At last, the brave young soul thought that he had discovered the clue; and, with a heroism as much greater than the heroism of the battle-field as it is nobler to sacrifice one's self to save men than to destroy them, he resolved to test his discovery upon himself. staked his life against the hope of conquering the cholera. Obtaining from one of his patients some of the deadly choleraic germs, he went deliberately to his room, placed a table with pencil and paper at his hedside, lay calmly down upon the bed, opened a vein in his arm, and inserted the deadly poison. He thought he had discovered how to neutralize it; if so, man was master of the pestilence forever more. But he was wrong, and the error was fatal. He lived seven hours, and then died; but during those seven dying; hours the young hero observed with scientific exactness, the effects and progress of the disease upon him, and one after another he noted his observations down until within the very half-hour when the spirit left the body. These notes are pronounced to have the highest value, and will serve the commission with new facts of the greatest importance; and so the dying legacy of Otto Obermeir may, after all, lead to the victory which he condemned himself to self-destruction in trying to achieve. MEN AND THINGS AT OTTAWA. The Storm after the Calm-Gathering

Already the swift winged telegraph will have borne to all parts of the Dominion the prominent features of yesterday's doings. Unprecedental interest has been nanifested in the opening of this Session. which will develop into excitement as it advances, and become memorably historical after its close. The proceedings of the Royal Commission were followed by an unnatural quiet, and even those seem, ingly immortal voices, political rumors appear to have died out upon the air. The only intermediate event that stirred for awhile the public pulses was the execrable exploits of Young, Holton and Company, in the letter stealing line which have enveloped those gentlemen in moral darkness, stamped them with the brand of unscrupulous political opponents, posted them before the world as the premeditated violators of the most sacred rinciples, and sealed their fate as leaders in any respectable party in Canada. The last week's events have wonderfully changed the appearance of things. Passing along Spark's street, where are located the fashionable stores and miliery establishments of the city, on ould imagine himself in the vicinity ne immense factory, as the clatter o undreds of sewing machines is heard, ngaged in preparing from far fetche abrics those mysterious combination which we call dress,-many of them evidently invented by some ambitious fe-male, to whom nature had not been overenerous, and who found it necessary to divert attention from her face to her By every train have been arriving the en whose voices and votes are to settle he vexed questions that have become a stale story in every household in the land; and who are to decide in a few days the political fate of the men who have breath, while the inexorable votes will stamp victory or defeat on the bravely-borne banners of Canada's Cabinet. While the red fires of battle were being lighted at Waterloo "There was a sound of revelry by night, And Belgium's capital had gathered then Her beauty and her chivalry;"

and on the eve of the greatest political battle ever witnessed in Canada there seems no indication that any one appreciates the importance of approaching events. In the Senate galleries there is a constitution of the control of the events. In the Senate galacries there is a surging, swaying, heterogenous mass of faces, flounces, coats and fans, while a feu de joie of feminine whispers runs the round of the building. On the floor are a few solemn Senators; doctors, whose patients may get a chance for their lives in their absence; lawyers, dressed in broad cloths which of right should be on their clients' backs; Aldermen who, if they represented themselves alone, would they represented themselves alone, would even then have control over a large cor-poration; and preachers who are, who are—preachers.

Surrounding them are the invited ladles—showing a brilliant representation of Canada's fair daughters, and, and — their mothers. Youth, beauty and Cashion are pictured here. What does Miss So-and-so care about Pacific scandals, stolen letters, or red-handed Riels? She got her shining silks needled and threaded, fashioned and flouneed and flowered into their present gorgeousness, a thousand eyes are fixed upon her now—and among them the eyes that, that—look thunder and lightning when the owner of them meets her entering the opera house doors with "the other fellow." What cares she for parties or prorogations? She is at the "open ng and to-morrow her name will be in the papers.

OUT OF DOORS there are greater crowds, livelier music, and better salutes than on former occasions. Lord Dufferin must have felt the the occupied a large place in loyal Canadian hearts, as he listened to these "ringing British sheers" which greeted him all the way to the Parliament build-just as naturally as common people. Head and shoulders above them all tower the tall form of DAVID LAIRD. How a man could ever get so far up in such a little place as Prince Edward Island is a mystery. With him are four of his brother representatives, all of them for the first time taking their places in the great family gathering of the Dominion.

Immediately upon the conclusion of the speech, the vast throng once more sway and surge and struggle for the best place, which is now out of doors; a volley from the battery, salute by the guards, all blending with music and cheers, tell that Lord Dufferin is leaving the grounds; the crowdrushes in and soon fills the galleries of the HOUSE OF COMMONS; the ubiquitous reporters are at their stations; quickly the members file in, till it seems that almost every seat is filled; after months of a sort of guerilla warfare the rival forces at last face each other in regular battle array; the hero of a hundred fights, the much maligned but yet trusted leader of the government of our prospering Canada, is upon his feet.
