CHAPTER XXVIII
 THROUGH THE NIGHT.

She knew it by the seat, which, covered with snow, was plainly discernible under the huge elm in front of the door.

With palpitating heart this fugitive—from she scarcely knew what—this young and beautiful, and much envied woman fell against the post of the door, and felt with timid fingers for the latch.

Even at that moment a vague sense of the extraordinary and critical position in which she had placed herself flashed across her; alone at night, she was about to seek the protection of one of her own servants from her own guest!

There was no time for thought; she heard, or fancied she heard, voices in the distance; her thin, soft fingers pressed down the latch, and pushing the door open she stood upon the threshold.

A man was sitting before the fire with his head bowed forward, his eyes fixed upon the glowing blaze which irradiated and made cheerful the plain and rustic little room.

The whole scene, small and compact, seemed to strike upon her senses and convey an idea of safety, even of comfort.

For the first time since she had started in her wild flight she seemed conscious that it was snowing. She made a movement across the threshold, and the figure at the fire looked up.

The whole light of the room fell upon her lovely face, slightly flushed now, with its deep, eloquent eyes and sweet, sensitive mouth—the loveliness made almost unreal and visionary by the background of darkness and snow, by the absence of any cloak or covering about the graceful form.

The man looked with his heart in his eyes, with something of absolute fear on his face; then he made a step forward, and held out his arms, uttering her name as it had never been uttered before.

"Edna!"
 Edna stood spellbound, motionless, her eyes fixed on, and drinking in, the handsome face and stalwart figure. Then she threw up her arms with a wild, imploring gesture, as if she prayed that this vision might not be a dream and maddening delusion, and, with a low sob, fell into his strong arms.

No human pen could describe that moment of wild, conflicting emotion. She did not faint, she knew that, because she could feel his strong grasp tightening round with so viselike a clutch that it brought pain—a pain that was an agony of delicious joy. She longed, and yet dreaded, to hear him speak, lest the voice might wake her from the ecstatic dream.

And he seemed unable to utter a word, but each moment he drew her in a closer embrace, until she had, as it were, hidden herself in his infolding arms.

At last he spoke.
 "Edna! it is you—you, in real truth! Oh, my God! Have I gone mad with hiding, hiding! You came in there!"

—looking at the door as if he wanted some evidence of her reality—"Ah!" and he started. "It is snowing fast. Your hair, your face, your dress are wet! Merciful Heaven!"

And with a cry of agonized alarm, he snatched her from the ground as if she were a child, and kneeling close to the fire, held her in his arms.

"Edna! Edna! my darling, tell me what has happened! Why have you come in the night and through the snow like this? Oh, my darling! my darling!" and with all a strong man's tender apprehension, he chafed her hands and wiped the silken hair which now fell in a glittering wreath about him.

Edna lay on his arms, and drank in every word, every look of tenderness and passion with thirsty greediness. His touch seemed to burn her, his eyes thrilled her. She would have been content to die then and there, and have asked no greater boon.

It was his turn to tremble now. He looked round the room and tried to put her down for a moment, that he might reach a rug, but she clung to him, and shook her head—and spoke.

"No, no, do not leave me—Cyril!" He flushed a deep red, then turned pale with emotion.

She asked him not to leave her! She knew him—was it possible? Oh, God, was it possible that it had come at last—that she loved him?

"Cyril," she murmured, putting her arm round his neck; "you will not leave me!"

Then, as he seemed powerless to speak, she drew his head down to her and put her warm, soft lips to his, and he fell back on his arm, and he thought that she had fainted.

And the Worst is Yet to Come--

CHAPTER XXIX
 IN THE GAMEKEEPER'S HUT.
 WITH a cry of alarm, he reached the rug, and wrapped it round her, still holding her, and, taking a flask from his pocket, moistened her lips. In a few minutes she opened her eyes upon him, with a faint, dreamy smile.

"You are here still, Cyril? It is not a dream?"
 "No!" he said, with a long breath; "it is not a dream, my darling! See, I am here!"

She put up her hand and touched his face, with a little caressing wistfulness.

"You have promised not to leave me—never again. You will not let them take me from you?"

He kissed her twice, passionately, then glanced toward the door; it was still open, and must be shut. He dared not leave her for a moment, but he was nothing loath to take her in his arms, and he did so, shut the door, and came back to the fire, and silently dried her face and hair, as a mother might tend her child.

Passive, and with her eyes fixed on his, Edna lay back content.

"You are not angry that I have come?" she said, in a low voice. He smiled down at her.

"I should have come to you soon, my darling; my strength would not have lasted longer than to-night."

She sighed and shuddered.
 "If you had only been weaker, and I stronger. Oh, my darling, what can I say—what can I do to humble myself, and win you back to me—how to win your forgiveness?"

"Forgiveness!" he echoed, with a world of meaning. "Look into my eyes, Edna; do you see only forgiveness there? That word is for me—for me! Idiot that I have been!—blind, insensate fool!"

"Hush, hush!" she murmured, putting her tiny hands to his lips and leaving them there. "Not you, not you, Cyril, but I! It was all my fault! I was a foolish, ignorant girl! I ought to have died; and I—yet I have been punished; oh, how I have been punished! Cyril," suddenly, "I have never lived a day or night since—since that night, without thinking of you, longing, longing for you."

His eyes filled and he bit his lips.
 "If I had but known—but known," he muttered, hoarsely. "I thought that—that you hated me!"

"Hated you!" she murmured, "hated you!" and, as if words failed her, she nestled against his breast.

Suddenly she started and drew away from him, and looked round the room warily.

"Where am I?" she gasped. "Where am I? Alone—alone, at night!" and, with a cry of hysterical alarm, she drew away from him.

"Edna," he whispered in agony, "Edna, you are here, with me, with Cyril! Don't you know me? My God, she will go mad! Edna, what are you thinking? What do you fear? You are here, safe with your husband; Edna, my wife!"

With a start she looked at him, murmuring the word to herself.
 "Wife, wife! Your wife!"

Then a blush stole over her face, and she hid her eyes in his bosom.

"Yes," she murmured, "I remember. Is it true? Am I—I am I your wife?"

"My wife!" he cried, excitedly, pressing her to him. "My wife! Oh, God, I do not deserve this! My wife!"

Let us leave them in that moment of ecstatic joy—that rare moment of perfect happiness which comes to poor mortals but once or twice in their whole lives, and return to Morton. He had played his best and strongest card, and he knew it; as he turned, for one instant, before passing into the large room, he managed to let fall the curtain, and so shut his dazed and persecuted victim in her cage.

The card players were deep in their whist, and did not even look up. He moved behind Aunt Martha, so that he could command the curtain, and, motionless and silent, watched. No one, looking at him, would have guessed that the critical moment of his adventurous life was so near at hand. He was a little pale, and there was a drawn look about the thin, delicate mouth—but those were the only signs—and they were faint—of the storm of hope, doubt, fear and passion that was raging within him.

He stood, five—ten minutes—lightly leaning over a prie-dieu chair, apparently deeply interested in the

Easy to Make This Pine Cough Remedy
 Thousands of families, never by its prompt results, incurable, and saves about $2.

You know that pine is used in nearly all prescriptions and remedies for coughs. The reason is that pine contains several peculiar elements that have a remarkable effect in soothing and healing the membrane of the throat and chest. Pine is famous for this purpose.

Pine cough syrups are combinations of pine and syrup. The "syrup" part is usually plain granulated sugar syrup. To make the best pine cough remedy that money can buy, put 2½ ounces of pine in a 16-oz. bottle, and fill up with home-made sugar syrup. Or you can use clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup. Either way, you make 16 ounces—more than you can buy ready-made for $2.50. It is pure, good and very pleasant—children take it eagerly.

You can feel this take hold of a cough or cold in a way that means business. The cough may be dry, or it may be persistent, or it may be persistently loose from formation of phlegm. The cause is the same—irritation of the membrane—and this Pine and Syrup combination will stop it, did, too, for bronchial asthma, whooping cough, or any ordinary throat ailment.

Beware of substitutes. Ask your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pine" with directions, and don't buy anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction. Money promptly refunded. The Pine Co., Toronto, Ont.

game, and critically observant of every card that was played; but, in reality, he did not see a single card—he could not have told one suit from another; the very table seemed to dance under his eyes; but not a muscle of the well-trained face was beyond control, and the white hand resting on the dark oak chair was as firm as it had been when he fired the fatal bullet through the heart of the young Spanish lad who had crossed the path of his wonted pleasure. That white hand had more than one life to answer for, and its master had trained it perfectly, and got it under the most exquisite control; even in that supreme moment of suspense and excitement, such as he had never felt before, he could not withhold a tribute to his own indomitable self-possession. He looked at the hand, and raised it to stroke his mustache, with a ghastly smile; the hand was firm and tremorless, though his heart throbbled fiercely.

He looked for his watch—the time was now 10.15. Now to grasp the prize for which he had been contending and struggling for so many months—the prize which had grown in value in his estimation that its possession was as life or death to him.

With a languid air he strolled toward the curtain and lifted it. In an instant his sharp eyes detected the absence of his victim.

With a great leap his heart seemed to stand still. He clutched the curtain with the hand that had lost its cunning. Then he sauntered back to the room and bent over Aunt Martha.

"Miss Weston is rather tired," he said, "and has gone to her room."

"Gone!" said Aunt Martha, looking up, all anxiety on the instant. "Dear me! I didn't see her pass, and I have been watching in the glass opposite."

"She went from the next room," he said, with a smile that almost cost him too great an effort.

"The next room!" said Aunt Martha. "She can't, Capt. Morton; the door is locked on the outside—it always is, though why I do not know, for I am sure I am always thinking about it; but you see, my dear Lady More, the room is not much used."

He waited for no more, but glided past the curtains and made straight for the window. The cold air that came in seemed to mock and deride him.

With a smothered oath he tore the window open and looked out at the snow with the suddenly dazed air of a wild beast balked of the prey it has marked down for its next savage meal.

Then he turned swiftly, drew the curtain, slipped out, shut the window, and threw himself on his knees in the snow.

AN IMPORTANT DECISION.

PARIS, March 18. The fortifications on the Island of Heligoland, Germany's formidable base in the North Sea, must be dismantled. This decision was reached to-day by the Supreme Allied War Council. It was decided also that the Canal should be internationalized and made available to the ships of all nations on even terms. Tolls will be collected to pay for the maintenance of the Canal. Germany probably will retain sovereignty of the waterway. The Council has under consideration the question of maintaining Heligoland as a port of refuge for peaceful craft.

Disposition of the German warships is not likely to be included in the Treaty of Peace, according to the view of the American Peace delegation. Germany, however, will be required to surrender title to the ships. The ultimate ownership will be determined later.

BRITISH AVIATORS SHIPPED TO ST. JOHN'S.

LONDON, March 18. British aviators are to try for a night across the Atlantic. A secretly built airplane accompanied by Harry Hawker as pilot, and Commander MacKenzie Grieves, Royal Navy, as navigator, was shipped from England yesterday to St. John's, Nfld., from which it will start at the earliest possible moment in an attempt to win the Daily Mail prize of 10,000 pounds for the first machine to fly across the Atlantic. The machine is a Sopwith, two seater biplane with a 350 horsepower engine. The fuselage is boat-shaped and will support the machine in the water. Newfoundland lies in the nearer to Europe than any other part of North America, the distance being about 1,900 miles.

IN KOREA.

TOKIO, March 17. (By the A.P.)—Korean demonstrations continued Saturday and Sunday according to dispatches printed in newspapers here, and it is indicated the National Independence movement is remarkably extensive and well organized in some of the strongest provinces of that country. Reports state that the railway station at Pusan has been stoned by a mob of ten thousand persons, the Korean National flag being commonly displayed. There is some uneasiness at Seoul but the situation there is said to be under control.

MEETING OF PREMIERS.

PARIS, March 18. An important Conference with Premiers Lloyd George, Orlando and Clemenceau will be held at President Wilson's residence to-day. This gathering of Premiers, representing the supreme directing force of the Peace Conference, takes the place of the session of the Supreme Council which has been postponed until tomorrow to permit the meeting. The question to be discussed is the large question of securing accord between the Great Powers on all phases of the peace treaty, and its early presentation to the Germans. It is expected an agreement will be reached as to the inclusion of the League of Nations as an integral part of the peace treaty in accordance with the resolution which has been already accepted by the Peace Conference. Special interest attaches to to-day's conference in view of recent reports of divergencies between the powers as to the inclusion of the league plan in the treaty. The meeting is looked upon as an earnest, decisive effort to regulate all views into a common understanding for an early conclusion of peace in a comprehensive form, including military, naval, economic and financial terms as well as the League of Nations.

Cure the Skin Through

It is now thoroughly established among skin specialists that eczema is purely a skin disease, due to a germ beneath the skin and curable only through the skin. Thousands of people suffer with skin diseases who are perfectly healthy otherwise, which shows that their blood is not diseased. Ugly-tasting stomach remedies are therefore as worthless for skin diseases as they are for a toothache. Eczema germs must be WASHED AWAY. Smearly salves do no good—they cannot penetrate the skin.

have myself more than once suffered through a contributor's lack of imagination. While on this subject, let me say another little grievance: "Imperil not the reader's eyes By trying wondrous foolscap feat His temper and his sight it tries When reading right across the sheets!" And this is another way of saying "Don't submit manuscripts on foolscap, making the lines run the whole width of the paper." At the end of a long day, under rational electric light, it makes one dizzy.

To-Day's Messages.

9.00 A. M.

A BIG QUARTETTE.

PARIS, March 18. The important conference between President Wilson, Premier Lloyd George, Premier Clemenceau and President Orlando began at three o'clock this afternoon. It was expected that the meeting would last throughout the afternoon.

UNDER ALLIED CONTROL.

PARIS, March 18. The future navigation of the Rhine will be controlled by an Allied Commission, the Peace Conference Commission on an international regime of navigation on an international regime of navigation, railways, and waterways decided today. The Commission will replace the German-Holland Commission of before the war.

DEATHS EXCEED BIRTHS.

LONDON, March 18. For the first time since the establishment of the system of registration, deaths exceeded births in the last quarter of 1918, according to a report of the Registrar General, made public today. In the last quarter of 1918, the deaths exceeded those of the preceding quarter by 127,000. Influenza, it is declared, was the primary or contributory cause of an excess of 95,998 deaths in the quarter named.

NO DECISION.

PARIS, March 18. The French Commission, to study the subject of tunneling the English Channel, reached no decision at its meeting yesterday, to consider plans for a tunnel to be built under a Franco-English agreement.

A MERE VILLAGE.

PARIS, March 18. The population of Rheims which was 115,178 before the war, is now 44,531, according to a census just completed by the Government. Of this number 3,887 are men, 3,253 are women and 1,213 are children. Five hundred of the children attend school in the ruined city.

NEUTRAL'S RECOMMENDATIONS.

PARIS, March 18. In connection with the meeting of neutrals, to consider the constitution of the League of Nations, it was decided that the Danish delegates were composed of Deputy Minister Munch, former Premier Niergard and M. H. A. Bernhoff, Danish Minister in Paris. Norway is represented by Messrs. Buchmann and Castberg, and Baron De Wedel Jarlsberg, the Minister in Paris. The Dutch League for a last year's peace pact has adopted a resolution for presentation to the Peace Conference. On the subject of a League of Nations, the resolution proposes that a maximum be fixed for armaments, that the smaller powers have greater representation and that after a certain period, the resolution asks that the Hague be granted the honor of becoming the seat of the League of Nations. A despatch from Geneva quotes the Tribune of that city as declaring that it has received information from Berné that the Peace Conference will be formally requested to make Geneva the seat of the League of Nations.

WILL GERMANY DO IT!

PARIS, March 18. Although no final decision has yet been reached, it is said that the present plan of a majority of the five big nations contemplating attaching the Peace Treaty as an appendix. This would enable Germany to sign the Treaty without securing admission to the League, although at the same time she would accept the dictatorial principles.

ELECTED CHAIRMAN.

PARIS, March 18. Edwin S. Montague, British Secretary for India, has been elected Chairman of the Financial Commission of the Peace Conference. The duties of the commission are to report questions relating to currency, national debts and other financial matters necessary to be included in the Peace Treaty.

PILING THEM UP.

NEW YORK, N.Y., March 18. Ellman Root was named to-night as chairman of a committee of fifteen of the Association of the Bar of the City of New York, to consider all questions of international law arising in connection with the Peace Conference.

AND NEWFOUNDLANDERS TOO.

OTTAWA, Ont., March 18. A Royal Proclamation, dealing with the distribution of prize money to the fleet, has been received by the naval service here. In this distribution members of the Canadian Navy who performed service at sea are included on exactly the same basis as those of the British Navy. The proclamation defines the necessary service "as having been borne financial matters necessary to be included in the Peace Treaty.

of a parent ship for service in armed seagoing tenders." Offensively armed auxiliary vessels serving with the fleet are classed as ships of war, as are also trawlers, drifters, armed boarding vessels and ships of the auxiliary patrol.

SLEEPING SICKNESS VICTIM.

NEW YORK, N.Y., March 18. Another death from epidemic coma, or sleeping sickness, making the fourth to date, was reported to the Health Department to-day. The victim was a nine year old girl.

NEXT!

PARIS, March 18. The Government has under consideration, the Temps says, the sending of a French mission to Vienna to take charge of French economic interests in German-Austria.

LATEST.

A "REPUBLICAN" THREAT.

WASHINGTON, March 18. "If President Wilson does not negotiate a peace treaty satisfactory to the Senate," Senator Lenroot, of Wisconsin, "Republican," said in an address on the League of Nations, before the Washington Commercial Club here to-night, "Congress may pass a joint resolution summarily ending the war with Germany without a treaty, leaving American participation in the League of Nations to future determination."

THE PREMIER PRESIDENT.

LONDON, March 18. There is a strong feeling in political and diplomatic circles in Paris, in favor of inviting Herbert H. Asquith, former British Premier, to become the first President of the League of Nations, according to the Daily Mirror.

WITH GERMAN CREWS.

LONDON, March 18. Eight German steamers, including the Kaiserin Augustine Victoria, Cleveland, Graf Waldersee and Pretoria, sailed from Hamburg this week for foodstuffs, according to advices from Berlin. It is said the crews of the ships made a formal demand that they should not be removed from the vessels during the trip.

IN THE AIR.

PARIS, March 18. (A.P.)—In a report submitted to-day, the Commission appointed to consider plans for an international air code, announced that the British proposals have been in the main accepted. An international council will be formed, as a section of the League of Nations, to handle all matters relative to aerial navigation. It has been decided that each nation is entitled to sovereignty over the air above it, subject to the granting of permission for the passage of foreign aviators. There is to be no discrimination against any nation by another. Air pilots will be licensed on an international basis, and there will be international rules governing the right of way for airplanes and airships.

ACROSS ATLANTIC BY STEAM.

Savannah, Ga., March 11.—The centennial anniversary of transatlantic steam navigation will be celebrated here May 22, the date when the Savannah, the first ship to cross the Atlantic propelled by steam and the forerunner of the great ocean greyhounds of to-day, sailed from this port for Liverpool on her historic voyage.

The Savannah was built at New York City and was launched on August 22, 1818. She was mastered by the two Rogers—Capt. Moses Rogers being the commander and Capt. Steven Rogers the sailing master. The vessel left New York City March 28, 1819, and arrived in this city for the first time on April 12, 1819.

May 22, 1819, the trip across the Atlantic was started from this port. Everything went well until June 17, when the vessel was stopped by the British cutter Kite, whose commander thought the Savannah was on fire and stopped her to assist in fighting the flames.

The vessel was stopped outside Liverpool by an English sloop of war, whose commander wished the American vessel to display the British colors above its own. Capt. Rogers refused and threatened the British officer with a boiling water bath if he did not leave the ship. He immediately left.

The Savannah docked in Liverpool on June 20, after completing the voyage in 29 days and 11 hours. The engines were used only 18 days on the trip. The entrance of the Savannah under full steam caused excitement in Liverpool, and while the vessel remained in port it was the centre of interest. The Savannah then proceeded to Stockholm and September 19 arrived at St. Petersburg (now Petrograd), where she was inspected by the American and foreign ministers and the nobility.

The ship left St. Petersburg September 29th, 1819, and arrived in Savannah November 30, after an absence of 192 days.

This was the first and last trip of the Savannah across the Atlantic. Afterward her engines were removed and she was used as a sailing vessel between New York and Savannah. She was wrecked off Long Island in 1821.

SOME NEW RECIPES.

Fried Codfish. Three pounds of codfish, boiled in water with a little vinegar for ten minutes. Make a thin batter with one egg, flour and milk and salt. Cut codfish in slices, dip in batter and fry in deep hot lard to a golden brown.

Rolls Filets of Halibut. Cut two slices of halibut into filets, roll and fasten together with wooden skewers. Arrange thin slices of fat pork in a baking pan, cover with thin slices of onion and sprinkle with half a bay leaf broken in small pieces. Lay in the filets, spread them with creamed butter mixed with an equal quantity of flour, then sprinkle with buttered and seasoned crumbs and bake in a hot oven.

Fish Pie. Take the remains of a cold fish. Mackerel, cod or salmon preferred. Pick the bones out of the fish. Line a pie plate with a thin flakey crust. On this place a layer of the fish, sprinkle with salt and pepper, then a layer of cracker crumbs and chopped parsley. Repeat until dish is full. Then add some melted butter or a thin white sauce. Take a puff paste, cut into strips and put on top in cross bars. Bake for fifty minutes.

Old Fashioned way of Steaming Halibut. Cut the fish into pieces about four inches square, leaving out the bones; season it slightly with salt to taste and let it stand half an hour. Take it out of the salt, put it in a deep dish and scatter over it cayenne pepper, ground white ginger and grated nutmeg. Add one pint of vinegar and a little butter rolled in grated bread. Put the dish in slow oven and let it cook till well done, basting it frequently with the liquid. When nearly done, add a teaspoon of capers.

Most of us are familiar with the use of the term "white coal" to designate the power derived from streams. In Europe a distinction is made between white and green coal. Only the power derived from melting glaciers and snow caps is known as white coal, while other water powers are termed "green coal." But there is another vast source of power, namely that which may be derived from the waves and tides of the ocean; and this is now termed "blue coal."

In a recent issue of the Scientific American we discussed the world's visible supply of black coal and showed that estimated future rates of consumption, it could not last more than fifteen hundred years. "White coal" furnishes a virtually perpetual supply of power, but the quantity is limited. If we used all the available water power of this country, it would yield about sixty million horse-power, according to estimates of the U. S. Geological Survey. But much of this would not be commercially available as it represents the entire fall of all our streams. Forty million is a more conservative estimate; this is the equivalent of three hundred million tons of coal. Vast as this total may seem, it would not begin to meet even our present needs, for we are consuming today about five hundred million tons of coal. In time we shall be compelled to supplement of hydraulic powers with other stores of energy.

"Blue coal," by far the greatest store of energy on earth, has as yet been practically untouched. There are enormous difficulties in the way of harnessing the ocean. It is so irascible and when angered its fury is so violent that as yet no man-made wave-power plants have been able to stand up against its wild assaults.

But we are growing more powerful every day. Engineering projects are being undertaken which only a few years ago would have been thought impossible. The time may come when even the ocean temper will obey the will of man and turn its energies to useful work. More immediate, however, are the prospects of using the power of ocean tides.

So far, such little power as has been abstracted from ocean tides has been insignificant. The rise and fall of the tides is not very great, even though it does amount to seventy feet in some few places, and hence, if any considerable power is to be obtained, basins of large area must be used. By damming the bay of Mont St. Michel in France, where the tide rises about forty-five feet, it is estimated that enough power may be obtained to operate half of the industries of France. A French engineer with vast powers of imagination has conceived of building dikes across the channel and across the Thames estuary to form two large tidal basins which may be used alternately to furnish a continuous supply of power. An ambitious plan, to say the least, but history teaches us that the visionary scheme of to-day often turns out to be the practical commercial enterprise of to-morrow.—Scientific American.

Too Much Solitude.

By RUTH CAMERON.

RUTH CAMERON

Almost everyone enjoys having a certain amount of solitude or sympathy for his ill-health and near friends. But beyond that certain amount, there is, I think, a point at which such solitude becomes embarrassing and even downright annoying. "I don't dare stir at night," a man who has had some trouble with insomnia told me, for fear my wife will wake up and want to know if I'm not sleeping well, and if there is anything wrong, and if there is anything she can do for me. I know she means it in the best possible way and it is sweet of her, but it makes me so nervous that I lie there all cramped up for fear of stirring and getting her started.

She Asked Him Every Half Hour How He Felt.

Another man announced that the next time he was sick he was going to the hospital because his wife asked him every half hour how he felt. Women are much more prone to the habit of over solicitude than men. I think this is partly due to the fact that women are by nature more sympathetic than men. They have had more practice (perforce) in the great game of putting yourself in his place, and therefore, they feel other people's ill health more acutely. Another reason is, that health is a subject in which women are more interested than men. The proneness of women to talk disease and hold "organ recitals" has long been recognized. Who can imagine a gathering of men entertaining themselves that way?

We Were Afraid To Clear Our Throats.

The tremendous amount of ill-health in the whole country this winter has increased the tendency to dwell on the subject and to be over solicitous. Living at the Inn where I sometimes go for rest periods, there is a woman who is so much worked up on the subject of the "flu" that she drives everyone wild by her solitudes. We were told by her that Miss C. certainly was coming down with the "flu" for she saw her going to the doctor's. After that story had been spread about the Inn, Miss C. happened to remark that she had had a thorn in her finger for two weeks and had finally had the doctor take it out. Again, a single muffled sneeze on my part instantly brought out, "You're getting another cold. You're very susceptible to them, aren't you?" And she quite flabbergasted a man who did not know her habits by asking him where he got his cold. "I haven't any," he said. "You were blowing your nose," she retorted accusingly. One grew to be afraid of even clearing one's throat in her presence.

It Makes People Over Secretive.

The result of this eagle eyed watching was to induce an undue reticence in us all. There is nothing that I dislike more than unnatural reticence, the sort of secretiveness that makes a secret of its most ordinary movements, but on that visit I grew to understand it. They say that one thing that produces a pessimist is to have to live with an optimist. I suspect one thing that produces that secretiveness is living with people who are forever asking you unnecessary questions about your affairs.

DEMOCRACY.
He thought the world a lonely place. He grieved about the human race. And thought that crowds were vulgar things. And not worth while to know; He wanted men of high degree Always to share his company. And so he spurned the humble men Who daily come and go.

He could not see the fellowship That lies in every friendly grip. He never paused along his way To talk with humbleness; He thought the only friends worth while Were men of pomp and power and style. And so he sought the worldly great And worshipped their success.

But few men rise to wealth and fame, And few the distant heights may claim. Who waits to share the pomp of kings. Must tread a lonely way. Who spurns the pleasures commonplace, The glittering joys of life to chase. Must miss the dainties at his feet Where all the children play.

He'll miss the charm of friendship true. The deeds that kindly people do; He'll find the world a dismal place. Who lives alone for fame. For all the joys that poets pen Are in the breasts of humble men And he is rich who finds a friend. Whatever his rank or name.

So do not hold yourself afar. But walk where all the people are. Be nice in every smile you see And share in every song. You'll find the world a happy place And lit by many a smiling face. And warmed by many a kindly heart If you will join the throng.

Sailor collars are smart. Suits have very narrow belts. Afternoon dresses are not very long. Tricotine is correct for the street frock. Street frocks remain nearly ankle length. The round buttonhole grows more popular. The very flat, round collar is attractive. Large pearl buckles fasten the suit belt. Reefers are often partly outlined with buttons. Beaded fringe weights tunics of chiffon or net. Dance dresses are sashed in contrasting colors. The belts of the more frail gowns are often tucked. Flowered chiffon is excellent for the matinee frock. The evening gown still keeps the very short skirt. The tablier blouse is being made in wash materials. The frilled lingerie blouse is gaining in popularity. Capes and dolmans continue to gain in popularity. Skirts for afternoon wear promise to be more full. A revival of the real lace collar is strongly suggested. Pineapple straw decorates the smartest sailor hats. Embroidery is used on so many of the wooden frocks. Attractive camileos have tops of dainty tuck net. Trains have a way of falling gracefully from one hip. Many of the spring suits are developed in tan or gray. Taffeta is a most popular material for the spring frock. For sports wear there are white skirts of fine white twill.

REMOVING DUST AND GRIME OF TRAVEL.
As soon as you arrive at your summer destination cleanse the face and hands from all train grime with water softened with borax. A few pennies to the hotel or boarding-house maid will bring the hot water you want if it does not run in your room, and if your eyes have been made sensitive with dust apply a little water, slightly salted with the eye cup from your beauty box. Eyes fearfully lacerated with cinders are often soothed in this way; besides, the salt bath brightens the eyes. If this membrane of your nose is inflamed (a distress from which travellers frequently suffer), the warm water and salt can likewise be poured into the nostrils with healing benefit. Hold the head backward, but perfectly straight, so that the water will not run into the ear passage. A glass nasal douche, which costs fifteen cents, is the best instrument for this, but the trick can be managed with the eye cup or even a common drinking cup, or glass. Put the tinsel pinch of salt in the water, which should be scarcely more than tepid. Of course, your hair, so beautifully washed before leaving home, has taken on what seems a peck of dirt with the long trip, but only bear in mind that you must wash it soon and then rest a few days. When the wash day comes, fee the maid again and ask her to bring you two fresh eggs and a pair of crockery kitchen towels with the necessary hot water. Into one of the bowls break the eggs and beat them up well, and into the other scrape four tablespoonfuls of powder from a cake of castile soap—the kind treated with olive oil. Then pour a little hot water on the powder and a wee bit of suds to the egg bowl. This holds the shampoo proper, for it is only after the soapy egg is well massaged into the scalp that the plain suds are put on and treated in the same way. Three rinsings will leave the hair as clean as a pin, and all the head wonderfully refreshed.

Milady's Boudoir.
WINTER RAIN.
The rain pours down by day and night; it's wet and mostly water; it makes the world a sodden sight. It makes my reason totter. It looks as though 'twould never cease, or take a small vacation; but it is good for ducks and geese, and that's a consolation. I'm glad it's not a total loss, this rain so moist and galling; I'm glad that it can come across with some excuse for falling. It makes the town a dismal place, where men all cuss together; and there's a scowl on every face; we sigh for brighter weather. The merchant princes in their stores are far from being sunny; no patrons seek their well known doors to blow in useful money. No farmers' wagons stand around, the main street is deserted; we raise a sad and wailing sound, and many tears are squirted. The wether bureau's slipped some cogs, against the people's wishes; yet rain is good for snakes and frogs and divers kinds of fishes. We always should remember this, that nothing's vain or useless; and we'd be just as shy of bliss if days were dry and juiceless. So let us dig up gaudy smiles, eschew the blues and willies; the rain is good for crocodiles, for rice and water lilies.

THE STORY OF GEORGE

How Singer Came to

L. C. MORSE CHAPTER

HOW I MET SINGER. When I was on the evening of Sept. 15th, 1918, that I first met this man; but I had heard of him the day before, when I was referred to there was in St. John's a branch of the Y.M.C.A., and some other agencies, it conducted Gospel service on Sunday evenings at the old Temperance Hall. These services began at a quarter past eight, and were attended by a very large class of people. On the date that I was quoted as the duty of leading the singing fell to me, and it was in this connection that I met George Singer. He was introduced to me by one of the committee, as an Evangelist from Newfoundland, and after a short consultation it was decided to permit the speaker to address the meeting. In appearance he was like a military man, or a naval man. He wore blue serge clothes, and looked like the officer of an ocean liner. In tone of voice was clear and audible; but a speaker he was quite common. During his address he made a remark which arrested my attention particularly, and which led to my close acquaintance with him, and finally led up to this story. He said that he would want a place to stay; the exact words which he used were as follows: "We shall want homes at which to stay." At the close of the meeting I watched to see if any one would offer him a place; but none did so. When all the people had gone, I asked him what he had by wanting a place to stay at, and he told me that he had not anywhere to go, and that he was waiting for Dr. Sall to arrive from England the week, and that the latter would put things in order for him and work. I then said to him, "Well, I am a greater person will give you lodgings for a day or so, I will." With this I left him in care of the gentleman who had introduced him to me, and went to my home. The next morning before breakfast, the gentleman brought Singer into my premises, and asked me if I intended to do what I said in the matter of boarding him. I immediately affirmed my promise, and took the man into my home, with the clear understanding, that he was to have the week's board and lodging free, and that by that time he would be in position to go on with his mission, and that he would have funds to meet his expenses. The week expired and in the meantime the Allan boat had arrived from Liverpool, and the Rev. Dr. Sall was one of the passengers. This tended to make the case look all right for Singer; and when he stayed at our home for a little longer period than we agreed upon, we did not mind it. We knew that delays often occur in the best of arrangements. But it became apparent that something was wrong between Dr. Sall and Mr. Singer, and that the work which they had agreed upon at Liverpool, and for

L. C. MORRIS.
CHAPTER II.

HOW I MET SINGER.
It was on the evening of Sept. 15th, 1918, that I first met this man; but I had heard of him the day before, through not hearing his name. At the time I referred to there was in St. John's a branch of the Y.M.C.A., and among other agencies, it conducted Gospel service on Sunday evenings in the old Temperance Hall. These services began at a quarter past eight, and were attended by a very large number of people. On the date when I was quoted the duty of leading the service fell to me, and it was in this connection that I met George Singer.

He was introduced to me by one of the committee, as an Evangelist from England, and after a short consultation it was decided to permit the stranger to address the meeting. In appearance he was like a military officer, and he wore a military uniform. He wore blue overalls, and looked like the second officer of an ocean liner. In tone of voice was clear and audible; but a speaker he was quite common.

During his address he made a remark which attracted my attention particularly, and which led to my close acquaintance with him. He finally led up to this story. He said that he would want a place to stay; the exact words which he used were as follows: "We shall want some homes at which to stay." At the time of the meeting I watched to see if any one would offer him a place; but no one did so. When all the people had gone, I asked him what he wanted by wanting a place to stay at, and he told me that he had been waiting to go, and that he was waiting for Dr. Sall to arrive from England the next morning before breakfast, and that the gentleman brought Singer into the premises, and asked me if I intended to do what I said in the matter of housing him. I immediately made my promise, and took the man into my home, with the clear understanding that he was to have a week's board and lodging free, and that by that time he would be in possession to go on with his work, and that he would have funds to meet his expenses.

The week expired and in the meantime the Allan boat had arrived from Liverpool, and the Rev. Dr. Sall was on board. This tended to make the case look all right for Singer; and when he stayed at our home for a little longer period than we agreed upon, we did not mind it, as we knew that delays often occur in the best of arrangements. But it became apparent that something was wrong between Dr. Sall and Mr. Singer, and that the work which they agreed upon at Liverpool, and for which the latter came to St. John's, was hanging fire. And so day after day passed, and the case became hopeless as far as his engagement with Dr. Sall went, and Singer was alone in a strange land, and with not a shilling to pay his expenses.

For six weeks George W. Singer had to stay at my home, and it was during that period that I made a study of the man, and learned his peculiarities, and it began to dawn upon me that he was a sort of mis-fit; and that there was something seriously wrong somewhere, or at sometime with him; but it was not until after he had been imprisoned, and all the evidence lay before me, that it occurred to me that he was the man for whom the London police were looking under the name of Jack the Ripper.

Altogether Singer spent more than a year in St. John's, and then he spent some time at Clarke's Beach and Salmon Cove, and he managed to keep himself respectable, and passable; but he lived daily at death's door, and were it not for the aid of some kind friends he surely must have perished. I have said that Singer was a deluded man, and so he was—he was the most deluded person I have ever met. I intend to devote a chapter to some of his delusions, so that my readers will be able to judge for themselves to what extremes a man may be carried in error, wrong, and suffering, and think it is the will of some higher power, when it is all his own doing.

After enduring much private remorse, and having almost exhausted the patience and goodwill of his friends, Singer was suspected of some improper conduct among boys, and was sentenced to one year's imprisonment with hard labor in the Penitentiary. He served his year and was sent out of the country, and nothing reliable was heard from him; although it was rumored in police circles that he was hanged in London for the murder of a woman. I made inquiry and found that the report had come from the late Inspector General of Police, who at the time of the murder was very prominent in all such matters. The rumor came to St. John's about two years after Singer had been transported. This report gave support to my suspicions of Singer, as all the while he was in Newfoundland, there were not any crimes committed at Hyde Park of the nature of those perpetrated by the man known as Jack the Ripper. But the facts as I shall relate them, will speak for themselves; and then, as I have already stated, my readers will be able to form their own conclusions in the matter.

Not Fooled by Huns.

Coblenz, March 11.—Anti-American riots in Berlin have served to awaken Uncle Sam's 275,000 soldiers here in Germany to the fact that perhaps there will be some excitement for them after all. Despite current reports elsewhere that the American army of occupation has so thoroughly made up with the Germans that the men are sorry they ever fought them, a single call tomorrow for volunteers to march on Berlin or some other German city to safeguard American interests would be answered by every man.

Warning From the Super-Government.

Mr. William H. Anderson, Superintendent of the New York Anti-Saloon League, has issued another message. Certain traitors and malefactors in the subordinate body have dared to talk about legalizing the sale of beer and light wines. They have composed a concurrent resolution, a "shameful" resolution for the purpose of unratifying and nullifying the Prohibition Amendment, passed by order of the Anti-Saloon League. Any such plunger into wetness, the Fount of Government says, will not be submitted to by the people. Efforts at nullification, delays of the court in responding to the sacred ardor of the Drys, will result in "carrying the issue into the next campaign."

St. Pierre and Miquelon.

In the great clearing house of territorial and racial balances the Peace Congress is conducting in Paris there may be settlements that were little dreamt of even when the armistice was agreed upon, and it is certain that some of the fantastic changes dreamt of will not be made. Denmark is not likely to be asked, and is still less likely to offer, to transfer Greenland to Canada. The French Government has declared that it will not part with Miquelon and St. Pierre, island possessions of France lying close to the south coast of Newfoundland. These islands are the headquarters of the French fishing fleet that operates on the cod banks off Newfoundland every year, and because of their utility in that connection and because the small French population on the islands look to their mother country for aid in times of food scarcity, the French Government has no thought of exchanging the islands. If it were to entertain the idea of disposing of them, it would doubtless be to Newfoundland or Canada they would pass. No foreign power should be interested in acquiring them and no foreign power ought to have a chance to acquire them, says the Toronto Mail and Empire.

A very enjoyable evening was spent by all present; the National Anthem closing the function.

St. Pierre and Miquelon.

Those rocky islands are worthless for agriculture. If it were not for the abundance of fish yielded by the waters about them the slender population would starve. The town of St. Pierre, which was for a long time the emporium of a smuggling trade carried on by a daring band of seafarers at the expense of the Canadian, Newfoundland and American revenue, may see a revival of its fame and fortunes in that field of enterprise. Now that Canada is so nearly covered by prohibition legislation and that the United States seems to be on the eve of becoming entirely "dry," the bold skippers who used to run into St. Pierre with cargoes of rum and other contraband of trade, and from the center distribute their merchandise to their confidential customers in the coves of the St. Lawrence, of the Maritime Provinces and of the Eastern States, may find inducements to their business more inviting than ever. For a long time no representative of Britain was permitted to act in a consular capacity at St. Pierre. That was owing to the extremely private nature of the business centering in that port.—N. Y.
