the minister, by him to be kept from and struck a lamp post. He went all eyes until after they were drawn out round this fourteen times, and stopped, of the wheel in the regular way, while those for sale, with corresponding numbers, were given out to the committee. Now there was a young lady in the family where Tom boarded who did not exactly believe in his piety or honesty. She had seen quite enough to convince her that he was but a trifle better than the ordinary run to raseals, although his landlady had every belief in him.

This young lady saw the number 205 marked on the piece of paper, with a circle drawn around it, and she at once suspected that he was up to some reguery. Five hundred and two was, undoubtedly, to be a large prize, and she resolved to head him off. She was doing up the work in his chimber at the time of her dis covery, and taking a piece of rubber she obliterated 502 and wrote 502 in WHITE LEADS, the same place.

That evening Tom returned from business, and after dinner he slicked himself up, preparatory to visiting the fair, now on its closing night, calculating to buy a package of tickets, including, of course, that particular number.

It had already slipped from his mind, but just before starting away he con-sulted his memorandum; 502, that was it, of course; he remembered it now well enough; 502, and he repeated

Thus refreshed in memory, he started for the vestry, to carry out his sharp little game; and that pretty servant girl also slicked up and wept to the fair. She took about as much potice of him as he did of her, in everything save the purchase of tickets; in this respect Sarah took mere notice of him than he did of her. See kept pretty close to him until she heard him call for several tickets, among which was 205, and then she felt sure that her suspicions were correct. Tom purchased about fifty dollars' worth of tickets, to make it appear that he was above suspicion, and finding the magic 502 among the number he at once proposed to sell or do almost any thing elve. In fact he gave away nearly sll of the tickets to poor people, and made himself very popular with everybody save the suspicious Sarah. He soubbe her completely, not even recognizing her presence, and she said that he had a very good reason for doing so.

But the mir was brought to a close, and the announcement made that the remaining articles were to be disposed of the fellowing night by lottery, the tickets to which were nearly all sold at a dollar a piece.

Tom Average felt so egood that he away to a lot of young ladies, wishing each, at the same time the good luck to draw the piano, the particular object on which everybody's heart seemed to be set. At all events, the tickets were nearly all disposed of before the evening was over, and the party retired to dream of coming luck.

The next evening the vestry of the church was crowded, and after some in charge of a particular business friend, so as to appear above suspicion himself when the result was made known.

MAKES THE WEAK STRONG.

The Peruvian Syrup, a Protected Solution of the Protoxide of Iron, is so combined as to have the character of an aliment, as easily digested and assimilated with the blood as the simplest food. It increases the quantity of Nature's Own Vitalizing Agent, Iron in the blood, and cures "athousand ills," simply by Toning up, Invigorating and Vitalizing the System. The enriched and vitalized blood permeates every part of the body, repairing damages and waste, searching out morbid secretions, and leaving nothing for disease to feed upon.

This is the secret of the wonderful success of this remedy in curing Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Chronic Diarrhoea, Boils, Nervous Affections, Chills and Fever, Humors, Chills and Fevers, Humors, Loss of Constitutional Vigor, Diseases of the Kidneys' and Diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder, Female Complaints, and all diseases originating in a bad state of the blood, or accompanied by debility or a low state of the system. Being free from Alcohol, in any form, its energizing effects are not followed by corresponding reaction, but are permanent, infusing strength, vigor, and new life into all parts of the system, and building up an Iron Constitution.
