1 million advertising campaign. However, the boxes did not work. The $1 million spent on advertising was a complete waste. It was shown on the national news that one key would open many compartments. That is the image which was created for the boxes. Every dollar spent trying to create a positive image was completely wasted. The Government tried to foist these boxes on rural communities as well.

Mail service began to deteriorate under the past Liberal Government and has gone steadily down hill under the present Government. The most aggravating aspect is the slow delivery. I have mailed notices of meetings in my riding to businessmen and community people, as have my colleagues. These notices were mailed a couple of weeks in advance, in compliance with the published standards of the Post Office, but arrived too late. Ordinary citizens have the same complaint. It can take eight days or a couple of weeks for a letter to be delivered from one side of Winnipeg to the other. Letters sent from Vancouver to Winnipeg can take two weeks to be delivered rather than three or four days.

These aggravating delays in mail delivery turn people off. The small business community has been turned off as well by the Post Office's inability to deliver on time and efficiently. People have turned to courier services for which they pay much more. Conservative ideologues like to threaten the Post Office with privatization. However, in many respects the Post Office has already been privatized because people are paying for courier service to avoid the poor service of the Post Office. As a result, the public service is losing revenue.

Poor service impacts on the people who work at the Post Office. It results in job loss, salary cuts, and being driven into poverty. Many people believe that postal workers are overpaid. I would use as an example the cleaners at the Post Office. They used to be public servants and earned around $10 per hour. Due to contracting out they are now paid only $5 per hour. For even a single person to live on that wage in Toronto is to live below the poverty line. The policy of privatizing existing public service jobs is driving people into poverty. That is an abominable policy. I wish the Government would become aware of what it is doing and consider the consequences of its own policies.

People are not willing to accept increases in postal rates because they are getting poorer and poorer service. Until the Post Office is turned around, no one will be willing to pay increased postal rates. People are aggravated by rising rates when service is decreasing. Rates have risen considerably. The Post Office has, in effect, requested an annual rate of increase. It will be coming back every year for a rate increase. It will be like the Chinese water torture. The drops will fall one at a time and it will drive you out of your mind. The Post Office must improve its service before it can justify increased rates.

The cost of many postal services other than first-class stamps has increased. Small business has rejected these rate increases because they threaten their economic survival. If there is one sector that is dependent upon the Post Office it is small business, and the rate increase for small business is a much higher percentage.

• (1600)

Let us consider the impact of these increases on Canadian culture which only yesterday was threatened by the American representative who demanded that Canadian culture be put on the free trade bargaining table.

Mr. Gormley: Do you know his name?

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Yeutter. He is threatening to strip Canada of its cultural sovereignty because he wants it on the bargaining table.

The Post Office policy affects Canadian culture with respect to magazines, such as Maclean's, the Canadian counterpart to Time, as well as other cultural and intellectual magazines and periodicals published by non-profit organizations or churches. They have subsidized rates, and increased rates threaten the existence of these magazines. Ordinary Canadians, small business and Canadian cultural industries reject the rate increases.

I want to comment on the development of the Post Office policy. This policy was formulated behind closed doors with no opportunity for public input. The Committee refused to hear public witnesses, but we intend to continue to exert pressure until it hears public witnesses. The Committee and the Minister have refused to travel. It is no wonder that the policy failed in its development and its delivery of service.

The Government's basic strategy toward Post Office policy is wrong-headed. The Post Office cannot deliver mail on time with a policy that operates on the barest minimum. We need a full service Post Office so that it can compete in revenue-generating areas and provide cross-subsidization to those aspects of the Post Office that are costly.

In conclusion, this plan must go back to committee because it is a failure. There must be public consultation through travelling committees so that ordinary Canadians can have their say.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I have to say that this plan for our post offices is a failure. It is a bad plan, and it should be sent back to committee so the public can give its opinion. It is a failure because it involves a reduction in services in rural areas, in the suburbs and poor mail delivery generally.

Mr. Speaker, we must take another look at our post offices. The Minister should look at the substance and the strategy and not just the rhetoric Canada Post is spouting, if he wants to give people the assurance that nothing is going to happen, at a time when post offices continue their service reduction. This plan is inadequate and should go back to committee so that the public may be heard.

[English]

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to my colleague. All Members of Parliament have received numerous representations about the Post Office from their constituents. I have received hundreds of phone calls and letters from people in Regina East, lodging various complaints about such things as the supermailbox and its implementation. One constituent told me that the Post Office informed him that it would place a mailbox in a certain location but ultimately installed a different box directly below the bay window of his new home. That certainly created much inconvenience for him and his family.

Throughout most of the fall we heard various questions put to the Minister in charge of the Post Office. The Minister frequently said that these very interesting representations may be valid complaints which the Committee should consider fully. That is why I was surprised to hear that the majority Conservative members on the Committee essentially shut it down and refused to allow full and open hearings. The Committee certainly did not invite Canadians to make representations and it certainly did not travel across the country.

Many of the letters I received contained suggestions which the Committee could have considered had it been allowed to travel. Perhaps it could have arrived at a consensus which would have developed a program and policy for the Post Office that would meet the needs and desires of Canadians. Yet the majority Conservative members on the Committee simply shut it down.

Will the Hon. Member explain how this occurred? Was he aware as an opposition Member on that committee that the majority Conservative members would shut it down? What were the reasons given to him for shutting down the Committee?

It is important that we remember that the House was supposed to have gone through a process of parliamentary reform in which the Committees would have greater independence and individual Members of Parliament could represent the views of their constituents rather than those of their respective parties. There was a hope that parliamentary reform would give Canadians better legislation resulting from a consensus rather than confrontation. It is obvious that when the Conservatives shut down the Committee dealing with the Post Office they kicked sand in the face of parliamentary reform. Will my colleague give us his opinion about that?

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, without trying to take partisan advantage of the opportunity, let me simply say that the Committee failed to live up to its responsibility to examine the plan that was presented to us. We heard from the President of the Post Office at some four meetings, but there were no public representations. For example, the Consumers Association of Canada was not invited to speak to the Committee, nor was the Canadian Federation of Independent Business or ordinary citizens. I wanted to hear their representations because I knew the plan had been developed in private, without public input.

After the back-bench revolt by the Tory Party when the Post Office plan was first revealed to them, it is my understanding that the Conservative members of the Committee essentially helped the Minister save face by taking the plan to committee. Then they sounded off about their own complaints. But they did not bring forward any substantive recommendations that would change the direction of the plan. That is where the failure lies. In addition, the failure lies with consulting people. So the hearings were token hearings. We needed more time to continue with them. We needed to involve the public.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask my friend to report to the House on a tour he made up in my part of the country, which is northern Ontario. He came up at the invitation of the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) and myself and he visited some communities with us. We met with residents in both urban and rural areas. Can the Hon. Member tell us what those people said to him? What message did they ask him to bring back to the House of Commons?

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I remember these meetings in northwestern Ontario very vividly. One was in an urban area and one was in a rural area. In the rural area the community involved was small. I went with my colleagues expecting perhaps a handful of people to show up. The meeting was scheduled during the day, and if I remember correctly it was a Friday afternoon. The turn-out was tremendous. I would say there were 30 or 40 people who attended the meeting in a small rural setting. Perhaps one-third of the entire population was in attendance. They felt that the post office was part of their community. The person who ran the library was there. She pointed out that the library could not function without deliveries from the post office. Small business people dependent on the post office attended the meeting. People active in local activities relating to the area of forestry were in attendance. Their concern was with respect to the repair of their machinery and that sort of thing. They depend upon the post office.

When we were in the urban area we had an enormous turnout. I do not want Hon. Members to think that I am exaggerating when I say this, but there were hundreds of people in attendance. They were angry about the inadequate service the post office was delivering and about the threat of continued reductions in service. These people came out in force in a small urban northwestern Ontario community to let us know in no uncertain terms that they felt that the post office provides an essential service and that it was an abomination to try to turn it into a profit-making enterprise.

Essentially, these people recognize that it is a public service for which they have to pay through their taxes, and for its maintenance. They were enraged that they were not receiving good postal service.

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to speak today on this particular motion. Perhaps I should rephrase my remarks by saying, I am never sure when speaking about the Post Office if that is any more a pleasure than speaking in defence of borrowing Bills, death or taxes. I will endeavour to respond to a few of the concerns that my friend from the New Democratic Party has raised.

I would like to begin by saying that in my capacity as the deputy chairman of the Government Operations Committee, which has been studying the Post Office corporate plan, I am sometimes struck by the great divergence of views, and in the way in which they come together in the House of Commons. I know Members opposite are well-intentioned on matters concerning postal service, and they have very good concerns. But when I hear them talk about the proceedings of these committee meetings it is almost as if we were at different meetings. It is almost as if we were not dealing with the same issue. I hope to put some light on this particular committee report that explains to Canadians many of the challenges that face the Government, and all of us, in terms of postal service and what Canada Post wants to do.

By way of background, the Government first received the Post Office corporate plan in November. In what the Opposition and the media are fond of calling the back-bench revolt, and as a revolting back-bencher—or perhaps better stated, a back-bencher who did have some concerns about the issue—I was pleased when the Minister looked at what the Post Office corporate plan proposed and said, "I think we should give parliamentarians an opportunity to review this in the light of what they know as representatives of the people of Canada".

I think if members of the Opposition would be fair—and I do not want to accuse anyone of politicizing the matter—they would admit that, given the responsibility of Members of Parliament, in reviewing postal service we speak for Canadians. The Progressive Conservative Party is the Government. It is the Party with the greatest number of rural seats, and it certainly speaks well for rural Canadians. But members of the Opposition have asked, why don't we call witnesses? In a standing committee that is a very valid concern.

We pointed out to the NDP in particular that the Marchment Committee had issued its report. The Marchment Committee was the committee appointed by the Minister to investigate Canada Post. In fact, many of the recommendations of the Marchment Committee Report found their way into the Canada Post corporate plan. I know all Members of Parliament have read the Marchment Report, at least if they are concerned about postal service in Canada. The appendix to the Marchment Report sets out quite clearly the number of groups with whom the authors of the report met. They met with unions, users and consumer groups. In nation-wide hearings they left not one group unheard. The report was tabled just a few months before the Canada Post corporate plan was tabled.

Let us have a look at what Canada Post is proposing. We have an in-depth report based on interviews with witnesses in hearings across the country. In the spirit of parliamentary reform, and having all of this documented evidence, why must we go back and do it again? I am a rural western Canadian. I know what my constituents want. They did not want many of the things proposed by Canada Post. So what did we do about it? The committee held lengthy hearings, some of which lasted well in excess of three hours. There were a series of meetings in which we brought the technical officials of Canada Post before us. We asked them very difficult and specific questions. Members of Parliament were able to conclude from the questions and the answers that we had some concerns about what Canada Post was proposing.

I came across as what could be known as the heavy in all of this. After hearing repetitive answers from Canada Post executives I came to the conclusion in December that I did not believe we should meet much more as a committee. I say that because the issues were far too important to let stretch out any longer. My concern was that we issue a report that was thoughtful, concise and exact. We did just that. In our report we put forward a series of recommendations. I will read them for the record and for the people who are viewing this debate. Based on that, I think everyone will agree that many of these are balanced and fair recommendations.

The opposition Parties were justifiably concerned. They said that we should travel the country and hear witnesses. I think we were faced with the problem of trying to act quickly and effectively to ensure that Canadians are protected. We had to act so as not to make it an overly-politicized exercise in rhetoric, talk and vituperative condemnation which, God knows, this place already has too much of.

So we issued our committee report. The committee report touched on a few central issues. As a western Canadian I am perhaps showing a bias in my input. The changes proposed in rural mail delivery, the changes proposed in rural post offices, and the reductions in subsidies for weekly newspapers and periodicals are the three points that most concern me. We also had some thoughts on other issues; the delivery service in new subdivisions, the technical deficiencies of the supermailboxes, and reliability of service.

We made a series of recommendations, and the Government responded to them very quickly. In so doing, the Government and Canada Post responded in a fair and balanced manner. The qualifier that I wish to add at this juncture is that I am not pleased with what Canada Post has done in response to at least one recommendation. That is why as a Saskatchewan Member of Parliament on the government side I have been working very hard with the Minister and Canada Post to ensure that we will see compliance, and beyond, with that one recommendation. That recommendation involves rural post offices.

I will digress and run through the committee recommendations. The committee recommended that the present pattern of rural mail delivery not be changed. We came to this conclusion as rural Members of Parliament. In many areas rural route service has been decimated by Canada Post over the last three, four, five years, and it cannot withstand any further reductions.

Generally, I do not overly politicize things in the House, but I will allow myself one political observation. Members of all three Parties had the opportunity of appearing before the committee. The hours were intentionally kept long and the forum open for as many thoughtful Members of Parliament as possible to come and cross-examine Mr. Donald Lander, the Chief Executive Officer of Canada Post, and grill some of his technical officials.

Committee records will bear out that we had so many Progressive Conservative government Members that often the meetings went on very long, and questions had to be limited because of the overwhelming degree of interest in this process. There were Members from new subdivisions, and Progressive Conservative Members from the cities talked about supermailboxes, mail delivery, and general levels of service. Rural Progressive Conservatives talked about rural post offices, rural routes, and those concerns.

The lamentable lack, particularly of Liberal Party Members, and New Democratic Party Members, was indeed disgraceful. The opposition Parties represent a significant number of Canadians. All told between the two Parties they were able to muster five Members of Parliament for an exhausting grilling on something as fundamentally important as postal service. I will leave the politics aside, but I think that Canadians should know—

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member said that he did not wish to politicize things. Would he acknowledge that during each of these committee meetings not only myself as a New Democrat was there—

Mr. Gormley: That's a point of fact.

Mr. Keeper: The Hon. Member made an accusation—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think the Hon. Member is engaging in debate. He will have the opportunity to ask questions of the Member in a few minutes.

Mr. Keeper: The Hon. Member is misleading the House at this point.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Member for the Battlefords—Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley).

Mr. Gormley: I appreciate the feeble bleatings, I was going to say, but that may be political. It is very important that we do put on the record the type of concern that government Members had on this issue.

An Hon. Member: So much good it did.

Mr. Keeper: Myself and others were at each one and you cut off the time in the end.

Mr. de Jong: How come you guys backed out on the committee?

Mr. Gormley: The committee made the recommendation that the present rural delivery pattern—Mr. Speaker, I must ask your indulgence. The NDP are indulging in name calling and trying to yell me down. I ask your indulgence to call for order.

Mr. Heap: Why don't you just tell the truth?

Mr. de Jong: If they were honest truths and honest points.

Mr. Gormley: I am attempting to make a few points. It is very difficult when the NDP are back to their old games. I cannot hear myself think amidst this NDP heckling and complaining.

Rural route service would not be interrupted. That was our recommendation. The Minister rose in the House and said that because of the effects on rural route service to many Canadians, who are already justifiably feeling like second-class citizens with postal delivery, there would be no further closures of rural route service.

As the deputy chairman, and as a rural Canadian, I feel vindicated by that. That was the first opportunity to say no to something that I did not feel was right for rural Canadians.

The second point we made was that Canada Post would not implement wholesale closure of rural post offices. We went on to say that, prior to any considered closures, Canada Post devise and provide the committee with more specific guidelies regarding the closure of rural post offices. These should reflect regional differences and needs.

Canada Post, as part of its corporate plan, tabled a mathematical formula involving proximity between communities, number of boxes affected, and that type of variable. To those of us who live in western Canada, and rural Canada, it is impossible to establish with one formula a system for post offices that will work in Newfoundland, Saskatchewan, rural British Columbia, or Ontario. The committee made that recommendation in good faith. That recommendation was made to tell Canada Post to come back to us and let us see its plans. This was the recommendation that I had the most concern about.

In his acceptance the Minister wrote to our chairman and stated:

> Although there will be cases where post offices are amalgamated and alternate postal service will be offered, this will be done over a ten year period. Canada Post does not intend to implement wholesale closures of rural post offices.

He further stated:

> On the subject of the possible amalgamation of some rural post offices, I am in agreement, and so is the Corporation, with the point made by the Committee that a simple amalgamation formula cannot be imposed arbitrarily and uniformly on a country as broad and as diverse as Canada.
> Canada Post recognizes the need to be sensitive to local concerns that vary from community to community. During the hearings, the President of Canada Post made the commitment that there would be no amalgamations without local consultation, and that in future a 90-day notice will be given of proposed service changes to permit this process to take place.

On the face of that, the Minister has made the commitment that our committee did make a valuable contribution. I am very concerned when I hear officials from Canada Post say that they plan on retaining essentially the same formula for amalgamating and franchising rural post offices. Obviously, Canadians and committee members will not accept having it both ways. Either Canada Post should report back to the committee before it plans any further action, or it goes ahead with what it was going to do. I do not believe that is good enough.

A number of government Members have been dealing with the Minister and we plan to have the committee again hear about this specific subject of rural post offices within the next several weeks. We are very concerned with what has happened in terms of this particular recommendation.

I know that I am taking a long time on rural service, but that is the area of particular concern to me as a western Canadian government Member of Parliament.

Other recommendations were made, for example, that the subsidies for weekly newspapers not be reduced, and that religious publications not lose their second-class mailing status.

The Minister wrote to us as follows:

> The subject of second-class mail privileges for newspapers, periodicals and books is part of the larger issue of cultural subsidies for which my colleague the Minister of Communications is responsible. I should point out that the Government is presently paying more than 70 per cent of the cost of sending publications through the mail.
> This particular approach has not been revisited since 1969 and, accordingly, the Department of Communications with the assistance of Treasury Board and Canada Post will be consulting with the publishing industry on this issue over the next several months.

The Minister goes on to explain that he believes that the issue of second-class mailing rates for newspapers and periodicals should not be dramatically altered. I think all of us as Canadians agree with that, but there is a difficulty which I should like to bring to the attention of members of the NDP. I was about to get political. I was going to call them the friends of free enterprise, but I will not get political. We have concessionary mailing rates for periodicals which range from very large newspapers and periodicals, such as Maclean's magazine, on down to the Meadowlake Progress, the Maidstone Mirror, and the Spiritwood Herald, newspapers which I read in my constituency.

Mr. Waddell: The New York Times.

Mr. Gormley: I hear an NDP Member who invests heavily in the stock-market informing me that he reads the The New York Times.

Should taxpayers be subsidizing the profits of very large, successful enterprises, or should they continue on a cultural needs basis to subsidize small weekly newspapers? I know of no Canadian who would agree with small weekly newspapers being adversely affected. If the taxpayers of Canada are paying 70 per cent of present subsidies, I would like to have another look at some of the larger publications.

We made the recommendation that religious periodicals should not lose their second-class mailing privileges. It is self-evident, obvious, and sensible. For several months Canada Post—in fact it pre-dates the corporate postal plan—has been in disagreement with several religious publications over what it calls "sufficient content". As a government Member representing people who regularly read The Lutheran magazine, The Presbyterian Record, and such periodicals, I do not find that to be an acceptable excuse on behalf of Canada Post. Many religious publishers and editors have pointed out the concern about other periodicals receiving a subsidy and their periodicals not being able to receive some kind of mailing assistance.

In this context the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) and the Minister responsible for Canada Post have made it clear that these issues will be dealt with. We have seen The Presbyterian Record regain its full mailing status. We have seen the statement by the Minister that on a case by case basis we will look at magazines and that those which are bona fide religious publications will receive mailing privileges. Unfortunately, it is not sexy, it does not sell a lot of papers, and it does not get a lot of headlines to talk about an eminent, reasonable, and sensible position.

The Opposition gets carried away with the issue and refers to girlie magazines receiving subsidies whereas religious publications do not. If that were the case it would be unacceptable. If we review what the Minister has done and what he instructed Canada Post to do, we see that the method is being dealt with reasonably.

Mr. Keeper: But The Lutheran magazine does not get it.

Mr. Gormley: I hear the Hon. Member. I am aware of that. In fact, I was just in Radisson the other morning, a very good community in the heart of my constituency, to meet with a number of people from the Lutheran congregation. We spoke at some length about the matter, and I gave them my personal assurance that we would be bringing this case to the attention of the Minister. I am hopeful that upon review of The Lutheran publication there will be no doubt about whether it should receive a subsidy.

I see Mr. Speaker signalling that my time is up. I have not touched upon five or six recommendations. I also have a few thoughts on the status of Canada Post as a Crown corporation as opposed to a government Department. I have a number of comments I wanted to make dealing with general service to Canadians. Unfortunately time constrains all of us. In the helpful, hopeful, and constructive way of which I know NDP Members are capable, perhaps they will ask some good questions and I will have a chance to clarify a few of their concerns.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should not have apologized to the House for being political. That is what this House is all about. I remember the comments of Robert Thompson. I think he was a Social Credit Member from Alberta and then he became a Conservative Member for a Fraser Valley riding in British Columbia. He became so frustrated in the House that he said: "Mr. Speaker, this House is becoming a political arena".

Mr. Rodriguez: Keep politics out of the House!

Mr. Waddell: Yes. Surely that was the quote of the decade in that this House is a political arena.

I was amused when the Hon. Member for The Battlefords—Meadowlake (Mr. Gormley) described Conservative Members going to the committee one after the other and presenting their views. It sort of sounded like lemmings going to the sea, lemmings jumping into the sea. Perhaps it is a sort of beginning for the next election. Conservative Members will be as scarce as are Beothuks now in Newfoundland.

Mr. Gormley: Do you have a question?

Mr. Waddell: Yes. I received a letter dated January 21, 1987 from the general manager of the Post Office in Vancouver. It was addressed to me as his Member of Parliament. He indicated that in order to streamline and enhance mail collection, they would be relocating street letterboxes. He went on to indicate that to minimize any customer inconvenience, they would be posting blue notice forms on any box being relocated or removed. The notices will inform people of the location of the nearest mailbox. Any box which does not have a notice form will remain in the same location. They expect to complete the project by February 28, 1987. If a senior citizen runs down to post a letter, she will see a blue notice posted for her convenience saying "sorry, you had better go to the other box" which could be half a mile away.

When will the Conservatives stop destroying the Post Office in Canada? They are to get rid of post office boxes in the streets of an urban riding.

Mr. Gormley: It is the pick-up boxes.

Mr. Waddell: The letter said that they will be posting blue notices on the boxes to be relocated. They are to cut down on the number of boxes in the streets, the red boxes, the symbol of the Post Office.

When will they stop? How far will they cut back in postal service? In this urban area they are to get rid of mailboxes, which will inconvenience people. If we think they are mad at the Post Office now, wait until they go to mail a letter and they are faced with not being able to get the box open and a blue notice telling them to go down the street a mile. It is ridiculous.

Is this Tory blue? Is this les bleus? Is this what we are to get from the Tories—blue notices on mailboxes? When will it stop? When will they stop cutting back in the Post Office and start thinking about the convenience of ordinary Canadians?

Mr. Gormley: Mr. Speaker, I think the intent of the question was concern. As usual, NDP Members phrase "when did you stop beating your wife" questions. Obviously I will not respond to the tenor of the question, the usual partisan rhetoric of which they are capable. However, I think the Hon. Member's concern stems from the whole question of urban service, particularly the so-called superboxes. I know that they are a concern in the newer subdivisions of Vancouver.

When the committee undertook its study, it found that as early as 1974 Canada Post began the group pick-up box concept in subdivisions. Of course that fact made opposition Members go loony because they keep calling it the "Conservative postal plan".

Canada Post is a Crown corporation. It has undertaken some service reductions. We must weigh these service reductions in the context of door-to-door service, for example, whether taxpayers of Canada will pay for a cost of some $500 million. Will urban dwellers pay $500 million to have services extended to new subdivisions? I know that is the concern.

In respect of his specific question on the relocating of red mailboxes, obviously I cannot comment upon the specific case. As a good Member of Parliament I know he would have found out exactly why it was being done. As part of the group pick-up box concept in newer areas, Canada Post is ensuring that so-called superboxes will actually be closer than the old green group boxes which many people have had in their subdivisions since 1974.

Specifically referring to his question, I obviously do not know what they are doing in Vancouver, but I know the Hon. Member would make the appropriate inquiries.

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, last Saturday I was in Agassiz in the riding of Fraser Valley East. After having listened to the Hon. Member's speech, I am wondering whether the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Belsher) spoke to the Vice-Chairman of the Standing Committee on Government Operations. He said he would speak to government Members upon returning to Ottawa to tell them the exact message of the people of Agassiz. These 600 people in this rural area indicated to him and to all other Members who were there that the message was clear. "We do not want you to come here to tell us how you are going to close the post offices. We want to hear that this plan is being thrown away and that the post offices in rural Canada remain".

The gentleman said that we had every chance to ask questions at the committee. I was the Member at the time questioning the Chairman or the President of the Post Office. We had only two witnesses. At that time the motion was proposed to shut off the committee. How can the Hon. Member say that we had asked all the questions? I had only started that day and I asked two questions because I had no right to ask further questions. Why did the Member last week walk away from the committee when the Member from Winnipeg asked the Chairman of the committee to reconvene so that we could ask questions again on the Post Office's plan? How can the Member say that we had all the time to ask questions? How can the Member say that he listens to people and knows the problems of rural Canada, and yet when he is in committee he does something else?

Mr. Gormley: Mr. Speaker, I will answer those questions with pleasure. First, the Rural Dignity movement is a very worthy group. I applaud the organizers of Rural Dignity in doing what they have done. It is a broad-based coalition made up of many of my friends from rural municipalities, villages, rural postmasters and postmistresses. Yes, I think they are getting the message across. They are reinforcing, along with the help of the entire rural caucus of the Progressive Conservative Government, the importance of ensuring a way of life in rural Canada. No one speaks for rural Canada like our Party speaks. Because of that I can say, without giving away too much, that the Hon. Member will find that rural post offices are safe as long as our Government and our Members are looking after that concern.

With respect to the committee, Mr. Speaker, it is lamentable what the Member, who was at some of the meetings, has said. Why did he read the drivel in Canadian Press from that little reporter who came to the committee hearings and twisted and distorted the things that I did? I am a former journalist. I know that journalists have their bad days. I will not comment on the little worm from Canadian Press who for some reason believes he has to malign my actions personally.

With regard to the particular committee to which the Hon. Member is referring, we had a motion at the beginning of the meeting to revert immediately to the rural postal service when just days before we had had a steering committee meeting and, by unanimous consent, made the decision to wait for another week or two before getting on to Canada Post. Why did I walk away, Mr. Speaker? I was in another committee meeting at the time. I was called and was told that this motion was coming up. I came to the meeting and I spoke to the motion. I said the same thing I am saying here, that the motion was needless because we had already agreed to another committee date. That is what I said. I said it. I left. Again, the little termite from Canadian Press decided, for whatever reason, perhaps having a rough day, that somehow I had done something wrong. The Hon. Member was there and he should not be believing what he is reading in the paper when he saw and heard my explanation with his own ears.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment based on the question which my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) already raised, namely, Canada Post's action in removing pick-up mailboxes in Toronto. I understand Canada Post is proposing to do the same thing in Vancouver and in other major centres. The reason that Canada Post is apparently doing this—at least the explanations I have received—were twofold: First, that Canada Post wanted to improve service, and second, that pick-up boxes on street corners were no longer used the way they were in the past because most people mail letters and other mail from office buildings. That is fine if you happen to work in an office building, but if you happen to live in a residential urban community, such as mine, which has a tremendously high population of senior citizens, I fail to see how that can possibly improve the service for people who want to use that service. But the removal of pick-up boxes is causing tremendous difficulties for a lot of people. In one area of my riding, Kingston Road, which is about two or three miles long, Canada Post sent a truck right along the whole thoroughfare and removed every mailbox. While I understand that this committee did not really study or take evidence on that particular aspect of Canada Post's operation, I certainly think it is something the committee may want to take a look at. Lack of mail boxes presents great difficulties to elderly people or to people who have mobility problems, especially in winter months if they are expected to walk an additional 10 or 20 blocks to mail a letter which, very often, you will appreciate, Mr. Speaker, is their only contact with their own family or the outside world. It is an extremely important question to them.

Mr. Gormley: I think that is an excellent question, Mr. Speaker. I realized in the cross-examination of Canada Post's executives the very interesting changes that took place in demographics, in work and in life habits. I think the Member would agree that, yes, most mail is now mailed from downtown office buildings, which is something I did not know or did not think of. That certainly does not diminish the importance for senior citizens of having accessible facilities where they can drop a letter in the post box. I think Canada Post should be aware of that. I know that in the areas where there are supermailboxes with the mail slots they are not going any further than 200 yards from any dwelling. If Canada Post is moving red boxes and if, in fact, someone must walk a great distance as a senior citizen, I do not think that is fair. I would hope that the Hon. Member for the Beaches (Mr. Young) with the help of all Members would get to Canada Post and make it aware of that and have the situation changed.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou (Mr. Gagliano).

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I would like to start by recalling what happened a few days ago in the House when the Minister responsible for Canada Post, and I think it was last Thursday, clearly said there would be no post office closures, and all Government Members gave him a standing ovation. Outside the House a few minutes later, we heard that was not exactly what he meant.

Again this morning, Mr. Speaker, in an article in the Montreal La Presse, the Minister said, and I quote:

Canada Post still intends to close several hundred of our 1,700 small rural post offices across this country and to privatize 3,500 more, the Minister responsible for Canada Post, Mr. Michel Côté, confirmed yesterday.

I would like to repeat verbatim what the Minister said, and I quote:

That is probably what will happen— But what is important is how it will be done.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, it means they are going to close some post offices. That is clear. The Minister said so to Canadian Press, and here is the text: Canada Post is going to close post offices. But it is all in how they will do it, which means they are going to wait and consult with us first. Mr. Speaker, this is really not consultation but information. They are going to inform Canadians in rural areas that one, two or three months from now, according to Canada Post's schedule, their post offices will be closed down. Why not tell it exactly like it is instead of playing with words, which is what the Minister has been doing for a whole week?

Mr. Speaker, the Liberals share the legitimate concerns of all Canadians about the present state of the postal services in this country. By establishing the Canada Post Corporation in 1981, the Liberal Government recognized the fact that postal services in Canada were an essential public service. That is why it gave Canada Post a balanced mandate, which included improving labour management relations. Mr. Speaker, I might point out that since then we have not had a major postal strike, and that Canada Post has been given a mandate to boost productivity, improve services and reduce the deficit.

Canadians have noticed some progress in recent years. Employer-employee relations are better and, as predicted, the Canada Post operating deficit has declined sharply, from $588 million in 1981-82 to $347 million in 1984-85, and to $184 million in 1985-86. Sadly, Mr. Speaker, improvements in productivity and service quality are not as promising, and the Liberals feel that their efforts should now be directed towards that objective.

Our approach is the exact opposite of the course set by the Government in the February 1985 Budget when the Minister of Finance made it clear that the priority of Canada Post was to reduce its operating deficit. Mr. Speaker, the situation did improve to a certain extent over five years and planning was beginning to bear fruits. In its report the Marchment Commission recommended that Canada Post be given at least five more years to wipe out the deficit. But in his February Budget the Minister of Finance said: No way, you have until 1988 to get out of the red. Canada Post management turned around and said: We are taking the necessary steps to balance our books. Obviously, these measures involve closing rural post offices, while home delivery will be only to the so-called superboxes, easy to open and impossible to close! A few months ago we saw some truly incredible scenes when Canada Post was in a great hurry to introduce this new system. It was acting on the new plan before the Minister had a chance to table it in the House. The superboxes were not introduced by Canada Post on November 5. We have been talking about the boxes for about a year, and we pointed out to the Minister responsible for Canada Post that Canadians didn't want the boxes and that they were poorly designed. But the Minister kept answering: Be patient, there is a comprehensive plan for our postal system.

Mr. Speaker, over a year ago, Canada Post started closing down rural post offices. In 1985-86 alone, 114 rural post offices were closed. Mr. Speaker, this means that on November 5, the Minister responsible for Canada Post was telling us what we already knew and what the Minister never wanted to admit before tabling the plan.

I also want to talk about consultation. The Conservative Member who spoke earlier said that the Minister was generous in allowing Hon. Members to have a discussion with Canada Post and to consult on this plan, a plan which as I said before was already implemented. Not only that, Mr. Speaker. It was a last minute arrangement. The Minister had no intention of consulting the House, but when he presented the plan to his own caucus, it probably caused a minor revolt, and that is why at the last minute, as you will recall, presentation of the plan had to be delayed because the Minister had to make some concessions and refer the plan to a committee. The committee did not sit for very long and heard only two witnesses: the President of Canada Post and the President of the Board of Directors of Canada Post. The morning when the Conservative Members decided to end committee proceedings by moving a motion to prevent us from asking more questions and hearing more witnesses so as to begin drafting our report forthwith, Opposition Members were there and prepared to ask questions, but so were a number of Government Members and they too had questions to ask. We were not given any opportunity to do so. We were convened to produce the report with which you are familiar. If I may, perhaps I should refer to this report and indicate to Hon. Members and all Canadians the points of the report on which we disagree and why. First, Mr. Speaker, we reject the Canada Post recommendation—endorsed by the committee—to implement a permanent policy aimed at delivering mail in community superboxes as a substitute for direct home delivery for all new housing projects in suburban areas.

Mr. Speaker, the action plan of the Canada Post Corporation clearly states that, from now on, which means that this is permanent and not temporary, all new residential sectors will receive their mail in superboxes.

Mr. Speaker, this decision means that we have created two classes of citizens. One class with home delivery and another with delivery to a postal box. However, Mr. Speaker, these people pay the same taxes and the same price for their stamps. Why should they not be entitled to the same service?

As for the other recommendation, we reject what Canada Post has proposed. In this case also, to meet the deficit reduction objective of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), Canada Post wants to change the postal service received in rural areas and replace individual services on rural routes by a service of community superboxes at major intersections.

As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, I was able to attend a meeting organized by Rural Dignity, a group which is putting pressure on the Government to cancel this plan and to ensure that rural post offices will remain open. One Saturday afternoon, 600 people met in Agassiz, in the Fraser Valley-East constituency of British Columbia. There were all kinds of people. There were parish priests, mayors, city counsellors, citizens, farmers, professionals—everybody in the area attended the meeting. Their message to the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Belsher) was clear: We do not want to be consulted. We want our post offices to remain as they are. For those people, the post office is a national presence within their community. There was even someone who rose to tell us that closing down the post office does not just mean closing down the post office—the postmaster will not be the only one losing his job. Small businesses could also close down. Because by forcing rural citizens to travel to another, more distant town to have access to postal services, they might then do their shopping in that other place. This means small businesses—the stores, the shops that are in that small town are unhappy about their post office shutting down. They may even be forced to quit themselves.

That is how the shutdown of a rural post office can cause the loss not just of one or two jobs within the post office itself, but also many other jobs in the area's economy. It means there is a social economic impact and the Government must realize what Canadians want where postal service is concerned. Why are Canadians not in agreement with that proposal? Because, Mr. Speaker, the Government, the committee that looked into that, and we hope to be able tomorrow to convince it to reopen the matter within the committee, can travel across the land and actually listen to those Canadians who are faced with a situation they find unacceptable, and rightly so, Mr. Speaker.

We cannot accept either the recommendation made by Canada Post and adopted by the Committee concerning the implementation of a rural post office franchising policy. Mr. Speaker, they are now talking about amalgamation. Well, amalgamation means closing, for if you amalgamate two post offices, each in a different village, one of them will have to close. Therefore, amalgamation means closing.

If they implement the franchising policy, we are certainly not going to keep all the post offices we have now.

Mr. Speaker, I feel the Government should be transparent concerning the Canada Post Corporation and tell Canadians exactly where it stands on this issue. In fact, through franchising of a post office under the responsibility of a postmaster which may be paid $12 an hour, it is seeking ways to have someone do part of the job for $4.50. Mr. Speaker, what Canada Post is trying to do in 1987 is to use cheap labour. Is that acceptable, Mr. Speaker?

Another recommendation. We agree with the solution proposed by the Committee which recommends that the rebates on postal rates should not be reduced and that weekly and religious magazines should not lose their second class mail status. I think it is important that Canadians should be able to receive certain magazines and newspapers at home. Our culture is at stake, and we agree with the committee that asked Canada Post to maintain the privileges enjoyed by periodicals, local newspapers and magazines. It is probably not the responsibility of Canada Post to subsidize culture. It is up to the responsible department, and it would be better if we had some kind of policy as soon as possible, because if the Government wants Canada Post to balance its books, Canada Post has to take care of delivering the mail and providing postal services, not culture. So I hope we will soon be advised of the Government's policy on cultural subsidies for the delivery of these papers and journals.

Mr. Speaker, we certainly cannot support the recommendation made by Canada Post and adopted by the committee that Canada Post be authorized to publish the proposed rate increases, in the Canada Gazette: an increase of 2 cents for first class mail and 9 per cent of the average rate applied to businesses. Mr. Speaker, we have a situation where services are being cut, home delivery is being phased out, post offices are being closed, and now they want to take away second-class mail privileges for certain types of newspapers.

First class mail will cost 2 cents more and the increase for all other postal services will be almost 10 per cent. In fact, Mr. Speaker, what is happening? It will cost more for reduced services. We object to that, and should the Government go to the trouble of consulting Canadians, Mr. Speaker—not information but meaningful consultation—it will find out that Canadians are quite prepared to pay a little more for service, for home delivery, for the assurance that rural post offices will remain open and that the postal service will really be up to par.

You are indicating that my time is up. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Richmond—Wolfe, for a question or comment.

Mr. Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, first, I wish to congratulate my colleague for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) who has done a quite remarkable job in the last few months. He has travelled extensively and consulted many people to collect all these protests against the initiative of the Government.

I have been in politics for eight years and I do not think that any issue has provoked us many comments, letters and articles. I receive every day at my Ottawa office very emotional messages from senior citizens and people who live in remote areas and who are very worried about the Government's initiative. Naturally, as my colleague has pointed out, the Minister has said on a few occasions that no post office will be closed. However, he very quickly corrected or modified his statement by saying that some post offices would close, but only after consultation. He also added: We shall go to the regions and consult the people because we want to know what they think. He concluded by saying: In any case, we shall give them adequate notice. In fact, this process is not really consultation, but simply an exercise in telling these people that they will lose within a very short time the essential services they now enjoy.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question to my colleague who has so eloquently expressed the many concerns of Canadians. During all his travels and at all those meetings, how are the people reacting to the possibility that the existing service will be considerably reduced? In addition, as I am aware of his concern for small businesses, I would like him to explain what tragic consequences the Government initiative could have on many small businesses in Canada.

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question, and I would like to answer immediately the second part of that question which concerns small businesses. This afternoon indeed—and of course until this morning we did not know this debate would take place—I had scheduled a meeting with the Canadian Federation of Independent Business to discuss that postal problem. Of course, all Hon. Members received from the Canadian Federation of Independent Business a letter in October strongly opposing any postal rate increases. We are as much aware of course as the Federation that we have a deficit problem, so we must reduce it, and this is why this afternoon we met probably to discuss and find the means to eliminate that deficit problem, not only by reducing services, but perhaps also to find means of increasing revenues without thereby increasing the burden for users of postal services.

Concerning what people say whenever there are meetings, as I said earlier, I already was in Vancouver; Monday I will be in Toronto, and I have already met groups in Montreal. In Montreal, for instance, there are at least sixteen postal urban areas. Those are people who protest, and they are people who had a chance to save their money and buy new homes. And now, because they bought new homes, they are penalized and will not be able to get home delivery as other people do who bought their homes perhaps four or five years ago. This is something of course that people do not accept. They feel they are second-class citizens. There are even people who feel court action should be taken, and they are talking about having groups formed to take legal action under the Canadian Charter of Rights. They feel this is discrimination. Why should someone who has a home on Montreal Island, especially in the Montreal area, not far away, three or four blocks away, get home delivery? Why have it on one street and not two or three blocks away, even for new homes? I know that in Toronto and Vancouver the same problem exists.

There are, for instance, people who write or phone us saying that upon coming home after work to the beautiful houses they just bought with beautiful lawns, they find holes in which Canada Post, without notice, has started pouring concrete in order to put up the famous superboxes, which as we know, Mr. Speaker, are easily forced open. The keys are no good, or one key will open them all. Of course people are mad at the way Canada Post has wasted money on those superboxes. A contract was signed without even a guarantee on those boxes.

When one figures out that the difference between home delivery and superbox delivery is $30 per house, it is no wonder people do not accept that. Without dwelling too much on rural areas, I think I already stated how, for instance, people in Agassiz, in Fraser Valley East, are concerned about those measures.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for my friend the post office critic for the Liberal Party. I know very well that the Liberal Party is always most progressive when in the Opposition, but what is the difference between the present Liberal policy on post office and the policy of this Government? If I remember correctly, the Liberal Party introduced the green boxes a long time ago, eleven or twelve years back, and now we have the superboxes. What difference is there? Also, if the Liberal Party were in power, what would have been the difference between the Liberal Party and this Government now?

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member from the New Democratic Party for that question, because it gives me an opportunity to explain the difference. Yes, there is a difference. Let us start with the urban areas. It is a fact that under the Liberal administration Canada Post or the Post Office Department put up green boxes. We never denied that. But it was a temporary measure, until let us say, that community would be organized and the postal service would be gradually provided. I can say that in my own city, and this is the argument, I already had a discussion with the Minister who said: This has been a Liberal policy since 1974. Saint-Léonard, Ville d'Anjou, in my constituency of Saint-Léonard—Anjou, are cities that developed over the last ten years. Still, we all have home delivery, except smaller sections which had remained undeveloped but were developed after 1984 and which get their mail through postal boxes. At that time, we could get organized. But since November, people know very well they no longer will have a chance or the possibility of getting home delivery. So, the difference is that this Tory Government authorized Canada Post mail delivery to postal boxes as a permanent policy. So, from now on, Canadians no longer can hope that six months perhaps down the road they will have home delivery, unless the Minister in charge of Canada Post drops that corporate plan.

As far as rural areas are concerned, I think Hon. Members can check the record, because I believe under the previous Liberal administration we did not close down post offices, we opened new ones.

[English]

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have the opportunity to participate in this debate. I would like to begin by thanking my colleague, the Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper), for giving us the opportunity to have this relatively short discussion in the House of Commons on a matter of interest to thousands of Canadians. I would like to thank him for his perseverance in committee, as well as in the villages, towns, and cities of Canada, in keeping the concerns of Canadians alive. He has fought against the actions of Canada Post which were precipitated by the policies of the Conservative Government of Canada.

We keep thinking that we finally have an unequivocal commitment that this will not happen. Then, lo and behold, the Minister goes out of the House and says something slightly different. He leaves the door open and seeds confusion about what will happen.

I was interested in the speech of the Member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley). He indicated that in a couple of weeks the matter of whether or not rural post offices will be closed or merged will be brought before committee. I was pleased to hear that because it means that my colleague, the Member for Winnipeg North Centre, has successfully badgered the Conservative Members of that committee into coming to their senses. He has planted a seed, which is now germinating, into another hearing on this very vital issue. At the end of my comments I would like to assist Conservative Members in that continuing review.

I have spent a fair amount of my time on this issue along with my colleague, the Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp), and the Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry). Together we represent all of northwestern Ontario. Many of our citizens rely on the mail for the vast majority of their communications. Regardless of whether they live in isolated homes along the highway or in small villages, they count on the postal service. It is essential for them. The Member for Winnipeg North Centre has been to Hurkett, Kakabeka Village, and Thunder Bay to hear the concerns of citizens, consumers, business people and unions with regard to the operations of Canada Post. It was very clear that there was no demand for cut-back in service. In fact, there was a demand for increased service because people recognize the essential nature of the service which Canada Post should provide.

Part of our job in this House is to pass along to our colleagues the thoughts and words of citizens of the country with regard to Canada Post and its services. Let me begin by quoting from a letter and resolution by the municipality of Neebing within the riding of Thunder Bay—Atikokan. This letter, which was sent to Mr. Lander, President of Canada Post Corporation, states:

Re: Reduction in Rural Mail Service

Enclosed please find a copy of a resolution passed by our Council regarding proposed reductions in postal service in the rural areas.

Members of Council wish to express their concern to Canada Post Corporation that the suggested changes will not only serve to isolate rural residents, but will also impose undue hardship on those individuals who will be forced to travel 25 to 30 miles (each way) to obtain their mail.

It is hoped that Canada Post will attempt to develop more practical approaches in reducing its costs of operation, that will not impair the quality mail service to rural residents.

• (1720)

Many citizens of my riding have written to me to express their concern about what the Government and Canada Post may or may not do with postal service, and also to indicate their support for a postal system.

I will read a few excerpts from letters without naming individuals because I do not have their permission to do so in the House of Commons. However, I know they will be pleased that I have taken the opportunity to read their concerns into the record. First:

As a rural resident and a user of the Nolalu Post Office—

A small village Post Office in the rural part of my riding:

—I am quite angry at the proposed closure.

We have been told that the reason for the closure is that the Post Office is not creating enough revenue. Since when is the Canadian postal service a money-making business? Is it not a service supplied to the public, paid for by the public?

Has any of the government officials involved in the decision of closing the Post Offices lived in a rural area and used them? Perhaps if they did they would understand our situation.

We, the public, have been told that we will have to use the Post Office in Kakabeka Falls. This office is 24 kilometers from here. Most families, in this area, only have one vehicle. How can we use the Post Office when the hours are not suitable. Most people work and cannot get their mail between 9 and 5. What happens when our bills come late and we are charged interest because we can't get to the post office on time? I will certainly not pay the interest when it is not my fault.

Another letter comes from a gentleman who is widely known in all of northwestern Ontario. He is an elderly gentleman who writes:

Our postal service at Nolalu is being discontinued. Because of a severe cardiac problem I am unable to come and go.

Could you and your Government see fit to continue this service to we who do not live in 'favoured' places.

These letters show varying concerns of people in rural communities. Another letter states:

I am writing to you and other members of Government who were put in office to represent our needs, that I myself and other residents of my township are not in favour of having our Post Office closed, and therefore bringing this matter (our needs) to your attention for help in saving our Post Office.

Our employees of our Post Offices have volunteered to stagger their hours of working to meet the needs of our residents to enable them to have access to the Post Office, but the Government dictates the hours for the Post Office. Therefore, the residents of the community can't use our Post Office, and therefore the Post Office is not meeting its revenue. Most of the residents of our community work Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. We are at least a good 30 miles plus out from town, so therefore many residents are leaving for work at 6.30 a.m. to 7 a.m., and not returning back home until 6 p.m. to 6.30 p.m. at night. The hours of our Post Office are Monday through Friday 8 a.m. to 2.30 p.m., and closed on Saturdays. My question is, how are we supposed to put money into our Post Office with those hours? Why can't the Post Office have the hours to meet the needs of the residents of our community?

I could on and on to talk about letters, cards and phone calls. Next to questions about unemployment insurance cheques, the largest complaint in my constituency concerns the level of service by Canada Post. People are unhappy about the delay in mail delivery. They are unhappy about the possibility of losing services.

They tell me that they do not want supermailboxes because it will not provide anything new to them in the rural area. They already receive those services and more, with mail being dropped off at the end of their driveways.

People have told me that while it may not be authorized, they can leave money in the mailbox so that the mail deliverer can put a stamp on the letter and leave change in the mailbox. A supermailbox cannot provide that service.

I want to talk about central post offices in communities where there are no rural routes. These post offices, which are within a reasonable distance for those in the community, become a focal point for activity. We hear about campaigning and canvassing at small community Post Offices which open at ten o'clock in the morning because citizens congregate there to pick up their mail and conduct community business. That activity will be destroyed if rural post offices are eliminated.

While we thought the issue had been resolved, the Minister re-opened it as a result of comments he made in the House recently. The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté) said, as quoted at page 2979 of Hansard on February 2:

—I can give the Hon Member the assurance that there will be no closures or service changes at the Canada Post Corporation and its rural Post Offices until the recommendations proposed by the Committee are acted upon. Mr. Speaker, the recommendation referred to a period of consultation with the Canadian people on the post offices that might be affected.

Clearly the inference is that the Government will consult and talk to local MPs and others but will make the ultimate decision. There is nothing in the Minister's response to indicate categorically that not a single rural post office will be closed. The Minister is talking about a process that is not new because before this information was revealed Canada Post had been sending letters to my constituents saying that it would stop their particular routes. That was its method of consultation, but it quickly backtracked once we became organized.

Mr. Forrestall: That is rot-gut, and you know it.

Mr. Angus: The Hon. Member says: "That is rot-gut".

Mr. Forrestall: Table the letters.

Mr. Angus: Perhaps he would like to see the letters that were delivered.

Mr. Forrestall: Send one over to me.

Mr. Angus: I do not have them here but I will give the Hon. Member a copy of the information. It was very clearly a retraction by Canada Post when it realized it had been caught. Is that the Government's version of consultation? Our experience leads us on this side of the House to believe that the Government will attack post offices one at a time until they are closed down.

Mr. Forrestall: Stop spreading fear.

Mr. Angus: The Government will close them down one by one in its blind devotion to making the Post Office break even. I wish it had a blind devotion to making it work better because people would then have more faith in the Post Office and begin using it more often.

I invite the Hon. Member to participate in the debate. Perhaps he could tell us why mail that is destined for Thunder Bay or leaving Thunder Bay must go to Winnipeg to be sorted? The result is that some of our mail ends up in northern Manitoba and we receive mail belonging in northern Manitoba. This adds many days to our delivery service. Rather than using the plant in Thunder Bay to process mail efficiently, Canada Post is so concerned about cost recovery that it goes to obscene lengths in an attempt to squeeze every nickel and dime out of the system. It should focus on improving the service.

Why was there the development of an independent parcel delivery system in Canada? It was not because of this Government but because the previous one did not put enough emphasis on quality of service to ensure that there was no need for a private parcel service. Because that was not emphasized, one now exists. It is competing with Canada Post and taking revenues away from it.

Why did the Government intervene at Canada Post when it was experimenting with a mail order shopping service which would have allowed people in small communities to buy items through catalogue shopping, thus increasing the revenue of the Post Office? Why did the Government quash that? Was it again as a result of blind devotion to ideology as opposed to a willingness to garner enough revenue for Canada Post to provide those services? That is the real question that has to be considered.

Tomorrow, at the appropriate time, I wish to table in the House a petition signed by residents from the South Gillies, Nalalu, and the Kakabeka Falls areas, residents who are concerned about their postal service. The petition is clear. It was written by the petitioners. It was not something we provided a thousand copies of and said: "Go out and fill this and we will raise it in the House of Commons". They initiated it. They clarified the preamble and the prayer to ensure that it conformed with the rules of the House of Commons. This petition is from an organization of concerned citizens who want to ensure that their post office is saved.

This is not a matter on which we will be silent. My colleagues and I will continue to press the issue. We recognize that the main problem is not with Canada Post. It has to abide by the mandate that the Government of the day gives it. Clearly, what we have to do is change that mandate. It is simple. The only real way to change that mandate is to turf out the Government. We must then put in place a Government which believes in service to the people and not cut-backs, not squeezing. We must put in place people who believe in efficiency with quality care and quality service.

I feel the matter needs more airing. It is important that we heed the words of the Hon. Member who spoke on behalf of the Conservative Party earlier in the debate with respect to the need to continue the dialogue. Therefore, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson):

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following therefor:

the first report of the Standing Committee on Government Operations presented to the House on Monday, December 15, 1986, be not now concurred in but that it be recommitted to the committee for further consideration.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I find that the Hon. Member's motion is in order. We will now proceed to the 10 minute question and comment period.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member who just spoke, who played along with what appears to be current New Democratic policy, which is to frustrate the objectives of Government in getting on with the business of the House, and who joins with and is strengthened and comforted by his companions in sometimes questionable law, could respond to three or four points which I wish to make.

The NDP voted with the Liberals and ourselves to create a Crown corporation. I ask the Hon. Member to respond to the following questions. Why did they do that at that time? Why did his Party participate in that decision at that time? We were seeking self-sufficiency for the proposed Crown corporation within five years. Why has the Hon. Member now changed his mind? Why are he and the members of his Party now going down another road? Why are they now playing another tune? To what fiddler are they dancing now?

As I suggested, they advocated and supported a Crown corporation which would be self-sufficient in five years. Yet, today, they are advocating positions that would add six cents to ten cents or more to the cost of mailing a letter in Canada. Why have they gone in that direction? Can the Hon. Member answer that question? What philosophy is the Hon. Member serving? He is a socialist, and I accept that. I work with him. He is a hell of a nice fellow, but he is inconsistent.

Mr. Nystrom: Don't accuse him of being a Tory. That's like being a Progressive Conservative.

Mr. Forrestall: Socialists like the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) are opposed to the use of the private sector in any context whatsoever.

Mr. Waddell: What are you talking about?

Mr. Forrestall: I sit here and listen to you day in and day out, year in and year out. I accused the Hon. Member a bit earlier of being sophistic in his argument, and he was. Sophistry is not becoming to Members of Parliament. The Hon. Member knows that. I tell you to be careful. If we throw out Mr. Lander you will have no postal service whatsoever in Canada. You foster and you breed in the rural areas of the country a mistrust and uncertainty that is not becoming the Parliament of this country. You are using unfounded arguments. You are supporting your unions. Your unions are supporting you in fostering this unrest.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have heard on approximately 10 different occasions over the course of the last few minutes the Hon. Member refer to another Hon. Member with the word "you". "You" is usually referred to when one is addressing the Speaker, as I am sure you are aware, Mr. Speaker. I trust Your Honour will bring my colleague across the way to order and have him address the Chair in the way that is customary in this House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has the floor.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the Chair. Of course I have been around here long enough to be fully aware that I must address you, Mr. Speaker. In the past I have been accused of asking the Speaker whether or not he would ask an Hon. Member why he feels he can be sophistic.

I would ask the Hon. Member why it is that he and the members of his Party find it so convenient today to take a position that such a short time ago they did not take. Does the Hon. Member not want the Crown corporation to be efficient? Does he want to support the unions in trying to bring down the efforts of the Crown corporation? It is less than perfect. There will not be wholesale and massive closings of rural post offices. There will not be massive changes, as the Hon. Member argues. Indeed, I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, to ask the Hon. Member whether or not he would care to send me these hundreds of letters which he is receiving and to which he referred a little while ago.

• (1740)

Mr. Angus: The letters have already gone to the Minister and to the President of Canada Post. The question about cost recovery over the long term in terms of breaking even will not occur overnight, or in two years. That is insanity.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): I am pleased to participate and comment on the important motion put forward by my colleague for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper).

I rise on behalf of my constituents in Burnaby to express serious concern and anger at the manner that Canada Post has responded to the community of Burnaby in terms of service. Canada Post is seeking increases in postage rates at the same time that it is seriously eroding the quality of service to our communities.

We were recently informed by the regional office of Canada Post in Burnaby that some 130 street letter boxes were to be eliminated. There was no consultation whatsoever with the local council. The Mayor has expressed his very strong opposition to this plan. There was no consultation with myself as the local Member of Parliament. Instead, Canada Post simply dictated to the people of Burnaby that they will lose this service of 130 street mailboxes. At a time when Canada Post is seeking an increase in postal rates, that heavy-handed attitude is absolutely unacceptable.

We have been told that a small blue sticker would be placed on the mailbox that will be eliminated, and at the end of a month that mailbox will be gone for good. This is a direct result of Conservative government policies aimed at cutting back on the quality of postal service in communities such as Burnaby.

Why was there no consultation with the people of Burnaby before this type of decision was made? Why has the Post Office insisted on cutting back service in other areas? Recently I was successful in having a sub-post office reinstated in south Burnaby at the Metrotown area. Until that time, the previous sub-post office had been entirely eliminated. The service at the south Burnaby post office was completely inadequate. It had long delays and line-ups.

Myself and my colleagues in the New Democratic Party insist that before there is any increase in postal rates, service be improved. Far from being improved, as a result of the cutbacks in mailboxes, the poor service, and the lengthy delays in delivery, there has been a deterioration and erosion in the quality of mail service in Burnaby. The Conservative Government is responsible for this decline in postal service.

I am pleased to rise today to support the motion of my colleague which calls upon the Government to come to its senses and restore quality postal service in Burnaby, and elsewhere in Canada.

Mr. Angus: It is clear from what my colleague has said, and when comparing what has happened in my riding, that it is typical Conservative thinking that the best way to get at the Post Office is to make it more difficult to use, so let us eliminate as many of the drop boxes that we can, and let us restrict the hours of operation of the post offices so that people cannot get into them. Quite clearly, I am wondering whether the Government wishes the Post Office to fail. What is its ultimate game plan? Is it trying to shut down the Post Office, or is it setting it up for privatization? What is the Government up to?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway)

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to make some comments with respect to the first report of the Standing Committee on Government Operations in connection with the Post Office. I am also pleased to have the opportunity to comment on the amendment put forward by the NDP, and also to make some general comments with respect to the Canada Post situation in my constituency.

I listened with interest to the first comments made by the Hon. Member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley) from the perspective of rural Canada. I also listened with interest to the comments of the Hon. Member for Saint Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) from the perspective of a new community with growing suburbs and new homes that were without postal service. I then listened to the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) and his comments dealing with the situation from the perspective of northern and rural Canada. Then I listened to the comments of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). The comments of the Hon. Member for Burnaby sounded somewhat familiar to me, because I have the perspective of an urban Member with a long established constituency. It is not a constituency with rural postal routes, or one that has new subdivisions blossoming up. It is a long established community with some modest changes, some infill, some increases in density, some new apartment buildings, and some new townhouses. There are no vast changes or vast rural areas. I see the situation a little differently, and so do my constituents.

When I was first elected to Parliament two and a half years ago I was personally aware, and I knew from the comments that had reached me from my constituents, of an uneasiness about the postal situation. That uneasiness has gone up and down over the last few years. The Post Office is not a problem that has suddenly burst upon us over the last two and a half years.

Mr. Baker: It has been apparent for some time.

Mr. Redway: It has been with us for some time, as my Liberal colleague says. In fact, it dates back to the days when the Government that he supported was around. We went through some fluctuations in mail service, particularly with postal strikes that were rather devastating to the services that we had. We seemed to come out of those strikes and into an era with irregular postal service. We did not seem to be able to put it all together. Somehow the Post Office never seemed to be able to put it all together, the way it seemed to be in what I would refer to as the good old days, the days that I recall when I was a boy growing up, and even a few years ago when the postal service was something that could be counted on. When you put a letter in the box, it would be delivered to where it was going within a day or two. Those days are long past. They did not pass within the last two years, they have been long past for some time.

The Hon. Member for Burnaby referred to the problem that I and my constituents have been having, that is, the removal of the street letter boxes. That is something that has hit my constituents very severely. It arrived in the last few months in the constituency of York East and in the surrounding constituencies. I hear from residents in various constituencies around, particularly from Broadview—Greenwood, the Beaches, and also from Don Valley East and Don Valley West. I know that the Members for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell) and Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley) do an excellent job in looking after those problems. But at the same time I certainly hear the rumblings when the street post boxes are removed.

I might say that dozens and dozens of these street postboxes have been removed in my constituency. Every time that one is removed, I receive telephone calls and letters. Recently I have been receiving petitions. In each case I have been in touch with Canada Post and with the Minister responsible for Canada Post, urging them to replace those street letterboxes. I do that not just because I receive one or two telephone calls and some petitions, but because of the composition of the population in my constituency, the demographics of it. The fact is that it is very substantially made up of senior citizens. My constituency has more senior citizens in it than any other constituency in Canada, with the exception of Victoria, British Columbia.

When one of these street letterboxes is removed in my constituency, it is not just a case of it disappearing and the residents being able to go a few blocks away to find another one. My constituents and I are faced with a problem. They are senior citizens. In many cases they are relatively immobile. It is just impossible for them to get to another letterbox which is in any way convenient. In fact, many of them have drawn to my attention that they actually had to take a bus or a subway train to get to a place where they could mail a letter. That is ridiculous to them and ridiculous to me. Surely it must be ridiculous to Canada Post and the Minister responsible.

Fortunately, a number of these street letterboxes have been returned at the urgings of constituents and at my urgings. These petitions have been effective in getting back some of these postboxes. I am hopeful that we will be able to get a lot more of them back in the very near future. I am certainly making representations right now to the Minister. I am optimistic, I might say, that he and the President of Canada Post will see the light of day and return these street letterboxes.

I was interested to hear the Hon. Member for Burnaby say that his constituents were receiving some notice of the fact that postboxes were being removed. That has not happened in my constituency. I am surprised to hear that it has happened in any constituency across the country. However, in the cases where they have been removed, I have been hearing about them in a hurry, as have other Members of Parliament. Once again, I am optimistic that we will have a goodly number of those street postboxes returned to us.

That particular problem struck my constituency just prior to Christmas-time, just before the next great problem with Canada Post—the question of taking away second-class mail privileges from religious publications. That is a particular difficulty in my constituency because it is the home publication base of The Presbyterian Record. Not only is it published in my constituency, but it is the location of the head office of the Presbyterian Church of Canada. In addition, the editor of The Presbyterian Record is the Minister of St. Mark's Presbyterian Church in my constituency. As one might imagine, there are many members of the Presbyterian Church of Canada who receive The Presbyterian Record on a regular basis. Suddenly they have been faced with the prospect of an extreme escalation in the price, affecting not only the church itself but those who have to pay for it, the church members. They were understandably concerned. They were in touch with me and with other Members of Parliament.

After representations by myself and other Members of Parliament, after petitions and letters which deluged Canada Post, the Chairman of the Board of Canada Post and the Minister responsible, I am pleased that the President of Canada Post announced that second-class mailing privileges were being restored to The Presbyterian Record. This proves that one can get some positive response if one makes the proper waves and rattles the bars enough. Hopefully other Members of Parliament will do that for other religious publications. I heard today that The Lutheran publication is having the same sort of problem.

That problem landed on our doorstep, as I said, just prior to Christmas-time. At about the same time another problem landed on my doorstep relating to the whole question of new subdivisions. We do not have vast new subdivisions in York East, but we have new apartment buildings and townhouses. One extremely peculiar situation came to my attention from one of my constituents relating to a townhouse-apartment building complex, a co-op housing complex, built in a triangular shape and fronting on three streets. Two of the streets are prior existing streets and one is a new street, a brand new street. The townhouses and apartment buildings built on the existing streets with existing names receive door-to-door delivery. The townhouses receive door-to-door delivery even though they are brand new. The apartment buildings built on existing streets in the same complex receive the usual apartment mail delivery in mailboxes in their lobbies. However, on the new street, which is part of the same complex, the apartment buildings receive the usual apartment type of delivery and the townhouses have green boxes, soon to be replaced by superboxes, I suppose, sitting hundreds of feet away.

It makes no sense at all. It is one housing complex, but the situation exists because of a technicality that some of the townhouses were built facing a new street whereas the other ones were built facing existing streets. The ones on existing streets receive door-to-door delivery and the others do not. It makes no sense at all.

Once again we have made representations to the President of Canada Post and to the Minister responsible. I hope, for heaven's sake, that they are listening to this debate and that they will straighten out the mess and ensure door-to-door delivery in that portion of the complex as well.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. For some time now the Hon. Member has put on record his concerns about postal service relative to his constituents. I am sure he is sincere. I wonder whether he would take this opportunity to move an extension of the hours, so that we could vote on the resolution and get the matter to committee for a full hearing.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate, the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway).

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, those are three concerns in connection with the Post Office which have been pointed out to me and which I have taken up on behalf of my constituents.

Another concern was raised immediately prior to Christmas-time. It concerned the Christmas card system of mailing last year. About a month and a half prior to Christmas, Canada Post suddenly introduced an incredibly silly system whereby one had to buy special envelopes in order to obtain a decent lower rate for the mailing of Christmas cards. If any other government body or private company had introduced a system with such incredibly short notice like the one utilized by Canada Post, they would have been shot.

I see you signalling, Mr. Speaker, that my time is up. I want to draw to a close, but let me say that I cannot support the amendment of my colleagues in the NDP. However, I support the motion to endorse the first report of the committee because I note that it provides for a continuing review of Canada Post by the Standing Committee on Government Operations. That is exactly what we need. We need a watch-dog on Canada Post, and this committee will do the job.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to petition No. 332-420.

INTERPARLIAMENTARY DELEGATIONS

CONFERENCE OF COMMONWEALTH CHAIRMEN OF MEETINGS AT KUALA LUMPUR, MALAYSIA

Mr. Marcel Danis (Verchères): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 101, I have the honour of tabling, in both official languages, the report on the meeting of the Standing Committee of the Conference of Commonwealth Speakers and Presiding Officers held at Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, from January 6 to 9, 1987.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I have the privilege to present a petition on behalf of a number of residents of British Columbia registering their complaint against the proposal of the Government to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs. They believe that this will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers, and that it will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. The petitioners believe that the proposed measure will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health requires the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis. Therefore, they request that the Government changes its mind.

RIDEAU HALL—PUBLIC'S ACCESS TO GROUNDS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure to present to the House several petitions from my constituents who wish to avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right to present a grievance.

Whereas a decision has been made to close Rideau Hall grounds by the National Capital Commission, the Department of Public Works, the RCMP, and the Office of the Governor General without prior notice; and whereas the closure of this attractive and tranquil park affects thousands of visitors to the capital from across the country who held Canada's uniquely accessible Rideau Hall as a symbol of the trust, openness, and democracy of which Canadians are so justly proud; and whereas area residents from the entire National Capital Region, who have used and enjoyed the grounds of Rideau Hall, recognize the security concerns that prompted the closure decision, the petitioners cannot accept a blanket closure of the 120 acre park to public access.

Therefore, the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to open that decision for consultation with a group of citizens representative of the large and growing opposition, in order that a modus vivendi be created that would satisfy both the Government and the public.

REQUEST TO WITHDRAW TARIFF ON ENGLISH LANGUAGE BOOKS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): I also have several petitions from constituents of Toronto, Scarborough, Willowdale, and Downsview. The petitioners wish to state that whereas the Government of Canada has imposed a retaliatory tariff on imported books in the English language which has limited the access of Canadians to literature and information, and whereas the tariff has had little negative effect on the publishing industry of the United States, it penalizes Canada's consumers, book publishers, book sellers, distributors, and Canada's culture. Rising book prices have placed a strain on the book acquisition programs and policies of our nation's public and specialized libraries. Therefore, the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to rescind this tariff, which threatens irreparable harm to the Canadian book industry and compromises federal policy on cultural industries in respect of free trade negotiations.

Motions

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and the duty to present two different petitions to the House. The first petition is from Senior Power and is signed by citizens of the City of Regina. The petitioners request Parliament to reject the proposals to increase prescription drug prices for Canadians by amendments to the Patent Act, and also because they will increase the cost of drugs to provincial government drug plans. The petitioners humbly pray for support from Parliament.

TRANSPORTATION—ECONOMIC REGULATORY REFORM

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): I have a further petition signed by residents of Vancouver, Coquitlam, and White Rock in British Columbia. The petitioners humbly sheweth that in their opinion transportation is a natural monopoly without economic regulation, and that deregulation of the dimensions proposed by the Government in Bill C-18 will create unnecessary chaos in the transportation industry leading to unacceptable reductions in safety standards and deterioration in quality, type, and frequency of service. Therefore, the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon the House to have Bill C-18 withdrawn.

• (1110)

POSSIBLE CLOSURE OF RURAL POST OFFICES

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I have the honour to present a petition certified by the Clerk of Petitions and signed by 76 residents of the villages of South Gillies, Nolalu, Kakabeka Falls, and Hymers in the rural area of Thunder Bay.

These residents are very concerned about the survival of their small rural post offices. They petition the House of Commons to reject any suggestion of closures and to protect by law or direct intervention the right of rural Canadians to full postal services.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I rise, pursuant to Standing Order 106, to present a petition signed by people from Alberta and Manitoba. They petition the House not to proceed with changes to the prescription drug Act. The petitioners believe that the present legislation before the House would increase the cost of prescription drugs.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a number of petitions from residents of my riding. The petitioners are from the communities of Thompson, Sherridon, Lynn Lake, Cross Lake, Flin Flon, Leaf Rapids, The Pas, Snow Lake, Norway House, Wanless, and Pikwitonei. The petitioners express real and deep concern that the Government's attempt to change the Patent Act will indeed force the cost of prescription drugs to rise and, of course, hurt those people who need to use large quantities of these drugs.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, once more I have the honour and duty to present petitions from the City of Windsor, protesting the Government's new Patent Act amendments which would increase the cost of drugs. It is with pleasure that I represent the people of that city, but it is not a pleasure that they have found cause to petition Parliament.

I submit one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight more petitions from the City of Windsor, representing hundreds of additional signatures to the thousands already submitted, and there are more.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert) moved:

That the first report of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, presented to the House on Tuesday, November 4, 1986, be concurred in.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise in this debate to make the point that we in this Parliament need tax reform very badly and that we should be working toward that end.

Many years ago the New Democratic Party, which at that time was led by David Lewis, used a slogan during an election campaign that I think best identifies the issue before us in this particular motion. During that election campaign and at times before and after—and I think it is still a valid description of the situation—he talked about corporate welfare bums taking advantage of the system and using the money of Canadian taxpayers as much as possible. They used the system to obtain assistance from taxpayers when they did not really need it and there was no reason for them to receive it.

In his 1985 report the Auditor General made a very specific statement regarding the tax remission orders conferred on certain companies. He was referring to a particular tax remission order which was granted to the Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company which allowed it to take advantage of the tax system up to a possible $1 billion. When the Standing Committee on Public Accounts tabled the report, the level already given, I suppose under this remission order, was an amount up to $400 million.

I should like to refer to what the Auditor General said in his report on February 5, 1985. He said that an income tax remission order was granted to Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company Limited, enabling it to deduct for income tax purposes financing costs which its parent incurred in acquiring it. He went on to say that the order may provide the company with an after tax benefit of up to $1 billion and permitted the use of a method of transferring losses for tax purposes which, in May 1985, had only been proposed to Parliament.

The actual decision to do this was made by the previous Government. In July, 1984 the Government announced its intention to provide Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company Limited, a subsidiary of Dome Petroleum Limited, with an order remitting income taxes pursuant to Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act. However, that remission was not granted until February 5, 1985, so both Governments were involved in the process.

Remission orders in themselves are used extensively and are needed. For instance, the operation of the Auto Pact depends extensively upon the ability of the Government to pass remission orders which, under the Auto Pact, allow the Government to repay companies that import automobile parts, after the cars have been built and have been sold in Canada or returned to the United States. The concern here is not the process of remission orders. The concern of the committee and the concern I am bringing forward now is that the Government, without the consent of Parliament, is spending up to $1 billion of taxpayers' money.

This process of tax expenditure without the consent of Parliament, the Auditor General suggests in the 1986 report, is becoming more prevalent on the part of the Government. The concern of the committee was that we should have in place the kind of law which would make it impossible for the Government to spend taxpayers' money without coming before Parliament. A basic democratic process is that Parliament passes all expenditures that are made by the Government, but it is far from correct here.

This expenditure about which we are talking, the remission for Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Limited, is an example of the kind of thing that can go on and where some corrective measures should be taken. The 1985 Auditor General's report draws attention to this specifically in Chapter 3. We are concerned that not only does this remission order authorize money for that year but authorizes it until possibly 1990. The only limiting factor that will be offset by this remission order—this is why I suppose there could be some discussion as to the amount—is the amount of tax the company will have to pay during that period of time. It can offset all of its taxes until 1990, if the company has enough. Knowing the ability of our tax lawyers, the chances are that the company will project financing costs beyond that time or make sure that by other acquisitions the company will be able to use the absolute maximum possible.

The committee had a number of concerns, and I would like to put them before the House. First, Parliament's consent was not sought and Parliament was not involved in a substantial expenditure of public funds. That is not acceptable, I am sure, to anybody in this House. In this case a corporate loss transfer procedure was used, a procedure not otherwise allowed in law. It is currently before Parliament as a proposal from 1985 in a budget discussion paper only. Are we going to have a procedure such as: "We are going to do this and eventually we will allow it to happen and then implement it"? A remission order is often used. But this type of arrangement has never been used before because it was illegal, although it has been suggested.

What we should be asking in Parliament is whether this use of the remission order is acceptable in the broad criteria that had been established to be as in the public interest. What we are looking at here is whether it is a good idea to allow, under any circumstances, expenditures of any amount. This one happens to be very large and it is probably an exceptional example. But is it a good idea to allow any expenditure of government funds without reference to Parliament?

The committee makes a number of recommendations some of which I will put before you, Mr. Speaker. The committee suggests that the Government make changes in the Financial Administration Act and as quickly as possible get rid of the process of tax expenditures which allow corporate structures to take advantage of tax breaks when they do not really require them and have no real right to them. Remission orders are generally used as a means of granting relief from some aspects of the tax system. As I said, we do not particularly worry about that fact but in this case the remission order was used as a means of implementing a policy that is not necessarily the policy of the Government. Large amounts of public money were involved, and the use of the remission order suggests that the bureaucracy was taking the law into its own hands and making the legal decisions without coming before Parliament.

The Auditor General goes on to say in his report that the Department of Finance advised him that if it had not done what it did, Dome would have been forced into bankruptcy and the federal Government would have suffered a substantial revenue loss. The Government was also concerned that the failure of Dome could have serious adverse effects on the Alberta economy. In the circumstances, the Department believed it could not accurately determine costs or prepare meaningful cost figures. Officials of the Department of Finance appeared before the committee, but in my eyes and in the eyes of the committee they were unable to justify any of these points. It appeared to me, and I think probably to other members of the committee, that the process was gone into in order to allow the takeover of Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas and to allow the putting in place of the remission order, which would end up being very beneficial to a corporation.

The remission order permitted Dome Petroleum Limited to make use of a method of allowing losses for tax purposes to be transferred within its ownership group. It had not been approved by Parliament. In May 1985, that had only been proposed as a part of a budget paper. Consequently, in the opinion of the committee, Parliament's consent should have been sought before the remission order was made.

• (1130)

The committee made a number of recommendations, and I would like to put some of those recommendations on the record. In his 1986 report, the Auditor General gave a lot of support to the recommendations that we made. In fact, he made very similar recommendations in that report and has done so on other occasions as well.

We recommended that the Financial Administration Act be amended to require the following: the tabling in Parliament of all income tax remission orders and the preparation of an explanatory note to accompany each remission order so tabled outlining why the remission order is in the public interest. The key statement in the Financial Administration Act is that remission orders are given only in the public interest. However, if one looks at the public accounts of any particular year, one will find pages and pages of remission orders. I would expect that it would be very difficult to provide an indication of why each remission order was given, but when the remission orders are in the magnitude of even a portion of the one we are discussing today, they ought to be explained not only to Parliament but to the people of Canada.

If the Auditor General had not put his finger on this particular remission order and the fact that it had not been consented to by Parliament, it may have gone through and gotten only minor play across the nation. As it is, it is the reason we should move in a number of areas.

The committee suggested that a reference of all remission orders so tabled be made to the appropriate standing committee and that prior approval of Parliament be sought of all income tax remission orders exceeding $20 million in value, and this is probably a key recommendation. This would mean that major remission orders would have to be explained. Many members of the committee suggested that the bureaucracy justify every remission order. In the end, we agreed on the figure of $20 million as being a central figure which would ensure that the Government was in hand.

We made a number of other recommendations and I hope that other Hon. Members will put these before the House along with the reasons of the committee for making them so that Hon. Members may see why this particular report should be taken very seriously by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the Cabinet and the Government. The issues brought up by this report should be dealt with by Parliament.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Madam Speaker, I appreciate having the opportunity to say a few words in connection with the motion of the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) because I am a member of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. The question of the Dome Petroleum and Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas remission order is a very troublesome one. It highlights a problem that dates back many years. One of my colleagues, a former member of the committee, has described this as being part of the Liberal legacy with which the present Government was left. The particular problem of the Dome Petroleum and Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas remission order is one that relates back to the days of the former Government, and the remission order concept itself certainly relates back to the former Government, though I suppose it has been a part of the laws of Canada for a long time.

This report identifies a problem at which we should take a very close look in the very near future in an effort to ensure that this sort of problem does not and cannot happen again. In fact, the problem relates to Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act which provides that the Governor in Council, on the recommendation of the Treasury Board, whenever the Governor in Council considers it in the public interest, may remit any tax, fee or penalty. In effect, that means a cabinet decision can forgive a tax and simply eliminate it as if there were no laws on the books of the country indicating that that tax had to be paid. I felt so strongly about this after dealing with the matter on the Public Accounts Committee that I have placed a Notice of Motion on the Order Paper which I hope will be debated before too long.

My motion is that, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of repealing Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act and requiring that all remissions of taxes, fees or penalties be submitted to Parliament for approval each year. That motion goes a long way, and I am sure the Government and other Hon. Members will have some reservations about going quite that far in dealing with remission orders. As the Hon. Member for Prince Albert has pointed out, there is perhaps some logic in having remission orders in some cases.

The real effect of a remission order is to forgive a tax. Even though there is a tax law on the books, the executive of the country can wipe out that tax for you, Madam Speaker, or for me but not for our neighbour. That seems to me really to strike at the roots of democratic Government and democratic principles. Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act allows members of the executive of the Government to say: "There is a tax on the books that you have to pay but I do not have to pay". Because of Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act, they could wipe out their taxes personally just by passing an Order in Council. They might not do that for themselves, because they might feel that that would be a little embarrassing, but they might do it for a friend. I am not suggesting in any way that they would do this or that that has happened but I am saying that that is what Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act allows. It allows a highly discriminatory situation to exist where the Government could decide that one person has to pay a tax and no one else has to, or that one person is exempted from paying a tax and no one else is. I think we should take a very close look at this section of the Financial Administration Act with a view to either repealing it altogether or restricting very severely the way it can be used.

• (1140)

The Standing Committee on Public Accounts, when it considered the Dome remission order in particular, saw the problems I have just pointed out. That order certainly highlighted very dramatically this kind of difficulty. The order had the effect over a 10-year period of allowing Hudson Bay Oil and Gas to deduct for income tax purposes the financing costs which Dome incurred in acquiring Hudson Bay. The value of that deduction, according to the Auditor General, was some $400 million, not a small sum, particularly if we were to apply it to the deficit.

The peculiarity of this situation is illustrated, it seems to me, by the fact that Dome Petroleum bought Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas but it did not have any income against which it could write off its financing costs. So what happened? Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas wrote off the financing costs incurred by Dome when it bought Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas. That something like this would be allowed just boggles the mind. Why was it allowed? Because Dome Petroleum was in such sad financial shape that there was concern that it and its suppliers might go down and all its employees might lose their jobs. It would be a tremendous blow to the Canadian economy, particularly that of western Canada. Therefore, the former Liberal Government entered into a commitment to allow this arrangement to take place, and the present Government proceeded with it because it did not feel it had the moral right to go back on the commitment. It was proceeded with but it cost the taxpayers some $400 million. That, as I said, is no small sum.

The impact of the remission order was, by an act of Cabinet, to change the tax laws of this country without an Act of Parliament. It gave great financial benefit to one company but other companies doing exactly the same thing did not receive that benefit. A preference was given to one taxpayer over others, and that brings our tax laws into disrepute, as if they need any more disrepute than they already have.

As my hon. friend for Prince Albert indicated, the Standing Committee on Public Accounts recommended a number of things that should be done to the Financial Administration Act. For example, there should be the tabling in Parliament of all tax remission orders with an explanatory note outlining why the order was in the public interest. It recommended approval by Parliament of all tax remission orders exceeding $20 million in value. That means that this particular tax remission order would have required parliamentary approval. My own motion, if the Government sees fit to adopt it and actually repeal or amend Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act, would require all such remission orders to be approved by Parliament. While there may be some piddling amounts involved in some remission orders, ones of this size are certainly significant. In my view even something involving $19 million should certainly be approved by Parliament, bearing in mind that it gives a preference to one taxpayer over another.

The other concern which the committee had with the Dome remission order was that a beneficiary of the order was not specified directly. In effect, the remission order did not limit the benefit to Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas because that company could sell off the benefit to someone else. It was an open-ended order and there was no way of limiting it to Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas. There are a lot of problems with this particular remission order, and a lot of problems with remission orders in general, because they leave the door wide open for the Government to give special preference to one citizen or company and not to others.

Bearing in mind my concern that what we need here is not to just to deal with the Dome remission order, and bearing in mind my concern that even the recommendations of the committee in its first report are not sufficient because they do not go far enough, and bearing in mind that the Government is to respond within the next few days to that report, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) that the motion put forward today be amended by deleting all of the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

—the first report of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts presented to the House on November 4, 1986, be not now concurred in but that it be recommitted to the committee for further consideration.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate.

Mr. Hovdebo: Any questions?

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order. With respect, Madam Speaker, I believe the 10-minute question period should apply directly after and that would allow my friend to question or comment on the statements made by the Hon. Member who just completed his remarks.

• (1150)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair agrees that that is the way to proceed.

Mr. Hovdebo: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask a couple of questions in order to put a couple of things on the record. Is it the Member's understanding that if Hudson Bay Oil and Gas is sold within the next two or five years the remission order will be removed? What would the effect be if it were not?

Mr. Redway: Madam Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for the question. My understanding of the remission order in this particular case is that there is no limitation on the remission of tax in the event of the sale of Hudson Bay Oil and Gas. If the company were sold to another company, that other company could take advantage of the remission order and receive the tax benefit. It is not limited specifically to the one company. That was one of the concerns expressed by the committee.

In fact, in paragraph 12 it was recommended that, where applicable, future remission orders include conditions specifying the ownership of the companies for whom the benefit is intended. If this recommendation is adopted by the Government, there would be no possibility of that type of thing taking place in the future.

Mr. Hovdebo: Madam Speaker, when this matter was before the Public Accounts Committee the Member was concerned that all remission orders have explanatory notes.

That is a major undertaking. Why does the Member consider this to be important in this particular structure?

Mr. Redway: Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member is aware, Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act talks about allowing the Governor in Council, on the recommendation of the Treasury Board, to remit the tax fee or penalty when the Governor in Council considers it to be in the public interest. The purpose of the recommendation for explanatory notes is for the Government to indicate why it thinks there is some public interest to be served in a particular case by making a remission order. If the Government only indicates that, in its view, it is in the public interest to forgive certain taxes, but we are not informed of how the Government came to that conclusion or the reasoning behind it, in fact, we have no reason to believe, other than taking the Government's word at face value, that it is in the public interest at all.

If the Government is not required to give an explanation or its rationale, it could very well forgive the income tax of the Hon. Member for Prince Albert while requiring me and everyone else to pay through the nose. The Government would only have to say that that is in the public interest. I am sure the Hon. Member may think that that is in the public interest, but the rest of us may differ in our opinions.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak in support of the motion moved by the Member for York East (Mr. Redway). I think it would be useful for the Public Accounts Committee, which has already considered this matter in some depth, to continue to do so. The report which was tabled on November 4, 1986, requested that the Government provide a comprehensive response in accordance with Standing Order 99(2). That response is due shortly and it will be very appropriate for the Public Accounts Committee to consider the matter further in light of the response.

This particular report dealt with remission orders in general, but particularly with the remission order granted to Dome. In July, 1984, when Parliament was not sitting, a press release was issued by the then Minister of Finance which indicated the Government's intention to provide a remission order to Dome to become effective December 32, 1984. The intent was to assist the company's efforts to achieve private sector financing. The debt rescheduling agreement which was ultimately entered into by Dome replaced a 1982 agreement which had contemplated a significant investment in Dome by the Government.

The Hon. Member for York East stated that the decision was made by the previous Government and that his Government merely gave effect to it. I do not particularly quarrel with that, but I point out that the remission order was made in February, 1985, and that the matter had not been raised in the House. I hope that in the future the Government will raise in the House matters which concern so much foregone revenue.

The remission order, which was granted under Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act, authorized Hudson Bay Oil and Gas to deduct, for income tax purposes, the financing costs which Dome incurred in acquiring it. The value of the remission order is high. Officials quarreled before the Public Accounts Committee with the estimate arrived at by the Auditor General, but did not offer any other figures in rebuttal. However, it is clear that the cost to the citizens of Canada was high. The Public Accounts Committee was concerned that the consent of Parliament was not sought and Parliament was not involved in a substantial expenditure of public funds. A corporate loss transfer procedure was used which, as far as members of the Public Accounts Committee could see, was not allowed in law. In fact, it came before Parliament in May, 1985, three months after the remission order, and came before Parliament as a proposal in the budget discussion paper. Indeed, it was described in the budget discussion paper as a new concept which needed to be: "fully discussed before implementation". Yet it had been used in February, 1985.

• (1200)

The officials from the Department of Finance justified their decision by claiming that Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act allows a remission order to be made if it is in the public interest. The concerns expressed in the Public Accounts Committee were that when a large expenditure of this kind is being made the question of what is in the public interest should be discussed in Parliament and should not be defined by officials behind closed doors.

Another concern raised at the Public Accounts Committee was that according to the Financial Administration Act there is a requirement to publish in the Public Accounts of Canada details of remission orders and their costs. There are some 44 pages of remission orders in the Public Accounts of Canada, but a full page of them includes cases where there are no figures attached. The Public Accounts Committee considers that this is unsatisfactory and that, in future, officials, even if they are unable to give accurate costs, should explain why they are not providing the costs and perhaps give their best estimate and describe it as such.

While I do not wish to repeat the points made by the two Members who spoke earlier, I want to stress the concern of the Public Accounts Committee about the lack of clear information in this matter. The Auditor General's staff were initially told by the Department of Finance that no economic analysis or cost benefit analysis of this measure had been done.

When the matter was before committee, the Deputy Minister of Finance said that there was a cost benefit analysis but it was a cabinet document and could not be made available to either members of the Public Accounts Committee or the Auditor General. Subsequently, whatever they had was made available to the Auditor General for examination. However, it is an example of an ongoing difficulty in getting clear facts and figures from the Department of Finance.

I do not want to be unduly critical or apportion blame. I want to concentrate on the recommendations of the Public Accounts Committee which I believe are constructive and valuable to any Government. First, we suggest that the Financial Administration Act be amended to require the tabling in Parliament of all income tax remission orders, with an explanatory note outlining why each remission order is in the public interest. We also propose that all remission orders so tabled be referred to the appropriate standing committees and that prior approval by Parliament be required in the case of all income tax remission orders exceeding $20 million in value.

We also recommend that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in future ensure that income tax remission orders do not deal with any matter currently before Parliament. This refers to what I said earlier, that the remission order in this case was passed in February, 1985 but there was a new proposal in May, 1985, as part of a budget paper to give effect to the method which had been used here.

Another concern was that the remission order in this case did not limit the benefit to the present owner of Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas. If Dome should decide to sell, it could lead to an unintended benefit to another taxpayer. We were concerned that there were no conditions involved. Therefore, the Public Accounts Committee recommends that, in future, remission orders include conditions specifying the ownership of the companies for which the benefit is intended.

Our final recommendation was that the Treasury Board develop guidelines for the reporting in the Public Accounts of the estimated amounts of remission orders where an exact figure is not available. We find it unacceptable and something that has potential for abuse when the officials do not meet the requirement of the Act to give a figure because they say they are unable to estimate the figure accurately.

We are looking forward to seeing the government response to this report which was tabled on November 4. The Government's comprehensive response is due shortly and I am looking forward to pursuing the matter at that point.

Mr. de Jong: Madam Speaker, my question for the Hon. Member may be unfair because she may not have the actual figures. However, how much does the Government lose every year in terms of remission orders, particularly as they pertain to the Income Tax Act? I understand that there are remission orders dealing with the payment of customs and excise tax, but does she have any idea of the magnitude of public revenues lost because of remission orders affecting income tax?

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Madam Speaker, the only information I have is what is in the Public Accounts of Canada, where a figure is given. I do not have that figure in front of me, but I believe that it added up to some $840 million.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, I rise to support the effort by my colleague, the Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo), to bring the report of the Public Accounts Committee before Parliament. It deserves attention by Parliament because it deals with some very important matters. First, there is the loss of some $1 billion in public revenue. The Government has forgone the significant sum of $1 billion that should have been paid in taxes.

We are living in a time of restraint, in which the Government is making cut-backs. Various Departments have been told in the last number of years to cut back their expenditures, and we have seen a decrease in such services as research and development, and grants to universities and to the provinces in the area of medicare. There have been cut-backs in the Department of the Environment and restraints in job-creation programs, unemployment insurance programs and others. We have also seen some major tax increases imposed upon the Canadian taxpayer in the last number of years, all, of course, in the name of fighting the deficit. Yet despite all the efforts of this Government and the previous Liberal Government to cut expenditures and raise more revenues, they can with the stroke of the pen forgive a major company some $1 billion in taxes owed to the Government and to the people of Canada. It just amazes me how in some areas the Government is nickel and diming, yet in other areas it allows the throwing of some $1 billion out of the window.

We see the loss of $1 billion with this remission order concerning Dome. We saw the loss of some $1 billion in bailing out the banks, a decision made over a weekend. We saw the loss of some $600 million, $700 million again because of a tax decision which allowed the Reichmann's to buy Gulf Oil. There has been the loss of major sums of money. Yet these decisions are made almost at the snap of a finger.

The particular case we are discussing today, the loss of some $1 billion in revenues from Dome Petroleum, is the topic of the first report of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. It goes into some detail and I wish to examine some aspects of its report and place some of its observations and recommendations on the public record. The report states:

> In February 1985 a remission order pursuant to Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act was granted to Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Limited, a subsidiary of Dome Petroleum Limited.
> Over a 10-year period, Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas was authorized to deduct for income tax purposes the financing costs that Dome incurred in acquiring it. The value of the remission order is considerable. To date, the Auditor General has estimated that $400 million has been expended.

The first part of the committee's report outlines the magnitude of this decision and the fact that so far it has cost some $400 million in lost revenue. The report continues:

> Your committee has a number of concerns with respect to this remission order:
> (a) Parliament's consent was not sought and Parliament was not involved in a substantial expenditure of public funds;

Perhaps, Madam Speaker, in this whole sorry state, this is one of the most serious observations made by the committee, and I repeat:

> Parliament's consent was not sought and Parliament was not involved in a substantial expenditure of public funds;

This decision erodes the role of Parliament and our role as Members of Parliament. That role is to scrutinize the expenditures of public funds by the executive, by Cabinet. That was denied to us. Of course, if there had been an open and public discussion in the House, there would have been publicity. There would have been the reporting of such a debate in the newspapers and the media. The public would have known what was happening and I would tend to think that the public would not, on the whole, have approved of what the Government was doing. Public disclosure and public awareness of what was happening would have forced the Government to have gone a different route in terms of accomplishing its objective of attempting to save Dome Petroleum. The report continues:

(b) A corporate loss transfer procedure was used, a procedure not otherwise allowed in law and currently before Parliament as a proposal in a budget discussion paper;

In other words, the committee was saying that what this remission order did was not legal. It was not allowed in law. It was only a proposal in a budget paper before Parliament. There was not even specific legislation which would have allowed that remission order to have occurred. Again, the committee points out that this remission order was outside the existing law and that there was no proper discussion by Parliament. The report observes:

(c) there was an unconvential and unprecedented use of a remission order which was approved on the basis of the broad and general criterion of "being in the public interest";

As other speakers have pointed out, this general phrasing of "being in the public interest" is too broad. To allow and justify the loss of some $1 billion, just on the basis of the five words "being in the public interest" is just not good enough. The Government has to demonstrate in a much more precise and specific manner why it is in the public interest.

The Government, of course, failed to do this. The report continues:

(d) there were less costly alternatives to the use of a remission order;

In other words, the committee was saying there was another way the Government could have solved this problem, a less costly way. Yet the Government ignored that option. Had the Government come to Parliament and had there been parliamentary discussion, the less costly alternative would have been also discussed. And, perhaps, in making it public, the less costly alternative would have been used. Perhaps there is some justification for this. Certainly, if Dome Petroleum was to go belly-up it would have a tremendous impact not just on the economy of Alberta and the hundreds of workers who work for Dome Petroleum, but on the many financial institutions which have lent money over the years to Dome Petroleum. However, if the public, through its Government, is going to take some of the risk, as surely we have done with this $1 billion in forgone taxes that Dome Petroleum owes to the Canadian public, if we are going to make that type of investment, surely the public has a right to be in on the action. If Dome Petroleum makes a profit in the years ahead, we can also have some of the benefit of the $1 billion investment we have in Dome Petroleum. If we are going to forgo revenues of nearly $1 billion, perhaps the Government of Canada should have taken some equity in Dome Petroleum, so that when the oil industry turns around and Dome Petroleum starts to make money after a number of years, the public will benefit from the good times. If the public invests money in the bad times, surely it has the right to benefit from the good times.

• (1220)

The committee goes on to note:

(e) analysis upon which the remission order was based was initially withheld from the Auditor General.

Why did the Government withhold this information? Why the tremendous amount of secrecy? Why were decisions made behind closed doors? There was no proper open parliamentary discussion. Information was withheld from the Auditor General. Why was there wheeling and dealing behind closed doors in the wee hours of the morning away from the glare of public concern and openness? Why was this deal cooked in such a tremendous amount of secrecy? What was the Government trying to hide?

In its final observation under this section the committee states:

(f) the amount of the remission order was not reported in the Public Accounts as required by government directives pursuant to the Financial Administration Act.

This is another tidbit about the Government not following the proper procedures, the law itself. Again I repeat the question that I posed earlier, why the secrecy? Why not the open reporting that is required by law?

The committee makes some important and useful recommendations, and I quote:

Your Committee recommends that the Government give consideration to amending the Financial Administration Act to require the following:

(a) the tabling in Parliament of all income tax remission orders;

In other words, that means open and full disclosure. I agree with this entirely. The next recommendation states:

(b) the preparation of an explanatory note, to accompany each remission order so tabled, outlining why the remission order is in the public interest;

In other words, a greater amount of accountabiity is needed. If this is going to be done, explain why. That makes a lot of sense. It further states:

(c) the reference of all remission orders so tabled to the appropriate Standing Committees;

In other words, a proper standing committee sees what the remission order is and it has an opportunity of debating it and asking questions about it.

It further proposes, and I quote:

(d) the prior approval by Parliament of all income tax remission orders exceeding $20 million in value.

The committee is recommending that Parliament take back its traditional power over the purse, and that the Government be accountable to Parliament for such expenditures.

What the Government did is highly unusual in allowing Dome Petroleum to write off an estimated $1 billion on its taxes, and it is outside of the existing tax law. I wish to quote from the committee on this. What it states is very pertinent. It says:

> The Department informed your Committee that the use of a corporate loss transfer in the Dome case was not offensive to existing tax policy concepts. Your Committee disagrees. The Income Tax Act permits companies to incur interest obligations for buying the shares of other companies, and then through amalgamation or winding-up to make the two companies one and have the income of the acquired company offset against the interest expense of the acquiring company.

This is what is allowed in law. The committee further states, and I quote:

> However, your Committee noted that Dome and Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas did not amalgamate. The remission order was therefore used to circumvent the Income Tax Act. Moreover, the remission order made use of a procedure outlined in a budget paper currently before Parliament. As the Auditor General noted, the budget paper referred to the corporate loss transfer system as "a new concept". This concept needed to be "fully discussed before implementation". The Dome tax remission therefore pre-empted Parliamentary consideration of an innovative and significant tax measure.

It is estimated that there are some $38 billion in unused business tax losses and tax credits, in other words, some $38 billion in tax deductions that the business community has not yet used. In essence, that amount of deductions can allow the businesses or the corporations not to pay taxes for the next three or four years. There are tremendously high unused tax losses on the books. If the business community decided to use all those tax losses, it would mean they would not pay one cent of tax for the next three or four years. Of course, the Government is extremely concerned about this.

I commend the Government for taking some steps in preventing the transfer of business losses, the buying and selling, and the wheeling and dealing of business losses to prevent a haemorrhaging of public revenues. What it has done here is the opposite. It has been made easier to use the business losses from one company to offset what another company should have paid.

Part of the frustration that Canadians felt with the Liberal Government, and which they are certainly now feeling with the Conservative Government, is the sloppy management and the loss of some billion dollars thrown out of the window. It is no wonder that Canadians are upset at this foolish business management of the Government which allows $1 billion to slip through its fingers. At the same time we have the deficit, and the cut-backs to human and social services.

In conclusion, I wish to talk briefly about tax reform. If the Government is serious about tax reform, it would not allow the type of remission orders that it allowed in the Dome case. Tax reform would mean fewer loopholes, lower rates, but a larger base. The remission order pertaining to Dome Petroleum is the opposite to tax reform. It is a hidden tax measure. There is no accountability by that company to the Government. The $1 billion in tax losses that this remission order allows to be written off can be bought and sold. It is not only directed to helping Dome. It will help Dome today, but Dome can wheel and deal, and other people and companies can benefit from that. There is no accountability. What a manner in which to run a Government! What a manner in which to look after the public interest! It is a shame, and surely it is a crime.

I congratulate my colleague, the Hon. Member for Prince Albert, in moving his motion today in order that there be this type of debate in Parliament.

Mr. Hovdebo: I wish to ask a general question. This tax remission can only be defined on a general basis as a tax expenditure, because it is tax that the Government will not receive. Over the years this has become a major method of under the table financing for many projects of many corporations and many economic regional development projects. In some cases they are very good, but I should like to use as an example another kind of tax expenditure—it is not the same as a remission but it is a tax expenditure—the scientific tax research program.

• (1230)

One of my concerns—and it is shared by many people around the country—is that if one is given a grant to do something, one must account for how the money is spent, but if one does it through the income tax system, the Income Tax Act does not allow for looking into how the money was spent. Consequently, a company receiving a direct grant and one receiving an equal amount through the tax system are treated differently. I should like the Hon. Member to comment on that real problem as far as the grant and tax expenditure structures are concerned.

Mr. de Jong: Madam Speaker, it was that very point which I was raising toward the end of my remarks when I talked about tax reform. The Auditor General has estimated that there are billions of dollars in what are called tax expenditures. I believe the amount is something like $45 billion to $53 billion. These items do not appear on the books. They are special tax incentives, loopholes, and deductions which are used by individuals and, to a very large extent, by corporations.

For example, if the Government wishes to see some regional development in Cape Breton, it offers special deals or special tax breaks to those people locating industries there. A few years ago, as another example, the Government decided that we needed more rental property and introduced MURBs. Individuals putting money into the building of rental properties were able to take advantage of certain tax deductions.

The money which is lost or which the Government does not collect because of various tax provisions is called tax expenditures. It does not show up on the books as money collected and spent because it was never collected. It is money which should have been paid to the Government but was not paid because of various loopholes.

Certainly what happened to Dome in terms of the tax remission order was one example of many which could be used to arrive at the billions of dollars of lost public revenues called tax expenditures.

Tax reform would do away with most of the tax loopholes and deductions. If that were the case, the Government could be collecting some $50 billion in revenue every year. The notion behind tax reform is that if we reduce the number of deductions, we collect more money and can therefore reduce income tax rates. If the Government wants to help support a particular industry, as was the case with Dome, because it is considered to be in the public interest, or if it wants to help in the location of industries in certain regions because it is considered to be in the public interest, or if it wants to help people raise children or whatever, then it can be done through direct grants rather than the taxation system.

There is no accountability in the tax system. Someone who takes advantage of a particular tax deduction or loophole does not have to come back to the Government to say how many jobs were created or what was done. As long as it can be justified through an accounting system, the tax deduction is allowed. There is no way for the Government to ensure that the deduction did what it was supposed to have done.

This is why we in the New Democratic Party support tax reform to make certain that there is a proper accounting of the moneys lost to the public. We were sad to see that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) postponed introducing tax reform for perhaps another year or so. It will mean the loss of many more billions of dollars of public revenue and the continuation of a system which does not allow for accountability.

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, it is not often that I have had an opportunity to rise in the House during the last year and a bit, but I wanted to put some facts on record today. There are colleagues of mine in the House today who spent eight weeks in Room 112-N, and I think it was the result of the ringing of the bells in 1982 that some changes were made.

I commend the Hon. Member for bringing this matter to the attention of the House and for providing us with an opportunity to discuss public accounts. However, the debate could have been foreseen in 1982. It arose from the National Energy Program. It was because of that program that we are discussing the situation today.

I was also glad, as an aside, that the last Hon. Member who spoke mentioned SRTCs which, as he will know, were cancelled as soon as we took office, as much as we possibly could without being totally unfair. We had to grandfather some of them, but most of the damage had already been done before we assumed office in September, 1984.

This is simply a landmine which we inherited. I feel badly that $400 million of taxpayers' money had to be spent, but it was part of the problems created by the National Energy Program. They were trying to encourage Canadians to invest and buy back Canadian oil companies which had been created and were owned by Americans.

I should like to refer to a company which was self-sustaining and sound, one of the best oil companies in western Canada. It had the greatest developed and undeveloped resources of almost any small independent company. Unfortunately, the National Energy Program brought it to an end, because at that time it was owned by the Continental Oil Company. I have to place a certain amount of the blame on the former management of Dome that tried to take advantage of the National Energy Program. Actually, I believe it was the management of Dome which created a great deal of the energy policy of the Liberal Government. As a matter of fact, we saw Jack Gallagher in Ottawa more often than people saw him in Calgary, Edmonton, or anywhere out West. I know Bill Richards came to Ottawa many times to lobby Government. Dome was a sound creation, but it was destroyed by its own making. It was only one of many companies which suffered as a result of the National Energy Program. It was brought to everyone's attention because of its massive debt which was created by the National Energy Program, by encouraging it to buy something it could not afford.

I recall a meeting concerning what we referred to as "baby NEP". The members of the committee attended a meeting in a small committee room, which the Speaker has now taken over as part of his offices. I remember the public servant from the Department stating that they had to make a change in the National Energy Program because they found that the figures in the black box were not quite right. They suddenly decided that we were not to have $100 oil. It was only a few months after they had introduced the legislation. They also decided that there would not be $50 oil, and at that point they were talking about slippage. Almost before the National Energy Program became law it was questioned by the people who created it, that it would not accomplish what they had anticipated. I said to the hon. gentleman at that time, "Do you mean by simply adjusting a couple of numbers in a computer that you can change your whole view of what you have been telling Canadians for the last year?" He said "Yes, we have". I wish they had said a little more and adjusted the figures a little further at that time. Had they done so, there would not be the chaos in western Canada that there is right now. I saw that chaos in 1982 and I see it again today. I see a responsibility of our Government to assist the West in some way. The West is an important part of Canada. It has a resource that I believe eventually will be in great demand.

We think we have a supply of oil forever, but I read the newspapers today turning from one page to another and all I read about was conflict, terrorism and problems in the Middle East. One day something in the Middle East may blow up that will make us responsible here for supplying our own oil. To manipulate an industry as the National Energy Program did was the cause for the damage. I am glad that the Public Accounts Committee had an opportunity to review the situation and bring it to the public's attention. We inherited this situation. We had no choice. As the Hon. Member who just spoke said, they probably did not have a choice because of Dome's immediate financial problems.

I am trying to put on the record a review of what has caused the problems. The Hon. Member touched on the SRTC's. I happened to question the validity of the SRTC's in the Finance Committee—it is on the record—long before those instruments were passed into law. I said there would be flagrant abuse of those research tax credits. I am not always right, but I have given two examples of when I was right in the past. It is fortunate, however, that our Government came into power and was able to correct some problems and was able to adjust and accept the responsibilities left.

Now we come to tax reform. I, for one, am a strong supporter of tax reform, Madam Speaker. It has been needed for many years. We had a Liberal Government that manipulated tax laws to suit its political needs, but our Government is bringing in tax reform. We are doing it with thorough thought and by looking at the consequences of all the past legislation on tax. We do not want to make the mistakes that have been made in the past. Tax reform for the sake of tax reform is not enough. Tax reform is only suitable when it is successful and it suits the needs of all Canadians. I am personally delighted that tax reform has been delayed. I believe that when it is brought in, and it will be brought in by our Government, it will eliminate the necessity of the Public Accounts Committee trying to dig up where we are losing funds through tax loopholes.

I sat with the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo), who introduced this motion today, on the Public Accounts Committee, not only in opposition but also in government. We have worked closely together over the years concerned as we were about the loss of funds, the bad expenditure of funds, and the tax expenditures that are not acceptable. I think we have brought to light the importance of the Public Accounts Committee and the importance of bringing to the attention of Canadians examples of where money is wasted. I am proud of my Government because it has dealt with the recommendations of the Public Accounts Committee. It has dealt with the recommendations of the Auditor General. We are trying to get the expenditures and the revenues of our country under control. We started with a deficit per annum which was higher than it is today. We are slowly eroding the damage that has been done.

I want to say, and I know the Hon. Member across the way will agree with me, that his motion is an idea that he and I have discussed in the past. There should be an opportunity to have a day's debate in the House of Commons when a report from the Standing Committee on Public Accounts is introduced. I think it is healthy because we can pinpoint problems.

What we are debating today, Madam Speaker, is the landmine left to our Government. We are dealing with it in the only possible way. Even though I do not like it, the problems that occurred in the West as well as the problems of today were caused by the National Energy Program because the Liberals put the hopes and anticipations of all of Canada, particularly those of western Canada, into the belief that the price of oil would keep going up. There is no commodity in this world that has ever been on an upward scale without a slight change from time to time. The example today is gold. Everybody has said that the price of gold would go sky high. I noticed yesterday in the paper that the price of gold dropped below $400 an ounce.

We should not, as a Government, be in a position to project or anticipate what the value of a resource might be. We should not try to take control of our resources with a view to taking more tax out of one segment of our society at the expense of another.

I appreciate having had these few moments to speak, Madam Speaker. I want to commend the Hon. Member for Prince Albert for bringing the matter to our attention. I would like to say too that I have enjoyed working with him in the past and I hope to continue working with him in the future.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments of the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell). I have a couple of questions for him. I know how he feels and I know his position on most of these issues because, as he has indicated, we worked together for several years on the Public Accounts Committee. The impact of the Public Accounts Committee report was to recommend a change in a structure which allowed this particular remission order to be issued. Would the Hon. Member comment on that recommendation? Does he think it is a good direction to be going in or is there another alternative?

Mr. Fennell: Madam Speaker, we should look at all of the possibilities. I think this is one of them. It is part of the tax reform package. There have been many changes and manipulations in the tax laws to suit the needs of Government. I do not think they were to the benefit of Canadians at large.

• (1250)

As one of many changes required, yes, I would agree with the Hon. Member that this should be reviewed and that it should not be abused. I do not believe it is being abused but we should definitely have a review of it. Preferably, we should have total tax reform in a total package that may be discussed in the House to ensure that we will have the best tax reform ever accomplished in a democratic country.

Mr. Hovdebo: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) has suggested that Section 17 of the Financial Adminstration Act be deleted in its entirety. That was the suggestion on which I was asking the Hon. Member to comment, and perhaps he will do so.

As has been mentioned, tax expenditures over the years are not things for which companies or individuals are accountable in the same way as they are accountable for grants. Still tax expenditures have been a major means of getting money to corporations, individuals and organizations. I wonder if the Hon. Member for Ontario would agree with the Auditor

General's suggestion that they should either be accounted for or disallowed entirely.

Mr. Fennell: Madam Speaker, I disagree that tax expenditures are not totally accountable because any tax expenditure is subject to review by the Department of National Revenue. They are also accountable to the shareholders of the companies.

I do not think tax expenditures have been as abused as members of the NDP are inclined to indicate. That is where are our positions differ. I do not believe they have been abused to that extent because the Department of National Revenue reviews tax returns and if they are found to be out of order, deductions are disallowed.

I personally do not believe in grants because I believe that if we give people something for nothing, they will treat it with the same amount of respect. I know the Hon. Member's next point. He can turn that around and talk about deductions, but at least tax credits are reviewed by the Department of National Revenue, by independent chartered accountants and by the shareholders and audit committees of corporations. I feel that there are protections for the tax base.

Mr. Hovdebo: Madam Speaker, I have one further question. I was intending to do exactly that, to turn that around and say that tax remissions are also gifts in the sense that they are expenses the companies do not have to pay. Consequently, I cannot really see the difference between a grant and a tax remission because we do require companies to tell us how they spend grants.

In 1985, remission orders cost us $882 million. A lot of those remissions were custom remissions for which there were good reasons. Would the Hon. Member comment on the possibility of requiring each Department to estimate the amount of money it is not receiving because of remissions as being one method of controlling tax expenditures and remissions?

Mr. Fennell: Madam Speaker, this is now getting into a lot of detail. I would like to touch on the Hon. Member's first statement. A tax expenditure is based on income earned by a corporation being productive and useful to the Canadian economy. I do not know that I am personally in favour of making minor changes to the Income Tax Act. If we remove Section 17 only, thus satisfying one segment of the public, we are not solving Canada's problem, which is the need for total tax reform.

For each Department to estimate how much tax expenditures cost would be difficult. If I were the head of a Department, I could establish a pretty general idea of the amount, but I think the only person who could give the specifics would be the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay). The Department would have to go through the last 10 years of audited statements to determine exactly how much every deduction has cost the revenue base.

The Hon. Member is making the assumption that it is the right of the Government to tax. I believe that it is the right of a company to make its own expenditures, to create jobs, to be productive and to earn income which provides a return for the shareholders. I do not think it is the Government's God-given right to determine how much money each person should receive. Going beyond that, we would be looking at a society very similar to one with which I do not have much sympathy. We would be handed a pay cheque by the Government at the end of each week instead of earning money in the way we can earn it using our own means. Theoretically, we are taxed on an equitable basis so that we can pay the expenditures required by Government. I am not totally in sympathy with all government expenditures, but that is how we are treated today and that is the way I would like it to remain.

I do not know that I wish to enter into a philosophical discussion which, however, would be worthwhile and interesting. I think we must make total changes in the tax system. We cannot live with what we have had in the past. We do not know to whom it has been fair or unfair, and this is part of the process that is being undertaken at the present time. Whatever changes we can make for the betterment of Canadians are changes I would support.

Mr. Hovdebo: Madam Speaker, if I may, we are dealing with an amendment to my motion. I know that there are only a couple of minutes left so I would like to speak for a couple of minutes if possible.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member would like to debate? There are 35 seconds left.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, rather than letting this amendment go to a vote, I would prefer that the report of the Public Accounts Committee stay before the Government so that it is required to answer to it under the law. I am going through this process because the motion will be referred back by the very fact that the Government will be required to make an answer to the report.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being one o'clock p.m., I do now leave the chair until two o'clock p.m. this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

WAR CRIMINALS

REQUEST FOR JUSTICE

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, a full page ad appeared in The Globe and Mail suggesting that millions of Canadians are outraged by the investigation of Nazi war criminals in Canada. This inflammatory message is a distortion of reality. It is totally reprehensible to suggest that individuals who should not have been admitted to this country in the first place because of heinous crimes be allowed to enjoy the privileges of Canadian citizenship due to any lapse of time.

At a time when neo-Nazism is rearing its ugly head and when some pretend the Holocaust never occured, failing to bring war criminals to justice vindicates old Nazis and encourages new ones. There is every reason why justice must be done. To do anything less would betray what the victims of World War II died for and what this country and its soldiers fought for.

Prosecuting suspected war criminals in Canada has nothing to do with the nationality of a suspect but has everything to do with morality. It is a moral stain on the fabric of Canadian society to allow such persons to use this country as a safe haven. That is what outrages millions of decent Canadians.

TOURISM

AGREEMENT TO INCREASE MOTOR COACH TOURS FROM UNITED STATES

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound—Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Government for signing a Memorandum of Agreement with the American Bus Association to increase motor coach travel from the U.S. to Canada. The Hon. Member for Dartmouth—Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) signed the agreement on behalf of the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Valcourt). The Canadian tourism industry stands to gain a great deal from the potential for more American visitors entering Canada by way of motor coach.

I would also commend the Government for its program promoting Canadian tourism at Walt Disney World's Epcot Centre. The Canada Showcase, which opened there in 1982, has hosted millions of visitors by highlighting the architecture, culture, and woodland wonders of Canada. This country has proven it deserves to be among the prime vacation destinations in the entire world.

HOUSING

CO-OPERATIVE HOUSING—CALL FOR INCREASED GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, after a long period of negotiation, the co-op housing movement in Canada thought it had reached an agreement with the federal Government to provide 5,000 new co-op housing units in 1986. Some 30 per cent, or 1,500 of those units, were to be eligible for rent supplements. Those funds were to provide assistance for low-income households so that they do not have to pay more than 25 per cent of their income for housing. The co-ops found out in November, however, that funds were available for only 3,200 units.

In addition, even though money for 1,500 rent supplemented units had been budgeted, the Government decided to offer only 950. We are well aware of the admirable record of the co-op housing sector and I call upon the Minister to release the funds for the full 1,500 units. If the Government were interested in creating jobs, jobs, jobs, one of the best ways to do it is to enter into the housing market where not only is employment provided but adequate housing as well.

RENDEZ-VOUS '87

TRIBUTE TO ORGANIZERS

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the House to Rendez-vous '87, a world class event that will take place in Quebec from February 8 to February 15. Three countries will be represented on this occasion, namely Canada, the United States and the Soviet Union. Rendez-vous '87 will be televised via satellite and give Quebec City, the province of Quebec and Canada tremendous visibility on television screens throughout the world.

The organizers have put a tremendous amount of time and effort into the preparations for this spectacular occasion, which will have an impact locally, nationally and internationally.

I would like to take this opportunity to express my appreciation of the organizing team which has been able to meet this formidable challenge and has put so much energy into ensuring this event will be a historic and unprecedented success.

Mr. Speaker, the eyes of the world will be on Quebec City next week, and I am proud to be a Quebecer and a Canadian as well as the Member for Quebec East, where a number of activities will take place.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST FOR REIMBURSEMENT OF EARLY RETIREES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the coalition that is defending Quebecers who took early retirement in 1985, 1986 and 1987 is furious about the Government's decision and the silence maintained by Conservative Members from every part of the country. Mr. Speaker, in 1985, 35,000 people in Canada acted in good faith, on information provided by Canada Employment Centres. According to the Act, for anyone under 65 a pension fund is not considered to be employment income. The Quebec Pension Plan is not considered to be a form of remuneration.

Mr. Speaker, in 1985 that was the information given by the Department of Employment and Immigration. The Deputy Minister has admitted no advice to the contrary was sent out, and at this very moment the Minister still refuses to reimburse those 35,000 people, simply because the Government has decided to save money to reduce the deficit and give more to the rich.

FINANCE

HIGH INTEREST RATES CHARGED BY CREDIT CARD COMPANIES

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, the long decline in interest rates has thus far benefited only the issuers of credit cards, not the more than 10 million Canadians who pay excessive rates of interest. Why has the cost for credit stayed up while the cost of money has gone down?

Ten years ago when the bank rate compared with today's, Master Card charges were 3 points below what they are now.

In 1980 major Toronto department stores paid more for capital than they do now and charged their customers almost 8 percentage points less for credit.

I admit that these stores are giving extra services to charge card users, but do these services have to cost that much? Are some people right when they suspect this is plastic piracy? Surely when money is cheaper the big operators should not get all the benefit. Mr. Speaker, the issue is fairness.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CRITICISM OF ACCORD ON MEASURES TO REDUCE DUMPING OF TOXIC CHEMICALS INTO NIAGARA RIVER

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, Canadians should not greet yesterday's signing of a Declaration of Intent to reduce toxic chemicals in the Niagara River with a great deal of enthusiasm. After four decades of study and negotiation the Governments of Canada, the United States, Ontario and New York have only managed to sign a statement of political will that is long on rhetoric and short on details.

Despite irrefutable evidence that deadly toxic chemicals are seeping into the Niagara River, the Declaration of Intent and accompanying work plan contain far too many unsettling references to ongoing studies, discussions, and negotiations to be of much comfort to anyone. In particular, despite its promise to reduce persistent toxic chemicals by 50 per cent by 1996, the declaration only makes passing reference to the excavation of the most dangerous dump sites on the U.S. side of the river, raising fears that the Americans still plan to pursue unproven technologies of extraction as part of their clean-up effort.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) says that Canada's cultural identity is not up for negotiation in the free trade talks with the United States. Good. But why does the drinking water of millions of Canadians continue to be negotiable?

SUPPORT FOR ACCORD ON MEASURES TO REDUCE DUMPING OF TOXIC CHEMICALS INTO NIAGARA RIVER

Mr. Allan Pietz (Welland): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I was in Toronto on behalf of the Niagara regional caucus to witness the signing of an historic accord. The Declaration of Intent relating to the Niagara River Toxic Management Plan is a commitment by the Governments of Canada, the United States, New York State and the Province of Ontario to cut in half the dumping of persistent toxic chemicals into the Niagara River by the year 1996. The Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) should be congratulated for this successful conclusion to a year of intense negotiations with the Americans.

The pollution of the Niagara River is a source of great concern to all who depend on it for their water supply. This accord represents a giant step, not only toward the clean-up of the river but also toward international co-operation on environmental issues. Let us hope it sets an example of co-operation for all of our negotiations with our American neighbours.

VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

HOSPICE/PALLIATIVE CARE SOCIETY OF CAPE BRETON

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise to join with my constituents in saluting the Hospice/Palliative Care Society of Cape Breton and its efforts to form such a service for Sydney, Nova Scotia, and the surrounding area. Through the hard work of the steering committee of this society and the support of the region, a hospice volunteer program began in September, 1986.
