OSMAN'S PHILOSOPHY.

"The old man was silent at last. The centuries had rolled backwards in his whitewashed cell. I had seen Sinai and Mecca, and talked with a patriarch who was young with Moses, and spoke as naive and as cogent as Daniel's. 'The Lord has chosen the English.'"

"Are they not the first in war? Have they not captured the Book and imprisoned its Prophet? Let the Egyptians be humble before them—he spoke in a low voice, and his eyes were dim. 'The Lord has chosen the English. So is my mission ended. I have waited for this day. I have transmitted my message by your hand to the English people. I am happy, for by message is spoken.'"

BURNABY, THE HERO THAT WAS

It was at a Lord Mayor's dinner in the Mansion House, London, England, that I first met the man, I did not know who he was. He sat low in his chair at my right hand, but his face, with its dark complexion, large, soft, black eyes, dark wavy hair, and charming play of expression, was the handsomest I ever had beheld. His conversation was fascinating, and covered a great variety of subjects, and the intonations of his mellow voice were a delight to the ear. He was as simple and unaffected as a boy.

He looked to be hardly beyond his first youth, and I took him to be some yet unrecognised scion of a good family, who had exceptionally improved the opportunities afforded him by the conventional "grand tour." But some remark that he presently made indicated connection with the army, and he admitted that he belonged to one of the British cavalry regiments. I then noticed, and commented on, the exceptional breadth of his shoulders.

COLONEL'S PONIES.
"Yes, the fellows used to consider me pretty strong," he replied, with his light laugh. "A couple of years after I joined, we were in barracks at Aldershot, and our mess room was, for some reason, at the top of the building, up three flights of stairs.
"Our Colonel a bit of a martinet, owned a couple of Shetland ponies, which his wife drove to a little basket carriage. They were cunning little fellows, and might weigh about three hundred pounds apiece.
"The Colonel was very proud of them; and he once said, when scolding us for some blunder on parade, that his Shetlands had more brains than any of us. They can't talk," he said; "but I'd about as lief have them at the mess table as some of you young gentlemen who fancy you know all about cavalry manoeuvres."
"It was only his fun, of course; but it stuck in my crop; perhaps because I imagined, with good reason, no doubt, that he had been pointing particularly at me.
BRILLIANT IDEA.
"Next evening I was late for mess; and as setting by the stables an idea struck me, and I went in and got the groom to let me have the two ponies. I led them along to the barracks, and then got one under each arm, and lugged them upstairs, kicking and squealing, till I fairly landed them in the mess room on the third floor. I walked up with them to the Colonel, who was carving a leg of mutton, and put them down beside him. I was a bit windy for the little beggars got to be pretty heavy at the last; but I managed to say, if though you might be in need of a little rational society, Colonel," and then went to my seat. "But, my word!" added my unknown friend, laughing, "I never heard such an uproar in my life!"

At this juncture, the functionary behind the Lord Mayor's chair hammered for silence, and called out, "The Lord Mayor drinks to the health of Captain Fred Burnaby!" Whereupon, to my amazement, up rose my companion, unfolding himself to greater and greater heights, till he stood at his full stature of six feet six of magnificent manhood, and gratefully acknowledged the cheers that greeted him. For he was at that time one of the most famous men in England, the hero of the "Ride to Khiva," the pride of the army, the darling of society, the author of several popular books, and, without doubt, the strongest man then wearing the British uniform. So I had been entertaining an angel—or, rather, he had been entertaining me—unaware.

Fifteen years later, in 1893, adds the narrator, I happened to be at the World's Fair in Chicago, and found myself in the vicinity of the British building, down near the lake. I knew that my friend Villiers, the war correspondent, was stopping there; but as I put my hand on the gate of the front yard, the sentinel on guard stopped me, saying that the house was closed to visitors for the day.
He was a tall, bony, soldierly fellow, with the stripes of a sergeant on his arm, and the number of the regiment on his cap prompted me to ask him whether he had been in the recent campaign in Egypt, where the British square was attacked by the "Fuzzy-wuzzies."
The man's eyes glowed. "Indeed, then, I was sir," he replied. "I was in the front of the line that day."
IDOL OF ARMY.
"Why in that case," said I, "you must have seen Burnaby."
He straightened up instantly, as if on parade, and stared at me with a sort of fierceness. "Did you know him?" he said, and went on immediately, "I saw him, sir—and I saw him when he died!"
We went into executive session forthwith, and the sergeant told me his story. Burnaby had joined the expedition having been assigned to no command, but for the sake of adventure, and for the sport of the thing. He soon became the favorite of the officers, and the idol of the rank and file. His experience in campaigning in wild countries, his quick perceptions, sound judgment, and cool-dare-devil courage, made him a valuable and stimulating companion.
On the day of the battle he assisted in choosing the position for the British. The Fuzzy-wuzzies engaged in hand to hand fighting with parts of the British line. Burnaby stepped to the point where the attack was fiercest, and with his drawn sabre fended with the native spearmen. "He didn't try to kill none of 'em, sir," said the sergeant, "being there unafraid, as I might say, though he had a chance enough, as I could see, being only

Officer Unravels Berlin Murder Mystery
Link by Link—Pawlicket Clue.

(Lloyd's News).
One of the most brilliant pieces of detective work heard of outside fiction for many a long day has been performed by Detective-Inspector Wannowski, of the Berlin police, who on Tuesday morning put his hands on August Heider, a cobbler, aged 42, and charged him with the murder of a boy named Herman Blescher.
On Wednesday, April 8, portions of a dismembered human body were found in a sack in the Berlin Zoological Gardens. Further search disclosed another package of remains, and the police surgeons set to work to put the bodies together. This they did so successfully that it could be recognized as that of a boy named fifteen years of age.
Then Inspector Wannowski carefully examined some rags of clothing which with the mutilated remains. In a piece of lining was a town pawlicket. This was pieced together, and then the trail was followed up with the result that it was found that the ticket related to a small article pawned by a boy named Herman Blescher. The latter Wannowski next discovered had been apprenticed to a tailor, but had run away from his master, and had been seen on the night of the murder with two men in a low tavern in the East End of Berlin. Keen on his clue, the detective searched all the slums of the city, and was at last rewarded by the discovery that one of the men with whom the boy had been seen had later been arrested for theft, and was in the Moabit Gaol.

charged with the crime. He strenuously denies his guilt, but the proofs seem overwhelming.

AMUSEMENTS.

"Moonshiners" at Nickel a Strang
Drama
Glorious weather yesterday and an enticing programme at the Nickel induced long promenades of people to the large Carlton street picture house. The show was a first-class one in every particular, introducing tragedy, comedy and farce-comedy in a most entertaining way. The 1,000-foot picture, "The Moonshiner's Daughter," was a decided change as far as story and scenic embellishments were concerned, and proved a most delightful novelty. The plot of the picture deals with struggles between illicit distillers in Kentucky and revenue officials. Throughout this picture holds one's attention firmly and has already made a decided hit. The other films were entitled "Willie's Party," "The Wrong Overcoat," and "The Seaman's Widow." Miss Davis, who entered upon her final week at the Nickel, was well received in a pretty little number, "The Moon Has His Eyes on You," and Mr. Maxwell rendered that beautiful ballad, "And a Little Child Shall Lead Them," in excellent voice. Same show today. Send the children today to see the Teddy Bears and Punch and Judy.

At the Princess
One of the best pictures ever shown in St. John is now being shown at the Princess—Royal Possibilities. The Hon. Wm. H. Taft, Secretary of War, who is a candidate for the office of President of the United States, at the elections to be held this fall, is shown in a most interesting campaign purposes. His duties, however, call him to Fort Myer and with the camera he is seen reviewing the troops, and at that point the man with the camera got in his work. The picture also shows Mrs. Taft, Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Taft, and the officers of the reviewing party. Mr. C. P. Taft is the financial backer of the Secretary in his presidential campaign.

At the Unique
Possibly no picture has ever been shown in St. John that has caused as much favorable comment as Othello in 8 acts, now being shown at the Unique. Why pay a half 50 cents to see this great tragedy when you can see the same thing here for five cents.

Fresh Air Field—This is a roaring comedy. A gentleman who is a crank on the fresh air subject, insists on having others share his belief. After a number of amusing experiences returns to his home and leaves the front door wide open. A thief in passing sees a handsome fur coat and gild hat hanging on the hall tree and appropriates it for his own use. The gentleman gives chase but in vain. This experience cures him of his fresh air ideas.

A Mexican Love Story. A sensational romance of Mexico. A handsome married lady becomes enamored with a young man. Her husband challenges him to a duel and kills him.
Mr. Wm. Lanton's head to great advantage in "When We Were Boys." The pictures in connection with this song are very fine.
Mr. Robt. Butler is also heard to good advantage in "I'd Rather Tootle than Waltz, Bill."
Remember in a few days we are going to put Poochimus the great Indian, for the first time in Canada.

STRIKE LEADS TO BLOODSHED

The G. T. R. Riids at Owen Sound were on strike yesterday and on the arrival of fifty C. P. R. vehicles a blood battle took place in the C. P. R. yards. In the battle clubs and revolvers were used. James Lambie, a young man from Hanover, also known as a spectator, was shot. James McIntosh, a strike leader, was badly clubbed. Detective Wright, of Toronto, was clubbed and it is feared his skull is fractured. Others were injured. Three Toronto detectives have been arrested for doing the shooting.

Her May Morning

By GEC LY ALLEN.

(Copyrighted, 1903, by Associated Literary Press)

The world said Eleanor Carey would never marry again. Her first matrimonial experience had not been strewn with roses, though money for her purchase had not been lacking. And the events of her widowhood had been enough to turn any woman hard, cynical and unromantic.

Not that Eleanor Carey looked either hard or embittered as she presided over Mrs. DeWitt Smith's tea table one balmy April afternoon. Robed in soft, clinging topaz-colored silk, with heavy incrustations of lace—the famed Carey lace—she looked not a day older than the daughter of the household who was that day making her social debut. And indeed in point of years, the fair debutante had little advantage over the fairer widow, whose coming out had been followed almost directly by her marriage with Henry Carey, retired broker, multi-millionaire and confirmed bachelor.

Younger men had envied the baby-eyed groom. Older women had envied the radiant bride who, rumor said, had acquiesced smilingly in her bold sale in the matrimonial market. That she had paid this price of family honor and her father's good name with outward calm and inward resolution was something dams Grumpy never guessed.

Her reward came sooner than she had dared to hope. Henry Carey died within a year of their marriage, and it was that year that rumor said was enough to harden any woman. Ghosts of Carey's ugly past tramped forth after the reading of the will. His first cousin, apparently well started on his elder relative's downward path, first laid siege to the widow's heart, and being repulsed, then started the contest which had made Eleanor's face familiar to every newspaper reader in America and arraigned the dead man in all the hallways of money-drunk eccentricities.

That any woman could believe in any man after going through what Eleanor Carey had was past even the belief of her own somewhat cynical social set.

So far Eleanor's attorneys had held out against the siege for the millions left entirely to her. So far Eleanor Carey had never been interviewed by either public reporter or private friend. She had simply resumed her place in society after laying aside her mourning and let the legal and social tongues wag.

So it happened that three men who had come to pay their respects to Mrs. DeWitt Smith and her youngest daughter lingered to pay court to the presiding genius at the tea table.

There were violets and lilies of the valley from Dr. Dalton, a corsage bouquet large enough to hide the front of Mrs. Carey's traveling coat. From Jimmy Danton there were pink roses, long-stemmed, perfectly tinted and crystalline with dew shrouded by the forster's rubber sprayer. There were bulky envelopes from her lawyers and daffodils from a girlish admirer. There were whistles from individual mandants and carefully phrased appeals from charity organizations.

And last the maid, with a correctly blank expression on her face, handed her mistress a curious floral offering, a basket made of soft willow twigs interwoven and lined with damp moss, which overflowed with the most commonplace flowers—violets with only a faint woodland sigh, Eleanor Carey opened the envelope tied to the basket by a blade of stout grass.

"My dear little sweetheart of long ago," it ran, "do you suppose for one instant that I intend to wait for you to bid me come to Craigmere? I will be there to bid you welcome—not on the stately terrace of your Italian villa, but down in the woods where I gathered these. And what is more, I want you to come to me with clean hands and an empty purse. Send for your lawyers. Tell them to take what they want and give the rest to the house who are fighting you. Turn your back on all—the ghastly skeletons of the past, the scandal, the publicity, the bitterness of all. You have never had a happy day since your purse was lined with his gold. Come, love, do you suppose for one instant that I am still young for you and me. Be the queen of my May today and for every May-day to come. I am waiting."

For almost an hour Eleanor Carey sat when the spring blossoms faded under her hot clasped hands. Her breakfast turned cold. Her maid slipped in and out of the room, silent and quickly tinted wild flowers, while dew-drops fell in a snowy shower on thick moss and modest blooms alike. His Parisian friends would hardly recognize him. Gone was the Van Dyke beard, gone the shabby corduroy, the flowing tie, in their stead Gregory was clean shaven, as in the old days when he had made and led Eleanor's May basket year after year. For the corduroys he wore a light gray suit, a soft madras outfit shirt a soft gray silk tie. He looked the boyish lover, not the successful artist.

And toward him, threading the pathway among the dewy petals, came the lady of his heart, clad in a simple frock of blue and white wash stuff and a low flat hat ornamented with daisies. He took them and the smiling woman to his heart.

"Dear girl," he murmured in her ear, "it is good to be young in May." And the woman raised her eyes to his, eyes from which had passed every trace of bitterness and anxiety and disappointment, as she answered stealthily: "Yes, Donald it is good."

"Not expected—Thank you very much," said the lady, smilingly accepting the proffered assurance. "Madam," said the man, tipping his hat, "you surprise and pain me." "I do not understand you—Well, you've lost me a bet."

COUNT OKUMA AND PACIFIC COAST PROBLEM

An Interview With Famous "Maker of War" of Japan

Early in the morning I looked out from my window at the imperial hotel in Tokio. A summer rain was beating pitilessly and incessantly, so incessantly that even the possibility of its ceasing seemed remote. This was the morning of the day when I was to meet in private Count Okuma, one-time Premier of Japan, Counselor of the Imperial Household.

At the time of the restoration he was shattered badly in an attempt at assassination. His expression was but one leg today in consequence. A man of and for his country, who has worked for it on an equal with any European, and who at nearly seventy years of age is strong and virile, a power in the cabinet, a power in politics—or rather out of them, for he is not of but rather against the government.

THE MAKER OF WAR.
Having driven for nearly an hour, I came to the house. The door opened and the man, Count Okuma, the maker of war, the leader of rebellion, tall and grim entered the room, the heavy silk of his massive costume swishing against the artificial leg which caused a slight hitch in his carriage.

He was accompanied by his confidential secretary, as well as by one of the professors of the Waseda University, often referred to as the Sage by Count Okuma.

His greeting was kindly. He wore not the mask which heretofore has caused to cover the faces of so many of his countrymen. His expression was frank, his eyes looked straight into mine with no drooping of the lids; a powerful man, physically dangerous, a man to conjure with, a man assertive and invincible, who, approaching the so-called limit of man's life, showed the dominant spirit of his youth, not a defeat, but would accomplish at any cost the great object—to put his hands on an equal with any European power, and to be himself the moving spirit of his party.

THE PACIFIC PROBLEM.
Admitting that a mere handful of such a Pacific slope by injudicious actions were not in themselves to be considered, Count Okuma went ten far enough to call them savages over whom the United States as a whole, had no control; and if this were so, then as these very men considered themselves newly acquired territory to be prevented the more ignorant of the Japanese from having a like feeling.

"Our people are gentle in spirit," Count Okuma said, "but if they are injured in their country or their people are injured, then they rise in a terrible and the spirit of ancient days is stronger with them by the very force of their newly acquired civilization, therefore troubles such as these must be appeased or a 'clash of arms'."

MILITARY MEN HAVE INTERVIEW WITH BORDEN RE QUEBEC AFFAIRS

OTTAWA, May 11.—A deputation of colonels in command of the various city regiments in Toronto and Hamilton waited on Sir Frederick Borden, Minister of Militia, today in reference to the proposed trip of militia of Eastern Canada to Quebec, next July. The militia officers, who spoke also for the officers in command of the Montreal and other city corps, protested against the present intention of the department to allow four days' drill pay to regiments for Quebec manoeuvres. Allowance for the place of the regular twelve days' pay allowed annually to the city corps. The deputation pointed out that such an arrangement would seriously affect the finances of their respective regiments this year. The regular fund for general purposes being largely dependent on the amount received annually for the regular twelve days' drill. Hamilton and Toronto regiments at any rate, the deputation said, would be willing to forego four days' pay at Quebec and would in addition perform the regular twelve days' drill provided the usual annual drill allowance were made and the whole corps taken to Quebec.

District Attorney Quoted as Saying Contest for Governor Might Kill Him

BOSTON, May 11.—District Attorney John B. Moran, who was looked forward to by some of the present leaders of the Massachusetts Democracy as the party standard bearer in the coming gubernatorial contest, is reported in an interview to have said that he will not be a candidate this fall for the reason that he fears such a contest would endanger his life.

FAT DEFEATING EXTRAORDINARY.

MARGARET KNOLLY
Slender Margaret Knolly now, if you please. The fascinating leading lady of the Bijou, now more fascinating than ever, astonished all her friends on Broadway the other day by presenting to their admiration a fat eye and willow form in place of the plump, not to say fat, outlines with which she has so long delighted the January. After a good deal of diplomatic cross-examination from fat acquaintances the secret was continuously whispered to a few dear friends, who then said that everybody knows it now. It was not exercise, nor fasting, nor sea air, nor worry about her new venture that had brought about this wonderful willow change in the charming Margaret; no, none of these things, but a simple mixture which all druggists are familiar with and can supply at small cost, to wit: One-half ounce Marmola, 2-4 ounces Fluid Extract Cascara Aromatic and 48 ounces Syrup Simplex. "Grown folks need a teaspoonful after meals and at bedtime," explained the slender Margaret. It is simply wonderful. It takes off the fat quickly, as much as a pound a day, and keeps it off. You can eat what you like, too. In that respect it is unlike anything of the kind I ever tried, and, besides, it has another splendid feature: It is entirely harmless and will not cause wrinkles. I think it is about as essential a toilet article for the woman who is fat and wants to get thinner as face powder. In order to get the best results, however, you should buy the Marmola in the original package and mix it with the other two ingredients after you get home.

PRACTICE MAKES PERFECT.

At the appointed time Edwin Jones had called at his best friend's home, but someone Miss Winkle was not there to greet him.

Cured of Colds and Croup by Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.

Geo. C. Bowden, of Little Rock, Ark., has used Chamberlain's Cough Remedy in his family for many years, and is seldom without it in the house. He says: "Chamberlain's Cough Remedy has proved a great relief to our boys in their throat and lung troubles. A few doses of it will relieve us of a threatened attack of croup, and a bad cold is quickly cured by its use. I take pleasure in recommending it." The prompt cure of colds and croup effected by this preparation is due to the fact that it can always be depended upon, is pleasant to take and contains no opium, chloroform or other objectionable drug, has made it a favorite with the parents of young children. When you have a cough or cold, try it and see for yourself what an excellent medicine it is. Price, 25 cents. Large size, 50 cents.

SARAH MORAN SENT IN A FALSE ALARM

By Yelling "Fire" While Drunk, She Woke the Men and Horses in King St. Station.

A drunken woman was the cause of awakening four or five fire horses and drivers this morning. At an early hour, as the police were escorting Sarah Moran to the central station, she saw that she was handy to Hook and Ladder station No. 1, and as loudly as she could shout she yelled "Fire." All the horses had been lying down, but springing to their feet, the drivers were awakened by the woman's screams and the noise of the horses. They found that the cause of all of the excitement was not an alarm bell, but a Sheffield street belle. Sarah pleaded guilty to drunkenness and was sent to jail for two months in default of paying eight dollars. She was not charged with sounding a false alarm.

FORMER ST. JOHN MAN REPORTED LOST AT SEA

D. E. Reid, Who Left Here in 1906, Was One of the Crew on the Castle Rock

The Glasgow sailing ship Castle Rock, which has been posted at Lloyd's as missing, had a St. John man, S. E. Reid, in her crew. The vessel left Sydney for Seattle and has not since been heard of. No hopes are entertained that she will ever be seen again. Mr. Reid is a grandson of Elias W. Elliott, of Elliott's Hotel, Germain St. He left St. John for the west in August, 1906, and corresponded regularly with his friends in St. John until April, 1907, when he wrote from Manitoba. The first he was heard of was a newspaper paragraph stating that the vessel had been lost and mentioning his name as one of the crew.

There is no hope that it is a mistake as his address is given as 23 Germain street, which is the address of the Elliott Hotel.

AFRICAN VETERANS' AGAIN AFTER THE LAND GRANTS

United Move Will be Made on Federal Parliament During the Present Session

The secretary of the South African Veterans' Association, of Quebec, has written to St. John asking the co-operation of the association here in the efforts now being made to secure land grants from the federal government. Petitions are being prepared in the various eastern provinces, which will be presented to the government before the first of June. The subject is one of the parliamentary programme for that date, and when it comes up it will probably be settled once for all. Realizing that after the question is discussed at the present session it will be practically impossible to reopen it in the future. The association in several provinces are preparing for a final effort, and in this the co-operation of the New Brunswick boys is asked. Several groups of the veterans have already received land grants in the west, but for various reasons the claims put forward by eastern members of the various contingents have never been recognized. All who feel an interest in this movement are asked to meet on Thursday evening at eight o'clock, at the store of W. H. Irvine, 55 King St.

THE DAY NURSERY IS BEING WELL PATRONIZED

Ten Babies Were Being Cared for This Morning, and the Matron Was Kept Busy.

The day nursery which was only opened a week ago, has already justified the ladies who thought the time ripe for such an institution. This morning there were ten children under the care of the matron, Mrs. Cox, and at least one was expected. The children ranged in age from a couple only a few months old, to some of six or seven years. The mother of the youngest infant was present and was busy introducing it to the nursing bottle. While the efficient matron is willing to do almost anything for the children she feels that she must draw the line at undertaking the charge of infants which have not been broken to the bottle.

Some of the older children were making themselves useful helping to amuse the others and most of the youngsters seemed happy and contented.

If the number of infants too young to take care of themselves increases, the matron will need an assistant as she has at present about all one person can attend to.

One of the chief disadvantages of the nursery is that there are not more inmates than at present is its location. Where it is at present, practically on the outskirts of the town, there are not many parents in other sections who can take their children to it without some inconvenience. This morning for instance there was one child from the south end of Prince Wm. street and another from St. James street. If the location were more central it would give more mothers a chance to take their babies to the nursery as they go out in the morning.
