Reply to a Wife Wanted.

Whan matured in the heart of a true souled man 'Tis an innate desire sent mankind from above, To surround their earth life with joy peace & love Together progressing to the heavenly goal.
Assisting each other while dwelling below, With kindness and forbearance in weal & in t Yet methought I detected when perusing your ine selfishness in every line; And if I misjudge you, your pardon I crave, But in wanting a wife I think you wanted a slave One strong in health, efficient and true, Who would work day and night and solely for you Who would leave her country and every friend, And gratefully toil till life's journey should end, In return for which you promise her bliss, That in my opinion amounts to just this, Cross words and looks when her work didn't please Moroseness and coldness from morn until eve; But as men such as you sometimes get a wife, I hope you'll treat leniently your slave for life.
