FISHED IN A BEER KEG

And Caught a Catfish Too Big to Pass the Bungalow.

WHITEHAVEN, Pa., July 25.—While fishing in the Lehigh River, near Whitehaven, Patrick Tully, a Lehigh Valley conductor, hooked a catfish which he could not land. He was about to give up in despair when another fisherman offered to wade the stream and spear the fish.

To his surprise the fisherman found his line entering the bung hole of a beer keg. The keg was dragged ashore and found to contain a four pound catfish, which had grown too large to pass through the bung hole.

ADDERS MILK HIS COWS.

Massachusetts Farmer Finds His Herd of Fifteen All Dry.

PITTSFIELD, Mass., July 25.—Striped adders are so thick in a pasture on the Goodrich farm, in Hinsdale, that they have taken to milking cows, and a posse of farmers will try to exterminate them tomorrow.

Peter Touchet, who runs the farm, found last evening that every cow in a herd of fifteen had been milked. He watched the pasture today, and every hour or two saw a striped adder crawl up a cow's leg and begin to milk the animal. No kids from the cows could drive away the reptiles.

THE BRIDE'S LUCK.

(St. Louis Republic.)

With reference to the rumors of "society" reporting, Melville Stone, of the Associated Press tells the account of a wedding published in a Kansas paper.

The story, which described the marriage in the usual flowery adjectives, concluded with this surprising announcement:

"The bridegroom's present to the bride was a handsome diamond brooch, together with many other beautiful things in cut glass."

THE ACCEPTED COURSE.

"I am sure," said the summer resort, "that Miss Gault has picked that young man from Boston for a husband."

"What makes you think so?"

"Why, she overruled the boat the other day, so that he could rescue her."

Respondent in Hartje Divorce Case Attacked in Street by Unknown Man.

Augustus Hartje, and his negro groom, Hooe.

PITTSBURG, Pa., July 26.—Just after leaving the court house today following the adjournment of the hearing in the Hartje divorce case, Mary Scott-Hartje, the respondent in the case, was attacked by an unknown man on the street. Despite the crowd about the court house at the time, the man made good his escape through an alley in the vicinity of the court house.

Mrs. Hartje left the building accompanied by Mrs. Alexander W. Slocum, who has been Mrs. Hartje's constant companion through the hearing. The women were on their way to the office of John Freeman, Mrs. Hartje's counsel. They had gone but a few steps from the court house, when a man having the appearance of a mill worker, thrust out his arms and grabbing Mrs. Hartje dragged her across the pavement saying, "Mary, come with me."

Screaming with fright Mrs. Hartje managed to escape from the man and found refuge in Mr. Freeman's office. In the meantime the crowd stood about apparently paralyzed at the incident. The man started to run and was lost to those who took up the chase. Some few minutes later Mrs. Slocum pointed out a man as the assailant and he was arrested, but released when Mrs. Hartje said he was not the man.

Today was the first since the hearing that Mrs. Hartje had appeared on the street without a detective being near. At today's session of the Hartje trial, counsel for Augustus Hartje called witnesses to refute the story told by Coachman "Tom" Madine to the effect that while Mrs. Mary Scott Hartje was in Memphis, Hartje met a blonde woman in Schenley park and took her to his home in the carriage driven by Madine.

Josephine Wright, whom Augustus Hartje had been charged with visiting, was placed on the stand and testified that Hartje had never visited her; that she only knew him by sight and had never spoken to him. The manner in which John M. Freeman, of counsel for Mrs. Hartje, cross-examined her led to a report that was not denied by some interested in the case, that witnesses would be placed on the stand by Mrs. Hartje to refute the unusual spectacle of a husband giving evidence that if produced in criminal court would tend to convict his wife of a crime, the punishment for which is imprisonment in the penitentiary, also was seen today.

Vilbert Ashby, husband of Blanche Ashby, formerly a domestic in the Hartje household, swore that his wife had told him she had lied in the deposition she made for Mrs. Hartje and that she had been promised money for doing so. This evidence was in continuation of the attempt of Hartje's attorneys to show that there had been improper influences used in securing testimony for the other side.

Ashby also swore that his wife had told him that Mrs. Hartje had declared to her she was sorry she had not returned to live with Hartje when he asked her to go back to him.

In cross-examination a letter which Ashby had written to Mrs. Hartje was placed in evidence. In it he told Mrs. Hartje that if she could pay Blanche for speaking for her Hartje could do the same.

A Story of France in the days of Louis XV., and how the work of a traitor was foiled by the energy of Madame Pompadour.

The Duke shrugged his shoulders. "My fancy, I suppose," he answered lightly. "Perhaps, however, our dear, captivating friend yonder will convert him. She could convert St. Anthony if she really tried, eh?"

Denis knew that under this perlage the Duke was studying her closely and she was greatly relieved that he now bowed himself away. For all his affectation of being a man of pleasure and nothing more she had divined his keen ability and wide knowledge of life. He had talked to test her and she was angry that she could not meet his searching gaze with the polished imperturbability that was his unique gift. She bitterly resented, too, that Andre should stand parted from her in the Salles des Comtesse des Forges, who was never happy save when she was making her stammering nincompoop of a husband unhappy. Two days had passed since that painful evening when he had parted from her in the Salles des Gardes de la Reine. He had proved his chivalry; he had triumphantly vindicated her honor; why did he not give her the opportunity to show that his conduct had appealed both to her pride and her heart? Why had he not come to ask and to receive forgiveness? Was it as gossip whispered, that he really preferred the Comtesse des Forges? Or was it, as the Duke had plainly hinted, because he really preferred, what was far worse, the service and rewards of Madame de Pompadour? And reward him the mistress could, poor Denis was thinking, for to the surprise of the Court the King had simply ignored the duel, though in other similar cases both victor and vanquished had been forced to make amends for a season. And Andre was still Captain of the Queen's Guard; Denis's foot beat on the floor. Yes, in the King's private salon Andre had a powerful protector, herself and her friends; a dangerous enemy, yet her pride and gratitude alike forbade her to reveal the truth to her allies—to the Queen, to the ministers, to the devotees to the nobles working together for a common end.

Andre saluted her as he passed out. On the threshold he paused to nod quietly to the Chevalier de St. Amant, who was entering. The young man was as gaily dressed as usual, but his boyish face was grave and sad. He whispered something to the Duke de Pontchartrain.

"Good heavens!" exclaimed his Grace, "Impossible!"

"I wish it were," said the Chevalier, "but it is quite true."

"Dismissed!" The Comptroller-General dismissed St. Amant, repeated, and the news flew around the room. "But why? Why?"

"It is an intrigue," the Chevalier explained. "Messieurs Paris, the bankers, who are related to the Pompadour, have refused to do any further business with the Comptroller-General. And so His Majesty has dismissed the bankers but the minister."

"You mean," remarked the Comtesse des Forges, "that the Pompadour has dismissed the Comptroller-General?"

"Exactly."

The consternation was general. "It is no laughing matter," the Duke de Pontchartrain pronounced. "This is the first time that that woman or any woman in her position has interfered with high affairs of state. It will not be the last."

"Ah, I knew she must be vulgar inside," cried his duchess triumphantly. "It is a pity she dresses so well. The bankers pay, I suppose."

"It is an outrage," Mademoiselle Engenie said. "The Court must protest."

"My dear lady," answered the Duke with his most finished scorn, "when a King owes twenty million livres to a pair of money-lenders and wants twenty million more you will find that it is they, not the court, who can protest."

"And that is not all," the Chevalier proceeded grimly. "His Majesty has been pleased to promise the reversal of the Comptroller-General's place to the Marquise de Vaudieres."

"Impossible! Impossible!" The consternation increased, for the Marquis till a few weeks before had been better known as Abel Polsson, Madame de Pompadour's brother.

"Charming," said the Duke, "if His Majesty must make marquises of the gutter at the bidding of a grisette it is only fair he should enable them to be masters of the public finances and to pay their way by plunder. What is His Majesty's next whim, Chevalier?"

"What it will be tomorrow, Monseigneur, I cannot say. The King has been pleased to do no more today than what I have said."

"And a very pretty day's work it has been," his Grace replied. "Well, ladies, I have only one piece of advice to offer you. Smile, smile, smile, for if you protest Madame is Marquise de Pompadour will turn her attention to you. Do not forget that she has a pretty bourgeois daughter eight years old to whom the post of maid of honor to her Majesty would be a delightful and profitable education."

He saluted the company, and taking most of the men with him withdrew, for the situation was sufficiently grave to demand an instant conference.

All the heart and gaiety had already been struck out of the ladies. The Chevalier's dejected air, so strange to his careless and irrepressible spirit, was the most telling comment on the menace in his news. To the angry indignation and rapid questions of the ladies he now replied with melancholy brevity. The King was infatuated and obdurate, and Madame de Pompadour was plainly determined to make him the instrument of her vulgar vengeance.
