Mr. Smith (Lincoln): Mr. Chairman, I should like at this time to speak for a few moments on sponsored immigration. I firmly believe that in order to maintain our economy and keep abreast of the pace of expansion it is necessary to have a steady flow of good immigrants to Canada. However, I am well aware that if we open the gates wide at the present time many people may come to Canada and find themselves facing difficulties in terms of securing employment and becoming established.

I have mentioned immigrants coming to this country being sponsored by their friends and relations here in Canada. When I speak on their behalf I speak for a large group of Canadians, especially new Canadians, who are trying desperately at the present time to bring to Canada from different parts of Europe their friends and relations who are living under troubled conditions. I know that at the present time practically all the immigrants who are coming here are coming under sponsorship. I should like to make some suggestions to the minister and I make them in a friendly way. Sometimes I have disagreed with decisions which the minister has made, and she might feel that I am a little hard. However, that part of Canada known as the Niagara peninsula, which I represent, is a fine place in which to live and there are a great many people from different parts of Europe who wish to come to live there. There are some countries in Europe from which it is easier to get to Canada than from others. They are allowed to bring mothers, fathers, wives, husbands, brothers and sisters. From some countries they are allowed to bring nieces and nephews and from others they are allowed to bring fiancees and also brides and husbands, but for some other countries the restrictions are very tough. I think the regulation should be the same for all countries. May I give an instance?

I have a letter here which I received from the department in connection with a family that is trying to get here from Poland. We were making very good progress. They had been approved as far as the local offices here were concerned and we were expecting to get word any day that they were on their way. However, I am informed today that the family here has been advised that the group they were sponsoring from Poland, which consisted of a father, mother and two daughters, were in this position. It had been discovered that one of the daughters is 20 years of age and therefore she is barred from coming to Canada. I think this is very unfortunate; it is a situation which should be corrected because how can a family come from Poland and leave a daughter 20 years of age who is really a juvenile in law?

I should like to make this point at this time. Our regulations require some changes so that a family of that kind would all be allowed to come here rather than debar one because she is 20 years of age? I could recite a good many cases that have come to my attention, cases that I have worked on but they are all more or less the same. In so far as some countries are concerned, as soon as a child or any person gets over a certain age he cannot come here. I could refer to another case which is similar. A girl is 21, and of course she is completely debarred from coming here to a good home and an opportunity for a real education and a chance to make good in this country.

There is also the question of fiancees. I think this is a matter to which we should give some consideration. I might say that I was involved in a case not so long ago where I found it was permissible for sisters to come to this country but not fiancees. This particular person arrived here as a sister but she was actually affianced. I thought that when she was here that would be the end of it, that we could write it off; but unfortunately we ran into a problem with the monsignor of the catholic church who said, "It is fine, the girl gets in here but you know we cannot marry brothers and sisters so you will have to do something about it." I should just like to say to the minister that everything turned out all right. The girl got married and they disappeared, and I burned my file with as much glee as a Presbyterian minister when he burns the mortgage on the church when the debt is paid.

I am not going to make a long speech on this, Mr. Chairman, but I should like to make a special appeal for sponsored immigrants. I suggest that the regulations be broadened in such a way that not only close relations but those who are probably just on the fringe could come here. After all, when most people come here they come under sponsorship and the party who is bringing them out undertakes to see that they become established in this country and to look after them until such time as they are able to become settled and make way for themselves. I do not see why we should not open up that type of immigration and bring more people of that kind to this country.

I might also make some remarks about Chinese people who are British subjects from Hong Kong. I know this is a matter which is controversial but nevertheless it has been my pleasure to know people of this kind who have landed in this country for one reason or another and then find that they have to be deported. It is very unfortunate that they should be deported, especially at the present time when the regulations permit them to make their application in Canada rather than go back home again and try from there.

There is also the question of the Chinese people who came to Canada in years gone by, made good and have quite a stake in the country. They wish to bring their children to this country. There again they are up against the problem that if the children are over 21 years of age they cannot come here. Hong Kong is at least a part of the British commonwealth of nations. We should give some consideration to special cases of that kind. I do not say that we should open up the gates and allow a great many Chinese people to come here; I am against that but in certain cases we should perhaps do better than we are doing at the present time.

This is about all I have to say at the present time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I discovered last year that if one wanted to get a full answer to questions from the Department of Citizenship and Immigration one had to pose his questions early and the minister would pick them up. I would like her to report later on what the situation is at the present time in the two countries of Italy and Poland in so far as people coming out here are concerned. I know that the difficulty in Poland is largely one of making arrangements with the present Polish government to expedite the movement of people who are eligible to come here to join relatives but who have blocks thrown in their way by the government of Poland. I should like to have a report on how that is coming along and whether there is any noticeable improvement.

I gather that the problem in Italy, and it has been brought up several times, is the fact of only having one centre, that at Rome, and because so many people are eligible to come here the facilities in Rome are not able to process them with any speed. I should like to know from the minister what the backlog is now, whether it has been reduced recently and whether there is any intention to increase the staff in Italy in order to move more of these people out here who have been proven eligible to come.

There is one other point in connection with immigration from Italy which I should like to bring to the minister's attention, and I have done so before in another form. I refer to the kind of assessment that is made of prospective emigrants to Canada in so far as their political background is concerned. I have talked recently to two Canadian businessmen of Italian origin who have been over there. They say that in some parts of Italy, especially in the south, there is a tendency for anyone who has opened his mouth at all at any time in the last 15 or 20 years to be labelled as a communist. These men both told me that they felt the department should take a very close look at any adverse reports that may come out of southern Italy with respect to the political complexion of people because so often people who really have no link or tie with the communist party are labelled in that manner.

Furthermore, many people who have taken part in political activity within the ranks of the social democrats are labelled as communists by the parish priest and other officials who make reports to the Canadian immigration department. I agree with the hon. member for Danforth who made the point that we need close screening in order to keep out people with radical or left wing persuasions of the communist kind, but from at least two cases I have encountered in my constituency I certainly have the feeling that people are being prevented from coming here because of political activities or sympathies that have been assumed to be communist when in fact they are really not that at all.

There is one other matter I have taken up with the minister and about which we have had certain discussions. I refer to the minister and her officials being placed almost in the role of Dorothy Dixes or intermediaries in lovelorn affairs.

Mrs. Fairclough: I thought you were the specialist in that.

Mr. Fisher: I think everyone tends to think that they are. The minister knows the cases of which I speak. It does seem to me that it is time the department tried to work out some crisper form of regulation with respect to people coming to Canada to get married because the minister will be aware of a couple of cases where true love seems to have faded as soon as the arrival of the affianced in the particular community took place. I understand there has been a tendency for this kind of thing to become a racket in some ways. There is really no love or romance at all in some of these arrangements. I know that in Europe it is often argued that this kind of arrangement makes for a much more solid base for marriage, but on the other hand we have these people coming out here to Canada supposedly intending to go through a marriage ceremony and very often the marriages do not take place. I think it would be very interesting if the minister could give us some statistical information on what happens in these cases. I do not want to give publicly the details of two cases that I am aware of because we are still in hopes that something may be done about them.

Mr. Pickersgill: Are you Cupid?

Mr. Fisher: But it is very awkward when someone in Canada spends money and goes to a great deal of effort to bring out a potential husband or wife and then discovers when they get here that true love really was not the impetus at all. It was simply a chance to partake generally of the Canadian scene. I hope the department will look into this matter.

There is one final point I wish to make with regard to immigration. It has to do with the particular ethnic group that happens to be the largest in our region, people who have come from Finland. One point that has been brought to my attention by people in the Finnish community with respect to immigration from Finland is that its character has changed to quite an extent. Anyone who drives round the lakehead region will realize that a great deal of the backbone of the whole community, so far as farming and bush work are concerned, is provided by people of Finnish stock. That is as it should be when one recognizes that Finland is an area about the same size as my constituency with roughly the same climate, the same amount of arable soil but with a population of approximately seven million whereas the constituency has a population of 90,000.

The Finns are experts at logging and a combination of bush farming and logging in their own country which makes them ideal immigrants for our part of the country and for the whole boreal forest band. But what has been noticeable about recent Finnish immigration is that so many of the people are from the cities. Because these people are such a premium to our area I wonder if a really strong effort could not be made when immigration does broaden to go after the people in the Finnish country districts in order to get more of them out here. We know that the majority of them will tend to come to our part of the country because the Finnish community has a solidarity based upon its own cultural institutions and its own newspaper that makes Port Arthur a magnet much more than any other community in North America for people from Finland.

The whole lakehead area is aware of how much this kind of immigration has meant to the region. We believe that we have land for agricultural development which would really benefit from this type of immigrant. From conversations I have had with a number of people in the Finnish Lutheran Church I know that they would welcome the opportunity to co-operate by making contacts in the rural districts of Finland in order to get more of the kind of people over here who can step right into our woods areas and who will have the background and the experience that no other type of immigrant from Europe really has, with the possible exception of some from Norway.

In the boreal forest area we have a very peculiar kind of farming and logging problem that is only paralleled in Finland and Russia. We do not expect to get any immigrants from Russia and we have had these people of a very high standard from Finland who have meant so much to our country. I would ask the minister to take under active consideration the matter of going into the rural districts of Finland so that we can get more of that type of person over here. As a corollary to these remarks may I say I do not want to give the impression that I think the people from the cities of Finland are not worth-while immigrants, but in terms of usefulness and being a real boon to the area they have no advantages over people from any other part of the world while the people from the rural areas of Finland certainly have.

In conclusion, I should like to say that I hope the minister will be some time in this particular portfolio. I, for one, have found her very agreeable in so far as immigration and citizenship problems are concerned. I hope she manages, in the next few years, to make a real mark of the best kind in this particular role she has before she is called away to what I imagine will be the higher responsibilities that her general abilities, I am sure, will warrant.

Mr. Crestohl: I should like to make one or two additional observations, if I may. I am sure the discussions this afternoon on these estimates, in the presence of the minister and her senior officials, are very helpful in enabling them to observe how the whole house, with very few exceptions, has seized upon what I should like to call the new obiter dictum from the Prime Minister with respect to immigration. The house has seized upon his words to the effect that Canada must have new population from immigration if it wants to hold and develop its resources. Practically the whole house has seized also on the Prime Minister's warning to Canada that we must either populate or perish.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope too that the house and the departmental officials, as well as the minister, may accept two other warnings that the Prime Minister gave. I am now quoting from the Montreal Gazette of April 27, 1957, which states:

> The Conservatives, he continued, will end the arbitrary and unjust interpretation of immigration regulations—

He also said with equal strength in a statement appearing in the Globe and Mail on April 27, 1957, and I quote from that article:

> He—

That is the Prime Minister.

> —pledged a more vigorous immigration policy would step up the flow of skilled immigrants, end the "bureaucratic" interpretation of the immigration act, and ensure that humanitarianism would be considered more often in handling immigration applications.

I quote these two admonitions or what I might call promises from the Prime Minister because they go hand in hand with this plea for increased immigration. That is why I emphasize them at the present time, so the minister and her officials will also be aware —I am sure they are already aware—of the Prime Minister's desire that these immigration regulations be not interpreted so restrictively, so harshly and right to the letter of the law, but that a more generous interpretation of these regulations be made. In that way, I am sure that the house will give effect to the Prime Minister's desire that we have an immigration policy that is expansive rather than restrictive, as he advocated in his speech on April 27, 1957.

Mr. Pickersgill: I just want to make a couple of brief observations before the hon. lady speaks, as I hope she is going to do. I should like to echo what was said by the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke at the beginning of the debate. I have in my hand a copy of an article by Mr. Stanley Burke, who is a correspondent I think for all Southam papers but this appeared in the Citizen of February 13. I am not going to inflict it on the hon. lady or on the committee because I daresay the hon. lady has at least read it. The article is along the lines of what was said by the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke.

I think we should make an effort as Canadians to take some part in this refugee year, and try to do a reasonable and proportionate share to draw to a conclusion this refugee problem once and for all in the hope we are not going to face the kind of world in which new refugee problems will be created, though that might well be. There is one real difficulty about this which the minister knows as well as I do, and that is once one year has passed, according to present practice and present policy—at least, it certainly was the policy when we were in office—any responsibility for relief or assistance or anything of that sort ceases to be a federal responsibility and becomes a provincial responsibility. In view of that situation we took the view, when we were in office, and so far as I know the hon. lady still does, that we should not bring people into a province who were suffering from some kind of disability, temporary or permanent, unless the provincial authorities agreed and unless reasonable provision was made for treatment.

I do not believe, having regard to our federal constitution, that it is very reasonable for a government to take any other attitude than that. It is not right for us to deliberately create problems for the provincial governments. I know that I did have some difficulties, particularly in the case of the hon. lady's own province, and I hope that may be changed. I noticed, perhaps it is the shadow of events to come, that in that province they have now set up a citizenship branch in their own government. I must say I am from Missouri about this and I will have to be shown that there is a more humane attitude than there was when I was in office. Perhaps the hon. lady has more influence with Queen's Park than I had. There is where at least half of these cases arise, and I think if we are to do anything effective about relatives, particularly elderly relatives—there are a great many of them—of residents of Canada who want to come here, not to go into the labour market but merely to live in their old age with their families and who, because they had a spot on their lung or something of that sort, are denied admission, it might be useful if the hon. lady could get an agreement with the provinces. I do not think we necessarily have to have agreements with all of them because in some provinces there are practically no cases. Perhaps some sort of policy could be worked out in this refugee year. I do not think we should take all of them, but we could do a reasonable share in this field.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the committee will agree with me that the discussion we have had this afternoon has been most interesting. If anyone needed proof of the diverse problems which confront this department, I am sure that has been furnished in the remarks of the members today. I shall attempt to answer a few of the questions that have been put to me. I hope that if there are any specific questions to which hon. members would like answers, and which I inadvertently overlook, they will tell me.

There are two or three things I should like to say, and one of them is in reply to the hon. member for Cartier and his last plea for a humanitarian approach to this problem. It has been my aim ever since taking the responsibility for this department to administer the affairs of the department in a humanitarian way. Of course, there are cases where the decision is not only difficult but possibly unfortunate. I can well understand that hon. members who present cases that they feel are very strong cases must be disappointed if the decision which is made is an adverse one. However, that is one of the responsibilities of this office and one which I cannot shirk.

A number of pleas have been made for co-operation in this international refugee year. This is, of course, a problem which will have to be solved by this department in conjunction with other departments of government, notably the Department of External Affairs. This is a problem which we are looking into at the present time. However, I should like to point out to members of the committee that while this hard-core problem is there and has been there for some time, it presents a peculiar problem, as has been mentioned by several hon. members, and just a few minutes ago by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

This matter of bringing people into this country to go immediately into hospitals must be cleared, I think, with the provincial authorities. I am sure that all members interested know that in various sections of the country local committees are being set up to explore the possibility of co-operation in this matter. Before long I think we shall probably have the type of co-operation we need. Just how far we can go along that road remains to be seen. We have nothing to be ashamed of in the matter of our reception of refugees over the years. If my memory serves me correctly, I think that since the war years something like 180,000 refugees have been taken into this country.

Mr. Pickersgill: More than that, I think.

Mrs. Fairclough: My official tells me that officially the figure is 180,000. Then, of course, there were many who were not classed as refugees who came in in the regular way. Of those we have no count.

Mr. Pickersgill: That figure of 180,000 does not include Hungarians, does it?

Mrs. Fairclough: No.

Mr. Pickersgill: So the figure is really about 220,000?

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes. We had some 38,000 Hungarians. With respect to the matter of health, I might say also that of those 38,000 Hungarians who came in it is estimated by the Department of National Health and Welfare that some 900 went into hospitals. We have therefore made a considerable contribution to the solution of the refugee problem. In addition to that, I might say that cash contributions I think including this year will total over $1 million. That is another contribution that has been made by Canadians to the solution of this problem. We should like to co-operate in this international refugee year. It comes, of course, right on the heels of the assistance which we gave to the Hungarians, a matter which was discussed in this chamber this afternoon. As I said, we shall have to wait and see what develops out of the various offers of co-operation which will be forthcoming from Canadians generally. I should like to make just one comment with regard to the oft-repeated criticism of the size of immigration last year or of the number of immigrants who came into this country last year as compared with 1958.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the hon. lady not mean 1957?

Mrs. Fairclough: I mean 1957. I am sure that hon. members of this committee, when they seriously look at these figures, will realize that this is no fair comparison at all. The year 1957 was the most unusual year in the history of Canada since about 1913. As a matter of fact, the average for the last ten years, if you exclude 1957, was 153,000. Even in taking that average, you include the other bumper year of 1951 when the refugee camps in Europe were cleaned out. I therefore do not think it is reasonable to take the figure of 282,000 as a normal figure. As a matter of fact, if you take out the bumper year of 1951 and that of 1957 you have an average of some 132,000 over the last ten years, a figure which is not too far removed from the nearly 125,000 which came in last year.

In reply to the hon. member for Fort William who quoted Mr. Rhys Sale with regard to the five per cent increase, I should like to say that if he will consult the Canada Year Book he will find out that it is just about the increase that we have had in population over the past few years. It averages out to just about that figure, namely 500,000 per year, including both natural increase and immigration.

There are a couple of specific questions, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Badanai: Will the minister permit me to ask a question?

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes.

Mr. Badanai: It concerns sponsored applicants. What is the attitude of the government now with regard to young fellows who are single and who have been assured employment on their arrival here? I know of cases where their applications have been turned down.

Mrs. Fairclough: I am afraid, Mr. Chairman, that I do not understand what the hon. member is talking about.

Mr. Badanai: I am referring to applications from young immigrants of say 20 years of age or 30 years of age who are single, who wish to come out here from Italy, who have made applications; and whose applications were supported by sponsors here in Canada guaranteeing employment.

Mrs. Fairclough: Of course the situation in Italy is probably different from that in any other country because of the terrific backlog there. I will answer the hon. member's question in the course of my remarks on this subject because it all ties in with remarks made in this chamber by various members.

It is true that during this last year immigration from the United Kingdom fell from the first place. I do not think that was so much a matter of design as of accident. It is notable that the people from the United Kingdom, once they are in this country, do not resort to the sponsoring of relatives in the same way as do immigrants from other countries. Italy is the one country which in great volume sponsors relatives. It seems that immigrants from Italy, immediately they come to this land and are here for the required length of time, want to bring out their brothers, sisters and other relatives. That has been mainly the reason for the huge backlog which has built up in Italy. I may say that it is a backlog which causes us a great deal of concern. If a person applies to come to this country and, as my hon. friend says, is an able bodied young man and should find a future here, it is most unfortunate that he should be obliged to wait a great length of time before being considered because there are so many ahead of him.

Someone asked me this afternoon—and without reference to my notes I cannot recall who it was—what the backlog actually was now.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was the hon. member for Port Arthur.

Mrs. Fairclough: I think I am correct in saying that the total backlog in Italy now is some 63,000. Last year it was about 60,000. Two years prior to that it was about 47,000. Despite that fact, the number of Italians who are coming into the country is growing each year. So, Mr. Chairman, you can visualize the problem which presents itself to this department. We are trying extremely hard to solve that problem as well as many others which have presented themselves to us. If that figure is wrong, I will get the correct one in just a moment. In round figures, that figure of 63,000 is correct.

I should like to answer a few of the questions that were put to me by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate when he spoke the other day. With regard to the establishment of judicial or quasi-judicial boards to look into the procedure for persons who are refused visas in sponsored cases and in other cases also, this is a matter that is still under view, I am sorry to say. The hon. member knows as well as I do what a difficult problem it is to solve. We do not want to make any mistakes and it is still being considered. I have not got the solution yet but I do hope to have it.

There was some question about immigration from Poland. I think the house should be informed that from 1953 to 1958 yearly the numbers coming in from Poland ranged from 2,400 to 3,300. They have gone up and down. In 1958 the number was 3,171; the year before that, 3,096. We do our best, and are doing our best, to reunite families. The hon. member for Cartier asked me if there had been any loosening up of the attitude of the Polish authorities. There has been to some slight extent. The situation is not what we might hope, but nevertheless some of these people are coming in all the time. Here again, many of those who come in are refugees; people who have probably got out of Poland and are in one of the surrounding countries. The figures I have given are people of Polish origin who have come out in these last few years.

As regards immigration from Poland itself, while it started off five years ago at 45, last year it reached the total of 2,292, which will give hon. members some conception of the manner in which the restriction imposed by the Polish authorities have been eased. As a matter of fact, that figure compares with the figure of 690 in 1957. In other words, three times as many came out in 1958 than in 1957. I thought that might be a reassuring piece of information for the hon. member. It is a problem which we are considering all the time.

I would also like to say a word with reference to immigration from the West Indies. Here again we have a problem which has changed somewhat in complexion by reason of the recent emergence of the West Indies as an independent nation within the commonwealth. I feel that rather than deal with local governments in the various islands we must deal with the federal government. Here again, numbers are increasing every year, and from the number of 849 who came in in 1954 we have increased to 1,192 last year.

I would like to say just one word with reference to what has been called a colour bar. This is a phrase or description which is thrown around, it seems to me, rather loosely by many people, some of whom are very well-informed people. But for the consideration of this committee I would like to put to them this problem. True, the West Indies are members, like many other countries, of the commonwealth of nations, but what mainly keeps out these people is the fact that they have not the skill or the financial resources to maintain themselves in this country for long enough to settle in. This is a serious problem as I am sure all hon. members will recognize. A person without resources and with no particular skills coming from the United Kingdom under those circumstances would scarcely be admitted to Canada. Now, you cannot say that there is a colour distinction there, because exactly the same situation prevails.

We have tried to overcome that, and I know that the former minister, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, had negotiations in this regard. We have tried to take a step in the right direction by including a class of person who could step into immediate employment in Canada. We are still reviewing the situation, and I hope that before too long it will be possible for us to have conferences with the authorities in the West Indies and that we will be able to come up with a solution to what has been a great problem. I might say that when these people are available to us and they have special skills they are not kept out. A great number have come in in the past few years, and a number of cases have crossed my desk where persons with skills and education who could be readily absorbed into Canadian life have been permitted to come into the country.

I do not know, Mr. Chairman, whether I have touched on all of the questions.

Mr. Pickersgill: I did ask the hon. lady about the backlog in Hong Kong.

Mrs. Fairclough: In December 1957 the backlog was 1,195.

Mr. Pickersgill: How would that compare with the earlier year?

Mrs. Fairclough: The year 1957 I have just given you, 1,195. In December 1958 it was 286.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is a very marked improvement.

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes, I think this is a great improvement and I am pleased with it. I should say with regard to this 286 that this group is now being considered, of course; but I think we have made great strides in clearing up what was rather a deplorable situation. I think the other questions which were asked, Mr. Chairman, I have answered in a general way. I draw the attention of hon. members to the fact that we will have another opportunity to review the situation when we get to the departmental administration vote.

I should comment briefly on the problems of the hon. member for Port Arthur, who certainly has had his share of difficulties, and I think if anyone in this house deserves the appellation of Dorothy Dix he does. But I must agree with him that this matter of bringing in fiancees, in many cases persons who have never been seen by the applicant, presents another one of the very grave problems of the department.

Mr. Pickersgill: One question I would like to ask the hon. lady. She knows this is a question of honour and I am sure she is ready with the answer. When I was minister I was accused of the most heinous inhumanity because I said we would only review Chinese cases once after there had been a refusal. I did this for the very good reason that I felt we should not keep on shuffling over the old straw but should get on and deal with the new cases. Could the hon. lady tell me if she still follows that policy, or does she follow a different one?

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, the other day the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate accused me of being far tougher in this department than he ever was, but I think I am now vindicated because I can tell him that some of these cases I have reviewed several times. However, I am glad he has given me that lead; maybe now I can also review them once and put the lid on them.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think that would be very wise.

Item agreed to.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Sevigny in the chair.

Immigration branch—

53. Field and inspectional service, Canada, including $13,000 for grants to immigrant welfare organizations, $6,899,092.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the hon. lady whether the increase represents anything more than simply higher salaries?

Mrs. Fairclough: No, Mr. Chairman. As a matter of fact there were decreases in several of the divisions.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was referring just to the field and inspectional service.

Mrs. Fairclough: The increase in salaries is $84,360 and there have been some decreases to account for the difference.

Item agreed to.

54. Field and inspectional service, abroad, $2,261,296.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, has there been any change in any of the offices abroad since we last considered the estimates?

Mrs. Fairclough: Does the hon. member mean in the number of offices or the location?

Mr. Pickersgill: The location.

Mrs. Fairclough: No, no change.

Item agreed to.

55. Trans-oceanic and inland transportation and other assistance for immigrants and settlers, subject to the approval of treasury board, including care en route and while awaiting employment; and payments to the provinces pursuant to agreements entered into, with the approval of the governor in council, in respect of expenses incurred by the provinces for indigent immigrants, $3,100,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I have one or two brief observations I would like to make with respect to this item. When we last considered the estimates which was about six months ago I asked the hon. lady if a settlement had yet been made with the government of Ontario about the expenses it had gone to with respect to Hungarians which they were seeking to recover from us. I have not checked the record and I may be wrong but my recollection is that at that time the hon. lady said a settlement had practically been reached but had not yet been concluded. I wonder, if a settlement has now been reached, what the basis of it was and what we have paid to Ontario?

Mrs. Fairclough: A settlement was reached on exactly the same basis as the settlement with Saskatchewan. I do not have the figures here but I could get them.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not particularly interested so long as I have an assurance that no rent was paid for any real estate. That was one of the big points in dispute. The Ontario government had rented certain real estate on a rather large scale and having made this magnificent gesture that government was trying to get the federal taxpayer to pay for it. I was determined that they were not going to get away with it and I am glad the hon. lady has been equally strong in her resistance.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, I can assure the hon. member that there was no rental paid.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am relieved indeed to hear that.

Item agreed to.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, it was understood that when item No. 55 was completed we were going to go back to item No. 49.

49. Citizenship registration branch, $477,571.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make some rather extended observations on this item. Before I begin I should like to ask the hon. lady if it is agreeable to her if we have a general debate on both citizenship branches under this item or if she would like me to confine myself strictly to the citizenship registration branch? I might suggest I think it would be better if we did have a general debate on citizenship generally and if we agreed to have it on this first item then when we come to the item on the Canadian citizenship branch we could just ask questions.

Mrs. Fairclough: That is quite agreeable to me, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Pickersgill: On that basis, again, I should like to deal with three separate but closely related topics. The first is the question of the citizenship act. I hasten to assure you, Mr. Chairman, that I do not intend to debate the bill that is now on the order paper and I do not intend to enter into detailed arguments about that bill, but I do believe the day-long debate we had on that bill which may never come up again illustrated two things. The first was there are more defects in the act than I had thought when I introduced that bill. I must confess I was convinced by some of the arguments advanced by the hon. member for Marquette that there were more inequities in the act than the hon. lady told us there were last summer when the other bill was before us.

I am unrepentant in my view that we should do, in fact, in this parliament what the present Minister of Justice said we should do as reported in the Winnipeg Tribune of October 9, 1957. I draw your attention to the fact that this statement was made by the hon. gentleman a few days before the opening of the first and only session of the parliament before this parliament. The Minister of Justice is reported by Mr. Alan Rogers as having made certain statements about what the objectives of the new government were in respect to citizenship. I feel that this should be put on the record so there will be no doubt about what was the original position taken by the present government in this matter. The article reads:

> The new Conservative government will soon bring the rights of "naturalized" Canadians into line with those of "natural-born" citizens.
> Chief aim of the government is to eliminate the feeling among new Canadians that "naturalized" citizenship is insecure—a feeling prompted by clauses of the Canadian Citizenship Act which appear to discriminate against the newcomer.

Omitting several paragraphs I proceed to a part of the article which more or less directly quotes the present Minister of Justice:

> Acting citizenship and immigration minister Davie Fulton said Tuesday he was impressed with the argument that the present act discriminates against the naturalized citizen.
> He said the government should not give up the right to deprive a naturalized Canadian of his citizenship if it were proved that citizenship was orginally granted on the basis of false declarations by the applicant.

There has never been any quarrel about that on either side of the house. I believe the the method I suggested for doing this is rather more satisfactory than the method followed under the present law; that is to say, we should make it clear that a person who gets a citizenship certificate by fraud in fact never was a citizen at all; but that is a detailed point. This is a sentence I particularly wished to draw to the attention of the hon. lady and members of the committee. These are the words of the acting minister of citizenship and immigration of that day:

> But in other respects, "There should be no difference between the rights of naturalized and natural-born citizens."

That was a statement of government policy made by the hon. gentleman a few days before parliament opened. I continue:

> Mr. Fulton said he was studying the Citizenship Act, but it isn't expected that any changes will be made at the imminent fall session of parliament.
> Amendments to the act likely will come when the commons meets again early in the new year.

In the time between that statement and the date the bill was introduced by the hon. lady last summer the government had a change of mind and it did leave certain discriminations in the act. As I say, I am not going to take the time of the committee now by discussing the details of those things but I am going to make a suggestion to the hon. lady and through her to the government. I suggest that the government look over the citizenship act in the light of the debate the other day, in the light of certain comments that have been made to me and also in the light of the interesting contribution made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre who pointed out that there were certain disabilities under which natural-born citizens of Canada not born in Canada also suffered. That is a concept that is not easy for the average person to understand, but there are such people.

I do think it would be a very good thing, and a good thing for another reason. It has come to my notice even since I ceased to be minister, and it came to my notice a good many times before, that every so often cases do arise, some of them very embarrassing. Without citing any names, I am going to cite one or two that have recently come to my notice. One that came to my notice the hon. lady knows about and I am not blaming her because there is nothing she can do about it any more than anyone else can, except parliament itself. But a child was brought to Canada in infancy, in fact before he was a year old, from Indiana and lived here, in fact was adopted by Canadians. He lived in Montreal all his life to the age of 23 or 24, when he found to his great embarrassment that he had never been landed as an immigrant. Therefore, he could not become a citizen for another five years. This is just an absurdity, of course, but it is the law and there is nothing whatever that the minister, the governor in council, or anybody else except parliament can do about a case like that.

It came to my attention the other day that a ship's deserter—I am sorry the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice who have such tender hearts for ships' deserters, or at any rate did have for one ship's deserter a year or two ago are not in the house at the moment—deserted his ship some 20 or 25 years ago. He has never been landed but has lived as a perfectly good resident of his community. He married a Canadian and has grown-up children in Canada. He now finds that even if he is landed, I am not sure whether he is yet, he may be faced with deportation. I have not gone into the details of the case, because again I knew that it would take five years after landing before that person could get citizenship. I must confess—perhaps I should not say this—that at the time I brought the amendment into the house when I was minister—I think in 1956—I did place a cut-off date in the bill I brought in and which was accepted by the house. It was provided that any person who had landed or been technically landed before that date but had been resident in Canada for a longer time before that could count the prior period, so that it was possible for someone who had already been here for five years to be landed and make his application for citizenship, and do the one right after the other.

I did suggest at that time that under certain safeguards and in certain circumstances we should put a provision in the act that would not be just retroactive but would provide for the future that in certain of these hard cases there might be some discretion given to the governor in council if the case were reported subsequently to parliament so that there was the utmost publicity. But just at that time I had the experience as minister of losing several cases in the courts, immigration cases, where the question of the discretion of the governor in council was involved, and I frankly confess that I did not propose that legislation at that time because I was afraid some of the hon. lady's friends would prolong the debate to such an extent that we would not get the bill through.

Mrs. Fairclough: You have a suspicious nature.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am inclined to think that that might have happened because that was in the days when the hon. lady and her friends had had no experience of government, and they did not realize that orders in council based upon legislation are perfectly proper and necessary instruments for the use of any government. We have a different kind of parliament now, with a responsible opposition that understands something about these things, and it does seem to me that we should take another look—when all is said and done—10 years have passed since the hon. member for Essex East introduced the original Canadian Citizenship Act; in fact, it is more than 10 years. It came into effect on January 1, 1947, and it does seem to me that it would be a very useful thing indeed if the hon. lady at the next session of parliament—I know she has got the Indian Act under contemplation for this session and that is enough for one session, I quite agree—would consider having a proposal laid before this house and the other place for a joint committee, and a serious committee, to go into the citizenship act in a non-partisan way in the light of our 12 or 13 years experience, with a view to trying to remove some of those anomalies and also trying to clear up this question of real equality of status. I offer this as what I hope will be a constructive suggestion.

The second thing that I want to say something about is that I have the impression as a result of the very heavy immigration of the last four or five years that there are other places besides Toronto and Montreal where there is getting to be a real backlog of citizenship applications before the courts and where it is not really possible for the ordinary county or district courts, whatever they may be called in the various provinces, to handle those applications on a current basis. I would not be surprised if the hon. lady lives in one of the most outstanding of those places because next to Toronto and Montreal I imagine there is the largest concentration of immigrants in Hamilton than in any other place in Canada. I would not be surprised if a similar situation existed in Vancouver, perhaps in Winnipeg, possibly in Edmonton and probably both in London and in Windsor. I am not making any suggestion in this field because I do not know all the facts but I think we would be interested to hear from the hon. lady what the facts really are and whether steps should not be taken to extend the number of citizenship courts.

I know the jurisdiction of the court in Toronto has been extended, if I remember rightly, to the whole of the province but that does not accomplish all that is needed. I wonder whether there should not be some further extension of those federal courts. I do not even know what the situation is in Ottawa. In any case, probably the hon. lady can tell us what the situation is.

The third thing I want to speak about is a particular case. It is not the only case of its kind. In fact, I know of two similar cases, but I refer to one that I communicated with the hon. lady on, I think, it was December 28 or 29, in the following terms:

Hon. Ellen Fairclough, M.P.,
Minister of Citizenship and Immigration,
Ottawa.

I am deeply disturbed by press reports of proposed deportation to Haiti of Jean Orsete Volcy and his wife who have an infant daughter who is a Canadian citizen.

In order to leave the hon. lady with no qualms about whether I am dealing with something that is sub judice, I assure her at once I have no intention whatsoever of talking about Mr. Volcy and his wife. I am talking about their infant daughter who is a Canadian citizen and, therefore, against whom no valid deportation order could issue I continue with the telegram:

Deportation will involve for this citizen of our country either enforced separation from her parents or more probably exile from her native land. Surely this is a case where humanitarian considerations should have priority over departmental adherence to the letter of the law being stubbornly upheld.

I should just like to remind the hon. lady and the committee that that is not the kind of language I normally use, but that phrase is taken verbatim and literatim from the Prime Minister's reference to the Hanna case, made in this house when the Hanna case was sub judice. I deliberately used those words because I thought it would be useful later on to have that distinguished precedent from so eminent a lawyer. I added:

I am sending a copy of this message to the Prime Minister.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Then, on December 29 I received a telegram from the hon. lady which read:

Regard your telegram Mr. and Mrs. Volcy. Regret cannot comply with your request. I have already given exhaustive consideration to this deplorable situation and must concur in decision.

I thereupon wrote a letter to the Prime Minister about this case, which I also propose to read into the record. The letter is dated December 31 and reads:

My dear Prime Minister:

I have been astonished to receive a reply from the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration to my telegram regarding the infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jean Volcy of Montreal flatly refusing to consider my representations. The minister in her reply completely ignores the fact that my representations were not made on behalf of Mr. and Mrs. Volcy but on behalf of their daughter who is a natural born Canadian citizen. I recognize that the parents are not admissible as immigrants under present regulations but I am also aware that hundreds of persons have been admitted as immigrants this year—

That was the year 1958.

—by order in council. You will no doubt recall your own strong appeal to me just two years ago to recommend an order in council for the admission of one George Christian Hanna who had no connection whatever with this country and who has since been deported by your government.

Here we have a case of the parents of a Canadian citizen whose deportation would involve the enforced exile or the desertion of one of our own citizens. These people have lived in Canada for some time and the public has no evidence they have committed any crime or even failed to support themselves.

The minister in her telegram says she has given exhaustive consideration to this deplorable situation which she does not define. If that means these people are not desirable immigrants, surely action should have been taken before they became the parents of a Canadian citizen.

The press reports indicate that the decision of the courts in this case was based solely on technical inadmissibility under the existing regulations which could easily be cured by an order in council.

The refusal of the minister to recommend an order in council in this case is almost certain to create the impression that the action proposed is being taken because of the colour of the skin of the parents of this Canadian citizen.

Is not this proposed action, which is surely prejudicial to the natural rights of a citizen of Canada, a strange prelude to the proposed bill of rights? I am writing to you because the minister seems to have overlooked altogether the fact that her action will affect the rights and the welfare of a citizen of Canada. I am of course sending the minister a copy of my letter.

In due course I received an acknowledgement from the Prime Minister's office saying that the case was before the courts. I am relying here on my recollection and it is possible that my recollection will turn out to be wrong. I admit at once that many times during the period when I was minister deportation orders were issued against the parents of a Canadian citizen but because there was no appeal or anything of that sort they never came to my attention. I am not going to say for a minute that there may not have been some parents of Canadian citizens deported while I was minister and that they may not have taken their children with them, but during that period I cannot recall any case ever brought to my attention where the deportation of the parents would involve either separation from an infant child or the taking of that child out of Canada into exile that I did not stay the operation of the deportation order at once.

It seems to me it is a shocking waste of the taxpayers' money to have this case in the courts at all, and I do think we should have an assurance from the minister that, in a case where the deportation of the parents of an infant Canadian citizen will result in forcible separation from the infant or in the exile of that Canadian citizen, deportation will not be carried out. No attempt should be made to carry it out, and unless there are the strongest possible reasons against it action should be taken by the governor in council under the act to land the parents of that Canadian citizen as immigrants.

Although it seems to me that the rights of a Canadian citizen are of the utmost importance, this is by no means merely a question of rights but a question of the practical application as well. The hon. lady, who is a lot younger than I am, perhaps will not remember that 25 years ago or 27 years ago or up to 30 years ago, when her political friends were in office in this country, a great number of residents of Canada were deported, particularly to the United Kingdom, from some parts of the prairie provinces because they had become public charges. I happen to recall some of these cases personally. I particularly remember a number from the city of Saskatoon. The action created a great deal of stir at that time. Years later, after the wider extension of assisted passages for immigrants from the United Kingdom, we found that we were receiving applications from people who could not qualify for assistance as immigrants because they were Canadian citizens who had been born in Canada, who had gone to the United Kingdom because their parents had been deported but who, as natural born Canadian citizens, could not be classed as immigrants and therefore could not get assistance to come to their own country. That situation was remedied by parliament without any difficulty whatsoever.

What is going to happen in practical effect if we deport—I should not say "deport" because we cannot deport them—if we exile these Canadian citizens is that they are going to grow up in another country while having all the rights of a Canadian citizen, and in many cases they are going to want to exercise those rights years later. Even if we have no humanitarian reasons for doing so, surely we should recognize these facts as facts, and surely when we find this kind of situation, which does not arise very often, we should simply accept it as a fact and see that the rights of these Canadian citizens are protected even though it does involve permission to remain in Canada to people who otherwise we perhaps would not have chosen to be immigrants. Although I have one or two other observations I want to make, I believe I have taken my share of the time for the moment and I have made the three points I most particularly wanted to make.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member will permit me to do so, I should like to make some comments at this point on what the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has said. With the first part of his remarks I find myself in almost complete agreement. He mentioned a couple of cases. I wish the hon. member would let me have the particulars of the first case he mentioned.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will be very glad to but I am afraid nothing can be done about it. The department has done its best.

Mrs. Fairclough: If the circumstances are as the hon. member indicated and he has given a correct description, it is our opinion that possibly something can be done. I should like to have a look at it in any event.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will be very happy to.

Mrs. Fairclough: I should like to say to him also that with regard to the act itself or any amendments or revisions thereto I have an open mind. I hope at all times that I will encourage revision of any of the acts which govern the department under my jurisdiction. I would assure him most sincerely that I will look at his suggestion. Moreover, I can assure him that we have the same thoughts upon the same subject. He will be pleased to know that I think he must be some sort of a mind reader. We are already proceeding to open courts. The first one, I think, will be in the city of Hamilton.

Mr. Pickersgill: That does not altogether surprise me.

Mrs. Fairclough: We propose to open courts in places where the traffic will bear them.

Mr. Pickersgill: Has the minister any other places in mind?

Mrs. Fairclough: Some of those my hon. friend mentioned fall into the category. We cannot open them all at once, of course. It is going to take time to get them in operation. However, it is my hope that eventually we can have across this country a group of generally uniform ceremonies, bright, impressive ceremonies, that will impress these new Canadians with the idea that the acquisition of Canadian citizenship is really the highlight of their lives. I feel very strongly about that, and that is the end toward which I am working.

I come now to the not so pleasant part of my remarks. This has to do with the case which the hon. member has brought before this house, although it is before the courts at the present time. I agree with him that this child is a Canadian citizen, but when he says this case should never have been brought to the court I would draw to his attention that it was in the court when he was the minister.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. lady would not want to create a false impression. There was no Canadian citizen at that time because this child has been born since I ceased to be the minister. My whole case is based on the Canadian baby.

Mrs. Fairclough: I am very pleased to learn the hon. gentleman now has a real concern for the children of immigrants. I have in my hand some cases in which deportation was ordered and in which there were Canadian children involved. I just went back a little way, and I have not too many. I only have about 15; two of them were under Mr. Harris; eight of them were under the hon. member and the rest of them were under my administration.

I have one right here. A citizen of Haiti entered Canada as a student and took employment. There was an application for a landing permit and he was ordered deported at Toronto on December 2, 1954, the wife included. The appeal was dismissed against voluntary deportation; there was deportation and the Canadian child accompanied the parents.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. lady has me there, I admit.

Mrs. Fairclough: My eye fell on that one because these people were Haitians also. Some of these others were from other countries such as Belgium, Italy, Scotland, England—they are pretty general, with a great many countries involved.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. lady will recall, of course, that I thought there were a good many cases in which there had been no appeal.

Mrs. Fairclough: When the hon. member tries to single out this one case as a great and glaring example of injustice, I draw to his attention the fact that there have been a number of them and not by any means the majority of them under my administration. I daresay if I go back and search the files I will find a great many more.

Mr. Pickersgill: That still will not make it right.

Mrs. Fairclough: I just wanted a sample. I draw this to the hon. member's attention: although this case is before the court, and quite properly, we should not be discussing it at all in this house. I say to him that these people will receive fair treatment. The treatment that is accorded to them will be just and fair, and their child will always be a Canadian child.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the hon. member would allow me to say a word about this matter because I think the hon. lady certainly has me in so far as this other Haitian case in which an appeal was taken is concerned. I think that what I did on that occasion was wrong, and I have no hesitation whatever in saying that, just as I think what the hon. lady is doing now is wrong. Whatever I may have done or Mr. Harris may have done or the hon. lady may have done in the past, I would not like to see us considering in this parliament in this session a bill of rights when at the same time we were still carrying on the practice which would indirectly exile Canadian citizens.

I say that whatever may have been done in the past, I appeal to the government and I appeal to the hon. lady not to proceed with this or with any other case where the child is of such an age that the deportation of the parents is going to mean either genuinely enforced separation or the exile of a Canadian citizen. Whatever the law may allow, I do not think this practice should continue. I feel very strongly about it. I feel just as strongly about it even though I may, in the past as the hon. lady has very properly pointed out, have been guilty of the same conduct. I suspected she might be able to point out some example, as anyone can see from my original remarks. I have never at any time in this house hesitated to say that I thought I had made mistakes. I know I did. But what I do say is that this matter has now been brought to the attention of the committee, and whatever may have been done in the past I do not think we should be using the powers in the Immigration Act to exile from Canada Canadian citizens.

Mrs. Fairclough: May I just say that the deportation order did not include the child.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, I know that.

Mrs. Fairclough: I have looked at this list while the hon. gentleman was speaking, and I find that in no less than five cases appeals were registered and yet he ordered the deportation. One case in which he ordered deportation to Germany concerned a man, his wife and four children; two of them were born in Canada and the other two were born abroad.

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame.

Mrs. Fairclough: Rather than take the second Canadian child abroad with them they had it made an official ward of the Manitoba authorities and placed it for adoption.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think it was wrong, anyway.

Mr. Howard: There are a number of matters which could be dealt with under this particular item, because certainly the fact a person becomes a citizen of the country is of extreme importance to the individual as well as to society as a whole. In looking at the citizenship act, section 22, if I could refer to it to preface my other remarks, we find a Canadian citizen, whether natural born or naturalized is entitled to rights, powers and privileges and is subject to all obligations, duties and liabilities. I underline those words, rights, powers and privileges as well as obligations, duties and liabilities.

I do not know if anyone has made a complete and all-embracing statement as to what is entailed in those rights and obligations. I doubt if such a complete compilation has been made. I am sure that those things sort of constitute our whole fabric of society and change from time to time through the process of time itself as well as a result of legislation and court decisions.

These rights and these obligations that devolve upon Canadian citizens are—or should be, anyway—equally applicable to British Columbia, the province from which I come and right across Canada to Newfoundland. No matter which province a person happens to be resident in, the rights and the obligations he has should be equitable throughout all of the provinces. I think we can assume that one of the fundamental and inalienable rights which we have—and which I mentioned earlier today at another stage of the proceedings—is contained in one of the conventions of the international labour organization at its 31st session in 1948, 11 years ago. While it is true that Canada has not ratified it—something which I think is a failure on the part of the government of Canada, both the one we had previously and this one—this convention concerns the freedom of association and the protection of the right to organize which I submit falls within one of the fundamental rights, powers, privileges, obligations and duties set out in section 22 of the act. The article of that convention has specific reference to the happenings of the last day or two in one of the provinces of Canada. I refer to article 4 which I am going to quote again. It states:

> Workers' and employers' organizations shall not be liable to be dissolved or suspended by administrative authority.

Article 11 I should say has specific reference. It states:

> Each member of the international labour organization for which this convention is in force—

I admit, as I said earlier, that it is not in force because of failure of this government and the previous Liberal government to ratify it.

> —undertakes to take all necessary and appropriate measures to ensure that workers and employers may exercise freely the right to organize.

That is one of the rights of citizens in Canada as set out in this international labour convention, section 4.

Mr. Churchill: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. We are here dealing with the citizenship registration branch and the hon. member is talking about other matters entirely. I think the question of relevancy comes in at this stage and he should be restrained from discussing matters which do not relate to this particular item under discussion, namely the citizenship registration branch.

Mr. Howard: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I should like to say this. The Canadian Citizenship Act specifically mentions certain rights, privileges, duties and obligations. From that are we to assume that we have ten different types of citizenship in Canada or do we have one; and I submit my remarks are in order specifically because we have a despotic premier in Newfoundland who seeks to deny—

The Chairman: Order. I must ask the hon. member to confine his remarks to the question of citizenship and immigration. He is completely out of order in discussing labour unions or labour relations. Certainly he has no right to describe the premier of a province in the way he did. I therefore declare his remarks to be completely out of order.

Mr. Argue: Before you make your ruling in final form, Mr. Chairman, I hope you will allow—as chairmen in this committee over the years have done—hon. members to make submissions on the point of order. I was unable to be in the house for all of the afternoon but as I understand it the arrangement was that we would have a general discussion of citizenship under this item and that it would not be confined to the narrow item as it ordinarily is in under our procedure. If that is correct, Mr. Chairman, as I believe it is, then I submit to you with great emphasis and with great respect that members of parliament have a right under the question of citizenship to discuss what are in fact the rights of citizens within this country. No matter where those rights may be interfered with. If the rights of a Canadian citizen, natural born or naturalized, are interfered with by actions of any authority, in this instance as the hon. member for Skeena has said actions by the Newfoundland government, I would suggest that this House of Commons and the members of it have every right under this item to make such a protest. I think it is a well established fact that, as far as these rights of citizenship are concerned, they are not only the rights that should and can be discussed in parliament but they are the very rights over which this parliament does in fact have jurisdiction. I would therefore suggest that it is very much in order; in fact I would suggest that it is not only in order but it is the duty of hon. members of this house to rise in their places and protest any infringement of rights of Canadian citizens, no matter where that infringement may originate. It is our respectful submission that the premier of Newfoundland—

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Argue: —has shown a complete disregard of the rights of Canadian citizens—

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Argue: —and that—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

The Chairman: Order. I regret to advise the hon. member that if he persists in carrying on his remarks while the Chairman is on his feet I shall be forced to report him to the committee.

We are at present in committee of supply discussing a motion which deals with items of citizenship under the department and which has relevance only to items of citizenship under federal jurisdiction. We cannot in this house discuss items which fall under provincial administration and which are relevant to provincial authority. It is therefore completely out of order at this time to refer, in the discussion which is presently taking place, to incidents which have occurred in a province. I therefore declare the remarks of the hon. member for Skeena to be out of order and the last part especially of the remarks of the hon. member for Assiniboia to be definitely out of order.

[Mr. Argue.]

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. Many times in this chamber when the Chairman or the Speaker has decided a point of order and has given a decision we then find hon. members rising and criticising the judgment of the Chairman or the Speaker. To my mind that is entirely wrong procedure. I point my remarks particularly tonight to the fact that after you gave your ruling, your ruling was challenged. To my mind that is a procedure which is not right. I submit that no member of this house should do such a thing.

Mr. Argue: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, which has been raised, I think I have the right to speak.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

The Chairman: The point of order has been dealt with by the Chair. I must remind hon. members that although they can appeal the decision of the Speaker or the Deputy Speaker, they cannot criticize such decision.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, it certainly was not my intention to precipitate such a furore, but we have seen slowly over the years a movement toward uniformity of citizenship as between natural born Canadian citizens and naturalized citizens. The last session of this parliament made certain amendments to the citizenship act which moved us toward more equitability as between natural born Canadian citizens and those who are naturalized. This is a welcome approach, and I am sure it is in the minds of all of us that the application of the rights of Canadian citizens be applied not only equitably as between natural born and naturalized citizens but also between the provinces.

I submit that that is not the case in Canada today, we have different attitudes and approaches as between one province and another with respect to the rights of Canadian citizens. This attitude is better in some provinces than others. But it does get worse. We have in British Columbia, for instance, a different attitude developing with respect to Canadian citizens than exists with Canadian citizens in other provinces. I am talking now, Mr. Chairman, about Section 22 of the act, which deals with the rights, powers, obligations and duties of citizens. These rights of citizens as we know them and as I said earlier must be involved in our own fabric of Canadian society but they are looked at differently in one province than in another because of provincial legislation. We have in British Columbia, the province from which I come, movements afoot in the legislature to deny certain of those rights just as we have a revival, which is reminiscent of the attitude of Hitler and Mussolini when they were in power, taking place in the province of Newfoundland with respect to the rights of certain people who work there.

The Chairman: Once again I must remind the hon. member not to discuss items which are related to provincial authority. He must confine his remarks solely to the item under discussion.

Mr. Howard: It is not my desire, Mr. Chairman, to reflect upon your ruling, but I feel very strongly about the rights of individuals in Canada. Those rights are embodied in the citizenship act, which to me is all-inclusive and should apply in one province as well as in another but does not because of people in one province poking sticky political fingers into people's rights. Therefore I must appeal your ruling to the committee.

The Chairman: May I ask the hon. member which ruling he is presently appealing?

Mr. Howard: The ruling which, as I understood it, denied me the right to discuss the question of the rights of Canadian citizens as they are affected by certain actions now taking place in the province of Newfoundland.

The Chairman: I must inform the hon. member that I made no such ruling. The ruling which I made was that we should not discuss in this committee items which are not of a federal nature or which are not under the jurisdiction of this committee.

Mr. Howard: Can I then take it, Mr. Chairman, that I can discuss the rights of the citizens in Newfoundland being denied them because of the action by somebody in the legislature done in an hysterical and reprehensible fashion—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

The Chairman: I must remind the hon. member, as I mentioned previously, that he is not permitted to question my ruling. If he wishes to appeal my ruling he must specify in precise words what he is appealing.

Mr. Howard: With deference, sir, I am appealing the ruling which you just made. As I understand it, it denies me the right to discuss the abrogation by the premier of Newfoundland of the rights of citizens who happen to be in Newfoundland.

The Chairman: Once again I must remind the hon. member he cannot question or discuss my ruling.

Mr. Howard: Then I appeal it.

The Chairman: The hon. member must confine his remarks strictly to the item of citizenship. My ruling is that all hon. members, and the hon. member for Skeena in particular, must confine their remarks to the item at present under discussion, which item is citizenship. That is my ruling.

Mr. Howard: I am not questioning your ruling, and I have mentioned that two or three times, sir. If your ruling is such that it prevents me from discussing the rights of citizens in Newfoundland, then I appeal the ruling.

The Chairman: Does the hon. member wish to appeal the ruling I have just made?

Mr. Howard: I thought I made that clear when I mentioned I desired to appeal your ruling in the first instance, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: To resume this discussion, I would repeat to the hon. member that my ruling is that he confine his remarks to the item under discussion, which plainly mentions citizenship. If he does not wish to confine his remarks to the item under discussion, I must ask him to resume his seat.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, if I may carry on, then, you said I am not at liberty to interpret your ruling. I wish to go on in the same vein as before, but if by your ruling you are preventing me from discussing things which, in my opinion, are quite in order to be discussed under this item—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Howard: I wish to appeal the ruling and I cannot make it any plainer than that.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, it is a well-known ruling and you have clearly outlined it that it is the right of any hon. member of this committee to challenge the ruling of the chairman if he wishes. That is a well-known rule which has been put into operation many times. When you pointed out to the hon. member for Skeena the rule and procedure—namely that if he wished to appeal he might do so—he indicated he wished to appeal the ruling. I submit there is no other course left open for the Chair other than to set down the dispute as he sees it and to hand it to Mr. Speaker at which time the ruling of the Chair will be put to the house.

The Chairman: On this question it is not up to the hon. member for Skeena to interpret my ruling. He may only appeal to the house concerning my ruling. If he wishes to appeal to the house he is at liberty to do so.

Mr. Howard: That is at least the sixth time I have indicated my desire to appeal. My answer to the question, "Do you wish to appeal?" is yes.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Division

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and the chairman of the committee made the following report:

In the committee of supply when vote No. 49 concerning the Department of Citizenship and Immigration was being considered the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) attempted to discuss labour conditions which in the chairman's opinion came under the jurisdiction of the government of Newfoundland. The chairman ruled that the hon. member for Skeena must keep his remarks relevant to the vote under discussion whereupon Mr. Howard appealed to the house from the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. Speaker put the question as follows:

The question is an appeal from a ruling of the chairman of the committee of supply. In the committee of supply when vote No. 49, concerning the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, was being considered the hon. member for Skeena attempted to discuss labour conditions which in the chairman's opinion came under the jurisdiction of the government of Newfoundland. The chairman ruled that the member for Skeena must keep his remarks relevant to the vote under discussion whereupon Mr. Howard appealed to the house from the ruling of the chair.

The house divided on the question: Shall the ruling of the chairman be confirmed? And the ruling was confirmed on the following division:

And the house having resumed in committee:

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply. Shall No. 49 carry?

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, now that we have had the decision of the house I wonder whether the minister might not consider this an appropriate time to outline to the House of Commons and the Canadian people exactly what is meant by Canadian citizenship. Does the ownership of a Canadian citizenship certificate mean anything? If so, would the minister, in the absence of a bill of rights, explain to the Canadian people exactly what is meant by national rights of citizenship?

Mrs. Fairclough: I will ask the librarian of parliament to supply the gentleman with a list of books from which he can get the answer.

Item agreed to.

50. Citizenship branch, $881,109.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have a few observations to make on item 50. I assure the committee they will have something to do with the item before us. I do not want to take any time in reviewing the activities of the branch generally, but I do want to appeal to the minister to consider very carefully whether or not there is some unnecessary literature being produced by the citizenship branch. I know the minister will be tempted to tell me, if I give any particular examples, that whatever example I give was started in my time and I did not do anything about it.

I am very sorry the Minister of Finance is absent, although I know he has other urgent duties, because I am trying to help him at the moment. I have in my hand a copy of a magazine called "Citizen", which I think in my day was a mimeographed production and which now is printed and bound. I have three copies here. I am not going to go into the contents of them and I am not going to criticize them. Quite frankly, however, I do not think they have any real, positive value that is not easily obtainable in other publications offered by the citizenship council or by other bodies. I am sure when I say this I will have an echo in the heart of every member, however he voted in the recent division, because the volume of printed matter that appears every day on a member's desk is quite staggering. It is not quite so bad when you are a minister because you have a staff that keeps some of it away from you. However, when you have to open your own mail and look it over you realize for the first time I think the tremendous avalanche of printed words that descends on members every day.

I am not going to say that most of these publications are not valuable, but some are of questionable value. I do think it is the duty of every member who feels any responsibility for the taxpayers' money, when he comes to the conclusion, as I have in the case of this particular publication, that it does serve no useful purpose that is not already served by some other publication, to say so. I am not suggesting that the minister bother to defend it or point out its great merits, because if so then I would do the reverse and I would check through the table of contents to prove my point. I do not want to prolong this discussion. I really believe this is one branch of the government service that does a lot of valuable and useful work, but because of its very nature I feel, and I am sure the minister feels, because of the rather amorphous character of the duties of this branch there is a greater tendency than in the citizenship registration branch, which has clearly defined duties, to spread out and perhaps spread too thin. As I used to say sometimes when I was minister, perhaps there is a tendency in the branch to take in one another's washing.

I genuinely feel that while it is important to have liaison officers to give guidance, particularly in the field of language instruction, and to give help, there are many ways in which the work of the branch could be tightened up and some small sum saved, not a great sum, that would really be a net saving to the Canadian people.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, if I may reply to that immediately, I would say that the reason this magazine is printed now instead of being mimeographed is that there were so many requests for it. We now print 4,000 in English and 1,000 in French. I am sure the hon. member will agree with me that mimeographing is a very uneconomical way to produce that many copies. There is quite a bit of demand for this publication. If it bothers the hon. gentleman to have it come in his mail, we will be glad to take him off the list.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have a far better suggestion for the hon. lady. There is a test which I think we might apply much more frequently to government publications. I would put a price on it and see how many requests there are then. The great mass of the Canadian people, I am sure, do not want this.

Mrs. Fairclough: They ask for it.

Mr. Pickersgill: The great mass of Canadian people do not ask for it, if there are 4,000 copies for 17 million people. It must cost a certain amount to produce. I would not suggest the magazine be run at a profit and I would doubt the possibility of that. I would suggest that for this and for many other government publications it would be a very good idea to apply the test of the market place, the test of a free economy, and put a price on it to see whether there really is a genuine demand. I am sure that this is the kind of suggestion that will have a good deal of appeal to the leader of the house and to the Minister of Finance in connection with some of the financial worries that they have these days.

Mr. Peters: I should like to mention a problem that has been drawn to my attention a number of times. It concerns those people who are now members of the British commonwealth and who hold British citizenship. I refer mainly to immigrants, and I have a number of them in my area, who come from the West Indies. The same situation, of course, will apply to other British immigrants from other parts of the commonwealth who hold British citizenship. These people come to Canada, and after the first year are allowed to vote in municipal, provincial and federal elections, and to run for office. However, they do not have the right to apply for citizenship until they have been here five years.

It has been felt by many of them that they have come to Canada with the intention of staying in Canada, so they want to assume Canadian citizenship as soon as possible. I would suggest to the minister that it might be possible, since these people are already educated in the British way of life through their commonwealth associations, that they are suitable citizens. It would be a concession to our commonwealth idea and bring the commonwealth closer together if these people were permitted to become citizens after one year of residence.

Mr. Broome: I wanted to say a few words on the same subject as was mentioned by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. I, too, suffer from a rather heavy flood of publications. Some of these publications are worth while, but there are many publications which are a mere duplication of things published by other bodies. I am not referring particularly to this department, but my remarks are of a general nature and cover the entire field of government publications. I believe these publications sort of grow on top of themselves, as will be seen if you look at the daily check list every day. I am quite sure that a little bit of editing would not do any harm whatsoever.

Mr. Peters: May I ask the minister if she will give consideration to this matter of lowering the resident requirement for British citizens who wish to apply for Canadian citizenship?

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, I give consideration to everything that is submitted to me in the House of Commons. I can assure the hon. member of that fact.

56. Administration, $680,907.

Mrs. Fairclough: If I may, Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few remarks. I think possibly I should give some information to the committee. The 1959-60 main estimates for Indian affairs show an increase of $6,563,652 over 1958-59. The major portion of this increase is attributable to two basically important fields, namely education and welfare of Indians.

The total increase in operating costs for education is $2,928,886 and for welfare $2,322,104. This envisages the employment of 42 additional teachers at day schools and 32 at residential or a total increase in teaching staff of 74. There is an increase of $350,000 to further assist in the education of Indian children in association with non-Indians and an additional amount of $765,499 to finance the operation and maintenance of residential schools. The program of residential school construction calls for an additional amount of $795,300 over 1958-59. The increase in the welfare appropriation is largely due to increased requirements to meet relief costs and the care of indigents.

In the all important field of education good progress has been made. For example, in the 1958-59 fiscal year the unrevised figures show a total enrolment of 38,836 Indian pupils in all schools. This includes 8,429 pupils who attend non-Indian schools, universities, teachers' colleges and commercial or trade schools and represents an increase of 1,099 over the previous year. The estimates presented for consideration visualize a further increase in numbers and further participation by Indian pupils in higher education.

In the past academic year we have had about 2,500 students taking post-elementary school training. There were but 200 in 1948 and it is my hope that this tenfold increase will gather momentum with each year. To this end a system of scholarships offers further incentive to Indian students to continue their education. These scholarships, representing a total value of $25,000, are offered in addition to the normal assistance given at post-elementary school level. Thirteen awards were made in the current year.

In both Indian day and residential schools the practical arts courses such as home economics, woodwork, sheet metal work, et cetera enrolled 5,898 students. For this program 48 instructors were employed for classes enrolling 2,683 boys. For the girls 63 teachers were employed to give instruction in home economics to over 3,215 students.

It is planned to construct 88 classrooms together with other necessary construction including teachers' residences. In line with the efforts being made to educate Indian children in association with non-Indians, provision is made for contributions towards the construction of 11 joint schools.

The residential school construction program, designed to take care of children of northern migratory Indians and those from broken homes, shows an increase. It includes two hostels for children attending elementary and high schools in Whitehorse and a start on the replacement of one old school, namely St. Mary's residential school, New Westminster agency, British Columbia.

In the field of Indian housing the appropriation was doubled in 1958-59 when the amount of $2 million was provided. This has made possible an expanded program of housing construction and an improved standard of housing, as well as an increased number of cost sharing agreements with bands with sufficient funds to participate in such undertakings. During 1958-59 a survey of housing was undertaken which will have an important bearing on the building program in future. The emphasis on financial assistance to Indians in northern and remote areas will continue.

In 1959-60 it is proposed to maintain the expenditure at the same level of $2 million and it is estimated this will cover the financing in whole or in part of close to 1,000 housing units. On the average for every dollar expended from public funds in recent years there has been an equal or greater amount provided from personal contributions by the Indians themselves in the form of labour, cash and materials, band funds, and Veterans Land Act grants available to Indian veterans.

During the debate on the departmental estimates in the last session of this house the question of the quantity of relief supplied on behalf of Indians in need was raised by some hon. members opposite. I said at that time that this subject was under constant review. As a result of a thorough and careful study improved standards and revised procedures of relief administration on behalf of Indians are being introduced throughout the country on April 1 next, in order that Indians in destitute circumstances may receive, as nearly as possible, the same treatment and assistance available for non-Indians in need in Canadian communities generally.

As I informed hon. members last year, the department in 1957 embarked upon a limited experimental program in the payment of relief in cash and in dollar value orders, replacing relief in kind according to a ration scale. This experiment has proven to be successful and on the basis of this experience and following a comprehensive review of scales of assistance and procedures in effect in various provinces and non-Indian communities throughout Canada, these methods are to be adopted universally with effect April 1 next.

At the same time new scales of food allowances in terms of dollar value have been authorized, which represent a substantial advance over the retail value of the foods listed on the former ration scale, and an increase over the rates payable in the experimental projects which have been in force since 1957.

These changes are costly, as evidenced by the fact that provision is made for expenditures of approximately $3 million in excess of those incurred in 1957-58. It is considered essential, however, that adequate assistance be provided for Indians in need in order that they may maintain a satisfactory standard of living at times when they are unable to do this through their own efforts. It is also the purpose of these changes to bring procedures and standards of assistance in line with those in force in non-Indian communities; to give greater responsibility to the Indians in the management of their own affairs.

For the information of the house, the new scales of assistance will be as follows. Please note that the standard rates may be supplemented up to the amounts indicated in columns A, B, C and D in the table, to provide for special circumstances and cases where local costs of food are high.

	Standard rates	Special rates payable in high cost areas and in special circumstances
		A	B	C	D
Single adult ..	$22	$25	$28	$33	$38
Each additional adult or child over 12 years of age	15	17	19	22	26
Each child 12 years of age or under	12	15	16	18	21

An important change in branch organization has resulted from the recent establishment of an economic development division which is now in the process of being staffed. The establishment of this separate division is reflected in the introduction of two new votes which encompass a number of items concerned with fur development, agriculture, urban-type employment and other commercial enterprises designed to permit the attainment by Indians of a higher standard of living. It has been recognized for some time that the rapidly growing Indian population and the relatively low returns from traditional Indian pursuits make it imperative that more attention be paid to economic problems and to employment.

A placement program is now in operation with the object of assisting Indians to find employment in a wider range of fields than has hitherto been open to them. Placement officers are now employed in six of the eight administrative regions, with a senior placement officer in Ottawa, and it is planned in 1959-60 to engage two more such officers, one for the maritimes and one for Saskatchewan. This program is carried on in co-operation with the national employment service and other agencies. Group placements in seasonal employment have been increasingly successful. For example, a total of just under 1,000 Indians from Alberta and Saskatchewan reserves were recruited to the beet fields of southern Alberta in 1958. In addition, in the last two fiscal years special arrangements were made for the employment of Indians in clearing of roads in the Yellowknife-Fort Rae area of the Northwest Territories.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, in the few moments at my disposal, having listened to the minister as carefully as I could, I would like to express at least my own sincere appreciation for her having made the changes in the matters of welfare cash payments, the increases toward education and educational facilities, and so on, which she has just announced. In the last couple of sessions I have had occasion to complain about some of these matters, particularly the inadequate food rationing arrangements which applied to Indians. I am very pleased about this, and I am sure that many of our native Indian people who have occasion to call on this service of the department will be appreciative too. The minister is taking a much more progressive attitude toward this phase of our Indian problems than has been taken for quite a number of years. Some of these grievances have been of very, very long standing with the Indian people, and I am sure this is only the first step toward giving Indians the opportunity to play the fullest possible role in society.

I hope you will excuse me, Mr. Chairman, if I make brief mention of a notice of motion that is now on the order paper with respect to the establishment of a joint committee of this house and the other place to deal with Indian affairs. I notice that it is almost a month or four and a half weeks ago that notice of this motion was given, and I hope it will not be too long delayed before we are able to proceed with the motion in the name of the hon. minister and that this joint committee is established to deal with the Indian Act and Indian affairs in general.

There is one phase, education, which probably in importance overshadows the long range views with respect to our hopes and desires for all Indian people, and probably even overshadows all of the other activities of the Indian affairs branch of the department, and of course takes into account the educational facilities of the various provinces and of private organizations. I would like, if I may, on this question of education, to point out again, if it is necessary to point it out, that the desire for education on the part of Indians has been of long standing.

In 1916 a royal commission on Indian affairs was established in the province of British Columbia, and I have a copy of one of the volumes of its report. This 1916 royal commission was not appointed, incidentally, to deal with the question of education, but was appointed to deal with the question of delineating certain areas for reserves for particular bands and also the question of rights of way through Indian reserves or property for a railroad. I point out that the specific object of this royal commission in British Columbia in 1916, which is long before many of the members sitting in this house today were even born—certainly some years before I was born—was not to deal with education but to deal with the delineation of reserves. However, in the process of that they compiled a certain amount of information about population of bands, the occupation of people in those bands, the condition of them, the educational facilities, the head of the families, how many people under 19, and so on, giving quite a statistical analysis of the population of each band.

I would like to point to some of the comments which are made in this report of 1916, some 43 years ago, and the incidental references the commission made to education of Indian bands and the desire of Indians to obtain that education. In the riding which I represent there is quite a large population of native Indian people, and I wish to refer to how, 43 years ago, native Indians had this attitude toward education. Now we are very slowly and finally realizing the ideals and hopes they had at that time. In the report reference is made to the Kitseguecla band and their condition. It says that they are progressive and comfortably situated. With respect to the view of the Indians on education it says that Indians are understood to strongly favour industrial schools. As I say, this was some 43 years ago, and the Indian people in that reservation at Kitseguecla were desirous of some form of educational facilities in the way of industrial schools. Then there is reference to the Kitamaat band and their condition. This was long before many of us in this house were born, and long before our parents thought we would be entering schools and proceeding through the various steps of education.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I assume we will go ahead, as the leader indicated last night, with the agriculture estimates tomorrow?

Mr. Green: Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is the intention.

Mr. Pickersgill: And private members' day on Monday.

Mr. Green: Yes.

At 10 p.m. the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

[The following items were passed in committee of supply]:

DEPARTMENT OF CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

Citizenship—

Supply—Items Passed

49. Citizenship registration branch, $477,571.

50. Citizenship branch, $881,109.

51. Grants to organizations as detailed in the estimates, $40,000.

Immigration branch—

52. Administration of the Immigration Act, $1,199,386.

53. Field and inspectional service, Canada, including $13,000 for grants to immigrant welfare organizations, $6,899,092.

Questions

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

PUBLIC SERVICE—RESIGNATIONS AND DISMISSALS

Question No. 121—Mr. Denis:

1. What was the number of government employees in departmental branches, services and corporations in June, 1957?
2. What is the present number?
3. How many resigned or were dismissed in that period?

Answer by: Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce):

1. The number of government employees in departmental branches, services and departmental corporations at June 30, 1957, was 192,884.

2. Latest available information is at June 30, 1958, and the numbers were 201,008.

3. Statistics on resignations and dismissals are not available.

NATIONAL MUSEUM—ROYAL COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS

Question No. 185—Mr. Argue:

1. Did the royal commission on arts, letters and sciences make any recommendations regarding the administration and control of the national museum of Canada, and the status of its director?
2. If so, what was the text of its recommendations in this regard?
3. Have any of these recommendations been implemented?
4. If so, which ones have been so implemented, and how have they been carried out?
5. If not, what reasons does the government hold for disregarding these recommendations at present?

1. Yes.

2. The text may be found at page 322 of the royal commission's report.

3. Yes.

4. (a) The geological survey is moving to new quarters in the coming summer and the national gallery moves early next year, thus making the whole of the Victoria museum building available for museum purposes; (b) The national museum's budget has been trebled, increasing from $228,669 in the year 1951-52 to $675,776 in the year 1959-60; (c) The national museum was formerly a division of the national parks branch and was headed by a chief curator at a salary of $8,200-$9,100. In 1956 the national museum of Canada was divided administratively into two branches. One of these, the natural history branch, is headed by a director whose salary is $11,000.

5. Not applicable.

HISTORICAL MUSEUMS—RECOMMENDATIONS OF ROYAL COMMISSION

Question No. 188—Mr. Argue:

1. Did the royal commission on arts, letters and sciences make any recommendations regarding the establishment of a Canadian historical museum; how it should be administered and controlled, and the status of its director?
2. If so, what was the text of its recommendations in this regard?
3. Have any of these recommendations been implemented to any degree?
4. If so, which ones have been so implemented and in what manner have they been carried out?

1. Yes.

2. The text may be found on pages 323 and 324 of the royal commission's report.

3. Yes.

4. (a) In 1956 the national museum of Canada was divided administratively into two branches, one of which is known as the human history branch. The position of director for this branch was created in January 1, 1957 and the director was receiving recently $11,000; (b) The control and administration of the Canadian war museum was transferred on April 1, 1958 from the Department of National Defence to the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, and entrusted to the human history branch of the national museum of Canada.

C.M.H.C., FORT WILLIAM, ONT.—LEGAL SERVICES

Question No. 190—Mr. Fisher:

1. Were any solicitors or other legal talent used by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation office in Fort William during 1957 and 1958?
2. If so, what were their names, addresses and the amounts of the fees?

Answer by: Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works):

1. Yes.

2. The names of solicitors in the Fort William area who were retained by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation or who were paid fees in respect of work allocated by the corporation are detailed below:

Murray W. Babe, Cuthbertson Bldg., Fort William; W. J. Weiler, 208 Grain Exchange Bldg., Fort William; C. B. Devlin, Cuthbertson Bldg., Fort William; R. L. Seaman, Public Utilities Bldg., Port Arthur; A. A. Kajander, Ruttan Block, Port Arthur; H. G. Blanchard, Tomlinson Block, Port Arthur; Gavin H. Young, Tomlinson Block, Port Arthur; C. J. Watt, 418 Portage Ave., Fort Frances.

Fees and disbursements paid by the corporation to Gavin H. Young amounted to $604.65 and those paid to C. B. Devlin to $25. The other work involved consisted of title search and the preparation of mortgages covering loans made by the corporation under the National Housing Act, 1954. In this connection the corporation allocates the work to the solicitors but their legal fees are paid by the borrower. The corporation has no record of the amount of these fees.

MAIL BOX CONTRACTS

Question No. 192—Mr. McBain:

1. Were any tenders called by the Post Office Department between May 1, 1957, and December 31, 1958 for (a) rural mail boxes; (b) mail storage boxes; (c) combination letter and parcel boxes?

2. If so, what was the name and address of firm and tender price submitted?

3. On each contract, who was the successful tender?

Answer by: Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General):

1. (a), (b) and (c) Yes.

NATIONAL MUSEUM—EFFICIENCY OF ORGANIZATION

Question No. 207—Mr. Argue:

1. Has an investigation ever been made by any agency of the government since January 1, 1945, relating to the efficacy of the manner in which the national museum of Canada is organized, administered and its policies determined?

2. If so, on what dates were these investigations made, what agency carried them out and who were its members, by whom were these investigations authorized, and what were the terms of reference of each investigation?

3. Were any reports made as result of these investigations?

4. If so, what was the date on which each was submitted, to whom was it submitted, by whom, and what were the findings and recommendations in each case?

Answer by: Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources):

1. Since 1945 there have been the usual reviews and reassessments by officers of the department, of the civil service commission and of the treasury board as well as the general enquiry into agencies of the Canadian government, such as the national museum of Canada, of the royal commission on the advancement of arts, letters and sciences in Canada. In 1958 there was a special investigation into the situation existing then in the human history branch of the national museum of Canada.

Questions

2. The usual reviews have taken place as required when policy questions arose and were carried out by the responsible officials of the department or other agencies concerned. The royal commission was established by order in council No. 1786 of April 1, 1949, and its terms of reference and membership are to be found on pages xi, xii, xiii and xv. The investigation as to the situation in the museum was undertaken by the deputy minister and an assistant deputy minister.

3. Yes.

4. The royal commission's report was submitted to the governor in council in May, 1951 and its recommendations on the national museum are to be found on pages 322, 323 and 324. The report on the situation in the museum was transmitted on January 14, 1959 by the deputy minister to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. The minister's statement in the House of Commons on January 20, gave an outline of the nature of the findings and of the recommendations.

NATIONAL MUSEUM—INVESTIGATION INTO PERSONNEL DIFFICULTIES

Question No. 208—Mr. Argue:

1. Was an investigation ever authorized by the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, since June 1, 1958, relating to difficulties among any of the personnel of the human history branch of the national museum of Canada?

2. If so, on what date was the investigation undertaken, who made the investigation, by whom was it authorized, when was a report submitted on the matter, and to whom was it submitted?

1. Yes.

2. The investigation began on June 11, 1958 at the direction of the deputy minister. It was carried out partly by an assistant deputy minister and partly by the deputy minister. Interim reports were submitted from time to time to the deputy minister and to the minister. The final report to the minister was made on January 14, 1959.

PUBLIC BUILDING, BRUSSELS, ONT.—PAINTING

Question No. 218—Mr. Denis:

1. Was the interior of the public building at Brussels, Ontario, painted during 1958?

2. If so, were tenders called for the work by public advertisement?

3. If not, how were tenders invited?

4. To whom were invitations to tender sent?

5. From whom were tenders received and what was the amount of each tender?

6. To whom was the contract awarded and in what amount?

7. When was this building painted previously to 1958?

8. Who was the contractor?

9. What was the amount of the contract?

Answer by: Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works):

1. Yes.

2. Yes.

3. Answered by No. 2.

4. Nil.

5. Ed. M. Sharpe, Listowel, $1,165; Lloyd Siddall, Listowel, $995.

6. Lloyd Siddall, Listowel, $995.

7. July, 1952 (interior painting).

8. Walter A. Williamson, Brussels, Ontario.

9. $2,175 (including caretaker's living quarters).

HENSALL, ONT.—POST OFFICE ACCOMMODATION

Question No. 219—Mr. Denis:

1. Has the public works department been authorized to enter into a lease for a new post office building in the village of Hensall, Ontario?

2. If so, who is the lessor?

3. Was the location and design of the building determined by the lessor or the department?

4. Were the department requirements for accommodation made known by way of advertisement? If not, how was the lessor selected?

5. What is the estimated cost of the completed building?

6. What will be the total cost per annum to the department for this accommodation, including caretaking and other services?

7. Does the crown or the landlord provide hydro and water?

8. How many years does the lease cover?

9. Has the department an option to renew the lease at the same cost per annum?

10. What factors were taken into consideration in determining the annual rental?

11. Is this building intended to serve other purposes than those of the post office? If so, what is it to be used for?

12. Why was it necessary to secure new accommodation for the post office in Hensall, Ontario?

Answer by: Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works):

1. Yes.

2. Mr. R. H. Middleton, Hensall, Ontario.

3. The lessor offered space for rental in a building he intended to construct. Both location and design were found acceptable by the post office and public works departments.

4. (a) No; (b) Answered by No. 3.

5. Information not available.

6. $1,628 including estimated cost of services to be supplied by the crown.

7. Crown pays lighting costs and water rates.

8. Ten years.

9. No.

10. Rental was determined by the lessor and compared by public works officials with other commercial rentals for similar type of accommodation in the area.

11. Post Office Department, only.

12. To provide improved and enlarged accommodation for Post Office Department.

APPENDIX

NOTE FROM CANADIAN CHARGE D'AFFAIRES, WASHINGTON, TO ACTING SECRETARY OF STATE

Canadian Embassy

The Canadian chargé d'affaires ad interim presents his compliments to the acting secretary of state and has the honour to refer to the matter of restrictions affecting exports of oil from Canada to the United States and in particular to the recent proposal on which the administrator of the voluntary oil import program has requested comment.

The notes of the Canadian ambassador to the Secretary of State dated January 15 and June 23, 1958, set forth the views of the Canadian government on the principles involved in such restrictive measures. It would now appear desirable to restate these views in the light of the proposal for revision of the basis of the import restrictions which has been put forward for discussion by the administrator of the voluntary oil import program.

The Canadian government continues to believe that there can be no justification on grounds of security (or, for that matter, on other grounds) for United States restrictions on oil coming from Canada. United States government restrictions on oil imports from Canada, imposed in peacetime for security reasons, are not reconcilable with the need of Canada and the United States to pool their oil resources in time of common emergency.

The Canadian government acknowledges that the proposal by the administrator of the voluntary oil import program attempts to take into account the importance to Canada of exports of oil to the United States, and the importance to United States refineries operating on Canadian crude oil of continued freedom to use that oil. Section 5(d) of the proposal would appear to offer to refineries in district II using Canadian oil some means of mitigating the very damaging effects of other sections of the new proposal.

The Canadian government would point out, however, that application of section 5(d) would be a matter of administrative discretion, rather than formal directive. The Canadian government is also aware that the United States government is subject to very considerable pressures from interests which would seek to make the oil import program more rather than less restrictive. The United States government will therefore understand that while the Canadian government is appreciative of the consideration shown for the Canadian position, the Canadian government could only await the actual outcome of the proposed revision with concern.

Further, the Canadian government would not wish any comments on the current proposal to be taken to imply a preference on the part of the Canadian government for one basis of import restrictions as against another. Furthermore so long as any import restrictions continue to be applied against Canadian oil, they will have a deleterious effect on Canadian-United States relations.

Following the imposition of United States restrictions imports from Canada have not only fallen sharply but have declined more seriously than imports from other areas supplying oil to the United States. Examination of United States import figures for petroleum and its products for the months from July 1957 indicates that the volume of crude oil and products moving from Venezuela and the Netherlands Antilles together to the United States has continued fairly level; a decline in crude oil imports has been offset by increases in imports of products. Middle Eastern crude oil and product sales have declined somewhat. In contrast, Canadian sales of crude and products have declined sharply, and by May 1958 were less than half the volume of July 1957. In July, 1957 Canada supplied 9.5 per cent of total United States imports of crude oil and products; by May, 1958 Canada was supplying only 4.5 per cent of such imports. Thus, imports from Canada, the most secure outside source of oil for the United States in normal times and in times of emergency, have fallen much more than those from offshore areas since the inauguration of the United States program established on grounds of United States national security.

This disproportionate decline would appear to have come about largely because of indirect effects of the United States program.

In district V, offshore oil from various sources, after it was denied ready access to the United States eastern seaboard and California, has virtually displaced Canadian oil in Puget sound. It would appear that the Puget sound refiners, having been limited as to the amount of crude oil they could import, have tended to disregard other considerations and have turned to the cheapest available sources of imported oil—Venezuela, the Middle East and the Far East—partly to offset the uneconomic use of United States domestic crude brought in from California; in an open market they might well have continued to use a substantial proportion of Canadian oil.

Similarly, in district II, Venezuelan oil, when limited in its access to other markets in the United States, has been displacing Canadian oil, though the displacement has been less than in the case of district V.

The United States import program has thus borne most heavily upon the source of imported oil for the United States which would be least subject to interruption, and which is most akin to the United States in the cost structure and market prorationing arrangements of its oil industry. Canadian oil is not and has not been a factor contributing to the problems which led to the institution of the United States oil import program. It is therefore a matter of regret and concern to the Canadian government that, notwithstanding the unquestioned goodwill of the United States government, the Canadian oil industry should not only suffer from the import restrictions but should suffer more than the oil industries of other areas especially since the Canadian industry cannot be regarded as having contributed to the problems intended to be met by the United States oil import program. The United States government will recall that in its note of February 19, 1958, it expressed the view that strong petroleum industries in both countries "contribute importantly to the support of the defence efforts with which both Canada and the United States are associated".

In the light of the considerations set out above, it is the hope of the Canadian government that, both because of the current adverse effects and because of the potential consequences for future petroleum policies, the government of the United States in its current re-examination of the import program will find itself able to remove the restrictions which have been imposed on the access of Canadian oil to markets in the United States.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF VISIT BY UNITED KINGDOM PRIME MINISTER

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, following my remarks yesterday I am now in a position to advise that Mr. Macmillan has accepted the invitation to come to Ottawa. He will arrive in Ottawa accompanied by the foreign secretary, Mr. Selwyn Lloyd, early in the morning of March 18, and the major portion of that day will be spent in consultation and talks with members of the government. They will leave for Washington on the morning of March 19.

I know that all hon. members will join in extending a warm welcome to Mr. Macmillan and Mr. Lloyd. By the time they visit us they will have completed a round of exploratory consultations which will have included discussions in Paris and Bonn.

The Prime Minister's visit will be unavoidably short, but plans have been made for a thorough, informal exchange of views on the international problems which confront us as interested members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. My colleagues and I look forward to the opportunity of discussing those matters in particular which resulted from the visit of the Prime Minister to the U.S.S.R.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the remarks of the Prime Minister, and wish to say that the C.C.F. group look forward very much to the visit of Prime Minister Macmillan and Mr. Selwyn Lloyd to Canada. We think this visit is most important at this time because of the discussions Prime Minister Macmillan has had with Premier Khrushchev. I want to say for the C.C.F. that we admire greatly the courage and foresight shown by Prime Minister Macmillan in making his recent trip to the Soviet union. We agree with statements we have seen in the press in which he has said that he would consider a pull-back of troops from Germany, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary and central Europe. We think these talks are most welcome, and we are very much in favour of continued conversations instead of the alternative of extermination for the world.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

"PRIVATE AND PUBLIC INVESTMENT IN CANADA—OUTLOOK 1959"—STATEMENT ON TABLING REPORT

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am tabling today the report, Private and Public Investment in Canada—Outlook 1959, which summarizes the results of a recent survey of capital spending intentions. The survey, conducted annually, is designed to cover all anticipated outlays for new plant and equipment, institutional and government facilities and housing. For the fourth year in succession capital investment in Canada will exceed $8 billion, a more than threefold increase in a period of 12 years. Present investment plans provide for total new capital outlays in 1959 of $8.3 billion, slightly below the $8.4 billion expended in 1958. The over-all total of intended outlays on construction and machinery, including repairs, gives a grand total for 1959 of $11.1 billion, exactly the same as for 1958. An examination of preceding survey results shows that in the past, in comparable situations to that now prevailing in Canada, stated investment plans at the beginning of the year have tended to underestimate the amount of work eventually realized. It is quite possible, therefore, that some further filling out of investment programs will occur during the course of the present year.

Within the total program, the principal increases appear in commercial and institutional building and government projects. Increased capital outlays are indicated for each of the three levels of government. Provincial and municipal governments and agencies are faced with steadily expanding requirements for roads, schools, hospitals and many types of local improvements. Somewhat easier supply conditions in the construction industry have helped in getting ahead with these programs. The federal government also is proceeding with an expanded program of public projects designed to meet the needs for defence installations and other services and to foster national development. Outlays made directly by federal departments are estimated to increase by 10 per cent, while expenditures by all three levels of government combined are expected to rise at almost the same rate.

Within the business sector, commercial construction will apparently go ahead more rapidly than ever. An approximately unchanged rate of capital spending is indicated for a broad range of industry, including agriculture, forest and mineral extraction and processing, secondary manufacturing and transportation and communications. Alone of the major business groups, fuel and power industries have indicated a somewhat lower level of capital expenditures in 1959. This reflects the near completion last year of a number of large scale undertakings, including the trans-Canada gas pipe line, the St. Lawrence seaway and power projects and other major power developments.

In recent months there has been a marked increase in the volume of new projects coming forward. Consequently a larger proportion of the 1959 program is comprised of work on newly-initiated projects, as opposed to the carryover of work on undertakings started in previous years. This change in the make-up of the investment program is indicative of new interest in expansion.

The rate of anticipated expenditures for 1959 indicates that Canadian industry is continuing to expand rapidly. As a proportion of total national output, anticipated outlays for new plant and equipment compare favourably with levels in most post-war years. This continuing build-up in the tools of industry reflects the underlying confidence of the businessman in the future of Canada, and is indicative of the strength and diversity of the expansive forces within the Canadian economy.

The physical impact of the anticipated investment program, in terms of its demands upon Canadian industry, will be about the same in 1959 as in the preceding year. Other types of demand, however, will be higher. Consumer purchases are rising. There are indications that inventory liquidation, which exerted a depressive effect on business activity for most of 1958, will soon give way to accumulation. With recovery proceeding steadily in the United States, export prospects are brightening. A sustained demand for capital goods, in conjunction with expanding markets in other fields, gives promise of further growth in production and employment levels in the period ahead.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the minister has made an extremely important statement which, so far as one can gather from listening to it without notice, represents that in regard to investment intentions and capital expenditures this country merely is holding its own. That is a situation which is surely not satisfactory if we wish to have a dynamic and expanding economy. However, the statement deserves and will receive attention from this side of the house. In due course there will be an opportunity to discuss it, possibly in connection with the budget debate which perhaps will be commencing before the Easter recess.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, knowing the tradition of governments and that the Minister of Trade and Commerce usually tries to put forecasts in the best possible light, it is my opinion that having regard to the need for a tremendous expansion in the Canadian economy, on a study little room will be found for comfort in the statement that has just been made. The statement, in effect, says we are going to be marking time; we will be holding our own, and there will be a reduction of expenditures in certain circumstances. There will be increases in certain other outlays.

When one considers the further increase in automation in this country and its further impact on employment, one can only come to the conclusion that now is the time for a great, dynamic development sponsored and promoted by government action. This is the time for the government, and governments generally, to increase expenditures on self-liquidating projects for the Canadian nation that will result in an increased standard of living and full employment instead of the current stagnation, recession and unemployment.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING MORTGAGES, CERTIFICATES, PILOTS, ETC.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport) moved the first reading of Bill No. S-3 (from the Senate) to amend the Canada Shipping Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

FISHERIES

REFERENCE OF ESTIMATES OF DEPARTMENT TO STANDING COMMITTEE

On the order: Government notices of motion:

March 4—The Minister of Public Works—The following proposed motion:—That items numbered 127 to 145, inclusive, as listed in the main estimates for the year ending March 31, 1960, relating to the Department of Fisheries, be withdrawn from the committee of supply and be referred to the standing committee on marine and fisheries, saving always the powers of the committee of supply in relation to the voting of public moneys.

Mr. Green: Stand.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of standing order 21 this government notice of motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the house.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

REFERENCE OF PUBLIC ACCOUNTS AND CANADA COUNCIL REPORT TO STANDING COMMITTEE

On the order: Government notices of motion:

March 4—The Minister of Finance—The following proposed motion:—That the public accounts volumes I and II and the report of the Auditor General for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1958 and the financial statements of the Canada Council and the report of the Auditor General thereon for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1958 be referred to the standing committee on public accounts.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Stand.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of standing order 21 this government notice of motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the house.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

MONTREAL—INQUIRY AS TO RECEIPT OF TELEGRAM FROM PRODUCERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Minister of National Revenue whether he has received a telegram from the C.B.C. producers in Montreal with regard to the settlement of the strike, and whether he proposes to take any action in regard to that telegram.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I have not received the telegram to which the hon. gentleman refers. All mail and telegrams go to the departmental office first and then come up here. There may be one there, but it has not come to my attention this morning.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Can the minister say whether there has been any change in the attitude of the C.B.C., and whether the C.B.C. is now prepared, as are the producers, to sign the original agreement to which initials had been attached and bring this strike to a conclusion?

Mr. Nowlan: There has been no change in the attitude of the C.B.C. I do not think I can amplify what I said yesterday. The C.B.C. is quite prepared to sign the agreement, provided that agreement means what it says and what it was intended to say when it was initialled early in February.

Mr. Argue: Would that not be the position the C.B.C. should have taken before they initialled the agreement?

Mr. Nowlan: There was no need to take that position before they initialled the agreement because it was fully understood at that time what the agreement meant, and it was only some weeks later that a new interpretation was put upon it.

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): I would like to address a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Is it a fact that the C.B.C. has now proposed a new definition of functions for its producers in Montreal after having refused to ratify the agreement it had accepted on February 7?

Mr. Nowlan: I am not accepting that premise at all. The C.B.C. has not refused to ratify an agreement which had been accepted. The producers have refused to ratify an agreement which they had accepted. So far as I know there has been no change such as the hon. member suggests.

Mr. Deschatelets: A supplementary question. Can the minister tell us why the C.B.C. is making that proposal at this stage, when it had refused to accept a similar one on January 11, two months ago?

Mr. Nowlan: I do not know to what proposal the hon. gentleman refers. I am not in touch directly with negotiations or conversations which have taken place between the corporation and producers. If there is any substance in this question to which the hon. gentleman has called my attention, I will make inquiries and deal with it on Monday.

[Later:]

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct another question to the Minister of National Revenue. I am sorry I did not have time to send him notice. My question can be taken as notice. In view of press reports indicating that Mr. Murray Hayes, vice president of the executive committee of the city of Montreal, received a phone call from a member of the C.B.C. board of directors in connection with the protection of the C.B.C. building in Montreal, can the minister tell us the name of the C.B.C. director who made the call and what was the nature of the representations he made to Mr. Hayes?

Mr. Nowlan: I certainly cannot, Mr. Speaker.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

MONTREAL—REPORTED REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE IN C.B.C. STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Can the Minister of Justice say whether the attorney general of the province of Quebec has authorized the intervention of the R.C.M.P. for the alleged protection of C.B.C. buildings in Montreal? Can he also say why such intervention has been undertaken, and what has been done in this connection by the R.C.M.P. up to now?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): So far as I know the attorney general of the province of Quebec has not taken any steps in the matter. There is, however, an over-all responsibility on the R.C.M. police for the protection of federal properties. The C.B.C. building in Montreal is crown owned property, and some R.C.M. police have been inside the building, prepared to carry out their responsibilities should the need arise.

Mr. Caron: May I ask a supplementary question. Has this intervention of the R.C.M.P. been decided upon by the R.C.M.P., or were they ordered by the government to do so?

Mr. Fulton: The commissioner of the R.C.M. police is responsible for the operations of the R.C.M. police, and in my experience I have not found that the commissioner requires to be ordered to carry out his responsibilities.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): A supplementary question. Has the commissioner discussed this difficulty with the minister, and is this action taken with the approval of the minister?

Mr. Fulton: The commissioner has discussed the situation with me, and as I have said the action referred to consists of the stationing of a small detail of R.C.M. police inside the radio corporation building to protect federal government property and the persons of those who may be using that property. But there has been, according to my information, no intervention. Nothing has actually happened in that regard calling for action by the R.C.M. police.

TRADE

RUSSIA—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF STATEMENT ON AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. My question arises out of the answers given to a question and supplementary question which I asked yesterday concerning the expiry of the trade treaty with Russia. The point to which I wish to address my question is this. The minister, in answer to the supplementary question, having indicated that there was no trade treaty with Russia at the moment, said this:

[Mr. Caron.]

...but Russia enjoys most favoured nation treatment and has for a number of years now.

I would like to ask the minister if he would clarify the position as to the most favoured nation treatment with Russia at the present time?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I shall be glad to do so, Mr. Speaker. The trade treaty which was signed in 1956 expired at the end of February. That trade treaty, with which my hon. friends opposite are quite familiar, principally established the exchange of most favoured nation treatment between Russia and Canada. An order in council was passed in 1956 in this regard, and an order in council would have to be passed to revoke that most favoured nation treatment. In the interval, while negotiations are going on with the Russians, they have been informed that the most favoured nation treatment will be continued in effect. As hon. members are aware, that most favoured nation treatment does not entitle another country to any unique advantage but merely guarantees that the country will not be discriminated against in trade matters.

The main advantage gained by the treaty of 1956 was an agreement for the purchase of wheat from Canada to the amount of 50 million bushels or more. That was to be taken up over a three-year period at not less than 400,000 tons a year. We are in this position at the moment, that for the crop year 1958-1959 the third and final commitment under that arrangement is in process of being settled between the Russians and ourselves. So although the trade treaty of 1956 expired at the end of February, our trade relations in respect of Russia are unchanged.

Perhaps I was not clear in my remarks yesterday that the only restriction with regard to trade with Russia has relation to the strategic list.

Mr. McIlraith: I thank the minister.

U.S. IMPORT CONTROLS ESTABLISHED DURING TERM OF LIBERAL GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether in view of the undertaking made by him last Tuesday in this house, and reported at page 1550 of Hansard, he is now in a position to supply the list of import controls established by the United States when the former Liberal government was in office, on Canadian oil as well as on other Canadian minerals?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have the list available. I had hoped the hon. gentleman would let me know in anticipation that he would like to have it today. It is available, and I will see that the entire list of protests sent by Canada over the years will be made available to the house.

PUBLIC SERVICE

HAY RIVER, N.W.T.—ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION IN ISOLATION ALLOWANCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. A. Hardie (Mackenzie River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Has the minister received any representations from government employees in Hay River, Northwest Territories, concerning the discriminatory isolation allowances paid to civil servants there as compared with allowances paid to other civil servants in the north where the costs of living are comparable? If so, what do they intend to do about it?

Hon. Henri Courtemanche (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge, no.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SIX NATIONS RESERVE—CONFERENCE OF HEREDITARY CHIEFS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I can ask the Prime Minister if it is his intention to attend the summit conference that has been called by the hereditary chiefs of the Six Nations Indians?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the hon. gentleman is also an honorary chief, so I return the compliment and ask him the same question.

Mr. Pickersgill: On a question of privilege, sir, I unfortunately am not a chief, honorary or otherwise. There is a provision that the superintendent general can never accept a chieftainship. I am sure that is the only reason I was not chosen.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

NEWFOUNDLAND—REFERENCE OF LEGISLATION TO CABINET COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice a question arising out of the interview I believe he had yesterday with Mr. Claude Jodoin, president of the Canadian Congress of Labour. Can the minister say whether it is the intention of the government to have the controversial bills now before the Newfoundland legislature referred to any committee of the cabinet or to any body for study, and whether the government is doing this for the purpose of considering whether or not those acts will be disallowed.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): As the hon. gentleman says, I had a visit from Mr. Jodoin and Mr. Forsey yesterday. They indicated to me their concern about the reported legislation of Newfoundland. I advised them that full note was taken of their concern and of the point of view they then put forward and that the matter would be considered by cabinet, where it is now being considered. One of our difficulties, of course, is that the legislation has not yet completed its passage through the Newfoundland house and we do not know in what final form it may emerge, so it is not too easy to arrive at a final decision at the present time; but the questions referred to us are under active study.

Mr. Argue: I appreciate the minister's answer. Can he say whether the bills in their present form are before the cabinet?

Mr. Speaker: I think the answer the minister has given makes it clear that to pursue this matter would be to pursue something that is hypothetical at the present time.

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Sevigny in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Administration branch—

1. Departmental administration, including advisory committee on agricultural services, $747,531.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Chairman, in introducing the estimates of the Department of Agriculture I think perhaps it would be appropriate for me to start by saying something about the reorganization which has been taking place within the department during the past several months and which will go into full effect at the end of this fiscal year, being the end of this month. The change shows up, of course, in the form of the estimates, and most hon. members who have looked at these estimates will no doubt have noted that they are in considerably different form than they were last year and in preceding years.

The physical growth of the department and the increasing dependence of farmers on the results of scientific research have brought about a need for changes in the form and direction of the departmental machine. There is no intention, however, of losing sight of the primary objective of service to agriculture. Rather, the changes are aimed at bringing to bear on farm problems the full resources of the scientific and administrative staffs. I think perhaps I should note that there have been some stories and misapprehensions at one time or another as to what the results of this reorganization would be. Some farmers got the idea that they would no longer be welcome at experimental farms across the country, and so on. Nothing is further from the truth. We are very anxious at all times to have people interested in what is going on at the experimental farms and research centres come there, learn what they can and carry away the results of the experimental work we are doing and put them into practical operation on their own farms.

The main features of the present plan are the establishment of a research branch that will integrate the former experimental farms and science services, and the incorporation of the marketing service and the production service into a production and marketing branch. Each of these new units will have at its head an assistant deputy minister under whom will be a director general with appropriate supporting staff. An administration branch will take care of departmental administration and will also embrace the information division and the economics division, the latter formerly associated with the marketing service.

Undoubtedly the most radical feature of this reorganization is the development of the research branch as the principal research agency of the department. Its organization will differ markedly from the present pattern. The old divisional lines will disappear, and the program directorate will plan and coordinate the research program. It will be the duty of this directorate to search out problems, to study them from the standpoint of their effects on the farmers' economy, and to recommend appropriate action.

Another feature will be the establishment within the department of 10 research institutes organized on the basis of scientific disciplines rather than problems. I have a list of those here but I will not take the time at the moment to go over them. If anyone is interested, when we come to the particular item I will be very glad to give the information in connection with the 10 new research institutes which are being set up.

Apart from the research institutes, the research program will be organized on a regional basis with the type of establishment and the program of work varying with the area. There will be little actual physical change in the present regional establishments, but rather a consolidation of effort and unified administrative control at each centre.

The second major arm of the reorganized department will be the production and marketing branch, bringing under unified direction all departmental activities in the fields of agriculture production and marketing. The largest single unit in this branch will be the health of animals division, which will remain unchanged as to organization. Livestock work in both the production and marketing fields will be centred in the new livestock division. Similarly, poultry work in both fields will be brought together in the poultry division. The present divisions dealing with dairy products, fruits and vegetables, plant products and plant protection will enter the new branch unchanged.

I think I should perhaps also say something about the plans for the central experimental farm here at Ottawa, which have been the subject of a good deal of speculation, not all of it by any means correct. The national capital commission is in the process of acquiring some 4,000 acres of land in the green belt to be used by the Department of Agriculture as an annex to the central experimental farm. It will accommodate the animal research studies, including the animal research institute of the research branch and the animal pathology laboratories of the production and marketing branch.

The commission has actively pursued its land acquiring program and will have the land available as required to carry out the department's plans. It will turn over the land progressively as it is needed to implement these plans. The animal research institute will require one main office-laboratory building to provide working facilities for approximately 80 research officers and satellite functional buildings for dairy cattle, beef cattle, sheep, swine, poultry and fur bearing animals. The animal pathology laboratories will require office-laboratory facilities, a special isolation unit for research on virus diseases, and limited functional buildings for livestock.

It is anticipated that the following work program will go forward during 1959-60: (1) surveys of the site will be completed and the site plan for the animal research centre will be agreed on; (2) plans for the installation of services will be completed; (3) land at and around the building site will be taken over from the national capital commission, the area being approximately 1,000 acres; (4) preliminary plans for the animal research institute office-laboratory will be completed; (5) phase 1 of the building program will be implemented, including the functional buildings for beef cattle and sheep and part of the requirements for poultry; (6) plans for the functional buildings of phase 2 will be completed and will provide for dairy cattle and for the remaining poultry.

It is hoped that the architects can produce a plan for the office-laboratory building and for the functional livestock buildings which will fit into the agricultural setting and the highest ideals of the green belt conception. Speculations that a part or parts of the present experimental farm will be sold or given over to other uses are entirely without foundation at the present time. The agriculture department can use and intends to use all the present central experimental farm, and has no plans whatever for disposing of any part of it. In my view the farm is one of the great assets of Ottawa as a city, and the farm will be increasingly an asset as time goes on. I would envisage that 100 years from now the farm will be to Ottawa what Hyde park is to London or Central park to New York. I would certainly hope that it would not be used for building purposes, and the only big open space left in the city thus alienated and done away with.

I should like to turn to some of the economic matters in connection with agriculture. In the debate on the speech from the throne on January 23 I gave a general picture of the agricultural economy, and I do not intend to repeat what I said at that time. However, I think I should add some of the further statistics which have become available since that time and in this way complete the story of 1958 from the agricultural point of view.

I spoke in January about the gross cash income received by the farmers in 1958 as the highest on record, $2,869 million. I shall not repeat at this moment the gross cash income which I gave at that time in respect of previous years. However, I have here a breakdown of cash income as far as the provinces are concerned. It is quite interesting to analyse this and see what the effect has been in all parts of Canada. I might say these figures are from the dominion bureau of statistics daily bulletin of May 29, 1958, which gives the cash income by provinces for the years 1940-57. We have added the current figures.

In 1958, in Prince Edward Island, cash income amounted to $28,730,000 which was the highest cash income ever earned in Prince Edward Island except for one year. The same is true of Nova Scotia, where the cash income received was the highest except for the year 1956, when I guess they had a good apple crop. It was about $750,000 less than that year.

Mr. Pearson: Would the minister put these figures on the record?

Mr. Harkness: I should be very glad to file this document and have the figures printed in Hansard. I wonder whether the committee would be agreeable to having this done?

The Chairman: Does the committee agree to having these figures printed in Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The figures referred to above follow:]

Mr. Harkness: When we come to New Brunswick we find that the total of $48,147,000 was exceeded only in 1956 by about $1 million, and in 1952 by $100,000 odd. In the province of Quebec, one of our bigger agricultural provinces, the total is the highest in history, $424 million. The same is true of Ontario, with $873,287,000 of cash income.

The highest previous figure was in 1951, when it was $800 million. In succeeding years it has amounted to $770 million in 1952; $749 million in 1953; $726 million in 1954; $791 million in 1957. Last year it amounted to $873 million. In Manitoba there were only four previous years in which cash income was higher, 1948, 1949, 1951 and 1952. In Saskatchewan there were four years in which income was higher, 1951, 1952, 1953 and 1956. In Alberta there was only one year in which income was higher; that was 1952. In British Columbia, last year was the highest on record. For the country as a whole, of course, this is by far the biggest cash income we have ever had in Canada.

I think these figures are very significant Mr. Chairman. They indicate that a great deal of the talk we have heard about agriculture in 1958 being in a poorer condition than in previous years is incorrect. Agriculture in 1958 was in a better position than in any year since 1953, and I think the figures I have just given the committee are sufficient to indicate that this is the case. I should like to point out also that in 1958 cash income increased by 10 per cent in comparison with 1957; by 7½ per cent as compared with 1956; by 20 per cent as compared with 1955, and by 20 per cent as compared with 1954.

At the same time the cost of the goods and services which farmers have had to buy or use increased in 1958 by exactly 1.2 per cent. In other words, the increase in the expenses which farmers have had to bear was considerably less than the increase in their gross income; which means, of course, that their net income has considerably improved. We have no figures yet as to net income, but when those figures come out there is no question but that net income will show a very considerable improvement.

Mr. Pearson: Would the minister permit a question? That comparison of real income with 1951, 1952 or 1953 would not show an improvement?

Mr. Harkness: As far as Ontario and Quebec are concerned I think it would. I have not calculated it. As far as the western provinces are concerned it would not. But real income and other incomes were certainly better in 1958 than in any year since 1953.

[The Chairman.]

It is interesting to look at the statistics with regard to the index of the prices of commodities and services used by farmers. I have had a list prepared which shows not only the index numbers but the percentage increase in costs from one year to another. When we look at these figures we see that a big increase in costs took place between 1946 and 1947 when the cost of the goods and services for which farmers have to pay went up by 8.5 per cent. The biggest jump of all was between 1947 and 1948, when the cost of goods and services went up by 16 per cent in that one year. Then follow two years in which they went up by a little more than 3 per cent each year. Between 1950 and 1951 we find they were up by 9.3 per cent, another big jump, and from 1951 to 1952 by 5.7 per cent. Then we find two years, 1953 and 1954, during which costs fell by about 1 per cent in each year. In 1955 we find costs going up a little, one half of one per cent, 3.9 per cent in 1956. In 1957 it was 3.4 per cent and then in 1958, 1.2 per cent.

It is quite easy to see from these figures in which years the big increase in farm costs took place. It was during the years up to and including 1952. From then on the increase in costs has been nothing like as marked as it was before and, as I say, last year it amounted to only 1.2 per cent.

This table is of value because I think there are some very serious misconceptions with regard to the rate at which the cost of goods and services for which farmers have to pay has increased, and also in regard to the times at which these increases have taken place. There is one other point I think I should make. These index numbers respecting the prices of commodities and services used by farmers have been prepared for Canada as a whole. There is a separate index for western farmers. The figures it shows are similar to the figures in the index for Canada as a whole. They are a little bit lower. For example, as to the average in 1958 for all Canada, the index number is 258.9. For western Canada it is 256.6.

One thing I think I should point out is that the index for western Canada, which is the best official index that can be used, does not give the true picture with respect to grain production, particularly wheat production. The error in it is owing to the weighting which is given to the labour factor. The economics branch of the Department of Agriculture have produced another index which gives, on the basis of a sampling, how much labour cost western grain producers, wheat producers particularly, and how they are making use of the amount of labour they use. They have a labour rating of 1.2 per cent rather than the D.B.S. rate of 13.9 per cent. Actual investigation as to the amount of labour employed by wheat producers shows that it comes to 1.2 per cent of their expenses rather than the 13.9 per cent which D.B.S. assigns with regard to labour costs.

I might say, of course, that this D.B.S. index is the best official index. It is generally known, however, that the index is out of date and that it is being revised at the present time. I think that is the thing we should keep in mind. The actual true index of the cost of goods and services used by farmers as prepared on the basis of the sampling done by the economics branch is 211.4 rather than 256.5 which is given in the official index.

I have here an interesting table. I do not think I had better take the time of the committee to go over it. Besides, it is extremely difficult to put the point across unless you actually have the document in front of you or are using a blackboard. However, I have here quite an interesting table showing how these various indexes are arrived at and the weighting which is given to each of the factors such as machinery, labour costs, seed, fertilizer and so forth.

At this point I should just like to say that a considerable amount of work is being done in order to improve the statistics with regard to agriculture. There is no question but that a great deal of improvement can be made in that matter. I find that one of the complaints of delegations that come down here is that the statistics with regard to agricultural matters, and particularly with regard to production, are not adequate and thus do not enable them to form judgments as well or as correctly as they would like to be able to form them.

In connection with what I have just said about these index numbers I should like to say that of course no blame attaches to anybody for using the indexes which have been supplied. However, I should like to point out that they do not really give the true picture with regard to western grain production. They tend to distort the matter and show a worse situation than that which actually exists with regard to western wheat producers.

Speaking generally, Mr. Chairman, I make no claim that the farmer is in excellent shape. Anybody who did that would be foolish. I make no claim that there is no reason for concern over the farmer's economic situation. The very reverse is the case. The farmer was in a severe cost-price squeeze for several years up to 1958. Since we have been in office over the last 20 months we have followed a long range plan to improve the farmer's position. It will, of course, take time to implement all of this plan, and it will take more time for the effects of the reforms we are making to be fully felt and fully apparent.

The first big step we took in our agricultural program was the passing of the Agricultural Stabilization Act, which during the last year has had an important effect in maintaining and improving the farmer's income. I will not say more on that matter at the present moment.

The other main features of our long range farm program have been mentioned here previously. I will merely indicate them once more. One is an improved system of farm credit. As everyone knows, its was indicated in the speech from the throne that legislation in that regard would be brought in during this session. The same thing applies to a system of crop insurance. Another important matter is soil and water conservation. We have already taken steps in regard to that matter. A final and extremely important matter is that of rural redevelopment in order to look after the farmers on small subsistence farms. According to the last census report, something like 38 per cent of all our farmers had cash incomes of less than $1,200 a year. That is gross income, not net. They had a gross income of less than $1,200 a year. As everyone realizes, that amount is not nearly sufficient to support a farm family. We must take measures to improve the situation of that large segment of our farming population.

The farm situation today, Mr. Chairman, is still far from satisfactory, but—and I should like to emphasize this point—we have made considerable progress. From some points of view 1958 was the best year agriculture has ever had. Certainly it is the best year since 1953 from almost every point of view. Some of the farmers on the prairies say this may be true for eastern livestock and dairy men but not for western grain producers. It is true, Mr. Chairman, that the western farmers had better years in 1951, 1952 and 1953, but those are probably the only years that were better than 1958 as far as western farmers are concerned.

I have here a table which gives the average cash income for farmers from 1951 to 1958 inclusive. It shows that in 1958 the cash income in Manitoba, for example, was better than in any year back to 1953, and was exceeded only in 1951 and 1953 and just barely exceeded in 1952 by about $30 a farm. In 1958 the average cash income in Manitoba was $4,814 a farm. In Saskatchewan the average cash income in 1958 was $5,958 a farm, which was higher than in any year except 1951, 1952 and 1953. In 1954, for example, the average cash income was $4,406 per farm. In Alberta the average cash income in 1958 was $6,495 per farm. That figure is the highest on record. As far as Alberta is concerned it indicates the great value of diversified agriculture. In Alberta you have not the dependence on wheat that you have in Saskatchewan. You have a much greater diversification in agriculture, with specialty crops in the irrigated areas and so on. This diversification explains the fact that the average cash income in Alberta is considerably better than that in Saskatchewan and very much better than that in Manitoba.

These figures with regard to average cash income as far as the three western provinces are concerned I think indicate fairly well that 1958 was a reasonably satisfactory year, and particularly that it was a much more satisfactory year than 1954, 1955, 1956 and 1957.

All, this Mr. Chairman, makes one wonder why there is so much complaint at the present time, and in some quarters, so far as the situation of agriculture is concerned. A great deal of the complaint which is coming forward at the present time, I submit, should have come forward in past years rather than now, when the situation is considerably improved over what it was in 1954, 1955, 1956 and 1957.

Mr. Forbes: May I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Harkness: Yes.

Mr. Forbes: Is the minister referring to net income or gross income?

Mr. Harkness: Those figures are for gross cash income.

Mr. Forbes: I should like to remind the minister at this point that a man's fuel and repair bill could easily amount to the figures he has given.

Mr. Harkness: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Forbes: A man's fuel and repair bill could easily amount to the figures the minister has given.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, all I can do is give you the statistics to indicate what farm income has been in past years, and to point out that the average cash income in 1958 is considerably better than it was in the four previous years. In the case of Alberta, at least the cash income is higher than it was in any previous year. So far as the figures I have are concerned, they indicate a better position with respect to cash income for farmers across Canada, and they are at an all-time high for this particular year.

Mr. Argue: Will the minister say what the forecast is for 1959?

Mr. Harkness: I have not come to the forecast for 1959. We are dealing with the situation in 1958 now.

Mr. Argue: Your officials say it will be worse.

Mr. Harkness: The officials, as a matter of fact, have not made any such prediction.

Mr. Argue: I have it in my hand.

Mr. Harkness: I have the January bulletin, too, and they say the situation, so far as hogs are concerned, is not going to be as good as it was in 1958; that is quite correct.

Mr. Argue: They say much more than that.

Mr. Harkness: As a result of that the net income, not definitely but probably, will not be as good as it was in 1958.

Mr. Argue: In other words it is getting worse.

Mr. Harkness: We are talking now about 1958. The hon. member for Assiniboia said all during 1958 that the situation was far worse than it had been before. He went all through the country in 1958 saying we had done nothing for agriculture and that the agricultural situation was much worse than it had ever been before.

Mr. Argue: I said you had not kept your promises.

Mr. Harkness: Every statistic shows the agricultural situation in 1958 was better than it was in 1954, 1955 and 1956.

Mr. Argue: These fabricated ones that were brought in this morning.

The Chairman: I regret having to interrupt the minister, but his time has expired. Has the minister unanimous consent to continue his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Harkness: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The stock in trade of the hon. member for Assiniboia is going around the country saying how bad conditions are, and he does not like to hear these statistics which show that 1958 was a considerable improvement over past years.

Mr. Argue: Is that why the mass delegation is coming to Ottawa.

The Chairman: I must remind hon. members on my left that the minister has the floor, and will they kindly make their remarks in as low a voice as possible.

Mr. Harkness: I may say that all the statistics I have been able to get, and I am sure all the statistics hon. members opposite will be able to get, indicate that 1958 was an improved year for agriculture. For example, retail sales are a fairly good indicator. They are at an all-time high in the prairie provinces. I have a list of them here. Retail sales for the prairie provinces as a whole in 1958 were $2,905 million; in 1953, the year to which most people in the west look back as a very good year for agriculture, the retail sales were $2,509 million, about $400 million less than they were last year.

Then if we take the various provinces, we find that in Manitoba the figure was $755 million, the highest figure on record. In Saskatchewan it was $901 million, very considerably the highest figure on record for retail sales. The previous high was in 1957 when the figure was $859,800,000, in 1953 they amounted to $845 million. In Alberta retail sales amounted to $1,248 million, and in 1953 to $987 million. In other words, retail sales in that province were up $260 million.

Mr. Argue: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Harkness: Yes.

Mr. Argue: Would those figures include retail sales made to everyone or just to agriculture?

Mr. Harkness: No, those are the retail sales made in those three provinces. However, I should like to point out to the hon. member, as he is always pointing out and as is true, that agriculture is the basic industry of these three prairie provinces. The great majority of the people in the three prairie provinces derive their living, either directly or indirectly from agriculture. Therefore if agricultural income is not relatively good, there is not the money available in those provinces to buy goods and services. The fact that the amount of goods and services purchased there was considerably higher in 1958 than in previous years indicates that the situation was not nearly as desperate as the hon. member for Assiniboia is constantly trying to make out.

Now we may go to another statistic which is a pretty good indication of how good or bad the situation is, and that is passenger car sales. We can examine what they were for several years back and make a comparison. The value of new passenger automobiles sold is at a new all-time high in the three prairie provinces. Total sales were $208,708,000 in 1958; in 1953, $182 million; in 1954, $137 million; in 1955, $156 million; in 1956, $180 million; in 1957, $204 million, and last year, as I have said, $208 million. The only province in which sales are not considerably up over any previous year is Saskatchewan, where they are higher than any time since 1953. These statistics indicate that the farm population is not starving to death; otherwise we would not have statistics of this kind.

Another thing at which I think we should look is the value of farm implements purchased in 1958. These figures are the highest since 1953. They do not, of course, go to anything like the levels of 1951 and 1952, when farmers were re-equipping themselves and completely mechanizing their operations. Most of that machinery is still in good shape and in operation. In 1958 the value of farm machinery purchased in the three prairie provinces was $94,578,000; in 1954 it was $80 million; in 1955, $75 million; in 1956, $92 million; in 1957, $77 million. Once again we find a very considerable volume of farm implements was purchased in 1958.

We have heard, Mr. Chairman, in this chamber and in other places, a great deal about the cost of production of agricultural commodities. It has been taken for granted by many people, I believe, speaking on agricultural matters that the farmer was not getting the cost of production so far as many commodities were concerned. It may be true that some farmers are not getting the cost of production at the present time, and it may be true as far as some commodities are concerned that the cost of production as a whole is not being secured. But by and large that statement, from the investigation we have been able to make, is not correct.

During the last year and a half in the Department of Agriculture, particularly in the economics branch, we have done a good deal of work on cost of production, and other people have also been working on that problem. Quite a few surveys have been made as to what is the cost of production for raising wheat, for raising hogs, for producing milk, for producing eggs, and so forth. A series of studies by J. W. Clarke of the Kindersley vocational farmers provide information on cost of production as far as wheat is concerned. It shows a wide variation in cost between small and large farms. An allowance of 5 per cent interest on capital and a $3,000 operator's wage was made, in addition to other operating costs. In 1955 the cost per bushel varied from $1.39 for the group of small farms to 72 cents for the group of large farms. That is the cost per bushel of producing wheat in the area he was studing in that year. In 1956 these costs were $1.37 and 97 cents respectively; in 1957, $1.44 and $1.21 respectively.

I would like to emphasize what I said a little earlier, that these studies show a terrific variation in cost between small and large farms. When you come to the cost of production per bushel you also have an extremely wide variation, depending on what the yield was in the particular year you are dealing with. If you had a high yield the cost of production per bushel is quite low; if you had a low yield the cost is high. These figures indicate some of the difficulties of trying to arrive at the cost of production per bushel of wheat. It varies terrifically from area to area, from farmer to farmer, from type of soil to type of soil, and from year to year.

The studies of the economics division indicated a variation similar to the studies conducted by Mr. Clarke. In these studies an allowance of 5 per cent on capital and $2,400 for the operator was made. In 1954, with high productivity soil—and in this case we put it on cost per acre rather than cost per bushel—the cost per acre varied from $36 on small farms to $22 on large farms. With medium productivity soil for the same year the cost varied from $28 on small farms to $16.50 on large farms. In 1955 with heavy soil it varied from $26.50 on small farms to $17.50 on large farms. These cost of production figures as far as wheat is concerned, Mr. Chairman, I think are quite interesting.

As far as the costs produced by Mr. Clarke in his studies around Kindersley are concerned, as I say he allowed in these costs 5 per cent return on the capital invested. In 1954 on farms up to 480 acres the cost per bushel was $1.26. In the range from 481 to 960 acres the cost was $1.14, and in larger farms of 961 acres and over it was $1.08 and an average of $1.16. That was with a yield on summerfallow of 21 bushels, and on stubble of 14 bushels. In the next year, 1955, with the same area farms the average cost instead of being $1.16 per bushel was 72 cents a bushel. Why? Because the yield was 27 bushels on summerfallow and 20 bushels on stubble. In 1956 the average cost was 80 cents a bushel, and in 1957 the average cost was $1.03 per bushel. Kindersley is a good area, as I think all members from Saskatchewan will agree, and the yields there have been relatively good.

What these cost of production figures show, however, is that as far as farmers in the Kindersley area are concerned they have all been making good money in the past several years, because if you figure 5 per cent return on their capital invested you still get $1.16, 72 cents, 80 cents and $1.03 per bushel cost of production of their wheat; and during that period they sold their wheat at considerably better prices than that. The studies carried on by the economics division of the Department of Agriculture indicate what were the costs—and these are quite interesting—of producing a bushel of wheat on medium sized farms with high and medium productivity soils in the years 1939, 1947, 1954, 1955 and 1956. The result of this study shows that the cost of producing a bushel of wheat in 1939 with a high productivity soil was 61 cents. In 1947 it was 88 cents; in 1954 it was $1.12; and in 1955, $1.11. With medium productivity soil for 1939 the cost was 95 cents; for 1947, $1.18 cents; for 1954, $1.27 and in this case, for 1956, $1.13.

Mr. Argue: Might I ask the minister to clarify a point? Can the minister say on what basis the farm operator's labour is calculated?

Mr. Harkness: It was on the basis as indicated before, an allowance of 5 per cent on capital and $2,400 wages for the operator. In other words these costs include 5 per cent on capital and $2,400 for wages. What these cost of production figures indicate, as I said before, is the great variation, more than anything else, from farmer to farmer, from area to area and from year to year, depending on what the yield has been.

We have also carried on extensive studies on the cost of production of other commodities. I have one study with regard to hogs, and I would like to say something about it because I am sure hon. members will be interested. This cost data was secured from areas in Quebec, Ontario and Alberta. They are the three big hog producing provinces. As far as Quebec is concerned, the Quebec department of agriculture has carried on complete cost account studies on 25 farms throughout the province since 1956, and that was the data we took and used, having been collected by the Quebec department of agriculture. As far as costing is concerned, farm grown grain was charged at the farm cost and skim milk at 25 cents per hundredweight. In the 1956-57 report the operator's labour was counted in at $150 per month. In 1956-57 the cost of producing hogs averaged $16.25 per live hundredweight in the province of Quebec, and ranged from a low of $7.81 to a high of $29.18. This gives you some idea of the terrific difference in cost which you get from one farmer to another. These are all farmers who kept records.

Mr. Gour: When you find the name of the farmer who produced at $7.81, I would like to know it.

Mr. Harkness: I presume I could find the name. I am putting these figures on record to show the marked variation one finds in the figures given for cost of production, and in order to show how unreliable they are in some instances.

Mr. Gour: That gentleman has never been born.

Mr. Harkness: These are the figures which were collected during a survey made by the Quebec department of agriculture. I intend myself to point out a striking disparity in these figures—

Mr. Boulanger: Where was this survey made?

Mr. Harkness: These are figures supplied by various farmers scattered over Quebec. In any event, as I say, the average cost of production on all the farms was shown as $16.25. The largest cost item was for feed, which averaged 78.6 per cent of the total cost in 1956-57 and 80.7 per cent of the cost in 1955-56.

Now we come to Ontario, and the data used in this report were obtained from studies conducted by the farm economics branch of the Ontario department of agriculture for the years 1955 and 1956. A total of 50 records were obtained in the counties of Waterloo, Perth and Wellington. I may say that family and operator labour were charged at the current rate of average hired male wages, including board, in the area, and that an additional allowance of 20 per cent was charged in respect of the operator for management. These charges are all included, and in 1956-57 the cost of producing hogs averaged $14.06 per live hundredweight and $33.70 per pig for the feeder plant as compared with $15.67 per live hundredweight and $31.34 per pig for the combined enterprise group where they are raising the pigs themselves from brood sows.

Once again the largest item of cost was feed. In 1956-57 it averaged 84 per cent of the total cost per hundredweight for feeder plants and 79 per cent for combined enterprise farms where the pig is raised from birth. These figures are further broken down. The cost of feed in 1956-57 was $11.83 for the feeder plant and $12.44 for the combined enterprise. In 1955-56 corresponding figures were $11.55 and $12.83.

We turn now to Alberta. In this case the summary is taken from the mixed farm cost studies conducted by the Alberta department of agriculture. Cost data were obtained from 50 farms in central Alberta during the period from 1951 to 1955. The years are not exactly the same, except for the last year. The costs for the most recent year shown, 1955, were adjusted to 1958 rather than using the five year period figures in order to arrive at comparable figures for Alberta as compared with Ontario and Quebec. This study shows that the average cost of producing hogs on a herd basis per 200-pound hog in 1958 was $35.83. On a hundredweight basis this was $17.92. It was thus slightly higher than the average cost of $17.58 in 1955. But when one comes to consider the cost of feed one finds that in Alberta, in 1955, all feed amounted to a total of $22.10, and that in 1958 the cost was $21.86. According to the Ontario study the cost of feed is just about half that sum. The cost in Ontario is shown as being $11.83 and $11.55.

It is quite clear that this is wrong, because everyone knows the average cost of feed is less in Alberta than in Ontario. After all, the feed has to be shipped from Alberta to Ontario. It has to be moved from the farm and put into the elevator. There is the handling charge to be paid. In addition there is freight, though of course the subsidy carries a large portion of that. However, one has only to look at the cost of a bushel of wheat or barley in Alberta as compared with the cost in Ontario to see what the difference is. Yet these cost of production figures show that the cost of feed in Alberta is much higher than it is in Ontario, an indication that it is almost impossible to arrive at anything which can be considered as scientifically accurate in these cost of production figures and studies.

We in the department have been carrying on such studies for the last year and a half with respect to various commodities. We have done a great deal of work on them, but I would hesitate very much about putting them out as being definite, reliable and dependable. Here we have a great variation in the results of studies carried out by different departments of agriculture showing a wide variation in their figures. It is quite apparent that the Alberta figures and the Ontario figures cannot both be right.

One of the reasons I mention this matter is that there is such a widespread demand for cost of production studies to be carried on and for support prices to be related to the figures produced by these studies. We have been doing our best and producing the most reliable figures we can. However, I call attention to this particular difference in connection with hogs to show how difficult it is to reach a reliable figure concerning cost of production.

One other thing I should like to say before I leave the subject is this. All these figures as far as hogs are concerned show that the cost of production, including wages, was lower than the floor price, in other words that the floor price is higher than the cost of production on any figures produced. I think that is significant.

I had intended to say something about the operation of the agricultural stabilization board and about irrigation, drainage work and P.F.R.A. work generally, in addition to touching on various other matters of interest in the department, but I think it would be unfair for me to impose on the time of the committee any further, and that it would be better to go into these matters as they arise under specified items.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested in the remarks of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness). He gave us a splendid outline of farm conditions in 1958. He also made interesting comparisons with previous years. However, I think he forgot to tell us a most important thing. He forgot to say that the results obtained were due to the wise and considered policy applied by the Liberal government during 22 years of administration. I am willing to admit that the Liberal party did not find a cure-all for all the ills of agriculture, because the Liberal party is as humble as it is great. However, it is recognized that the farming industry in Canada has developed considerably under the Liberal administration which was led by honest and sincere men who only wanted the best for the country as a whole.

The Minister of Agriculture—

(Text):

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): That is really stretching it.

Mr. Henderson: You mean Gardiner?

Mr. Boulanger: He is a better man than anyone you have, anyway.

Mr. Henderson: No, sir; you are wrong.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: If the hon. member wants to rise and ask a question—

(Text):

Mr. Henderson: I come from a district—

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McGee): Order. The hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska may proceed.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, I am glad to find that the simultaneous interpretation system is working very well.

Mr. Pigeon: Thanks to the Conservative government, and to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, in the remarks he made during the debate in reply to the speech from the throne as well as in his latest statement, the Minister of Agriculture has tried to list all agricultural legislation passed in the two years his government has been in power. He even went further, and referred certain bills adopted by the Liberal administration. We are happy and appreciative about it. We are sincerely convinced of having done something for our farmers.

The Minister of Agriculture has detailed the new bills which the government intends to submit to this house: to amend the Canadian Farm Loan Act, to introduce a crop insurance plan, to set up a soil and water conservation project, to institute a program for the re-development of certain farming districts, to extend our export markets, and so on.

I would ask the minister that when he introduces those bills, he let us have advance copies of them at least a week before they are discussed. The part of his speech to which the hon. gentleman seems to have given greatest emphasis is the listing of farm products that are being sold at higher prices than in other countries. He was very happy to announce that the value of products sold by farmers had risen in 1958.

Wheat prices are the only ones to remain lower than those obtained by farmers in other countries. Yet, wheat represents the main source of income of western farmers. The minister did not dwell at length on the wheat problem. I am sorry I have not any figures on hand, but I am sure I can safely say that Canadian wheat prices only come in twelfth place in comparison to prices obtained by producers in other countries.

In his speech on the address in reply, the hon. Minister of Agriculture closed his enumeration with a list of payments made directly to the farmers in 1958. He told us then that under the following measures the government had paid these amounts to Canadian farmers:

Payments to western farmers	$42,000,000
Prairie farm assistance	$25,000,000
Prairie farm rehabilitation	$17,285,988
Maritime marshland rehabilitation	$ 2,275,000
Premiums on high grade hogs	$ 6,630,000
Freight assistance on grains ..	$21,000,000
Farm price stabilization	$15,000,000

Thus, the federal government has paid to our farmers in 1958 some $166 million.

Mr. Chairman, this increase in the net income from the sale of farm products, as well as the payments made to farmers under the various acts I have just referred to, are the result of Liberal policy, as I said previously.

A good portion of this increase in income is the result of increased sales of our beef cattle to the United States, at a better price and that, thanks to an agreement concluded by the Liberal government. However, the hon. Minister of Agriculture may take credit for that, if he so wishes.

There are, however, other facts on which the minister did not elaborate, particularly in regard to the increase in costs of professional service goods needed by the farmers, as compared to the prices obtained for their products.

A moment ago, the hon. minister gave us a detailed series of index numbers, which we are at a loss to understand.

I have also prepared index numbers, which may be found in the reports of the Economiste agricole. In the December 1958 issue, it is said that the general index of services used by farmers rose from 251.2 in January 1958, to 262.9 in August of the same year, an increase of 11.7. The increase is even greater in the western provinces, where the index rose from 245 in January 1958, to 262.7 in April 1958, an increase of 17.7.

This increase in the general index of service goods bought by the farmers does not correspond to the decrease of the general index of wholesale prices of farm products, which was down to 231 in 1957, the lowest level ever reached since 1948. For the first seven months of 1958, the index improved somewhat and reached 238.

If we consider the practical aspect of the matter, we come to the conclusion that the farmers now get 44 cents per dollar spent by the consumer for the purchase of food products of Canadian origin, whereas according to the Prime Minister's very words, reproduced in the Ottawa Journal of April 27, 1957, following a speech he had delivered at Newcastle on April 26, 1957, he got the following:

(Text):

"Between 1951—1952", he said, "the farmer's share of the consumer price dollar dropped from 59 cents to 51 cents.

It is now 44 cents.

An hon. Member: That is what you say.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: Those are figures that the Minister of Agriculture was afraid to mention, but that he will have to put in the records of his department, as a contribution to the development of Canadian agriculture.

And there will be yet, during this session, Conservative members—even among the 71 who represent the western provinces—to support and commend the agricultural policies of the government and of the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Chairman, the time of boasting is passed, and it is now time, more than ever, to act.

Mr. Pigeon: That is precisely what the government did.

Mr. Boulanger: I understand that the government—

(Text):

Mr. MacLean (Winnipeg North Centre): Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Boulanger: After I have finished it can be arranged.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McGee): Order. If the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska wishes to yield the floor he may. Otherwise he has the floor.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, the time for bragging is over, as I was saying just a moment ago. I understand that the government, and particularly the Minister of Agriculture, after their heady victory in March 1958, felt they were supermen and thought the administration of Canada raised no greater problems than were involved in winning an election through irresponsible promises.

I should like to recall a few of the premises made by the Prime Minister in a speech he delivered at Brantford on May 9, 1957, as reported the same day in the Ottawa Journal. The Prime Minister then stated:

(Text):

If elected to power the Conservatives will take action to improve the condition of agriculture so that farm people may successfully re-establish their rightful position in our economy.

(Translation):

I hope the members will go on cheering till the end.

(Text):

Maintain a flexible price support program to ensure an adequate parity for agricultural producers, based on a fair price-cost relationship.

Place a formula in the Agricultural Prices Support Act for arriving at support prices. It would allow for variation in production and demand for individual products.

Establish support prices in consultation with farm organizations to be announced each year well in advance of the production period.

The Conservatives would seek effective trade agreements with other countries and make use of vigorous marketing and advertising programs.

They would extend and ease farm credit policies. They would work with the provinces in establishing a proper program of soil and water conservation on a national basis.

At Minnedosa, Manitoba, on May 16, as reported in the Toronto Daily Star of May 17, he said:

To farmers whose family income has dropped from $3,600 to $3,000 since 1951, while the average income across Canada has risen from $4,100 to $4,900, action must be taken to reverse the continuing decline in farm income. The farmer was the forgotten man in Canada and only a Conservative government could restore the prosperity he once enjoyed.

(Translation):

Now we can see that all this amounted to no more than big words and irresponsible, foolish promises designed to pick up votes.

What action is the government taking to stop the soaring prices of goods and services used by farmers, when the index, which was at 247.6 in 1956, rose to 255.8 in 1957, and stood at 262.7 last April? Where will the index stand when you add the 17 per cent boost in freight rates? According to the Manitoba Co-Operator, it will cost $450 more for the transport of a combine from Ontario to Brandon, Manitoba; $280 for a tractor with four plows; $55 for a raker and $30 for a mower. Where will the index stand after you pile on the increased taxes, loan interest and the 8.2 per cent increase in handling cost of food products, and the 30 per cent increase in handling and grading costs for eggs?

It was not without reason that the chairman of the commission on price spreads stated last November 12 that farmers are able to stay on the farm only by ignoring the depreciation on their equipment and by living, in effect, on their capital. Such persistence is seldom seen in other fields of activity.

Again, farmers will be the ones to bear the burden of such an increase, particularly those of average income. They will again have to tighten their belts, because farmers are not in the category of those who can pass on to consumers the increased costs of services they use.

When the government decided to approve higher freight rates, it took into consideration the difference between wages paid in other industries and those paid to railway employees, but took no account of farmers' incomes.

I ask the government just what was meant when during the last two election campaigns, the Prime Minister and his supporters said that the Conservatives would give back to the farmers their fair share of the national income.

It is interesting to thumb through copies of Hansard for the year 1956. You will find in them the finest speeches ever made on parity prices and on the farmers' right to a fair share in the national economy. Those speeches were made by the Prime Minister who was then Leader of the Opposition.

Here is what he said, according to page 2021 of Hansard, English text, of March 12, 1956:

The squeeze which the farmer suffers results from the disparity in the relationship between the prices of farm products and the prices the farmer has to pay. When they are in proper relationship parity is established, and it is parity that the farm organizations across this country are asking for today.

He then made the following proposal:

In the opinion of this house—

Those were promises made by the present Prime Minister when he was Leader of the Opposition.

I come now to the motion he moved in this house on March 12, 1956:

In the opinion of this house consideration should be given by the government to the advisibility of introducing during the present session legislation to create a parity of prices for agricultural products at levels to insure producers a fair price-cost relationship.

That was the attitude taken by the Prime Minister when he was leader of the opposition.

Yesterday's cream has turned to to-day's curds.

Mr. Chairman, farmers cannot tighten their belt any more than they have done. We have come to a point that will lead us to the failure of the farming class and to a breakdown of our general economy unless drastic action is taken to safeguard our family farms, the backbone of our economic system.

This will require unity of thought on the part of our leaders. Unfortunately, that is not the impression we get from the statements made by members of the government side, as the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Brassard) so ably indicated in his speech of January 22, as found on page 229, English text, of Hansard.

The Prime Minister said in Saskatoon, at the opening of the exhibition:

To those who think that in the field of agriculture we have come to a point where expansion is no longer desirable, I shall say this: one fourth of the world's population goes to bed at night on an empty stomach and we must devise means of distributing our surpluses so that the nations of the world can find happiness.

Before making the gifts he has in mind, he should consult his members from the province of Quebec who said during the last election campaign: "Duplessis gives to his province and Ottawa gives to foreign countries".

On the other hand, the Minister of Agriculture said at the federal-provincial agricultural conference last fall:

There are but two possible ways to prevent the stockpiling of heavy surpluses in sustained farming. One depends on the farmer, the other on the government. Either farmers, as a group voluntarily submit to a production rate as consistent as possible with domestic and foreign needs or the government tries to get the same results by lowering prices. For the time being, we are counting on the voluntary system to restore this balance in certain productions: if we cannot do it that way, we will have to lower present support levels a notch or two.

That is the statement made by a federal minister.

(Text):

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. I do not know whether or not the hon. member has translated my remarks himself, but certainly the re-translation I am hearing bears very little resemblance to what I said on this occasion. As I said, I do not know as between these translations what the situation is, but if the hon. member translated my remarks into French himself, the re-translation I am hearing is not what I said.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: That quotation, Mr. Chairman, comes from the paper La Terre de chez nous, published a few days only after the federal-provincial conference on agriculture. The statement is not mine. If he wants to cast blame on anyone, he should direct it to the paper La Terre de chez nous.

(Text):

Mr. Harkness: On that point, I do not know that is the case at all. The translation may be correct, but what I am hearing in my ear is not what I said; that is all.

Mr. Habel: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I think the minister should complain to the translation people and not about the member who is now speaking.

Mr. Harkness: May I make this point clear? I was not complaining about the member speaking, I was merely pointing out that what I was hearing was not what I said. I wanted to make it clear that these were not my words and I was not assenting to them as being what I said; that is all.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: The important thing is not whether my words were properly or improperly interpreted but the fact that they are on the record and that they are true.

Such was the statement of a minister of the Canadian government who is moreover, a member of a departmental committee responsible for the disposal of surpluses.

This is irrefutable proof of incompetence on the part of the Minister of Agriculture and of the lack of a real farm policy. This lack of single purpose is the more serious at this time, when Canada's general economy is facing unprecedented difficulties and when unemployment is rising at an alarming rate. Agriculture should be at the very basis of our economy and not its doormat as it seems to be considered by those men who lack unity of purpose.

The number of farmers who leave the farm to swell the ranks of the unemployed in cities is disconcerting. Another cabinet member, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Hamilton),—who might be described as the minister with visions,—said over the radio, in Regina, on January 31, according to reports in the Western Producer for February 12 and March 5:

(Text):

This seems to be organized mainly by Mr. Wesson, the head of the wheat pool, and supported to some degree by Mr. Gleave of the S.F.N. There is grave suspicion in the minds of many that the march on Ottawa is not a genuine march of grassroots farmers that rose from the grassroots.

Some comments were made following the minister's speech, and let me give you an example.

The Chairman: Order; I must remind the hon. member that his time has expired.

Mr. Argue: Carry on.

Some hon. Members: One o'clock.

The Chairman: Is it the pleasure of the committee that the hon. member be permitted to continue his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: One o'clock.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member will be permitted to carry on his remarks at 2.30. It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

Supply—Agriculture

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, I thank the house for allowing me to proceed with my remarks.

When the house adjourned at one o'clock, I was reading from an editorial published in the Western Producer last February 12, which reads as follows:

(Text):

If keeping a promise can be described as a "political conspiracy," how would one describe the broken promises of Conservative members from the west? One could be tempted, in a moment of anger, to describe them as political renegades. But, not being given to strong language, let us just say that they suffer from lapse of memory. It is to be hoped that the farm delegation will serve to remind them of the numerous promises they made to those engaged in agriculture.

How different is the attitude of the present Prime Minister from that of a slightly younger politician from Saskatchewan, by the name of John Diefenbaker! In 1942, under similar circumstances, Mr. Diefenbaker addressed huge farm meetings and urged them to "march to Ottawa and demand justice."

What does he expect them to do now, crawl to Ottawa and beg charity?

The whole issue, if it were not so serious, would be amusing. There was truth in the old English ditty, which ran something like this:

When the Devil was ill
The Devil a saint would be,
But when he grew well
Devil a saint was he!

(Translation):

If Canadian farmers' living conditions are as interesting as the hon. Minister of Agriculture made them out, why does he travel to western Canada to set things right? It is simply with the idea of toning down the promises made by the Prime Minister and his candidates during the last elections.

Mr. Chairman, on looking through the magazine "Conditions and Prospects of the Farming Industry in 1959", I find that, according to that publication, the net revenue in 1959 will probably be slightly less than in 1958. It says here that the prices of steers and calves might be lower in 1959, as might the price of lamb. Hog prices during the first nine months will be very much lower than in 1958.

Prospects for the export of hogs are not bright, for production in the United States is being increased and therefore the price stabilization board will go on buying as it has since October 1958.

The demand for beef cattle from the United States will remain firm, but the average price will be less than in 1958.

Those are briefly the conditions which farmers are up against in 1959.

Mr. Chairman, as I said earlier in my remarks, the speech from the throne announced that new legislation was to be submitted at this session. Such new legislation would certainly be of appreciable value, but it would not be a lasting solution to the farm problem, which is in a constant state of flux.

Indeed of what good will the Price Stabilization Act be for submarginal farms?

Was the Price Stabilization Act passed for the purpose of maintaining the level of farm revenues, or for the purpose of increasing prices? Will it bring about production control, as previously intimated by the hon. Minister of Agriculture?

How could one then reconcile the practice of production control with the education and research work being carried out by our experimental farms, laboratories and information services?

What is the good of deficiency payments to farmers who do not earn enough to provide for their families?

What is the good of the farm credit legislation, even improved, if the farmer does not earn enough to meet his yearly payments. I agree there is an urgent need of amendments, but that does not touch the core of the problem.

At its latest conventions, the Liberal party had considered those problems in the light of the new legislation it planned to introduce. A few resolutions were adopted and I am glad to submit some of them to the minister. Besides promoting the setting up of a farm and fisheries development bank, designed to facilitate and increase present credits—a resolution which I personally proposed, and dealt with here on February 2 last—the Liberal party recommended the establishment in each province of an advisory committee on agriculture whose membership would include federal and provincial authorities. That committee would be responsible for studying agricultural problems within the limits of each province and making fair and appropriate recommendations to the federal government.

Those provincial committees would have a hard task but the surveys and recommendations they could make would be tremendously useful.

While I do not wish to minimize the value of the senate committee on land use, I am inclined to believe that within the limits of its province, a commission such as this would render greater services.

On the federal level, those committees could advise the minister on the setting of prices for farm products.

In every province, there are different problems which require special attention. Thus in the maritimes and in Newfoundland, those studies would be concentrated on fisheries perhaps more than on agriculture. In Quebec and Ontario, a study might be made of land classification and reforestation, while in the prairies, the wheat problem might be gone into.

This morning, in his remarks, the Minister of Agriculture said he was in favour of setting up certain research committees. We shall be glad to co-operate, inasmuch as such committees meet the needs of all Canadian farmers.

(Text):

Mr. MacLean (Winnipeg North Centre): The hon. member stated that he would answer my question when he had finished. He has just made a forceful speech on agriculture. The hon. member seems to be the chief agriculture critic for the Liberal party. Will he tell the committee whether or not he is in favour of the proposed deficiency payments for grain farmers?

Mr. Boulanger: I do not have to commit myself on this. We have already discussed this question and I have given my answer. If you wish to refer to it you can do so.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, I listened this morning with very great interest to the Minister of Agriculture making a very important statement at this time as to the economic condition of agriculture. I have heard many speeches in this house by ministers of agriculture, and I never thought I would ever listen to a minister who showed greater dexterity with figures than the former minister of agriculture, Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner. However, I see that the present Minister of Agriculture has learned everything the former minister used to know in this respect, and I think has learned even more. Because he has brought in today a conglomeration of statistics, some official, some from provincial administrations, some concocted for this debate from the recesses of the Department of Agriculture, to prove something that every farmer in this country knows is not the case, namely that in some respects the year 1958 was the best year agriculture ever had.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, in order to keep the record straight, I did not make that statement. What I said was that it was the best year agriculture had had since 1953.

Mr. Argue: If the minister cares to read Hansard he will see the words used by him this morning. But I challenge the general statistics that the minister has used. I challenge his conclusions and I say to him that the very best evidence of the state of agriculture will be shown in this very city on Monday morning by the people who disagree completely with his views, when 1,000 or more delegates from the prairie provinces come here to tell him that his agricultural policy is not as he has painted it today.

Mr. Speakman: Nonsense.

Mr. Argue: He went to great lengths to bring forth statistics to show cash income. He was unable, he said, to bring forth statistics to show net income for 1958; but he did not point out that, in the way he presented it, that cash income in no way took into account the very serious drop in the purchasing power of the dollar in the last ten years. You do not prove the case that 1958 was the best year agriculture has ever had, or even the best year since 1953, unless you take into account the obvious fact that money will not buy as much as it used to. Every other industry, or almost every other industry, has seen year after year a steady increase in its cash income and its net income. Some industries and some people have been in the very favourable position of being able to obtain an increase in real income.

The Minister of Agriculture was not content with bringing forth figures which were alleged to relate to the economic situation in agriculture today, but he went far afield to use retail sales statistics, such as passenger car sales statistics, without taking into account what is obvious to any member who knows anything about agriculture, namely that people who are not directly connected with agriculture have not experienced the difficulties of the farming industry.

The province of Saskatchewan, which is substantially an agricultural province, has enjoyed in recent years a very rapid industrial expansion. Because of the urban and industrial expansion in that province, it is possible for retail sales to increase, for passenger car sales to increase, and for agriculture to remain in a very depressed position. Cash income in 1958 increased, and it increased in the main because we have exported larger numbers of cattle to the United States at higher prices. This is the main central fact in the increase in agricultural income. Can the minister say with any certainty that these exports at this price will be maintained this year?

Mr. Harkness: Yes.

Mr. Argue: The minister says yes, he can assure us of this. We are glad to have that assurance.

Mr. Harkness: I hope the hon. member will not keep trying to put words into my mouth which I did not say. What I do say is that there is every prospect that the exports of cattle to the United States will continue throughout this year at much the same prices as last year.

Mr. Argue: There we have another opinion from the Department of Agriculture. The minister failed in his speech this morning to relate anything to export markets. There was no reference to the difficulty we are having in obtaining a new trade agreement with the Soviet union. There was no reference to the possibility of a continued trade agreement with Poland. The minister knows, I believe, that agriculture in this country today is sitting on a keg of powder which is likely to go off at any time because of the very difficult situation we find ourselves in with regard to export markets, the growing threat to our markets in the United States, and the fact that the government has not come to grips with the central question of inflation and the rising costs of production.

The minister today made a much different speech from the speech which he made in this city on November 12 last. The speech he made today was for the consumption, in the main, I suggest, not of people who know anything about agriculture but of the people who are not acquainted with agriculture. After this speech you will see one editorial after another in the main newspapers of this country; you will see prominent newspaper reports, based on the minister's statement, that agriculture is in a good position, that agriculture is booming, that—

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, I have the floor and the minister cannot interrupt me.

Mr. Harkness: I am rising both on a question of privilege and a point of order. The member is stating that I said agriculture was in a good situation. I did not say that. What I said in my speech was that no one would say agriculture is in a good position, but it is in the best position since the previous four years. I did not say it was in a good position or was booming, and I object most strongly to the hon. member constantly putting words which I did not utter into my mouth in an attempt to give a completely false impression of what I said this morning.

[Mr. Argue.]

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, when the minister rises again in such a violent and volatile mood I hope he will rise on something which is a point of order. The minister knows from long experience in this house that if he disagrees with what I am saying, or even disagrees with the interpretation which I am putting on remarks of his, then it is his privilege, in keeping with the rules of the house, to rise when I sit down and contradict those statements. It is not the privilege of the minister to rise on what are fictitious points of order in an attempt to interpret statements I am making while I have the floor.

To return to the statement I was making. As a result of the most unfortunate speech which the minister made this morning there will be a great many editorials in the principal newspapers of this country and strong arguments put forward that agriculture is in a good situation, that agriculture is in a much better position than it has been for years. Those editorials and those comments will be misleading to the people who are outside the agriculture industry and to those who do not know the difficult position in which the industry finds itself today.

The industry is in a very difficult position, not only because the cost of production continues to rise and because the minister was unable this morning to give the committee any assurance that in 1959 there will be any improvement, but because this government has no policy for dealing with the problems which confront the farmer. Here is the Canadian Minister of Agriculture making a very important statement in this house in the year 1959 without commenting at all on the problem presented by vertical integration—without commenting at all on the problem of contract farming.

Contract farming, we are informed by the people who are in this business, has taken over in the province of Ontario upwards of 90 per cent of the broiler industry. The great chain stores, the great retail outlets, are moving in on the family farm and elbowing it out of existence, through contracts and through vertical integration what was a very special segment of free enterprise. All this is going on without the Minister of Agriculture having any comment to make.

We intend to wait for the minister to tell us what the policy of the government is with regard to preventing the liquidation of very important segments of agriculture in this country. And lest anybody be under any misapprehension, let me say that I and the group with which I am associated believe that farming in this country is best operated in the hands of the farmer and his family.

An hon. Member: That is a new one.

Mr. Argue: That is not a new one; that has been our policy all the time.

Mr. Habel: On a point of order, I think the Chair should try to stop these blue jays from croaking in the background.

Mr. Argue: I enjoy their interventions.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Then would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Argue: The answer is, no. I enjoy the squawks from over there, because I have observed in recent weeks that it is the most effective contribution many of them are apparently capable of making to the discussion of this very important subject. I am not one who is going to run to the Chair and ask to be rescued from these ineffective and rather ridiculous interruptions.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Then will the hon. member permit a question? Does he know that there is more land operated by farmers in Saskatchewan who own that land than in previous years.

Mr. Argue: You mean than under the Anderson government—that old Tory government with their horses and buggies—and then under Jimmie Gardiner's political machine? Of course, more and more farms are being placed in the hands of their operators because of the position which the C.C.F. government has taken.

I have been referring to some of the statements which were made by the minister today. The Minister of Agriculture places a lot of statistics on the record including, as I have said, some which he had to get fabricated for this occasion. We have heard the statistics of the hon. member for Essex East—his own personal and private statistics—now we have the personal statistics of the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Harkness: These are all official statistics.

Mr. Argue: They are not official statistics at all. The minister stood up and said that the cost of production index of farm commodities as put out by the dominion bureau of statistics was not accurate, and he went on to say that he had some later statistics—some fabricated statistics—which some of the officials had prepared for his speech. And how the minister needed those figures in order to bolster his speech. But the same Minister of Agriculture spoke in this city in November. What did he have to say about agriculture then? He said:

> It is evident that in these circumstances we cannot continue to increase our production of dried skim milk and, in fact, must cut it down.

An he said, further, referring to poultry:

> It is quite apparent that a rate of increase such as this will create in the very near future an impossible marketing and price situation with consequent distress and bankruptcy for many producers.

In November, it will be noted, the minister forecast bankruptcy for many producers.

An hon. Member: Of poultry.

Mr. Argue: For many poultry producers, and that is very important. Yet today the minister says that agriculture is all right. I have said that one of the great omissions of the Minister of Agriculture was that he did not relate his statistics to real income, and I would suggest to him on the basis of the statistics I have—

An hon. Member: Where did you get yours?

Mr. Argue: —and which I have calculated myself—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Argue: —because the government has no statistics in this field; for a very obvious reason, that it is evident that in terms of purchasing power the position of the Canadian farmer in 1957 was worse than it had been in any year since 1946. It is indicated that 1958, with the exception of two years, will be worse in terms of real purchasing power than any year since 1946. I do not have to argue that these figures are accurate today because that is the very basis on which the delegation is coming to Ottawa; that because the increase in the cost of production has been so tremendous at a time when prices have either not risen or have fallen, the government must be asked for assistance by way of deficiency payments.

We have heard the Conservative party enunciate its agriculture policy over the years. Since 1940, on a number of occasions in this house the Prime Minister, when he was the hon. member for Lake Centre or the hon. member for Prince Albert, moved motions asking for parity prices, asking for a fair share of the national income for farmers. Lest anyone might think that these were merely private motions put forward by the hon. gentleman, let me say that these motions have been made the official policy of the Conservative party in a pamphlet put out by the Progressive Conservative party national headquarters before the election of 1957 and entitled "Agriculture". On page 8 this document had this to say:

> The following motions have been introduced in the house by Mr. Diefenbaker in order to secure for the farmer a more satisfactory share of the national income:
> "Immediate steps should be taken to create a parity of prices as between agriculture and other products in order to improve the condition of Canadian agriculture so that it may receive a just and fair return."

"Consideration should be given by the government to the advisability of introducing in the present session, 1953, legislation to provide floor prices for agricultural production at such levels as to ensure for producers a fair price-cost relationship.

An hon. Member: We did.

Mr. Argue: There is no cost-price relationship in that legislation.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Argue: There is no price-cost formula in that legislation. The minister announces the floor prices from year to year under this legislation as he did under the old prices support act. Prices are set at the whim of the government.

In view of all these circumstances, the farmers of western Canada are coming to Ottawa. What are they coming for? They are coming to ask the Prime Minister and this government to fulfil that part of their election program which said they believed in parity prices. They are not asking for full parity prices for farm products; they are asking for deficiency payments which will bring the price of grain upwards toward but not reaching the full level of a parity price. By this means they are asking that the government put a floor price under wheat, oats and barley. They are asking this because of the tremendous increases in the cost of production. They are coming to Ottawa representing people in many occupations on the prairies, representing people in all walks of life, carrying to this capital a petition with hundreds of thousands of signatures.

They have asked the people who have signed the petition to contribute to the cost of the delegation and I read that in the province of Saskatchewan the average contribution toward the cost of the delegation was just over 70 cents. Therefore, they have not found a bag of money; they have not found a mint. People who believe with them that it is a problem that should be brought to the foot of the throne are coming to Ottawa to bring their plea to the government and to the Prime Minister. They are doing this because it is a movement of all the people to try to get a solution to this aggravating problem.

People should not be inferring that this is some kind of undemocratic action. Farmers of the west came to Ottawa in 1910 to ask for action on a grain marketing act to protect them in the selling of their grain as to grade, dockage and weight. In 1942, the farmers of the west came to Ottawa, 400 strong, in February to ask for $1 a bushel wheat. They came to this parliament; they interviewed the government of the day and not very long after they had gone home they achieved an increase of 20 cents a bushel. They are coming now with, I think, the greatest problem that they have ever had, a problem that is tied up with their very survival. Unless this government does two things, namely put a floor under the price of grain and do this by way of a deficiency payment, which is the technique they wish used and prevent further increases in the cost of production, then this industry is threatened.

I for one believe that the grain growing industry of the three prairie provinces is important to Canada. I think our grain export market is important and everything should be done to protect this industry in a reasonable way. I do not mean protection in the classic sense of tariffs and a special income tax protection, but protection by seeing that we put a floor under our products. We should not allow the cost of production to eat away our standard of living. That is why the delegation is coming to Ottawa and I am hopeful that the government will give them—and I believe it will—a courteous reception. I hope the government will give them a very careful hearing.

When I heard the statement of the Minister of Agriculture this morning as he painted a picture—he may not think he painted a picture—of agriculture making rapid improvement and when he went to the Kindersley area, which is not only one of the best farming districts in western Canada—

Mr. Harkness: I said that.

Mr. Argue: The minister did not say this—

Mr. Harkness: I said that.

Mr. Argue: If the minister will just contain himself. This he did not say, namely that in that area in the last few years they have had relatively good crops and much better crops than in most other districts of western Canada. If the minister had come to the constituency of Assiniboia and if there had been statistics on this basis he could have proved exactly the opposite, because we have not had the bumper crops; we have not the tremendous grain carryover that they have in the Kindersley and surrounding districts. Mainly because climatic conditions have been good their crops have been much above average and this is the area in which the major part of the surplus grain lies on the farms. So far as the majority of farmers who are not in this crop area are concerned, their granaries will be swept clean; there will be no farm grain surplus and the farmers, in spite of the fact that in the last 10 years they have had higher than average crops, are in the position where they are faced with the threat of bankruptcy for their industry.

What has been the attitude of the government members? Have they welcomed this delegation? Have they said it is a good thing; have they said that the farmers have a good cause? No, I have—

An hon. Member: How do you know?

Mr. Argue: I have the record of the radio broadcasts that some of them have been making and the radio broadcast that was made by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources—

Mr. MacLean (Winnipeg North Centre): Talk to the farmers.

Mr. Argue: —on the march to Ottawa as it is being called. They do not put it in its true light, namely that it is a move by the people to ask for correction and assistance from the government, but they look on it as a deep, dark political plot. Oh, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, in a radio broadcast that was given tremendous coverage and publicity and reported rather fully on page 4 of the Western Producer for February 12, had this to say:

> It looks to us as if it has been imposed from the top by a group of C.C.F. ex-M.P.'s and the Saskatchewan government—

An hon. Member: That is right.

Mr. Argue: Somebody said, "That is right". I continue:

> —working in close participation with certain leaders in the wheat pool.
> The very people that cuddled up back in 1945 and 1946 to impose on us the British wheat agreement, the C.C.F. and Liberal henchmen, are now cuddling up together to march on us for political purposes.

That is absolute nonsense, Mr. Chairman. It is an insult to the farm leaders; it is—

Mr. Smith (Calgary South): The best part of your speech.

Mr. Argue: That is nice on the record as coming from a western member. It is an insult to the over 200,000 citizens of Saskatchewan who have signed the petition.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Argue: Yes.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Is the hon. member denying that the Liberals and C.C.F. ganged up in 1945 and 1946 to support the British wheat agreement which cost the western farmers $600 million?

Mr. Argue: That is the most interesting question I have had today.

An hon. Member: Answer it.

Mr. Argue: Instead of talking about the Liberals and the C.C.F. ganging up, as he had alleged, to bring a mass delegation to Ottawa, he wants to go back to 1945. Therefore, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources—

An hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Argue: —has said something which is foolish, ill-founded and untrue, as it is recorded in his speech in the Western Producer.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Answer my question.

Mr. Argue: The answer is no. I have already answered my friend's question.

Mr. MacLean (Winnipeg North Centre): He has not got an answer.

Mr. Argue: The minister went on to say:

> I would suggest that deficiency payments, if you are considering the small farmer, is wrong in principle and dangerous.

So, here, the thousand farmers with these signatures of the vast majority of the farm people in Saskatchewan and petitions from Alberta and Manitoba are coming to Ottawa to ask for something that the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources calls dangerous.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Will the hon. member permit another question?

Mr. Argue: The answer is no.

An hon. Member: You did not like the other question.

Mr. Argue: I will take the minister's questions when I sit down. I will deal with them one at a time and as far as I am concerned we can go on all afternoon.

Mr. MacLean (Winnipeg North Centre): Follow your script.

Mr. Argue: "Follow your script", somebody else says. The Western Producer. I am proud, Mr. Chairman, to be a member of the Saskatchewan wheat pool. As a farmer I am proud to be a supporter of the Saskatchewan wheat pool and I am very pleased to be in the position to say that I support the proposals being brought to Ottawa, as do other members of the C.C.F. These farmers are coming to Ottawa because the government has failed them. The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources can say that this is the same gang who cuddled up in 1945 and 1946 in something that he thought was a nefarious agreement. I say to him that by and large these are the very same people who voted for him and his colleagues from western Canada in the last election, who voted for me, who voted for candidates who were elected and candidates who were not elected.

This is not a plot. This is not, as the minister has said, a ganging up of people on the government. I imagine that the Prime Minister must be having a difficult time when colleagues of his are going around shooting off this stuff in all directions. He should have taken a page out of the book of former prime minister, W. L. Mackenzie King, who in 1942, when a delegation came here, said, "You do not have to come here to convince me; I know you are in trouble but I am glad you came here to convince my colleagues who come from other parts of Canada and to convince the people of Canada who do not know the problem."

Today the Minister of Agriculture gets up and paints a picture which is not accurate. I think the problem can be met only by a program which includes parity prices and deficiency payments. I suggest that the domestic price of wheat should be a parity one. I suggest that an adequate program for agriculture calls for national marketing boards and a board of livestock commissioners. It calls for international commodity agreements and the continuation of the international wheat agreement. It calls for an international food pool. It calls for better nutrition for Canadians which could be brought about in part by a free school lunch program.

To provide a square deal for agriculture requires an increase in the benefits under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act and extension of the act. It requires an extension of the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act to all parts of Canada. It requires the provision of low cost credit to farmers, credit that will be really available to farmers so that they will not have to go through the tremendous amount of red tape involved in applying for a loan now from the Canadian farm loan board, only to be refused very often without cause in my opinion. It calls for the restoration of the farmer's right to deliver grain to the elevator of his own choice. We thought this would be the result of the Bracken commission. We are still waiting for action in this regard. It calls for the further step of placing the marketing of all grain under the Canadian wheat board.

The solution of the agricultural problem calls for planning. It calls for national marketing boards. It calls for a reduction in the margin between the prices paid to producers and the very high prices paid by consumers. It calls for the reversal of the trend in evidence now for many years whereby the farmers' share of the consumer dollar has gone down and the retailers' share has gone up.

I have mentioned 12 points that I believe should constitute a bill of rights for agriculture. I suggest to the Minister of Agriculture that a good many of these points have been in the agricultural policy of the Conservative party in recent years. I suggest that they fulfil their commitments to the farmers. I suggest that they give a sympathetic hearing to the delegation coming to Ottawa and that the government consider the proposals the delegation wishes to make and not close the door on them.

I think the timing of the speech of the Minister of Agriculture has been most unfortunate. I do not think this kind of misleading speech should have been made in advance of the arrival of the delegation. I suggest that the speech was made by the minister to try to strengthen the position of those who are opposed to the requests of his organization. If that was not his fundamental purpose in building an argument against the delegation, I fail to realize the purpose of his speech. In my opinion he has not shown that agriculture is in the sound position that he suggested.

Before I resume my seat, having regard to the interruptions that have taken place, perhaps I might be permitted to refer to a publication issued by his own department, the Current Review of Agricultural Conditions in Canada, the issue for January, 1959. On page 4 of the review I find the following statement:

> Information available at the end of November indicated a farm cash income of about $2.7 billion in 1958, about five per cent higher than in 1957. ...In 1959 farm cash income is expected to remain about the same as in 1958...
> With little change anticipated for cash income and income in kind and a continued rise in farm expenses in prospect, realized net income in 1959 is likely to be somewhat lower than in 1958.

There, Mr. Chairman, is a statement in the Current Review of Agricultural Conditions in Canada which is very much in keeping with the statement made by the Minister of Agriculture himself on November 12. It shows that agriculture is in a most difficult position and that action is required now along the lines I have suggested in the 12 point program which I have termed a bill of rights for agriculture and along the lines of the presentation that will be made here by the mass delegation early next week.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, may I, first of all, congratulate the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) for the steps he is taking in favour of farmers. I would not like to hurt his modesty, but I can say in this house that he is one of the best brains in Canada in matters of agriculture. Day in and day out, he directs his attention to farmers' problems. If a request is put to him, if some organization submits a brief to him, he considers it at once. In brief, he conscientiously strives to improve the farmer's lot.

I have listened to the speech made by the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Boulanger). In my opinion, it is more of a liability than an asset to the farmers of Canada. The hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska made no constructive suggestions. His speech was merely critical.

Mr. Chairman, if farmers today are finding it hard to sell their products, it is because we have lost our export markets. And who made us lose those markets? The previous government.

It is being claimed in certain quarters that the farming situation is in a bad way.

Mr. Chairman, need I refer to discussions that took place in this house at the time our hon. friends were in power? May I however, refer to page 69 of the English text of Hansard for January 27, 1942, i.e. during the war, when farmers were said to be prosperous. This is what the hon. member for Stormont, who is today the representative for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier), said at that time:

> In view of the shortage of labour on the farm and the increase in the cost of production it seems to me that the farmer, and particularly the cheese producer, is called upon to make an extra sacrifice, or an extra contribution. Every year since the beginning of the war—and I believe these are the words of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner)—Canadian farmers have accepted prices for their food commodities far below those to which they were entitled. This is particularly true of cheese. It is interesting to note in the speech from the throne that vast quantities of foodstuffs will go to Britain as an integral part of the war effort. It is to be hoped that for the primary producer this will mean an increase in prices. It seems to me there should be a greater parity between the return of the wage earner and the return of the farmer producer. Canada's contribution in foodstuffs centres chiefly around pork products, cheese, canned salmon, wheat and flour; and in all these commodities we are the chief source of supply for Britain.

My purpose, Mr. Chairman, in quoting those remarks is to call your attention to the fact that, at the time, the hon. member for Stormont rose in this house to tell of the farmer's plight, although it was in wartime. Mr. Chairman, no government to date has more thoroughly looked after the needs of Canadian farmers than has the present government.

Need I mention that the Minister of Agriculture, in introducing the Agricultural Stabilization Act—and the opposition voted in favour of this legislation—gave most valuable help to our prairie farmers. Now we will soon have a crop insurance act.

At the last session, a bill was adopted covering the grading of leaf tobacco. The Minister of Agriculture is always on the forward march. He is always proposing new legislation. In other words, although this government has been in power for only a few months, it has done more, all things considered, than the previous one did in 25 years.

Mr. Godin: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question before he goes on to another subject?

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: If you please, Mr. Chairman, when I am through with my speech, if the hon. member wishes to ask me a question, he may do so and I shall gladly reply.

Mr. Godin: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member allow me—

Mr. Pigeon: After my speech.

Mr. Godin: I shall be very brief. Could the hon. member tell me—

Mr. Pigeon: This question you have in mind has been suggested by the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Boulanger).

(Text):

The Acting Chairman (Mr. MacEwan): I believe the hon. member stated that he would allow a question after he completes his speech.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: It is too bad, really, that a member who is unable to assume his own responsibilities should allow himself to be prompted by the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska. If the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska wishes to ask questions, let him stand on his feet, and do so, but I note he is afraid—

Mr. Boulanger: What right has the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm to talk that way and put words into my mouth I have never uttered, and ideas that never crossed my mind. The hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Godin) is entitled to his own opinions, and has the right to express them. When I have views to make known or questions to ask, I am not in the habit of relaying them through a desk mate.

I therefore ask the member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm to withdraw what he said.

(Text):

Mr. Godin: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman; since the point of order raised refers to me, I feel that the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm should retract the remark that possibly I was directed by someone else to ask the question. I would appreciate it if the hon. member would take it as obvious that I am able to ask questions on my own.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I saw what happened. The hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska was not at his seat but next to the hon. member for Nickel Belt, whispering something to him. If the hon. member wants me to say that he did not whisper that question to his neighbour, even though he seemed to be doing so, then I apologize.

Mr. Boulanger: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, the member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm has just said that I am not in my seat; I would like him to tell me just where I should be sitting. I ask him to withdraw his remark.

The Chairman: I understood the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm to apologize for the remark he had made. Accordingly, it seems to me there is no cause for further discussion on the point of order.

May I point out to hon. members who are behind the curtains that, if they wish to make suggestions, they should make them from their seats.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, it is a habit with hon. members of the opposition to hide behind the curtains and to whisper questions. At any rate, I will revert to more significant matters and resume my remarks.

In the first six months of 1958 the proceeds of Canadian farmers' sales of farm products reached an estimated amount of 1 billion 300 million dollars. This is 9 per cent more than the 1 billion 200 million dollar proceeds they got in the corresponding period of 1957. That increase over the previous year is due largely to the sale of livestock and related products.

In all provinces, estimates for the first half of the year were above those of the previous year. The increases, in most provinces, were close to the national average of 9 per cent. The major exception was in Prince Edward Island where the increase was 25 per cent because of larger income from the sale of cattle, calves and potatoes.

[Mr. Boulanger.]

Sales of livestock and animal products amounted to $807 million in the first six months, or about 16 per cent more than in the previous year. About half the increase went to the prairie farmers, so that returns from the sale of livestock and animal products rose by only about 10 per cent.

Mr. Chairman, may I most humbly make a few suggestions to the house concerning Canadian agriculture, knowing that, as usual, the hon. Minister of Agriculture will give them close consideration.

I wonder whether it might not be desirable, in the interest of Canadian farmers, and more particularly in the interest of milk producers, to levy a tax, no matter how small—

Mr. Godin: Mr. Duplessis!

Mr. Pigeon: —on vegetable oils imported from abroad. The money thus collected could be paid indirectly, in some other way to milk producers, and this would fully meet their needs.

Mr. Boulanger: Before asking for that, why do you not ask Mr. Duplessis to enforce the law in Quebec?

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, as a federal member I am making my remarks on the national level. If the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Boulanger) wishes to go into provincial politics, he should resign his seat and stand for election in his provincial riding; then we would see what support he would get from the Quebec farmers.

Mr. Boulanger: I accept the challenge.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I also ask the Minister of Agriculture to consider raising import duties on American potatoes.

I also urge officials of the Department of Agriculture to consider establishing a support price for maple products.

Mr. Chairman, the experimental farm at l'Assomption is located in the federal constituency of Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm. I would ask the Minister of Agriculture to increase, if possible, the funds available to this experimental farm, in order to promote research—

Mr. Godin: For the future.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, the federal constituency of Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm is a tobacco centre, and we find that insofar as cigar tobacco is concerned, consumer demand is mostly for mild tobaccos. In my view, additional funds should be made available to the authorities of that experimental farm, to enable them to promote research with a view to producing milder varieties of tobacco.

The federal constituency of Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm is also the largest tobacco-producing centre in the province of Quebec. I know that certain members from Ontario also represent constituencies where there are many tobacco producers.

I appeal to the firms buying cigarette tobacco, most of which are controlled by foreign investors, to pay a fair price to tobacco producers, who are farmers and average Canadians, in order that they may contribute to the progress of the Canadian economy.

Mr. Chairman, I just wanted to make those suggestions. Were any suggestions forthcoming from the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska? On the contrary, his was destructive criticism; his speech is a liability for the farm people of Canada.

Mr. Chairman, our attitude is quite different from that of our opponents, those who previously held office. They used to sit around, not daring to rise and make themselves heard on behalf of their constituencies. Today, it can be said that Conservative members are expressing in this house the views of their constituents.

Mr. Chairman, I wanted to make those suggestions quite humbly and I am sure that they will receive careful consideration from the officials of the Department of Agriculture.

(Text):

Mr. Gour: Before I go on with the few remarks I wish to make, Mr. Chairman, I should like to bring to the attention of hon. members, particularly of the Minister of Agriculture, the fact that I do not agree with my good friend when he said that the revenue of the farmer in 1958 was better than it was up to the year 1953-54. I understand that my hon. friend must bring in a little bit of politics. He is under the big boss. Therefore it was necessary for him to follow along that line. However, I do not intend to participate. Before going on, I want to tell hon. members and the minister that I am not one who would try to make it appear that I believe the minister is not an honest man. I have known him since 1945. My opinion is that he certainly makes mistakes. However, I am not ready to believe that he is not honest.

I should like to make an appeal to those hon. members who desire to have a little bit of fair play for the farmer and ask that we throw aside the question of politics and speak about what is good for the farmer. Let us stop playing small politics, something that has always been done by one party and the other. I have been here for 14 years. During that time when we were in power the opposition were playing politics on this matter and I do not intend to do it. I did not do it when they were in the opposition. The story was the same with regard to the C.C.F. and the Social Credit groups.

I think agriculture is an important business. The Minister of Agriculture has one of the most difficult jobs in Canada. We have a large country producing various products far from the market and with not half the market we need for the things we produce. I know the minister has problems. I sympathize with him. I like him. He has done the same thing, as far as I have known him, for 14 years. The same thing applies to another matter. When they were in opposition they were saying that our friend Right Hon. James Gardiner was not an honest man. He was the best minister of agriculture we had in this country. The minister is a nice gentleman but he is playing a little bit of politics. That is all he is doing. It is all right to have a little bit as long as it is kept at a reasonable level.

I regret that the minister has been forced to bring in these statistics. I have to go back a little bit in the review of these statistics. I will take first the production of pork. I think the price of $7 for pork was right, but only six weeks old, not six months old. It is right for five to six weeks. That is all right for from five to six weeks old if they are not too unlucky with the sow. The other price in Ontario, namely $13.30 and $14, is all right for feeders from two and a half to three months old but not more than that. The price for Alberta is high enough. I think it is exaggerated a little bit.

Mr. Harkness: Too high?

Mr. Gour: A little bit. As to the cost of feed for hogs in Ontario, Quebec or the maritimes, the feed that is brought from the west costs about 25 per cent more or something like that. I think in this part we can, if we are not too unlucky, bring the pig to 200 pounds at a cost of about $35 or $38 or $40 for a 200-pound pig. I think the price in Alberta is exaggerated by $2. But what I find is this. If the minister wants to be honest as he likes to be I think these people who make out these reports had better get together. We should get more honest reports than that. There is something wrong with these reports. I do not blame the minister but I do not need to tell the committee that they leave something to be desired and it is too bad for these people that 1958 was not a better year than it was. Pork was cheaper than in 1957. The price of pork was 34 cents, 9 cents higher. Beef was lower. The minister dropped the price of dry milk by three cents therefore that is not an increase.

The year is not so bad in 1958. As I said not very long ago in the house, we had a good crop. The Americans are buying our cattle. They bought more in 1958. They bought about eight times more than they bought in 1957. We had that revenue which helped to give more money to the farmer. But what should be done for the farmer? There is a change in farming just as there is in the rest of industrial Canada. Therefore the minister and the government should change year after year the means adopted to help the farmers. But they do not do that. They just pay a little bit on something. It is a small thing.

The main thing in this country is the danger for the farmer of these big organizations. They call them farmers. Some people say they are farmers, others say they are not, that they are poultry raisers, egg farmers, grain growers or beef cattle raisers. The person who is a farmer is one who is a mixed farmer. They have more to put up with than anybody thinks. To be a good farmer he has to work 365 days a year and like it. Next, you have to be equally skilled in agriculture as well as in mechanics and carpentry. You have to have the knowledge of a veterinary surgeon; and after that you have to have a good wife. You need to be a good worker and in good health. That is what I call a farmer.

To keep those good farmers this country needs to help them. I am not talking about 600-acre or 1,000-acre farms, as I had myself. I was just a gentleman farmer. What we need are the good family farmers. To keep these farmers we need a special organization, call it the name you like. We need the same sort of thing like the Department of Veterans Affairs. Some farmers have not enough money to buy sufficient grain or cattle. A farmer who has to do work half the time outside his farm will never be a good farmer; he will ruin himself, his health, and his wife, and that is all he is able to do. Therefore you need an organization which will guarantee a certain price. You must find a way to stop these big companies which give the farmer so much a chicken so that he will go into debt. That farmer may have to assume a $40,000 or $50,000 debt. The same applies to hogs and small cattle farms, as it does to the big ranges of beef cattle and dairy cattle. But the little farmer cannot stand it. Those people must have help from the government because they need it so much. I would like to see an organization which guarantees a return of so much per pound for butter, cheese, pork, eggs or chickens to those farmers who are the ordinary farmers. I mean the little farms of not more than 100-odd head. We must stop those big concerns ruining the little man. The way things are going now the farmer will be ruined, and so will the government through the subsidization of them.

I do not agree with my hon. friend who talked a minute ago that there should be a higher price for wheat in Canada. If something has to be done to help those farmers, it is not by raising the consumer price, because that is high enough. The taxpayers should only be called upon to pay a reasonable price for their goods. The more the price goes up, the more the need for higher wages, which leads very often to strikes; and so it goes round in a vicious circle. During the war butter was selling for about 50 cents a pound and in addition to this price the farmer also received a bonus of 10 cents per pound from the cheese factory, this being paid by the federal government. So we should have so much per head up to a certain limit. If we do not, I do not know what will happen to our small farmers. They cannot compete with these big outfits with their new mechanical machinery. The larger the farm the larger the machine, and they are very expensive. Lots of farmers bought tractors and machines for $10,000 or $20,000 each. They have borrowed some $120 million.

In my own district they have borrowed so much for machines that most of the farmers are in debt, and if we do not give the farmer a chance to make a living by their own honest labour, he and his family will quit. Most of the farmers' wives work all hours of the day to help their husbands on the farms, and they get their sons of seven or eight years to help with the tractor when they come home from school. If they did not do that about 25 per cent of the farmers at the present moment would have to leave and come to the city. They are still on the farms. Therefore it is up to the government to help them. I cannot believe there are no honest Tories; there are some honest people in the Tory party.

It is evident that the minister has made promises which he is not able to keep, but that is not his fault, it is the fault of the irresponsible undertakings that were made by his leader. Now the Minister of Agriculture finds himself in the position where he cannot fulfil even a quarter of those promises. What does he say now about parity prices? Oh, when the minister was on this side of the house he was a very good speaker and the phrase "parity price" was always on his lips. But now parity prices have disappeared like a sputnik. But let us not talk politics for too long. The farmers of this country are more important than politics, and it is in the best interest of the whole country that something should be done to help certain parts of this industry.

In some ways conditions are improving. I can remember that five or six years ago in my own riding a man might raise 100 or 125 chickens in a year. He would work, helped by his sons, for every day of the week except Sunday when he would go to Mass. Hon. members know, of course, that they are good people in my riding. They did this work for peanut money. It is the big people who control the grain and grind it to make feed who run the market and are able to fix the prices, and when the time comes to renew the contract, they dropped the price.

As I said a moment ago, there is no lawyer who is bright enough to be a good farmer without experience. Farming cannot be carried out successfully without experience, and in order that young people may have a chance we should try to help them out, while at the same time exercising some control in advancing money. We have a lot of good men in the provincial departments of agriculture, and a lot of good men in the federal department, too, who can take part in this work. We might try to get some more and use them to help supervise the small farms not these big companies or big concerns who farm 3,000 acres of wheat and whose cheque has to be sent to Miami because they spend six months down there. The same applies to the people who raise cattle for beef, and the same is coming to apply to the dairy industry.

These people should have only a certain amount, and that is all. The same applies to business. The way things are going now, in a few years time all retail business will be in the hands of a few big companies. I spoke about this last session. It is the same with labour. I can imagine a situation in this country where we would have the big labour organizations fighting with the big farm companies. There could be a strike and we should all starve. With things like this happening we should not, as I said, make politics out of the farm industry.

But I believe we have too many big fellows at the present time. I am not against the farmers of the west, but I am not in favour of boosting the incomes of those millionaries who work for only three months of the year and spend the rest on vacation; these people who get a couple of men to run the tractors, sow a thousand acres a week and when the crop is gathered, say "Good-bye my friends". That is all right, but we should not take taxes from the people in general in order to make these operators still bigger. I am against the taxpayers of this country putting more money into the hands of these people.

I do not think I will take more time now, except to say a word about loans to farmers. I hope the minister will see that farmers who need loans and are in a position to apply will get them without any unnecessary delay. Perhaps it is because there are so many lawyers mixed up in the administration that it takes so much time to grant these loans. Of course, I know that lots of care is needed in order to see that title is clear, and so on. All I am asking is that the procedure be as quick as possible.

I believe the minister should see that producers are covered and that he should find a way by which they can get back any deficiency; that he should refund a certain amount up to a certain level, but not too far. For chickens, 3,000 would be good enough; eggs, 2,000, would be reasonable. Never mind the speculators; they will look after themselves. I do not want the taxpayers' money spent to help them. The same applies to wheat, and the same applies to hogs. I do not think we should protect them by going beyond 200 hogs. That is enough. This should be protection enough.

That is all I wish to say today. I will return to this question later on. I know that the minister has to introduce a certain amount of politics into his speech, because the boss is the boss, but I think that his leader should at least have given him more assistance. In my opinion the Minister of Agriculture should certainly have the help of a parliamentary assistant. As soon as a parliamentary assistant is named it will relieve the anxieties of some of those funny figures over there who would have to live for 200 years before they could become parliamentary assistants. There will be less nervousness among a lot of those Tory members than there is now, and, finally, they would feel more free to vote with the opposition when the time comes.

Mr. MacEwan: I have listened with great interest to the hon. member for Russell, and I bow to his parliamentary experience as well as to his experience of the farming industry. I believe he made the statement that the reason for the slowness, as far as farm loan board applications were concerned, is that too many lawyers have something to do with the Canadian farm loan board. That may be so. I am sure that the proposed legislation which will be brought down later this session by this government will be such that even the lawyers will be able to give some help to see that it is enacted in the proper manner and loans given without delay.

He also mentioned the fact that the small family farm in Canada needed more help, and he also referred to the health of the farmer's wife. I can go along with that. I hope perhaps he will endorse the way it is looked at down east, where it is said that in order to provide healthy farmers what you need is plenty of fresh air and buttermilk. Perhaps that is the answer. I would agree with the remarks in which he said that the family farm is important in Canada. In the constituency which I represent agriculture is quite an important industry, along with a number of others.

While I was home in the interval between the sessions I had the opportunity to attend the meeting of the Pictou-North Colchester federation of agriculture. This was the first time that I was able to attend the meetings. Along with the hon. member for Colchester-Hants and some of the members of the Nova Scotia provincial legislature I met with farmers from the area in their annual meeting. Various matters were brought up there and we were able to get a picture of farming, especially in our own area and indeed in the province of Nova Scotia. Later on the Nova Scotia federation of agriculture held a meeting in Truro which I was not able to attend, but after coming to Ottawa the executive of the Nova Scotia federation of agriculture met the Nova Scotia members and made certain recommendations and submissions. It is with a few of those submissions that I would like to deal just briefly this afternoon, Mr. Chairman. Time does not permit my going into all of them or any one of them too closely, but I believe they are important matters.

The first one is that of farm credit. During the last session I spoke in the house on the matter of farm credit, especially in reference to the province of Nova Scotia and the findings of the Hawkins commission. The Hawkins commission was set up in Nova Scotia to inquire into rural credit. Among its recommendations was something to this effect, that the provincial and federal boards, that is, the Nova Scotia land settlement board and the Canadian farm loan board, should be integrated into one and combined so as to provide more adequately for short term, intermediate and long term loans.

I was pleased to note that the Minister of Agriculture has stated that there are to be amendments to the Canadian Farm Loan Act. I should like to thank him and also probably the Minister of Finance who will be concerned in the matter. The speech from the throne stated:

> —a comprehensive review and revision of the legislation concerning farm credit, in order that credit may be more effective in assisting in the development and maintenance of an efficient and prosperous agriculture.

The amendment will be introduced at this session. As far as the province of Nova Scotia is concerned, I would say that farm credit is the crux of the whole agricultural industry and situation in that province, and that changes must be made to cover present day agricultural matters. As the legislation now stands—and as I said before in this house—it would seem that the Canadian Farm Loan Act does not cover the small farmers, and especially the farmers in the east. This is something which was pointed out by the executive of the Nova Scotia federation of agriculture in a meeting. As late as 1931 the land and buildings on a farm constituted 77 per cent of the total farm value. The submission is that today the land and buildings constitute not more than 50 per cent of the farm value and the other 50 per cent consists of stock and equipment. As we see it, so far as Nova Scotia and the maritime provinces are concerned, the act is not so constituted as to give farmers an opportunity to buy the stock and equipment necessary for modern day farming. I am glad to know that the act will be changed. I would support the government on this.

The matter of land use was also referred to by the Minister of Agriculture today. The federation of agriculture of the province of Nova Scotia pointed out to us as members that there was much good interval land in that province along the rivers which could not be taken advantage of because of the river erosion and so on. We have the Maritime Marshland Rehabilitation Act which takes care of salt water areas, and I am glad to know that a committee has been set up to study the matter of these lands in Canada and undoubtedly this matter of erosion of good land and other matters will be studied. I would recommend that after the report of this committee is brought in the government should look into this matter. Perhaps something can be done because it is a most important matter.

I should like to refer to the matter of freight rate assistance. It was pointed out by the federation, and it is recognized by the people in the Atlantic provinces, that freight rate assistance given by the government on feed grains coming from the western provinces is most important. After the recent increase in freight rates, as shown by the further supplementary estimates which were passed in the house not too long ago, assistance was given to the eastern farmers to help them out in the matter of freight rates.

It was suggested and recommended by the hon. member for Colchester-Hants during the last session that the freight rate assistance policy should become a permanent one and should be so enacted. This is recommended by our local federation. I would suggest that the government look into this matter with a view to making it a permanent policy. It is most necessary to have this freight rate assistance because it is a great stimulus to the production of livestock in the maritime provinces. Beef cattle are now being raised in Nova Scotia. The Nova Scotia department of agriculture has set up community pastures throughout the province and an abattoir will be built in Halifax to take care of the beef and pork produce which will come to it. This was a combined effort of the government of the province of Nova Scotia and the farmers of Nova Scotia. It is being recommended and lauded a great deal because it means a lot to our cattle and hog producers. As I have said, feed grains are necessary, they are the key to the whole problem. Assistance on feed grains is most vital and I would recommend that this matter be made permanent by the government. In travelling through northern New Brunswick, particularly through the area of the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton, I was pleased to note that many of the potato producers in that area were going into beef cattle raising in order to help themselves and not be dependent on one crop only.

These are submissions which were made to the Nova Scotia members and they are most important ones. The federation of agriculture in our province is doing a good job. They are co-operating together. There are many able men in this federation and with the assistance of our able Minister of Agriculture here and with the assistance of the able minister of agriculture in the province of Nova Scotia and with the assistance of everyone, particularly the farmers in the province, the industry is going ahead and I believe will go ahead even more. It is important to our province and to many provinces, and I think we are just beginning to see the light and to put the industry really on its feet.

I do not intend to enter into discussion of the matter of wheat and deficiency payments brought up by the hon. member for Assiniboia. I will let my western colleagues say a few words on that. They probably will not be too peaceful and calm. Their words will probably make the storm outside today look like a south sea island breeze by the time they are finished. I thought I would make a few remarks now and bring forward matters that are important to my own province.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Chairman, since my name came into the debate earlier—

Mr. Argue: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, it is a well known practice in the house—if members want to change it I am not going to object—to call on an opposition member after a government member has spoken. The hon. member for Fort William was on his feet.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Coates): I saw the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I am sorry that the hon. member for Assiniboia raised a point of order because he was the one who brought my name into the debate. I stood up on previous occasions.

Mr. McIlraith: So did the hon. member for Fort William.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): That is right. Many stood up, but the great majority of the members of the house from western Canada are from one party and they have just as much right to speak as the hon. member for Assiniboia, the hon. member for Fort William or any other member. I recognize that the hon. member for Assiniboia does not want to hear what I am going to tell him now because this afternoon we heard a classic example of the extreme statements by the C.C.F. which have done more harm to agriculture in western Canada in the last 20 years than any other single thing. In his remarks he indicated that these farmers coming to Ottawa would be met with an unfriendly reception from the government side. By reading extracts from a report in the Western Producer of a speech I made, which report is entirely accurate, he left the impression that there would be an unfriendly reception. Nothing could be further from the truth.

All this started some weeks ago, Mr. Chairman, when an article appeared in a western Canada paper, the Leader-Post. There was much comment about the news story in the Leader-Post. I am going to read into the record a letter I wrote to the editor of the Star-Phoenix concerning the same subject. The letter reads as follows:

> In your February 6th edition you have an editorial charging me with poor taste in doubting the grass roots character of the march on Ottawa. We have very few ways of measuring this. My personal mail for some months has run three to one asking that we stick with acreage payments. Other members report the same experience. Therefore I have to keep my mind open.

I would ask the privilege of pointing out the following circumstances. Your editorial appears to be based on an emasculated story that appeared in the Leader-Post. Rarely, if ever, has the Leader-Post reported a speech of mine from the series, "Report from Parliament". Yet this time it did using only selected sentences.

By contrast, the Western Producer, the organ of the wheat pool, asked for and got the full text. The farm paper may choose to disagree with me, but it will do so with all my remarks before it.

For your information, my chief concern over the march on Ottawa is not the purpose of the march but the harmful effects which may result to western agriculture. In the final paragraph of my radio address I made it clear that the federal government "will always be ready to meet and talk in good faith with western Canadian farmers at any time."

Our government will welcome the delegation because we all have a common purpose, namely, to raise the level of farm income and/or reduce farm costs. The whole matter is crystallizing into an issue of for and against immediate relief versus an attack on the fundamental problems facing agriculture. Actually we need both.

I personally am very disturbed that the tremendous pressure being put on western farmers and their organizations at the present time will make them lose sight of the basic reforms that are long overdue. Moreover, there are serious arguments against deficiency payments which are not being presented to the people.

For instance, present information is that deficiency payments, even with a $1,500 maximum, would go in large measure to larger farmers. We are trying to gather this information now, but using American estimates for their farmers the percentage is 79 per cent for 25 per cent of the farmers. I am enclosing a table showing comparative figures for two crop districts in Manitoba, one of smaller farmers and one of larger farmers. This will make clear the type of information that the western farmers should have and are not being given.

There are other points I could discuss but I will content myself with listing them.

(1) The danger of destroying the unity of members of parliament from all parts of Canada achieved by the present government behind our national agricultural policy.

(3) The danger of spoiling our efforts to get importing countries to reduce wheat subsidies.

(4) The danger of getting into the same financial difficulties as the United States which resulted from their use of a fixed parity price concept instead of striving for a parity of income.

I trust that these thoughts will add something to the present debate.

The Star-Phoenix took that letter, printed it and included the table that I gave them, and by so doing rendered a great service to the farmers of that area of western Canada.

There is another thing that happened in the debate. I came into the house toward the last part of the speech of the hon. member for Assiniboia. He was making certain statements and was reading from a story in the Western Producer which was an exact replica of my speech. I asked him the question: Do you deny that the Liberals and the C.C.F. cuddled up in 1946 in support of the British wheat agreement? The British wheat agreement was opposed by only one party in Canada, the Progressive Conservative party led by John Bracken who warned that certain things would happen if the government went through with this madness. That agreement did not come from the grass roots at all but was imposed from the top by a group of people led, I believe, by the then minister of agriculture, the then minister of trade and commerce and certain farm leaders who went back and told western farmers that they must support the agreement to guarantee high prices after the agreement was ended.

If any person wants to read about this, go back to the debates in Hansard for August, 1946. Read the remarks of Walter Tucker, the ex-member for Rosthern. Read the remarks of the leader of the Progressive Conservative party in those days, John Bracken. There you will find one of the greatest sell-outs of the western farmer that you ever saw. Nor was this the end of it. These same gentlemen came back to western Canada and joined in the attack on the Conservative party in the election of 1949. Because we were pointing out all the facts and dangers of the British wheat agreement to western Canadian farmers they accused us of being friends of the grain exchange. In fact, the C.C.F. did such a wonderful job of scaring the people silly in western Canada with respect to what we stood for, the right of the farmer to decide his own future instead of it being decided by government leaders at Ottawa, that there was hardly a C.C.F. member elected in the 1949 campaign. In 1945 the majority of members from Saskatchewan were C.C.F., but in 1949 they almost disappeared and the Liberals took over because they had scared the voters so badly the voters felt they had to turn to the only party that could stop the Conservatives.

This British wheat agreement cost the western farmers, by best estimates, about $600 million and I know how desperately the farmers would like to have some of that $600 million today. The most amazing thing is that farm organizations at the rank and file level, and political parties at the rank and file level, have been through a very rough time in Saskatchewan in the last 25 years. This applies to our prairie provinces generally. About three years ago it seemed that peace was coming because the members of every political party, Social Credit, Liberal, C.C.F., Conservative and every other party of which I have heard out there, were all saying pretty well the same thing about what the agricultural industry required. The farm organizations got together and, for the first time, we had a unanimity of opinion in 1956 that has never existed since because of this ramp on deficiency payments.

Deficiency payments are a proper thing to discuss. There are certain arguments for them and certain arguments against them. However, when all the arguments and all the propaganda are in favour of one side, then somebody has to have the courage to stand up and put forth the facts concerning the other side. There are people who believe differently. The hon. member for Assiniboia mentioned his own bill of rights. I have said in this house that I could support every point in the bill of rights he enunciated in his speech at Crane Valley, Saskatchewan. This is the type of speech that western Canada needs, and the type of speech that agriculture in western Canada needs. Agriculture does not need the type of generalization and conflicting statements which were made today because all they do is rend and divide.

The Winnipeg Tribune of January 24 carried a newspaper story concerning the program of the Manitoba federation of agriculture. I have a copy here, and there are some six immediate points and 12 long range points. Not once in this series of 18 points mentioned is there any mention of deficiency payments. I could support almost everything in this program now. I could have supported it last year and I could next year. This is a sound, constructive report as to what they think agriculture needs. I know the hon. member for Assiniboia knows what should be done and I know the members of the Manitoba federation of agriculture know what should be done. However, when they, as farm leaders, are faced with the tremendous pressure of television shows two or three times a week, radio programs and an army of 7,000 people out collecting names on petitions, it is very difficult for a moderate, responsible farm leader to stand up in front of what looks like an avalanche. But somebody does have to stand up occasionally and speak his mind about what he believes is true. This is what I attempted to do in that speech of February 4 or 5, whatever the date was. I did not make the speech in any attempt at being derogatory to the march. I simply said, and other people were noticing the same thing, that this appeared to be a great promotion from above and I am always suspicious of anything that is promoted from above. I point that out, that these farm leaders from all across the west come and tell us that this federation program is what they want.

I am not finished with this thing yet. One of the great things that we have accomplished as a government is that we have brought members of parliament from all parts of Canada to recognize that this agricultural problem is not only in western Canada, it is in every part of Canada. The hon. member for Russell was speaking today about his constituency. The same speech could be made for many ridings across this country. This is a national problem. Any effort made to try to pit the west against the east or the maritimes against Ontario or anything else like that is an effort to destroy the work of people who desperately need constructive help. I am going to read to you two paragraphs from an address delivered by Mr. Wesson on November 10, 1958.

I quote:

> Even in the election campaign between January and March, questions were put to speakers in the country and they always gave the same answer—the government is continuing to give careful consideration to this whole question. And it was not until the end of August that we got an official denial and something else proposed in its place, after the rejection of the principle of deficiency payments as proposed by the three wheat pools.

He is referring to the Prime Minister's statement in the house in August laying down the seven points for a national agricultural policy.

Then, he goes on and says to these delegates:

> I am not going to tell you what you should do before this discussion is closed, but in view of what happened with government policy, it is obvious to me with conversations that we had with private members from western Canada as well as ministers, that eastern Canada had a good deal to do with this final decision on this paltry $40 million and that is the reason why eastern Canada has got to get some education.

Now, this country, so long divided on many issues, so long divided by regional problems, has been able to get a government, under the banner of a great Canadian, to collect the people from all parts of this country, from all walks of life, and get them to see that there was a national problem in agriculture. This party supported that national agricultural policy in this house 100 per cent. This was unity of a real sort, and yet here we have this effort to divide.

This problem of agriculture cannot be resolved by pitting the west against the east and it was for that reason I charged, in my opening remarks, that the type of speech delivered here by the hon. member for Assiniboia was another classic example of the type of thing that stirs the emotions and divides the country on basic economic issues.

Mr. Argue: You are very foolish; no truth in that at all.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): One of the remarks made by the hon. member for Assiniboia was that 200,000 names were affixed to this petition from Saskatchewan, and I should not have suggested that this is not a grass roots movement. Do hon. members believe that I, as an elected representative of a farm riding in Saskatchewan, have to measure my opinion of what is right or wrong by the number of names on a petition? I was elected, I hope, because the people of my riding believed that after many years of being turned down and rolled over by the C.C.F. machine in Saskatchewan and the Liberal machine I was a fellow who stuck to his principles. The people, therefore, supported me in June of 1957.

Mr. Benidickson: You were with the rest on John Diefenbaker's coat tails.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I think they expect me to stand up for something. The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River mentioned "coat tails", but if I were him I would not mention "coat tails" in this house.

I have a very serious proposal to put before the hon. member for Assiniboia. In 1952 we in Saskatchewan recognized the serious difficulties which agriculture was facing and the provincial government set up a royal commission on agriculture and rural life. This commission reported in 1956 in 14 volumes, but I have only three of them here. How many times has any member from western Canada, or Saskatchewan in particular, heard the hon. member for Assiniboia mention the recommendations of this report?

An hon. Member: He would not dare.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): How many times has any member of this house heard any C.C.F. member mention this report when dealing with agriculture? Yet these 14 volumes are the only thorough study that western Canada has had, certainly in this century. Does it mean that he repudiates the men who wrote these 14 volumes? Who are they? They include Professor Baker, the chairman, a distinguished agricultural economist from the University of Saskatchewan; Charlie Gibbings, Rosetown, vice-president of the wheat pool.

An hon. Member: And a C.C.F.'er.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I understand that he will be down here with this march from the west. Does he repudiate Charlie Gibbings?

An hon. Member: He would not dare.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): There is J. L. Phelps Wilkie, a C.C.F. ex-cabinet minister, who is not coming down with this march from the west, I understand. He is also a close personal friend of mine. There is also H. L. Fowler of Saskatoon from the co-operative movement; there are Mrs. Nancy Adams and Mr. T. H. Bourassa, the other members.

Does he repudiate these people or does he repudiate the recommendations they made? I have my volume 8 open at one page dealing with prices. I cannot read these whole 14 volumes to the committee nor do I intend to do so. But here is the type of recommendation that they make:

> In achieving these goals—

They are talking about agricultural needs.

> —public policy with respect to markets, marketing, and prices can make an important but limited contribution:—

I would ask you to note this, Mr. Chairman.

> —a comprehensive approach is necessary.

Then it goes on and lists 10 points in that basic approach. This same theme is carried out in all the volumes. If any person wants to know where this government is going, one of the best ways to find out is to go through these 14 volumes and read their conclusions and recommendations. We look at these volumes and they play a great part in our final decisions. We also look at many other sources of information because we are seriously trying to make up for almost a quarter of a century of inactivity on the agricultural front by the previous government. Liberals today in my province know that their party would not be where it is if they had moved to grapple with these extremely complex and difficult problems. No reasonable farmer expects any government to come up with final answers in one, two or three years. All he expects from his government is an honest and intelligent effort. As long as we have in this house, not only men like the Prime Minister but like the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Trade and Commerce, doing the type of work they are doing there is no question in my mind as to how these same farmers who supported us in 1957 and to a greater degree in 1958 will stand at the next appeal to the people.

The hon. member for Assiniboia makes some play with figures. I notice that he did not use too many of his own. He has not all the "M.B.S." to support him as opposed to the D.B.S. If hon. members do not understand what "M.B.S." means, may I say that spelled out it stands for the Martin bureau of statistics.

One of the things that must be remembered is that farm income and the statistics indicate for the first time in a long while that the gross income is moving upwards and that the cost figure quoted by the Minister of Agriculture is only one per cent. I believe in an earlier speech in the house he mentioned that the gross income increased by ten per cent across Canada. No one is satisfied with this situation. But we at least feel, particularly with our stabilization bill in effect and beginning to take hold, that the long fight upwards for better prices and a better return to the farmer is beginning to show results. I mention that matter with some feeling because I know that I must be honest with my own farm constituents. I know that any politician who says to them, "Vote for me and I will cure all your problems with some price change" is just fooling those people. That is the type of thing that I said in the election campaigns of 1953, 1957 and 1958 and I hope I can say it again when the next election comes.

The hon. member for Assiniboia raised the question of my stand on deficiency payments. He raised the matter previously in the house in the throne speech debate. At that time I rose on a question of privilege and said that the statement was not true. Then I came into the house and in making my own speech I read into the records of the house—and this can be found at page 327 of Hansard—exactly what the press reported and these press reports appeared all over the province.

Mr. Argue: What the minister reported was from a different meeting.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I would ask the hon. member to let me finish. Throughout the election campaign C.C.F. speakers went up and down Saskatchewan and said that Hamilton is against deficiency payments. Not one of them said I was for them.

Mr. Argue: Are you?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Yet he takes a clipping just before the election, in which appears a list of things including deficiency payments and states, "This is the statement of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle before he was elected". I have put on Hansard what actually took place, and I will go this step further and say that not only is this a matter of individual C.C.F. speakers saying it but that the premier of the province of Saskatchewan, on the Friday before the election, went into my constituency at the town of Grenfell and repeated this same statement which appeared in the headlines in the newspapers all over the province before the election, namely that I was opposed to deficiency payments.

That was the stand that I took.

I put it this way. I would not support any policy where a greater proportion of the money went to the larger farmers and a smaller proportion went to the more numerous small farmers. I do not back down from that stand. But if anybody can show me how deficiency payments will help the little farmer lift himself up and get out of this situation where his gross income is so low, then I am always willing to listen. But I look at the figures showing the amount of wheat, oats and barley sold by a small farmer in my riding and I see the difference all through the north eastern part of Saskatchewan and through Manitoba. I do not care if you raise the price to $3 a bushel, you could not lift up the level of living of some of the farmers in my riding. They must feed their oats, their barley and some of their wheat to stock in order to make any sort of income at all. Yet this thing is designed to force them to sell to the elevator in order to get the deficiency payment. I could go on and discuss this matter at greater length but I think I have said enough to make my own stand clear.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I want to remind the committee that last August when the Prime Minister stood up here and outlined that statement on the national agricultural policy it was a great day in Canada's history as far as the farmer was concerned. How many times have you heard the hon. member for Assiniboia discuss this farm program enunciated by the Prime Minister and taking a look at all its aspects, how it is trying to get at this question of the sale of our products; how it is trying to stabilize prices by a forward pricing system; how it is trying to stabilize the effect of weather calamities by crop insurance; how it is trying to give to the young farmer and the small farmer and even help the older farmer to sell his land; some help in doing the things that will make his farm operation more efficient and give a chance to see what we in the Conservative party stand for, namely the family farm all across Canada.

I wonder if the hon. member for Assiniboia has considered the great need for constructive suggestions on a rural development program? I know we are working on it, but I would like the views of the hon. members of this house, and I know the Minister of Agriculture would. I would like to hear various suggestions in connection with this program to help the smaller farmer, or any farmer, meet the technological problems which have arisen, as well as the problems of the machine age. I could discuss other things, such as research and so on, but I would like to put it in this way. If any hon. member would sit down and make a list of these various steps, which are only the seven main steps of a huge program, and figure out the amount of money that the people of Canada would be willing to put behind a constructive, comprehensive farm program, then the danger of threatening that great program by trying to divert farm organization attention away from the need of a comprehensive program to an isolated act will be realized.

Mr. Badanai: Mr. Chairman, up to the present the committee has heard the voices of experts on the subject of agriculture. Now for a few moments I beg your indulgence to listen to a few remarks from an amateur. I want to assure hon. members that I will not speak until the deadline, so that all of us will be able to say a few words.

The district in which the two fine cities of Fort William and Port Arthur are located is not a prosperous agricultural area comparable to the prairie provinces, or even to the eastern portion of Ontario. But in the rugged terrain of Thunder bay there are numerous dairy and truck garden farms. They are small, with a few exceptions. We have, however, large tracts of empty barren area that could be profitably put to farming use if the prospective farmer had the means of acquiring machinery and stocks. The majority of those small farmers who are now engaged in farming in my constituency need assistance in the form of loans. At the present time unless a farmer has collateral assets it is virtually impossible for him to obtain a loan from a bank, and even the farm loan board is not always sympathetic to his need. I believe that the hon. member for Cape Breton South had the same thing in mind when he spoke a few moments ago about the needs of the farmers in Nova Scotia. I am very much concerned with the small farmer who is operating a comparatively small piece of land, judged by western farm standards, and who is making his living wholly from his produce.

Another important aspect of the small farm which should be considered is that a farm is a good place to bring up a large family. A lot of people are entering Canada through immigration channels, so let us start a number of small farms where there is plenty of room and fresh air, which is an ideal environment in which to raise children, whose worth to Canada transcends any consideration of small assistance in the way of a loan. I realize that this is a problem which concerns the provinces as much as the federal government. However, when we visualize the national benefit that would be derived from the over-all growth and prosperity of Canada by giving active encouragement to these people we should consider immediate steps to devise ways and means to assist those who are ready and willing to go on the land. It seems to me that while the government is very much interested in the wheat farming of the west and the fruit and tobacco farms of the east, it does not show the same zeal for the welfare of the small farmer of northwestern Ontario.

I am in full accord with the proposal to establish an independent research organization as suggested by the interprovincial farm union council, with representation from the district of Thunder bay. We have qualified farmers in our district who could make a substantial contribution to such a research council. In any such organization a capable representative from northwestern Ontario should be essential, because farming in that part of the province of Ontario raises problems which are not prevalent in other parts of Canada. If a research council is to be established, such council should be made operative for all types of farming and not be only of benefit to the wheat farmers. It should also embrace the problem of the small mixed farmers, whose facilities for the development of their holdings are very limited. These are types of farms involving practices which do not apply to other areas; hence the importance of expert advice and assistance, beginning with the establishment of a policy which would enable the small farmers to obtain long term loans from the farm loan board, which at present, as I have indicated, because of undue restrictions does not meet the exigencies and requirements of the average farmer of northwestern Ontario.

In closing, I am going to ask the minister to indicate if the government is considering the establishment of a research council and, secondly, has the government any land loan policy which would be of benefit to small farmers?

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Chairman, in rising to take part in this debate I would like to be permitted to express my appreciation for some of the proposed legislation for this session pertaining to agriculture. As a western farmer it was very gratifying to me to hear that a national crop insurance plan will be presented to th ehouse for its consideration. This long sought legislation asked for by farmers and authorities on agriculture for many years is a very important and essential legislation and is long overdue. When I think back over the years when acres and acres of farm land in the west were flooded and could never be sown to crops; or when I think back to the years when land that was sown could never be harvested because of heavy fall rain and the crop had to be left in the fields over the winter to deteriorate to the point where it never could be harvested; or when I think of beautiful stands of grain wiped out, together with the farmers' hopes, by one hour's frost; then and only then can one understand what a national crop insurance scheme could mean to a farmer. Our Prime Minister is familiar with these hazards, and on August 30 last he spoke in the house about his intention to introduce legislation dealing with crop insurance.

The other legislation awaiting parliamentary approval concerns improved conditions of farm credit. We have heard much about the need of young farmers to establish themselves on economic farm units, but it would be both useless and senseless for us to keep talking about this if we cannot provide them with the necessary means of making their farms economic units either by diversifying them, enlarging them or by using the latest farm methods and equipment. All this can only be done if long term credit is made available to enable all these things to be accomplished. Many of our younger farmers, who wanted to make farming their life occupation have been handicapped because they could not qualify for farm loan credits.

But the most welcome and heart warming words which I have heard for a long time were those which spelled out this government's recommendation to review the discriminatory effects of horizontal freight rates and the latest increases. What do these increased freight rates mean to the farmer in the west and in the maritimes, and how do they affect their economies?

To give hon. members a true picture, and illustrate my point, I must take the committee back to the year 1947. If a farmer bought a harvester combine in that year he had to have it shipped to his home town in the west, and was charged $300 for freight. Ten years later, in 1957, let us suppose he has to replace his combine. Suppose he buys the same kind of machine, a machine of the same size which suits his farm best. Again he has to ship the combine to his farm, but this time the freight bill is not $300, it is a figure twice as high. Why is this? It is because freight rates had been allowed to increase by 125 per cent during the 10-year period. But this is not the end of the story. The manufacturer, too, had to pay a higher freight rate on the materials used to build this combine—125 per cent more in 1957 than in 1947. Of course, as far as the manufacturer was concerned this only meant that he had to increase the price of the combine by the amount of the additional freight it cost him.

The simple truth illustrated by this example of the purchase of a combine is that in freight rates alone the price rose during that 10-year period by between 200 and 300 per cent. However, a harvester is not the only piece of machinery which a farmer has to buy. He needs many more implements such as tractors, drills, and so on, the list seeming to be unending once a farmer begins to buy machinery. And farmers must pay freight on them all, whether they buy an $8,000 combine or whether they sell and ship their own products. For them it is a one way street, coming and going. Mr. Chairman, are you still wondering why the cost of farm production is so high, and what the facts are behind the price squeeze?

Freight rates are one most important factor about which we have heard many complaints. These discriminatory freight rates should never have been allowed to come into force. The Turgeon royal commission recommended that horizontal freight rate increases were unfair and unjust. Nevertheless they were allowed to go on year after year until they reached the point where they were a staggering 125 per cent above the 1947 level. Our party, in opposition at that time, sounded a warning and pointed out the serious consequences these increases would have on our economy, but nothing was done. Of course, we are not washing our hands as if to say it is not our fault and nothing can be done to remedy the situation. This government has recognized that a serious problem exists, and has undertaken to revise the whole freight rate structure so as to avoid the detrimental effects of a horizontal freight rate increase.

Speaking of freight rates, I should like to bring to the attention of the committee another unjust freight rate, namely the freight rate on rapeseed. The present freight rate structure will definitely restrict the development of the rapeseed industry. In order that hon. members may be able to compare the figures, may I say that the freight rate on wheat, oats, barley and rye from Saskatoon to Fort William is 22 cents per hundredweight: the rate for flax is 23½ cents per hundredweight. The rate for rapeseed, however, is no less than 70 cents per hundredweight. Cereal grains and flax are covered by the Crownest pass agreement, but rapeseed is not. Consequently, rapeseed is subjected to further increases in freight rates as they become effective. At the present time, the railways have a further application pending for a 17 per cent increase in freight rates. Applied to rapeseed this would bring the rate from Saskatoon to Fort William to 82 cents per hundredweight. Unless action is taken to modify the effect of present rates, production will be curtailed and acreage now growing rapeseed will again be put under wheat.

Rapeseed cannot be competitive in the situation I have described. The handling, marketing and storage of rapeseed are processes identical with those carried out in the case of other grains. Rapeseed is accepted and carried by ocean carriers at the same rate as flax or other grains to all parts of the world and lake freighters carry rapeseed at the same rate as they carry other grains.

Seemingly the only people who do not recognize rapeseed as a grain are the Canadian railways. Yet the railroads incur no more costs in handling rapeseed than are incurred in handling any other grain; there is no difference between rapeseed and flax when it comes to transportation.

In addition to freight rates, tariffs have also affected the expansion of this branch of the industry. Rapeseed, when processed, is manufactured into an edible oil comparable to soybean oil, or any of the other oils on the vegetable oil market.

Progress reported.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to private and public bills, the former having precedence, pursuant to standing order 15(3).

PRIVATE BILLS

Mr. Speaker: There are a number of private bills standing for consideration in committee of the whole house. Is it agreed that in accordance with standing order 54(1) they be referred to the committee of the whole in one motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McIlraith: Just before we go into committee, do I understand that private bills, items No. 130, 131, and so on, are included?

Mr. Speaker: They are all included. No member loses any precedence or rights. All this means is that it takes one motion instead of seven to put them into committee.

Mr. McIlraith: Thank you.

BOILER INSPECTION AND INSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA

The house in committee on Bill No. S-8, respecting the Boiler Inspection and Insurance Company of Canada—Mr. Morton—Mr. MacEwan in the chair.

Clauses 1 and 2 agreed to.

On clause 3—Subdivision of existing capital stock.

Mr. Morton: Mr. Chairman, in respect of clause 3, as a result of a discussion when this bill was before the committee I understand the hon. member for Ottawa West has an amendment to propose. I understand it is an amendment that has to do only with the changing of wording but makes no material change in the meaning.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, clause 3 of the bill as it appears reads this way:

> The three thousand shares of the company issued and outstanding prior to the passing of this act and having a par value of one hundred dollars each shall be subdivided into thirty thousand of the aforesaid shares having a par value of ten dollars each on the basis of ten shares for one. The said thirty thousand ordinary shares shall constitute the total issued capital of the company at the date of the coming into force of this act.

At the time this bill was being dealt with by the banking and commerce committee some question was raised to the language used in this clause, although there was no difference of opinion, or no disapproval of what was being sought to be done by the clause, or what the petitioners were asking to be done. Following that discussion and because I had taken a rather active part in it in committee, I took the opportunity of consulting with the law clerks on the question of the draftsmanship of the clause and I found that some of the views I held on the draftsmanship were supported, and some additional points of view were expressed on them. I got a rather lengthy opinion from the parliamentary counsel and the assistant law clerk. I think it is not necessary to take up the time of the committee on the points raised but perhaps I should say a word or two about them. It will be noted that in the third line—that is, line 30 of the bill now before the committee—the words "shall be subdivided" are used. The provision is that the existing shares of the compnay now in existence shall be subdivided when the new legislation now before us comes into effect. Then, in the last sentence this statement is made:

> The said thirty thousand ordinary shares shall constitute the total issued capital of the company at the date of the coming into force of this act.

That is, presumably, the new shares. It was pointed out that probably the difficulty in language can be corrected by simply striking out the words "shall be" in line 30 and substituting therefor the word "are". But there are still further difficulties in the language because, referring to the point of time and the coming into force of the act the expression is used in the second and third lines, "prior to the passing of this act" and then, in referring to the point of time at the very end of the clause, the expression is used, "at the date of the coming into force of this act." It will be seen that there is a looseness of terminology there. It will be further seen that in line 33 of the clause the words, "the said thirty thousand shares" appear, when there are no said thirty thousand shares. It seems to me that the use of these words is not accurate and it is capable of a good deal of confusion. The result of it all is that I think there should be new language and the suggested language which I propose to move after I have read it is the language suggested by the parliamentary counsel and the assistant law clerk, which reads:

> Each of the 3,000 shares of the company issued and outstanding and having a par value of $100 is hereby subdivided into 10 shares having a par value of $10 each, so that the capital stock of the company now issued and outstanding shall consist of 30,000 shares having a total par value of $300,000.

That is the clause suggested by the officials. Therefore I should like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Colchester-Hants (Mr. Kennedy):

That clause 3 of Bill S-8, an act respecting the Boiler Inspection and Insurance Company of Canada, be deleted, and that the following be substituted therefor:

"Each of the 3,000 shares of the company issued and outstanding and having a par value of $100 is hereby subdivided into 10 shares having a par value of $10 each, so that the capital stock of the company now issued and outstanding shall consist of 30,000 shares having a total par value of $300,000."

Mr. Morton: Mr. Chairman, just to assure the committee I should state that after the amendment was brought to my attention I brought it to the attention of the parliamentary agent, the Toronto solicitor acting for the company, and he approved of the amendment as being satisfactory. I also checked with the superintendent of insurance, under whose jurisdiction these matters come, and he has forwarded a letter to me approving of the change. I have also checked with other officials concerned, including the chairman of the standing committee on banking and commerce, and the amendment is in order so far as they are concerned.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

Clauses 4 and 5 agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

EXTENSION OF RIGHT TO VOTE AT ADVANCE POLLS

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-10, to amend the Canada Elections Act (voting at advance polls).

He said: The disconcerting speed with which we have moved in processing bills today is in marked contrast to the fate of this particular bill, because this is the fifth time it has been introduced into the house and each time it has been garlanded with all sorts of approval. Everyone seems to think there is a marvelous principle involved in this particular bill, but it is usually talked out. Fortunately today the time during which it can be talked out is not going to be very long. I am pleased to see the minister who is responsible for this particular department in attendance. I am pleased also to see the tall member for Halifax, the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McGee) and the other member from Toronto, whom we usually see when bills are to be talked out. I hope they will pass around the honours today.

The Canada Elections Act is peculiarly an act that is handled within the House of Commons framework. The executive takes much less of a lead in regard to amendments to this act. This act is much more sensitive to the opinion of hon. members. It is traditional that during the first session after an election when most grievances with regard to the act are sharper the standing committee on privileges and elections does not sit. The sittings of this committee are postponed until the second session. I have a good hunch when the next election is going to be. It is going to be sometime in late May or early June of 1962. The reason it is going to be then is, of course, that with the great majority the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) has he can call an election at any time. It will not be any later than that because if it is later he will have to go to the people with a completely new distribution of seats which will mean the losing of at least three seats in Saskatchewan. The Prime Minister comes from there and I am assuming he will not want to fight the next election on that basis, so I have deduced the date to be early June, 1962.

This does give us some considerable time to make changes in the Canada Elections Act. I think there is almost universal agreement, even amongst such generally contradictory bodies as the Canadian chamber of commerce and the Canadian Labour Congress, that we need to extend the advance polling privileges. This privilege is limited now to a few occupations. The general reason for extending the scope has to do with changes in society. We have much more mobility in our labour force; many more sales personnel on the road and wider distances to cover. People are planning their vacations to a greater extent, even planning them months ahead because it is possible to make that type of arrangement now which cannot be altered even for such a fundamental as casting a vote.

The principle involved in this particular bill is a very simple one. The amendment seeks to extend the privilege of voting at advance polls to any Canadian who is aware of the fact he is not going to be at his proper polling place on election day. This is really all the bill does, and that is the principle involved. It has been noticeable in previous debates that speakers who approved of the principle and wanted to have enough time to talk the bill out always dove into the actual provisions of the bill.

Hon. members have been critical of several points, and one of those points has been the feeling that the regulation involved in this particular bill will make it difficult in rural polls. I should like to put it to most hon. members, not so much in contradiction of that but in balance, that the people in rural polls have a tremendous advantage in so far as voting is concerned over the people in urban polls. Provided a voter in a rural poll can get a neighbour to identify him, he can be sworn in and cast his vote. However, this provision does not apply to urban polls and it is in urban polls where the greatest pressure exists for advance polling privileges, not only because they are the more populous but because they are the polls in which there are more people who are moving in society.

The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) has another bill on the order paper relating to absentee voting. This is something with which the standing committee on privileges and elections will have to deal. I should like to remind hon. members that there is a distinction between the two. I have to say, fairly and truthfully, that what we need is a complete revision of the Canada Elections Act from a fairly wide point of view. A thorough study is needed to assess the merits of the various schemes of absentee voting and voting at advance polls. The absentee voting system is really designed so that no matter where you are in Canada you can vote for a particular candidate in your particular constituency. This is not such an urgent problem as voting at advance polls, that is in the sense of a real grievance, but it also needs to be considered.

We have some marvelous examples in British Columbia, Saskatchewan, and to a degree in Ontario and Manitoba, where very serious and sincere efforts have been made to extend this particular privilege to more people. I think, in the main, they have worked well. Last year I touched on one of the weaknesses of the extension of advance polling privileges in Ontario, and that was the relatively high cost in relation to the number of votes cast. However, we are going to have an election in Ontario this year. It seems to be in the cards, and I think we will find that the advance polling privilege will be used much more this time than it was last, when the people, especially the party organizations, were not so aware of it.

Now, the final point I wanted to make in so far as the bill is concerned is that the principle is a good one. I think almost everyone will recognize that there is hardly a member of parliament who has not been haunted at election time, and especially on election day, by phone calls from people who have not been able to vote because of the narrowness of the restriction of this privilege. There really is no reason why a commercial traveller or a transport worker should have an advantage in voting over someone who, because of the nature of his employment, is forced to be away on election day.

This particular lack disenfranchised hundreds of voters in my own constituency in the last election. They are woods workers and were covered and put on a poll list out in the woods camp. It just so happened that between the time they were registered as voters and polling day these camps were closed down and the majority of the men moved into urban polls where they could not be sworn in. Hence that whole group was disenfranchised. I am not saying that this particular legislation would cure that particular difficulty but it would tend to cure it in that it would give them a longer period in which to vote. I hope it would fit in with the other changes in the election act that would give them a chance to vote such as extending to the urban polls the privilege that people now have in the rural polls.

The electoral officer this particular house has to deal with is a well-informed gentleman. He has helped to a degree in conection with almost all the bills that private members have brought in with respect to changing the Canada Elections Act. At the very least he has provided a tremendous amount of information. I hope the present minister who has the responsibility and the present chairman of the standing committee on privileges and elections are in close touch with the chief electoral officer. I know the spirit and the general attitude of the chief electoral officer and his senior officials is a progressive one; I mean it is progressive in the sense that they are as much aware as we are or perhaps more so, of the tedious administrative difficulties involved in changes in the act but also in bringing the privilege of voting and the right of voting to more people. For that reason I should like to see someone move that this bill, after the principle has been approved, be referred to the standing committee on privileges and elections.

After this particular committee has heard from the electoral officer and from the various members who have an interest in this kind of amendment and change, this particular bill could be the focal point for considering that particular aspect of the Canada Elections Act. I think it would provide the members of the committee with a starting point that would be a good relative consideration in relation to the present regulations. Certainly I believe the difficulties involved in the consequential changes arising out of this bill are going to be encountered in making adjustments. I think this particular bill and the bill on absentee voting would be an excellent starting point for major changes in the elections act with regard to polling.

Despite what I seem to feel is a thickening lethargy and a thickening disinterest on the part of many government members on such matters, I feel that this particular change is going to come before the election in late May or June of 1962.

Mr. Frank McGee (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, during the early part of the remarks of the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) I was tempted to rise on a question of privilege; but in view of the incident which occurred yesterday it does not seem that that crowd pays too much attention to the rules of this house anyway, so I decided not to bother. His remarks were another aspect of the sanctimonious and pious attitude emanating from that corner of the house based an the assumption that anybody who speaks after the great man has let fly his pearls of wisdom simply has nothing to say; and that once this great wealth of wisdom has commented on a certain bill there is really no necessity for any of us to speak, we can all go home and that group can carry on throughout the rest of the session and pass all of the bills. As I say, that seems to be the assumption. I should like, through you, Mr. Speaker, to let the hon. member for Port Arthur know that there are certain of us who have a genuine and honest interest in matters such as this and that simply because we have the temerity to rise and speak to a bill does not mean what the hon. member indicates.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is that the typescript of the hon. gentleman's speech?

Mr. Fisher: Read it.

Mr. McGee: Mr. Speaker, I see that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is still incapable of keeping his nose out of virtually every speech that is made here. I should like to quote a pertinent remark made by one Hilaire Belloc. He reminds us that the very eccentricities of professors, their peculiarities of gait, their squint, their oddities of gesture and speech, are a curse put upon them as punishment of their terrible sin of pride.

Mr. Speaker: I did not know that professors were involved in this particular piece of legislation.

Mr. McGee: I beg your pardon, Mr. Speaker; but it was an opportunity to reply to the consistent and persistent interruptions from that section of the house.

As far as my views are concerned on this particular bill, I approve the principle of it with reservations. My reasons for approving the principle apply in particular to some of the aspects of the bill mentioned by the hon. member for Port Arthur. I would refer to such people as holidayers, employees of companies, of which there are large numbers in my riding—and I used to be one myself—who have virtually no choice when they will take their holidays. They apply early in the year, months and months ahead, to take their holidays at a particular week or period of one or two weeks in the summer, late spring or early fall. When an election is called after that decision is made these people have no opportunity to alter that holiday period and they are either at the cottage or resort some hundreds of miles away from their normal place of residence, or are touring through the many beauty spots of Canada or the United States. I think it is asking a great deal to ask a person, particularly one such as I was in recent years, with two short weeks to enjoy in a regular working year, to leave a cottage two or three hundred miles away, spend the better part of two or three days in getting back home and then to drive back to the cottage or to interrupt touring plans in order to return home to vote.

I approve the principle as it applies and as this bill will obviously assist such persons. The same thing applies to employees of commercial firms in capacities other than those covered by the present act. While a travelling salesman operating on commission certainly is entitled to go to the advance poll under the present regulations, a man working for someone else again has no choice. He is told to go to a certain place at a certain time. While we have many responsible employers in this country who try to avoid the possibility of this difficulty costing a man his vote, unfortunately there are many who either do not consider it in time or who have plans which have been made so far in advance that it is impossible to change them.

These are the obvious reasons and there are many others. I have been looking over the debates on this bill in the past two sessions. What I should like to discuss for a few moments are some of the problems inherent in the holding of an earlier poll. I suggest there are serious difficulties in this matter and prodigious problems as far as I myself am concerned.

One aspect of that argument, of course, is that an election is something like a jury trial. The electors are the jury and the candidates present their cases to that jury. It seems to me that at a period of something like ten days before an election all the evidence is simply not in. Issues are developing and move from side to side. Public opinion sways back and forth between the two major candidates. It raises doubts in my mind from what I have seen of municipal, provincial and federal elections. You have to contend with the well known technique of the smear campaign. A statement is made late enough in the election that it is impossible for the person who is alleged to have committed an offence to have the opportunity to reply to it. How this would affect the results of an advance poll raises serious questions in my mind.

Another thing I am concerned about is, what percentage of the voters eligible to vote in advance polls will vote? I know from reading previous debates that reference was made by the then member for Winnipeg North Centre to recent elections in Manitoba. I think he described the percentage of advance poll voters as relatively small. I think the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Morton) last year made reference to the fact that in the Ontario election in 1955 again the numbers were small. I would like to know what sort of percentages we are dealing with here. What are the anticipated percentages in the event that the scope of this particular aspect of the act is widened? It seems to me, on examining the records of elections over the years, that the percentage difference between the votes of the two major parties which decide who shall form the government, and the percentages in individual cases of candidates in most of the federal elections in our history, has been relatively small. I am wondering if there is a danger, when you are increasing the percentage of those who make the decision at a time when, as I have suggested, the evidence is not in and the picture is not complete, that this might have quite a serious result. Certainly in a close election it could have a decisive effect on the result. The percentage increases, as I think it will when people become accustomed to these new voting habits. Is this likely to result in two campaigns in one? Is it likely to result in a campaign designed to appeal to that section of the electorate which would be voting earlier and then a later campaign designed to focus upon the final election date?

I mentioned earlier that this would pose a virtually insurmountable problem in my own case. There are in my constituency at the moment about a quarter of a million people. My estimate is that by the time the next election rolls around there will be approximately a third of a million. As to what the number of voters might be is very difficult to assess. There are large numbers of young children in my riding, and many young families. However, the simple problem does remain, that in my case I can inform the electorate what my name is, what my party is, and so on, in the form of a postcard to them, but if this legislation is enacted, how can I tell these people the simple facts without going broke in the process? My estimate is that it would cost me something like

If there is going to be an appreciable number of the electors in my riding voting at an advance poll, the question arises, should I send this information out ten or even fifteen days before the election? Obviously if there are going to be an appreciable number of persons voting I am in trouble, because I must contact them either too early or wait until later in the election and I cannot do both. I was hoping I would have heard some discussion from the hon. member who introduced this bill as to the numbers he has in mind when he suggests that these advance polls be moved back as the bill indicates. If any other member speaking to this bill has any ideas on this subject, I would be most interested to hear them. As I said at the beginning, Mr. Speaker, I favour the principle of this bill, but I have some reservations about its application in my particular case in the next election.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I was happy to hear the member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) clarify two things this afternoon. He told us first when the next federal election will be, and he has told us when the next Ontario provincial election will likely be. I am sure now that we know these facts we can prepare ourselves accordingly.

In rising to speak to this question, I, like the other two members, agree with the principle. I think all of us who have taken part in elections, even before we had our nominations—when perhaps we were working for others who were federal candidates—appreciate the fact that in many cases people who are entitled to vote and have the qualifications under the act were denied the right to vote because they were absent. In principle I go along with the terms and conditions of the amendment in question. The explanatory notes very simply put states:

> The privilege of voting at an advance poll is now restricted to a limited number of voters, namely commercial travellers, fishermen, persons employed upon railways, vessels, airships, etc., members of the reserve forces, the R.C.M.P. etc.

It does seem, on examining and discussing this matter with the people who feel they have the privilege of voting in their absence, that because they do not fill in their application they are denied their franchise. On examining the bill itself one is faced with two or three questions. I want to deal with some of the questions which might affect a rural constituency, particularly one like mine, Bow River, in Alberta. In rural constituencies it would seem, when setting up advance polls, that it would be necessary that all communities, all villages or towns, have an advance poll. In that instance there would be an increase in the number of advance polls. The way the position stands at the moment, I only have a very small portion of the city of Calgary along by the Bow river and there is only one advance poll. Under the amendment, if it passed, it would mean we would have to have advance polls in all the towns and villages in some of the rural communities, because if the act is to be equitable and carry out in principle what it intends, then it would be very unfair for a man in one constituency to travel 35 miles while another man travels only one mile. There would have to be a lot more advance polls, and when we run into that sort of thing it would affect the question of the cost of running an election.

There is a second point I should like to make. I am sure it is one which has been considered by others in the past because I understand this bill has been before the house on previous occasions. The time between the date of nomination and the date of the election would be extended under the terms of the act by at least one week, which would make it three weeks instead of two. The reason for that is that because of the number of advance polls which would take place in these circumstances it would be necessary for the deputy returning officer to tally the number of advance votes so that there would be no duplication. Then you would have to set up special machinery for advance polls similar to the machinery set up in the ordinary poll on voting day, complete with clerks, scrutineers and other officials—almost a duplication. This would, of course, work some hardship on the candidates themselves because they would have to have agents working for three or four days instead of on the one day at the election as presently required and that, of course, would result in extra expense.

It would be necessary for a candidate to have such scrutineers or agents, because if arrangements are not made similar to those made at the polls on election day there is always the chance of something taking place which is not quite according to law. This may seem like a digression, but it might be helpful to give an example of what happened at one of the polls when I first became a candidate in the election of 1957. I attended one of the polls and I saw two or three people handing out literature. This happened to be a facsimile of the ballot, on the back of which was a picture of my main opponent and the words: on the other side, see how to mark your ballot. And the people were able to take the ballot handed out—the facsimile—into the voting booth and mark the ballot accordingly. That is the reason why we have provision for scrutineers in the original act, and that is why we should have to have candidates' agents present all the time. That is why it is clearly set out in the act that the principle of equity for all shall apply. If matters were left entirely to the discretion of the returning officers there would be a different system in every poll and in every constituency across the country and there would be no uniformity at all.

I have not done a great deal of research on this, but it does seem to me that some of the suggestions which were made by the hon. member for Port Arthur had merit and that they could profitably be studied in committee. With regard to the idea of an absentee voting system, I do know from my experience as a practising lawyer that Americans have come into my office in order to have certain documents notarized, thus entitling them to vote in elections at home. I believe this system is also used in certain countries of the commonwealth. It should be compared, in my opinion, with the system of advance polls which would be more costly and more cumbersome because it would mean a three-day election set up instead of the one-day system we have at present.

In summary I should like to repeat the main points I have raised. If this amendment were to carry it would mean the setting up of a number of advance polls. Second, there would have to be a greater time between the date of the nomination and the election date in order that the returning officer could get in all the returns so that it could be ascertained that those who had taken advantage of the advance poll in question had been removed from the voters list. Third, there would have to be special machinery set up which, again, would be more costly. Last, but not least it would impose something of a burden on candidates themselves, because they would be running a three-day election instead of a one-day election.

Before I sit down I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Port Arthur for presenting this amendment to the present act. As I understand it, the Canada Elections Act has not been changed for a number of years. The amendment deals with one of the major problems which all candidates encounter in an election. There are numbers of people who are denied their right to the franchise, and I feel that in a democracy if a man is absent because of business reasons or for some reason beyond his control he should not be prevented from voting. The hon. member for Port Arthur made a good point when he differentiated between the type of rules and regulations governing city polls and those governing rural polls. In the rural poll it is always possible for an applicant to be sworn in, but a person in a city poll is denied this privilege. Unless he checks the voters list and finds his name there or takes action in the period which is set before the election, he cannot take part.

I think we should streamline the act somewhat and make it possible for every qualified person in Canada to have the privilege of exercising his vote, whether he is at home on the day of the election or not. This legislation is equitable in its effect upon all, whether we support the Liberal party, the C.C.F. party or the Conservative party. We all know that it is a free contest in this democracy of ours, and we want to see such rules and regulations set up under the election act as will be fair to one and all.

Mr. W. L. M. Creaghan (Westmorland): I see it is nearly six o'clock, Mr. Speaker. I had quite a number of points I wished to add to this debate. Perhaps I might point out, however, that schedule 2 of the election act does provide for the constitution of advance polls across the country. At the present time there are approximately 150 towns, cities and villages which are able to hold advance polls. I have been advised by the chief electoral officer that in the last election about 250 advance polls were actually in existence because of the fact that some of the larger cities often had one advance poll per constituency. One advance poll was held in my own riding, and I know it was a busy poll.

Unfortunately, too few of our citizens have the privilege of voting at advance polls. There are many people such as loggers, miners, prospectors, and so on who, because of the rigid requirements of our election act, are in effect disenfranchised.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but it is six o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the leader of the house what is to be the business for Tuesday and Wednesday and, if possible, for the whole week.

Mr. Green: On Tuesday we intend to take four routine motions. One is in the name of the Prime Minister, providing for the Easter adjournment. The second is also in the name of the Prime Minister asking that the report of the Canada Council be referred to the public accounts committee pursuant to the Canada Council Act. These two motions are contained in Votes and Proceedings for today.

Then there are two other notices on today's order paper under government notices of motion, one under my own name which would refer the estimates of the Department of Fisheries to the standing committee on marine and fisheries, the other in the name of the Minister of Finance referring the public accounts and some other documents to the public accounts committee. Then, we will take item No. 9 on today's order paper. This is a motion to refer the subject of the humane slaughter of food animals to the standing committee on agriculture; item No. 6, dealing with the appointment of parliamentary secretaries; item No. 8, a resolution which will provide for an amendment to the bill we are considering to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act; then, item No. 4, a resolution concerning the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act; item No. 3, a bill to amend the Public Servants Inventions Act; item No. 1, a bill to confirm an agreement between the government of Canada and the government of the province of New Brunswick respecting Indian reserves; a motion to step up a joint committee to consider the Indian Act; and we also intend to consider estimates next week of the departments of agriculture and citizenship and immigration.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is it the intention to go along with this program right through the week in the order indicated?

Mr. Green: It will be that order for Tuesday. There may have to be some variation on the three remaining days.

It being four minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Questions

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

RURAL MAIL CARRIERS, ETC., ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Question No. 131—Mr. Pickersgill:

1. How many rural mail carriers are there in (a) Nova Scotia; (b) New Brunswick; (c) Prince Edward Island; (d) Newfoundland?

RURAL ROUTE NO. 5, COLCHESTER COUNTY, N.S.

Question No. 145—Mr. McWilliam:

1. Were tenders called for a rural mail route, Tatamagouche No. 5, in Colchester county, Nova Scotia?

2. If so, what persons submitted tenders, and what was the amount of each tender?

3. Was a contract awarded? If so, to whom, and for what amount?

Answer by: Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General):

1. Yes.

2. Donald Shirley McKay, Tatamagouche, P.O. Box 208, $1650; H. M. Coulter, Tatamagouche, $1950; Leroy Fenwick Esau, Tatamagouche R. R. No. 5, $2000; Daniel Blair Cloney, Tatamagouche R.R. No. 2, $2060; Sidney Cawley Bonnyman, Tatamagouche, $2069; Mrs. Ethel MacConnell, Tatamagouche R.R. No. 5, $2100.

3. Yes, Donald Shirley McKay, $1650 per annum.

EGG SALES TO VENEZUELA

Question No. 146—Mr. McIlraith:

1. Have eggs been sold to Venezuela by the Canadian government or any agency thereof, since December 1, 1958?

2. If so, at what price?

3. What did the Canadian government or agency, pay for such eggs?

4. What was the retail price to the Canadian consumer at the time of such sale abroad?

Answer by: Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture):

1. The agricultural stabilization board has offered eggs to Canadian traders for resale to certain approved export markets including Venezuela.

2. Prices received since December 1, 1958, have varied from 5 to 16 cents per dozen f.o.b. storage below the price equivalent to the support price of 44 cents per dozen, grade A large Montreal, graded and packed in new wooden cases.

3. All eggs purchased by the board have been at a price related to the support price of 44 cents per dozen for grade A large at Montreal, graded and packed in new wooden cases.

4. The Canadian retail prices for the same grade of eggs vary greatly, sometimes even within the same store. The weekly poultry products market report shows a range of from 49 to 60 cents per dozen for grade A large in cartons to consumers in Montreal and a range of from 46 to 57 cents per dozen in cartons to consumers in Ottawa since December 1, 1958.

KREBIOZEN—CANCER RELIEVING DRUG

Question No. 211—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

Is the Department of National Health and Welfare in a position to comment on the claim made by Dr. Andrew C. Ivy regarding a drug known as krebiozen as a possible cure of relief-producing agency for cancer?

Answer by: Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

A new drug submission (as required by the regulations under the Food and Drugs Act to give information for establishing the safety of all new drugs) was received by the department some years ago for krebiozen. The information submitted was not considered by the department as being complete in that no data was given to indicate that more than one lot was ever made or that subsequent lots would have the same composition and effects. The manufacturer was informed of this situation at that time and no further information has been received since to remove the objections.

Meanwhile clinical trials of the drug may be made in Canada by qualified investigators as permitted by section C.01.302 of the food and drug regulations. Results of a few of these tests have been sent to the department. However, until full information is received that krebiozen is a drug that can be made to an established standard, that the various lots of the drug can be properly controlled, and that it is and will be safe for the conditions of use recommended, the distribution of the drug must be limited in Canada by the restrictions for new drugs laid down in the food and drug regulations.

It is necessary to be very careful in this respect, particularly so when the new drug is one that will be used in the treatment of cancer.

ACREAGE PAYMENTS TO WESTERN FARMERS

Question No. 224—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. What amount of money has been paid out from the amount of $40,000,000 provided last year for payments of $1 per acre to western grain farmers?

2. How many farmers have received these payments and what was the amount paid by provinces?

Answer by: Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture):

1. As of February 27, 1959 $39,908,302 in cheques has been issued to farmers in connection with the western grain producers acreage payments.

2. 227,981 farmers have received payments. The distribution is as follows:—

Province	Farmers	Amount
Manitoba	42,604	$ 7,063,657
Saskatchewan	108,848	19,892,795
Alberta	75,111	12,720,820
British Columbia	1,418	231,030
Totals	227,981	$39,908,302

PRIVILEGE

(Translation):

MR. GOUR—REFERENCE TO NEWSPAPER ARTICLE OF MARCH 7

Mr. J. O. Gour (Russell): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I wish to put a matter right following a report published in a local newspaper Saturday concerning the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) and myself. The report quotes me as saying:

(Text):

This newspaper article quotes me as saying, "The Minister of Agriculture is one of the worst ministers that Canada has." This is not what I said. I referred to the "ministry of agriculture", and I did explain my sentence properly. It might have been better if I had said that the portfolio of the Department of Agriculture is the worst among the portfolios. I gave the details to support my statement by saying that many lines of farming are different in the various provinces, that the western provinces produce mostly grain; Ontario and Quebec produce mostly dairy products and meat, while the maritimes produce mostly fish and potatoes, far from the marketing centres. We consume only a part of our production.

On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, when I started my remarks I said that I had known the minister for 14 years and that I considered him a very honest gentleman. However, I mentioned that being a minister in a Conservative government conducted by only the master we may expect him to make this so-called small politics, but I hope this will not happen.

(Translation):

On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, I said, at the outset of my remarks, that I have known the minister for 14 years and that I consider him an honest man and a nice gentleman. I mentioned, however, that since he is a cabinet member in a Conservative government, run by only one man he might be expected to play a little bit of politics, but that I hoped he would not do so.

MONTREAL—ANNOUNCEMENT OF SETTLEMENT OF STRIKE

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, perhaps for the sake of the record and for posterity, because some day someone may be looking in Hansard and wondering what happened to a matter which has caused some concern to the house during this session, I should be permitted to say what hon. members know now, that the C.B.C. strike was settled on Saturday afternoon. In the early hours of Saturday morning the wording was agreed to as to the interpretation of the section which had caused some doubts heretofore.

This agreement was reached largely through the efforts of the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Chambers), who has worked tirelessly on this matter for weeks. As a result the wording was brought to Ottawa and was agreed to by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and on Saturday afternoon the documents were signed. Shortly afterward the picket lines were brought to an end.

I should like to express my appreciation to the staff of the C.B.C. for the pressure under which they have been working, the difficult circumstances, the long hours and in general the co-operation which they have shown. I am also sure I am speaking for all when I express appreciation to the officers of the corporation for the long hours, the hard work and the trying circumstances under which these negotiations have been carried on.

I should also like to say a special word indirectly with respect to Mr. Quirion and to the president, Mr. Ouimet. When Mr. Ouimet was stricken with illness during these negotiations the responsibility, as acting head of the corporation, fell upon Mr. Bushnell. He and his associates I feel have worked tremendously hard on this matter. With the removal of Mr. Ouimet from the active negotiating field there was a danger of injecting other issues into this matter, and a suggestion of racial problems might have arisen. I want to express my appreciation to Mr. Quirion and those who were closely associated with him for having resisted any suggestion of that kind and for maintaining discussions on the issues and not on extraneous matters.

The strike is over, Mr. Speaker. I am sure that all concerned will unite in working together for the corporation and with the corporation and will strengthen, develop and re-establish the French network so that shortly it will again have achieved the position which it had prior to the strike, namely the best French network in the world.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the house join wholeheartedly with the Minister of National Revenue in expressing our happiness and delight at the settlement of this long strike. We were delighted to learn on Saturday that notwithstanding what had been said earlier, that the television producers had been recognized as a bargaining agency and that, furthermore, they had agreed that they would not affiliate with any other group.

I want to join also with the minister in extending to all those who were responsible for the settlement of this strike our thanks and, I am sure, the thanks of those who are particularly interested in the French network of the C.B.C. I refer not only to those officers who represented the producers and the unions representing the other 1,200 or 1,300 people who were on strike. I include also the C.B.C. officials and the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Chambers). To use an expression which is well known in the French language, I think this is an occasion on which to say:

(Translation):

The government owes the hon. member a great deal for his help in settling the strike.

(Text):

While I joined with the minister in the earlier part of his remarks I should now like to dissociate myself from him, and I hope the house will not disagree with me when I add this comment. It is unfortunate that the government decided not to intervene in this strike. If the government had intervened, as we on this side of the house suggested that it should over a period of months, the prophecy and the statement of the Minister of National Revenue would long ago have been put into effect, namely that the strike could have been settled in 30 minutes. Certainly the strike could have been settled long before it was settled had the government intervened; and certainly soon after February 6, when all this difficulty arose over the interpretation of a clause in the understanding, because at that time it was not an agreement.

So while we on this side of the house are happy that the strike has now been brought to an end, we say that it could have been brought to an end a long, long time ago if the government had intervened as we suggested it should.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, the statement by the Minister of National Revenue today is most welcome to the members of the C.C.F. party. We are very pleased that this important French language network will be restored. We hope that as a result of this strike there will be no reduction in the quality of the programs, nor any change in the personnel.

I would like at this time to pay tribute to all those who were involved directly in the strike or associated with it. We all realize that in such a situation there may be many regrettable incidents, but I think all will agree that those who participated in or were associated with this strike used good judgment, were most careful at all times, and there was a minimum of turmoil.

I think parliament itself is very pleased that this strike has been settled. We hope the C.B.C. for many years to come will enjoy good relations with all the people working for that important organization, and that the wonderful record to which the minister has referred will be maintained.

EASTER ADJOURNMENT

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister) moved:

That when this house adjourns on Wednesday, March 25, it stand adjourned until Monday, April 6, 1959.

Motion agreed to.

LOSS OF PRIVATE MEMBERS' DAYS THROUGH MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT OF HOUSE

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I should like to raise a matter which you could perhaps take under advisement and on which you can give us a ruling at a later date.

The question relates to today's order paper, page 3 of routine proceedings, which states that this is private members' day, the fourth allotted Monday. May I point out that the third allotted Monday occurred two weeks ago today, when the member for Trinity, under standing order 26, brought in a motion for the adjournment of the house in order to debate a matter of urgent public importance. This motion was brought in after the ordinary daily routine of business under standing order 15(2) had been concluded. This took place before notices of motion had been reached. Accordingly, since the hon. member's motion was accepted, there was no opportunity for private members' resolutions to be moved.

I would argue, Mr. Speaker, that though there are times when government plans for the day get set aside under the provisions of standing order 26, the government does not lose the chance to carry on with its motions at a later date. In effect the loss of this day guarantees that we shall have one less effective private members' day. This point will be of concern to private members in all parties who wish to see the privileges of private members protected.

As far as I can find out there are no precedents in connection with this particular question, inasmuch as the rule governing private members' Mondays was only introduced in 1956. I can find no rulings in the Journals upon this particular point. In effect we have lost the third private members' Monday so far as notices of motion are concerned, and I suggest that you consider this question in order to determine whether or not there has been any infringement on the rights of private members in this regard.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): May I say a word on this point. There is a precedent established with regard to private members' Mondays being taken up by a discussion of a motion to adjourn the house such as arose two weeks ago today. On February 25, 1957, the fourth allotted private members' day of that session, Mr. Knowles moved a motion to adjourn the house in order to discuss the pipe-line question. The house was adjourned accordingly, and a debate took place. The next allotted Monday, March 2, was marked as the fifth private members' day, and therefore the fourth private members' day was considered as having been used even though the ordinary business of the house had been adjourned on the previous Monday.

Mr. Speaker: It appears that the officers of the house have assumed that the Monday which was used as the hon. member for Port Arthur has indicated was a private members' day, and the order paper was made up accordingly. However, I will take under advisement the point which has been raised as a matter of privilege and consider whether the hon. member's case has been made out. If there is any doubt about the matter I may give a further opportunity for the house to express its views. In the meantime, no interference with our procedure will result from my holding the matter under consideration.

TRANSPORT

MONTREAL—SUSPENSION OF INCREASES IN COMMUTERS' FARES

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in view of the interest shown by members on both sides of the house in the proposed increases in commuters' fares by the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company effective March 15, I thought the house would be interested to know that the board of transport commissioners today issued an order suspending the effective date of the proposed increases pending the arrangement of public hearings in the matter. The board has given notice that as soon after April 27 as can be arranged, hearings will be commenced at Montreal, and elsewhere thereafter if deemed necessary, to receive evidence in regard to the proposed increases. The board has also announced that cities, towns and municipalities and other interested parties who intend to oppose the changes in fares may make their objections known to the board on or before April 21. Further notice of the date and place of hearings will be announced by the board later.

PUBLIC LANDS GRANTS ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING TRANSFERS TO CROWN IN ANY OTHER RIGHT

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. S-2, an act to amend the Public Lands Grants Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

FREIGHT RATES

MEASURE RESPECTING REDUCTION OF CLASS AND COMMODITY RATES

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to direct the board of transport commissioners to require by order the reduction of class and commodity freight rates (other than competitive rates) charged by carriers subject to the order of the board dated November 17, 1958, and to authorize payments to reimburse carriers for the resulting reduction of their revenues up to an aggregate amount of twenty million dollars.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA COUNCIL

MOTION TO REFER REPORT TO PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE

On the order: Government notices of motion:

March 5—The Prime Minister—The following proposed motion:—That the report of the Canada council for the year ended March 31, 1958 laid before the house on July 10, 1958, be referred to the standing committee on public accounts in order to provide a review thereof pursuant to section 23 of the Canada Council Act.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Stand.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of the standing order 21, this government notice of motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the house.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

INCOME TAX ACT, SECTIONS 5 (2)

Motion No. 12—Mr. Fisher:

For a copy of all representations and correspondence received by the government, and the government's replies thereto, concerning section 5, subsection 2, of the Income Tax Act, since 20th December, 1957.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I have had a discussion with the hon. member for Port Arthur. I am fully prepared to accept the motion on the understanding that it covers communications from companies, associations or from organizations of that nature rather than any communications which may have been received from individuals across Canada and, of course, subject to the usual reservation concerning privileged documents.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the limitations expressed by the minister, is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

UNIVERSITY OF BRITISH COLUMBIA—FEDERAL AID TO STUDENTS

Motion No. 66—Mr. Herridge:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between any cabinet minister or his or her deputies, and the president of the University of British Columbia, and any organization or government, with respect to seeking federal government financial aid to assist students or former students of the University of British Columbia to continue their studies at the university.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has mentioned no time limit in this motion. I might suggest to him that in fairness he do so, and perhaps his motion could stand until he has indicated a time limit.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I apologize for that omission, and I could indicate a limit very quickly. I would suggest a limit of the last six months.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I have no objection on that basis.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to accept the limitation of the last six months?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion as amended?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

[Mr. Speaker.]

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY—CLAIMS BY CONTRACTORS

Motion No. 67—Mr. Winch:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, reports, briefs and other documents exchanged between the Minister of Transport or his deputies, and any official or agency of the government, and any person, persons, or organizations, since December 1, 1958, dealing with claims made by contractors for payments from the St. Lawrence seaway authority.

Motion agreed to.

BRIDGES

MONTREAL—PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF BRIDGE AUTHORITY

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of establishing a public corporation or bridge authority which would be empowered:

1. To acquire from the national harbours board, the ownership of (i) the Jacques Cartier bridge; and (ii) the Nuns' island bridge (when completed), upon reasonable terms and conditions;
2. To lease from the Canadian National Railways the facilities for motor vehicles over the Victoria bridge, upon reasonable terms and conditions;
3. To build other bridges across the St. Lawrence river at Montreal; and
4. To operate all such facilities for the convenience of the public, using the revenues therefrom to meet the expenses of administration and operation and the costs of interest and amortization.

(Translation):

He said: Mr. Speaker, right at the beginning of my remarks, I want to make a few comments before dealing with the subject matter of the resolution itself. I would like a good many representatives from the Montreal district, sitting on either side of the house, to take part in this debate and discuss at least the principle of the resolution. I cannot conceive, Mr. Speaker, that anybody, either on our side or opposite should be, in principle, opposed to the resolution. On the contrary, I believe all will wish to declare themselves in favour of this formula for the administration of the bridges connecting Montreal with the south shore.

I am therefore inclined to believe that all hon. members will come out in favour not only of that formula, but also in favour of more adequate and more modern means of transportation between the two shores, and even of the construction of a new bridge or a new tunnel. And the best way to obtain those new means of transportation including another bridge is I think to vote for the resolution now before the house.

There will no doubt be among hon. members some holding back, some hedging, reservations, suggestions, and even amendments to the motion. This would be a good thing for the resolution has been put on the order paper precisely in order to be discussed.

However, if I had to express a wish, it would be this one: I would like to be allowed just about 15 minutes at the end of this discussion, for a a few comments on the remarks of hon. members who chose and were willing to make the effort of taking part in this debate.

(Text):

The object of this resolution is threefold: first to set up a bridge authority or corporation; second, to empower that authority to take over the two bridges now in existence between the island of Montreal and the south shore, the third bridge when it will have been constructed, and any other bridges or tunnels which the government or its agencies should decide to construct in the future; and third, to operate these facilities for the convenience of the public, using the revenues therefrom to meet the expenses of operation and the cost of amortization.

Before dealing with the subject matter of this resolution I should like to give a brief history of the bridges which separate the island of Montreal from the south shore. They are four in number. As one travels upstream the first is the Jacques Cartier bridge. It was built by the Montreal harbour commissioners pursuant to a statute passed by this house authorizing it to construct the bridge and collect tolls. The bridge was opened to the public in 1930, and the cost of that bridge was $19 million.

Under a tripartite agreement entered into by the Montreal harbour commissioners, who were later succeeded by the national harbours board, a crown agency of the federal government, the province of Quebec and the city of Montreal, it was undertaken among these three groups that any annual deficit encountered by the bridge should be divided among them over a period extending from 1930 to 1970, but not to exceed the sum of $150,000 a year. Both the province of Quebec and the city of Montreal met those annual contributions of $150,000 a year for the period 1930 to 1943. In 1944 the city of Montreal refused to make its contribution on the ground that the tripartite agreement of 1928 was ultra vires. Simultaneously the province of Quebec discontinued payments under the agreement, but it did not actually repudiate the agreement. Later on the national harbours board deemed it advisable to take legal proceedings against the city of Montreal in 1946, and in 1952 it obtained judgment against the city for the amount of $745,000 in principal and about $250,000 in interest, roughly speaking an amount of $1 million, which in due course the city of Montreal paid.

On March 13, 1953, the province of Quebec owed under this agreement $745,000 in principal and $237,000 in interest, which has been accruing ever since that date. If we were to include the interest owing since that time the amount now due by the province of Quebec on its indebtedness under the tripartite agreement would run well over $1,250,000.

In 1955-56 the former government undertook and completed alterations to the Jacques Cartier bridge to provide an additional traffic lane. The bridge was originally designed to accommodate two street car lines at a level lower than that of the highway itself. In 1955-56, the track on the downstream side of the bridge was removed and covered over, and was opened to traffic while the former administration was still in office. The remaining traffic lane is being completed and the work undertaken by the present government, as announced by the Minister of Transport in the house some time ago.

I would like to make a statement about the financial operations of this bridge. As I stated earlier, the statute under which this bridge was constructed authorized the collection of tolls, and ever since its inception tolls have been collected on the Jacques Cartier bridge. The latest report available is that of 1957, and from that report it will be seen that the operating revenue for the calendar year 1957 was $2,228,000. The operating expenses were $318,000, and the net operating revenue was $1,910,000. When income from investment held by the national harbours board is added and the charges for interest, amortization and depreciation are deducted, a surplus of $1,015,000 remains. The year 1958 was somewhat better than 1957, although I have not yet been able to get the figures for that year. The year 1959, because of the increasing number of motor cars, I have no doubt will be the best year experienced by the board.

Here I would like to say that according to the annual report for 1957, the amount still owing on the bridge is $8,330,000, roughly speaking, and if you deduct from this the amount of the 1958 surplus from the collection of tolls on the bridge, which I understand was higher than in 1957, plus the amount owing by the province of Quebec, you will find that the indebtedness is now down to $5 million, roughly speaking. At the rate of increase in the traffic this will be paid off within the course of the next few years.

As one moves upstream the next bridge is the Victoria bridge. It was built by the Grand Trunk Railway pursuant to an old statute of the nineteenth century as a railway bridge. It is the property of the Canadian National Railways. Again, at a later date, brackets were added to both sides of the railway structure, the upstream side of the bridge having been used for horse-drawn traffic in the old days, and the downstream side having served to accommodate two tracks of the Montreal and Southern Counties Railroad which provided electric interurban service between Montreal and various points in the eastern townships. From time to time changes were made on the upstream side of the bridge.

In 1955 the rails of the Montreal and Southern Counties Railroad were removed, and the Canadian National Railways spent $2,300,000 for the purpose of converting the downstream bracket of the bridge to vehicular traffic. This had the effect not only of enabling the bridge to accommodate more traffic, but also to speed up the movement of traffic. Formerly, when only one bracket was open for vehicular traffic, large trucks and buses could not use it because of the narrowness of the roadway; but with the opening of the downstream bracket it became possible to accommodate larger vehicles which naturally did not meet oncoming traffic. The only disability from which this bridge has suffered has been the limitation which it was necessary to impose upon it because of the carrying capacity of the first bracket. Since the additional bracket has been constructed the carrying capacity of that bridge, according to the engineers of Canadian National Railways, has been doubled.

Tolls, sir, have always been charged upon the Victoria bridge since the two brackets have been in existence, and I think the tariff of tolls on both the Victoria and Jacques Cartier bridges is identical, except that the method of collecting tolls on both sides has been streamlined since the present government took over in 1957. It has always been my belief that the cost of Victoria bridge has been repaid by tolls levied on motor traffic. While the Canadian National Railways have been asked from time to time in this house to make public the amount of tolls collected on Victoria bridge, they have refrained from so doing on the basis that it would not be possible for them to segregate this particular portion from the rest of their railway earnings.

On the other hand, it is clear that the Canadian National Railways have not collected sufficient revenue to repay the $2,300,000 they invested in improving the downstream side of the bridge. I have no doubt that with the increase in the traffic capacity of the bridge, and in the motor cars using the bridge, it will not be very long before the $2,300,000 expended by Canadian National Railways is repaid. Then before long we will have two bridges crossing the St. Lawrence at Montreal which from the point of view of vehicular traffic will have been amortized by the payment of tolls, namely the Jacques Cartier bridge and the Victoria bridge.

There is still another bridge to which reference must be made and that is the Mercier bridge, which was built by La Corporation du pont du Lac St. Louis and which links the north and south shores opposite the Caughnawaga Indian reserve on lake St. Louis. This bridge is now the property of the province of Quebec. It continued to be a toll bridge until 1942 when, pursuant to a statute passed by the province of Quebec dealing particularly with the Mercier bridge, it was decided from that year on to abolish the collection of tolls thereon.

Important as is the movement of traffic from the island of Montreal to the south shore, and important as it is with reference to other bridges, the Mercier bridge I think has its importance mainly in the fact that it looks after and takes care of through traffic. It has taken on additional importance of late, of course, because of the construction of a new highway from the north part of Montreal to the Laurentian hills. While it is some distance removed from the city of Montreal and plays an important part, as I said, in through traffic, it does not play a preponderant part in the movement of traffic directly from the island of Montreal to the south shore.

The fourth bridge, of course, is the Champlain bridge which is now under construction. I refer to it in my motion as the Nuns' island bridge. I make no apology for that because when I first placed my resolution on the order paper in 1957 the bridge had not received the name Champlain and it was then known as the Nuns' island bridge. I therefore would amend my motion accordingly so that where the name "Nuns' island" appears it should read "Champlain" bridge.

I should like to say a word about the origin of this bridge. When the St. Lawrence seaway authority was first authorized to build facilities for navigation along the south shore, it made public its plans and discussed them with the various municipalities. From the outset these municipalities drew to the attention of the seaway authority how important it was for them to have modern and up to date transportation facilities linking the south shore with the island of Montreal, and how insufficient those transportation facilities were at that time. We held many meetings with the authorities involved, and at most of these meetings this question was always paramount. These representations were passed on to the government. I remember that on several occasions I discussed them with the then prime minister and the then minister of transport, and suggested to them how much easier our task would be in dealing with the Montreal authorities and the municipalities on the south shore if we were authorized to amend our statute and construct a bridge.

Meanwhile the former minister of transport received a number of delegations on the subject. In the latter part of 1955 a delegation from the city of Montreal approached the government requesting them to build a third bridge to provide communication between the island of Montreal and the south shore. The government pointed out at that time, as I believe it has always been pointed out by federal governments in the past, that it is not the responsibility of the federal government to build bridges. This responsibility belongs mainly to the provincial authorities. However, the delegation from the city of Montreal at that time indicated that they did not see any possibility whatever of the provincial government taking any steps in this matter.

After consideration of the subject the then minister of transport recommended to the cabinet the construction of a third bridge, but as a toll bridge because quite obviously the building of such a bridge without tolls would have given rise to two serious difficulties. The first was the establishing of a precedent of the federal government building a bridge across a river which was not interprovincial; and the second, the establishment of a toll-free bridge in that area in Montreal would tend to greatly prejudice the revenue position of both the Jacques Cartier bridge and the Victoria bridge.

The recommendation, therefore, for the construction of the new bridge was accepted, but on the distinct understanding that the new structure would be a toll bridge to be built and administered by the national harbours board. The announcement to this effect, I believe, was made by the former minister of transport in 1955 or early in 1956. The site at which the bridge is to be built was recommended by the municipal government of the city of Montreal. The choice of the site was, I understand, their responsibility.

Now I come to the problem itself. It seems to me that the general problem of those who live on the island of Montreal and on the south shore and who must rely on communication across the St. Lawrence river is that they are faced with certain harsh facts and certain harsh realities. The first of these is that it would be difficult for either the municipal authorities, the provincial authorities or the federal government to build any new facilities while the other facilities remain as toll structures. Second, it probably cannot be expected, because of the danger of creating a precedent elsewhere in the country, that either the national harbours board as the owner of the Champlain bridge and as the owner of the Jacques Cartier bridge, or the Canadian National as the owner of the Victoria bridge, would voluntarily abandon the right to collect tolls unless adequately compensated therefor.

This, therefore, is a bleak prospect, and unpromising so far as the provision of additional bridges or tunnels is concerned. Likewise it is a bleak prospect for the residents of the south shore and those on the island itself who must use and pay for the facilities, because they can see no end to the time when tolls will be levied. The Victoria bridge is a good illustration of this. We still have tolls levied even though we believe that the bridge has been fully paid for.

The encouraging side, on the other hand, of maintaining tolls is that experience has shown that while a system of tolls prevails, the authorities concerned are ready to invest further sums in order to provide further facilities. For instance, the national harbours board decided to spend $600,000 under the previous administration in order to add an additional traffic lane. The present government is willing to spend additional moneys in order to add the last lane and also to build the Champlain bridge. The Canadian National Railways is willing to spend $2,300,000 in order to add an additional bracket for vehicular traffic on its downstream lane. Hence it follows that there seems to be no serious objection to additional facilities providing there is an opportunity to recoup or recapture the capital sums expended by means of the collection of tolls.

The necessity for an additional bridge is certainly obvious in the Montreal area. In another debate in a previous session of parliament I drew to the attention of the minister—and I do so again today—the report of the St. Lawrence ship channel and Montreal harbour committee of 1950 dealing with the fourth reference submitted to it. That committee was charged under this reference to consider the implications of the power and seaway development of the St. Lawrence in Montreal harbour. In its comprehensive report it recommended the construction of a bridge downstream from the Jacques Cartier bridge. I recommend the reading, the consideration and the study of this report not only to the Minister of Transport but to all Montreal members who are interested in future facilities for the port of Montreal and also future transportation facilities in that area.

While I am on the subject I say to the minister that I hope he will bring this report up to date. I think this is one of the most practical and beneficial reports ever brought down in so far as future facilities in the city of Montreal are concerned. However, it was based on the assumption that the power development would take place concurrently with the navigation development, and that part of the seaway would be on the north shore and another part on the south shore. I hope it will be possible for the minister and his officials to bring this report up to date with respect to what is happening now in that area. As a matter of fact the minister kindly consented in an earlier debate to give consideration to this matter. I am sure he has done so. In fact I have learned unofficially that the ship channel division are giving consideration to bringing this report up to date. If they could do that in the light of what has happened and what is happening now it would be of tremendous assistance to the metropolitan area of Montreal.

When I occupied a position similar to that which the Minister of Transport occupies today and sat on the other side of the house, each year there was on the order paper a resolution from certain Montreal members demanding the abolition of tolls on the Jacques Cartier and Victoria bridges. I was in the position—perhaps the unfortunate position, though I am not too sure that it was at that time—of having to resist that motion because of the fact that there was a tripartite agreement among the province of Quebec, the city of Montreal and the predecessors of the national harbours board, namely the Montreal harbours commissioners, for the payment of the deficit, and also because at that time the financial position of the Jacques Cartier bridge was not nearly as good as it is today. Furthermore, I was in the position of having to resist it because of the attitude taken by the Canadian National Railways. They took the position that if they were to abandon tolls on the Victoria bridge they should be compensated therefor.

Hence today I am not advocating the abolition of tolls, although I am sure that if this resolution were put into effect it would eventually accomplish that purpose. I am today advocating something which is more practical and which it seems to me is impossible to resist. I suggest that the present situation in Montreal needs to be altered because the public sees no hope of an end to the levying of tolls. If a bridge authority were established, as suggested in the resolution, there would be a hope because there would then be two alternative prospects to which to look forward: (1) the segregation of the net revenues from the operation of the three bridges I have mentioned and the use of these revenues to eliminate the total debt relating to the facilities; and (2) the segregation of the net revenues and the use of these revenues to provide additional facilities as they are needed.

In other words the bridge authority, were it established, would either eventually remove tolls or, in the alternative, provide additional facilities. If something like this is not done, then a serious injustice is going to be perpetrated upon those using motor cars and crossing these bridges between Montreal and the south shore, who are paying tolls for the amortization of the cost of these bridges. When the debt will have been wiped out the government will have either to abolish the tolls on the Jacques Cartier bridge or continue them. If it abolishes them, there will be a tremendous dash by motorists for this bridge. If it continues them, then this money will be paid into the consolidated revenue fund, whereas in point of fact it should be used in amortization of the debt on the Champlain bridge.

The people residing in Montreal do not expect to get services for nothing. They expect to pay for the services they are receiving. However, they do not want to pay twice; and unless something like this is done that is exactly what is going to happen, because the tolls will continue and they will be paid into the consolidated revenue fund whereas they should, I submit with deference, be paid in reduction of the debt on the other facilities. Hence I say that unless something like this is done there will be a great hue and cry from the population of the city of Montreal.

In so far as the Canadian National Railways is concerned, I realize that the position is different. However, we know that the investment has been paid off many times in so far as the highway aspects of the bridge are concerned. There would still, of course, remain the investment of $2,300,000 which I mentioned earlier.

How would a bridge authority or a bridge corporation solve this problem? The setting up of a bridge authority provides the clear-cut hope that one or other of the two alternative prospects will be realized. If the facilities are allowed to remain indefinitely in their present position, the present situation can be expected to go on indefinitely. When Canadian National Railways' most recent investment in the Victoria bridge has been repaid it will expect to receive the net revenues from the facilities, just as it did when the original Grand Trunk's investment in the Victoria bridge was repaid; and it would be extremely difficult for either Canadian National Railways or the national harbours board to justify maintaining these three structures toll free and paying the expenses of maintenance.

It is for this reason that I think the house should give consideration to the establishment of a bridge authority which would in effect put the three bridges under the control of an independent authority. This would provide for segregation of the revenues and for the use of cash revenues for the special benefit of the communities served. The bridge authority would have a choice between using its surplus revenues for the retirement of its debt or borrowing further moneys in order to provide additional facilities in the form of a new bridge or a tunnel.

I have noted the experience of the Triborough bridge and tunnel authority in New York. Their experience was practically the same as that of the national harbours board in earlier years, where there was deficit upon deficit. The bridge authority, known as the Triborough bridge and tunnel authority, was established and because of the method of financing as well as the method of operation this authority solved in New York city a tremendous problem, one which is not dissimilar to that existing in the city of Montreal.

In other words the bridge authority promises the segregation of surplus revenues, the possibility of the elimination of tolls or, alternatively, the maintenance of tolls and a gradual expansion of facilities as the needs of traffic mount and the possibility of adequate revenue presents itself. The method to be followed, as I suggest, is the creation of a public corporation which would be referred to as a bridge authority, whose purpose it would be to acquire the Jacques Cartier bridge and the Champlain bridge upon reasonable terms and conditions.

Here I would assume the government would be disposed to take a beneficent view of the position disclosed by the balance sheet and forget about interest on the deficit and arrive at a reasonable price for this structure. As far as the Champlain bridge is concerned I do not think there should be any difficulty, because I presume the government or the national harbours board would be entitled to payment of the amount invested in that facility. I assume, moreover, that the new authority would pay the purchase price by means of bonds which would be a first charge on the structure and net revenues therefrom.

I also suggest, because it would be difficult to provide for the ownership of the upstream and downstream brackets of the Canadian National Railways bridge which, as the house knows, is not only a railway bridge but also a vehicular bridge, that what could be done would be to arrange a lease from the Canadian National Railways to the bridge authority for those two brackets, upstream and downstream, at an equitable rent. The rental in this case, of course, would be a reasonable one having regard to the fact that the facilities are intended for the general benefit of the public and not for the particular benefit of the Canadian National Railways.

This idea, sir, is not a new one. I cannot claim its paternity. If it belongs to anyone I think it belongs to the former minister of transport, Hon. Mr. Marler, who did speak to me about it on several occasions, discussed it with various groups and associations in Montreal, members of the city council and the like, and gave a lot of time to discussions of this matter with others in the metropolitan area of Montreal.

Another question is this. Is a new bridge required in the metropolitan area? Well, I note that there is not very much time left at my disposal. I have here the figures of the last survey which was made in 1957, concerning traffic to and from Montreal. It would take me some time to put this survey on Hansard, and I have not that much time. However, I can summarize it rather quickly. On the Jacques Cartier bridge traffic counts which were taken in 1957 indicated that at that time the average daily number of motor cars was around 40,000. Dealing with Victoria bridge. Since the roadway on the downstream side of the bridge was put into operation, comprising two lanes 17 feet wide, it accommodates 1,800 cars per day. The facilities which are being provided on the south shore leading to the Mercier bridge have had a tremendous effect in increasing the capacity of that bridge, and when the twin structure is built alongside the present Mercier bridge it will be possible to accommodate 4,500 cars per hour. I should tell the house here that when the discussions took place for the construction of the access roads from the highways leading to the south entrance to the Mercier bridge, it was then indicated, not in any official way but certainly in many unofficial ways, that it was the intention of the province at that time to build soon a twin structure alongside the present Mercier bridge.

To sum up this matter in so far as the traffic survey is concerned I say this. From this survey made in 1957 it appears that the average daily traffic between the island of Montreal and the south shore is approximately 75,000 vehicle trips per day. The survey then goes into detail as to what is likely to be the population of the province of Quebec in the future, which they fix at 6,500,000 by 1973. That would apparently give a car registration in the province of 1,650,000 vehicles at that time, of which approximately 650,000 would be in the metropolitan area of Montreal.

The survey comes to the conclusion that by 1973 there will be 202,500 vehicles per day using the bridges from Montreal to the south shore. Under these circumstances, it would appear clearly that a new bridge is indicated; and while it is not up to me to say where it should be constructed, I refer simply to the report of the Montreal harbour committee which indicates that the bridge should be to the east downstream from the Jacques Cartier bridge.

I had hoped that I would have a minute or so to deal with another question, namely this. What was done by the former administration to help solve this tremendous highway problem which exists between the island of Montreal and the south shore? May I say that a great deal was done, which can best be summarized in this fashion. The federal government through its agencies, the national harbours board, the Canadian National Railways, the Department of Transport, spent tremendous sums of money in order to build modern and up to date approaches not only to the Jacques Cartier bridge, which was a joint enterprise between the national harbours board and the seaway authority and which has provided there a number of modern access highways, but also to the Mercier bridge and to the Victoria bridge.

I know there might well be some criticism in so far as what was done with reference to the Victoria bridge; but the house should not forget the fact that the Victoria bridge is a low level bridge, and being a railway bridge it had to be cut by the ship channel. In order to do that it was necessary to arrive at a plan and formula which was devised by the engineers of the Canadian National Railways in conjunction with those of the St. Lawrence seaway authority.

May I just conclude by making these four points. It seem to me, sir, that if this resolution were adopted and the government saw fit to accede to it, it would do these four things. First of all, it would lead eventually to the abolition of tolls on all the bridges; second, it would provide for additional facilities between Montreal and the south shore; third, it would provide for the construction of a new bridge or tunnel; and finally, it would provide for consideration of conditions which will prevail in Montreal harbour when completion of the St. Lawrence seaway has been attained.

I submit with deference to the minister and to the house that I hope the house will see fit to accede to this resolution.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

(Translation):

Mr. Andre Gillet (Mercier): Mr. Speaker, this is the first time I have the honour to address the house in my capacity as member for the constituency of Mercier.

Mr. Speaker, when I was about 12, my family took up residence in the constituency of St. Mary where I lived for over 15 years. And during my holidays, I had the pleasure of spending a few hours from time to time watching workers operate heavy machinery, particularly the pile-drivers used in driving great pieces of timber that were to be the foundations and supporting structure of Jacques Cartier bridge.

At that time, Mr. Speaker, I was far from suspecting that 30 years would elapse—despite the constant development that has taken place and is still going on on the east side of Montreal—before a bridge was built to connect the east of Montreal island to the south shore.

That bridge is a pressing need for the citizens of the constituencies of Mercier and Longueuil. People there are badly in need of that bridge, especially if they hope to benefit from the advantages which the St. Lawrence seaway—which will be ready shortly—might bring them. It is high time we let manufacturers, merchants and large contracting firms know that we are in favour of anything that would provide the constituency of Mercier in the eastern part of Montreal with a bridge connecting the south shore to the north shore.

As a result of the present situation in Montreal many householders are moving away from the outskirts to homes which are sometimes 20 to 25 miles away so that their families can enjoy wholesome air, unpolluted by the smoke of the many factories scattered all over Montreal and vicinity.

Some of those householders are quite prepared to expatriate themselves for a few hours more than they ordinarily would so as to take up jobs far away from their homes.

In view of all those facts, Mr. Speaker, I should like to quote a few excerpts from a report prepared for the Montreal municipal authorities by an organization known as the greater Montreal metropolitan organization:

> Industry, Factor of Balanced Metropolitan Expansion
> The three inseparable factors of material progress, in the modern economy pattern, are industrial diversity in keeping with geographical concentration, ready availability of manpower, and a vast consumer market.
> In a civilization based on production, manufacturing activity becomes the most powerful stimulus to regional development.

In fact, a manufacturing plant is at one and the same time:

(a) a capital investment;
(b) a producer of profits and wealth;
(c) a provider of employment;
(d) a source of municipal revenue;
(e) an outlet for consumer goods.

Mr. Speaker, may I also quote a few remarks about Montreal harbour:

There is no doubt that commerce and industry and therefore the very economic future of the Montreal area, are closely linked with the part that the Montreal harbour will be allowed to play.

Besides, its industrial and commercial operations eventually became the predominant activity and have never stopped growing as the Montreal area became industrialized.

However, as industries built their plants, access facilities became inadequate and the resulting congestion contributed to the strangling of the harbour facilities whose expansion was vital.

Therefore, industries had to look to the south shore for room to expand and proper harbour facilities. Those expansion requirements of industry and trade in the Montreal area thus caused the decentralization of Montreal harbour.

By way of conclusion to these few remarks, Mr. Speaker, the report adds:

The development of harbour facilities and the part they play in the economy of Montreal clearly indicate that the metropolitan zone of influence must include the south shore by connecting it with the north shore by as many bridges or tunnels as possible.

(Text):

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, we in the C.C.F. have considered this resolution carefully, and despite the comments and observations I have to make on it I want the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) to know that we endorse the principle which he is here attempting to establish.

I was very pleased indeed to note a leading spokesman of the Liberal party and a former minister of transport advocating active federal participation in efforts to solve a problem caused by the lack of bridges in Canada. I know he is not asking anything for the city of Montreal which he would not be willing to grant to all other areas of Canada. And while he may think it odd that someone from the lower mainland of British Columbia should rise and say something on this resolution, I know he appreciates that we have a situation at home which in many respects is much the same as the situation in the city of Montreal.

I welcome the support which the Liberals are now giving to the idea of federal participation in responsibility for the building of bridges in Canada. I know they realize that it is quite beyond the capabilities of municipal governments alone, in some instances, to assume responsibility for the entire cost of building bridges. It must also be realized that in many cases it is beyond even the capacity of the provincial regimes to supply the necessary money.

The former minister of transport, the hon. member for Laurier, called this a highway problem and I was very pleased to hear him use those words to describe the bridge problem, because basically that is what a bridge problem is; a highway problem. We in this group have for many years advocated that the federal government should assume a major role in the development of a national highway program, and we have always included bridges as part of such a program. We believe that more bridges are essential in the interests of the economic and social development of the Canadian people and essential, too, in the interest of national unity.

The hon. member for Laurier has very ably pointed out the chaos and confusion which is beginning to make itself obvious in the administration of the bridges which now exist in Montreal, and he is sounding a warning that unless action is taken this chaos and confusion will become worse with each passing year. We have a very similar situation with regard to the bridges across the Fraser river. We have a new bridge known as the Marpole bridge. This is a toll bridge connecting Vancouver to Lulu island. Then we have a toll free bridge connecting Vancouver to Lulu island; that is the old Fraser avenue bridge. There is now being proposed a new toll bridge to connect New Westminster with the eastern end of the same island.

It leads to very much confusion when you have two bridges connecting the same bodies of land or passing over the same body of water and one is toll free and on the other a toll is levied. We are going to have the same situation a little farther up the river, in that the provincial government has already completed the digging of the Deas island tunnel, on which a toll is to be charged. Not far away is the Pattullo bridge which is toll free. The provincial government is now wrestling with the problem of building another bridge farther up the river in the Port Mann area. I do not know if it has yet been decided whether the new Port Mann bridge will be toll free but if it is to be a toll bridge that government will lose the grant under the national Highways Act.

At Burrard Inlet we have the same situation. We have a toll bridge known as the Lion's Gate bridge and an older bridge called the Second Narrows bridge which has been earning a considerable amount of money in recent years, and now a new bridge is being built there. We can understand why the hon. member for Laurier wants to end the chaos and confusion that exists in order that in years to come there may be adequate water crossing service offered to our motorists.

We welcome most heartily the apparent change of heart on the part of the federal government. We noticed some months ago the willingness of the government to assume some responsibility toward the building of a bridge in the city of Prince Albert. We take that as an indication that there is a general realization in all parts of the house that it is high time the federal government began to share with the provinces and municipalities the very great responsibility of supplying the necessary bridges.

We note that the resolution before us calls for the establishing of a public corporation or bridge authority which would do certain things. I do not know if the hon. member had in mind eliminating the right of the city of Montreal and the province of Quebec to have any voice in the operation, management or building of these bridges. He indicated that there had been some financial misunderstanding in the past among the three levels of government. If that is what he has in mind then I regret that we cannot agree with his approach. We feel that so far as possible the business of government in Canada shoud be decentralized. We can understand why Ottawa, which makes a contribution, should want a voice and ought to have one in these affairs; but we also feel that the administration of a series of bridges situated within a municipality certainly should be left as much as possible in the hands of the municipal and provincial regimes. Despite the fact that in the past in the case of Montreal there have been financial misunderstandings, we feel that the idea of partnership is extremely important, and no attempt should be made to establish any authority that will enter a municipality and without the necessary regard to either the municipality or the province begin to operate a series of bridges there.

We also note that the last part of the resolution calls for the continuation of the collection of tolls. Here we also have to be at variance with the attitude expressed by the hon. member for Laurier. Our group has always opposed the principle of levying tolls on either highways or bridges in Canada. I believe the only time we have ever endorsed this principle was when an international bridge has been proposed. We believe that toll collections represent an archaic method of paying for bridges and roads. We believe it is an economic waste that need not exist in this day and age. After all, our fathers and grandfathers were able to build the roads and bridges they required without in most cases resorting to tolls. Tolls as a common practice have been abolished for many years in the Anglo-Saxon world, and we do not like to see a revival of this method of financing highways and bridges. We know that experimentation is taking place south of the border. Those of us who come from the far west are aware of the undertaking that exists in British Columbia at the present time. Despite that, however, we feel it is an economic waste and an archaic method.

We recognize that there are certain disadvantages in the collection of tolls. It is our contention that each time a toll bridge is built you get one bridge yet have to pay the cost of four. First of all principal has to be paid on the money that is borrowed. The interest usually almost equals the principal by the time the loan is repaid. There is also the overhead cost of collecting tolls which in the long run also just about equals the cost of the bridge. There is also the wear and tear of the starting and stopping of the automobiles. Over a period of years this is also enough to pay for another bridge.

I hope I have not misinterpreted what the hon. member for Laurier has said. We welcome his resolution and endorse its basic principle. However, we feel the authority should be operated by all three levels of government and not only by the federal government. We believe it is high time that financial contributions were made by all three levels of government in such a way that no tolls need be collected. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch):

That the resolution be amended by eliminating therefrom the words "establishing a", and substituting therefor the words "encouraging the establishment of."

And that the resolution be further amended by changing the comma after the word "public" in clause 4 to a period, and eliminating all the words after the said period.

The resolution as amended would then read:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of encouraging the establishment of a public corporation or bridge authority which would be empowered:

1. To acquire from the national harbours board, the ownership of (i) the Jacques Cartier bridge; and (ii) the Nuns' island bridge (when completed), upon reasonable terms and conditions;

2. To lease from the Canadian National Railways the facilities for motor vehicles over the Victoria bridge, upon reasonable terms and conditions;

3. To build other bridges across the St. Lawrence river at Montreal; and

4. To operate all such facilities for the convenience of the public.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, as I understand this resolution, the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) would have a federal authority established and given certain definite powers. I certainly think that everybody in the house today listened with much interest to his remarks because the hon. member for Laurier has had experience both in active government and in the civil service with this very question. Therefore, naturally he spoke with a great deal of authority on the question. While I did not agree in complete detail with everything he said, certainly his resolution deserves much discussion, for it has much merit.

I also listened with much interest to the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier). I heard his remarks with regard to tolls. He said he did not like them. After listening to him I could not help but feel that the C.C.F. were reverting to the old Social Credit funny money policy of yesteryear. Maybe that can be rectified also in the debate.

In dealing with the resolution I feel that initially we should go to the basic or central aspect of the problem. As I look at the basic aspect of the problem I soon realize that the terms "island of Montreal" and "city of Montreal" are synonymous. Much reference has been made in history to the scenic aspects of the fact that Montreal is located on an island. Yet, the fact that Montreal is on an island obviously creates definite problems of communication.

The second problem centres on the fact that Mount Royal mountain is situated virtually in the centre of the city. The very location of the mountain, with all its parkland beauty, gives the city authorities less chance to improve and ameliorate traffic conditions in comparison with other town councils which are faced with similar problems of increased traffic congestion in expanding metropolitan areas. For these two and other reasons, Mr. Speaker, I shall attempt to outline the basic significance and importance of the problem with which we are faced.

It would help, if yet another problem could be referred to in relation to bridges and allied communications in and about the island of Montreal. Primarily this question involves the matter of civil defence. Right away, may I say I do not intend to offer any expert knowledge to this house on civil defence. I would simply like to say it would seem that, in the light of changing defence needs and requirements—requirements and needs of which I have little expert knowledge—the house will agree that the problem of bridges and allied communications in and around the island of Montreal has obvious significance; that is, assuming there would be any survivors to evacuate in case of an attack.

In discussing this general proposition I realize that the matter has more significance for some hon. members than for others. At the same time, while superficially we look at the problem as one of a local nature, I think all of us here today should realize that the problem of communication to and from the nation's largest metropolis has more than mere local significance. In my own case it cannot be said that the constituency which I represent is even opposite the island of Montreal. Brome-Missisquoi is located in the heart of the eastern townships, and my constituency starts approximately 45 or 50 miles from the island. But even my own constituency is affected in a very obvious way by all of the implications of bridges, tunnels or any other means of communication to and from the island.

Like the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees), I have received many different types of representations regarding the general matter, and I should like to read briefly from some of those representations which generally illustrate how the problem affects people in this highly populated area of Quebec even up to a hundred or a hundred and fifty miles from the actual scene of the present discussion. I quote:

Whereas the residents of this municipality have to use the facilities of the Victoria bridge, the Jacques Cartier bridge and Honoré Mercier bridge in order to go to Montreal for business and other purposes;

Whereas alterations to the Victoria bridge are necessitated because of the St. Lawrence seaway project;

Whereas the closing, even temporarily of the Victoria bridge, will work hardship for those of this municipality who have to use these facilities constantly:

Therefore be it resolved that a request be sent to our member of parliament that he present the following propositions to the hon. Minister of Transport, and to the authorities of the St. Lawrence seaway, as well as to the authorities of the Canadian National Railways and to the national harbours board;

I quote this particular resolution because as you can see, in the initial paragraph this particular town council has outlined all of the various crown agencies and corporations which generally come under the ambit of this discussion. They go on to say:

1. That careful study and special attention be given to the planning of the work of the diversion of the Victoria bridge so as to prevent, if at all possible, the already over-congested traffic circulation to and from the south shore;

2. To complete as soon as possible all works on the Jacques Cartier bridge in order that if any re-routing need be done from Victoria bridge it will alleviate the burden caused by its temporary increase in traffic;

3. To request from the proper authorities the immediate completion of the proposed Champlain bridge as being an urgent necessity for both the south shore and the island of Montreal;

4. To consider the urgent need of additional facilities connecting the east end of Montreal with the south shore, in the form of a bridge or tunnel and that the said proposal be tabled as an urgent solution to the ever overwhelming increase in population.

I am sure the Minister of Transport has taken cognizance of many of these questions, and that they are being given rapid consideration. One of the suggestions in this resolution is of great interest to me, but I shall not discuss it as an expert because I do not know the detailed thinking behind it. The resolution points out the possibility of tunnels being considered to and from the island. Looking at this whole proposition, we all realize it is extremely difficult to plan ahead with great foresight with respect to bridges and their relationship to such a project as the St. Lawrence seaway. I am sure the hon. member who has presented this resolution to the house realizes this perhaps more than any of us.

Certainly, in my remarks, I am not attempting to exculpate the former administration or ministers of transport for their sins of omission or commission, especially in relation to the Victoria bridge. In spite of what the hon. member for Laurier has said, I do feel perhaps that the former Liberal administration was a little bit hasty with their plans for co-ordinating the Victoria bridge with the seaway project. I think certainly, even viewing the remarks of the hon. member for Laurier, in the light of my remarks they bear consideration.

At this point with the forbearance of the house I should like to put on the record a few statistics and facts which I have been able to obtain from the Montreal harbours board and the Canadian National Railways. I would think the house would be very interested in hearing a summary of the expenditures at Montreal harbour by the harbours board during the year 1958. The expenditure on capital works in 1958 by the Montreal harbours board amounted to approximately $28 million, the largest expenditure in any year since the creation of the board. In addition, the expenditure on maintenance of works amounted to approximately $1,600,000. It would be unfair to say that all these expenditures come under the heading of bridges because I have such headings as wharves, transit sheds, grain elevators and dredging.

[Mr. Grafftey.]

Under the heading of bridges, starting with the Jacques Cartier bridge, it is important to note that during 1958 a contract was awarded for the construction of an additional traffic lane. This work will be completed in July, 1959. In addition, several contracts were being carried out during 1958 in connection with the improvements to the southern approaches to the Jacques Cartier bridge. These improvements consist of the construction of cloverleaf approaches and new and improved toll collecting facilities. These works will be completed in the spring of 1959.

I think that I speak for most of the citizens of the island of Montreal and the communities opposite the island of Montreal when I say that we are most pleased with these new improved toll collection systems. I think it is correct to state that this new toll collecting system has been put in on the Victoria bridge, too.

In so far as the Champlain bridge is concerned, my notes from the harbours board state that during 1958 contracts were carried out on some on the bridge piers and abutments and a considerable quantity of the fill for approaches was placed. Tenders have been invited for the construction of the superstructure of section 3 and tenders will be invited for the construction of the superstructure of sections 5, 6, 7A and 7B by the middle of April. I believe that for further information on this subject hon. members could refer back to the remarks made in the house by the minister not very long ago.

The proposed capital expenditures for Montreal harbour in 1959 amount to $24,776,200. I think it is important also to note that the construction of the new traffic lane on Jacques Cartier bridge and the improvement to the southern approaches will be completed by July of this year. It is expected that the contract for all phases of construction of the Champlain bridge will have been awarded in the near future.

I have some notes here which were made after consulting with the various officials of Canadian National Railways. They have a more direct bearing on the actual resolution proposed by the hon. member for Laurier. I think it is most interesting to note their remarks because, in a general sense, they are not in agreement with the premises of this resolution which we are now discussing. The management of the Canadian National Railways advise that their position is that the Montreal bridges can be more efficiently operated—I hope, with the leave of the house, I may be permitted to read the notes I have here because frankly there are some fairly technical terms with which I am not familiar—by the separate crown agencies involved rather than by a special bridge authority. The roadway on Victoria bridge is an ancillary facility and, as such, it is essential that the control of vehicular traffic remain in the hands of the bridge owner. With the opening of the St. Lawrence seaway this becomes even more important in the sense that highway traffic will have to be co-ordinated with the operation of trains and the movement of ships so as to provide for the safe and uninterrupted flow of all three types of traffic. With the expansion of the roadway facilities on Victoria bridge as a result of co-ordination with the seaway we will have a vastly improved highway link with the south shore to the extent that:

1. The capacity has been substantially more than doubled with the installation of a second roadway lane on the downstream bracket;

2. The deck on the upstream lane is being replaced with open type grating similar to that installed on the downstream side;

3. The operation has been streamlined with the installation of automatic toll collectors at the Montreal end replacing the former toll collection booths at both ends of the bridge;

4. The approaches at the Montreal end have been completely altered and at the St. Lambert end they will be greatly improved with the installation of grade separations and the complete elimination of all intersecting traffic.

I think this is most interesting, bearing in mind that these remarks were made after certain discussions with officials of Canadian National Railways. Before I turn to another aspect of this matter, may I say that, like the hon. member for Laurier, I realize that the great proportion of our bridges fall directly under the jurisdiction of the provincial authorities. With this fact in mind, I have noted that this resolution does not spell out in detail the great problem in and about the island of Montreal in relation to bridges and allied communications, not only with relation to the south shore but with relation to Ottawa, the Ottawa valley and the northern part of Montreal north to the Laurentians.

I want to point out right now, Mr. Speaker, that I am on very delicate ground. I am not quite sure, and I admit this, which of these bridges would fall under provincial authority or if the circumstances permit the federal authority to intervene. However, I should like to state simply that as a resident near the island of Montreal, merely 70 miles away, I have often turned on my radio on a Sunday evening and heard pointed out what a major operation it is to get onto the island from the northern approaches on a Sunday night. This is an operation which I understand takes more than a modicum of patience and a sense of humour. It is for this reason I should like to bring this problem to the attention of the house, and I think it should be given some consideration under the terms of this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I know that the office held by the hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Sevigny), that of Deputy Speaker, precludes him from entering into this debate. The reasons are obvious. However, I should like to inform the house that in private conversation he has mentioned to me, many times, the great importance of the subject matter of this resolution which is before the house today. Representing as he does a historic south shore community I have spoken about this matter with the hon. member for Longueuil and he has told me that even considering the improvements that are being made today and that will continue to be made on the Jacques Cartier bridge, he is recommending the construction of a bridge east of the Jacques Cartier bridge. As I think it is well known by all here who represent ridings in the general area in and about Montreal that an amazing industrial and housing expansion is going on east of the Jacques Cartier bridge today. For that reason the hon. member for Longueuil has often suggested to me that perhaps the government should definitely consider the construction of a bridge to connect the island of Montreal, starting from the general area of Boucherville.

I know that many more hon. members are going to be interested in offering their contributions in connection with this most worthy resolution presented by the hon. member for Laurier. Although the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam has complicated this whole debate with his great dissertation in relation to tolls, I would like to say to the house that I think this whole discussion should commend itself to most hon. members because bridges, and all types of projects that we have been discussing today,—and the hon. member for Laurier has also pointed out this fact especially in relation to the Victoria bridge, as the Victoria bridge is a shining example of what I am going to say—are self-liquidating projects. For this reason, I repeat, the very fact that they are self-liquidating projects, should commend these to most hon. members of this house and certainly should commend them to the Minister of Finance.

(Translation):

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, not only is it a pleasure for me, but it is my duty to second the resolution moved by the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) with regard to the administration of the Montreal bridges.

Proposed Montreal Bridge Authority

Representing as we do a population as large as that of Montreal, we are particularly interested in the settlement of this bridge issue, which has been discussed in this house for over 20 years. I am convinced that the hon. member for Laurier has done everything in his power and has acted in an able manner when he was minister of transport, the department having jurisdiction over the Jacques Cartier and Victoria bridges. He has explained clearly and precisely the reasons for creating this bridge administration. We found that he was competent in the matter and that he still remembered his days when he was so efficiently administering the business of this country. This makes it easier for us to add a few words with regard to those bridges.

As he stated so clearly, the tolls, whether on the Jacques Cartier bridge, the Victoria bridge, the Champlain bridge or on any other bridge which the federal government may consider as necessary within a period which I would want to be as short as possible, need to be controlled by some legislation. Everybody knows that it is practically impossible, particularly on week-ends, to get in or out of the island of Montreal; it takes hours and hours to do so. I will say that the collection of tolls slows down even more the traffic on our bridges. Moreover, we need additional bridges not only on the St. Lawrence, but also in the east, the west, and also in the north.

Victoria bridge, as the hon. member for Laurier said, is a hundred years old. It was improved in 1900, at the cost of nearly $2 million, but the section used by motor vehicles cost only—if the figures given are accurate—$100,000. Consequently, the revenues from tolls having reached a million dollars a year for several years, and exceeded that amount, in the last few years, I believe Victoria bridge has been paid up, especially that section being used for motor vehicle traffic. Furthermore, I am told that, while $1,800,000 was being spent on improving the bridge, the government was itself providing $500,000.

I am convinced, therefore, that this bridge yields millions of dollars each year, and that its building cost has been paid up many times. These revenues could very well be used, as this resolution puts it, to speed up the payment of Jacques Cartier bridge, as well as that of other bridges which the government proposes to build.

Jacques Cartier bridge is also a toll bridge and, as in the case of Victoria bridge, in order to divide the deficits, there had to be an arrangement between the city of Montreal, the province of Quebec and the federal government. Unfortunately, the federal government has had little luck with its associates; it had to take legal proceedings against the city of Montreal, in order to get paid while the province of Quebec has subscribed nothing since 1943 or 1944. This means that the federal government, under a Liberal administration, would have had to take legal proceedings against the government of the province of Quebec as well. Now, it takes so little for the present Quebec provincial government to pose as a martyr, that its leaders would have raised an outcry had the then Liberal government taken legal proceedings against the Quebec provincial government. However, since the present government is supposed to be a friendly government, there would be no more case for posing as a martyr, and I believe it would be mere justice to get in touch with the representatives of the province of Quebec and ask them to pay that amount of more than $1 million. And if, then, unfortunately, the government of the province of Quebec should disclaim that debt, courts of justice should be asked to decide whether the government of the province of Quebec owes that amount or not. Quebec provincial leaders do not mind too much going to court. As a matter of fact, in these last few years there always have been one, two or three or even more of them involved in some trial.

May I recall that in 1942, in the province of Quebec, a Liberal government had decided to abolish tolls. In fact, not only did it abolish all of them, but it even bought privates bridges in order to rid the people of Quebec of bridge tolls. As the Jacques Cartier bridge and the Victoria bridge were both under the joint jurisdiction of the city of Montreal, the provincial government and the federal government, the Hon. Mr. Godbout, then premier, came to Ottawa and met with the federal authorities to discuss settlement of the toll problem, because it was not fair, with tolls abolished nearly everywhere in the province, that a third of the people of the province, namely those living on Montreal island and vicinity, should have to pay tolls, while people in the rest of the province did not have to.

I cannot remember how many times each year we met with the then minister of transport, now member for Laurier. In any event, every time Liberal members called on the minister of transport, the minister would state: "We are prepared to abolish toll bridges, but it requires the consent of the three parties involved: the federal government, the city of Montreal and the province of Quebec." Referring to page 4983 of Hansard for 1947, I find that the Hon. Mr. Chevrier made the following statement:

We will sell to the province or to the municipality the Jacques Cartier bridge, but they will have to take into consideration a fair and reasonable value.

Nous vendrons le pont Jacques-Cartier à la province ou à la municipalité si elles consentent à lui attribuer une valeur raisonnable.

The minister went on to say:

The deputy minister of transport was advised by the Canadian National Railways that it would be willing to agree to a proposal for abolishing tolls, subject to the following:

That, Mr. Speaker, was in 1947. However, unfortunately for the settlement of the matter and for the province of Quebec, the Liberal party had been defeated in 1944 and replaced by the Union Nationale government. Since that time nothing has been done. The provincial government did not make any move and no one has ever heard about the province of Quebec. As a matter of fact, so little was heard from it that it did not even pay its share of the operating deficits of the Jacques Cartier bridge.

An hon. Member: That is dreadful!

Mr. Denis: Indeed it is. However, the decisions of the provincial government, which is always infringing some rule, as if the province of Quebec were an enemy of the federal government, should not be taken lightly.

Mr. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member for St. Denis allow a question?

Mr. Denis: When I am through with my remarks, the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm may ask all the questions he wants.

I would like to draw to the attention of the house the fact that the cost of building the Jacques Cartier bridge was estimated originally at $19 million, as the hon. member for Laurier, has pointed out. This was done by means of a loan at 5 per cent interest. It was also thanks to the hon. member for Laurier has pointed out. This in 1949, to get a loan at 2¾ per cent instead of 5 per cent, which reduced the amount of interest by $445,000. From that time on, and thanks to the good administration of the present member for Laurier, the revenues of the Jacques Cartier bridge showed some surpluses.

On May 5, 1953, the hon. minister of transport published a press release, in which it was said plainly—I shall not read it at length—that the federal government was ready to settle the question of tolls provided the authorities of the province of Quebec and of the city of Montreal were ready to negotiate. The day after that release was published, the city of Montreal stated it was prepared to enter into negotiations in order to settle this question of tolls, according to an article published in Le Devoir of May 6, 1953:

Following Mr. Lionel Chevrier's statement, Mr. J. O. Asselin, chairman of the Montreal executive committee, said that the city of Montreal would be glad to discuss the abolition of tolls on the Jacques Cartier and Victoria bridges.

Since then, and on several occasions, the municipal authorities have met the Quebec premier, asking him to negotiate with the federal authorities in order to obtain the abolition of tolls. Nothing has been done. The Quebec premier did not budge, as usual, and once again, if we are faced with difficulties today, if the citizens of the island of Montreal have to pay toll charges, while those living in other parts of the province do not pay any, it is still the fault of that famous autonomist who blocks the way and who so acts that the citizen has to pay for that sham autonomy we have to suffer; I hope we shall be able to settle that problem in the near future.

The setting up of a bridge authority, as suggested by the hon. member for Laurier, would actually create a body of experts who would be in a position to make surveys and inquiries on the island of Montreal in order to determine the number of additional bridges needed and also settle the question of tolls to the satisfaction of all concerned.

And in connection with the matter of bridges on the St. Lawrence, Mr. Speaker, I believe it is necessary also to have more of them in the east, in the west and in the north. Everyone knows we have to wait for hours on each of those bridges in the rush hours, especially on Saturdays and Sundays.

Mr. Speaker, I remember that in 1936, the Liberal administration which took over from the Bennett government had passed legislation to help the unemployed and to provide jobs for the people of Canada. It was under that legislation that Pie IX bridge was built; half the construction costs being paid by the province of Quebec, and half by the federal government.

In reply to a question I raised in the house in 1948—and this is in reply to the hon. minister for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm—oh, Mr. Speaker, I feel I have made a serious mistake, because I do think that title will never be applied to the hon. member—

Mr. Pigeon: It will not be any worse than in your own case; you have been a member for 25 years, and yet you have not—

Mr. Denis: We love him too dearly to send him off to the cabinet.

In 1948, as I was saying, I asked a question in the house, and this is the reply I was given:

(Text):

Yes — under dominion - provincial agreement entered into under relief legislation 1936-37. Maximum dominion contribution authorized—$506,500.

Half a million dollars has been spent by the federal government. What a difference to the $43,000 given lately, and the same thing happened.

(Translation):

The same thing happened in the case of the bridge at Bout de l'Isle. Under the 1936-37 act the federal government paid 50 per cent of the costs.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the bridge authority proposed by the hon. member for Laurier could determine the need for additional bridges around Montreal island and later contact this government and show the importance and the necessity of those bridges. This might lead to legislation similar to that of 1936-37, and so, while we would be relieving unemployment, we could give adequate service to this population of over one million people. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that representatives of constituencies on Montreal island and the province of Quebec would support that resolution which, eventually, would put an end to tolls.

Mr. Speaker, only last week we heard of obstacles to free access to Montreal island. In fact, a tourist bureau report showed that revenues from tourists are growing less each year in Montreal. I am convinced that any visitor who drives into Montreal and who wants to drive out of the city during the weekend tells himself that he will never come back to the province of Quebec and especially not to Montreal island.

Mr. Speaker, I am happy to support the resolution of the hon. member for Laurier and I trust that the other hon. members will do the same.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for St. Denis told me that I could ask him a question at the end of his remarks. Could the hon. member tell me why, at the time his government was in power, he did not claim the moneys that he now says are due by the province of Quebec?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I specifically pointed out the reason while I had the floor. If we had claimed those amounts from the premier of Quebec, he would have raised the cry of persecution and would have won his elections by claiming that the federal government was persecuting the provinces, and by harking back to his famous autonomy, as usual, something that is costing us millions of dollars every year. If the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm had listened to my remarks—I would suggest that he read today's Hansard tomorrow and find out what I said previously—he would see that I gave the reason why we did not take action against the provincial government.

Now that the friends of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm are in charge of the country, I would ask them to do their duty and to render unto Caesar the things which are Ceasar's.

Mr. C. E. Campeau (St. James): Mr. Speaker, I was very agreeably surprised to see that the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) has at last rediscovered Montreal. During all the time he was minister of transport and chairman of the St. Lawrence seaway authority, directing the planning and the carrying out of projects, in the good old days of Liberal administration, the hon. member for Laurier seemed to act as if Cornwall, and not Montreal, was the metropolis of Canada. He had seemed to forget entirely that there was such a city as Montreal. Fortunately, since the election of March 1958, the hon. member for Laurier, and his friends opposite have at last rediscovered Montreal and become aware of that city's needs.

What I do not like about the resolution submitted by the hon. member for Laurier, Mr. Speaker, is that I find it based on the same misconception which guided the St. Lawrence seaway project in the good old days of the Liberal administration.

Once again there is failure to take into account that fundamental aspect of every public works problem, over-all development, and too much attention is given to particular technical and economic details.

It is indeed, deplorable Mr. Speaker, that the Liberal administration was unable to see in the St. Lawrence seaway anything but a digging and dredging project that might affect the operation of a few main sewers. The hon. member for Laurier evidently wants us to repeat the same mistake.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, a man cannot be an expert in everything, an expert in seaway estimates and at the same time an expert on the needs and requirements of the Montreal area. It is indeed quite natural that the hon. member for Laurier be much more familiar with the needs of the district of Cornwall than with those of the Montreal area. It is probably in that sense that the hon. member for Laurier, while chairman of the St. Lawrence seaway authority, used to repeat to anyone who cared to listen, in the good old days of Liberal administration, that the St. Lawrence seaway was not a highway undertaking. Besides, according to the Gazette of March 22, 1955, the hon. member for Laurier stated:

(Text):

The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority was established to build navigation canals and not to solve traffic problems. Hon. Lionel Chevrier reminded critics of the project here yesterday.

He said criticisms of the authority's plans for Victoria, Jacques Cartier and Honore Mercier bridges were justified if they pertained to navigation. "If they only refer to the problem of traffic between the two shores I am not too concerned."

(Translation):

And I now quote from the editorial of the Gazette of the following day, March 23, which does not share in any way the opinion of the hon. member for Laurier, who was then chairman of the St. Lawrence seaway authority:

(Text):

As Mr. Chevrier said: "Our statute, in effect, imposes on us the task of canalizing—not roadways or traffic." In other words, the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority has been assigned the task of "building the ditch". It does not consider that it has the obligation to solve other problems.

It must be admitted that Mr. Chevrier speaks in his own defence with considerable reason. The difficulty is, however, that the building of the channel may itself cause tremendous changes in the whole area of Montreal—in industry, in shipping, in traffic. What is also important, the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, by setting out to build the channel as such, may find that it has failed to co-ordinate the channel with the larger plans that might be needed to solve the new problems.

The truth is that the "task of canalization"—which Mr. Chevrier believes to be his particular assignment—is in itself too narrow an interpretation of what the St. Lawrence seaway really involves.

The hon. member for Laurier, Mr. Speaker, obviously does not like comprehensive views. The creative vision shown by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), when he proposed to the nation his national development program, is above his comprehension. The hon. member for Laurier prefers the good old-time manner of the Liberal administration, multiplying crown corporations and agencies to facilitate the granting and control of major contracts.

The problems of traffic connections between Montreal and the south shore existed at the time the seaway was decided. At the time, however, the Liberal administration was unaware of the existence of Montreal. There is no doubt that more bridges are needed between Montreal and the south shore. Statistics are there to prove it. I am not going to repeat the figures which the hon. member for Laurier has already quoted, nor those referred to by other hon. members. But I should like to draw the attention of the house to the figures given by the national harbours board in regard to vehicular traffic on Jacques Cartier bridge.

Generally speaking, between 1949 and 1954, the figures doubled, and between 1954 and 1957, they doubled again. In other words, they practically doubled in five years and tripled in eight years. I could quote more figures, but there is no doubt that the need for additional bridges and tunnels is an urgent and long standing one. There is no doubt that work on the seaway has increased the problems of vehicular traffic between the two shores. It would be interesting to review what was done and what was not done in this regard. I shall be content, Mr. Speaker, to quote the hon. member for Laurier, who, when he was chairman of the St. Lawrence seaway authority, made the following statement with regard to Victoria bridge:

The bridge being low, it was not easy to co-ordinate the requirements of highway and seaway traffic. I am pleased to announce that we have found a solution. Engineers of the Seaway authority and of the Canadian National have reached agreement on the principle of a plan that will not slow down the normal flow of traffic.

I think the facts do not bear out those expectations. We hope, Mr. Speaker, that as a result of the forceful intervention of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) a solution will be found that will prevent undue delaying of traffic on Victoria bridge.

In this regard, I wish to draw attention to the efforts of the hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Sevigny), who is now in the Speaker's chair, towards improving the situation with regard to the approaches to Victoria bridge. And I personally hope, if there is no other solution, that pending completion of the work, people on the south shore will not have to pay tolls, so that they might forget the delays in which they will be involved on the Victoria bridge, thanks to the Liberal administration.

As regards Jacques Cartier bridge, I am pleased that it is a Conservative government that will add a new lane on the bridge this year. As to Champlain bridge, I was pleasantly surprised to see that, due to the vigorous intervention of the Minister of Transport, contracts for those works will be let this year while, in the good old days of Liberal administration, delay followed delay as only one engineer had been hired to draw up the plans, probably so he would not get mixed up in his calculations and to facilitate the control of contracts to be granted.

It seems to me that the necessity of a bridge in the eastern part of Montreal island, has been demonstrated time and again, I need only refer to the latest developments on the south shore to show that this huge industrial and residential expansion requires improved communication between both shores. It is reported in the Gazette of March 4, 1959, that the Dosco Company, the Sogemines Limited, the Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation and other companies are planning development in the area of Varennes, Vercheres and Contrecoeur.

There is no doubt that these industries will ask or will need improved communications with the economic area of Montreal and particularly with the business centre of the city. Nor is there any doubt that a large part of the Montreal population will be employed in those industries. About this development, may I point out, Mr. Speaker, that the whole problem of traffic connection is related to a greater problem, that of the future development of Montreal harbour. I think it was to that effect that an engineers' report was filed in 1950, as stated by the hon. member from Laurier. However I wonder what happened to this report between 1950 and 1957. During that period, the Liberal government was in power and the reports submitted by engineers were allowed to gather as much dust as possible in the records of the good old days of the Liberal administration.

It is deplorable, Mr. Speaker, that the plans for the future development of the port of Montreal were not defined instead. Taking an instance, if only to stress one point, this is what the hon. member for Laurier, then minister of transport or chairman of the seaway authority—I don't remember which—stated and I quote from La Presse of February 13, 1951:

> A few minutes earlier, Mr. Chevrier had stated that one of the proposed improvements was the creation between Victoria bridge and Longue-Pointe, of an artificial basin similar to those of the world's larger ports, especially those of London, Liverpool, Antwerp, Le Havre and Buenos Aires.
> Protective works in Montreal harbour would not only have the effect, he said, of eliminating the river current, of improving ice conditions and of cutting down much of the danger of spring floods, but they would also, in the minister's opinion, "reclaim an extensive flooded area on the south shore of the river", and would call for "a development of harbour facilities, as required, on the south shore, according to needs" and would further open up to industrial development "one of the most promising industrial areas of this continent, which is situated between Victoria bridge and Varennes".

La Presse also reproduced in July 1956, the following statement of the then minister of transport—excuse me, he was then chairman of the seaway:

> First of all, the railway concentration at Pointe-St-Charles made travel by the north shore difficult; it was necessary also to prevent shipping from creating a practically permanent bottleneck while passing through Montreal harbour.
> There is this additional fact, added the speaker, that industrial and residential areas will find additional available space on the south shore.
> Montreal is an almost exceptional example in the world of a great river port being choked up at the foot of a mountain, while its opposite shore is being completely neglected. Montreal is a harbour without a right bank, while an almost empty plain spreads out at its feet on the other side of the river.
> The seaway will correct this situation, added the speaker. Already the shadow of industry is spreading over the south shore triangle, between Valleyfield, St. Jean and Sorel, but many people are induly concerned about the future of south shore communties.

And I now quote from La Patrie of February 13, 1951:

> Mr. Chevrier made it clear that those improvements were based on the provisional report of an engineers' committee set up the year before "to consider the necessity of co-ordinating the responsibilities of the Department of Transport and of the national harbours board, and to provide for their fulfilment, with a view to establishing facilities to meet future needs, not only of the St. Lawrence seaway, the Lachine canal and of railway transportation, but of Montreal harbour."
> He stated that one of the proposed improvements was the creation, between Victoria bridge and Longue-Pointe, of an artificial dock similar to those of the world's larger ports, especially those of London, Liverpool, Antwerp, Le Havre, and Buenos Aires.
> Protection works in Montreal harbour would not eliminate the river current,—

Then follows the same quotation as was given a moment ago. In other words, as early as 1950, it was known that certain improvements would have to be made with regard to shipping in Montreal harbour. Thus, there was talk of this dam at Sainte Therese island. The point now is to decide whether there should be a dam or not, a matter that can weigh heavily on the development of the area, the development of the harbour itself and the surrounding area. Between 1950 and 1957, no decision whatever had been reached in this connection, and those who want to develop that area, whether the islands of Boucherville, Sainte Therese island and the neighbouring shores, and even the industrial locations of Vercheres, Varennes, Contrecoeur, as well as the industrial sites of the Laprairie basin do not yet know what kind of physical development is in the offing for the harbour.

However, the McGill University business school, and particularly its Montreal research council, having made an exhaustive study of the matter called attention in 1958, to the possible repercussions of the St. Lawrence seaway on Montreal harbour and indicated that the immediate provision of the facilities needed for the adequate future development of Montreal harbour was urgently called for. Allow me to mention, in this connection, the splendid work done by the Montreal harbour council, a district committee under the able chairmanship of Mr. Murray Hayes, vice chairman of the executive committee of Montreal, who have been studying the whole question of jurisdiction and planning in Montreal harbour in co-operation with the national harbours board.

Before we think of the ways of doing it, I think we must first draw up an over-all plan which would provide for the future expansion of Montreal harbour, including the use of the harbour's neighbouring areas, and which would take into account future shipping facilities, railway traffic, motor traffic and parking, and all other necessary facilities. We must dispel the present dangerous uncertainty and encourage private industry to go ahead with full knowledge of what the public authorities want to achieve for the future of Montreal harbour. After that, we could study ways and means of achieving this over-all plan, including the necessary bridges and tunnels.

Once again, the hon. member for Laurier has probably yielded, as in the good old days of the Liberal administration, to the American influence when he apparently tried to copy the port authority of New York. However, there is quite a difference between New York and Montreal in this respect. Port revenues over there go to the city of New York and to the port authority, while in Montreal the situation is altogether different.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, may I point out that Montreal, without its harbour, would be a city of minor importance. To preserve its status of metropolis of Canada, no effort should be spared in making its harbour facilities rank with the world's most modern facilities. It is of primary importance for Montreal and for the whole country that Montreal harbour keep its efficiency and its high reputation and that the city of Montreal maintain its rank among the world's great metropolitan centres.

Mr. Raymond Eudes (Hochelaga): Mr. Speaker, may I be allowed to say a few words in support of this resolution.

It is necessary for me, in order to support it to repeat the sound arguments used by the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier), and to stress its merits as well as the good and practical results it would bring about.

I shall content myself with commenting briefly on the paragraph dealing with the third power which would be given to the bridge authority suggested by this resolution, i.e.:

To build other bridges across the St. Lawrence river, at Montreal.

It may be stated, without fear of error,—and this is, in fact, the general and almost unanimous impression—that the bridges connecting Montreal island with the south shore of the St. Lawrence no longer serve the main purposes for which they were designed, i.e. to give motor vehicles adequate means of communication between the north and south shores of the St. Lawrence in the Montreal area.

At the present time, three bridges link those shores: Jacques Cartier and Victoria, owned by the Canadian National Railway Company, and Mercier bridge, which does not come under federal jurisdiction.

Prima facie evidence of their inadequacy is the fact that a fourth one, Champlain bridge, is being erected west of Jacques Cartier bridge. Another traffic lane on Jacques Cartier bridge was recently opened to motor vehicle traffic, and it is proposed, in the course of next year, to use all available remaining space on that bridge for the same purpose.

This additional bridge, together with its two additional lanes, will no doubt improve the traffic situation between the shores of the St. Lawrence but, even when completed—in so far as communication facilities between those two shores of the St. Lawrence in the vicinity of Montreal are concerned—they will never efficiently solve the motor vehicle traffic problem.

One has only to cross one of those bridges to have an idea of the problem. In any season, at any hour, there is no let-up. At times, when the traffic has not yet reached its normal intensity, they may give the impression that they fulfil their function. But let anyone venture to cross from one shore to the other at what are conveniently called rush hours. Now those rush hours extend from before 8 o'clock in the morning till 7 o'clock at night, with some scarcely perceptible let-up in between. And the word "venture" is not exaggerated.

In the first place, the approaches to the bridge—as a result of the rush of incoming vehicles, and the presence of other traffic which, though going elsewhere, has to use the same streets—are barely accessible, and can only be crossed by dint of waiting and patience.

The drive across the bridge has become such a slow process that automobile engines choke up and stall, and this in turn often causes many accidents.

The result is that, once the bridge has been crossed, car drivers face another problem: they again have to go through the dense traffic on the way out of the approach opposite the one they have just left.

Mr. Speaker, I think there is no need for me to describe in greater detail what an achievement it is to cross a bridge on Montreal island at the so-called rush hours, because all the members of the metropolitan area are quite familiar with the situation.

On the other hand, the serious difficulties caused by this lack of sufficient communication facilities between the south shore and the north shore of the St. Lawrence river in the Montreal area are easy to visualize: losses of man-hours, unaccountable delays, heavily increased transportation costs, delivery problems, all factors that have a definitely harmful effect on the economy of the area.

There is another, more basic, argument to show the inadequacy of bridges on the St. Lawrence at Montreal.

To a considerable degree, the Canadian metropolis and the surrounding area have shared in the great development Canada has enjoyed in the last 15 years.

For instance, in 1957, the population of the city of Montreal was over 1,127,000, and the population of the metropolitan area, 1,695,000, of which at least 95,000 were living on the south shore, which had an industrial output of $3,725,000,000, whereas industrial production in the metropolis itself stood at $2,208,000,000.

The whole metropolitan area is now in the throes of growing pains, and this era of progress is still very far from over.

Montreal is thus going through the same phenomenon experienced by other cities with large populations: the effect of gradual encirclement by surrounding municipalities.

Only a few decades ago, industry and business in the area were thriving along Montreal harbour. Plants could get the necessary water supply for their operation and economical water transport was at hand.

Nowadays, and for the last ten years especially, the population of Montreal has increased tremendously.

New techniques have modified industry. Larger sites have been required for the installation of modern equipment. In the vicinity of plants, large parking areas have become a necessity.

In other words, industry and business, like residential areas, have spread out at an increasing rate, beyond the old-time central nucleus.

Again today, everywhere around Montreal, on the south shore as well as on the north shore, new plants are being built, residential areas are sprouting up, new municipalities are being founded. And the opening of the St. Lawrence seaway will give new momentum to this already intensitive development.

Of course, this development involves many difficult and urgent problems, one of the most important being that of transportation between Montreal island and the south shore of the St. Lawrence river.

There is no need to emphasize the importance in modern economy of transportation, whose function is to take raw materials and finished products as easily and as quickly as possible to their markets, and to take workers to their jobs.

This rapid expansion and development of the metropolitan area have multiplied transportation needs: longer distances to cover, more frequent deliveries of products to farther places, mass movements of workers,—still chiefly concentrated in the city proper—to an increasing number of plants situated on the south shore. There are also more frequent movements of the general population towards both shores, on business, for recreation or for the pleasure of travel.

It is easily understandable, Mr. Speaker, that the present bridges have ceased to meet the urgent and essential needs of motor traffic between both shores of the St. Lawrence river, in the Montreal area.

There is no doubt that the new Champlain bridge, now under construction, will relieve the transportation difficulties I just referred to, but it will be no more than a partial remedy; and when that new bridge is added to the existing ones, it will not bring the urgent and efficient solution of this transportation problem between both shores of the St. Lawrence in the metropolitan area.

Last but not least, this new bridge will not bring any improvement in the critical situation now prevailing in the eastern Montreal area. In fact, difficulties with regard to communications between the two shores are most intensely felt downstream from Jacques Cartier bridge.

A geographical study of the map of Montreal reveals that Jacques Cartier bridge crosses the river on a line which, if extended, would divide the island of Montreal in two parts, east and west, of about equal size.

Now, all other bridges, including the Champlain bridge which is now being built, are located to the west of Jacques Cartier bridge and at a considerable distance from one another.

That gigantic development of the metropolitan area on both shores has taken place with much more rapidity in the west.

In the east, this development is only in its initial phase. From a few thousand people, for instance, only some ten years ago, the population of the eastern suburbs of Montreal has risen to 90,000 souls in 1957 with an industrial potential of approximately $778 million.

On the south shore, to the east of Jacques Cartier bridge, up to Contrecœur, hundreds of million of dollars were recently invested in the setting up of new industries and the labour force necessary to the operation of those industries is and will be for some considerable time in the future, supplied by an industrial and working population living on the island of Montreal.

As a result, the traffic between the south and the north shores of the St. Lawrence, in the eastern section of the metropolitan area, is getting heavier from day to day. Because of the distance involved, almost all this traffic crosses Jacques Cartier bridge.

Now, this bridge is often very far toward the west, from the starting points of the vehicles which must go across. The roads and streets leading to the bridge, both on account of the great deal of traffic caused by the bridge and on account of the heavy local traffic, are the scene of an indescribable congestion. It must be borne in mind that the approach to Jacques Cartier bridge on the island of Montreal is located just where the population is the most dense. The resulting congestion is still worse on Jacques Cartier bridge than on other bridges and causes a deplorable slowing down of traffic.

Let us consider for a moment these statistics taken from the annual reports of the national harbours board. From May 1930 to June 1931, about 1,650,000 motor cars crossed the Jacques Cartier bridge. In 1950, 4,822,-462. In 1956, 11,000,000. In 1957, 11,-500,000, an increase of half a million in one year. One Sunday, on August 15, 1930, for instance, when the famous German dirigible, the R-100, the centre of attraction of the whole area, was on the south shore, an all-time high of 15,000 vehicles had been recorded on that day.

Today, Mr. Speaker, a daily average of 35,000 vehicles cross the bridge during the week and 60,000 on Sunday. Here is another example. On a Friday, on September 19 last, between 5 and 6 o'clock in the evening, 1,256 cars crossed the Jacques Cartier bridge towards the north and 2,834 towards the south; that is the full carrying capacity of the bridge.

No wonder that the bridge no longer meets the needs created by the traffic running between the north and south shores of the St. Lawrence, in the eastern metropolitan area.

The numerous and increasing difficulties brought about by the inadequacy of the means of transportation between those two shores obviously give rise to a considerable waste of time, increased transportation, delivery and motor vehicles operation costs which put together are unmistakably detrimental to the present development of the eastern part of the area and unfairly penalize the residents in that area by the additional expenses involved.

A new lane on the Jacques Cartier bridge, the last one possible, will be opened. This step is most welcome indeed, but it is clearly inadequate and does not provide the solution called for by the problems of communication between the two shores of the St. Lawrence in the eastern part of the metropolitan area.

It is quite obvious that economic conditions today require the construction of a new bridge below the Jacques Cartier bridge. It is not a new project. That construction was recommended in the 1950 report of the Montreal harbour board.

On December 9, 1957, the hon. member for Laurier suggested the same project in this house, and my colleagues the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Deschatelets) and the hon. member for Papineau (Mr. Meunier) made the same suggestion. I do not think many representatives of our metropolitan area in this house are opposed to the project.

In closing, may I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that this is one of my reasons for supporting this resolution. I urge the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) to consider building a new bridge below Jacques Cartier bridge.

Mr. Marcel Bourbonnais (Vaudreuil-Soulanges): Mr. Speaker, as a member for a riding located in the suburbs of the great city of Montreal, I take pleasure in congratulating the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) on his most intelligent suggestion. Beyond doubt, as citizens of the Vaudreuil-Soulanges peninsula we are aware of the bridge problem. We realize it is a most difficult problem. Our sympathy goes out to the people of Montreal and of the south shore who are obliged to travel great distances to go to work.

Proposed Montreal Bridge Authority

Our opponents did not manage to build a bridge during the 22 years they were in office, but I am confident that this proposed bridge will be built under a Conservative administration.

But the proposal submitted by the hon. member for Laurier places him in a dangerous position. We know that in Montreal when a great politician is more concerned with the general interest than with his party, he is in danger of being struck off the list of his party should the Conservative party decide to accept his proposal. Moreover, his proposal is not quite original. In fact, the bridge now referred to has been asked for by the Conservatives and the Liberals as well, as was evidenced a while ago by the hon. member for St. Denis (Mr. Denis) when he stated that during the 20 years he has been here, when his party was in power, a great number of delegates came to Ottawa to make representations in order to get a favourable decision from the minister of transport with regard to the construction of a bridge. So his proposal is not original.

The hon. member for Laurier suggests the establishment of a new organization which would "control" the bridges and which would look after their operation under a single administration. As far as I am concerned, the idea is hardly commendable. The hon. members of the C.C.F. party seem rather in favour of a triumvirate, composed of the municipal, the provincial and the federal administrations to operate those bridges. I think it would be more advisable to let the present administration of the Jacques Cartier and Victoria bridges carry on as it does now, because I understand Jacques Cartier bridge will be paid for within three or four years. As for Victoria bridge it has been paid for long ago. If a new bridge is to be built, it should be placed under another administration, in the care of private enterprise, with the financial support of a government agency. There is too great a tendency nowadays to let the government settle everything. There is lack of confidence in private enterprise yet it always provides the best and most efficient service. In the province of Quebec, the bridges built under the previous administration give an exact picture of the parties by which they were built: they are long, aloof and very narrow; such are Mercier bridge as well as Taschereau and Galipeau bridges, between Ste. Anne and Vaudreuil; they are long, narrow and wearisome to cross. It will be recalled that those bridges served to make fortunes for petty civil servants who were supposed to be getting salaries of $100 a month but had a $40,000 a year income, under the old administration.

Of course these were abuses which today prompt hon. members to call for the abolition of bridge tolls. But rather than abolish bridge tolls, I feel it would be advisable to find some mechanical devices, perhaps, to ensure the collection of those receipts which the bridges should yield, that is to say that bridges should be a source of revenues for governments or the people responsible for their administration.

I have a feeling of admiration for the hon. member for Laurier who is not proposing the abolition of bridge tolls, as do our friends of the C.C.F. who wish to abolish tolls out of lofty generosity toward the population. They always want to eliminate taxes, or everything that costs the taxpayers money, but they never tell us where we would get the money necessary to manage the affairs of this country. The hon. member for Laurier had the courage to refrain from asking for the abolition of bridge tolls. Well, we still know where to look for the experience and sincerity of a hardy old politician, and,—because our friends were comparing him to an ageing lion—we find that he has not lost his claws, and that, at times, he knows how to use them and how to set traps for us. However bridges, or buildings of any type, have to be paid for by the taxpayers. It would not be fair to ask all taxpayers in Canada to help pay for the cost of structures which benefit only a particular area of the country. It is known that the city of Montreal is burdened with too many construction problems at this time, and the few travellers who drive through Montreal can see that there is construction going on throughout the city and that the seaway has brought about substantial industrial expansion.

People who live in eastern Montreal and on the south shore, in Varennes, Boucherville and Contrecoeur, are entitled to the necessary facilities to get to Montreal, but we should not ask the city of Montreal alone to pay for the construction of a bridge which will be used not only by the people of Montreal, but by people outside the city, or to ask the province of Quebec to share in the cost of such a project.

Besides, in the last few years, the province of Quebec has built some 2,000 bridges,—and I say this for the benefit of the hon. member for St. Denis who claimed that the Duplessis administration had not spent anything for bridges. The blind who do not want to see are worse than the deaf who do not want to hear, and it may be that some day the hon. members will see the light, the light of understanding, and will come out of their dream of administration, of control. They are blinded by the fact they held office so long and that they now sit in the opposition. We forgive them.

Mr. Speaker, there are many other kinds of bridges that could be built in the city of Montreal, bridges that would not be expensive. We have had a fine example of one recently, when the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Chambers) built a magnificent bridge between C.B.C. producers and management It may not be the kind of bridge that we should be talking about now, but I believe bridges of that type are always beneficial and are quite useful to all the population, not only of Montreal, but of the suburbs as well.

Mr. Deschatelets: It could have been built a little faster than it was.

Mr. Bourbonnais: It is too bad you were unable to build one like it. There would be other bridges, like the one that might be built between our national railways, which at this time seem to be making slightly exaggerated demands for a boost in rates, which would, to a certain extent, prejudice the people of Montreal and of this country as a whole. I mean that, if people living in the suburbs have to travel by rail, they will have to pay the planned higher rate of 17 to 37 per cent. Well, those people will be deprived of a revenue which, today, enables them to make certain purchases. It is well known that suburbanites do part of their shopping in the city of Montreal. Their situation will be somehow adversely affected by the exaggerated increase in railway fares, and the city of Montreal will feel the effects of this. Apart from this, since Montreal commuters who use the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific railways will be seriously affected by this increase, if it is granted, the economy of their communities will suffer accordingly. The Minister of Transport told us the other day, that the board of transport commissioners would make a thorough investigation before tolerating this increase. If the increase in railway fares is accepted, it will slow down development in the ridings of Vaudreuil-Soulanges, Laval and Two Mountains. It will also prevent many Montreal citizens from settling and living outside the city where they can enjoy fresh air, quiet and open spaces.

Our rural citizens always support good moves likely to help the city of Montreal whenever the opportunity presents itself. The proof of this is that, if a vote were taken with regard to the building of a bridge, the first to support the motion would be the members for ridings around Montreal.

Mr. Speaker, before closing my remarks, I should like to say that, if a great many bridges still remain to be built, the Union Nationale government, at the present time, proposes to replace, not later than this spring, the bridges connecting the city of Montreal with the constituency of Vaudreuil, namely the Taschereau and Galipeau bridges, with new bridges that will be representative of the Union Nationale party, that is, wide, stylish, well arched and strong.

An hon. Member: Will they be as strong as the Three Rivers bridge?

Mr. Pigeon: Why don't you talk about the Quebec bridge that collapsed four times!

Mr. Bourbonnais: Talk about the Quebec bridge? It is ill-fitting to refer to bridges that have caused tragedies.

In closing, I should like to congratulate once again all those who made fine academic speeches about bridges linking Montreal with the south shore. We especially enjoyed the brilliant outline given by the hon. member for St. James (Mr. Campeau), who managed to direct a criticism which was somewhat harsh, but based on actual figures, to the mover of the resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to add that should the resolution of the hon. member for Laurier be put to a vote I would be pleased to support it, subject to certain improvements and the deletion of this paragraph which provides for the establishment of a new agency, because I believe we now have all the necessary agencies for such a construction.

Indeed, the Department of Transport, the Department of Public Works and, perhaps, the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation could be authorized to grant loans to certain private companies for the construction of public buildings or bridges which would be used by part of such a large population as that of Canada's metropolis.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the preceding speakers who gave this resolution their support.

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I should like first of all to congratulate the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) for having introduced this resolution in the house, and tell him how appropriate such a proposal is in view of the fact that he put it in a new and original light which emphasizes the complex problems we have to solve, if we want to provide the citizens of the Montreal area with more convenient means of communication.

Proposed Montreal Bridge Authority

Mr. Speaker, I should like to limit my remarks to paragraph 3 of the resolution, which provides for the building of other bridges across the St. Lawrence river, at Montreal, and especially inform the house of the need for an additional bridge in eastern Montreal to link with the south shore of the St. Lawrence.

Since the remarks made by the hon. member for Vaudreuil-Soulanges (Mr. Bourbonnais) do cast some doubt as to what the Liberal members have done while the Liberal government was in office as well as to the originality of this resolution, I should like to prove to him that, several years ago, we took an interest in this matter, and that this resolution which is now being submitted to us presents new and original considerations which are necessitated by the increasing number of complex problems resulting from the St. Lawrence seaway.

At this stage, Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to page 706 of Hansard for January 31, 1955, where I stated:

I would like here, in passing, to suggest to the government to take into consideration the building of a new bridge on the St. Lawrence river at the end of Pie IX boulevard; when I am suggesting the building of this additional bridge for Montreal, what I have in mind is the speeding up of traffic. As a matter of fact, all the traffic coming from the eastern part of the city must now go through the central part of the town in order to cross Jacques Cartier bridge; this Pie IX boulevard bridge would link the south shore of the river with eastern Montreal, and would connect directly the Laurentian highway with Pie IX boulevard at St. Vincent de Paul.

I should like now to refer to page 4298 of Hansard for August 29, 1958, where I stated:

I now want to bring the minister up to date on the various conversations—

I was then addressing myself to the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees), in connection with his department's estimates.

I now want to bring the minister up to date on the various conversations I have had on this subject with the former minister of transport, Mr. Marler. The former minister of transport, having instantly recognized the need for a third bridge in Montreal East, had decided in 1957 to submit the matter to the Council of Ministers, once work on the bridge of the Ile des Soeurs (now Champlain bridge) had been completed. I am sure the minister will not refuse to take my word on this, but I must tell him that the matter goes much farther than that, for even the name of this new bridge was dragged into the discussions.

As controversy was raging at the time about the name chosen by the C.N.R. authorities for the new hotel, I had suggested to the former minister of transport that the authorities of the city of Montreal, as well as the residents of Montreal East, would be only too proud if we called this bridge after Montreal's founder, Maisonneuve. To this, the former minister of transport had replied to me that it was not the practice of the former Liberal government to impose names for constructions under its jurisdiction.

I must say, in this connection, that the present government followed our policy in selecting the name of Champlain bridge.

The former minister of transport had, however, promised me that if the authorities of the city of Montreal, and the public bodies concerned, agreed upon calling it Maisonneuve bridge, then the government of that time would be happy to agree.

Then, I added:

The minister will appreciate, no doubt, the work that has already been done by Liberal members toward the construction of this third bridge over the St. Lawrence river, and he will also appreciate the fact that even the name has almost been chosen.

This, I believe, answers very well the remarks just made by the hon. member for Vaudreuil-Soulanges.

And now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to add that since the beginning of the seaway construction more particularly, new needs have cropped up which require the co-ordination of means, such as those suggested by the hon. member for Laurier, to solve the problem.

Now, in connection with a certain remark made by the hon. member for Vaudreuil-Soulanges, may I say that I took an interest myself in the matter, and I would like to see a member opposite give us before the end of this debate, and based on Hansard, a single example of any steps taken by a Conservative member of parliament in connection with bridges on the island of Montreal.

Mr. Speaker, the south shore of the St. Lawrence river is now going through a period of industrial expansion, and this makes it even more imperious and more urgent to build a new bridge in the east of Montreal. However, such a bridge will meet our needs only inasmuch as there is some co-ordination in the study of the matter. I think the resolution put forward today by the hon. member for Laurier is the most original and the most adequate one ever introduced in this house on the subject.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would point out to our honourable friends opposite that they have been managing the country for two years and that the problems which then existed regarding the need for building a bridge in the Montreal area have become greater and even more complex in the last two years.

Not only do I not recall ever reading any suggestions from a Conservative member in Hansard, but I have seen no reference to the matter in the speech from the throne, nor have I heard of any contemplated legislation to deal with this problem which was so ably dealt with today by the hon. member for Laurier. As a matter of fact, if we are now discussing this question, and if it is being brought to the forefront—it will be in the news and will be discussed by several municipal councils—the credit goes to none other than the hon. member for Laurier, the mover of this resolution.

Before resuming my seat, Mr. Speaker, may I say to the house that I favour this motion. I hope our friends in the Conservative party will forget about party lines and will vote in favour of this proposal which can give us the key to the problem of communication facilities facing Montreal today. The fact that the hon. member for Laurier will be credited for it should not prevent them from voting in favour of this proposal.

Mr. Rodrigue Bourdages (Laval): Mr. Speaker, this resolution surely deserves much attention from the members of the house. In fact, not only does it deserve the attention of hon. members representing constituencies affected by the Jacques Cartier and Victoria bridges, but I know the hon. members for Longueuil (Mr. Sevigny), for Chambly-Rouville (Mr. Johnson), for St. Mary (Mr. Valade) and for St. James (Mr. Campeau) are particularly interested in this resolution.

I know also, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Longueuil would like very much to express the views of his constituents, but as he occupies here a position which forbids him to take part in the debate, he cannot do so. Besides he may have to stop us, members from the Montreal area, if we go too far or if we are out of order.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution must be of tremendous interest to all hon. members from the Montreal area, on either side of the house.

That is why I take part in this debate.

Before I come to the heart of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, may I offer my most sincere congratulations to the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) for having moved the resolution which reads:

> That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of establishing a public corporation or bridge authority which would be empowered:
> 1. To acquire from the national harbours board, the ownership of (i) the Jacques Cartier bridge; and (ii) the Nuns' island bridge (when completed), Of course,
> —upon reasonable terms and conditions;
> 2. To lease from the Canadian National Railways the facilities for motor vehicles over the Victoria bridge, upon reasonable terms and conditions;
> 4. To operate all such facilities for the convenience of the public, using the revenues therefrom to meet the expenses of administration and operation and the costs of interest and amortization.

I congratulate the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) for having introduced this resolution. But what I find rather strange is that nobody ever complained about the situation although the Jacques Cartier bridge was built almost thirty years ago and although the hon. member for Laurier, who has been a member of this house for more than twenty years and who was also minister of transport for quite a few years, never thought of introducing before now such a motion. I think his suggestion is very interesting and is welcomed by all the members of this house. But as far as I am concerned, there are much more important problems than that of organizing a government agency or a bridge administration.

Mr. Speaker, according to my calculations, there are now eight bridges to accommodate the people of the island of Montreal, leading to and from the city. At the south-eastern end of Montreal island, we have the Charlemagne bridge; moving toward the centre, we come to the Jacques Cartier bridge; a little farther west, the Victoria bridge, and again a little farther west and to the north, we have the Mercier bridge; at the western limit, we have the Ste. Anne de Bellevue bridge; on the northwest side, there is the Cartierville bridge and a little more toward the centre there is the Viau bridge. And later on, a few years from now, we shall have a ninth bridge, the Champlain bridge leading to Nuns' island.

We have now those eight bridges, Mr. Speaker, and we will have another one a few years from now to serve a population of over 1½ million spread over an area of approximately 350 square miles. Something which is even stranger yet, there is in the northern part of Laval constituency which I have the honour and pleasure of representing in this house, an island adjacent to the island of Montreal, known as Jesus island the population of which is much smaller than that of Montreal, since it numbers approximately 100,000 people only. The area of Jesus island is approximately half that of the city of Montreal, or approximately 150 square miles.

In addition, Jesus island has eight bridges, as many as the island of Montreal. We have the Cartierville bridge at the south-west tip, the Viau and St. Eustache bridges in the centre part, and the Pie IX bridge in the north. We also have the Terrebonne bridge which was built by the city of Terrebonne in co-operation with the present provincial government. This bridge is a tremendous help to the municipality, on account of the tolls it provides. In addition, we have two other magnificent bridges on Jesus island.

We also have a magnificent highway with a weekly traffic of about 50,000 cars. There is no other highway like this one, not only in this country, but in the whole world. With all due deference to my honourable colleagues opposite, the building of this magnificent highway is due to the present premier of Quebec.

Proportionally to its population, Jesus island has a bridge per 12,000 people while in Montreal they have a bridge per 200,000 people. I believe it is urgent to build a bridge on the island of Montreal in view of the fast development of the area. I think that the pace of development on the south and north shores of the St. Lawrence river is due to the St. Lawrence seaway which has brought and will bring many industries and business establishments to both sides of the river.

Mr. Speaker, within a few years, the population on the south shore of the St. Lawrence river will have increased threefold and the population of Montreal will certainly be over 2½ million people. I think that the means of communication between Montreal and the south shore are of the greatest importance. The approaches to the bridges paralyse traffic. Access roads would paralyse traffic at peak hours in particular and it would take hours to cross either the Jacques Cartier or the Victoria bridges. If traffic is paralysed, this will enormously delay the delevopment of industry, of trade and of housing construction.

Some of the different members who spoke before me have said that in 1949, traffic on the Jacques Cartier bridge had been over 4,500,000 cars and that the number of cars which will be crossing it in 1959 will reach 12 million. I think it is necessary for the present government to take steps immediately in order to do away with the bottlenecks on both Jacques Cartier bridge and Victoria bridge. This is an urgent problem. It may build approaches for all the bridges that are needed in the Montreal area, to serve the people of the island of Montreal entering or leaving the city.

I also think, Mr. Speaker, that the government should at once order an extensive survey to be made immediately in order to hasten the construction of Champlain bridge or Nuns' island bridge if you want to call it that way. That bridge should be completed at the latest in 1961, or if you want a maximum delay in 1962.

For all the reasons I just mentioned, I believe the present federal government should consider building a new bridge in the east end of Montreal, which would enable not only the people of the Montreal area but the people of Canada and of the United States to visit our part of the country which we all cherish. The bridge should be built in the eastern section and should link the city of Montreal to the south shore district, that is to the following areas, Fatima, Vercheres, Varennes and Boucherville.

I understand, Mr. Speaker, that building a new bridge at a possible cost of $40 million or $50 million requires much study and long and serious consideration. That is why this afternoon, most of the members from the Montreal area who know the district and who are aware of the need of another bridge in the east, have addressed the house. I am not ready to say right now that such a bridge should be built and paid entirely by the federal government. The necessary funds could perhaps be loaned for the construction of this bridge, in the same way, for instance, that the government is loaning millions at the present time to the central mortgage and housing corporation in order to enable Canadians to build homes or to establish businesses. I do not see why the federal government could not loan such a sum of money to permit the construction of a new bridge, the cost of which would be paid off in 25 to 30 years, as was the case for the Jacques Cartier bridge and the Victoria bridge. Perhaps the federal government might ask the provincial government, the municipal councils of Montreal and the surrounding cities on the south shore to contribute and co-operate in order to help the people in the area of Montreal and of the south shore. That would make it easier for the Canadian people as a whole to go in and out of our city, the metropolis of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, the construction of such a bridge in the near future would also remedy unemployment now obtaining throughout this country and more particularly so in the Montreal area. And certainly, a construction project the cost of which may vary between 40 and 50 million dollars would provide daily work to 3,000 or 4,000 people for the next two, three or perhaps four years. Besides, we must take into account the labour force that would be engaged in the production of building materials required for such a project, that would reduce the number of unemployed and could provide work for 8,000 to 10,000 people for a period of three or four years in the city of Montreal.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

(Translation):

Mr. Bourdages: Mr. Speaker, now that I have had a good dinner, I take pleasure in resuming my remarks concerning paragraph 3 of the resolution introduced by the hon. member for Laurier.

At the outset, this afternoon I congratulated the hon. member for Laurier and then I dealt with the construction of a new bridge in the eastern part of Montreal. Tonight I want to say that I am not speaking in my own behalf only; I am speaking on behalf of all the members from the Montreal area. I want to support them vigourously and encourage them to carry on along the lines of this proposal.

I support the hon. members from the Montreal area who are concerned in the matter. I would like to support my colleague, the hon. member for Mercier (Mr. Gillet), as well as my other colleagues the hon. members for St. Mary (Mr. Valade), St. James (Mr. Campeau) and Longueuil (Mr. Sevigny) who has not the pleasure to make the voice of his electors heard, of the hon. member for Vaudreuil-Soulanges (Mr. Bourbonnais), the hon. member for Chambly-Rouville (Mr. Johnson) as well as the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) whom you will hear in a few moments.

I also want to speak on behalf not only of the Montreal area members but of the people of the city of Montreal and its neighbouring communities, which over the years, have been asking for a new bridge to be built in the east end of Montreal. There have been requests by a great many associations in that city. There have been requests by the Northern Businessmen's Association, which comprises 1,800 businessmen from all over the city of Montreal. We also had requests from the Eastern Businessmen's Association, from the chambers of commerce, and all businessmen's organizations which may exist in our neighbourhood. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I trust that the government will take note of the comments we made this afternoon and that it will be able, in the not too distant future, to take the necessary steps to have a new bridge built in the east end of Montreal. I am so convinced that the government will grant us that bridge that I am even ready to suggest a name for it. We might call it the Maisonneuve bridge or the Madeleine-de-Verchères bridge. I am sure that all the remarks made this afternoon by the hon. members will be welcomed by the government and that it will undertake an extensive study of that matter and that in the near future we shall get a bridge in the east end of Montreal.

According to statistics, certain manufacturers in the east end of Montreal were able to produce in 1957 goods to the value of more than $740 million. That again shows that a new bridge should be built now.

I said that there were first class roads and bridges in Laval constituency which it is my privilege to represent, and that they were due to the initiative of the present premier of Quebec. In my opinion, and nobody will deny it, the present premier of the province of Quebec is the greatest premier the province ever had.

It might be appropriate to consider the possibility of building a tunnel instead of a bridge. In fact, a tunnel would speed up traffic and would not be subject to our difficult climate. In winter there would be no ice to impede traffic and many accidents due to slippery roads would thus be avoided. The building of a tunnel could be entrusted to private enterprise. A tunnel, for instance, like the one in the vicinity of New York, or in Windsor, Ontario, going to Detroit. Those tunnels are built by private interests and are paying propositions. I am sure that in the Montreal area some contractors would be prepared to build such a tunnel at their own cost and risk, provided the government would guarantee the cost of such a project.

Mr. Adrien Meunier (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, may I add a few remarks to those made by previous speakers on the motion introduced by the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier).

As the representative of a Montreal constituency, I am very much interested in this motion because it is of interest to all the people of Montreal.

As you know, Montreal is an island with a southern shore about 30 miles long. To serve the majority of the people in Montreal, there are now two bridges linking the island with the south shore.

In the last 10 years, Montreal has been going through an unprecedented development in the fields of business, industry and housing. The population of Montreal is over a tenth of Canada's population, and it is a well known fact that a large proportion of the people are bottled up on this island. Considering the number of people living there the outlets these people can use to reach the south shore are inadequate. Traffic is intense, and as Montreal is also a business and industrial city where many people come to do business, the result is that traffic in the city, with its two bridges serving the greater part of the population, raises a real problem.

To illustrate this, I would point out that in 1959, there were 450,000 motor vehicles registered in the city of Montreal, that is for Montreal only, not including the suburbs; if you add to that motor vehicles coming from Pointe aux Trembles and from the north, and the fact that a certain number of outsiders go through Montreal daily, you find that from 600,000 to 700,000 motor vehicles travel daily in the city of Montreal.

Montreal having experienced an enormous industrial and commercial development, the south shore, in turn, has had a spectacular growth these last ten years and more particularly since the beginning of the St. Lawrence seaway project. Many industries, Mr. Speaker, have been established on the south shore and many housing projects have also mushroomed. These people come to Montreal and the bridges they use are no longer adequate.

The southern shore is bound to enjoy considerable development in the next few years, and serious observers, as well as the members of the Gordon commission, foresee an industrial expansion, and at the same time, a considerable increase in population in the next decade.

I have been told that Champlain bridge will improve traffic conditions on Montreal island. Let me merely answer that the bridge will be mainly of service to people in the western part of that island.

If for the past ten years Montreal has enjoyed substantial development, the suburban towns along the St. Lawrence have also gone through a period of considerable expansion in the industrial and housing fields. All people who live in Montreal East, Pointe aux Trembles, Repentigny, and other adjacent municipalities have to cross part of Montreal island when they want to go to the south shore and their travelling through that city adds to traffic congestion and is causing quite a lot of trouble.

If a bridge were built in the eastern part of Montreal island, it would be of great benefit to many Montreal people who want to get to the south shore and eliminate part of the serious traffic problem in downtown Montreal.

Moreover, people who live in eastern Montreal or near Montreal island, have to travel 10 to 15 miles to reach Jacques Cartier bridge, the only one they can use to get to the south shore.

In view of this serious problem, Mr. Speaker, I think that the suggestion made by the hon. member for Laurier is justified, and that the government should devote serious study to the idea of creating a crown corporation which would acquire Jacques Cartier bridge and Champlain bridge on completion, then rent from the Canadian National Railways all practicable approaches to Victoria bridge and operate those bridges for the greater convenience of the public. With the revenue drawn from them, the corporation might build other bridges, to the greater advantage of the people of Montreal and as a stimulant to and a safeguard of its business and industry.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for St. James (Mr. Campeau) participating in the debate this afternoon, has expressed his attitude with regard to the resolution now under consideration. He spoke much more about Montreal harbour than about the need for the Montreal population to be linked to the south shore. He subordinated the building of bridges to the organization and efficiency of Montreal harbour. He referred to the views of Mr. Murray Hayes, vice-president of the Montreal executive committee, about the Montreal harbour development.

He also told us, without any supporting evidence, that the hon. member for Laurier had just rediscovered Montreal. I could well reply to him that it is a good thing, once in a while, to discover something and grasp at once all its importance within an overall design.

For his part, the hon. member for St. James did not discover anything but seems rather immersed in the affairs of Montreal harbour, linking harbour development with his own town-planning in Montreal itself.

We know that the hon. member for St. James is getting substantial fees from the city of Montreal for work he has done, according to certain members of the executive committee, when he was employed by the city of Montreal prior to becoming member for St. James.

In his outline, the hon. member for St. James seemed more concerned with his personal interests than with those of the population of Montreal.

He also spoke of the good old days of the Liberal party, as if he envied the policy of the Liberal party toward the city of Montreal. In this connection, I may say to him that if his government does as much as the Liberal party has done for the city of Montreal and its population, we shall be satisfied.

The hon. member for St. James also referred to contracts granted by the St. Lawrence seaway authority, of which the hon. member for Laurier was chairman, contracts which were higher than originally contemplated. I must tell the hon. member for St. James that his argument is rather flimsy, because all those initial estimates were made by engineers—and he is an engineer himself—and the changes were also requested by engineers. They were changes over which neither the minister nor the chairman of the St. Lawrence seaway authority had any control. It happened that the hon. member for St. James made miscalculations about the city of Montreal, but nobody dared raise any doubt about his ability, nor about that of the hon. member for Laurier, in his capacity as chairman of the St. Lawrence seaway authority.

I wanted to say these things to the hon. member for St. James in order to show him that the population of Montreal is leaning more heavily on the devotion of hon. members who think more of the general interest of the population than their own personal interest.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend the hon. member for Laurier for moving this resolution, and I hope that organizations, public bodies and municipalities will be able to use the ideas put forward during this discussion and will avail themselves of those ideas to urge action upon the government and obtain a more adequate number of bridges to serve the people of Montreal.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, as a representative of the federal constituency of Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, which is located a few miles from Montreal and whose economic life is closely linked to that of the metropolis, I feel it is my duty to humbly state my views before the house.

The hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) has developed a more understanding attitude. He is a recent convert to the cause of Montreal, in other words a Montreal neophyte. He excels not only at seaway digging, but is also a good surface operator, when it comes to "Montrealizing". When, for many years he represented Stormont, and at the same time held the office of minister of transport, he ignored the city of Montreal, Canada's largest city. Now that he represents Laurier in the opposition, he turns his back on Cornwall and looks to Montreal.

While he was chairman of the St. Lawrence seaway authority, he was, I might say, responsible for the traffic slow-downs that occurred between Montreal and the south shore and vice versa. The hon. member for Laurier, now in the opposition, wields less influence than the hon. member for Timmins (Mr. Martin).

Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I was listening to the remarks of the hon. member for St. Denis (Mr. Denis). In all fairness, I will point out to him that the government of the province of Quebec has liberally contributed to the construction of bridges and the building of access highways to the metropolis, as far as its responsibility goes.

The federal government is surely in a better financial position than the provincial government and the Canadian metropolis, because it is getting the lion's share of taxes paid by the people of Montreal and of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for St. Denis—

Mr. Boulanger: Go tell that to Mr. Duplessis!

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for St. Denis (Mr. Denis) is doing a disservice to his electors in Montreal. When his government was in power, the hon. member for St. Denis remained riveted to his seat in the House of Commons, instead of rising in his place to ask the then minister of transport—that is the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier)—for another bridge for the eastern part of the metropolis. Mr. Speaker, the government of the province of Quebec is financially poorer than the federal government. In its own field and jurisdiction, the provincial government did certainly contribute to the economic development of Montreal. The then federal Liberal government was in power for twenty-five years. It ignored the city of Montreal. It refused to give it other bridges. It is Sir Wilfrid Laurier who said that the 20th century would be that of Canada, and I add that of the metropolis of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the right hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Diefenbaker) in co-operation with the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) will certainly say that Sir Wilfrid Laurier was right and that he will make the 20th century the century of Montreal, the century of the province of Quebec and surely of the whole of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, as metropolis of Canada and as the economic centre of the country, Montreal should have had bridges at least fifteen years ago. Surely, he who was then hon. minister of transport and is now hon. member for Laurier, has failed in this regard. He did not really study the economic problems of the Montreal area. To expand, to grow, to develop, the Montreal area needs many bridges and, unfortunately, the former government did not realize its responsibilities and neglected Montreal. Today, we may say that, if Montreal and its region have suffered, it was certainly due to the indifference of the former government. There is no doubt that the city of Montreal is in need of bridges to the south shore. Facilitating access to the metropolis means economic, industrial and financial progress for the whole of Canada. Montreal is the economic heart of the province of Quebec and even of the country. By getting access roads, the city would expand its economy and give to the neighbouring area and to this country a corresponding economic activity.

I congratulate the present government for its decision to build Champlain bridge, a name which is a symbol of progress and gives prominence to one of our national heroes.

It is all very well to multiply roads and highways on the island, and to improve them, the important thing is to give Montreal other bridges to connect the metropolis with the south shore. The city of Montreal has been served for the last 25 years by exactly the same ways of outside communication. No significant improvement has been brought to Montreal for a quarter of a century.

Yet the population of Montreal island and of the neighbouring islands has increased. Industrial plants have doubled and even tripled on the island. Cars have multiplied at such a rate that Montreal people are imprisoned on their island. Yet communication facilities have remained unchanged.

Apart from the need for industrial development on the south shore, or rather in view of such development, present traffic requirements already exceed existing facilities, so that even with a new bridge, the facilities will still be overloaded. We recall the battles that were fought to avoid traffic interruption during the construction of the St. Lawrence seaway. An additional lane was obtained for the Jacques Cartier bridge. Instead of three lanes inadequate for a traffic load of between 100,000 to 115,000 cars per weekend in 1954, there are now four lanes accommodating 130,000 to 150,000 cars in 1958. There has therefore been no gain, no improvement in the traffic problem on the east side.

Not only is there no improvement in the west, at Mercier bridge, but traffic is increasingly congested. The south section of the bridge was raised some 120 feet and this opportunity was seized for building four lanes and new approaches; but the bridge itself was left with two lanes. Yet traffic rose from 60,000 to 67,000 per week-end in 1954, to 78,000 and even 85,000 per week-end in 1958.

Mr. Speaker, in 1954, thousands and thousands of cars crossed the bridge each week-end, with bottlenecks causing two to three hours' delay. After another lane was added on the east side in 1958, between 78,000 and 80,000 cars travelled that way on the week-end, and tie-ups were almost as serious as in 1954. Now, since that year, the relevant authorities have forcefully maintained that they doubled the capacity of the bridge. The figures I just quoted clearly indicate that, even if new approaches were built for the existing bridge, nothing was gained, because twice as many cars are now using them.

On January 28, 1955, it was reported in the Montreal daily press, that the St. Lawrence seaway and the Canadian National Railways would spend $6 million dollars for approaches to Victoria bridge for the highway as well as for the railway traffic. At that time, a lift-bridge was being planned for both kinds of traffic. On March 13th, 1956, Canadian National Railway officials announced their decision to build a junction in the residential district of St. Lambert. That junction would have used the second lift-bridge which the St. Lawrence seaway authority had planned to build at the head of the St. Lambert locks in order to ensure uninterrupted traffic, and which would meet Victoria bridge at the 17th span.

There was quite a turmoil among south shore municipalities and in the city of Montreal. In spite of every objection those pillars were erected.

In November 1958, newspapers announced the final works to the superstructure of that branch line, that is the building of an overpass for highway traffic, at the junction of the branch line and of the main line on Victoria bridge, as well as the closing for a period of 8 to 10 weeks in 1959 and for a longer period in 1960, of one of the two present traffic lanes on Victoria bridge. The two-hour traffic jams of 1954 may very well be doubled, according to the increase in the number of cars.

Mr. Speaker, may I join with the other members for the Montreal area in paying tribute to the hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Sevigny) who often met with his distinguished colleagues of the Montreal area in making certain representations, in expressing their opinions about the traffic jams that will result from the closing of one of the two traffic lanes on the Victoria bridge. I know that, in this regard, he has met, in the company of other Conservative members, with the responsible authorities.

The hon. member for Longueuil even engaged an engineer to draw a plan designed to improve the approaches to Victoria bridge in order the ensure a continuous flow of traffic.

Mr. Speaker, allow me to pay public tribute in this house to the hon. member for Longueuil and the representatives from Montreal who have made and are still making the necessary representations to the authorities of the Department of Transport and who are trying to solve this problem. Why? Because, Mr. Speaker, for a quarter of a century, there has been no member to make the voice of the metropolis of Canada heard in this house.

Hon. members of the Montreal area are working for their fellow citizens and are helping find a solution to the problems of the metropolis of Canada. The metropolis, or Montreal, is the economic focus of the country's future.

If, in the future it is at all possible for the government to solve that problem, the population of Montreal and vicinity, the people of the province of Quebec will commend the hon. member for Longueuil and his colleagues of the Montreal area. The hon. member for Longueuil will have played his own part, along with the government, to make the twentieth century the century of Canada, as Sir Wilfrid Laurier so rightly said.

Mr. Speaker, why was construction of the Champlain bridge delayed? I should like at this point to commend the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) and the government authorities for giving this bridge the name of Champlain, as a tribute to one of our great national figures. Mr. Speaker, it was only after repeated requests on the part of the municipal authorities, and repeated demands from newspapers, service clubs, chambers of commerce and the board of trade, that the people of greater Montreal learned from big headlines in the July 18 and July 20, 1955 editions of Montreal papers, that the Department of Transport at Ottawa had agreed in principle to a plan for improving communication facilities between Montreal and the south shore.

Four months later, on November 17, 1955, press reports announced the construction, by the national harbours board, of an elevated bridge, known today as the Champlain bridge, at a cost of approximately $25 million. The bridge was to be completed at the end of 1958. Here is a bridge that was to be started, as had been announced, in 1955, and was to be from eight to nine years abuilding. Above the southern channel, between Cornwall island and the United States, it took two years to build an elevated suspended bridge. The bridge had to be completed before ships could use the canal in the fall of 1958, and the means were taken to complete the work in due time. In Montreal there was no reason to hurry, no ships to let through, there was only the matter of satisfying the vital needs of the people.

Here in this house, I wish to commend and express personal thanks to the Minister of Transport who, in co-operation with the government, helped speed up construction of the Champlain bridge, a magnificent structure which will materialize in the near future.

Mr. Speaker, nobody will deny that Montreal needs all these present bridges and even additional bridges. Was it not the St. Lawrence seaway authority, directed by its former president, now member for Laurier, who ordered the deepening of the St. Lawrence and the way it is being carried out, so as to provide not only advantages but many temporary or permanent inconveniences for the Montreal area?

If the former government in Ottawa had sooner taken a decision about Champlain bridge, that bridge would probably be completed now and the planned traffic restrictions on Victoria bridge, because of the St. Lawrence seaway would become much less disturbing.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly urge the government to study the possibility of building another bridge in eastern Montreal. At this point I want to congratulate the hon. member for Longueuil. I want to congratulate him once again. I would not want to strain his humility, but the hon. member for Longueuil, with his colleagues of the Montreal area, has already made and continues to make many representations, that is, all necessary representations to the responsible authorities in view of getting another bridge for the eastern part of the metropolis. There is a possibility that this project may become a reality in a not too distant future. Credit will go to the hon. member for Longueuil and to his distinguished colleagues of the Montreal area.

Mr. Speaker, the city of Montreal must have other bridges for its development and in order that the area may grow and prosper. It is important for the Montreal area to have other bridges for civil defence purposes. What would happen if, by accident, we should have a war, or if a bomb or an atomic missile should fall on Montreal? We would need roads to evacuate the metropolis.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that another bridge in the eastern part of the city is essential to the economic growth and to the civil defence of Montreal.

Mr. Boulanger: Then, call for a vote.

Proposed Montreal Bridge Authority

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, the new bridge in eastern Montreal could be built for example, at the end of the island, at Pointe aux Trembles. Use could be made of Sainte Therese Island, in the St. Lawrence river. The cost of building this bridge would be lessened and would allow a housing development on Sainte Therese island. Residents of eastern Montreal and of the most beautiful riding in this country, the federal riding of Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, as well as the neighbouring constituencies, would thus be able to use the bridge to travel to the south shore.

Mr. Speaker, may I make a suggestion? As we are celebrating this year the second centenary of the battle of the Plains of Abraham I would favour giving the bridge the name of the Marquis of Montcalm. I know that other hon. members would like to see it named after Maisonneuve, because they did not succeed with a certain hotel in Montreal. We have now in that city the park Maisonneuve, the district of Maisonneuve and we also have the Maisonneuve market.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member is departing somewhat from the resolution when he deals with the naming of bridges and hotels, etc.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Denis: He is all mixed up!

Mr. Pigeon: —in the resolution, the hon. member referred to new bridges, new bridge building projects for Montreal island. Perhaps I have somewhat strayed from the subject matter, but, in any case, I did so quite intentionally, so that if some day a bridge is built in eastern Montreal, it might be designated by that name.

Mr. Speaker, later on the government could also build another bridge in St. Sulpice in the constituency of L'Assomption, because there is looming there an extraordinary residential development in the town of Repentigny. There is also a similar development in St. Sulpice, and Montreal will probably extend up to Berthier, some day.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the government to keep on studying the problem of the metropolis of Canada. I know that the Minister of Transport, in co-operation with the government, would like, more than ever, to find a solution to the problem of the metropolis of Canada and of the Montreal area.

The solution of the problem will certainly not take 25 years. The Minister of Transport, in co-operation with the hon. member for Longueuil and his distinguished colleagues are now considering the project so that the city of Montreal may remain the metropolis of Canada and continue to co-operate and work for its economic, industrial and national welfare.

(Text):

Mr. John B. Hamilton (York West): Mr. Speaker, I think even a Toronto member would be justified in saying that the hon. members from Montreal today have had a field day. One of the things which has concerned us, Mr. Speaker, and which I think was the subject of a point raised today by the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher), is the limited time which we have for debate on private members' day. Regardless of your ruling, sir, in connection with the observations made today by that hon. member, at the most we only have three more private members' days. I am aware that there are many other subjects which should be debated. There are many other members with resolutions on the order paper, and I think it is only fair that we should give them some opportunity to be reached.

Therefore, sir, I move:

That the debate on the proposed resolution of the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) standing in the order paper as No. 3 under notices of motion and the proposed amendment thereto of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier) be now adjourned.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order before you put the motion. The hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Boivin) did rise to take part in this debate a moment ago, but you saw the hon. member for York West (Mr. Hamilton) following the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon). With all due respect to Your Honour's decision, I thought perhaps that was irregular.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Chevrier: I said I thought, with all due respect to Your Honour's decision, it was irregular. I do not see anything the matter with that language. I hope I am not abusing my privileges, but what I was going to say was that I had expected I would be able to speak on the amendment of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier), and I hope I will not be prevented from doing so by this motion.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry but I did not see the hon. member on my left or I would have recognized him because, as the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) has said, when there is a debate the custom which has been followed is to call hon. members from alternate sides. The hon. member is quite right when he says that in recognizing the hon. member for York West (Mr. Hamilton) I recognized a second member from the same side. That was unintentional on my part.

However, the motion before us having been made, it is my duty to put it to the house.

Mr. Chevrier: May I be allowed to make one observation?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Chevrier: The Speaker has taken his seat which indicates he is ready to hear me.

Mr. Speaker: Unless the hon. member for York West is willing to let his motion stand until the hon. member has spoken, I have no choice but to put the motion.

Some hon. Members: A new form of closure.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): If we continue this debate, even with one other speaker, we will lose the opportunity to have any debate at all on the next resolution.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Hamilton, York West) which was agreed to on the following division:

NORTHERN ALBERTA RAILWAYS

SUGGESTED EXAMINATION INTO OWNERSHIP AND OPERATION

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of examining the system of ownership and operation of the Northern Alberta Railways, and the question of such ownership, operation and related matters be referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I think it might be best to give a short history of the facts which lie behind this particular resolution on the grounds stated many years ago by Abraham Lincoln that we first should decide where we are and whither we are going so that we best know what to do and how to do it.

The Northern Alberta Railways is a system lying, as its name would imply, in the northern part of the province of Alberta. The purpose for which it was originally designed and constructed was to aid the settlement and development of that particular area of Canada. It was originally commenced by private enterprise. During the course of construction many difficulties beset the contractors and the people engaged in this project. The result was that the provincial government of Alberta was compelled to take over first the construction and then, after the construction was completed, the operation of this railway. It was operated by the government of Alberta for a great many years until 1929. In 1929 the people of the Peace river and the government of the province of Alberta felt that this was a railway system that might better be taken over and developed by some corporation which was more adequately equipped to handle the type of service which was required. Consequently, negotiations were commenced between the provincial government and the two railway systems.

Some controversy arose as to what would actually develop from the point of view of who would operate the railway. The people of the Peace river country felt that their interests would be better served by the public ownership of the Canadian National Railways system. On the other hand, the Canadian Pacific railway was interested in developing the service at that time and it made certain offers to the provincial government, which were not accepted. Eventually, as a result of the discussions and the arguments, one of those compromises was arrived at, which seems to happen in connection with most great problems confronting governments. As a result of that compromise what I would call a monstrosity was created, a factual and legal monstrosity, consisting of joint ownership between the privately owned system of the Canadian Pacific railway and the publicly owned system of the Canadian National Railways.

In view of the controversy which has arisen as to the development of the northern part of Canada by railway line construction, I think it is interesting to note here that at that particular time the Canadian Pacific railway was very keen to acquire the system in question. It made substantial offers to the provincial government, and the reasons which it gave, the reasons which were assigned for its view, were that the agricultural production of the Peace river country was just starting to come into its own and it felt that this was a proper condition for its particular railway system. In any event the situation developed to the point where in 1929 a statute was enacted by the government of Canada under the name of the Northern Alberta Railways Act. This statute provided inter alia for the taking over of the lines then owned by the government of Alberta by those two railway systems, namely the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific, on a joint basis, each having an equal share in the undertaking and each presumably paying one half of the purchase price.

I am not going into all the details of that original enactment, but it is interesting to note that the purchase price was established by agreement and is appended as schedule A to the act, which is chapter 48 of the statutes of Canada, 1929. Schedule A provided, amongst other things, that the purchase price to be paid to the province of Alberta be the sum of $15,580,000. In addition, the two systems would take over certain undertakings and obligations consisting of approximately $16 million. That appears to be the total of the purchase price.

The system in question has been operating since 1929 to the present day. I would like to give the house some of the details of the physical assets which constitute this system of railways. There are about 1,000 miles of rail line which are manned and operated by about 1,400 employees. Edmonton is the commencing point of the railway. It runs due north to a place called McLennan where it separates, the northern half then travelling north across the Peace river to one terminal at Hines Creek, which is about 80 miles from the British Columbia border. The other section travels from McLennan to Grande Prairie and then on to Dawson Creek. In addition to this particular line, which is the main line, there is another railway line which travels from Edmonton to Fort McMurray, where it makes connection on the Athabaska river with the navigation system which for many years has been operating to the Northwest Territories. There is also a third line which runs to the town of Barrhead. I think that constitutes in the main the complete system of this railway line.

Under the management system—and here, Mr. Speaker, I go largely on hearsay and as I understand the situation—the custom has been, first, for the Canadian National Railways to appoint a general manager for a period of five years, and thereafter the Canadian Pacific railway to appoint a general manager for five years, and so on. I understand this practice was commenced at the time the N.A.R. was organized and has been continued until the present date.

The people of the Peace river country feel that as a result the operations of this railway system have not been for the benefit of the people. We feel that here is a situation in which these two great competing railway systems each owns a half share and each has a veto power in connection with the control and operation of the smaller system. We have inevitably felt that such a system has not been to our advantage. When some situation arises which would require something to be done by the railway management, then we have been of the opinion that the solution of this problem would be one which would be for the benefit of the large railway companies and not for the benefit of the people.

This has been the premise upon which I have based this resolution. I have been interested for some time in making inquiries as to the financial operations of this railroad. I have compiled here some statistics furnished by the dominion bureau of statistics on the financial position of this Northern Alberta Railways system during the years 1940 to 1956, inclusive. I would ask leave to have this printed in Hansard rather than read it to the house tonight because it is rather lengthy.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member leave to have this printed in Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Baldwin: The table follows:

(1) Includes railway, express and commercial communications operations.

The reason I have asked that that be considered is this: these years from 1940 to 1956, inclusive, include some excellent operating years during the war as well as some other excellent years the railway has experienced since that time. This statistical data provides a fair indication of the costs of operating this railway line and shows that it has made money. I feel this is quite important at this particular stage because I have heard the opinion expressed in certain quarters that at this stage in our development railway lines should be constructed and utilized purely for the benefit of our resources which are found in the north country. I, for one, take violent exception to that particular statement. This statement is founded, in part on the fact that these railway lines are not capable of operating at a reasonable profit. The statistical data which I have filed—I am not going to go into detail on it—has this peculiarity about it. There is an operating profit shown during this period from 1940 to 1956. The statement also indicates that in every year in question corporate income is shown as a profit.

Side by side with that is a statement referred to as a non-operating expense item. I am not a financial man, and there may be some particular reason behind this, but I have noticed that peculiarly enough that statement shows the expense item almost equalling the net corporate income. The result has been that during this period of some 16 years the financial position of the railway system has been such that it operated at a net profit of $65,000. We feel that if the financial operations of this railway system were exposed to the scrutiny and examination of the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, as I have indicated in this resolution, it would serve a very useful purpose. This is one of the main reasons for putting this resolution on the order paper, and why I am glad to have the opportunity of discussing it tonight.

However, that is not the only reason. There is an even more compelling factor at this time at which I think we should take a close look in connection with the operations of this railway system. Recently the Pacific Great Eastern railroad was completed into Dawson Creek on the one side of the Peace river and into the city of Fort St. John on the other side. I have already mentioned the fact that Dawson Creek is also one of the termini of the Northern Alberta railway system. I have made some inquiries as to what changes or developments there have been with relation to the freight tariff since this line from Vancouver has been completed into the Peace river country. I was not able to get all the facts that I would have liked, but I did find that, with respect to carloads of cattle shipped from the Alberta side of Peace river to Vancouver the rate had been lowered from approximately $2.26 per hundredweight to $1.45. If one translates the saving represented into terms of a carload of cattle it comes to a total of $160.

I do not know concisely the numbers of carloads cattle and hogs shipped out of the Peace river country, but I believe it would be in the neighbourhood of 3,000 or 3,500. Not all of these would necessarily be consigned to the Pacific coast, although from information I have I am quite certain the Pacific coast could take a lot more of our livestock and livestock products. Certainly, however, this change in the freight tariff would mean savings to the people of the Peace river country of from a quarter of a million to half a million dollars a year.

When I look back I find that the people of our country first advocated the construction of this railway line to the coast in 1929. As a matter of fact, the Northern Alberta Railway Company statute from which I quoted contains a permissive clause to the effect that the new firm was to be allowed to construct two major branch lines, one to the Pacific coast and the second one from a point near Grimshaw, northern Alberta, to the northern boundary of the province of Alberta in a line which would lead directly to the south shore of Great Slave lake.

Let us take the first of these alternatives, the railway line to the Pacific coast. I think I am not overestimating the results when I say that if that railway line had, in fact, been constructed in 1929 or 1930 we would have had between a quarter of a million and a half million people in that area today. I have given figures which indicate the savings which would have resulted on one carload of cattle, for example. The same situation would apply with regard to goods being shipped from Vancouver into the Peace river country. I am not suggesting here that the result of the construction of that line 30 years ago would have been that the trade of the Peace river country would have been diverted, if I could use that word, to Vancouver, but the resultant decrease in the cost of goods coming in and the increased price of our production being shipped out would have served as a yardstick which, I am quite confident, would have had a beneficial effect on the standards of living of the people in our area.

As a matter of fact we hear now—and there has been in the past—quite a good deal of controversy with regard to this question of building a railway line into the Northwest Territories. It has been suggested that there has been some conflict between the city of Edmonton and the city of Vancouver as to which way the line should be built. I do not think there is any conflict at all. I think both points of view can be well and easily reconciled. The natural alliances—the economic, social, administrative and judicial alliances—of the people of the Peace river country on the Alberta side lie substantially with the remainder of Alberta.

The sole result of the increase in the productivity of the people of our country, and what I hope will be the increase in the wealth of the Peace river country would naturally inure to the benefit of Edmonton. It is true enough—and I think properly so—that there would be some additional trade with the Pacific coast. After all, I think the distance from Dawson Creek to Vancouver is only about 700 miles. That is the nearest seaport. That is one of the logical places to which our trade should naturally flow. But I am satisfied that it would not be done at the expense of our trade with Alberta. I say this—and I have said it before—because I think it is a point which must be borne in mind when we come, as we must sometime in the future, to resolve the controversy which at present exists.

May I now say something about the economy of the country which would be served by these railroads. The railroads have suggested that they are not interested in agricultural development any more. That may not have been said publicly but I think it is an inference to be taken from their statements from time to time. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that ours is not a type of agricultural economy which would in any way be a detriment to the railroads. It is a diversified economy in every way. It happened, of course, that some 20 or 25 years ago the Peace river country took, with a regularity which was almost monotonous, the wheat crown of the world as well as that for oats and some of the other cereal grains which were put up for competition. That was achieved, of course, in the person of Mr. Herman Trelle and others who lived in his vicinity. But the people of the Peace river country had to learn from hard and bitter experience that they must adapt their economy to the economic situation of the day. There has been a large transfer of the activities of the farmers from grain to more diversified farming. I am not going to go into the figures but I have seen that transfer with my own eyes. I have seen it develop in the last five years to ten years. I am confident that a line of railway which serves the Peace river country is inevitably bound to benefit as a result.

Before I go on with my next point, I should like to say this, and I think I am justified in saying it. The failure on the part of the railway companies and of past governments to give effect to the proper natural aspirations, hopes and wishes of the people of my country, through the medium of the construction of these two lines of railroad is, in my opinion, a damning indictment against them. In my area I have seen many small towns and villages in which young people have lost hope and confidence up until recently because the railroads and past governments were not prepared to do anything for our country in the form of transportation development. I think it is a sad commentary on the way in which we have managed our affairs in the past, that in our study of development of the country, we have appeared to turn our backs on the frontier.

Now I should like to put on the record some statements made in a periodical called the International Journal which I hold in my hand, the issue for the winter of 1958-59. There is an article there by Michael Marsden who is described as being the acting director of the Montreal office of the artists institute of North America. The article is to be found at page 33. It is a very interesting article. Mr. Marsden makes some very intriguing comparisons between northern development in Russia and northern development in Canada. For example, he explains that in the Soviet union there are two large cities, one of 400,000 people and one of almost 100,000 people, lying far to the north of our present limits of populated areas. He refers to the fact that there are three railway lines which go through the settled areas of southern Russia to the river transportation systems and which serve these particular cities. He gives some other statistics as to the development which has taken place. He rationalizes and explains why this situation exists there. I think it is a valid explanation.

He explains, for example, that northern Russia was settled for many years by political exiles. He goes on to say in addition that since the revolution in 1917 the development of their north has been under a system of state domination which, of course, we will have nothing to do with. Finally he explains the statistics in a geographical and climatic way. Actually the parallels of north latitude which are supposed to limit what is north and what is south, do not necessarily have the same climatic conditions in Russia as they do in Canada; and in large parts of the Russian north the tree line or the vegetation line are to be observed farther to the north than they are in Canada. I think that is a reasonable explanation for the fact that we have not progressed as far and as fast as they have but to some extent I feel that the explanation does not necessarily hold good with regard to the Peace river area which extends into the Great Slave lake district and up through the Mackenzie area to the Arctic. There the tree line and the vegetation line stretch some considerable distance to the north. It has been established that plants and cereals can be grown far north of where it was ever contemplated would be the case many years ago.

So far as development and exploration is concerned, Alexander Mackenzie came down from Great Slave lake and down the Peace river in the eighteenth century. He came down from a post which had already been well established. I cannot help thinking, as I said before, that there is no proper or valid excuse for the failure to develop the north as we know it in northwestern Canada. For that reason we in the Peace river area are most concerned about the plans for the future railroad development into the Northwest Territories. We think—and this, Mr. Speaker, is one of the premises for this resolution—that there should be a searching and close scrutiny of the management and of the objectives and of the policy of this railway system.

There is probably one more reason why I think I am entitled to make these observations with regard to this railroad development. I have been here for some time. I have sat here and I have observed a great many of the problems with which this country is afflicted that have been brought here and left with the government for solution. Each of the problems has a variety of causes, but one cause may be common to many of the problems, and that is our situation in a tremendously large country with a small population concentrated in one small area with a thin settlement along the southern border. In the result the pattern of development and industrial expansion has been, I think, over-emphasized in this one area. We find that the products which come from far afield must be brought into the settled areas, developed, processed, and then sent back. I think the corollary to that is that as our resources are scattered you have to go further and further afield to find, develop and bring into the more central regions these natural resources, and we are going to have greater problems of transportation and are going to compound the difficulties which presently exist.

This is a many-sided problem and I do not suggest there is any one simple solution to it. It is a problem with many facets and will, I think, yield only to a variety of solutions. But I do feel that one of these solutions could well be the settlement of those areas of Canada which are susceptible to being settled, where there can be agricultural development and development in an industrial sense. I think in the future, when through immigration and natural increases in population we can look forward to a further 10 million or 15 million in this country, we will somehow have failed in our duty if we have not taken it upon ourselves to ensure that the people who are required will be settled in these far-flung areas. I listened, sir, with interest the other day, in the debate following the introduction by the hon. Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mrs. Fairclough) of her estimates, to the very eloquent exposition by the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke (Mr. Fleming) on the desirability of allowing into this country great numbers of unfortunate people from other lands. As I listened to him and the other excellent contribution from both sides of the house, I thought of the inscription which appears on the statue of liberty:

> Give me your tired, your poor,
> Your huddled masses yearning to breathe free,
> The wretched refuse of your teeming shore,
> Send these, the homeless, tempest-tossed, to me:
> I lift my lamp beside the golden door.

I think to some extent the United States, in its function as a refuge for these people, is possibly functus officio; it has largely completed its mission. The torch has probably been handed to us, and I submit that unless we take a new look at our system of railway development and construction in the light of our natural duty, we will have failed in that duty.

Mr. M. A. Hardie (Mackenzie River): Mr. Speaker, ordinarily this motion would not have reached us for another three to four weeks; but since the government put closure on us this evening, I have to go on with this motion without any preparation I wonder if this resolution really will do what I am sure the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) wants it to do? I know he is very sincere in his efforts to have a railway built from Grimshaw to the south shore of Great Slave lake, but I somehow feel after reading the resolution that possibly this government can use it as another red herring in the way they have used other incidents.

I am wondering if the government will not use this as another red herring to stall the building of this railroad. In the election of 1958 I can remember the present Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), the present Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Hamilton), and practically every minister who is sitting on the front benches today, running across this country from east to west and from north to south promising a railroad to the south shore of Great Slave lake. Then shortly after the election we opened our session here and in the speech from the throne the government put into the mouth of the governor general words indicating that last year a bill would be introduced into this house in order to accelerate the start to the building of this railroad. But what did we see happen? They withdrew the bill before the end of the session last year and the reason was this. The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources gave as a reason all over the west, as did the former parliamentary assistant to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Pearkes)—I am wondering at this time whether he will get his job back—that the people of the Peace River country and of Alberta were told that unless they got together the government will not build the railroad. Imagine ministers who went the length and breadth of this country promising this railroad being elected to a government with 208 members, and now they are going to wait for the people in Waterways and Grimshaw to get together before they build them a railroad. That is about like asking Khrushchev to accept democratic philosophy or the western world to accept his philosophy. The people in Waterways want the railroad through Waterways. Naturally the people in Grimshaw want the railroad to be built from Grimshaw.

An hon. Member: Which way do you want it?

Mr. Hardie: Any way at all as long as it gets to the Northwest Territories. In any event, this government with 208 members sit here in this house and tell us that until the people of northern Alberta get together they cannot build the railroad. I said a moment ago that the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources told the people of Alberta the same thing as the former parliamentary assistant to the minister of defence. This is just an excuse, and I am wondering if the government will use this resolution as another red herring to stall off the starting of this railroad. I have asked time and time again in this house for the past 18 months for the tabling of correspondence between this government, the railway companies and the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company. The other day the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) for about the twelfth time said he could not table these documents because discussions and negotiations were still going on. Before March 31, 1958 this government had the nerve to promise the people of the north a railway, but they have not the fortitude to make that decision now. A large number of Tory members were elected in northern Alberta and I am sure the people are wondering why they gave their support to this government, this government of no action which is fumbling from one excuse to another.

Mr. Bigg: Sit down and we will tell you why.

Mr. Hardie: Who is that, the hon. member for Athabasca?

Mr. Bigg: That's me.

Mr. Hardie: There is another man who went all over his riding promising the same thing, and he is going to tell me why they cannot build a railroad. Better go and ask your front benchers, my boy. You do not know half as much about that railway as I do.

An hon. Member: You do not know where you want it to go.

Mr. Hardie: Now someone says I do not know where I want it to go. You had better come from behind the curtain, my boy. To the south shore of Great Slave lake, to the greatest lead and zinc deposit in north America and possibly in the world. The minister of northern affairs himself said it is the greatest in the world, and went around the country saying it should be opened up. I had to agree with him. But now what does he say? He says: it does not matter about this great ore deposit; it does not matter how much delay it causes. No, we have to wait now until the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Bigg) and the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) get together and decide which route the railway shall take. They are applauding. That is all right. If we wait for those two to get together we will never see a railway built. We will never see a railway built north of Waterways or north of the Peace river.

An hon. Member: Lost your place?

Mr. Hardie: Mr. Speaker, some of those jackals who are yapping in the background —one was the hon. member from Saskatoon (Mr. Jones)—

Mr. Jones: On a point of order, I think that in this House of Commons we should observe the rules of procedure. This is a place of dignity—

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Jones: —and hon. members should not be referred to as "my boy" and so on. The procedure is to call them hon. members, and I think that rule should be observed by the hon. member who has just taken his seat.

Mr. Chevrier: I would like to rise on this point of order and point out to Your Honour that the hon. member for Mackenzie River has been interrupted ever since he began to speak by hon. members on the other side of the house. Now they complain that he is calling them names.

An hon. Member: Jackals.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps there is some justification for both points that have been made, and perhaps we should make a fresh start, with the hon. member for Mackenzie River trying to confine his remarks to the subject under discussion.

Mr. Hardie: I hope that my dear and hon. friend across the way will listen intently, and perhaps when I am through he can make his speech himself.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the hon. member for Peace River is sincere in presenting this resolution. I think he believes that this resolution will hasten the day when the first spike is driven into the railway to the south shore of the Great Slave lake. For this reason I do not want to talk the motion out. I think we should have a vote on it tonight. However, I should like to amend the motion by submitting the following amendment:

That after the word "matters" in the fifth line be inserted the following:
"such as the proposed extension of the northern Alberta system to the south shore of the Great Slave lake."

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, now that I am allowed to stand up and say what I think about this railway I think I will address my first remark to the hon. member for Mackenzie River (Mr. Hardie). The hon. member for Mackenzie River says he knows all about this railway and all about where it should go.

Mr. Hardie: I know well enough that the government is stalling it.

Mr. Bigg: Oh, we will get to that. I am one who is vitally interested in this railway because whether it goes through Peace River or whether it goes through what has been called my side of northern Alberta—and the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and myself share the whole of northern Alberta—I should like to know a good deal more about this railway, and I mean in the planning sense, without any thought in my mind of stalling. We can build a railway to the south shore of the Great Slave lake. We could build three railways, or ten railways. I am only interested in building the one which will best serve the interests of Canada. I am not playing petty politics.

Mr. Hardie: Oh, oh.

Mr. Bigg: You can laugh. I, like my friend and colleague from Peace River, am here sincerely to advocate the building of this railway into that point where it is needed the most, and to advocate that it should be built as efficiently, as cheaply and as fast as it is possible to build it. And it will be done, if I have my way, without any filibuster and without any delay. But it will not be done on petty political lines. It will be built the way the transcontinental railways were built in the first place, to serve this great country of ours. It is time we stopped disputing among ourselves, and instead of throwing epithets across this chamber the hon. member for Mackenzie River would do better to tell us what he does know about this railway, and help us to build it.

Mr. Hardie: Why talk it out?

Mr. Bigg: This it not talking it out. I am suggesting that this should go to the committee where we could discuss the matter properly. We could ask for all the papers we need, and if that committee could not handle it we would appoint a royal commission to look into the matter further. Reference has been made to reports already. I have one in my hand. They are sometimes partisan reports. They are made on behalf of chambers of commerce, and there are several in my own community—there is one in Edmonton, one in Vancouver, one in every city of Canada, and they all have their own personal reasons, their petty reasons, perhaps—for wanting a railway to go in a certain direction. Perhaps the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company want it to go along a particular route. But if a railway is to be built to the south shore of the Great Slave lake let us build it efficiently, let us build it—

Mr. Hardie: Now.

Mr. Bigg: Yes, if this is the most appropriate time. But can we have the assurance that once this matter is decided in the proper democratic fashion hon. members over there will not start bickering and squealing about our having done it wrongly?

Mr. Hardie: I don't care how you do it, build it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Mackenzie River has concluded his speech.

Mr. Bigg: The hon. member for Mackenzie River represents a diminished party that was in office for many years during which it could have started construction of this railway. The north country has been in existence for many years and it will remain for many years to come. As far as I am concerned when this railway is built it will be built the best way, the cheapest way and in the most efficient manner to serve our whole country. I do not care whether or not I am re-elected in Athabasca on this point. This railway is important to the north country and I will work as hard as the hon. member for Mackenzie River or anyone else in Canada to see that the railway is built when the government decides it should be built, if it should reach that decision.

Mr. Hardie: Why "if"? Let's go.

Mr. Bigg: It has not yet been decided when it is to be built. If you are accusing me of filibustering, let me ask why you stood up at all? You made no constructive contribution to this debate.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member must recall that he should address the Chair only.

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Speaker, in my opinion the hon. member for Mackenzie River made no positive contribution to this debate. I welcome now or at any time having hon. gentlemen opposite present me with good solid arguments as to where this railway should go.

Mr. Hodgson: He does not know.

Mr. Hardie: To Great Slave lake, I said.

Mr. Bigg: Yes, it should go to the south shore of Great Slave lake in the light of our present knowledge. But which route should it follow? Many experts have already put their minds to this problem and we have reams of reports on the subject. Perhaps I am mistaken and I hasten to admit I may be wrong. In this respect I am unlike certain hon. gentlemen opposite. However, I have read these reports and carefully analysed them and have reached the conclusion that the economic factors that have been presented are fairly evenly balanced with respect to both possible routes.

Hon. gentlemen would need a map in order to be able to understand what I am about to say but most hon. gentlemen would have access to a map of northern Alberta. An examination of the map reveals that the distance between Edmonton and Pine Point on the south shore of Great Slave lake is approximately equal to the distance of the other route. One of the routes lies to the west through Peace River and the other, to the east, runs through Waterways. There is a difference of only 20 or 30 miles in mileage.

There is a problem concerning bridges and the terrain but I am informed that the difference between the cost of the two routes would be negligible. I am not just yammering because I have spoken to experts of the railway. They tell me that the amount of tonnage presently coming down on the Peace River side which is largely an agricultural area does not represent a sufficiently significant factor to enable them to weigh it decisively one way or the other. If one considers the present available knowledge on the subject one might say we are stymied and so we will have to look to the future for a solution to this dilemma.

We in this group on many occasions have been accused of having no vision and of being unwilling to take action even if we did have vision. We are not going to take hasty action. I am a Conservative and I do not believe in hastily spending hundreds of millions of dollars on projects which may later prove to be less economical than some alternative proposal. I believe in spending the money when we have it for the purpose that is most required. This attitude has characterized every word I have ever spoken and I hope to take this attitude as long as I am in this house because I am no socialist. We will have to look to the future to decide which route this railway should take to the south shore of Great Slave lake.

Mr. Hardie: You said there was no difference.

Mr. Bigg: We have to give the matter full and careful study and avoid unnecessary and expensive guesswork. Our action should be dictated by all the information and facts we can accumulate.

Mr. Hardie: The railway companies know the situation.

Mr. Bigg: If we are accused of delay, I can only reply that a certain amount of delay is necessary so that we may take wise action based on the fullest facts we can gather. I say we should get on with the job but that we should acquaint ourselves with as many facts as possible. We should consult the appropriate people.

Mr. Hardie: We are the appropriate people to pass the money.

Mr. Bigg: If this matter is referred to a committee of this house hon. members in all parties will be able to fully explore the question. The committee could interview expert witnesses who could assist us in achieving the best answer that is possible under our system. I still believe that our democratic system of government is the best in the world. Although it could be improved upon it is the best system ever devised. Having this democratic system, let us use it. Let us use our democratic parliamentary system and our committee system and if this fails to assist us in obtaining a satisfactory solution the matter could be referred to a royal commission. We do not want to do this hastily.

Mr. Hardie: Are you speaking for the government now?

Mr. Bigg: We are going to do it—

Mr. Hardie: Let us vote.

Mr. Caron: We have only two minutes to vote.

Mr. Hardie: Let us send it to the committee.

Mr. Bigg: Let me remind hon. gentlemen that there are others who may wish to speak on this question. We intend to tackle the problem as fast as we can. We are working on it on this side of the house and indeed all hon. gentlemen should be working on finding a solution. I suggest that hon. gentlemen consult a map of this area and acquaint themselves with the facts of the issue. How many people in Canada know anything about northern Alberta? When you go north of northern Alberta you find that the ignorance is abysmal—

Mr. Hardie: What is this?

Mr. Bigg: —particularly on the part of the hon. member representing that vast area. Ignorance abounds with respect to this great area in northern Alberta. A project of this magnitude is not one that should be rushed into. We should not throw away approximately $350 million on a project of this importance without being certain that the money will be spent in the best possible way to assure that the railway will serve the greatest need. This is something the government has pledged to look into. The plans of this government for the development of northern Canada cannot be accomplished in six months and indeed they will not be entirely realized within 50 years. The policy of the government is to look forward to the future, planning wisely for our children and our children's children.

The government wants to remain solvent and if it borrows money for a project it intends to pay it back. If it builds the railway under contracts it will pay the contractors. No matter how the government spends its only source is the taxpayer. The government is not an old man with a long white beard sitting in Ottawa with a huge sack full of money. It is, as it were, a committee comprised of people from all across Canada entrusted with the spending of the public funds. If the government spends foolishly without careful planning there will come a day of reckoning. The suggestion advanced by my colleague is the only suggestion feasible at the present time.

Mr. Caron: This is a first-class funeral.

Mr. Bigg: I am fully in agreement with what was said by the minister. He described our way of doing this thing and it is the only way. Before action is taken we will require additional information to ensure a course of wisdom being followed. We intend to take action just as soon as we can.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it ten o'clock?

Mr. Caron: Oh, there is half a minute yet.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, on Friday evening the house leader gave the business for today. I do not want him to repeat it again because it is quite lengthy and it is there for anyone to see. I wonder, however, if he could answer this question. Is it the intention to deal with these items that he mentioned on Tuesday and Wednesday? I would also like to know what we will do on Thursday and Friday if he could tell me.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, there is some slight change in the order in which these items will be considered. We are planning to take first the motion by the Prime Minister concerning the annual report of the Canada Council.

Mr. Caron: What number?

Mr. Green: It is under government notices of motion. We then propose to take item No. 36 which is the motion to refer the public accounts to the public accounts committee; then item No. 35 which would refer the estimates of the Department of Fisheries; and then if the Minister of Justice is here we will take item No. 34. He will be here some time in the afternoon but I am not sure when and it may be necessary to take the item dealing with humane slaughtering of animals later in the day. We then propose to take item No. 33, the resolution concerning the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act; then item No. 26, the second reading of the bill to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act including the resolution which will have been passed before; then item No. 27, second reading of the act to amend Public Servants Inventions Act; then item No. 29, the resolution concerning the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act; then item No. 25, the act to confirm the agreement between the federal government and the government of New Bruswick respecting Indian reserves and then the resolution to set up a committee to study the Indian Act.

Finally, we shall take the resolution on freight rates. I think we will be going on with this business on Wednesday, and later on in the week have the estimates of citizenship and immigration and agriculture.

Mr. Chevrier: Do I understand from the leader of the house that on Tuesday and Wednesday we shall deal with the list that he has just mentioned. What do we do on Thursday? Shall we continue if we are not through?

Mr. Green: We expect to take estimates on Thursday and Friday, and on Wednesday we may also take the resolution concerning the parliamentary secretaries.

It being three minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

CIVIL SERVICE EXAMINATION PANEL

Question No. 168—Mr. Argue:

1. How are the members of a civil service commission examining panel customarily selected?

2. Is the minister or either of his deputy ministers customarily a member of such a panel when an applicant for a position in his department is examined?

3. On what occasions, if any, has this been the case when applicants were examined for any position in the government since January 1, 1956; who were the ministers or deputy ministers so concerned, who were the applicants being examined, and what positions were they applying for?

Answer by: Hon. Henri Courtemanche (Secretary of State):

1. All appointments to examining boards established by the civil service commission to select recruits for the civil service are made by the commission. Such boards usually comprise not less than three members and the chairman is an officer of the civil service commission. One of the members is normally a representative of the department in which the vacancy is to be filled. Another member, knowledgeable in the field of endeavour relating to the responsibilities of the vacant position, is normally drawn from outside the commission and the department.

2. Ministers are never members of examining boards. On the other hand, deputy ministers are from time to time appointed members of examining boards, particularly when the positions to be filled are at a senior level, such as positions of assistant deputy minister, branch director, chief of a division, etc.

3. Since January 1, 1956, the following deputy ministers have been members of examining boards in the competitions referred to hereunder for positions in their own departments:

Name	Competition No.	Position to be filled
Dr. Marc Boyer, Department of Mines and Technical Surveys	56-383	Director general of scientific service, Department of Mines and Technical Surveys.
Mr. N. A. Robertson, under-secretary of state for external affairs.	59-2650	A number of positions of foreign service officer grade 1 to be filled by university graduates.
Mr. R. G. Robertson, Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources.	56-599	Director, national museum of Canada.
	57-856	Chief, mining and lands division, Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources.
	58-528	Chief economist, Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources
	58-540	National parks planning officer, Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources.
Major General Hugh Young Department of Public Works.	56-667	Financial adviser, Department of Public Works.
	57-372	Chief engineer, harbours and rivers, Department of Public Works.
	58-375	Assistant dominion fire commissioner, Department of Public Works.

As required by law, the names of successful candidates in civil service commission competitions are published regularly in the Canada Gazette. This has been done for all the competitions referred to above, except competition 58-528, the results of which will be published early in March, and competition 58-540 and 59-2650 which will be published some time later. The commission does not make public the names of unsuccessful candidates as it is felt that this would not be fair to the individuals concerned.

NATIONAL MUSEUM—DIRECTOR OF HUMAN HISTORY BRANCH

Question No. 171—Mr. Argue:

1. On what date was the competition for the position of director of the human history branch of the national museum first advertised by the civil service commission?

2. What were the qualifications stipulated for this position?

3. What was the name of each applicant, and the date of his application?

4. Which applicants were selected for consideration of the filling of this position by the civil service commission, and what were the qualifications of each?

5. Which applicants were examined by a civil service commission panel, and on what dates?

6. What was the name of each member of the civil service commission panel which examined each of these applicants, and what position did each member hold at the time?

7. Who was the successful applicant, and was he chosen by a unanimous decision of the examining panel?

8. If not, what was the nature of the divergence of opinion amongst the members of the panel?

Answer by: Hon. Henri Courtemanche (Secretary of State):

1. A competition to fill the position of director of the national museum of Canada was advertised in June, 1956. The closing date for receipt of applications was July 9, 1956.

The competition poster described the duties of the director as follows:

> The director will be responsible for the management and administration of the national museum of Canada where are collected, classified and exhibited specimens required to afford a complete knowledge of the geology, mineralogy, paleontology, archaeology, ethnology and fauna and flora of Canada. As more space becomes available in the museum building, the director will be responsible for the reorganization and reorientation of the museum; he will be responsible for co-ordination of research and for the dissemination of information acquired by the museum; he will also be required to advise on the work of the department regarding other museums operated by it and, in general, to give advice on related matters.

The same poster described the qualifications required as follows:—

> Graduation with a doctor's degree from a university of recognized standing with specialization in one or more of the related fields. Extensive experience in one or more of the disciplines involved and an international standing as shown by published results. Experience in planning, exhibits, a knowledge of modern museum and public information methods.

Seven applications were received in this competition, all before the closing date of July 9. Three of the seven candidates were summoned to oral interview by an examining board on July 20, 1956. The examining board comprised Mr. J. E. McCannel of the civil service commission as chairman; Mr. R. G. Robertson, deputy minister of northern affairs and national resources; and Dr. W. Kaye Lamb, dominion archivist and national librarian, as members. Following these interviews Dr. L. S. Russell and Dr. Jacques Rousseau were qualified, in that order, by unanimous decision of the board. At that time Dr. Russell was chief of the zoology section of the national museum. He held the degrees of B.Sc., M.A. and Ph.D. in palaeontology and geology. At the time he submitted his application, Dr. Rousseau was scientific director of the Montreal botanical gardens. He held the degrees of B.A., L.Sc. and D.Sc. from the university of Montreal.

Before the examining board submitted its report to the civil service commission, the government decided to divide the museum into two parts on the basis of one of the recommendations of the royal commission on national development in the arts, letters and sciences. The single position of director of the national museum was therefore replaced by two positions—a director of the natural history branch and a director of the human history branch of the museum. Of the two candidates who had qualified in the competition, the examining board felt that Dr. Russell was more suitably qualified for the position of director of the natural history branch while Dr. Rousseau was better qualified for the post of director of the human history branch.

The civil service commission does not make public the names of candidates who are unsuccessful in civil service competitions as it is felt that this would not be fair to the individuals concerned.

Questions 2 to 8. (See 1 above)

INFANTILE PARALYSIS CASES

Question No. 212—Mr. McMillan:

1. How many cases of infantile paralysis were reported in Canada, during the years 1956, 1957 and 1958?

2. What was the number of deaths in cases of paralysis in these years?

3. What was the incidence of death and paralysis in relation to one, two or three doses of the Salk vaccine immunization?

1. Reported cases of paralytic poliomyelitis in Canada: 1956, 369; 1957, 177; 1958, 229 (provisional).

2. Poliomyelitis deaths in Canada: 1956, 51; 1957, 26; 1958, 19 (provisional).

3. 1956, information is not available. 1957, only one death was reported in vaccinated persons. Of the 96 cases of paralytic poliomyelitis reported in the age group 0-9, 24 had received vaccine as follows: 1 dose, 3; 2 doses, 14; 3 doses, 5; 4 doses, 1; not known, 1. In the 81 cases over the age of 9 years the data on vaccination is incomplete. 1958, information is being compiled but is not yet available.

DOLLARD COUNTY, QUE.—POSTAL STATIONS

Question No. 230—Mr. Rouleau:

Questions

1. Since June 10, 1958, has the government received representations from Mr. Maurice Cousineau, mayor of the city of St. Laurent, requesting the building of new postal stations in the county of Dollard, Quebec?

2. If so, in what locations?

Answer by: Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General):

1. No.

2. See answer to No. 1.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, March 10, 1959

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

TRADE

WHEAT—ANNOUNCEMENT OF CONCLUSION OF NEW INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENT

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, on January 21 I advised the house that a delegation was being sent from Canada to take part in the United Nations wheat conference at Geneva. Included in the Canadian delegation were members of the advisory committee of the Canadian wheat board who are at the same time leaders of the principal farm organizations in western Canada.

The purpose of the conference was to negotiate a new international wheat agreement. I am pleased to state that the negotiations in Geneva have come to a fruitful conclusion. Subject to ratification by the governments concerned, a new three-year international wheat agreement will enter into effect next August. I am advised that the new wheat agreement was negotiated in an atmosphere of international good will and co-operation, and that it is broader in scope and content than the present agreement and will cover the major proportion of the international wheat trade.

The new agreement differs in important respects from the agreements negotiated in 1949, 1953 and 1956. These earlier agreements were based upon rights and obligations which had effect only when prices reached the internationally agreed maximum and minimum. In the new agreement each of the importing countries has committed itself to buy a specified percentage of its annual commercial imports from the exporting countries at prices within the agreed price range. If, however, prices should go to the maximum the exporters' obligations to supply at that price are limited to the average commercial purchases of the importing countries over a recent period of years.

The objectives of the new agreement have been significantly broadened, and provision has been made for a comprehensive annual review by the international wheat council of developments affecting world trade in wheat, including surplus disposals. A new price range has been negotiated. The present minimum price of $1.50 per bushel basis No. 1 Manitoba northern in store Fort William/Port Arthur has been maintained unchanged and will be continued during the next three years. The maximum price has been established at $1.90 per bushel for the same grade of wheat in the same position.

It is a matter of satisfaction to Canada, and I think to all countries interested in international co-operation in wheat, that the United Kingdom, subject to parliamentary approval in that country, is likely to join the new agreement. The return of the United Kingdom to the international wheat agreement will strengthen the agreement and increase its effectiveness and value.

The text of the agreement will be submitted for ratification at the present session, and I trust it will commend itself to this house and to Canadian wheat producers.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I think the house will have listened with great interest to this announcement by the Minister of Trade and Commerce to the effect that a new wheat agreement has been agreed upon at Geneva. There will be regret, I know, that it was found necessary to reduce the maximum price of $2 to $1.90, without interfering with the minimum price of $1.50. I think there will also be general satisfaction that the United Kingdom has entered into the agreement, and I am wondering whether the minister can inform the house whether any other countries which were not signatories to the earlier agreements have taken this course.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, we in this group over the years have supported the international wheat agreements which have been formulated from time to time. We are again pleased on this occasion to support the passage of this agreement and Canada's signature to it. We think it should be an improvement that a certain specified percentage of imports will be taken by each importing country. The past agreement has really been quite ineffective because neither the ceiling price nor the floor price came into effect.

I think to appreciate the probable value of this agreement one must bear in mind that the ceiling price for No. 1 northern wheat at Fort William/Port Arthur today is in the neighbourhood of $1.70 a bushel, which means there is a 20 cent leeway in either direction. The floor price in the agreement, while some guarantee, would be a disaster for the wheat producers of Canada if our Fort William price should fall an additional 20 cents a bushel. The house will appreciate what I say when I refer to the great demand in the country today for an effective price higher than $1.70.

The agreement itself is satisfactory, but I suggest it must be supplemented and supported by a program of deficiency payments to bolster our western farm incomes. I am hopeful that the Minister of Trade and Commerce will pursue a vigorous trade policy, and I express the hope that he may be successful in concluding important export agreements with Poland and the U.S.S.R.

Mr. Churchill: I am glad the hon. member for Assiniboia has given his unqualified support to this agreement.

I would like to answer the Leader of the Opposition. I have not the details with regard to all the countries which would be in the organization, because ratification is required, as he understands. However, it is expected that in addition to the four major exporters, the United States, Canada, Australia and the Argentine, France and Sweden will continue in the agreement and Italy, Mexico and Spain will come in. The details which he would like to have will, I think, be available to us later on when we discuss the agreement.

WHEAT AND BARLEY—ANNOUNCEMENT OF SALE TO POLAND

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have an announcement to make which will, no doubt, be of interest. I should like to advise the house that the Canadian wheat board has signed a contract with officials of Rolimpex, the Polish government purchasing agency, covering the purchase of 150,000 tons of Canadian wheat. The grain is scheduled for shipment from Canada between now and the end of the crop year, July 31. I might add that some of it will be moving very soon by way of the Atlantic ports.

Under the provisions of the contract the Canadian grain trade, acting as agents of the Canadian wheat board, will negotiate the individual purchase transactions. Rolimpex which is, as I said, the official purchasing agency of the Polish government, will now enter into negotiations with the agents of the board for the purchase of 100,000 tons of Canadian barley for shipment from Canada by July 31.

Both the wheat and barley transactions will be purchased under credit facilities extended by the government through the export credits insurance corporation on the same terms as previously granted to Poland.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it is encouraging to learn from the minister that we are continuing to ship wheat to Poland. While we are on that subject, may I ask the minister whether any progress has been made toward renewal of the agreement with Russia which lapsed a week ago, and under which we sold such large quantities of wheat in recent years?

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): This is a welcome announcement, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure the Minister of Trade and Commerce would agree that this is a most appropriate day on which to make such an announcement. I congratulate the minister on having arranged such an appropriate time, whether it was by coincidence or not. I wonder if he can say whether or not negotiations are still in progress for a long term agreement with Poland. I understand that the quantities he has mentioned are in respect of the present year.

Mr. Churchill: I am not able to advise the hon. member for Assiniboia with regard to any further agreement which may be entered into with Poland.

In answer to the Leader of the Opposition, I do not want to announce everything at once, but I can hold out every hope that on an appropriate occasion I shall be able to advise the house that wheat will be shipped to Russia in accordance with the agreement set up by the hon. gentleman and his colleagues a few years ago.

OIL

STATEMENT ON SALE OF OIL AND GAS PERMIT RIGHTS IN NORTHERN CANADA

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Hon. members will be pleased to hear that a public sale of oil and gas permit rights was held yesterday afternoon for 3,546,829 acres. All the acreage, except for some 250,000 acres, lies in the southwestern Northwest Territories and southeastern Yukon in the general vicinity of Fort Liard. Some 250 bids indicate the largest public interest in any sale ever held by the department, and also indicate that major exploration for oil and gas is moving northward into the Northwest Territories and Yukon Territory.

Cash bonus bids to the value of over $6,500,000 will be accepted with some of the bids reaching nearly $9 per acre. This is all direct revenue to the crown. The successful bidders must spend $3 per acre over the nine year term of each permit, which will amount to over $8,500,000 in actual exploration for oil and gas.

I should emphasize that this sale is for exploratory privileges only, though if the permittee complies with the regulations he may acquire up to 50 per cent of each area as an oil and gas lease. He must apply for such a lease if he discovers oil and gas and wishes to commence production.

I plan to make a full statement to the standing committee on mines, forests and waters on government policy regarding oil and gas and other minerals in northern Canada, and how the public interest is protected in the development of these resources.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I wonder if I may ask the minister, in connection with this statement, if he could tell us how many of the bids he has mentioned were made by United States corporations or Canadian subsidiaries of such corporations.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, we have not had time even to complete the final and exact tabulation, but if the Leader of the Opposition wishes me to do so I could get this information for him.

Mr. Pearson: Was the highest bid taken on each occasion?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): That is what I announced, Mr. Speaker.

ALBERTA TAR SANDS—PERSONNEL OF COMMITTEE ON USE OF ATOMIC BLASTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. R. Smith (Calgary South): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. Can he tell us if the government has yet decided upon a plan to proceed with the establishment of a feasibility committee to examine the proposal of a nuclear oil separation process in relation to the Athabasca tar sands? If a decision has been arrived at, and if it is in the affirmative, can he tell us the membership of that committee?

Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): I wish to thank the hon. member for Calgary South for having given me notice of this question. The answer to the first part of the question is yes. In so far as the second part of the question is concerned, I must say that a technical group under the chairmanship of Dr. John Convey, director of the mines branch, will include: Dr. George Laurence of Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd.; a representative of the federal Department of National Health and Welfare; two representatives from the Alberta government; one representative of Richfield Oil Corporation, and one representative, as an adviser, from the United States atomic energy commission.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REPORTED U.S.-CANADA AGREEMENT ON CONTROL AND STOCKPILING OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister comment on a report in the New York Times of March 8 that the United States and Canada have agreed in principle on joint control of nuclear weapons and stockpiles of warheads to be based in Canada, and that an announcement on this matter is to be made shortly which would, among other things, state that such stockpiles in Canada would be under the direct control of United States personnel, as provided by United States law?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I noticed that article; and while the hon. gentleman did not give me notice of his question I have made inquiries with regard to this matter and I find that the article appearing in the New York Times is inaccurate in a number of details.

The government does not anticipate concluding a formal agreement with the United States government on the acquisition of nuclear warheads in the immediate future. I would draw the attention of the house to the statement I made in this regard on February 20. I indicated then that it would be some time before nuclear weapons would and indeed could be available for use by Canadian forces. At that time I stated that as soon as the government was in a position to do so it would inform the house, within the limits of security, of the general terms of understanding reached between the two governments on this subject. I believe that is about as far as I can go on this occasion.

D.E.W. LINE—U.S. PERMIT FOR MINISTERS' VISIT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I should like to indicate this group's respect for the rules of procedure by asking the Minister of Justice a question which is strictly in order. I understand that the minister will be taking a trip to northern Canada and possibly the Arctic regions in the near future. Would he inform the house if he intends to visit D.E.W. line installations, and if so will it be necessary for him to get a permit from the appropriate United States authorities?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): It is refreshing to find the hon. member in order for a change.

In answer to his question I have to say that it is not my intention to visit D.E.W. line installations, those installations not being under the administrative responsibility of the Minister of Justice. My trip will be confined to visiting R.C.M. police detachments and other points throughout the western half of the Northwest Territories—where, as Attorney General, I am directly responsible for the administration of justice—in order that I may have a better understanding of the nature of the problems of the police and those who are in charge of the courts in that area.

So far as I know my schedule does not call for any stop at any D.E.W. line installation, in any event the R.C.M. police are capable of taking care of my modest requirements in regard to accommodation.

REPORTED SPEECH BY AIR MARSHAL CAMPBELL RESPECTING BOMARC INSTALLATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): May I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Will the minister tell the house whether Air Marshal Campbell delivered a speech at Montebello on February 5, and whether he will make copies of that speech available to members of the house?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, Air Marshal Campbell did not make a speech at Montebello on the date mentioned.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask a supplementary question. Would the minister then clear up the contradiction between his statement to the house on March 2, 1959, at page 1519 of Hansard, that two Bomarc squadrons were to be established, and the statement attributed by the hon. member for Calgary South to Air Marshal Campbell that we have been given the green light on two half squadrons of Bomarcs?

Mr. Pearkes: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Both the Prime Minister and myself have on several occasions stated that there will be two squadrons of Bomarcs, one to be established at North Bay and one to be established in northern Quebec north of a line drawn between Ottawa and Montreal. These will be separate units with complete establishments of personnel, missiles and launching apparatus.

INQUIRY AS TO TABLING OF WHITE PAPER ON POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. O. J. Godin (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Could the minister advise the house if the white paper which he promised some time ago concerning the policies of the government will be available shortly?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I answered that question a few days ago when I said the white paper would be ready and tabled before my estimates are presented to the house.

AIRPORTS

VANCOUVER—INQUIRY AS TO ACQUISITION OF INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Drysdale (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the necessity of expanding facilities to meet jet age requirements, would the Department of Transport be prepared to actively consider acquiring the Vancouver international airport from the city of Vancouver?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we shall be very pleased to consider any proposition put forward by the city of Vancouver.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

"PRIVATE AND PUBLIC INVESTMENT IN CANADA—OUTLOOK 1959"—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. It is based on his statement in the House of Commons on Friday, March 6, when he tabled the document entitled "Private and Public Investment in Canada—Outlook 1959". His statement as found at page 1673 of Hansard is as follows:

> —increased capital outlays are indicated for each of the three levels of government.

The Department of Trade and Commerce publication to which I have made reference, which publication was issued the same day, shows in table No. 7 on page 17 that capital outlays of the federal government will decline by $30.6 million in 1959, and that similar expenditures by the provinces will decrease by about $40 million. There appears to be a contradiction in terms, and I wonder if the minister could clear it up.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I would welcome an opportunity of clearing it up, but I do not think I can do so on such short notice as this.

Mr. McIlraith: Tomorrow?

Mr. Churchill: Tomorrow will be satisfactory, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question on the same point relating to the publication entitled "Private and Public Investment in Canada—Outlook 1959". I have given the minister notice of my intention to ask this question.

Will the Minister of Trade and Commerce explain his statement as it appears at page 1674 of Hansard in these words:

> The rate of anticipated expenditures for 1959 indicates that Canadian industry is continuing to expand rapidly.

I ask this question in view of the fact that the publication of the Department of Trade and Commerce issued the same day and to which reference has been made shows in a table on page 7 that business capital expenditures will decline by $225 million in 1959 as compared with 1958.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of this question. I am of opinion that the publication to which the hon. gentleman refers deserves careful study. The hon. member has drawn attention to what he considers a discrepancy in the statement as related to the tables. The statement he read was:

> The rate of anticipated expenditures for 1959 indicates that Canadian industry is continuing to expand rapidly.

I think that is borne out by a study of the document. On the first page there appears this sentence:

> On the basis of these intentions as stated at year-end, the 1959 investment program would be moderately below the all-time peak of 1957 but would still comprise a larger percentage of gross national production than in any post-war year prior to 1956.

I think what is intended by that earlier sentence is that Canada is continuing to expand, perhaps not as rapidly as in 1958 or as rapidly in 1959 as in 1957, but the rate of expansion in the four years 1956, 1957, 1958 and the anticipated prospects for 1959 indicate that this is an expanding economy, because the prior years show that investment in 1954 was only at $5,700 million, and in 1955-56—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the minister and the members who have posed these questions that they really cannot be appropriately dealt with at this stage. It seems to me they could be discussed more effectively on the estimates of the department or at some later stage than by question and answer on the orders of the day. They seem to involve expressions of opinion and argument.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the reasons these questions were asked are surely obvious. The minister made a statement last Friday. He tabled some figures, and the figures contradicted his own statement. This is the first opportunity we have had to bring this contradiction to the attention of the house.

Mr. Churchill: In view of the statement by the Leader of the Opposition I should think I should be given an opportunity to reply, because he has now stated—

Mr. Speaker: I think the Leader of the Opposition raised a question of privilege. If so, then certainly the minister will have an opportunity to deal with the alleged discrepancy.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I have already pointed out that during the last three years, and with the anticipated investment for 1959, Canada is in an expanding economy as compared with the preceding years and, as I pointed out in that earlier statement, there has been a fourfold increase in investment in Canada during the last four years over the preceding years, which is a remarkable achievement. There is a slight drop anticipated in the business sector of 1959, but a careful reading of the document indicates that the revised figures which come out later in the year may indicate, as they have done in the past under similar circumstances, that the intentions of the year will be exceeded by the actual expenditures. On page 10 of this document we find this:

> On the economic side, the present intentions were framed at a time when business conditions were in the initial stages of recovery. If this recovery continues, and particularly if it accelerates in tempo, it may be expected that additional expansion projects will be forthcoming as the year progresses, especially in the commodity-producing industries. In the past, in periods of improving business conditions investment intentions have always underestimated actual accomplishment. In current circumstances, however, the extent to which intentions may be exceeded will probably be limited by the amount of excess capacity still present in a number of industries.

There are other intimations throughout this document which indicate that the economy is in good shape and that there is every prospect of it expanding, and that it is an expanding economy as compared with other years.

Mr. Benidickson: I do not think this is an answer to the question, because I indicated that the minister had segregated one of the fields of capital investment, namely that with respect to industry. As I stated in my question, he asserted in a statement at the time he was submitting the document that industry —there are other segments; there is public investment and other capital investment—is continuing to expand rapidly, and the figures in the document do not bear out that statement.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, in answer to my hon. friend's question I shall read just two other sentences in the summary:

> In summary, the 1959 capital spending program in the business sector is more heavily weighted with new expansion projects than was the case last year. Spending on these new projects, as planned at this time, will be almost sufficient to offset the large gaps left by the completion of major undertakings in 1958.

It is on that basis that it is expected that the actual expenditures will exceed investment intentions in the business sector.

WATER RESOURCES

CHICAGO DIVERSION—INQUIRY AS TO FURTHER CANADIAN PROTESTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. L. Houck (Niagara Falls): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Due to the fact that the house public works committee in Washington gave quick clearance to the bill permitting Chicago to divert more water from lake Michigan by a vote of 19 to 11, after Canada and the six great lakes states have been fighting the proposal, will the minister make another formal protest to Washington before the bill comes up in the house or the Senate?

Hon. Sidney E. Smith (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I thank the hon. member for indicating to me his intention of asking this question. Hon. members will recall that we have presented to the state department an explicit and strong protest, so in answer to his question I would say that at the moment there is no intention of presenting another strong and explicit protest.

As the hon. member has said, Bill H.R.1 was adopted by the public works committee of the House of Representatives by a vote of 19 to 11. I understand that it now goes directly to the House of Representatives, where it will be considered in due course. This bill has not yet been before any committee of the Senate or, of course, before the Senate itself. Even if it is adopted by the House of Representatives and the Senate it does not become law in the United States, as we all know, until the President gives his approval.

I can assure the house, Mr. Speaker, that the government is following the course of events very closely. If and when the occasion should demand it, we will make formal, informal, oral or written representations in this vein.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I ask the minister a supplementary question arising out of his answer, in which he indicated that strong representations had been made in the aide memoire which he tabled in the house. My question is this. I read a letter recently which was addressed to Congressman Yates, in which it was said—this was a letter from the U.S. Secretary of State—that at that time, prior to the aide memoire, the Canadian government had no objection whatever to the diversion of 1,000 c.f.s. out of lake Michigan into the Chicago drainage canal. Is that so?

Mr. Smith (Hastings-Frontenac): I think this is the same letter to which the hon. member referred some days ago in the house. I have not ascertained the authenticity of that report, but I repeat that the latest word in this respect from the government of Canada is the aide memoire.

Mr. Chevrier: Would the minister be good enough to ascertain whether such a letter was sent prior to the aide memoire?

Mr. Smith (Hastings-Frontenac): I do not know whether or not it is possible for me to get the text of proceedings in the legislature of another country. I shall endeavour to ascertain the facts to the end that I can answer the question.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): While the minister is trying to ascertain whether or not such a communication exists—and it does exist—would he also table for the information of the house the communication from the state department to the Canadian government, I think on February 9 of this year, inquiring whether and when the Canadian government was going to make a protest on this matter?

Mr. Smith (Hastings-Frontenac): I would remind the Leader of the Opposition that that has already been tabled, with the aide memoire.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

NEWFOUNDLAND—INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT ACTION ON LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister at this time in a position to inform not only the house but the people of Canada as to what action the government is planning to take in regard to the recent labour legislation passed in the legislature of Newfoundland?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that the legislation passed by the legislature of Newfoundland has been brought to our attention and the cabinet is giving consideration to the whole question.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): A supplementary question. I wonder if the Prime Minister would be able to tell the house when a decision may be made, since the I.W.A. which has been the legal union under the law is now being interfered with by this law?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Of course the hon. gentleman knows that that is a matter of government decision, and I am not going to anticipate the date of that decision.

Mr. Argue: In the meantime the legal union is being smashed.

HARBOURS

LAKEHEAD—REPORTED INCREASE IN ESTIMATED COST OF DEVELOPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. It arises out of a newspaper report to the effect that the Department of Public Works has made the announcement that the estimated cost of the development of the lakehead harbour is $6,600,000 plus $900,000 for a railway overpass. The minister indicated some time ago that the expenditure on the project was going to be $5,500,000. Can the minister inform the house if there has been a change of plans which has made necessary the increase of $1,100,000 in the estimates?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the preliminary report of the consultants, Sir Alexander Gibb and Associates, estimated that the cost would be about $5.5 million. We now have the final report and the estimate has gone up to $7.5 million, but it includes certain additional features which were not in the preliminary report.

TRANSPORT

GREAT SLAVE LAKE—INQUIRY AS TO START OF CONSTRUCTION OF RAILWAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. A. Hardie (Mackenzie River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister fulfil his promise to the people of northern Canada by announcing at this session a start on the construction of a railway to the south shore of Great Slave lake?

Mr. Speaker: This is a matter which the hon. member was debating last night. It seems to me that it is a question of policy which he could hardly expect to have answered on the spur of the moment.

MONTREAL—REPORTED CANCELLATION OF PASSES OF RAILWAY EMPLOYEE COMMUTERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday last the hon. member for Dollard inquired about the reported cancellation of passes of railway employee commuters in the Montreal district. I have spoken to the Canadian National Railways, and so far as that company is concerned the management advise that passes have not been cancelled, but that effective March 1, 1959, passes held by C.N.R. employees were restricted against use for commuter travel; that is, for regular or daily travel between residence and place of business. The management add, however, that for such travel Canadian National employees having the requisite length of service may obtain reduced rate commutation tickets. The management point out that commuter services are operated at a substantial loss.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

INQUIRY AS TO MEETING BETWEEN EMPLOYEES AND CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Courtemanche). In view of the fact that the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Hamilton) has stated that grievances put forward with regard to postal employee's salaries were the responsibility of the civil service commission, does the hon. Secretary of State intend to see to it that civil service commission officials meet the leaders of postal federations and associations, and of mail carriers before it is too late?

Hon. Henri Courtemanche (Secretary of State): I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for St. Denis (Mr. Denis) already knows the answer to his question. He is perfectly aware that the civil service commission is an independent body and that the Secretary of State has no instructions to give it.

Mr. Denis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the right hon. Prime Minister why it is that, every time we ask for information, we are told about this matter of "independence"? Whenever we put a question or make a suggestion, ministers reply that the matter is outside of their responsibility?

[Later:]

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, the question I directed to the hon. Prime Minister is, in my opinion, of general interest, and I claim that account must be taken of those meetings and grievances of government employees. As he is no doubt aware, thousands of persons are working in the Post Office Department, and when the Postmaster General is asked what he intends to do to solve the problem, he replies that the matter is the responsibility of the civil service commission.

I am directing the question to the hon. Secretary of State and—

(Text):

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I shall try to reply in French.

(Translation):

I will take the question as notice and answer it later.

FINANCE

BANK OF CANADA—INQUIRY AS TO TABLING OF ANNUAL REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the unusual interest in monetary policy these days, can he tell the house when we may expect the tabling of the annual report of the bank of Canada? May I also ask whether, after the tabling of that report, the minister would have any objection to having it referred to the banking and commerce committee for discussion as has happened in previous years, although it has not been the invariable practice.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the report is being printed at the present time. I hope to be in a position to table the report by the end of this week or not later than the beginning of next week. Whatever course of action is decided upon with regard to the possible reference of the report to any standing committee is a matter that will have to be decided after the report has been tabled. It has not been the practice to have that report referred to the banking and commerce committee every year. It has been done occasionally.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

ALBERTA—REPORTED PURCHASE OF FAIRHOLM RANCH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. It concerns a matter which is of great interest to many of us, especially those of us from western Canada. Can the minister give any advice as to the reported statement of Captain O'Brien-Ffrench that with respect to the famed—and I say "famed" advisedly—Fairholm ranch in Alberta an agreement is being concluded for its purchase by the government? If so, for what purpose is this most marvelous rustic ranch home and property being purchased by the government?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, the department is now in the process of negotiating with Captain O'Brien-Ffrench for the purchase of this property. I think the proper place for me to give an answer to the question would be in the standing committee on mines, forests and waters, as there are a number of reasons.

Mr. Winch: I have a supplementary question. When we are told this by the minister, may I ask why the information cannot be given to the House of Commons on the orders of the day?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I think the reason is obvious, Mr. Speaker. Negotiations are still in process. I shall be glad to make a statement. As I say, there are many good reasons why we should purchase this property.

Mr. Winch: If I may, I should like to ask another supplementary question. Is it the policy of the minister and his department to enter into negotiations without knowing the reason why they want to purchase the property?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SIX NATIONS RESERVE—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PRESENT SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, of which I have given the hon. lady notice. My question is this. Can she bring the house up to date on what is happening at the Six Nations reserve? Before putting the question, if the hon. lady will permit me to do so I should like to express to her my regret with regard to a sentence attributed to me in a story in the Hamilton Spectator of yesterday and which states that "the government cannot afford to be frivolous any longer". As a general proposition I think that is sound, but in relation to this particular matter I do not think the government has been frivolous. I know the hon. lady has taken this matter extremely seriously. I think it is a matter that we should all take seriously.

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for his explanation, or apology, or whatever it may be termed.

Mr. Pickersgill: Expression of regret.

Mrs. Fairclough: I must say that I was shocked when I read the account in the Spectator, because the interchange to which it refers was one which arose from a frivolous question which certainly did not start on this side of the house.

With reference to the present situation at the Six Nations reserve may I say this. We are in constant touch with the elected council and the hereditary chiefs. It is a matter of keen regret to me that there should be a conflict over jurisdiction in that reserve. Because the situation is so serious I have spent a great deal of time on the matter myself. I spent the whole week end in consultation with various persons. The director of the Indian affairs branch was in Brantford. He met all day yesterday with the hereditary chiefs, and prior to that he had met with the elected council.

We are hopeful that we can come to a successful compromise in this matter. It will be recognized by the house that the elected council is in control of the affairs of that band. It will also be recognized that the hereditary chiefs have made some complaints which we are quite willing to hear. I would have preferred it if they had brought their grievances to the department instead of taking the action which they have taken. Nevertheless, we are doing our best to iron out the differences without undue delay.

Mr. Pickersgill: I thank the hon. lady.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

NEWFOUNDLAND—USE OF R.C.M.P. IN LABOUR DISPUTE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I would like to address a question to the Minister of Justice. Has the minister received a telegram from H. Landon Ladd, president of district No. 2 of the I.W.A. of Newfoundland, in which Mr. Ladd has quoted Inspector Stevenson of the R.C.M.P. as saying that a detachment of 20 members of the force had been used to disperse an I.W.A. picket line on the Halls Bay road near Badger to assist 25 non-union men to enter a strikebound camp, and can the minister say—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I seem to recall that the hon. member, or some hon. member, asked a similar question about the use of the police, and the minister gave his response that the direction of the police was a matter for the provincial authorities, in which event this would not be a proper question to ask.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, on this point I wish to submit that the question arises out of a telegram that has been sent by the responsible president of the union to the minister. It raises a very important question at this time, and—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: As I understood the question it concerned the direction of the police. If the hon. member has another question which is in order I will be glad to hear it.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted, I think this question relates to another alleged incident different from the one which was discussed on the occasion of the earlier question. It is the same sort of allegation, but it does refer to another incident, and if Your Honour rules that, being another incident, it is in order, I would be prepared to reply.

Mr. Speaker: What I was attempting to avoid was spending the time of the house on matters which are not the responsibility of the ministers to whom the questions are addressed. If the minister considers this is a matter of his responsibility, I have no objection to the question being answered.

Mr. Fulton: I did receive a telegram as referred to by the hon. member. I have, of course, not seen the statement alleged to have been made by Inspector Stevenson, and I doubt if he made it in the form in which it is reported in the telegram. What happened was that there was a roadblock on a public road, and the R.C.M. police, acting in accordance with their responsibility under the provincial contract to maintain communications and preserve law and order, sent out a patrol to ensure that the obstruction was removed from the public road. The R.C.M. police did not escort anyone through the picket line and have not yet escorted anyone through picket lines; they acted in order to maintain communications and prevent disorders from breaking out.

GRAIN

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT ON ALLOCATION OF BOX CARS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can the minister say whether the Bracken royal commission report on the allocation of box cars, which is in the hands of the printers, will soon be tabled in this house; and can he say further what action the government intends to take on this report?

Hon. Gordon C. Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The report will be tabled in the house as soon as it is received from the hands of the printers. The action which may be taken will be announced in due course.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, since the report was delivered on January 21 and is in the hands of the printers, I wonder if the minister would twist the printer's arm so this report may be made public soon?

OLD AGE SECURITY

REPORT OF DR. CLARK—INQUIRY AS TO RECOMMENDATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I would like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare, in view of the fact that I, at any rate, have not been able to find any recommendations in the Clark report, whether Professor Clark was asked by the government or any of its members to make recommendations of any kind, either written or verbal, in addition to his published report.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I answered that question the day I tabled the report. The terms of reference are in the report itself.

[Mr. Fulton.]

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I could put a slightly different question to the hon. gentleman as a supplementary question. Was Professor Clark asked to do anything for the government except prepare this report?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): I think, Mr. Speaker, the terms of reference do answer that question.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

MOTION TO REFER CANADA COUNCIL REPORT TO COMMITTEE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister) moved:

That the report of the Canada Council for the year ended March 31, 1958 laid before the house on July 10, 1958 be referred to the standing committee on public accounts in order to provide a review thereof pursuant to section 23 of the Canada Council Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to make any statement at this time except to point out that under the statute, chapter 3 of 1956-57, section 22 and section 23 read as follows:

22. The accounts and financial transactions of the council shall be audited annually by the Auditor General, and a report of the audit shall be made to the council and to the member of the Queen's privy council for Canada designated under section 23.

23. The chairman of the council shall, within three months after the termination of each fiscal year, submit to the member of the Queen's privy council for Canada designated by the governor in council for the purpose a report of all proceedings under this act for that fiscal year, including the financial statements of the council, and the Auditor General's report thereon, and the member so designated shall cause such reports to be laid before parliament within fifteen days after the receipt thereof or, if parliament is not then sitting, on any of the first fifteen days next thereafter that parliament is sitting and provision shall be made for a review thereof by parliament.

The hon. member for Vancouver Quadra suggested at the time this legislation was introduced that there should be some control by parliament over the expenditures of the Canada council, and it is pursuant to this that the section was accepted at the time. My understanding is that if this motion is acceptable a committee of this house will be set up, and in the other place the action taken will be to submit a report to the finance committee. The hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) referred to this matter on one occasion. I think it is generally agreed that an examination would be beneficial not only to the council itself but also to hon. members of this house.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): We have no objection to this motion. In fact, we support it, and feel that the report of the Canada Council should be submitted to the standing committee on public accounts where I hope it will receive careful, serious and objective consideration.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, we are very much in favour of this motion. One of the questions which comes to mind is whether it would not have been better to have left this until later in the session so that the more recent report might be before the committee. I suppose it could be argued that a year's interval since the last report would enable us to look at this subject in better perspective. But I think there have been many press releases made by the council since the time of the last report, and it seems to me that the council's activities are moving at such a speed and on such broad lines that we should try to keep up with them. It seems to me that we have a special responsibility so far as the Canada Council is concerned. I should like to make one of my points by reading from a report criticizing the council which was written by Richard Jackson of the Ottawa bureau of the Sudbury Star. The article is headed: "Culture Vultures may 'get lumps'" and it says, in part:

> The Canada Council and the $100 million it got for the promotion of the arts—through the National Gallery and the National Museum among other agencies—got the former Liberal administration into trouble.
> It was knocked publicly on the basis that it amounted to a $100 gift for the eggheads at a time when the old age pensioners were being given a stingy $6 increase.
> Dr. Albert Trueman who was appointed to run it, didn't help. He had a built-in reputation for extravagance and disregard of the tax dollar that did neither he, the Council or culture much good.
> For he was the civil service brass hat who got his knuckles rapped, in the days he ran the National Film Board, for buying television sets at public expense for his staff.

This sort of comment is, in my view, nonsense. It is worthless, but it is the kind of criticism we can expect to find in certain quarters about the activity of an organization such as the Canada Council. I recall one man who whenever he got going on this theme used to refer to "culture vultures" or "those long-haired nut boys". It seems to me we have to keep a balance in this regard if we are in any way interested in education or the arts. We have just been talking about deficiency payments on grain. Well, the Canada Council represents the making up of a tremendous deficiency in the two fields I have just mentioned.

I would say the council is doing an excellent job. I could think of a number of criticisms, and I can think of one that is current in university circles, namely that too much of the endowment funds have been devoted to the building of residences and having those residences qualify under the arts and humanities provision by putting in reading rooms. I know that a good many hon. members of this house who are familiar with university residences will realize that the reading rooms, however genteel and pleasant, are not the most important part of the building. This may be an example of an area in which the Canada Council should watch its expenditure. At the same time, no one who has been around universities will fail to agree—and I know you will not, Mr. Speaker—that residence requirements are very urgent. I know that you and other hon. members have been pressing the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) in this connection.

One of the other things we must keep in mind in connection with the Canada Council is that pressure by people with political influence in so far as scholarships and grants are concerned should be kept to a minimum. One of the general observations I would make about the academic and arts communities in Canada is that they are a little bit tarred with the puffing attitude to which we have become accustomed over so many years with respect to all Canadian literary and artistic achievements. We tend to blow them up more than they really merit by world or by North American standards.

And I think this sometimes applies to the kind of references which must be forthcoming from the Canadian academic community with regard to scholarships. This is a question which must occur to anyone who looks at the format of the various scholarships. I believe that the Canada Council should ask applicants to be as factual and as bald as possible. One could possibly find, reading the list of the people who have received scholarships so far, some who did not deserve them on merit. At the same time the list is a wonderful thing to look at when one remembers that until a few years ago the people in the fields of science and engineering had so many more marvellous opportunities for scholarships, both pre-doctoral and post-doctoral. This program has been a wonderful incentive to everyone in the arts faculties in Canadian universities.

I cannot finish my comments on this without saying how pleased we were in our particular area about having our own lakehead college of arts, science and technology recognized by the council. One of the things that concerned me when the early grants were going out was that contributions were going largely to the big establishments already in existence. It appeared from the first grants that those who already had were going to get, and that the new and developing institutions which were going to mean so much to secondary and higher education were going to be left out. The latest list of awards scotched that feeling and indicates that the Canada Council has a wide point of view, and makes it clear that the growing and hopeful universities developing in northern Ontario, in Sudbury and in North Bay, are going to get a certain amount of help from Canada Council grants.

Perhaps this may destroy the validity of some of my early remarks about people in politics not pressuring, but there is one particular topic I should like to see supported by the Canada Council. Under the general principles outlined in the annual report on page 25, this particular project would not seem to qualify for grant. Nevertheless, I think this project should be dear to the hearts of all members of parliament because it relates to the collection of information which is of particular usefulness as far as parliamentary speeches are concerned. The Canadian library association is in charge of a project called the Canadian periodical index. Each year it indexes a host of Canadian periodicals, and any time one signs a request to the library in this area of research it is almost certain that this particular index will be used. Unfortunately this index is on a service basis, and we do not have in Canada at this time a wide enough demand for this kind of service.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the hon. member would allow me to interrupt him in order to comment on the course his remarks are taking. He has introduced with great ingenuity the subject of deficiency payments in connection with the reference to a committee of the report of the Canada Council. I should think the debate is not really a debate on the subject matter of the report of the council, though perhaps a few general observations about why the committee should deal with this report, or why it should not deal with it, would be in order. I would ask the hon. member to keep his more detailed observations about the report for that time when it is before the committee.

Mr. Fisher: I stand rebuked in that particular regard, Mr. Speaker, and will content myself at this time with asking the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) a question. I would assume that the officers of the Canada Council will appear before the committee. Does the Prime Minister believe that a certain amount of the work of that committee should deal with the policy of the Canada Council? I would like to know what the scope of that committee will be. I know he may say that is for the committee itself to determine but I believe he is also aware that his attitude will be very powerful in determining the scope of the committee.

Mr. Speaker: May I inform the house that if the Prime Minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I shall follow the commendable example of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson). I do not want to do anything to hold up the motion.

With respect to the question raised by the hon. member for Port Arthur I do not want to leave myself open to any suggestion that the course, scope, ambit or field of study of the committee will in any way be determined by me. That is a matter for the determination of the committee. Having regard to past experience I am sure that were I to suggest the course of that committee in any way the hon. member for Port Arthur would be the first to raise the strongest possible objection.

Motion agreed to.

MOTION TO REFER AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT AND CANADA COUNCIL REPORT TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved:

That the public accounts volumes I and II and the report of the auditor general for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1958, and the financial statements of the Canada Council and the report of the auditor general thereon for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1958 be referred to the standing committee on public accounts.

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any need for any extended discussion of this matter by hon. members of this group. I commend the government for introducing this motion and particularly for pinpointing the report of the Auditor General as an early matter for discussion by the public accounts committee. I believe it has been rather fundamental in our practice in all years except last year that precedence is given at the beginning of the sittings of the public accounts committee to consideration of the report of the Auditor General. I understand that the steering committee has already met and indicated that we are likely to follow this practice again this year and that this will be the first item of business before the committee.

Motion agreed to.

FISHERIES

REFERENCE OF ESTIMATES OF DEPARTMENT TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Minister of Fisheries) moved:

That items numbered 127 to 145, inclusive, as listed in the main estimates for the year ending March 31, 1960, relating to the Department of Fisheries, be withdrawn from the committee of supply and be referred to the standing committee on marine and fisheries, saving always the powers of the committee of supply in relation to the voting of public moneys.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, all I want to do at this stage is restate the position we took originally on this motion. We think that the withdrawal of these estimates from the committee of supply and their reference to the committee on marine and fisheries is a waste of time. We believe that to be the case because there are so many other things to do while the house is sitting and while we are getting ready for our work here. When these estimates come back from the committee they will all be discussed again and there will be no gaining of time as a result of this.

My purpose in rising is simply to restate the position we took earlier and to say that the sending of these estimates to the committee will save no time but on the contrary will result in a great deal of lost time.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on this matter. I believe it is an important question but our position may be expressed in a few words. It would be most difficult if all the estimates of the house were referred to committees. It would make it almost impossible to carry on and it would certainly be impossible if the committees were to sit while the house is sitting.

On behalf of this group I want to say that the sending of departmental estimates to specialized committees or to the estimates committee is a useful practice. It is of interest not only to hon. members of these committees but to the public in general whom they represent if on periodic occasions at least certain departmental estimates are referred to a committee for particularized study. A committee calls before it officials of the department concerned and hon. members are able to conduct an interrogation and obtain information and answers it would be impossible to obtain on the floor of the house.

As far as this group is concerned as long as not too many estimates are referred at one time and as long as committees do not sit when the house is sitting we would say that judging even from the brief experience last year this is a good principle and should be continued. Fisheries are of vast importance to the maritimes and to British Columbia and we in this group will support the present motion.

Mr. Speaker: I must inform the house that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am very grateful for the support given to this motion by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) on behalf of his group. I cannot quite understand the attitude being taken again today by the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier). I think he will agree that in years past the committees have not been given sufficient work to do and that in many cases the estimates of the departments could have been considered by a committee much more effectively than is possible when the house is in committee. Let us remember that these estimates always come back from the standing committees to the committee of the whole house.

Some years ago a start was made in having a standing committee consider estimates when the committee on external affairs was set up. As I have said on numerous occasions when discussing this subject in the house, that external affairs committee from the very beginning has done excellent work. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Smith) and the under secretary have always appeared before the committee and been interrogated. General McNaughton has been called and any other officials who could throw any light on the functioning of the department have been quite ready to appear. I believe that the result has been a highly efficient and thorough consideration by the committee of the work of the Department of External Affairs.

Last year we set up a standing committee on veterans affairs. The same course is being followed in that committee with the same good result. I do not understand how anybody can reasonably criticize the work being done by the veterans affairs committee in considering the estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs.

I explained to the house last year that in the interest of efficiency and for no other reason we were going to try out the same system of referring the estimates of this and of some other departments to a standing committee of the house.

There was a committee on mines, forests and waters, which had not met once during the whole term of the Liberal government. From 1935 to 1957 I do not believe that committee was ever even called although it could have and should have been considering questions which were of the utmost importance to the nation. Last year we referred the estimates of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources to that committee and also the estimates of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys, and I have never heard any complaint from any member of any one of the three parties who served on that committee about the work that was done. I think it was the unanimous opinion that that committee did splendid work. This year it has been considering the estimates of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys and from what I heard by the grapevine it is again doing splendid work. It is the intention of the government to refer the estimates of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources to that committee within the course of the next week or two.

The only other estimates which we are referring to a similar standing committee are these estimates of the Department of Fisheries. There again you have a specialized field. It is of great value to those members who are interested in the fisheries problems to have the minister, the deputy minister and the other officials of that department come and subject themselves to cross-examination. I do suggest that nothing but good can come from the deliberations of the standing committee on marine and fisheries in considering these estimates of the Department of Fisheries.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask a question of the house leader? How many of those estimates are being referred to committees; how many of the departmental estimates are being referred to committees? What difference is there between those estimates and the estimates of the Department of Transport which it was decided were to remain in the committee of the whole?

Mr. Green: Now I see why the hon. member for Laurier did not want to have the estimates of the Department of Transport referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. Last year we did refer the estimates of that department to that committee and I believe it did good work. This year, because the hon. member for Laurier was complaining so loudly about not wanting to have them referred, I fell in with his wishes and assured him I was not going to ask to have them referred. Now he comes out and asks, since we are not referring the estimates of the Department of Transport, why are we referring the other estimates? I did not realize that this was a come-on game he was pulling on me when he asked us not to refer the estimates—

Mr. Chevrier: Is there any difference?

[Mr. Green.]

Mr. Green: Yes, of course there is a difference. I departed from the practice of referring the transport estimates to please my good friend.

Mr. Chevrier: Why does the minister not please me a second time?

Mr. Green: I am afraid he is not going to be pleased no matter what we do.

I think the only other standing committee which will be considering estimates this session will be the estimates committee itself. To that committee we have already referred the estimates of national revenue and I presume there will be one, two or perhaps three other departments whose estimates will be referred to that committee, depending on the work it does.

I think we are entitled to a few good marks also for getting those estimates referred early in the session and getting the work done before the great rush of the last few weeks of the session commences. Under present conditions there is very little need for the committee to meet while the house is sitting and we are hoping that those estimates which have been and will be referred can be considered at sittings held in the morning so that nobody need feel that he is being overworked.

Really, we are trying to do the business of the House of Commons in a more efficient way than was the practice under the former government and we think we are succeeding.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): You are saying so.

Mr. Green: I think so. I think the hon. member for Ottawa East thinks so, too, even though he will not admit it. However, this motion is being made with the best of intentions and, as I said at the beginning, I am very glad to see that at least the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) and his associates in the C.C.F. party realize that we are trying to do something for the benefit of the country.

Mr. Speaker: Those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

Mr. Chevrier: On division.

Motion agreed to on division.

LIVESTOCK

REFERENCE OF SUBJECT OF HUMANE SLAUGHTER TO COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice) moved:

That the subject of humane slaughter of food animals be referred to the standing committee on agriculture.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate, as I know the house will, that it is now some time since the government first undertook to introduce legislation which will ensure that food animals in Canada are killed by humane methods. The fact is that it has been a most difficult and complicated problem to devise legislation which would be effective and at the same time be fair and workable. I should like to give the house a brief history of the efforts we have made to accomplish this objective.

This government from the outset has accepted the necessity of additional legislation to ensure that humane methods are used in the slaughter of animals in Canada. This in itself marks an important step forward, for the fact is that our predecessors never accepted this position, or if they did they refused to consider that it was necessary or possible for such legislation to be introduced by the dominion government. There is as a matter of fact quite a lengthy history of discussion of the problem in the House of Commons and elsewhere, a history of efforts being made by members of the Conservative party when in opposition, on their own behalf and in support of the position taken by humane societies, to persuade the former government to take action and of the refusal of that government to do so. However, I shall not go into the details of the earlier controversy but will confine myself to an outline of the steps taken since we assumed responsibility and undertook to introduce legislation to carry out our policy in this field.

It is interesting and significant to note that since we have first begun to move in this connection the idea of legislation has not been opposed by the main spokesmen for the meat packing industry. In fact, their representatives on the meat packers council of Canada have at all times in their discussion with us agreed that legislation in this field is necessary and desirable. They have never opposed our efforts to find a practical legislative formula; their concern has been to find a suitable and fair scheme of legislation. They have co-operated with us throughout in working to this end.

At this point I should express the very real appreciation of myself and my colleagues in the government for the work done and the help we have received from all those who have been involved in this problem. I refer especially to the initiative shown by the various humane societies across Canada and their individual representatives; also to the co-operation of the meat packers council of Canada and the very extensive research that they have carried on. In general, although there has been some conflict and differences in points of view between those two organizations they have worked with a good deal of co-operation and harmony to achieve the desired end.

I should also express our appreciation to the officials of the department of my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, who for a number of years now has maintained a close and active liaison with the other organizations engaged in research in this field and also carried on extensive research on their own to develop humane killing methods which would be practical and applicable to the Canadian industry. I should mention also the work of the officials of my own department who have laboured long and earnestly, as the members of this house know, to devise legislation which will meet the problem. Finally, I should express thanks to our own members of parliament who, throughout the past two years, have given the benefit of their study and advice.

Our first approach to the problem was to seek an answer through the medium of the Criminal Code. There is already a general provision in the code regarding cruelty to animals, and inasmuch as the criminal law is within dominion jurisdiction, it seemed to us a logical approach to seek an answer by way of amendment to that provision.

A bill was accordingly drafted by my department during the first session after the election of 1957. This bill was introduced on December 21 of that year as Bill No. 241, and was given first reading on that date. In a statement reported at page 2713 of Hansard I outlined the government's approach and intention, emphasizing that the object in introducing the bill and giving it first reading only was to make it available to the house and the country for study. I stated that we recognized that this is a difficult and complicated problem, and that we hoped to receive the advice of all those concerned, including especially the provincial attorneys general who would be responsible for enforcement of the proposed law, with a view to studying their comments and removing any defects or weaknesses that might be shown to exist before reintroducing the legislation at a subsequent session.

As an indication of the government's approach to the problem that had to be solved, I should refer to the following quotation from that statement:

There is, then, general agreement that humane methods of slaughter exist and can be made applicable in Canada although there are still some problems to be solved. In considering our course of action we have had to bear the following factors in mind. First, that there is a measure of divided responsibility, and that in any criminal legislation to be introduced we must bear in mind that the responsibility for enforcement rests with the provinces. Second, that hasty action on the part of the government might force out of business abattoirs and packing plants and could result in a shortage of such commodities as bacon, etc. Third, that impracticable or unenforceable legislation does more harm than good. Fourth, that the provinces have an interest in the matter especially from the point of view of enforcement, and therefore should be consulted.

Following the introduction of that bill, and its distribution by us to various interested organizations and officials, we did receive some comments. These came mainly from the attorneys general of the provinces, six of whom replied to our letter. To be quite frank about it, Mr. Speaker, I must say that the attorneys general greeted the draft bill with something less than enthusiasm. The general effect of their comments was to question whether the bill as drafted was really sound criminal legislation, and two or three of them raised very serious questions about the problem that would arise with regard to its enforceability. We also received replies from some of the humane societies and others, these replies being generally favourable to the proposal.

We accordingly studied the matter further to give effect so far as we could to the observations that we had received. I must admit that in view of the criticisms that had been made we had some reservations about the course being followed, but after we had worked further over the bill in our department we felt that we had made a substantial step toward removing the objections, and accordingly introduced a further bill in the session following the election last year. This bill proceeded on the same basis as the earlier draft, namely by way of an amendment to the Criminal Code, and was given first reading as Bill C-32 on June 25, 1958.

I should tell the house now that we had been somewhat surprised that we had received relatively few comments and suggestions after the original bill had been introduced and made available for distribution. The fact is that it was only after Bill C-32 was introduced in June of last year that we began to receive some of the representations and suggestions we had hoped to receive earlier and which we had invited. These representations now came from a wide variety of sources and indicated a very real and legitimate concern about the effects of the new proposed legislation. Meetings were at once arranged with all those who indicated a desire to meet with us and very full discussions were held in an effort to assess the exact nature of the problems raised in each case and the merits of the criticisms or suggestions advanced. Following these meetings, we made a further study of each proposal in an effort to see if we could amend the legislation to meet those points which we found to be substantial.

I will not take the time of the house at this stage to particularize all the criticisms and suggestions we received or the efforts we made to meet them. It will be enough to say that a number of them seemed to be substantial and legitimate. For a more detailed discussion of the situation in which we then found ourselves I would refer the house to my statement made on September 6, 1958, reported at page 4705 of Hansard for that date.

In essence, we found that in order to ensure the realization of our objective by way of legislation under the Criminal Code, and yet meet all the legitimate objections and criticisms which had now been raised, we would have to particularize to such an extent that it was doubtful whether the final result would be sound criminal legislation. We were driven to the conclusion that what would emerge would amount almost to a form of regulation rather than legislation, and it became very doubtful whether such a form of enactment would stand up as valid criminal law.

At this point, I should make it clear that the objections we received at that stage were not, as has sometimes been suggested, made by large packing concerns, but came in the main from some small individual packers, from religious organizations concerned with the question of ritual slaughter, and from individual farmers and farm organizations. In the result, we came to the conclusion as I advised the house at that time, that it was not possible within the time at our disposal before the end of the last session, to find a legislative formula which would resolve all the objections which had been brought to our attention. I, accordingly, advised the house that it was not our intention to proceed with Bill C-32 at that session, but to study the matter further and then refer the whole question at this session, together with the government's suggestions, to an appropriate committee of the house. As I then said:

It is my hope that in the meantime all concerned will give the matter further consideration and prepare their submissions, so that at an early date next session the committee may proceed with its study and hear evidence which should be helpful in enabling parliament to determine the best course to follow in bringing about a solution.

It may be helpful to the house and to the committee if at this point I summarize the objections which we had received and which we felt raised points of substance, and which indeed led us to question whether it was possible to find a satisfactory answer by way of criminal legislation. The main objections are as follows:

1. The best provision that could be devised for the Criminal Code failed to meet the legitimate demands of almost every interested group. This is illustrated by the following paragraph from my statement of September 6, 1958, which appears at page 4705 of Hansard:

> The submissions which raised new considerations deal with such points as the problem of providing for those cases where slaughter, or preparation for slaughter, is carried out in conformity with certain religious ritual; the designation of approved appliances; the availability in Canada of equipment necessary particularly in the case of certain classes of animals; the desirability of defining 'humane method' in advance so those installing certain devices will know for certain that the expenditures made will not be thrown away; the problem of legislating in such a way that large commercial slaughterhouses will be covered without at the same time imposing conditions which it is impracticable or impossible for small concerns or individual farmers to comply with, all matters which present real problems when criminal legislation is concerned.

2. Any provision prepared for the Criminal Code in an attempt to meet all or most of these points would have to be so limited or hedged about with qualifications that there must be some doubt that it is a valid criminal law.

3. A Criminal Code provision must yet contain some such general expressions—such as humane slaughter—that it will be given different meanings in different parts of Canada, and even by different magistrates in the same general localities.

4. It cannot be expected that local police authorities could obtain anything like 100 per cent compliance with such a provision in the Criminal Code. Enforcement would call for a specialized type of enforcement officer who would not be available to most of the police forces, and it was indicated to us that, in any event, more pressing problems of criminal law enforcement would, as far as our police forces are concerned, take priority over the inspection of packing houses.

5. A Criminal Code provision might force out of business many smaller plants who found that they could not afford the expensive type of installation which would undoubtedly be used by the larger plants and who, finding themselves unable to afford these sure-fire methods, would not be prepared to run the risk of using some other method and thus the risk of being branded as criminals. Such a development would have the effect of further concentrating the meat packing business in the hands of a few large organizations.

6. The attempt to particularize in order to meet legitimate objections would have the effect of turning the bill into a form of regulation rather than legislation and thus into one of doubtful validity as criminal law. On the other hand, or on the other side of the picture, if we merely enact a Criminal Code provision of broad general application in order to meet that objection, this would have the effect of extending its scope to such an extent as to make potential criminals out of farmers who kill animals on their own farm for their own consumption, for which purpose it is obviously not sensible to require the installation of expensive slaughter devices.

In the face of these formidable difficulties we sought an alternative approach which would not be open to this type of objection. We accordingly turned our attention back to a consideration of the Meat and Canned Foods Act which we had previously considered but had rejected in favour of the approach by way of the Criminal Code. That act provides for inspection of all animals intended for slaughter in any establishment as defined in the act, and also authorizes the governor in council to make regulations for the carrying out of the provisions of the act. In view of the difficulties we had encountered under the Criminal Code approach, we came to the conclusion that a satisfactory alternative might well be found by way of amendment to the Meat and Canned Foods Act which would establish, or give power to establish, the conditions and methods by which slaughter must be carried on in any establishment in order for it to conform to the requirements of the legislation.

I should point out that when we had considered this possibility previously it had been rejected on the grounds that there was at that time no agreement as to whether specific humane killing devices then being considered would in fact be effective or feasible for use in commercial operations. In view of this disagreement and uncertainty at that time it did not seem wise to contemplate making regulations requiring the use of specific devices about whose suitability there was such widespread question.

Since then, however, there has been a great deal of further active research. New devices have been discovered, and devices already in existence have been modified and perfected, particularly in the case of electrical stunning machinery. As a result of our latest discussions with experts in this field, we now believe that it is practicable to make regulations which can be adapted to different types and sizes of operation, and yet ensure that in each case a properly supervised and workable method of humane killing will be installed.

There are, it is true, advantages and disadvantages to both approaches. In view of the advances and discoveries which have recently been made, however, the approach now being discussed by way of amendment to the Meat and Canned Foods Act seems to be the most feasible one. The main considerations in its favour are as follows.

1. Since it is obvious that what is needed is regulation and supervision, action under the Meat and Canned Foods Act, which in its very essence is an inspection regulation scheme, will accomplish the objective most readily without any question of jurisdiction or validity of that legislation.

2. The regulation under such an inspection scheme will be effective, uniform and scientific, and enforcement will also be uniform and effective, because enforcement will be under the supervision of one authority instead of widely diversified authorities with different interpretations resulting in confusion and hardship to a legitimate industry. Trained inspectors will be available for the purpose.

3. Under such a proposal, the necessary detailed regulations can be made which will permit the ensuring of the over-all objective while at the same time adapting the requirements to the circumstances and needs of individual operators. Without relaxing the over-all standard—namely that killing must be by a humane method—nevertheless there can be variation, under an effective scheme of supervision, as between different sizes and types of operation. Thus the absence of the element of rigidity necessary in criminal legislation will avoid making criminals out of those who have no criminal intent.

4. This new approach should remove the objections which have been made by so many under the other approach, especially the objections of law enforcement officers, and thus should ensure that the objective is achieved with the co-operation of all concerned instead of arousing potential hostility and criticism from provincial authorities and farm organizations.

In the foregoing, Mr. Speaker, I have tried to summarize for the house the salient features of both these proposals which the government has so far worked out. From what I have said, I think it will be obvious that our view at present is that the second proposal is the best and most practicable way of achieving the objective upon which, I am sure, all are agreed. But the main purpose of this resolution is to enable a committee of the House of Commons to study the whole question and to decide for itself what course it thinks is the best one to follow. It is the view of the government that in a matter of this kind we should not take rigid positions, and that the members of all parties should have an opportunity to hear and consider all the suggestions that may be advanced as to how the problem should be solved.

The government proposes therefore to make available to the committee, if this resolution carries, two draft bills, one embodying each of the proposals that we have so far had under study. The government will welcome the assistance of the committee in perfecting either of these proposals or, if the committee wishes, in working out and recommending any new legislative scheme which commends itself to the committee.

By referring this subject in this way to the standing committee on agriculture, the house will ensure that the fullest and freest inquiry is made to enable members to arrive at a determination of this problem. I should remind hon. members of the terms of reference of the standing committee, as found at page 803 of Hansard for February 9 of this session. By the usual routine motion made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) immediately the committees were constituted, this house provided:

> That the standing committees of this house be severally empowered to examine and inquire into all such matters and things as may be referred to them by the house, and to report from time to time their observations and opinions thereon, with power to send for persons, papers and records.

If the resolution is adopted the committee would be enabled immediately to commence its inquiries and to call before it representatives of such interested bodies as may wish to come or the committee may wish to hear and whom the committee considers qualified and able to assist it in its study. The government of course will be only too glad to co-operate with the committee in making available officials from the Department of Agriculture and my own department, or any others who may be desired, to assist and advise. Since the committee is empowered to report from time to time its opinions and recommendations it will be possible for the committee to recommend which course it thinks most suitable or, if it wishes, to suggest some alternative proposal. It is our hope that the committee will commence this important work without delay. There are, I know, several organizations who are prepared as soon as they receive word to appear before the committee.

Mr. Speaker, the government regrets, as I know all members of the house do, that the difficult and complicated nature of this problem has so far prevented a final solution. But I believe we are entitled to take some credit for the efforts that have been made so far; it is also fair to say that as a result of these efforts, and as a result of the readiness of this government to look for and implement an acceptable course of action, we are now very near a final solution. If this resolution passes, as I trust it will, then with the help of the committee to whom this subject is now being referred we expect and intend to bring in legislation at this session.

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): Mr. Speaker, this is a very simple resolution and one with which we find ourselves in complete agreement. Indeed, there is hardly any basis for disagreement, because the resolution simply proposes to send the subject of humane slaughtering of food animals to a standing committee. The motion itself does not give any direction to the committee, and the minister implied that this was not necessary because that is taken care of in the terms of reference of the standing committee on agriculture.

However, after listening to the long history of this subject and the experience which the minister himself has had now since he took office and became interested in this matter, and since he introduced bills to deal with this problem, one cannot help but think that the committee would be in a much better position to advise this house and help the government toward a solution of this problem if it were presented with a bill or some legislation upon which we could go to work. A study—

Mr. Fulton: Excuse me, but perhaps the hon. member missed the passage in which I said it is our intention to lay before the committee two draft proposals, one which we think is best and one which we think is second best, so that the committee will have something concrete with which to work.

Mr. Carter: I am very sorry. I knew there was reference to two bills, but I missed the point where the minister said it was to be referred to the committee.

Mr. Fulton: They will be made available.

Mr. Carter: Yes. They are draft bills only. Of course, this subject appeals to all of us, because the subject of the prevention of cruelty to animals certainly appeals to our humanitarian instincts. I think everybody would agree that that principle should be incorporated in our legislation. But if we bring in legislation at this time to deal with this problem no doubt we will take a great deal of credit upon ourselves, as the hon. minister has already done for his efforts in this matter and as other countries have done who have already brought in similar legislation. However, I cannot feel very proud of the fact that we, as Canadians, are so insensitive and callous about animals that this kind of legislation is necessary. Surely it does not reflect very much credit on our attitude toward animals if such a thing is so widespread that it can be dealt with only in this way. Speaking personally, I think this legislation, while it may afford some sort of answer, is certainly not the best answer. Education is perhaps a better answer.

The hon. minister has referred to weaknesses in legislation in dealing with this type of problem. Perhaps the main weakness is that having once passed this legislation in this house we will be able to rest our consciences and say that we have done our job. But the end result is what is important. Even if we do pass a bill setting forth certain requirements with regard to humane slaughtering, unless it produces that result we are not any better off. What result is produced by any legislation which we pass in this respect depends, as the hon. minister himself said, upon the provincial authorities, because it is they who are going to enforce this legislation.

One of the things which has caused me concern since I came to the House of Commons is that we have put a great many bills and laws on the statute books and then washed our hands of them because we cannot do anything about them. Certainly if this subject does concern us so much, we should, if we are in earnest about it and want to come to grips with the problem, try to work out some sort of understanding with all the provinces concerned so that we would have their assurance that they, in turn, would make an earnest effort to enforce this legislation to produce the result we want. The fact that the hon. minister mentioned that some of the provincial attorneys general were not too enthusiastic about it does not reassure us that they will make a very great effort to enforce any bill we may pass in this house concerning this problem.

When we deal with the subject of humane slaughtering we are at once up against the fact that it is a very controversial subject. Different peoples and organizations have very different ideas as to what is humane and what is not humane. I do not know how the committee can prevent itself from getting into a sort of academic excursion on this kind of thing. At best, I suppose we can collect all sorts of opinions, but how are we going to get worthwhile scientific advice that a certain course is more humane than another? I was glad that the hon. minister said that the second draft made provision to take care of slaughtering under different situations. For example, it would have to be realistic, and recognized that the individual farmer, the small concern, would not be in the same position to equip themselves with the necessary equipment as the large packing houses. I think we all heartily agree with that approach. However, I gathered from what the minister said that there were going to be variations in the method, and there would also be variations in the degree of humanity in the method.

Mr. Fulton: I never said that for a moment.

Mr. Carter: I know the hon. minister did not say that, but it certainly could be inferred from what was said.

Mr. Fulton: No. Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to have the opportunity of clearing up any misunderstanding there might be. The point I was making there was that this would be done by regulation, sanctioned by an amendment to the Meat and Canned Foods Act, which regulation could prescribe a certain type for one type and size of operation, and another equally humane type of installation for a different type and size of operation. As I recall, I said it must be done without relaxing the over-all standard of killing by a humane method, but that under regulation there could be that flexibility to which I referred.

Mr. Carter: I think I understand perfectly what the hon. minister says, but I still do not know how he can be so sure that each method is humane to the same degree. I would think that would depend upon scientific research and knowledge, which I doubt whether the committee would be in a position to assess.

The motion itself refers only to animals slaughtered for food. But if we are in agreement on the principle of humane slaughter of animals, why should it be confined only to animals slaughtered for food? The principle should extend to all animals. Perhaps the minister will tell us he is confining this measure to animals killed for food because these are the only ones which can be given effective protection. But certainly the principle is the same, and we cannot say it is a crime to slaughter animals intended for food in a particular way but that it is not a crime to slaughter other animals in the same way.

Along the coast of Newfoundland we have the seal hunt, and a great deal of concern has been expressed about the methods employed in the killing of seals. These methods have been handed down for generations; they have been born out of practice and perhaps it would not be easy to change them without upsetting the industry. These animals are not taken for food but I think the same principle should apply to them as applies to other animals. I cannot see any logical reason in why a cow, for example, must be slaughtered humanely and why a seal need not be. In addition, of course, there are animals which are slaughtered in laboratories and in colleges for the purpose of research. Animals are also slaughtered in civic institutions which pick up stray cats and dogs and put them to death. Should we not be interested in their fate, too? Why should we confine our interests only to animals we are going to eat, such as cows, pigs and sheep.

To my mind, the principle is important. If we are going to adopt it, and if we really believe in it, let us not limit its application but try to extend it as far as humanly possible. No doubt all these matters will receive due consideration when the whole question goes before the committee.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, our group is most interested in the motion which is now before the house. I may also say I followed with close attention the closing remarks of the previous speaker because I have for a long time been interested in the entire field of legislation concerning the killing not only of animals but of birds; not only in the destruction of seals but also in the trapping of animals to provide furs for beautiful women and of birds to provide feathers for the use of beautiful women. It is a very broad and interesting subject.

However, this afternoon I wish to confine my remarks to the specific subject matter before us in resolution No. 11. We in this group support the motion. Having heard the remarks made by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton), I am able to say that fully and emphatically. We did have a few doubts on the basis of the wording of the motion itself. However, we remembered the interest taken by the minister in this subject of recent years. We remember Bill No. 241 introduced in December of 1957 and also Bill C-32 introduced in June of 1958 and the very definite statements made by the minister that specific action would be taken this session after interested organizations and individuals had had an opportunity to study the bill and its wider context. But we were a little disturbed when we saw in the motion provision merely for the reference of the subject matter to the committee on agriculture. We wondered just what was going on. However, now that we have the assurance of the minister that two draft bills will be placed before the committee on agriculture, we feel a great deal more content. As a matter of fact, we now look forward with a great deal of confidence to something being done this session, in view of the minister's statement that as far as he is concerned it is the intention to have a bill introduced before the recess if he is able to get the report back in time.

As the previous speaker has pointed out, this is undoubtedly a matter on which there has been some controversy, though not on the question of principle involved. Certainly there could not be any controversy with regard to the principle of the humane slaughter of animals. I noted the remarks made by the minister when he began his statement commending certain organizations for the interest they had taken in this matter.

I should like to add one group to this list —one which I believe he left out inadvertently. I refer to the employees in the packing industry. These are the people who have to do the actual slaughtering and year after year, at conventions of the united packing house workers union, they have asked for legislation which would make humane slaughter of animals compulsory. When one looks at the subject from the point of view of these workers one can really understand the necessity for enacting such legislation. It is true that in this past year some of the packing houses have been making changes but formerly, at any rate, any hon. members who have gone through packing houses would have found animals being killed with sledge hammers. If the hammer hits right, the animal is stunned and that is it. But when you have a restive animal, or an animal with an unusually thick skull, if the hammer just does not hit right the animal does not lose consciousness and one must consider not only the terrible pain suffered by the animal but also the harmful reaction on the human being who has to wield the sledge hammer and who has to go back on the floor to try to knock the animal unconscious. After the sledge hammer, they use what is known as a shackling chain or a logging chain by means of which the animal is hoisted up. Sometimes the chain slips or breaks and the animal falls down from a considerable height on to the floor. It is understandable why the employees are so insistent and unanimous for the need of some changes being brought about.

I know the interest which the Minister of Justice has taken in this matter and I am not suggesting that there has been any stalling, but may I say that I never understand why this country, which maintains that it is so progressive, should be so many years behind the United Kingdom, Denmark and the Scandinavian countries which have been using methods of humane slaughter for many years.

As to referring this question to a committee for further study, I do admit to some doubt as to whether a committee would be in better position to decide which are the best methods of humane slaughter than, for example, the Department of Justice or the Department of Agriculture or the other organizations which are concerned, on the basis of the studies which have been carried out. I am not going to go into that. If the government feels a doubt but knows something has to be done concerning the problem what better procedure could be followed than to refer it to a committee of members of parliament from all parties? That is a basically good principle.

From my own reading and because of my personal interest in this matter I have learned that there are not less than three practical methods for the slaughter of animals. I shall not take up the time of the house in discussing these because this will be a question for the committee. However, I submit that if it is not already the intention, the Minister of Justice or the Department of Agriculture should prepare a factual, scientific presentation concerning the methods of humane slaughtering. As I said, there are three methods. There is what is known as the captive bolt pistol and concussion stunner, the carbon dioxide method and the one mentioned by the minister, the electrical stunner method.

I would like the assurance of the minister that a scientific brief on each of these methods will be immediately prepared for use by the committee setting out any objections that may exist to any of these methods. I have never heard any objections to the first or second methods I mentioned but I understand there is some slight objection to the electrical stunner method because unless the bleeding knife is used very quickly there can be a certain degree of blood coagulation which is not good with respect to certain types of meat when it goes on the retail counter. However, these are matters that undoubtedly will be considered.

At this time I should like to ask an indirect question which I know the minister will answer later. I am interested in knowing what is the interpretation of the words, "the humane slaughter of food animals." I take it that this would include poultry. Millions of fowl are killed for food in Canada each year. There are three methods in current use for the killing of fowl. You may wring their necks, cut off their heads or use an instrument that has many names but which I have frequently heard referred to as an ice pick knife. The latter is reputed to be the most humane method of their slaughter.

I understand that in Europe and in many parts of the United States a sure-fire method of the humane killing of fowl is used. I refer to the electric knife. I am wondering whether the humane slaughter of poultry will be included in the terms of reference of this question? We in this group feel it should be included.

There was one matter on which the minister did not enlarge. Perhaps I can understand why because it is highly controversial and delicate matter for discussion. However, it is not a question we can avoid. I was hoping to hear more from the minister concerning ritual slaughter. I appreciate that it presents a problem but it is a question we cannot ignore. This is a matter upon which there must be a clear understanding.

I personally do not wish to see action taken that would hurt the beliefs of any religious group with respect to their ritual but at the same time I cannot conceive of a religious group, no matter what it is, objecting to some form of humane slaughter. I know that last year this raised a problem in the mind of the minister. I do not have the record here but if I recall correctly the minister explained last year that the question of ritual slaughter represented one reason why the matter will be delayed for further study. I sincerely hope that in the interval an answer has been found that will not interfere with the religious beliefs of any group with respect to dietary practice and that will ensure the humane slaughter of animals.

I believe I have dealt with the main points we in this group have in mind. I am in accord with the approach the minister has taken with respect to priority being given to consideration of the Meat and Canned Foods Act. It is my hope that he will have a bill to introduce at this session. We appreciate the clear exposition given to us concerning what the minister has in mind with respect to the procedure to be followed concerning the bills. We in this group are heartily in accord with this procedure and support the motion now before us.

Mr. Speaker: I must inform the house that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, there are one or two comments that have been made by speakers in support of the motion which I think should be answered now in order that the answers may be on the record before the committee in so far as the intention of the government is concerned. Of course, the committee is the master of its own procedure but to the extent that it may be of assistance in terms of guidance to the committee it may be useful to have this information on the record.

The hon. member for Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Carter) referred to the difficulty—the sort of moral problem—we have here in enacting legislation in parliament and then perhaps being tempted to sit back and say, "we have now put the legislation on the statute books and so we have done everything that is necessary." As he said, we so often leave it to the provincial authorities to enforce these laws. That indeed was one of the weaknesses of the Criminal Code approach and it is one of the reasons why we felt that a more sound approach—once some other problems had been solved—would be by regulation under the Meat and Canned Foods Act because if it is done by regulation under that act then the enforcement will be a dominion responsibility and the same authority that has passed the legislation will have the moral responsibility of enforcing it thereafter.

The hon. member also mentioned the problem—the moral problem again, if you like,—of passing legislation to deal with one category of animals, namely food animals, and leaving out some others. He referred specifically to the question of municipal pounds and the municipal authorities who round up stray animals and have them destroyed. The only answer I can give to that question is that we can only take action and deal with those things over which we have jurisdiction and control. Where particular municipal authorities provide by bylaw for the destruction of stray or injured animals, I would think that it was no great problem at all for the municipal voters concerned to ensure that the municipal authorities will also see to it that slaughter is done by humane methods.

The same general remarks might be made with respect to one aspect of the speech of the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch). I can assure the hon. member for Vancouver East that it is our intention to make our officials, both in my department and in the Department of Agriculture, available to give the fullest evidence, help and advice, if asked for, to the committee both with regard to the legal problems and the implications of those problems and with regard to scientific and technical aspects of humane killing devices. The Department of Agriculture particularly has one or two, if not more, that I know personally, very highly qualified experts who have done a great deal of research in this field, whose evidence would I think be very valuable to that committee.

The hon. gentleman also asked whether the use of words "food animals" in the terms of reference was sufficiently inclusive to permit of the committee inquiring into the humane killing of poultry. Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, I prefer the words "humane killing" to the words "humane slaughter" because it seems to me to be a contradiction in terms. I think the words "humane killing", while not altogether void of some contradictory aspects, are more logical and fitting to use.

In the draft bill we first introduced under the Criminal Code it is true that poultry were not defined as food animals, the reason being at that time we were informed that there has been no agreement that a device has yet been developed which was capable of application to the poultry killing industry all across Canada. I understand now—this is confirmed by what the hon. gentleman himself has said—there have been improvements made in the methods of killing poultry and, certainly in so far as the terms of reference are concerned, it would be my view that the term "food animals" is wide enough to include poultry. I can see no reason for suggesting that there should be any limitation if the committee wants to look into that. Again, the committee is master of its own procedure. If it wishes to discuss poultry under these terms of reference there would be no reason why it should not.

Lastly, with respect to the matter of ritual slaughter, I recognize fully it is a problem on which I think the committee will want to receive evidence. The problem there is not so much in the slaughter itself, the actual killing of the animal, as it is in the steps which must be taken in preparing the animal for the stroke of the knife. I am informed that, properly carried out, this method of killing the animal is as humane as any method yet devised. The stroke of the knife produces instant unconsciousness, but the problem in large packing plants is to find a method of controlling the animal so that it can be held steady for that scientific stroke of the knife. Frankly, under the Criminal Code approach we found that we either had to make a blanket exception of ritual slaughter, in which case we were told the inference drawn by those concerned was that we were branding their method of slaughter as cruel, —they said, "It is not cruel at all"—or else go into such detail in the proposed enactment that it would not have been criminal law at all; it would have been the purest and simplest regulation and a regulation which, as I said before, was not sound criminal law. It was one of the main reasons why we felt we should go back and have another look at the other approach. Under the other approach it was suggested that we could make detailed regulations which are valid, sound and enforceable as to steps that must be complied with in the preparation of animals for slaughter in accordance with religious ritual which you cannot do under the Criminal Code. Therefore, from that point of view alone it seemed to us that the new approach was much the soundest way to deal with the problem.

The committee will certainly have evidence on that subject before it as well as on all others which will enable it to make up its mind as to what is the best form of legislation to report back to the house.

Motion agreed to.

FISHERIES IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

FURTHER AMENDMENTS RESPECTING GUARANTEED LOANS ON FISHING VESSELS

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to provide in the proposed measure to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, Bill C-30, now before the house, that a guaranteed loan may be made to a person who, at one time, had an interest in a fishing vessel but no longer has such an interest or to a person who desires to acquire an interest in a fishing vessel for the first time.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Rea in the chair.

Mr. Howard: Is the minister going to make a statement?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the members of the committee will recall that when the resolution preceding Bill C-30 was before the committee of the whole for discussion on February 24, the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg put forward a suggestion, which was concurred in and supported by several other hon. members, that the scope of the lending provisions of the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act should be enlarged so that a guaranteed loan might be made to a person who at one time had an interest in a fishing vessel but no longer has such an interest, or to a person who desires to acquire an interest in a fishing vessel for the first time. Such persons are not now included within the lending provisions of the act, and the present resolution is designed to permit the amendment of Bill C-30 to enlarge the provisions of the act in the manner proposed by those hon. members on February 24.

Mr. Pickersgill: Will you call it five o'clock, Mr. Chairman?

The Deputy Chairman: It being five o'clock it is my duty to leave the chair in order to permit the house to proceed to the consideration of private and public bills.

Progress reported.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private and public bills pursuant to standing order 15(3). There being no business under private bills, the house will now take up public bills.

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR PRINTING OF NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS IN BOTH ENGLISH AND FRENCH

On the order:

Second reading of Bill C-9, an act respecting the printing of negotiable instruments in the English and the French languages.

Mr. Pigeon: Stand.

Mr. Godin: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order it seems to me that the hon. member has asked twice that this bill stand. The question is before the house and many members of the opposition groups are interested in this matter and would like it dealt with in a very short time by having a vote taken on it.

Mr. Green: This is not a point of order at all. The hon. member has a perfect right to stand his bill just as the other hon. members have stood theirs. No point of order whatever has been raised by the hon. member.

(Translation):

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I point out that the former hon. member for Beauce has let his bill stand, as did some other Liberal and C.C.F. members. I am therefore entitled to do so today, if I am not ready.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: On the point of order, I may say that the hon. member who moves a bill, subject to objection being taken by the government, has the right to pass his turn under standing order 19 (1) which says:

Questions put by members and notices of motions, not taken up when called may (upon the request of the government) be allowed to stand and retain their precedence; otherwise they will disappear from the order paper. They may, however, be renewed.

(2) Orders not proceeded with when called, upon the like request, may be allowed to stand retaining their precedence; otherwise they shall be dropped and be placed on the order paper for the next sitting after those of the same class at a similar stage.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT TO EXTEND ABSENTEE VOTING PROVISIONS

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena) moved the second reading of Bill C-16, to amend the Canada Elections Act (absentee voting).

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill, as indicated on the order paper, is to so amend our elections act as to allow for a system of voting called absentee voting. Perhaps I should explain that there is confusion sometimes in the minds of some people as between a system of absentee voting and the system of advance polls. The advance polls are special polling days, the Thursday, Friday and Saturday of the week preceding election day, upon which only certain selected classes of people may vote. The absentee system of voting is such as to allow an elector, on the normal election day, to vote at a polling station other than the one in which he is registered. It is an attempt to ensure, to the broadest possible extent, that the right of citizens to vote and the opportunity of citizens to vote at elections are guaranteed.

This bill, while it certainly may not be complete in all details, is as complete as it possibly can be, having in mind our present act. It was patterned after the system of absentee balloting now in effect in the provinces of British Columbia and Saskatchewan. In addition to that, it was drafted in consultation with the very capable law officers of the crown. Not only do we have this system of allowing people to vote if they are absent from their home town on election day in British Columbia and Saskatchewan, but there is something akin to it in the province of Ontario. However, in Ontario the provision is confined to one group of people, namely mariners. This is a system of proxy voting whereby a mariner who is absent may authorize a relative to cast a vote for him.

This bill envisages two types of ballot: one, the ordinary ballot to which we have all been accustomed with the names of the candidates printed thereon, and the other a special ballot paper which would be used by people who were absent from the constituency within which they are registered. This would be a blank ballot in order that the name of the candidate for whom the person wishes to vote may be printed in the blank space or blank spaces if there are multi-member constituencies involved.

There has been a considerable amount of discussion in past years about this, and in every session objections have been raised to the effect that it would be almost impossible to institute such a system as would extend from British Columbia to Newfoundland. The objection concerns the time involved when a person registered in British Columbia happened to be in Newfoundland on election day, and that ballot cast in Newfoundland has to be returned to British Columbia. In an attempt to overcome that difficulty this time the absentee voting is to be confined to the province within which a person is registered or to an adjacent province. In this way, three provinces could be covered by the absentee balloting provision. An attempt is made also to lengthen the period of time between nomination day and election day. At the moment the act provides for a nomination day 28 days before the election day for ridings in the northern part of Canada in which the people are scattered far and wide. This applies to the riding I represent. The majority of constituencies in Canada have their nomination day 14 days before election day. This bill seeks to make the 28-day period between nomination day and election day universally applicable.

The purpose of this provision is to allow a sufficient length of time to prepare the ballots and get them out to all parts of Canada, that is the special and ordinary ballots. It would also allow the chief electoral officer to compile a list of candidates running in each constituency in the adjoining provinces so that each deputy returning officer, on election day, would have a list of the candidates running in each electoral district from which the absentee voter would be able to vote.

There are many hundreds of people in Canada who are now denied the opportunity to vote on election day because there is no such absentee balloting system in effect. They are denied this opportunity through no fault of their own. These people find it necessary, for business or other reasons, to be away from their home town or away from their home province on election day. I can think of a number of categories of people who find themselves in this situation. I would refer particularly to loggers who, because of the weather or because of their natural desire to get home, may find themselves either working or at some logging camp that is not in the same constituency as the one in which they were registered when the election was called. Fishermen are in somewhat the same position.

Many fishermen are not now able to fall within the provisions provided for them on advance poll voting, especially when they are some distance from the mainland and when they are away from their home town and when they operate out of camps and so on such as we do on the west coast. The advance poll system is not of too much benefit to them. The absentee system of balloting would afford them an opportunity to cast their ballot in the way that many others of us have the right to do. Our construction workers likewise move from one project to another, often times working for the same company. For some reason or another they are transferred to a different construction project and find themselves unable to cast their ballots. This absentee system would afford them that opportunity. Transport employees are in somewhat the same category as are fishermen. Provision is there for advance poll voting but many of them do not find themselves at home within the three days which are allowed for advance poll voting.

Lawyers are another group of people who would be affected. On the day after the election in June, while I would not say I was accosted, I was speaking on the street with a good friend of mine who is a lawyer. I may say that I have a friend who is a lawyer. He was upset because he had been denied the right to vote because he had been away from his home town on a case. He was obliged to go to a sitting of the county court on election day. He had to go to some city, at any rate—I think it was of the county court—and he could not cast his ballot. Under this system he would be able to do so. Then travelling salesmen might be mentioned.

The list could be almost as long as your arm of people who, because of the category of work they have, because of demands on their time, because of the necessity of moving or travelling, find that they are not able to ballot. Candidates are in somewhat the same position, although there is some provision for them. The Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), for instance, in his cross-country tour at election time could easily find himself away from his home constituency. I do not know whether that is Prince Albert or Ottawa. Whatever it is, however, he could very easily find himself away from it and not be able to cast his ballot for the candidate of his choice, whoever that might happen to be. The other cabinet ministers could certainly find themselves in the same position.

In recent years there has been some talk about cutting down the period of time for campaign purposes by reducing the number of days between the calling of the election or the issuance of the writ of election and election day itself. Those who believe that this is necessary, or believe that it should be done, believe that with the improvements in the mediums of communication and such we do not need a two month or three month period for election campaigns. They are also of the opinion that in order to cut down the time of holding elections we should have a system of permanent registration of voters. We have that system in some provinces. While a permanent voters' list is not provided for in this particular bill, nevertheless I think it is an integral part of establishing a system of absentee balloting, although it is not absolutely necessary. But if we are going to curtail the period of time for election purposes, we may find the result to be as has happened in the province of British Columbia where we did curtail that time. We found that the period for registration of voters is also curtailed and that people's opportunity of even getting on the voters' list is lessened much more than it is at the present time.

I am not particularly married to every word that is in this bill of which I have now moved second reading. I am concerned about the principle of ensuring to the greatest possible degree that people have the opportunity to exercise their right to ballot. As I have said, many hundreds are now denied that right for one reason or another, through no fault of their own. The speech from the throne indicated that the elections act would be referred to the standing committee on privileges and elections. I for one wish that the government would hurry up and do it before this session is over so that we could start consideration of it. But, as I said earlier on another bill, if any hon. member would like to make a motion that this bill be not read a second time but that it be referred to the standing committee on privileges and elections in order that they may deal with the subject matter only of the absentee ballot and report thereon to the house, I should be more than happy to accept that procedure. Does the hon. member wish to ask a question?

Mr. McGee: Yes; I have a question. I was wondering what effect this bill would have, if it is passed, on balloting and the final result of any given election?

Mr. Howard: I do not think it would have a great effect upon the over-all results of the election itself, unless the results of the election were close as, for instance, if we elected 125 of one party and 126 of another. On election night, with absentee balloting that could change one or two seats, we would not know the over-all results. Within the province of British Columbia we are able to know within three weeks or 21 days between election day and the final counting of the ballots.

The procedural problem is this. When a person casts an absentee ballot, he is given a ballot. He marks it and he puts it in an envelope. This is what is in effect in the province of British Columbia where we have a permanent system of registering voters. The voter signs a card when he registers. When he votes he signs his name on the front of an envelope. That envelope with the ballot in it is put in the ballot box. On election night it is opened and that particular one is then mailed to the returning officer of the constituency where the person voted and this period of time is allowed for all of these ballots to get from each returning officer to every other returning officer. The returning officer then checks the signature on the envelope against the signature on the card. If they are the same, and it is the same voter, he opens the envelope, takes the ballot out and puts it in the ballot box. There is no violation of the secrecy of the vote, none whatever, unless only one absentee ballot was cast or unless all the voters voted for the same candidate, in which case it would not matter anyway. That happens in some instance where there is a 100 per cent ballot for one party or candidate or another.

But the time lag, as I mentioned, in one province may be longer than that, as the bill proposes, if we are to consider adjacent provinces. For instance the provinces adjacent to Quebec would be Ontario and New Brunswick. May be New Brunswick and Ontario would have a longer period of time. But with postal facilities as they are, I do not think it would be much longer than that time lag. Certainly the results would be known on election night unless the voting was fairly close so that a few votes one way or the other could alter the results. But so far as knowing the results of the election itself is concerned, we would know them on election night.

I think I have fairly well summed up the thoughts I have on the matter, Mr. Speaker. As I said earlier and as I should like to reiterate, the details of the bill are ones that I have envisaged. They are taken from our British Columbia legislation and were adapted to fit our present federal act. Has the hon. member another question?

Mr. McGee: I was wondering what percentages are involved. From the practical and actual experience in British Columbia, what percentage of the total vote take advantage of this opportunity?

Mr. Howard: I have not the results here with me but I can give you an idea. I cannot give you the figures province-wide because I do not think they averaged out the full number of voters in the province, but I can give you an idea in constituencies. For instance, in Skeena, the provincial riding of the same name, use of this was made by 4.7 per cent of the voters voting by absentee ballot. In another riding, that of Atlin, which is to the far north, the occupancies of many people living there take them away from their homes at election time, which is normally in June, and it is up to as high as 12 or 14 per cent. However, I may be mistaken in those figures. In an urban riding it may be relatively small, depending on the occupancies of the people. I am not concerned with every little detail set out in the bill. What I am concerned with is giving every opportunity to people to use their absentee ballot on election day. I am sure the committee will review the elections act, and I hope it will take this matter into consideration. I think it would be extremely courteous of this house if we were to say to that committee that we would like them specifically to study this particular matter if the house does not desire to give the bill second reading.

Mr. E. J. Broome (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, this is an involved bill and one which has as its main objective something which every member of this house will, I think, be in favour of, namely to make it possible for the voter to exercise his franchise. I know in the previous session I myself had items on the order paper dealing with advance polls, and I believe that there will be bills coming up on advance polls all with the same idea, namely to make it possible for the voter to cast his ballot for the candidate of his choice.

There are, however, in the particular bill presented to us now certain aspects of operation which should be considered. I know that the hon. member will say that they can be considered in committee; but since this is the first time that this particular bill has come before the house, I think certain consideration should be given to these various phases. For instance, in Hansard of July 4, 1956, Mr. Barnett, the former member for Comox-Alberni, when the estimates of the Secretary of State were being considered, and in particular the office of the chief electoral officer, pointed out the difficulties which the fishermen in his riding were having in that an election poll during the summer months pretty well disenfranchised them. The same is true, as the hon. member pointed out, of construction workers, lumber workers, and so on. Mr. Barnett, in speaking of this, said, as reported on page 5667 of Hansard:

> Actually the only feasible way I have been able to think of for dealing with it would be by the introduction into our election act of the absentee vote. I realize there may be a great many practical difficulties in the way of the introduction of the absentee vote into our federal elections act, particularly if it were to have application across the whole country. However, I do feel it could be written into the act in a form that would apply at least within the boundaries of a given province.

Of course, Mr. Barnett was referring to the fact that in the province of British Columbia we already have such a system in use in regard to provincial elections, as the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) has pointed out. However, I was interested in going back to the committee on privileges and elections for the year 1955 when the chief electoral officer appeared before that committee and where the very point that the hon. member has brought up was raised by various members of that committee. I do not want to quote at extreme length, but there is a statement by the chief electoral officer which bears on this particular bill. The statement starts at the bottom of page 53 of the minutes, where the chief electoral officer is attempting to tell the committee how such a system as is proposed in this bill would work. He says:

> I cannot answer those questions.

They were questions by members of the committee in regard to the absentee vote.

> I am not advocating that this system be adopted. I am merely explaining the mechanics it would take to provide extra facilities for electors to vote who are absent from their polling divisions in Canada or outside Canada. I am trying to explain the change which would be involved if such facilities are to be provided.
> Some members of this committee have been candidates at the election with permanent lists in 1935. I think you will recall that that one experience turned out to be a failure. They had also provided absentee voting in 1935, and that experience also turned out to be a failure. At the same time this system is working out satisfactorily in other countries and I now wish to explain to the committee the mechanics involved. Taking the vote of people who are not only absent outside Canada—

The committee were there discussing people outside Canada, and that is not relevant. He goes on to say:

> A permanent list requires a biennial, triennial or quadrennial revision.
> That is where they have these permanent lists. These revisions are a house to house canvass. To a permanent list you attach these facilities. The first is by a postal envelope very similar to the envelope supplied to members of the Canadian forces. For people absent from their home polling division within Canada, they are supplied with a ballot and an envelope and they write in on a ballot paper the name of the candidate for whom they wish to vote in their constituency, and that ballot is placed in the envelope and put in the ballot box.

Then the chief electoral officer went on to explain the varied safeguards which are necessary in the casting of an absentee ballot, and I am sure the hon. member for Skeena would not like to see any letting down of our guard as far as safeguards in regard to the casting of ballots is concerned. A system such as absentee balloting could lend itself to abuse if these safeguards were not present. I believe it is not within the rules of the house that I should quote at extreme length, but the electoral officer goes on to explain the various safeguards which are necessary if a system of absentee balloting is to be used.

Mr. Howard: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Broome: Yes.

Mr. Howard: I wonder if the hon. member would agree that in our legislation in British Columbia sufficient safeguards are there to prevent abuse? I mean, as much as is possible to do so.

Mr. Broome: I have not had the privilege, as the hon. member has had, of running in provincial elections, so I only have a nodding acquaintance with those regulations and I am afraid I am not competent to say whether there are sufficient safeguards. If the hon. member for Skeena says that there are, then I am quite willing to accept his statement.

Mr. Howard: The member is very gracious.

Mr. Broome: Further on in the discussions of this committee, the former member for Vancouver-Burrard, Mr. MacDougall, made the statement on page 55 of the minutes that every day in the city of Vancouver for 365 days of the year there are more than 475 changes of address. He went on to point out that this would, of course, apply in a greater degree to the cities of Montreal and Toronto, and also to Winnipeg. That seems a strange statement for someone coming from Vancouver to make, because the problems of Winnipeg would, of course, be much smaller.

This system of permanent lists means a permanent register and a permanent staff. If the list is taken on a biennial basis it means it is closed as of, say, February 1. Then if an election is held on July 1, all changes between February 1 and July 1 have not been entered on the permanent list. This presents a problem, and I am not sure how it would be overcome. Hon. members know that mailing out to constituencies even now represents a major problem, and so far as I can read in the record of the committee I find no place where either the officials or the members point out how that difficulty can be overcome. As hon. members know, under our present elections act, enumeration begins 48 days before polling day and carries on for about six days. Later, the lists are published and provision is made for revision in urban ridings. In rural ridings there are no courts of revision, and anyone can vote by making an affidavit and being vouched for by another voter from the district where the person desiring to vote claims to reside. All these are checks and safeguards which have been mentioned by the chief electoral officer and which constitute perhaps the prime responsibility borne by that officer, namely to see that the election is honestly carried out. I have felt that what worried this official most throughout his evidence was that he could not be assured as to how well these safeguards would work under a system of absentee voting.

The hon. member for Skeena has limited the problem to some degree by making his proposal applicable only to provinces adjacent to provinces where the person concerned happens to reside, but this in itself seems to be begging the question. I think that if absentee voting is the right thing to have, and if it can be carried out it should be carried out on a national basis, providing it is worth while, as it is carried out in the United Kingdom or in other nations of the commonwealth. The fact that it adds to the complexity of the situation means only that it adds to that complexity by adding to the numbers and by adding to the time which must elapse before a definite result can be brought in.

There is an old political story which may have some application here, I will not say which party it concerns. Driving through a certain province, the leader of a certain party had one of his lieutenants for that province stop his car to visit the grave of a friend who was a member of the opposite party. He turned to his lieutenant and said: this man was one of my best friends but unfortunately he did not vote the right way. And his friend said: well, he has been dead for 16 years and he has been voting for me all those 16 years. That is an old political story, but it does illustrate that we cannot be too careful in regard to the safeguards applied to ensure against fraud, and I should think that the complications added by this system of absentee voting would immeasurably complicate the task which our chief electoral officer and his returning officers have to undertake.

The suggestion that this matter should be sent to a committee for study is, I feel, unnecessary because the elections act will no doubt be discussed as a matter of course, and there will be the same type of examination as was carried out in 1955 when amendments were made to the act on the advice of the officials who are charged with the responsibility for carrying on elections. For this reason I believe that anything we say here will most likely be repeated during the hearings of the committee. All I can do is emphasize the fact that according to everything I have been able to find out in regard to absentee voting, it hinges on a permanent list. The bill might just as well have included a provision for setting up a permanent voters list, because this is the only basis upon which a scheme of absentee voting can be carried out. The setting up of such a permanent list involves further complications; I have only referred to some of these complications in the remarks I have made.

I know this system has worked in other countries and that it has worked in at least two provinces. At least I am taking the hon. member's word that it has worked well for him as a candidate in British Columbia, and I presume, therefore, that it has worked as well for other candidates. But with regard to the constituencies of Skeena and Atlin I must say that these are vast ridings and, as the hon. member pointed out, because of the nature of the activities of the people who work in those ridings it is normal for a large proportion of the population to be unable to attend the poll on the day of an election. But this would not be true of urban ridings to anything like the same extent.

Mr. Howard: Do you know what the statistics are in regard to urban ridings?

Mr. Broome: No. I am speaking on the basis of my own knowledge of urban ridings. Does the hon. member for Skeena have that information?

Mr. Howard: I do not have it with me. Moreover, if I were to speak now I would be closing the debate, and I do not think that would be fair to other hon. members.

Mr. Broome: I think the absentees in the ridings of Skeena and Atlin are high; I do not think they would be so high in urban ridings. Perhaps we should consider some system of broadening the scope of advance polls. I believe it is pertinent to mention advance polls while we are speaking on the subject, because the whole intent of this bill is to make it possible for all Canadians to exercise the franchise. I agree that the advance poll system is not as effective a mechanism as it might be, but it does offset some of the injustices which have been experienced. I am quite prepared to admit—and I have stated this before in this chamber—that the advance poll set-up needs to be reorganized. At present it is too limited in scope, and perhaps it is not in effect long enough before voting day.

Mr. Speaker, I feel I may summarize my position in these words. The question of allowing people to exercise their franchise is a matter of concern to all hon. members and it may be tackled in many different ways. This bill represents one way. From what I have been able to determine it lends itself to many complications. I believe every hon. member of the house should give each clause of the bill most intense study.

(Translation):

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to point out to the house that the hon. member for Skeena took twenty-five minutes to explain the contents of his bill, which proves that the bill is so complicated that we could not consider it all today. I understand the bill provides for certain amendments to the Canada Elections Act. In fact, I even wonder whether it is being introduced for the purpose of amending the act, or simply with a view to some political advantage. Besides, Mr. Speaker, it is no surprise that such bills should come—

(Text):

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Valade: I should think the hon. gentleman would let me continue my remarks before interrupting but I invite him to go ahead.

Mr. Howard: It may be that the words that came over the translation system have given me an incorrect impression, but I take it that my hon. friend suggests that I should not have taken 25 minutes to introduce this bill. Am I to conclude that he feels I should have curtailed my remarks to one or two minutes in attempting to cover all the points that I felt were of interest to the house?

Mr. Valade: I did not mean that, Mr. Speaker.

(Translation):

I was simply saying that, in view of the number of bills introduced by the C.C.F. party, in connection with the Canada Elections Act, that is Bill C-10, introduced by the C.C.F. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher); Bill C-11 introduced by the C.C.F. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters); Bill C-13 introduced by the member for Skeena (Mr. Howard); Bill C-15, introduced by the member for Skeena; Bill C-16, introduced by the member for Skeena, and Bill C-17, introduced by the member for Skeena (all those bills provide for amendments to the Canada Elections Act, I wonder whether it is not an amendment race with regard to the Canada Elections Act, or whether our friends are sincere in introducing bills to amend an act which is as important as the Canada Elections Act. But, I will say, Mr. Speaker—

(Text):

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member is questioning my sincerity in introducing various bills. I request quite earnestly that he withdraw that statement.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I do not question the sincerity of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard). I am questioning the sincerity of the group he represents.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I have only 15 minutes at my disposal and the hon. gentleman took 25 minutes to make his statement.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, my point of order will meet at least one of the objectives of my hon. friend. He will get to six o'clock quicker than he normally would if I speak again at this time. I have introduced certain bills which appear on the order paper in my name. The hon. gentleman who is now speaking has cast a reflection upon my sincerity with respect to those bills and I suggest he withdraw his remarks as far as I am personally concerned.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member continues I cannot be accused of killing his bill because he will have killed it himself.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Just so that we may clarify the matter may I say that I am under the impression the hon. member for St. Mary (Mr. Valade) withdrew his reflection on the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) personally and is reflecting only on the bills the C.C.F. group has introduced.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, may I make it quite clear that I was not referring specifically to the hon. member for Skeena as a person. I will now return to the question and continue my remarks in French because I know my hon. friend enjoys the translation system.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, I gather from the argument put forward by the hon. member for Skeena that this would allow people who are away at summer camps or taking summer holidays to remain at their cottage or their fishing camp as, under the act suggested by our friends to the left, they could cast their vote in a neighbouring community rather than have to go back to their own riding.

It is the duty of every citizen to go out and vote on election day. I realize that, in a democratic country, a number of people sometimes happen to be "disfranchised", either by circumstance or by illness, travel or professional obligations.

In a democratic country we cannot—and I stress this point so that friends to the left will understand—we cannot force people to go out and vote. We have laws laying down certain conditions with regard to elections, and people have the moral obligation to avail themselves of this opportunity and to exercise their franchise.

In my view this amendment reveals the socializing tendency of the C.C.F. party which would compel people to vote. Fortunately, the Lord is kind to us, Mr. Speaker, and this great leftist group, which is very small in number, will not be able to impose its socializing laws during this or even several other parliaments—as the Conservative government will be in power for a good many years to come.

Mr. Speaker, the bill introduced by the hon. member for Skeena provides for a 28-day extension of the period between nomination of candidates and polling day. I cannot see how this could remedy election day absenteeism.

Extending that period of time will not correct absenteeism. In my view, that part of the bill is probably intended only to serve electoral purposes, and on this point I again emphasize that I am not personally accusing the hon. member for Skeena of being somewhat foolish in his ideas.

The proposal to extend by 14 days the period between nomination day and voting day, as a means of eliminating absenteeism is, I think, a nest of contradictions.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I feel that if we extended that period by 14 days, serious difficulties would result. Possibly the extension of the period might be useful, perhaps necessary, to the candidates in some ridings. Well, such a provision already exists today because schedule 4 of the Canada Elections Act provides for a period of 28 days from the closing day for nominations to the date of the vote in certain electoral districts.

Mr. Speaker, I note that the hon. member is leaving the house.

Schedule 4 of the elections act lists 21 electoral districts where 28 days must elapse between the last day for nominations and voting day. However, Mr. Speaker, such a situation would raise serious difficulties in urban ridings. It is well known that the holding of elections in an urban constituency is a very expensive proposition; candidates are up against tremendous publicity costs. There is also the matter of the meetings to be held which is a most important factor. We should really study this bill carefully before accepting the amendments proposed by our friends to the left. There are very few of them, both in the house and outside, and I understand that in view of their small number, they benefit more than others from this free time provided by the C.B.C. to political parties during an election.

For instance we saw, in the last general election, the obvious fact that no C.C.F. candidate, or practically no candidate, wanted to hold public meetings. They simply nominated candidates in order to get free time on Canadian television, thus spreading through their new organizer, Mr. Michel Chartrand—

(Text):

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Order. I must remind the hon. member that we are not discussing television time; we are discussing absentee voting, a bill to amend the Canada Elections Act. The hon. member will have to keep his remarks relevant to the principle of this bill.

Mr. Winch: How can he? He does not know what it is all about.

Mr. Valade: I believe I was keeping within the spirit of this bill. According to the explanatory note, the purpose of the bill is to entitle an elector to vote on polling day by casting his vote in a polling station other than his own. I think it is relevant to discuss what might occur between nomination day and the polling day and I think I am discussing the principle of the bill, Mr. Speaker. The members of the C.C.F. party wish to extend to themselves the benefit of television programs and I was just referring to the province of Quebec.

(Translation):

Not having campaigned in the province of Quebec, C.C.F.ers used television for their propaganda; that is a practice to which I object. I believe that policy tends to give the small group they represent free time on C.B.C. television, and they use this time for demagogic talk while the public foots the bill.

Mr. Speaker, a serious study of the clauses of this bill reveals that the adoption of subclause 46 A would create a dangerous precedent. It reads:

Notwithstanding any other provision of this act—

(Text):

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Order. I must once again remind the hon. member that he cannot discuss the bill clause by clause. He must discuss only the principle of the bill. I am sure he understands.

Mr. Winch: Are you not being optimistic?

Mr. Valade: I shall take your advice, Mr. Speaker. The bill has 13 clauses. I was referring specifically to clause 4, subclause 46A of the old act. I was not dealing with all the clauses but just one particular clause of the bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): We must discuss the principle of the bill, which is the question of absentee voting. We must not discuss either one clause or two clauses. It does not make any difference; clauses must not be discussed at all. All the clauses must be discussed at once as the principle of the bill.

Mr. Valade: If the hon. member had taken five minutes less time I could have had five minutes more. I will leave that and come back to the principle of the bill.

Mr. Winch: You have not even started on it yet.

Mr. Valade: There is a principle in this bill, Mr. Speaker. The purpose of this bill is to amend the Canada Elections Act. As I said at the beginning of my speech, I notice there are three bills on the order paper to amend the Canada Elections Act.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, I will conclude my remarks in French and I will stick to the principle of the bill. We notice that the true object of the bill is not to avoid election day absenteeism but rather to extend by 28 days the interval between nomination day and election day. In order to discuss this point, Mr. Speaker, I must—

(Text):

Mr. Howard: You are incorrect.

Mr. Valade: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Winch: He said, you are incorrect.

Mr. Valade: I would like the hon. member to tell me where I am incorrect.

Mr. Winch: That will take the rest of the week.

Mr. Valade: The hon. member says it would take a whole week. Why did he present it at such a late hour?

Mr. Winch: There is a misunderstanding. What I meant was, to explain it to you.

(Translation):

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, in order to deal with the principle of the bill, I am forced to interpret subclause 46 B of clause 4 of Bill C-16, as introduced by the hon. member for Skeena. It is said in that clause:

—an elector whose name is on the list—

(Text):

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Order. I am sorry but if the hon. member is not going to take advice from the Chair I will have to ask him to take his seat. The hon. member for Halifax.

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I am rising at a very opportune time. I have not made up my mind as to how I shall vote on this bill.

Mr. Habel: You have until six o'clock.

Mr. McCleave: I do not intend to go further into the remarks of the hon. gentleman but there is one thought that does come to my mind—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Order. The hour for private bills having expired, the house will now revert to the business which was interrupted at five o'clock.

FISHERIES IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

The house resumed consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Fleming (Eglinton)—Mr. Rea in the chair:

That it is expedient to provide in the proposed measure to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, Bill C-30, now before the house, that a guaranteed loan may be made to a person who, at one time, had an interest in a fishing vessel but no longer has such an interest or to a person who desires to acquire an interest in a fishing vessel for the first time.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Pickersgill: There are one or two points I should like to mention before the resolution carries, Mr. Chairman. In the first place, I notice that the resolution states that provision will be made in the bill that a guaranteed loan may be made to a person who at one time had an interest in a fishing vessel but no longer has such an interest, or to a person who desires to acquire an interest in a fishing vessel for the first time. It will not surprise the minister if I ask him whether he has considered whether this would bar any person in Canada who may have owned a fishing vessel at any time. Does he think that there may conceivably be a conflict between this proposed legislation and the Senate and House of Commons Act?

Having asked that question, I would now go on to something about which I expect a more serious answer from the minister. As the minister is well aware, we did have a very brief debate on the original resolution regarding this bill. I regret to say I was unable to be present at that time and so was not able to say a word or two on the proposed measure. I hope the minister will bear with me if I make a few remarks that are not strictly relevant because there are some points upon which I would like him to answer at the committee stage of the bill. What I should really like to be quite sure about is that the bill will make provision for loans to fishermen who, because of the difficulties that were experienced in certain parts of the Atlantic coast and notably in Newfoundland last year, find themselves in very straightened circumstances and who, because of the bad weather, lost part of their gear. I should like to know if the minister feels the act covers that sort of situation.

In order to illustrate my point may I cite a letter which I received just the other day from one of my constituents in Bonavista. Perhaps I could make my point more quickly by reading this letter than in any other way. The letter reads:

Dear Mr. Pickersgill:

I am writing you a note to ask if you could give me any information concerning the fishermen's losses last summer. Is there going to be any assistance for us? I lost my cod trap and all its belongings except my leader—

That does not mean "leader" in the political sense, but that is a part of the fishing gear.

—and I am not in any position to replace it. With the loss of my trap and the very bad summer you can imagine, sir, why I am asking for assistance. I wrote Captain Strickland—

That is the provincial member.

—to ask the Department of Fisheries to help me with a gift or a small loan. I am man enough to pay it back yearly if they could arrange it for me so that I could get another cod trap to fish with. It is not much good for me to write the fisheries loan board for help because I don't want an engine or a boat. I would like to get a loan to use to my own satisfaction so as to cut out credit. Charges are too high on the fishermen. Now, Mr. Pickersgill, you should remember me because I drove out to our fishing place Mifflins cove with you and Mr. Max Little last spring and it is no easy place to work, either.

He is certainly right about that.

Now, sir, do you think you could spare time to drop me a line or two telling me how I can get some help.

This is not an isolated case. Not only was there a very poor fishery, but there was a lot of very bad weather and a great many fishermen lost their gear last year. If they are not able to get some credit in some way there are a great many of these people who are just not going to have the gear necessary to earn their livelihood. If the minister feels that this would be adequately covered by the bill—I am not sure myself whether or not it would—I would appeal to him to make a special appeal to the Bank of Nova Scotia which, after all, is the principal bank so far as the outports of Newfoundland are concerned, to ask them to take special note of this situation.

I am not suggesting for a minute that the minister should urge the bank to make bad loans. There are many of these fishermen who in a normal year would be well able to pay back the loans. They are well known as reputable people. It would be of enormous help in a very, very difficult situation.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, it is a little difficult to say on the facts as stated by the hon. gentleman whether the case will fall within the terms of the act. My hon. friend is aware of the terms of loans provided by the act. These, of course, are not government loans, but they are government-guaranteed bank loans.

The purpose of the amendment which is now before the house is to enlarge the lending provisions of the act to include persons who had an interest in a fishing vessel but no longer have such an interest and persons who desire to acquire an interest in a fishing vessel for the first time. Now, as to the position of the Bank of Nova Scotia, it would not be a proper thing for the Minister of Finance to intervene in individual cases. I cannot take them to the bank but I, of course, will be pleased to draw the remarks of my hon. friend to the attention of the management of the Bank of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Pickersgill: If I may say this one more word. The minister will recall that before he or I were in parliament the farmers in the western provinces, and particularly in Saskatchewan, experienced a severe drought. In many cases these farmers did not have enough seed grain, they did not harvest enough grain to have seed for the following year, so federal assistance was provided. The situation here is quite analogous. I do not mean to say you need seed for the fish, but you do need gear to catch them. It is a very similar situation in many ways.

Mr. Howard: I have one or two comments to make, Mr. Chairman. The indicated purpose of the measure is to aid people who intend to acquire a boat or acquire an interest in a boat. I have in mind the case of a person who, on his own, started to build a boat or fishing vessel and was able to get only part way through, say completing the hull, and then required financial assistance. As I understand it, under the act as it is now, this hull is not considered to be a vessel, so the person who finds himself in this difficulty is not able to get a loan to complete the vessel. I am wondering whether this proposal would apply in such a case.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, I doubt if it would because section 2 (h) of the act defines a fishing vessel as follows:

—"fishing vessel" means any ship or boat or any other description of a vessel for use in a primary fishing enterprise, that has an engine for its propulsion, and includes the equipment affixed thereto for use in the operation thereof but does not include prescribed electronic equipment;

Mr. Howard: This proposal, then, would not alter those circumstances?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, this resolution does not propose to make any alteration in the definition of a fishing vessel.

Mr. Howard: If I may, sir, I submit that I feel it should. If a change is to be made to apply to a person who intends to own a vessel or intends to acquire one or, as I believe is the wording of the act, to acquire a prescribed interest in a fishing vessel, then it should be extended to apply to a person who on his own initiative starts to build a boat, is able to proceed only so far in the construction of it and wants to proceed further. I think probably additional amendments to other sections of the act should be considered in order to cover that individual case also. Perhaps that may be something that the minister could take into consideration and we can deal with it at a later stage. At least I would hope so.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Several suggestions have been made with respect to amendments to this bill, all of them, I think I may say, designed to enlarge the scope of the bill. When the previous resolution was before the committee I said that these would be taken under study and they will be taken under study. The one that is before the committee now is one that readily commended itself and had some general support in the discussion, and it seemed to us to lend itself to early decision. That is the reason why the house is being asked to permit the amendment of the bill, in the course of its passage, to permit this enlargement in the provisions.

Mr. Howard: I submit that the suggestion I have made is merely an extension of this selfsame principle. Here is a person who starts to build a boat. It is his intention to acquire a prescribed interest in the vessel. For one reason or another financially he is not able to complete it on his own. He then, in my opinion, should quite propertly be considered in the same light as the minister has considered the person who would be affected by this present legislation. That person should be able to go to the bank and be in the same position as anyone else would be if he fell within the scope of the provisions of the act. I think the principle is precisely the same. The individual fisherman may be just in different circumstances. One starts on his own to build a boat, or a fishing vessel as it is called, and the other does not start to build it himself but attempts to acquire it. It seems to me that those two individuals should be placed on precisely the same footing so far as they are under this act.

There are a number of other matters concerning the present application of the act which are rather involved because they take into account the relationship between the native Indian as defined in the Indian Act who lives on a reserve and the banks which would make loans under this particular legislation. On the west coast, especially in the northern part from which I come, there are a great number of native Indian people and a great number of villages or reserves right on the coast line or right on the water. A great number of these native Indian people engage in fishing as their means of livelihood. Their sole means of income is through fishing. I know that this is the attitude of the bank which makes the loan to the individual and probably the bank looks at things differently than we normally would. There is a reluctance and in some instances there is a complete refusal in connection with granting loans to native Indian people who want to build their own fishing vessels and to go out and fish and to be on substantially the same footing as a non-Indian. Many of these native Indian people in years past have been able to get some sort of credit from the fishing companies, have been renting boats from fishing companies, renting their gear from them, getting credit from fishing companies for food and other provisions and at the end of the year find themselves still indebted to the fishing company for one reason or another.

A number of them that I know, particularly the Haida Indians or the Tsimshian, for some years have been engaged in fishing. Many of them want to get out of the clutches of the fishing company and want to get out and build, own and operate their own fishing vessel. They find it extremely difficult to do so under the act, as it is at the present time because of the reluctance of the banks to make loans to fishermen who are Indians. They say they have no right of recourse against the individual because he is an Indian and because he lives on a reserve. That is another matter which I think should be considered carefully by the department. I wonder whether the minister would indicate his feelings on this matter.

It would be my suggestion that inasmuch as there are a number of other thoughts about changes in the act and inasmuch as it does not apply equitably as between one person and another person because of the way in which they go about acquiring a boat or because of the colour of their skin or because of the way in which they live and so on, that these matters could very easily be dealt with in the standing committee on marine and fisheries. While it is a matter of finance and comes under the minister's jurisdiction, nevertheless it also pertains to fishing. The committee on marine and fisheries, as a result of action taken in the house this afternoon, will be considering the estimates of the Department of Fisheries. I think we would be well advised to refer to the committee on marine and fisheries the bill that will arise out of this resolution. If the minister wants to select a banking and commerce committee because it deals with banking, that does not matter too much. However, I think the bill should go to some standing committee of the house in order that a fairly free and informal discussion may take place and that individual representations may be made to the committee with respect to additional changes in the proposed legislation. I should like to hear some comment from the minister about that particular matter.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): These suggestions that the hon. gentleman has made as well as the others that were made on the other resolution will, of course, be taken under study. Of course, these are matters that must be discussed with the banks because they are the primary lending institutions.

As to the second suggestion made by the hon. gentleman, namely that this bill should be referred to a standing committee, I regret that I cannot accept it. The hon. gentleman may be overlooking the fact which was very much in the minds of the committee when the previous resolution was before it, namely that the provisions of the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act have in fact expired. They expired last December. This legislation is urgently necessary now in order to continue the legislation at all. At the present time the loans that are being made under the act by the chartered banks, credit unions or caisses populaires are being made simply on the strength of a request which I made of them, accompanied by an undertaking given to them to bring this measure before the house and to ask the house to make it retroactive to December 11, 1958.

Mr. Howard: If I may, Mr. Chairman, I should like to pursue just a little bit further the question of the application of this legislation to native Indian people. I understood the minister to say that while certainly the loans under this legislation were at the instance of the bank itself or it was a matter for their determination as to whether they wanted to lend or not under the act, these matters would be brought to their attention. Is that what I understood the minister to say?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I said that these suggestions—I refer to the suggestions made by the hon. member as well as the other suggestions made on the previous resolution—would be brought under study. I pointed out that the lending that is contemplated by the act is lending by the banks. Therefore, before any change in the terms of the legislation is considered, it would be necessary to ascertain whether the banks are interested in lending at all under such terms.

Mr. Howard: I would point out one thing, Mr. Chairman. If it is considered advisable by the department or by the minister to look in a favourable light on the application of this act to native Indian people I would point out to him one thing in his discussions with the banks and in discussions along this line. They say the banks do not have any recourse to enable them to get the boat back if he buys one, because the Indian lives on a reserve, and so on. May I point out that the fishing vessel itself is not on the reserve but for most of the time lies in the water. Often those Indians living on the coast have no other means of livelihood than fishing. If the banks would appreciate the fact that they would have a right of seizure of the vessel, which is the guarantee they require before granting a loan, then these Indians could be provided with the loans they need. If the banks wished to repossess the boat at any time they are able to do so as long as a vessel remains in the water. Even if the vessel is taken up on skids up on the beach, in most cases it is still not on the reserve because it is below the high water mark. I hope the minister will make these thoughts known to the banks so that they will treat these native Indians with a little more consideration than they have in the past.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I make one point. I quite appreciate what the minister said about the desirability of putting this legislation through quickly pursuant to the undertaking which he gave to the banks. For that reason, and for that reason only, I would not join with the hon. member for Skeena in pressing the suggestion that this particular bill go to a committee. But I do hope the government will consider the plea made by the hon. member for Skeena, in which I warmly join, that the whole problem of credit for fishermen be considered in exactly the same generous manner as the government in the speech from the throne promised to extend credit to the farmers. At an earlier stage some of us pointed out there was nothing for the fishermen analogous to the farm loan board. If the government is going to do something at this session, as it indicated in the speech from the throne, about farm credit, those of us who represent fishing ridings suggest that equally effective provision should be made for credit for the fishermen.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, I want to add my voice to the pleas made by the hon. member for Skeena and the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. Like the hon. members who have just spoken, I am a little disappointed to learn that this legislation is not going to be useful as it first appeared when it was referred to in the house. Hon. members will remember that when the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg made this suggestion in debate on an earlier bill and the Minister of Finance told the house he would take it into consideration, we had great hopes that this bill would mean what it said. I had understood it was to help the person who desired to acquire an interest in a fishing vessel. If it is only going to apply to fishing vessels which are already built, or interests which are for sale, then it is not going to be of any help in my province.

What we are trying to do in Newfoundland at the present time is this. We are trying to reduce the cost of production of fish by utilizing more modern boats. These boats have to be built. Our fishermen are well able to build them themselves, and I had hoped that under this legislation they would be able to acquire a small loan which would enable them to purchase the materials required to build a vessel and equip it, thus enabling them to put to productive use their own skill and ability. We need long liners which can go offshore, say 20 to 30 miles, and come in every day. That would mean a boat costing about $10,000, equipped with a diesel engine of 60 horsepower to 70 horsepower, and a suitable amount of fishing gear. If three men could get together and get a loan under this legislation, they could very well build that boat themselves under conditions which would enable them to repay the loan without too much difficulty. At the present time the provincial legislation does not cover that particular type of boat because the provincial legislation requires specifications which are difficult to meet and which run the cost of the vessel required up to about double what the fishermen can afford to pay. If this legislation is going to be restricted by the definition of the term "fishing vessel" then the usefulness of this legislation is going to be very limited, particularly in the province of Newfoundland.

Of course, as the other hon. members have pointed out, unless the banks are prepared to make loans and take these vessels as security then this legislation is of no use at all. The success of this legislation depends first and last upon the willingness of banks to make loans. Unless they do that we might just as well not pass it at all. But assuming the banks will take a favourable attitude in regard to this problem, then I think we should go as far as possible to help the fishermen make the fullest use of it.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to enter this part of the debate, because I had a few questions to ask at the committee stage when the bill is introduced. But in view of the reply given by the hon. minister a few minutes ago to the hon. member for Skeena, when the hon. member mentioned that when a fisherman starts to build a boat of his own and does not have the financial facilities to complete it he might not qualify under the act. I would note that the resolution which is before us now to study states that guaranteed loans may be made to a person who at one time had an interest in a fishing vessel but no longer has such interest. The second part states that a loan may be made to a person who desires to acquire an interest in a fishing vessel for the first time.

I think that latter part deals with the question raised by the hon. member for Skeena. When this person applies for a loan, he certainly intends to acquire a prescribed interest in a fishing vessel or in the fishing gear. We have not seen the amendment as yet, but under the terms of the amendment I am wondering if this person who desires to acquire an interest in a fishing vessel for the first time would not qualify for a loan. There may be a clause which states that a fisherman may have to place or install an engine in a fishing boat which he is building, or intends to build, and in that case I feel he would qualify under the act, especially after this amendment is introduced. I would like the hon. minister to clarify this point.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, I do not know how I can clarify this any further. I have already dealt with the point in reply to the question of the hon. member for Skeena. I referred to the definition of "fishing vessel" under the act. The purpose of the amendment is to enlarge the category of persons who may qualify for a loan to include the person who desires to acquire an interest in a fishing vessel for the first time. A fishing vessel is described by the act in terms which seem to me to apply to a vessel in being, because if my hon. friend will look at section 2 (h) of the act, he will see:

(h) "fishing vessel" means any ship or boat or any other description of a vessel for use in a primary fishing enterprise, that has an engine for its propulsion, and includes the equipment affixed thereto for use in the operation thereof but does not include prescribed electronic equipment;

I think it is quite clear from the language of that definition that it has reference to a ship in being, not merely to part of a ship or a hull.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, in this case it would give preference to fishermen who make application for a loan to buy a secondhand boat, and to the fisherman who wanted to acquire a new boat with an engine. After all, most fishermen now have engines in their fishing boats, and if a fisherman applies for a loan to buy a new boat with an engine, according to the minister he would not qualify because his boat is not an existing fishing vessel. This does not seem to be logical because it would limit a fisherman to the purchase of a secondhand or existing boat. I feel that fishermen should be given the opportunity to buy new fishing boats with new engines. I think this was what the hon. member for Skeena had in mind, and I believe it applies to practically every community. I do not see the use of broadening the application of the act if it is to be interpreted in the way suggested by the minister. If we are to broaden the application of the act I think it should apply to fishermen who desire to purchase new vessels.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): If the vessel is in being, there is no trouble about it. The hon. member speaks of the new boat. Of course, if the new boat is in existence it comes fairly within the definition. What the question originally raised presented as its problem was a hull or an incomplete structure. It seems to me that the definition in the act connotes a completed vessel.

Mr. Carter: I should like to be clear on this point. Let us assume, for example, that the fisherman already owns his own engine and that he wants to acquire a new boat which is under construction. Let us suppose, as the hon. member for Skeena has suggested, that he builds this boat himself and that he already has invested $200 or so in the construction of the vessel and requires a loan to complete it. When the boat is completed it will have a propulsion unit as required by the act. It is my understanding that such a fisherman would qualify for a loan under the act, but I should like to have some assurance on this point.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): We are coming back to the same point. There is a definition of a fishing vessel in the act. I cannot change that. It is one that has been in the act from the outset, for the last three years. The purpose of the resolution is to permit the enlargement of the lending provisions to include a person who intends to acquire an interest in a fishing vessel, that is, a fishing vessel as defined in the act.

Mr. Carter: Before we carry this resolution, is it a fact that the vessel must be in existence? Is it the case that it cannot be a vessel which is under construction but that it must be a vessel which is already in existence and completed? Is that the only kind of ship for which this loan can be made?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think we are going over the same ground again and again. The definition is there, and it seems to me it is quite clear. It does not connote a portion of a ship. It connotes a fishing vessel and it seems to me the definition is clear in requiring that it should be a completed vessel. There is nothing, of course, to prevent a bank providing for assistance while a vessel is under construction or from lending money on a portion of a vessel, but the type of loan contemplated by the act under legislation which has now been in existence for three years is in respect of a vessel according to the terms of section (h), which obviously means a vessel in being.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is the minister right about that? I have been looking at the act while this discussion has been going on and I see that section 2(h) merely provides a definition. The operational section would appear to be section 3, and section 3, subsection 1(a)(i) defines two of the purposes for which loans may be made. These purposes are the purchase or construction of a fishing vessel. I may be wrong, but I am trying to assist the minister. I appreciate that the only person who can get a loan under the existing legislation for the purpose of purchasing or constructing a vessel is someone who already has an interest in a vessel and that what the minister is trying to do is to extend that to cover a person who, like myself, may at one time have had a vessel but who no longer has one, or a person who, like the minister, has never had one.

Anyway, there are three types of persons to be considered: a person who now has an interest in a fishing vessel; a person who formerly had an interest in a fishing vessel; and a person who never had such an interest. It would seem to me that if the minister's statement about enlarging the scope of this measure means anything it means that the present act is restricted to a person who already has a vessel but that in future it will apply to people who have no such interest, granting the same power or right to borrow as to someone who does at the moment have any such interest. Such a person could borrow for any purpose set out under section 3 of the act, one of which is the purchase or construction of a fishing vessel. I do not know whether or not I am right in all this, but it does seem to me a sensible construction.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think the hon. member is right.

Mr. Pickersgill: If I am right, I think the committee is satisfied.

Mr. Carter: If that is the case it is not what the minister told the hon. member for Skeena. I think the hon. member for Skeena asked whether a fisherman could get a loan if he wanted to build a vessel and was prepared to build one, and I understood the minister to say he could not. I am interested in utilizing this legislation in order to construct a vessel—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This resolution does not contemplate any change in the provisions of the act in regard to the terms of lending in any respect except to enlarge the class of borrowers who come within the terms of the act to include a person who intends to acquire a vessel in the future. The resolution does not take anything away from any provision of the act as it is at present. It does not reduce in any way the scope and terms of the lending powers.

Mr. Carter: The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has pointed out that the original legislation permitted loans for construction.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Well, this does not take anything away.

Mr. Carter: That is what we were worried about.

Mr. Howard: I thought I had it clear once, but now I am not sure. After the assistance which was given to the Minister of Finance by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, is the minister still of the opinion that a person who starts on his own to build a vessel and who does not complete it would be unable to get a loan in order to finish the job?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It would depend on the terms. The hon. member says: can a fisherman get a loan on a hull? I do not think he could. But if it is a matter of the construction of a vessel as defined by the act, that is a different matter. The hull is not a complete ship. It is simply an incomplete ship. I think there is a difference. I thought the hon. member was asking me about getting a loan on a hull. A loan on a hull as such does not appear to me to come within the provisions of the act. However, if it is a matter of the construction of a fishing vessel as defined by the act under section 2(h) I think it does come within the terms of the measure.

Mr. Howard: A while ago the minister made reference to section 2(h) which defines what a fishing vessel is. He said this cannot be changed. I wonder why?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, I said I cannot change it as one minister or one person. The legislation is not going to be changed by this resolution in any but one particular. My hon. friend is asking me about enlarging the terms of the loans under the act. I have no power in that respect whatsoever. But the purpose of this resolution, and its only purpose, is to enlarge the class of qualified borrower to include a person who although he has not acquired an interest in a vessel now intends to acquire one.

Mr. Howard: One of the advantages of being a lawyer at some stage of your career, Mr. Chairman, is that you are able to interpret and apply things the way you would like them to be. Certainly as a minister of the crown the Minister of Finance has as much authority with respect to changing the definition of a fishing vessel as he has to changing the application of loans to include a fisherman who intends to acquire a fishing vessel. That is all I ask. Will the minister undertake to give that question some study and if he were to introduce legislation in the house I am sure he will not find any disagreement about it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, as I have already indicated to the hon. gentleman, his suggestion this evening and the other suggestions that were made on the previous resolution are going to be taken under study. I cannot do more than that. I cannot give an indication of what course of action may be taken in future with reference to legislation but all these suggestions will be taken under study.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, in view of another item on the legislative menu for this evening and the hope of future favours, perhaps I could assist the minister a little more in this respect. I refer, of course, to the resolution concerning parliamentary secretaries. It seems to me that if you had a hull as the minister has said and went to the bank and asked for a loan and were considered by the bank to be a good borrower, you would not have to start de novo to construct the vessel. You could surely start with the hull and get a loan to complete the vessel. It surely does not mean you have to start with nothing. It seems to me that clears up the hon. member's difficulty.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): My hon. friend has stated the point, Mr. Chairman. You can obtain a loan if you are going to construct a complete vessel.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not imagine that any bank would lend money just to build a hull. I do not think anyone was suggesting that.

Resolution reported and concurred in and referred to committee of the whole on Bill C-30, to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act.

MEASURE TO PROVIDE POR EXTENSION OF LEGISLATION

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill C-30, to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act.

Mr. C. R. Granger (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I am rising to support the bill. I should like to associate myself with the remarks previously made by the hon. members for Trinity-Conception (Mr. Tucker), St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Carter) and Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill). My only criticism of the bill is that the scope is not great enough. I am thinking particularly of those fishermen in Newfoundland and Labrador who through the failure of the fishery last year find themselves in a position wherein they will not be able to be outfitted for the fishery this coming season. The situation was severe enough due to the failure of the fishery but in at least certain parts of the province it has been aggravated by heavy seas and storms which have caused great damage on the coast of southern Labrador and in parts of northern Newfoundland.

This season the fishermen will be doubly handicapped. They will have no money to outfit themselves with normal equipment because of the poor fishery last year and in addition according to reports which as yet are far from complete it is indicated that much fishing gear and equipment has been destroyed on the southern coast of Labrador.

I invite the assistance of hon. members in seeking relief for these fishermen who through no fault of their own will find themselves unable to prepare themselves for the fishery this coming season. I particularly ask the insistence of the hon. member for St. John's East and the Minister without Portfolio from Newfoundland (Mr. Browne). I would point out that the season for outfitting for the fishery is not very far away.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, together with the resolution adopted this day in respect thereto, Mr. Rea in the chair.

On clause 1—Time within which liability may arise.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): On clause 1, Mr. Chairman, this will afford me an opportunity to introduce the amendment contemplated in the resolution that has just been approved. I shall move that Bill C-30 be amended in accordance with the terms of the resolution. I have distributed copies to interested hon. gentlemen opposite. I believe the purport of the amendment is quite clear. It embodies in the first section of the bill as proposed to be amended the enlarged definition that the house has just approved in committee and then proceeds to re-number the clauses of the bill and to provide for the extension of the provisions of the act until June 30, 1962.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I have some remarks to make but if the minister would like to have his amendment adopted first I could make my comments after the amendment has been adopted.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words before the amendment is adopted. I realize that the amendment just introduced by the minister would certainly broaden the scope of the act by extending the terms to bona fide fishermen which were included in the original act passed in 1955 but the amendment now introduced I am sure will not meet all the suggestions which were made on both sides of the chamber on February 24 when the bill was introduced at the resolution stage.

Judging from the impression which was left not only with hon. members in this chamber but also with the general public I feel that the amendment may not go far enough. I hold in my hand a clipping from the Charlottetown Guardian, dated February 26. I will not read the whole article. It might be too long, but it reads in part as follows:

> Guarantees, it was suggested, should extend to loans for purchases of fishing gear that cannot now be insured.
> Finance Minister Fleming promised "sympathetic consideration" of the suggestions.

I know the minister did mention this on that occasion.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Is my hon. friend reading a newspaper report of the debate in this house on February 24?

Mr. Robichaud: Yes.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think my hon. friend should read from the Hansard record of the debate, not some newspaper report of what happened in the house. I indicated I would certainly give consideration and study to a number of suggestions made. This particular one had some general approval and, for the reasons I indicated, has been incorporated with the approval of the house in the measure. But the other proposals—and there were a number of them—will have to receive study but we cannot deal with them at this stage.

Mr. Robichaud: I am glad to have the minister clarify the impression at this time because I think the impression was left that the other suggestions would also be favourably considered. I understand the minister's position, because it would be difficult for him or for the government to include in this act certain items for certain fishing gear which may not come under the fishermen's indemnity fund. I also realize that a bank would not be interested in making a loan on types of fishing gear which cannot be insured under the fishermen's indemnity fund. I know that in this instance the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg and the hon. member for St. John's East were just as much interested as we were on this side of the house. We who represent fishing communities would like to have these loans extended. For example, we would like to see them extended to include sardine weirs and herring nets and other types of fishing gear. I understand the minister's position. These amendments are not being introduced tonight, and the others which were mentioned a few minutes ago, because these types of gear may not come under the fishermen's indemnity fund. But I would appreciate it if the minister would give further consideration to suggestions which were made when the bill was introduced in its resolution stage on February 24, because at a future date it might be possible to extend the application of the fishermen's indemnity fund so that these items could be covered under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act. This is the suggestion which I make at this time.

I also wish to express our appreciation of the amendments which are now being introduced by the minister. They will widen to some extent the scope of the application of the act but they will certainly not meet the requirements of the fishermen in the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I say a word on clause 1 before the clause as amended passes? I am saying this in a general sense, in the way in which the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra used to deal with clause 1 of bills when he was on this side of the house, a precedent which I know will appeal to the minister. I should like to be as much assured as the minister can assure me that section 3, subsection 1(a)(2), which defines one type of object of a loan means what I interpret it to mean. It reads: "The purchase or construction of fishing equipment." I would like to be as much assured as the minister is able to assure me from his knowledge of the regulations under the act which he administers that this would include cod traps or parts thereof.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am not in a position to give a snap answer to such a question. It would mean a matter of interpretation of the regulations. I should be glad to look into that and communicate that view to my hon. friend.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether the minister would undertake to do his utmost within the limits of the power given to him by parliament to interpret that in the most liberal sense possible, and I use the word with a small "l".

Mr. Robichaud: Before clause 1 is carried, can the minister answer the questions which I raised when the matter was discussed before? Before he answers those questions which I placed before him at that time I should like to mention a statement which he made on February 24, as reported at page 1353 of Hansard of that day. The minister said:

> While the volume of lending has not been large it appears, in the experience of those charged with its administration, that in large degree contractors for the prime product have been financing the fishermen's operations.

> However, the current trend appears to be for fishermen to become more independent of the buyer and the opinion of those who are charged with the administration of the act is that greater use is likely to be made of the provisions of the act.

If we look at the table placed on Hansard on that occasion we find that for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1958 there were 136 loans under this act for a total of $149,960.43, and for the period April 1, 1958 to October 31, 1958, there were 77 loans for a total of $87,891.51. This is for a period of only seven months but if we take the average we find that for the four-year operation—the act operated for only part of the year 1955-56; the first portion of the four years of operation consisted of only seven months and there were only 77 loans in that time—there was a decrease in the number of loans and also a decrease in the total amount as compared with the previous years. This really shows that the fishermen are not making great use of this act. I again suggest that one of the reasons why the fishermen are not taking full advantage of this act is that the banks and the credit unions are reluctant to lend under this act. They are more reluctant to lend to fishermen than they are to lend to farmers under similar legislation.

I know the minister may not be in a position to do it at this time, but I would ask him to give further consideration to increasing the guarantee clause on the 20-15 basis rather than on the 15-10 basis as the act now states.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Robichaud: Has the minister replied to the few questions I asked on February 24 in connection with the number of loans made to credit unions?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, Mr. Chairman, I have that information for the hon. gentleman. Several questions were asked on that occasion for which I would now be happy to supply the answers. The hon. gentleman asked at page 1347 of Hansard, how many pamphlets had been mailed and also how many had been issued in the French language. The answer is that there have been 7,637 pamphlets in English and 2,169 pamphlets in French distributed by the administration. These have been mailed to 110 separate addresses including head offices of chartered banks, individual branch banks in all provinces and to credit unions in British Columbia and the five most easterly provinces. At the time these pamphlets became available for distribution the head offices of the chartered banks and the credit unions designated as lenders were notified and were requested to submit their requirements to the department and distribution was made following receipt of requests.

The next question I was asked by the hon. gentleman related to the numbers and amounts of loans made by credit unions since the inception of lending under the act. The answer is that up to December 31, 1958, 54 loans totalling $110,180 have been made by credit unions. All of these were granted in the province of British Columbia.

The next question was by the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi who asked how many applications for loans had been refused. I stated at that time that the information was not available, and I am in a position to confirm that that is the fact. The applications are made to various lenders and not to the department.

Then I was asked a further question by the hon. member for Gloucester as to the distribution of the material. I think I have sufficiently covered that point. The only other point about which I was asked was raised by the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi and that is at page 1350 of Hansard. He raised a point about the maximum term of the loans. Some are presently restricted to a three-year term and he thought they might be extended to five or six years. I am informed that the loans in this particular category were restricted to a three-year term because of the rapid rate of depreciation of the subject matter involved. This, of course, is a matter of the views of the banks in regard to lending operations.

Mr. Robichaud: I thank the minister for giving us this information which is, I know, very valuable to those of us who come from the Atlantic provinces. I am surprised, although I mentioned it on February 24, that the credit unions have not taken advantage of this act. I am unable to find the real explanation for this attitude because we all know that credit unions are in existence in the maritime fishing communities. They are making loans on their own to fishermen and I think that a further step should be taken by the department to ascertain why the credit unions and the caisses populaires are not taking advantage of this act.

I mentioned before that they are in an even better position than the banks to take care of this type of loan because in many of the fishing communities, I would say in most fishing communities, the chartered banks have no branches. The only facilities in existence are those of the credit unions. I repeat that I am rather surprised to learn that in the Atlantic provinces where the credit unions and caisses populaires are so popular, they are not taking advantage of these facilities.

Bill reported.

Mr. Speaker: When shall this bill be read a third time, now?

Mr. Pickersgill: By leave.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

PUBLIC SERVANTS INVENTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING ADMINISTRATION OF MONEYS

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-33, to amend the Public Servants Inventions Act.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): Has the minister got an explanation?

Mr. Churchill: I might make a short explanation. This amendment is brought forward for the reasons that are given in the explanatory notes that accompany the bill. In 1954 the Public Servants Inventions Act was brought before the house and was proclaimed in 1955. At that time provision was not made for the proceeds that would come as a result of the inventions which were patented to go other than to the consolidated revenue fund. The practice has grown up over the last three years for the corporation which operates under this measure to hold these moneys and pay out the awards. The Auditor General drew attention to that, and this amendment will make regular a practice which has been followed during the last three years.

The explanatory note says that the proceeds of any patent or invention coming under the act would ordinarily go to the consolidated revenue fund. The purpose of the amendment is to permit the corporation to which the administration and control of a patent or an invention has been transferred to retain the money arising therefrom, and to require that the money be used for the purpose of this act and the purposes for which the corporation was established.

The remainder of the amendment simply makes it retroactive so that the amendment will apply to all assignments that have already been made as well as assignments that may be made in the future. This is the whole purpose of the bill which is now before the house. We are not introducing any practice that has not been followed, but are simply adding a clause to section 9 of the Public Servants Inventions Act so that the whole procedure will be in accordance with the statute.

Mr. J. T. Richard (Ottawa East): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that I am any more in favour of the Public Servants Inventions Act now than I was in 1954. I do not think that at this time I can make a speech on that subject. However, the minister has just said that the purpose of the amendment is to vest the moneys received from any invention by a public servant into a corporate agency instead of the consolidated revenue fund. This, of course, is quite true and as it should be in certain cases.

I am not at all clear, however, as to how this is done because in some cases it is true that there may be some receipts from an invention by a public servant which should be vested into a corporate agency to which they have been assigned. However, there are some cases where an invention might be assigned to a private agency. Certainly, in that case I am wondering what that corporate agency would be. I feel, therefore, that I should reserve to the committee stage my attempt to ascertain what the situation may be as contemplated by the minister. I might also restate my stand and my reasons for being against the Public Servants Inventions Act.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I want to express the support of this group for this small measure. I must say that once again we are delighted to see the government giving effect to a couple of C.C.F. principles in this minor legislation. The first one, of course, to which effect is being given is in acknowledging the value of the principle of decentralization in the administration; and the second one is in desiring to promote, apparently by this amendment, departmental initiative and the initiative of the personnel of the departments in question. In his brief statement the minister mentioned that this small amendment makes it possible for the department or the government corporation in question or agency, I presume, to retain moneys, even to the advantage of the government corporation in question. We think that is a good principle because it is, in a limited way, giving effect to the principle which I have just mentioned previously. I noted that the minister said that it was now actually giving legal effect to something which had been accepted in practice for some time. I presume it is giving legal effect to the common sense of the people who were concerned with administration as a result of experience. We support this measure wholeheartedly.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Rea in the chair.

On clause 1—Administration of moneys.

Mr. Churchill: I understand the interest of the hon. member for Ottawa East in this bill. I have read with interest the remarks he made in 1954 when the bill was first before the house. I was just going to suggest to him that if he has any technical questions he would like to ask, the president of Canadian Patents and Development Limited, Mr. E. R. Birchard, is in the gallery and could come down here to assist me. Are there any technical matters which the hon. member wishes to discuss in connection with this legislation?

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): Mr. Chairman, I think it is only a question of information that I should like to get at the present time from the minister. I do not think the questions will be technical. For example, in order to satisfy myself I should like to know the number of patents for inventions which were granted to civil servants who signified their intention to the deputy ministers. Then I should like to know how many patents were granted. Would the minister require assistance? Perhaps he would.

Mr. Churchill: I have some of this information here. The hon. member asked about the ones that had been submitted to the deputy minister. I am not sure that that information is before me. As to the inventions that have been submitted to Canadian Patents and Development Limited since June 1954, I can give him that information, as to the total.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): Pardon me, Mr. Chairman, but that is much different from the scope of the act. Just in order to make things a litle bit clear, may I say this. This act states that any public servant who invents anything—for instance, a new pencil—cannot obtain a patent unless he first submits his invention to the deputy minister who, at his leisure, can decide whether or not he will accept the invention. I am greatly interested in finding out how many such inventions were submitted to the deputy ministers and what was done about them. I think this is the first opportunity I have had to do so. That is the first question. Maybe the minister will require some information from someone else.

Mr. Churchill: Perhaps if I call Doctor Birchard down here he can supply us with some of that information. I do not see it in the documents that are in front of me here. I have lists of the types and the ones that originated or came from the national research council and those that came from other government departments but that does not give quite the answer that the hon. member is after.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): No. I have never been very much worried about patents of the research council, atomic energy or some of those corporations. But the scope of the act is so wide that a public servant who invents anything, because of the fact that he is a civil servant, cannot obtain a patent anywhere unless he first submits it to the deputy minister who may be active or who may be lazy, and in the meantime he will lose his right to the patent because the superior employee does nothing about it. The patent laws, not so much in this country but in other countries, are very stringent. If the deputy minister should decide that he has not time to look at this invention, and it is a public servant who has invented this pencil, I will call it—and I am not interested in pencils—and he belongs to, let us say, the Department of Trade and Commerce, he cannot apply in the United States because a year has passed, or for some other reason in some other country. I am just anxious to find out the situation. I can understand this section being limited to inventions of corporate agencies of the crown.

Mr. Churchill: The difficulty that arises here is that the corporation handles only the inventions that are submitted to it. In order to get the information for which my hon. friend is asking each department would have to be queried. This corporation has not that information.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): I quite understand the point of my hon. friend. My only point is this. What corporation is he talking about?

Mr. Churchill: I am talking about Canadian Patents and Development Limited.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): Where do they come into the act? Just in order to help the minister out may I ask this question. Have we a new corporation?

Mr. Churchill: Section 9 of "An act respecting inventions by public servants" reads as follows:

> 9.(1) The administration and control of any invention vested in Her Majesty by this act and any patent issued with respect thereto are vested in the appropriate minister, and the appropriate minister may transfer such administration and control to any other minister or to any corporate agency of Her Majesty.

The practice is that these are referred to this corporate agency which we have been discussing, Canadian Patents and Developments Limited.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): Mr. Chairman, I can quite understand the hon. minister's attitude and what he has said, but surely he is not making a broad statement that all inventions submitted by public servants are referred only to this corporation?

Mr. Churchill: I do not think I said that, Mr. Chairman; I did not say they were all referred. As I read the act, the appropriate minister may transfer such administration and control.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): I only want to help the hon. minister. It may be sent to the research council, it may be sent to the atomic energy board, it may be sent to a number of places, and it may be kept with the minister who has received the invention. That is why I say that there seems to be no reason for this section, because there is no one corporate body, nor any corporate bodies as such, who receive all the inventions of public servants. I think my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who sympathizes with the rights of ordinary people, will appreciate that in this case the section makes no sense at all, because there is no such thing as a corporate agency existing which will do this job, which is that it "shall be used for the purposes of this act and the objects and purposes for which the agency was established". Now, what is that agency?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member, who made clear to the House of Commons in 1954 when he was discussing the act that he has considerable knowledge of patent procedure, is rather beside the point here tonight, when all we are discussing is an amendment to a bill which will make regular a practice which has grown up over the past three years. The subject matter which he is introducing now goes beyond the amendment which is before the house. He is suggesting that the bill itself is inadequate for the purpose for which it was set out. I do not see that his remarks, important and interesting as they are, really refer to the amendment which we are considering.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): Mr. Chairman, I would not mind helping the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I think this is a bad section, and that is very clear to a lawyer so eminent as himself, because the section says:

> Where pursuant to this section the administration and control of any invention or patent has been transferred to a corporate agency of Her Majesty, any money received by the corporate agency in the course of the administration and control of the invention or patent may be retained by that corporate agency, and shall be used for the purposes of this act and the objects and purposes for which the agency was established.

All I want to know, first of all, is what are those corporate agencies; second, how many patents or inventions were transferred to this agency; and third, how many patents were obtained under this section? Of course, I will say to the hon. minister that that leaves a blank in this act, a great blank. What happens to the revenue, or what was the revenue received from other patents which were not transferred to corporate agencies? I think we should be entitled to a broad statement.

Mr. Churchill: It is not possible to answer my hon. friend's second question, because the agency, as I mentioned earlier, deals with those inventions which are referred to it. Others which are made but do not come forward, and are not referred to this agency, naturally are not known, and I cannot give him that information at the present time. According to the act, section 3 states:

> The following inventions, and all rights with respect thereto in Canada or elsewhere, are vested in Her Majesty in right of Canada, namely,
> (a) an invention made by a public servant
> (i) while acting within the scope of his duties or employment, or > (ii) with facilities, equipment or financial aid provided by or on behalf of Her Majesty, and
> (b) an invention made by a public servant that resulted from or is connected with his duties or employment.

Canadian Patents and Development Limited is the agency which deals with these patents which are referred to it.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): Is the hon. minister assuring this house that that corporate agency is the only one which is to receive patent rights of public servants?

Mr. Churchill: No, I am not saying that at all. I am not quite clear just what the hon. member is driving at. This agency deals with the inventions which are referred to it.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): But does it, though? I am asking the hon. minister if he has proper advice that all inventions or public servants are dealt with by that particular agency?

Mr. Churchill: We are going back over what we have covered earlier, Mr. Chairman, because earlier on I read out the first subsection of section 9, which says:

> The administration and control of any invention vested in Her Majesty by this act and any patent issued with respect thereto are vested in the appropriate minister, and the appropriate minister may transfer such administration and control to any other minister or to any corporate agency of Her Majesty.

It does not follow from that that every invention made by a public servant is referred to Canadian Patents and Development Limited.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): That is the information I wanted to get. Therefore, this section would only cover such inventions on which patents have been obtained and which have been transferred to a corporate agency of the crown. Now what are the purposes of the corporate agencies of the crown for which this is to be used?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I must say the debate is ranging very far afield. When my hon. friend, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, was secretary of state and introduced this bill he outlined the purposes of the bill in the following words. He said, as reported on page 5008 of Hansard for May 24, 1954, that it: > —is to substitute a uniform legislative scheme for the various provisions on the subject contained at the present time in four different statutes.

Then he went on to say that the principle of the bill was that under the three circumstances set out there inventions made by public servants shall be the property of the crown. The then secretary of state pointed out, as the hon. member who is now asking the question realizes quite well because he participated in that debate, that it was just drawing together into one act things which were done under four different acts, namely under the Patent Act, under the Research Council Act, under the Atomic Energy Control Act and under the National Defence Act. They were drawn together into this one act, and this agency was set up to deal with inventions which were referred to it, which would obtain receipts from patents and pay out awards where it was deemed advisable.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): That is quite true but I am not associating myself with anything that was done by former heads of departments under that government. I am still interested in knowing for what purpose this new section has been introduced. Take Canadian Patents and Development Limited. What can it be used for?

Mr. Churchill: The hon. member for Ottawa East has, I feel sure, all the knowledge for which he is now asking by way of questions. I am sure that he has looked at the report of Canada Patents and Development Limited, as I have done. The report shows the income which the agency receives, and it shows the money which is paid out by that agency on receipt of an invention, in arranging for meeting expenses in connection with patent attorneys—I assume the hon. gentleman is familiar with that—and in promotion expenses involved in getting patents accepted, in paying out awards to inventors and so on in addition to the salaries paid to the staff engaged in the work of that organization.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): But I am too familiar with the patent system not to think that the valuable patents which have fallen into the hands of this agency have already been paid for, because they were assigned to this corporation and the corporation receives royalties much in excess of the disbursements, I hope, otherwise we should scrap the agency in this case. But there is more than one agency. Does this apply to the national research council? Does it apply to the mines department? Does it apply to the atomic energy board, to name three examples?

Mr. Churchill: I think that for the third or perhaps the fourth time I should say that we are dealing with inventions which are referred to Canadian Patents and Development Limited.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): Where does it say that in this section? I should be, if not happy, then fairly happy if it were said in this section that this was the case. But this is a small matter, Canadian Patents and Development Limited. The research council, the department of mines and all the others have in the past got some of the most valuable patents in this country. They do not belong to this agency. I think the minister does not have the right information.

Mr. Churchill: We are not talking about patents taken out under other agencies. This has reference to Canadian Patents and Development Limited.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): Oh, Mr. Chairman, it says in this section—

Mr. McIlraith: Read it out.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): I know that the minister feels the same way as I do about this matter, and he would like to understand it. I want to do this in a good-natured way. It says that where, pursuant to this section, and so on, a corporate agency—note that it says "a corporate agency" and not "the corporate agency." How many are there?

Mr. Churchill: At the moment there is just the one to which we have been referring. There may be another set up—

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): Would not the minister so amend his section? I do not understand what good deeds this agency does. If we were dealing with a bill about the Red Cross I could understand it.

Mr. Churchill: It may be that some alteration should be made, as the hon. member is now suggesting. I am sorry he did not make these suggestions in 1954 when he was discussing this matter at great length. Obviously the intention of the act, on which he spoke at great length on that occasion, was that Canadian Patents and Development Limited should administer the Public Servants Inventions Act and this has been done now for the last three years in respect of the inventions and patents which have been referred to it.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): I certainly would not accept this bill, in view of the suggestion the minister has made, until such an amendment was included, because that point has now been made by the minister himself and I thank him for his appreciation of the situation. I do not blame the minister at all, but his reply still leaves the question open. What is happening to the other inventions? Where are they going and what is happening to the money? I might also ask this: What is happening to the people who submit inventions? Are they getting fair treatment or not?

I suggest it would be well for the minister —because this debate could go on for a long time—that he should consult with his advisers and adjourn the debate on this matter until such time as he has drafted an amendment which would be appropriate to the circumstances.

Mr. Churchill: I appreciate fully the remarks which the hon. member has made and I appreciate fully his interest in inventors, who he thinks may not be looked after as carefully as they should be. However, under this particular bill all we are hoping to do is to add a small amendment to section 9 in accordance with the suggestion made by the comptroller general so that the moneys that are paid in may continue to go to Canadian Patents and Development Limited as they have been going for the last three years, and as they did under the former Liberal government, instead of going direct to the receiver general.

It is in accordance with that suggestion that this amendment has been put forward. The corporate agency that is mentioned here was understood by all those who were dealing with this to be Canadian Patents and Development Limited and I think perhaps that was in the mind of my hon. friend as well.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): No, Mr. Chairman, it never was. That corporate agency is a small corporate agency of the crown as far as patents are concerned. The Department of Mines and Technical Surveys has some of the most important patents in this country if not in the world and this is also true of the atomic energy control board. For instance, I could also make mention of Polymer Corporation and a number of other such agencies.

I find that I am raising my voice and this is not fair. I assure the minister that I am not directing my emotional outburst against him. I would not dare raise my voice toward the Minister of Finance because we are too friendly. That hon. gentleman is a lawyer and I am sure he would say, as a lawyer, that we should put this aside for a while and do a good job of it.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, may I point out that Canadian Patents and Development Limited has been receiving revenue from inventions which have originated with the National Research Council, the Fisheries Research Board, the Department of National Defence and the National Film Board, to mention but a few. Surely that is an indication that the system has been working satisfactorily. I have heard nothing by way of complaint, criticism or suggestion until this evening. The hon. gentleman himself has not in the past raised the problems which he is now putting before the committee.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): But oh, Mr. Chairman, I have. What the minister just said confirms my statement. If this is intended to place in the hands of a particular crown corporation the patents it receives the statement should be limited to that. If that is the case I would then be in a position to seek some information. I want to know a great deal about the number of patents that have been received by that particular corporation, the amount of revenue received and the plight of the inventors, et cetera. This section does not state to what corporation these matters are related.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, would it make a serious difference to my hon. friend if there were several corporate agencies to which this might apply? It happens to apply to Canadian Patents and Development Act.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): Yes, it would make a difference because it would contradict the minister's statement. He just informed us to what corporation it relates. It mentions "a" corporate agency, not "any" corporate agency. There are many questions which would follow, of course.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, apparently the hon. member is not prepared to accept my statement that we are dealing with Canadian Patents and Development Limited which is the corporation that was considered when this amendment was introduced in the act.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): I do not agree that it was considered at that time. I have never been at all satisfied with this act. Since registering my objections in the past this is the first opportunity I have had to find out what is happening to the inventions of public servants. I am very much surprised that my hon. friends who sit in that party to my right and who speak with such eloquence about the rights of men do not awaken and seek to find out what is happening with respect to the inventions of public servants and the benefits that accrue therefrom. Perhaps those hon. gentlemen feel we should socialize everything.

Mr. Herridge: If I may reply to that, Mr. Chairman, I would say that the hon. gentleman is confusing everyone more and more—

[Mr. Churchill.]

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): Especially the hon. gentleman who is now on his feet.

Mr. Herridge: —and he is certainly confused himself. I feel that he actually misunderstood the real intent of this bill.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): Mr. Chairman, with all the deference at my command may I suggest that the hon. gentleman completely fails to understand the meaning of this bill As a lawyer and as one who is interested in the rights of Canadian citizens I want to know what is happening to the inventions of public servants. I was very free in the criticism I made of this act under the former administration and I feel equally free to criticize this legislation now. This is a loosely drawn act that forfeits the rights of citizens perhaps simply because they are mere civil servants, as it were. As it is presently drawn any agency of the crown or any other body such as General Electric or Westinghouse could take the invention of a civil servant and do what it liked with it paying only a certain royalty to be decided by the cabinet. I am sure my hon. friends would wish to see this section properly re-written.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, may I be permitted to ask the hon. gentleman if this bill was not passed by the former administration?

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): Not this bill, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Herridge: I mean the act.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister if this organization, Canadian Patents and Development Limited, is the organization about which we have recently read something in connection with the electronics field and the representations to Washington that became necessary on the part of the Minister of Justice? Is this the agency or entity that is involved?

Mr. Churchill: Not this one, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): No, Mr. Chairman. After all, I have not been able to get anywhere with the minister. I quite appreciate that he realizes this is a bad section and it requires amendment.

Mr. Churchill: You said the whole bill is bad but you fellows passed it.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): Oh, Mr. Chairman, that is an old, tired and dull story which we have heard many times before. I am pretty sick of that story and perhaps I should have risen on a previous occasion and said the same thing to other ministers.

I am not one who follows foolishly along without questioning a course of action that is being taken. This is not in accord with my training as a lawyer.

It appears that the minister does not want to take any responsibility in this regard. I know that ministers do not want to take responsibility. May I point out, however, that this bill requires our being given a lot of information and unless I receive from the minister an assurance that he will drop this clause for a few days and amend it, I shall start asking questions.

Mr. Stinson: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the hon. member could assist the minister and hon. members of the committee by asking his questions in a clear, concise and systematic way in order that they may be dealt with in the same fashion?

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): But surely, Mr. Chairman, I already have asked a number of questions.

Mr. Stinson: Yes, but not clearly.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): In the first place I want to know what is the corporate agency? I think it should be included in the bill. That is my first question. From there I am prepared to go on to ask how many patents have been sent to this agency, how many have been refused by the agency, how many people have lost their inventions because they were sent to the agency, what was the amount of revenue that accrued to the agency since its inception and what corporations have received assignments from the agency?

An hon. Member: Put it on the order paper.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): Mr. Chairman, may I inform hon. members opposite that they are lucky that I do not get up on my feet more frequently because as far as taking care of them verbally is concerned and meeting their silly innuendoes I am capable of doing it at any time. I am not worried about that at all. I have been pretty decent and kept to the law. We could talk in this way until 10.00 o'clock. I think the minister would agree with me that it would be much better to come around with a section that is properly drafted and also agree that somebody has drafted a bad section. It would not take much time on the next occasion to pass it.

Mr. Churchill: Some of the questions which the hon. member is asking go beyond the scope of the act. He is asking about matters with regard to inventions which do not come to the attention of Canadian Patents and Development Limited. These questions can be put on the order paper and made applicable to each department, if he so desires, and he could get the answers to them. He is asking questions with regard to how many inventions have been refused by the corporation. These are things that could easily be put on the order paper and the answer could be produced and given to the hon. member at any time.

Mr. McIlraith: I would like to raise a point of order. We are dealing with an amendment concerning the Public Servants Inventions Act. The clause in the amending bill deals with the transfer of such inventions and patents to a corporate agency of Her Majesty. It could be any one of a great many corporate agencies of Her Majesty.

The minister is seeking to argue now that he does not have to answer questions as to the number of patents of public servants which have been granted within the time of the act, or of the inventions. Surely it is not tenable to hold such a position at all because how can the bill have any meaning if it is not to cover any of the inventions or patents of public servants, or if it is to cover part of them? What percentage is it to cover? Certainly the position is not tenable at all. Surely we are entitled to this information which is clearly within the purport of the amending bill now before the committee.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): I am still looking for information, Mr. Chairman. If the minister intends to make a corporate agency I want to have a statement from him as what that corporate agency is, and whether it is the only one within the terms of the act. I am entitled to find out how many inventions have been referred to this so-called corporate agency. I know the minister is busy with my good friend, the Minister of Finance, who will soon reduce the taxes.

Mr. Churchill: Go ahead.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): I hope it is not the corporation which will give the revenue. As I said before, I am entitled to get this information from the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who I am sure thought that this was an innocent bill. In view of his great respect for the rights of public servants who are already under the preceding section 9, in my opinion at least, treated in a very, as the Prime Minister would say, cavalier fashion—I am not trying to imitate the Minister of Finance when I speak in this way.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Go ahead, why not?

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): Well, it was very successful. I ask the minister what is the corporate agency? Will the Minister of Trade and Commerce not give to the committee information as to the number of applications as distinct from patents, because these are the two things which have been referred to this agency. My second question is, what did the inventors, or the so-called inventors, get out of it and, third, which is much more important, to whom are they assigned? To what private corporations are the inventions of public servants assigned for the receipt of a very small royalty? What were the receipts and to what use were they applied?

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I cannot resist getting up in view of the hon. member turning and shaking his fist at this group. We wish he would be more concerned about the human rights and fundamental freedoms of the loggers in Newfoundland and the people in Newfoundland than he is over this minor, paltry matter which is essentially for the protection of the exchequer of this country.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): Mr. Chairman, at this time, if I were the hon. member, I would be much more concerned about the deficiency payments than the rights of the loggers of Newfoundland.

Mr. Winch: We thought the government was worrying about that.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would like to ask the minister a question. He pointed out that this legislation was originally introduced by the secretary of state. At the time I happened to be the secretary of state who administered this act. How does it come about that it is the Minister of Trade and Commerce and not the Secretary of State who is sponsoring the amendment of the act?

Mr. Churchill: At the time that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate introduced this act in 1954 he was secretary of state. He introduced it with some reluctance and in the course of that debate referred to the minister of trade and commerce to assist him. Subsequent to that it was decided by, I presume, the former government that the administration of this act might very well come under trade and commerce and that is how it happened to come to my attention.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister is well aware that it is not possible to transfer the function of one department to another department except by an order in council under the transfer of duties act. Can the minister give us the date and the number of the order in council which transferred the administration from the department of the Secretary of State to his department?

Mr. Churchill: I think we can get that information for the hon. member. Actually, I should have said this comes under the national research council and I happen to have some responsibility to report to parliament on behalf of the national research council. But if the hon. member wants that type of information I am quite sure that it can be given. In fact, any of the questions which have been asked tonight can be answered. There is no desire to conceal anything. Some of the information is right here. If the hon. member for Ottawa East had not taken up so much time I could have told him the people to whom the awards are being paid and the organizations from which some of those inventions have come forward and the amount of royalties which have been received, and so on, but the time has elapsed.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could ask the leader of the house if there is any change in the order for tomorrow?

Mr. Green: Tomorrow we shall commence with the bill which has just been under debate and then take item No. 6, the resolution concerning the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act; then item No. 15, the resolution concerning freight rates; then item No. 4, second reading of the act to amend the Canada Shipping Act; item No. 1, that is the act confirming an agreement between the federal government and the province of New Brunswick respecting Indian reserves, and the motion to set up the committee to study the Indian Act.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is it intended to go on with that business on Thursday or is it intended to go on with estimates on Thursday?

Mr. Green: I am not sure at the moment, but probably we would go on with estimates.

It being two minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

Questions

1. No.

2. Not applicable.

ALASKA HIGHWAY

Question No. 213—Mr. Argue:

1. On what date was the Alaska highway completed?
2. How many miles long is it, and what points does it connect?
3. Of this, what portion lies in Canada?
4. Is the government or any agency paving any portion of the Canadian section?
5. If so, when did it begin this program, how many miles have been paved each year, from what point was it started, what agency authorized the paving program, and what agency is doing the actual paving?
6. What is the estimated time it will take to finish the paving program?
7. What has been the cost of the paving program each year?
8. Has the government an estimate of the total cost of the program?
9. If so, what is the estimated total cost?

Answer by: Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence):

1. The Alaska highway was opened for traffic on November 20, 1942.

2. The Alaska highway, which is 1517 miles in length, begins at the railhead in the town of Dawson Creek, B.C., and extends northwesterly for 1422 miles across the province of British Columbia and the Yukon territory to Big Delta, Alaska, where it joins the Richardson highway. The Richardson highway provides the final 95-mile link to Fairbanks, Alaska.

3. The section of the Alaska highway which traverses Canadian territory, from Dawson Creek, B.C., to the Alaska-Yukon border, is 1221.4 miles in length.

4. Yes. 85 miles of the Canadian section of the Alaska highway is being paved.

5. (a) Preliminary engineering work began on August 26, 1957. (b) Schedule of completion of paving: 1958, 38 miles; 1959, 13 miles; 1960, 34 miles. (c) Paving commences at mile 1.4 (Dawson Creek). (d) Department of National Defence. (e) Defence Construction (1951) Limited. (By public tender).

6. The estimated completion date for the first 51 miles is August 1959 and it is expected that the balance will be completed by July 1960.

7. Fiscal years 1957-58, $351,380; 1958-59, $1,971,093.

8 and 9. The estimated total cost of the 85 mile length of the highway is $5,650,000.

CANADIAN ARCTIC—DISPUTES AS TO OWNERSHIP

Question No. 215—Mr. Argue:

1. Has a dispute ever occurred at any time since 1900 between Canada and (a) the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics; (b) the United States of America, concerning the ownership of any portion of the Canadian Arctic?
2. If so, on what dates did these occur, what was the area involved, what was the nature of the dispute, and what settlement was made?
3. Are there any disputes still unsettled?
4. If so, what is the nature of the dispute in question?

Answer by: Hon. Sidney E. Smith (Secretary of State for External Affairs):

1. A search of departmental records has failed to disclose any dispute since 1900 between Canada and either the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics or the United States of America concerning the ownership of any portion of the Canadian Arctic.

2. Answered by 1.

ACME, ALBERTA, POST OFFICE

Question No. 223—Mr. Denis:

1. Was an agreement entered into by the federal government in 1953 or 1954 with respect to the construction of a building to be used in whole or in part as a post office in the village of Acme, Alberta?
2. If so, what are the terms of the said agreement?
3. Is another building being constructed at present for the same purpose?
4. If so, who is the owner of the said building and what is the estimated cost of same?

Answer by: Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works):

1. No. The federal government did enter into a lease in 1954 covering the ground floor of a building on Main street, Acme, Alberta, to house the post office.

2. The lease covers the ground floor of a building on Main street, Acme, Alberta, having a floor area of 1,000 square feet, at a rental of $1,920.00 per annum, for a period of five years from September 1, 1954, with option to the crown to renew for one year on same terms and conditions. Mr. Leo Lavoie, as the lessor, is responsible for all repairs, payments of taxes, water rates, provision of heating, lighting, cleaning, janitor service and toilet accommodation.

3. A contract was awarded on November 26, 1958, for the construction of a post office building.

4. Department of Public Works, $17,721.61.

VOCATIONAL TRAINING PAYMENTS, QUEBEC

Question No. 228—Mr. Meunier:

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

NEWFOUNDLAND—STATEMENT ON ACTIVITIES OF R.C.M.P. IN LABOUR DISPUTE

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, in view of the importance of the subject and the concern over the situation, I should like to make a statement to the house as to the present position in the strike area in Newfoundland in so far as the R.C.M. police are concerned. I should like to make clear at the outset, as I shall be doing in more detail later on, that at no time have the police acted as strikebreakers, taken sides in the strike, or escorted or attempted to escort anyone through a picket line. They have acted throughout in strict conformity with their duties as police responsible for the protection of property and the maintenance of law and order, and indeed have conducted themselves admirably throughout a long and extremely trying period, and sometimes in the face of great provocation.

The functions of the R.C.M. police in this situation are determined by the provisions of the police contract between Canada and Newfoundland, the relevant provisions of which are paragraphs 4 and 5, which are as follows:

> 4. The division shall perform in the province such duties and render such services as are ordinarily performed by peace officers in aiding the administration of justice and in carrying into effect the laws of a provincial legislature.
> 5. The officer commanding the division shall for the purposes of this agreement act under the direction of the attorney general of the province in aiding the administration of justice in the province and in carrying into effect the laws of the legislature.

A copy of this contract was tabled in the house on February 16.

It is of course the obligation of a police force at all times to enforce the provisions of the Criminal Code. These duties involve normally the investigation of acts of violence which are a breach of the code, such as assault and damage to property, and arresting offenders who commit such acts. It is an unfortunate fact that as a result of the tension and bad feeling engendered in the course of this strike, as between those who wish to continue working and those who wish to prevent anyone from working, cases of assault and damage to property have been multiplied, thus magnifying the burdens of law enforcement.

The fact that there is a strike, however, does not relieve the police of their responsibilities in this field, but on the contrary imposes upon them extra duties of taking precautions to see that the tension and bad feelings engendered are not in fact allowed to result in general lawlessness and violence. They must protect the public—and this includes those involved in the dispute—against the possibility of excesses arising out of the tense situation.

In addition, under strike conditions there arises the further obligation of enforcing section 366 of the Criminal Code, which deals specifically with picketing and makes it unlawful for anyone engaged in picketing to use violence or threats of violence to any person, or intimidation, or to indulge in disorders. In particular, section 366 makes it unlawful to block or obstruct the highways.

It will thus be seen that under strike conditions the police are bound to be called upon from time to time to perform special duties such, for instance, as to make sure roads are kept open for traffic. Under normal conditions the necessity for such action does not arise, but under strike conditions it is a specific duty they have to perform.

It is apparent that the manner in which the police have discharged their duties must be judged against this background. Regard must be had to the nature of the problems with which they had to deal, the area in which they have had to carry out their duties and the total numbers of the loggers involved and of the police available.

The most troubled area is that of Grand Falls, particularly the Badger district. The Grand Falls area, extending from Gander lake to Millertown, stretches across a front of approximately 75 miles. The area involved extends southward across the island for a distance of 50 to 60 miles. If the Corner Brook district, where about 1,000 of the Bowater company's loggers are out on strike in sympathy with the Anglo-Newfoundland Development Company loggers, were included, then the area would be extended by a further 300 miles.

There are many thousands of loggers involved. Indeed, I have seen one estimate which puts the number as high as 18,000. I am informed that a substantial number of the 1,000 loggers at Corner Brook, whom I have mentioned, have just moved over to the Badger district to support the strikers in that area. As against this I am advised that the total police strength attending to the strike situation is 143, the majority of whom are employed in the most troubled area around Badger. This strength has recently been supplemented by a group of some 25 from the Newfoundland constabulary, who normally police the city of St. John's and are not part of the R.C.M. police.

As I have stated, the actions of the police in this very difficult situation have been entirely preventive. Their actions have been limited to enforcing the provisions of the Criminal Code against assault, damage to property, acts of violence, obstruction of roads and other similar provisions.

Furthermore, the position of the police as I have described it has been outlined by responsible police officers to the union officials concerned, by whom it has been accepted. In addition the police have been at pains, in all cases where picket lines have been established or where men have gathered on the roads, to explain to them the limits imposed upon their activities by the Criminal Code.

It is an unfortunate fact that since the commencement of this strike, and particularly within the last six weeks, it has been necessary to make a number of arrests and charges. The total number of charges laid in this period has been 202, which have been disposed of as follows: convicted, 71; dismissed, 15; awaiting trial, 75; withdrawn 41.

Since there have been a number of accusations made against the police which have arisen in the main out of three major incidents, I should give here a factual account of what actually took place on those occasions, because the facts demonstrate most clearly that the police have only acted when the provisions of the Criminal Code have been violated.

The first incident was on February 7, when 84 strikers went to two camps in the Badger district at about 3.30 a.m. At the first camp they forced 50 workers out of their building and left them to walk in sub-zero weather to Badger, about 10 miles away. Many of the workers were insufficiently clothed. At this camp they broke windows and furniture and did other damage to property. At the second camp they threatened violence, with the result that 23 loggers decided to leave. As a result of these violations 79 men were arrested and charged.

The second incident took place on March 9. About 45 pickets blocked the main road leading to Halls Bay. A police patrol went out and persuaded the pickets to cease their obstruction, which they did. On the way back the patrol met a crowd of about 200 on the same road; they radioed for help and on the arrival of reinforcements the crowd opened up and ceased to obstruct the road. On both these occasions on that day, therefore, the police were able to discharge their duties by peaceful persuasion and no arrests were made.

The third incident was last night. At about 5.00 p.m. yesterday the police detachment at Badger reported a crowd of about 250 collecting on the road outside the town. In order to prevent or remove the obstruction the police detail went to the scene and saw that a car which was trying to get through had been stopped by the crowd, its windows had been broken and the car had been forced to turn back. It was also observed that this crowd was armed with sticks, peaveys and bottles. It was established later that one of them was carrying an axe.

A call was sent for a police detail from Grand Falls to help deal with this situation, since the road was blocked. On arrival of a detail of some 50 police, including some members of the Newfoundland constabulary, words were exchanged in which the police clearly indicated that the obstruction could not be allowed to continue and the group must disperse. One of the crowd then swung an axe at one of the leading policemen. The police moved in to arrest him. This led to a clash. A member of the Newfoundland constabulary was struck on the head with a club and critically injured. This clash lasted for some ten minutes. Nine of the apparent ringleaders were arrested and the balance dispersed into nearby brush. I am informed that two of the crowd of strikers were also injured, but the extent of their injuries is not known. The member of the Newfoundland constabulary is critically ill in hospital.

In concluding this statement, Mr. Speaker, I should like to make it clear that I have made this report to the house not because I as Attorney General of Canada have any immediate responsibility for the enforcement of law and order in the province of Newfoundland, but simply in my capacity as minister responsible for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. As such it is my concern to see that the police discharge their responsibilities wherever they may arise, and it is also my concern to investigate any criticism of the conduct of the R.C.M. police. I have investigated and reported upon the situation accordingly.

I am satisfied from my investigation that there is no foundation for any suggestion that the police have permitted themselves to be used as strikebreakers. I am also satisfied that they have acted strictly within the limits of their duties in connection with the enforcement of the criminal law as these duties are multiplied under the circumstances of a strike. Indeed, it is apparent that the approximately 150 police involved have done a thoroughly creditable job in their efforts to preserve the peace over a long period under most trying and difficult circumstances.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all hon. members of the house will have listened with great interest to the report which has just been made by the minister in, as he has stated, his capacity as the minister responsible for the activities of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in the responsibilities they have incurred as the result of an agreement made with the government of the province of Newfoundland. I am sure the house will have learned with satisfaction that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are discharging with restraint the responsibilities arising out of an extremely difficult and indeed very distressing labour situation; that their activities have been confined solely to the maintenance of peace; have been preventive in that sense, and also that they have not been concerned in any way, shape or form with any strikebreaking activities. We would expect that from the R.C.M.P. under any circumstances.

I am sure also the house will have learned with great regret from the minister and from the press of the most unfortunate clash at Badger last evening which has resulted in injury, especially in grave injury, to a member of the Newfoundland police. Pershaps, Mr. Speaker, since we are dealing at this time only with the relationship of the R.C.M.P. to this matter, that is all I can usefully say.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, the incidents to which the Minister of Justice has referred have been serious ones. They are incidents which give us cause for concern, and to which I am sure all members of parliament generally are giving their attention at this time. I listened very carefully to the statement of the Minister of Justice. So far as the C.C.F. group are concerned we shall have to examine very carefully the statement he has made, because we feel that as a basic principle the Royal Canadian Mounted Police should never be used as strikebreakers.

Mr. McPhillips: What do you mean?

Mr. Argue: And should not be used in any way detrimental to human rights and fundamental freedom.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Argue: We in this group believe that those incidents were unnecessary and could have been avoided. We feel that in this very difficult situation the government is justified in giving the most active and earnest consideration to whether or not it should set aside the law of Newfoundland.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would ask the hon. member for Assiniboia to consider whether it is proper to go beyond the matter which was raised by the statement of the minister. I appreciate that he would like to comment on broader aspects of this matter, but I do not consider that appropriate at this stage of the proceedings.

Mr. Argue: On the point of order which you have raised, Mr. Speaker, I submit with great deference that in relation to these very tragic incidents it is most appropriate that a member should comment on the things that can be done to prevent these incidents happening. We have referred to this in the past. We know that it is now before the governor in council—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I cannot accept the hon. member's interpretation of what is proper to be done at this stage. The matter which is raised is the responsibility of the federal authorities for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and their activities in connection with the keeping of order in Newfoundland, and not the matter on which I apprehend the hon. member was about to embark, namely the question of the recent legislation of Newfoundland. I would consider that out of order, and I ask him not to enter on that subject.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice went over in some detail some of the circumstances surrounding the incidents to which he referred. I hold in my hand further comment on this latest incident. It is reported in today's Toronto Star as follows:

> Marching three abreast and carrying nightsticks a column of 66 policemen waded into a throng of striking loggers last night, clubbed two of them unconscious, flattened dozens more, while wives and children screamed for them to stop.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Argue: I continue:

> I watched the attack on mainly defenceless men for about an hour.

I do not intend, Mr. Speaker, to read the whole of this news report into the record.

Mr. Churchill: May I ask the hon. member a question? Does the hon. member accept that statement as his own and take responsibility for it?

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, I am not accepting—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Coward.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Assiniboia has the floor.

Mr. Argue: I am referring to something that I feel should cause all members of the house concern.

Mr. McDonald (Hamilton South): It does.

Mr. Argue: I am certain that it causes the cabinet concern. I am asking that this report, in addition to the information the Minister of Justice has given the house this afternoon, should be inquired into. I was about to say that the report is headed "Eyewitness —It Was Dark Hour for Canada's Finest." The report goes on to say:

> It was a dark hour for Canada's finest and the beginning of violence that could set all central Newfoundland aflame.

I reiterate that I believe members of the house on both sides are most concerned with these tragic and regrettable incidents. We in this group feel that they need not have taken place, and we respectfully submit that action should now be taken by the cabinet to disallow this legislation.

Mr. Fulton: May I comment on one thing the hon. member has said. Of course all reports received as to these incidents will be most fully and carefully investigated to establish what are the true facts. My information is that the only ones who carry any form of stick, and it is called a nightstick, are the Newfoundland constabulary. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police, as my hon. friend knows, carry short riding crops.

Mr. Winch: How they can hurt.

Mr. Fulton: My information also is that the picketers—

An hon. Member: How do you know?

Mr. Winch: I know. I got it years ago.

Mr. Fulton: —in question were armed with pulpwood clubs, bottles, peaveys and one at least with an axe.

UNITED NATIONS

UNRWA—GIFT OF FLOUR FOR PALESTINE REFUGEES

Hon. Sidney E. Smith (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the house will be interested in the statement I am about to make. The government has decided to seek parliamentary approval for a special gift of $1,500,000 worth of Canadian flour, which is equivalent to about 973,000 bushels of wheat, to the United Nations relief and works agency for Palestine refugees. This proposed expenditure will be in addition to our normal cash contribution of $500,000 for which parliamentary approval will be asked when we consider the main estimates for 1959-60.

The house will recall that a similar special flour contribution was made to UNRWA last year. That contribution, together with a very large matching contribution made by the United States, we have been informed, brought about a considerable though temporary improvement in UNRWA's finances and, as we had hoped, the agency has been able to make plans to use the savings effected on food costs, through our gift of flour, to revive some of the more constructive rehabilitation projects of the agency such as improved vocational training facilities and the like. Some of these activities had to be abandoned because of lack of funds.

Recently, however, despite new and increased pledges by a number of countries and despite a lower total budget, UNRWA has again found itself gravely short of funds. As last year, our flour contribution will also make available to UNRWA a large additional contribution from the United States on a matching basis. The contribution is being made not only because of the humanitarian reasons which the government will place before the house but by reason also of UNRWA's important role in preserving political stability in the area through its relief and rehabilitation work among the refugees.

This special contribution is also evidence at this time of Canadian support for a proposal that was unanimously adopted by the United Nations assembly last year, namely to designate 1959 as a world refugee year. The objective of the world refugee year is to focus attention of governments and peoples on the unfortunate plight of large groups of refugees and, by drawing forth increased support for programs in their aid, to alleviate and where possible solve their difficulties.

Mr. Speaker, just for a moment I will seize this opportunity to speak of the contributions that have been made by Canadian citizens and certain voluntary organizations in Canada in addition to government help for UNRWA. A number of private Canadian charitable organizations are providing extremely valuable and worth-while assistance. The Unitarian service committee of Canada, for example, provided in 1958 some 20 tons of clothing for the refugees, 10,000 layettes sewn by thousands of groups across Canada, and funds for commercial and nurse-midwife training courses. The Canadian Red Cross women's work committee supplied over $19,000 worth of new clothing to UNRWA in 1958, and other significant contributions have been made by the Canadian Lutheran world relief and the committee on overseas relief of the United Church of Canada. All these and other voluntary organizations in Canada deserve our commendation for their work in this and many other important fields abroad.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the announcement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs will be welcomed by all hon. members in this house. It is, of course, a continuation, as he would be the first to recognize, of a policy that was adopted a number of years ago by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) when he served as secretary of state for external affairs. Then milk, codfish and other forms of food assistance, including flour, were given to the United Nations relief agency in addition to the $500,000 which Canada as a member of the United Nations had allocated to her.

I may be permitted, as one who recently visited some of these refugee camps under the United Nations relief and works agency, to confirm what the minister has said about the extremely important contribution which supporting and contributing countries are making to the maintenance of some one million refugees in the Middle East area. As the minister has said, it is not only a matter of the contributions that are being made by the governments concerned but of voluntary contributions, notably those made by a number of Canadian organizations which were properly referred to a few moments ago by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

This whole question, however, points up the consideration which this government and other nations must give when this assignment under the United Nations terminates in 1960. The house will hope that the minister will be able at some early date to give some indication of the policy of the government with regard to the future operations of UNRWA and the ultimate disposition of this extremely serious and difficult refugee problem.

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the group in this section of the house—and I intend to be very brief indeed—may I say that we were pleased to hear the announcement made by the minister. We are particularly pleased with the emphasis the minister placed on his hopes for rehabilitation of the refugees. However, Mr. Speaker, we all know that the situation with regard to these refugees has become gradually worse over the years, and that our expectations of earlier years have not been fulfilled. We hope the government will continue to place as much emphasis as it possibly can on rehabilitation as being extremely important, possibly even more important than relief, so that the difficulty in this trouble spot in the Middle East may soon be resolved.

Mr. Smith (Hastings-Frontenac): In view of the remarks that have been made, Mr. Speaker, I would just add this comment. With this gift of $1,500,000 worth of flour, Canada will be the third largest contributor to UNRWA. First there is the United States, then the United Kingdom and then Canada.

STARRED QUESTIONS

A. V. ROE LIMITED—MEETINGS WITH PRIME MINISTER

Question No. 33—Mr. McIlraith:

1. Did the Prime Minister meet with the president of A. V. Roe Canada Limited or any of the officials of A. V. Roe Canada Limited between September 24, 1958 and February 20, 1959?
2. If so, where were any such meetings held and with whom were they held in each case?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): The answers are as follows:

1. Yes. On February 5, 1959.

2. A meeting was held with Mr. J. S. D. Tory, vice president and director of A. V. Roe Canada Limited in my office here in Ottawa. With respect to the other meetings with officials of Avro, an order for return was directed and it will be available either today or tomorrow.

PRINCE ALBERT, SASK. BRIDGE

Question No. 37—Mr. Caron:

1. Has the federal government built, agreed to build or made any contribution to the cost of building a bridge across the Saskatchewan river in the city of Prince Albert?
2. If so, what proportion of the cost of the said bridge will be paid or has been paid for by the federal government?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): The answers are as follows:

1. Yes; under the roads to resources program.

2. Fifty per cent up to a maximum of $1,250,000.

PREVAILING RATE EMPLOYEES, NATIONAL DEFENCE—POLITICAL ACTIVITY

Question No. 38—Mr. Hellyer:

1. Are prevailing rate employees of the Department of National Defence allowed to take part in partisan political activity without endangering their employment?
2. What regulation of the department, if any covers this point and when was it passed?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): The answers are as follows:

1. No; although there are certain exceptions defined in departmental regulations.

2. Department of National Defence regulations governing this matter were first defined in 1951, incorporated into the civilian personnel administrative and accounting manual in 1956, and issued in present form as article 7.16, in 1958.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

ATOMIC WASTE DISPOSAL, NORTH ATLANTIC

Question No. 222—Mr. Morris:

1. Were atomic waste materials recently dropped in the North Atlantic, Lat. 34 deg. 14 mins. N. Long. 45 deg. W.?

2. Is Canada a signatory of any international convention or agreement covering the disposal of atomic waste materials at sea?

3. If so, has the federal government made any representations concerning atomic waste materials being dropped in Lat. 34 deg. 14 mins. N. Long. 45 deg. W.?

4. Has any analysis been made recently of the Canadian off-shore waters of the Atlantic coast to determine whether atomic waste disposal at sea affects the Canadian fishery?

5. If so, what was the nature of the findings?

TRADE

OIL—EXPORTS TO U.S. IN 1958

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. L. Houck (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, this is a more lengthy question than I would like to ask, but I have given the Minister of Trade and Commerce notice and have discussed it with him, and I think he is ready and willing to give the answer. I would like to ask the minister the names of the Canadian oil companies which in the last year exported crude oil to the United States under the voluntary control arrangement to limit exports to the United States. I would also like to ask the amount exported to the United States by each of the companies, and the voluntary quota which each company accepted. Finally I would like to know the names of the oil companies which, according to President Eisenhower, exceeded their quota and thus brought on mandatory controls.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member gave me notice of this question, but I regret that we cannot give him all the information he would like. There is no official information in the possession of the government as to the names of individual Canadian oil companies which have participated in shipments of oil to refineries in the United States. Alberta oil is marketed under a prorationing system within which each producer of oil of the specifications demanded by a United States importer shares in any shipment to that importer.

In reply to the second question, there is no information in the possession of the government as to the amount of oil exported to the United States by each individual Canadian oil company. The total exports of oil by pipe line were 21,467,000 barrels by Interprovincial pipe line, and 8,846,000 barrels by Trans Mountain pipe line.

In answer to the third question about the quotas, no Canadian company has a quota set for it in relation to exports to the United States. The United States government asked refineries in the United States to accept voluntary quotas for imports of oil from all sources, and the refineries arranged their purchases of oil from various sources within this quota.

As to the names of the companies, we have no information with regard to the names of the companies which President Eisenhower had in mind in the reference in his press statement to companies which had exceeded their import quotas. They were, of course, United States companies, not Canadian companies.

OIL—MANDATORY CONTROLS ON EXPORTS TO U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. Has the Minister of Trade and Commerce any comment to make on the new and mandatory restrictions placed by the United States on imports of Canadian oil?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Calgary South had spoken to me respecting this matter, and I wish to advise that, as hon. members are aware, the President of the United States yesterday proclaimed the institution of a system of mandatory controls on imports of petroleum and petroleum products. These replaced the voluntary oil import program which had been in effect since July, 1957, and which apparently had been fully considered prior to June 10, 1957, and the decision as to the course to be taken determined.

This note brings to the attention of Canadians a matter of grave concern to Canada. This government has vigorously and repeatedly protested the application to Canada of any United States restrictions on imports of oil, whatever their form. As was pointed out to the United States government in our recent note of February 19, we believe there is no justification on the ground of security, or for that matter on any other ground, for restrictions on oil imports from Canada.

The text of the new regulations has just been received; therefore there has not been time to study their implications. However, in his statement yesterday to the press the President referred to informal discussions which are taking place between Canada, Venezuela and the United States. The position of Canada was made clear to the United States cabinet secretaries at the meetings with them on January 5 and January 6. On January 19 and January 20 some of our officals participated in informal discussions in Washington. On each and every one of these occasions it has been urged that whatever restrictive measures the United States found necessary to adopt, those measures should not apply to Canada.

In the course of his press statement yesterday the President indicated a desire that further conversations should be held. The government will seize every opportunity—and I want to make this very clear—to obtain unimpeded access to the United States market for Canadian oil. In this or in other ways which may be necessary our determination is to safeguard the interests of the Canadian oil industry.

[Later:]

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): May I ask a supplementary question arising out of the statement made by the Prime Minister with reference to President Eisenhower's announcement. In view of the very serious damage which will result to the Canadian economy because of this very regrettable step, can the minister say what consideration the government is giving to the building of a pipe line to the Montreal area, and if the government has decided whether such a line would help provide a market for western oil?

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. gentleman always has a solution for all the problems. May I say in respect to his question that the course of action to be followed by the government will be determined in the light of the fullest study.

Mr. Argue: The Prime Minister always has an answer.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Prime Minister, in view of the fact that the last note of protest by the government in this matter was on February 19, before the President had asked for an extension of time to enable him to consider this question, if he took advantage of a suggestion which was made from this side of the house that he himself should communicate directly with President Eisenhower before March 10, so as to avoid the imposition of these curbs on Canadian oil imports.

Mr. Diefenbaker: As a matter of fact the suggestion had been made long before it was ever thought of by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the house. There are from time to time, and will continue to be, representations made to the President with respect to these matters which we believe are detrimental to Canada and, in particular, to Canada and the United States because of the relationship which exists between the two countries in respect of defence.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Prime Minister may possibly have misunderstood my question. May I ask him again whether representations were made directly by the Prime Minister after the last note of February 19?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Representations were made, of course, during the visit of the President here with regard to this and other matters, and from time to time the fullest representations are made, all of which come to the attention of the President. Some of them have been made in very recent weeks and months.

U.S. IMPORT CONTROLS ESTABLISHED DURING TERM OF LIBERAL GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, I wish to refer to Hansard of March 3, 1959, at page 1550, where during a passage between the Leader of the Opposition and myself the following summary is reported. The Leader of the Opposition asked me if I would mention any of the other materials exported to the United States in respect of which notes had been sent to the United States, to which I replied:

> At the moment I am unable to indicate the exact ones, but I have a list of them available. It covers agricultural products and other commodities, and I will give it to the hon. gentleman.

Then there are some references to Mr. Howe which have no application here. Then the Leader of the Opposition said:

> What commodities?

To which I replied:

> Well, as I said a moment ago, I can look this up, and I will place them on the record since the hon. gentleman has probably forgotten.

Then there are some further references and the hon. gentleman then said:

> I think I can help the Prime Minister. The protest he is talking about was against the export of barley that went into rye whisky in the United States.

To which I replied:

> Oh, it was more than barley going into rye whisky. I will give the hon. gentleman the list.

The other day the same question was again asked. I now have before me the list of formal representations to the United States on trade matters for the period February, 1953 to June, 1957.

The list is as follows: Dairy products, February 11, 1953; a note protesting extension of import restrictions under the United States defence production act to include dried milk products. Cheese and dairy products, June 30, 1953; note protesting decision of the United States to continue import restrictions on cheese and other dairy products under the agricultural adjustment act when the authority under the defence production act had expired. Oats and groundfish fillets, July 20, 1953; the note referred to the tariff commission investigations conducted on oats and groundfish fillets. Lead and zinc, May 28, 1954; the note referred to the tariff commission's recommendation that the tariff be increased on lead and zinc imports. Groundfish fillets, May 28, 1954; the note referred to the tariff commission's recommendation that the tariff be raised and a quota imposed on imports of groundfish fillets. Alsike clover seed, June 4, 1954, and again on June 25, 1954. The next one is hardboard, July 19, 1954. Then on July 27, 1954, lead and zinc. September 29, 1954, oats; a note referring to the tariff commission's recommendation to impose quotas on imports of oats. Barley and barley malt, October 7, 1954. Crude oil, March 8, 1955. Lead and zinc, March 31, 1955. Alsike clover seed, May 13, 1955. Hardboard, June 1, 1955. Surplus disposal of agricultural products, June 2, 1955. Rye, June 27, 1955. Then August 23, 1956, regarding imports of hard fibre cordage. September 4, 1956, wheat disposal. October 16, 1956, groundfish fillets. January 8, 1957, synthetic rubber. May 15, 1957, alsike clover seed. May 29, 1957, lead and zinc.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Perhaps I could ask the Prime Minister, in view of the lengthy list he has just put on record in Hansard, whether he is aware that my intervention arose out of a discussion of restrictions on defence products such as oil and other minerals. I asked if any restrictions had been placed on oil and other minerals during the years we were in office. The list he has read indicates that only on three occasions were protests made with regard to minerals, and on each occasion these were letters protesting against the possibility of such restrictions. Restrictions were not in fact imposed at that time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am not entering into any controversy about this matter now. The record is there.

Mr. Pickersgill: It certainly is.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I was answering the Leader of the Opposition who said it was only in respect of rye going into whisky, and I thought the record would enlighten him.

Mr. Pearson: In view of the study the Prime Minister has now been able to give to this matter of restrictions, may I ask whether he has discovered any restrictions which were imposed by the United States on the import of oil and base metals from Canada during the period of office of the former administration.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is why I gave the list, so the hon. gentleman might be able to study the information which he asks me to compile and add to his knowledge which, he said, was restricted to the case of rye going into whisky.

Mr. Pearson: May I tell the Prime Minister what the answer is; there were none.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

NEWFOUNDLAND—INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT ACTION ON LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. I wonder if the minister could indicate what action, if any, the government has taken with respect to the request for the disallowance of certain pieces of Newfoundland legislation.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, there is really nothing I can add to what the Prime Minister said yesterday. As a matter of fact, to the best of my knowledge we have not yet received from Newfoundland the official copy of the legislation which the British North America Act requires to be sent to us. One or two other hon. members have inquired about this matter, including the hon. member for Hamilton South. I know the Secretary of State has written officially requesting it to be sent as soon as possible, but the last time I asked about it the copy had not reached that office. Until the matter is before us we are not able to make any decision, as the Prime Minister indicated yesterday.

Mr. Howard: I wonder if the government will do everything it can to speed up the forwarding of a copy of this legislation, recognizing that each moment's delay will aggravate the situation down there and contribute toward further unfortunate and inexcusable violence.

Mr. Fulton: I think the hon. member heard me say that we have asked for the official copy of this bill to be sent with all dispatch. So far as I am aware, until it arrives there is no official action that can be taken in connection with it.

CIVIL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Will the minister soon be in a position to give the house the statement on civil defence for which we are waiting so eagerly?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

GRAIN

WHEAT—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON DELIVERY AND QUOTA POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. Muir (Lisgar): Would the Minister of Trade and Commerce inform the house as to the present position in the prairie provinces of our wheat board delivery quotas?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I should like to thank the hon. member for advising me that he intended to ask this question. The quota delivery system in the prairie provinces is in a very favourable position, and reflects the activities of the Canadian wheat board in disposing of our grain. Last year the quota of 2 bushels per specified acre applied at 706 stations. The improvement this year is such that only 80 stations are on that 2 bushel quota. Last year there were 771 stations on the 3 bushel quota. This year there are 968. Last year 559 stations were on the 4 bushel quota per specified acre, and this year there are 633. Last year at this period, March 8, there were no stations whatsoever on the 5 bushel quota, and this year there are 348. The picture represents a vastly improved situation for the marketing of grain.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): In view of the good progress which has been made—the minister has suggested that it reflects the activity of the wheat board, but I might add it also arises because of short crops in certain areas where wheat is not available—

An hon. Member: Sour grapes.

Mr. Argue: —does the minister have sufficient information available at the present time to enable him to say whether or not there is any possibility of having open delivery quotas in western Canada at the end of the crop year?

Mr. Churchill: The hon. member will recall that before the end of the last crop year all the stations out west were on either 6 or 7 bushel quotas, and it is obvious from the situation now prevailing that this situation will be repeated this year and that perhaps an open quota will prevail.

OIL

FURTHER STATEMENT ON SALE OF OIL AND GAS PERMIT RIGHTS IN NORTHERN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I made a statement in the house regarding the sale of oil and gas permits in northern Canada, and I pointed out that we would be accepting cash bonus bids to the value of over $6,500,000. The Leader of the Opposition asked how many of these bids were made by United States corporations or by Canadian subsidiaries of such corporations.

I have had a check made of the status of the various successful bidders. There were ten successful bidders, of whom two were United States corporations and four were Canadian subsidiaries of such corporations. One corporation is owned by United States, Canadian and British interests, and there were three Canadian firms. As I said yesterday I shall be making a full statement before the standing committee on mines, forests and waters. At that time I hope to make it clear that the Canadian public interest will be protected in the development of these resources.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

"PRIVATE AND PUBLIC INVESTMENT IN CANADA —OUTLOOK 1959"—STATEMENT IN CLARIFICATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Ottawa West questioned a statement I had made on March 6 when I was tabling the investment intentions for 1959. My statement was:

—increased capital outlays are indicated for each of the three levels of government.

Inquiries of the Ministry

In the same paragraph I went on to say, as reported at page 1673 of Hansard for March 6:

Outlays made directly by federal departments are estimated to increase by 10 per cent—

The hon. member drew my attention to page 17 of the booklet entitled "Private and Public Investment in Canada—Outlook 1959" and thought perhaps there was an error. There was no error at all, Mr. Speaker. My statement referred to the capital investment intentions of government departments, which may be found in subparagraph 3 on that page. If the hon. member will check again he will discover that the investment intentions of federal departments this year exceed those of last year by $38.9 million.

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister go a little further in correcting this matter? I find myself unable to understand his explanation. He made the statement when tabling the document that increased capital outlays are indicated for each of the three levels of government; that is, the federal, provincial and municipal governments. The information as I have it from the booklet indicates that the total capital expenditure by the federal government will be $863.1 million in 1959 as against $893.7 million in 1958, or a decrease of some $30 million. It is that point I want cleared up, because the figure the minister now gives to the house for government departments is only one part of the capital outlay of the federal government. The same point would arise with the figures for municipal and provincial governments.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I believe I can explain that very briefly. Under each of the headings dealing with federal, provincial and municipal governments there are three subheadings, one for enterprises, one for housing and in one instance one for institutions. The sentence that has been quoted here today referred to the subparagraph dealing with government departments and not housing, enterprises or institutions.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Are we to understand that when the minister said that increased capital outlays are indicated for each of the three levels of government, he was really meaning each of the three levels of government departments?

Mr. Churchill: I think that is quite right, Mr. Speaker. It was explained in a subsequent sentence in the same paragraph.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister not think it would be much better just to table documents of this sort that all hon. members can read for themselves?

Mr. Speaker: Order. There will be a further opportunity to debate this matter, of course.

AMENDMENT RESPECTING ADMINISTRATION OF MONEYS

The house resumed, from Tuesday, March 10, consideration in committee of Bill C-33, to amend the Public Servants Inventions Act —Mr. Churchill—Mr. Rea in the chair.

On clause 1—Time within which liability may arise.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): Mr. Chairman, I do not know if at this stage the minister has anything to add to what he said yesterday. I do not want to labour the point I was raising. Has the minister anything to say?

Mr. Churchill: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the co-operation of the hon. gentleman. We covered the ground rather fully last night, but perhaps I may summarize for the benefit of anyone who is a bit confused.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Before the minister continues may I ask those hon. members who are talking to please lower their voices, and especially those who are sitting anywhere near an area where one of the microphones is open in front of someone who is speaking, because background noises can be heard.

Mr. Churchill: The explanatory notes set out in the bill which I read last night show the necessity for the amendment in this phrase:

—the moneys received from royalties are to be used by the corporation for the purpose of this act and the purpose for which the corporation was established.

I also indicated it was done at the suggestion of the comptroller general. There may have been some misunderstanding with regard to the purpose served by the corporation, which perhaps could be explained in this way. The corporation was established under the national research council for the following purposes:

1. To examine any invention referred to the corporation and to evaluate it.
2. To determine if the invention is new and decide as to its patentability.
3. To determine if the development has any value commercially.
4. If, after careful examination of 1, 2 and 3, it is decided that the invention is new, that it has a commercial value, and it is patentable, the Canadian Patents and Development Limited proceed to apply and process the securing of a patent.
5. If a patent issues the Canadian Patents and Development Limited endeavour to interest industry in its production.

6. Costs of the above are paid for by the Canadian Patents and Development Limited on the understanding that they will recover their costs from royalties received.

Under the act as it stands at present the royalties received are payable to the consolidated revenue fund, and as Canadian Patents and Development Limited receive no vote from parliament it is impossible for them to operate. This amendment is to correct this situation. I continue:

7. In addition to the above, the Canadian Patents and Development Limited would be authorized to make awards to the inventor in accordance with section 11, subsection 1 of the public servants inventions regulations on the recommendation of the appropriate minister.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): Mr. Chairman, I am sure those hon. members of the committee who followed the debate last evening welcome this explanation, and I think perhaps I played a small part in eliciting this statement from the minister. However, I am going to ask this question once more. Is it not a fact that the explanatory note referred to one corporation as being the corporation mentioned, while as a matter of fact there may be a number of corporations that will have the power to receive and retain these moneys and use them for their purposes in addition to Canadian Patents and Development Limited?

Mr. Churchill: As I mentioned last night, Mr. Chairman, it was the intention that this would refer to Canadian Patents and Development Limited. I queried the Department of Justice people with regard to that, and they would prefer to have it stated as it is now so that if necessary some other corporate agency may operate under the limitations of this particular act.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): That is the point I have been trying to make all along. Following the first three subsections of section 9 it is clear that other crown corporations will be eligible to operate under subsection 4, and may receive moneys and disburse them for their purposes. I understand the minister to agree with what I have said up to this point. The balance of my remarks relate to the general aspects of the law, and I could refer to this again for details when the estimates are before us.

Mr. McIlraith: In so far as the explanatory notes are concerned, and as to what is being sought to be done in this legislation, I have no objection at all. In so far as the remarks of the minister pertaining to Canadian Patents and Development Limited, are concerned I well understand the situation and I am in accord with that he is seeking to do pertaining to that company but what concerns me is this. The legislation as drafted is not confined to Canadian Patents and Development Limited at all, and we have had no information at any stage of this bill as to how many other patents which are not being administered by Canadian Patents and Development Limited are now held by other ministers under the act. How many other corporate agencies of Her Majesty are now holding patents? We have no explanation on that point at all. I do not propose to delay the matter longer but I wonder whether the minister is able to give us some information on this because it is this point which concerned me when the matter was up yesterday.

Mr. Churchill: No other crown corporations are handling patents in the way which this organization handles them but there might be patents held by various government departments. We have not that information in front of us at the present time. I presume it could be obtained.

Mr. McIlraith: Take a corporation such as Polymer, does it hold any patents?

Mr. Churchill: Yes, I believe it does.

Mr. McIlraith: As I see the legislation there is a weakness in it in that the patents having to do with one department and its activities could be referred to another crown corporation that is wholly unrelated in its work. I am wondering whether the minister has thought through the draftsmanship of the section in the light of what was said about it last night and the questions that were asked.

Mr. Churchill: I fully appreciate the suggestions that were put forward. It may be that next year we might have to look at the entire act to which the hon. member for Ottawa East raised some objection. But I think it would not be unwise simply to adopt this amendment now which makes regular what has been done during the last three years. If it does not go far enough, I think perhaps we can have a look at it. In fact, I think the hon. member for Ottawa East would rather prefer, would he not, that we examine the whole act in addition to this slight amendment which is suggested on this occasion?

Mr. McIlraith: I will not pursue the matter further but I do want to be on record as indicating disapproval of the draftsmanship of the amending bill, to achieve the purposes set out by the minister. I think it is quite desirable that the legislation he is seeking for Canadian Patents and Development

Limited be granted and approved, but I do question the form of this bill to achieve that end.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before the clause passes may I ask the minister whether he has the number and date of the order in council under the transfer of duties act that I asked about?

Mr. Churchill: The hon. member was asking for the date of the order in council which transferred—

Mr. Pickersgill: I will refresh the minister's memory. I pointed out that the functions of one department could be transferred to another department only under the transfer of duties act or by statute and since it has not been done by statute I was wondering on what date and by what order in council the administration of this act has been transferred from the Secretary of State to the Minister of Trade and Commerce?

Mr. Churchill: I am sorry, I have not that information in front of me.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not want to press it.

Mr. Churchill: I will get it and relay it to the hon. member privately.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the minister would not mind putting it on the record some time by tabling the order.

Mr Churchill: All right.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL TAX-SHARING ARRANGEMENTS ACT

FURTHER EXTENSION OF INCOME TAX RATE

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Federal - Provincial Tax - Sharing Arrangements Act to extend for a further period of one year the rate of 13 per cent for standard individual income tax for the purpose of calculating the tax equalization payments to the provinces and the amounts payable to the provinces under the tax rental agreements.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Rea in the chair.

Mr. Benidickson: Is the minister not going to make a statement on introducing this resolution?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this resolution is very clear and very simple. It is to extend for another year the increase which was made a year ago in the provincial share of the yield from the personal income tax from the 10 per cent rate which was established in the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act to 13 per cent. The whole subject of dominion-provincial fiscal relations was very fully discussed in this house in a two day debate on February 9 and 10. I take it there is no occasion to cover today ground that was then very fully covered.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Finance was extremely brief in introducing this resolution. However, in view of the fact that it relates to our federal system and our relationship with the provinces, notwithstanding the debate that we had on February 9 and 10, there is involved in the matter a great deal that the minister has not referred to. I would hope that before we pass this stage he will feel prompted to say something to the committee in explanation of some of the queries which I am sure are in the minds of a great number of members.

It is true that I was one of those who participated in that debate on February 10. In consideration of all of my colleagues I do not want to be unduly repetitive. On the other hand, under our rules the debate was limited by time and the minister was permitted to speak only once. Unlike the present occasion, he was not enabled to reply to subsequent questions, questions which are of very great merit. I hope that before we move on to the next stage we may get some further enlightenment from the minister. Despite what the minister may say it cannot be denied that we are again facing something that he himself was most vigorous in criticizing in the past, that is, any suggestion that in our dealings with the provinces there might be something in the nature of a unilateral decree. I cannot think of anything more deserving of the description, "unilateral decree", than the telegram type of notification the minister sent late in January of 1958.

I feel that this particular subject is very deserving of the attention of the committee because I am quite sure that in the last few days the minister is finding—the evidence has been put before some of the rest of us also—that there is quite a harvest of disenchantment with respect to the equation of promises with performance. I cannot think of any area where this is more noticeable than in the matter of federal-provincial relationships.

As I have said before, and I think it is worth repeating, in this new parliament we have a great number of members who were not here when the basic statute was introduced in 1956. At that time the Minister of Finance, who is introducing the measure now before us, and the present Prime Minister had a great deal to say. I am quite sure that members of the house, including the heavily weighted government party, are fully aware of the promises of the Prime Minister in both the 1957 and 1958 campaigns. But I am not so sure that one could expect them to be equally familiar with the positions taken and the commitments made by the present Minister of Finance and Prime Minister when federal-provincial relations were discussed in 1956.

When we had an opportunity to debate this matter in 1956 at this very stage, the first speech made by a member of the opposition was made by the then leader of the opposition, Mr. Drew. He took violent exception to proceeding with a matter that had a great effect upon our provinces in the absence of what he thought was adequate consultation with those provinces. I am going to speak about consultation with the provinces but I want to draw to the attention of the committee, particularly to the attention of new members, what I think is a very decided contrast in what we are being asked to do today.

On July 16, 1956, during debate on the resolution stage, the very same stage we are in at the moment, Mr. Drew had this to say with respect to the proposals of the previous government as to tax sharing, as found on page 5999 of Hansard:

> A government that fails to seek a solution of this problem and puts this matter into rigid statutory form before there has been approval is a government that is unfit to govern.

A year has elapsed since we were asked to do exactly what we are asked to do today. When the present Minister of Finance was in opposition in 1956, in his usual vigorous manner he had some very stern criticisms to make of the procedure, and I want to recall his words to his mind today. With respect to the matter of whether or not we have got the cart before the horse, the Minister of Finance had this to say as found on page 6296 of Hansard for July 23, 1956:

> A new conference . . . is . . . desirable. There is no use, so far as Her Majesty's loyal opposition is concerned, asking us to approve a form of dominion-provincial fiscal arrangement which has not received the approval of a single provincial government.

Before we conclude debate at this stage I think the minister should indicate whether or not his views have changed in this respect. The minister went further on second reading. I do not want to anticipate that stage, but on February 10 the minister felt that the statute itself was undesirable, unwise and was incomprehensible. He described it as a maze. Yet when he amended the statute last year he simply wanted to make one slight change. He said that where the statute then read "10 per cent" it should from then on read "13 per cent". There were no alterations to remedy those things which he described in the most derogatory terms when he was sitting on this side of the house.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think my hon. friend should be fair enough to recognize that in the meantime agreements had been signed by nine provinces with the federal government under the terms of that legislation. We are not the kind of people who propose to repudiate such agreements.

Mr. Benidickson: I am coming to that very point. My main point is that 24 months ago he and his leader assured the country in the election campaign of 1957 that there was nothing they were more concerned about if they were given the responsibility of administration than calling the provinces together and arriving at something that would not be a unilateral decree, as he described it, but on the contrary would be something that would result in benign satisfaction to all concerned.

I simply want to make the contrast I indicated earlier between the arrangements that were made before the introduction of this taxation statute in 1956 and what preceded the introduction of the minister's amendment in 1958, now repeated here. As I said, at that time the present Minister of Finance, the present Prime Minister and the then leader of the opposition were so vigorous in their criticism that they said any government was unfit to govern if it introduced a statute without being able to tell the house that it met with the approval of the other participants, the ten provincial governments.

What is the history of the taxation proposal of 1956? In April of 1955 there was a federal-provincial conference. It was followed by a conference in October. The then prime minister of the country had the courtesy to send to all those associated with him in the conference a very informative and descriptive indication of the thinking of the federal government resulting from the two conferences. There was no telegram, none of this "brinkmanship" which we saw last January when the provinces were told so abruptly, "this is it, you have it and that is all." That was followed by a conference in March, 1956, and it was after all these preliminaries that the former government felt disposed to ask parliament to make certain changes in the federal-provincial tax-sharing arrangements.

At each of these stages the record shows that as a result of the friendly consultation between the federal government and the provinces certain amendments or certain changes were made beneficial to the provinces beyond what might have been the position taken at the first conference on the part of the federal government. I will be most sympathetic to the Minister of Finance. In conference of this kind, with the bargaining that is involved in a matter of this kind, I do not think everybody can go away completely satisfied. However, what I am saying is that we had conferences and notwithstanding those conferences when in 1956 there was before this house the proposition that increased benefits to the provinces by 25 per cent, the Minister of Finance appearing with us again today was one of those who said that without proof that the provinces agreed to the proposition this parliament should not be asked to legislate by statute.

What is the contrast. I indicated that I felt that all hon. members would be quite familiar with the proposals of the Prime Minister in the last two election campaigns. There will be no lack of understanding there and no need on my part to remind any hon. member about the extremely firm statements made by him which I do not think any member of this house any more than the most humble member of the electorate would have any difficulty in any way in interpreting. I have the sources, the times and places where statements of this kind were made. This is the kind of thing that was stated in the ringing voice of the Prime Minister with respect to federal-provincial matters and I underline this. He said that one of the first steps—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): What is the date of this?

Mr. Benidickson: The date of this was in April 1957.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is two elections ago.

Mr. Benidickson: Yes, two elections ago. But the conference is all the more delayed when one recalls the time that has elapsed between this firm commitment and the failure to live up to the promise that was made in such unequivocal terms at that time.

Mr. Stinson: Before the hon. member goes on to another part of his address, will he permit a question?

Mr. Benidickson: Yes.

Mr. Stinson: Is it or is it not a fact that this administration has given to the provinces a better deal than that which they enjoyed under the previous government?

[Mr. Benidickson.]

Mr. Benidickson: I will answer my hon. friend in this way. The present administration in January of last year, in a most arrogant fashion, sent telegrams indicating that it was prepared to change the formula from 10 per cent to 13 per cent with respect to personal income. They gave most misleading figures to the press and to the public at that time, figures which have proved to be completely unsound.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Using a provincial official for that purpose.

Mr. Benidickson: It was never answered in the last debate on February 9 or 10. The Minister of Finance has never indicated whether or not the suggestion, indeed the assertion of the hon. member for Essex East was correct.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The Martin bureau of statistics.

Mr. Benidickson: The figures actually came from the chief treasury official of the department of finance in Toronto, from the department of finance of the province of Ontario rather than from his own department. In consequence, the rest of the country is wondering whether or not Ontario is getting undue consideration in strategy and matters of this kind. However, I go on to say that these were the kinds of words used at that time by the Prime Minister, and I have not completed my answer to my friend the hon. member for York Centre.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You have not even started.

Mr. Benidickson: The result of these conferences of which I have spoken was that the benefit to the provinces was increased by $105 million, which was about 25 per cent beyond the amount to which they had previously been entitled. In the fanfare, the type of thing that is so typical of this government, particularly when they use terse telegrams to express their views and get them out to the press, the indication was that this would have some benefit of the nature of $80 million. Hence the answer to my friend is that the specific amendment was not as worth while, financially or otherwise, as was the proposition of the previous year that brought to the provinces this substantial increase of 25 per cent of their revenue.

But in addition to that, everything that had been put in the agreement made by the former administration with the provinces was, as we say, stabilized. This particular thing in no way was included in the telegraphic agreement or proposition that was sent out a year ago and, I imagine, the proposition that we are being asked to rubberstamp at this time without a conference in the meantime.

What were the words that were used? They were words such as these: The federal governments grasping greed for dollars; taxes needlessly high; the municipalities were being pauperized; that we had outrageous rates of interest that were detrimental to the provinces and to the municipalities. We heard all that kind of thing.

A conference was held, Mr. Chairman. The conference was held in November 1957 and lasted for two days. The premiers were gathered together and they were given the benefit of the advice of the Prime Minister of Canada, including some soothing syrup about unemployment conditions, which prophecies proved to be extremely poor ones indeed. I want to quote from the written record of that conference. The Prime Minister said:

> We are not placing before you any "take it or leave it" attitudes; we are not taking any hard or fast positions.

Let everyone remember the telegram that came in January. However, he went on to say this:

> When we have your views and suggestions we would like to study them in detail and prepare some specific proposals to put before you at a mutually convenient time in the new year.

That is the new year of 1958. I am certainly not going to criticize the government for being unable to fulfil that particular technical commitment of holding a conference in the new year of 1958. They, like the rest of us, were engaged in an election campaign and we all understand that predicament. But the thing I do not understand is why no conference was possible in the fall of 1958. If the Minister of Finance felt so strongly that a conference should precede the presentation of a statute such as that with which we are going to be faced in a day or two, why has he changed his views? I think he must indicate some substantial reason for changing his views. On hearing the minister on February 9 and re-reading the remarks he made at that time, I gathered the impression that he is again engaging in this business of blinding the house with a wealth and welter of words. The emphasis in this particular speech was the suggestion that attention should be concentrated on the fact that there is going to be a meeting of federal and provincial officials.

Again many members of this house may not realize that there is nothing new about this. As a matter of fact there has just recently been published in the Canadian Tax Journal a report by the federal director in the Department of Finance who has responsibility for co-ordinating federal and provincial relations. This extremely efficient and well-thought of officer had this to say, as found in the Canadian Tax Journal of January-February, 1959, at page 13:

> The federal-provincial continuing committee on fiscal and economic matters had its first meeting in February, 1956. There have been five others, usually two a year, one in Ottawa and another at a provincial capital.

I suggest to the committee that in this interval of 24-odd months since the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance in the first election campaign indicated that this was almost at the top of their list of determination to provide satisfaction, there has been plenty of opportunity to bring the political leaders together, and this has not been done. I say that the Minister of Finance, in making the speech which he did on February 10, is placing a very low opinion—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I did not speak on February 10.

Mr. Benidickson: On February 9—on the judgment of his colleagues in this house when he says that there is a possibility that this would take the place—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. My hon. friend is undertaking to refer to a previous debate at the present session, which was a debate occurring on February 9 and 10 on an amendment introduced by the hon. member for Essex East to a government motion to resolve the house into committee of supply. That debate proceeded to its conclusion and the vote was taken. Now my hon. friend is seeking to continue that debate and make extended reference to it.

Mr. Benidickson: I will accede to the hon. minister's objection, but I will say that it is an objection which I do not think has been taken by anybody else so far this session. I have found that the minister has a thinner skin with respect to rules when he is introducing a bill than anyone I know. He never had the Queensbury rules suggested to him when he was on this side of the house, but he is perfectly correct.

However, it does not prevent me for a moment from saying in reply, without any reference to the debate which took place on February 9 and 10, let not the Minister of Finance attempt to put our wits to sleep with any suggestion that some conferences of officials which have been going on routinely since 1956 is any satisfaction or fulfilment of the kind of commitments which I have described and quoted to the house.

The minister on Februray 26, in answer to an order for return of papers, presented all the correspondence up to that date, which correspondence with the premiers of the provinces dealt with the subject we are now discussing. Although the return was very thin, I am a little curious why there is no correspondence from the premier of Manitoba or the premier of Ontario suggesting that we should have a conference of this kind. They were very vigorous in the past in asserting it would be very beneficial to their provinces. The premier of Manitoba said he was very disappointed that a conference had not been held. In fact, the other day, I think probably after the Arrow performance, which is out of the rules of course, the premier of Manitoba was getting disenchanted to the extent that on a TV program he said, "Yes indeed, we are getting rather unhappy about things going on in Ottawa".

The point I was intending to make, however, was, first, the slimness of the file of correspondence as presented on February 26, I wonder if the minister when he speaks subsequently will say whether or not he has carried out this commitment that he seemingly gave in a letter to the treasurer of Saskatchewan, Mr. Fines, in a letter dated January 29, when he said, "I will be writing you further on this within the next few days". As far as I know the provincial treasurers, up until a month ago, had still not been given an indication of the kind of things the minister had in mind which they might expect from the conference.

Now I refer to "brinkmanship". I say that in January, 1958 this administration carried out the typical attitude it has carried out all along, namely of stalling, delaying and creating confusion, and it was not until they knew that legislatures were likely to meet within the next two or three weeks that they did anything, which happened to be the sending of a telegram without any detail. I say the same thing is happening here. There was no conference throughout this interval, and then notification is given to the provinces by a short statement in the speech from the throne that the government simply proposed to introduce this three-line amendment to the statute in 1959.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is not correct.

Mr. Benidickson: My hon. friend indicated that in deference to the house he had not prior to the convening of the House of Commons given any intimation to the premiers of the provinces, and there is nothing in sessional paper No. 188A to indicate that the minister even said to the provinces that he was intending to continue the proposition made at the end of 1958.

[Mr. Benidickson.]

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member knows that a letter was written to the provincial premiers on the day parliament opened.

Mr. Benidickson: I said that, and I have no quarrel there. I said that no notification had been given them until after the speech from the throne, and how closely that approaches the convening of the provincial legislatures. Since then we have had budgets presented in most of the provincial legislatures. In the debate on February 9 and February 10 I think the hon. member for Essex East referred to the formula, whether it was 10 and 13 and 9 and 50. Then someone interjected that what you should say is that what they want is 15, 15 and 100. That has been demonstrated by the speeches by the treasurer of the province of Ontario, a Conservative government, and the treasurer of the province of Quebec, a government which some of us believe is pretty friendly to the present administration; I think you can call it a Conservative government.

I raised this point on the motion we have been discussing, which motion was made on February 9. I said that one of the real reasons why we should have a conference at this time is that we have a new administration. We have had it for 22 or more months now, and every utterance of the prominent members of this group when they were on this side of the house indicated that there was very little of the present set-up of which they approved. I quoted one example, and I cannot quote the other although I referred to the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General on that occasion. But I think this is very significant. One of the architects of the Conservative party described—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, might I ask for your ruling? Reference has already been made to this matter of the debate which occurred on February 9 and February 10 on an amendment introduced on behalf of the official opposition by the hon. member for Essex East. I would point out, Mr. Chairman, that at page 826 of Hansard of February 9, 1959, the amendment appears. It was seconded by the hon. member who is now addressing the committee. The amendment was in this form:

> That all the words after "that" be deleted and the following substituted therefor:
> "this house is of the opinion the government should call a federal-provincial conference at once to deal with serious problems of common concern such as unemployment and fiscal relations".

Debate, as I have indicated, proceeded on that resolution until the following evening when, in accordance with the rules, the question was put and the amendment was defeated. My hon. friend started out to refer to the statements made in that debate in detail. He conceded that he was quite out of order in doing so, but now he is proceeding to debate this same question all over again. It is quite clear, Mr. Chairman, that this is entirely out of order. If it can be debated today it can be debated half a dozen times in a session. My hon. friend and his party chose to introduce that subject at that time, and the house dealt with that subject, and in my respectful submission dealt with it conclusively as far as the present session is concerned. Therefore I submit that further reference to that subject, namely the calling of a dominion-provincial conference, is precluded as far as the present session is concerned. My hon. friend is obliged under the rules of the house to confine himself to the resolution now under discussion, which relates to a proposed amendment to the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act.

Mr. Benidickson: May I speak to the point of order? I would be the first to confess that by the use of three or four words referring to the debate which took place on February 9 and 10 I probably had technically fallen foul of the rule, and I would be the last ever to attempt to meet the Minister of Finance in a dispute over these small technical matters. But without making any reference to what was said on February 9 and 10, and coming back to my main point, I expect the minister to indicate why he has changed his view that a conference between the premiers and the federal government should precede the request to the federal parliament for a reconsideration of the statutes.

I want to say that one of the reasons why I think that such a conference should precede the introduction of a step such as this is that the Prime Minister and other members of the present ministry—

The Deputy Chairman: I thought the hon. member was going to speak on the point of order. Just to clear up that matter, I am sure I need not refer him to the appropriate citation of Beauchesne—section 148(3)—with reference to the supply motion we had on February 9 and 10. And as he has already conceded the point I am sure he will now stay within the relevant rule.

Mr. Benidickson: Quite. I will not make any further reference to that debate. I will simply state in argument—and this is very sincerely meant—that having regard to the length of time which has elapsed between the previous conference and the introduction of this resolution and to the statements made by the hon. minister and by the leader of his party when we were last legislating on matters of this kind that the cart was quite clearly before the horse, we feel that this does represent the position. Moreover, we know that many members of the present administration have over the years—I believe the Prime Minister's rolling phrase is "all through the years"; he used it again on a television program the other night—advocated that the whole concept of federal-provincial relationships should be altered. This was most obviously set forth in a speech made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce when, as reported on page 3647 of Hansard of May 10, 1955, when he had this to say:

> Dominion-provincial conferences may continue to be a necessity for Canada. If so, they should be restricted to the core of the problem, the division of administrative responsibility between the dominion and the provinces and the division of fields of taxation.

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry, but I must inform the hon. member that his time has expired.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): I was unfortunately out of the chamber when the Minister of Finance introduced this resolution. I understand the minister took about 30 seconds to perform this task, and I find this rather strange remembering the minister's eloquence on other occasions when this same subject was under discussion. This resolution reads:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act to extend for a further period of one year the rate of 13 per cent for standard individual income tax for the purpose of calculating the tax equalization payments to the provinces and the amounts payable to the provinces under the tax rental agreements.

I must say that this resolution is an outstanding example of the tendency of the present government to conduct dominion-provincial relations on a unilateral basis, and certainly it reflects an approach which members of the Conservative party condemned in vigorous terms when they were in opposition. I think it will be appropriate at this time to place on the record some of the statements which were made by various members of the present cabinet on this subject. Let us take the Minister of Trade and Commerce, for example. That minister, speaking on July 7, 1956, as reported on page 6064 of Hansard, said:

> The only way in which to approach this problem is by a conference which would deal with this crucial matter and deal with it not in 24 hours or in 48 hours but over a lengthy period.

Of course, we all recall that the conference which was called in the fall of 1957 lasted for only two days, November 25 and 26.

Then again, the Minister of Justice, as reported on page 6335 of Hansard of July 23, 1956, had this to say:

> What is needed is a meeting of all the governments with a view to assessing their needs and what if any exchange of constitutional responsibilities can be arranged by mutual consent.

I wonder what mutual consent there was about the telegrams which were sent out last January to inform the provinces what they were to receive, and, again, this year, when the announcement was made in the speech from the throne? What kind of mutual consent was there then? What steps were taken then to secure the consent of the provinces?

But in order to get a really good quotation we have to turn to the remarks of the Prime Minister himself as reported on page 6369 of Hansard of July 24, 1956 when he said:

> I wonder often why this government has not taken the provinces into its confidence. Why these short-term meetings: why these gatherings of a day or two? Why do we not have a meeting of the federal authorities, the provincial authorities and the municipalities—designed to bring about the reconsideration of a problem which for the last 13 years or so has become increasingly complex?

I submit that the situation has become even more complex in the last couple of years. Then again, on July 24, 1956 the Prime Minister said these words as reported on page 6370:

> I think it is fair to say that the attitude taken by the government at the last conference was an arbitrary one. The government simply said, "These are the terms". No opportunity was given for amendment or for amelioration of any term. The recipe for a division of taxation was as final as the laws of the Medes and Persians; and how similar that attitude was to the attitude of the government in the house which is that power makes perfect anything they do. There was no opportunity for negotiation; there was simply the attitude of a feudal lord bringing into being a modern feudalism and laying down the law to the vassals.
> That is not the attitude, that is not the consideration to which the provinces are entitled under a constitution which allocates powers as between the federal and provincial governments.

How well those words could apply to the present government even more than they applied to the previous government. Then, of course, we come to what was said by the Minister of Finance. Speaking on July 23, 1956, as reported on page 6287, the hon. member for Eglinton had this to say:

> The house is now asked to carry into legislative form and effect the formula which was the essence of the federal government's proposals. We are asked to do so with full knowledge that no provincial government has yet given its approval to those proposals and indeed with full knowledge that there has been widespread disapproval of the government's proposals on the ground of their inadequacy.

[Mr. Martin (Timmins).]

It seems so strange in the light of these words of the minister, spoken less than three years ago, to find now that the federal government's terms should be made known by telegram. And the Minister of Finance, speaking in the same debate, as reported on page 6289, said further:

> —this rigid and inflexible, this hard take-it-or-leave-it attitude, is foreign to the spirit of confederation, and there has been altogether too much of that rigidity and inflexibility in the attitude of this government all through the years during which the problem of dominion-provincial fiscal relations has occupied the attention of all those governing the dominion and the provinces.

Certainly we can see very little difference between the attitude of the previous government and the attitude of the present government. If anything the attitude of the present government is worse than that of the former administration.

When the Prime Minister convened the dominion-provincial conference in 1956 he is quoted as having said:

> We are not placing before you any take-it-or-leave-it attitudes. We are not taking any fast and hard positions.

From my observations of the present government I agree that it does not take hard and fast positions simultaneously; it takes them separately. I noticed that it took a very fast position when it came to increasing by 50 per cent the money accruing to moneylenders in this country but it reserves hard positions for the sake of the western farmers and the employees of Avro who were thrown out on the street.

We cannot criticize too severely the failure of the government to introduce proposals at the last dominion-provincial conference because it had been in office for only a few months. I do not know just how the impression was created or the undertaking given but it was clearly understood by the provinces on that occasion that the conference would be reconvened the following January in order to work out a satisfactory agreement between the federal and provincial governments. As we all know that January came and went and another January has come and gone and it is going on to a year and a half since the last conference concluded. Not only have we not had a conference but there is no indication of one in the offing.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I wonder if I may just remind the hon. member that on February 9 and 10 the house held a two-day debate on the first supply motion of this session in the following words:

> This house is of the opinion the government should call a federal-provincial conference at once to deal with serious problems of common concern such as unemployment and fiscal relations.

That was debated for two days and concluded by a vote of this house. I should like to refer to citation 148 (1) of Beauchesne's fourth edition:

148.(1) It is a wholesome restraint upon members that they cannot revive a debate already concluded; and it would be little use in preventing the same question from being offered twice in the same session if, without being offered, its merits might be discussed again and again.

The debate we held had reference to a dominion-provincial conference. I simply wish to draw that to the attention of the hon. member and ask him to bear it in mind in his remarks.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, may I raise a point of order for information on that point. I agree of course with Your Honour that we cannot ask the government to call a federal-provincial conference now because that question was decided in the negative by this house but certainly that would not preclude any member of the opposition from drawing attention to the fact that hon. gentlemen opposite on other occasions when they were in opposition were strong proponents of the holding of such conferences and that is what I apprehended the hon. member for Timmins to have said.

The Deputy Chairman: Perhaps the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate did not hear the last two or three remarks made by the hon. member for Timmins.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, I thank you for your ruling and I shall endeavour to keep my remarks well within the rules. The proposal before us at this time is a continuation of the proposal introduced last year when an amendment was made to the tax-sharing formula which provided an increase from 10 per cent to 13 per cent in the standard individual income tax in computing provincial payments under the tax-sharing agreement. The provinces were given no opportunity to discuss this proposal or to suggest amendments or alternative proposals. The federal government indicated that this was to be an interim measure effective for a period of one year but now the government is proposing that the present arrangement be extended for another one-year period without having consulted the provinces and with full knowledge that the provinces do not consider this formula adequate. This attitude of the government is most certainly representative of the take-it-or-leave-it attitude which hon. members of this administration so vehemently condemned while in opposition.

The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River made reference to the rosy picture that was painted by the Minister of Finance at the time this arrangement was introduced. This would be an increase only if the revenue stayed the same as before or if it were increased. What was accomplished was that the government raised the ceiling but did not raise the floor. A certain amount of optimism should be allowed to the government from time to time but I suggest that there has been an excess of optimism which is particularly noticeable on the part of the Minister of Finance. Many of the announcements made by that hon. gentleman lead us to believe that the country is being administered through the processes of government by mirage rather than through the processes of a government that bases its activities on facts and figures.

Possibly I have said enough concerning the actions of the government in the past. What I believe is of concern to Canadians as a whole is what the government will do in future. Will it continue to wallow in the same bog of indecision which characterized the previous administration which fact was so frequently and vocally deplored by hon. gentlemen opposite when they were in opposition? On the other hand will the government clear the decks and endeavour to establish a reasonable and just understanding with respect to these matters that would prevail from coast to coast?

Eight years from now in 1967 Canada will celebrate the 100th anniversary of its founding. Certainly that would be an excellent time to conduct a complete review of the situation in the country in order that each segment could contribute its full share to our development and perform its proper duties. It is essential that the federal government should retain its taxing powers so it can maintain the responsibility of establishing monetary and fiscal policies throughout the country. The taxing field should be left to the federal government. If this were not done how could it possibly meet national emergencies? It would have no money with which to meet these problems if the taxing authority was removed from its hands.

On the other hand the provinces have grown to have responsibilities that were not even dreamed of in 1867. They require federal assistance to meet their growing responsibilities. This line of thinking is not new. May I refer to a statement made by the former hon. member for Dauphin, Mr. Zaplitny, as reported at page 6333 of Hansard of July 23, 1956:

If there were a constitutional conference, and if those who participated took a good look at things, had expert advice, decided what from now on could be more efficiently handled on the provincial level and what in the national interests could be more efficiently handled on the federal level, and then suggested to parliament and eventually to the parliament of Westminster further amendments to our constitution based upon the results of that conference and arising out of common agreement among the representatives of the provinces and the dominion, we would do away with a great many of the difficulties that arise at a time when we are wondering how best to share these revenues.

I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the measure before the house now is more a matter of expediency than it is of any particular benefit. In fact, more and more people in this country are beginning to believe that the policy of this government is nothing more nor less than what the Prime Minister says is expedient to do each morning when he rises. That becomes the policy of the present government. If we are going to accept the responsibilities in this country of ours we cannot and we must not permit this to continue. I would say, let us fix 1967 as the target date for maturity in this country. One of the biggest steps in that direction would be to make some honest effort to solve this problem which unfortunately this government appears to have avoided so far.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, in introducing the measure under discussion this afternoon the Minister of Finance was exceptionally brief. He stated that the purpose of this resolution was clear and simple and all that it intended to do was to extend for another year the federal-provincial tax-sharing arrangements which were passed in this house last year.

In introducing the measure amending the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act last year on January 27 the Minister of Finance made it clear to the house that this act provided an interim measure only and that in its application to the fiscal year commencing on April 1, 1958, the definition of "standard individual income tax" in the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act shall for the purposes of that act and any agreements made thereunder be read and construed as if for the words "10 per cent" therein there were substituted the words "13 per cent". As I have just said, the resolution before us at the present time resolves:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act to extend the present act for a further period of one year—

This is an interim measure. In fact, Mr. Chairman, it is really in accordance with the present government's policy, which is a short term policy of introducing interim measures after interim measures.

On January 27 of last year, in introducing the resolution which provided the extension from 10 per cent to 13 per cent of the individual income tax share of the equalization formula under the federal-provincial fiscal arrangements, the Minister of Finance said, as reported at page 3847 of Hansard:

Mr. Chairman, to the present resolution and to the bill which it is hoped will follow upon the passage of the resolution, the government attaches very great importance, for it looks upon this measure as one that will bring aid to the provinces and municipalities of this country, and effective also in meeting the problem of unemployment. The terms of the resolution, I think, are clear. It is the hope of the government that it may be possible after adoption of this resolution to proceed with the motion for second reading of the bill tomorrow.

I will agree with the minister that the terms of the resolution are clear, and I think the government looked upon this measure as one which should bring aid to the provinces and the municipalities of this country. The present economic condition of the provinces and municipalities justifies the need for more than an extension of the present tax-sharing arrangements for a period of one year. In the report of the proceedings of the dominion-provincial conference of November 19, 1957 we find at page 5, the foreward of the report, the following quotation:

It was agreed at the end of the conference that a subsequent meeting be held as soon as possible in the new year in accordance with the proposals made by the federal government in calling the conference.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, this report makes it very clear that it was the intention of the government to call a dominion-provincial conference at a later date early in the new year. It was made clear that a subsequent meeting would be held as soon as possible in accordance with the proposals. In tabling on behalf of the Prime Minister copies of telegrams dispatched by the Prime Minister to the premiers of the 10 provinces on the matter of dominion-provincial fiscal relations, which we are discussing today, on January 25 of last year the Minister of Finance is reported at page 3796 of Hansard for that date to have said:

It has not been possible, as we had hoped it would be, to reconvene the dominion-provincial conference in January. Therefore as an interim measure, and an interim measure only, we are asking parliament immediately to make available this additional sum of money for the forthcoming fiscal year. Then when there is opportunity it is the intention of the government to reconvene the dominion-provincial conference with a view, as indicated in the letter, to seeking fiscal settlements. This was put forward, of course, without prejudice to the freedom that the dominion-provincial conference will undoubtedly have to discuss the whole area of fiscal settlements.

The telegram which was read and inserted in Hansard on January 25, 1958, as reported at page 3795, said in part:

> This is interim measure pending reconvening of dominion-provincial conference to seek fiscal settlements.

These are exactly the same words as were used by the Minister of Finance. The last sentence of this telegram signed by the Prime Minister reads as follows:

> The government of Canada hopes this additional assistance aggregating eighty-seven million dollars in fiscal year commencing April first will be useful in helping provinces and municipalities to meet unemployment and other problems.

There again, Mr. Chairman, it was made clear that this measure, which we are asked to renew today for another period of 12 months, was introduced as an interim measure only, pending the reconvening of the dominion-provincial conference in January of last year. Last year the session which was then under way ended on January 31. An election was held and it was followed by a second session of parliament which ended on September 7. Over a year has since gone by and today we are being asked by the Minister of Finance, not to make an improvement in the act or in the arrangements which we were asked to pass last year but just to extend the same agreement for a period of another year. In repeating his pledge to distribute more federal revenues to the provinces and municipalities the Prime Minister said at St. Patrice de Beaurivage on May 30, 1957, as reported in the Montreal Gazette for May 31:

> The provinces and municipalities are poor but the Ottawa government is rich.

Would it be true that conditions have changed considerably since May, 1957, because in June of 1957 a Conservative government took office in Ottawa? Would it be true that the federal treasury may not be in as healthy a state today as it was when the present government took over the administration of the affairs of the country? The fact remains, however, that the Prime Minister promised to make sure that the provinces and municipalities would have sufficient money to do the job they are supposed to do, and notwithstanding the charges which have been made on previous occasions in the house by the Minister of Finance blaming us of accusing the Prime Minister of not keeping his promises, we of the official opposition will make it our duty to remind the Prime Minister and his followers of the promises which they have made to the electors of the country, promises made to provinces and to municipalities, promises which they claim to have fulfilled but with respect to which the results so far are pretty insignificant.

I wonder if any individual member on the government side could go before his constituents today and convince them that the promises made by the Prime Minister to the provinces and the municipalities have been fulfilled. I hear one hon. member say, "We could." Well, just for his information I will recall some of the statements which have been made by the Prime Minister in this regard. I recall first the statement made by the Prime Minister at a press conference in Winnipeg on May 14, 1957, when he said, as reported in the Winnipeg Free Press:

> The provinces have been placed in a starving condition. The municipalities have been placed in a position where property owners are faced with heavy burdens of taxation.

We all know that starving conditions were prominent in this country during the last Conservative government, the Bennett regime. Was the statement of the Prime Minister made on May 14, 1957 a prediction of worse days to come? Did he have a premonition at that time of the conditions which exist in Canada today after only 20 months of Conservative government?

The Minister of Finance clearly stated that the government had carried the principle of equalization further than any previous government. The fact is that only 12 or 13 months after the introduction of an amendment to the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act the government is already forced to back away from the principle established by the last amendment. In fact, when the estimates for the coming fiscal year were tabled in the house a few weeks ago it was revealed that six provinces will receive considerably less under the tax-sharing agreements than they received during the present fiscal year, and unfortunately the provinces most affected under the new agreement are those which are recognized as being the needy provinces.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is not correct at all. I do not know where my hon. friend gets a statement like that because it is just not true.

Mr. Robichaud: The statement I have made is based on the estimates for the fiscal year 1959-60 which have been tabled in the house by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, it is not.

Mr. Robichaud: When the hon. member for Essex East stated on a previous occasion that an employee of the provincial government of Ontario, Mr. George Gathercole, had prepared the figures used in the telegram sent to the provincial premiers on January 24, 1958 the statement was not denied by the Minister of Finance. Therefore we must accept the fact that the Minister of Finance referred to an employee of the government of Ontario matters which were strictly within federal jurisdiction and this, Mr. Chairman, is nothing but an insult to the federal civil servants.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is utter rot.

Mr. Robichaud: The Prime Minister stated time and time again that the tax-sharing pattern used by the previous Liberal administration was niggardly so far as the provinces and municipalities were concerned. If the pattern was niggardly then when conditions were normal what must it be today when over 12 per cent of our national labour force are unemployed and seeking work?

It is true that the interim measure introduced in January, 1958, and the extension we are being asked to ratify today increased from 10 per cent to 13 per cent the individual tax share which the provinces will receive from the federal treasury. However, by failing to place a floor on the amounts which each province will receive, let us say based on the 1957-58 levels as asked last year by the then member for Montmagny-L'Islet, Mr. Lesage, the 1959 estimates now show, notwithstanding the denial of the Minister of Finance, that the poor provinces, the provinces which need it most today, may receive in the coming fiscal year substantially less than they were allotted for the year 1958-59 under the equalization method.

In fact, according to the figures we find in the estimates, to which I have just referred, New Brunswick, for example, is estimated to receive close to three-quarters of a million dollars less and Nova Scotia over $1,400,000 less and this at a time when unemployment in those provinces is at a record high, in fact, almost as high as during the hungry 30's. We are prepared to admit that the provinces were not completely satisfied with the fiscal arrangements made under the previous administration and they are definitely not satisfied with the present arrangements.

At the short 1958 conference which lasted only two days every provincial premier, without exception, asked for a more favourable tax-sharing agreement or more adequate fiscal arrangements. As late as March 26, 1958, as reported in the Halifax Herald for March 27, premier Stanfield, addressing a political meeting at Tatamagouche, said:

> Unless the tax-sharing agreements between the federal and provincial governments were revised substantially, our revenues from Ottawa would fall sharply. Nova Scotia, he said, was in no position to absorb such a reduciton.

This is in fact exactly what will happen during the coming fiscal year, and it is one of the reasons why the convening of a federal-provincial conference is urgent and the extension of the present arrangement for the period of one year will not be satisfactory. The former leader of the Conservative party, Mr. George Drew, when leader of the opposition and while addressing the house on July 16, 1956, clearly stated, as found on page 5993 of Hansard, that an arrangement should be made to reallocate to provincial governments and municipalities their share of taxes "which will make it possible for them to carry out the heavy responsibilities which they cannot ignore and cannot shirk."

I am sure that Mr. Frost, the premier of Ontario, would be pleased to hear those words repeated today. In the course of the same debate the present Solicitor General addressed the house and had this to say, as found at page 6031 of Hansard:

> What is most required is a federal-provincial conference in which the federal government and the provinces will consider the steps to be taken for a fair distribution of taxation fields so that the provinces may play their part in their own sphere.

I am sure that Premier Duplessis would be pleased to hear those words repeated today. At a press conference in Winnipeg on May 14, 1957 the Prime Minister stated that "under a Conservative government the provinces would have a voice in deciding fiscal terms and the tax agreements would contribute to national unity". Where is that voice today? Has it faded because a Conservative government is in power in Ottawa? I am sure that the premier of Manitoba, Mr. Roblin, would be pleased to have those words repeated today. A few days later in Victoria the Prime Minister said this:

> The time has come for a meeting of the provinces with the municipalities present, to discuss their problems. He intended, said the Prime Minister, to convene such a meeting in the spirit of confederation.

Again I am sure that Premier Bennett would be glad to hear those words repeated today. Here is a further statement of the Prime Minister when he said this:

> If action is not taken, we shall find ourselves in a position in five years' time where the municipalities will be bankrupt or unable to carry out their responsibilities.

It did not take five years, Mr. Chairman, under a Conservative government for the prediction of the Prime Minister to be realized. The present government has been in power less than 20 months and already throughout the country numbers of municipalities are on the verge of bankruptcy or are unable to carry out their responsibilities. Where is the action promised by the Prime Minister to ease the present tax burdens of municipalities? Where is the action promised by the Prime Minister at the opening of the short 1957 dominion-provincial conference when, in addressing the provincial premiers, as reported at pages 8 and 9 of the report, he said:

> When we have your views and suggestions we would like to study them in detail and prepare some specific proposals to put before you at a mutually convenient time in the new year. This would be in accordance with the experience in one or other past conferences, and I believe it is the most acceptable procedure and the only feasible one under all the circumstances.

Mr. Chairman, the 1958 new year has passed and the 1959 new year is passing. Yet we are still waiting for the conference and we have no indication whatsoever—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, I must rise on this point of order. My hon. friend keeps coming back again and again and asking for a conference. As was ruled some time earlier this afternoon by the deputy chairman of committees, that subject has been already concluded so far as this session is concerned by the vote of the house on February 10. It is therefore quite out of order for any hon. member to advocate the convening of a dominion-provincial conference. That matter has been concluded as far as this session is concerned by the decision of the house on February 10. That is the substance of the ruling made this afternoon by the deputy chairman of committees when he was in the chair.

Mr. Pickersgill: Speaking on the point of order, Mr. Chairman, may I say this. I was listening most attentively to my friend the hon. member for Gloucester, and he was not advocating the calling of a federal-provincial conference.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Oh, yes, he was.

Mr. Pickersgill: What he was doing, Mr. Chairman, was inquiring what had happened to the federal-provincial conference that was promised in 1957 by hon. gentlemen opposite. Surely that is a legitimate line of speculation and has nothing to do with the decision made by the house.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is a line, all right.

Mr. Robichaud: What I was saying, Mr. Chairman, is this. The only answer we have, so far, from the present government is the assurance of a continuation of the federal-provincial continuing committee on the matter of federal-provincial fiscal arrangements. We heard recently that a messenger from the minister's department had been sent around to contact the respective provincial secretary-treasurers of the various provinces.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is not a very kind remark to make about a very responsible official of the Department of Finance.

Mr. Robichaud: I will accept the minister's remark, Mr. Chairman; and I would say that the very responsible official of the Department of Finance is now visiting the provinces in order to discuss the matter of federal-provincial relations and other matters with the provincial premiers and provincial secretary-treasurers. I reminded the minister of this matter a while ago and again I presume that we shall receive no answer.

If the municipalities were the "forgotten people" under the previous administration, what are they now under the present government? I have here the last report showing the municipal tax collections to December 31, 1958 in the province of New Brunswick. I feel that these figures should go on record. It shows that as of December 31, 1958 in the county of Albert, for example, only 81.5 per cent of the current taxes have been collected; in Carleton, 59.6 per cent; in Charlotte, 66 per cent; in Gloucester, 60.8 per cent; in Kent, 69.5 per cent; in Kings, 75.4 per cent; in Madawaska, 59.3 per cent; in Northumberland, 62.2 per cent.

Mr. Stewart: May I ask the hon. member what he is reading from?

Mr. Robichaud: I am reading from the New Brunswick Municipal Monthly for January, 1959.

An hon. Member: I think the hon. member is reading his whole speech.

Mr. Robichaud: I am reading from a report. I have said that the report is the New Brunswick Municipal Monthly for January, 1959. The figure for tax collections in Queens county is not stated. For Restigouche it was 73.7 per cent; for Saint John, 74 per cent.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, may I say this. If we are going to have municipal statistics read into the record here, we can be here from now till Doomsday. Those statistics have no relevance to the matter under debate. The matter under debate is a resolution that contemplates the amendment of one clause of the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act increasing from 10 per cent to 13 per cent the provincial share from the individual income tax. There is not a word about municipal revenues.

Mr. Benidickson: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, may I just say this. Surely the Minister of Finance recalls that when this particular statute was debated on previous occasions the present Prime Minister always indicated that in a discussion with respect to tax-sharing matters it was appropriate that the municipalities should be added as a third party to the negotiations and discussions.

Mr. Robichaud: I already put the following quotation on Hansard. The last paragraph of the telegram sent by the Prime Minister to the premiers of each province stated as follows:

> Government of Canada hopes this additional assistance aggregating eighty-seven million dollars in fiscal year commencing April first will be useful in helping provinces and municipalities to meet unemployment and other problems.

What I am trying to do now is to prove to the minister that this new agreement is not meeting the needs of the municipalities. As an illustration of the urgent need of the municipalities, I should like at this time briefly to describe the financial position of my own municipality of Gloucester. The situation is serious and critical when a municipality like Gloucester is near the breaking point and has to petition the provincial government to pass special legislation to levy additional tax on liquor, beer, wine and luxuries to meet its obligations and to provide the public services expected by our population. The Gloucester municipal council also petitioned the provincial government of New Brunswick for a larger share of federal subsidies, a share which it is not receiving now.

The direct taxation in Gloucester county has reached its limit. The school taxes have increased by 80 per cent in the last 12 years.

The Chairman: Order. I have listened to the remarks of the hon. member for Gloucester for the last few minutes and I must bring to his attention the fact that he is straying away from the resolution which is at present being debated. We cannot at the present time permit discussion with regard to the situation in each individual county or in each individual municipality. We are discussing a resolution which is clear. I must ask the hon. member please to confine his remarks to matters which are relevant to the resolution under study at the present moment.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, a very important question of privilege for all members of the opposition is raised by the observations Your Honour has just made. As we have been told over and over again by the previous government and by the present one, the purpose of these tax-sharing arrangements is to put the provinces in a financial position to carry out their constitutional functions by themselves. That is the reason why we have tax-sharing, and I believe it is the only valid reason. The municipalities are creatures of the provinces. One of the most important historical reasons which has been given ever since the days of the Rowell-Sirois report on the principle of tax-sharing is that the provinces, and through them the municipalities, should be put in a financial position to carry out their functions. My hon. friend from Gloucester is showing, or attempting to show, that in his province, in one of the leading municipalities, the present arrangements which this government is asking to be continued are not being so continued. It seems to me that nothing could be more completely relevant to the subject which is before us.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order might I say I think there is relevance, because it is public knowledge that in the province from which I come, namely Ontario, the minister of planning and development, the member for Kingston, has stated within very recent weeks that every last dollar that might be forthcoming from this government to the province would be passed on to the municipalities.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order I would again recall to this committee the words of the Minister of Finance when he introduced this very same measure last year on January 27, as reported on page 3847 of Hansard. He said:

> Mr. Chairman, to the present resolution and to the bill which it is hoped will follow upon the passage of the resolution, the government attaches very great importance, for it looks upon this measure as one that will bring aid to the provinces and municipalities of this country—

I cannot see how we can be prevented from bringing in municipalities, when the Minister of Finance himself mentioned it in introducing this bill last year. It is the very same bill we are being asked to amend this year, to extend it for another period of one year. I would like your ruling on this.

The Chairman: I am not ruling out of order the remarks of the hon. member for Gloucester in this sense, that he can talk about questions relating to municipalities in a general sense. But he cannot talk about questions relating to one particular municipality. If the chair permitted the hon. member to actually deal with such matter in a particular sense it would mean that all the hon. members of this house would then have a right to ask that their own problems in each municipality be discussed. Therefore I suggest that the hon. member confine his remarks in a general sense to the relationship of the municipalities, but not to bring in individual cases.

Moreover, in relation to the point of order raised by the hon. Minister of Finance concerning the discussion with regard to the resuming of a debate which has already taken place in this house, on which a vote was taken, I would like to quote from Beauchesne's fourth edition, page 126, rule 148 (1), which states:

> It is a wholesome restraint upon members that they cannot revive a debate already concluded; and it would be little use in preventing the same question from being offered twice in the same session if, without being offered, its merits might be discussed again and again.

Consequently, I must defer to the point of order which the Minister of Finance raises, and that is that we cannot return to a debate on which there has been a vote. It would be appreciated by the Chair if the hon. members of the house confined their remarks as much as possible to the item under debate.

Mr. Robichaud: The Prime Minister in Truro on May 1, 1957 promised that the Conservative government would immediately convene a dominion-provincial conference with representatives of the provinces and municipalities to restore once again the opportunity for provinces and municipalities to exercise their functions under the terms of confederation. Direct taxation in the different municipalities of the province of New Brunswick has reached its limit. Some of those counties may certainly be a good section of the country to live in, but we have reached the point where it is impossible to live and expect the same privileges as enjoyed in other sections of the country. I do not want to cite any specific examples concerning my municipality of Gloucester but, for example, owning a car in Canada is not ordinarily considered a luxury. In some counties in the province of New Brunswick the owner of a car has to pay from $36 to $70 a year municipal taxes if it is a small imported car like an Austin, or any of the others of similar make. If he is the owner of what we call a standard car, like a Ford or a Chevrolet, his municipal taxes are $54 to $110 a year. If he is the owner of a larger car, like a Buick or Monarch, his taxes are from $100 to $200 a year. I am not blaming our municipal councillors, because these gentlemen are doing the impossible to meet the existing demands of their respective municipalities. But nevertheless the situation is beyond their control and they have no other field of taxation from which to raise the funds required for the administration of their municipalities. This is why we feel that the purpose of the amendment which we are being asked to discuss and pass today would not meet the needs of the different municipalities.

I realize that there may not be permanent and realistic solution to the complex problems of fiscal relations. However, I feel that practical compromises should be marked out to meet changing social and economic conditions which also affect the responsibilities of the federal, provincial and municipal governments. Every Canadian citizen is entitled to a certain reasonable minimum of services without having to bear a level of taxation more onerous than the average Canadian. All across Canada municipalities are finding their tax revenues inadequate for the rapidly mounting cost of their operations. Money is getting more and more expensive and difficult to obtain. During the last four or five years municipal expenditures have increased by over 50 per cent. The cost of financing education, health, welfare, roads, utility services and others have increased year after year. Some provinces, like Manitoba, have made available to municipalities a large share of the amount received under fiscal grants, or under federal-provincial tax arrangements, while others, like New Brunswick for example, have refused to recognize the urgent needs of municipal governments.

This is a clear example of unilateral decision where the municipalities did not have one word to say. The municipalities face the most critical conditions of all levels of government, and the municipalities are faced with the most widespread demands for expenditure; but they have nothing to say in getting their right share of amounts paid under federal-provincial fiscal arrangements. The federal government could also arrange for municipalities to borrow at a lower rate of interest, somewhere in the vicinity of the federal rate. We all know that the borrowing capacity of municipalities—

The Chairman: With regret I must interrupt the hon. member; his time has expired.

(Translation):

Mr. Meunier: Mr. Chairman, I am happy to take part in this debate in order to remind the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) that he must now fulfil a promise he made during the last election in the province of Quebec, and which as a matter of fact, he had already held out in July 1956, when we were discussing the matter in this house. Here is what the Minister of Finance said in July 1956, as can be seen on page 6296 of the official record dated July 23rd 1956:

> I ask the government to take a responsible attitude in this matter and recognize the imperative needs of the provincial and municipal governments. This formula is at best a makeshift; it is no solution of the problem. What is needed is a government with a realistic and sympathetic appreciation of the responsibilities and burdens and problems of the provinces and a wholesome respect for the constitutional position of the provinces and the constitutional rights they possess, as well as the responsibilities they bear.

Moreover, during the 1958 election campaign, the Minister of Finance came to the province of Quebec, and more particularly to my riding, on March 17th or 24th of last year, and, speaking on behalf of my opponent, Mr. Danis, he promised the final settlement of this issue with the province of Quebec. I am aware that the minister is a man of integrity, of talent, and a glutton for work, but I shall tell him that, when he promised to settle the problem of fiscal relations with the province of Quebec, he undertook a very hard task indeed.

At the 1957 conference, a meeting of the provinces had been called to explore their needs. They were then promised a further conference where the government would state its position.

I have no intention of repeating the statements made by previous speakers, but I can say to the Minister of Finance that, to settle a problem of such magnitude, he needs the co-operation of the authorities concerned.

When he proposes, as he now does, to grant to provinces, and particularly to the province of Quebec, 13 per cent of federal income tax, I say as other members have said that this is a poor solution as far as the province of Quebec is concerned.

I said just now that, to correct the situation and settle the problem, he needs the co-operation of the parties concerned. However, I wonder whether he can hope for the Quebec government to co-operate in this matter. If we look up the proceedings of the 1955 conference, on page 40, and the proceedings of the 1957 conference on page 31, we find that the premier of Quebec came to Ottawa to repeat the same thing in both circumstances. I quote his statement:

> 1. Clarification and delimitation of the powers of taxation of both the federal and provincial authorities, in accordance with the letter and spirit of the Canadian constitution, that is to say having regard to the past, the present and the future.
> 2. Simplification of public taxation in such a way as to reduce its cost and facilitate its collection.
> 3. Moderation in the domain of taxation to be arrived at by the collaboration of all public powers, in such a way as to ease the burden of the taxpayer so far as possible.

Those sentences were repeated at both conferences, and it is obvious that the necessary co-operation for the settlement of such a vast problem will not be easy to get.

The situation, in the province of Quebec, is quite special. If the Minister of Finance wants to settle the problem, he will have many prejudices to overcome, not because of the stubbornness of the premier of Quebec, but rather because of his puns and of his distorted mind.

Only a few days ago I heard the premier of Quebec say that the federal government was grabbing 75 per cent of taxes. However, he made no mention of the equalization payments or of all that the province of Quebec receives under the constitution, or what the province gets in the form of grants for hospitals and for professional and technical schools. Without explaining the exact situation he prefers to insinuate that the federal government grabs 75 per cent of taxes, instead of saying that the federal government collects taxes and offers in turn the equalization payments, as is the case now. For the year 1957-58, the province of Quebec received $51,815,000 and this year, it will receive $55,809,000, and this is not taking into account the other amounts paid under certain statutes.

We are sure that the federal government is not grabbing 75 per cent of the tax dollar; it levies those taxes and then hands them back to the provinces. I then say to the Minister of Finance, Mr. Chairman, that he has a mission to fulfil, because in the province of Quebec the story goes—and people believe it—that the fiscal agreements of 1956 were agreed to with a knife held to the provinces' throats, and that the provinces, especially the province of Quebec, were forced to accept what was offered them.

Furthermore, during the last election campaigns, the Minister of Finance kept repeating that he would settle the problem to the satisfaction of all, as the Solicitor General (Mr. Balcer) also claimed here, for instance on October 18, 1957, when in reply to a question put to him by a member of the opposition, he stated:

> I wish to tell my hon. friend that I am still opposed to subsidies such as were proposed by the former government.

And later on, he added:

> I want to tell him that the proposals of the federal government are not yet known, but I am convinced that they will be made on a very different basis from those of the former government.

I understand the Solicitor General was not then speaking on behalf of the government, but what he said squares with what the Minister of Finance stated on various occasions, i.e. that the problem of fiscal relations would be solved fully and satisfactorily, in so far as the provinces, especially the province of Quebec, are concerned.

I am not reproaching him for his failure to call another conference, but I hope that within a year he will have called one and thus given satisfaction to the province of Quebec, since its population is now being deprived of considerable and badly needed income.

(Text):

Mr. Howard: In rising to take part in this debate I think it would be well for us to review that part of the resolution which indicates that it is the intention of the government to extend the tax rate for one additional year. The words of the resolution say, in fact:

—to extend for a further period of one year the rate of 13 per cent for standard individual income tax for the purpose of calculating the tax equalization payments to the provinces—

And so on. I think this is indicative of the type of government we have. It may be one is generous in saying that this is a year-to-year government. It would be more apt to call it a month-to-month government operating on a temporary basis without any clear idea where it is going in the field of long-range planning.

I think we had expected far more from the Minister of Finance than a mere attempt to extend for an additional year the change which was brought about by telegram shortly before the last election. It would have been far more acceptable to the house in my opinion, as well as to the provinces and to the municipalities, if the minister had been able to come here this session with some plan or scheme respecting provincial financial arrangements which would have been in keeping with the attitude taken by the Conservative party in the past. As long as the government continues to proceed on a haphazard basis, a month-to-month basis, it can expect all the criticism which it is possible to generate with regard to its actions. I wish to say a few words about municipalities. I hope that the minister is not going too far. I observe that he has gone out the back door.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I will tell him what you say.

Mr. Hees: We will pass it along.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the generosity of both the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources in promising to communicate my ideas to the Minister of Finance. I am sure they will not do it in the same fashion I intend to but I hope their representations to the minister will bear some weight. Indeed, it would have been better if these two hon. gentlemen had undertaken many months ago to make representations along this line to the Minister of Finance. It would be preferable if they would exert some of the energy they displayed when in opposition in urging the introduction of sensible proposals. Perhaps they are not on speaking terms of recent date with the Minister of Finance, I do not know.

Mr. Walker: How about talking about something you do know?

Mr. Howard: The municipalities are an integral part of our dominion-provincial relationships inasmuch as they are the children of the provinces, as it were. The federal government has a financial responsibility toward them to a certain degree. While the 13 per cent approach may assist the provinces and municipalities in some small measure it represents a feeble effort in terms of offsetting the increased costs they have to bear as a result of the higher interest rates the federal government has forced upon them.

I wish to make brief reference to interest rates as they apply to a couple of municipalities in British Columbia. I choose these only because they are representative of the general pattern. I take this information from the 1958 red book on British Columbia municipal statistics which I have in my hand. These figures relate to borrowings guaranteed by the province of British Columbia and they would therefore bear a lower interest rate than would debenture issues floated by municipalities without such guarantees on the part of the province.

In 1947 the village of Burns Lake issued 20-year debentures at an interest rate of 3 per cent which even today would be a pretty high rate to have to pay. Eleven years later the same village issued 20-year debentures in the same amount and for the same purpose but the interest rate was jacked up to 4 per cent. The interest on the borrowings of another village municipality, Lumby, for 1958, was 5 per cent. In recent months the general trend has been that interest rates that provinces have to pay on their borrowings for the various works they enter into and those payable by municipalities have been steadily increasing. This is a direct result of the action of this government in its recent conversion loan program.

I believe it is disgraceful that the 13 per cent approach should be taken in an attempt to balance the scale of the drain that is made on municipalities and provinces for the borrowings they have to make at this time. We cannot continue for long this disgraceful method of dealing with the municipalities and provinces. It is long past the time when concrete action should have been taken by this government.

Recent statements made by the Prime Minister indicate that interest rates may go even higher. I should like to read some comments made by the Prime Minister—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, this obviously is out of order. There is nothing in this present resolution that has anything to do with interest rates. I would ask that the hon. member be requested to confine himself to the matter that is before the committee.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, if I may comment on the point of order I would say that the minister is quite correct in that there is no reference to interest rates as such in the resolution but it deals with the financial relationships of the federal and provincial governments. Because of the system we follow the provinces occasionally have to borrow money and their borrowings are affected by interest rates. The payments of the federal government to the provinces under the tax-sharing agreements should take into consideration the question of interest rates and I believe reference to this is in order.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Crouse): The Chair does not wish to be too firm in this matter but I think the hon. member should confine himself more to the terms of the resolution and not pursue that line of thought.

Mr. Howard: Very well, Mr. Chairman, I will not pursue it too far. In fact, at your insistence, I will stop now. Your ruling has prevented my quoting some statements made by the Prime Minister that I know he would not like to have mentioned too often. They indicate that interest rates are going to go up.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Order, order.

Mr. Howard: There is one other matter that I feel falls within the ambit of the resolution before us. I wish to refer to a statute that has been on the statute books for a number of years but of which no use has been made in recent years. This statute relates to the fiscal relationships between the federal government and the provinces and their children, the municipalities. The act is familiar, I am sure, to the Minister of Finance as its administration comes under his jurisdiction. It is chapter 183 of the revised statutes of 1952 and is an act designed to assist municipalities in making self-liquidating improvements. How are we to consider the activities of the government with respect to this 13 per cent proposal if we do not think in terms of the other relationships that exist between the provinces and the federal government? One of these, I suggest, is embodied in the provisions of this act which reads—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, I have to raise a point of order again. The hon. member is proposing now to talk about an entirely different statute. This is clearly out of order. We are dealing here with a resolution that contemplates the introduction of a simple amendment to the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act. That does not open the door to discussion of other statutes.

Mr. Howard: If I may discuss the point of order I would say that the minister is correct in saying this is a simple amendment. It is far too simple and I feel it should be extended. What I am attempting to do is illustrate how simple the amendment is and indicate that it should be far broader. I am seeking to point out the failure of the government in not dealing adequately with the financial relationships between the provinces and municipalities and the federal government. I suggest that this entire field should be considered if only in the light of what constitutes a failure on the part of the Minister of Finance to adequately cope with the problem.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Crouse): Once again I would like to refer the hon. member to the resolution. It is true that what he is saying deals with a certain facet of this resolution, but it is not broad enough to take in his remarks and I will again ask him to confine his remarks to the resolution which reads:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act to extend for a further period of one year the rate of 13 per cent for standard individual income tax for the purpose of calculating the tax equalization payments to the provinces and the amounts payable to the provinces under the tax rental agreements.

Mr. Howard: I appreciate your consideration of my position and of the position of hon. members in discussing this resolution. Originally I did not think it would be as confined as that, but I will certainly attempt to make my remarks in such a way that you will remain sitting in the chair and will not have to rise to draw my attention to being out of order and also the Minister of Finance will not get as much exercise in jumping up and down.

The beginning of the resolution says that it is expedient to do this. So far as I am concerned it is not expedient to do it. It would be far more sensible if the minister had some ideas as to where he is going, if he had some sort of plan, if he had been able to look a little bit into the future and see the desires and needs of the provinces under the federal-provincial tax-sharing arrangements instead of just slipping along from one month to the next and hoping that by the time the end of the month comes around the problems will have solved themselves and he will not have to concern himself too much about the future. I think it would also be appropriate at this time if the minister could give us some sort of information in a general way whether he expects to carry on from month to month and from year to year in this haphazard way, or whether he has really any thought of doing something beneficial for the provinces. Perhaps he might like to leave that until we get to the budget itself.

Can the minister indicate whether it is his intention to introduce any sort of legislation which will have a bearing on the financial position of our municipalities in order that we may be able to deal with that phase of it, in as much as I am prevented from doing so at this time.

I posed a question to the Minister of Finance, Mr. Chairman, which was to this effect. I wondered whether he could indicate that it is the intention of the government to take any concrete, definite steps with regard to easing the tremendous financial burden of the municipalities in order that we might discuss the plight of the municipalities and the federal government responsibility to them.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, it is obvious that that matter is quite outside the scope of debate on the present resolution.

Mr. Howard: I do not think it is quite outside the scope at all, Mr. Chairman. Reference was made to it in earlier discussions. Hon. members participating in this debate earlier mentioned the position of municipalities. The Minister of Finance himself is quite prone to glorify the attitude of this government toward the municipalities with respect to easing their position. I suggest he is merely trying to slide out from under a difficult case for which he has no answer because he has no policy toward it. I think I am entitled to insist upon a better type of answer than the minister has given us at the moment.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Howard: I suppose I can take his silence as indicating he has no policy and he smiles, too.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, the resolution reads:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act to extend for a further period of one year the rate of 13 per cent for standard individual income tax for the purpose of calculating the tax equalization payments to the provinces and the amounts payable to the provinces under the tax rental agreements.

We are placed in the position of being asked to agree as to whether or not we should allow the provinces to have a little more money for one more year. I say that this resolution is inadequate; it is completely inadequate. I had hoped that after all the election campaigns, after all the pledges and after all the promises of the new deal that we have heard so much about, the minister would have introduced a resolution that certainly would have given a bit of indication of the new deal. However, in my opinion this resolution is something that is based upon expediency. This resolution contains no indication of the new deal for the lower levels of government that we have heard so much about over a goodly number of years now.

I am sure that in 1867 the fathers of confederation had no idea of what the functions of the various levels of government might be like in the year 1959. They made arrangements to meet the particular time and circumstances that they were faced with at that time. Today the function of the federal government and its responsibilities are relatively small in the light of the developing and growing responsibilities facing the municipal and provincial levels of government. The Conservative party pledged itself to do something to remedy the situation if the electors would elect it to office. I can well remember the Conservative party when in opposition moving an amendment calling for a rearrangement of the existing situation, in so far as the responsibilities, and especially in their opinion in so far as the revenues of the various levels of government were concerned.

I have obtained a little bit of information and I find that in the year 1958 the revenues of the federal government from only three tax fields amounted to $3,001.8 million. I hasten to add that these were not by any means the only sources of revenue of the federal government; the revenues of the federal government were much higher indeed. However, from only three main sources the federal government collected $3,001.8 million and the net revenues of all the 10 provincial governments of Canada totalled only $2,051 million. I am informed that in that year, taking all the taxes that the people of Canada paid, the federal government received 75 cents out of every dollar. Our provincial governments received 11 cents out of the tax dollar, and while many of us think that municipal taxes are very high, and they are, municipal governments were able to collect only 14 cents out of the tax dollar. In other words, the federal government collected 75 per cent, the lion's share of the tax payments of the Canadian people and the other levels of government had to be satisfied with a mere 25 per cent or with taking only one dollar out of every four.

It is hardly good enough that a new government pledged to a new deal should now ask the house to renew once again the old and inadequate arrangement arrived at in the past. The minister may well attempt to argue that he gave the provinces more money. Yet I think he will have to admit that statistics have proved that actually he did not give them any more money, that actually they are in receipt of less money than they received on other occasions.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is not true.

Mr. Regier: I know that some of these factors are beyond the minister's control. I know that tax revenues have been on the decline, something that the minister did not anticipate at the time he announced very proudly that he was making an additional $65 million available to the provincial governments. I do not think the minister expected at that time that events and circumstances in the year ahead would be such as to eliminate most of the $65 million increase announced by him.

We in our group realized at the time what was happening on the Canadian economic scene and we feel that the minister's advisers should have advised him that the increase of $65 million announced by the minister would at best only result in a very small increase to some provinces and in the case of others the result would be that they would actually receive less money than on other occasions.

The resolution before us is in very specific terms. The minister is asking that the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act be extended for one year. Surely that is far from satisfactory. If the minister feels that the existing formula is so realistic and has to be continued then he should be able to give the provinces some indication of what kind of a deal they can expect beyond one year. Our provincial governments have to do a lot of planning if they hope to meet their constitutional responsibilities and it is hardly satisfactory for the minister to ask the provinces to be satisfied with what is in effect an ad hoc arrangement whereby he says to them, "Let us go from month to month and see how we get along". Our provincial governments need more assurance than that.

I have mentioned how the federal government takes in much more money, although only from three tax fields, than do the ten provincial governments combined. However, I might take another approach to this matter. The responsibilities of the other levels of government have grown tremendously. The share of the tax dollar of the senior level of government has grown but at the same time its share of responsibility has, in the absence of war, declined substantially. Therefore we now have a situation where one government, with a smaller percentage of responsibility than before, has the lion's share of the tax dollar while the other levels of government, whose percentage of responsibility has grown by leaps and bounds because of our changing society, find that their share of tax revenue has declined year by year.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I wonder whether the hon. gentleman would permit me to interrupt? It is now about two minutes to six o'clock. I wonder whether the committee would be prepared to allow the resolution to pass so that the bill can be introduced. My hon. friend will have an opportunity to continue his remarks in the debate on second reading of this bill.

Mr. Regier: No.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The bill, I might point out, follows very closely the language of the resolution. From last year's bill the hon. member knows what form the bill will take, and I should think he would have full opportunity to continue on second reading of the bill or on the committee stage of the bill the type of argument he is advancing now. If the resolution were passed it would enable the house to have the bill forthwith.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, we know from past experience that the range of debate will be much more limited once the bill is introduced. The sole purpose of the resolution stage is so that members of the opposition may yet influence the type of bill that is going to be presented to the house. I have many other comments to make at this time and I regret that I cannot comply with the minister's request.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether the leader of the house could let us know what the business will be for tomorrow and Friday.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we shall commence with the estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration and then take those of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is all that is proposed for the rest of the week?

Mr. Green: Well, if we get those both through tomorrow we will have a lot more business for Friday.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

C.N.R. EMPLOYMENT STATISTICS, MAN. AND NORTHERN ONT.

Question No. 11—Mr. Fisher:

How many men did the Canadian National Railways employ on section work between (a) Winnipeg and Redditt; (b) Redditt and Sioux Lookout; (c) Sioux Lookout and Armstrong; (d) Armstrong and Nakina; (e) Nakina and Hornepayne; (f) Longlac and Port Arthur, on (1) January 1, 1958; and on January 1, 1959?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

The management of the Canadian National Railways advise that they do not assemble employment figures by districts, and consequently such a compilation would require a considerable length of time and the assignment of special staff.

CHAMPLAIN BRIDGE—TENDERS FOR CONSTRUCTION

Question No. 141—Mr. Loiselle:

Questions

1. Have tenders been advertised by the national harbours board in connection with the construction of the future Champlain bridge?

2. If so, in what manner, for what part, and what were the specifications and other directions submitted to those who tendered?

3. Have tenders been received by the board? If so, how many, and on what dates were they opened?

4. What are the names of those who submitted tenders, and what is the amount of each tender?

5. Was the contract awarded to the lowest bidder? If so, to whom? If not, for what reason?

6. Has a date been set by the board for the commencement of this work?

7. If not, when is the work likely to begin, and what is the estimated time for its completion?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

1. Yes.

2. Tenders for the superstructure of the drift span were invited by public advertisement, the specification limiting quotations to a structural steel through span structure with either concrete or steel grid gutters.

3. (a) Yes, (b) eight, (c) February 12, 1959.

Firm	Amount Concrete gutters	Steel grid gutters
Canadian Bridge division of Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation	$2,123,181	$2,284,046
Niagara Structural Steel Limited	2,132,548	2,280,873
Dominion Structural Steel Limited	2,222,765	2,370,535
Dominion Bridge Company Limited	2,239,000	2,391,800
Ardelt Industries of Canada Limited	2,311,084	2,463,283
Runnymede Steel Construction Limited	2,320,500	2,502,500

In addition, the following firms submitted tenders for a pre-stressed concrete structure rather than the steel structure specified:

Louis Donolo Inc	$1,763,000	$1,774,000
The Foundation Company of Canada Limited	2,093,240

These two tenders include the roadway slab which is not included in the tenders on the steel structure.

5. (a) The contract has not been awarded (b) a study is being made of the acceptability of an alternative design.

6. No.

7. (a) Shortly after approval of award of contract by the governor general in council (b) The completion date will be as stipulated in the tender of the successful contractor. Contractors' estimates range from 155 to 630 days.

"AGREED CHARGES" ON RAIL SHIPPING

Question No. 143—Mr. Fisher:

1. Have Canadian railroads established "agreed charges" arrangements with any Canadian shippers since July 1, 1958?

2. If so, what railroads, with what shippers, for what goods in what amounts and quantities, between what shipping points, and at what rates?

3. In each case, what was the scale of the adjustment in money terms per unit (e.g. cwt., ton, etc.) from the rates in effect before the agreed charges?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

1. Yes.

Questions

2 and 3. The board of transport commissioners advises that agreements for agreed charges are being filed almost daily, and that since July 1, 1958, up to February 16, 1959, 156 agreed charges have been executed and filed with the board. These apply to 275 shippers from a minimum of 423 shipping points to a minimum of 593 destinations, and involve a minimum of 1,701 rates on at least 500 commodities. To furnish the detailed information requested would require a long period of time, as due to pressure of regular duties it would not be possible to assign staff specially to collate the data. As to that part of the question inquiring about the charges which would be in effect in the absence of agreed charges, the board advises that in some cases this would be impossible to supply, for example, one particular agreed charge applies to all commodities except explosives, household goods, livestock and live poultry, and applies from 110 shipping points to 110 destinations.

To pick out all the commodities that would be involved in many different rates, all of which are embraced in this one particular agreed charge, would in itself be a task of major proportions. In regard to the quantity of goods involved in the agreed charges, this information is not available in the records of the board of transport commissioners.

NATIONAL GALLERY ADMINISTRATION

Question No. 186—Mr. Argue:

1. What was the annual budget of the national gallery for each year since 1935?

2. Who is the director of the national gallery at present, what are his duties and administrative powers, his qualifications for the position he holds, and what rank in the government service does he have?

3. What are the financial and administrative relationships between the national gallery and the department through which it reports to parliament?

4. Is the national gallery administered in any way through a board of trustees?

5. If so, what is the administrative relationship between the director and the board, the board and the department; who have been the members of this board for each year since its appointment, by whom are the members appointed, and what is the method of their selection?

Answer by: Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration):

Fiscal year	Budget
1935-36	$ 73,000.00
1937-38	75,000.00

2. Mr. Alan Jarvis. Under the authority of the board of trustees, to be responsible for the direction and administration of the national gallery in pursuing its objectives, i.e., the development, maintenance, care and management of the national gallery, and generally the encouragement of Canadian public interest in the fine and applied arts; to be responsible for the custody and preservation and proper presentation to the public of works of art in the possession or care of the national gallery; to recommend and negotiate the purchase, lease or loan of master paintings and other works of art and industrial design; to give advice and information in connection with lectures on art and travelling exhibitions; to organize the exhibition of Canadian art abroad, and to negotiate with official institutions in other countries for art exhibitions to come to Canada; and to perform other related duties as required.

Born in Brantford, Ontario, in 1915, he attended Parkdale Collegiate Institute, Toronto, and the University of Toronto, where he took his B.A. with honours in philosophy and psychology in 1938. Later, at the University of Oxford where he was a Rhodes scholar, be specialized in philosophy with particular emphasis on aesthetics. He also held a fellowship at the Institute of Fine Arts, New York University, New York, and took additional graduate studies in art history at the University of Toronto. During the war he worked in the aircraft industry in England on training and industrial relations. In 1945, he was private secretary to the late Sir Stafford Cripps, who was then president of the board of trade in the United Kingdom government. His great interest in design took him after the war to the newly organized council of industrial design in England and he became its first public relations officer; he handled the publicity for the "Britain Can Make It" exhibition in 1946 which first brought contemporary British design to the attention of the post-war world. Later he became executive director of Pilgrim Films, an independent film producing organization. From 1951 he was head of Oxford House in London, England. While residing in England he was actively engaged is many cultural activities including the post of editor of a series of design booklets "The Things We See" published by Penguin Books. He is a sculptor with works in collections in Canada and the United States and he has written and lectured widely in art and design. His cultural interests include drama and the stage and prior to returning to Canada in 1951 he was chairman of the board of governors of the Group theatre in London.

His classification in the government is senior officer 2, with responsibilities equivalent to deputy minister.

3. No relationship. It reports to parliament as an autonomous department through the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration.

4. Yes.

5. The director is the principal administrative officer of the gallery, and has the general management and direction of the gallery's affairs and of its officers, employees and servants, subject to the authority of the board. He presents a report on the activities of the gallery at each meeting of the board and has such further powers and duties as may be prescribed by the board. There is no relationship between the board and the department. Members of the board for each year since its appointment have been:

1913-1922: Sir Edmund Walker, Dr. Francis Shepherd, Hon. Arthur Boyer.

1923: Sir Edmund Walker, Dr. Francis Shepherd, Mr. J. Auguste Richard, Mr. Warren Y. Soper, Mr. Newton MacTavish.

1924: Dr. Francis Shepherd, Mr. J. Auguste Richard, Mr. Warren Y. Soper, Mr. Newton MacTavish.

1925-1928: Dr. Francis Shepherd, Mr. Newton MacTavish, Mr. Vincent Massey, Mr. Norman Mackenzie, Mr. J. O. Marchand.

1929-1932: Mr. N. S. Southam, Hon. Vincent Massey, Mr. Norman Mackenzie, Mr. J. O. Marchand.

1933-1936: Mr. H. S. Southam, Hon. Vincent Massey, Mr. Norman Mackenzie, Mr. J. O. Marchand, Mr. Elwood B. Hosmer.

1937-1945: Mr. H. S. Southam, Hon. Vincent Massey, Mr. Elwood B. Hosmer.

1946-1947: Mr. H. S. Southam, Right Hon. Vincent Massey, Mr. Jean Chauvin.

1948-1949: Right Hon. Vincent Massey, Mr. H. S. Southam, Dr. Robert Newton, Mr. Jean Chauvin.

1950-1951: Right Hon. Vincent Massey, Mr. H. S. Southam, Mr. Jean Chauvin, Dr. Robert Newton, Mr. Lawren Harris.

1952-1954: Mr. H. S. Southam, Mr. Jean Chauvin, Mr. Lawren Harris, Mr. C. P. Fell, Mrs. H. A. Dyde, Dr. W. T. R. Flemington, Mr. John A. MacAulay, Mr. F. Cleveland Morgan, Mr. Jean M. Raymond.

1955-1958: Mr. C. P. Fell, Mr. Jean Chauvin, Mrs. H. A. Dyde, Dr. W. T. R. Flemington, Mr. Lawren S. Harris, Mr. John A. MacAulay, Mr. F. Cleveland Morgan, Mr. Jean M. Raymond.

1959: Mr. C. P. Fell, Mrs. H. A. Dyde, Dr. W. T. R. Flemington, Mr. Lawren Harris, Mr. John A. MacAulay, Mr. F. Cleveland Morgan, Mr. Jean M. Raymond.

Members are appointed by order in council and the general practice has been for new members to be selected from recommendations submitted by the board of trustees.

NATIONAL ART GALLERY CHAUFFEUR

Question No. 196—Mr. Murphy:

1. Is there a chauffeur employed by the national art gallery?
2. If so, to whom are his services available?
3. Does the national gallery have an automobile for the use of the director?

Answer by: Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration):

1. No. A truck driver whose civil service classification is designated as chauffeur will be added to the establishment effective 1st April 1959.

2. The truck driver's services will be available to the national gallery for general delivery purposes.

3. No. The national gallery does have a city delivery van especially fitted to transport works of art.

CONSTRUCTION OF POST OFFICES, QUEBEC

Question No. 209—Mr. Roberge:

1. Since the beginning of the 1957-58 fiscal year, in what city, town or village municipalities of the province of Quebec, has the government built post offices, the cost of which was less than $25,000? What was the total cost, upon completion, in each case?
2. In what city, town or village municipalities of the province of Quebec, is the government at present building post offices, the estimated cost of which is less than $25,000, and what is the said cost in each case?
3. Have arrangements been made by the government to erect post offices in the province of Quebec before the end of the fiscal year ending March 31, 1960, the cost of each not to exceed $25,000?
4. If so, in what city, town or village, and at what estimated cost in each case?

Answer by: Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works):

1. Location	Estimated cost
Napierville	$14,654.00

Questions

2. Location	Estimated cost
Bromptonville	$16,200.00

3. Consideration is being given to a winter works program for 1959-60 for the construction of standard plan post offices.

4. Answered by No. 3.

APPLICANTS FOR EMPLOYMENT, 45 YEARS AND OVER

Question No. 238—Mr. Rouleau:

1. How many persons forty-five or more years of age are at present seeking employment in Canada?

2. How many of them are female applicants?

Answer by: Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour):

1. In the week ended January 17, 1959 the estimated number of persons without jobs and seeking work, 45 years of age and over, was 143,000.

2. In the week ended January 17, 1959 the estimated number of females without jobs and seeking work, 45 years of age and over, was less than 10,000.

FARM LOAN APPLICATIONS, SASK.

Question No. 249—Mr. Argue:

1. How many applications for loans have been received by the Canadian farm loan board in each year since 1950 for persons giving their addresses in Saskatchewan as the following post offices: Killdeer, Wood Mountain, Rockglen, Scout Lake, Lisieux, Canopus, Strathallen?

2. How many loans have been made by the Canadian farm loan board in each year since 1950 to persons giving their addresses in Saskatchewan as the following post offices: Killdeer, Wood Mountain, Rockglen, Scout Lake, Lisieux, Canopus, Strathallen?

Answer by: Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance):

1 and 2. The Canadian farm loan board does not maintain records respecting applications and loans by municipalities as it does not require to do so for administrative purposes and the information requested is therefore not available.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, March 12, 1959

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

STANDING ORDERS

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. J. W. Kucherepa (High Park) presented the second report of the standing committee on standing orders and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

FINANCE

BANK OF CANADA—TABLING OF ANNUAL REPORT AND STATEMENT OF ACCOUNTS

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): May I inform the house that I have tabled a copy in English of the annual report and statement of accounts of the governor of the Bank of Canada to the Minister of Finance for the year 1958. Copies of this report in English are now available in the distribution office.

I had expected to have a copy of the report in French available for tabling at the same time, but I regret to say that there has been a little delay in that respect. I believe a copy in French will be available for tabling within the next 24 hours, and that copies will be available for distribution among hon. members within the next few days.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SOUTHEAST ASIA—ANNOUNCEMENT OF CANADIAN AID PROGRAM

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): May I, in the absence through illness of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, make on his behalf an announcement concerning a Canadian aid program in southeast Asia. The announcement is being made simultaneously elsewhere.

For a number of years the United Nations commission for Asia and the Far East has been conducting a series of investigations and studies of the development possibilities of the lower Mekong river basin. The Mekong is one of the great rivers of the world. Its total length is about 2,600 miles, and its length in the lower basin is 1,600 miles. It actually rises in southern China but for most of its course it flows through or between Laos, Thailand, Cambodia and South Viet Nam. The economic health and the political stability and independence of these countries are in large measure related to this great river.

The development of the lower Mekong offers great economic benefits to the four riparian states and, indeed, to the region as a whole, in terms of flood control, irrigation, hydroelectric power and improved navigation. The realization of these benefits, however, is still many years away. Some preliminary planning and survey work has been done but further progress cannot be made without first obtaining more reliable and detailed data on the basin. The development possibilities are so encouraging that the United States, New Zealand, France, Japan and several agencies of the United Nations have already contributed men and resources to carry out these further investigations.

For our own part, while the bulk of Canada's aid under the Colombo plan has been and should be concentrated in commonwealth countries, the government considered that this project was sufficiently challenging and promised such great benefits as to warrant some Canadian participation in it. Moreover, the government was influenced by the fact that these benefits would go in substantial degree to countries with which Canada has been closely associated in recent years through our membership in the international supervisory commissions in Indo-China.

We therefore made available the services of Lieutenant Colonel G. S. Andrews, surveyor general of the department of lands and forests of the province of British Columbia, to make a detailed study of the problems and estimated costs involved in the aerial surveying and mapping of the Mekong river which, as hon. members will appreciate, is an essential first step toward the eventual realization of the potential benefits of this project.

On the basis of Colonel Andrews' report the Canadian government has now decided to participate in the first priority phase of the survey and mapping of the main stem of the Mekong river. This work, which Canadian companies are particularly well qualified to undertake, is expected to extend over two years and will involve an aggregate Canadian contribution of up to $1.3 million. It is the intention of the government to finance this contribution from Colombo plan funds which parliament will be asked to appropriate in 1959-60 and 1960-61.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday we had an announcement by the Secretary of State for External Affairs regarding supplementary action in the matter of assistance to a particular underdeveloped country, and now the Minister of Finance on behalf of his colleague makes an announcement regarding assistance to a development project along the Mekong river which extends through Indo-China and, of course, through part of China itself.

The little country of Laos, with which Canada has had association through the international truce commission, based on the agreements of 1954 and concluded at Geneva, will receive assistance from Canada. The agreements are now to be given further emphasis by this additional assistance amounting to $1.3 million, which is part of our Colombo plan project. I am not aware from what the minister said whether this assistance will extend to the neighbouring country of Cambodia or to the larger neighbouring country of Viet Nam.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I mentioned the four countries; Laos, Thailand, Cambodia and South Viet Nam.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker; I misunderstood. That will be very welcome news in those areas. My hon. friend, however, did mention something that rather mystified me when he said that hitherto we had confined our assistance to south and southeast Asian countries that were in the commonwealth. I am sure that is not the case. We have given some assistance by way of bursaries and training projects to Indo-China and Burma. We have already given some assistance to Viet Nam, and we even anticipated the Soviet union in the assistance we gave for technical training assistance in Cambodia. However, that is not said by way of disagreement with this announcement of policy, which I am sure will be warmly welcomed.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. member will permit me to correct him. I did not say that our assistance had been confined to those countries. I said it had been and should be concentrated in the commonwealth countries.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I thank my hon. friend, Mr. Speaker. In any event the whole house will concur in the decision of the government in this respect, which is a further manifestation of Canada's interest in accordance with her capacity in the economic and social problems of underdeveloped countries, and in this instance in Asia.

We do this, I take it, as was always done before, without any conditions attached. We do this because we feel that at this difficult time in the history of the world those nations that are more fortunate than others must in accordance with capacity share in the building up of the standard of life of those countries, and in this way we make our contribution to the easing of international tension in our time.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): This is a welcome announcement. Any step forward in the provision of economic assistance to underdeveloped countries is something that will receive the support of this group. We hope this will foreshadow a general expansion in Canada's contribution to important programs for economic development in the world today. The strengthening of the economies of backward countries is most important to the western world, democracy and the millions of people in those areas.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

STATEMENT CONCERNING IMPOSITION OF TOLLS—TABLING OF NOTES

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a statement regarding the agreement reached between Canada and the United States on the tolls to be charged on the St. Lawrence seaway. With the concurrence of my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs, I now table copies in English and in French of the exchange of notes dated March 9, 1959, constituting an agreement between the Canadian and United States governments. The agreement makes provision for the division of the toll revenue, for the method of collection, for future minor amendments of the tariff and for the constitution of a joint tolls advisory board to hear complaints with respect to interpretation of the tariff or alleged unjust discrimination.

The tariff becomes effective from April 1, 1959. The whole concept of defraying the cost of construction and maintenance of the seaway, including the cost of deepening and maintaining the Welland canal as an integral part of the seaway by charging tolls, was provided for in the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act of 1951. This principle was fully debated at that time and passed without dissent by parliament.

The tariff of tolls agreed to has the same rates recommended by the tolls committees of the seaway entities on June 12, 1958. Some changes and clarifications have been made in the definitions of bulk and general cargoes.

The tariff of tolls is based on a composite assessment which encompasses a charge per ton of cargo actually carried together with a charge per gross registered ton of the vessel, and will be applicable to all vessels whether laden, partially laden or in ballast.

The method of assessing and collecting the tolls and rates was adopted with the following objectives: one, procedural simplicity which will minimize the cost of collection and expedite the dispatching of vessels; two, recovery of the cost of the seaway and its operation on a basis which will provide economic rates to users and encourage traffic.

The rates will be as follows: 1. A vessel will be assessed 6 cents per gross registered ton of the vessel and, in addition, 42 cents per ton of bulk cargo and 95 cents per ton of general cargo carried. 2. A vessel will be assessed 4 cents per gross registered ton of the vessel and, in addition, 40 cents per ton of bulk cargo and 90 cents per ton of general cargo carried. For partial transit of the new seaway facilities between Montreal and lake Ontario, where there are seven locks, the user will be charged for each lock transited 15 per cent of the toll for complete passage. 3. For each passage through the Welland canal only a vessel will be assessed 2 cents per gross registered ton of the vessel and, in addition, 2 cents per ton of bulk cargo and 5 cents per ton of general cargo carried. In the Welland canal a partial transit will be assessed 50 per cent of the toll for complete passage irrespective of the number of locks used.

Other main features of the agreement and tariff of tolls are: First of all, commercial vessels carrying passengers will be charged 50 cents per passenger for each lock transited between Montreal and lake Erie, in addition to the vessel and cargo charge. The charge for a complete transit of the seaway will be $7.50 per passenger. The tariff will apply to all types of craft using the seaway, including government owned or government operated vessels except vessels of or employed by the seaway entities. Pleasure craft will be subject to the same rates as other vessels except that there is a minimum charge for pleasure craft of $2 per lock transited. The minimum charge for all other vessels will be $4 per lock transited.

The unit of weight for the collection of tolls will be a ton of 2,000 pounds. Provision is made for prior registration of vessels and satisfactory security to be given for the payment of charges subsequent to which passage will be permitted. Toll collection and invoicing of accounts, as well as the preparation of statistical data, are assigned to the St. Lawrence seaway authority at Cornwall. The St. Lawrence seaway development corporation will participate in the billing and collecting operation and will share in the annual cost of these services. Charges will be billed to the ship owner or representative promptly and will be payable within 14 days of the date of billing. An additional charge for non-payment within this period may be levied in an amount not to exceed 5 per cent of the amount due.

For through passages to or from Montreal and lake Ontario the invoice will show two amounts to be paid; 1, Canadian funds to cover the portion applicable to the St. Lawrence seaway authority of Canada, which has been intially set at 71 per cent of the total charges, and 2, the balance of the account, or 29 per cent, in United States funds representing the portion applicable to the St. Lawrence seaway development corporation. Tolls for passage on the Welland canal will be paid in Canadian funds only.

Bulk cargo as defined in the tariff of tolls includes such goods as are loose or in mass and generally must be shovelled, pumped, blown, scooped or forked in the handling and, without limiting the generality of the term or otherwise affecting its meaning, it is deemed to include barley, buckwheat, corn, dried beans, dried peas, flaxseed, rapeseed and other seeds, flour, grain screenings, mill feed containing not more than 35 per cent of ingredients other than grain or grain products, oats, rye and wheat, loose or in sacks; cement, loose or in sacks; coke and petroleum coke, loose or in sacks; domestic package freight; liquids carried in ships' tanks; ores and minerals, loose or in sacks, including alumina, bauxite, coke, gravel, phosphate rock, sand, stone and sulphur; pig iron, scrap iron and scrap steel; pulpwood, poles and logs, loose or bundled; raw sugar, loose or in sacks; and wood pulp, loose or in bales. All commodities not included in the definition of "bulk" are classified as general cargo.

The agreement provides that the toll revenue for that portion of the seaway between Montreal and lake Ontario be shared proportionately to the annual charges of the two seaway entities. The agreement also permits, under appropriate procedure, changes in the list of goods defined as bulk cargo.

The joint tolls advisory board to be constituted will consist of four persons, two of whom shall be appointed by the St. Lawrence seaway authority and two by the St. Lawrence seaway development corporation. The board will hear complaints relating to the interpretation of the tariff by the authority or the corporation, or with respect to alleged unjust discrimination arising out of the operation of the tariff, and report its findings and recommendations to the authority and the corporation.

The two seaway entities are charged with the duty of reporting to their respective governments not later than July 1, 1964 as to the sufficiency of the authorized tolls to meet the statutory requirements and to cause the tariff to be reviewed accordingly. Reviews of the tariff at other times may, of course, take place by decision of the two governments.

As hon. members know, this great inland waterway will become operative with the opening of the navigation season this year, and we have every reason to look forward to a material increase in the volume of shipping using these facilities. This should be of great assistance to the development of the commerce of this country as a whole, and should enable goods produced in Canada to become more competitive in world markets. We look forward to the whole economy of Canada benefiting with the opening of this great seaway project.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): For a moment, Mr. Speaker, I thought I was listening, particularly during the last part of the minister's remarks, to a speech made by myself. However, I am sure the house will welcome the statement the minister has made, because it will give notice to shippers and ship operators of the tariffs which the two corporations intend to charge in ample time for them to get ready for the opening, which we hope will bring that voluminous amount of traffic which the minister and others have stated.

There are two questions which came to my mind while listening to the statement. The minister stated there would be established a joint tolls advisory board, composed of two representatives from Canada and two representatives from the United States, to deal with the tariff of tolls. My first question is this. The minister will remember that last year when he made a similar announcement prior to the tolls being investigated by the two groups, I asked him whether the board of transport commissioners would have jurisdiction over these tolls. He replied that they would, in conformity with a section in the St. Lawrence seaway authority statute. My question is, why has this change been made?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the minister would defer his answer until we hear the hon. member for Kootenay West.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the whole house has listened with great interest to this very important statement. However, I think everyone realizes that it takes time to digest a lengthy statement like this, and particularly the attached documents. I am not one who is given to making off the cuff endorsations or condemnations until I have had an opportunity of studying the situation. This represents the view of this group. We are unable to assess fully, from the information received, the impact of this agreement on the various sections of Canada or on certain industries, agricultural producers and so on. We will therefore have to reserve our objective and informed comments until a later date.

However, this is a two-party agreement, completed between the governments of Canada and the United States. We realize that in those circumstances we cannot have all we want if we are to reach a mutually satisfactory agreement. We do hope the government has done its very best in securing this agreement to protect the interests of all sections of Canada. We all know, I think, that the government has received representations from certain provincial governments in Canada, and possibly from some sections of industry, urging a toll free St. Lawrence seaway. I was pleased to note, while listening to the minister's statement, that there is provision in the agreement for consideration of complaints by persons concerned to the board authority. I do hope they take every advantage of that provision in the agreement to bring to the attention of the government the views of various industries, producers and users of the canal across Canada with the idea that as time proceeds the arrangements under this agreement will be satisfactory to all sections of the Canadian people.

In conclusion I want to mention that these requests which have come from various provinces and certain industries and producers in Canada for free tolls spring from the increasing costs of transportation in Canada at this time; that is their basis. I think the protests and the whole argument in support of free tolls are convincing evidence of the necessity of the establishment of a national transportation policy in Canada at the earliest possible date.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member for Laurier, the answer to his question is that the joint advisory committee has been established because it is considered by the St. Lawrence seaway authority, the St. Lawrence seaway development corporation and the governments of the two countries that this will be the most efficient and fairest method of dealing with representations and complaints, if any arise, from shippers and other interested parties.

Mr. Chevrier: Then I take it that the board of transport commissioners will have no jurisdiction over the rates?

Mr. Hees: That is correct.

Mr. Chevrier: The other question is this. By what rules and regulations will the new United States-Canadian toll board determine whether a rate is unjust or discriminatory?

Mr. Hees: They will hear the complaints and make their recommendations, having so heard the complaints, to the two governments, and the governments will report back to them.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport, notice of which has been sent to him. Can the minister comment on the view that rate differentials of 42 to 90 cents in the seaway tolls make it cheaper to ship iron ore from Seven Islands to Cleveland by way of the gulf of Mexico and rail than to send it by the St. Lawrence seaway?

Mr. Hees: I wish to thank the hon. member for having given me notice of his intention to ask this question. I am unaware what the specific rail and water rates may be from Seven Islands to Cleveland by way of the gulf of Mexico, but the toll committee in determining rates for bulk cargo, including iron ore, did take into account shipping rates by alternative routes, and concluded that the recommended rates via the seaway would be competitive for most traffic movements.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In the issue of the Montreal Gazette of March 11, 1959, an article appears to the effect that the north Atlantic freight conference representing foreign lines sailing into the St. Lawrence and the great lakes intends to quote new ocean rates to Toronto which would be only slightly higher than those being charged to Montreal and, by inference, that the rates to Chicago would be only slightly higher than those being charged to Toronto.

In view of this intimation, is it the intention of the minister or of the government to bring these new ocean rates under the jurisdiction of the board of transport commissioners in the same manner and to the same extent as the railways and the Canadian water carriers are regulated?

Mr. Hees: I have read the report to which the hon. member has referred, and I have heard rumours of this possibility. My department is looking into this whole matter.

Mr. Chevrier: Will the minister make an announcement with regard to this matter at a later date?

Mr. Hees: Yes, as soon as we have been able to conclude our studies of the matter.

Mr. Fisher: Would the minister, while he is taking the question by the hon. member for Laurier into consideration, also extend his study to the question of chartered ocean shipping proceeding up to the lakehead and the rates that will be charged on these particular ships?

Mr. Hees: Yes, I shall be very glad to do so.

[Later:]

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the Minister of Transport a further question which arises out of his statement on tolls. The board of transport commissioners has rules and regulations by means of which it determines what constitutes unjust freight rates with respect to railways. My question is this. How will the new joint board on tolls determine what constitutes an unjust rate in so far as shipments up the St. Lawrence and the great lakes are concerned?

Mr. Hees: Well, they have had some experience in this matter already. After the preliminary announcement was made last June with regard to the suggested toll structure, representations were made to both authorities, to the United States authority in Washington and to the Canadian authority here. They weighed these representations, met together and brought back recommendations to their governments. That is my understanding of the way they will operate.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

LEGISLATION RESPECTING ORGANIZATION AND DISCIPLINE

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-34, an act respecting the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Mr. Pickersgill: Explain.

Mr. Fulton: This is the first of two bills which were forecast in the speech from the throne. This bill deals with the organization and discipline of the force, and will be followed by a second bill dealing with Royal Canadian Mounted Police pension arrangements.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

NEWFOUNDLAND—HALTING OF R.C.M.P. REINFORCEMENTS TO ASSIST IN LABOUR DISPUTE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could ask the Minister of Justice if, as reported in the press, he stopped the transfer to Newfoundland of additional members of the R.C.M.P. requested by the attorney general of the province under section 13 of the intergovernmental agreement; and if so, on what grounds?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the hon. gentleman's question is that the authority of the Attorney General of Canada is required before any reinforcements are sent to any province, and the authority has not yet been given.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask a supplementary question. In view of the language of section 13, which says that Canada shall, at the request of the attorney general of the province addressed to the commissioner, increase the strength of the division as requested if, in the opinion of the Attorney General of Canada, having regard to other responsibilities and duties of the force, such increase is possible, would the minister say whether it is because the members of the force were not available that this request was not complied with?

Mr. Fulton: The matter is still under consideration, and I am not able to answer the hon. gentleman's question at this time.

Mr. Pickersgill: If I might ask a further supplementary question, does the hon. gentleman think he has any discretion other than to determine whether the number of police which have been requested is available, and can the minister tell us whether, as the press reports—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: —these men have already been assembled?

Mr. Speaker: I think the last question of the hon. member is really asking for an interpretation of a document. In other words the hon. member is asking for an opinion, and I doubt whether the question is a proper one to ask at this time.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, it seems to me that this question relates to a solemn undertaking by the government of Canada to another government, and I should be permitted to ask the minister whether the government intends to carry out that solemn obligation.

[Mr. Fulton.]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has asked his question and the minister has answered to the effect that the determination has not yet been made. Does the minister wish to comment further on the subsequent question, in view of it having been asked?

Mr. Fulton: Only to say, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Justice requires no lecture from the hon. gentleman as to solemn obligations. The matter is under consideration, as I have already stated.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could I ask the minister if he has received any communication from the attorney general of the province?

Mr. Fulton: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have, and I was in communication with him last night.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could I ask the Prime Minister if he has received any communication from the premier of the province about this matter, and if so would he indicate its nature to the house?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the close relationship between the government of Newfoundland and the hon. gentleman would no doubt provide an answer to his question.

BRIDGES

PRINCE ALBERT, SASK.—INQUIRY AS TO INCLUSION UNDER ACCESS ROADS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. In answer to a question of mine yesterday with regard to the Prince Albert bridge over the Saskatchewan river, the minister said it was built under the roads to resources program. Does that mean what are generally called access roads?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): The roads to resources program, Mr. Speaker, has been explained in the house on several occasions. It covers the roads we are building in agreement with nine of the provinces to open up new resource areas in these various provinces.

Mr. Caron: A supplementary question. Are there any roads within or immediately outside Prince Albert in that program? What I mean is, in the program of roads are there any within the city of Prince Albert or in the immediate vicinity?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, the main project in the agreement in the province of Saskatchewan is a road to Uranium City, of which the southern terminus is Prince Albert.

Mr. Caron: Another supplementary question. Does that road at the present time go any further than Lac la Ronge, which is 150 miles from the city of Prince Albert?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I cannot give the house the exact mileage that the road has gone beyond Lac la Ronge, but I would say 30 or 40 miles at least. When the road is finished it will go 550 miles beyond.

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Might I ask the minister a further supplementary question. Is it not a fact that the only new road being built is from Lac la Ronge northward, and that Lac la Ronge is some 150 miles away from the city of Prince Albert? Therefore the bridge is not anywhere near this road the minister mentioned?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I can inform the hon. member that there are several roads in this program in the province of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Caron: Could the minister tell me whether Prince Albert is in the Prime Minister's county?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest that the hon. member will find his answer in the appendix to Hansard.

TRADE

URANIUM—ALLEGED PURCHASE BY JAPAN FROM SOUTH AFRICA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. If he has not the information available perhaps he would take this as notice. Is it true that Japan has purchased and taken delivery of six tons of uranium oxide from South Africa without a bilateral agreement having first been concluded between those two countries? If so, would this have any bearing on the government's policy that there must be a bilateral agreement before Canadian producers can sell uranium oxide in more than token quantities?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): An alleged sale of uranium by South Africa to Japan has been suggested on several occasions during past months, but there does not appear to be any evidence to support this suggestion. However, I will look into this matter again having regard to the question asked by the hon. gentleman.

Inquiries of the Ministry

URANIUM—STATEMENT AS TO RENEWAL OF AGREEMENT WITH UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, on March 3 the Leader of the Opposition asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question concerning the renewal of the agreement between the United States and Canada for the supply of uranium.

The agreements to which reference was made are the commercial contracts between Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited and the United States atomic energy commission for the supply to the United States of Canadian produced uranium concentrates during the period from 1955 to March 31, 1962 or, in the case of a few mines, to March 31, 1963. These contracts grant the United States atomic energy commission an option to buy the production of the Canadian mines in question during the period between the completion of deliveries under the present contracts and December 31, 1966. The United States atomic energy commission has until March 31, 1961 to exercise these options.

In view of the great importance of this matter to the Canadian uranium industry officials of Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited have in recent months been urging the United States atomic energy commission to make an early declaration of its intentions with respect to the exercise of these options.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I thank the minister for giving us this information. May I ask whether in view of the importance of this matter—an importance which the minister himself has just recognized—and of the fact that it involves something over $300 million this year in exports, the minister will take every possible step within his power to press for the resumption of this agreement by the taking up of the options.

Mr. Churchill: Oh, yes; every possible effort will be made in the course of the next few months.

THE BUDGET

INQUIRY AS TO PROBABLE DATE OF PRESENTATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): May I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Without necessarily pinpointing the date, would it be possible for the minister to indicate the probabilities of having the budget brought in either before or after the Easter parliamentary recess?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): It is not our intention to introduce the budget prior to the Easter recess, but it is expected that it will be presented soon after the Easter recess. I will endeavour to make an announcement of the date of the budget if possible before the house concludes its sittings prior to the Easter recess.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

REPORTED STATEMENT BY PREMIER FROST RESPECTING EARLY RESUMPTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Minister of Finance if he can make any comment on the statement attributed to Premier Frost in this morning's Globe and Mail—a statement alleged to have been made in the Ontario legislature yesterday—that he was satisfied that as the result of steps now being taken we could look forward to a resumption of the dominion-provincial conference at a fairly early date?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): I have not seen the report to which the hon. gentleman alludes, but I presume some reference was made to the fact that steps are under way to bring together provincial treasurers or the ministers of finance of the provinces and the Minister of Finance of the federal government after the preliminary discussions which are now proceeding have advanced to the point where such a meeting can be held.

This was all outlined earlier in the session. If the hon. gentleman has forgotten, may I refer him to the answer I gave him and his leader in reply to just such questions on the evening of February 9. An official of the Department of Finance, Mr. Burns, at the present time is visiting the provincial capitals of western Canada conferring with officials of the departments of finance of those provinces, and on his return from the west he will be visiting the provincial governments in central Canada and in the Atlantic area with a view to making arrangements in relation to the meeting and its agenda.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask the minister whether, in view of the fact that Premier Frost is likely to suggest that there would be a dissolution of the Ontario house before June, the minister thinks there is any possibility of this conference taking place before the provincial elections are held this summer?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I hope my dear and honourable friend has a little better success with his information in this respect than he had with the Martin bureau of statistics.

AGRICULTURE

POULTRY—INQUIRY AS TO IMPORTS FROM UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Samuel Boulanger (Drummond-Arthabaska): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Could the minister inform the house whether poultry products and especially turkeys are still being imported from the United States?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, although I have not checked on the matter recently and am not certain in this respect I think there are some broiler chickens still coming in from the United States. I believe that is the case. As far as turkeys are concerned, no import permits have been issued in the past few weeks as far as I am aware.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

NEWFOUNDLAND—INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT ACTION ON LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Justice. Has the minister yet received the official copy of the Newfoundland legislation? If so, what study is the government giving to the question of disallowing this legislation?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I was informed last night that two copies had been put in the mail by the attorney general of Newfoundland. I have not yet seen them in my office. It may be that these are the official copies requested, and if so they will be placed before the cabinet immediately.

BELL ISLAND, NFLD.—ASSISTANCE TO UNEMPLOYED MINERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister from Newfoundland if he has received a telegram or other communication from the mayor of Bell Island asking his assistance in preventing the impending lay-off of about one-third of the working force in the iron mines there and, if so, what action he proposes to take.

Hon. W. J. Browne (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I have received such a telegram, which I have shown to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. Both he and I propose talking to the vice president of the company regarding a possible solution to the problem.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

MEMBER FOR ROBERVAL—APPEARANCE ON TELEVISION MARCH 10

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Can the minister tell us if it was the C.B.C. authorities who invited the hon. member for Roberval to appear on a televised news program on channel 2 on March 10 last at 11 p.m. to explain the vote abstention of several Conservative members from Quebec on the trans-Canada highway legislation? If so, would the minister be kind enough to inform us if opposition members could hope to appear on similar programs to comment on what takes place in this house?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am sure there are members of the opposition who, provided they are photogenic and have a reasonable degree of intelligence and a relatively well-modulated voice, would be welcome for successful programming on the C.B.C.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Sevigny in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION—

Indian Affairs Branch—

56. Administration, $680,907.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, the other evening I was dealing briefly with the question of the education of our native Indian people. I attempted to point out in a brief way that for many years we have fallen far behind in promoting adequate education for these people. I think it is time we moved as quickly as we possibly can to expand educational facilities and opportunities for the Indians of Canada. My position for some years has been that we should transfer the education of Indians to the jurisdiction of the provinces or those who would accept this responsibility.

Mr. Chairman, there appears to be an inordinate amount of noise in the committee at the moment, and I shall wait until it subsides before continuing.

It has been my thought for a long time that we should persuade the provinces to accept the responsibility of the education of our Indian people with payments being made from the federal treasury to assist in the cost of providing that education.

Last session I had occasion to mention the salary structure of teachers. I suggested that the Indian affairs branch does not pay sufficiently high salaries to its teachers and therefore is not able to compete with other schools throughout the country for the most able teachers. I have some figures with respect to salaries paid to teachers in British Columbia, and I should like to compare them in a general way with the salaries paid to teachers who work under the Indian affairs branch. The schedule I have is the Department of Citizenship and Immigration schedule of salaries for 1958, and I do not know if it is still in effect.

I observe that the minister shakes her head in the negative. If there is an additional schedule then I can dispense with my remarks on this subject for the time being. I wonder if the minister at a later stage in this discussion could place on the record or have printed as an appendix to Hansard the present salary schedule for teachers in the Indian affairs branch.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, if I have permission of the committee to do so I shall be glad to place that schedule on Hansard.

The Chairman: Is it the wish of the committee to give the minister consent to place this information on the record?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Howard: It is kind of the minister to do this and I appreciate her co-operation. I may have some remarks to make on this subject at a later stage, depending on the information contained in the schedule.

In her opening remarks the other day the minister made reference to the question of increasing the welfare relief payments, especially with respect to moving in the direction of cash payments rather than giving food allowances. The information was set out in a table and at page 1665 of Hansard the minister is reported as saying:

> At the same time new scales of food allowances in terms of dollar value have been authorized—

I wonder if the minister would make available to us the new scales so we may relate them to the food allowances previously in effect under which so many pounds of beans, peas and flour were listed. Is that information available?

Mrs. Fairclough: That practice has been discontinued.

Mr. Howard: I did not know whether the minister was still going to use both or go directly into cash payments. I am sure that will be helpful. However, I do find that in the scale that was placed on Hansard the standard rates of $22 for a single adult and $15 for each additional adult or child over 12 years of age and $12 for each child under 12 are not very much different from the maximum amounts authorized before, with the exception of the increase from $18 to $22 per month for the adult. Columns A, B, C and D indicate that additional rates may be payable, depending upon high cost areas and special circumstances.

I hope the minister will not make too many payments under the standard rates, because these are disgracefully low. I hope she will keep her thinking in terms of the necessity of providing cash relief to indigent Indians. I hope she will keep in mind schedule D, let us say, rather than the others. Even so, in my opinion these rates are still not comparable to any marked degree with relief payments made to non-Indian people.

I obtained the information I have here over the telephone this morning from the research branch of the Department of National Health and Welfare. This information is supposed to have been published in the Ontario Gazette on June 1, 1957. It relates to payments made in unorganized territory in the province of Ontario and lists maximum amounts of relief payments. If one makes brief reference to this he finds that these maximum amounts paid are in excess of maximum amounts allowable under the new, revised scale which the minister provided us with on March 5. The maximum is $120 a month to the head of a family with one dependant. I will not give the rest of them, but they move upward from there, depending on the number of dependants, to a maximum of $180 a month in relief payments to people in unorganized territory in the province of Ontario.

So far as I have been able to find out these maximum payments include payments which could be made for special diets, for medical—

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the hon. member does not want to prolong the discussion when he is obviously on the wrong tack. The amounts he has described which are paid by the several welfare agencies include all manner of things.

Mr. Howard: That is what I was saying. These maximum payments which I have listed from Ontario take into account such questions as special diets, and so on. I had got that far when the minister interrupted. They include medical supplies, household sundries, shelter, fuel and so on. I was not trying to leave the impression that they were exactly comparable. What I am trying to point out is that $38 per month for a single adult is still, in my opinion, not sufficient, depending on the circumstances of the case.

I would rather see a larger maximum allowable, to take into account particular circumstances.

I should like to raise one other matter. It has to do with our general attitude toward Indians, which I hope will change as we progress. Generally we in Canada look with abhorrence upon racial discrimination which exists in other parts of the world. We decry the attitude that exists in certain sections of the United States toward its negro population. We view with distaste the approach of apartheid in certain parts of the world such as Africa. Generally we pride ourselves on being free from discrimination in Canada, and we say that other countries certainly are not as far advanced in racial equality as we are.

I do not think we should pride ourselves too much on that, because there still exists in a number of places in Canada, consciously or otherwise, an attitude of discrimination against native Canadian peoples in terms of providing them with employment and accommodation in hotels and things of that nature. I know we cannot legislate, though we have tried it in some provinces in Canada, to make that type of discrimination illegal, because it is an attitude of mind on the part of one group as against another. I only express the hope that in the future we shall think more in terms of an attitude of equality toward our native Indian people, far more so than we have done in the past.

I should like to deal with one other specific item. Inasmuch as we shall be establishing a joint committee of this house and the other place shortly—at least I hope it will be shortly—there will be ample opportunity to go in the fullest possible detail into the problems of our native Indian peoples, and I hope we shall find some solutions to them. Therefore my remarks will be rather general and brief on this occasion.

There is a question affecting our native Indian peoples, namely the question of liquor as it relates to the native Indian, that I should like to deal with. On March 4 there was a news item in the Vancouver Province which apparently arose out of a letter that a Mr. Andy Paull from Vancouver had sent to the minister, asking that native Indians there be given the right to buy liquor in liquor stores and also packaged goods—they are called that—in liquor stores and take them home. The announcement of the attorney general of British Columbia was to the effect that the first move, in so far as liquor rights for Indians were concerned, was entirely up to the Indians themselves.

I suppose in the strict and narrow sense, without taking into account the full provisions of the Indian Act in so far as liquor is concerned, the attorney general was correct. But I think someone should either bring him up to date on what the law of this country is, or he should go back to law school for a little while to find out what is in the Indian Act; because the attitude of the attorney general in that province is not conducive to providing equality of opportunity for our native Indian peoples.

He says that in the first instance it is up to the Indians themselves. I would point out the ridiculous situation which would exist if Indian band councils were to take advantage of a section of the Indian Act having to do with the right to have liquor on the Indian reserves without having the right to be in possession of liquor in other parts of the province. An Indian band council could do this under a section of the Indian Act. If they took that action and the attorney general of British Columbia, or the attorney general of any other province, did not object within 60 days; if they had a referendum and the reserve decided that they wanted the right to consume liquor on the reserve, we would find that they would be in the ridiculous position of having the right to consume liquor on the reserve but no right to buy it or to keep it there. They would have the right to drink in a beer parlour, as they have in British Columbia, but they could not buy a case of beer in a beer parlour and take it home on the reserve, where they could have the right to have it if they were to follow the suggestion of the attorney general.

So far as British Columbia and the other provinces are concerned, the matter rests squarely on the shoulders of the provincial governments from the point of view of taking the initiative. Certainly Indian band councils could take the initiative but, as I am sure the minister realizes, that would merely promote a chaotic situation.

Our liquor laws as they relate to Indians are a bit foolish. We hear the comment that Indian people cannot handle their liquor, that they do all sorts of wild things when they have access to liquor, and therefore we should not allow them to have it or, if we do, only under strict conditions. It is quite true that when a native Indian gets a little too much of the corn under his belt he becomes drunk, obnoxious, loud-mouthed, sloppy, argumentative and wants to fight. It is quite true that is what happens to the native Indian; in fact he is almost as bad as the white man who does the same thing. There is no difference.

I should like to point out the ridiculousness of our liquor laws as they apply to native Indians. Depending on who and where he is, it is all right for a native Indian to drink liquor. I do not wish to speak in any derogatory sense at all, but I should like to make reference to His Excellency the Governor General. He was in Prince Rupert on October 21 and 22, 1952, and held a reception at which liquor was served. Native Indian people of the province of British Columbia were invited to the reception and some of them came. One of them was Frank Calder, at that time a member of the legislature. Another was Ed Bolton from Port Essington, a member of the Indian advisory committee of British Columbia. These gentlemen, both native Indians, both members of Indian bands, went to the reception and imbibed liquor there. Thereby they broke the law, the Governor General broke the law, and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, Canada's finest, were there and did not enforce the law.

The Chairman: Order. I must ask the hon. member to refrain from mentioning that His Excellency the Governor General has broken the law. In fact I must ask that he withdraw those remarks.

Mr. Winch: Even though he did.

The Chairman: I must also ask the hon. member for Vancouver East to withdraw that remark, and I must advise hon. members that the next reference of this kind concerning His Excellency the Governor General will be treated quite severely by the Chair.

Mr. Howard: I said initially that I did not want to say anything in a derogatory way. I realize it is a rule of the house that I cannot cast reflections upon His Excellency. I did not intend to do so, and I am not.

An hon. Member: Withdraw.

The Chairman: The statement was made by the hon. member for Skeena that His Excellency the Governor General had broken the law. I must ask him to withdraw that statement.

Mr. Howard: Well, I will, Mr. Chairman. That is what I intended to do earlier in my remarks, and I thought I had. The unfortunate part is that two native Indian people whom I know very well, two members of Indian bands, restricted by the laws of Canada and the laws of the province, broke the law by imbibing at a certain reception; and while the law enforcement officers of the crown, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, were there they did not, for obvious reasons, take any steps to make any arrests.

In the past Frank Calder, by reason of the position he then held as a member of the legislature, was invited to a number of receptions. He was an Indian, a member of a band and prohibited from drinking liquor, but he was invited to a number of receptions and he went. The R.C.M.P. were there and they did not interfere in any way. Yet Frank Calder broke the law respecting liquor rights as much as it was possible to break the law. I do not blame him one bit; I would do the same thing myself if I were in his position. Again, not only at the reception I have mentioned but at every session of the provincial legislature Frank Calder was invited to a reception by the lieutenant governor of the province.

There is another awkward relationship involving a native Indian and the liquor laws. It has to do with a gentleman who is a member of the other place. Because of his background, because of his race, because of the position he holds, no doubt he has been invited to many receptions in the past at which liquor was served and undoubtedly he will be invited to similar receptions in the future. As the situation stands now, having regard to the province of Ontario only, if that hon. gentleman as a member of the other house accepts an invitation to such a reception he is in order. He is not contravening the law.

The Chairman: The hon. member cannot refer to the actions of a member of the other place in the present fashion. Furthermore, all references concerning various guests whom the lieutenant governors of the various provinces may wish to have at their receptions are quite out of order. Furthermore, we cannot refer in this house to actions of lieutenant governors or matters affecting provincial legislatures.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, if I may raise a point of order, I quite agree with and I am not protesting what Your Honour has said about lieutenant governors and the Governor General, but surely when because of his race the hon. member for Skeena referred to a person who happens to be in the other place he was simply illustrating a point with respect to Indians, and was not discussing that gentleman's conduct in the other place or any speech he has made or anything he has done as a member of the other place. He was discussing the fact that an Indian was a member of the other place and was subject to additional embarrassment for that reason. It seems to me that it would be very restrictive indeed to our liberties in discussing the administration of the Indian Act if Your Honour were to insist upon so narrow an interpretation.

Mr. Winch: The government is very touchy on this subject.

Mr. Howard: As the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has pointed out, it is not my intention to embarrass anyone but merely to attempt to show the foolishness of our liquor laws as they apply to some people in Canada. However, I can say that a few years ago I deliberately invited a native Indian into my home, an Indian who was a member of a band and prohibited by law from consuming liquor in any other place except a licensed beer parlour or cocktail bar. Incidentally, Indians cannot get into the cocktail bars because of the discriminatory attitude of their operators. I invited this Indian into my home and offered him a drink. I mentioned to the R.C.M.P. beforehand what I was going to do and I was told not to worry, that they would not do anything about it. That again shows the ridiculousness of our liquor legislation. All I am trying to point at this time is that the situation is screwy, and that some action should be taken immediately.

Mr. McDonald (Hamilton South): You were trying to get someone into trouble.

Mr. Howard: I was trying, my friend says, to get somebody in trouble; that is about the extent of his knowledge of this situation. I am here to point out the necessity for an attitude of equality toward the people of this country whether their skins be coloured the same as yours or differently; whether they happen to have been born of parents who were in this country many years before my parents were in this country, or under any other circumstance.

I point out that our attitude toward these people is not one of equality but one of discrimination. This is another phase of it, and the problem rests squarely on the shoulders of the province. I know the Indian Act has been amended, in effect, to remove as much as possible the jurisdiction of the minister with regard to the liquor question as it relates to Indians. This problem has been pushed where it belongs, under the jurisdiction of the various provincial governments. I am complaining that they are at fault in not working in the direction in which they should be working. There is one province, Ontario, which is far advanced in so far as the question of liquor is concerned, and I wish to heaven the other provinces would follow suit.

Mr. Badanai: I was glad, Mr. Chairman, last week to hear the minister say that it is the government's intention to see that the Indian population receive greater consideration. I understand that the department of Indian affairs is conducting an experimental program in Manitoba which has to do with the rehabilitation of Indians who have been disabled by tuberculosis. This is a very commendable beginning, but it should not be limited to Manitoba. We have similar cases in the district of Thunder bay. It seems to me that Indians who have spent several months or years in a sanatorium should be helped, no matter where they live.

I suggest that Fort William or Port Arthur could be considered as an ideal centre for the establishment of a rehabilitation centre in one of the lakehead hospitals, preferably in one of the wings of the Fort William district sanatorium. Young men and women could be trained as orderlies or nurses' aides. These Indians could be taught some trades to enable them to become useful citizens, and at the same time give them a feeling that they are part of the community and enjoying equality of treatment, which I believe should be the answer for all Indian problems.

Another great need is adequate recreational facilities. The problem of unemployment is greater for the Indians than for the rest of the population because of their isolation. This makes constructive recreational outlets doubly important, as the young people tend to drift around and get into trouble. A few years ago, as a result of the generosity of the president of Canadian National Railways and a few people in Fort William, a small building was made available for recreational purposes. This has helped to some extent. However, the lack of proper direction and adequate assistance has limited its usefulness. Here is a place where the government can really do something which would not cost a great deal.

It is rather regrettable, but the Indians still do not have the full benefit of all the services provided by the Ontario government that other people enjoy. An example of this may be found in the matter of mothers' allowances. I submit that while the public welfare authorities may be experiencing certain difficulties in extending their services to Indians, and while a certain amount of time will be required to achieve a smoothly functioning procedure, this should not prevent them from receiving the full benefit of all our welfare services.

At the present time when an Indian family is destitute the amount of assistance it receives from the department is much below that which would be required for even a minimum standard of subsistence. If the act were amended so that a reserve would be regarded as a municipality for such welfare purposes, with the department of Indian affairs assuming the responsibility together with the band and the province providing its usual share of 40 per cent of the cost as is the case with municipalities, the difficulties would vanish.

During a recent visit to my constituency I attended a meeting of the local Indian band, which is the Ojibway tribe. Their chief, Frank Pelletier, welcomed me to their reservation school and outlined some of their needs and grievances. He felt that there was a need for higher education. He deplored the neglect in the past, but hoped that the coming generation might obtain an education which would enable the Indian to stand on his own feet in a competitive world.

The next most important need is housing. The Indians do not have the funds to decently house their growing population. Some houses which were constructed a few years ago were poorly built; they were too low; they sagged, and the doors and windows stuck. Here, surely, was a case of total indifference and a definite lack of good workmanship. They do not ask for ultra-modern buildings, but something good and solid.

These Indians certainly complained about not having a vote in federal elections. This indeed seems to be a paradox. They can vote for a provincial member but they are not allowed to vote for a federal member when, in reality, it is the federal government which has jurisdiction over their affairs.

The majority of the men are employed cutting pulpwood, but their limits are almost exhausted and within two or three years this source of livelihood will be gone unless the government provides some new limits. There are several islands in the district with good stands of timber which would be ideal for their purpose. Some time ago some individual from the department of Indian affairs made a survey, but nothing has been heard of the outcome. There seems to be a lack of co-operation, if not total neglect, on the part of the department of Indian affairs in Ottawa.

In so far as education is concerned, the elementary schools are well conducted and presided over by competent teachers. One of them, Mrs. Mary Duggan, attended the meeting. She made the suggestion that in order to prepare pupils to absorb a higher education they should be given some vocational training, such as carpentry for the boys and sewing for the girls. The department should look into the matter, since it would not cost much to set up a couple of rooms in the basement of one of the schools and have someone supervise at least a limited vocational training program.

All the pupils capable of absorbing education wishing to attend high school in the city should be provided with transportation. A small bus or even a station wagon would probably meet the requirements of those on the reservation. One father whose family lives in the reserve at Squaw bay, which is approximately seven miles from the nearest high school, has three children who wish to go to high school, but there is no means of transportation. That is just a case in point. Some 12 children do attend high school in the city, and they walk two miles to the nearest city bus line. Road conditions within the reservation are also poor and this matter came in for a lot of criticism from the gathering. Only $6,000 had been appropriated for road work in three reservations, which means that only a bit of patchwork on each can be expected.

The Fort William reservations own mount MacKay, which is about 900 feet above the level of lake Superior, at the back of which the Fort William watershed is located. That is a lake known as loch Lomond, which is seven miles long and about half a mile wide, from which lake our city gets its water. I might add that it is the purest water on the continent, flowing by gravity through a tunnel on the mountainside and piped to the city. It is so pure that it needs no distilling for any purpose. The purity and taste of this water have been favourably compared with the water flowing from the summit of mount Ben Nevis, which is the highest peak in the British isles, in Fort William, Scotland. There is a road leading up around the ledge of the mountain some 600 feet high, at the end of which there is a chapel and also a cross erected in memory of the Indian soldiers who fought and died in the first great war. This side of the mountain could be beautified, and with a good road would become one of the major tourist attractions of the lakehead. I believe the department should look into this feature as a means of revenue for the Indians of the local reserve.

Another question which is worthy of consideration is the status of the Indian in relation to our liquor laws. Our Indians are asking for the same privileges enjoyed by other people. It is rather a shame that an honest, civilized human being, because he is one of the original Canadians, upon entering a beverage room is faced with a large sign which reads, "Anyone caught serving an Indian will be prosecuted". Such is not the treatment that the forebears of our present Indians were promised when they all too trustingly agreed to let the white man take over most of their possessions. How can we speak of bills of rights when we are condoning such an injustice? In the event of war these men would be in the armed services. Many of them have served with distinction in both world wars, yet they are faced with the worst type of discrimination. Let us have equal privileges for equal responsibilities. This glorious country of Canada cannot and should not have two classes of citizens. To quote the Indian chief of our tribe himself at this particular meeting, he said:

> There is good and bad among all classes of men, but the majority of my people are law abiding and should be recognized as such.

Now I wish to quote from an editorial which appeared in the Globe and Mail in late February of 1959 and which contains a few paragraphs of an address delivered by Professor W. J. Morris of the University of Toronto:

> Across the country, he said, Indians constitute the most economically depressed segment of our population. A once proud and noble people showed a high degree of co-operation toward the encroaching whites; and as their inheritance they are "tossed from municipal to provincial to dominion governments like the proverbial football".
> He recalls that for decades there was a pitiful lack of educational facilities on reserves, and those that existed were furnished by the churches. These and welfare conditions have improved, but Indians forced off the reserves "by threat of starvation" find no comparable services among whites. For our 111,000 Eskimo, said Professor Morris, we spend more than twice as much as we do for 173,000 Indians. "This in itself is second class citizenship." And we need only recall recent testimony of Eskimo hardship to visualize the lot of the Indians.
> With "our first real Indian act" dating only from 1951, Professor Morris says we have "operated on a hit and miss basis"; and among his suggestions is research both economic and in the area of inter-personal relations, together with inter-government co-operation at all levels to utilize voluntary resources. "We have for long enough refused to accept any measure of responsibility as individuals for what is in effect the sorest blight on our Canadian conscience."
> Those are important words. Two centuries of official bungling and evasion of a great human problem are in the last analysis a reproach on the monumental indifference of the Canadian people. It will in turn be their pressure which will give Indians their rightful heritage of first class citizenship.

As a matter of fact, the press of the country appears to be unanimous in its estimate of the situation. After 200 years since the royal proclamation, which said that no Indian could be dispossessed of his land without the crown's consent, this charter signed in 1763 being a guarantee of equality, these promises have not been fulfilled according to its terms.

I have a copy of another editorial which appeared in the Calgary Herald, which further illustrates, if more illustrations are needed, that the plight of the Indian is a question which concerns all Canadians. I quote:

> Canadians are quick to offer advice and gratuitous opinions on racial problems in other countries. Yet Canadians are part of what might be called an unintentional conspiracy to keep the Indians as second class citizens. Canada's record with the native Indian population has some items of merit to its credit over the years. Unfortunately we have only to look at the Indian population to realize that an entirely new approach is needed, and should be speeded to suit modern conditions.

Mr. Chairman, this is undoubtedly an accurate appraisal of the present status of our Indian population. I do not wish to cast any aspersions, or blame this or any former government. I simply express a belief and desire on the part of the great majority of the Canadian people that the time has arrived for the government of Canada to translate good intentions into a practical reality. I respectfully submit that the question of helping our Indian population is an urgent one and should be dealt with during this session of parliament.

Mr. Hardie: First of all, may I say that I am wondering why the hon. member for Skeena spent so much of his time dealing with the question of liquor for Indians. I think the big problem which faces the Indian today is the opportunity to earn enough money to make a living so that in the long run he may have enough money left to buy his liquor after he gets his permit.

With regard to what he said about the difficulty experienced by an hon. member in the other place, I personally think that the hon. senator should apply for enfranchisement if he wants to drink liquor. All he needs to do under the terms of the Indian Act is to apply for enfranchisement.

I wish to express my appreciation today for the consideration which the minister has given to the question of destitute rations and to the problem of housing. In past years, as the hon. lady knows, I have been very critical of the meagre rations distributed to Indians who are destitute or who have returned to their homes from tuberculosis hospitals after being cured of T.B. The minister has given us the details with regard to destitute rations, and I wonder if she would be good enough, when she replies, to give us similar details with regard to rehabilitation rations, in particular those rations which are given to people who have returned from tuberculosis hospitals.

In each of the past five years the amount set aside in the estimates for providing Indians with housing, at least in my part of the country, has increased. However, I do not think it has increased at the rate it should have increased if we really intend to impress upon the Indians that we are conscientiously and seriously concerned about their living standards. I think we could well increase a great deal more those estimates, particularly where they concern the Northwest Territories.

I was happy to see that some attention has been paid to the economic development of native Indians. If I understood correctly the minister's statement the other day, it was to the effect that a new division would be established within her department in order to deal with the economic aspect of the development of our Indian people. I am wondering, however, if this new division will have any jurisdiction in the Northwest Territories, and I say this because I heard recently that the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources has carried out a reorganization of their department and have set up a new division in that department known as the welfare division. I understood the minister of northern affairs to say that this new division in his department would look after not only the welfare of Eskimos, as it has done for many years, but also the welfare of Indians, white people and all others in the Northwest Territories.

I notice also that a new section of the department of Northern Affairs and National Resources was set up this year, namely the industrial section. This section involves, I imagine, a duplication of what the department of Indian affairs has done in setting up its new economic development section. I hope the minister will be able to clear up this matter when she replies, and say whether her department will have jurisdiction with regard to the welfare and economic development of Indians in the Northwest Territories or whether this work will be the responsibility of the department of northern affairs.

I wish also at this time to express my appreciation of the very fine work done by the officers of the hon. lady's department in my riding. In recent years we have found these officers coming into my riding in greater numbers, and we are thankful for that, and I am confident they are all very interested in the native people and anxious to bring about changes which would make it possible for Indians to realize a standard of living which could be compared, at least to some extent, with our own. I should like to make a suggestion to the minister with regard to the economic development of our Indian people.

As the minister knows, we have Indian agencies in the Northwest Territories at Yellowknife, at Smith, in Norman and Aklavik, Hay River and Simpson. Each of these agents has to cover a very large area if they are to get into close contact with the natives and understand the problems of the communities over which they have jurisdiction. I wish to suggest to the minister that the department should hire works foremen—let us call them that—in every settlement in the Northwest Territories where there is an Indian population. The duty of these work foremen would be to guide and give leadership to the Indian people in their economic development. The people appointed should be men who know the conditions in the north, people who have lived in these communities, not someone who has just come out of the University of Toronto with a degree in welfare. The people I have in mind should be practical men who have lived with the Indians and who are interested in doing something to improve their conditions.

A further suggestion I have to make concerns co-operation between the Indians and the works foreman. I think any Indian agent would agree that in my part of the country, at least, the co-operation of the Indian chief of each particular band and settlement is very necessary if the government hopes to "sell" to the Indians a policy designed to raise their living standards and help them advance from their present static condition. The co-operation of the chiefs is very necessary in most cases if the government is to be successful in bringing the Indians out of the depths of poverty. I understand that in some parts of Canada the chiefs have not the same influence over their tribes as they had many years ago. But in the Northwest Territories they still have great influence over their people, and I suggest to the minister that her department should pay the chiefs some sort of salary for working in co-operation with the works foremen to which I have referred and helping to convince his people of the benefits of government policy in the field of economic development.

I also think that in every community there should be provided a tractor with a blade, a sawmill and a powered scow. I will go into this matter in somewhat more detail, pointing out what I think each of these pieces of equipment will or can do in order to help the Indian to place himself in a position where he can at least make a living like any other person in Canada.

At this time I would like to deal with the Great Slave lake area in particular. There are many communities centred around this lake including Yellowknife, Rae, Hay River, Fort Resolution, Rocher River and Snowdrift. Great Slave lake is considered to be the world's greatest source of whitefish and trout but on this lake you see only a handful of Indians working in the industry of commercial fishing. In my opinion many more of these people could be employed in this industry but you cannot say to an Indian, "Here you have this lake; the fish buyers are here so go out and fish." Any commercial fisherman must have a considerable amount of equipment. I suggest to the department that it should set up some sort of loan fund for Indians all around the lake including those people at Fort Providence and Fort Simpson who every fall go up the Mackenzie river into the lake to do their domestic fishing under which a loan plan could be established. In other words these people could borrow money to equip themselves under the guidance of the works foreman to whom I previously made reference and establish themselves in the profitable business of commercial fishing on Great Slave lake.

Another thing that would be of assistance would be to have the department request the Department of Fisheries to conduct surveys to investigate the various inland lakes such as Lac la Marte to establish whether or not they are suitable for commercial fishing. If, for instance, Lac la Marte was found to be suitable for this purpose a number of our Indian people in the area around Rae, Lac la Marte and Hislop lake could be profitably employed in commercial fishing. I urge the department to take some steps toward supplying these people with guidance and equipment to encourage them to become engaged in useful projects of this type.

A few moments ago I said that every settlement in the district should be supplied with a tractor and other equipment. I appreciate that the first question that will be asked is: What will the Indians do with this equipment? In the Northwest Territories we have vocational training schools. Here the Indians are trained as operators of tractors and other equipment. These trained operators could be used during the early winter before the snow became too deep in hauling out logs cut by other Indians in the bush to supply the people in the area with material for proper housing for themselves. At the present time they tend to construct clapboard or plywood homes under a contract basis. I believe the Indians should be encouraged to haul out their own logs from the bush and build suitable homes for themselves.

The sawmill could square the logs and it could be operated by our native people under direction and guidance. There is no reason why one or two Indians from each settlement could not be trained in sawmill work at the vocational schools.

I also urge that a powered scow be provided at each settlement. Any person who has lived among Indians or dealt with them is aware that when winter comes they are faced with the problem of heating their homes. These people usually live for today with no real thought for tomorrow or the future and so their homes are heated from day to day as it were. If a scow were provided it could mean that those Indians who were unable to obtain salaried employment during the summer months could work in the bush cutting wood and transporting it to the settlements to provide themselves with a supply of firewood for the winter, and also they could sell wood to those Indians who were gainfully employed on a payroll.

There are other things that could be done. Possibly some land clearing equipment could be provided in areas where there is land suitable for growing vegetables. The men could work the equipment and the women could look after the seeding and weeding and assist with the crops.

At this point I cannot resist telling the committee about a trip I took down the Mackenzie river in 1954 with the then minister of northern affairs and national resources. It was his first trip north after his appointment and of course at every place we visited the civil servants shined up the brass and showed us all the nice things in the north. We eventually arrived at Fort McPherson and were given a wonderful dinner. When we left the dining room the local school teacher invited the minister, the deputy minister and others including myself to see the garden project. We discovered six or seven Indian women pulling weeds in the garden. By the time we arrived there only half the garden had been weeded. The word had gone around that the minister was coming and the garden should be cleaned up quickly and although they had started at it in the morning they had not completed it by the time we arrived. If we had arrived in the morning before the warning had gone out we would have seen nothing but weeds in the garden.

There are, however, Indians in the north who have initiative and who are interested in working. They tell me that garden projects of this kind operated on a community basis is for the birds. They explained that some of them work very hard all summer in the garden and when the fall comes the crop is taken off and shared with the whole community. They said they would rather see the government split up these garden plots into individual acreage. They prefer to work their own plots and take off the produce that is the fruit of their individual labour.

An hon. Member: That was a C.C.F. policy.

Mr. Hardie: An hon. member comments that communal gardens were a C.C.F. policy and I agree. I have explained what has been happening under that policy. I hope the department will change its tune on that score and give these people some opportunity for individualism, a goal to work for and a degree of personal initiative.

I have dealt with some of the things we could do to improve the lot of the Indian people. It must be pointed out, however, that the fur industry is still the backbone of the economy of the native people in the Northwest Territories. In the past several years fur prices have been so low that in many places it is not worth trapping fur. I appeal to the minister and ask her to see her friend, the Minister of Agriculture, and ask him why we cannot bring fur under the Agricultural Prices Support Act. Everything else that is produced in this country can come under the act. The raspberry growers, the pulpwood cutters, grain grown in eastern Canada, and just about everything that is grown comes under the act. Sheep come under the act. Wool of the sheep comes under the act. Everything from soup to nuts comes under the act. The minister told me last year that even the fur ranchers in Canada who ranch mink and other furs come under this act, but wild fur cannot come under it. I appeal to the minister and I am sure that with her sweet smile she can convince her colleague the Minister of Agriculture that wild fur should come under the act. If she cannot do that, then I would suggest that the department of Indian affairs should start to look at the proposition of putting a floor price under furs, covered by separate legislation, if we have to.

In the past four or five years there have been—and I am sure the director, or any of the officials of the department will agree with this—a number of Indians employed in construction projects at Inuvik, at Fort Smith, at Yellowknife on the road, and so on. The minister mentioned this as a matter of fact in her statement. This year we are in the process of moving the town of Aklavik to its new location. At Fort Smith we are building government houses for civil servants and offices for civil servants. Most of the building that is going on is for civil servants and some Indians are working on those projects. Those construction programs will be over and finished in two years. Ever since we started that construction program I have repeatedly said that we had to look to the future. It is fine and dandy to have Indians on the payroll today and making a half decent living, but the minute that construction is over what are you going to do with the Indian? This is the problem and now is the time to start thinking about it. What are you going to do with the children who are coming out of the vocational training schools that we have built in all parts of the country. This is a problem that requires serious consideration now.

I noticed the minister said we will have placement officers. Have we one in the Northwest Territories? If we have, has any thought been given to what the placement officer is going to do to place Indians if there is nothing for them to do? How are we to encourage native children to take vocational training two or three years from now when their older brothers and sisters have come out of school and are back on the trap line trapping muskrats because there is nothing else for them to do? This is a serious problem. If we do not do some planning now we shall force the native Indians four or five years from now to reject the whole basis of education and he will have reason to do so. He goes into a school and takes a course as a grader operator, an electrician or any sort of operator but when he comes out of school the construction work is finished and he has no job. Then the government asks him to go back on a trap line, something he has never done before. He does not know how to trap; he is useless as far as trapping is concerned. If we do not do some serious thinking now this will happen.

There is an immediate solution at least for those who have been trained in the last few years and for those who are being trained right now. I would suggest that the Department of Transport be notified of every native who is a mechanic or who is able to operate a piece of equipment such as a snow blower, a grader, a tractor and the like, all of which are required, as the committee knows, for the maintenance of airports, with the view of filling all the vacancies from now on with natives who have been through the vocational training courses provided by the government and who I am sure can handle any piece of equipment that is sitting on any airport in the Northwest Territories.

This, I say, is something we should do immediately. We should provide every department of government operating in the country with a list of qualified people whom they might require for their work. I suggest also that before the construction season opens this year the contractors who have been successful in getting contracts at Inuvik, Fort Smith, Hay River, Fort Simpson, Yellowknife, and on all the roads that are going north, be supplied with a similar list. It should be made plain to them that native people are to be employed before they start shipping in carloads of people from the outside. The Northwest Territories has the highest percentage of unemployment in Canada, regardless of what anyone says. When native people who have been told, "you take a vocational training course and you will receive jobs", find themselves out of work during the construction season and find, as I said a moment ago, carloads and aeroplane loads of men being shipped into the north to do jobs they could do, how do you think they feel about it?

I would also suggest that we provide a list to the Imperial Oil company down in Norman Wells and to the transportation companies, both the crown-owned Northern Transportation Company and the Yellowknife Transport, and ask for their co-operation.

[Mr. Hardie.]

The Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but I must advise him that his time has expired.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, there is one matter coming under this vote upon which I should like to make a few comments. It is one which has not been discussed so far and I admit that it is somewhat complicated. Nonetheless, I hope that the minister will be able to give the committee some information about it. May I say first of all that I am raising this matter at the request of the president of the grand council of the North American Indian brotherhood.

We all recognize that property and civil rights and natural resources come within the jurisdiction of the provinces while Indian affairs come within the jurisdiction of the federal government. However, it has been mentioned to me on a number of occasions and again recently by the grand council of the North American Indian brotherhood that they would like to have a clear exposition from the minister as to how far she feels her responsibility extends in the conduct and direction of Indian affairs having regard to ownership of property and Indian rights within the boundaries of provinces, particularly where no treaty rights are involved.

We all recognize that the minister is faced with problems right now involving the Six Nations Indians and it may be on a somewhat similar basis that I have been asked to raise this matter in the committee at this time. I have been told on many occasions by Indian chiefs in British Columbia that they have never given over their ownership of British Columbia because there is no treaty under which they did so. However, I am not going into that phase of the matter this afternoon.

May I say that I am quite proud that the native Indians of British Columbia should take such interest in whether or not they hold ownership to lands and certain rights in respect of timber or minerals. In recent years they have expressed great interest in the development of the province and great interest particularly in the last year as to who will develop the province. They are primarily interested in the northern part of British Columbia where, as the minister knows, approximately one-fifth of the territory of British Columbia apparently is to be ceded by the Social Credit government of our province to a corporation or group of corporations nominally headed by Axel Wenner-Gren but behind whom we know are the Krupp interests of Germany. The Indians are concerned as to their status in the development of that part of the province under that type of ownership. I believe that the Indians of British Columbia generally and the grand council of the North American Indian brotherhood are to be congratulated, complimented and commended because of their interest in this matter. Perhaps the best way I can present the matter to the minister and the officers of her department is by doing what I was requested to do by the president of the grand council. With your permission, Mr. Chairman, I will read the letter I received under date of February 20 on the official letterhead of the brotherhood. It reads in part as follows:

> By the provision of section 109 of the B.N.A. Act, the title to the minerals and soil in a province is in the crown, the province and the Indians. Lord Watson in giving judgment for the privy council in the St. Catharines Milling case ruled in part as folows: "There is a third interest, and that interest is the Indian interest, which is capable of being vindicated in competition with the provincial interest."
> By that fact and by law, as fortified by the privy council judgment . . . the B.C. Indians have an interest equal to the province but wacky Bennett has not consulted us in giving a big portion of what belongs to us Indians to Axel Wenner-Gren. The reason for this letter is to ask you to speak for us in the House of Commons and ask what kind of a man is this Axel Wenner-Gren? Is he worthy of a man to be allowed into British Columbia? The people of B.C. who are co-owners of what Bennett is going to give him . . . from the grapevine and the moccasin telegraph this Indian has been told by white people that Wenner-Gren made his millions dealing with human lives.

I say that that statement, Mr. Chairman, is a correct one. I continue:

> That during world war II he dealt with the enemy, while also doing business with the allies.

That too is a correct statement, Mr. Chairman. I continue:

> Is this gangster, who is worse than Capone, the kind of a man to do business with? What comes after this donation by Bennett may be detrimental to all the people in B.C. We may be enslaved, we must protect our posterity.

This comes from the Indian brotherhood in the interests of British Columbia, their own land. The letter continues:

> You can use my name in these allegations because as the chosen leader of my people it is my duty to know and can only find this out through your questions in the parliament of Canada. The query must be directed to all hon. members of the House of Commons, not only the government, because they are the trustees for the Indians of Canada—The land that he is to get is rich in minerals, etc., and will adversely affect the economy of the Indians in that part.

I was asked to raise the matter in the house. That is signed by Andy Paull, grand chief and president of the North American Indian brotherhood.

I felt it was my responsibility, Mr. Chairman, having received the letter to read it. As I previously stated, it is something to be proud of that our truly native-born Canadian citizens, our native Indians, are concerned about the development of our natural resources, and who develop them. Basically their question is, what power, what influence, what interest has the minister in charge of Indian affairs at this time, to assist them in a situation in which British Columbia is making a deal with a man who, by order in council, was declared a traitor and a person with whom no one could deal during the last war.

I was so interested in the letter and in the other statements made that I checked on the St. Catharines Milling and Lumber Company case, a decision of the privy council, which is to be found in Canadian Constitutional Decisions of the Judicial Committee by Olmsted. I am not going to go into the decision in detail, but I did find some interesting facts in that judgment of the privy council. May I just give a couple of quotations which I feel are important. On page 238, the judgment says:

> Documentary evidence was referred to, to show the nature and character of the Indian title. It was contended that the effect of it was to show that from the earliest times the Indians had, and were always recognized as having, a complete proprietary interest, limited by an imperfect power of alienation.

On page 241, we find this:

> It is contrary to the spirit of the act to hold that the grant of legislative power—

That is the British North America Act.

> —over lands reserved for the Indians carries with it by implication a grant of proprietary right.

I am not going to continue with that, but I do believe sincerely that the North American Indian brotherhood has raised a most interesting, if complicated, question. I do hope that the minister may find it possible, because of her interest in the department over which she exercises jurisdiction, to take note of the situation in British Columbia and the interest of the native Indians of British Columbia in their own proprietary right to develop the resources of the province, who develops them, and perhaps inform the native brotherhood through the medium of what she says in this house as to what their position is and what help they can expect in defending, not only their own hunting and fishing grounds but the natural resources, thereby honouring their ancestors who were the original settlers of that great province.

Mr. Herridge: I have two or three questions to ask the minister which I have been directed to ask by some people in Ottawa. Are there any solicitors employed by the department in connection with Indian affairs? If so, what are their salaries and have they passed the necessary examinations to qualify as solicitors in any province of Canada?

Mr. Pickersgill: There are a few questions I should like to put to the minister before she replies. I do not intend to make a speech, and I am sure she will be relieved to hear that. I think we would all be interested in the most up to date information she has about what is going on on the Six Nations reserve. It did happen, I think it was last night or at any rate very recently, that I was looking at television which I do not very often do. I saw the superintendent of the Six Nations reserve on television. He expressed the view—I am not taking any exception to this or anything of that sort—that the sooner we found out what the people of that reserve really wanted, the better.

As a matter of fact, this had already occurred to me even before I saw this television program. I thought perhaps it would be advisable—I am only putting this forward very tentatively because I think the minister appreciates I have no desire to make any difficulties at all in connection with this matter—to have a plebiscite on the reserve to ascertain whether or not the majority of the Indians want to continue to have an elective council or want to have the restoration of the government of the so-called hereditary chiefs. I know there would be considerable difficulties if the second course happened to be the wish of the people because of the claims that are made by the hereditary chiefs that they are not Canadian citizens and the reserve is not a part of Canada but an independent country.

I have to confess that I do not know whether or not this course has ever been taken or ever been considered. It may be that at one time a decision was made by the courts on this matter. I understand that there was a certain treaty in the time of Sir Frederick Haldimand which had a good deal to do with the status of the reserve and of the Indians living on the reserve. I am wondering if possibly it might be a good idea, by agreement if agreement can be secured, to refer that document and any of the other relevant documents to the supreme court, with a view to getting an authoritative interpretation of them. I imagine there would not be much purpose to be served in doing that unless there was a prior agreement with the parties interested that they would accept an interpretation by the supreme court. It might be impossible to obtain such an agreement.

These two ideas had crossed my mind, and I thought, it would be useful to put them forward. I do not expect the hon. lady to make any particular comment about them. However, I would appreciate it, and I think other members of the committee would, in view of some of the things that have been happening, if without taking too much time we could be told as much as the hon. lady has in the way of information as to what is occurring.

I am also very much interested in being brought up to date, as I am sure would be other hon. members of the committee, about the progress of the famous expropriations at Caughnawaga. I have spent a good deal of time on, and given a good deal of attention to, this subject, and I am sure the hon. lady has done the same and I would again like to know what the current situation is. While I am not seeking to go underground or anything like that, I would also like to hear a little more about water mains and the sewers, and how they are coming along at Caughnawaga.

Mrs. Fairclough: I told you all I knew the other day.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was hoping in the meantime the hon. lady had instructed herself a little more.

Mrs. Fairclough: I thought I gave a pretty full answer, but I will see if there is any more information.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would be very much interested as well, although perhaps the hon. lady would rather do it at a later stage, but I will ask the question now, to hear how the scholarship scheme has worked out and to have a brief report on that. I think I can say, with my usual modesty, that I had something to do with starting that scheme, and one is naturally interested in the things one starts oneself. I would also be quite interested in knowing what the experience has been with what I think was the last thing I had anything to do with starting in the Indian affairs branch, and that was the provision of relief in cash instead of in kind. I know I had some little difficulty in persuading some of my colleagues on treasury board that some Indians on selected reserves should be treated like other people with respect to relief, and it was agreed it would only be an experiment. I think it was one of the steps in the right direction which I would like to see taken as fast as people will agree to them and circumstances permit. I am sure the hon. lady will, without even being asked, tell us what the latest progress has been in the integration of the schools; that is to say, in getting Indian children into schools attended by other children in the various provinces.

There may be some other questions which will occur to me later on, but they are the ones which occur to me now.

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister a question about a matter which has arisen on the Indian reserve at Gleichen. The situation there is one of concern as regards the financial difficulty of the Indians on that reserve. A situation has arisen whereby the Indians, who for a number of years have farmed their own land and built up a capital reserve, now find that that capital reserve has diminished and that they are in such financial difficulty that they are unable to farm their own land. Also, consideration is being given to renting that land to the white man. This is a sort of reflection on the administration of that Indian reserve, either through the failure to have farm management men there to assist and supervise the Indians in the proper management of their land, or it could be due to a number of other causes. Nevertheless, the fact remains that the Indians on that reserve now find it necessary to seek jobs off the reserve in order to gain a livelihood. It seems to me that the Indian affairs branch should, in their wisdom and administration of the affairs of that reserve, give careful consideration, if they have not already done so, to the step which is now contemplated.

That land belongs to the Indians, and I submit that before it is leased to the white man and before long term contracts and commitments are made, the Indians' fundamental problems should be probed to the very depths in order to see if by financial help or other arrangement something cannot be done by this government to bring about a situation on that reserve where these Indians can profitably administer and farm their own land.

Mr. Howard: I wonder if I might briefly pose a couple of questions to the minister. I understand that we make a grant to the national commission on the Indian Canadians. I would like to know how much that is. I cannot find any reference to it in the details, but it is the amount of the grant we make which I want.

Mrs. Fairclough: You will find it under the citizenship branch.

Mr. Howard: Is it listed as an amount?

Mrs. Fairclough: No, it is not. I will find it for you.

Mr. Howard: Thank you. My other question is this. On October 30 and 31, 1958 there was a provincial conference of Saskatchewan Indian chiefs and councillors held at Fort Qu'Appelle. I would like to take the liberty, if I may, of reading one of the resolutions passed at that conference. One reads:

> We, the chiefs and councillors of the association of Saskatchewan Indians, in conference assembled, request the federal government to undertake a detailed social survey of Saskatchewan Indians to among other things
> (1) gather factual information on the conditions prevailing on all reservations;
> (2) make recommendations as to policies and programs designed to provide for the advancement and improvement of Saskatchewan Indians, and

I wonder if the minister would indicate whether the association of Indian chiefs has officially communicated the contents of this resolution, or the import of it, to the minister, and what action has been taken or is contemplated with respect to the suggestions made therein?

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, possibly I could try to answer now some of the questions which have been put in the course of this debate. In so doing, may I thank the hon. members for their interest and say to them that all of the constructive suggestions which have been made will certainly be dealt with by this department, and consideration will be given to them. There are two or three very good suggestions which have come out of the debate today. I might say further that the officials of my department are ready and willing at all times to consult with members who wish to bring to them suggestions, or who wish clarification of existing conditions on any of the reserves.

With reference to the remarks of the hon. member for Skeena, perhaps I should answer his last reference first. The resolution from the conference at Fort Qu'Appelle was forwarded to the branch and we have it. There are certain difficulties in the way of proceeding immediately; the matter is under consideration. I might tell him that it took five years from the time of the first consideration of the report now known as the Hawthorn report on the British Columbia Indians before the study was finally undertaken. These things cannot be done overnight. If my memory serves me well it is now something in the nature of two years since the suggestion was first made that a similar study, or something approximating the same kind of study, be made amongst the Indians in Saskatchewan. We are considering the matter. It is the opinion of those who have studied the Hawthorn report that much of the material in that report is of general interest to Indians right across Canada, and we do not wish to duplicate the work which was put into that report. I can assure the hon. member that the matter is under study at the present time. Eventually there will be a study made, but that will depend upon the speed with which we can arrive at terms of reference establishing such a study.

The hon. member asked me about salaries for teachers. I have the schedule here, but I say to him that salaries are the same in all the provinces in Canada with respect to the teachers in Indian schools. I do not have in my hand a schedule of the salaries paid by the province of British Columbia. It may be that in some instances the pay scale is a little lower than British Columbia but I can assure the hon. member it is considerably higher than the salaries in some of the other provinces. Where you have one scale across the country there are bound to be differences where some salaries are under the jurisdiction of provincial governments, but we cannot pay higher salaries for teachers in British Columbia teaching in Indian schools than are paid to those teaching in other schools.

I might say that the schedule I should like to place on record in Hansard, with the permission of the committee, does not include isolation benefits which are paid in certain districts. These are in addition to the amounts mentioned.

The Deputy Chairman: Has the minister permission to place the schedule to which she has referred on record in Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Howard: Would it be possible for me to peruse this document and make some notes from it at this time?

Mrs. Fairclough: I shall be glad to send it over to the hon. member. Afterwards we can send it to Hansard.

I noted what the hon. member had to say with reference to relief payments. I am sure he will agree with me that the schedule now established represents a great improvement over that formerly in effect. I cannot let this opportunity pass without commenting on the fact that last year when this subject was under discussion I maintained, from the available figures, that the average relief payment made was around $14. The hon. member maintained it was $10, and the press of this country picked up that amount and made it known that the amount of relief payments to Indians was $10, despite the fact that I had given a different figure. This year, however, when payments have been increased to a minimum of $22 for the first single adult, the hon. member indicates that this represents a very small increase. He cannot have it both ways. Either his figures last year were wrong or his figures this year are wrong. It must be one or the other. I would point out once again that these figures relate to food only; there are many other things which have to be added to these payments.

The hon. member is quite right in his statement that the sale of liquor to Indians comes under provincial jurisdiction. However, even before it becomes a matter of provincial jurisdiction the Indians themselves must make their wishes known to the provincial government which in turn makes a request to the federal authorities. Thus I imagine that the statement by the cabinet minister in British Columbia which he read would have reference to the fact that the initiative must come from the Indians if they wish to have the liquor laws changed with regard to the consumption of liquor on the reserves.

Mr. Howard: Does this provision that the initiative must rest with the Indians themselves form part of the Indian Act?

Mrs. Fairclough: No. The request must come from the province, but the province naturally does not move until it is sure of what the Indians want.

Mr. Hardie: Is it not true that although the provincial government may request permission, if an opposite request should come from the Indians the government would consider the Indian request before the provincial one?

Mrs. Fairclough: The department is anxious at all times to administer the affairs of the Indians in a manner which will be to their liking and which will further their welfare. Consequently, I think there is some basis for the hon. member's remark.

I might add at this point that during the course of the questions which were asked by the hon. member for Skeena the hon. member for Vancouver East interjected a remark that the government was "a bit touchy" on the liquor question. I can assure the hon. member for Vancouver East that this is not the case at all. This minister is not a bit "touchy" on this subject and when representations are made to the government on this as on all other matters they will be carefully considered and, as the hon. member for Mackenzie River intimated, the wishes of the Indians will be taken into consideration.

The hon. member for Fort William asked whether special consideration could be given to the rehabilitation of tubercular patients in the Thunder bay district. I can assure him that the department will give consideration to this request. It is possible we may be able to establish some sort of centre at the lakehead. We will certainly look into the matter and see what can be done. I am not sure whether I understood the hon. member correctly when he referred to the mothers' allowance, but may I say that Indians do receive mothers' allowances in the province of Ontario. I understood the hon. member to say they did not.

Mr. Badanai: I understood that they were not eligible for the allowance if they lived on the reserves.

Mrs. Fairclough: That does not matter. They are still eligible.

I should just like to say, further, that the hon. member for Fort William was one of those who has raised a number of points and I can assure him that all the points he raised will receive consideration.

The hon. member for Mackenzie River asked a question about rehabilitation rations. As he knows, these rations are made up on the basis of foods which are needed for the restoration of health. The attitude taken by the department is that they are supplied regardless of cost. It does not matter what the cost is, these rations are available. That is still the policy of the department, with the exception that if the cost of the rations that are being supplied is less than the new cash scale of relief, the cash scale will prevail. It depends on which is greater, the cost of the rehabilitation rations as shown on the schedule or the amount set out as cash relief under the new schedule.

[Mr. Hardie.]

Mr. Hardie: I wonder if the minister would permit me to explain some things that happen which do not always involve her department to any extent. In many cases when an Indian leaves Camsell hospital to return to his home in the Northwest Territories he is not provided with the authorization from the hospital that is necessary in order to obtain from the agent the rehabilitation rations he requires. Even though the agent knows that the Indian has just come from Camsell hospital he is unable to provide him with rehabilitation rations because he lacks authorization from the hospital. Can the minister explain why the present procedure is followed?

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, I agree with the hon. member that it does not sound reasonable. We will look into the matter. It has been left in the past to the discretion of the doctor who releases the Indian to establish his need for special rations but I assure the hon. member we will look into the question.

The hon. member also asked me about the jurisdiction of this department in the Northwest Territories. Indians do come under this department. Where there are existing services in many of the provinces, in some cases the department rents those services rather than setting up duplicate services in those areas. That is true of the Northwest Territories as well as other sections of Canada. It is particularly true in the field of education in the Northwest Territories because, as the hon. member knows, we have an agreement with the northern affairs department to look after education there.

Mr. Hardie: Does the department have a similar agreement with the northern affairs department in respect to the welfare of Indians?

Mrs. Fairclough: Not at the moment, Mr. Chairman. I do not know whether or not they are planning to make representations to this department to rent their services to us. In any event I can assure the hon. member that this department is handling it at the present time.

I might just say to the hon. member that we found most interesting his suggestion with regard to a works foreman. It is one of the suggestions I referred to as being extremely constructive and useful. We will look into it and I hope something may come out of it.

In reply to the hon. member for Vancouver East I might say that Mr. Andy Paull is a frequent correspondent of mine; in fact we carry on a rather heavy correspondence. However, I do not appear to have received the letter which Mr. Paull directed to the hon. member for Vancouver East who read it to the committee today. When requests come to my desk from Mr. Paull they are given careful consideration even though sometimes he may not be entirely in accord with my answers. If the lands referred to are Indian reserves of course no one can encroach upon them. If, however, they are not Indian reserves then they come under provincial jurisdiction. That is probably not a specific answer but it is a general one having regard to what I can remember of the letter as the hon. member read it. In any event when we see the letter we shall reply to Mr. Paull and satisfy him with regard to his problem.

The hon. member for Kootenay West asked me about solicitors in the department. We employ two solicitors, grade 5. One is qualified in Saskatchewan and one in Ontario. The salary range is $7,500 to $8,580. We employ one solicitor, grade 4, qualified in Manitoba whose salary range is $6,840 to $7,860. We have four solicitors, grade 3, of whom three are qualified in New Brunswick and one in Ontario, the salary range being $6,360 to $7,320. We have one officer employed as an administrative officer, grade 2, whose salary range is $5,700 to $6,180 and who is a graduate in law in Ontario. Those are the solicitors employed by the department.

The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate asked me several questions. Since a great many of them related to education and in view of the fact that the hon. gentleman has been called out of the committee perhaps I could leave those and deal with them when we reach the education vote. Possibly I should defer answering his other questions, too, until we reach the appropriate votes on which they might be answered. The hon. gentleman may have returned to the committee by that time but if he has not returned, Mr. Chairman, I shall proceed to put the answers on the record.

I was also asked a question by the hon. member for Skeena with reference to the grant to the national commission on Indian Canadians. The sum of $4,000 is provided in the current estimates but, as I said, it comes under the citizenship branch.

The only other question I recall being asked was that raised by the hon. member for Macleod. I should say to him that this is a pretty complicated problem that has developed over the years. I believe that some part of the problem probably arises out of the generosity of the Indians themselves to their brothers. I do not think it is a problem I could deal with in a short space of time in this committee but if the hon. member would like to come to the department we will be glad to give him the full story in so far as we have it. I would also extend this invitation to any other hon. members of the committee who have any specific Indian problems, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I thank the minister for her answers and I have just two more questions. I observe that other departments list their solicitors in the details in the estimates book as solicitors but those in this department are listed as administrative officers or some other category. What is the reason for that? My second question is this. Are there any persons in the department doing the work of a solicitor or legal work of any kind without qualifications in Canada?

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, I can answer "no" to the last question immediately. If the hon. gentleman will turn to page 145 of the estimates under "Reserves and trusts" he will find the solicitors listed.

Mr. Herridge: I must apologize, Mr. Chairman, I think my eyesight must be failing.

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Chairman, can the minister tell us if it is the intention of the government to establish the joint committee of this house and the Senate soon? If this proves impossible, does the government intend establishing a royal commission to study the Indian question and bring in at the next session of parliament some fundamental recommendations designed to solve many of the problems that are so apparent in the administration of Indian reserves in western Canada.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, I am sure on reflection the hon. member would agree with me that you do not get very fast action with royal commissions. It is my hope that the committee which will be set up this year will be able to furnish a great deal of valuable information of a current nature to the department. I hope to present that resolution to the house when we have finished the estimates of the department. It is my hope that we can probably have the personnel of the committee established, with the co-operation of the other parties in the house, so that it could get to work right after the Easter recess; but I can assure him that the matter will be handled with all possible dispatch.

Mr. Kindt: Thank you.

Mr. Badanai: I would like to correct a question I asked of the minister regarding mothers' allowances. Instead of mothers' allowances I meant widows' allowances.

Mrs. Fairclough: I do not know what the hon. member means because there is no widows' pensions as such for anyone, either Indians or anyone else, except those which are payable under the Pension Act to the widows of service men.

Mr. Badanai: I understand that the province of Ontario pays a widows' allowance to widows.

Mrs. Fairclough: I am not an authority on provincial law, but I can find out about it for the hon. member.

Mr. Habel: Mothers' allowance.

Mr. Hardie: I think the federal government pays a portion of the provincial widows' allowance. Earlier the hon. member for Fort William referred to mothers' allowance and I am sure that not only the minister but all of us understood it to mean family allowances.

Mrs. Fairclough: No.

Mr. Hardie: I think what he really meant was widows' allowances paid by the provincial government toward which the provincial government pays.

Mrs. Fairclough: That is precisely what I was talking about. It is known as mothers' allowance. It is paid to women who are either separated from their husbands, or are widows and who have dependent children who need assistance and it is strictly on a means test basis. It is payable to Indians and to non-Indians.

Mr. Hardie: Is any part of that allowance paid by the federal government?

Mrs. Fairclough: All of these matters come under the Department of National Health and Welfare, but I think I am correct in saying that it is purely a provincial matter.

Mr. Howard: I must express first appreciation for the information which the minister has given in reply to various questions which were posed. Of course, as I did at the last session, as I will do at this session, next session and ad infinitum, I wish her well in her task of dealing with the Indian affairs branch.

The minister was kind enough to send me over the schedule of teachers' salaries in effect in the Indian affairs branch, but I would point out that when I started my earlier remarks the list that I had in my hand had to do with the 1958 salary schedule for the teaching staff. The minister indicated that this was not correct, that there was a revised one. I discontinued my remarks along that line until I could receive the proper schedule. The one she sent me over is exactly the same as the one I was referring to. It is headed, "1958 Salary Schedule for Teaching Staff—Department of Citizenship and Immigration". This is the one I made reference to when I made my earlier remarks. The one the minister sent me has the very same heading. It gives the classification, the levels of teachers, the various wage rates that are payable to them based on different factors, and so on. They are precisely the same as the one I have.

Mrs. Fairclough: I apologize if I misled the hon. member. The schedule was effective on April 1, 1958, and I am afraid I did not realize that that was what he had in his hand.

Mr. Winch: I can assure the minister on behalf of this group, in view of this discussion, that what appears in the paper as follows is not correct:

> Wallace (Mad Bear) Anderson, a Tuscarora from a reserve near Lewiston, N.Y., told the meeting.
> "My reaction is this—she can go jump in the lake. She has previously announced she will have nothing to do with us. This is another example of the forked tongue."

Mr. Howard: In any event, I can return the schedule that the minister was kind enough to send over and it will be printed in Hansard. Originally I did want to make some reference to the difference between the salary structure payable by the department to those teachers as compared with the salary structure payable in the province of British Coliumbia in two or three of the school districts, specifically those which are in the constituency of Skeena, and to show in a general way that there is a difference and that the salaries paid by the Indian affairs branch here are lower than those which are paid in the province of British Columbia.

I might say that while I selected the salary schedules applicable to school districts within the riding of Skeena, I might point out that in so far as the range of salaries is concerned in all of those school districts, it is higher than those listed here. I have no figures available on this but I think the salaries paid by the department to teachers in Indian schools are on a par with the average throughout Canada and are higher than those paid by some of the school districts in some other provinces. I do not know that. The listing, for instance, under the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, I take it, is for a teacher with senior matriculation and one year teacher education. I am informed that it is comparable with E.B. in the province of British Columbia, which means a second-year standing in the college of education. It is the same as a senior matriculant with one year's teaching experience.

I make reference to the Queen Charlotte islands school district. Perhaps permission would be granted to include the salary schedules in Hansard also.

The Deputy Chairman: Has the hon. member the permission of the committee to have these salary schedules included in Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Howard: The schedules follow:

With no years of experience, range 8 of the Indian affairs branch shows a basic salary, not taking into account isolation payments or other things which are not taken into account in the ones that I am referring to in British Columbia either, of $3,000 compared with a starting rate for the same grade of teacher, the same number of years experience, in the Queen Charlotte islands, of $3,500, or a difference of $500. In the Burns Lake school district it is $3,350 and in the Terrace school district it is $3,425. The same differences are shown throughout. Generally they range from a difference of $300, $500 to $600 a year as between those paid by the school districts and those paid by the department.

I do not know whether we should accept the condition which exists at the moment or that the salary schedule should be equal throughout all Canada. For instance, under our school system in British Columbia the salary schedules for teachers are not the same in each one of the some 80 school districts. They draw up salary schedules and other conditions, payments and so on, for each school district and they vary. As the committee will notice, they vary between Queen Charlotte islands and Terrace to the extent of about $75 a year during the first year. These differences exist between various school districts in the province. I wonder whether any thought has been given to arranging the salaries of teachers in the Indian affairs branch so that they will equal the salaries paid to teachers in the various provinces. We may find that in maintaining a uniform salary scale we are paying higher salaries in one province and lower salaries in another province. We all know that income is an incentive to teachers and, as has been suggested by others on other occasions, the Indian affairs branch is not able to draw upon the most capable people in the teaching profession if the salary scales remain lower than the salary scales of various school boards in the different provinces.

I certainly suggest that we attempt as much as possible to maintain equality between the salaries paid to teachers employed by the Indian affairs branch and the salaries paid teachers employed by school boards in the various provinces. I know that this cannot be done in each instance and that salaries cannot be kept equal every day of the year because changes take place in school districts and provinces from time to time, but as far as is humanly possible I think we should attempt to maintain the highest level of salaries for teachers in the Indian affairs branch, particularly in view of the fact that their job in teaching native Indian children is more complicated than is the job of teachers of non-Indian children. I hope that the minister will take this suggestion into consideration. I hope that the salary schedules will be revised so as to reflect salaries paid in other parts of the country and so that Indian affairs branch teachers will be placed on a footing as near as possible equal to that of teachers paid by other agencies.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, in all departments of government civil servants are paid precisely the same regardless of what section of the country they work in with the exception, of course, of northern allowances and things of that nature. Therefore I do not think we can make an exception in the case of teachers. It is true that the salary scales in the provinces of British Columbia and Ontario are probably a little higher than that of the department. In the maritimes the department scale is higher and in the other provinces they are just about equal. Therefore they pretty well level out. I can assure the hon. member that the matter of pay scales for teachers is constantly under review and what he has said will be taken into consideration.

Since the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has returned, perhaps I might deal with some of the matters he raised. I should like to refer first of all to the situation at the Six Nations reserves. Possibly I had better tell the house what has already become public knowledge since it happened last night after the house rose.

Yesterday on the Six Nations reserve the new Iroquois police, as they style themselves, arrested one of our school teachers, an Indian by the name of George Beaver. They charged him with treason because he had written a letter to a local newspaper criticizing the action of the hereditary chiefs. They incarcerated him in the basement of the council house where they kept him for some time. They finally tried him for treason. I understand they found him guilty and then released him with a warning not to do it again. However, Mr. Chairman, it is my opinion that we must protect Canadian citizens and accordingly I should like to read into the record the telegram which I sent to Joseph Logan, Sr. who has been speaking for the hereditary chiefs. It reads as follows:

Joseph Logan, Esq.,
Ohsweken,
Ontario.

It has been brought to my attention that citizens have been molested and detained by an alleged Indian police force on the Six Nations reserve said to be under the direction of your organization. I am further informed that some of these persons have been subjected to mock trials and in some instances ordered to pay fines.

This type of conduct cannot be tolerated and I must most emphatically advise all those members of the Six Nations participating in and who are responsible for such unlawful conduct that it must cease immediately.

I must further inform you that steps will be taken without delay to restore and maintain peace and order on the Six Nations reserve for the protection and quiet enjoyment of all citizens.

The telegram is signed by the minister. I am not sure whether the hon. member made a suggestion or was thinking out loud, but with respect to his remarks about the proposed plebiscite I may say that is something that has occurred to some of the members of my staff. We have been discussing the matter. I think little would be achieved by proceeding in the heat of the present situation but I draw to his attention also that in any event nothing can be done at the moment because the authority of the hereditary chiefs is being argued at the present time before the courts in Ontario. Until that matter is settled I think we would be wrong in taking any action.

[Mrs. Fairclough.]

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether the hon. lady would allow me to interrupt her for the purpose of obtaining information. How did that case get there? I do not want to say anything about the case but how did it get before the courts? Is my memory failing or is it something that occurred since the hon. lady became minister?

Mrs. Fairclough: I think it was already started when I came into the department. As I understand the situation, and my officials will correct me if I am wrong, the hereditary chiefs challenged the action of the elected council with regard to the sale of a piece of property.

Mr. Pickersgill: That would have been after my time.

Mrs. Fairclough: The matter is now before the courts and, of course, we must await the outcome. The hon. member also asked me a question with reference to Caughnawaga. The area expropriated was 1,374.14 acres. The number of individuals entitled to compensation was 217. As of February 24, 1959, settlement has been completed with 198 of them or some 91 per cent and settlements are pending with the other 19. The total amount of compensation paid to individuals as of February 24, 1959, was $2,217,892.20.

Mr. Pickersgill: Have any of these cases gone into the courts?

Mrs. Fairclough: No, there are none in the courts. I said in the absence of the hon. gentleman that I thought that the rest of his questions had to do with education. Would he like to wait until we reach the education item?

Mr. Pickersgill: I would be quite happy to wait until that time. However, another question has been put to me. Perhaps it is a little unfair of me to ask the hon. lady without trying to find out for myself but as she has so much more research staff than I have perhaps she will not mind. It has been represented to me by some Caughnawaga Indians that they are very fearful of this proposed metropolitan Montreal arrangement. They feel Mr. Duplessis is attacking the autonomy of the Caughnawaga reserve. I wonder if the hon. lady knows whether the reserve is to be included in the metropolitan area or definitely excluded?

Mrs. Fairclough: I can assure the hon. gentleman I have made no changes in the law. As he knows, under the present situation no one can encroach on a reserve, so the Indians are quite safe.

Mr. Pickersgill: It occurred to me it would, of course, be quite incompetent for the provincial legislature to attempt to legislate a reserve into part of a municipality. I did not think there could be anything in this, but I thought there would not be any harm in asking the question since it had been put to me.

Mrs. Fairclough: No, not at all. As a matter of fact, if my memory serves me well, we did have some correspondence with at least some members of the band in that regard, and gave them that answer.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is another question about Caughnawaga, and that is the question of re-routing the road and re-routing the bridge. Have all problems of that sort been settled with the provincial authorities and with the Indians?

Mrs. Fairclough: I do not know that they have been settled. The Indians have objected to any change in the road and so long as their objection stands nothing will be done about it. Unless they can come to an agreement, nothing will be done. I believe that some of the provincial authorities wanted to discuss the matter with them, but they were not even amenable to that suggestion so the department does not intend to take any action on the matter so long as the opinion of the Indians is that they want no change.

Mr. Pickersgill: There were also some expropriations at St. Regis. Have they all been settled?

Mrs. Fairclough: The area of the reserve expropriated was 140.3 acres; the number of individuals entitled to compensation, 40. All of the settlements have been completed and the total compensation paid was $184,771.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, that is a happy ending.

Mr. Howard: I have one very minor question before this item passes. It relates not only to this particular vote, but to every other vote in the book. At the last session I urged that something be done about this, and if I could indicate it to the minister now perhaps she could communicate with the authorities responsible for the compilation of the statistical information in the estimates book. What I am suggesting is this: in the second portion of the book containing the details of the services, would it not be possible to arrange to print in that section the number of the vote, just as it is in the front of the book? We find great difficulty in following exactly what vote we are dealing with in the detailed section. I wondered if I raised the question at this session, perhaps next session and eventually we will be able to have the vote number printed in the detailed sections of the book.

Mrs. Fairclough: If the hon. member will mention it to the Minister of Finance when his estimates are before the committee, he will be putting it to the proper authority.

Mr. Howard: Will the hon. lady join me?

Mrs. Fairclough: I shall be glad to.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. lady will remember that there was a good deal of debate and a good deal of agitation at one time about the completion of the band lists, particularly in relation to certain happenings in Alberta that were ultimately settled in the courts, as they should have been in the first place. There were, the last time I made inquiries, still a few cases pending and I just wondered if the hon. lady could bring us up to date, and let us know if that job is also completed?

Mrs. Fairclough: It is practically completed, Mr. Chairman. The protests remaining are down to two, and we hope that these will be handled to their satisfaction shortly.

Mr. Pickersgill: Are these two persons living on the reserve or not living on the reserve? I would be interested in their history. Perhaps I could find a grievance.

Mrs. Fairclough: The reason they have not been settled is that we cannot locate them.

Item agreed to.

Indian agencies—

57. Operation and maintenance, $3,728,028.

Mr. Howard: In connection with this item, page 144, there is an item about three-quarters of the way down the page, listed as allowances. There is quite a substantial increase in the vote, from $40,000 to $100,000. Would the minister give us information on that?

Mrs. Fairclough: This results from the revised scale of northern allowances.

Mr. Pickersgill: I believe the hon. member for Mackenzie River wanted to ask a question, although he does not seem to be in the committee at the moment. He wanted to ask about northern allowances to ascertain whether they were on precisely the same scale in Indian affairs as they are in northern affairs.

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes, they are precisely the same.

Item agreed to.

Reserves and trusts—

59. Operation and maintenance, $367,421.

Mr. Pickersgill: This is an old favourite of mine, as the minister well knows. Perhaps the minister would like to leave this until we resume at eight o'clock, when she could tell us just where these estates stand. It is one of the most vexing problems, as I found when I was in the department, and I am sure a lot of us hope the situation is improving steadily. I should like to have a fairly detailed report on what the situation is.

Mrs. Fairclough: I think with all the information I have at hand I can manage to give it to the committee before six o'clock. The estates which were concluded in 1956-57 were 1,420; in 1957-58, 1,179; 1958-59—this is just from April to December—the last figure I have is 2,412. Now, in the management of estates opened, in the 1956-57 year we find they were 667; in 1957-58, 702; and in 1958-59, for the same period April to December 31, 508.

Mr. Pickersgill: Has the hon. lady the global figure for the backlog at present?

Mrs. Fairclough: My officials do not have the figures for the backlog at present.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think there are a couple of other questions I should like to ask, so perhaps we could let this stand.

Mrs. Fairclough: From the information I gave, the hon. member will realize we are cutting steadily into the backlog.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think it is very encouraging.

Mrs. Fairclough: How far we have gone, I could not say at the moment, but I shall try to find out.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Deputy Chairman: We have been discussing item No. 59. Shall the item carry?

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I would like to address a few remarks on the first item before it carries. There are a number of items which are of some concern to the Indian people of the Yukon. I want particularly to draw to the hon. minister's attention matters concerning housing, children's aid, welfare payments in isolated areas, education, both schools and hostels, and land. Perhaps I could first refer to the minutes of a meeting held in Whitehorse between the superintendent of the Yukon agency and five members of the legislative council of the Yukon, as well as Commissioner Collins. At that meeting the main topic of discussion was the matter of welfare payments to Indian people in isolated areas. The following resolution was passed:

> Be it resolved, in order that the economic welfare of Old Crow, Ross river and such other areas as may be found necessary at a later date, be better secured, it is desirable to pay to each adult Indian or person living the Indian mode of life, who kills a wolf by means other than poisoning and delivers the pelt to the R.C.M.P., the sum of twenty dollars as a rehabilitation measure for an experimental period of not more than three years. The pelt to remain the property of the person killing the animal.

This matter of welfare I have already discussed with the director of the branch, who has been very helpful and who has given me reason to believe that some sympathy, perhaps, exists in the branch for the people of these rather remote areas, and that they may expect some assistance in this regard.

Another subject which was discussed at this same meeting was the matter of the allotment of land. I would like to call to the attention of the minister the fact that the five members of the legislative council of the Yukon were present at this meeting and all these resolutions were passed unanimously, with the exception of the one concerning the re-establishment of the bounty, and that received unanimous consent with the exception of one voice. This resolution concerning land was passed:

> Be it resolved that inasmuch as no treaty exists between the Indians of the Yukon, and the government of Canada, it would seem desirable, with the consent of the Indians of the Yukon, to make some arrangements regarding individual and band land allotments at this time as a measure of security.

This matter of the allotment of land to the Indian people of the Yukon is one which should be of some concern to the minister, as I am sure it is. The time has come when some arrangement has to be made for the Indian people of the Yukon. If it is not the intention of the department to allot tracts of land, which was the normal course followed in other parts of Canada, may I suggest to the minister that consideration be given to setting up band council funds in lieu thereof.

The territorial council at its last session considered these matters, and I have before me a copy of the votes and proceedings of the legislative council which was prepared last year. In debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, Councillor George Shaw of Dawson said this:

> Another matter, Mr. Speaker, that I feel strongly about, is the matter of extermination of predatory animals, more specifically the wolf. I can quite understand how nature balances the continuity of the different species of animals; however, I do not think that nature always takes into account, in its balancing, the effect that man has created in his need of game animals, either for meat or sport. Accordingly, statistics have proven that caribou are very much decreasing in number; the people who feel the impact of this most severely are the Indian population that subsist primarily on these animals for food and clothing, etc. To assist these people, whose very lives depend on these large herds continuing, I consider it imperative that a bounty be placed on wolves. Such an action without question will substantially deplete the wolves in the area concerned; also will assist the Indian trappers in what is now a most depressed industry.

These remarks of Councillor Shaw may be used to point out the present need for consideration being given to the resolution which was passed at the meeting of December 29, 1958, at Whitehorse. Councillor Shaw brought up another matter at the last session of the legislative council when he discussed the education of young Indian people. In this same debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, he says:

It is commendable, and I welcome the government's plan, to provide vocational training to the younger Indians; however, it is still necessary that the older members be taken into consideration and assisted in a manner by which they can maintain their self-respect in a type of livelihood with which they are acquainted.

Since the hon. minister assumed office she has caused action to be taken for the construction of a new school at Old Crow. This is extremely commendable. The school is being constructed not only with native materials but with native labour. This will put substantial numbers of breadwinners into this area to work; work which is vitally required at this particular time of the year in view of the fact that in the last year and a half the fur industry has dropped to a new low, thereby severely restricting the range of income which these people have at their disposal. This type of program is recommended for other such projects which are required in other like areas, but in the meantime it is necessary to consider the remoter areas, such as Ross river, and consider the feasibility of following the advice of the legislative council of the Yukon, as well as the commissioner—I may add my own opinion to that—regarding the implementation of these welfare payments in the form of wolf bounties in the remoter areas. This is a new approach to the matter of a wolf bounty. It is not a question of a handout but of a monetary payment in the form of a welfare grant which, at the same time, assists in the control of predatory animals.

I pass on quickly to the matter of children's aid. I believe the hon. minister was presented with a brief by the Southern Yukon Children's Aid Society. This is an organization which was formed recently. When I say recently, I should say in the last three or four years. This organization has done more to alleviate suffering and hardship among the infant population in the Yukon than any other organization of which I am aware. This is an organization which until now has been entirely supported by private subscription; that is to say, it has had no connection with the government. A surprising fact is that 74.6 per cent of the cases that were handled by this society during the period January, 1958 to October, 1958 were cases involving Indian children, Indians of white status or halfbreeds. At the moment this organization is gaining support only by private subscription. The brief which was presented by the children's aid society asked for government financial help. I think, Mr. Chairman, this is a matter which deserves the very special consideration of the minister. I simply quote the last paragraph of the brief which was presented in order to show the need for the immediate consideration of the request made by this organization. It reads:

Though we have never previously requested financial aid from the department, the society now has to request an annual grant, despite generous contributions from the public. Our work has increased four-fold, necessitating additional paid help, rental of an office, and many other expenses. Our whole program is expanding and we will need more financial support from the departments of the government we are serving. The amount we are asking is $3,000 annually. A brief has been submitted to the territorial government requesting an increase in our annual grant, and if we fail in our efforts to obtain these, our treasurer reports that we shall be forced to cease to function after May 1959.

I commend this request to the minister's special consideration, because without such aid the society, as it has said, will be forced to discontinue this work. I know that the minister and all hon. members will agree that this is an effort that is deserving of every possible support.

I should like to conclude my remarks by referring to the minutes of a conference of Indian delegates which was held at Whitehorse on June 10, 1958. I believe the director of the branch, who has done such wonderful work in the Yukon in the last two years, was in attendance at that meeting. The Indian delegates who represented their various bands at this meeting brought up matters ranging from housing, education and aid to trappers, to bounties and refrigeration. In fact, the whole field of Indian affairs was covered. Two or three of the outstanding features of the ensuing brief deserve particular consideration.

One refers to the fact that unemployment insurance is not now available to two classes of Indian people in the Yukon, and I assume this also applies elsewhere. The first class of people affected are Indian trappers, and the second are those engaged in forest firefighting duties. The Indian people feel that unemployment insurance should be paid to Indian people who are engaged in trapping and firefighting on the same basis as it is paid to those engaged in fishing. They believe that when trappers or firefighters are out of work they are entitled to receive unemployment insurance.

There is one further matter which is of some importance and which I should like to include as having been among the subjects dealt with, at the meeting on December 29, by the legislators of the territorial council. This concerns the need for an Indian placement officer, and a recommendation to this effect was unanimously supported at that meeting. Again I say that this represents the view of the Commissioner of the territory and of the five members of the Legislative Council of the Yukon, in addition to the heads of the two main branches of the church up there, and many other people. Bishop Coudert who is the bishop of the Roman Catholic church in the Yukon, said specifically that there is a need for a placement officer in the Yukon agency. This particular request was also made by the various Indian people who made up the delegation which attended the meeting last July. Bishop Coudert also stated that there is a need for the Indians and halfbreeds in the Whitehorse area to be provided with additional houses. I know that the minister is making progress in this regard, and I should like to commend her on this work.

Bishop Greenwood of the Anglican church reiterated the need for an Indian placement officer. He said, further, that the care of old and disabled Indian people presented a problem. He also expressed the feeling that steps should be taken in order to permit the inclusion in the bands of some illegitimate children of Indian women born between September 1951 and August 1956 in addition to legally adopted children. This is very important because unless these people are classified as Indians they cannot attend the schools set up specifically for Indian children; they are neither white nor Indian as far as the definition given in the Indian Act is concerned. Unless they fall within the definition given in the act they are denied the right of access to the Indian schools. They are also being denied the right of access to the hostels which are being constructed at the moment in Whitehorse, so they cannot come into Whitehorse from outlying points and attend the new schools, because they have no place in which to live.

There is a very pressing need for something to be done about this situation. It is something which requires immediate attention. I think this view has been expressed by Commissioner Collins and by others in the Yukon and I would suggest that the minister give this matter every consideration prior to the opening of these new hostels and the school in Whitehorse, because otherwise these children would be denied the educational facilities which are being provided.

One further thing which came out of this meeting last June at which the director was in attendance was a statement by an Indian delegate that more liaison work could be done with regard to the integration of the Indian people into jobs in industry. This, once again, emphasizes the need for the establishment of an Indian placement officer in the Yukon. It seems odd that there should be more government employees concerned with the administration of forests and wild life in the Yukon than are concerned with the welfare of the Indian people. I trust the situation will not continue to be as it has been over the past 30 years.

With regard to the question of freezers there are, I believe, two freezers being built in the Yukon in different locations, but there is need for one in Dawson. Perhaps I could do no better here than quote from the remarks which were made last June at the conference which was held with the chief of the Dawson band. The latter said this absence of freezer facilities was a matter for regret. Apropos of this, an amusing story was told by Chief Charlie Mason. An Indian agent once had locker-freezers built in two places. One was not a place where a freezer was needed. An Indian from a place that needed a freezer locker said, "Why did you build one in that town?" The agent said, "I made a mistake". The Indian said, "I wish you would make a mistake and build one in our place." Dawson natives hope that soon a mistake will be made and a freezer put in Dawson for the native people commented Chief Mason.

I could do no better than conclude with the words of that chief as set out in these minutes:

> It would seem that the native wants many things. It is true. He feels he has been robbed of his land and his livelihood and not much has been given in return. He feels that nobody cares much for his adjustment to the new way of life. Some people work and help but they have not the money or the time or the authority to do much. The native needs more understanding. We feel we should have an assistant agent living in Dawson who will be with us from day to day. The agent could help us and teach us better and make us happier. Our people are getting more and more in number every year. The agent should be able to give us help now before the problems get too big.

Chief Mason continues:

Sometimes the agent says he is too busy in Whitehorse to come to Dawson. The department is like the candidate for parliament who visited Old Crow.

I may say that the chief is not speaking about me here, he is speaking about my then opponent.

He got off the plane. He said to the people "I am sorry I am late. For five days there was bad weather." One of the men said, "That is too bad. Did you have bad weather for the nine years before that?"

Mr. Jutras helps us out a lot and is thinking a great deal about us, but the head of his department should give him authority to put a man in Dawson. For too long the government has been away from us and has not come to help us. Mr. Meek was a good agent too, but he needed more help. So we think it is important to have an agent or representative for the agent in Dawson.

I thank you for listening to this our letter from Dawson natives. We hope that you will consider it with sympathy.

These are not isolated ideas, but are common and shared by all the Indian people of the Yukon. The problems have been stated before and I commend them to the minister for her sympathetic attention.

Mr. Hardie: Mr. Chairman, in regard to what was said concerning the people at Old Crow by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat may I say that I am sure he knows these people come under the Indian agency which is in part of my riding and I am sure from now on they will looked after properly and very well.

Before the evening recess the minister replied to some of the suggestions I proposed early in the afternoon. I noted that she said there was some merit in the hiring of works foremen in the various settlements in the north. I wonder if the minister would give an opinion as to some of the other suggestions I made. In particular I should like to have her comments on my suggestion concerning the payment of salaries to Indian chiefs who would work in co-operation with the works foremen in selling government policy to the native Indians. I am sure the minister and the officials of the department realize how valuable it would be to have the co-operation of the chiefs in these settlements when projects are undertaken which are aimed at bringing the Indians out of their present condition into a better world.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt the hon. member. He raised the subject on the first item of this department, No. 56, and I did answer him at that time. True enough, I did not deal with every suggestion he made but I suggest to him that he is now re-hashing an item which has been passed. All of the suggestions he made will be considered by the department.

At this moment, Mr. Chairman, I am uncertain whether we are considering item No. 59 or 60. I thought No. 59 was passed but it appeared to me that the hon. member for the Yukon was directing his remarks entirely to No. 60. Possibly we could straighten that out now.

Mr. Hardie: I do not wish to disagree with the minister or with the Chair but I believe we are considering item No. 59 at the present time.

The Chairman: We are on item No. 59 at present.

Mrs. Fairclough: If we are on No. 59, Mr. Chairman, I should like to answer the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. I thought we had passed that item but since we are still on it perhaps I could tell the hon. gentleman that we can only estimate the backlog of estates. About three years ago there were approximately 9,000 and it has now been reduced to approximately 5,000. I am expressing this in round figures, of course. The hon. gentleman will understand that it is a little difficult for us to arrive at an exact figure. To do so would require careful review of a large number of old estates. Sometimes when a new estate is opened it in turn reflects upon or has some bearing upon an old estate until a few matters are cleared up concerning the old estate, and so on. While not entirely satisfactory the figures show a rather remarkable improvement over the last three years, let us say.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister is quite satisfied now that she has a good organization for dealing with this?

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: When I was minister I often said I was thoroughly dissatisfied with the situation and I attempted to do a great deal to improve it. I am glad to hear it is working itself out.

Mrs. Fairclough: I am sure the hon. member will understand that once you start to improve a thing it snowballs—

Mr. Pickersgill: I am only too happy to take the credit, Mr. Chairman.

Mrs. Fairclough: I might say it looks very encouraging now. We are on our way to cutting a large slice out of this backlog and I believe over a period of time it will eventually come down to a much smaller figure.

Item agreed to.

Welfare of Indians—

60. Operation and maintenance, $6,817,932.

Mr. Hardie: Mr. Chairman, I feel that some of the questions I asked this afternoon relating to the welfare of Indians have not been answered and I wonder if the minister will consider this an appropriate item under which to comment on those matters?

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, at six o'clock I checked all my notes and I thought I had answered the hon. member in every respect except in a couple of instances where the hon. gentleman raised questions that obviously I could not answer off the cuff. It is necessary to have consultation with the department on some of these matters. I cannot give him an offhand answer on some of these issues. As far as I am aware I have answered every question he posed that could possibly be answered orally.

I wish now to say a few words with respect to the questions raised by the hon. member for the Yukon who made some serious suggestions. I might tell him the matter of unemployment insurance does not come under the jurisdiction of this department and he will have to raise his questions when the estimates of the Department of Labour are called. We are attempting to have placement officers stationed at all places where they may be usefully employed. We are gradually placing them in areas where they have not been placed heretofore and I hope we will get around to the Yukon shortly.

The matter of co-operation with the children's aid society is under active consideration and I think will come to a successful conclusion very shortly.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is the hon. lady going to tell me about my cash relief, Mr. Chairman?

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, I thought I had dealt with that question early in the afternoon. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would care to repeat his question.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the hon. lady has dealt with it, I apologize. I was out of the chamber for a little while and she may have answered it during my absence.

Mr. Hardie: Mr. Chairman, with all due deference may I say that I was present this afternoon and I cannot recall that the hon. lady commented on several of the suggestions I offered. I should like to have her comments on my proposal with regard to her department supplying to the Department of Transport a list of graduates from vocational training schools who could operate equipment for that and other departments on contract work. I should like to have her speak about my suggestion concerning the payment of a salary to Indian chiefs who would work as, shall I say, straw bosses or assistants to the works foremen. I do not recall that she gave an opinion with respect to my proposal about having the Department of Fisheries conduct surveys on inland lakes to see if they are suitable for commercial fishing by Indians. There was also the suggestion about providing equipment to assist Indians wishing to engage in commercial fishing on Great Slave lake and other related questions.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, with respect I submit that I did answer those questions in a general way. The hon. member knows that I cannot answer for other departments of government. I did tell him that every suggestion he made would be very carefully considered. Some of the suggestions he made I am sure he himself in all fairness would not expect me to answer immediately without consultation with my department and without full consideration of the implications of some of the rather drastic ones that he did make. As to some of the suggestions he made, I would ask him to give the department a chance to digest what he has asked and not press for an answer now because, in any event, I cannot give an answer particularly to problems which have interdepartmental implications.

Mr. Hardie: Mr. Chairman, I will take for granted that the minister agreed with what I said. I personally did not think that some of the questions, particularly those in regard to employment by the Department of Transport in the filling of vacancies and so on, were answered but I will look forward to reading Hansard tomorrow to see what the minister did say in this respect.

Mrs. Fairclough: Possibly I did not answer that particular one, but I can tell the hon. member that this department has circularized to all departments of government a plea to employ Indians wherever possible. We have met with considerable success in a great many parts of the country. I do not think any steps have yet been taken with regard to circularizing subcontractors but we are taking that into consideration. I can assure him that this department is pressing as hard as it can to employ Indians wherever possible in the areas in which they are resident.

Mr. Hardie: I asked this afternoon whether a placement officer would be located in the Northwest Territories.

Mrs. Fairclough: I answered that really when I was answering the hon. member for the Yukon. We are hopeful of placing officers in those various sections of the country as quickly as possible.

Item agreed to.

Economic development of Indians—

62. Operation and maintenance including an amount of $5,700 for grants to promote Indian agriculture, handicrafts and economic enterprises generally, $867,272.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. lady knows exactly what I am going to ask her on this item. I want to know whether a successor has yet been appointed to Mr. Mel Jack, and whether she is satisfied with him and what is he doing?

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, I am very sorry to say that there has been no successor appointed as yet. I am most regretful about that. We have held two competitions but, as the hon. member very well knows, this is a position which requires a peculiar kind of specialized background. He was fortunate enough to secure a man who had that kind of background. If he can suggest to me one who can take his place I can assure him that I will treat his suggestion with the greatest consideration because I would like to find someone right at the moment who could really do the job.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I can suggest to the hon. lady that she could not do any better than to get Mr. Jack back. I do not know anybody in the country who is likely to do the job better than he did and I would certainly like to see him back there.

Mr. Hees: I can assure you that he will not be back.

Mr. Pickersgill: He will be after a while, but not for two or three years. In the meantime, of course, the hon. lady has to get somebody else. I suggest that probably one of the difficulties is that it is very hard to convince the hon. lady's neighbour who sits in the chair next to hers that an adequate salary should be paid for the position.

Mrs. Fairclough: I would not argue that point with the hon. member, Mr. Chairman, but I think we are agreed on one thing, namely that this is a most difficult post to fill. Now that the hon. member has been answered by the Minister of Transport I think he realizes what I am up against.

Mr. Pickersgill: Quite; I understand.

Mr. Hardie: Mr. Chairman, this afternoon the minister said that her department would continue, regardless of what the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources was doing, their setup of industrial and economic welfare in the Northwest Territories. She did say at that time that the Indian affairs division could ask for and pay for services provided by other departments in the north. If she is considering the fact that the Indian affairs division will ask the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources to take over this responsibility of economic development of Indians in the Northwest Territories I would hope that she would make it very plain to the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources that we do not want any long-haired Ph.D.'s. Make it clear to the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources that we want practical men hired for these positions, men who will be looking after the welfare and the economic conditions of the Indians in the north, people who have lived with the Indians, know their conditions and are interested in doing something about them, not graduates of the University of Toronto who have never been outside of this so-called inside lavatory age in which we are living, but people who have had some experience in living in the outside lavatory age in which the Indians are living.

An hon. Member: You are hired.

Education—

64. Administration, operation and maintenance, $17,734,854.

Mr. Speakman: Mr. Chairman, on this item I would like to do something this evening which nobody appears to have done. I would like to congratulate the minister on the work of her department in education for Indians. I would also like to make just one minor inquiry. In my constituency at the present time a building is almost completed which will contain 166 new classrooms and it is being constructed on the reservation. Many requests have been made for additional school space. I do not see any appropriation set aside either in the minister's estimates or in the estimates of the Department of Public Works. Has any consideration been given to the provision of this additional space on the Hobbema Indian reserve?

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, this really comes under item 65. Would the hon. member wait until item 65 is called? In the meantime I could possibly answer the questions put to me this afternoon by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate with reference to the scholarships scheme. I presume he wanted to know what scholarships had been given and to whom. I wonder whether he would be satisfied, rather than have me read off this long list, if I had the list included in Hansard?

Mr. Pickersgill: I would be quite happy about that.

The Chairman: Has the minister permission to have the list placed in Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mrs. Fairclough: The list follows:

SCHOLARSHIPS AWARDED TO INDIAN STUDENTS 1958-59

Mr. Pickersgill: I still hope the minister will say a little about it. Has it been a success?

Mrs. Fairclough: We think it has been a success. The only thing that bothers me about these scholarships is that there are not enough of them. I feel very strongly on this and I have said to many people in important places that there is a great deal of latent talent among the Indians. It is not only talent for administration, for teaching, for nursing, but also for the arts. I have already taken some initial steps which I might say involve merely an approach to individuals.

My hope is that in the next couple of years I will be able to encourage young people to come forward and demonstrate their talents in these fields. I may say that we have already taken steps within the department to instruct our teachers throughout Canada to be on the lookout for special skills and talents so that these young people may be encouraged in their early school years to develop the talents they have been given in order that they may have the same opportunities as children in non-Indian schools across Canada to secure scholarships and other assistance which will further their advance in the field of their own particular aptitudes.

[Mrs. Fairclough.]

Mr. Pickersgill: I think there was another question I asked the hon. lady about school integration.

Mrs. Fairclough: Oh yes. While the officials are looking up the actual figures I might just say that progressively each year more and more Indian students attend non-Indian schools, and we think that the further integration of Indian students with non-Indian students is a progressive step, as I know the hon. member also thought when he was the minister of this department. I do not know whether we have any specific figures which I can give. I find that at the present time there are 8,429 Indian students in non-Indian schools out of a total of 38,836 Indian students. In other words, almost 25 per cent of our Indian students are studying in non-Indian schools.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is that percentage up much from a year ago?

Mrs. Fairclough: Last year the number was 7,330 or 19.5 per cent. I have not figured out this one but at a rough glance it is almost 25 per cent, so we have an increase of 4½ to 5 per cent over a year ago.

Item agreed to.

48. Departmental administration, $774,401.

Mr. Pickersgill: On item 48 I want to ask the minister a couple of questions I overlooked. I promised the minister I would not make another speech on this item and I do not intend to but there is one question I had intended to ask. There is a press digest put out by the citizenship branch—I was going to call it a publication but perhaps I should not—of the press in Canada other than English and French. I am sure the hon. lady will not have the information here now but on a later occasion I wonder whether she would table information as to who receives this publication and who is capable of receiving it.

Mrs. Fairclough: I would be very glad to. We have had quite a call for this particular publication. I am sure the hon. member knows what would be involved in making it available to a great number of people.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think that would be particularly desirable but it is, of course, prepared through the use of public funds. I know that the hon. lady knows that it has the word "restricted" on it. I suppose that merely means that the circulation is restricted, not that security is involved in it.

Mrs. Fairclough: Of course, one of the difficulties is that we do not claim that this is a verbatim translation. It is only a description of what our translators think is meant by the article and any extended distribution would have to be more specific than that. At the present time, if my memory serves me well, it is only a mimeographed sheet. There is a limit to the number of copies you can mimeograph. I will be glad to give the hon. member the information and if he has any suggestions to make we will be very glad to consider them.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is one other question. We were rather diverted when we were considering the citizenship item by some discussion that was not perhaps strictly relevant to it, and I therefore failed to ask the hon. lady, who succeeded in scoring off me a little bit on that occasion, if she would be willing to give the assurance that in such cases as I referred to there would not be deportations in the future unless the circumstances were very exceptional indeed.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, as the hon. member knows, one of the problems of the department is that once you break a rule you establish a precedent.

Mr. Pickersgill: I know that very well.

Mrs. Fairclough: Where there are humanitarian aspects involved I can assure him that in every case I do a great deal of soul searching about the matter.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am referring only to those cases where young children who are Canadian citizens are involved. As the hon. lady knows, the number of those cases is very small and I really do not think the precedent there is of any importance whatever.

Mrs. Fairclough: I draw the hon. member's attention to the fact that even though these children leave the country they are still Canadian children. They are always Canadian children and they are Canadian citizens. They can come back to this country at any time at all. Just how far one goes in condoning the actions of irresponsible parents I do not know. After all, there are people in this country who blight the lives of their children by their own acts. Just how far we go in forgiving parents for their actions because of the fact that they have small children, I do not know. We do not absolve a man from serving his sentence simply because he has children at home. All these things have to be considered. I know the hon. member will realize that I am speaking very much off the cuff without serious consideration of the problem at the moment, but I can assure him that in every one of these cases very serious and soul searching consideration is given.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to say one more word on the subject. I expressed regret and am very glad to repeat the regret I expressed if in any case I was in fact responsible, as the hon. lady seemed to establish I was—I have not been able to look at the files and I take her word for it—for deporting people who were undoubtedly technically deserving of deportation and thereby exiling Canadian children or causing them to be deserted by their parents. However, I do not think we should do that any longer and, as the hon. lady points out, it is precisely because these children remain Canadian citizens that I think it is all the more important that they should be allowed to grow up in Canada. Whatever the balance of advantage and disadvantage may be, if these children are going to remain Canadian citizens as they are, surely it is more desirable from the point of view of Canada that they should be brought up here in Canada irrespective of what rights there may be in the matter.

As I pointed out, after we established assisted passage loans for dependents, it happened a good many times that we discovered in the department that there were cases of children whose parents had been deported in the 30's because they were on relief, who had been brought up in another country and wanted to come to Canada and could not even get assisted passage loans because, being Canadian citizens, they were not immigrants. Of course, we changed the law and fixed that up.

These cases occur very rarely, as the hon. lady knows. After all, deportation is not a punishment, it is the carrying out of the immigration law. The hon. lady does not conduct trials any more than I did. She reaches an opinion as parliament has asked her to do and deportation should not be regarded as a punishment. It is removing from this country someone whom parliament did not think was desirable as a permanent resident of Canada. I do not question that, on balance, perhaps some of these people are not desirable but if they happen, though undesirable, to be the parents of infant Canadian children who are Canadian citizens it seems to me that the balance should be swung the other way.

Mr. Crestohl: In speaking of deportation, I should like to ask the minister whether or not there has been any change in the procedure with respect to telling a person ordered deported the reasons for his deportation.

Mrs. Fairclough: The deportee knows the reasons for his deportation.

Mr. Crestohl: No, the deportee does not know. I have to respectfully differ with the minister. The reasons why he is being deported are not given to the deportee. I should like to draw to the attention of the minister that this is a serious matter and very serious complaints on this subject were made by the present Prime Minister when he sat on this side of the house, and also by the present Minister of Justice. This was one of their basic and most serious charges against the immigration department at that time. They stated that the failure to give reasons to the deportee caused grave injustice.

I should like, for example, to quote the words of the present Minister of Justice as found at page 1158 of Hansard for February 15, 1955. He said:

> There is concern and dissatisfaction not only with respect to the over-all policy of the government relative to immigration, which indeed is difficult to determine, but also because of the practices of the government in administering that department, the result of which is to create injustices, hardship, and inequities.

In speaking of a special case he said that the applicant had a right to know the reasons for the refusal to admit his relative. If the minister will permit me—

Mrs. Fairclough: May I just interrupt here for a moment, if the hon. member will permit. This is precisely the point I was about to make. He is talking about admissions, which is an entirely different thing from deportation. On deportation, it is true that in some cases the evidence is not spelled out completely but the deportee knows under what section of the act he is being deported.

Mr. Crestohl: I apologize to the minister. There is a difference between not giving reasons to a deportee and not giving reasons why a relative is not admitted into Canada. Has there been a change in the regulations whereby the department tells the relative in Canada, the Canadian citizen who is bringing someone to Canada, the reasons why the relative is not admitted?

Mrs. Fairclough: No, there has been no real change yet, although the matter has been under intensive study ever since this government came into power, but it is a most complicated and difficult problem. I believe that in many of these cases the applicant for admission to the country knows the reason for refusal. In some cases, it is possible to tell the sponsor that the applicant knows the reason and if he will ask the applicant for the reason he can tell him. Sometimes the applicant is not willing to divulge to his sponsor what he knows to be the case, and over that we have very little control.

Mr. Crestohl: I must again respectfully differ with the minister; that is not the fact as I have learned in some cases. I shall again quote the words of the present Minister of Justice as found at page 7162 of Hansard for August 7, 1956, when he made this very direct statement:

> I refer, of course, particularly to the refusal of the department to inform prospective immigrants who are rejected of the reasons for their rejection, which practice is carried over in a number of cases to a refusal to inform people who land in Canada and against whom orders for deportation are made of the reasons for those orders. We have said before and we say again that this practice is absolutely unjustified, that it is contrary to the principles of justice upon which this country's system rests.

That was the position taken by the Minister of Justice at that time. I have similar quotations from the Prime Minister. I agree with the statements made by the Minister of Justice and the Prime Minister when they sat in opposition. I want to know if, since they now have the power to remedy these defects which they did not have when they sat in opposition, anything has been done in that direction?

Mrs. Fairclough: There are two things I should like to say. First of all, in making these remarks when this party was in opposition the present Minister of Justice did admit in this house that he realized it was a very serious and complex problem. When he came into the government he was Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration in addition to being Minister of Justice. One of his first acts was to set up a committee to study this matter.

I dealt with this the other day when we were on citizenship—I do not know if the hon. member was in the house at the time—and I did say with regard to establishing judicial or quasi-judicial boards that the question was still being considered. It has been considered by a cabinet committee for some time now but a definite decision had not yet been reached. I can assure my hon. friend it is a matter of great concern to this government. We are considering it carefully and we hope we will arrive at a solution to the problem. However, I am sure that like the Minister of Justice my hon. friend will agree with me that it is not a problem easy of solution.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am pleased to hear the hon. lady say that, and she would not expect me to sit here without saying a word about it. While the Minister of Justice did, on one occasion, after I had made a patient explanation, say that it was a difficult problem, no such admission was ever obtained from the Prime Minister, who used far more extreme language about the inhumanity and the brutality of the administration when I was minister. I am very glad to hear the hon. lady say that under the Prime Minister's leadership the same inhumanity and brutality are still being practised.

Mrs. Fairclough: That I do not concede.

Item agreed to.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is true, just the same.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

234. Administration, production and distribution of films and other visual materials, $4,361,772.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, on August 28 last when I presented the estimates of the national film board for the current year, I gave the house figures concerning the distribution activities of the board in 1957-58. These figures appear in the annual report for 1957-58 which I tabled at the opening of this session.

Concerning the distribution of Canadian film abroad, I should like to mention that a senior representative of the national film board recently visited Central and South America. While there he had the opportunity to meet the heads of posts in that area at a meeting which was held when the Secretary of State for External Affairs was in Rio de Janeiro in November. The chairman of the national film board has just told me that as a result of the trip a number of interesting opportunities for the expansion of Canada's information program in Latin America through the distribution of films are being studied in co-operation with the Department of External Affairs.

In the parliamentary appropriation presented for your consideration two-thirds of the increase is required to cover the additional cost of maintaining existing activities and the balance represents the cost of extension of activities and new projects. In December last I had the opportunity of spending a full day at the national film board's operational headquarters in Montreal. I was very much impressed with what I saw and, on behalf of the board, I should like to convey to the members of this house an invitation to visit the Montreal premises. I hope that time may be found during this present session for one or several groups of members to go to Montreal for this purpose.

(Translation):

Mr. Rouleau: Mr. Chairman, last year I invited the hon. Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mrs. Fairclough) to visit the beautiful and great riding of Dollard at the time she called at the national film board offices. She now tells us tonight that she did come to my constituency to visit those buildings and even kindly asked hon. members to do likewise.

I take this opportunity on my own behalf, as member for Dollard, to invite all hon. members to meet me when they visit the national film board offices. This will give me an opportunity to show them the beauty spots in my riding.

(Text):

Mr. Chairman, the role of the opposition, as I understand it, is to scrutinize, and then scrutinize again, the acts of the government and of the different branches of the government. It is also the role of the opposition, to my mind, to criticize the government when criticism is justified. It is also the duty of the opposition to make suggestions to the government, on occasion suggestions which do not seem to be taken into consideration by the present government.

However, I find myself tonight in the pleasant position of going on record as commending the national film board for the excellent job they are doing. In studying the estimates of the national film board I find no room for criticism. The board, as I said, is doing a very excellent job, and I wish tonight to congratulate the film board commissioner and the members of his staff for their achievements in recent years. In going through the last annual report of the national film board I noticed with satisfaction an increase in production. Eighty more films have been produced, bringing the total of films produced to 225. There is also an increase of 1.5 per cent of film processed; and there also has been an increase in personnel. I have noticed with great satisfaction from the annual report of the national film board that the board has received in the last year 27 awards across the world. This should be a matter of pride not only to the hon. minister responsible for the national film board and the chairman of the board, but also to those who have produced those films and the people of Canada at large. I would ask the hon. minister and the commissioner to express our appreciation to the members of the staff of the board.

During a visit he made to the national film board, His Excellency the Governor General of Canada said:

> The national film board does, and must, I feel, play a vital part in making Canadian conscious of their country and what is going on in it.

I am convinced that hon. members of this house will bear me out when I say the board is doing a very excellent job in achieving the aims proclaimed by His Excellency. I am not always in agreement with the hon. lady in her actions or speeches, but I want to praise her tonight for continuing to give her good support to the film board, as was so well done by her predecessor, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

(Translation):

As I said at the beginning of my remarks, Mr. Chairman, last year I invited the hon. minister to come and visit the constituency of Dollard. I was glad to learn tonight that between the sessions she visited the national film board. Let me extend to her the same invitation this year. I hope she will come back to the national film board, and that I shall have the pleasure of welcoming her personally in the constituency of Dollard. The hon. minister may rest assured that she will not be resquested, as was done elsewhere, to go jump in the lake, because there is no lake in the constituency of Dollard. Besides, all the citizens of the constituency of Dollard, including its representative in the house, have much regard for the hon. minister. And if it should happen that, during the hon. minister's visit to Brantford, she was thrown into the lake, I would be one of the first to go to her rescue, as I would be one of the first to make sure she is quite alive, so that she might look after her department. But, Mr. Chairman, I would also be the first to keep putting questions to her about the administration of her department. And while I am on the subject I should like to ask a few questions in connection with the administration of the national film board.

[Mr. Rouleau.]

During the dispute, which was fortunately settled recently, between C.B.C. producers and the C.B.C., television fare throughout the strike consisted of films, produced here and there, which were purchased by the C.B.C. French network, to be shown later to the people of Canada. I do not know how many films were bought from the national film board, so I should like to ask her: how many films were bought from the national film board?

The national film board has produced some excellent French films and I would ask the minister if the necessary steps were taken to sell as many films as possible to the C.B.C. so they could be shown over its French network.

I was saying a moment ago that I do not always agree with the actions and statements of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. I had occasion, a few weeks ago, to voice a vigorous protest against a speech the hon. lady made in Toronto, in which she said that our national anthem is not "O Canada".

(Text):

Mr. Johnson: On a point of order.

(Translation):

Mr. Rouleau: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member will arm himself with patience, he will see that I am perfectly right, and also in order, because I want to suggest to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration that she ask the directors of the national film board to do whatever is required to produce a film about our national anthem "O Canada".

(Text):

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, I just have a brief question I would like to put to the hon. minister. About two years ago when these estimates were before the house I raised the question of the possibility of the national film board filming a play called "Patriots", written by a prominent Canadian author, Judge Eric Cross of Woodstock. I might say the play is required reading in the public schools of Ontario, and it concerns the period in Canadian history from 1837 to 1848. It is a remarkable play in many ways, chiefly because it is historically accurate and it is also very good theatre. You do not often find this combination in many historical plays. At that time the then minister said he would recommend my suggestion to the national film board. I believe a year later I again raised the question, and I understand at that time that negotiations had been going on with Judge Cross for the purpose of producing the play. Since then I have not heard very much about it, and I was wondering if the hon.

minister could tell us whether they are going to produce it, or what the state of things is in this matter.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I want to say a few words on this item. First of all, I give my support to the words of commendation for the work being done by the national film board, as expressed by the hon. member for Dollard. I am sure there is a growing recognition and understanding of the work which is being done by the national film board and of its value to Canadians generally, particularly in the production of these very excellent documentary films which are making it possible for Canadians to know Canada much better, both its history and geography, and also making it possible for persons living in other countries to know Canada.

As far as my own constituency is concerned, the film councils are increasing in membership and activity, and undertaking more work every year. I must say to the minister that the work of the district representative of the national film board for the Kootenays, whose headquarters is in Nelson, is very much appreciated by the members of the various film councils and also by people living in isolated and small communities for whom the national film board provides an excellent service. I have some very small and isolated communities in my constituency, and the only films and documentaries which they have the opportunity of seeing are those which have been made available by the national film board. I have been asked by a number of organizations, including some of the churches, the Canadian Legion, and some of the women's institutes, to express appreciation of the work being done by the national film board both in the production of these documentary films and also in the work which is being done in the district and the co-operation received from the representative of the board in the Kootenay area.

I cannot sit down without talking very parochially, as one of the pressmen said of me on one occasion. I intend to make some remarks directly related to some propaganda for the area in which I live. There is a great interest in the Columbia and Kootenay regions in the documentary film which it is proposed to make in this area. I hope that when the minister replies to the questions raised by hon. members she will be able to give some fairly accurate and detailed information as to what the board is proposing in this direction, because this documentary film to be made of the Columbia river basin provides the greatest opportunity the board has ever had in Canada. There we have a region of 40,000 square miles with an unusual history and unusually beautiful scenery—mountains, valleys, lakes and rivers. This region has a most interesting history with respect to early navigation, both by the Hudson's Bay Company, later by the stern wheelers, and still later in connection with the lumber and mining operations in the district. The region has a most interesting history with regard to the development of mining, the development of smelting, and the tremendous growth of the forest industry.

Anyone who looks for them will be able to find some particularly interesting small communities—beautiful small communities located on the Kootenay and Arrow lakes as well as on various parts of the Columbia and Kootenay rivers. These communities would provide charming opportunities for producers of the national film board. I hope, too, that when the producers of the board—those who plan these things—are arranging the content of this film they will consult with the provincial organizations—the British Columbia historical association, to name one—and with the local historical societies. I also suggest that if they wish to get a little colour into the film they should consult with a few people of ancient vintage who live in the Columbia basin and thus get in touch with those fast disappearing "characters" who are required to make any film particularly memorable and striking.

I must repeat that the people of our district are looking forward to the production of this film. All the local organizations are willing to co-operate in any way they can in what, I have no doubt, will turn out to be the greatest and most successful venture ever undertaken by the board in the realm of documentary films in this area.

Mr. McGee: I am wondering whether the minister will say a few words when she replies about comparative costs in the film industry today. If my impression is correct, it seems to me that when the national film board was first established there were very few criteria available in Canada on which to compare the cost of producing films in various circumstances. Now, however, there are in existence outstanding film companies as the Crawley Film Company, the Fletcher Company and numerous others who are doing important and good work in the film field, and I wonder whether any attempt has been made by the minister to compare the cost to the government and to the taxpayer of the operations of the national film board as compared with the operations of such private companies as I have mentioned.

Mr. Crestohl: I wonder whether the minister, when she rises to reply, could inform the committee to what extent documentary films of Canada are in the possession of our missions abroad. Some days ago, at a meeting of the commonwealth parliamentary association, we were shown some beautiful films of life in Australia and we are to be shown another one shortly about Africa. These films from other countries, shown by their missions to parliamentarians in Canada do make an impression, and I should like the minister to say to what extent Canada is doing the same thing through our own missions abroad. Such films would, I am sure, prove of great value to our country and perform an important service.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before the minister rises there is one question I should like her to answer. Could she tell the committee what has happened to a film which was made on the United Nations Emergency Force by the film board in co-operation, I believe, with the United Nations?

Mrs. Fairclough: Perhaps I could answer some of these questions. In the first place, may I thank all those hon. members who have paid compliments to the film board, to its staff, and in some cases even to the minister.

I should like first of all to answer the question put to me by the hon. member for Dollard and tell him that during the recent strike of some employees of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation the film board not only made no effort at all to sell films to the C.B.C. but, figuratively "bent over backward" in order not to become involved in the difficulties which had arisen. The only films which were sold to the C.B.C. in that period were those in respect of which there were existing contracts on a continuing basis. In all other respects the film board tried to avoid becoming involved in this dispute.

The hon. member for Oxford asked me a question relating to the play written by Judge Cross. I am sorry, but we do not have any specific information with reference to this. My officials are unfamiliar with it. However, I can tell the hon. member that a historical series has been started and that the first film will be completed in a few weeks. The subject is Lord Elgin.

I have some good news also for the hon. member for Kootenay West, namely that the cost of the script and of the necessary research in connection with the film to be made in his area has been included in this year's estimates. We hope that all the research will be completed this year, and the script written. We hope to have the film in the estimates for 1960-61. I can also assure him of something I imagine he already knows, that is, that the producers and the staff of the film board are very resourceful people, and I am sure they will find most of the colourful figures in the hon. member's district. It might even be possible that they will call on the hon. member himself, though I can hold out no real hope that he will appear in the finished product.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mrs. Fairclough: The hon. member for York-Scarborough asked me a question with respect to comparative costs, and I can tell him now that the film board at all times carries on a policy of comparing costs as between operators in Canada from whom quotations are received and the board's own costs. This is a problem with respect to various departments of government. In some cases a department of government will ask for a film to be produced by a specific producer in which event arrangements are made to have it produced. In other cases for the purpose of establishing costs, if producers wish to present their costs they are compared with the costs of the department. There is a constant study going on with regard to comparative costs. If the hon. member is interested in any specific case I am sure we could supply him with the information if he would apply to the department.

The hon. member for Cartier asked with reference to the films that are shown at our missions abroad. I should like to refer him to page 36 in the annual report in which there is a record of the number of showings of our films abroad, the countries in which they were shown and the attendance at these showings. It is very illuminating. I do not propose to put the whole table on the record but I might point out that the total number of showings abroad was 213,655 in the fiscal year ended March 31, 1958, and the aggregate attendance was 21,008,919. These are films obtained through our embassies abroad. I have been in a few of the offices of our missions abroad as I am sure the hon. gentleman has and there is a sizable stock of films on Canada there available for showings when opportunities arise.

The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate asked me about the United Nations film. As the hon. gentleman knows, this film was made by the national film board for the United Nations as a joint venture. As a matter of fact I believe the United Nations was about to send their own people into the field when they realized that the national film board was already on the scene and so they commissioned the film board to make the film. It is in the custody of the United Nations as regards its distribution. I have no information other than that. It has not been released to date and permission has not been procured for its release.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. lady tell us how much the film cost the Canadian taxpayer, if anything, and whether or not any recent efforts have been made to secure the film from the United Nations for distribution in Canada? It seems to me that if it was made by the film board, even if the United Nations is not particularly interested in it, Canadians would very much like to see it. I know I would myself.

Mrs. Fairclough: As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, I do not think we are in a position to run counter to the wishes of the United Nations with regard to the release of the film. I am not in a position to answer for the Department of External Affairs and I believe that question might more properly be asked of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Certainly we are in no position to distribute the film independently of the wishes of the United Nations in that regard.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I pursue that a little further. Could the hon. lady say if permission was sought and refused at the United Nations or if no steps have been taken in the matter. It seems a rather odd thing that a film made by the national film board of Canada would be censored by the U.N. Since this was one of the undertakings of the film board surely it is something of which we ought to have an account.

Mrs. Fairclough: That might appear to be so. The cost of the film which was assumed by the film board for its activities was $42,460.71. That is not the total cost because some of it was borne by the United Nations. Application has been made through the Secretary of State for External Affairs to the United Nations for reimbursement of this amount. In the meantime the film does not belong to the film board it belongs to the United Nations and I am afraid it is much more a problem for the Department of External Affairs than for the national film board.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. lady has much more opportunity of talking to her colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs than I have as a humble member of the opposition and I wonder if she would be so kind as to speak to the minister about it and ask him if he would not make some effort to see that this film is exhibited in Canada so that the Canadian taxpayers would get some value for this money. In my view that would be the most sensible way of doing things. It seems rather odd that we would have no proprietary interest in a film on which we spent over $42,000.

Mrs. Fairclough: I should be very glad to speak to my colleague.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, I was standing behind the curtain and could not help but overhear the subject being discussed. It so happens that about a year ago I was acting as vice-chairman of the Canadian delegation to the general assembly of the United Nations. At that time this matter was discussed not with me but among senior officials of the United Nations. I do not think hon. members of the committee would expect me to divulge names at this time but for information of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate may I comment that it was felt there were certain parts of the film that might possibly cause ruffled feelings among some of the countries concerned and that it might be more advisable in the interests of goodwill and amity among countries of the United Nations if the film were submitted to further editing or released at a later date.

I do not think I need say more at this time. A few members of the Canadian delegation were invited to a showing of the film. I saw the film myself and thought it a splendid one. From the point of view of photography and production it was an excellent film indeed but I would agree with the members of the staff of the secretary general that at the time it would have been unwise, possibly, to release it because, as I believe the hon. gentleman could well imagine, it might have in some countries caused hard feeling—or let me put it this way, it might have rubbed salt in the wounds—after the Suez affair. No doubt it will be released at a future date.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, as everyone knows I have the greatest possible respect for the hon. member for Oxford but I cannot say I have the same respect for the argument he has just made. If the Canadian taxpayers have spent over $42,000 for this film it does not seem to me that because it might injure the susceptibilities of someone else in some other country it should not be exhibited in Canada. I believe the government should either get the money back if this censorship is going to continue or follow the course that I think would be preferable and get some prints of the film to exhibit in Canada.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, on the surface what the hon. gentleman has just said appears to make sense but in the contract which was drawn copyright was vested in United Nations and I am afraid until such time as they give permission for the showing of the film there is not very much we can do. Personally I would like to get back our $42,000 as I am sure the film commissioner would also.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, perhaps if the hon. lady could get back the $42,000 she should apply it on one of these pictures that she seems to get into such difficulties about.

Mr. Rouleau: Mr. Chairman, I noticed that in the answers to various questions asked by hon. members the minister did not answer one of the questions I put to her. It is possible that she did not fully understand my question or it may be that she did not take it seriously. I shall repeat my question to the minister. I wish to ask her if she is contemplating instructing the board to produce a film based on our national anthem, "O Canada"?

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, the minister does not instruct the board.

Mr. Rouleau: Can the minister make a suggestion? Is she responsible for the film board?

Mrs. Fairclough: The minister answers to parliament for the national film board but it is an autonomous body. The minister does not direct the activities.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am afraid the hon. lady has not read the act because when I was administering the act I did read it. She is completely wrong about that. It is quite different from the C.B.C. Under the National Film Board Act the minister is responsible for and directs the activities of the board. I cannot recite the precise language, but if the hon. lady will look at the act she will find that she is fully responsible for all of its activities and has to answer for all of them.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I just want to ask the minister a question. Would the hon. lady tell us the number of films produced by the national film board in each province during 1958? I just want the total for each province.

(Text):

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, we do not have those figures here. We shall be glad to make them available to the hon. member tomorrow.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): Mr. Chairman, I listened with a great deal of interest to all of the remarks and I think it is well to heap congratulations on the board, and I must say that as one of those humble citizens who has to stay home with the children at nights I find the films of the national film board most educational and as interesting as any others that are shown. What prompted me to rise was the fact that some hon. members made suggestions as to the type of films which should be produced and shown.

As a humble citizen of the city of Ottawa I am aware of the fact that we spend a great deal on the national capital plan and on publicizing our capital. I believe at this time the minister—and I think she has the authority to do this—could suggest to the film board that we should have a full-length film about our capital, about its origin, about its people from the days of Bytown to date, not a short but something active. I think that that type of film would appeal to the whole of Canada and would be of much greater value in publicizing our capital than anything else we have produced to date. This is a short story and I do not think it is compromising. I think all hon. members will realize that there is no more beautiful city than Ottawa because it is the city of everybody in this house. If it is not better it is because we have not all put our shoulders to the wheel. Let us all get together and get a real full-length film of the history of the capital and when it is produced show it everywhere.

Mrs. Fairclough: I think the hon. member has just put his finger on the crux of the problem with regard to instructions, suggestions, policy and so on. I shall be very glad to pass his suggestions along to the film board but, as I said before, I do not have the power to instruct the film board to make any specific film and I know that was not what the hon. member asked me to do. The act, which I have in my hand now, says that the minister shall control and direct the operations. For over-all policy that is true, but for the actual process of producing this and that the minister does not interfere. I will be glad to make the suggestions.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): I know that at least the minister's ears are sympathetic and I also know that in this very room at least there are strangers who have ears and who will also listen to what I have said.

Mr. Rouleau: In the light of the answer given to the hon. member for Ottawa East, would the minister be ready to pass along to members of the board my suggestions concerning a film based on "O Canada" as our national anthem?

Mrs. Fairclough: I am sure I do not need to assure the hon. member for Dollard that the ears of the officials are always open to suggestions.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, I notice that the minister seems very favourably disposed and seems prepared to give earnest consideration to the requests of the members for Dollard (Mr. Rouleau) and Ottawa East (Mr. Richard). I would also like to suggest that our distinctive flag be shown when the film just mentioned by the member of Ottawa East is produced.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I have a suggestion to make to the national film board authorities. I want to ask them if it would be possible to produce a film showing the work done on the St. Lawrence seaway, and to be sure not to forget the locks on the Welland canal.

NATIONAL GALLERY OF CANADA

236. Administration, operation and maintenance, including grants as detailed in the estimates, $879,640.

Mrs. Fairclough: If the Leader of the Opposition will permit me, I have a short statement I would like to make with reference to the national gallery.

It has been known since the spring of 1955 that the national gallery would move to the Lorne building some time during 1959. It is now confirmed that the move will take place on or about September 30.

The move to the new building will have a number of important results in terms of services to the public, both Canadian and tourist. All of the important works in the collection will be on public view; there will be space, at last, to show and properly to house the print and drawing collection, which is one of the finest in terms of quality in North America; there will be sufficient room to show a reasonable proportion of the war collections; all the important works in the sculpture collection, which is a small one, will be on view. We will have our own auditorium and we will be able to present a greatly increased and far more systematic program of public lectures, film programs, and so forth. There will be sufficient space for the scientific and conservation laboratory to develop and expand into a truly national service; the design centre will return to its old site at the corner of Albert and Slater; the library and photographic library service will have sufficient space for these services to operate at a level worthy of a national gallery; the workshop area in the double basement will allow the extension and travelling exhibition services to operate with proper efficiency. Perhaps the greatest gain of all is that special exhibitions can be mounted without displacing the permanent collection.

The prospect of the move to a new building has affected the work and program of the gallery profoundly over the past four years. The staff has been slowly increased—it is now almost double what it was in 1955—as people could be found and trained for both the increased curatorial work which will result from a much greater proportion of the national collection being on public view and also to deal with a greatly expanded extension program serving some 120 centres across the country.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, the committee, I think, will have learned with satisfaction of the progress made in the transfer of the gallery to its new building, a project which was initiated, as the minister knows, some few years ago before she was so happily in charge of the department.

While I congratulate the minister on that progress report, I am afraid I cannot congratulate her in regard to a matter which I wish to bring up at this time, undoubtedly not to her surprise, and which is concerned with the possible purchase or negotiations for the purchase of a picture for the gallery, a Breughel.

I think I should begin by pointing out to the committee that I believe the minister was not in charge of the department after the change of government when negotiations for the purchase of this picture began, and therefore she does not have any direct responsibility perhaps for the sorry, unhappy ending of these negotiations. I have had the opportunity of making some investigation into this matter and, as I have just said, it is a confused, unhappy situation which brings no credit to the government and which, on the contrary, has resulted in a good deal of discredit to the government and to the name of Canada in those circles which are concerned with art matters.

What I am dealing with is not the desirability or otherwise of spending a large sum of money at this time for the purchase of a picture, however rare and beautiful that picture may be. The question at issue is the way in which this matter was handled or rather mishandled, as I see it, by the government. The reply by the minister, to be found on page 1364 of Hansard for February 25, to a question put on the order paper by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate concerning this matter certainly does not mitigate the complaint that we have to make with regard to the way the matter was dealt with.

If I am inaccurate in giving my account of these negotiations no doubt the minister, who has the records at her disposal, will correct me. As I understand the situation, the first contact between a representative of the gallery and the agent for the owner of the picture, a landscape by Breughel, was made on January 4, 1957, when the gallery became interested in what perhaps is one of the finest pictures of its kind in the world and one of the very few pictures of this artistic value which was open for purchase. I believe that in January of 1957 a value of approximately $500,000 was placed on the picture by the European owner.

A good many months later, on October 22, 1957, after the election of that year, I believe the owner of the picture or the agent of the owner was informed that the trustees of the national gallery, who would naturally have to pass on any purchase of a picture of this kind or any other kind, were interested and I believe the director was authorized at that time to pursue the matter further and no doubt report back. I am informed that in October of 1957 the amount involved was far beyond the appropriation of the national gallery.

However, in December, 1957, the officers of the gallery, no doubt with authority, pursued the question of price with the owner or the agent of the owner of the picture. I am informed that in January, 1958 the agent for the owner of the picture was told that the trustees of the national gallery of Canada had unanimously expressed the intention to acquire this painting if negotiations could be satisfactorily concluded, that negotiations then began with the owner or agent on the question of price and that late in January, 1958 the owner was then informed that there would be a delay because of the political situation in Canada and the approach of an election and nothing could be worked out very quickly on that account.

But in February the agent did learn that the trustees were pursuing the matter of the purchase and that question was before the government at that time for a definite opinion on whether or not the picture should be bought. Then, toward the end of April the owner or agent was informed that the trustees of the national gallery had agreed on a figure which, if other aspects of the matter could be cleared up, might be offered to the owner, that figure being $350,000, well below the amount I have quoted as being the value placed on the picture some time earlier by the owner. It was considerably less than that earlier value.

I have already referred to the answer given by the minister to the question asked in the house. As found on page 1364 of Hansard the minister made this reply:

> —the board of trustees of the national gallery had asked—

Presumably had asked the government.

> —for "authorization to negotiate for the purchase of the Breughel owned by Baron von Polnitz". At the same time the trustees asserted that the necessary funds had been appropriated and were available for the purchase. This statement was confirmed by the director of the gallery.

I gather from that that the government got their information as to the availability of funds for this picture not from any treasury board authority, not from the Department of Finance but from the officers of the national gallery, from the director and trustees of the national gallery. Having received their information not from treasury board but from the trustees and the director of the national gallery, according to the answer to this question, that money was available, on the basis of that information the cabinet on May 2 authorized the Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration to give permission to the director to proceed accordingly. Apparently, by that it meant to proceed with the negotiations for the purchase of the picture.

I am informed, Mr. Chairman, that on the other end of the deal a very different understanding prevailed. I am informed that the agent for the owner was told by the director of the gallery that he was authorized, not merely to negotiate as stated in the answer to this question but to make an offer of $350,000 for this picture, presumably on the understanding that this money was available, on the basis of information secured from the gallery itself and not from the treasury board or the Department of Finance or the other authorities of government which might be expected to know.

He was authorized to make an offer, authorized by the government to make an offer of this amount without any strings attached, with payment to be made on delivery of the picture sometime after May 12. The agent was asked, as a matter of urgency, to get a reply from the owner. He got in touch with the owner on May 3 and the owner assumed that this was an offer made in good faith, a valid offer, without any strings attached. The owner accepted the offer and the agent wired the director of the gallery accordingly and requested, I am informed, written confirmation.

Then on May 5 the director of the gallery told the agent that he would send a purchase contract in a few days and payment would be made. There would be a little delay in making payment because it would have to wait until after parliament convened, but that would be a mere formality. Then three days later the director, after all these negotiations had been completed, informed the agent that there would be difficulty in regard to the financing of this picture because the cabinet had authorized this firm offer on the understanding that the money was readily available from some fund which was in existence for the purchase of pictures from the Liechtenstein collection. Now they discovered, after this firm offer had been made, that there was no such money readily available from that fund. The agent was informed that it was hoped this difficulty would soon be cleared up and the contract could be signed.

It was not until four or five days after that, on May 12 or May 13, that finally the agent for the owner of this picture was able to see the minister concerned, and the minister then explained that this was all very unfortunate; that there had been a misunderstanding; that the money which was thought to be available was not available and therefore the deal, if I may put it this way, was off and no purchase would be made.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that, according to my information, is an account of the events leading up to the decision of the government, first to authorize the firm offer and eventually to withdraw that firm offer and tell the owner of the picture that the deal was off. Perhaps in the present circumstances it was a very wise decision not to spend the money for the picture at this time—I am not qualified to judge—but surely, the way this was done reflects no credit on anybody concerned with it. I am sure it has given Canada a very bad name in circles which deal in art matters. Perhaps this may not be of any immediate importance to Canadians but it will do Canada no good in future when we wish to add valuable pictures to our national gallery.

Perhaps I could complete this sorry record of mishandling by asking the minister, who would no doubt wish to reply to what I have said, whether at any time the owner has, since this date I have mentioned of May 13, asked for an interview with the Prime Minister or any minister to get an explanation why this matter was handled in this way? Has the minister any other information she could give to us about this matter which, as I have already said and I repeat, was an unfortunate example of confusion, fumbling, bumbling and mishandling.

Mrs. Fairclough: May I preface my remarks by saying I have no apology to make for the action of the government with regard to this particular matter. The Leader of the Opposition has seen fit to read into the record his own assumptions with respect to what might have taken place in the negotiations for the purchase of the Breughel. I made my statement in the house, as he has said, on February 25, after due consideration. I should like to quote the last two paragraphs of that statement in which I said:

> It is clear that no authority existed to make a firm offer or enter into a contract for this purchase by the national gallery or the government of Canada or anyone on its or their behalf. The Financial Administration Act specifically requires that there be an appropriation provided by parliament for the purpose before a contract can be made.
> It is reiterated that the authority asked for was to negotiate. Although granted in the first instance this was immediately revoked as soon as the lack of appropriation was revealed.

The Leader of the Opposition has been at some pains to castigate the government for its lack of knowledge of what funds had been appropriated. But the Leader of the Opposition has been a minister of the crown as well as a deputy minister, and I think he knows that the minister relies upon information which is given to him by his officials.

Mr. Pearson: I also know that the minister takes responsibility for all acts of his officials.

Mrs. Fairclough: That is all well and good; then, is the Leader of the Opposition suggesting to me now that he is castigating the government or is he casting reflections upon the director of the national gallery or upon the board of trustees?

Mr. Pearson: I will answer that question. I am casting reflections upon the government which must take the responsibility for the way these negotiations were conducted. Perhaps the minister, if she thinks my information is wrong, will table all the correspondence in connection with this matter, all the letters, telegrams, records of telephone calls and any material which will throw any light on this situation?

Mrs. Fairclough: If the Leader of the Opposition wishes to request in specific terms what he requires to be tabled we will be glad to look into it. I would say to him that because of his long experience in government, both as a civil servant and as a minister of the crown, he knows very well that the government has no power to spend funds which have not been appropriated.

Mr. Pearson: They should find that out.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister should know that before making any commitments.

Mrs. Fairclough: There was no appropriation and, as the Leader of the Opposition stated, this did not happen during my term of office. I will say that I would not condone the expenditure of funds and I would not ask parliament to provide funds to cover up a fiasco like this.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I call it ten o'clock?

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could ask the leader of the house what the business will be for as much of next week as he can forecast now?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, for tomorrow first of all.

Business of the House

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we shall continue with the estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration and then take those of the Department of Agriculture. On Monday there will be a motion to go into supply. On Wednesday we are asking for interim supply, and there will also probably be supplementary estimates to be considered at that time.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is that all that is contemplated for Wednesday?

Mr. Green: Judging by the remarks of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate I contemplate a little trouble.

It being five minutes after ten o'clock, the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

EDUCATION OF INDIAN CHILDREN

Question No. 130—Mr. Howard:

1. Pursuant to section 113(1) of the Indian Act, have any agreements for the education of Indian children been entered into with (a) government of a province; (b) the commissioner of the Northwest Territories; (c) the commissioner of the Yukon Territory; (d) public or separate school boards; (e) religious or charitable organizations?

2. If so, with what provinces, persons or organizations?

3. With respect to each such agreement, has any contribution towards the capital cost of schools been (a) authorized; (b) paid, and if so, how much in each case and what percentage does this represent of the total capital cost?

4. With respect to each such agreement, has any arrangement been made for the payment of tuition fees on behalf of Indian children? If so, what is the monthly or annual per capita payment in each case?

Answer by: Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration):

1. (a) Yes, (b) Yes, (c) Yes, (d) Yes, (e) Yes.

2. The answer to this question has been provided in the answer to question 3 below.

3 and 4. Agreements with the following authorities have been completed:

The board of school trustees, district No. 70, Alberni, B.C.—Two agreements: federal government contribution, $25,264.29; percentage of total capital cost, 14 per cent; federal government contribution, $112,475.66; percentage of total capital cost, 18 per cent; tuition fees (monthly), $15.00.

The board of school trustees, district No. 73, Alert Bay, B.C.—Federal government contribution, $80,000.00; percentage of total capital cost, 31 per cent; tuition fees (monthly), $15.00.

The board of school trustees, Joan and Phyllis township area public school district, Bear Island, Ontario.—Federal government contribution, $1,000.00; percentage of total capital cost, unknown; tuition fees, no billing received to date.

The board of school trustees, district No. 49 (Ocean Falls), Bella Coola, B.C.—Two agreements: Federal government contribution, $65,207.73; percentage of total capital cost, 73.5 per cent; Federal government contribution, $37,723.57; percentage of total capital cost, 56.6 per cent; tuition fees (monthly), $15.00.

The Board of school trustees, district No. 72 (Campbell River), Campbell River, B.C.—Federal government contribution, $18,728.00; percentage of total capital cost, 3 per cent; tuition fees (monthly), $15.00.

The board of school trustees, district No. 2264 (Churchill), Churchill, Manitoba.—Federal government contribution, $27,963.50; percentage of total capital cost, 50 per cent; tuition fees (monthly), $10.00.

The Roman Catholic Episcopal Corporation of Bathurst, Dalhousie, N.B.—Federal government contribution, $32,510.24; percentage of total capital cost, 9 per cent; tuition fees (monthly), $5.00.

Dauphin-Ochre school board, Dauphin, Manitoba.—Federal government contribution, $75,252.51; percentage of total capital cost, 33.3 per cent; tuition fees (monthly), $10.00.

Commissioner of the Yukon Territory, Dawson, Yukon—Federal government contribution, $40,826.00; percentage of total capital cost, 15.4 per cent; tuition fees (monthly), $25.00.

The board of school trustees of S.S. No. 5 Lash school board, Emo, Ontario.—Federal government contribution, $19,896.47; percentage of total capital cost, 19 per cent; tuition fees (monthly), $8.50.

The school board of the parish of Escoumains, Escoumains, Quebec.—Federal government contribution, $18,900.00; percentage of total capital cost, 25 per cent; tuition fees (monthly), $15.00.

The Fort Frances separate school board, Fort Frances, Ontario.—Federal government contribution, $58,936.55; percentage of total capital cost, 79 per cent; tuition fees (monthly), $13.88.

The board of school trustees, district No. 53 (Terrace), Hazelton, B.C.—Two agreements: Federal government contribution, $73,000.00; percentage of total capital cost, 56 per cent; Federal government contribution, $53,697.00; percentage of total capital cost, 19 per cent; tuition fees (monthly), $15.00.

The board of school trustees, district No. 49 (Ocean Falls), Hagensborg, B.C.—Two agreements: Federal government contribution, $18,000.00; percentage of total capital cost, 25 per cent; Federal government contribution, $25,563.50; percentage of total capital cost, 25 per cent; tuition fees (monthly), $15.00.

Questions

NATIONAL MUSEUM—QUALIFICATIONS OF DIRECTORS

Question No. 167—Mr. Argue:

What qualities and qualifications are desirable in a director of: (a) the human history branch of the national museum of Canada; (b) the natural history branch of the national museum of Canada?

Answer by: Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources):

(a) and (b). In addition to good health and personal suitability, the desirable qualities in a director of either branch of the national museum of Canada comprise a sound knowledge of and capacity for management and administration, organizational ability, and capacity to co-ordinate research. Specific qualifications include: graduation with a doctor's degree from a university of recognized standing with specialization in one or more of the related fields; extensive experience in one or more of the disciplines involved and an international standing as shown by published results; experience in planning, exhibits and a knowledge of modern museum and public information methods. In the case of a director of the human history branch, it might be expected to find a candidate with specialization and experience in fields or disciplines such as anthropology, ethnology or archaeology. In the case of a director of the natural history branch it might be expected to find a candidate with specialization and experience in fields or disciplines such as geology, minerology, palaeontology, zoology or botany.

CANADIAN HISTORICAL MUSEUM

Question No. 217—Mr. Argue:

1. Did the royal commission on arts, letters and sciences make any recommendations regarding the establishment of a Canadian historical museum, how it should be administered and controlled, and the status of its director?
2. If so, what was the text of its recommendations?
3. Have any of these recommendations not been implemented?
4. If so, for what reason or reasons have they been disregarded?
5. Have steps been taken to implement any of these recommendations in the near future?
6. If so, which ones?

Answer by: Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources):

1. Yes.

2. The text may be found on pages 323 and 324 of the royal commission's report.

3. Yes.

4, 5, and 6. Recommendations which have been implemented were described in the answer to question No. 188. No decision has yet been taken to implement the other recommendations.

Questions

RADIOACTIVITY TESTING PROGRAM—STRONTIUM 90 IN MILK

Question No. 225—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. Is the Minister of National Health and Welfare in a position to comment on a newspaper article appearing in the Financial Post, February 28, 1959, alleging that the existing federal radioactivity-testing program is inadequate?

2. Will the minister give assurance regarding the safety of milk from excessive doses of strontium 90?

Answer by: Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

1. The best evidence available shows that the existing Canadian radioactivity testing program compares most favourably with those of other leading countries in the nuclear field. A study of the report of the United Nations scientific committee on the effects of atomic radiation of August, 1958, confirms this view. Since the beginning of this program in 1955, the Department of National Health and Welfare has built a new radiochemical building in Ottawa, the number of scientific and technical positions has been substantially increased and at this very moment the department is broadening the scope of its investigations to include measurements of radioactivity in rainfall, air and soil. The program is further supported by the recent construction of two whole-body measuring units for the determination of radioactivity in humans. The department has planned to build a third Canadian unit of this type which it considers an essential part of the studies.

The department is keeping abreast of all new scientific developments in this field and to this end the program is kept under constant review.

2. Excessive levels of strontium 90 have occurred only on nuclear weapon testing sites, of which there is none in Canada. On the basis of findings of the Department of National Health and Welfare there is at present no discernible hazard by strontium 90 contamination of milk.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY, MONTREAL

Question No. 231—Mr. Rouleau:

1. Has the federal government received representations from the provincial authorities or other agencies in the province of Quebec or in the city of St. Laurent, requesting its participation in the completion of the trans-Canada highway in the northern section of metropolitan Montreal?

2. If so, on what date were the said representations made and by whom?

Answer by: Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works):

1. No.

2. Answered by No. 1.

CONVERSION LOAN—DIFFERENCES IN TOTALS

Question No. 234—Mr. Benidickson:

What is the explanation of the substantial differences between: (a) the principal amount of the conversion loan bonds as given in the January 1959 Bank of Canada statistical summary; (b) the principal amount for the same loans given in the December 1958 Bank of Canada statistical summary?

Answer by: Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance):

The principal amounts of conversion loan bonds given in the December 1958 statistical summary of the Bank of Canada and labelled "preliminary" were the same as those given in the Department of Finance press release of October 21, 1958, covering statistics as of October 14, 1958. The figures were estimates based on reports received directly from authorized agents during the campaign and in the press release were footnoted as "subject to revision on completion of final accounting by issuing agents." The figures in the January statistical summary are based on a near final accounting by issuing agents. Minor adjustments may still be made and the figures are still labelled "preliminary".

CONVERSION LOAN STATISTICS

Question No. 235—Mr. Benidickson:

In connection with the Canada conversion loan of 1958:

1. What was the principal amount converted of each of the fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth and ninth victory loans?

2. What was the amount of interest accrued to 1 September, 1958, on the bonds of each of such victory loan issues which were so converted?

3. What was the cash adjustment payable on each of such victory loan issues which were so converted?

Answer by: Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance):

(As at February 27, 1959)

	1.	2.	3.
5th victory loan	$ 905,248,450	$ 4,616,674.54	$11,473,044.49
6th victory loan	1,118,711,700	8,457,104.00	13,049,282.00
7th victory loan	1,262,166,050	3,218,523.43	12,558,552.21
8th victory loan	1,072,799,150	13,383,743.75	5,256,613.14

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, March 13, 1959

The house met at 11 a.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PHOTOGRAPH OF HOUSE IN SESSION BY NATIONAL FILM BOARD

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I recall to the house that the national film board endeavoured to get a picture of the house in session some two or three weeks ago without using flashlights. This attempt was unsuccessful, and unless hon. members have some objection to a picture being taken with flashlights I propose to ask the film board to try again at the commencement of the sitting on Wednesday next, when I think more members will be here. Wednesday is the day proposed unless some other time may be suggested.

CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

MOTION TO APPROVE CONVENTION ON NATIONALITY OF MARRIED WOMEN

On the order: Government notices of motion:

March 11—The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration—The following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient that the houses of parliament approve the convention on the nationality of married women done at New York on February 20, 1957, and that this house do approve the same.

Mrs. Fairclough: Stand.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of standing order 21 this government notice of motion is transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the house.

TRADE

OIL—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PREVENT DIVERSION AND DUMPING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is the government considering action which might counteract the effect on Canadian oil production arising out of the pressures created by the new oil restrictions in the United States for the diversion and dumping into Canada of oil and its products which would otherwise have been exported to the United States?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this subject is a matter of very great concern to the government and to the oil industry in Canada, as well as to all Canadians. We have the matter under review, and close study is being made of the mandatory controls recently set up by Washington. In due course we perhaps will have something to say with regard to what may be done. At this time, however, I may say that the whole problem of the oil industry is certainly seriously affected by the controls which have been established. There has been some leeway permitted in the midwestern area of the United States, to which area some of our crude oil has been going. The government recognizes the serious situation that now prevails.

COAL

NOVA SCOTIA—INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ASSIST INDUSTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister arising out of the number of layoffs and continuing unemployment in the Nova Scotia coal industry. Can the Prime Minister say what consideration has been given to assisting this industry, and can he inform the house as to when an announcement of government policy in this regard may be made?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this matter has been a subject of constant review and examination by my colleagues and myself. It is an involved and difficult question, but I hope the government will be in a position at a very early date to make some announcement with respect to this matter.

SHIPPING

QUEBEC—INQUIRY AS TO SUBSIDIZATION OF PASSENGER SHIP COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Augustin Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Transport. I regret that I could not give him notice of my intention to ask this question, and of course he may take this as notice. I wonder if the minister would tell the house if the Canadian maritimes commission have granted a subsidy to a Quebec passenger ship company operating in Quebec, which has not yet been issued a permit of operation by the public service board in that province?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): I will speak to the chairman of the maritime commission and let the hon. gentleman know as soon as possible.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

NEWFOUNDLAND—REQUEST OF LABOUR CONGRESS FOR INVESTIGATION INTO LABOUR DISPUTE FATALITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister based on a report in the Gazette of this morning that the Canadian Labour Congress has formally requested a complete investigation into what actually occurred in Newfoundland, namely the unfortunate result in respect of many and the death of one. Is an unbiased and complete investigation going to be held?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): So far as I know, no request as yet has been made in that connection. When any communication is received the matter will receive consideration. I am not saying that some of my colleagues have not received such a notice, but there is nothing on my desk at the moment that indicates the receipt of such a communication.

Mr. Winch: May I ask a question supplementary to the question I asked the Prime Minister. I now ask the same question of the Minister of Justice.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have seen the report in this morning's Gazette that Mr. Jodoin is sending me a formal request. I have not seen it myself, but I have been informed that it has been delivered to my office in the justice building just recently, and that it does ask that we conduct some sort of formal inquiry into the activities of the R.C.M. police in Newfoundland.

I have to say in reply that I am told by my office that the letter contains no specific information to back up the allegation that the R.C.M. police have acted in an improper manner. I have had no such evidence from elsewhere, and in the absence of such evidence I would not feel inclined to recommend to my colleagues that such an inquiry be held. However, if evidence is received, or if factual information is received that would warrant it, we would immediately reconsider the position.

[Mr. Brassard (Lapointe).]

Furthermore, as soon as the situation down there permits the ordinary administrative routine to be resumed I would expect to be receiving full and detailed reports of every one of the incidents involved, and if those reports themselves disclose anything that would warrant such an inquiry I shall refer the matter to my colleagues for a decision.

But at the moment there is no evidence or information before me which would lead me to change the opinion I have expressed to the house that the R.C.M. police have conducted themselves with restraint under very difficult circumstances.

Mr. Winch: A supplementary question. We are all interested in peace and harmony and a solution to this difficulty. I would like to ask the Minister of Justice whether he is in a position to go to Newfoundland personally and see what can be done to solve the difficulty.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I am as concerned as anyone in the house, but no more concerned certainly than any of my colleagues, and probably no more concerned than other hon. members. While I have every desire to do everything possible to contribute to a settlement of this question, the question of anyone visiting Newfoundland would obviously have to be a governmental decision. This matter has not yet been taken up because there seems to be no occasion for it; there has been no suggestion that such a visit would produce any good results.

Mr. Winch: May I ask another supplementary question. Is the Minister of Labour interesting himself in the situation, and is it possible for his good offices to be used in Newfoundland?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member well knows, as every member in the house knows, that this matter is strictly under provincial jurisdiction and the federal Department of Labour has no jurisdiction at all in this dispute.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice. When the minister is making the survey of R.C.M.P. activities in Newfoundland will he find out whether I.W.A. property was given the same protection by the R.C.M.P., on the occasion when windows were broken, as was given to the property of the company on other occasions?

Mr. Fulton: Yes, Mr. Speaker, the reports I will be receiving will cover the situation. I should perhaps advise the hon. member that I have an interim report this morning that yesterday, in the course of transporting the body of the constable who was killed back to St. John's for burial, at one of the small towns through which the train passed there was a demonstration which took the form later of an attack on the I.W.A. hall in that community. Before the situation could be brought under control there was, I understand, some damage done to the hall; but as soon as possible the police moved in and were able to restore the situation and bring about a cessation of the attacks without the necessity of using force. The police moved just as quickly as possible to protect that property, in the same way that they will move to protect any property that may come under danger.

PUBLIC SERVICE

ALLEGED STRIFE AND INTRIGUE IN SELECTION OF PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Has the minister's attention been drawn to a Canadian Press dispatch which appeared in last night's Citizen to the effect that strife and intrigue are being created in the selection of federal government employees through the actions of officials in various departments?

Mr. Speaker: I take it that the hon. member is asking the minister whether or not the account is correct, and if he is I would remind him that this is not according to the practice of the house.

Mr. Howard: I am not asking whether or not the account is correct, but whether the minister's attention has been drawn to the article and whether he has any comment to make.

Hon. Henri Courtemanche (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the report but I will check and answer later.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Rea in the chair.

NATIONAL GALLERY OF CANADA

236. Administration, operation and maintenance, including grants as detailed in the estimates, $879,640.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 236 carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, Mr. Chairman. I was hoping that the Minister of Justice would be present in the committee, because my observations relate to his conduct rather than to that of the hon. lady. I should like to make one or two observations about what the hon. lady very properly called a fiasco as revealed by the questions asked last evening by the Leader of the Opposition.

The observation I want to make is this. It appeared from what the Leader of the Opposition brought out last night and from what the hon. lady herself said in the answer she gave in parliament that the government were perfectly prepared to buy the picture in question so long as they thought there was an existing appropriation, and it probably would not come to the notice of parliament; but when they found that they would have to come here in a straightforward manner and ask parliament to vote the money—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: —they backed down on their commitment. The record shows that very clearly indeed.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Utter rubbish.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Minister of Finance, who was probably at that time on one of his numerous travels instead of attending to his business here in Canada, failed—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Wrong again.

Mr. Pickersgill: —according to the record—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Too bad you couldn't be right once in a while.

Mr. Pickersgill: According to the record, or at least according to the evidence that has been supplied so far and is uncontradicted, the government were quite prepared to buy this picture if there had been an appropriation, but when they found that they would have to come in here and in a straightforward, honest fashion ask parliament to vote money, they repudiated the good name of Canada. This is what happened, and there is no getting away from it.

Perhaps the most shocking feature of all, sir, is that the Minister of Finance, who presumably was represented at the cabinet meeting if he was not there himself, ought to have known what the appropriations were. In other days the affairs of this country were managed differently.

An hon. Member: They sure were.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Minister of Finance did know, in those days what was going on in government and commitments were not made that had to be repudiated because of misunderstandings about the real situation. It does seem to me, sir, that this is a shocking and a shabby business. It is quite obvious that what the government hoped to be able to do was buy this picture and then, if there was any criticism, get up and say that the Liberals had provided the money. However, after finding they had to come in here and take the responsibility for their own act, they did not have the courage to do so. What they very obviously decided to do—

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): May I ask a question—

Mr. Pickersgill: This is a beautiful example of the kind of government we have been getting during the last two years.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): May I ask a question? Would the hon. gentleman have been prepared to spend this amount of money himself, if he had been in the position to make the decision?

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, that would have depended upon—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: —that would have depended entirely upon the state of the exchequer. As the hon. gentleman knows, in the days when we were in office we had a very considerable surplus because the affairs of this country were being well managed. We could well afford to purchase imperishable articles of this sort that would last as long as the country lasts. We are not ashamed of having done so. However, if the country had got into the terrible condition financially that it has under the hon. gentlemen opposite, I doubt if it would have been a prudent thing to do.

I did not have that decision to make. The decision had to be made by the Minister of Justice, as acting minister, by the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister. I feel sorry for the Minister of Justice because having made a commitment on behalf of the government of Canada, and knowing the Minister of Justice as I do, I am sure he wanted to keep it. I am sure he was overruled by his colleagues. I am sympathetic toward the Minister of Justice, and I am sorry for him. I am sorry to see this habit of repudiation beginning to develop.

I am sorry to see the Minister of Justice being put in the false position in which he has been put over this matter. It does seem to me, sir, that either the government should have decided in the first place they were not going to spend this money, if indeed they were so concerned about the treasury as they later pretended to be, and made a decision on the basis of the merits of the case. However, having made a decision and then having found they were wrong about the technicalities, they should have been honest enough and straightforward enough to go through with what they had started.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Fulton: The hon. gentleman has not lost his ability to work up a fine state of frenzy over nothing.

Mr. Pickersgill: Just a repudiation of contract.

Mr. Fulton: It is quite obvious that the hon. gentleman wishes to continue in opposition that great fault from which the Liberal government suffered when in office; that was to commit the country to a course for which they had no authority, and to act as a government in a manner for which they had not been given any authority by the house. Now the hon. gentleman has asked us to do the same thing, which we refuse to do, and for the doing of which the previous government was, in a large measure, repudiated by the country. The fact of the matter is that no commitment was made because there was no authority to make any commitment.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is not what the hon. lady says.

Mr. Fulton: The hon. lady said so, as will be found on the record at page 1905 of Hansard for March 12, 1959. She said:

> It is clear that no authority existed to make a firm offer or enter into a contract for this purchase by the national gallery or the government of Canada or anyone on its or their behalf.

The hon. member knows, and I assume has conveniently forgotten for the purpose of this discussion, that in the absence of an appropriation by parliament there can be no contract, and that in the absence of an appropriation by parliament no one has any authority to make a contract. Hence what the hon. gentleman is asking us to do or is suggesting that we should have done is to make a contract for which we had no authority. When we found that was the position we informed all those concerned immediately, explained the position and said that we were not prepared, in the absence of parliamentary authority, to do that which we had no authority to do; nor were we prepared, as the former government so often did, to seek to commit parliament as to what parliament would do, before parliament had any opportunity to express its opinion.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that completely disposes of the matter except to say this. If any further answer were required the hon. gentleman has given it himself. When, after all the sound and fury which he emitted, he was asked a simple question, namely whether if he had the authority, he would have come to parliament for the appropriation, he took refuge in those typical Liberal words, "That would depend upon the circumstances". What a fine ending for an initially valiant stand. Having started out so valiantly to do battle, when he sees the enemy he turns tail and flees.

Mr. Pickersgill: If any hon. member has ever seen me turn tail and flee in this house, Mr. Chairman, I should like him to cite the occasion. What I said about the hon. gentleman, which he cleverly—because he is clever—perverted in his reply, was that the government should not have entered into these negotiations at all if it did not intend to go through with them. I said, and I repeat, that it was extremely incompetent of the minister and of the government not to know the facts, not to know whether there was an appropriation before they entered upon these negotiations. That was the whole point. It is just another of the examples we have had over and over again in the last two years of the fumbling and bumbling incompetence of the present administration.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, perhaps in a quiet mood I could ask a few questions which might help to get to the truth of this matter. At page 1364 of Hansard, in her answer to the question, the minister stated:

> —the board of trustees of the national gallery had asked for "authorization to negotiate for the purchase of the Breughel owned by Baron von Polnitz".

This is my first question, and I have many more. Will the minister tell me from what that quotation is taken? Perhaps she would put the full communication on the record. Will she also give us the date when that authorization was requested?

Mr. Fulton: Perhaps I could answer that question, Mr. Chairman, because I was acting minister at the time. The quotation reproduced at page 1364 of Hansard comes from a resolution of the trustees of the national gallery. In this resolution it was stated—I am not sure that I am quoting the language exactly but I know that the fact is correct; it was in either that resolution or the immediately preceding one to which it was related—that funds were appropriated for the purpose. Then the resolution went on to ask the government to give authority to negotiate in the terms which are quoted at page 1364 of Hansard.

With regard to the previous statements of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, it would take a long time to correct all his inaccuracies, but there is one that I think should be corrected. The government at no time entered into negotiations. The government authorized negotiations to be commenced on the basis of the information it had received from responsible persons appointed by the previous government to manage the affairs of this gallery.

Mr. Pearson: Does the Minister of Justice deny that negotiations in regard to the purchase of this picture had been going on for weeks before the communication from the gallery to which he has referred?

Mr. Fulton: I am not in a position to confirm or deny that. I find that at page 1903 of yesterday's Hansard the hon. gentleman himself is reported as having said:

> If I am inaccurate in giving my account of these negotiations no doubt the minister, who has the records at her disposal, will correct me. As I understand the situation, the first contact between a representative of the gallery and the agent for the owner of the picture, a landscape by Breughel, was made on January 4, 1957.

If that date is correct it would, of course, be during the administration of the hon. gentleman and his friends who were then in office.

Mr. Pearson: That information is quite correct. The first approach was made at that time. Does the minister not agree that subsequent to that time, as I mentioned last night, at the end of the year, or in January 1958 these negotiations regarding the purchase of this picture were proceeding and that negotiations had gone so far that prices were being discussed, as to what would be a fair value for the picture? Is not that negotiation, and is not that long before the statement from the gallery to which the minister has referred?

Mr. Fulton: The matter first came to my knowledge in about February of 1958, as I recall it, when the director of the gallery first gave me a resolution of the trustees. That was a resolution of the trustees of January 29, 1958. The trustees were then meeting, and immediately after that meeting—I think it was early in February; within the first few days of February—the director brought this resolution to my attention and first asked for authority to negotiate. That authority was not given at that time. It was late January, or early February, when I was first advised by the director that discussions—I do not think they should properly be called negotiations—had been entered into between representatives of the gallery and representatives of the owner of the painting with regard to possible purchase.

Mr. Pearson: I will not quibble over the difference between the words "discussion" and "negotiation". The minister now admits that in February he knew discussions were going on with regard to the possible purchase of this painting. I ask the minister now whether this matter was not brought by him before the cabinet, and whether there was not a discussion of this matter by the cabinet. I ask him when that discussion took place, and whether there was not an agreement reached by the cabinet that an offer of $350,000 should be made for this picture.

Mr. Fulton: No, that is incorrect. The matter was brought before the cabinet by me on the basis of a resolution of the board of trustees requesting "that cabinet document 244/53 of October 7, 1953, be amended so that the sum of $2 million appropriated for the purchase of paintings from the collection of the Prince of Liechtenstein, of which $441,000 remains, could be applied to the purchase of works of comparable quality and importance". That was the resolution of January 29 which the director requested me to take to the cabinet. The request was taken to the cabinet, and on that occasion the cabinet turned it down.

Mr. Pearson: So was not the director—and he must have been acting in his capacity as director; the gallery is a department of government in this regard—authorized on May 2 to make an offer to the agent of the owner for the purchase of this picture?

Mr. Fulton: On the second occasion when the submission was brought forward the cabinet approved it. The submission was based on the resolution of the trustees asking for authority to negotiate, and the director was advised that the cabinet had approved.

Mr. Pearson: I am asking the minister whether the director was authorized to make an offer to the owner for the purchase of this picture at an amount of $350,000 or some other amount.

Mr. Fulton: The authority that had been asked for was authority to find out whether two paintings could be bought. It was asked that authority be given to negotiate to find out if one painting could be bought for a certain price and, if it could, it could be that authority would be given to negotiate for the other painting to see if it could be bought for a certain price. The resolution asked for authority to negotiate, and it was a submission based on this resolution which was approved by the cabinet.

Mr. Pearson: The minister now says there was no authority given to any representative of the gallery to make an offer at that time, May 2, for the purchase of this picture. I follow this up by asking him whether such an offer was made to the agent of the owner of this picture, a firm offer, without strings, at a particular price?

Mr. Fulton: As far as the Breughel is concerned, I was advised by the director of the gallery that he inquired of the agent of the owner whether the owner would be willing to sell for that price. I was advised by the director in a memorandum from him that this was the question he asked, whether the owner would sell the Breughel for $350,000. It appears that this inquiry, this conversation, was taken by the agent as a firm offer. What justification the agent had for doing so I fail to understand. The position is, as I have said, that there was no authority to make an offer. The only authority given was to negotiate. There could have been no authority to make an offer or enter into a contract, because there had been no appropriation.

Mr. Pearson: The minister now states very clearly that there was no authority given to make an offer for the purchase of this picture, and that so far as he knows no offer was made.

Mr. Fulton: No offer, on the basis of this memorandum of the conversation which I have received; no offer which I as a lawyer would regard as a firm offer.

Mr. Pearson: Well I, perhaps, would make a distinction between an offer which would be regarded as a firm offer by a lawyer and an offer which might be regarded as a firm offer by the owner of the picture.

Some hon. Member: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: I ask the minister this. Was the owner of this picture, who was acting in good faith in this matter—

An hon. Member: How do you know?

Mr. Pearson: I know a little more about this than the hon. gentleman does, so perhaps he will not bother to interrupt. Was the owner of this picture not asked to confirm his acceptance of the offer in writing?

Mr. Fulton: I will have to check the documents and memoranda again. My information is that it was the owner who asked whether what he describes as the offer could be confirmed in writing, and the owner was notified on May 8 that the basis for any further negotiations no longer existed. I think it was on May 8; certainly it was not later than May 12.

Mr. Pearson: I think it is a fact that the minister saw the agent for the owner of this picture on May 8. Did the minister at that time tell the agent that he had previously obtained agreement to make the offer on the understanding that the money was available, and that later he found he was wrong in this understanding and that he did not wish to ask parliament for the appropriation which would now be required.

Mr. Fulton: The hon. gentleman is asking me to recall a conversation which I am frankly unable to do in detail at the moment. I recall the agent visiting me in my office, at which time I explained the position to him in detail and explained that there had been no legal basis on which any offer could be made. I also said that I could not hold out for him any hope that the government would decide to go before parliament and ask for an appropriation, and that in the absence of an appropriation there was no authority for anyone to commit the government. I told him I would consider the situation further, but that I could not hold out any hope of an outcome that would be acceptable to the agent.

Mr. Pearson: May I ask the minister when and how the government finally decided that the money was not available unless a further appropriation was made by parliament?

Mr. Fulton: My recollection is that the absence of an appropriation was first confirmed on May 7, some three days after the submission had been approved by the cabinet, when I was asked to make a submission to treasury board asking that an item be inserted in the supplementary estimates for an appropriation.

Mr. Pearson: From what we have learned, Mr. Chairman, the minister I know will agree with my statement that a representative of the government, the director of the gallery, was authorized to negotiate for the purchase of this picture, which was an important negotiation both financially and otherwise, on the assumption that $350,000 was available when it was not in fact available.

Mr. Fulton: The director was authorized to negotiate on that basis; that is a correct statement of the facts. I have referred to two resolutions of the trustees stating that the funds were available. I should also mention that on several occasions when the matter was under discussion I questioned the director of the gallery as to whether in fact the funds were available, and I was assured that they were.

Mr. Pearson: Then later the owner, assuming this was a serious negotiation, was told there was no such financial basis for negotiation. May I ask when the owner was finally and officially informed that the government was not going to proceed with the purchase of this picture?

Mr. Fulton: When the owner was informed?

Mr. Pearson: I should like to know when the owner was finally and officially informed that the government did not intend to proceed with the purchase of the picture.

Mr. Fulton: As far as being a government decision I would have to ask my colleague who is presently the minister concerned to answer that. My recollection is clear that there was a telephone call on the 8th and a letter from the director to the agent on the 12th. I ceased to be acting minister on the 14th. I believe I actually handed over to my colleague, the present minister, on May 21. I have recounted the interview I had with the agent, at which time I told him I could see no way in which the matter could be proceeded with; but whether there were further official letters from the minister or on behalf of the government stating this as a government decision, I would have to leave the present minister to answer.

As I have said, there was a letter from the director to the agent on May 12. There was a visit from the agent to myself within a very few days of that time; it may have been within a week or ten days. I recall also that later I had a discussion with a solicitor who I understood was retained by the owner or the agent, I am not sure which. I understand he also had some conversation with my colleague, but I am not sure of that. He came to me because I had been acting minister at the time.

Certainly on the basis of those discussions I told him that the government's decision was that there was no way of proceeding with it, that we did not intend to proceed, and the solicitor agreed that there was no contract. We have not heard further from the solicitor since that time.

Mr. Pearson: One final question, Mr. Chairman. Has the owner made an effort to see the Prime Minister or any minister, and has there been any such interview between the owner and any representative of the government on this matter?

Mrs. Fairclough: Possibly I could answer that, Mr. Chairman. I understand the owner was in town. I was given to understand there would be some attempt made to have an appointment with the Prime Minister or with this minister. Certainly no approaches were made to this minister, and I understand the situation is precisely the same with regard to the Prime Minister, but of course I cannot answer for him.

Mr. Best: Mr. Chairman, just a few brief remarks on this item. I listened with interest last evening and today to the remarks made by the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, who appeared to me to be attempting to recoup some of the technical losses he suffered yesterday in the debate. I was particularly interested in the remarks made by the Leader of the Opposition last evening as reported at page 1904 of Hansard, when he recounted his feeling with respect to the sequence of events leading up to the discussions surrounding the tentative purchase of these two paintings. It is bewildering to me—and I cannot answer this—how the trustees of the national gallery could pass a unanimous resolution that they would like to buy the Breughel painting and convey this information to the agent, expecting that the purchase might go forward. It seems to me there was a great lack of information in this instance, perhaps on the part of the trustees—

Mr. Pickersgill: And the minister.

Mr. Best: —or those acting for the national gallery. This is a field in which I think the procedure should be clarified and set out more distinctly in the future.

The possible purchase of these two paintings has attracted wide comment throughout Canada and this, of course, is a more subjective field, as did the purchase two years before of paintings from the collection of the Prince of Liechtenstein. The information conveyed to me by a number of people in the art world in both Canada and elsewhere is that the price talked about in this immediate case and the prices paid in the past case were very much out of line and higher than the general market price, even considering the rise of prices in value of old masters.

This raises the problem, of course, of what sort of price should be paid, who should judge these matters and on what basis prices should be arrived at. I gather it is the feeling of experts in this field that the prices have been considerably inflated. While I am very hopeful that in future we may acquire a Breughel and works of other masters of that period when they come on the market, there must be considered the interesting question of the level of prices that should be paid.

Mr. Fulton: Perhaps one could summarize this matter by saying that the thought in the mind of the government was very similar to the opinion expressed by the hon. gentleman who has just spoken. We were not prepared under the circumstances to ask parliament for an appropriation of this amount of money for this painting, and it is clear that my hon. friends opposite, at least as represented by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, would then have come to the same conclusion.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a few words on the question of value. It is difficult, of course, to value a painting of this kind. If you are attempting to build up a national art collection I suppose the question of price is more or less in the hands of those who own the rare pictures and you must negotiate on the basis of the best price you can get. I understand this painting was valued at $500,000, and as a result of earlier negotiations long before May the price was reduced to $350,000. I believe it is of the greatest importance to build up a national gallery of first class pictures, but at the same time when we are confronted with a serious unemployment situation and an extremely substantial deficit, I consider that even $350,000 is too much to pay for that picture.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, there is one comment I should like to make before the Minister of Justice covers himself with glory by pretending the government was not willing to spend the money. I believe the record should be made clear. As the Leader of the Opposition clearly demonstrated by these questions and answers, the government was prepared to spend this money as long as it did not have to come to parliament to ask for it.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, that is so obviously a foolish statement that it cannot be allowed to pass.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is the truth.

Mrs. Fairclough: The circumstances are that if there had been an appropriation as was alleged, that appropriation would have been passed by parliament. The very fact that there was no appropriation showed that the government was unwilling to act without the consent of parliament, a point which I think my hon. friend completely ignores.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, it is unfortunate perhaps that the minister has raised this question again, but has she not already said that the director was authorized to negotiate for the purchase of this picture and a price was arrived at on the assumption that $350,000 was available from a fund which had been previously voted?

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes, I did say that, and that is precisely the point. If that amount had been in the purchase fund of the gallery, under the terms of the National Gallery Act the trustees would have had the right to go ahead and purchase this painting. As my hon. friend knows, there has been a lot of talk about this appropriation, and I understand that some time ago the national gallery was told that the previous government could negotiate up to a certain amount for paintings from a specific collection, but each individual purchase had to be approved or the appropriation had to be approved to cover the purchases of the trustees for the gallery from time to time. No such approval had been given; the matter had not been presented to parliament in this instance.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should just like to conclude with this observation. Surely the hon. lady has been a minister long enough to know that even if parliament has provided money the government is under no obligation to spend it unless the government in its wisdom decides that it is a wise expenditure. Now, the government had decided that this would be a wise expenditure, if the money had been appropriated, but they were not willing to come to parliament and ask for it, so they can take no credit for themselves for the great virtue of saving.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, I am still unwilling to ask for it.

Mr. Pearson: You got the last word, anyway.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would not try to have the last word.

PUBLIC ARCHIVES AND NATIONAL LIBRARY

Public archives—

308. General administration and technical services, $542,870.

The Deputy Chairman: This item will be found on page 62 and the details on page 405.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman,—

Mr. Best: Mr. Chairman,—

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Pickersgill: I hear some murmurs, Mr. Chairman. I think it has always been the understood practice in committee of supply—

Mr. Aiken: On a point of order, the murmurs the hon. member heard were in connection with the fact that the hon. member for Halton had been on his feet for some considerable time when the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate rose.

The Deputy Chairman: The Chair did not see the hon. member for Halton but saw the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I have only one question to ask the hon. lady, and I am not going to inflict any speech on the committee. I think it would be of great interest to the public if the hon. lady could tell us the progress that is being made in dealing with the public records of the various departments, reducing their volume and getting them into the public records office; because in my opinion this is one of the most important functions the archives are carrying on at the present time. It could save the Minister of Public Works millions and millions of dollars in real estate if it is done quickly and efficiently. If the hon. lady could make a statement I would be greatly pleased.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, the reason I did not rise immediately is that, as the hon. member knows, the work of the public archives is very diverse and to attempt to summarize it in brief form is almost impossible in a short space of time. I am anxious to answer any specific questions which the members may have, but I do have a statement with regard to the records centre which I shall be very glad to read.

The records centre, which is one of the group of government buildings at Tunney's pasture in Ottawa West, was handed over to the archives on January 3, 1956. It was formally opened on April 10, after the installation of shelving and other essential equipment. The building is approximately 200 feet square and there are five storeys. Floor area totals more than four acres. Initially, 20 miles of steel shelving were installed; another 20 miles were added in 1957.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I wonder whether hon. members would keep their voices down. It is hard to hear the minister when she is speaking.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. lady read a little more slowly for the benefit of the duller members of the committee like me?

Mrs. Fairclough: I shall certainly comply with the suggestion. I know, Mr. Chairman, that is a fault of mine; I am inclined to speak too quickly.

When all the filing rooms are fully equipped the building will have 62 miles of shelving. In addition to file rooms, the centre has receiving and sorting rooms, a fumigating chamber, offices, reference rooms and a research room. It is thus a fully equipped branch of the public archives, with all necessary reference and research facilities.

The primary purpose of the centre is to take over from departments and agencies all records that are not required for day to day use. Such records can be divided, in a rough and ready way, into "dead" files and "dormant" files. As the name implies, the former are referred to seldom, if ever. In the records centre they are examined and their future determined, in consultation with the department in which they originated. The department advises with regard to their practical value, or lack of it; the archives determine whether or not they contain material of long term importance or historic interest. Files that are retained for departmental use are filed in the records centre; those of historical importance will ultimately be transferred to the public archives building.

Useless material is disposed of through the public records committee, established by order in council in 1945. Particulars of the files for disposal are submitted to the committee; if the committee concurs in the recommendation that they should be destroyed it in turn recommends their destruction to treasury board. Although experience indicates that large quantities of old records can be destroyed and much valuable space and equipment thereby freed for further use, due care is taken to see that files of interest or importance are not disposed of. As the procedure outlined indicates, every proposal to destroy "dead" records must pass scrutiny from the departmental, historical, financial and legal points of view.

Files are considered to be in the "dormant" category if, on the average, references to them are not more frequent than one reference per file drawer per month. Much of the "dormant" material that has been transferred to the records centre must be referred to occasionally by the department from which it came, and the reference staff of the centre will either check a file or return the file itself to the department on loan, whichever the department prefers. In many instances additional files are transferred to the centre from time to time which must be integrated with the files already there; these "interfiles" must be handled with care and accuracy, and they are an important aspect of the service offered to departments by the records centre.

Inventories and detailed accession lists of all records transferred to the centre are compiled for the information of both the departments and the archives. These lists are so arranged that if they are merely given the file number under which a document was filed in a departmental registry, the staff of the centre can find quickly and accurately any one amongst the hundreds of thousands of individual documents that have been placed in their keeping. Quick access to records in the centre can thus be guaranteed, and this is naturally an important consideration to departments that send their files to it.

The following statistics summarize the activities of the records centre in the first three years of its operation: Cubic feet of records accessioned, in 1956, 53,471; in 1957, 29,007; in 1958, 31,242; square feet of floor space cleared in other buildings—and this is with reference to my hon. friend's remarks —46,291 in 1956; in 1957, 21,609; in 1958, 19,742. Requests for loans of files received from departments were 3,777 in 1956, 15,404 in 1957 and 35,958 in 1958. In other words, in three years the number of such requests increased over eleven times. Interfiles numbered 1,421 in 1956, 7,838 in 1957 and 63,715 in 1958, which is an indication of the increasing use being made of the records centre by the various departments of government. Cubic feet of records destroyed amounted to 240 in 1956, 7,425 in 1957 and 4,648 in 1958.

Up to December 31, 1958, the centre had thus received 113,720 cubic feet of records and had cleared a total of 87,642 square feet of floor space, or more than two acres, in offices, filing rooms, vaults, basements, attics and storage rooms in other buildings. These records came from 28 departments and agencies of the government. Much of the material transferred was placed in special cardboard cartons that are cheap, reasonably dustproof, and use the space on the centre's shelves to maximum advantage. As a result, large quantities of filing equipment were released, much of which could be used again by the departments. In the three year period, 13,881 transfer cases and 5,377 filing cabinets were released in this way.

Except in a few instances it seems probable that most departments and agencies have now sent to the centre the bulk of the dead and dormant records that were causing acute crowding and space problems. The next step will be to persuade them to make the regular transfer of their older files to the records centre an integral part of their whole registry and records systems. Only in this way can the full benefit of the facilities and economies offered by the centre be secured. Careful planning will be necessary to bring this about; and in December, 1958, the public records committee appointed a small investigating committee with a view to securing for the committee and the archives the data necessary to plan for the future from a long term point of view.

In 1957, at the request of treasury board, the records centre undertook the task of assembling, sorting, culling and filing all personnel records relating to men and women who have been in the civil service but who ceased to be employed, for one reason or another, at least three years ago. This is a complicated undertaking, and among other things involves bringing together files held by the civil service commission, the superannuation branch of the Department of Finance, and all employing departments and agencies. Good progress is being made and files are now being processed at the rate of about 12,000 per month.

I do not know whether I have answered all the questions the hon. member wished to ask, but if there is anything further we will try to supply the information.

Mr. Pickersgill: I thank the hon. lady for her very complete explanation, which I found most interesting. I hope she will forgive me if I have to leave the committee now, because I am not walking out on her account.

National library—

309. General administration, $188,279.

Mr. Benidickson: Would the minister give us an up to date report on the programming with respect to the new library building? What are the prospects?

Mrs. Fairclough: Frankly, Mr. Chairman, this is a matter that comes under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Public Works. We had hoped, of course, that steps would have been taken before now, but having regard to the catastrophe which befell one of the public buildings in Ottawa in the last year there was some delay. I am sure the Minister of Public Works would be glad to give the necessary information to the hon. member.

Mr. Benidickson: The intentions are the same, and the only interference has been caused by the damage to the Jackson building and the postponement of the evacuation of temporary building No. 1?

Mrs. Fairclough: I would not like to say "only", because I fancy that all of that had ramifications. I would say that probably the accident, the ramifications thereof and the resultant moves of employees have been the deciding factors in the delay.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Administration branch—

1. Departmental administration, including advisory committee on agricultural services, $747,531.

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Chairman, when the debate on the agricultural estimates was interrupted at five o'clock last Friday for the consideration of private and public bills I had just finished my presentation regarding the freight rate on rapeseed. Today I should like to speak about the tariff on rape seed. At the present time our tariff structure allows soybean oil, the largest competitor of rapeseed oil, to enter Canada from the United States under a 20 per cent tariff. However, soybeans themselves can be brought in duty free. Beans are transported into Canada, processed here and the oil sold on the Canadian market. The Canadian processor may also ship the oil back into the United States duty free or export the oil and meal under the British preferential tariff provided they have 25 per cent Canadian content.

Cottonseed oil, peanut oil and corn oil all enter Canada duty free. On the other hand, although there is no tariff with respect to Canadian rapeseed being sold in the United States, the rapeseed is subject to a 1 cent per pound import tax. Canadian rapeseed meal going into the United States is subject to a tariff of $6 per ton. So, Mr. Chairman, I know hon. members will agree with me in my presentation of the story of rapeseed.

I should like to turn now to another subject. At this time we hear so much in my province and in the west as a whole about the high cost of production and the cost-price squeeze. Nobody can deny the fact that the farmers of the west are labouring under these conditions and that the federal government has done many things since 1957 to eliminate them. Many more such steps will be forthcoming, some in the near future and others at a later date. But we cannot remedy all the existing evils and shortcomings of the past in one year.

This accounts for the delegation from the west. The march to Ottawa this week was very orderly. The 1,100 delegates from the west who came here were anxious to bring their case personally to the attention of the government. They behaved like gentlemen and were given a most friendly reception and hearing by the cabinet and members generally.

In the brief submitted to the government they stressed deficiency payments and the two price system for wheat. Of course the government has had no opportunity so far of reviewing the brief or coming to any decision. Serious consideration will have to be given to the contents of the brief. Personally I cannot disapprove of the stand our western farmers have taken at this time, as they are only requesting a fair share of our national income, which other sectors of our economy are securing.

However, I hasten to say that the situation in which our western farmers find themselves today is not one that came into being today, this year or last year. It had its start many years ago and has deteriorated over the last five or six years, to the point where it has become ruinous to many of our farmers. Nothing was done in the past by our predecessors to stem the tide of the cost-price squeeze or even to slow it down. Had steps been taken four or five years ago; or had full support been given to farm organizations which had prepared proposals for presentation to federal authorities, and had those proposals been given unanimous support by all farm organizations and farmers, as is being done today, some of our farm problems would have been solved years ago.

If the situation is considered to be a legitimate case now, why was it not a legitimate case then when the situation was similar to or worse than the one we are experiencing today? It was apparent to everyone in the west at that time that the situation could not continue any longer, but no attempt was made at that time to alleviate the situation or to make representations to the government in power at that time. I can only say now, let this be a lesson to us, and an example. If we, as representatives in this house of western agriculture, must speak and act for western agriculture, let us do so with a unanimous voice and without prejudice or discrimination whatever. We will have to stand up for the sacred rights of our farmers. Let us be worthy of those men who stood up in the past and asked only for equal rights and consideration, for a fair share of the national income.

We who represent the farmers in this parliament relentlessly work conscientiously toward this goal. Our government has done a tremendous job since 1957. The records and figures are there for everybody to see. New legislation has been enacted, old statutes have been revised and amended, with only one aim in mind; that is to do all that is humanly possible to alleviate the plight of the western grain farmer and bring the cost of production in line with his income.

In conclusion I should like to say we should not only be concerned with the present situation, but we should also be concerned about the future of Canada and the long range programs for agriculture, so that all problems coming before this house will receive sympathetic and fair consideration. We ask that a just hearing be given to all representations and briefs, so that all decisions will be made without prejudice or discrimination against any one segment of our nation. This is our task, and I am sure our government will complete it to the full extent of their capabilities.

Mr. Racine: Mr. Chairman, I would like to take this opportunity to say a few words on farm problems at a time when the estimates of the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) are before the house.

Representing as I do a largely agricultural riding in the province of Quebec, I shall, naturally, limit my remarks to the problems facing the eastern farmers. Not that the problems of the westerners are unimportant. On the contrary, western agriculture, by its very character, affects the economy of the whole country. However, I shall leave it to hon. members from the west to deal with their own problems.

In the province of Quebec, there are no large farms as in the west, but agriculture remains nevertheless, a very basic industry.

In 1951, Quebec had a population about three times as large as in 1901, and yet from a percentage point of view fewer people were farming than in 1901.

[Mr. Rapp.]

According to a news letter published by the Banque Canadienne Nationale in April 1958, there were 60 rural people against 40 city dwellers at that time, whereas in 1951, the ratio was 33 to 67. Between 1941 and 1956, our rural population has decreased by some 73,000 people. Thus it now represents only 16.5 per cent of the entire population instead of 25.2 per cent.

During that period, the number of farms has decreased by 32,000 falling from 154,669 to 122,617, whereas the farmed acreage decreased from 5.4 per cent to 4.7 per cent in relation to the area of the province.

It is obvious that the increase of productivity in spite of a diminishing labour force is due to mechanization. The latest statistics I just quoted also tend to prove that the farmer has a larger acreage to farm.

As far as mechanization is concerned, if we look over the figures for April 1958, we see that the number of combines has gone up from 55, in 1941 to 1,481. The number of tractors for the same period rose from 5,869 to 54,322.

As a matter of fact, the figures put into the record by the hon. Minister of Agriculture indicate that farm production, which amounted to $114 million in 1940, went up to $424 million in 1958. However, I feel the hon. Minister of Agriculture has probably given in his speech, too much importance to production figures, and not enough to profits made on that production by our farmers; net profit indeed is not always proportional to production figures or gross income.

In spite of this increase in productivity, how can the constant increase in the loans granted to our farmers by the Canadian Farm Loan Board or the Quebec farm loan board be explained? I quote in this respect page 3 of the Canadian Farm Loan Board report for the fiscal year ending on March 31, 1958:

> The demand for loans has continued to increase and 3,702 loans for a total of $21,278,450 were approved and placed in the hands of solicitors as compared with 2,921 loans for $13,978,700 in the previous year. It should be observed that this is the first full year of operation following the 1956 amendment of the Canadian Farm Loan Act increasing the maximum first mortgage loan from $10,000 to $15,000 and the total amount approved for loans is the largest amount approved in any year since the board has been in business. The board has continued to give the speedy processing of loans top priority by increases in personnel and improved methods in field and office work.
> In the course of the year 7,058 appraisal, re-inspection and collection calls involving 600,000 miles of driving were made. The average loan was $5,748 and 63.4 per cent was borrowed to buy land and pay land secured debts, 21 per cent to pay other debts, 11.7 per cent for livestock, machinery and improvements and 3.9 per cent for sundry purposes.

In 1955, according to a table included in the report of the Canadian Farm Loan Board for the year 1958, we find that loans amounting to $8,225,500 were approved for that year, and we also note that the loans granted for the year 1958 amounted to $21,278,450, and that, for the country as a whole.

From that amount, as recorded in the report of the board, $667,250 were granted to Quebec farmers only, but to that amount should be added those loans granted by the provincial farm loan board, as far as my province is concerned, loans which amounted to $10,799,725 for the year 1957.

To that should be added also the loans obtained by Quebec farmers under the Farm Loan Improvement Act. In fact, a study of the report, published by the Department of Finance in 1957 in connection with the farm loan improvement act, indicates that $1,231,526.81 were loaned for the purchase of trucks, $6,076,781.56 for the purchase of tractors, $211,110.76 for the purchase of combines and $1,036,160.92 for the purchase of hay-binders.

If we add up all those amounts which the federal government loaned to Quebec farmers, we come to an overall total of more than $20 million.

Mr. Chairman, last Friday, an hon. member stated that the speech of the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Boulanger) was a liability for the agricultural class. It seems to me the hon. member should have studied the liabilities of the farmers themselves; in the light of those facts, he would have realized that farmers are somewhat deep in debt.

Let there be all kinds of farm loan measures, I am in full agreement with that and I fully approve such a course, but we should not forget to provide farmers with the means to repay those loans, and that, without their having to tighten their belts, so that they may have each year what they require to look after the needs of their families and make their payments on their loans.

Of course, farm production has required and will require again some changes, and it would perhaps be preferable that more generous credit terms be granted to farmers.

Besides, that is what is stated in the final report of the Royal Commission on Canada's Economic Prospects, on page 175:

> Too easy credit can aggravate farm problems by inducing an expansion in output that would lead to lower prices.
> Scarcity of credit, on the other hand, can prevent a desirable rise in agricultural productivity by perpetuating antiquated types of farm organization. As the mechanization of Canadian farms continues, some farmers in all parts of the country will need more medium-term capital to enable them to buy machinery and equipment, and more long-term capital to enable them to enlarge their holdings, while the rise in demand for meat will mean that more capital will also be needed for the purchase of livestock. As the result of these cumulative developments, the capital value of farm businesses will be rising on the average; and there will be difficulty in transferring them from one owner to another—in many cases it will be from father to son—unless somewhat more generous credit arrangements are available. So long as farm incomes are relatively low and irregular, it is important that fixed annual payments on mortgages and other forms of indebtedness be no larger than is necessary. Appropriate rates of interest will vary from time to time, but annual payments can be reduced by extending the number of years over which the principal will be repaid. Since the long-range prospects for farm income and for the ability of farmers to service loans would seem to be favourable, we think that farm credit agencies might appropriately extend the period of repayment up to 40 years for long-term loans and up to five or six years for medium-term loans. Extension of credit on somewhat easier terms is one way by which the adjustment of Canadian farming to changing economic conditions can be facilitated.

The price support legislation passed by the former government, and the Agricultural Prices Stabilization Act passed by the present government, have been greatly beneficial to farmers. But are those two acts adequate to give farmers all the guarantees they are entitled to? Probably not.

It is necessary that a commission be set up to study production costs of various agricultural products, and perhaps to find a way of producing and marketing such products somewhat more economically.

Statistics show that it has been possible to increase production while cutting down labour, and I wonder whether a commission set up to enquire into production costs might not have the same happy results, namely to supply farmers with scientific and technical production data, because if production costs could be lowered, farmers would be able to raise their profits and could offer for sale on the international market a number of products that the national market cannot fully absorb.

Farmers have always shown their willingness to co-operate, and the most striking illustration of that is the co-operation they have shown in mechanizing their operations.

With regards to price support, the board notes that this matter is so important and delicate that responsibility for it should be entrusted to a board whose members could devote their full time to this task, and thus be able to forecast emergencies and to set such and such a price not only with regard to production but also to income.

Nor should the Agricultural Prices Stabilization Act be an umbrella handed to farmers when the sun shines, and taken away from them when it rains.

This umbrella policy was more or less adopted last November by the Minister of Agriculture when he said: If it should rain, or if surpluses are so large that they cannot be sold or even, in certain cases, given away, we will not be able, under the Agricultural Prices Stabilization Act, to hold prices at their present level or even less to raise them. The minister went on to say that education work was necessary and that farmers should be urged to voluntarily refrain from producing more than is required by Canadian consumers and available world export markets.

When the minister submitted his estimates on March 6 he made much of the high rate of productivity in 1958; on the other hand, in November of the same year, he told farmers the same thing, that their production was too high and that if they kept it up he would be unable to hold prices at their present level.

How can we reconcile those two different points of view? On the one hand the minister quotes farm production figures to prove that agriculture is prosperous; on the other hand he says those figures are a threat to the farmers, and cautions them that a high rate of production might force him to withdraw support prices.

I would like now to refer to a study on the matter, the MacDonald College Farm Situation and Outlook Report for 1959, published by MacDonald College, McGill University, in February 1959. Here is what I find at page 7:

(Text):

Net Farm Income Adjusted for Purchasing Power

(Millions of dollars)

Year	Maritimes	Central Canada	Prairie Provinces	British Columbia	Canada
1949 actual	57	557	747	55	1,416
1957 actual	43	507	449	55	1,054
1957 expressed in 1949 dollars	35	446	368	45	865

(Translation):

It can be seen in that report that since 1949 farmers' buying power has declined by approximately 40 per cent.

We are also very glad to find that in 1955 a Senate committee on land use was instituted. However we note that this committee does not meet often enough. This certainly does not help farmers to get what they expected from that committee. We are still waiting for its proposals and we do not know yet when it will be in a position to make them.

Another matter I should like to mention is the marketing of farm grown pulpwood.

On April 29, 1958 the report on the inquiry came out and once again we have realized that farmers who produce pulpwood had been right in complaining.

But since the report came out, I believe new circumstances have developed which are causing difficulties. So I refer to an article by Jean-Marie Jobin published in La Terre de chez nous, October 1, 1958:

As soon as, in any area, farmers and settlers agree on a joint plan, a remarkable thing happens: companies stop buying pulpwood. And if some of the farmers go out and ask representatives of certain companies the reason for this phenomenon, they sometimes get the following answer: "Go ask the chairman of the U.C.C. (Union catholique des cultivateurs) to buy your wood". I understand such answers have been given. Not all of the companies in Gaspesia behaved this way, but it appears that the word is given around: they stop buying, and more wood is taken out of crown timber limits.

Now if this has happened in Gaspesia, it might well spread to other areas of the province of Quebec. I would therefore ask the minister to take the necessary steps to avoid such abuses, if possible.

However, I would not like to lay all the blame on the Minister of Agriculture, because I feel that the provincial governments, having full jurisdiction over crown timber limits, might very well work hand in hand with the buyers in certain cases.

In fact, it does seem to me that the provincial governments should come to an understanding with the companies having concessions and oblige them to purchase part of their requirements from farmers.

In the report of the director of investigation and research under the Combines Investigation Act, for the year ended March 31, 1958, we read the following:

> In the period 1948-1955, which is the period covered by the report, pulpwood purchases from all sources for use by the pulp and paper industry in Eastern Canada comprised between 26.7 and 34.6 per cent of such usage in the province of Quebec and between 30.9 and 39.9 per cent of such usage in the province of Ontario. The commission noted that: "for the pulp and paper industry as a whole, farmers' pulpwood constitutes probably less than 25 per cent of the total pulpwood used."

In other words, companies buy from 20 to 25 per cent of that wood from farmers, and it is on the basis of those figures that I say that provincial governments should see to it that, out of the amounts required by the companies, a minimum of 20 to 25 per cent should be bought from farmers at a reasonable price.

The present state of pulpwood markets in our area has shown little improvement. As I said a moment ago, I do not want to blame the Minister of Agriculture, since as far as the province of Quebec is concerned, I feel the government of that province is largely responsible for the situation. But while I hold the provincial government responsible for the situation, one should not overlook the fact that the federal government has also a certain responsibility, which was recognized by the Prime Minister himself, when he promised at Rimouski, on February 26, 1958, as recorded in the Toronto Daily Star of February 27, 1958:

(Text):

> The Prime Minister was in the course of pointing out that the Conservative government had put a new agricultural price support act through parliament to provide farmers with higher incomes when he lightly dropped the suggestion, almost in an aside, that wood might also be brought under the protection of a subsidy.
> I hope, and representations have been made, that the advisory committee and the stabilization board (which will administer the act) will give consideration to including farmer-produced woods so they will know the lowest prices they will receive a year in advance.
> It was presumed his reference was to pulpwood which normally is cut in heavy volume by Quebec farmers during the winter. This winter the demand for pulp has fallen off sharply as a result of the move by pulp and paper companies to reduce heavy pulp inventories.
> Although pulpwood is not one of the nine products which must come under price supports, the act gives the price stabilization board wide powers to include other commodities.

(Translation):

In view of that promise made by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), I ask the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) to carry it out if possible, or at least to give it very thorough consideration.

I would also like to read to the hon. Minister of Agriculture some paragraphs of a letter I received from several poultry farmers in that area who are now complaining of heavy American imports that are jeopardizing the marketing of Canadian chickens at a reasonable price. I shall just quote the two following paragraphs:

> In 1957, imports of U.S. chickens amounted to 1.4 million pounds; in 1958, they went up to 6.2 million pounds, almost five times as much as the previous year.
> As a result of those massive imports, Canadian chicken prices have dropped alarmingly and on January 1, 1959, storage stocks were twice as large as a year ago.

This situation is highly prejudicial to Canadian poultry farmers, and especially to producers of broilers. The government of Canada should hasten to introduce legislation that would afford better protection to our poultry farmers; otherwise, they will have to give up the market to American producers.

I therefore ask the hon. Minister of Agriculture to give favourable consideration to the representations of Canadian poultry farmers so that they can stay in business and not suffer too much from exaggerated competition on the part of foreign countries.

I would also like to deal with another problem which hon. members may think exists only in the riding of Beauce. Of course I could not speak about farming without mentioning maple syrup.

If we refer to a press release issued by the department of agriculture of the province of Quebec, we find the following constituencies produced over 20,000 gallons for the years 1951 to 1954.

I would like to read the list of these constituencies, together with production figures, so that the members for these twelve ridings may make representations for the settlement of this problem which is of concern to us. The matter of maple products does not concern the Beauce district exclusively, since twelve constituencies are heavy producers of maple products:

	gallons
Beauce	262,500
Megantic	186,000
Arthabaska	117,200
Dorchester	113,800
Frontenac	108,125
Bellechasse	79,000
Shefford	97,800
Brome	49,500
Compton	40,550
Lotbiniere	51,900
Wolfe	25,225
Portneuf	31,800

At the bottom of that page of statistics, we find this note:

All other constituencies produce less than 20,000 gallons—260,000 pounds.

Thus, as I said earlier, the matter of maple products does not concern Beauce district alone, since twelve constituencies are considered heavy producers.

Therefore, I urge the members for these constituencies to make representations for an efficient solution to that problem.

During the last election campaign, I did not have the pleasure of receiving the visit of the Prime Minister in Beauce riding. However, I admit that I would have appreciated it very much, as I am sure that he would have promised to solve the maple syrup problem, because wherever he went he promised to solve all problems.

Perhaps some government members will reply that the Liberals, while they were in power, took no action to help solve this problem.

Mr. Pigeon: That is a fact, an obvious truth.

Mr. Racine: I would recall to the house, and not only for the enlightenment of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, that in 1940, the government favoured the exchange of sap pails and that, up to 1955, 17,047,310 pails had been turned in, involving a grant of $2,932,447.78 on such exchanges.

Moreover, in 1939, the former Liberal government passed the Agricultural Products Co-operative Marketing Act. Under this act, the Canadian Minister of Agriculture could guarantee bank loans to enable co-operative organizations dealing in maple products to market their merchandise in a methodical way.

Mr. Pigeon: Would the hon. member for Beauce allow me a question?

Mr. Racine: I would ask the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, since my speaking time is running short, to kindly wait till the end of my remarks before asking me the questions he has in mind.

Mr. Pigeon: Very well.

Mr. Racine: Moreover, in 1945, under the former administration, the government had taken steps to protect sugar producers in regard to their operations. Those are three cases where the former government took action. I would ask the present government to act at least once to help our sugar producers.

There are many other agricultural problems that I could deal with, but I shall be content with those I have mentioned. I feel, as I am sure the Minister of Agriculture feels, that agricultural problems are of utmost importance and that the government should pay special attention to those problems, because they present both a social and an economic aspect and, as I said before, they exist in western Canada no less than in eastern Canada.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Racine) has allowed me to put a question to him after he was through. I should like to ask him why the previous Liberal government has discontinued grants on the exchange of sap buckets.

Mr. Racine: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to answer the question of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm. I believe that grants on sap buckets exchange were discontinued in 1955. At that time, 21 million maple trees had been tapped and more than 17 million sap buckets had been replaced. The policy established by the previous administration had then been profitable to the great majority of producers of maple products. The hon. member will agree that many of those sap buckets are now obsolete and that it is now up to the present government to revive this legislation for the benefit of our maple producers.

I want also to point out that the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm seems to blame the former administration exclusively for this problem which now besets the maple product industry. He seems to forget that on three occasions, the former Liberal administration did show concern for sugar producers, and it was as a result of the action taken that we now have a sugar producers co-operative, which can store its syrup because of the government guarantees to banks that make loans to sugar producers.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Chairman, the introduction of the estimates of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) affords me a welcome opportunity to make very brief comments on two questions which are of concern for the farmers in my riding. These are the poultry market and the pulpwood industry.

I do not want to rehash what was said by the hon. member for Beauce (Mr.

Racine), but refer to representations which were made to me by the farmers in my riding. I shall try to deal with them very briefly.

In 1957, as you know, the government introduced a measure providing for an embargo on the products and sale of poultry from the United States. The enactment was particularly welcomed by our poultry farmers since this legislation, at the time, saved our poultry market in this country.

Apparently the measure was of short duration and poultry farmers had no way of knowing that it would soon come to an end.

On learning that the government had put an embargo on poultry, poultry farmers expanded their facilities so as to produce more. Thus, in my own riding, where there are many poultry producers, almost $300,000 was spent in 1957 and 1958 to improve and build chicken houses, incubators and other equipment to improve the quality of the product. They could afford to do this because they could then confidently compete with their American counterparts on the Canadian market, as the Canadian embargo had somehow slowed up poultry production in the U.S.A.

It is unfortunate that the embargo on turkey and poultry has been so short-lived in 1947, for our poultry farmers' overproduction has alarmingly depressed the turkey and poultry market.

Mr. Chairman, like the hon. member for Beauce, I have received serious representations from several poultry farmers in my riding who would like the government to take firm and immediate action in order to correct that situation.

Personally, I do not think that it is so much the quantity of broilers imported from the United States that is affecting our market as the ready availability to Canadian outlets of American poultry at prices that our own poultry farmers cannot meet.

Just now, the hon. member for Beauce read an extract from a letter he too had received from various poultry farmers. The letter pointed out that, in 1957, American chicken imports amounted to 1,400,000 pounds, and in 1958 to 6,200,000 pounds, i.e. five times as much as in the previous year.

According to poultry farmers, that state of affairs is highly prejudicial because the massive imports of American poultry have contributed to lower the price and they also doubled our stocks as of January 1, 1959. I therefore ask the hon. Minister of Agriculture to consult with his colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming), and to consider amending the customs tariff in that regard.

Mr. Chairman, I also wish to draw the minister's attention to another problem that was dealt with rather briefly by the hon. member for Beauce. I am referring to the problem of production and sale of pulpwood.

It is recognized that in my province, farmers must sell a certain amount of pulpwood every year in order to make ends meet. In Quebec province, the government has taken some action in this regard, contrary to the assertions of the hon. member for Beauce. The government has passed an act that allows our farmers to form a kind of union, as a means of rationalizing woodcutting operations both in regard to quality and to quantities. The act also aims at protecting our farmers against the practices of certain buyers who formerly purchased wood from the farmers at ridiculous prices.

As we all know, pulpwood production is an important factor of our Canadian economy since approximately $900 million are spent each year in Canada on forest industries.

Moreover, a review of economic prospects of forest industries in Canada shows that of the 263,000 farms which reported to the 1951 Census, 235,000 were engaged, in 1950, in forestry production. Farm wood lots accounted for close to one tenth of the pulpwood and rough sawn timber production and for most firewood.

Those remarks, Mr. Chairman, clearly indicate that the problem of our farmers, in so far as the production and sale of their pulpwood are concerned, is not one to be given second priority.

But it is of no use to them to do their utmost to improve the quality of their forest products if they must suffer, from the companies, a kind of boycott with the aim of forcing them to sell their products at prices lower than production cost.

And yet, companies using pulpwood for the production of newsprint make substantial profits which would warrant their paying a reasonable price to farmers. The export of newsprint has not slowed down very much for the last ten years. Markets for that product are stable, and it could even be added that they rather tend to increase.

In 1950, 4,000 tons of paper were exported to the United States; in 1955, 5,000 tons, and it is expected that our exports to the United States will reach, within 12 years, 7,000 tons. If we add that the price of newsprint ranges from $120 to $140 a ton, we realize that the profits made by companies in that industry are high enough to enable them to pay our farmers a reasonable price for pulpwood.

The problem now facing our farmers is very serious. Paper companies categorically refuse, at least in my constituency, to buy wood from our farmers at a price determined by the Union Catholique des cultivateurs. Their attitude, in my opinion, is akin to a conspiracy between buyers of that type of wood to refuse our farmers' pulpwood or, at least, to buy it at a price often lower than its production cost.

In 1958, when I took part in the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, I mentioned the unfairness suffered by our farmers. I said this:

> The gross unfairness prevailing on the pulpwood market in our part of the country cannot be too strongly condemned, Mr. Speaker. Dealers and buyers compete for the purchase of this wood, often below production cost. It is high time that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) appoint a committee of men familiar with this matter who would study pulpwood problems and determine whether it would not be appropriate to ask the Industrial Bank of Canada to finance the creation of small pulpwod companies or co-operatives, in specified districts, to handle the buying and selling of this product in such a way as to avoid our people being victimized by any glaring unfairness in this field.
> We would like the Minister of Agriculture to include pulpwood in the price stabilization act. The plan would be quite practicable, for the profits made by corporations on each ton of paper are well known.

Obviously the matter of price stabilization on pulpwood comes under the provincial jurisdiction but I would encourage the minister to given this matter careful consideration so as to help provinces find a solution which would be of material assistance to our farmers.

I therefore submit these remarks to the minister's consideration. I am sure they will relieve him from the thorny problems raised this week by the delegation from the western provinces regarding deficiency payments on wheat.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I see it is almost one o'clock. Will you call it one o'clock?

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

[Mr. Asselin.]

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I understand that the Minister of Transport wishes to make a statement with Mr. Speaker in the chair. Will the committee agree to my rising, reporting certain resolutions and requesting leave to sit again later this day?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

AIR TRANSPORT

ANNOUNCEMENT OF MODIFICATION OF BILATERAL AGREEMENT

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to revert to motions for the purpose of making a statement?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity to advise the house that successful talks have been held between Canadian and United States officials who met in Ottawa on March 12 and 13 to discuss modification of the bilateral air agreement of June 4, 1949, as amended.

The discussions concentrated for the most part on improving present trans-border routes so as to provide a better service to the travelling public of both countries. The delegations expressed the hope that the discussions would be resumed at an early date to review the air traffic requirements of the two countries on a broader basis.

The two delegations agreed to recommend to their respective governments the following improved services. Canadian carriers may operate between (1) Prince Rupert and Ketchikan; (2) Calgary and Spokane; (3) Winnipeg and/or Kenora, International Falls and Fort William-Port Arthur; (4) Toronto and Buffalo; (5) Halifax and New York by an extension of the Halifax-Boston route.

United States carriers may operate between (1) Ketchikan and Prince Rupert; (2) Spokane and Calgary; (3) Great Falls and Calgary in replacement for Lethbridge on the existing Great Falls-Edmonton route; (4) Minot and Regina; (5) Duluth-Superior, Fort William-Port Arthur and Hancock-Houghton; (6) Buffalo and Toronto.

It was also agreed that a United States carrier might serve Portland, Maine, as an intermediate stop on the existing route between Boston and Montreal and that Winnipeg might be served on present U.S. turnaround flights between Minneapolis-St. Paul and Edmonton. This agreement will be put into effect, when approved by each government, by an exchange of diplomatic notes.

Mr. Chevrier: May I be allowed to ask one or two questions? First I should like to say that the negotiations, as the statement points out, have been in the offing for some years and I am happy to be able to hear the minister say that they have come to fruition. However, as the minister read the statement I was struck with this reaction. There seem to be five concessions granted to Canada and six granted to the United States. In addition, United States carriers are to serve Portland as an intermediate stop on the existing route between Boston and Montreal and Winnipeg is to be served by a United States carrier on the present turn-around flight between Minneapolis and/or St. Paul and Edmonton. My first question is this. What does Canada get in exchange for these additional rights granted to United States carriers on the over-all basis?

Mr. Hees: The answer to that question is that the inclusion of the very important stop of New York as an extension of the Halifax-Boston route is considered to be equivalent to the additional privileges granted the United States which the hon. member for Laurier has just mentioned.

Mr. Chevrier: Another question comes to my mind. For many years now T.C.A. has been trying to get fifth freedom rights at Miami. Did that matter come up for discussion and is there some hope that Canada, through its chosen instrument, T.C.A. will be able to get fifth freedom rights at Miami in the near future?

Mr. Hees: That is one of the calls which we have very much in mind. I can assure the hon. member for Laurier that in the future talks we expect to have on these matters we will continue to press for that additional route.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Rea in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Administration branch—

1. Departmental administration, including advisory committee on agricultural services, $747,531.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, in years past we have heard it said that many of the members from eastern and central Canada are not familiar with agriculture and these members have had to listen, without knowing too much about agriculture, to other members discuss the subject. However, I think that cannot be said now of the present membership of the House of Commons because during this week we have had the opportunity to hear a number of western farmers present a specific problem.

It may be quite true that the industrial sections of Ontario are not too concerned with the matter but I do not think it can be said any longer that they do not understand some of the problems facing farmers across Canada and particularly the grain producers of western Canada. Over the years politicians on both sides of the house have supported the need of establishing a closer relationship between the cost of the goods the farmer must buy in order to produce and the amount of money he gets for his product. When the Prime Minister and other ministers of the government sat in the opposition they pointed out the need to establish a fair relationship between the cost of production and the selling price of the product. This has not been put into effect and is not being put into effect at the present time. It is true that some slight consideration has been given to the matter under the Agricultural Stabilization Act but in general no consideration has been given to establishing parity prices for farm products.

I am sure that the farmers of western Canada are well aware—the delegates I spoke to were—of the need to establish a fair and just situation so that as their production costs rise they will be able to justify their position when they ask more from consumers in the rest of Canada for what they produce. I should like to congratulate the people responsible for the delegation. Their manner was certainly controlled, quiet and dignified. They presented their arguments to the government and to members generally in an orderly and reserved fashion. I think they were a credit to the people they represent and made the contribution they came here to make.

It was stated by a number of members that this delegation was not necessary. It would have been fine to send only two or three people down to represent them. I am quite sure if that had been the method chosen the delegates would have made a fair representation. I am quite sure that the 300,000 people who supported this delegation, who gave money to pay the expenses involved in the delegation, are going to find much more satisfaction in being able to talk to their delegate and hear firsthand of the reception he received in Ottawa. I think these people are going to be anxious to find out if there was any difference in the attitude of the government between the time the delegation arrived in Ottawa and the time they left for Ottawa.

I think we need to look no further than the front page of the Financial Times, which states it is Canada's newspaper for investment, to ascertain that they congratulate the government for having turned a deaf ear to deficiency payments. The article is headed "Deficiency Payment Denial Augurs Well". Then it goes on to say what they think about giving any subsidies to western grain producers. On the opposite page of the same newspaper there is an advertisement which probably gives you a better idea of what they suggest you should do, and that is buy British Columbia Electric bonds which carry an interest rate of 5.63 per cent. I think that this is their solution, and if it is then the government has given the answer that that is the best thing to do.

Let us look at what has been happening to agriculture in general. The dominion bureau of statistics figures on December 10, 1958 point out that the cost of living and production index for the western grain producers stands at 244.9, taking 1935-39 as equalling 100. In other words, it means that it costs the prairie farmer $2.44 for what one dollar would buy in 1935. This means that the $1.40 initial payment on wheat is worth only 57 cents in 1935-39 value of money, basis of No. 1 northern wheat, Fort William. This is equivalent to a price at a country elevator point of approximately 49.5 cents a bushel.

As has been pointed out, the western farmer is faced with a most serious position because in the period from 1945 to 1953 the cost of production had risen by 51 per cent. During the same period of time the price they got for their wheat went down by 21 per cent. This is an indication that something must be done for these people. I do not believe they came here asking for a handout. What they are asking is that some consideration be given to the fact that the Canadian government sells their wheat, and it takes some time before they know exactly what they are going to get for that wheat. They now find that they are not going to get a price that is in keeping with their cost of production. They are asking the government, through a short range program, to pay deficiency payments for the last three years. I suggest that the remaining segments of the economy of Canada would look favourably on this type of payment. It could easily be pointed out that the farmers of western Canada are not going to be able to produce if they have not enough money to pay the expenses they incur in the production of that wheat.

We have assumed in Canada a responsibility for the marketing of their wheat. We have assumed, or we have neglected to assume, any responsibility for the matter of inflation which has meant that the money they have received has not been worth as much as it was previously. We have this responsibility, and I think we have a responsibility to the farmers of western Canada to see that they continue to exist in that area.

These farmers came to Ottawa and presented their case. I think they are going to do something else besides present this case. I am sure they are going back to their own areas and they are going to report upon the reception they received from the government as well as individual members of parliament. They have already one western member's report in this house that there was no need for this delegation to come to Ottawa because 47 Conservative members had been elected from the west to do the talking for these people. I feel these members are going to have to do more talking for the delegation because I think much more pressure is going to be put on them.

We have made inquiries about this dollar an acre payment versus deficiency payments. In no case did I meet a farmer who considered the dollar an acre payment to be a substitute for deficiency payments, and I did not meet any farmers who considered deficiency payments or acreage payments or both to be any substitute for a full parity price program. These farmers realize they can justify to the other segments of the Canadian economy their request for the cost of production plus a fair and reasonable wage. I do not think they are asking for anything unreasonable.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): Would the hon. member permit a question? Would he like to make things a little bit clearer? Would he state definitely his party favours paying to the largest farmers in Canada a cash payment of $4,500?

Mr. Peters: I cannot answer that question. The reason is I do not know the mechanics or the method that would be used in paying it.

An hon. Member: Did you read the brief?

Mr. Peters: Yes, I read the brief. You asked me about a specific amount, about a specific case. Our party is on the record as endorsing these deficiency payments as presented by this delegation. We agree that these would be made once and that this is no solution. We are going to have to give consideration to a much more satisfactory method of financing agriculture, not only in western Canada but in all of Canada. It is because the situation with respect to the grain producers is so desperate that these deficiency payments are the only answer at the moment. The exact amount, and how it applies to a specific case, I am not familiar with that.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): Read the brief.

Mr. Peters: The brief explains it, and the hon. member can read the brief if he has any doubt about it. We do support their representations.

There are, Mr. Chairman, many other problems in connection with agriculture today. The Prime Minister on numerous occasions spoke so eloquently on this matter of parity prices, but he has given no consideration to implementing this policy for agriculture. In my particular area we are not grain producers but engage in mixed farming. We find the same problems exist in Timiskaming, in the fruit growing areas of southern Ontario and the grain producing areas in the west; in fact, in all agricultural areas in this country. We have recommended over the years, as have many other members, that parity prices be applied. We do not ask for 50 per cent parity or 150 per cent parity, but full 100 per cent parity. This parity, we should make clear, includes the cost of production plus a fair and reasonable wage.

Mr. Brunsden: Would the hon. member permit a question? Would he give us his definition of parity in relation to agriculture?

Mr. Peters: I thought I was doing that. I do not think parity is very difficult to define. This term is being used, and the policy of parity followed, in one small segment of agriculture in Ontario. They do not call it parity prices. We may disagree with the original starting point they use, but the whole milk producers in Ontario are using a formula of prices in which they take into consideration the various commodities they purchase, the expenses they incur in the production of that particular product, and when those prices rise by a certain ordained amount, then the cost of the product to the consumer rises in accordance with their formula.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Peters: Yes.

Mr. Woolliams: I should like to ask if the greatest cost—

The Chairman: Order. I recognize the hon. member for Lisgar.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): In the United States, under their agriculture policy, they have a percentage of parity. The government now holds $9 billion worth of farm products. This year it is going to cost that country an additional $7 billion. How would you avoid that situation in Canada with full parity when down in the United States they have got themselves in such a mess with only a percentage of parity?

Mr. Peters: The hon. member well knows that we are not going to justify what happened in the United States or try to explain it. I should just like to remind him how difficult it is to apply to the Canadian economy United States programs and to suggest to him that he read the Clark report on another subject. We are not suggesting that we follow the United States program. We are suggesting something which I think is fair and reasonable and which can be understood by anybody. I do not think you can expect any segment of the Canadian economy to produce any product at less than it cost them to produce it. It seems to me that any business which operated at less than cost for any period of time would be bankrupt, no matter what their reserves were.

The farmer has been able to exist in this type of situation by the simple expedient of not worrying about depreciation and not worrying about labour. We are finding that the very fact that the parity price has not applied is one of the reasons why we are getting surpluses in Canada. Every farmer knows—and if the hon. gentleman lives on a farm he will know it—that if he can make a decent living with 160 acres and 20 head of cattle, then he will farm with 160 acres and 20 head of cattle. But if he finds that the amount of money he has at the end of the year is not enough to take care of the debts he has incurred, then he rents the farm across the road and works twice as long hours and puts in another 20 head of cattle. Then the next year, when he still finds that he is not making a go of it, he buys some more land or rents it and puts some more cattle on it and he neglects such things as buying fertilizer and he ignores such things as painting the barn and doing the other things that a farmer will normally do as a conservationist. You can check the figures, Mr. Chairman. You do not need to take my word for it.

Mr. Kindt: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Peters: I think I had better keep on with the speech. I should be quite happy to answer questions at the end of it. I have a number of points I should like to make and I think I had better continue. If we go back to 1945 we shall find that at that time the Canadian farmer came as near as he has ever come to a parity price but the cost of production was about equal to the selling price of his products, and at that time we did not find surpluses piling up. I know that on our own farm we were making a fairly decent living. We had one pasture besides the home one. Last year they extended the barn. They have put in almost twice as many cows. They are now farming five farms and my father was telling me the other day that they are making less money than he has made for a great number of years.

These matters of parity are relative, I think, to the needs of the farmer himself. If a farmer finds that he can break even, he is lucky. I do not think he has ever been one to ever put any money in the bank. I know few farmers that have ever become really rich.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Peters: Most of the rich farmers have come from some other industry. I think that is perfectly true even with regard to the Minister of Agriculture who did not go into farming and come out of that industry but who went into it from another field which I do not think was too lucrative either sometimes.

Mr. Harkness: I might say that I never got rich in any of them.

Mr. Peters: I agree that that is a true statement. Certainly I would agree that it is true of the farmer himself. But in the main, farmers have not been ones to abuse their farms in times when they were making a fairly decent living. They were willing to put fertilizer on them, to do summerfallowing and do the other things that make for good farming. These are things that they will continue to do as long as they get a decent living. But when they are getting less than parity, they are going to produce surpluses because they are going to be obliged to produce twice as much.

On a number of occasions the minister has pointed out that the farm cash income is higher this year than it has been for a number of years. I think this statement is probably true. But I also think it is not correct to imply that the farmer has more money now than he had before. I think this situation results from the farmer having to overproduce, from his having to put in a couple of extra head of cattle in the barn and having to sell an extra couple of beef. I am sure if the farmers from western Canada were asked—and they should know about the matter—they would tell you that they have sold more beef this year than it has been their practice to do in the past because the price has been good and they needed the money, and this has raised the price.

I had some research done into the total price index numbers, taking into consideration the drop in the value of our dollar. Our deflated cash income from farm products, according to these figures has dropped 7.37 per cent. At the same time these figures also point out that comparing the average for 1946-1956 with that of 1957-1958, the farm cash income has risen by 10.26 per cent; the net farm income has dropped by 11.14 per cent; the deflated cash income from farm products is down 7.37 per cent; and the deflated total net income is down 34 per cent. Mr. Chairman, I think this is the reason why there has had to be an increase in production. This is the reason why there will be a surplus established with low prices and not with high prices.

Agriculture is faced with another problem that is almost insurmountable. We have it in eastern Canada. This may not apply to areas for deficiency payments. This situation may not apply to western Canada yet, although I suggest that they had better take a close look at it because it will affect western Canada shortly. I refer to the matter of vertical integration. A great deal has been said about vertical integration, some of it in a light vein and some of it in a heavy vein. I noticed in the Western Producer a short article on vertical integration. It reads as follows:

The most striking example of vertical integration is to be found in the northern Saskatchewan constituency of Athabasca,—

An hon. Member: That is in Alberta.

Mr. Peters: The quotation continues:

—says C.C.F. MLA John Harrop. One of his constituents raises chickens in an old mine shaft.

This is one aspect of vertical integration, I assume, because vertical integration means integration from the top of the bottom. If he has filled a mine shaft with chickens, I suppose that is vertical integration as far as the mine shaft is concerned. I might say that this is a new use for mine shafts.

Vertical integration in Ontario has become a major problem. I am told that the broiler industry is 98 per cent integrated at the present time. The pork industry is 30 per cent integrated and 10 per cent of beef production is involved in vertical integration or contract farming in one form or another. Vertical integration and contract farming are terms which are widely discussed and sometimes misunderstood even by the farmers themselves. I am told that vertical integration is the last stage of contract farming.

There are four major stages in contract farming. Many farmers have had to accept contracts because of their inability to get cash for such things as feed or the primary products and commodities which they need. The first stage of contract farming would be the feed companies supplying the money or the feed necessary to produce a particular crop. The producer is allowed to buy his own primary product and to sell it on the open market. Then he has to pay off his obligation under the contract. Interested in this type of contract farming are the feed companies, the packing companies, a number of industries and, also, a number of general stores.

The second stage of vertical integration arises where the feed is supplied under contract, and the primary product, too—the chick or the suckling pig, the small calf or whatever it may be that the farmer proposes to raise. The market is open and the farmer is allowed to pay off his contract with the money he receives from the sale of his product on the open market.

In both these stages marketing legislation would be of assistance and it is obviously to the farmers advantage to press the government for the type of legislation most suitable to his selling operations.

In the third stage of integration the contract will call for feed to be supplied and for the primary product to be supplied. In addition, there is an undertaking to supply the market as well. In this phase we find a number of the chain stores handling the finished product, and obviously in such a case as this it does not really matter whether there is marketing legislation or not, because it simply does not apply.

The fourth stage, which is total vertical integration arises where the feed, the primary product and the market are supplied and where, in addition, the buildings are owned by the company or interest managing the enterprise, and in which the farmer is only an employee or labourer engaged by the financing interest. I suggest that this last stage of contract farming or vertical integration will probably be the easiest to handle, because one of the enterprising labour unions will organize these farmers and the farmers will finally end up with a decent wage and a decent standard of living. If this is the way the farmers want it, all they have to do is wait for a short time and this will happen in the province of Ontario.

Some time ago a young farmer from Almonte was in to see me and he told me that if the change to vertical integration continues in Ontario during the next ten years as it has done during the past three years there will be no more family farms as we know them today. I questioned two leading members of farm organizations about this—Mr. Hannam and Mr. Patterson—and neither of them would disagree with this statement, though they thought the process would take rather more than 10 years.

I think this is a very serious matter, and the minister should give earnest attention to it. If farmers are to be forced to sign contracts for feed, primary products and even markets, then I think it behoves the government to work out contracts which would be acceptable to the farmers concerned. In some cases where a farmer is in stage 2 of vertical integration, for example, the financial result may not turn out too badly, but in other cases the results can be disastrous. The same young farmer to whom I referred a moment ago told me of the experience of one of his neighbours who had entered a contract with regard to broilers. He had a thousand, and when things did not go too badly he was encouraged to go into the business deeper. He went into bankruptcy in two years in the sum of $57,000, and the reason was that when the broilers in his buildings were ready for market he was told: sorry, but the price has dropped, it is now 18 cents. Since this man's cost of production was something over 20 cents it was obvious that it was impossible for him to do other than sustain his serious loss.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): One would not draw the inference from that example that contract farming is likely to continue.

Mr. Peters: Certainly not, but one must feel sorry for anyone who is placed in this position. Small feed companies can no longer supply six months credit as they were once able to do, for the simple reason that they cannot borrow at sufficiently cheap rates. Interest rates have gone sky high, these financial companies are advertising bonds at 5.3 per cent, and it is obvious that seed companies cannot give credit at interest rates lower than this. They are obliged to charge the farmer a higher interest rate than they themselves must pay to the banks, if they are able to obtain loans at all. We are not suggesting that contract farming is a good thing, because it is not, and I ask the minister to give very serious consideration to this question of vertical integration as it affects all agricultural production before it is too late.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I think I would be remiss if I did not speak on agriculture at this time because my constituency depends a great deal on the condition of agriculture. First of all, I should like to commend the delegation which has recently been in Ottawa on their able presentation of their brief and on their behaviour while they were here, and I hope that in my small way I can do something here, along with the other western members, to promote better conditions in the west both with regard to wheat and with regard to the general agricultural picture.

I do not wish to comment to any great extent on the remarks just made by the hon. member for Timiskaming. The hon. member talked about farming conditions, but I realized that he knew very little about farming conditions. He discussed contract farming and told us what a great threat it is to the farm industry as we know it today, and then he went on to cite a very good example of one of the dangers faced by farmers who enter this type of farming. It seemed to me that the example he gave pointed to the very opposite of what he had been saying up till then.

In western Canada we have two main sources of income—wheat and cattle. In my constituency we sell as much wheat as in any other constituency in Alberta, and probably there are as many cattle raised. On the average the farmers in my area had a fairly good year in 1958. However, they realized that this was due to the demand for cattle and to the relatively high prices paid for cattle on the United States market. They are greatly concerned lest this should bring a false sense of security to farmers in western Canada, because there is no assurance of a continued demand from the United States for Canadian cattle. It should be realized that apart from income derived from cattle revenue from all other sources is low.

During the past six or seven years there has been a great deal of diversification of crops in western Canada. The farmers went into the production of durum wheat at a time when the price of durum was slightly higher than that of hard spring wheat. Today the price of durum has fallen and we have a slight surplus of it. Quotas have been imposed on its sale. There is no longer any incentive for farmers to continue in the production of durum wheat to any large extent.

The same may be said of flax. Six or seven years ago there was a growing tendency to go into the production of flax but today the price is down. Although we have disposed of some of the crop through the manufacture of linseed oil and exports the price has fallen very low. There is little advantage in going into the production of flax over the production of hard spring wheat.

The same remarks would be applicable to rapeseed which had a very encouraging price at one time. The price has declined to approximately half what it was and there now remains little encouragement to go into the production of rapeseed over hard spring wheat. I am pointing out these facts so hon. members of the committee will realize that with respect to field crops the situation in western Canada is somewhat serious. The prices that can be commanded for field crops are falling and the costs of production are rising.

On the one hand we have labour causing strikes and demanding higher wages. On the other hand we have management failing to take constructive action. The results of these failures fall back on the primary producer. He is the one who in the end has to pay for these failures. A good example of labour causing strikes and not caring one bit who suffers is the longshoremen's strike on the west coast last fall. It primarily affected the farmers of Alberta because to a large extent their early fall shipments of wheat go to the west coast. Some farmers in my constituency could not even deliver their initial quotas in the fall because the market was tied up on the west coast and the boats were not being loaded. Many farmers in my area were unable to deliver their initial quotas until January of this year. Incidents of this type have a severe effect on farm families.

I am a farmer and I feel qualified to speak about the position of farmers in western Canada. Farmers operate on borrowed money all summer. I would say this is true in the case of nine out of ten farmers. In the fall the farmers are in dire need of a little ready cash. When the initial quotas are not readily made available the farmers must obtain further credit and sometimes it is difficult to secure the "little more" that is required.

To illustrate how the primary producers are affected by labour I shall quote an article that appeared in The Rural Scene, volume 13, of June, 1958. This article considers the wheat pool figures in relation to the cost of a small combine. I emphasize that a very small combine is used in the illustration because most combines are much more expensive than the one referred to in this example. The article states:

> In 1946 it took 1,845 bushels of wheat to buy a small combine; and today it would take 3,963 bushels.

And later:

If a combine cost 1,845 bushels of wheat in 1946 and the price of wheat has dropped 20.8 per cent since then, and if no other prices had changed, the present price of a combine would be 2,335 bushels of wheat, or 490 more than it cost in 1946.

That is due to the drop in wheat prices alone. I continue:

But the price of combines has changed, and now it is 3,963 bushels of wheat. This is 2,118 bushels more than it was in 1946. The drop in the price of wheat accounts for 490 bushels of this. The balance, 2,118 minus 490, or 1,628 bushels, is due to the rise in the price of the combine. This rise in the prices of the things he buys is what really hurts the farmer.

The article concludes:

The answer is plain to see. Labour costs have moved steadily upward ever since the war and they show every indication of continuing to rise in the future. Not only the direct factory labour but also the labour involved in producing the raw materials and transporting them. All labour costs have risen.

I cite this as an illustration of another side of this picture. The farmers are concerned about continually increasing costs due to another part of our economy taking advantage of the primary producers. The farmers have to pay for this.

The cost of farm machinery in my area went up 6 per cent last fall and then along came the 17 per cent hike in freight rates. The price of tractors in my home town went up an additional $35 to $40 as a result of the increase in freight rates. While on the subject of freight rates may I say that I am glad to see on the order paper notice of the intention of the government to bring in a $20 million subsidy which will perhaps defray some of these increased costs.

During the last three or four years the price of tractors, cars, trucks and other large items that farmers must buy increased in my neighbourhood by between $600 and $1,000 and in the same interval, as I pointed out, the price commanded by field crops has fallen.

Labour is not solely to blame; management is at fault, too. Management has made no sincere effort to put out a machine and hold the cost of that machine. I do not know if hon. gentlemen are familiar with tractors but I will use them as an example. What have machine companies done in the past few years in terms of holding down the cost of the machines to a level that would bear some relationship to the price a farmer gets for his goods? They have continually changed models and designs. During the last four years they have continually switched from model to model and from design to design and now I notice that a tractor has been put on the market that has a two-tone paint job. This type of activity results in making it difficult for local agents to stock the many parts that are required for repairs to the machine.

During the forties tractors with rubber tires were put on the market. The fifties witnessed the addition of headlights on most tractors, individual wheel brakes and motors that would stand up fairly well to heavy use. There has been no drastic change in tractors in the past two decades. The price per horse power, however, has practically doubled. As I said, the manufacturers are continually changing the external designs and we now have had the introduction of a tractor with a two-tone paint job that is perhaps no better than the tractors manufactured during the fifties although they have doubled in price since then.

I do not wish to dwell on this subject at too great length but I cannot resist mentioning that in my home town the farm equipment dealer four years ago sold more combines than any other dealer employed by that manufacturer in the province of Alberta. He was awarded a medal for doing so. Last fall this man had in stock two combines that were a carryover from the previous year and he could not dispose of them. I think he finally bought one himself at a loss just to move it. That is the type of problem confronting the dealers. Increased prices of equipment have meant that they are unable to sell the machines. A farmer certainly hesitates before paying $7,000 or $8,000 for a combine to take off his crop because although we have had fairly average yields in the last two years the prices commanded by field crops have been decreasing. This has to be considered also.

I have been told by one machine company that they have a price for machines which they charge in this country and another price which they charge in Europe, for instance. Those machines are made either in Canada or in the United States, taken across to Europe, and sold in that market at a much lower price than they are sold at in Canada. In other words, they have a two-price system for their machines, and this is very discouraging to the farmers of this country because they realize that the machine companies are charging just as much as the market will bear. Sooner or later the machine companies, for one reason or another, are going to price themselves right out of the market.

I think it was very evident from the delegation that was down here—I know the farmers from my constituency expressed it in various ways—that it is the cost-price squeeze that is the greatest problem so far as the agricultural picture is concerned. It is those irresponsible actions on the part of labour and management that have contributed to the continued high cost. Of course, the only way the farmer has to remain in business is to become more efficient. As the hon. member for Timiskaming said, some of them buy more land but that is not the only way in which the farmer can become more efficient. In many instances the farmer has ample land. He either steps up his production or the cuts down on his expenses. These are the only two ways that I know of by which you can come out with a higher net income. You either step up your production or you cut down on your expenses. Of course, if the farmers cut down their expenses very much the rest of Canada suffers to some extent through loss of labour used in producing machines or the loss of labour employed on the farms.

I should like to deal for a moment with the cattle outlook. Without a doubt the cattle picture in western Canada in 1958 was the brightest of any. The prospects for that crop were brighter than for any other crop the farmer had to market. Over the past year a great deal of concern has been expressed about the cattle market and about how long it will hold up. That thought was in the mind of every farmer who was down here with the delegation. They did not know. The cattle men are worried for fear the grain producers may go into the cattle business, produce cattle and thereby create a surplus. Of course, there is no way of telling whether they will go into that business or not. We have only to trust that in the future things will work out.

Let me go back to the fall of 1957. I think all of us from western Canada and eastern Canada will realize that in the early fall of 1957 we were faced with a depressed cattle market. Around October 1 the United States market opened up and things brightened up. Since then we have been in a relatively good position. It must be realized that in the last four months of the year we exported to the United States nearly 400,000 head of cattle. This was in the fall of 1957. In 1958 the number was around 700,000.

There is a great deal of concern in the minds of farmers as to whether there will be a surplus of cattle on the market in the future. The question is, how soon in the future, and what will be the effect on the price? According to the latest reports of the cattle population that I have seen the numbers of cattle are down below what they were in 1956. I think this is a good indication that perhaps a surplus of this product will be staved off for a while. The number of steers on the farm was down by 15 per cent. Calves were relatively the same as were beef cows also, although in some areas there is evidence that the farmers are reducing their basic herds. All this points to the fact that Canada, with a cow herd of about the same size as it was in 1957, can produce a great deal of beef if she is called upon to do so.

We must look at our population figures. We must also remember that from 1952 on, after the preceding fall in prices and the foot-and-mouth disease, we exported very little beef until 1957 when the vast demand occurred and we were in the very fortunate position where we could export beef to the United States. We should take a look at the Gordon report. This report states that by 1980 our population will be approximately 26 million. The report bases this estimate on the fact that our population will increase every year and that immigration will average around 75,000. Last year the number of immigrants was around 124,000, and most people considered it a low year. If one takes into consideration the increase in the birth rate and the fact that people are living longer now than they used to, I think it is safe to say that our population will increase about half a million each year and, of course, as our population increases so will the rate of increase. Therefore, I think it is safe to say that, judging by those figures, we shall very easily reach 26 million by 1980.

Of course, the Gordon report stated that by 1980 the numbers of our livestock would have to be doubled to feed our own population. If we keep these figures in mind, perhaps it would be safe to say that the cattle industry will perhaps hold up and that the next three years will be the crucial time. If we can hold on to the United States market for a certain small percentage of our production, then perhaps we shall be over the hump and be all right so far as cattle prices are concerned.

I should like to deal with hogs for a moment. We all know that as the price of meat goes down the rate of consumption per person goes up, and this has held true over the past years with hogs. Hog marketings have been very heavy, but we have surprised the experts. Through our own consumption we have got away with a great deal of this pork. Right now we have not much of a pork surplus. The price has been down to the floor. Anybody who has been watching the western markets particularly—I do not know what it has been like in the east—must have noticed that the price has been bouncing off the floor price at various times. I think in the future, perhaps by next fall, we shall see a trend upwards and away from the floor price of pork. Today, as I have mentioned, we have not got too great a pork surplus, probably one week's supply.

I think there is a great deal of concern among the people engaged in pork production, and rightly so, because with the floor price in effect there is the threat that contract farming will move into the industry. As the hon. member for Timiskaming said, they have already moved into the broiler industry and I am happy that we are not buying a lot of broilers. I think though that the government will have to bring in some sort of control. I do not know exactly how it may be done but the support will have to be reduced in the case of units that are large enough to be classed as contract farms. One way to do this would be by means of deficiency payments on hogs.

As hon. members know, the government is buying certain cuts of pork in order to keep up the price. In Alberta the price is $21.50 a hundred. If I were allowed to sell my hogs at 19 or 20 cents a pound, a deficiency payment to make up the balance would come to me. In that way I could sell 100 pigs and get a deficiency payment on those 100 pigs but I would not get a deficiency payment for anything over that number. I think this would have quite an effect on contract farming.

I do not want to speak too long but I think I should mention that I am certain the farmers will be pleased to receive the interim payment on wheat. Most of them should have received it by this time. I am certain that with the increase in the lakehead price of wheat of 5⅝ cents the final payment will be as high as it was last year and perhaps a little higher on some of the lower grades. That is a very serious point. Last year the final payment on No. 4 wheat was just 2¾ cents a bushel and that had a severe effect on the over-all wheat price.

I am pleased to see that the port at Churchill has moved about 20 million bushels of wheat. Every bushel shipped through that port saved the western farmer about eleven cents. I would encourage the building of greater handling facilities at that port in order that the farmers can perhaps save a little more with respect to the cost of moving their wheat.

I think the government should be commended for the great effort made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce in selling our wheat. It has played quite a large part in removing the surplus in western Canada. Right now the wheat board says that the grain bins will be nearly empty, and I think that is true. This has a two-fold effect. With the grain bins empty there will be no market for bootleg wheat and that will encourage those people who have gone into the contract feeding of livestock to get out of that sort of business when they cannot purchase wheat at far below the cost of producing it.

I commend the government for the recent trade agreement with Russia and the export of wheat to Russia and Poland. I want to deal for a minute with tariffs. We heard a lot about tariffs from the farm delegation and it is true that the farmer pays the extra cost brought about by many tariffs. That being so, I think it is only right that the people of Canada should pay more for the wheat they consume in Canada. In other words, the farmer should have a little protection too.

A great deal has been said about what this would cost the consumer. I got figures from a well known baker. I am not going to go into the bakers' set-up at this time. This baker explained to me, by taking the number of bushels required to make a barrel of flour and the number of loaves in a barrel of flour, that the price of wheat could go up almost 60 cents before the price of a loaf of bread went up one cent. I think we should have $1 a bushel more for wheat consumed in Canada. This would raise the price of a loaf of bread by two cents. We must remember that the labourer today has never worked such a short period of time—

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt but I must advise the hon. member that his time has expired.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I should like to finish the last sentence.

The Deputy Chairman: Has the hon. member consent to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I should like to point out that never before in history has the labourer worked such a short period of time to earn his food requirements.

Mr. Boulanger: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Certainly.

Mr. Boulanger: The hon. member who has resumed his seat seemed to attach more importance to the price of farm machinery than to the selling price of farm produce. Which one of these two situations does he consider as having the greatest influence on the present farm situation?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I referred to an example using wheat pool figures in that regard. The price of wheat had an effect of 500 bushels on the cost and labour and management had an effect of 1,600 bushels. I would not base my own opinion on those exact figures. In my opinion they are both equal.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, the intervention in this debate by other non-farmers and non-experts has encouraged me also to make a few observations about the agricultural industry. Personally I am not a farmer and there are only three or four small subsistence farmers in my riding and very few farmers in my province generally. The only personal connection I have ever had with farming was when I used to have to look for the cows and drive them home before going to school in the morning and then deliver the milk after school in the evening.

But there are several reasons why I should like to say a few words about this subject. In the first place I am deeply interested in the farmer as a human being and I also recognize the importance of the agricultural industry to our national economy. I am also deeply conscious of the deep similarity of the problems of the farmer and the problems of the fishermen who are my constituents. For example, both the farmers and the fishermen are primary producers. In both cases their production is affected by factors largely beyond their control. Both also are victims of the cost-price squeeze. Both are largely dependent on external markets and conditions.

In the case of the Newfoundland fishermen, practically all our fish is sold in foreign markets and in that respect we are even worse off than the farmers because our fish are sold to countries which have state purchasing agencies, which fact prevents the ordinary law of supply and demand becoming operative. Although we may have low production of fish in one year, the price does not go up because of the extra demand largely on account of the restrictions imposed by the state agencies which purchase fish in our foreign markets.

I think there is another similarity between fishermen and farmers and that is in their working conditions. Both farmers and fishermen work from dawn until dusk, but there is still a difference in favour of the farmer because in most cases the farmer can be home all the time with his family, whereas a fisherman has to stay out on the seas sometimes as long as two weeks.

The Deputy Chairman: Order; I must mention to the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo that this is vote No. 1 on agriculture. I think I have been quite lenient in allowing the odd comparison between farmers and fishermen, but I must ask the hon. member to bring his remarks back to agriculture.

Mr. Carter: I was just pointing up the similarity of the problems faced by the farmer and those faced by the fisherman.

[Mr. Horner (Acadia).]

I am convinced that a solution of the agricultural problem is essential to the welfare of the economy as a whole. My final reason for entering this debate was that I thought members would be interested in knowing how farm problems appear to one who has no personal experience with them, and who has had to build up his picture from information received from various sources, including hon. members in this house. For 10 years now I have listened very patiently to hon. members tell this house about farm problems. I have read a great many of the briefs which have been presented to us by farm bodies. I have honestly tried to understand the problems and assess them in relation to the efforts that have been put forth toward a solution.

I should like to tell my farmer colleagues that this has not always been easy because the farm industry has been speaking, at least so it appeared to me, with two voices. I think there is a passage in the scripture which says that if the bugle makes an uncertain sound, who is going to get ready for battle? Well, there have been uncertain sounds from the agriculture industry. Farmers will tell us one story about blue ruin and the minister will get up and give us figures to indicate that things are a little better than they were last year. Certainly it is difficult not to be confused when you hear conflicting reports of that kind.

I think it should be pointed out that farm bodies who have presented briefs have painted their picture as representing the industry as a whole, and the minister too has spoken in terms of the industry as a whole without distinguishing between the component parts. We get two opposite and conflicting pictures and, therefore, we are reduced to the point of trying to put two and two together. Putting two and two together, it seems to me we must conclude that there is a group of farmers who are very poorly off; there is another group of farmers who are fairly well off; and in between the two there is another group who are perhaps just managing to keep their heads above water. What we do not know is the relative size or different categories of these groups. Neither do we know the relative causes for these different conditions. We do not know, for example, how many of the farmers who are in the poor group are there because of poor management or poor farm practices. We do not know how many are there because their farms are too small, and we do not know how many of them are trying to make a living from land which could be put to some better use.

I think this points out one of the weaknesses of the representations that have been made on behalf of farmers, and that is the absence of reliable statistics which break down the problem into its component parts. I am glad that the farmers themselves have come to recognize this and have asked for research facilities. I would say the government should give them some help in acquiring these facilities. I think also the information should be gathered by the farmers themselves because they are in the best position to know exactly what information is required, and also in the best position to obtain it more quickly than could be done by a royal commission or some other agency set up for that purpose.

There seems to be no doubt that at the present time agriculture is undergoing a revolution, a revolution perhaps in many ways comparable to the industrial revolution that took place in Europe a century ago. While this revolution is going on the farmer is faced with three very serious problems, namely the cost-price squeeze; the problem of vertical integration, and the problem of surplus production. I think it is evident, too, that the measures which have been adopted in the past, as well as the measures which are in force now, have not been capable of solving these problems. I think it is safe to assume that in solving this problem, the measures we adopt will determine the future shape of the agricultural industry.

Since I am not an expert I am not qualified to make any recommendations of a technical nature, although I do not see why something could not be done toward remitting the sales tax on farm implements. It seems to me that the measures we have adopted so far have turned out to be merely stopgaps. What is required is a permanent solution. I believe that if a permanent solution is to be found, a whole new approach is required and a fresh start must be made. While I am not able to make technical suggestions, I should like to offer a few suggestions about the kind of approach I think is needed.

In the first place I think it must be a human approach. It is encouraging to find that the farmers themselves are coming around to that way of thinking. I was greatly encouraged by the brief which was submitted some time ago by the interprovincial farm union. That was the first time I have noticed an attempt to approach the farm problem in this way. The human approach requires a concept which takes into consideration the relationship of the farmer as a human being with other human beings and this approach requires the facing of certain facts.

The first of these facts is that price supports, deficiency payments and like measures have not proved to be a solution in the past and are not likely to be any more effective in the future and also that measures which are based on slogans such as parity, fair share of the national income and comparisons with tariff valuations, are in much the same category. All of these slogans mean different things to different people. Because of that fact they do not offer any basis for unity and unity is the first essential if we are to find the right solution.

The second fact that I think we must recognize is that whatever formulas are developed from the monetary standpoint they must of necessity be limited by what the national economy can support.

The next fact that farmers must face is that the government alone and the farmers alone cannot solve this problem. It is doubtful whether it can be solved by the farmers and the government working together. As I see it, the solution of this problem is going to require the co-operation not only of the government and the farmers but also of the consumers and, as the hon. member who preceded me in this debate pointed out, the co-operation of management and organized labour as well.

Another fact which I think farmers must consider, if they are going to get on the right track, is that there is no valid basis of comparison between the farming industry and the manufacturing industries in terms of monetary reward. There are basic conditions which must be taken into account. The farmer is obliged to work all hours from dawn to dusk while the factory worker works regular hours with a work week of 40-hours or whatever it may be. The factory worker is also more likely to receive higher pay for his services. It will not be possible to raise the farmer's income to a level that is comparable to the higher wage that is paid in industry. I think that fact must be accepted.

But the farmer has other compensations. He is engaged in a creative work, something which in itself must be extremely satisfying. It is a healthy work. He lives close to nature and close to his God. He enjoys a measure of independence which is not available in other forms of industry.

If the answer to this problem can be found only by the farmer, the government, management and labour all working together, then obviously this cannot be done without a basis of unity; and there must first of all be unity with regard to the goals and the objectives we want for the farming industry. This consideration raises the problem of vertical integration.

As I understand this problem, if vertical integration keeps on developing in the way it has started it will not be long before the only difference between our collectivized farms in Canada and those in Russia will be that collectivized farms in Russia will be run by the state and in Canada by big business. I think that is a serious trend. Even if it may produce some advantages in terms of higher production and lower cost, nevertheless we must consider whether or not that is too high a price to pay for that kind of end result.

Another essential in order to develop this unity is a recognition on the part of each party concerned that each has a responsibility to the other. Of course there must also be, in my opinion, a sense of mission. All industry has developed in response to human needs. The purpose of the farming industry is to feed hungry people. But if we are to develop the industry in the way in which its destiny requires, I think we must think of it not only in terms of a means of earning a livelihood but also in terms of something bigger, something which places the industry in proper relationship to other industries, and also in relationship to the world picture. What is needed then is a sense of purpose which will inspire in the farmer a sense of dedication which will largely tend to make up for any lack in monetary rewards. The working out of the solution between the parties concerned must take place around the conference table where each will be prepared to approach the problem honestly and fairly and in a spirit of what is best not only for the industry itself but for the country as a whole.

This will require some self examination on the part of the farmer himself. He will have to look back to see where he himself may have gone wrong in the past; whether he has exerted wrong pressures and whether he has been activated by wrong motives. In this way only can he discover to what extent he himself may be responsible for the condition of the industry today. This does not mean pointing the finger at one another, but it does mean an honest appraisal of the situation in order that we may not make the same mistakes as in the past. It is in this way that the farmer can make his best contribution toward a solution of the problems which face the industry and at the same time inspire the other parties upon whom he must depend to do the same.

There is one other point to which I should like to refer, and perhaps it affects government policy rather than the farmer himself. I refer to the need for a determination to use our agriculture industry strategically, as is done by the Soviet union. It seems to me that instead of giving cash handouts to the farm industry which may be paid for a limited period and then cut off, it would be much better if we could find some way of expanding our markets. In Canada we have a very small domestic market of only 17 million people, but it should not be forgotten that Canada forms part of the commonwealth and that there are many countries in the world today which are potential markets for our wheat provided we go about the matter properly. In Africa, next year, Nigeria will become self-governing. Nigeria is a country with a population of 33 million, a very large potential market. Nigeria is one of the few countries in the world today which possess sound leadership and it is one of the countries which is going to determine whether the whole continent of Africa is to remain in the western camp or whether it will fall into the camp of Soviet Russia. We should seize every opportunity which presents itself to help Nigeria establish and strengthen her economy. I am told that in Nigeria a lot of the flour consumed is made from Canadian wheat milled in the United States. Why could we not establish Canadian mills in that country, either by private enterprise, or through the Colombo plan, and thus build up over the years an important market for our wheat? It is this type of assistance which will in the long run do more for the agriculture industry than any temporary expedients, however necessary these may be as short range measures.

In conclusion I should like to say a few words about the farm delegation which visited us a few days ago. This delegation focussed attention on the agricultural problem and deserves a great deal of commendation on the responsible manner in which its members presented their brief and also on the manner in which they conducted themselves throughout this visit. Not only did this delegation focus our attention on the farm problem but I think it served another and equally important purpose; it enabled us to meet a large number of farmers personally and thereby offered us the opportunity to know them as people and to appreciate their sterling qualities. The thought which has come to me since meeting some of these farmers—and I took the opportunity to meet as many of them as I could—was that the farmers may be the salvation of Canada, because it appears to me that they are the only group in Canada which has any vestige of a pioneering spirit. Some of us had feared that this spirit has deteriorated, but the personal contacts we had with these men showed, certainly in my case, that it is still alive. The farmers are one of the few remaining groups who are prepared to pioneer new territory and explore new trails even where it may have to be an act of faith. But the farmers are tired of expedients. They want a permanent solution worked out around a conference table.

The Deputy Chairman: I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Hicks: Mr. Chairman, we in this group of 73 over here do like the opportunity to get on our feet and say a few words occasionally. I sometimes wonder what we are here for. I have mentioned on a few other occasions what Prime Minister Macmillan said when he was here. It was something to this effect—I am not quoting his words—that if one were to believe what the press says or what the opposition says or what the government backbenchers say one would think that the whole country was going to the bad. And I am just wondering if anyone in this house thinks that this rump over here is a sort of opposition to the government. If we were, I think we could move a little way further down the house and get more accomplished with less talk than some of the hon. members to our right have been able to do.

There is one thing I should like to see, and that is this division line between the parties, this alleyway here, straightened out. There are four sections in here, and if they were shoved down a piece, and if the division line were put through there, there would not be so much difference. From time to time a member of the government stands up over there and says: "Hon. members of the opposition opposite", and sometimes he looks right at us when he is saying it and I know half a dozen of us maybe think we are Liberals, although of course we are not. However, I do not want to squeeze this side down too far, because that might shove my old friend from Kootenay West clear out of the door, and I certainly would not want to do that.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to bring a little more optimism into this chamber with respect to agriculture than I have been listening to on some occasions in the not too distant past. I wish first to congratulate the Minister of Agriculture for the very fine summary of the work of his department he outlined as reported at page 254 of Hansard. The work to which I refer involved the expenditure of $166 million paid out by the Department of Agriculture as direct assistance to agriculture. This is no mean amount. This sum was expended in assisting in such projects as freight assistance on western grain, the payment of $1 per acre for agriculture which amounted to a total of $40 million—again no small amount—the payment of compensation for animal slaughter, the payment in the form of support prices on farm products, payments for grain storage, P.F.R.A. payments, payments under the Maritime Marshland Rehabilitation Act, the Prairie Farm Assistance Act and other work.

I wish also to congratulate the deputy minister and the entire staff of the Department of Agriculture. I know something of the hours these men put in after work, particularly the employees of the experimental farm. It is my observation that they are a fine group of conscientious, hard-working men. I say this because I know something about the subject of agriculture. I was born on a farm in southwestern Manitoba and several years ago graduated from the University of Manitoba. Following this I worked at experimental farms at Lacombe and Brandon and after a very active life I retired for a few years. I then came to the House of Commons to rest and I find that just cannot be done.

There have been great strides made in agricultural research during all these years. It is a delight to me personally to know that the science services and the experimental farm services will be combined again in one complete unit. I feel that is a far more efficient way of operating these services. There was not very much duplication of effort under the previous setup but there certainly will be less now that their efforts will be united.

When I am on the subject of duplication of work may I say I think there is a little feeling among the people of Canada that there still is a duplication of effort as between the federal Department of Agriculture and the provincial departments of agriculture. I can assure hon. members this is not the case in British Columbia. There we have the university agricultural department, the provincial agricultural department and the federal agricultural department and far from there being a duplication of work there is a high degree of co-operation among these splendid groups of hard-working people. As I said before, I know whereof I speak.

No sooner is one problem solved in agriculture these days than a dozen new problems arise demanding solutions. Things are moving very quickly and so the world today is the product of what we believed yesterday just as tomorrow's world will be the product of what we believe right now. I feel that if we are to avoid the mistakes of the past, men of good will such as you and I, members of this parliament, regardless of which side of the house we are on, have a wonderful and challenging job to do. We must find the kind of leadership that will instil in the hearts and minds of Canadians the concept of true citizenship.

There is one other matter which I have contemplated mentioning but I do not know whether or not I should speak of it. I am going to mention it, Mr. Chairman, and leave it to you to decide whether or not I should have mentioned this point. It is evident that some hon. members in their speeches are talking to people at home having in mind the next election. I feel that by this time with the results of the last election well known we can surely forget considerations of this kind for a year or two and get down to the business we were sent here to conduct and stop talking about the past. After having said that and as I look around me I feel maybe I am talking to the people at home because there are not many hon. members present in the chamber to listen to me and I see many empty seats.

An hon. Member: They are worthy characters.

Mr. Hicks: Yes.

Mr. Howard: Only four cabinet ministers.

Mr. Hicks: I think it is a waste of time to rehash political issues in this chamber when we know that the people of Canada would welcome the news of our putting our minds to the task of finding constructive solutions to their problems and getting on with the business at hand. I should like to quote from the Canada Year Book, 1957-58, page 119, with respect to agriculture in British Columbia:

> The traditional movement of population on the North American continent from east to west has not been apparent in Canadian statistics in recent years. The most spectacular changes are shown in the prairie provinces and in British Columbia. While the three prairie provinces lost by migration about 250,000 persons between 1931 and 1941 and somewhat more from 1941 to 1951, they gained in the period 1951-56.
> British Columbia gained at the rate of about 8,000 persons a year during the 1930's, about 23,000 a year during the 1940's and about 27,000 a year in the first half of the 1950's. On an absolute basis Ontario received more people than did British Columbia but, in relation to its larger population, this growth was only about one-third as important.

The importance of British Columbia's agriculture reveals some illuminating facts to which I should like to draw attention. Less than 2 per cent of the total area of the province of British Columbia is potential agricultural land and approximately only .5 per cent of this total area is now producing agriculturally. Less than one crop acre per person is produced in British Columbia. This is only about half enough which means that approximately half the food consumed in the province must be imported. Between 25 and 27 per cent of all agricultural land in the province must be irrigated. Agriculture in the province is very diversified and any crops that will grow anywhere else in Canada will grow in British Columbia. In addition British Columbia can produce some crops that cannot be produced elsewhere in the nation.

The Fraser valley is one of the most important agricultural areas in the province. I do not refer specifically to my own constituency but to that area extending from Hope to the coast which is about 100 miles in distance. Thirty miles of this district in the upper end are not particularly agricultural but in the area that is approximately 15 miles wide and 75 miles long, 48 per cent of the agricultural wealth of the province is produced. Thirty-nine per cent of the farmers of the province dwell in this area and 38.5 per cent of all British Columbia farms are located there. The remaining 52 per cent of British Columbia's agricultural wealth is produced in nine other regions. The greatest of these is the Okanagan valley that produces about 18 per cent or a little less than one-third of the output of the Fraser valley. Next is Vancouver island with 10 per cent and the remaining seven regions with 25 per cent.

There is a substantial food processing industry in the Fraser valley. It is not generally known that in greater Vancouver food processing is second only to wood production in the number of employees it engages. The Fraser valley contributes substantially to this secondary industry. The Fraser valley produces 85 per cent of the total of the small fruits; 59 per cent of the provincial vegetables and potatoes, and so forth; 65 per cent of the special horticultural crops such as bulbs, flowers, holly, nuts, nursery stock, and so forth. So far as livestock are concerned, 66 per cent of the dairy production, 66 per cent of poultry and 61 per cent of turkeys are produced in the Fraser valley. According to the 1956 census, the value of the lower Fraser valley production amounted to $49,338,000. The amount for the other areas was $54,618,000, or a grand total of $103,956,000. These are 1956 census figures and are taken from the extension service bulletin published by the provincial department of agriculture.

I should like to say just a word about Chilliwack but I do not want to say anything against the rest of the towns and villages within my territory. Chilliwack, of course, is the centre of the area. There are 7,300 people in the city and there are 17,000 in the municipalities. Within a radius of nine miles of the centre of Chilliwack there are 25,000 people. In terms of retail trade, Chilliwack is British Columbia's fifth largest city. Three miles from the centre of the city is located one of the large Fraser valley milk producing co-operative plants. The Fraser valley milk producers have 6,000 members. The plant nearest to Chilliwack is one of the largest on the North American continent. There they accept, in the rush season of the year, half a million pounds of milk per day.

I see my time is going very quickly and I know there are other members who wish to speak, but there are just a few things I would like to say at this time about British Columbia agriculture. I should like to take a few minutes to say something about some of the most serious problems in our area. Before I do that I wish to say that the dairy business in the Fraser valley of British Columbia is in a very satisfactory position at the present time. I should like to mention the raspberry growers. Those of you who heard me speak about raspberries a year ago will, I am sure, be glad to know that some of the growers out there are looking forward to a better year than they had last year. You will recall that last year berries were offered at six cents a pound. We had a nine cent floor put under them which saved the crop. I could quote some letters of appreciation for what the government did for the farmers. Strawberries are also a problem, not in their production but in getting a suitable price to the producer for his product. This should be in the neighbourhood of 17 cents a pound. Our poultrymen are also in a little trouble. Those of you who heard the minister speak some time ago heard him mention broilers. In 1953 I think some 30 million pounds were produced; in 1958, 180 millions pounds were produced, or six times as much. With such a large production the price is bound to go down. One of the things that is disturbing some of the growers in the Fraser valley at the present time is the frozen pea problem in relation to the entire crop.

I cannot let this opportunity go by without saying a word about the artificial insemination unit in the Fraser valley. By the way, this is just outside of my constituency but it is something that I helped to organize and I am very proud of the results. The first cow was inseminated on February 1, 1945. Two people were employed at that time; at the present time they have 27 employees and after 13 years there are 6,000 members within this association. In 1958, 31,803 cows were inseminated in the Fraser valley. In the Okanagan, 2,022 cows were inseminated; in other subunits in British Columbia, 4,619 cows were inseminated; and in the province of Alberta, if you please, 13,269 cows were inseminated from the unit in the Fraser valley. They have equipment and modern barns; they have a good office and they have good storage facilities there. Most important of all, they are using real top, high-class sires.

I should like to mention one other item before I close, Mr. Chairman, and that is the Canadian writers federation which met at the recent Royal Winter Fair. This is the occasion on which awards to press, radio and television are given. Three British Columbia writers won first prize in that competition. I take off my hat to and congratulate Mr. Armstrong, Mr. Leach and Mr. McPherson on the great work they did.

What about crop insurance? I know there is a difference of opinion about crop insurance. I think I know the minister's attitude and stand in connection with crop insurance. I have made a little study of this problem during the last couple of weeks and I have not changed my mind too much on the subject. Those of you who were in the chamber when the hon. member for York-Humber spoke about unemployment insurance will recall that she mentioned the fact that you did not insure your house against fire today and expect it to burn tomorrow; you did not insure your life today and expect to be killed tomorrow; you did not insure your car today and expect to dump it in the ditch tomorrow. You did insure your employment hoping, I presume, to be employed whenever you wanted to but, if not, you received unemployment insurance. Personally, I think unemployment insurance is overdone a little because I personally have offered unemployed men work and they would not take a job because they were getting unemployment insurance. I wonder whether the statement that Abraham Lincoln made at one time has any relationship to this? Abraham Lincoln said that you cannot help men permanently by doing for them what they could and should do for themselves.

I have another item on old age pensions which I would like to apply to old age farm people. I do not know whether I should take the time to do it but I should like to say that on our farms there are a great many elderly people, some of whom cannot work. I should like to see put into effect in this Canada of ours some scheme by which people living under certain conditions could apply personally to spend their security cheques outside of the country. This would be based upon financial reasons. They might want to go to live with a relative outside of the country. It might have something to do with domestic incompatibility; it might have something to do with health. I believe these people could be far healthier living in another country. I simply close by saying that I feel something should be done under certain conditions for our older people, if they make personal application to those in authority, to allow them to live in another country, spend their money there and receive their cheques there because there are other people coming into this country who certainly do that and live here.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I listened with great interest to what the member for Fraser Valley had to say, particularly in view of the contribution he has made to the development of agriculture in British Columbia as superintendent for many years of the Agassiz experimental station. On his retirement from that position his services to agriculture in British Columbia were acknowledged by farmers' organizations, by all sections of the communities with which he was associated and by farm and other newspapers of British Columbia. I am sure that the name of the member for Fraser Valley will be included in the roll of those who have accomplished much on behalf of the farmers of British Columbia, including such men as the late Professor Sadler of the University of British Columbia, the late Professor Boving, whom the hon. gentleman knew quite well, and Dean Clement.

Before proceeding with my few remarks I want to support the hon. member's representations on behalf of farmers in receipt of old age security payments that the government should give consideration to these people having the opportunity, along with others in receipt of similar payments, to spend their cheques in other countries. Very often when they reach the age of retirement it is necessary that they do so for health reasons and certainly for their greater enjoyment during the winter months in Canada. Having overheard the minister's loudly whispered remark, I wondered whether he was going to call me out of order for referring to old age security.

I rise to say a few words on these estimates as a socialist who realizes the need of long term economic and social planning with respect to agricultural policies in Canada. I am not one who underestimates the difficulties in connection with such an approach to agricultural problems or suggests that all our problems can be solved overnight. I am one who has a great interest in the maintenance of the economic family farm because I believe we should maintain the values that it has preserved in Canadian society and the diversification which is so necessary for the maintenance of a sound democracy.

I am going to illustrate my points from my experience at one time as a peasant farmer in the Kootenays and with long knowledge of the situation there. Agriculture in the Kootenay district commenced about 60 years ago. It was largely promoted by the needs and requirements of the small communities, mining camps, lumber camps and the stern wheeler steamers that operated on the lakes. I knew most of the old timers who located on various relatively small patches of ground, cleared the forest and sold their supplies directly to the customers I have mentioned. I am one who remembers the clearing of almost the first acres of land for agricultural production, and it was no easy job. As a matter of fact, I represent a type of farmer who is more acquainted with the axe, the crosscut saw, now replaced to some extent by the power saw, and the walking plow than with large equipment although owing to the circumstances under which we live there is an increase in the degree of mechanization even on the smaller farms in my constituency.

If we provide the proper circumstances and the proper marketing facilities at a satisfactory price there is a great opportunity for agricultural development in the constituency I have the honour to represent. There is an opportunity for considerable extension of general farming and some stock farming. We talk about developing the north and the hinterland of Canada but we fail to realize what large areas of land we have in this country relatively close to transportation. I can take hon. members to one valley in my constituency where you can stand on a knoll and look at 10,000 acres of black, alluvial soil that only requires draining and transportation facilities. It is 25 miles from the nearest transportation.

There is opportunity for dairy farming to supply the growing cities and for extension of poultry farming and new efforts in fruit farming, having particular regard to the suitability of our district to the growing of a limited variety of apples, of cherries and pears particularly, and small fruit.

There is also opportunity for considerable extension of part-time farming allied to the forestry industry—I am very keen on that—and allied to the tourist industry. We have these opportunities in our district because we have the land, and provided we have correct land utilization these opportunities can be taken advantage of. In our opinion there is a necessity in Canada generally, not only in the constituency I have the honour to represent, for a land use survey conducted as a result of co-operation between the federal and provincial governments. As a result of such a survey there should be a planned and systematic movement of farmers from marginal land. There are persons in my constituency farming marginal land cleared years ago which should have been left in timber, and I am sure the same is true of other hon. members. There should be assistance toward the location of these farmers on suitable land which they can farm to their profit and advantage. There should be a program of reforestation of submarginal lands. That would mean close co-operation between the federal and provincial governments.

To illustrate the opportunities at the present time, let me describe the Slocan valley. It is 30 miles long and contains thousands of acres of fertile bottom land. It has a paved highway throughout its whole length, power throughout its whole length and a river possibly an eighth of a mile wide in places flowing throughout the whole length. You have all the basic requirements of satisfactory agriculture. Yet this valley is largely undeveloped. It is inhabited at the present time by some of that well-known sect, the Sons of Freedom, and a few survivors of the pioneers who have stuck it out. I have written the minister about that problem, and something could be done about it if there was co-operation between the federal and provincial governments. A very large acreage could be brought into production quite close to the major cities in our community. I might say that at the present time we are only producing about 25 per cent of the farm production requirements of the people in our district.

Then there is the Lardeau valley with 16,000 acres of almost undeveloped land which only requires draining in some cases and clearing in others. We also have the Inonoaklin valley, some 15 miles long. All that is lacking is transportation to markets and roads. It is simply a question of economic and social planning and co-operation between the federal and provincial governments to bring this land into satisfactory production, and it requires the co-operation of the local farmers' organizations, chambers of commerce and women's institutes.

So far as my constituency is concerned, all these organizations have full knowledge of what I am referring to today, are interested in the developments and are willing to co-operate with the federal and provincial governments to develop the areas I have mentioned. Now, in so far as land problems are concerned, we have still an abundance of land if we bring into production the areas now lying idle.

The next need is long term loans at low interest rates. Under present circumstances it is impossible for young people to go on the land, clear it and develop it or build the buildings without the capital. This capital can only be provided through long term loans at low interest rates through federal or provincial governments. In this connection, I should like to quote from the report of the royal commission on the tree fruit industry of British Columbia, written by Dean E. D. MacPhee, M.M., M.A., B.Ed., C.A., LL.D. Before doing so, I want to say that in my experience this report is the most able and comprehensive report made to date in the history of British Columbia with respect to all the circumstances surrounding the tree fruit industry. It costs $7, but it would be a good investment, particularly for any member from British Columbia, because it is historical, factual and the recommendations were made after a serious study of the whole question. In connection with what is required with respect to supplying capital, I want to quote from page 798 of the report. This is what the commissioner has to say:

Financial Assistance

In the light of these factors, what recommendations should be made?

1. I believe that the fruit-growing industry should be maintained, and that the needed assistance requires action by both the provincial and federal governments if suitable conditions can be defined. From the standpoint of both governments, it provides the most profitable return available to the residents of these areas.

He is referring to the fruit-growing areas of the interior.

—Despite the fact that land values have risen in some areas to quite unreasonable levels, one cannot envisage any acceptable plan to make other use of much of this land at anything approximating these values—approximating the investments growers have made. Despite the long history of the withdrawal of farmers in other areas of British Columbia from fruit-growing, I am convinced that it is in the interests of the province and the dominion to keep this industry alive in at least parts of the Okanagan, the Similkameen, and in the Creston valleys.

2. Federal program—Fruit-growing is an expensive business per acre in comparison with other forms of farming.

I have had some personal experience in that respect. We were a green English family when we planted the orchard, and my father ordered 25 varieties. Then, we had to regraft the whole lot.

The investment in land and real estate is unusually high, as is shown in table 9. The nature of the operation requires a high expenditure for labour; the amount of equipment required by even the most conservative managers is substantial; the period of waiting before a crop is obtained is unusually long, especially for the production of apples and pears; and the possibility of mixed agriculture is relatively remote. Assistance, to be of value, must therefore be long-term assistance, covering a period of at least 30 years, or the working lifetime of a grower. It must be at rates and under conditions which are better than those available through banks and mortgage companies.

Long-term loans by farm loan boards—Mortgage companies are not a major factor in providing long-term loans in the valleys, nor do I believe that it is to be expected that the chartered banks of Canada will relax their arrangements and terms sufficiently to provide the necessary capital for the rehabilitation of the farms. Short-term loans, whatever their value for growers of annual crops, are of little significance in an industry where the product requires a decade to develop. If the growers who qualify on other scores are to be assisted, and I believe they should be, and must be, the funds that are needed are long-term loans.

I believe it is the responsibility of the federal government to reorganize the farm loan board and to redefine its policies in such a way that these growers are able to undertake the re-establishment of their orchards without placing them under the annual pressures that follow from short-term loans.

The conditions under which, in my opinion, long-term loans should be given are:

This is the part in which I am particularly interested, and I support the commissioner's recommendations wholeheartedly, as a result of my own experience and knowledge of the circumstances.

(a) The farm should not be less than 10 bearing acres, on soils and with climatic conditions that give a grower a reasonable chance of profitability. (In every area, however, there are planted acreages which never have, and never will, qualify under these terms.)

Those are the acreages that are planted on the marginal lands to which I referred.

(b) Loans should be made only to those who have demonstrated managerial capacity better than the average of their district.

(c) Loans should be made for specified purposes, each one of which can be identified and valued:

(i) Replacement of dead and damaged trees.

(ii) Top-working of trees to change a variety of low market value to more market-acceptable varieties.

(iii) Replacement of obsolete varieties.

(iv) Purchase of orchard land.

(v) The purchase of special orchard equipment, including trucks (not automobiles).

(vi) Land rehabilitation.

(d) Supervision and guidance, such as has been provided by the Veterans' Land Act, should be made available, especially for young growers.

The commissioner makes that recommendation without doubt as a result of his inquiry and in ascertaining the numbers of people in the fruit-growing areas who have succeeded under the V.L.A. to a greater extent than they might have succeeded had no supervision been given under the V.L.A.

The provision of some supervision and guidance to young growers is important, and may be critical, and the combination of the V.L.A. service with that of the provincial horticulturists will solve some of the problems. The amount of equity presently required by the farm loan board before a loan will be advanced (35 per cent) is excessive, particularly in the Okanagan valley, where property values are high. If the proposals of the federation of agriculture were carried out and care taken in the selection of growers, I hope that the farm loan board would be prepared to increase the maximum percentage loan to 75 or 80 per cent.

I have examined the statement of policy on farm credit issued by the Canadian federation of agriculture, and believe that they have substantially indicated the changes required in the Farm Loan Board Act and its operations to make this useful to the fruit-growers of these valleys.

[Mr. Herridge.]

Mr. Chairman, the same applies to those who wish to engage in small general farming, livestock farming, small fruit growing and poultry farming in my district. I see that my time is going, so I shall hurry along.

After having provided the land and made capital available, in order to assure sufficient production, in addition to the type of supervision which is suggested by the commissioner, I suggest that very close co-operation is required between the federal and provincial departments of agriculture and the experimental farms. In British Columbia that co-operation has been quite good, as mentioned by the hon. member for Fraser Valley. However, in other circumstances, I understand there has been some overlapping. There is a necessity, in our district particularly, for a general soil analysis survey, owing to changing conditions of the soil. Even in the area in which I live you find climatic and soil conditions change in very short distances. There is not very much information with respect to some of the areas I am discussing now.

We could do with an illustration station. While the experimental station at Agassiz serves the Fraser valley and the experimental station at Summerland serves the Okanagan, our conditions in the Kootenays are very different. I am not suggesting the establishment of an experimental station, but I do suggest we should have an illustration station for the assistance of farmers. These stations would give some leadership and guidance with respect to breeds of cattle, with respect to varieties of fruit which would avoid wastage in unnecessary plantings and things of that sort, and with respect to plant diseases.

I want to have a word or two to say about marketing. I might say that the commissioner wholeheartedly endorses the marketing scheme of Tree Fruits Limited in British Columbia which comes under provincial legislation. After a most exhaustive inquiry and the hearing of witnesses in all parts of the interior of British Columbia where tree fruits are grown he supports the present plan for the marketing of fruit and makes some recommendations for improvement in its operation here and there. But I want to deal with one recommendation he makes with reference to marketing. As found at page 790 of this report he recommends as follows:

That the provincial government request an amendment by the governor in council to the federal order in council under the "Agricultural Products Marketing Act" of Canada to give the fruit board powers similar to those given it by the lieutenant governor in council in the province of British Columbia, and in addition the powers to pool and equalize returns on tree fruits sold in interprovincial and export trade. No change in the federal act would be needed because it already authorizes the delegation of the widest powers to the fruit board.

I must say, Mr. Chairman, that if we could get some planned over-all agricultural policy in Canada there is an opportunity in our district for the development of processing plants such as jam factories, canning plants and cold storage plants for the storage of livestock, dairy and poultry products. In British Columbia in my constituency we used to ship out some of the finest jam in Canada. There is a large market for jam in Canada. We have the soil; we have the young people and we have the ability but it is going to take some planning and some co-operation.

In conclusion, may I say this. I have hurried along in order to complete my remarks by five o'clock. I think it is necessary that some careful reseach be done in order to obtain accurate figures as to the costs of production of crops and livestock in various regions in Canada. We have the bureau of statistics figures. We had the figures given to us by the minister from his point of view. We have the figures provided by growers organizations or farmers organizations which on occasion make representations to the federal and provincial governments. I think it is necessary that we have some research done in this connection so that we may have figures which are acceptable to governments and to the agricultural producers as a sound basis for the operation of the farm prices stabilization act. In our opinion, Mr. Chairman, it is only by this form of economic and social planning in relation to agriculture that the future of the family farm can be assured.

I have hurried through my remarks, but I am firmly of the opinion that we are not going to solve this problem until it is approached from a completely non-partisan point of view. In my opinion, the objective is very much worth while. When one goes through the prairies and sees, shall I say, the ruin of the countryside by the development of these large industrial farms—the small rural communities being decimated, the country church and the country amenities being destroyed by this development—I think it is up to all of us, regardless of party, to use our influence in this parliament, in the legislatures of this country and in the various organizations to which we belong, working toward what I consider to be an extremely worth while objective, namely the maintenance and improvement of the economic family farm in Canada.

(Translation):

Mr. Dorion: You will allow me, Mr. Chairman, before beginning my remarks, to commend all those who up to now have taken part in this discussion. Their sincere and objective attitude proves how much importance they attach to the problem of agriculture in this country.

Being myself the representative of an entirely agricultural riding, which has no urban centre, it is proper that I should, in my turn, express the feelings, views and claims of the constituency of Bellechasse, of the province of Quebec and of the country as a whole, with regard to improving the position of a class which is absolutely essential to the economy of this country.

At the very outset of my remarks, I want to say a word about the issue raised by the hon. members for Beauce (Mr. Racine) and Charlevoix (Mr. Asselin) in respect of the producing and marketing of pulpwood in the province of Quebec, in Ontario and New Brunswick. It has been rightly stated that the corporations which develop our forest resources for the purpose of making paper are probably the first to blame for the bad marketing conditions which affect our farmers, not only in Quebec but also in Ontario and New Brunswick.

The other day, following a question I had directed to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton), we learned that 17 of these companies have been prosecuted for infringement of the Combines Investigation Act while shamefully, deliberately and systematically exploiting—I have to use this word—the isolated small producers in our rural areas. Those punitive measures will not of course settle the problem. However, in taking this action according to law and within its constitutional responsibilities, the present government has shown a fairness and a sense of justice which deserve commendation.

In this respect, I entirely approve the remarks made more particularly by the hon. member for Charlevoix. And following the suggestions he made, may I be allowed—

(Text):

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being five o'clock it is my duty, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15, to rise, report progress and request leave to sit again later this day or at the next sitting of the house, as the case may be.

Progress reported.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private and public bills, the former having precedence, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

Private Bills

PRIVATE BILLS

SECOND READINGS—SENATE BILLS

Mr. Speaker: As there are a number of items under this heading, is it the wish of the house to have the group of divorce bills standing for second reading taken up under one motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Very well, by unanimous consent.

Bill SD-106, for the relief of Morris Gordon.—Mr. McCleave.

Bill SD-107, for the relief of Maurice Castonguay.—Mr. McCleave.

Bill SD-108, for the relief of Rita Lucia Palmieri Bellefleur.—Mr. McCleave.

Bill SD-109, for the relief of Alex Groot.—Mr. McCleave.

Bill SD-110, for the relief of Gustave Rene Gosselin.—Mr. McCleave.

Bill SD-111, for the relief of Marie Berthe Jeannine Quesnel Patenaude.—Mr. McCleave.

Bill SD-112, for the relief of Wauneta Langill Bourque.—Mr. McCleave.

Bill SD-113, for the relief of Pierrette Bertrand Suchereault, otherwise known as Pierrette Bertrand Chussereault.—Mr. McCleave.

Bill SD-114, for the relief of Yolande Bosse Murphy.—Mr. McCleave.

Bill SD-115, for the relief of Joseph Rolland Wright.—Mr. McCleave.

Bill SD-116, for the relief of Rosalie Jakes Reisinger.—Mr. McCleave.

Bill SD-117, for the relief of Jacqueline Ann Rosenfeld Bernstein.—Mr. McCleave.

Bill SD-118, for the relief of Margit Elizabeth Mary Temke Malcolm.—Mr. McCleave.

Bill SD-119, for the relief of Celia Claire Kanigsberg Dickman.—Mr. McCleave.

Bill SD-120, for the relief of Constantin Deacur.—Mr. McCleave.

Bill SD-121, for the relief of Bernard Fourcade.—Mr. McCleave.

Bill SD-122, for the relief of Sylvia Mary Mefrige Makad.—Mr. McCleave.

Bill SD-123, for the relief of Marjorie Seymour Hammond Pearson.—Mr. McCleave.

Bill SD-124, for the relief of Helene Dagenais Roy.—Mr. McCleave.

Bill SD-125, for the relief of Violet Winnifred Kean Newton Armstrong.—Mr. McCleave.

Bill SD-126, for the relief of Marlene Marle Korn.—Mr. McCleave.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Bill SD-127, for the relief of Elaine Shirley Dorfman Moscovitch.—Mr. McCleave.

Bill SD-128, for the relief of Eric Alexander McConnell.—Mr. McCleave.

Bill SD-129, for the relief of Etta Rose Palevsky Lerman.—Mr. McCleave.

Bill SD-130, for the relief of Edward Bruce Bonneville.—Mr. McCleave.

Bill SD-131, for the relief of Pamela Margaret Clark Creber.—Mr. McCleave.

Bill SD-132, for the relief of June Bernice Rath O'Hanley.—Mr. McCleave.

Bill SD-133, for the relief of Michael Zuk.—Mr. McCleave.

Bill SD-134, for the relief of George Frederick Davies.—Mr. McCleave.

Motion agreed to on division, bills read the second time and referred to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR PRINTING OF NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS IN BOTH ENGLISH AND FRENCH

On the order:

Second reading of Bill C-9, respecting the printing of negotiable instruments in the English and the French languages.

(Translation):

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, for several months now, I have been meeting my distinguished colleagues from the other provinces—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: I take it the hon. member wishes to move second reading of the bill which stands on the order paper as item No. 14.

I have given considerable thought to the propriety of permitting a debate on this bill and on a further bill which stands on the order paper as No. 16, having regard to the fact that the house is already debating the second reading of a bill which for all practical purposes is identical in substance. Indeed, two of the bills are identical in wording. I think this is a situation which is without precedent in our house and I first considered whether the motions should be accepted to stand on the order paper at the same time. I am satisfied that this was quite in order, but I came to the conclusion that it would be quite improper to permit a second debate on identically the same subject matter as the subject matter of a debate which was already proceeding. In other words, the house is not going to occupy itself on two separate occasions under two separate headings with exactly the same business. That would not be reasonable, and I can find no support or authority for following such a course. Thus

I have come to the conclusion that this bill must stand, as well as the other bill in the same terms, or at least in terms for exactly the same purpose, until the bill which was first moved has been disposed of either by being withdrawn, which would open the door for one of these other bills to proceed, or by being approved, which would automatically dispose of these bills for the simple reason that the house would not vote twice on the same subject matter any more than it would debate the same subject matter twice.

That is the conclusion I have reached. If there is any disagreement with this view I should be glad to hear briefly what it is.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your remarks, but I felt that the wording of this bill was more specific than that of the other bills suggested, and put greater emphasis on the principle of bilingualism. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I should like to have the honour and pleasure of dealing with this bill.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: I understand the hon. member to say that there is a differentiation between the two bills. However, I have taken the trouble to go into the subject matter very carefully, and I must say that unless I can be shown in some more detail what this difference is, I must adhere to the ruling I have just made. I must say that I cannot see any distinction.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): No doubt Your Honour has fully investigated this matter, but I should like to draw your attention to citation No. 373 to be found at page 273 of Beauchesne's fourth edition which says, in section (2):

> There is no rule which restrains the presentation of two or more bills relating to the same subject and containing similar provisions.

It may be that Your Honour feels that this does not apply in the case of provisions which are identical, but the citation does appear to allow debate on similar bills provided there has been no decision on second reading either accepting or rejecting such bills.

Mr. Speaker: That citation is, in my view, not applicable in this case because it refers to bills dealing with a similar subject matter. The hon. member will recall that we had an instance last session of a public bill and a government bill, both of which dealt with the same subject matter, proceeding at the same time without restriction. But they were not identical bills. The citation also refers, as the Clerk reminds me, to the presentation of the bills. No objection was taken to the presentation of these bills. It was only when they reached the stage of second reading that I found it necessary to intervene.

I refer the house to just one authority. Bourinot, fourth edition at page 329, states as a principle that unless this rule were in existence the time of the house might be used in the discussion of motions of the same nature, and contradictory decisions would sometimes be arrived at in the course of the same session.

Accordingly, I am afraid I cannot allow the hon. member to proceed with his motion.

Mr. O. J. Godin (Nickel Belt): Now that a decision has been made, Mr. Speaker, I should like to raise a point of order or, possibly a question of privilege. I feel that this is one of the rare occasions where it may be both. I feel I should raise a point of order and request that standing order 19(2) be adhered to by this house. We should afford all hon. members the privilege of being able to vote on the motion of the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Boulanger) that is coming up.

For the assistance of hon. members I shall read standing order 19 to which reference was made last Tuesday.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is raising a point of order. There is no subject matter before the house at the moment and I fail to see how he could take up a point of order. He did indicate there might be a question of privilege. Unless the house has something before it I think he himself is out of order in speaking. We had better proceed to the next item. I will have the Clerk read the next item and then I shall hear the hon. member.

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR PRINTING OF NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS IN BOTH ENGLISH AND FRENCH

On the order:

Second reading of Bill C-12, an act to amend the Financial Administration Act—Mr. Ricard.

Mr. Speaker: The ruling I made with respect to the bill in the name of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon), item No. 14, applies also to this one. I cannot allow it to proceed to debate on second reading.

Mr. O. J. Godin (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, standing order 19 reads as follows:

> 19. (1) Questions put by members and notices of motions, not taken up when called may (upon the request of the government) be allowed to stand and retain their precedence; otherwise they will disappear from the order paper. They may, however, be renewed.

The second portion of this standing order has more direct application. It reads as follows:

(2) Orders not proceeded with when called, upon the like request, may be allowed to stand retaining their precedence; otherwise they shall be dropped and be placed on the order paper for the next sitting after those of the same class at a similar stage.

I realize I am a new member and perhaps not well versed in these matters. It has been the practice of this house to permit a member on his own to stand a bill or order for second reading without adhering to the rule and shifting the item to its proper place in accordance with the standing order. This is a privilege all hon. members have. I feel it would be very wrong to continue the procedure whereby an hon. member can remove the privilege of another hon. member. I realize I may be subject to being overruled by a member of the cabinet or by the house itself. If we allow a practice under which one hon. member may take away the right of another with respect to a bill which he feels is important and should move up in the order of business we will be adhering to a bad principle.

Your Honour has indicated that this is possibly the first time in the history of this parliament that bills had to stand in this fashion. I felt this was an opportune moment for me to indicate that the rule should apply to these bills when an objection is made by an hon. member and they should take the position which the standing order of this house requires them to take. If the rule had been applied, item No. 1 on the order paper today would be item No. 19 and the bills in question would appear immediately after item 28 on the order paper.

I submit that if an hon. member requests the privilege of having the rules adhered to that privilege should not be taken away from him by any hon. member of this house and that the government as stated in the rule on the proper occasions could make the request for retaining precedence.

Mr. Speaker: I believe the hon. member has a point. Our practice in this house as long as I have been here undoubtedly has been to allow an order to stand under this heading of public bills and orders if the hon. member in whose name it appears requests that it stand. It is true that the rule says that it may stand upon the request of the government. Rationalizing our practice with the rule as closely as we can I believe that we have assumed that if the government did not object to the hon. member's request to have his order stood and no objection was made it was assumed that the government had requested it to stand and the item was allowed to stand, the order was retained and the order paper was printed in the same order as it had been printed before.

All of us in this house have been accustomed to seeing a great number of items under this heading allowed to stand one after another and appear again and perhaps allowed to stand a second day and again a third day and then come back and be dealt with in the same order in which they were originally placed.

If strictly applied the rule would require the leader of the house to say he had no objection to the item standing but I think we have fallen into the careless practice of assuming that he says that when he does not say anything. That is my interpretation of what has developed as our practice. Perhaps the more correct way would be for an hon. member who wishes his bill to stand to rise in his place and say, "With the leave of the government I wish this item to stand," and that would put the house leader under the necessity of saying "Yes" or "No" and the matter could be dealt with in that way.

As we have followed the practice to which I referred as careless, perhaps we should consider whether in the future we might be more careful of what the rule says. Because we have followed that practice I do not see how I can interfere with the order paper as it stands today. However, I will take the hon. member's point under advisement and proceed accordingly.

The hon. member has asked that item 16 stand.

An hon. Member: Has it?

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure.

Mr. Green: Stand.

(Translation):

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should be very glad if my bill were allowed to remain in the order in which it is now.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: The rule says that upon the request of the government it may stand. I understand the house leader has asked that it stand.

Mr. Green: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: Therefore, I declare that this item stands.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, to come back to my bill, I note that it is not altogether identical with the others which have been proposed. For instance, part of the explanatory notes of Bill No. C-4 read as follows:

—it is enacted . . . that the notes payable to bearer on demand and intended for circulation in Canada issued by the bank, shall be printed in both the official languages—

Whereas Bill C-9 says:

—shall be printed in both—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order!

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon:

—official languages at the same time.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order!

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: There is a difference.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: I understand the hon. member is attempting to revert to business which has already been disposed of and that we cannot do.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING READJUSTMENT OF REPRESENTATION IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS

On the order:

Second reading of Bill C-14, an act to amend the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1952, with respect to the readjustment of representation in the House of Commons.—Mr. Fisher.

Mr. Howard: I would like to request the house leader to give permission to allow it to stand.

Mr. Green: I do not want to be accused of being a dictator. However, following up the regular practice, I would ask that this stand.

Mr. Benidickson: You must be consistent.

Mr. Speaker: The bill stands.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT REQUIRING RETURNS SHOWING INCOMES OF POLITICAL PARTIES

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena) moved the second reading of Bill C-17, to amend the Canada Elections Act (election expenses).

He said: The purpose of this bill is indicated in the explanatory notes and was also indicated during the last session. It is to have apply the same principle that applies to candidates and contributions to candidates to the contributions to political parties themselves and to require that political parties, like candidates in an election, file a statement respecting the contributions that have been made to them and the source and the amount of the expenditures.

During the last session the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) had a number of comments to make on this bill and on rereading his remarks of last year I was pleased to see that he indicated he would endorse it this session. He will now be able to deal with it.

We find that when it comes to election expenses the larger the country grows, the more wealth it has and the larger its population, the more money there is around and the more money is spent for election purposes by political parties. Some millions and millions of dollars have been spent in recent years. It is estimated that some $7 million to $8 million was spent by the Conservatives alone during the last election, and we are of the opinion that the general public is entitled to know what elements of society, if any, are attempting to subvert political parties.

A candidate must disclose the source of contributions made toward his election expenses. That being so, we feel that the same principle should extend to a political party itself. We all know the axiom that he who pays the piper calls the tune. I think the public is entitled to know who is paying the piper with respect to parties as well as with respect to candidates.

I do not intend to go into too much detail or make too extensive remarks on moving the second reading of this bill. The bill was dealt with to a degree during the last session and undoubtedly, as the hon. member for Edmonton West indicated at the last session, he will support it now in order to get it in the hands of the privileges and elections committee this year where we can go into it in great detail.

In years past there has been an unsavory history of contributions to political parties. We know that in some instances people who make contributions get the spoils, or get on the gravy train, if there are any spoils or any gravy trains involved. I would like to put it this way. I should like to point out what the application of the present act means and how it is complied with or not complied with, as the case may be. I should like to do that by making reference to the returns which were filed by some of the candidates in the province of British Columbia and then pose the question whether we should not have a little closer look at contributions which are made to political parties.

My good friend from British Columbia, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green), filed a statement or his official agent did on his behalf. We find an item in the return having to do with contributions to the candidate's fund in that constituency, or toward the Conservative candidate who is the Minister of Public Works, by a Mr. Frederick Field. His address is listed as 675 West Hastings, Vancouver. He made a contribution of $5,000, which is a pretty substantial amount of money. We find that the same individual,

Mr. Frederick Field, at the same address in Vancouver, made a contribution toward the expenses of the candidate who is now the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Jung) in the amount of $7,675.88, which is a pretty hefty amount of money to put into a campaign. We find that this same individual, Mr. Frederick Field, paid to the tune of $5,000 toward the campaign expenses of the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Henderson). My good friend, the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Broome) also was earmarked for a contribution. He did not fare so well as the other three individuals; he got only $3,000 from Frederick Field. Here we find one individual in Vancouver who, from the returns that I have —they may not be all complete; he may have had made other contributions to other candidates—contributed over $20,000 toward the campaign funds or the campaign expenses of the four individuals I have mentioned who now sit in this house.

As one can appreciate, this is a pretty hefty amount of money. Where did it come from? We do not know whether he was handling it in transit from somebody else. Whether it came from other sources is far beyond my knowledge. Whether some consideration was given to Mr. Field himself at a later stage by this government remains to be appreciated by each individual in his own light, but we find surprisingly enough that Mr. Field who dished out these 20,000 bucks at least ended up on December 1, 1953, by being appointed as a director of the Bank of Canada and the industrial development bank on a temporary basis. He was appointed for a three-year term on the first day of March.

There are other items listed, large amounts of money, in the thousands of dollars, for other candidates. The attempt is made by candidates to list the total amount of their expense contributions as coming from one organization, from a constituency organization of a political party or from the provincial headquarters of a political party. The point is that the present provisions of the act requiring the candidate to file his expenses are not complied with. The intent of the provisions is not complied with. The individual candidate can list that he received $6,000, $7,000, $8,000 or $10,000 from a political organization and there is no indication as to the people who contributed toward that lump sum.

The intent of the act in the first instance was to require the candidate to file his election expenses and show who made contributions to his election fund. This has been overcome by candidates filing a report indicating that they got their money only from one source, that source being, as I said, the constituency association or the provincial organization or the national organization of the particular party. The source might also be some other organization or individual whose sole duty was merely to handle campaign fund contributions from the central party and distribute them to the particular candidates.

The intent of the bill is to attempt to meet the requirement set out in the act at the present time that the public are entitled to know the source of campaign fund contributions. We will then not have in the future such cases as I have just mentioned where one individual can be listed by four separate candidates as having contributed $20,000 with the result that people wonder later, after that individual is appointed by the government as a director of a couple of organizations, whether or not there is some nefarious intent involved. I am not suggesting that there was but I am saying that people would probably ask themselves this question if they had known of the situation. It is something that we should attempt to overcome. We should attempt to maintain the greatest possible degree of morality with regard to political contributions.

Mr. Lambert: May I ask the hon. member a question? Would he place in the same category the appointment by the Saskatchewan government of certain people, formerly colleagues of his in the house, to positions under the Saskatchewan government?

Mr. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, it would appear that the hon. member is not going to answer the question so I should like to proceed with the debate that has been initiated on this bill. The subject matter of course, is of very vital and deep interest to all hon. members because it involves a proposed amendment to the Canada Elections Act and each member of the house is very much interested in the contents of the Canada Elections Act as well as the operation of the statute because it is by means of that machinery that we have all found our way to this chamber as members thereof. The bill deals with one of the most vexing problems confronting any Canadian citizen who offers himself for office on the federal level, namely the processes whereby he obtains the funds necessary to run his political campaign. These funds are popularly known, of course, as the sinews of war.

As I listened to the hon. member explain the bill it seemed to me that he has a very dark and suspicious outlook with regard to the level of public morality in this country. No doubt he was speaking for himself and he is entitled to do so, but in participating in this debate I want to deal with my understanding of the bill before the house from my own experience as a candidate in several elections since 1951. Before the hon. member spoke I had given him the benefit of the doubt and had suspected that he might be preoccupied with the problem confronting every member resulting from the rising cost of conducting election campaigns. I had thought that the amendment that he proposed to the act perhaps would make some small contribution toward reducing the ceiling on the costs of running an election campaign. However, in listening to his remarks I found that this idea did not enter into his interpretation of the amendment.

In a democratic society such funds must be raised from private sources. We have no access whatsoever to public funds in obtaining the necessary finances to carry on our election campaigns. All of these funds are provided through voluntary support. From my experience I have found that there are at least four major categories into which we can divide the sources of the funds obtained by the local committee, the provincial committee or the national campaign committee. First of all, some of these funds are obtained from large business corporations. Second, smaller business firms in the local communities make their contributions, usually on the level of the local campaign committees. Again, with the development of modern society and the emergence of other organized groups, labour unions have made substantial contributions to political campaigns. In Canada there is a tendency for this source of voluntary contributions to support one particular political group. However, from personal experience I find that the most important source of election campaign funds is contributions made by supporters of the party within the constituency, by donors who anonymously contribute to a particular individual's election campaign.

In addition, and I doubt whether this practice prevails in the larger urban areas, in rural western constituencies particularly it has become almost an accepted practice to help to defray election expenses by the old fashioned method of passing the hat or taking up a collection. By that means expenses arising from renting a hall are covered at the local community level. I know that in my constituency organization we try to make every poll in the district responsible for the expenses arising from the carrying on of the campaign in that particular section of the constituency. From my experience in several elections those are the main sources of campaign funds. As I examine the sources of the funds, I see no reason to be unduly suspicious that the contributions made are designed to subvert the true processes of our democratic society.

As I said at the outset of my remarks, I am speaking from my personal experience. However, if it is true that funds from these various sources are used as suggested by the sponsor of this bill for subversive purposes, it suggests an unfortunate level of political morality in this country, which I trust does not operate too generally or in too many constituencies. I have never observed that tendency myself, and therefore I have the feeling that the introduction, the interjection, the emphasis or the underscoring of this particular aspect of the problem of raising funds is a tendency toward projection on the part of the hon. member concerned.

I would have one very strong objection to supporting the amendment as it is outlined in the bill. The essence of our democratic system is the secret ballot. I think if there is any subversion involved at all in the situation, that subversion would occur as a result of the amendment. There would be a tendency to violate the principle of the secret ballot because there would be widespread knowledge as to the support of the private citizen, the business corporation or other groups I mentioned, given to particular political parties by the donors concerned.

Mr. Howard: That exists right now.

Mr. Dinsdale: To a very minor extent.

Mr. Howard: To a very major extent.

Mr. Dinsdale: I think the more we can preserve the secret ballot, the healthier our democratic system will be.

Mr. Howard: Certainly, but it has nothing to do with the secret ballot.

Mr. Dinsdale: Although the hon. member did not mention this particular aspect of the problem, if the hon. member is concerned about the rising costs of conducting an election campaign I think there are other ways of dealing with the problem than the one outlined in the bill before the house. I am going to refer to the systems that are followed in the United States and the United Kingdom. A ceiling is placed on the moneys that can be expended by each of the major groups. Whether or not there is adherence to this ceiling, I do not know, but the ceiling is set at the sum of $3 million. In the United Kingdom, they have provided more direct control over expenditures. Expenditures are limited to so much per voter in each riding, plus a flat sum that is allowed for the national campaign.

These are attempts to cope with this problem by legislative means. In the United States, perhaps, the legislative approach has not been too successful. In the United Kingdom, I understand that the legislation is effective in imposing a ceiling. I would suggest that a much better, a much more democratic approach to this problem, is to operate a legitimate campaign. The old days of vote buying and other devices that used to be resorted to in the elementary stage of the development of our democratic processes, I feel sure are now past. We can further reduce the expenditure ceiling by encouraging voluntary workers, by resorting to old fashioned techniques of economy, by having the campaign conducted on a voluntary basis, party workers volunteering their services in all respects, the scrutineers manning the polls and so forth, which tends to be one of the major items of expenditure.

I think that rather than endeavouring to impose morality by legislative means upon the body politic, we would be making a much more substantial contribution to our electoral processes if we worked toward raising the level of political morality generally. It is well-known truism that stateways do not make folkways. You cannot impose morality upon the public by legislative means. If there is larceny in the soul, it will burst out regardless of how many legislative prohibitions are imposed. If my hon. friend is concerned about the tendency toward subversion of our democratic processes by means of the financial control exercised through voluntary contributions, I think he would be making a more positive contribution toward the solution of this problem if he campaigned on behalf of raising the level of public morality generally; that should be part of our election campaign in a democratic society. After all, those things that broaden the values, ideas and morals are not going to be controlled from without, but control must come from within.

Mr. W. L. M. Creaghan (Westmorland): Mr. Speaker, time will not permit a very long debate tonight because we had such difficulty in deciding which public bill would be under debate. However, for the few moments at my disposal I should like to discuss generally what is intended by the bill introduced by the sponsor of Bill C-17. In the first place, I think I had better explain to the house that, generally, I am opposed to the legislation because, in my opinion, there have been too many attempts within the short time I have been here to make piecemeal amendments to the Canada Elections Act.

A brief review of the session just concluded will indicate to the house that last year there were five bills introduced, bills C-8, C-15, C-18, C-19 and C-23. The same bills have been re-introduced during this session. They are identical in form, and in fact they have the same sponsors as the bills that were unsuccessful in 1958. I am also of the firm opinion that amendments to the Canada Elections Act are most important and should only be introduced after serious and careful study by the committee of the house which is responsible for that type of legislation, and after the advice of experts who are available to assist such a committee.

Another principle to which I am opposed, and which appears in this bill, is the infringement upon basic freedom. In the first place, the bill makes it mandatory that the return be filed within four months. If it must be filed, then it follows that it must be accurate. When filed it automatically becomes a public document. There are thousands of electors in Canada who make voluntary contributions of small amounts to political parties of their choice. I know that there are many thousands of supporters in the country who make personal contributions to the party which the mover represents. Equally, there are as many or more who make voluntary contributions to the party which I have the honour to represent. These people make these contributions on one understanding, namely that their names will remain secret.

As soon as a person runs for office he is marked and tabbed for life as a supporter of a certain political party. The same thing will apply if photostatic copies of the contribution list were made public in each and every individual riding. That is something that could well result if the central committee were obligated to make public its contribution list. In fact, in my opinion, this bill, if passed, might do more to take away our freedom than any bill introduced in recent years.

I know that the mover last year referred to the fact that similar legislation was in existence in the province of British Columbia. That may be so, Mr. Speaker. However, that does not mean that it would be good legislation for Canada as a whole. As the hon. member who preceded me said, the most important thing in a democracy is to make certain that the ballot remains secret as it is today. Otherwise we might end up with a one-party system in Canada as we see it, unfortunately, in too many communist countries.

Mr. Howard: We are very close to it here.

Mr. Creaghan: If it were mandatory that the individual donor to a national political party have his name made public, he would automatically be marked, tabbed and accepted as a supporter of that party. There are today in Canada not only individuals but many companies, both large and small, which make voluntary contributions to election campaigns. Many of them, including individuals, make contributions to more than one party. In fact,

I think the major source of campaign funds is the money that is collected voluntarily on the local level. This bill does not try to find out the source of that contribution unless the contribution finds its way into central headquarters.

Mr. Howard: That provision is in the act already.

Mr. Creaghan: Central headquarters is the hub of any political party. Are we to be obligated by this bill to separate what national headquarters might spend during the time of an election. How do we designate what it spends for ordinary day to day expenses? I do not think any hon. member present will disagree with me when I make the statement that, in order for a party to remain national, it is necessary to maintain at all times active national headquarters. It is necessary to have a permanent staff. I believe that all parties represented here have such a staff. Staffs must be paid salaries. Headquarters must be provided for them. There is also the matter of the publication of literature. In my opinion it would be absolutely impossible for any national headquarters to separate what is actually spent on elections. In the party which I represent an election campaign goes on continuously.

Mr. Speaker, I realize that there are other hon. members who wish to take part in this debate. In conclusion I wish only to state that I am opposed to the legislation principally because of the fact, as I said originally, that I do not like to see such an important act being amended piecemeal from session to session without the research and study to which it is entitled. In the second place, I am opposed to the principle of making it necessary for a donor to have his name filed in a public document and advertised throughout the country.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

Mr. Pickersgill: No.

Mr. Nielsen: It is hardly worth while, Mr. Speaker, in the short time that is available to me now, to make a start on the rather lengthy remarks I have to make in connection with this bill. However, there are two points which I perhaps might be able to make in the two minutes that are left to me. The first is with regard to the declaration of election expenses by a central committee. Apart from the fact that it is rather difficult to define just what the bill means by a central committee—and I think this point was raised by the hon. member from Edmonton who spoke on the bill last year—whether it is the national central committee or the central committee of the province or of a local association, there is this difficulty and I fail to see how the bill gets around it.

I am not suggesting for a moment that what I am about to say will actually come about, but let us suppose that the Canadian Labour Congress determines, as a matter of policy, to support a particular political party. As I say, I am not suggesting that it is the case but am just assuming it for the purpose of making this point. Suppose this policy was written into their constitution. Suppose that policy and that constitution required the contribution by various labour unions across the country for the specific purpose of earmarking funds to support political campaigns of a particular political party, and I mention no party by a name. Then suppose it comes campaign time and the election is over and the requirement exists that the particular political party which I am assuming the C.L.C. is supporting must file a return under this amendment. All the particular political party would have to do, and still be fully within the terms of this particular amendment, would be to state that the source of their funds was the C.L.C. How does this amendment, in the light of the point I have just made, assist in designating individuals or concerns from whom these funds are made available to political parties?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I inquire what the business is for Monday and Tuesday, and perhaps the leader of the house would project his mind a little bit further into next week.

Mr. Green: As I announced last night, Mr. Speaker, there will be a supply motion on Monday. On Tuesday we are asking for interim supply.

Mr. Chevrier: On Tuesday?

Mr. Green: On Wednesday. I think there will also be supplementary estimates. I cannot as yet say what particular legislation we will take up after that on Wednesday, but I will let the hon. member know.

It being two minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Questions

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

AIRPORT CONSTRUCTION, SAULT STE. MARIE

Question No. 118—Mr. Nixon:

1. Is the contract with the firm of Michaud & Simard, for the building of an airport at Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, on schedule?

2. When will tenders be called for the erection of administrative buildings, provision of equipment, etc.?

3. Have any provisions been made in plans for the new airport, for planes equipped with skis and for private planes?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

1. The Michaud & Simard contract is considered by the departmental engineers to be about 15% behind schedule, due principally to wet weather in 1958.

2. It is hoped that tenders can be called for the terminal building, maintenance garage, etc. in the winter of 1959-60. Provision has been made in the 1959-60 main estimates for the purchase of equipment.

3. No special provisions have been made for ski-equipped aircraft but the graded areas adjacent to the runways will be available for such operations.

DORVAL AIRPORT OVERHAUL BASE—ARCHITECTS AND ENGINEERS

Question No. 220—Mr. Fisher:

1. What were the names and addresses of consulting architects and engineers used by Trans-Canada Air Lines in the development of its hangar and overhaul base at Dorval airport?

2. Were their services engaged for this specific job or have they been the regular architects and engineers of Trans-Canada Air Lines?

3. If not, have they been used on any previous Trans-Canada Air Lines work? If so, on what project?

4. Has Pigott Construction Company had any successful tenders with Trans-Canada Air Lines in the last ten years, and if so, on what contracts, to what value?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

1. Ross, Fish, Duschenes & Barrett, 4115 Sherbrooke Street West, Montreal, Quebec.

2. The services of this firm were engaged for this specific job.

3. The firm has not been used on any previous T.C.A. work.

4. Pigott Construction Company was awarded the general contract for construction of the Trans-Canada Air Lines hangar and overhaul base at Dorval airport, theirs being the lowest bid received in response to a public call for tenders. No other contracts have been awarded to this firm by T.C.A. in the past 10 years.

[The following items were passed in committee of supply]:

NATIONAL GALLERY OF CANADA

236. Administration, operation and maintenance, including grants as detailed in the estimates, $879,640.

237. Payment to the national gallery purchase account for the purpose of acquiring works of art in conformity with section 8 of the National Gallery Act, $25,000.

PUBLIC ARCHIVES AND NATIONAL LIBRARY

A—Public archives—

308. General administration and technical services, $542,870.

B—National library—

309. General administration, $188,279.

310. Payment to the national library purchase account for the purpose of acquiring books, in conformity with section 12 of the National Library Act, $40,000.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, March 16, 1959

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, 1958-59

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting further supplementary estimates for the financial year ending March 31, 1959, was presented by Hon. Donald M. Fleming, (Minister of Finance), read by Mr. Speaker to the house, and referred to the committee of supply.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

NEWFOUNDLAND—STATEMENT ON REQUESTS FOR POLICE REINFORCEMENTS AND JUDICIAL INQUIRY

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the house would wish to know that late last week I received two telegrams from the premier of Newfoundland, the first regarding a request that 50 additional Royal Canadian Mounted Police constables be sent to that province, and the second requesting the setting up of a judicial inquiry into the troubles that have occurred there.

While this government has no intention of infringing on matters under provincial jurisdiction, I feel impelled to say that the premier of Newfoundland has greatly aggravated the present situation in that province by intervening in a labour dispute in a way which apparently goes beyond the usual role of government. The result, as might have been anticipated, has been a violent reaction on the part of the workers concerned. Under the circumstances we have concluded that it would be provocative and likely to cause further outbreaks of violence to authorize the sending of further members of the R.C.-M.P. at this time.

We feel that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police has performed its duty with fairness and efficiency. The situation in Newfoundland will be kept constantly under review and if the mounted police, in the proper discharge of their duties, are subject to or encounter intimidation or threats by lawbreakers reconsideration will be given immediately to this decision.

With regard to the request that a commissioner be appointed to inquire into and assess responsibility for acts of lawlessness and violence in Newfoundland, there seems to be no necessity for the setting up of such a commission. I feel I speak for all hon. members in this house when I say that the important consideration now is not to have a commission or any other inquiry set up to determine a responsibility which is so apparent. The important thing and the urgent necessity at the present time is to bring about an end to the existing situation. I would think that the danger of disorder and violence would be very much reduced if all those concerned would agree to a cooling off period of say two weeks. The whole country, I am sure, would welcome some reasonable action being taken along these lines.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I see the Minister of Justice on his feet, and I understand he wishes to make a statement which is related to the statement made by the Prime Minister. With the concurrence of the Leader of the Opposition, both these statements might be made and both commented on together.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I regret to have to advise the house that I have received a letter dated March 12 from the commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in which he submits his resignation. I have advised the commissioner by letter today that under the circumstances I have no alternative but to accept his decision and will prepare a submission accordingly to the governor in council. I will ask consent of the house to have these letters printed as an appendix to today's Hansard.

The facts leading up to this resignation can be summarized as follows. On Sunday, March 8, I received a wire from the attorney general of Newfoundland asking for 50 additional Royal Canadian Mounted Police reinforcements and citing the terms of the contract. I immediately consulted with Commissioner Nicholson and found that he in turn had been advised by Superintendent Parsons, the officer commanding the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in Newfoundland, that he had made a request to the attorney general of Newfoundland.

As a result of these consultations, however, it was agreed that the situation might be kept under control by the sending of some 25 members of the Newfoundland constabulary from the city of St. John's into the strike area. This was done, and a further 20 Royal Canadian Mounted Police from other points in the divisional area were also brought into the strike area and, on this basis, it was reported that control of the situation might be maintained. However, arrangements were made by the commissioner, with my approval, to alert the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in the other maritime provinces so that if the situation should require it and authority should be forthcoming, reinforcements could be sent in from the outside with a minimum of delay. This information was accordingly conveyed by the commissioner to Superintendent Parsons and by him to the attorney general of Newfoundland.

Following the clash that took place on the highway outside the town of Badger on Tuesday evening, March 10, the situation apparently deteriorated further and Superintendent Parsons advised the commissioner that in view of the movement of 100 further strikers into the area, he felt that the call for reinforcements should be renewed.

On receipt of this information from the commissioner on Wednesday morning, I approved his taking the steps necessary to gather the men in the maritimes who had been alerted, and to have air transportation arranged. I told him, however, that while these steps were to be taken as a precaution I was not giving authority for the plane to take off from Moncton, and that this was not to take place until I had an opportunity to consider the situation further and to consult with my colleagues with regard to it. These consultations were held on Wednesday afternoon, and it was decided that a state of readiness should be maintained but that reinforcements should not be dispatched at that time.

The commissioner thereupon informed me that he could not agree with the decision, in view of his understanding of the effect of the contract, and that he would have to resign. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, I might stop here to say that the decision of the commissioner has been under review. I do not want to give the appearance that this was immediately precipitated; it has been under review, and the final decision has been taken and communicated by my letter to him today to which I have already referred.

In order that the issue may be clearly understood, I should read the relevant clause, which is clause 13 of the contract, as follows:

> 13. Where in the opinion of the attorney general of the province an emergency exists within the province requiring additional members of the force to assist in dealing with such emergency, Canada shall, at the request of the attorney general of the province addressed to the commissioner, increase the strength of the division as requested if, in the opinion of the Attorney General of Canada, having regard to other responsibilities and duties of the force, such increase is possible.

This, in my view, makes it clear that before the government of Canada is required to dispatch reinforcements as requested, the Attorney General of Canada must form the opinion that, having regard to other responsibilities and duties of the force, it is possible to send the reinforcements. It is also clear that the ultimate responsibility for the decision rests on the Attorney General of Canada.

Further to clarify the issue leading up to this resignation, I think I should read at this point the relevant passages from the commissioner's letter. I am now quoting from his letter of March 12:

> There is no doubt in my mind as to the need and I am certain that the number of men asked for can be provided without prejudice to "other responsibilities and duties".
> I realize that other issues are before you which arise from this strike but I feel most strongly that the matter of law enforcement should be isolated and dealt with on its own merits. This is the attitude the force has taken throughout. It has not concerned itself with the issues back of the strike but has merely tried to maintain law and order in the area.
> I think the contract clause on this matter of providing reinforcements in an emergency is clear and I cannot escape the conclusion that failure to supply reinforcements in this instance is a breach of that clause. Bearing in mind that we have similar contracts with seven other provinces the decision of the government has a particular significance.
> With these considerations in mind I feel I have no option but to ask you to accept my resignation and this I now do. I hope you will be able to relieve me as soon as possible and I shall await your advice as to what arrangements will be made to that end.
> I cannot close without telling you how much I regret having to take this step. I am within a year of completing my full service and I had looked forward to finishing my time in a more pleasant way. I have enjoyed serving under your direction and I have appreciated your support of the force and your active interest and understanding in all aspects of its work. I assure you that it is only a firm conviction of the correctness of my view which leads me to take this disagreeable action.

That is the end of the quotation from the commissioner's letter. I have reproduced in quotes those parts in which the commissioner discussed the issue between us. As I said, I shall ask leave to table the whole letter and my reply.

It was with deep regeret that I found that the commissioner disagrees with the decision that I felt had to be taken, and that this disagreement led him to decide that he should resign. The fact is, however, that the contract is a contract between the government of Newfoundland and the government of Canada, and that the decision called for by the contract is a decision to be made by the Attorney General of Canada.

In acknowledging the commissioner's letter of resignation I have endeavoured to set out the position, as I understand it, in the light of clause 13, as follows:

> The obligation imposed on Canada by that clause is to increase the number of members of the force in the province if, in my opinion as Attorney General of Canada, "having regard to other responsibilities and duties of the force", such increase is possible.
> In reaching my conclusion on the question whether "having regard to other responsibilities and duties of the force" such increase were possible, I, of course, as you know, gave the most careful and anxious consideration to your views that additional members could and should be sent to Newfoundland without prejudice to other responsibilities and duties of the force. However, upon a consideration of all the factors, including especially the importance of preserving the character and capacity of the force to discharge its duty in connection with law enforcement in all of Canada, I came to the conclusion, after consulting my colleagues, that, as the situation existed at that time, it was not possible to send the additional men requested without prejudicing the other responsibilities and duties of the force. This decision was my responsibility. I reached it only after the most careful consideration of your views and of all the other factors that, in my judgment, were relevant. I regret profoundly that you came to the conclusion that, by reason of that decision, you should resign.

That is the end of the quotation from my letter.

Since it is obvious that the point involved here is the question of whether account should be taken of anything more than the mere physical availability of men in determining whether reinforcements should be sent, I should outline the view upon which my decision is based.

I do not accept, and the government of Canada cannot accept, that an issue of this importance—whether reinforcements should be sent under the circumstances such as existed here—can be decided on the basis of a mere mathematical calculation as to whether men are physically available. We cannot discharge our responsibility by considering only the physical circumstances prevailing and examining the need for men under those circumstances. We must also consider the over-all responsibilities of the force, and our responsibility for the force, in a much wider context.

The primary duty of the force is to maintain law and order wherever the force operates throughout Canada. It is therefore an essential responsibility of the force to maintain its full integrity and its ability to discharge that duty on a national basis. In my view I cannot overlook, in assessing the responsibilities of the force, the necessity to ensure that it is not cast in a role which in effect might disable it from discharging its responsibilities to the country as a whole by weakening its standing as a law enforcement body. The responsibility of the force in this sense I have had to keep very much in mind in assessing the request which came from Newfoundland.

The Prime Minister has in his statement indicated clearly our views as to where over-all responsibility for creating this situation lies, and also what should be done now to end it. It will be apparent from the Prime Minister's statement what are the various factors that I have had to bear in mind in assessing this call for reinforcements.

In the current situation the activities of the government of Newfoundland appear to have gone beyond the usual role of a government. That role in this context is first to provide the machinery for the promotion of industrial peace and development and for the settlement of industrial disputes, and second to preserve and enforce law and order in the course of any dispute that may arise.

In the current situation, however, the activities of the Newfoundland government take on the character of an intervention in a dispute actually in progress, on the side of one of the parties and against the union which up to that time had been chosen as the bargaining agent by the workers and certified as such under the terms of the appropriate provincial legislation. This is an abnormal role for a government, and certainly has the elements of an attempt to extinguish from the province a trade union national in character and hitherto chosen by the workers in that industry, in that province, as their bargaining agent.

As I appreciate the situation, therefore, the request made by the government of Newfoundland for Royal Canadian Mounted Police reinforcements takes on the character not of a request to assist in the normal function and duty of the province in maintaining law and order, but of a request for additional help made necessary in the course of the furtherance of a project to extinguish a union from the province.

We have also had to bear in mind the possibility that under these circumstances to send additional Royal Canadian Mounted Police into Newfoundland, instead of ensuring that the situation is kept under control, might act only as provocation to further incidents of violence and defiance, so there is no certainty that the sending of them would not do more to inflame the situation than to control it.

After weighing all these factors, and discussing them with my colleagues, I have come to the conclusion that the arguments against sending more men at this time outweigh the arguments in favour, and I have decided accordingly, having regard to all the responsibilities and duties of the force.

This decision, as I have said, was a decision which was my responsibility to make, and I regret that the decision was not acceptable to the commissioner; but I had no alternative but to make it, and having made it to accept his resignation if he felt he should submit it. The situation, however, will be continuously watched and arrangements are being maintained with regard to the alert of the men in the other maritime provinces. As the Prime Minister has said, reinforcements will be sent immediately should they become necessary in order to protect the safety of the members of the force who are presently engaged in their proper function of maintaining law and order in Newfoundland.

It remains only for me to express my deep, personal regret that the commissioner should have felt impelled to act as he has done. Hon. gentlemen will perhaps appreciate my attitude in this regard, particularly in the light of the close personal relationship which has existed, and of my knowledge that the commissioner is within a year of normal retirement. As I have said in my letter to him, although I disagree fundamentally with his view as to the course which he should follow, I respect his sincerity in arriving at his decision.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I begin by saying that I think all members on all sides of the house will have learned with the greatest possible regret of the resignation of the commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. He has served his country for many years with honour and distinction, and he has always shown in that service—and I know the minister will agree with me—a high sense of public responsibility and duty. I feel quite certain that the commissioner would not have resigned for any reason which is inconsistent with his own sense of public duty and responsibility, and in the communications from which the minister has read the commissioner has indicated in quite clear terms his reason for this resignation.

There are one or two other matters, Mr. Speaker, on which I would like to comment. The first is the decision announced by the Prime Minister and elaborated on by the minister, not to accede to the request for police reinforcements made by the government of Newfoundland in accordance with section 13 of the agreement entered into on June 12, 1957 between the governments of Canada and Newfoundland. That section is perfectly clear. I do not need to read it again; it has been put on the record once more this afternoon by the minister. The only question to be determined by the Attorney General of Canada under that section is whether the requested increase is possible having regard to other responsibilities and duties of the force.

The minister this afternoon, in making his statement, has given an interpretation of section 13 which will certainly require, and will receive, very careful examination. It was an interpretation which, although I tried to follow it, was difficult for me to understand. He related his decision to the activities of the government of Newfoundland, not so much to the request of that government for further assistance in the maintenance of law and order but because of an interpretation—and this is his responsibility, not that of the government—which he has given to certain policies of the government of Newfoundland. The minister has taken his responsibility in that regard and has decided that in view of this kind of interpretation given to a paragraph that on the face of it seems very clear he is not able to accede to a request made within the terms of an agreement reached with the province.

I also wish to discuss the matter of the request of the government of the province of Newfoundland for a public inquiry. I hope the Prime Minister will table or put in Hansard the exchange between the premier of Newfoundland and himself, the request and the reply to the request. I have not a copy of the request made by the premier, nor have I seen it except in the press. However, it would appear from the press that the request for a public inquiry was made in the following terms:

> In the interest of the peace, order and good government of Canada, and to protect the good name of the R.C.M.P., the government of Newfoundland invites the government of Canada to set up at once a public inquiry.

Mr. Smallwood is reported by the press as having asked that the inquiry be made under a superior court judge from outside Newfoundland to investigate the "acts of lawlessness and violence which have taken place in central Newfoundland since the strike of the loggers began on December 31". The inquiry, according to the press, should be held "for the purpose of ascertaining the facts and assessing the responsibility".

In the first place I think the fact that such a request was made in those terms is an evidence of the desire of the government of Newfoundland to secure and make public all the facts concerned with the matter covered by this inquiry. We on this side of the house have thought that a full and objective inquiry of this kind would be desirable in view of the uncertainty created and the differences of opinion that have been expressed over what actually happened. The conduct of the R.C.M.P. has been bitterly attacked in the press and elsewhere and as strongly defended. Charges of disorder and violence have been made and have been rejected. I suggest that if we desire to understand the situation, as we do, and if we wish to criticize recent legislation passed in the house of assembly of Newfoundland in meeting the situation, we should have accurate and full information from an objective and impartial inquiry on which to base our views.

Any differences of opinion over facts are bound to have a bearing on differences of opinion over the legislation which was passed by all the members of both parties in the Newfoundland legislative assembly, which was and which remains accountable to the people of Newfoundland. It will be remembered that last summer the federal government initiated legislation in this house, which was approved by parliament and by all hon. members of this party, and which ended a strike and sent men back to work. This was, of course, an interference with the right of free, collective bargaining.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does the hon. gentleman say that the legislation in Newfoundland is comparable?

Mr. Pearson: I have not said that, Mr. Speaker, but I have said that we passed legislation in this parliament last summer which was an interference with the right of free, collective bargaining, in that by legislative enactment it sent men back to work. Any interference of that kind can only be justified after all the facts are known, as I think they were known last summer, on grounds of emergency; when the public interest or the public security demands such emergency action in the face of clear and present danger to security or to the economic life of the country or of a province.

On the basis of the facts that are known with regard to the Newfoundland situation strong differences of opinion, as was inevitable, have developed over the measures taken by the government and the legislature of Newfoundland to deal with the situation which confronted that province. I have expressed my own views on this issue when I said in view of recent events in Newfoundland; I wished to repeat what I have already stated, to the effect that the policy of the national Liberal party in labour matters has been and will continue to be firmly based on the right of free, collective bargaining through unions chosen by the workers themselves.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Except for Newfoundland.

Mr. Starr: Newfoundland is the exception.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I have said that is the policy of the national Liberal party of Canada, and those words speak for themselves. However, if hon. gentlemen would like to hear it I am prepared to express an opinion. This is the first occasion I have had to speak on this matter in parliament. On the basis of the information I have received I would be unable as leader of this party to agree with certain of the procedures that have been followed or with specific provisions of the new laws.

The people of Newfoundland feel strongly on this matter, and I know that a unanimous assembly with very strong support from the people of that province would not have supported this action of their government if they had not thought—and many of them I am sure came to this conclusion very reluctantly —that the interest and welfare of the province required it. Surely it is our duty not only to get all the facts about this matter but to try and understand the views of the people of Newfoundland with regard to it. I have tried to do that myself, even though as I just said the information I have leads me to conclude that I could not agree with all of the steps taken.

One of the most disquieting features of this whole tragic and unhappy business is the growing sense of grievance and resentment in what is an ancient colony, but a new province, over what so many of its people feel to be a lack of understanding on the mainland of the position; of its difficulties and problems and, indeed, its dangers. This feeling is bound to be increased by the fact that often the conditions, attitudes and circumstances of Newfoundland are not the same as those of the older provinces.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. gentleman would permit a question in view of the fact that he is speaking at great length. Would the hon. gentleman let the house know which of the elements in the legislation are those with which he does not agree?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister did not give us any information on this matter from his side of the house. I have said there are certain specific provisions in this legislation with which I cannot agree, and I mention this because—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Which ones?

Mr. Batten: No one interrupted you.

Mr. Starr: Which ones do you disagree with?

Newfoundland—Administration of Justice

Mr. Pearson: Perhaps the Prime Minister will keep quiet for a moment and let me finish my speech.

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I remind both sides of the house that this is not a debate. The Prime Minister has made a statement and the Leader of the Opposition is commenting upon it.

Mr. Churchill: At great length.

Mr. Pearson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I was saying before the Prime Minister saw fit to interrupt me, the people of Newfoundland are in this matter, as in other matters, naturally sensitive to any misrepresentation of their motives and to anything they consider to be unfair in the reporting of conditions in the province.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, whatever we may think of the action taken in Newfoundland in this labour dispute, it is of vital importance to do nothing to add to this feeling of resentment or to this feeling of being misunderstood; for from that could grow a feeling of isolation which would be especially regrettable as we approach the tenth anniversary of that fortunate day for Canada when the work of confederation was completed by Newfoundland joining this nation. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we all have a responsibility in this parliament, as they have in the legislative assembly of Newfoundland, to refrain from saying or doing anything which would add an unnecessary strain on this union.

I can only add in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that for the reasons I have given it is most regrettable that the kind of objective inquiry requested by the government of Newfoundland, which also would have covered the request made by the Canadian Labour Congress for an inquiry, and which might have had important and positive results along the lines advocated by the Prime Minister himself when he said we ought to have a two-week cooling off period, has been refused by this government.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, we have all been waiting with a great deal of interest to hear a statement on the position of the government with respect to the critical and unfortunate situation in Newfoundland. After hearing the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice, I think we can safely say we now know the position of the Conservatives, but I am doubtful whether we know the position of the Liberals; not yet, anyway.

I do want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I am not going into the question of the legal interpretation of section 13 of the contract between the government of Canada and the government of Newfoundland as regards the utilization of the R.C.M. Police in that province; but we do unhesitatingly say that irrespective of the legal interpretation of that matter, in our opinion the position taken by the Minister of Justice is morally a correct one, and we commend him on his decision. He has shown an understanding of the probabilities if certain action had been taken in sending down at this time and under existing circumstances and situation, an additional complement of 50 R.C.M. Police reinforcements. We quite agree with the interpretation which he had the honesty to express just a few moments ago that the request for the reinforcements was not so much on the basis of maintenance of law and order as it was for assistance and as a bulwark in pushing forward the stooge union of the premier of the province of Newfoundland, and we maintain that that is not the purpose and is not the function of the R.C.M. Police.

We are quite disappointed in the statement of the Prime Minister as to the position of his government and as to their decision after reviewing the request for an inquiry. We too feel most strongly that nothing but good could have come from the holding of a judicial inquiry. As was pointed out by the Leader of the Opposition, it is necessary to try to get the absolute and correct facts as to the situation in that province. It would mean a great deal in clearing the air and in clarifying the situation. I repeat that we would ask the Prime Minister to reconsider that decision and have an honest and complete inquiry into the basis of the present situation so far as the dispute in Newfoundland is concerned.

But, sir, though we say that we feel it would be a correct and a useful procedure, we would like to have a little more information also and to know just what is meant or just what is in the Prime Minister's mind when he so emphatically recommends a two-week cooling off period. Just what is meant by a cooling off period, sir? Just what are both sides to the dispute supposed to do? What would take place—

An hon. Member: Obey the law.

Mr. Winch: —during the cooling off period? Well, I am afraid the Prime Minister did not give us any indication as to what he thought would take place during the cooling off period. I think we can safely state what we think would take place in this so-called cooling off period, namely that the premier of Newfoundland has outlawed a legitimate trade union in that province. He has outlawed it and has brought in severe penalties if the members try to carry on as a legitimate trade union. The premier himself has taken the initiative in the formation of a new union.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I should remind the hon. member that there are two matters which were dealt with in the statements made, and it would be more in accordance with practice to confine his statement to the two matters which were dealt with, namely the reinforcement of the police and the public inquiry, and not to get too broadly into a debate of the other matters.

Mr. Winch: I thought that was exactly what I was doing. I had already spoken, sir, on the question of the reinforcement. The Prime Minister spoke of the inquiry, and then he outlined what he thought should take place in Newfoundland and he named a cooling off period. It is the very matter of the cooling off period which was mentioned by the Prime Minister in his statement, sir, which I am discussing. However, that is quite all right except—

Mr. Speaker: I was not objecting to that part of the hon. member's remarks but rather to his apparent departure into the realm of the actions of the premier of Newfoundland.

Mr. Winch: May I put it in this way, Mr. Speaker. I always like to bow to your wishes. I believe that a cooling off period would actually function if the Prime Minister would make one announcement as to the basis of the cooling off; that is by letting it be known now that in the general interest of Canada and in the particular interest of Newfoundland and as a guarantee of the protection of citizens of that province in the free organization of an association or union of their own choice, he will use his power of disallowance to remove this legislation from the statute books of Canada. That, sir, in our estimation would be the finest thing that could be done. Most certainly sir—I hope this is in order—it would be in line with the Conservatism which the Prime Minister maintains he upholds. Therefore, sir, from the point of view, as mentioned by the Prime Minister, of an injury, or on the basis of a cooling off period, so as to give him time to take the necessary steps for disallowance, it is completely in line with Conservatism and we would ask him, sir, to consider it on the basis of basic principles and on the facts of his philosophy.

I should like to read a couple of quotations that give an indication as to the approach which we feel, coming from the Prime Minister and the government, would resolve this situation in Newfoundland in the most speedy manner. I presume, sir, that Quintin Hogg, now Lord Hailsham, would be considered a good authority on Conservatism. I should like to quote an important passage from his book "The Case for Conservatism", in which he says, as found on page 69:

> But just as Conservatives believe that the freedom of the individual is subject to law, so also subject to that rule must be the power of the state and the discretion of ministers to fetter the freedom of the individual.

Again, on page 73:

> To some partisans of the left, democracy means no more than a tyranny based on the counting of heads. Where 51 are opposed to 49 the 51 must always have it, however arbitrary or unjust their view. The Conservative regards this doctrine as the reverse of justice and even the reverse of democracy.

I point that out in view of the statement of the Leader of the Opposition about how the law in question was carried by a majority of the house. Even if we cannot penetrate the thinking of the Liberals I draw that quotation to the attention of the Prime Minister, so that he will take note of what was said by Quintin Hogg about this principle of Conservatism.

There is a great deal more one could say, Mr. Speaker, but as you say this is not a debate. We plead with the Prime Minister to recognize that this dispute, although it is taking place in one province, has created not only an unfortunate situation there but an uproar throughout the length and breadth of Canada. All Canadians are very concerned about what is taking place there. They are very concerned that legislation has been placed on the statute books of that province which goes back 100 years to the days of feudalism.

The federal government must maintain an interest where the rights of the people and the rights of free organizations are concerned. Therefore we ask two things. First, we ask for the institution of an inquiry so as to get full and complete information. Second, we ask for the maintenance of democracy in Canada by the disallowance of this vicious legislation which has been placed on the statute books of Newfoundland by a would-be Hitler, to the disgrace of his own people.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I obtained official leave of the house for the request I made.

Mr. Speaker: Is the minister requesting that the documents be printed in Hansard as an appendix?

Mr. Fulton: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house that these documents now being tabled by the Minister of Justice be printed as an appendix to Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wonder whether the Minister of Justice would also agree to table and put in Hansard the exchange of communications he had with the attorney general of Newfoundland?

Mr. Fulton: I do not think they form any part of the context of this discussion, but I will be glad to look them up and if they seem to relate directly I can discuss the matter further.

[For text of letters referred to above, see appendix.]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister inform the house when the government is likely to come to a decision with respect to the disallowance of the Newfoundland legislation?

Mr. Diefenbaker: The answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister from Newfoundland if he concurred in the decision of the government to repudiate the contract with the province of Newfoundland.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member, I think, knows that the constitutional practice is that the Prime Minister speaks for the cabinet.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I could ask the minister a supplementary question. Does the minister intend to uphold the honour of his province by submitting his resignation?

SHIPPING

QUEBEC—STATEMENT AS TO SUBSIDIZATION OF PASSENGER SHIP COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the hon. member for Lapointe asked me if the Canadian maritime commission had granted a subsidy to a Quebec passenger ship company operating in Quebec without a permit of operation issued by the public service board of that province. The answer to the question is no.

COAL

NOVA SCOTIA—INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ASSIST INDUSTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to ask the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister in a position now to make any statement on the coal problem in Nova Scotia?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the house will be glad to know that the government has made encouraging progress in its study of the problem, and I expect to be able to make a statement to the house on this question tomorrow.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. Does the Prime Minister not recall that he told the people of Sydney in the last election campaign that he had the solution to that very problem?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether that is another of that group of statistics for which the hon. gentleman has become so noted.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I suggest to you, rising on a point of order—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —that under the rules of the house the Prime Minister may refuse to answer a question, but that under our rules and traditions he has no right to indulge in irrelevancies—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —and if he does we can only conclude, as do the people of Sydney with whom I was on Saturday night, that the government has no policy at all.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has raised this matter as a point of order. Perhaps he would think it relevant to consider the nature of the question he asked in the first place.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I will give that matter my serious consideration.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SUDBURY, ONT.—REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF DISTRICT COURT JUDGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. O. J. Godin (Nickel Belt): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Justice, to whom I sent a copy of the question earlier. In the light of the grave necessity for the appointment of a district court judge for the judicial district of Sudbury, indicated in a news item in the Sudbury Daily Star, a copy of which I have sent to the minister, and in view of the statement made in Sudbury last Saturday in my presence by the attorney general of the province of Ontario that a request had been made to the federal government for the appointment of a judge for Sudbury and that the department was awaiting the said appointment, can the minister indicate to the house the position of the federal cabinet with respect to this matter and why the appointment has not been made?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman kindly sent me notice of his intention to ask this question. I have not seen the details and I was not there to hear the statement made by the attorney general of Ontario, but the fact of the matter is that last year the Ontario legislature amended its county judges act by establishing six additional offices, and we at the same time amended our Judges Act to provide salaries for these positions. Five of these judges have been appointed because the areas for which they were to be appointed have been designated by the province, but the fact is the province has not yet provided for a third district court judge for the district of Sudbury.

SUPPLY

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

CANADIAN-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Once again, Mr. Speaker, this motion gives the official opposition an opportunity to comment on a matter of important policy and to criticize, if criticism is required, the action or inaction of the government in respect of that policy. Today, Mr. Speaker, I am going to raise, and I do it in no narrow partisan sense, a question of the greatest importance which concerns our external relations, and a question which has been very much in our minds, indeed which we have been discussing already in some of its aspects. I am referring to the matter of Canadian-United States relations.

I hope in dealing with this matter to do so in as constructive a fashion as possible, and to put some ideas to the government which may help in the solution of some of the problems that face us in this field, and for that purpose to move a motion toward the end of my remarks. I venture to hope, Mr. Speaker, that perhaps this discussion can be carried on without too much reference on one side to the question of what did you do, or perhaps without too much reference on the other side to the question of what did you say. I hope also, Mr. Speaker, that the discussion can proceed without too much display of press clippings and dredging up of debating points from previous occasions, because the question of Canadian-United States relations is a matter not only of the greatest possible national and international importance, but one which transcends the normal debating points that one makes in specific domestic problems and indeed at times specific problems in international affairs. Therefore I hope to consider this matter with the responsibility which it deserves.

As I said just a moment ago, and have said on many previous occasions, there is no more important subject facing us at the present time than our relations with the United States. I know of no more complicated subject, no subject more difficult or complicated for Canada, politically, economically and indeed culturally; no subject that requires more careful, cool and honest consideration, consideration which will be as free as possible, subject to our human and political weaknesses, from emotion and prejudice and which will be treated with as clear an understanding of where our true long range interest lies, the greatest of which is of course the preservation of peace and security in the world.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the problem of our relations with the United States is our most important single international problem, at least in the bilateral sense of the relationship of Canada with any other single country, even though it is only a part, a very important one, of our general international policy for peace and security. I believe that is a point upon which we are all united in this house. This problem is, of course, of far greater importance to Canada than to the United States. I am talking now of the bilateral aspect of our relationship. I do not need to waste the time of the house in elaborating upon it.

The realistic consideration of the problem is often hindered on the one hand by what I might call the unguarded boundary, 140 years of peace approach, which perhaps is less prevalent in Canada than it is in the United States. There it is based upon what many, including myself, have referred to as benevolent ignorance. On the other hand, it does not help in the solution of the problem that faces us in this field when we in Canada display self-righteousness or become oversensitive at times and yield to the temptation to give gratuitous advice to our neighbours occasionally in a fashion which has subjected us to the mild reproach of having become charter members of the international society of sidewalk superintendents.

Both these approaches, on the one side and on the other, prevent the kind of serious consideration of these problems which is required. I suggest, and I am sure my hon. friends will agree with me that it is a sign on our part—I am talking only about ourselves—of immaturity when we are petulant and captious, when we are purely negative, carping in our criticism, we are not likely to accomplish very much, and we are at a time when there is so much to accomplish in this field.

The keynotes to our relationship with the United States—it may seem platitudinous to say this—are threefold. The first is the intimacy of the relationship, and that speaks for itself. I need say nothing further about that. The evidence of it is at hand on every side in every contact we have with our neighbours across the line. The second keynote is the importance of this relationship and the growing, if you will, awareness of that importance below the line. The third keynote, which in a sense is related to the second and is an aspect of the problem which has been mentioned more than once by the Prime Minister in debates on international affairs, is our interdependence with the United States. This is something of which I believe we are far more conscious than our neighbour is, which may be a fact which helps explain something of the difficulties we have in our relations with the United States.

I should like to remind the house that this matter of interdependence, on which I shall say a few words, should be more than continental, even though it is the continental aspect of interdependence that we so often have in mind when we use the word and even though it is the continental aspect of interdependence of which we are most conscious economically, strategically and politically.

May I just say a word first about the political aspect of this continental interdependence. As reported at page 1549 of Hansard of March 3, the Prime Minister had this to say:

> —we intend to continue to assert unswervingly that we shall have for Canada a fair, full and equal participation in all decisions which go to our common defence.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that we would be unrealistic if we in this country based our policies on the assumption that we must have equal participation in all decisions that are concerned with common defence.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would "equitable" have been a better word?

Mr. Pearson: Fair consideration and full consideration, yes; but if we think—and I am sure the Prime Minister will agree with me in this statement—that in all these matters we are going to have equal consideration with the nation which bears the greatest responsibility because it has the greatest power in the free world, we are going to leave ourselves open to disillusionment which may result in disappointment and, at times, in criticism and complaint. Sovereignty—and the Prime Minister had a good deal to say about this the other day—means equality between states in theory, but it does not and cannot mean absolute equality in practice between states of different size, power and responsibility in reaching decisions of common interest today.

There are recent statements from Washington which prove what I am trying to indicate. There are recent statements which show in an alarming way, I believe—in any event, alarming to me—that the United States government has already made up its mind what to do in certain contingencies that are related to the Berlin situation but which certainly affect the common defence. That defence, we are told—and I am not objecting to the statement because I think it is true—is now and must remain continental in the sense that it cannot be based on national plans or national policies alone. We are told that it must be based on the unity of the two countries for defence planning, or at least for the strategic and tactical side of planning. Yet as President Eisenhower pointed out at his press conference of March 4, and I quote from that conference—and these are words which are pregnant with significance—

> When you have got certain circumstances that . . . could put your nation's life at stake . . . whatever would be necessary the President would then order.

And the measures that he felt it necessary then to order—and I hope he will never be put in the position where he has to do this—nevertheless would affect us just about as much as they would affect the United States of America.

The Prime Minister had something to say about this matter to the House of Commons on March 3 when he said this, and I quote from page 1547 of Hansard:

> What is our position in Canada? Some seem to have the view that we could be neutral in any war that may take place, neutral in the event that the United States was involved . . . There is no neutrality of that kind today.

Mr. Speaker, I would not go as far as that, as to insist that we could not be neutral in any war in which the United States was involved, and perhaps the Prime Minister did not mean that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Under NATO.

Mr. Pearson: Under NATO there is no neutrality. An attack on one NATO country is an attack on them all. That concept of neutrality we abandoned when we signed the NATO pact in respect of the NATO area, but I do not think that means that we cannot at least avoid involvement in non-NATO wars that any other country might find itself engaged in in a limited way, or in an area of the world which has nothing to do with NATO.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am very much interested in this matter. Suppose there was an attack on United States forces in Asia. Then what would our position be?

Mr. Pearson: If there was an attack on United States forces in the NATO area, of course we would be at war as soon as parliament met and took the necessary action. We have an international obligation to consider an attack on the forces of a NATO country inside the NATO area as an attack on our own forces. If there was an attack on United States forces in some part of the world far removed from the NATO area, in the Far East or some other place, I am not trying to suggest for a minute that we would be able to escape the consequences of any action in which the United States was involved. But I do not go so far, and I have never gone so far and perhaps the Prime Minister would not go so far, as to suggest that this means that we would have to abandon the legal concept of neutrality in any attack on a United States force in any part of the world. I certainly would not want to accept that as a doctrine guiding our international obligations or our international policy.

Yet if the President of the United States ever had to take the kind of action which he mentioned in his press conference, I repeat that we would be affected; we would certainly be involved in some form or other, because we could not escape. The President made clear a week later, on March 4, what he would order in defence against aggression, when he said at the following week's press conference:

> We are certainly not going to fight a ground war in Europe.

When I read that statement I wondered. I know it was a statement at a press conference, but it was a statement by the President of the United States, a statement which seems to have been contradicted since then by one or two service chiefs in the United States. But any statement of that kind could not help but create anxiety, I am sure, in the minds of people in other countries who heard it. In the policy leading up to that kind of statement, does Canada have a full, free and equal voice? That is a statement that certainly bears on common defence. What are the implications for Canada of a statement of that kind in terms of continental interdependence which we all agree must be recognized?

No doubt we shall have an opportunity to examine these matters in greater detail in subsequent debates on defence. I mention them now merely to point out what I think is one of the major problems facing us in our relations with the United States, namely the increasingly—perhaps because of the circumstances with which we are faced—one-sided character of continental interdependence in this field and in other fields which I shall mention later.

We agree that policy in defence, trade, production or anything else cannot in this country be based any longer on the old concept of unlimited and unrestricted national sovereignty. I agree wholeheartedly with what the Prime Minister said about that matter the other day. I think there is no doubt where we in this party stand on that matter. We have shown it when we were in office in word and I think we have shown it in deed by our advocacy of NATO and other collective security arrangements. The record of 12 years in office is an indication of where we stand with regard to the matter.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What did the hon. gentleman understand by the swift thinking attributed to the President in that press conference? He mentioned the implications, and then he did not complete the statement.

Mr. Pearson: The implication of that statement which I thought would create some anxiety in people's minds outside the United States—I do not want to say anything which will be unnecessarily alarmist—surely would be that if action were begun in regard to the defence of the rights of the NATO powers in West Berlin, which rights, as the Prime Minister and I have already stated should be firmly upheld, and that action resulted in counteraction, which in turn resulted in conflict, that conflict could only be all-out air conflict.

That is the implication to be drawn from the President's statement. It is of far-reaching importance and underlines the necessity of the fullest, freest and most equal consultation possible among allies before policies of that kind are agreed upon. If the nations of NATO and the free world cling to old, outworn concepts of sovereignty, and by doing so find they have weakened their security and created disunity within the coalition, which apart from the weakening of our strength, is the thing these people would most like to see brought about, we may find that we have saved our sovereignty but lost everything else. The Prime Minister put the same idea to us the other day in another way.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am listening very carefully to the hon. gentleman, and I am asking him for information. What does the hon. gentleman mean by "clinging to the outgrown concept of sovereignty"?

Mr. Pearson: I think the best explanation I can give of my views in that regard is the fact that we considered it necessary in this country ten years ago to accept obligations in regard to collective security which limited our freedom of action. We felt it necessary to give up some of our sovereignty in that respect and accept limits on our freedom of action in order to increase our security and thereby, we hoped, strengthen the peace.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Thank you.

Mr. Pearson: On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, if interdependence—which must, I submit, mean some limitation on sovereignty —rejects, as I think it should, absolute national sovereignty, then in the continental sense it cannot rest on Canada's excessive subordination to the policies and decisions of the United States. I am now talking about continental interdependence. That is why I strongly believe that Atlantic interdependence is a far better policy and concept for us politically and economically than continental interdependence. Surely we have recognized that in our acceptance of NATO obligations, in the NATO commands, and in everything else which flows from NATO. Surely this means, because of our political situation on this continent, that intercontinental defence for us should include continental defence in the most direct manner possible. Interdependence politically and strategically, as well as economically, I submit is a preferable concept for Canada than continental interdependence.

I know that our relations with the United States in this field recognize this concept of interdependence, but that recognition on such a continental, narrow basis—if the North American continent is a narrow basis; it is only relatively a narrow basis—has surely been shown by the events of the last few years. In some aspects of our relationship that interdependence has been shown to be more apparent than real. We have learned, I think more particularly in the last year or two, that a defence system based on a genuine and equal interdependence of two nations so different in power as are Canada and the United States is very difficult indeed to work out in practice. In practice, whatever we may have in mind in theory, such a system usually means that the more powerful nation retains most of its independence and the other, the less powerful nation, tends to become more dependent.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I ask if that has applied in the NATO organization as such, in the hon. member's experience?

Mr. Pearson: I do not think so, Mr. Speaker, because I think the broader the basis of the interdependence the greater opportunity there is for the various members to make their views effectively known. But whether it applies in NATO or not, and I do not think it does to the same extent as bilaterally in the North American continent, surely it is a good thing for Canada to broaden the basis of its interdependence and thereby—I was going to use the word "weaken" the pressures which come from the south when we are working together with the United States alone without the benefit of a larger grouping. This continental relationship, then, which we have to accept and work out to the best of our ability tends to become one more of dependence than interdependence, from our point of view. We have certainly learned in the last few months that this interdependence, this continental interdependence and unity, is more apparent in the field of strategy and planning than it is in the field of development of resources and industrial production.

Mr. Diefenbaker: So is the NATO organization under section 2.

Mr. Pearson: The Prime Minister says this is also so in the NATO organization. But it has not been tested in the same way in that organization because there has not been the same effort yet, that I know of, between any of the NATO countries to work out any special relationship inside NATO, as there has been between Canada and the United States.

Perhaps I know as much as most people how difficult it is to do much about article 2. I think the Canadian delegations at the present time, as in the time of the previous government, have done what they can to make progress in that field. I suggest that the only alternative, Mr. Speaker, is an interdependence which means a balanced, collective defence where each nation can specialize in certain types of defence production. In the long run it seems to me that is the only approach which will make a collective system work, whether that collective system consists of 12, 13 or 14 nations under NATO, or the two nations on the North American continent. If that kind of interdependence is essential this implication must be acceptable by all members of the group, including the United States, if the collective organization is to survive. It requires defence resource development and production sharing arrangements between governments much more far-reaching than those which now exist between the United States and Canada, and between Canada and the NATO countries.

So much, then, for that aspect of interdependence. What about our trade relations between the two countries? Surely over recent years they have also illustrated our growing dependence on the United States. Hon. members opposite have had a lot to say about that in past years, and they have called attention in no uncertain terms to the dangers to Canada's development because of that growth. I think the growth over the years of our commercial and trade dependence on the United States—I am talking now about the last 10 or 15 years—was not only inevitable, but I think if we had not had that development of economic and trade interdependence we would have been in a very bad way in this country after world war II.

Why did this occur? Why have we become more dependent in these matters on our neighbour? The reasons are pretty obvious, and I am sure are familiar to all members of the house. Perhaps the most important reason, and one we do not often refer to in discussions of this matter, is the fact that we have had two world wars with a relative decline of the western European countries brought about by their efforts and sacrifices during those two world wars. That effort weakened them economically and made them less available as markets for our goods.

The first reason then is the relative decline of the western European countries in the world economics and especially after world war II when there were currency difficulties arising out of impoverishment through war exertions and sacrifices.

Second, there were higher costs of production in North America which tended to divert more and more of our products to the only market where we could compete in price, which was the United States. Third was the important part played by United States capital in our amazing development. We could not have had the pace and pattern of that development without United States capital but it did result in the growing dependence on the United States in some phases of our economy and it resulted also in demands for measures to counter the dangers arising from this kind of development. It has now reached the point in this country where three quarters of the $7,500 billion of the foreign capital invested in Canada comes from the United States. This involves an economic and financial problem but it may become a political problem. We need the capital but we want to ensure that the capital does not mean outside control.

A very good illustration of the advantages and dangers of this kind of development which emphasizes our dependence on the United States was given the other day when the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) spoke as reported at page 1549 of Hansard of March 3 and had this to say:

> How often have hon. gentlemen opposite laughed when we talked of plans for northern development to secure the northern areas for Canada so that they would not be lost.

I do not recall laughing at that policy but we will let that pass. The hon. gentleman continued:

> In the last few weeks something of that development plan which was scoffed at, the design of which was to improve the economic future of Canada and also preserve those areas for our defence, has been shown to be achieving fruition in the events which have taken place in connection with those vast mineral and oil areas which are today being taken up.

I believe it is true—the minister directly concerned will correct me if I am wrong; but his own information shows I am not wrong—that this development in the way it has been brought about and is now taking place is largely through the movement of more United States capital through United States oil companies or their Canadian subsidiaries into the northern parts of Canada. This is a recent illustration, a development that has occurred in the last few weeks which reveals the advantages and may later reveal some of the difficulties that flow from that kind of assistance.

Another reason why we have become more dependent on the United States over the years than some of us would perhaps like to see with respect to economic and trade matters is the United States need for our raw and semi-processed material. Hon. members know how this works out. We are advised by the United States when there is a period of emergency in that country where our raw materials are required for strategic or defence purposes, as was the case a few years ago, to develop and produce these resources at any cost and that the market will be there in the United States at an reasonably profitable figure. We are told to go ahead and produce the stuff and then when national production in this country is stepped up or the need diminishes in the United States or as is more often the case, both, the tap is turned off in the United States and restrictions are put on the imports of those goods into Canada, goods that we were urged to produce in the first place.

I need only to cite as examples lead, zinc and uranium. It was not many years ago that this country was urged by the United States authorities to proceed with the search for uranium. Washington advised us to search and hunt for all the uranium we could find here and develop it and they would make a contract to purchase practically all of that uranium. We were told it was necessary not only for our economy but for United States security that this should be done. During the period we developed this uranium—by that I mean capital from a good many countries, not only Canada—the search for uranium went on in the United States and now that they have found great quantities of uranium in that country, when the time comes to renew that contract on which some areas of Canada now depend I hope in Washington they will not point to United States production and say. "No longer do we need your help in this field, thank you very much."

The same problem is arising over oil. The voluntary restrictions that were in effect for a period extending back a couple of years have been replaced by mandatory restrictions. We have some right to complain about that item but we have more right to complain about the reason given for that kind of restriction, that is national security. National security cannot be accepted by Canadians as a valid reason for the imposition of restrictions on continental production. If we are interdependent continentally for defence we ought to be interdependent continentally for the production of oil for defence use in the planes that fly over Canadian territory. Yet we were told that for reasons of national security this cannot be done and our oil imports have to be restricted.

There are other examples. There are increased restrictions placed on our imports as I have mentioned, and increased and unfair competition in marketing abroad our agricultural products, a matter with which all hon. members are familiar. There is also the effect of escape clauses and peril points in the United States reciprocal trade agreement act which minimized the advantages we receive from the legislation. Because of this act and the arrangements made under it at GATT the duties on Canadian exports to the United States in many fields have been considerably reduced in the last ten years. The advantages we have been enjoying from that in the past may now well be threatened by the new escape clauses which the United States can impose against us. Other difficulties are created by the interference with the trade of Canadian subsidiaries of United States companies to areas of the world where it is illegal for a United States company to trade and the effect of United States anti trust legislation applied to Canadian companies.

I have mentioned only a few illustrations. I do not think it is an exaggeration when I say that a serious situation has developed in this aspect of our relationship. We must consider what we can do now to prevent that situation deteriorating into economic conflict from which nobody on either side would gain anything. We ask ourselves if the present arrangements in effect are satisfactory to deal with these problems. Are Canadian interests sufficiently considered in the application of the principle of continental interdependence? If not, what can we in this parliament do to improve that situation?

We have, of course, the normal intergovernmental contacts and I suppose they are just as continuous and effective under the present government as they were under the previous government when I can assure hon. gentlemen from personal knowledge they were both close and effective, both personal and official and both formal and informal. We have the use of the diplomatic machinery which I am sure works as effectively now as it has always worked in both Washington and Ottawa. We have some relatively new pieces of machinery and some which go back two or three years.

We have, for example, the intergovernmental cabinet committee on economic matters. It did not meet very often when this party was in office and I would be the last person to say it was a very effective piece of machinery so I am not trying to score any debating points when I say I do not think it is any more effective in its present operations or has met more often in the last year and a half than was the case before 1957. We also have a joint intergovernmental cabinet committee on defence which the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Pearkes) may think is an invaluable piece of machinery but it does not seem to have met very often.

However, we have something new in the joint congressional parliamentary committee which has been set up. This is a piece of machinery that is not only novel in the relationship between the two countries but it could be very important. When I say that I emphasize the word "could" because it could also be almost all window dressing. If that joint congressional parliamentary committee means that every six months there will be a trip to Washington for a couple of days and then in the next six months there will be a trip to Ottawa for a couple of days you would have a good time in Washington and a good time in Ottawa. You would meet opposite numbers in congress and the opposite numbers in parliament. That is all to the good, of course. You would get to know the problems of Washington and the problems of Ottawa a little better and perhaps that would have some effect, but I do not for one moment believe that a joint committee of this kind, carried on in that way, will have any considerable or lasting effect on the solution of the problems with which we are faced.

I do hope that those who are responsible for the operation of this committee will perhaps discuss together to see whether there is not some way by which this committee, which is of such great potential importance, can be made actually important in the day to day examination which a committee of this kind might make through a permanent staff on both sides, through more frequent business meetings and day to day examination, give to problems which are coming up and which might be considered on this legislative basis before they became a subject of public controversy. I know this is not going to be easy.

One of the difficulties in regard to working out an arrangement of this kind is the difference between our parliamentary and congressional systems. Committees in Washington, as we all know, have an independent, effective existence and indeed an effective influence sometimes on the executive even in spite of the executive. I doubt whether that could be said of committees in a parliamentary system of government. And therefore with this different approach to the parliamentary structure and the functions of committees as they operate under congressional principles it is not going to be easy to work out this new piece of machinery in a way which might help solve this problem of throwing light on them before they become public problems. I hope the government will look at this and see if there is not some way in which this piece of machinery can be made more effective than it will be.

One of the men who has done most to make the United States more aware of the Canadian problems—in that I think we all owe him a debt of gratitude—is Representative Coffin of Maine. Representative Coffin made a speech in Portland, Maine, on February 13. He was dealing with a statement which he had made, when the two congressmen who came up here a few months ago, made a report on the new relations between Canada and the United States which, in his view, perhaps required a new form of association. I know what will be said about that when we approach the United States government, if we approach the United States government, for a new form of association. They will say, what we do for you, you will have to do for others. I say that that argument does not hold water any longer. If in fact our relationship is so important, so intimate, and if this special interdependence between Canada and the United States because of the force of circumstances is not the same as it is between the United States and any other country; if that is the case, perhaps we must ask for some special form of organizational arrangement to reflect that interdependence. Perhaps that is what Representative Coffin had in mind when he said this:

> I had come to see that we could expect a reasonable solution of our boundary waters and power problems, our trade differences, our customs and immigration problems, our transportation, agricultural, and fisheries problems only if both congress and the executive were able to take the broad view. On the congressional level this meant giving enough senators and congressmen an understanding of the full range of problems so that in the consideration of any particular measure backed by those with a specific regional or occupational interest, there would be a larger number of legislators who could afford to look at the problem in perspective and strive for a sound approach. On the executive level what is needed is a device or procedure which can bring together the thinking on all of the issues between the two nations. The objective would be to consider some problems en bloc, in a package. For example, one such package proposal is the giving of corridor rights to Canada through the Alaska panhandle in exchange for an agreement as to sharing of benefits from Yukon power development. If all the elements were collected and assessed by the executive branch in an imaginative manner, other combinations might be deemed feasible ways of breaking existing log jams.

I agree with that, so far as I know anything about the United States approach to those problems, but I would go farther. Why not have all those elements collected and assessed by the two governments in the way that Representative Coffin said is becoming essential in the case of the United States? That means, surely, asking for some kind of formal arrangement—I have spoken about this before in this session—some formal treaty arrangement that laid down principles which would guide the conduct of the governments on both sides of the border.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What about the inflexibility of such a plan? I know the hon. gentleman mentioned this before.

Mr. Pearson: I mentioned it before and, as a matter of fact, the Prime Minister mentioned it. He had something to say about this at page 1550 of Hansard. When he spoke on March 3 he had this to say:

> However, we have been speaking of the economic co-operation agreement between Canada and the United States, which is dated October 26, 1950. This document, which all hon. members have,—

This was the document which attempted to prolong the principles of the Hyde Park agreement which governed our relations during the war when it was not too difficult to work out relationships of that kind. I continue:

> This document, which all hon. members have, sets forth the principles for economic co-operation. The arrangements worked out under the Hyde Park agreement proved so successful that when international conditions again appeared threatening the joint United States-Canada industrial mobilization planning committee was established on April 12, 1949, to make plans in case joint action should again become necessary.

And so on. When we are threatened with some external dangers then we can find ways and means collectively or jointly to deal with those dangers. When that danger disappears we fall back on the old arrangements. Therefore, I suggest that if it was desirable in 1950 to work out a document which laid down certain principles which would govern economic co-operation between the two countries, which was done in a form which was not binding on congress or binding on parliament, and which had no treaty or other legal significance; if it could be done in 1950 in that way, then perhaps the time has come —and I put it no higher than that—to give consideration to the enshrinement of the principle of economic co-operation in a formal treaty arrangement which would be submitted to congress where it could be debated and submitted to parliament where it could be debated. And if the two legislatures agreed we would then have a document which each side could follow in case action was taken by the government of either side which infringed those principles. Perhaps it would be worth while giving consideration to that kind of situation. I think however that we should go farther than that and these are my closing words, I again refer to the speech of Representative Coffin who said:

> Beyond this second level of minimizing the Canadian-United States points of contention or friction, to the benefit of both, there lies the ultimate level of Canadian-United States co-operation in policies and programs devised to sparkplug a free world effort to stabilize commodities—

He is right. This approach to the problem is somewhat different. What he had in mind in this speech was to broaden the basis of continental co-operation not only in defence, which I have spoken about, but in the field of trade and economics; broaden the basis so that it will cover the whole of the Atlantic area. The Prime Minister knows my views on this and I know the difficulties in the way of doing any such thing. I used to go to the Atlantic treaty council meetings every spring and every autumn and we used to talk about this kind of thing and it was extremely difficult to do more than talk about it. But perhaps the time has come when we may have to do more than talk about this interest in the alliance because if something cannot be done to strengthen the non-military basis of the alliance it may fall apart. Indeed, there are some signs of even the military basis of the alliance weakening in the news in the last two or three days. The reason I say this is that there are situations, there are circumstances now which did not exist five years ago and which may perhaps provide more hope, certainly they provide greater opportunity, for progress in this direction than existed a few years ago.

What I am thinking of is the development of the European free trade area, the development of the European common market. Six European countries have now worked out among themselves something that would have been considered absolutely out of the question 15 years ago. If anybody had said that in this or any other legislative chamber before world war II that by 1959 we would have a European economic unit including these European countries it would have been considered as a visionary statement indeed. But we have it now and the other countries of Europe, including Great Britain, are considering whether they can expand this into a European free trade area.

If my hon. friend has been following the debates in the British House of Commons he will know that some very pertinent and significant questions have been asked the government of the United Kingdom as to how they could do this, what would be the effect of joining the European free trade area on commonwealth preferences and all that kind of thing. They are beginning to debate association of the United Kingdom with the European free trade area, and while there is a large gap between debate and action the first steps are being taken. If those steps should lead to a European free trade area with which the North American states, the United States and Canada, have no association at all it will be extremely bad for Canada, both economically and politically, because we will be thrown back on continentalism and we will then learn in a far more vivid way than we know now the effects on our destiny of continental relationships at a time when the Atlantic is split in two between Europe and North America.

Therefore, not only is it of first importance for Canada economically and commercially to do something to widen the basis of freer trade arrangements but perhaps in the long run it is of even greater importance that our political development and political destiny should be brought about not on any continental basis, not even exclusively on a commonwealth basis but by working out in this North Atlantic area closer and closer co-operation with people and countries who think as we do and who will work with us politically and economically in the face of the menace that confronts us today from countries who do not think like we do.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Before the hon. gentleman goes on, what does he conceive to be the political and economic co-operation that should exist between Canada and these countries of Europe within the free trade area?

Mr. Pearson: I see no reason why we should not now begin, and we would certainly have to try to associate the United States with us, the same kind of consideration in respect of the European free trade area that Great Britain is giving to that area, a consideration of how an association can be brought about which is not based on complete free trade, which does not give up control of separate customs duties but which is based on the development of an area where there will be freer trade between those members than exists at the present time and which perhaps one day will lead to the kind of association you have in a federal state. When I say "one day" I am thinking far into the future. If the Prime Minister thinks this is an imaginative and visionary observation I would ask him and other members of the house whether, in the face of the situation we have in the world today, any other ideal will be enough to safeguard not only our prosperity but also our security.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, in view of the considerations I have mentioned I move, seconded by the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin):

> That all the words after "that" be deleted and the following substituted therefor:
> this house is of the opinion that recent decisions of the United States government, particularly in the field of production and commercial policy, underline the necessity for the government to make more effective arrangements with the United States to prevent the undesirable impact of those decisions on Canada, and the necessity of a more active participation by the government in working out the implications of interdependence and closer unity within the North Atlantic community.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to express briefly the support of this group for the purpose of the amendment. Before proceeding with my few remarks I must say that we are very pleased indeed to see the official opposition now expressing the same concern over United States influence on defence and trade policies in Canada that this group has been expressing for several years. I think I should once again compliment the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) for moving in our direction in this important field. It is another indication of the influence that this small group in the house is having on the somewhat larger group to our left. I hope that influence will continue.

We have been very concerned for some years about the impact of United States policies upon Canadian affairs, and this is understandable in view of the greater size of our neighbour to the south. We have been concerned about their influence on external affairs, defence policies, our trade relationships and industry and agriculture in Canada.

To demonstrate the influence that the Americans aim to have on our policies with respect to external affairs I want to use one illustration. We all know that there has been a growing demand in Canada for the recognition of the Peiping government, the mainland government of China. That demand has come not only from the group in this corner of the house but has been made by leading bankers, leading industrialists, particularly in British Columbia, who face the situation realistically, by the Canadian Labour Congress, by the agricultural organizations and by an ever-increasing number of Canadian people who appear to understand the realities of the situation better than the government at the present time. No doubt the growing support in Canada for recognition of the government of the mainland of China is causing some concern to the state department of the United States. I presume that is why Mr. Walter S. Robertson, undersecretary of state for the United States, visited Ottawa a few days ago and addressed a meeting of the Canadian Club in the Chateau Laurier, to which I was very kindly invited. I understand that he also addressed members of the Progressive Conservative association yesterday and is taking every advantage of his time in Canada to influence Canadian public opinion with respect to this important question.

In that connection I want to quote briefly from an article by Charles Lynch which appeared in the Ottawa Citizen on Saturday, March 14. The article is headed, "Why U.S. Won't Recognize Peiping." Mr. Lynch was at the dinner held in the Chateau and this is what he has to say in his article:

> One of the most pointed and most important speeches ever made by an official of the United States government in Canada was made here yesterday by Walter S. Robertson, assistant secretary of state for far eastern affairs.
> Mr. Robertson is "Mr. China Policy" in the state department.
> His speech, before the Canadian club, was as considered and as eloquent a presentation of the U.S. view on communist China as any man could make.

I certainly bear that out because the views of the United States government were very eloquently placed before the meeting by Mr. Robertson.

Canadian-United States Relations

The fact that he came to Ottawa to make it is evidence of the concern that is felt in Washington over the trend of Canadian opinion on the Red China question.

A short time ago, the Canadian club heard an eye witness report on communist China by Canadian correspondent Gerald Clark—a hard-hitting, well documented report on the achievements of the Peiping regime.

Mr. Robertson came to present the antidote—not only to the observations of Mr. Clark, but to those of other recent Canadian visitors to mainland China, including James Muir of the Royal Bank of Canada, and Oakley Dalgleish, the publisher of the Toronto Globe and Mail. It is also fair to say that he came to address himself to the Canadian government and its policy of increased trade with communist China.

Then, the article goes on to say in conclusion:

Mr. Robertson's words are unlikely to be echoed from any part of the house in the forthcoming commons debate. But they state, more eloquently than any of our own officials would be ready or willing to do, why the U.S. feels as it does about communist China, and why Canadian policy, as a consequence, continues to be one of non-recognition.

They make clear the size of the breach that would be blown in Canadian-American relations by an Ottawa move toward recognition.

As such, the Robertson speech is an essential backdrop against which the commons debate will be conducted.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is an illustration of the tremendous impact of the government of the United States on this government's foreign policy with respect to the recognition of China. They send Mr. Robertson to Ottawa to address this important meeting and to meet other members of the House of Commons and try to persuade them that United States policy in this respect is correct. However, I am glad to notice, according to this morning's Globe and Mail, that the editor of the Globe and Mail has not been enamoured of Mr. Robertson's remarks. I should like to quote part of this editorial as an antidote to Mr. Robertson's remarks at this time. I think we must give credit to the editor of the Globe and Mail for writing some excellent editorials on foreign policy and other important matters. The final paragraph reads:

Finally, there is Chiang, heading what Mr. Robertson described as "a non-communist Chinese government firmly oriented to the free world". Now, Chiang is certainly non-communist, and he certainly heads a government. But it is not, and has not been for 10 years, a "Chinese" government. It is the government of Formosa, a small island 100 miles off the Chinese coast, which Chiang heads. And he is never going to head anything else. The one and only Chinese government is that at Peking, and neither Chiang nor Mr. Robertson has—if we may coin an expression—a California Republican's chance of overthrowing it.

This is the first thing Canadians must understand in their formulation of an independent, a genuinely Canadian, Far East policy. This is the first point at which Ottawa, as it looks to Asia, must break with Washington. Chiang is nobody, his rump regime on Formosa means nothing. Canada should immediately disown him.

It will be particularly interesting to note what influence the visit of Mr. Walter Robertson has on the government of Canada in the days to come in connection with its policies with respect to the recognition of this government.

Now, then, the second influence, and a major influence, on Canadian affairs with which this group is seriously concerned is the United States government's influence on our defence policy and all the ramifications which flow from that influence. We have had some lengthy debates on this question in recent days, and I am not going to rehash those debates. We do think in this group that that influence has been increasing at a rapid rate since the signing of the NORAD agreement, this unilateral agreement with respect to the defence of the North American continent. The purpose of the agreement, the defence of the continent, is something with which we are heartily in agreement. However, as we said on the occasion of the debate on the agreement, we in this group object to this unilateral approach to defence which places Canada at an increasing disadvantage with respect to the defence policy of the United States and the United States at an increasing advantage.

On that occasion we urged that defence policy should be based, first, on the United Nations, and urged the strengthening of the international police force and the conception that goes behind that international police force. Secondly, we claimed that the defence of the North American continent should be part of the duties of NATO and that NORAD should be an integral part of NATO. In that connection, I want once again to congratulate the leader of the official opposition. I think in recent days, although I have heard him mention it before, he has been coming more and more to the C.C.F. point of view, because during the debate on the NORAD agreement there was not a word from the Liberal benches—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Oh, yes.

Mr. Pearson: Perhaps the hon. gentleman has forgotten, but I have, from the very beginning, advocated that NORAD should be part of the NATO command.

Mr. Herridge: I sincerely apologize.

Mr. Pearson: Perhaps the hon. member forgets the amendment which he introduced was ruled out of order before anybody had a chance to speak on it.

Mr. Herridge: I apologize if I was incorrect in that statement. I certainly accept the word of the Leader of the Opposition in this respect. Perhaps I should say that there has been an increasing emphasis then, and that is possibly why I have noticed it in recent days, on this aspect of their policy which we are pleased to see.

I come now in my few brief remarks to the question of agricultural policies and industrial policies. Agricultural policies of the United States, particularly their disposal programs, have had a very serious effect upon the well-being of the farmers of this country, particularly the farmers of western Canada. Possibly if these policies had not been given effect the large delegation that visited Ottawa last week would not have had the same reason to visit Ottawa and would not be suffering the same distress. In any event, I am not going into that because the matter has been dealt with much more effectively than I could do so by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue). Perhaps I am a little premature in that statement. He has a thorough knowledge of the circumstances of the grain producers.

I want to add a few words with respect to the impact on Canadian industry of United States policies, particularly with respect to the control of United States subsidiaries in Canada. This subject has been mentioned in this house on a number of occasions. There was the cancellation of the order for trucks that was given by some representative or agency of the government of Peking; the cancellation of the order for aluminum under the direction of the parent company in the United States; the cancellation of the order for certain rubber products from the Goodyear tire people on instructions of the parent company in the United States. We in this group, Mr. Speaker, think it is an intolerable situation that a company operating in Canada should be subject to control of the laws of the government of the United States. If companies come to this country to operate and to reap their profits we in this group say those companies should be willing to abide by Canadian law and operate first to the advantage of the Canadian people.

In following my argument, I should like to quote briefly from the Gordon commission report. I should say that the Gordon commission discovered the reason for Canadian anxiety about foreign investment, and I quote from page 390 of the final report of the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects as follows:

> At the root of Canadian concern about foreign investment is undoubtedly a basic, traditional sense of insecurity vis-à-vis our friendly, albeit our much larger and more powerful neighbour, the United States. There is concern that as the position of American capital in the dynamic resource and manufacturing sectors becomes ever more dominant, our economy will inevitably become more and more integrated with that of the United States. Behind this is the fear that continuing integration might lead to economic domination by the United States and eventually to the loss of our political independence.

That is what a great number of Canadians fear at this time,

> This fear of domination by the United States affects to some extent the political climate of life in Canada today. Therefore it is a factor which has some bearing upon "the probable economic development of Canada and the problems to which such development appears likely to give rise".

The Gordon commission report notes that many Canadians are worried over the fact that such a large degree of economic decision making is in the hands of non-residents, particularly United States citizens. In that connection the report has this to say at page 389:

> This concern has arisen because of the concentration of foreign ownership in certain industries, because of the fact that most of it is centred in one country, the United States, and because most of it is in the form of equities which, in the ordinary course of events, are never likely to be repatriated.

The next aspect of this problem which is also of great importance is the fact that a very large part of United States equity investment in Canada is in the form of "wholly-owned" subsidiaries and branches of United States parent corporations. This means that although such companies virtually control important sections of the Canadian economy, it is absolutely impossible for Canadians to purchase ownership in them. This situation has been the cause of protest across this country. If a Canadian wishes to buy into Canadian General Motors, for example, he must buy shares in the United States parent corporation. This means that his Canadian investment is in the entire operation of General Motors conducted in the United States and elsewhere as well as in Canada. Thus there is no Canadian investment as such. It is even possible for a Canadian to invest in one of these parent companies and lose on his investment, despite the fact that the Canadian subsidiary may be showing a substantial profit.

I might say that I have had residents in my own constituency write to me in that connection, people who were interested in the lumber industry and in the pulp and paper industry and who wanted to purchase shares in a subsidiary of the Celanese Corporation of America which operates a large forest management operation under licence, partly in my constituency. They were not allowed to do so. They were obliged to buy shares in the parent company. Other residents in my district own shares in a certain relatively small British Columbia lumber company, I think it is Canadian Western. This company has been absorbed by a United States company. Therefore their shares are included in the shares of the parent company in the United States. The very thing which they thought they were doing, namely investing in a Canadian industry, or the very thing they invested their money for has now changed its complexion.

There may be a conflict of interests, that is to say, the best interests of Canada may not at all be the same as the best interests of shareholders of a foreign parent company controlling the policies of subsidiaries in Canada. To illustrate how a clash of interests may take place, I want to quote again from the Gordon commission report which cites the oil industry as an example:

> —in the oil industry the same large international companies, or their affiliates and subsidiaries, which broadly speaking dominate the producing, refining and marketing sections of the Canadian industry, are the principal suppliers of crude oil to the large market centred in Montreal, and are important suppliers in most areas of the United States. The immediate and continuing interest of the Canadian subsidiaries of these companies, and indeed of Canada, is to find increasing markets for Canadian oil in the United States, or, failing that, perhaps in the Montreal area. Without growing markets a large part of the oil being discovered in western Canada would have to be "shut in" perhaps for some considerable period. The importance and the immediacy of this problem of markets for the oil industry in Canada is clear enough to Canadians. Quite understandably, it may appear somewhat less important and less immediate to those in other countries who control the situation and who have world-wide interests to consider.

I think that is another good illustration of the effect which the policy of parent companies in the United States has on the development of Canadian national resources.

In concluding my brief remarks on this question, I want to suggest that some recommendations made by the Gordon commission could be very well incorporated in legislation and be introduced by this government. The commission recommends that subsidiaries of foreign-owned corporations should be compelled to:

1. Sell an appreciable interest—approximately 25 per cent—in their equity stock to Canadians. In order to ensure that the 25 per cent would not revert to United States ownership, such shares would have to be made transferable only to Canadians or residents of Canada. Another method would be to provide that such shares would lose their voting rights on transfer to non-Canadians.

2. Include on the board of directors a number of independent Canadians.

3. Employ wherever possible a certain number of Canadians in senior management and technical positions.

4. Publish their financial statements, and make full disclosure of their Canadian operations.

Furthermore, we believe that legislation should be enacted to prevent the passing of control or ownership of Canadian banks and insurance companies into foreign hands by providing that shares in such institutions which in the future are acquired by non-residents of Canada be ineligible to vote.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Is the hon. gentleman not aware of the fact that last year we passed some legislation to prevent the transfer of insurance companies to the United States?

Mr. Herridge: Yes; I am fully aware of that fact but it does not cover the complete picture as would the recommendations.

We in this group would like to see the government of Canada introduce legislation to implement the remedies suggested in the Gordon commission report. While those recommendations would not meet the situation completely, from our point of view it would at least indicate that this government was taking a step in the direction that it has advocated, and which some of its members have advocated vociferously in this house when in opposition.

I was very much interested in the suggestion made by the leader of the official opposition, namely that consideration might be given, if I understood him correctly, to a trade treaty between the United States and Canada. We in this group think that suggestion merits close consideration. It would provide an opportunity for representatives of this government to go into every aspect of business that arises in the circumstances that we have mentioned and others and would codify in a sense and be a means of reaching an agreement that I think would be the commencement of laying the foundation of much sounder trading relationships in the future.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, I must say that we in this group were pleased to see the leader of the official opposition introduce this subject by his amendment into the house today. It is an important question. It concerns a large number of Canadians. As the result of the introduction of this amendment and any other amendments or subamendments that may be introduced I trust that the government will be influenced to start walking in the direction in which it has urged others to walk in the years passed, namely in the direction of Canada's interests with respect to external affairs, foreign policy, defence policy, agricultural policy and industrial policy.

Mr. A. R. Smith (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to congratulate the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) for the introduction of the amendment, but nevertheless I do welcome the opportunity to express a few opinions in relation to two aspects of the subject with which the resolution deals. As the Leader of the Opposition mentioned in his initial remarks, this is one of those opportunities when the opposition has the right to criticize the government and government policy; but after listening to him, I rather had the feeling that he really was not very annoyed with us. The very nature of the amendment itself, phrased in such broad generalities, reminded me so much of that old adage which is attributed to people who have been in political office for some time, "We must never build our political fences so high that they cannot adequately be straddled at all times."

I felt this was the nature of the comments which the Leader of the Opposition made, for while in these loose generalities he suggested that we should make some improvements, or some more effective general arrangements—he made a reference to the possibility of establishing a treaty—I think it can be adequately pointed out that the long range program aimed at improving the understanding between our two countries has to a very substantial measure alleviated a situation which certainly could have been considerably worse had some action not been taken. I propose to itemize these aspects in my brief remarks this afternoon.

Every member of this house is naturally concerned with the problem of our relationships with other countries, in particular with the United States. I rather feel, Mr. Speaker, that I have some particular interest in that matter, because in the consular area of my own constituency there are some 46,000 Americans. I think we have set an example to the rest of Canada, and certainly to the rest of the world, of how good neighbours can exist side by side in the working out of many domestic problems and, yes, of many national problems.

Let us look at the history of our problems very briefly. The long standing complaint, of course, by Canadians has been that we for the most part have been ignored by the United States. I suggest that the action of the United States congress in the past year, associated with the economic life of that country, has to a very substantial degree alleviated and reduced, in fact almost eliminated the argument that we have been ignored. There are four very obvious examples of that. First of all, the visit of the President of the United States to this house of parliament. Second, there was the extension of the reciprocal trade act. Third, there was the production of the Hays-Coffin report which has already been referred to; and fourth, there was the acceptance by United States congress of the need of a joint legislative committee between our two countries.

I was not in a position to thoroughly understand whether the Leader of the Opposition approved or disapproved of the establishment of this committee. I think in effect what he did question was its effectiveness. I suggest to you, sir, that the first advantage to be gained from this committee and its appointment has already been accomplished. At long last we have some body which can deal effectively to define the area where our disagreement actually lies. So often we hear individuals on both sides of the border complaining about certain frictions which they insist exist.

Then when you examine them you find that many are actually imaginary. So I believe that the Canada-United States committee has, by its very appointment and through the work it has in front of it, the opportunity to define the area of disagreement, and once that has been accomplished it can bring back its report to the two legislative bodies they respectively represent. There we can see some attempt to reconcile the differences wherever they may exist.

I propose to deal with two of those difficulties. The first, which has been introduced many times into the house since March 10, is the question of the United States imposition of mandatory controls on the importation of Canadian oil. The history of this particular problem is one which has its basis of fact in that area of the United States which in past years had become oil deficient or short of oil is now in a surplus position. Then in June of 1957 we saw the introduction, first, of the voluntary controls which were later amended and made somewhat more severe. Then secondly, and more recently, as a result of the justice department of the United States advising the United States government that mandatory controls were essential because the voluntary controls offended the United States anti trust act, we saw the imposition of controls providing restriction to a greater degree than we have ever experienced before.

I think the first point that should be made, is that these controls were directed against all foreign importers. They were designed primarily against the largest importers of oil into the United States, the Venezuelan and Middle East countries bloc. The President and the United States government have said that they were designed to have least effect on Canada, and I think to a degree it can be said that there is some truth to this in that certain exemptions were made in the marketing area in the United States into which the Saskatchewan crude flows. But no one will disagree with the argument offered by the Leader of the Opposition that this was indeed a slap in the face to Canada, certainly based on the argument that in the interests of continental defence the United States could not declare our country exempt from the restrictions imposed on the other countries. I suggest that the real basis of the United States action was not the question of continental defence or the maintaining of a healthy petroleum industry, but was rather that the United States government succumbed to the very large and effective oil lobby which exists in Washington.

The problem we have, however—and let us look at the future—is that while Canada, it is true, was unable under certain circumstances to take advantage of the full quotas, it is certainly a wrong impression for anyone to suggest that these quotas were not harmful. Actually the restriction had this effect on us: We found that the market area of the United States was reduced. The net result was that the effect of competition had a very serious effect in particular on the markets which we refer to as district No. 5, the Pacific northwest of the United States, because all other foreign importers began to concentrate on the availability of the quotas open to all countries. In such a circumstance the Canadian found that he could not compete with the low concessional oil which, in many instances, was produced anywhere from 14 cents to 25 cents a barrel, compared with oil in Canada which would average $1 to $1.10 per barrel. So during the past year we as a country, because of the voluntary, now mandatory, restriction, reduced our imports into the United States by better than 40 per cent. Fortunately the domestic demand, particularly in Ontario, maintained a reasonably healthy oil situation, but the industry has been able to produce only about 50 per cent of its capacity compared with the United States average of 75 per cent.

Let us look at the action that has taken place. As I mentioned, these quotas were imposed on all importers. On several occasions Canada made representations to the United States government pointing out that in the interests of continental defence and our general trading relationships we should be declared exempt, first of all because we are separated only by a pipeline and not a waterway. In addition to this the report prepared by Messrs. Hays and Coffin which pointed out there should be no difference between the oil produced in Texas and the oil produced in Alberta in the interests of defence. The many important groups and bodies within the United States in addition to those in Canada that have asked the United States government to give consideration to the Canadian people in this respect have all been ignored. Today we find ourselves in a situation where if the door has not been completely closed to us it has most certainly to a large extent been shut.

We should remember that this restrictive action began as early as May or June of 1957 because of the building up of the surplus supply of oil in the United States that started immediately following the Suez crisis. After representations made to the United States government were turned down Canada was required to develop other markets within its own borders. As I mentioned, Ontario fortunately took up part of the demand. We now find ourselves on the horns of a dilemma. On the one hand we have been told that these quotas are essential in order to maintain a healthy industry in the United States and on the other hand our application for exemption was rejected. We cannot be declared exempt because we lack a continental agreement.

The Leader of the Opposition spoke today of the need to make more effective arrangements on the basis of some treaty. This is by no means a new idea. The greatest obstacle in this proposal would be endeavouring to spell out in an agreement arrangements in relation to an industry such as the oil and gas industry. Let us bear in mind that voluntary oil import quotas represent only one aspect of the problem of this industry and our relationship to the United States in this field. In many instances the United States federal power commission has failed to co-operate with Canadian interests. Licences have been granted to Canadian exporters in the past by the Canadian government; however, if I may use the term, we in Canada have had the short end of the stick in that the federal power commission has failed to act. With respect to this aspect of the problem it is understandable that the Canadian government has adopted a firm attitude prior to granting any export licence for gas and I suggest that now is the time for even firmer action to be taken with respect to oil.

We have seen the building up of reserves of oil in the United States which have prevented our marketing our products in that country. We have seen little likelihood as a result of the presidential statement of any hope for a change in this policy although the press release made a loose reference to future defence arrangements to be worked out between Venezuela, Canada and the United States. If the Canadian government is not in a position to negotiate a general agreement on a top level basis with the two countries to which I referred surely this government must adopt a policy that will tend to sell more oil to Canadians.

I believe, in other words, we have reached the time when a quota system in Canada should be seriously considered. This is not a means of retaliation; rather, it is merely a matter of adjusting our own economy to make absolutely certain that we provide the required markets for Canadian producers. This is not a criticism of any policy that has been introduced up to this point. There was every reason to follow the policy of retaining the most economic markets in the United States, especially that of district No. 5 in the Pacific northwest. It is wrong for us to endeavour to obtain markets that are many miles distant only if we are unable to work out some arrangement with the United States.

I suggest, therefore, that now is the time to introduce legislation of our own in this field as a protection to Canadians, although this government through no fault of its own, has nevertheless been unsuccessful in persuading the government of the United States to change its policy. It will not be easy to work out arrangements under which the United States market may be retained. We have frequently been told by the United States that if we could satisfy Venezuela in terms of persuading that country that our being exempted from United States restrictions would not affect them we would better be able to negotiate an agreement with the United States. The complications involved in working out any agreement render it a near impossibility. I therefore believe it is time that we developed our own markets and examined how we might introduce policies to adequately deal with the situation.

I wish to speak for a moment about investment capital. The Leader of the Opposition suggested that we should not become completely reliant upon this for the development of our country. This is an obvious statement we all accept. May I urge, however, that in our desire to judge fairly whether or not this capital has been dangerous in terms of its volume putting us in the position of being subject to United States dominance and in generally assessing its effect on the economy, let us not discourage United States capital from coming into Canada. Let us examine the history of what it has produced for us. The oil industry which requires over $1 million a day to operate could never have developed to its present stage without the assistance of United States capital. We do not generate enough capital in Canada to take care of the demands of this industry alone. We could also consider the development of our mining industry and the pulp and paper industry. To a substantial degree these have been assisted by United States investment.

I suggest that we have all the legislation and lawmakers we require to ensure that the rights of Canadians are protected which is of course essential but if we do anything to discourage the flow of United States capital into Canada we will regret it for many years to come, for it will affect the orderly progress and development of our country. We should not forget that we have also attracted European capital to Canada.

I fail to understand those people who on the one hand criticize the advantages to be gained by having United States investment capital in Canada and on the other indicate concern about the lack of progress and development of Canadian industries. I believe it is fair to say that during the past year the oil and gas industry led the boom in this country in its period of prosperity and progress. If we do anything to discourage investment capital it will retard our expansion and reduce the level of prosperity we are enjoying today.

We should bear in mind that this capital is employed in a variety of industries producing new wealth and higher standards of living for Canadians and therefore we cannot be concerned with the nationality of the dollar that serves us so well. Instead we should lay ground rules so the dollar can be employed in Canada's development, and in Canada's interest.

The majority of United States companies in the petroleum industry already recognize the above fact. Many insist on employing Canadian management and staff in their subsidiaries. Many are taking an active part in the community life of Canadian cities and many invite Canadian participation in their new underwritings. Through their affiliates and subsidiaries in the development of the by-products of the industry these companies have generated vast wealth for the benefit of Canadians.

Finally, may I say, Mr. Speaker, to the Leader of the Opposition that when we enter into a debate which on the one hand suggests that the rights and the sovereignty of our country are at stake and in jeopardy we must also assume the responsibility of recognizing that to a very large degree we have obtained the level of development which we have today because of the co-operative attitude we have worked out with the United States. On the other hand, it is not inconsistent to say to the United States, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) has said on a number of occasions, that we as Canadians will insist on our rights. We recognize that there are disagreements between us. These, however, are not insurmountable. They may be worked out on a basis of common understanding.

I take pride in the fact that in Canada we have developed a growing nationalism, a nationalism which has for the first time in many years made Canadians realize that we have a common bond—that we are not poor relations in the family of world nations. I think it is a very sound thing that we have developed an appreciation of what we own, and the assets that we have, within our borders. I think however that it would be a sad day if in the building up of any animosities—because to a large degree many are purely imaginary—we were to do anything which would destroy a relationship between our two countries which has been second to none. I suggest that if we did that we would be doing a disservice to the people of Canada.

I suppose it will be said of me, as one who is concerned more than any other in this house with the problems of this one industry, that this is being inconsistent. This is not the case at all, Mr. Speaker. I have stated very clearly that because of the position in which the petroleum industry is now in, a mineral industry which is the No. 1 industry in Canada and so important to the welfare of the entire dominion, it is necessary for us to take our own action in the interest of Canadians. If we do that the United States administration will be the first to appreciate not only our right but the need for such action. Therefore, in speaking to this admendment I suggest that it is very difficult on the one hand to talk about the great concern which we have about the encroachment on our sovereignty and on the other to accept the benefits that we have obtained by the building up of a great nation in this country which to a large degree has resulted from the cooperative attitude which has been taken in that one country of all the countries of the world.

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, the subject of the discussion is perhaps one which affects the lives of more people than any other topic, which cannot be treated lightly and upon which there should be a broad area of agreement in all parties.

One of the greatest factors in international relations is the problem of mutual understanding between the citizens of neighbouring nations such as Canada and the United States. Happily, there exists a community of interest between those two nations which is rather unique in the world today, a community of interest which provides the greatest opportunity for the exemplification of international understanding and good will. For that understanding to deteriorate would be a sad blow to both countries as well as a sad blow to the other free nations of the world.

One of the world's greatest needs today is understanding and good will in the international field. These two nations, Canada and the United States, are very fortunate to have the opportunity to demonstrate to the world how to get along together even in the face of some conflict of interest. Understanding, friendship and good will must remain as solid as the rock of Gibraltar between those two nations, but unless we work steadily and constructively for this development the rock will give way and misunderstanding will set in. However, in our dealings with our powerful neighbour, while always friendly, we must also be firm whenever our interests are in serious jeopardy, caused by some contemplated action of the United States.

Apart from the delicate relationship of mutual defence and recurring irritations about mutual trade, there is one other very serious problem which concerns my own constituency in a very particular way and it concerns every municipality along the St. Lawrence seaway. I am speaking of the diversion of water from lake Michigan by the city of Chicago which in effect will threaten the water levels of the great lakes, thus affecting navigation along the St. Lawrence seaway and most certainly the new projected seaway terminal at the lakehead. What worries the people of the lakehead and elsewhere is the feeble protest of our government, if it can be called a protest, against this new attempt of water stealing by the city of Chicago.

The supreme court of the United States issued a decree which provided that after December 31, 1958 the diversion of water from lake Michigan through the Chicago canal should be limited to 1,500 cubic feet of water per second. However, the city of Chicago is now trying to increase the diversion permitted by an additional 1,000 cubic feet of water per second. In spite of the fact that a bill to permit this addition was blocked in the United States senate in 1958, the demand by the city of Chicago is on again and with added vigour.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The bill was passed.

Mr. Badanai: No, the bill is not passed. Only a few days ago the mayor of Chicago made a statement to the effect that the diversion of water from lake Michigan was none of Canada's business. I submit that this is very much our business and the mayor of Chicago should know better than to make such a statement, unbecoming to the office which he holds; but perhaps it may be that he is preparing himself for an election. As a matter of fact, I understand there is an election going on now in the city of Chicago.

It is generally admitted that the lowering of the levels of lake Huron and lake Erie would handicap the seaway project, which is Canada's business and Fort William and Port Arthur—in fact all of northwestern Ontario—would be directly affected and indirectly even the interests of the prairie provinces would feel the impact by injury to the shipping route.

Today I received a letter from the city clerk of the corporation of the city of Fort William which illustrates the deep concern of our city in this matter of diversion and I now wish to read it to the house:

I am directed to advise you that at a meeting of the council of the corporation of the city of Fort William held on the 10th instant, the following resolution of its finance committee was unanimously adopted, a copy of which I was instructed to forward you for your consideration:

"That whereas the metropolitan sanitary district of greater Chicago in the United States of America is contemplating the further diversion of water from lake Michigan for its sewage disposal systems;

And whereas this diversion of water is detrimental to the harbour development of the city of Fort William;

Be it therefore resolved that representations be made to the federal government to protest the action of the Chicago authority and to halt the unwarranted diversion of water by the metropolitan sanitary district of greater Chicago;

And that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the Prime Minister of Canada, the Ontario water resources commission of Ontario, and to Mr. H. Badanai, M.P., and to Mr. Clare E. Mapledoram, M.L.A., for Fort William."

The suggestion has also been made that the city of Chicago is interested in the diversion for the purpose of developing hydro power in that area. If that is true, Mr. Speaker, this matter is even more serious than it appeared to be at first. According to the records, when the Prime Minister and his supporters were in opposition they were loud in condemning the Liberal government for not speaking loudly enough to the United States in the protection of Canada's interests. But the question now is, is the government doing anything about them?

What has been the attitude of the government since it came into power with respect to the present water diversion? Some of the answers can be found in Hansard. On August 2, 1958, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Smith) gave the following answer to a question put to him by the hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Murphy). I quote from page 3009 of Hansard:

Mr. Speaker, I wish to take this opportunity to answer the question which was addressed to me on Wednesday, July 30, by the hon. member for Lambton West dealing with water diversion at Chicago. My answer to his question, which was directed to three main points, is as follows:

1. The position taken by Canada with respect to a proposed additional diversion of 1,000 cubic feet per second from lake Michigan at Chicago is set forth in an aide memoire dated January 6, 1958. As the document is somewhat long, I ask leave to have it printed as an annex to Hansard.

2. To the extent that any additional diversion of water may take place at Chicago, the level of the lower lakes and connecting channels will be reduced as far as Montreal, and there will be a corresponding reduction in the availability of water for hydroelectric generation at Niagara, Barnhart and Beauharnois. The effect, however, varies at different places and at different times over a period of years. I should be pleased to arrange for the hon. member to consult tables and graphs in order to determine precisely what effect a particular diversion would have at a specific time in a specific place.

3. Principles applicable to a diversion from lake Michigan would not necessarily apply to boundary waters, as lake Michigan is not a boundary water.

I think I should perhaps read the aide memoire because it is very important to understand exactly what we are talking about. The aide memoire alluded to by the Secretary of State for External Affairs is headed, "Chicago Diversion—Aide Memoire from Canada to United States", and reads as follows:

Useful conversations between United States and Canadian officials were held in Ottawa on July 7, 1957 on the subject of the sanitation problems which gave rise to proposed legislation for a three-year temporary diversion of 1,000 cubic feet of water per second from the great lakes system and on the subject of studies to be carried out under the proposed legislation.

The Canadian government understands that if such legislation is enacted these sanitation studies will not be limited to evaluating the effects of dilution but will also include consideration of all possible measures for dealing with waste disposal facilities at Chicago. Such measures would include:

(a) complete separation of storm sewers from the domestic sewerage system or expansion of the existing treatment facilities to serve a total combined flow;

(b) treatment of organic wastes in industrial plants before discharging these effluents into the sewerage system;

(c) chlorination of effluent before discharge into the Illinois waterway; and

(d) artificial aeration of the waterway.

The treatment of sewage in the Chicago area is, of course, a matter entirely within the jurisdiction of the competent legislative bodies within the United States. It is understood that present treatment of waste represents a vast improvement over conditions which existed in former years and that under the present day uses of the water the waste is more a nuisance than a menace to the public health in the area.

In considering the economics of alternative methods of improved waste disposal, it is assumed that full consideration will be given to the economic harm which may be done to navigation and hydroelectric generation in both countries by extended use of dilution methods.

It is not possible to give a firm undertaking to provide flows of a particular volume through the existing Longlac and Ogoki diversions to the great lakes basin during the three-year period envisaged by proposed United States legislation. However, if it were possible to offset part of the effects of the Chicago diversion by inflows from the Albany basin in Canada, it would be equitable that an equivalent amount of water should remain available for use in hydroelectric power generation by the Ontario interests at St. Marys falls, Niagara falls and in the international section of the St. Lawrence river until the effects of the proposed temporary diversion will have ceased to be felt in the great lakes system.

All rights under the provisions of the boundary waters treaty of 1909 are specifically reserved.

That is the aide memoire from the Canadian embassy in Washington, dated January 6, 1958. As found on page 620 of Hansard for February 3, 1959, the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) asked this question:

Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I should like to know whether the government has sent a note of protest to the United States government in connections with Bill HR-1 now before congress for the further diversion of water out of the great lakes into the Chicago drainage canal.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs replied:

Mr. Speaker, as I informed the house a few days ago this matter relating to the purport of Bill HR-1 is under consideration. We are considering various representations that have been made by officials and by other organizations. We have not made a protest.

As late as February 12 the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) asked the following question, as found at page 946 of Hansard:

Has the minister yet sent a protest on behalf of this government to the United States government? If not, does he realize that he has only a week left before the hearings begin in the senate on this matter?

The Secretary of State for External Affairs replied:

As I informed the house on two recent occasions, this matter is under close study by our officials and, as I indicated a moment ago, we are ready and anxious to get information with respect to the discussions. We do realize that the hearings will begin in the near future, but that does not indicate that the bill then will be adopted.

Now, Mr. Speaker, after studying the answers to the questions asked on the subject, one cannot help but come to the conclusion that the indication of softness in the Canadian aide memoire must have created the impression in Washington that all was well and that Chicago could go ahead with its plans for diversion.

At a convention of the lake carriers' association of the United States and the dominion marine association, held in Ottawa last January, a resolution was passed unanimously opposing the diversion of water from the great lakes watershed. I wish to read that resolution:

Whereas, the several states and provinces bordering on the great lakes hold title to those waters under a high public trust to protect and preserve them for the benefit of all their citizens; and

Whereas, by the Boundary Waters Treaty of 1909, the United States and Canada have dedicated the waters of the great lakes to the primary purpose of commerce and navigation to be enjoyed by their citizens, subject only to certain uses by riparian states and provinces not inconsistent with such primary purpose; and

Whereas, by the law common to the United States and Canada any diversion of such waters by any riparian or other user constitutes a wrong against all other riparian owners; and

Whereas, any diversion of water from lake Michigan lowers the natural level of that lake and lakes Huron, Erie, Ontario, their connecting and tributary waters and the St. Lawrence river; directly impairs the natural depth of rivers and harbours, nullifies improvements therein, reduces the carrying capacity of Canadian and the United States great lakes fleets and increases transportation costs, all to the detriment and injury of the people; and

Whereas, the waterborne commerce of the great lakes is indispensable to the growth and well-being of the United States and Canada; and

Whereas, any diversion in one country gives rise to dispute between the people of that country and the people of the other country, which should in the interests of their friendly relations be referred for investigation and recommendation as to solution to some tribunal in which the people of the two countries have equal voice:

Now, therefore, be it resolved that the dominion marine association and lake carriers' association, in joint meeting assembled at Ottawa, Ontario, Canada, this 26th day of January 1959, do hereby express their unalterable opposition to any diversion of water from the great lakes watershed and urge that the Congress of the United States refrain from passing legislation authorizing any diversion of water from the great lakes, which diversion would violate solemn treaty rights and obligations between the two nations and would pillage the natural resources of the great lakes watershed vested by law and by decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the people of the great lakes basin; and

Be it further resolved that the two associations hereby urge that the United States and Canada refer to the international joint commission all questions concerning the diversion of water from the great lakes for full investigation and recommendation as to solution to the end that all controversies may be laid at rest and the rights of the people of the great lakes watershed be preserved; and

Be it further resolved that a copy of this resolution be furnished to the chief executive of the respective national governments of the two countries and to each governor or prime minister, as the case may be, of states and provinces bordering on the great lakes and St. Lawrence river.

Those people who are saying that there is no cause for alarm should ponder over the meaning of some editorials which appeared in the Chicago Tribune, one in February, 1957 and the other in February, 1959. As an illustration of the seriousness of this matter, I should like to quote from the editorial of February, 1957, which says:

> Twice President Eisenhower has vetoed bills permitting a slight increase in lake diversion at Chicago. In the second veto message last August 9 he said he believed no increase should be granted without negotiation with Canada, and he announced that he had asked the state department to undertake discussions with that country.
> We said at the time that such parleys were unnecessary, since neither congress nor the supreme court has recognized that Canada has any legal right to interfere with diversion from lake Michigan. Now it appears that the state department has not bothered itself to carry out the president's directive.
> Members of the Canadian parliament who recently sought to get their government's views on the matter were told that no consultation had been requested by the United States. The questioners were referred to the terms of the 1909 boundary waters treaty which says that each government reserves to itself—

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member is reading a comment upon what has taken place in the house, which strictly is not in accordance with the practice. As I understand what he is reading, it refers to what has already been done earlier this session.

Mr. Badanai: I am speaking on the contemplated water diversion from the great lakes at Chicago. This has a direct bearing on the relations between Canada and the United States, and that is why I am taking the liberty of reading this portion of the editorial.

> The Canadian government might have added, for further clarification, that the treaty was made when the diversion rate was assumed to be 10,000 cubic feet a second, and the agreement specifically provided that its terms did not apply to "cases already existing", which included the diversion rate at Chicago.
> Now the rate is fixed by a supreme court decision at only 1,500 cubic feet a second. The bills vetoed by the president would have increased the rate to 2,500 cubic feet for a three-year experimental period during which army engineers would study the effects.
> We have no objections to the failure of the state department to negotiate with Canada. Perhaps the department has at last discovered that the question is one for congress to decide and that Canada's opinion is irrelevant. If so, President Eisenhower ought to be advised by the department. The bill for increased diversion then can be passed promptly by congress and there will be no excuse for another veto.

Then, I should like to quote a few paragraphs from this other editorial which appeared in the same newspaper in February, 1959.

> If Chicago is "stealing" water, it is doing so by order of the United States supreme court and by an act of congress authorizing the diverted water to be used for navigation in the Illinois waterway. The matter of how much water is needed for navigation in the waterway has never been decided, but the supreme court has ruled that congress has the power to fix that amount.
> The army engineers say that permanent regulation of the lake levels to prevent the cyclical changes would present no great engineering difficulties. Illinois would be glad to take part in such a program and to pay its share of the cost. The other lake states would do the same, abandoning their false propaganda and mischievous litigation, if they really wished to stabilize lake levels.

That is the end of the quotation from that editorial. The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Hamilton) speaking to the Canadian club at Montreal on December 9, 1957, had this to say about our water resources and I shall quote just a few paragraphs:

> The importance of water conservation is growing along with the nation. It must consist of more than a response to immediate emergencies such as floods or water shortages as it has too often been in the past. The conservation of water, as indeed of any natural resource, looks to both the present and the future; it is this characteristic which gives it special significance. In seeing to it that our resources are used wisely and well we recognize that, however important they may be to us today, they have a still greater role to play. Meeting the problems of conserving our water resources is both a challenge and an opportunity measured by the contribution which these resources can make to Canada's future development.

The minister is to be congratulated for pointing out the challenge for the conservation not only of our water resources but also of our rights whenever and wherever they may contested. I respectfully submit that the Secretary of State for External Affairs, for whom I have great respect, or the Prime Minister should give the house a clear statement without any equivocation as to what action the government contemplates taking to safeguard our interest in the great lakes.

Mr. H. F. Jones (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, the remarks of the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Badanai) with regard to the Chicago diversion have already been dealt with in advance by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Smith) and I think there is no need to refer to that question at this time. I should like to refer, however, to the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) which were confused as to the present, bemused as to the future and apparently forgetful of the past. The amendment he moved was in these terms:

> This house is of the opinion that recent decisions of the United States government, particularly in the field of production and commercial policy, underline the necessity for the government to make more effective arrangements with the United States to prevent the undesirable impact of those decisions on Canada, and the necessity of a more active participation by the government in working out the implications of interdependence and closer unity within the North Atlantic community.

We must wonder at once just what he has in mind when he mentions the North Atlantic community. Is he referring to the nations of the NATO alliance or has he in mind some wider group of nations? Is he referring to that great trading area upon which the nations of the North Atlantic depend for trade but which by no means is restricted solely the nations of the North Atlantic? The trading area of the nations of the North Atlantic goes far beyond that ocean. That area depends for its trade on the Far East and the Middle East as well as other parts of the world. This amendment, I submit, is confused in that particular.

I should like to deal for a moment with the proposal he made as to the future relations between this country and the United States. This proposal is similar to the one he made in the House of Commons on February 26, when, as reported at page 1410 of Hansard, he said:

> I have been wondering whether the time has not now come for a top level formal conference between the leaders in Canada and the United States to see if some formal agreement could not be reached and embodied in a formal convention, perhaps for ratification by legislatures—because this would be one way of bringing these matters to the attention of congress as well as parliament—embodying principles that should govern our relations.

On that occasion, when I rose to speak, as reported at page 1435 of Hansard, I said:

> The Leader of the Opposition mentioned at some length a suggestion with regard to the formulation of a new group—a formal conference, I believe he called it—to deal with problems relating to the United States.

The Leader of the Opposition rose at that time and said this:

> On a point of order, I wish the hon. member would explain what he means, because I made no such suggestions, nothing remotely approaching it.

By reference to Hansard we can see now that is exactly what he was proposing then and that is exactly what he is proposing now.

One of the difficulties raised in connection with this question—which the Leader of the Opposition has raised at this time and which I dealt with on February 26—is the very nature of the difference between our two governments. May I refer for a moment to the terms of the exchange of notes that was made between Canada and the United States on October 26, 1950, a document to which he has referred, which clearly illustrates the limitations of this sort of agreement. The note reads:

> In the interests of mutual security and to assist both governments to discharge their obligations under the United Nations charter and the North Atlantic Treaty, it is believed that this field of common action should be further extended. It is agreed, therefore, that our two governments shall co-operate in all respects practicable, and to the extent of their respective executive powers—

I emphasize that particular point, because of course the executive powers of the government of the United States are different from the powers of the government of Canada. The executive powers of the United States, under their system of government, are restricted. To make such an agreement binding in fact on our two countries the restriction would require, as I said on February 26, a self-denying ordinance on the part of the House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States, denying them the right to deal with these matters of international obligations with which it is at present their right to deal. I am sure they would not accept—and up to the present time they have shown no indication of any desire to accept—any fetters on their rights in this regard. That is why the agreements of the past between Canada and the United States, such as the one I have mentioned here, restrict the agreement to co-operation between the governments in all respects practicable to the extent of their respective executive powers. In my view there is no possibility that we could get the congress of the United States to agree to a set of principles in advance in order to deal with situations which could not be foreseen in advance, and which would restrict the activities and the rights of their legislative bodies.

I mentioned again, when dealing with this proposal previously, that there are already in existence many channels of communication between the United States and Canada, both formal and informal—and they were mentioned today by the Leader of the Opposition—by which the problems of the respective countries can be brought to the attention of the other in order that they may be dealt with in accordance with the legislative practices of the two countries. In regard to this particular problem it seems to me that the introduction of a further group in this connection would have a shackling effect on the relationship between the two countries. In view of the fact that we already have these many existing agencies for conveying international thoughts from Canada to the United States, the introduction of yet another would clog and confuse the present channels of communication. Each of the channels of communication would again have to refer to this document which the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) wants to have formulated in order to make sure that their particular proposals fall in line with these principles.

It seems to me that the relations between this country and the United States, two great and expanding nations, cannot be fettered by this means in our future relationship. Surely it is wiser to ensure, as this government has done and as the Leader of the Opposition has acknowledged it has done since it came to office, that the United States is made aware of the determination of Canada to protect its sovereignty, its economic interests, and to assure in co-operation with the United States the survival of our two countries, as well as the countries of the NATO nations.

The Leader of the Opposition in making his submission dealt at very great length with this proposal of a new treaty between Canada and the United States. He based his remarks—indeed, the phraseology of the resolution supports this—upon the necessity of working out the implications of interdependence and closer unity within the North Atlantic community; at any rate, within a larger field than that of continental interdependence. He stressed that several times in the course of his remarks. I would suggest that the proposal that the Leader of the Opposition made in this regard would work exactly contrary to the expressed intentions of his motion. Surely the implications of such an agreement, if that were possible, would be such as to divide the European nations of NATO from us, and make them suspicious that there was developing such a division between the European and North Atlantic sides. In this regard I would like to refer to his speech of February 26, on page 1411, of Hansard, where he dealt with this particular problem. He said:

> If we on this continent do not give some degree of consideration to and take some action about this development which is taking place in Europe—and I have said this a good many times—we will perhaps one of these days be faced with the division of the Atlantic world between the North American and European segments.

He goes on to say, quite rightly:

> No one will gain from any division like that except those who are attempting to destroy the whole Atlantic community.

The very proposal that he has made today would be one which would tend to destroy the unity which there is in the NATO nations, and would divide them. In this regard I would like to refer to the record of what has gone on in this field of interdependence.

I would like to refer to what have been the developments in the years since the war in this portion of the world, which the Leader of the Opposition refers to as the North Atlantic community. In March, 1947, the economic and social council of the United Nations organization established the economic commission for Europe, whose aim was stated as being to initiate and participate in measures for facilitating concerted action for the economic reconstruction of Europe, for raising the level of European economic activity, and for maintaining and strengthening the economic relations of the European countries. Of course, its initial start was not a start which could have a life of great duration because Soviet membership was included in that particular organization. Therefore it was necessary in 1948 to form the organization for European economic co-operation excluding the Soviet states.

Originally the O.E.E.C. aimed at enabling its members to co-operate closely in their economic relations and to formulate and execute a joint European recovery program based on Marshall Aid from the United States. As all hon. members will recall, the accomplishments of this body exceeded the hopes of its founders. Mutual consultation on economic policies among its members increased, and it carried out a program of trade liberalization. It stimulated production in its member countries and developed the European payments union to facilitate payment for articles of European commerce. Side by side with the attempts at economic revival, efforts were made to establish a new pattern of political and military co-operation.

The Dunkirk treaty of 1947, which bound Britain and France to resist any revival of German aggression, made way for the Brussels treaty of economic, social and cultural collaboration and collective self-defence, out of which developed western European union and provided for mutual defensive action by Britain, France and the Benelux countries in the event of an armed attack in Europe. I am going into this history, in order that we in Canada may recall at this time, in view of the comments made by the Leader of the Opposition, the record of the part which Canada took in those events in the past.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Jones: Mr. Speaker, before the six o'clock adjournment I had been dealing with the resolution which is proposed by the Leader of the Opposition and I referred to another proposal he made in his speech which was similar in character to that which he had proposed in this house on February 26 and to which I replied on the same date as reported at page 1435 of Hansard.

I also attempted in my earlier remarks to deal with the record that had been established in the field of interdependence arising out of the communist threat in the early postwar days. The purely national response to the threat of aggression in that period gave way after the treaty of Dunkirk of 1947 to the limited regional response of the western European union which in time was largely supplanted by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization with its much wider concept, an organization which in its original form had been thought of primarily as a military and political alliance embracing the fifteen member nations of NATO: Norway, Denmark, the Benelux countries, West Germany, Portugal, the United Kingdom, France, Italy, Germany and Iceland as well as Canada and the United States and extending as far east as Greece and Turkey.

Since the formation of NATO in April 1949 a number of other organizations have been created which to some extent perhaps have reduced the emphasis which might otherwise have been placed on development through NATO with respect to the ways and means to promote the non-military side of the alliance. There is, for example, the council of Europe which was launched in 1949—the talking shop of Europe as it has been called —an organization which has nevertheless been useful. Its purpose was to encourage social, economic and cultural co-operation among its members. It also had its intentions directed toward the formulation of European as opposed to purely national opinion.

There is the European coal and steel community of 1950, a remarkable and successful adventure in the creation of an organization which in itself has certain sovereign powers and rises in respect of those powers above the national states in whose territory it operates. More recently there has been the European economic community inaugurating a common market for its six member countries and finally the European atomic energy community, EURATOM, which aims to develop nuclear energy for peaceful uses with a view to raising the standards of living of its member states.

Much has been said in the past about the implementation of article 2 of the North Atlantic treaty. I wish to make reference to a statement that appears at page 48 of the report of the Princeton University conference on NATO of June 1957:

> Many specific proposals for expanding NATO's role in the economic sphere have been put forward by both official and private persons. But the facts are that NATO was not designed as an instrument for economic collaboration, and it has not acted as such an institution. The various suggestions that it do so have virtually come to naught.

In view of the existence of other organizations for economic co-operation the communique of the heads of government meeting in Paris in December of 1957 put its stand in these words:

> We will accordingly lend encouragement to a successful development of the European economic committee and of a European free trade area.

I may say that apart from the purely military aspects of economic co-operation the emphasis has been to give importance to those initiatives in such a way as to—and again I refer to the text of the communique:

> —strengthen not only the participating countries, but also the relations within the Atlantic community and the free world as a whole.

In fact, clause 34 of that communique outlined what may be expected in the thinking of that time when it described the most that NATO can and should do in these words:

> —without duplicating the work of other agencies, it should review from time to time economic trends and assess economic progress and make suggestions for improvement either through existing organizations, by the efforts of individual countries or in special cases by new initiatives.

I would recall to hon. members that last November the secretary general, Mr. Spaak, in addressing the NATO parliamentarians conference said:

> A more competent body than NATO is necessary to face the Russian challenge for world domination in the political and economic fields.

He went on to say that at present the western nations:

> —lack a body which would consider all economic angles, as the Russians are able to do. As a matter of fact—

He said,

> —I do not even think that NATO should be this body for the needs in this sphere exceed the limits of our Atlantic alliance.

Mr. Spaak also said in a more general way:

> NATO is no longer the perfect answer to the problem of communist expansion which it was when it came into being. The communist menace has now become more African and Asian than European, more economic than social and military.

Although we may not agree with Mr. Spaak's general interpretation of the situation, particularly in view of the present situation in Berlin where in fact military pressure is being threatened, nevertheless something of what he said points up a problem for Canada. Outside NATO the majority of the existing international organizations I have mentioned either attempt to deal with economic matters on a universal or worldwide scale or on the other hand are basically European rather than Atlantic and hence exclude Canada in the nature of their organization. The inverted protectionism of the common market excludes this country.

The O.E.E.C. excludes this country. All these organizations or proposals for organizations of European rather than Atlantic nature may assist in the recovery of Europe and for this we must be thankful. Those organizations were created or were in the process of being created at a time when the Leader of the Opposition was in the government of this country and when Canada's bargaining power in economic matters was never higher but still we were excluded.

Those were the days when the European nations were struggling to recover from the ravages of war and when for their very survival they depended upon Marshall aid, which was supplied by the United States. Never was there a time in the history of this country when Canada was in a better position to insist on interdependence than in those days. But now the Leader of the Opposition comes along and complains that this government should have been more active in working out the implications of interdependence and closer unity within the north Atlantic communities.

Those days I have mentioned, Mr. Speaker, were the days when he was in power, and it was at that time that those matters should have received his attention. Those days were different from the present, when the situation in the European countries has improved as a result of Marshall aid to the point where they have been restored in large part to the position they occupied before the war. Therefore, they are reasserting their independence in those matters. How much better would it have been if during those years when the Leader of the Opposition was a member of government, and at a time when Canada's bargaining position was never better in this field because of the economic weaknesses in the European countries which was brought about by the war, he had pushed the view then that he condemns the government for not pushing at this time?

The implications of western European economic integration are an aspect of this matter which I think deserve the consideration of this house. The two treaties of Rome, establishing respectively the European economic community and the European atomic energy community, were signed on March 25, 1957 by France, Germany, Italy, Belgium, Luxembourg and The Netherlands. They came into effect on January 1, 1958 and on January 1, of this year. The six signatories of the European economic community treaty put into effect among themselves a 10 per cent cut in tariffs and started to dismantle their remaining quantitative import restrictions.

These are the first steps which they took toward full customs union which it is proposed to establish in the course of a 12 to 15 year transitional period. At the end of that time, the six countries will thus form a free-trading area surrounded by a common external tariff and will also have undertaken a large degree of co-ordination of their commercial, social and financial policies, including the establishment of a European investment bank. Certain overseas territories of the member countries are associated with the community and will receive the benefits of the trade liberalization put into effect by the six countries without being called upon fully to reciprocate.

The other countries of western Europe have been apprehensive, as we in Canada have been apprehensive, lest the economic integration upon which the six have embarked create a grave economic and political division. Led by the United Kingdom, the remaining 11 members of the organization for European economic co-operation have accordingly striven for almost two years to negotiate some form of multilateral association with the six which would create a free-trading area among all 17 countries but which would leave each participant free to maintain its individual external tariff, and would stop short of the degree of integration aimed at by the European economic community. The efforts to reach agreement on the United Kingdom free-trade area proposals broke down in November, 1958. The commission of the European economic community is shortly, I understand, to produce a report suggesting how a multilateral association of the six and the 11 might be developed. In the meantime the United Kingdom and France are engaged in bilateral negotiations which may possibly provide a formula which could be used as a basis for a series of other bilateral arrangements intended to prevent the development of a discriminatory trading situation between those six on the one hand and the remaining members of the organization for European economic co-operation on the other.

The movement for European economic integration among the six at least has rested on the hope that by creating an economic unit comparable in size and resources with the United States they would be able to build up their economic efficiency and strength and by so doing would lay a foundation for an ultimate political integration. The free trade area countries, not being prepared to accept the long term political goal, have tended for their part to stress the disruptive effect which the emergence of an exclusive trading bloc in Europe might have on existing political co-operation. The same consideration would apply to co-operation within NATO, and for this reason it is of the utmost importance that any new economic relationships established in Europe, whether among six, or in the wider grouping of a free trade area, should be forward-looking and outward-looking and should not tend to create a regional and restrictive trading bloc.

In speaking in the budget debate on June 17, 1958, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) has this to say:

> The Canadian government is following with sympathy and interest these European efforts to integrate their economies and to develop a broader and more competitive system of production ... We attach high importance to the economic and political strength of western Europe as a safeguard of world peace and prosperity. Europe, however, has extensive trade and economic links with the rest of the world. In our view it is vital that efforts to solve European regional problems should not weaken these wider connections.

This, Mr. Speaker, is the situation as I see it at the present time. The Leader of the Opposition, in his amendment, when viewed in the light of his speech, is contradictory, confused and completely woolly. On the one hand he advocates the taking of certain steps by Canada and the United States with regard to the relationship between our two countries which would tend to create on this side of the water an economic bloc, which would be divisive in so far as our NATO alliance is concerned. It completely fails to deal with the serious situation in which Canada finds herself as a result of the events of the years since the war for Canada, in her progress in those years, has found herself excluded from various organizations which have been formed in Europe. Admirable as they are in the purposes for which they were originally formed, namely to assist in the economic recovery of Europe, they do in fact not take account of Canada's vital interest in maintaining her trading relations with Europe.

After all these years, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition comes along with the amendment he has moved today, apparently in repentance for the past but with hope for the future. But in view of the woolly speech he made this afternoon in relation to the amendment before us I think it must be apparent to all members of the house that the ineffective suggestion he made can only have been made on the basis that the opposition can find so few thing about which to criticize the government that they have to fall back on this completely inadequate suggestion to bring before the house at this time. Repeatedly they have charged us with following courses that they thought were defective and have urged that the business of the house should be adjourned to discuss these various matters. But when they have an opportunity for a full debate, for full criticism of any of the government's policies, they bring forward this dismal production today and, as I said before, all members of the house can only be heartened by the effort they have made in that it is an assurance that there must be so little with respect to which they can criticize the present government.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the amendment before the house is in terms which I think justify repetition at this time after the beginning of the evening sitting. It is in these words:

This house is of the opinion that recent decisions of the United States government, particularly in the field of production and commercial policy, underline the necessity for the government to make more effective arrangements with the United States to prevent the undesirable impact of those decisions on Canada, and the necessity of a more active participation by the government in working out the implications of interdependence and closer unity within the North Atlantic community.

I regret that the hon. member who has just taken his seat should seemingly have misinterpreted the motive behind the action taken in the opening speech made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) which was intended to provide the house with the opportunity of discussing the important relations that prevail between our country and the United States, one of the most powerful, if not militarily and economically the most powerful country in the world today. The utterances of the Leader of the Opposition were, I think, couched in language which, while on occasion involving criticism of the administration in some particulars, was generally aimed, as the reactions of the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) indicated, at the elucidation of a problem which increasingly is engaging the attention of serious-minded Canadians. As the Leader of the Opposition said, while all of our relations with friendly and not so friendly countries are important, it may be that in the complexity of modern life, both in terms of continental and other relationships, no bilateral relationship is as important as our relationship to the United States, both because of the fact that that country means a great deal to us in terms of our economic welfare and also because, through her position in world affairs, she is such a determinant factor in the easing of tension between nations and in the preservation of peace.

Therefore it is of the greatest importance that we should take advantage of opportunities such as this to assess the character of some of our problems as a result of our proximity to the United States, our association with her and our respective national ambitions and aspirations. Canadian-American relations have taken on an evolutionary form particularly in the last decade. For a long time we on both sides of the border referred with satisfaction to the fact that Canada and the United States in the Rush-Bagot treaty had developed possibly the first successful disarmament covenant among the nations. For a long time we have referred to the existence of the international joint commission as an exemplar of our instrumentality in preserving peace between two nations and providing a method for adjudication of their differences and conflicts.

Then too, we have often mentioned the importance of the Ogdensburg discussions between the president of the United States and the prime minister of Canada during the days of the second world war and the Hyde Park agreement that had such significance in smoothing our common participation for the preservation of freedom and the resulting establishment as a result of the informal discussions between the president and our prime minister of the permanent board on defence, an organization which, having no more than the power of recommendation, nevertheless did lay down in the early stages of the postwar period the continental defence arrangements that have now taken on a more mature character.

Since that time, as a result of meetings between the presidents and the prime ministers, further instruments for joint collaboration and consideration have been created such as the ministerial committee dealing with economic affairs, the defence committee of interested ministers from the two governments and now finally, as a result of the last visit of the President of the United States and his conversations with the Prime Minister of today and his colleagues, the decision to set up, in collaboration with Your Honour and His Honour in the other place and opposite numbers in the congress of the United States, a congressional and parliamentary group which is intended to provide a further opportunity of informing both our legislative bodies about problems that are regarded as having mutual interest and concern. I think we must observe that these various instruments that have been created for these purposes can, if fully employed, render very satisfactory and useful service to the relations which we hope and believe and know will prevail notwithstanding all the difficulties between our two countries.

But I must say that I am sure hon. gentlemen sitting in the ministerial benches will concur that we do not altogether feel too happy about some of the meetings of the joint ministerial groups. The last meeting perhaps is the best example of some of the weaknesses in this particular arrangement. I note that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) has said it is hoped that on some occasion within the very near future this ministerial group will meet again, but quite obviously from the long communique that followed its deliberations a few months ago that medium, not without its value, did not come up to expectations which hon. gentlemen on all sides had for it.

We may expect that with frankness and proper direction, both from the government side and this side of representatives from this house and from the other place, the representatives who sit on the joint parliamentary-congressional committee will be able to render valuable service, particularly to the people of the United States in indicating to them how Canadians feel about some of their domestic policies and the implications of some of their international policies, particularly the consequences of their natural supremacy in the matter of intercontinental defence.

We must, of course, pay our tribute to two distinguished members of the house of representatives who have projected our concern and our irritation in a very courageous manner. I refer to Mr. Brooks Hays, former representative from Arkansas, and Mr. Frank Coffin, from Maine. To these men, we must express the gratitude of this house and the people of Canada for bringing our problems to the attention of their colleagues, and we would hope to the people of the United States, what Canadians, regardless of party, feel about some of the commercial and economic policies pursued by the government of the United States which seriously affect the economic welfare of Canada, as we were reminded today by the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Smith).

It is with interest that I note from this report to which I have just made reference that until the middle of 1957 the main Canada-United States trade problem was the United States surplus disposal program on agricultural products which received its main impetus in 1954. I note that in commenting on some of the conclusions it is suggested by the Canadian-United States committee in a recent study that in the crop years 1954-55 over 40 per cent of the United States exports of agricultural commodities were aided under various governmental programs. With respect to wheat and wheat flour, virtually all such exports were subsidized and about one half moved under the stimulus of special disposal arrangements and the other half under the normal subsidies resulting from sales by the C.C.C. at prices below world levels. In so far as feed grains are concerned, oats, barley and corn, some 20 per cent of the total exports were disposed of under the special program and of the remainder some were sold under the C.C.C. subsidy and the rest through ordinary commercial channels.

Now, the important matter that I wish to bring to the attention of the administration is that a new development has taken place in our commercial relations with the United States since the middle of 1957 when the basic provision of the United States disposal program was not changed substantially. It is true also that direct consultations regarding the wheat disposal had developed since that time, but nevertheless, in addition to the agricultural difficulties, we have had the introduction as a result of United States government policy of certain abridgements of Canadian imports which extend particularly to our mineral resources, notably oil, lead, zinc, aluminum and possibly copper.

These policies have been extended to the extent that they interfere with the trade policies of Canada with regard to certain corporations doing business with particular countries in particular parts of the world. The United States government has likewise resorted to extraterritorial legislation which affects Canadian corporations subject to Canadian law, and which apply to residents and to corporations domiciled in Canada. These are matters that represent a very considerable extension of the area that concerns the Canadian people in their relations with the United States.

Latterly we have had, as the hon. member for Calgary South mentioned earlier, the imposition of mandatory curbs on oil which have created, to use his own language, a very serious problem with a semblance of much permanence attached to it. It was serious, as he himself stated, a year ago when the curbs were of a voluntary character, but now the United States government on the congressional level and on the level of the highest executive of the United States, the President, has decided to impose mandatory curbs on Canadian oil imports. There are some Canadians who have regarded this decision as a blessing which will enable them, according to plans which they properly have in mind, to find a wider market in Canada for much of the products of the oil industry in western Canada.

But generally speaking, this mandatory curb cannot but be regarded, as the hon. member for Calgary South regarded it, as a matter of the greatest concern to all in Canada. I wonder now if this is not the legitimate place to register some complaint about the way in which the Canadian government registered its protest against this decision, first in the recommendation stage by a congressional committee and later the decision made by the President of the United States. It will be recalled that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Smith) told the house that he had caused a note of protest to be sent to the secretary of state for foreign affairs of the United States. This was on February 19. After that note had been dispatched, the President of the United States asked for an extension of time after February 28 in order to enable him to give further consideration as to whether or not the recommendation should receive the presidential veto.

It was at that point that we on this side of the house suggested to the Secretary of State for External Affairs that, notwithstanding the discussions in the ministerial committee last January, and notwithstanding the protest of February 19, consideration should be given by him, on behalf of the government, to direct representations to the White House. While one does not want to be unfair to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, Hansard does record he did reply, in answer to that suggestion, that he was not familiar with the communications to the White House. He may be able to offer—as I am sure he can—an explanation of what he meant when he made that reply. But those are the words he used.

Then a suggestion was made directly to the Prime Minister who was asked whether, as this was a matter involving action of the highest authority in the United States, he did not think that he himself should make direct representations to the President of the United States? The replies made in answer to those questions are on Hansard. The Prime Minister replied by saying that he had discussed this matter at various times with the President of the United States and had discussed it on the occasion of the President's visit to Ottawa last summer. But those replies were certainly not answers to the interrogations put from this side of the house. The question was whether the Prime Minister did not think that at this stage, before the expiry date of March 10, he should direct, in whatever form he wished, an expression of hope and protest, in terms of the greatest urgency, to the President of the United States himself.

I am sure the Prime Minister will find that there are precedents in Canada-United States relations when the head of the government of Canada has made telephonic representations to the President of the United States in respect of matters which were of the greatest concern to Canadians. It is true that the Prime Minister said that these were matters which were continually engaging the attention of the government. But the decision has been taken and the effectiveness of representations made by the head of the government of Canada to the President of the United States after the event are not—as the hon. member for Calgary South indicated in his language, referring to the matter of mandatory controls —likely to be very effective and certainly not as effective as they would have been if the Prime Minister of this country, before the 10th day of March had indicated—as his predecessor did at least on two occasions—what an act of this sort would mean to Canada.

Mr. Smith (Calgary South): I wonder if I might ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes.

Mr. Smith (Calgary South): I wonder whether the hon. member is aware of the fact that the voluntary controls introduced in June, 1957 were actually prescribed or arranged for during the period of the Liberal administration of which he was a member? Can he tell us whether or not he or his government was in any way successful in seeing that any negotiations prevented the voluntary controls which led to the mandatory controls?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I can tell my hon. friend that when that was done and before, and on another occasion, the prime minister of Canada of that day let the President of the United States know what he felt about the possibility of these things happening.

Mr. Smith (Calgary South): And the results?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The results speak for themselves.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The fact is that they were voluntary. I will tell my hon. friend who is very much interested in this matter that in 1956, if it had not been for the representations strongly made at the highest level in Canada, instead of voluntary curbs coming into being when they did, they would have come much earlier. Whether or not that is the case, my hon. friend who represents—

Mr. Fisher: The oil lobby.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do not think that is a fair observation.

Mr. Harkness: It is the usual C.C.F. observation.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend who represents a constituency which is vitally concerned in this matter should join with me in saying that from February 19 there was no protest made by the government of Canada to the United States government and there was no protest made whatsoever by the Prime Minister from the date—it was a Saturday morning—when the President announced that he had asked for an extension of time up until March 10. I would have thought that my hon. friend who is generally very alert would have been on the doorstep of the Prime Minister saying, "Contact the President at once; at least try and see if we cannot do something to avoid the mischief of this particular act".

Mr. Smith (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I know that the hon. member would like to be accurate. Unfortunately he missed a meeting of the committee on external affairs in which it was indicated that representations were made, and that is as recent as today.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend now says that representations were made. As of what date were they made?

Mr. Smith (Calgary South): This was prior to and during the period of discussions when the extension of mandatory controls was made.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I put this question to the hon. member. Why did the Prime Minister say that representations had been made last summer?

I want to point out to the house, Mr. Speaker, that I believe that the developing problems in our country in connection with the United States are now such that the Prime Minister ought to give consideration to meeting with the President. It will be recalled that the President came to Canada last summer. He spoke in this house. We all recall that the reactions to his speech were not particularly acceptable to hon. gentlemen opposite. Nevertheless, the fact is that the President did come to Canada. I am sure that both the President and the Prime Minister and the latter's colleagues profited greatly from their discussions with the President and with Mr. Dulles, the secretary of state for foreign affairs. But in view of the developing problems that are seemingly accruing now between our two countries on the economic front, and particularly in the matter of continental defence and defence purchases and their implications on our economic life, I wonder whether the Prime Minister will not give consideration to meeting the President at the earliest possible moment.

This is a matter in which Canadians generally are interested. It is not only the matter of the disposal of surplus commodities; it is not only the matter of embargo on our mineral deposits and the curbing of oil imports, there are gathering situations now which particularly arise as the result of the cancellation of the Arrow which placed us in a measure of increasing dependence on the productive capacity of the United States and on its defence arrangements.

Such a meeting could usefully take into account some of the recommendations, for instance, on the economic front made by the Hays and Coffin report. I refer to page 28 of the second part of the report where with regard to the matter of the problem of surplus disposal of wheat, no less than five different proposals are made which might mitigate the severity of this problem in so far as Canada is concerned. Those proposals are worth studying. Undoubtedly the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) knows of them. Undoubtedly he is giving them his serious study. I should like to think that the Prime Minister, with his prairie background and interest in this problem, would find this an additional reason for meeting with the President at this time.

I make that suggestion in the light particularly of the recommendations made by the Leader of the Opposition this afternoon when he included among our concerns the situation with regard to uranium production in Canada. I do not know whether or not I am accurate, but I saw a press report about five weeks ago to the effect that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) had received a delegation of uranium producers; and the report suggested that there was going to be some confrontation of this problem by the minister or by someone on his behalf. In view of the great stake that Canada has in uranium production and in view of the fact that our initiative and our resources went into this particular form of endeavour at a time when it meant so much in the prosecution of the war, we have, at least morally, a strong bargaining position which I know the Minister of Trade and Commerce will want to have placed before the authorities of the United States at the earliest possible moment so that we can await the reaction of that country to the events that will ensue in 1962 or 1963. In any event those are matters, together with the other matters which concern us, which warrant a meeting with the President of the United States.

I am sure that the house is not fully satisfied with the visit of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) in the matter of the application of extraterritorial powers by the government of the United States. All that the Minister of Justice was able to get from his opposite number in the United States was an assurance of consultation. There was no guarantee that such an infringement of our sovereignty would not occur again. I think that the Leader of the Opposition has proposed the only effective way to deal with that particular situation, and that is to embody in the form of solemn treaty the commitments in that and in other matters which the two governments are prepared to accept.

There is one other matter which I think, in a discussion of Canadian-United States relations, we cannot but carefully note at this time. I say this not without a full appreciation that when we were in power the United States was able to acquire certain rights in Canada in the common interest, such as the D.E.W. line, the various preventative measures taken in that regard, the installation of radar and so on. All of those matters would be regarded in one sense as a violation of the principle of sovereignty. I think we have reached a stage in our relations with the United States when we have to think of the implications of our dependence upon that country for our security, and upon that country as the initiator of so much of what flows by way of economic buoyancy through defence contracts and the like.

When in 1948 the United States and Canada agreed to join the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and place themselves under the command of one responsible to a group of nations—the NATO commander—that was, on the part of the United States, a transfer of sovereignty. It was also a transfer of sovereignty on our part when we and they joined the United Nations. This country and all the members in that body, in the interests of the preservation of peace, transferred some of their sovereignty. That kind of transfer in our interdependent world is inevitable, and it is certainly desirable.

The Prime Minister of Great Britain will be here on Wednesday. When he was here last his theme was interdependence. He told us in this parliament that today all of the nations of the world were interdependent one of another. That did not mean that they were all equally involved in the mischief of war, but it did mean that in their common interest they had to pool their responsibilities, as well as the advantages which flowed from the international community. The Prime Minister of Great Britain will be here again, and this visit will give us the opportunity of once again emphasizing the significance and implication of his concept of interdependence.

So that when we joined NATO, and the United States and ourselves and other countries joined the United Nations, we recognized the force of interdependence in the world in which we live. But now we have to realize in Canada that the situation which confronted the European powers in 1948 in terms of contributions made by Canada and the United States now confronts Canada and the United States on the North American continent. Whatever power France or Great Britain has transferred to NATO has been transferred to a collective group of nations.

In the matter of our continental defence the transfer of sovereignty now from Canada to the United States is not to a collectivity; it is not to a grouping of nations; it is a transfer to one single power. We are now increasing our dependence on that power, and while we enjoy with that country the greatest possible friendship, while we share together common objectives, each of us—they in the United States and we in Canada—is anxious to go our separate national way, pursuing our own national aspirations and integrities, wanting to see nothing happen which will violate the independent position of each nation.

It is all very well to assume that because of current friendship nothing but the continuation of that collaboration will eventuate in the long future, but some Canadians have doubts on that score. Mr. Speaker, this middle power country of ours has been able during the past decade to make contributions in the field of foreign policy. Because of our association with the United States, because of our membership in the commonwealth, because of our friendship with Ceylon, India and Pakistan, the newer members of the commonwealth, and because of the fact that we have had a short history and on that account have not been able to antagonize other peoples, we have special opportunity in the field of international mediation which on occasion we have exercised with great and telling consequence.

I think that is important to preserve, and while this does not confront us immediately, one can envisage how growing dependence on one single power in a military way would destroy our freedom of exercise in the particular to which I have addressed myself in these last few minutes. So I think that in no way, as we argued a year ago, should the organization or arrangement involving continental defence known as NORAD be unequivocally made responsible in so far as Canada is concerned, and so far as Canadian forces in the United States are concerned, to the President of the United States, but rather to the NATO commander himself. In other words, we would be transferring in that particular our sovereign interests, as European nations have done and as we have done along with the United States in Europe, to the person directed by the group of nations constituted by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, in that way we would preserve not only psychologically, but I believe in fact, all of the advantages and safeguards that come from a real pooling and sharing of duties and privileges.

I know this is not an easy matter. The very fact that we recognize the difficulties, however, should not stand in the way of our emphasizing and re-emphasizing the importance of this position, not only because of ourselves and because of our relations with the United States, but because of our relations with other partners in the North Atlantic treaty alliance. Toward that end is it unreasonable to suggest that several steps should now be taken to make sure that satisfactory development and production-sharing arrangements will be made along the lines of genuine interdependence? Not only should the commander of NORAD be made responsible to the NATO commander. That would not in any way diminish the authority of General Partridge. His capacity under the exigencies of his command could still be the same as they are now, but the lines of authority could be postulated by the NATO council and General Norstad, the general in charge of NATO, rather than by a military commander or the head of a single government. That is my point.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. gentleman a question. If an attack were made on the North American continent would the hon. gentleman suggest that communications should be commenced with the commander of NATO forces of Europe before action were taken here?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I thought I just dealt with that point. I am glad my hon. friend asked that question because apparently I did not make myself clear. In reply I would say no. Obviously whoever is in charge of SAC or NATO must be able to act with expedition. What I am saying is that the authority he now has from the President of the United States and from the government of Canada to act quickly without hesitation can be given to him by the NATO council just as well as by the President of the United States. I quite agree that there must be no impairment of the efficiency of his operation but it is important that the chain of authority be established in such a manner as to diminish the dependence of one country on another and to extend that dependence not to a dependence on one power but to dependence on the group, namely NATO itself.

In fulfillment of these needs, having talked about continental defence, may I say a word about production-sharing arrangements. It would seem that we should see to it that free trade should be established as soon as possible between NATO countries with respect to defence production. If we are going to recognize interdependence effectively in this field surely we will have to abolish measures such as tariffs and all other obstacles to a free and easy movement of defence products within the NATO alliance. Second, sharing arrangements should not be restricted to the possible participation by one country in another's defence production program. It must involve the assignment by the whole alliance of specific defence production schedules to individual countries so that those countries can really specialize in those fields and be sure to have sufficient opportunity to develop manufacturing facilities under optimum conditions of efficiency without fear that other countries will enter into those production fields.

Finally, we must ensure that specific programs assigned to a given country will be carried out effectively so that other countries could safely rely on the quality of the work being done by that country. Arrangements should be made to staff the development teams with the most qualified personnel available for that purpose in NATO and to provide continuing information to and consultation with all other interested countries of the alliance.

Those are general directions which I know it is not humanly possible to bring about immediately. It seems to me, however, that Canadian thinking at this moment is directed along these lines. This kind of thinking in no way involves our friendship and collaboration with the United States. Indeed, the fact that it is possible in this free parliament to discuss these matters as we are doing with respect to our relations with our great neighbour is the best demonstration of the fact that we do get along and will get along with that great and important country. Only friends can talk in the friendly spirit we do about one another and about our problems.

In resuming my seat I can only say that as our country grows and develops in the complexities of modern international society with the tremendous obligations that are now imposed on us because of the fact that we are the closest neighbour of this powerful nation with whom we have these common objectives we are not relieved in this house of the responsibility for thinking of methods by which we may contribute to peace in our time simultaneously giving thought and consideration to the problems that vitally affect the future integrity, character and the maintenance of the national purposes and character of this nation, Canada.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, in my remarks I plan to approach the subject from a somewhat different approach from those taken by other hon. members who have spoken in the debate thus far. I should like to discuss briefly the importance of United States leadership and in relation thereto the vital importance of the Canadian partnership in the roles the two nations are playing in containing the encroachment of communism across the world. I should also like to discuss my views on the battlefield, namely increased production in our country and the effect this has on our trade relations with United States.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Before doing so, however, I should like to say I do not share the pessimism my hon. friend, the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin), seems to have with regard to the success of the United States-Canada parliamentary group nor the pessimism that seemed to be implicit in the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) in presenting the amendment. I believe that this group got off to a good start and that it will not develop into a social organization or one that does not devote its time to the vexing and pressing problems that exist between our two nations today. This group will work because there are in it hon. members from all sides of the house who intend to see that it does.

Before embarking on my general theme I should like to state my basic agreement with the Leader of the Opposition when he said there can be no disagreement with the assertion that our relations with the United States today are the most important single item of our foreign policy. This I believe. Fostering the growth of the economic strength of Canada and of the north American continent as a whole is vital to us if our way of life is to be preserved and if we are to constitute any sort of defence at all to military aggression, ideological aggression or to commercial aggression which as our Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) has pointed out on so many occasions in the past is becoming a very real threat. I believe this is the challenge before the free nations of the world today.

Reference to the free nations brings me to the criticism I have of the amendment proposed by the Leader of the Opposition. Apart from its general circumlocution and vagueness it is restrictive to the extent that it concludes with words to the effect that we should endeavour to work out the implications of interdependence and closer unity within the North Atlantic community. The threat that is posed today by the communist economic policies to which I will refer later is not confined to the North Atlantic community. It is a very real threat aimed at the whole of the free world. I wish to make one further point before continuing. I do not feel you can isolate political policy, economic policy and military policy. You cannot sit down at a bargaining table and workout an economic policy completely forgetting about a military need or a political necessity. All these factors constitute that fabric which will contain the threat of communist aggression in whatever form it appears.

The United States has quite properly assumed political leadership in the free world today. Because of its economic position it must likewise assume in a more active fashion —and in my humble belief a more responsible fashion—economic leadership and military leadership. I think there can be no argument in this regard. With all due respect to the remarks of the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) as to the activities of the cabinet committee which met last January, I might, perhaps for the purpose of illustrating that his opinion works both ways, quote from a speech made by Congressman Frank M. Coffin at Portland, Maine, on February 13, 1959, as follows:

> Shortly after our report was issued, in early January of this year, the joint cabinet committee on trade and commerce met in Ottawa. In the past, meetings of this group had been noticeably infrequent. The holding of this January meeting was another proof that we were determined to attain the best possible relationships with Canada. Unfortunately, both secretaries Dulles and Benson were unable to attend because of sickness. And, more unfortunately, the meeting suffered from two chronic bureaucratic diseases: inadequate briefing and co-ordination of our delegates;—

He was speaking of the United States delegates. I continue:

> —and premature and intense preoccupation by all concerned on the press release that became the work product of the meeting. In the future, when the mere fact of a meeting ceases to be a novelty, I doubt that we can avoid serious criticism for this kind of a performance.

The shortcomings are therefore fully realized by those who are vitally concerned with those relations and have been working so well in the past toward achieving an improvement therein.

I have said that in the adoption of sensible military, economic and political policies, particularly by the United States and Canada, rests our future internal well-being, rests our national security and indeed the fulfilment of our external defence and economic obligations. I think I can do no better than state the challenge as it was set forth by Mr. Khrushchev himself in the meeting of the twenty-first extraordinary congress of the communist party of the Soviet union on January 27, 1959 in announcing the new seven-year plan, in which he said this, and I am quoting from his remarks:

> Today, our task is to tip the scales in world production in favour of the socialist system against the capitalist system—

I emphasize Mr. Khrushchev's use of that word "against". I go on with the quotation:

> —to surpass the most advanced capitalist countries in productivity of social labour and output per head of population, and to attain the world's highest living standards.

Mr. Khrushchev claims that the national income of the Soviet union can be made to increase each year by 8.6 per cent, not only in the early stages of industrialization but as a permanent feature of the soviet economy. It may be startling for hon. members to reflect that the normal western rate of growth has never gone much beyond three per cent. This is the first challenge, as I see it, that the soviet government can maintain double or more the western rate of growth.

The second challenge, as I see it, is the manner in which the soviet intends to go about achieving the industrial expansion that Mr. Khrushchev says she is going to do. I do not believe, from the reading that I have done on the subject, that there can be any doubt that the Soviet union can achieve what Mr. Khrushchev says is their national objective. This presents a very real challenge, despite the fact that the soviet labour force has been depleted by a low wartime birth rate, and they surely must by now prefer a spending sort of living rather than a savings sort of living after four years of perpetual crises. But despite these difficulties, as I say, the soviets intend to reach this goal and the recent western belief is that they can do it.

The challenge that is presented to the western world—and this is where our trade relationship with the United States becomes so important—is in the chosen field of the west, namely in the field of increased production. If western management, western ingenuity, western skills and technological ability cannot meet that challenge, then one may as well say that the rest of the world is lost. This is where it becomes so important for us to support policies which will give aid to foreign countries not just in the north Atlantic community, because the Far Eastern countries and the Middle Eastern countries, those free nations, in my view are just as important as those close by.

How does the question of United States leadership bear on the manner in which the free world is to meet this challenge? I have stated the challenge and the adverse effect that it will have on our way of life if it is not vigorously taken up. I think it is well to consider now, as I have tried to point out, who are the protagonists, I do not think,—as this amendment of the Leader of the Opposition would suggest—that we should confine ourselves to the North Atlantic community. The challenge must be taken up by the whole of the free world because Mr. Khrushchev used these words, that this economic offence is aimed against the free world, which I suggest should take it up. Canada is very important, Mr. Speaker, in this whole fabric, but I think Canadians everywhere should be asked just where does Canada's responsibility lie? How can we be of the greatest assistance in meeting the soviet challenge? This is where the importance of our trade relationship is pointed out most dynamically. Dr. Norman M. Littell, of the American bar, has said:

> Canada is our most indispensable ally in the world battle to maintain our free way of life.

Canada's rapidly expanding economy and growing wealth will enable this country to assume a greater share of the costs which a free world has to incur in order to achieve greater security and greater internal well-being and greater internal welfare; and Canada is in a unique position to achieve and discharge this responsibility. She is a British commonwealth nation; she is a Colombo plan nation. Forty per cent of our nation lies above the 60th parallel; therefore we are an Arctic nation. In defence we are a North Atlantic treaty nation; in trade we are a North Atlantic triangle nation. We are a western nation; we are a North American nation. Surely, it must be realized that the maintenance of this intricate network of relations is of vital interest to and should be the vital concern of the United States.

Canada is in the unique position, as I have said, to be an invaluable instrument in the looming economic struggle with the Soviet union, or rather should I say with the communists, because China on the horizon is just as real a threat as the Soviet union. We are a natural, and indeed, an inevitable partner with the United States in meeting the soviet challenge. How can we in Canada assist in meeting that challenge? Here again this is so important in our relations with the United States. In my view, we can meet the challenge by increasing production. As I said, I feel this is in our chosen field. This involves economic policies which have to be shaped. This involves military and political policies which have to be shaped. These policies have to be shaped not in a vacuum, not in isolation but shaped with the one having regard to the other.

When the Leader of the Opposition proposed this amendment he said that he did not want to hear the words, "Why didn't you do something about these matters when you were in power?" The fact is, however, that we are saddled today with policies which were made by the previous administration when dealing with these matters and they simply cannot be tossed aside in a moment.

I wish to make the point clear that in my view no commercial policy is possible without taking a complete inventory of our resources. It is like shouting in a vacuum to say that you can formulate a policy concerning resources if you do not know what you have. We as Conservatives believe that we are responsible to future generations of Canadians for our decisions today. We believe that we have to answer to future generations for policies we adopt with regard to the disposition of our resources. I say that very little was done in the past. I say that we are saddled with this situation today because the previous administration determined commercial policies dealing with the disposition of our natural resources without knowledge of the facts, without knowledge of what resources we have.

As a result today we have policies of whole cloth, policies that we have to patch up here and there until we can catch up to the position we should be in and be in possession of all the facts. We will not be in possession of all the facts until we have a complete inventory of what Canada has to offer, and certainly no policies with regard to the disposition of these resources should be made until we do know.

One of the finest examples I can think of in that regard is the Columbia river. The first thing this government did when they came into office to deal with this problem which had been hanging fire was to order a study made to see what we had. There was no point in trying to make a decision as to what we were going to do with Columbia river power until we knew what we had. The way the matter had been dealt with by the Liberals is typical of their thinking all along. As I said, I can think of no better phrase than to term it a policy of whole cloth.

In this regard I should like to go back a few years to the time when the northern affairs department was set up as the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. As many hon. members will recall this was done on December 8, 1953. I should like to quote now from the remarks of the prime minister of that day, Mr. St. Laurent, found on page 698 of Hansard for December 8, 1953. At that time he said:

> But there has not been for a long time any special occasion offered to discuss these vast areas of Canada which compose the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory. It has been said that Great Britain acquired her empire in a state of absence of mind. Apparently we have administered these vast territories of the north in an almost continuing state of absence of mind.

This is what we are saddled with today, policies which have been shaped with a complete absence of mind. There could not have been anything else because we have certainly emphasized the need of having an inventory. The Prime Minister and the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Hamilton) have said many times throughout the country that the first thing that is necessary is to take an inventory of what we have. I want to relate these remarks to the proposition that you cannot make any disposition of these resources by commercial or any other policies adopted by government without knowing what you have. The difficulties we would get into if we did are evidenced by the difficulties confronting this country today with regard to United States-Canadian trade relations because of a policy of whole cloth which has had to be patched here and there.

Another good example, of course, is the fact that at our present rate of progress it will take approximately 100 years to complete the mapping and hydrographic work in the Arctic islands. No work was done by the past administration in the sense of embarking on a dynamic program of establishing the extent of Arctic resources. Nothing was done until this government came into power. In the last year and a half some very dynamic work has been done by the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys. This department, the orphan of the government in the past, is waking up. The brilliant men in the lower echelons of scientific endeavour in the department have had their ideas stifled in the past by bureaucratic shortsightedness, by an absence of mind, as the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent so ably put it.

I say that the field of increased production is the field in which we can meet this challenge. As far as Canada is concerned, this means increased production of our raw materials. As I see it, there are four reasons for not only increasing production of raw materials but bringing about increased unit productivity, an increase of production in which management and labour must take an extremely active part. The four reasons I put forward as justifying the approach I advocate are defence, research, foreign aid and education.

To deal first with defence, after the debates of recent weeks I think no Canadian is unaware today of the fact of our absolute interdependence with other free nations of the world in matters of defence. I do not think any useful purpose would be served by rehashing those debates. Suffice it to say that it is vital for us to embark on a program of increased production so far as defence is concerned. In this regard I might recall the Prime Minister's remark that there is not much point in worrying about national security if survival is lost.

The second reason I have given is research, and I think its importance is apparent to all hon. members. In terms of absolute results in this field, comparing the United States and Canada with Russia, one has only to reflect on sputnik and lunik and the marvellous scientific advances made by the Soviet union in recent years.

The third reason I have mentioned is foreign aid. I think this is a very vital program, a program that must continue and to which we must give complete support. The Russians are in this field too. Although they only entered it in 1955, I believe they have expended about $2 billion up to the present. This amount is only about 25 per cent of what the west is contributing, the United States particularly, but nonetheless the Russians are in the field and intend to be even more vigorous in their activities.

The fourth reason I have advanced is education. The priority which has been given to education in Russia has allowed that country to leap forward from virtual illiteracy 40 years ago to their sputniks and luniks that are circling about what I might call a startled western world today and they are evidence that we must approach this field of endeavour with more vigour than ever before.

Now, with regard to trade policies themselves, I wonder if you will allow me, Mr. Speaker, to recall to hon. members the observations which have passed from one side of the floor to the other in recent months, and indeed during the last session, concerning the policy of trade diversion which was enunciated by our Prime Minister. I shall repeat them, just to refresh hon. members' memories. Our Prime Minister said:

> Our hope is to achieve . . . a better balance of trade and a greater diversification of that trade. . . . We believe it is in the interest of both Canada and the United States to pursue long term policies which aim at achieving this objective.

Now, this statement has been ridiculed and it has been belittled. I thought perhaps hon. members might be interested to learn of the opinion of some of the hon. members who used to sit on the government benches in so far as this matter is concerned. So far as Canada-U.S. trade relations are concerned, I think it is absolutely vital to recall that every further restriction, every further import control, every further quota placed on our exports to the United States does nothing more than weaken Canada for the job ahead. Whether or not the United States is aware of this fact, and I believe quite sincerely that they are aware of it, they must realize that it is in their interest not to disturb the economic health of Canada.

The Prime Minister is not alone in his hope of achieving a greater diversification of trade and the removal of trade restrictions. This is what the Right Hon. C. D. Howe said in October, 1949 when he was minister of trade and commerce and addressed the Canadian exporters association in Montreal. He said:

> Obviously, our policy must be to export more to the United States, or alternatively, to buy less from that country.
> It also is obvious that if we can divert about $400 million worth of imports from the United States to the United Kingdom, our problem is solved.

Certainly, it is true that there is a difference between the circumstances in 1949 when Mr. Howe made this statement and the circumstances in 1957, but the point I want to make is this: The basic problem and the suggested solution are identical. In addition to this, the present Leader of the Opposition also made a statement as recently as December 2, 1958, in a speech delivered at Rochester, New York. The hon. member said, and I quote:

> Canada's great need is an expanding and diversified export trade.

I have tried to show that there are four areas in which Canada can meet the economic threat of the Soviet union, and it is within those four areas that there is a concern which must be met with regard to the improvement of Canada-United States trade relations.

Before I resume my seat, I should like to discuss for a moment the terms of the amendment itself. I think I would not be far wrong if I said the amendment is perhaps a bottom drawer amendment which was produced in the emergency of the moment. The amendment sets forth that by reason of recent decisions of the United States government, particularly in the field of production and commercial policy, and here I quote:

> —underline the necessity for the government to make more effective arrangements—

I think I agree with that. I think that more effective arrangements are necessary. I think that the reason more effective arrangements are necessary now is because of the policy of whole cloth to which I referred before, and which has been left with us by past administrations. I have endeavoured to show the approach that was taken by the previous prime minister with regard to that 40 per cent of Canada which lies above the 60th parallel and which is the storehouse of resources that will prove to be vital if we are going to accomplish these wise and intelligent policies. I think I am in agreement, therefore, with the necessity for more effective arrangements being made.

I think, too, I agree that this is the only way to prevent the undesirable impact of these decisions on Canada—I think we should expand those words and include other countries because we cannot isolate, as I have attempted to suggest, the economic policies of one country from the political and military policies. They must live together. They must be fashioned together. I think there is a need for more effective participation by the government in working out the implications of interdependence. I do not agree that this should be restricted to closer unity within the North Atlantic community because I think that is isolationism in perhaps a mild sense but still isolationism and something that is undesirable.

I would say, therefore, in the words of the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) that the motivation of the amendment itself is, in general terms, good. I think if you were to strip the resolution of its circumlocution and its vagueness, I would be going along with it. However, I would want to spend the night reading it because I would want to understand it. As it is phrased now, there is quite a bit of it with which I agree, and I agree with the motivation. I agree that more effective arrangements are necessary for all the reasons I have stated.

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in hearing some of the arguments put forth by the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). I noticed his great concern with the problem of production in the western world. He seemed to indicate that there was a fear in his heart that it might be possible the communist world might exceed us in the production race. Along with that expression of fear I seemed to sense an expression of fear that all these values that we hold dear would be lost if we should lose in the race to increase our production.

I am pleased to see the west becoming aware of the need for increasing production. However, I like to see a growth in production because a greater production will help to fill more of the needs of the many people in the world who are in need. I believe that if we have values that are worth preserving, that are worth sponsoring, and I believe that we have, they will continue to exist regardless of what side of the iron curtain should eventually win the race for production. I have not so much confidence in materialism that I am overly afraid of the long term implications of us having a slightly lower rate of production than others in the world.

In looking at the Liberal amendment to the supply motion I can certainly see that the Liberal party is not a very great admirer of some advice that Sir Winston Churchill once offered when he said that in politics the best English is the simplest English.

I must say that half of us in this section of the house are graduates of universities. Yet we have to read, reread and reread once again the Liberal amendment before we really begin to understand what is meant. Instead of the word "necessity", they might easily have used the word "needs"; instead of "participation", they might have used "part"; instead of "undesirable impact", they might have used "bad effect". They might have used a semicolon to separate at least the two main parts of their resolution. It is so long winded and so complicated as to its wordage that it is almost as hard to understand as is the present policy of the Liberal party on many matters of public concern at this time.

The matter raised by this amendment is not a new matter for this House of Commons. It is many long years now since the House of Commons began to express its concern with regard to United States actions which affected the export of Canadian minerals, Canadian grain, Canadian potatoes, Canadian forest products, Canadian oil and Canadian natural gas. It has been several years now since this house has expressed concern lest Canada not receive its proper share of the defence production that was needed for North American defence. For some years now we have heard complaints in this house about the actions of the United States government in subsidizing its exports. In that connection may I just mention the fact that the United States government is not the only foreign government that is subsidizing certain of its producers. I was very much surprised, Mr. Speaker, to read in the papers last week, when the farmers were here, that the West German government or the parliament of West Germany has now been informed that the farmers of West Germany will be subsidized in this year to the extent of $300 million. It is not only the subsidization program of the United States government that is of concern to us; it is the subsidization programs of many foreign nations.

I feel that there is another problem that concerns us and this one may be not as obvious. I refer to the competition, if you wish to call it that, which Canadian production is obliged to face in the world markets from United States-owned plants in countries outside of the United States of America and outside of our own Dominion of Canada. That problem is making itself evident as each month rolls by. The angle that I wish to pursue in my contribution this evening, Mr. Speaker, is to appeal to this house to have an end to this constant harping against the activities of the ruling authorities in the United States of America; to realize that they at least believe that they are acting in the best interests of their own national producers; and to realize that if members of this house were sitting in the United States House of Representatives the actions they would take would not be very far removed from the actions being taken by their counterparts in Washington. The United States government and its members must be elected and hope to be re-elected; and it is only natural that they will apply themselves to the urgings of their electors. I feel that our answer does not lie in continuously appealing to the Americans to consider the interests of Canadian producers. Those appeals are unrealistic. After all the years of appeals that we have made, I think it is about time that we began to look elsewhere for a solution.

I realize that much can be done and I wish this interparliamentary committee well in building greater understanding of our needs south of the border. Conversely, it is likely that we shall gain a greater understanding of the pressures and the forces at work in the United States of America. There are many matters of difficulty which are simply misunderstandings, and they should be removed at the earliest possible date. However, I submit that the economy of the United States—and also, I might say that of the U.S.S.R.—is so analogous to our economy that we shall continue, in times of economic stress and strain, to realize that those countries whose natural resources and productive capacities are so similar to ours are not our finest commercial allies and that we should rather look around in the world—especially in the North Atlantic community, if possible —and attempt to find an economy that is or economies that are complementary to the natural economy of the Dominion of Canada.

I regret very much that so many of our eggs have been placed in one basket. Most economists could have told us that if and when the time comes when the United States is plagued with surplus production in many lines they will eliminate the importation of Canadian supplies. Over the years we have warned of the danger of putting all our eggs in one basket. I find it rather odd that of all people to complain about the situation at the present time the Liberals of Canada are doing so. They, more than anyone else are responsible for our eggs all having been placed in that one basket. The Conservatives, of course, gave their word to the Canadian electorate that all of this was going to be changed if they were given the chance to form a government. We have not seen very much of a change yet.

While I can appreciate cabinet ministers' looking up old Hansards and finding out how former Liberal counterparts used to reply on orders of the day, I fail completely to see the need for leading members in the official opposition now to go back to Hansards of three and four years ago, and this afternoon to be repeating, almost thought for thought the expressions that were emanating from the official opposition only two or three years ago. I feel that the Liberals ought to consider how weak the Tory arguments were and how long they had to sit in opposition. I am sure they will agree that was the Messiah that put them in office and that it was not the validity of the arguments that put them in the role of government where they are today.

We feel that not very much has been done. We continue to hear the same answers which we have heard for the last five years. We have made our views known to the United States government. We have made serious representations. We have made serious protests. Members of the cabinet have met with their counterparts in the United States government, and we feel that not very much has been accomplished, and as I expressed previously, I can well understand some of the real factors why so little is being accomplished.

I feel that we have to be realistic and recognize that it is very, very hard indeed. It is most difficult for the United States legislators to withstand the pressures of their own people in these matters. We are in effect asking them to pay less heed to their own interests and more heed to our interests. I had felt for a long time that the formation of the European economic union would be very, very harmful indeed to Canadian interests.

I welcome the formation of the European economic union none the less, because it removes a sore point in western Europe. It removes many of the frictions which have often been the cause of bloody wars in the past. I welcomed the efforts of the United Kingdom when they attempted to expand the European economic union to take in 17 Atlantic nations instead of only six. I only wish that the United Kingdom would have included the Dominion of Canada in a proposal of this type.

Our problem is, where do we stand now? The European economic union ruled us out. We have a serious problem on our hands. The United States economy is largely self-sufficient; the western European nations are beginning to look after themselves and do not have to depend on us. We feel that we should take more aggressive measures for the sponsoring of a real, effective north Atlantic economic community either with or without the United States of America.

I remember very well a really worthwhile speech made in this House of Commons on this subject some years ago by the former member for Winnipeg North, Alistair Stewart. His proposal at that time to the House of Commons was that the member nations of NATO should reach an agreement whereby they would progressively reduce their tariff barriers, one NATO nation to another, by a flat percentage of 10 per cent per annum. His argument was that that would not be so severe that member nations would not be able to afford to smooth over the hardships that might be imposed by dislocations in each of the participating nations. Then his argument was that we could look forward to the day when the whole western world as we now know it would be one economic unit with a fairly uniform standard of living for all of its people. This would lead to closer social, cultural and he hoped eventually political, ties.

I do not see this as running counter to the interests of world brotherhood, because if we are to build world brotherhood, we have to begin to build it with our immediate neighbours and with people who are most closely allied with us. When we have established some feeling of brotherhood there—a brotherhood, I may say, based on more than military alliances—then we can begin to proceed with more assurance toward establishing a world brotherhood.

Our present method of going about things in the western world, Mr. Speaker, is going to give us cause for regret in the not too distant future. The United States government, if it wants to be loyal to the interests of its own people in the western world as it exists today, cannot give us treatment which is very radically different from what we are receiving today. I also feel that if we are going to allow the European economic union to operate for any number of years, it is going to become more and more difficult for us to ally ourselves with the economy of western Europe. I feel that the longer we postpone closer economic ties with member nations of the commonwealth, the more difficult it is going to be for us to cement those ties, because they are not exploring ways and means of allying their economic lives with the economic lives of other parts of the world.

I feel that we have done ourselves a lot more harm than good over the past five years by protesting so loudly yet never being prepared to follow up any protest with any action. We have established much ill will south of the border. We have deliberately—I blame in the main the former Liberal government for this—alienated ourselves from the markets of Europe, the United Kingdom and the commonwealth. I regret that I fail to see any substantial action which has come out of this government in the past eighteen months of its life to indicate that there has been any fundamental and basic change. They, like the former government, keep on running to Washington hoping that they will get a better deal out of Washington. I feel, Mr. Speaker, that that better deal is going to be a long, long time in showing itself.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the house leader what the business is for tomorrow and Wednesday, and for the rest of the week if he can so indicate?

Business of the House

Mr. Green: Tomorrow, of course, we will continue with this debate. On Wednesday we will take interim supply and the supplementary estimates. Then we will go on to agricultural estimates. The first item on today's order paper, item No. 2, deals with amendments made by the Senate to the act to amend the National Defence Act. We want to move concurrence in those amendments.

Mr. Chevrier: Will that be done on Thursday?

Mr. Green: Wednesday or Thursday.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Questions

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

DR. JACQUES ROUSSEAU

Question No. 182—Mr. Argue:

1. Did Dr. Jacques Rousseau hold a position at the Montreal botanical garden prior to his appointment as a director of the national museum of Canada? If so, what position?
2. How long had he held this position, and what were his responsibilities in this regard?
3. How long had Dr. Rousseau been employed by the Montreal botanical garden prior to his last appointment and what positions had he held during this time?

Answer by: Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources):

1. Yes. Scientific director.

2. From March 15, 1956 to March 12, 1957. The department has not determined what were his responsibilities other than to learn that Dr. Rousseau no longer had administrative responsibilities after March 14, 1956.

3. The department is informed that, from 1938 to 1942 Dr. Rousseau was part time and full time assistant director; that from 1942 to March 14, 1956, he was superintendent of the garden; on March 14, 1956, by resolution of the Montreal executive committee, he was relieved of any responsibility for the staff and became "scientific director" of the garden until he resigned on March 12, 1957.

AIR CONDITIONING SYSTEM REPAIRS, PRINTING BUREAU

Question No. 227—Mr. Pigeon:

1. Is the government repairing the air-conditioning system of the printing bureau?
2. If so, what is the cost of such repairs?

Answer by: Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works):

1. Yes. The new work provides for improvements to the existing air conditioning system.

2. Funds were provided in estimates for $800,000. Tenders were called recently and are being processed through treasury board.

APPENDIX

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN MINISTER OF JUSTICE AND R.C.M.P. SUPERINTENDENT

Royal Canadian Mounted Police
Office of the Commissioner
Ottawa

March 12, 1959.

The Hon. E. D. Fulton, Q.C., M.P., Minister of Justice,
OTTAWA, Ontario.

Dear Mr. Fulton:

On Sunday last you received a wire from the attorney general of Newfoundland asking under the terms of the contract that 50 R.C.M. Police reinforcements be sent to that province for duty in areas where the loggers are on strike. At about the same time I received a telephone call from Superintendent A. W. Parsons, the officer commanding the R.C.M. Police in Newfoundland, advising me of the situation and informing me that he had requested the attorney general to apply for help.

Superintendent Parsons told me that he might be able to get some assistance from the Newfoundland constabulary, the provincial force which polices St. John's, and I asked that he follow up on this possibility at once in the hope that help from that quarter might avoid the necessity of sending in reinforcements from outside.

I discussed the situation with you during the afternoon by telephone. I also received a further call from Superintendent Parsons letting me know that he had been able to get a detail of 25 men from the Newfoundland constabulary and had also scraped up another 20 from his own resources. With this help he felt that his request for reinforcements from outside might be held in abeyance.

On Tuesday, March 10, at your request I dispatched the following message to Superintendent Parsons:

> Please deliver following message to Mr. Curtis begins re your tel. March 8 to Minister of Justice Stop Mr. Fulton has referred matter to me with instructions to watch situation closely Stop Have accordingly taken steps necessary to insure that RCMP reinforcements are ready with air transport available Stop I am advised changing situation including steps taken within provincial establishment and help from constabulary indicate reinforcements from outside province may not now be needed Stop Accordingly situation will be watched closely and readiness maintained pending further developments ends

At 11 o'clock Tuesday evening, March 10, Superintendent Parsons informed me of the clash which had just taken place on the highway outside the town of Badger between approximately 300 strikers armed with clubs, bottles and other weapons, and a detail of about 50 police including 15 men of the Newfoundland constabulary. Parsons felt that this clash might be the turning point and might convince the strikers that the police were determined to maintain law and order.

At about 6 a.m. yesterday Parsons telephoned me again and told me that instead of improving the situation in the Badger area was deteriorating. Another 100 men had come in during the night and the total number of strikers in this little town now stood at about 400. These were almost all from outside points.

At 8:30 a.m. yesterday I informed you of the situation and, with your approval, took steps to get a body of 50 men ready in the maritimes and to arrange for air transportation. Later you asked that the plane be held at Moncton where some of the men were to be gathered until the cabinet had time to consider the Newfoundland request. At about 5:20 p.m. you informed me that the cabinet had decided the request from Newfoundland was to be refused. I thereupon told you that I could not understand or agree with the decision and that I would let you have my resignation the following morning.

The clause in the contract dealing with the provision of reinforcements is to my mind quite clear. It reads as follows:

> Where in the opinion of the attorney general of the province an emergency exists within the province requiring additional members of the force to assist in dealing with such emergency, Canada shall, at the request of the attorney general of the province addressed to the commissioner, increase the strength of the division as requested if in the opinion of the Attorney General of Canada, having regard to other responsibilities and duties of the force, such increase is possible.

There is no doubt in my mind as to the need and I am certain that the number of men asked for can be provided without prejudice to "other responsibilities and duties."

I realize that other issues are before you which arise from this strike but I feel most strongly that the matter of law enforcement should be isolated and dealt with on its own merits. This is the attitude the force has taken throughout. It has not concerned itself with the issues back of the strike but has merely tried to maintain law and order in the area.

I think the contract clause on this matter of providing reinforcements in an emergency is clear and I cannot escape the conclusion that failure to supply reinforcements in this instance is a breach of that clause. Bearing in mind that we have similar contracts with seven other provinces the decision of the government has a particular significance.

With these considerations in mind I feel I have no option but to ask you to accept my resignation and this I now do. I hope you will be able to relieve me as soon as possible and I shall await your advice as to what arrangements will be made to that end.

I cannot close without telling you how much I regret having to take this step. I am within a year of completing my full service and I had looked forward to finishing my time in a more pleasant way. I have enjoyed serving under your direction and I have appreciated your support of the force and your active interest and understanding in all aspects of its work. I assure you that it is only a firm conviction of the correctness of my view which leads me to take this disagreeable action.

Yours sincerely,

L. H. Nicholson

(L. H. Nicholson),
Commissioner.

Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada

Ottawa, Canada,
March 16th, 1959.

Commissioner L. H. Nicholson,
Royal Canadian Mounted Police,
Ottawa, Canada.

Dear Commissioner Nicholson,

I have received your letter of March 12 and have learned with regret your decision to submit your resignation as commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

You first indicated your intention to resign on Wednesday evening, March 11. This was in the course of a telephone conversation, immediately after I had informed you of the decision that the reinforcements requested by the attorney general of Newfoundland should not be sent at that time. My recollection of the developments leading up to that point is in accordance with the facts as set out in your letter of March 12, with one minor exception to which I shall refer later.

The fundamental difference between us, as I view the matter, centers around your conclusion that there has been a breach of the clause quoted by you from the contract between Canada and Newfoundland.

The obligation imposed on Canada by that clause is to increase the number of members of the force in the province if, in my opinion as Attorney General of Canada, "having regard to other responsibilities and duties of the force," such increase is possible.

In reaching my conclusion on the question whether "having regard to other responsibilities and duties of the force", such increase were possible, I, of course, as you know, gave the most careful and anxious consideration to your views that additional members could and should be sent to Newfoundland without prejudice to other responsibilities and duties of the force. However, upon a consideration of all the factors, including especially the importance of preserving the character and capacity of the force to discharge its duty in connection with law enforcement in all of Canada, I came to the conclusion, after consulting my colleagues, that, as the situation existed at that time, it was not possible to send the additional men requested without prejudicing the other responsibilities and duties of the force.

This decision was my responsibility. I reached it only after the most careful consideration of your views and of all the other factors that, in my judgment, were relevant. I regret profoundly that you came to the conclusion that, by reason of that decision, you should resign.

Much as I regret your decision to tender your resignation, under these circumstances I have no alternative but to accept it and am prepared to make a submission to the governor in council accordingly. However, there will be a number of administrative arrangements that must be made to meet the situation thereby created, and I shall appreciate it if you will carry on until such time as a successor can be appointed. I expect this will be in the very near future.

While the point of minor difference to which I referred at the beginning of this letter may not be of any real significance, I should mention it for the purposes of the record. It is my clear recollection of our conversation at 5:20 p.m. on March 11 last, that I informed you that the decision taken as of that time was that the dispatch of reinforcements was to be delayed pending further consideration, and not that it had been finally decided to refuse the request, as appears from the third paragraph on page 2 of your letter. I appreciate that, from your point of view, this difference may not be of any significance in its implication. Nevertheless I thought that I ought to mention it.

It remains only for me to express my deep personal regret that you should feel impelled to make this decision. You know that I disagree with your view as to the course you should follow but I respect the sincerity and conviction with which you hold it. I have enjoyed our association since I became minister responsible for the force and have appreciated your advice and support and the very pleasant relationship we have enjoyed in every aspect of the work of the force. You can rest assured that whatever may be the views as to the present situation you have earned the respect and esteem of all those with whom you have served.

Yours sincerely,

E. D. Fulton.

COAL

MARITIME PROVINCES—ANNOUNCEMENT OF INCREASED SUBVENTIONS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Cape Breton South asked me for a report in connection with coal policy, and I now wish to give the house the information regarding this matter.

The government has been paying particular attention to the problem of the movement of maritime coal to markets in central Canada in the light of the special marketing problems and difficulties encountered this year by the coal industry of the maritimes. It will be recalled that substantial stockpiles of coal were accumulated last year as a result of the decline in market outlets for Canadian coal. Canada was not alone in this connection, as coal markets overseas have also been feeling the competition of other fuels.

This year further difficulties have been encountered in marketing due to the temporary surplus of electricity available to compete with coal in the St. Lawrence area, the first competition with gas from western Canada, and the continuing competition with United States coal. It is now necessary to make a readjustment in the subventions to ensure that the opening of the St. Lawrence seaway will not in any way prejudice the position of the maritime coal industry.

As a result of the consideration of these factors the government has decided that it will revise the maximum rates of subvention payable on maritime coal moving into Quebec and Ontario. The detailed changes in these subvention rates will be incorporated in orders in council to be passed in a few days' time, and these orders in council will then be made public. The revised rates of subvention will enable coal to move effectively to those areas in Quebec and eastern Ontario where it has been sold heretofore notwithstanding the changes in the marketing situation to which I alluded at the beginning of my remarks.

In some cases it may be necessary for the coal board itself to take an active part in negotiating the detailed arrangements to accomplish this purpose. The volume of sales necessary to maintain a reasonably satisfactory level of employment this year in the maritime coal fields, particularly in Cape Breton island, cannot be achieved without moving coal farther into the Ontario market than it has moved previously. This is particularly so if the stockpiles of Cape Breton coal which were accumulated last year are to be reduced to normal proportions.

For this reason and the other temporary reasons affecting this year, a special increase will be made in the rates of subvention for the coming fiscal year 1959-60 to make possible the shipment into Ontario of additional Nova Scotian coal up to a total of 700,000 tons. The additional cost of subventions for this purpose is estimated to be about $4,300,000 over and above the estimate of $8,100,000 required for the other movement of Nova Scotia coal into the areas of Quebec and eastern Ontario where it has been sold in the past.

The government of Nova Scotia, taking note of the special need for making provision for the disposal of these stockpiles this year, has agreed to share with the federal treasury the cost of this temporary increase in subventions for this purpose. The government of Nova Scotia has agreed to accept 20 per cent of the first $2,500,000 required in additional subventions for this extra movement.

We believe that this special action this year will make it possible for the coal mining industry of the maritimes to continue its program of modernization and the improvement of its efficiency while working off the excess stocks that have been accumulated. The Dominion Coal Corporation has informed the government that if this extra movement of coal to Ontario is made, only the minimum lay-off of 40 days will be necessary. By the end of this month all the miners will have been off for 25 days. The remaining 15 days will be arranged for during the summer months.

The government, of course, does not contend that subventions alone are a final answer to the Nova Scotia coal problem. All those concerned recognize that a thorough study of the long term market outlook is urgently required, and that the related readjustment of coal production must be made in such a way that the industry may serve its future markets efficiently and economically. The principal company concerned is undertaking its own studies of these problems. The governments of Nova Scotia and Canada have now agreed to study this question jointly. Premier Stanfield of Nova Scotia will be coming to Ottawa some time in the next few weeks to discuss with this government the arrangements to be made for undertaking this review as expeditiously as possible.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in connection with the statement the Prime Minister has made I should like to remind the house that when we discussed the difficulties of the Nova Scotia coal industry last June and July, we on this side emphasized that vigorous action and long term planning would be necessary to deal with the increasingly serious situation. We were then charged with being unduly pessimistic in our observations on the industry. Indeed, the Minister of National Revenue, who spoke at that time, gave an optimistic picture and said orders for coal were recurring and multiplying.

Then, as the house knows, the difficulties which we predicted occurred, and as a result there have been cut-backs and lay-offs beginning February 1. Also, as a result of this, coal production in Nova Scotia has declined in 1958 by almost half a million tons.

On January 28, as the house knows, there was a meeting in Halifax of provincial labour and management representatives. This meeting was not attended by any member of the federal government, though I believe the chairman of the coal board was present. Following the lay-off in February a delegation waited on this government to make proposals which had grown out of the meeting in Halifax.

Since that date the government has had before it certain proposals arising out of that meeting. The first of these proposals, as the house knows, was for increased subventions on the movement of Nova Scotia coal. The Prime Minister has now informed the house that there are to be increases in those subventions which will permit, it is hoped, the marketing of 700,000 tons in Quebec and Ontario, the cost of which will be borne by the federal government except for 20 per cent of the first $2.5 million.

This delegation made certain other proposals. One was that there should be government assistance in the construction of a coal washing plant. If that is to be done it will require an extension of the life of the Maritime Coal Production Assistance Act beyond its expiry date of October of this year. This act was passed, I think, in 1948 by the previous government, and had at its disposal $10 million of which all has been spent except $3,000. If there were additional funds they could be made available for this particular assistance.

Then the delegation also asked for serious and sympathetic consideration of the united mine workers marketing proposal that the dominion coal board be constituted the marketing agency for Canadian coal. We have heard nothing from the Prime Minister about that recommendation, although it is true that Mr. Uren, head of the dominion coal board, did put on the record of that meeting at Halifax to which I have referred the following statement:

> Unofficially we have acted as a marketing board. In several instances in the past two or three years the chairman of the coal board has carried on negotiations with the purchasing agents of large pulp and paper industries in northwestern Canada. As a result we have succeeded in getting Canadian coal into those plants, and we have got some Canadian coal into those plants which should never have got there, although we were told that they would be good boys and do what they could.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that encouragement should be given by the government to the carrying on of that kind of activity and to stepping it up to meet the present critical marketing situation. I know the house will welcome the increased subventions which the Prime Minister has mentioned, but that is not the answer to the difficulties of this industry. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, the subventions—welcome as they are and perhaps essential as they are at the present time—are only stop-gap emergency measures and are not the long term measures that are required. Since subventions went into effect in 1928 the dominion treasury has paid out $77½ million for that purpose, yet the coal industry in Nova Scotia is in the position in which we find it today.

Therefore while we also welcome this long term examination which the Prime Minister has indicated will now begin, may I just point out that the proposals which we made with regard to this inquiry and with regard to energetic action were made last summer, and six, seven or eight months later all we have from the government is increased subventions.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, over the week end I had the pleasure of being in Sydney, Cape Breton island and I can tell the Prime Minister and the house that the people of that area will find this news extremely welcome. With some 4,000 miners out of work the whole of the Cape Breton economy in recent weeks has been greatly depressed. There is naturally great concern not only amongst the miners but amongst the business community and all the residents in that area as to the future of the coal mining industry. In addition to the step announced by the Prime Minister I hope assurances can be given that in the building of thermal plants in the maritime provinces every consideration will be given to the use of coal as a fuel.

The people in that area feel that one of the great difficulties they have to face, as compared with the economy of central Canada, is exceedingly high freight rates. Any action that may be taken by way of subvention or otherwise in order to equalize freight rates and give the maritime provinces and their industries something of an equal competitive footing as compared with the rest of Canada will be most welcome.

I hope the thorough study to which the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition have made reference will be undertaken, and that the incomes and the industry represented by the coal mines of Cape Breton will receive every consideration from the government and from parliament.

INQUIRY AS TO ASSISTANCE TO INDUSTRY IN WESTERN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister, in view of his statement on the maritime coal situation. I would like to ask the Prime Minister what consideration has been given, or is being given, to the situation in the coal mining industry in southwest Alberta and southeast British Columbia, where the industry is almost at a halt? In Fernie, British Columbia, it has come to a halt. Mr. Speaker, you understand that we welcome the announcement about the maritimes, but we are interested in the coal mining industry in Alberta and British Columbia. Is any consideration being given to our problem there?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, of course that is not a question which can be answered off the cuff, but may I say that this government did provide subventions in order to encourage the shipment of coal from those areas to Japan. The question of further action to be taken is always under consideration.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CANADIAN CONSENT FOR U.S. STRATEGIC AIR FORCE ALERT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question, Mr. Speaker, arising out of a report which I read this morning. The question is this. Is the consent of the government of Canada required before the strategic air force of the United States could be put on air alert?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition advised me of his intention to ask this question. I wish to advise that in so far as the question is concerned, the answer is no. However, I should like to say something more than that, and would refer the house to my statement in the House of Commons on June 3, 1958, in which I dealt at length with the agreed procedure whereby prior permission from Canada is required for each bomber flight over Canada. There has been no change in the agreed procedure since the statement to which I refer, which was made on June 3, 1958.

In so far as United States bomber aircraft carrying nuclear weapons over Canada are concerned, those flights can take place only following prior permission from Canada. These flights are dealt with separately, by specific application, and there is nothing in the nature of a blanket authority. The weapons are inactivated in order to avoid the possibility of accident, and the rules of procedure being followed are unchanged from those which have existed for several years.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

WELCOME TO HON. MEMBER FOR HURON FOLLOWING ILLNESS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. On behalf of this group I wish to welcome the return to the house of our old friend and political enemy, the hon. member for Huron. We trust he will soon be returned to perfect health so that we in this group will have no qualms about hurling our verbal brickbats against him.

Mr. W. L. Houck (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, we too on the Liberal side of the house want to say a hearty word of welcome to the hon. member for Huron. We are happy and thankful to see that he is sufficiently recovered from his serious accident to take his seat for the first time during this session, and we welcome him.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has already been welcomed by members of the cabinet and myself, and I am sure this is one of the things he will not forget, namely that feeling of friendship which prevails in this house in its relationship among members regardless of their viewpoint. Before he gets an opportunity to say thank you, I want to say to the hon. member for Kootenay West how much we appreciate his words, as well as the words of the hon. member for Niagara Falls.

Mr. L. E. Cardiff (Huron): Mr. Speaker, may I take the opportunity of thanking the hon. member for Kootenay West and the hon. member for Niagara Falls, as well as the Prime Minister. I am also very glad and pleased to be here. May I take the opportunity to thank all members for the numerous letters I received during my absence from the house. They were of great help to me, as they would be to any person accustomed to being on duty and working. It was a great privilege for me to answer those letters; it took my mind off myself and it had a great effect. Thank you very much.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

INQUIRY AS TO RAID ON SIX NATIONS RESERVE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. A. Hardie (Mackenzie River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice, arising out of a news report which appeared in yesterday's Ottawa Citizen, which reads in part as follows:

> Last week 40 mounties were assembled at a maritime point to be sent to Newfoundland to assist the mounties there in maintaining order during the woodsworkers' strike. When Justice Minister Fulton heard of the proposed reinforcements—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Hardie:

> —he overruled Commissioner Nicholson. This was followed by the 3 a.m. raid on the Indian reserve without the knowledge of the commissioner.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member ought not to read this statement at such length as a means of basing his question. Has the hon. member a question to ask?

Mr. Hardie: Yes. My question is based on the last sentence; that is why I had to read the whole paragraph. My question is this. If the commissioner of the R.C.M.P. had no knowledge of the contemplated action by the force under his command, did the minister himself order the R.C.M.P. to take this action, or did he have no knowledge of this raid prior to 3 a.m.?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): The hon. gentleman's question is not too clear, but I can assure him that the R.C.M.P. do not take any action of the magnitude described without the knowledge and authority of the commissioner. I can assure the hon. member also that the commissioner has at all times been at pains to keep the minister informed on the impending actions of the force.

[Later:]

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, it may be that my previous answer to the hon. member for Mackenzie River created a wrong impression. In case this should be so I should like to say clearly that it was not my intention to indicate in the answer I gave that either the commissioner or myself knew all the details of the action to be taken by the force at Brantford. Details as to how these activities were to be carried out are, of course, as is customary and necessary, left to the discretion of the officer commanding in the area.

Mr. Hardie: Who ordered the raid?

Mr. Fulton: My understanding is that at the request of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, Indian affairs branch, the police were asked to carry out their responsibility of maintaining law and order on the Brantford reserve, in as much as the hereditary chiefs had taken possession of property by violent acts and lawlessness had taken place. The police were asked to carry out their proper function of restraining further acts of lawlessness and to restore the property to its original owners.

Mr. Hardie: Under what legislation can a minister of the crown have the police make a raid on any reserve?

Mr. Fulton: If my hon. friend will read the Indian Act I think he will understand the authority for taking this action.

An hon. Member: Is there a state of war between us now?

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

NEWFOUNDLAND—INQUIRY AS TO INTEREST OF PROVINCIAL ATTORNEY GENERAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): May I ask a supplementary question concerning the R.C.M.P. Could I ask the Minister of Justice if, when he received and replied to a request from the attorney general of Newfoundland for R.C.M.P. reinforcements, he knew that the attorney general of Newfoundland is reported in the Canadian Parliamentary Guide as a director of Bowater's Newfoundland pulp and paper company, and had therefore been influenced by other considerations in asking for reinforcements.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me the hon. member's question is directed to giving the house certain information rather than to obtaining it.

Mr. Winch: Is that not the only reason we ask questions on orders of the day?

Mr. Speaker: It may be, but it is not the official reason.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO KNOWLEDGE OF R.C.M.P. RAID

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue, of which I have given him notice. Last week the R.C.M.P. made a raid on the Six Nations reserve near Brantford, Ontario. My question is, how did the C.B.C. become aware of the raid in order to have their mobile unit on the spot?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): The hon. member was good enough to send over notice of this question, as he said, so I was able to contact the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. I am in a position to advise him as follows on the basis of the information I have received from the corporation.

In the first place, no mobile unit was sent to Brantford by the C.B.C. A freelance cameraman in Hamilton, Herbert Foxcroft, who works for the C.B.C. and other private television stations, and who had been reporting for private television stations previously, received information that the R.C.M.P. were about to make a raid. Foxcroft advised the C.B.C. to this effect, and the corporation told him that since he was there he had better cover the story, and he did so. The C.B.C. moved no equipment there. All the equipment was provided by Foxcroft. The C.B.C. understands that, strangely enough, there were several other cameramen present, including still photographers from Buffalo, Brantford, Toronto and other parts of the United States and Canada.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—REQUEST FOR UNEMPLOYMENT FIGURES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. Macdonald (Kings): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour what are the figures as of February 26 of persons registered for employment in Prince Edward Island, and those of one year previous to that date?

The Late Sidney E. Smith

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was good enough to give me notice of his question. I have the answer here. The figures for the two offices serving Prince Edward Island as of February 26, 1959, were: for the Charlottetown office, 3,874; for the same date in 1958, 4,344; for the Summerside office, 2,227; and for the same date in 1958, 3,167.

THE LATE SIDNEY E. SMITH

ANNOUNCEMENT OF DEATH OF SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have a most difficult announcement to make regarding one of our colleagues, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who passed away a few moments ago. No words of mine can express the feelings I have, and I know I speak for members of this house. He was a long-time personal friend of mine. I suggest that we stand in memory, and that the house do adjourn.

Mr. Speaker: Would it be the wish of the house to suspend the sitting?

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): May I just say this. I know how the Prime Minister feels and I feel exactly the same way myself. I am quite incapable of saying what is in my heart at the tragic and sudden passing of a very old friend.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): We are shocked to hear of the passing of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It is a tragic loss to the government, to parliament and to Canada.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The conveying of sympathy to Mrs. Smith and the members of the family will be done on the next occasion, but I know all of us would want to convey to her the hope that comfort will come to her.

Mr. Speaker: Would it be the wish of the house to suspend its sitting until eight o'clock this evening?

Some hon. Members: Tomorrow.

Mr. Green: Perhaps it should be suspended until tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: If it is the wish of the house.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Whereupon at 3.05 p.m. the house adjourned.

Questions

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

PUBLIC BUILDING, WHYCOCOMAGH, N.S.—TENDERS

Question No. 240—Mr. McWilliam:

1. What are the names of those from whom tenders were received for the construction of a federal public building at Whycocomagh, Nova Scotia, and the amount of their respective tenders?
2. Has a tender been awarded for this construction? If so, to whom and in what amount?
3. If a tender has not been awarded, what further steps are contemplated towards commencement of this project?

Answer by: Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works):

1. Stephens Construction Ltd., Sydney, N.S., $24,995; M. R. Chappell, Sydney, N.S., $27,400; Maritime Builders Ltd., Sydney, N.S., $27,900; R. G. McDougall Ltd., Sydney, N.S., $28,380; A. E. Whidden, Antigonish, N.S., $29,616.15.

2. No.

3. The lowest quotation of $24,995 is considered excessive. Attempts to negotiate a better price with the lowest tenderer are not proving successful and it may be necessary to call new tenders.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES INSPECTORS—COMPETITIONS

Question No. 262—Mr. Brassard (Chicoutimi):

1. How many competitions have been held by the civil service commission since 1951 for the position of inspector of weights and measures, grade 3, Department of Trade and Commerce?
2. How many applicants were there for each competition?
3. How many applicants were successful at each competition?
4. Have promotions to grade 3 been made upon recommendation?
5. If so, what are the names of those promoted on recommendation only, and by whom were they recommended?

Answer by: Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce):

1. Five departmental competitions under the supervision of the civil service commission were held since 1951.

2. 1951, seventy; 1953, fourty-four; 1955, thirty-seven; 1956, thirty-four; 1958, twenty-four.

3. 1951, eight; 1953, ten; 1955, eleven; 1956, seven; 1958, four.

4. Yes, to a number of employees with at least 15 years of satisfactory service and where grade 3 positions were available.

5. Messrs. D. J. Bartlett, B. Beavis, W. R. Billings, and Thomas Clark were promoted to the grade 3 class on the recommendation of the director of the standards branch.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, March 18, 1959

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

DISTINGUISHED VISITORS—RIGHT HON. HAROLD MACMILLAN AND RIGHT HON. SELWYN LLOYD

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, ordinarily no reference is made to the presence in the gallery of distinguished visitors, but I am sure the house will allow me on this occasion to make reference to the fact that Right Hon. Harold Macmillan, Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, and Right Hon. Selwyn Lloyd are in the gallery of the house today, here for a stopover for this day while en route to Washington.

We regret that the Prime Minister found it impossible to address the house and Senate on this occasion, but I am sure I speak for hon. members everywhere in paying tribute to him for the tremendous inspiration he has given to the peoples of the free world, and also that conviction which he and the foreign secretary have given to the assurance of the maintenance of peace in the free world.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I join with the Prime Minister, on behalf of the official opposition, in the words of friendly welcome that he has just uttered to our distinguished guests, and assure him and the house that we share those feelings of admiration for what the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom and his foreign secretary have been doing in recent weeks to safeguard the peace and security of the world.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the C.C.F. party I should like to add my words of welcome to Right Hon. Harold Macmillan and Right Hon. Selwyn Lloyd. We believe their work has been in the interests of world peace and in the interests of free nations everywhere. On behalf of all of us we wish them the greatest success in those endeavours.

THE LATE SIDNEY E. SMITH

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, yesterday afternoon tragedy walked with the House of Commons. Today we are speaking in memory of Hon. Sidney Smith, the late secretary of state for external affairs, not in his capacity as such but as one who in the short 18 months during which he was a member of this house earned the friendship of members everywhere in the house and the appreciation of Canadians as a whole for the contribution he made in international affairs on behalf of Canada.

Mr. Smith came into the house with a reputation fully established as one of the great Canadians of his time. One cannot look into the future with any certainty, but I know the house will agree when I say this. Here on the threshold of a new career, had he been spared, the brilliance of his contribution in other walks of life would have been repeated in large measure in this house.

His life was one of service, beginning in the first war when as a young man in his teens he went overseas and served his king and country in the artillery and subsequently in the Royal Flying Corps. On demobilization he continued his studies, first in his own locality at his birthplace of Port Hood and at Windsor in his native province of Nova Scotia. In 1921 he was called to the bar of that province. In the same year he was appointed lecturer at Dalhousie, and soon rose to a professorship. In 1929, after a period as lecturer at Osgoode Hall in Toronto, he became dean of law at Dalhousie.

He was a great university administrator and teacher. His record is enshrined in the hearts of the many thousands of graduates who came under his influence at Dalhousie, Manitoba and Toronto universities. I believe his greatest and most enduring memorial will be the lives of those who came under his beneficent influence in the course of that relationship, unique in its nature, which at all times existed between him and his student body.

His was a life of service and devotion. He had an instinctive genius for human relationships. After becoming a member of the House of Commons and a minister of the crown he visited various parts of the world. Today messages are being received from national and international leaders not only in Canada, in the United Nations and NATO but in the capitals of the world. All of them confirm the estimate that we formed of him and the respect, admiration and affection felt for one who gave so much to his country. Indeed, his loss is being felt throughout the entire free world to the principles of which he gave unstinting devotion as a happy warrior for peace.

The range of his interests can only be appreciated by those who knew the capacity of his mind and the boundless energy which he possessed. At various times he held the position of president of the national film society, the national council of adult education, the national council of the Y.M.C.A., the national conference of Canadian universities, the United Nations association, the national council of Canadian clubs; as well as chairman of the Canadian youth commission and the national council of the student christian movement. That is the busy life he led. He was able as well to win renown as a distinguished editor and author of learned journals and legal texts. He was a Queen's counsel in three provinces, a fellow of the Royal society of Canada, and the recipient of many degrees from leading universities in Canada, the United States and the United Kingdom. He was one of those who had the capacity for work above and beyond the normal limits of endurance. He was one who put the demands of duty at all times before other considerations.

I speak as the one who communicated with him in the latter part of August, 1957, when I asked him whether, in view of his experience and knowledge of international affairs and his relationship with the United Nations Organization, he would consider changing his mode of life and entering the cabinet. His answer, which was typical of him, was "If you think I can do something, I shall not fail". No day was too long, no burden too onerous, and all his tasks were undertaken with a cheerfulness and warmheartedness that will not be forgotten. He overtaxed his strength.

It was only a few days ago that I suggested to him that he slow his pace. That was not his nature. His end came suddenly, in a way that most of us would like to pass away, in harness and in the full possession of those attributes and capacities with which he was endowed in such great measure.

To Mrs. Smith and the three daughters go from the hearts of all of us the expression of our sympathy. The monument which Sidney Smith left behind is enshrined in the hearts of all of us.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to join with the Prime Minister, on behalf of the official opposition and on my own behalf, in the expression of deep and sincere sympathy to Mrs. Smith and the family. I would also, if I may, like to extend our sympathy to the Prime Minister and the government in the loss of a close friend and a valued colleague.

We are all, of course, very deeply shocked and grieved at his passing; so sudden, so untimely, but so peaceful. It was only last week, Mr. Speaker, that I attended a meeting of the committee on external affairs and Mr. Smith, the minister was there. Behind him to advise him was the assistant under secretary of state for external affairs, Mr. Donald Matthews, and within a week both those men have departed from us. One was a civil servant, quiet, unobtrusive, but dedicated to the service of his country as an official; the other, the minister.

The secretary of state for external affairs was a man who served his country with devotion and sincerity in war and in peace during all his days, from the time of his enlistment as a very young man in the Canadian army in the first war to the very last moment of his life. As an educator, especially, before he joined the government, he made a contribution to the development and progress of this country which will not be forgotten. He was a servant of the state and he was a servant of the people. He has died in action, and his name now appears on the honour roll of sacrifice to his country and to his duty.

His work, as the Prime Minister has pointed out, was both wearing and worrying, but he never spared himself. Yet his happy disposition tended to conceal the strain and fatigue he must have felt. He was that kind of person, smiling and not complaining. As perhaps I have some reason to know, his was an arduous and exacting portfolio and one which he accepted out of that sense of public service which dominated his life, at a time when years of unremitting service in other fields had perhaps given him the right to look forward to easier days. Instead, he began new service in a field in which he was achieving national and international recognition—though he had only been in office a short time—through his calm good judgment and through his broadminded and forward-looking approach to international problems. It was a field made more difficult for him because, unlike his predecessors, he entered upon it without the advantage of previous experience in parliament or in the work of the department over which he presided.

Today we think of him not only, or perhaps not even primarily, as a minister of the crown, but as a friend, whole souled and great-hearted, with a gift for the bright and kindly word and a genius for comradeship and good companionship; a man who made friends easily and who kept them just as easily. I was privileged to enjoy his friendship over many years, and that friendship continued without interruption or any lessening after he moved into the office where I once worked and took the seat on the other side of the house which I once occupied.

The country has lost a devoted, sincere and accomplished public servant, and we have lost a friend whom we will not soon forget.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, the passing yesterday of Hon. Sidney Smith was a tragic loss for the Canadian nation. I think the statements made by the Prime Minister and by the Leader of the Opposition will be endorsed by every Canadian.

Mr. Smith had a very distinguished career in the service of Canada, a career which began many years before he entered the Canadian House of Commons. He had a distinguished career in the field of education in Nova Scotia, in Manitoba and in Ontario. He possessed those qualities which recommended him to all parts of Canada, to the east, the west and the centre.

Coming in to head the Department of External Affairs was a very onerous and difficult undertaking. I sincerely believe that as the days and months went by during which he occupied that office he displayed a greater and wider grasp of these important world problems. I believe I may say both from the statements Mr. Smith made in public and from conversations I have had with him that in dealing with difficult situations around the world he sought to establish an approach based on common sense, negotiation and peace. I was extremely pleased to see that as his term of office lengthened, greater consideration was given to the emphasis of those things that I am convinced will build an enduring and permanent peace. I have particular reference to the emphasis he placed on the need for the expansion of economic aid. His death yesterday demonstrates to all of us that this man in a very real sense died in the service of his country.

In my association with Mr. Smith and in the association of my colleagues with him I may say that at all times he treated us with respect and as equals. Whenever he acted as our host he was most genial. On behalf of the C.C.F. group I wish to convey to the Prime Minister and to his colleagues our sympathy in their loss. To Mrs. Smith and the three daughters we extend our deep, heartfelt sympathy on the loss of a beloved husband and father.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that if all those hon. members who would like to pay a personal tribute to the memory of the late secretary of state for external affairs were to do so it would require several hours. I, too, could pay a personal tribute because I suppose I had known the minister longer than any other hon. member of this parliament. It was my good fortune to attend the first class which he conducted as a lecturer at Dalhousie University after his appointment to that position. I remember his warm personality and the impression he made that morning when to a rather hard-bitten group, most of whom were veterans of world war I who had recently returned to Canada, he apologized for being a freshman in the presence of seniors. Over the course of the next month or two the students developed the use of the name Sid Smith by which he has been known ever since.

It is not on a personal basis, however, that I wish to speak this afternoon. I wish rather to speak on behalf of that ancient law school to which he contributed so much and where his name will be enshrined with those of Weldon and MacRae, the deans who predeceased him. I wish also to speak on behalf of that little, old province with its rich history from which he came, of which he was so proud and of which some of us heard him speak with such force and feeling within the last few days. I also wish to speak for that county from which Mrs. Smith comes, where her family and mine have been neighbours for years and where her forebears made such a significant contribution over the last two centuries.

On behalf of that law school, of that university, of that province and of that county I wish to express the sympathy of all those people to Mrs. Smith and to the daughters who, no matter how grievous the shock is at the moment, share the proud memory of a husband and father who attained the status of one of Canada's great citizens.

[Later:]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with the leave of the house I would ask that we revert to motions in order to make a general reference to the state funeral arrangements for the late Hon. Sidney Smith.

Mr. Speaker: Has the Prime Minister leave to revert to motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In keeping with the general tradition, Mr. Speaker, a state funeral will be given for the late Hon. Sidney Smith.

The funeral will take place at 4 p.m. tomorrow at Chalmers United church. That being so, by unanimous consent of the house I move, seconded by the Minister of Public Works:

That when this house adjourns today it stand adjourned until 8 p.m. on Thursday, March 19, 1959.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DISPOSITION OF AMENDMENT TO SUPPLY MOTION

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, if you will hear me I should like to discuss a point of order in an effort to be of assistance in dealing with the business of the house. At the moment there stands in the name of the Leader of the Opposition an amendment to the motion to go into supply. Since that amendment has now been put under orders of the day, and since it concerns Canada-United States relations, and as I am sure the late secretary of state for external affairs would have taken part in the debate, I have this suggestion to make on behalf of the opposition. Out of consideration for the memory of the late Mr. Smith we on this side of the house would be prepared to waive the second day to which we are entitled for consideration of the amendment, and if the government wished to call this matter as the first item of business today we would be prepared to vote on it simply by Your Honour calling for the yeas and nays and without a formal division of the house. I realize, of course, that this suggestion will require unanimous consent.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the government may I thank the hon. member for Laurier for his suggestion, which seems to me to be very fitting. If it is the wish of all members of the house we would ask that this particular item be called as the first order of business today.

Mr. Speaker: I think I called orders of the day, but we have not yet reached that stage on the order paper. If the house is prepared to deal at this time with the suggestion made, may I then ask if it is the wish of the house that the relevant order on the order paper be taken at this time and that the matter be disposed of as suggested by the hon. member for Laurier and concurred in by the leader of the house and the leader of the C.C.F. party? Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: May I also make it clear for the guidance of the officials of the house that in disposing of the amendment and motion by a simple division it is the intention that the supply motion will be considered to be disposed of as if there had been a two-day debate.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, Mr. Speaker; and I presume the house leader will want to call the various departments he intended to call.

Mr. Speaker: And therefore there will not be a carryover of time under the rules. I appreciate this very amiable solution of a difficulty which was puzzling me to some extent. If it is agreed I shall now put the amendment and motion which stand on the order paper.

SUPPLY

CANADIAN-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

The house resumed, from Monday, March 16, consideration of the motion of Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) for committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Pearson.

Mr. Speaker: The question is on the amendment. Those in favour of the amendment will please say "yea".

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those opposed to the amendment will please say "nay".

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Amendment (Mr. Pearson) negatived on division.

Mr. Speaker: The question is on the main motion. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Sevigny in the chair.

The estimates of the following departments were first taken up and entered for consideration:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

General administration—

163. Departmental administration, including grants as detailed in the estimates and the expenses of the international labour conferences, $1,105,745.

DEPARTMENT OF NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES

261. Departmental administration, $866,273.

DEPARTMENT OF SECRETARY OF STATE

372. Departmental administration, $303,040.

Progress reported.

STARRED QUESTIONS

C.B.C. BOARD OF DIRECTORS—RADIO INTERESTS

Question No. 10—Mr. Caron:

Is any member of the executive committee of the board of directors of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation at present engaged in the business of broadcasting or has any pecuniary or proprietary interest, as owner, shareholder, director, officer, partner or otherwise, in a broadcasting station or in the manufacture or distribution of radio apparatus?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. gentleman will call this question again a week from now. I have information with respect to one person to whom he probably has particular reference, but I have had letters sent to each of the executive members to whom the question refers and I have not heard from them all. Therefore I would prefer to have the question stand for one more week and I will then give a complete answer.

Mr. Caron: I am willing to have the question stand.

Mr. Speaker: Stand.

Question stands.

C.N.R. RETRAINING PROGRAM

Question No. 39—Mr. Fisher:

1. Has the Canadian National Railways a retraining program in connection with personnel affected by automation and similar technical developments?
2. If so, how long has the program been in effect, what is its general policy, and how much money had been expended on it to March 1, 1959?
3. What numbers of employees have been retrained in the central region under such a program in the (a) running trades; (b) maintenance of way; (c) clerical branches?
4. On what basis is the employee's income calculated when undergoing such retraining?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the answer to part one is yes. In regard to parts 2 and 3, the management of Canadian National Railways advise that generally speaking a program went into effect as new techniques and forms of mechanization became available, and its aim is to retrain personnel as required. It is not possible to provide an exact breakdown of the number or the cost of the program.

The answer to part 4 is that the employees usually receive on the job retraining and are paid the regular rates of the position.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct to the Minister of Transport a question arising out of his answer to starred question No. 39. Would the minister consider informing the management of the C.N.R. that in the view of the questioner the answer is incomplete and evasive?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would make this suggestion to the hon. member. I believe he is a member of the special committee which meets every year to go over the operations of the Canadian National Railways, and which will be meeting in a few weeks' time, and I suggest that he take that opportunity to question the president, Mr. Donald Gordon, just as thoroughly as he would wish to question him. I know he is capable of such thorough questioning.

ADVISORY BOARD ON OLD AGE ASSISTANCE, ETC.

Question No. 40—Mr. Fisher:

1. Is there a welfare advisory board made up of officials of the Department of National Health and Welfare, plus representatives from the provinces, which meets to discuss and review regulations and procedures in connection with matters such as old age assistance?
2. If so, how often and when has this board met since January 1, 1955?
3. Is any consideration being given to having this board meet in 1959?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the answers are as follows:

1. Yes.
2. The advisory board has met once since January 1, 1955, the meeting being held in Ottawa on November 5 and 6, 1956.
3. Yes.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

ROBERT ALEXANDER CECIL HENRY

Question No. 41—Mr. Fisher:

1. Has Robert Alexander Cecil Henry, of 1405 Peel street, Montreal, been in the employ of or used as a consultant by the federal government since January, 1952?
2. If so, what was the nature of such engagements, how much remuneration did Mr. Henry receive annually, and what department or government agency was he paid through?
3. In this particular period, what positions outside of the government service did Mr. Henry hold?

EUROPEAN TRIPS, NEWSPAPER PERSONNEL

Question No. 244—Mr. Fisher:

1. Were any newspaper or syndicate employees transported to the United Kingdom and to Canadian bases in northwestern Europe during 1957 and 1958?
2. If so, what were the names of such people, their employees, and the dates on which they were transported?
3. Were services such as meals, accommodations, etc., supplied for these people? If so, to what persons, at what times, at what cost?
4. Who arranges such transport and makes arrangements for visits?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

ROADS TO RESOURCES PROGRAM, ONTARIO

Motion No. 23—Mr. Benidickson:

For a copy of all correspondence, and any agreements entered into between the federal government and the government of Ontario since January 1, 1958, relating to the roads to resources program.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Stand.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Speaker, surely the minister should be able to bring down this return before the recess, perhaps next Wednesday. Can he say anything as to that?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I doubt whether I will be able to bring down the answers to this motion for papers and motion No. 5 before the recess.

Mr. Speaker: Stand.

Motion stands.

EAST SAINT JOHN THERMAL PLANT, N.B.

Motion No. 25—Mr. Robichaud:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the federal government or any official thereof, and the provincial government of New Brunswick, or the New Brunswick electric power commission, with respect to the signing of an agreement for the construction of the East St. John thermo plant, for the period June 1, 1958, to date.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Stand.

Mr. Robichaud: This motion has been allowed to stand since January 27. Can the minister tell the house how much longer we will have to wait for the production of the papers?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): This matter is still under discussion between the two governments. I can give no indication at this time as to when I will be able to produce these papers.

Mr. Speaker: Stand.

Motion stands.

ROADS TO RESOURCES PROGRAM

Motion No. 30—Mr. Argue:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the federal government and each provincial government since April 1, 1958, regarding the "roads to resources" program.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I shall have to ask that the hon. member allow this motion to stand.

Motion stands.

NATIONAL MUSEUM—CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING SCIENTIFIC PERSONNEL

Motion No. 70—Mr. Argue:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, reports of other documents exchanged between the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources or either of his deputy ministers, and Dr. James B. Griffin, director of the museum of anthropology of the University of Michigan, since 1955, relating in any way to the national museum of Canada and its scientific personnel.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL MUSEUM—REPORT BY JEAN GABUS

Motion No. 71—Mr. Argue:

For a copy of the report submitted by Mr. Jean Gabus to officers of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources on August 19, 1958, relating to the national museum of Canada.

Motion agreed to.

TRADE

OIL—REPORTED CANADIAN EXEMPTION FROM U.S. IMPORT RESTRICTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce if he has any comment to make on a press report this morning from Washington to the effect that the United States government has decided that oil import restrictions imposed on the grounds of national security should not apply to Canadian oil?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I have seen the press report to which the Leader of the Opposition refers. We have been in communication with our officials in Washington, but have not had any confirmation of the report. We would welcome some arrangement such as is set out there, but we have no assurance that this will result.

SALT FISH—INQUIRY AS TO WORK OF INTERDEPARTMENTAL COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): I should like to ask if the Minister of Trade and Commerce is now in a position to answer the question I directed to him on February 27 with regard to a report on the progress made by the interdepartmental committee to discuss salt fish marketing with members of the industry in Quebec, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I can assure the hon. member I will make a statement on that matter before the house rises for the Easter recess.

POLYMER CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON STRIKE THREAT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. W. Murphy (Lambton West): I wonder if I might direct a question to the Minister of Labour which concerns the labour-management situation at the Polymer Corporation in Sarnia. If a strike has been called, I wonder if the minister has any report to make to the house.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): The latest report I have received is that the dispute has gone through the ordinary processes of conciliation and the parties have been carrying on negotiations without arriving at a settlement. There has been a threat of the stoppage of work which, if carried to its conclusion, would continue until Wednesday of next week. It is to be done in progressive stages.

I have been in close touch with this matter, and only this morning dispatched telegrams to both parties urging them to continue negotiations and offering them the services of mediation through the labour department.

FINANCE

CANAL PROPERTIES—CONTINUANCE OF GRANTS IN LIEU OF TAXES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance of which I have given him notice. At the present time grants in lieu of taxes under the Municipal Grants Act are payable to municipalities for canals, canal lands and properties, which are soon to be taken over by the St. Lawrence seaway authority. My question is, what steps if any must the interested municipalities take to ensure that similar payments will be continued?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his intention to ask this question. The Welland ship canal property of the Department of Transport is to be transferred to the St. Lawrence seaway authority as of April 1, 1959. From this date the responsibility for payment of grants in lieu of taxes on the property transferred will lie with the St. Lawrence seaway authority.

Municipalities containing Welland canal property wishing to continue to receive grants should make applications annually, beginning with 1959, to the St. Lawrence seaway authority on the prescribed application forms. These forms may be obtained by writing to the secretary, St. Lawrence seaway authority, No. 2 building, 70 Lyon street, Ottawa. For the year 1959 it will be necessary also to submit application forms to the municipal grants division in order to receive grants in lieu of taxes for the first three months of the year. While two sets of application forms will be necessary for this one year, there should be a minimum of confusion since the application forms used by the St. Lawrence seaway authority are virtually identical with those used by the municipal grants division of the Department of Finance.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I ask a supplementary question. Is the formula in the case of the crown corporation the same as that in the case of the department for such municipal grants?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): So far as I am aware, but I think that question should be directed to the seaway authority.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the Minister of Transport if there is any difference between the formula for the payment of municipal grants by the corporation rather than by the department?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): I shall check up on that detail, Mr. Speaker.

AIR TRANSPORT

WESTERN AIRLINES—INQUIRY AS TO CHANGE OF WESTERN BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. R. Gundlock (Lethbridge): May I address a question to the Minister of Transport. It has been announced that Western Airlines, which for many years used Lethbridge, Alberta, airport as its Canadian base, hereafter will bypass Lethbridge in favour of Calgary. Is this change of policy one formulated by the government or by the airline itself, or is it the result of pressure from civic and other groups? Has the contribution of the city of Lethbridge and various groups therein in initiating, and for many years supporting, this air traffic between western Canada and the United States been fully recognized in this decision?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): I wish to thank the hon. member for his courtesy in advising me of his intention to ask this question. The hon. member for Medicine Hat has also made numerous inquiries about this matter. I am very glad to be able to answer as follows. In the discussions which took place last week the Canadian officials offered to retain, and urged the retention, of Lethbridge as a Canadian point of call on the trans-border route into Alberta, but the United States wished Calgary to be added as a Canadian terminal on this route in place of Lethbridge, rather than in addition to it. The agreement has had to be concluded on that basis. The position, however, is that if at any time a trans-border carrier wishes to serve Lethbridge I will be quite ready to make traffic rights available in Lethbridge for this purpose without any hesitation.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. E. W. Brunsden (Medicine Hat): In view of the very great interest in this subject on the part of many men in southern Alberta, I should like to ask the minister if this matter could not be reopened with a view to using both airports, at Lethbridge and Calgary?

Mr. Hees: As I just pointed out, in our discussions last week we urged the United States to include Lethbridge as well as Calgary, but the carrier concerned was not willing to do so. However, if at any time a carrier is willing to call at Lethbridge, we will be pleased to provide the traffic rights.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REQUEST FOR SHOWING OF DOCUMENTARY FILMS TO MEMBERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): My question is to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. In view of the particular interest of some members of the house in the work and productions of the national film board, would the minister inform the house if arrangements could be made for the showing of documentary films in the railway committee room on Wednesday evenings, for the information of members, their wives and guests? In fact I am asking whether a very good practice of some years ago could not be revived.

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): As the hon. member has said, this was the practice some time ago, but the attendance at these showings was so low and the acoustics in the room were so poor that the showings were discontinued. Subsequently they were shown in another room in the house where the acoustics were a little better, but again the attendance did not warrant the time that was put on the showings.

Consequently this year the film board decided to make available showings of films in their own small theatre on Kent street, and invited small groups of parliamentarians. Since the hon. member himself was one of those who turned up, I am sure he will be interested to know that 30 persons were invited to attend the showing and three showed up. If there is any real indication that there is some support for such a program we shall be happy to resume showings, with the consent of Mr. Speaker.

CIVIL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. L. Houck (Niagara Falls): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Having regard to the apparently serious aspect of the Berlin situation, will the minister tell the house if he has any further plans to step up civil defence?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I had expected that a statement on civil defence would have been made to the house prior to this time. Owing to unavoidable delays the statement had to wait a few days. I fully expect that this statement will be presented to the house later this week or, at the latest, in the first part of next week. I think possibly the question would be better answered at that time.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INQUIRY AS TO FURTHER EXTENSION OF BENEFITS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that we are to recess in a few days, may I ask the Minister of Labour whether or not he will be introducing the amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act which were referred to in the speech from the throne several months ago, a measure which, as he will understand, will give relief to many thousands of persons now out of work and who cannot qualify for benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows the Unemployment Insurance Act is based on the insurance principle. No such amendment is contemplated in the amendments that will be placed before the house for approval.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

RAINY RIVER—REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF DISTRICT COURT JUDGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. The Minister of Justice is aware of the fact that the district court of Rainy River has been without the services of a judge for a great number of months partly because the nominal judge for that district when he was appointed formally to the court in Toronto, had been serving in Toronto for many months. In consequence there is a great backlog of judicial work to be done in that county. I would ask the minister to consider this as an urgent matter, and I would hope there is to be an early appointment.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to take into consideration what the hon. gentleman has said.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING COURT MARTIAL APPEAL BOARD, ETC.

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-27, to amend the National Defence Act.

Motion agreed to, amendments read the second time and concurred in.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Sevigny in the chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) moved:

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $616,654,878.69, being the aggregate of

(a) One-sixth of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1960, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, $606,770,511.84;

(b) Five-twelfths of the amount of item 209 of said estimates, $791,666.67;

(c) One-third of the amount of item 38 of the said estimates, $216,666.67;

(d) One-sixth of the total of the amounts of items 175, 182, 183 and 358 of the said estimates, $713,163.17;

(e) One-twelfth of the total of the amounts of items 64, 210, 259, 384, 451 and 454 of the said estimates, $8,162,870.34, be granted to Her Majesty on account of the fiscal year ending March 31, 1960.

Mr. Chairman, the amounts proposed in the present resolution are those required to provide for the needs of the public service up to May 31. With the exception of 12 items, the proportion of the total item in the estimates is one-sixth or in other words the equivalent of a straight proportion of two months of the total.

In the case of the 12 items to which I have referred, there are special reasons why the amount is required in excess of the fraction of one-sixth, because these are expenditures of a type that do not fit the program of the year on an even, uniform basis, month by month. I point out to the house, Mr. Chairman, that even in the case of these dozen items in no instance is the total amount of the item being released by the present resolution and the bill to follow. The form of the bill to be presented is the same as that of interim supply bills passed last year.

I give the usual undertaking, Mr. Chairman, that the passing of this bill will not prejudice the rights and privileges of hon. members to criticize any item in the estimates when it comes up for consideration in committee of supply, and that the rights and privileges of hon. members in this regard will be respected and will not be curtailed or restricted in any way as a result of the passing of this measure.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, as the minister has indicated, only $10 million of the $616 million asked as interim supply for the first two months of the fiscal year starting April 1st involves more than one-sixth of the items appearing in the book of estimates for 1959-60. I am well aware that particularly today the house is not in a controversial mood. I am aware also that we are hoping very soon to have a budget which will give us a fairly extensive opportunity to discuss monetary and fiscal policies. On the other hand, despite that introduction I must tell the minister that inasmuch as he did on introducing the new estimates make a fairly extensive statement, which has not been made in that way for quite a number of years, not since 1954, I do take a little exception to the terms of his statement. I thought it was unduly slanted in a political direction, and I therefore feel obliged to say something to the committee at this time with respect to the 1959-60 estimates.

We all know that the minister was one of those who talked a great deal in the past about cutting expenditures. In the statement which he made, in the form in which he utilized the combination of figures, and in the place in his statement where he put what was a very interesting statement, I find that he made matters controversial and unduly political. I do not feel that this is desirable on the introduction of the estimates for the year, particularly as one knows that those who heard the statement on that occasion have had no advance notice of the items in the statement. They are very complicated and very difficult to reply to at that time.

One of the difficulties for members of the house hearing a statement of that kind is that a speaker often is not comparing oranges with oranges. The minister on that occasion directed his statement in such a way that we were really unknowingly, to many I am sure, comparing oranges with grapefruit, as one might say. He compared the first proposals of expenditure for the new year 1959-60 in the main estimates then tabled with the total expenditures in the main estimates of a year ago; with besides the supplementary estimates, plus supplementary estimates No. 1; and third, also supplementary estimates No. 2. He related the total of his proposed new expenditures for the forthcoming year to the main expenditures and these additional expenditures known to February 5 for the current year.

If one were comparing equals, what we really should consider is the fact that the main estimates for this year total $5,595 million, compared with $5,179 million at the same stage of proposed expenditures a year ago. That is an increase of $416 million. This, in itself, is confusing and I think that the minister in addition, putting at the top of his second paragraph this statement, has done something which has resulted in publicity favourable to him, perhaps, but I do not think it presents the true state of the financial proposals for the coming year. These were the words of the minister, as reported on page 705 of Hansard for February 5, 1959. This was the emphasis, the impression, he wanted to give, not only to this house but to the country at large. He said:

> The most noteworthy feature is that compared with those for the present year, 1958-59, these estimates provide for a decrease of $39.1 million in the non-statutory items.

Mr. Chairman, the minister and some of us on this side do at times find difficulty in reconciling our methods of calculation and arithmetic, but I would like the minister to tell us before the item is passed whether or not he has an explanation for what I consider to be a departure from a justifiable practice in arriving at his conclusion, namely that there was a reduction of $39.1 million in non-statutory expenditures. Because when I examine in the blue estimates book the statement that was prepared a year ago, presented to the press on May 13, 1958, it was calculated that the statutory items amounted to $1,788 million. This year when the minister is making a comparison between statutory items for last year and this year he refers to an item of $1,766.8 million. This I found very hard to reconcile; but afterwards I found that, differing from the similar press statement of last year, there has been omitted this year with respect to last year's statutory items an item of $12 million with respect to the C.B.C., which appears on page 10 of last year's estimates. In addition, in this new figure relating to last year's statutory items, the reference to $12 million for C.B.C., there is omitted $10 million with respect to a special statutory item of last year relating to taxation sharing with the provinces on electricity companies. The result is that you have $22 million which appeared last year as statutory but does not appear the same way this year. If the minister had used the same yardstick, he would not have been able to use the figure of $39 million, but it would have been $22 million less than the figure that he used so very conspicuously and prominently put at the masthead of his statement to the house and to the press, which was of course circulated to the country.

As I say, in addition to that he was comparing, not the main estimates this year with the main estimates at the same stage last year, but related to the main estimates plus all the known expenditures of last year up to date, which included supplementary estimates. This is certainly misleading, and with respect to the statutory item on the C.B.C. which was described as such in last year's estimates at page 10 I frankly cannot account for the failure to include that in the press release figure of approved statutory items for last year. With respect to the special compensation to the provinces of $10 million to which I have referred, I can see that there has been some change in the intended practice there because last year we did have a special statute which authorized this particular transfer of federal funds to the provinces. However, it had an expiry date limiting its application to one year. This year the item is apparently not intended to be a statutory item, because we have an item in the estimates presumably now non-statutory for this purpose.

The effect of this kind of bookkeeping is that the minister's figure of $39 million, representing so-called reductions of controllable or non-statutory expenditure, is larger than, I suggest, it is fair for the minister to use in deference to the house. I think matters of this kind should not involve sleight of hand or gimmicks, but that the minister should at all times be completely frank with the house and with the public. I should appreciate knowing why the two items to which I have referred were not included again in this year's press release and why the minister has changed the figure from $1,788.1 million, representing last year's statutory items, and used this year the figure of $1,766.8 million.

We have, of course, seen a great deal of inconsistency from the treasury benches this session in relation to what we were led to believe was to be the policy of the government and, in particular, the policy of the Minister of Finance in fiscal and monetary matters. I think the committee is well aware that the minister wasted no time after being sworn in to his present position in June, 1957 before meeting the press, and one of the many things he said would be accomplished under his guidance, as reported in the first paragraph of an article in the Ottawa Journal on June 26, 1957, at a press conference was an undertaking that he would declare war on waste and extravagance. I have indicated that comparing the main estimates this year with the main estimates last year we find an increase of $416 million. I recall some strong statements made by the minister when he was in opposition on this as on many other matters, and again I point out to the committee that he is unduly acrobatic, and that this is another occasion when we are witnessing a very remarkable somersault.

I should like to make some general remarks to the minister in connection with interest rates, because in the statement he made on February 5 he pointed out that one of the chief items of increase in the estimates for the forthcoming year as compared with the current year was the item of an increase of $106 million accounted for by the necessity of paying larger amounts in interest on the public debt. It is in this connection that I find, in odd comments made by the minister during the present session, an unwillingness, again, to be frank with the house. I think that many of the minister's statements this session, particularly on the subject of interest rates, have been unduly fatuous and, indeed, vacuous. I will give the committee an example of what I have in mind. How can anybody either in this chamber or outside reconcile statements of the minister with his past onslaughts on tight money or, indeed, with the present facts in relation to high interest rates? On page 997 of Hansard the minister is reported as saying:

> No one can accuse the present government of doing anything to create an increase in interest rates.

All right. Would the minister say something about what this government has done to reduce interest rates? He says he has done nothing to increase them. I should like to know what is different about the present government's performance in relation to the central bank, the method of selling treasury bills, marketable securities or any other type of government security, from that which he criticized when he was on the hustings and talking about the tight money policy.

I regret having to point out some of the very unfortunate circumstances surrounding the cost of money today, not only to the federal government but to other governments and to the private commerce of our country. I know that we have been told, not only in recent debates but even last year—and when the Conservatives were in power in the thirties they had the same argument to make in reply to any criticism by the opposition; they inferred that criticism was disloyal and that the communists might hear it—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Would the hon. gentleman permit me to interrupt him? Is he proposing now to embark on a full dress debate on these questions? I ask this because he, I think, must recall the words that were very often used in the past by my predecessors, particularly by Mr. Abbott, who consistently took the stand that a motion for interim supply was not an appropriate motion for opening up a general debate. Mr. Chairman, we are going to have a budget debate soon, and I call to the attention of all hon. members that an undertaking is always given by the Minister of Finance, when the present type of motion for interim supply is under consideration, that the full rights of all members will be respected and that they will be able to discuss any item of supply when it is called in due course in committee of supply. The whole purpose of such an undertaking is to avoid duplication of debate. It was never intended that a motion for interim supply should be the occasion for a full dress debate.

This is not a motion to resolve the house into committee of supply, upon which it would be appropriate to raise questions which might be called grievances, or to introduce amendments in relation to matters upon which the house might wish to divide. The hon. gentleman is familiar with these procedures, and has had experience with regard to them, having been parliamentary assistant to the minister of finance when this same position was consistently taken by my predecessors. He will appreciate that if a motion for interim supply is to be made the occasion for a general debate, it will simply mean that there is bound to be a very extended discussion. Is it not the wish of the committee that this course is the one which should be taken, having regard to the program which is still before us and the number of items to be passed before the Easter recess?

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, may I refer to Beauchesne's Fourth Edition, page 192, 59(2), which simply says:

> Speeches in committee of the whole house must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

As we are voting one-sixth of the whole budget for 1959-60, I think the remarks which are being made on the general nature of the administration are relevant, and even if it has been the custom in the past, on certain occasions, not to have a full-fledged debate on these matters I think the hon. member should be permitted to continue his remarks on the general nature of the estimates now before the committee.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Finance has done as his predecessors have done, and is pointing out that subsequent debate will not be denied to members of the house, because no one item is being completed under the resolution he is presenting. That never in the past restrained the Minister of Finance and his associates when they were on the opposition side of the house from debating particular items which they felt could not wait for the estimates to come up.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is not true.

Mr. Benidickson: That is certainly true. It reduced debate undoubtedly because we were not going to discuss every item with respect to the numerous entries in the blue book but there never has been a denial of hon. members' rights at this stage to speak if they felt the requirement, on a particular item which in their opinion they felt was of sufficient urgency that discussion should not be delayed. I say that an item in the new estimates of expenditure that involves almost 25 per cent of the increase in expenditures amounting to some $400 million odd to which I referred is worthy of a little consideration at this stage. I am not trying to be unpatriotic in making some reference to this very important question. I intend to be brief with respect to it but I must point out to the committee that the bond market of this country is indeed in a real crisis with respect to confidence respecting federal government securities.

The interest rates that are being paid for federal bonds are at a differential in relation to those paid by high grade private corporate bond issues that was never so narrow as at the present time indicating that the traditional premium of confidence in federal government bonds does not prevail at the present time.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. gentleman a question. Does he think it is a very responsible course to pursue the line he is following now knowing that the effect of it can only be to hurt the credit of this country when we have to go to the bond markets?

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, on that point of order—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That was not a point of order; it was a question.

Mr. Benidickson: I should like to answer the question. I expected my hon. friend to again raise some bogeyman of this kind in the hope that we would not have a debate here on dirty dishes he would like to keep from view. However, I am not introducing this thought. I was just about to tell my hon. friend that the financial editors of two of the best-informed newspapers in this country on monetary matters, the Globe and Mail of Toronto and the Gazette of Montreal, have had a great deal to say on this subject and that is public knowledge. I do not need to express an opinion if my hon. friend does not wish me to at this time. I shall simply say that about ten days ago Mr. Fraser Robertson the financial editor for the Toronto Globe and Mail, a newspaper that is very friendly to my hon. friend, was visiting western Canada and went as far as the west coast. In his column of March 2, he had this to say:

> As one investment dealer put it to me, the quickest way to lose the confidence of a client is to suggest he buy Dominion of Canada bonds.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, would my hon. friend agree with that statement and take the responsibility for saying those words in this committee? Is my hon. friend prepared to make that his statement?

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I feel that for many weeks this country has awaited some decisive statement from my hon. friend or from the Prime Minister with respect to their policies on fiscal and monetary matters and even the budget is being postponed—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is not being postponed. You have been told when it is coming down.

Mr. Benidickson: It is the uncertainty with respect to policies and the attempt on the part of the government to ride two horses that is resulting in this lack of confidence in government bonds at this time.

Mr. Argue: They cannot stay on either one.

Mr. Benidickson: The Minister of Finance made an important speech that received a great deal of publicity on January 5 in Toronto. His talk seemed to emphasize the problem of inflation but in the speech from the throne that did not seem to be the matter that was concerning the Prime Minister. He referred to continued spending and deficits if necessary. I say that what is holding back confidence in government bonds is a lack of some decisive statement or action by this government. It is most unfortunate in my opinion that the budget was not introduced prior to the Easter recess.

Again to indicate this is something that is not being stated from a political basis—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Oh, no!

Mr. Benidickson: —I offer to my hon. friend a statement by Mr. John Meyer, financial editor of the Montreal Gazette, a newspaper that is also friendly to the minister. The following statement appeared in an article published on December 9—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): December 9?

Mr. Benidickson: —in which Mr. Meyer said:

> The investor no longer believes the government can, or will, restrain inflation.

Only a budget and the stated intentions of the government for next year would indicate whether or not the government is concerned in a serious way about restraining inflation. The article goes on to state:

> This fear has become increasingly apparent over the last few months. It was offset, at first, by compensating increases in return and other attractions inherent in a government bond.

There is another feature to which I hope the minister will give consideration. This has been causing me alarm in recent weeks and I believe it also requires some very decisive action on the minister's part. All hon. gentlemen know that we recently had the floating of two fairly short term bonds, one at a nominal coupon rate of 2¾ per cent for 13 months and the other at 3 per cent for one year, 9½ months. The thing that is worrying me and which I draw to the minister's attention because I feel it will be helpful to him in consideration of budget proposals to which he will be giving very rapt attention over the recess is the fact that there seems to be an unseemly and unholy competition on the part of public borrowers—and I include the federal government, the provinces and the municipalities—in seeking from the public funds with a silent gimmick or attraction, namely bonds sold at a discount which when one relates it to an income tax rate results in very expensive cost for public money.

In January of this year the province of New Brunswick floated bonds which carried a coupon rate of 2½ per cent but by reason of the discount and short term the effective rate will be 4.75 per cent. I am told that one of the municipalities in Quebec has been utilizing this gimmick to the extent that it offered money at a nominal rate of 1 per cent but the non-taxable discount was so substantial that it still had attractions for borrowers because they believed they would not be responsible for income tax on the difference between the par value of the bonds and the discount prices at which they got them.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, would the hon. gentleman care to give the date of the municipal issue to which he refers?

Mr. Benidickson: I refer to the municipality of Malartic.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): And would my hon. friend give the date?

Mr. Benidickson: I have not got it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think my hon. friend will find it was several years ago under the previous government.

Mr. Benidickson: I am not so informed by the Bank of Canada. When I inquired yesterday the date was not given me. I have cited this as a recent illustration of what is happening. Hon. members of the committee know that except in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario any tax advantage in the matter of floating bonds of this kind is at the expense of the federal income tax collections and so unless this thing is straightened out the minister himself will find that the federal treasury will be losing in taxes on these highly discounted bonds for short terms whether his or offered by other governments.

I want to give a little illustration of what the actual value was of the most recent flotation of federal bonds by the minister. I will refer to the 2¾ per cent bonds due, as I said, 13 months after issue, $85 million of which was subscribed. This bond will go up $20 per thousand in 13 months.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): My hon. friend says "subscribed". He knows it was over subscribed and that was the limit of the allotment.

Mr. Benidickson: My friend has boasted about oversubscription. I want to indicate to the house why this bond has perhaps proved satisfactory to the extent that it was oversubscribed.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Don't say $85 million was subscribed.

Mr. Benidickson: In the minister's advertisements to the public the issue is referred to as 2¾ per cent, due April 1, 1960, issued at 97.90, a discount from 100 to yield on that basis 4.76 per cent. I want to point out to the minister that the corporation tax is approximately 50 per cent and that a great number of the personal taxpayers who buy bonds are paying on the last portion of their income an income tax of at least 50 per cent. The result is that people in that category who buy these bonds would have to get an annual yield of 6.6 per cent on another bond sold at par in order to net this amount. That is how attractive the minister has been forced to make his interest rates for his purposes.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Surely my hon. friend is not going to leave on the record a shockingly misleading and inaccurate statement of that kind. The hon. member knows perfectly well how interest rates are calculated, and if anybody paid any attention to his last statement it could not possibly fail to do very serious mischief. I ask the hon. member if he does not think that a sense of responsibility would dissuade him from making a shocking statement of that kind.

Mr. Benidickson: I will spell out how attractive it is and the type of argument that is made by the sellers of these bonds to people who, as I say, may have an income tax rate of 50 per cent. A person or corporation paying a 50 per cent tax would receive in a year after paying tax $13.75, being one-half of a 2¾ per cent coupon, plus $19.32—I am using a year as the basis although the issue was for 13 months—being twelve-thirteenths of $21. The result is that he receives in that year a benefit of $33.07 per $1,000 bond after tax. I repeat that to net that amount on another bond sold at par he would have to get an annual yield of 6.6 per cent.

But the point I am making is that there is unseemly competition going on between public bodies in this respect, and I hope the minister will consult the provinces about this because on the facts—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Will the hon. member recall that bonds were issued at a discount under the previous regime where it happened to meet the needs of the market at the particular time, even when he was parliamentary assistant to the then minister of finance? This is nothing new at all.

Mr. Benidickson: I will challenge the minister to give the house particulars of returns from government bonds in any recent flotation by the former government or going back for many years that netted to a taxpayer paying a rate of 50 per cent a yield of 6.6 per cent as a result of the use of this feature of discount which is non-taxable.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. gentleman is running away from my question completely.

Mr. Benidickson: Not at all. The minister has all the information. He says that this feature of the federal government losing the income tax is something that he can attribute to the previous government in similar conditions in recent times, and I simply ask him to inform the committee of those facts. In addition, I have always heard from the minister that interest rates in Canada have been rising recently simply because of our proximity to the United States. It just happens that in recent weeks, Mr. Chairman, while rates in Canada have been rising very markedly, the trend has been the very opposite in the United States, and I do not see the validity of that kind of argument.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is not true.

Mr. Benidickson: The point I really want to draw to the attention of the house—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Does the hon. member say that interest rates in the United States have been going down? Did I hear him say such a thing?

Mr. Benidickson: Yes.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Then I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, that my hon. friend is not better informed as to the facts because the facts are dead against him.

Mr. Benidickson: I will put a quotation on the record and the minister can correct me if I am wrong. We do not have the sources of expert information that he has. I simply have to do my own reading. In the U.S. News and World Report of March 9 I find the following:

> Short term interest rates have declined despite the firm hand of the federal reserve on credit supplies. The treasury on its February 23 offering of 91-day bills accepted an interest cost of 2.589, down from 2.726 the week before and 3.035 on January 19.

I think this statement, Mr. Chairman, is a direct challenge to the minister. When questioned on the matter of interest rates and government action to encourage raising them or to prevent them from rising, he has always taken the attitude that he has nothing to do with it. He says he sits in a vacuum and lets the money market settle the matter. If there was anything that the government did to bring interest rates down after they came into office I should like to hear about it. On January 27, 1958, as found at page 3852 of Hansard, the minister had this to say:

> That tight money policy has now been eased in line with the policies of this government.

In other words, when interest rates were declining he took credit for it but when interest rates have been rising rapidly he absolves himself from any responsibility. He says that he is a complete neutral.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am no neutral.

Mr. Benidickson: On November 25, 1957, and this is another example of the political advertising the minister does with respect to this very important problem—

The Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but I must advise him that his time has expired.

Mr. Benidickson: I just have a three-line quotation.

The Chairman: Does the committee consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fraser: Let him get it off his chest. It is not very good anyhow.

Mr. Benidickson: This is what the minister boasted to the federal provincial conference on November 25, 1957:

> Here in Canada, quietly and gradually over the last three months, the tight money situation has been eased. Those whose business it is to follow the bond market will have noticed it—and that includes many of you here—but it has not attracted as much attention as one would think it has merited. Interest rates have declined.

I simply say to the minister that if he takes credit for his administration when rates decline will he give the committee some explanation of present government policy because there has been a very marked increase in rates in recent times?

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I rise to deal with two questions which I assume I can deal with properly on going into interim supply. They come under the administration of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice. According to the Prime Minister, the government has made a decision in the one case and as to the second we presume that the matter is still under consideration. The two questions I wish to deal with this afternoon on behalf of this group are the request on behalf of the Canadian Labour Congress for inquiry into the unfortunate and regrettable incidents in Newfoundland and the request for a judicial inquiry by the premier of the same province.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend has indicated that he approaches these matters as on a motion to resolve the house into committee of supply. May I point out, Mr. Chairman, that this is not that situation at all. We are not on a motion to resolve the house into committee of supply, we are in committee of supply now. May I point out to the hon. gentleman that the subjects he is proposing to discuss now are surely not appropriate for discussion on interim supply, that is, discussion in committee of supply. If my hon. friend is looking for a place to discuss this question there will be an item in the supplementary estimates dealing with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Mr. Robichaud: The minister will object.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Whatever may be appropriate for discussion there may be discussed, and whatever is improper obviously will not be permitted. But I do urge that this is not the place to discuss matters as though this were a motion to resolve the house into committee of supply. This is not such a proceeding at all.

Mr. Herridge: I cannot agree with the contention of the Minister of Finance. The minister is asking for supply and I understand this request covers all departments. We have a right when the minister is asking for supply for a department to go into any question concerning that department. In support of that contention I want to quote from May's 16th edition, page 739:

> Matters which can be discussed upon the grant on which an advance is sought, may be discussed, in anticipation, upon the motion for the grant on account; though the proper occasion to examine the grants in detail is when the final grant to complete the sum demanded is proposed to the committee.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That last statement is the important one. I do point out to my hon. friend that once we are through with interim supply we are going to have before the committee the supplementary estimates for the year 1958-59. It seems to me that whatever may be relevant to the item for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police should be said there, and not on this present proceeding in committee of supply.

Mr. Herridge: According to the rulings that have been made in connection with dealing with supplementary and further supplementary estimates, we have been tied very closely since this government came into power to the actual item under discussion. The matters I wish to raise here go somewhat wider than that. I think this is the appropriate opportunity to discuss a matter of very urgent concern to the Canadian people.

The Chairman: I must bring to the attention of the committee that the item which was read by the hon. member for Kootenay West can be found on page 739 of May's 16th edition. This paragraph reads as follows:

> Matters which can be discussed upon the grant on which an advance is sought, may be discussed, in anticipation, upon the motion for the grant on account; though the proper occasion to examine the grants in detail is when the final grant to complete the sum demanded is proposed to the committee.

It is the opinion of the Chair that this question concerning Newfoundland should be discussed when the detailed estimates are brought forward, but not at the present time. Actually, at the present time we are in committee of supply and discussing the estimates on a very broad, general basis. It is the opinion of the Chair this is not the appropriate time for discussing the matter to which the hon. member for Kootenay West refers. It would be preferable, in my opinion, to discuss the matter under the detailed items.

Mr. Benidickson: May I speak to the point of order? I feel that this is something which involves the rights of all members of the opposition. I feel that the suggestions of the minister are quite contrary to the practice of this house over a great number of years. I could not, if I were in the position of the hon. member for Kootenay West, agree to the suggestion of the Minister of Finance because recently we have had other supplementary estimates before the committee and I thought the minister was unduly technical. As I say, he completely ignored the practice that he and the present Prime Minister advocated when the supplementary estimates were being considered under the former administration.

I would ask him to cite any illustration in recent years when supplementary estimates were under consideration when points of objection were taken by the former government that was then in power similar to those he took earlier this session in the debate on the supplementary estimates. I feel that we would end in a trap, in view of the rulings that were made, if it was agreed to postpone discussion of this particular subject, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

I put forward this thought to Your Honour. Would it not be possible for a member of the house at this time to move that we do not vote one-sixth of the supply for the months of April and May for a particular item, such as the administration of the mounted police, because certain members are not satisfied that the committee has had an adequate opportunity to discuss the program of that force for the two months for which the force is being given this blank cheque?

Mr. Regier: Before you make a final ruling on this matter, Mr. Chairman, I may say that your early indication would leave serious implications for us. Never in my six years of experience has the opposition been prevented before on an interim supply motion from discussing something that broadly affects the policies of the government—

The Chairman: I regret to interrupt the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, but I should like to inform him and the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River that the Chair did not rule out the debate on the present matter. It was simply a request that was made that this matter to which the hon. member for Kootenay West referred be discussed when the detailed estimates come along. This was a request made in line with the paragraph to which the hon. member referred in May's 16th edition.

It is stated in the latter part of the paragraph:

> —the proper occasion to examine the grants in detail is when the final grant to complete the sum demanded is proposed to the committee.

The Chair has not ruled out of order the debate upon which the hon. member is starting, but has simply requested that members limit their remarks as much as possible to matters of a general nature on these items. I must also bring to the attention of the hon. member the fact that since we are discussing the question of supply we cannot allow debates to stray into all fields, in all directions, and consequently if this matter is discussed it will have to be debated with the greatest possible respect for the question of relevancy.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I thank you for your opinion in this connection. It was not my intention to go into the details of these estimates. We intend to go into them very fully when the main estimates come before the committee, at which time the ministers and departmental officials will be here. What I am dealing with is something more in the line of general principles which concern the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice.

As I said before, I was going to deal first with the request of the Canadian Labour Congress for an inquiry into the unfortunate and regrettable incidents in Newfoundland, and a similar request for a judicial inquiry by Premier Smallwood to the Prime Minister of Canada.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Let us clarify this matter for the guidance of us all. My hon. friend has indicated he is proposing to initiate a debate on a subject which concerns the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice. This emphasizes the point that I was seeking to make earlier, Mr. Chairman, a point which has been recognized in this house all the time that my hon. friend and I have been members of this house. When the house is in committee of supply for the purpose of granting interim supply we do not have debates involving other ministers. The Minister of Finance is the only minister who takes part in the discussion of interim supply. This has been the invariable practice all the time my hon. friend and I have been in the house.

If he wishes to find an occasion for debating the question that he has indicated, one involving the Prime Minister and my colleague the Minister of Justice, I can assure him this is not the occasion. I have no doubt, that my hon. friend will have other occasions. However, this is not the occasion. If I may say so, my hon. friend approaches this matter as though this were a motion to resolve the house into committee of supply on which he can raise grievances or introduce amendments to test the feeling of the house on a particular issue that he chooses to raise as a grievance. But that is not the situation we are in now. We are in committee on this motion for interim supply.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I certainly cannot agree with the Minister of Finance that in the absence of other ministers he does not represent them in dealing with interim supply or supplementary estimates. That matter has arisen on a number of occasions throughout the years. If he were in interim supply or on supplementary estimates he would answer for the minister who was not present.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Quite so. Let there be no misunderstanding. I am here to answer with respect to the present motion within the proper limits of the present proceedings. My hon. friend has indicated he wishes to raise a matter or to initiate a debate on a matter that properly calls, as I understood him to say, for the presence of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice. I emphasize that this is not the time for that kind of debate.

The Chairman: It is not my opinion that actual matters affecting the departments of ministers who are not in the house cannot be debated even during the ministers' absence. However, once again, in line with the remarks I made in my ruling a few minutes ago, I must remind hon. members that since we are at present in committee of supply debating an interim supply matter we should limit our remarks more to matters concerning sums of money rather than other principles. Otherwise the principle of relevancy would not be observed. I must therefore ask hon. members please to try to restrict their remarks to the matter that is being discussed at this time.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I am taking advantage of the minister's coming before the house and asking for interim supply. In this interim supply the minister is asking for money that would go to Newfoundland for the services of that province. I do not see how one can talk about money only without talking about policy in relation to the money, its expenditure and the surrounding circumstances.

Mr. Chairman, I have had two starts. I hope I can get away satisfactorily this time. I would have been finished now if the Minister of Finance had not got on his high horse. I should remind him, Mr. Chairman, that when I am talking, no other member of this group is talking because we have only opportunity to talk one at a time. I must say that we were extremely sorry about the reply the Prime Minister made the other day to the request of the Canadian Labour Congress and to the request of the premier of Newfoundland that an investigation be conducted into these unusual happenings in Newfoundland. We think such an investigation would have been of great advantage to all parties concerned. I think it was wanted by a large number of people in Canada and that it would have established the truth in these matters where there are such wide differences of opinion.

In that connection before proceeding I want to refer to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate whom I had the dubious pleasure of witnessing on "Press Conference" last night and his vigorous defence of the loss of freedom of choice of the Newfoundland people and their rights and his, I must say, amazing performance in which he was able to reconcile opposites and make national Liberal policy and provincial Liberal policy appear as one. The hon. member said this, and I wish he were in the chamber because I do not like talking about members when they are absent. These are the words used by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate on "Press Conference" last night when being interviewed by the press men. He said in part:

> I talked to Mr. Knowles about this at the press gallery dinner. I don't think it was a private conversation.

As a matter of fact, I made inquiry of Mr. Knowles and he tells me that it was a private conversation. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate went on to say this:

> I asked Mr. Knowles why it was that the I.W.A. had jumped all the way from British Columbia to Newfoundland. He said that was a difficult question and he didn't try to answer it.

My point is this, Mr. Chairman. I think it is somewhat unethical to quote from a private conversation on a press conference in this country, and particularly a private conversation at a press gallery dinner which even the press itself treats as being so confidential that never a line appears in the papers about it. I am rather surprised at the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate doing that. I am sure that the members of the committee generally will consider his remarks to be somewhat unethical. If we were all to go on "Press Conference"—

The Chairman: Order. I must with regret tell the hon. member for Kootenay West that his present remarks are quite out of order. If I heard them correctly, he is at present criticizing the reference which was made at a press conference to a private conversation and his remarks are directed mostly to the question of the ethics to be observed under certain circumstances. This matter has no reference to the item under discussion. I must therefore tell him that I must rule these remarks out of order.

Mr. Herridge: Thank you for your ruling, Mr. Chairman.

An hon. Member: They got on the record.

Mr. Herridge: I shall have to complete my remarks on a question of privilege later. But in any event I was extremely sorry to observe his course of action because I do not think it was quite up to the hon. member's usual standard. Now I do not know quite where I am at.

An hon. Member: You are in the woods.

Mr. Herridge: Anyway, we in this group urge the members of the government to give reconsideration to their decision with respect to this request for an inquiry into the whole situation in Newfoundland. It is not too late for this matter to be reconsidered. We feel that a great deal of good could be done by establishing the truth in this situation.

I do not know whether or not I am going to be out of order again, but I must say that when I was listening to the hon. gentlemen in the official opposition on a number of occasions asking questions of the Prime Minister on the matter I thought to myself, "Whatever has happened to the Liberal party? It is a different party from what it was when I belonged to it". I knew an old gentleman in my district who was president of the district Liberal association. In order to show the deterioration, I just want to tell of an incident.

The Chairman: Order. I know that the remarks of the hon. member are most entertaining but once again I must tell him that they have little reference to the item under discussion. I must therefore once again, and with regret, rule his remarks out of order.

Mr. Herridge: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I shall be obliged to deal with that incident of the supplementary estimates on the recommendation of the Minister of Finance. I now get on to the second question. The C.C.F. believes that the government of Canada should disallow this unfortunate legislation that was recently passed in Newfoundland. There is no question about the authority of the government in that respect in support of that proposal.

Mr. Chairman, I notice you are repeatedly turning and looking at me, but I am eliminating some of my notes from time to time. Therefore it is most difficult for me to retain a normal continuity of argument. I see that the hon. member for Essex East is looking at me, and I am going to quote from a law book, the Canada Supreme Court Reports for 1938, with respect to the power of disallowance. On page 72 I find a reference is made with respect to this question of disallowance. There are four questions to be answered. The first question is:

> Is the power of disallowance of provincial legislation, vested in the governor general in council by section 90 of the British North America Act, 1867, still a subsisting power?

The decision of the supreme court, which is found on page 80, is:

> Question 1. Yes. The power of disallowance is and remains in full vigour.

The second question is:

> If the answer to question 1 be in the affirmative, is the exercise of the said power of disallowance by the governor general in council subject to any limitations or restrictions and, if so, what are the nature and effect of such limitations or restrictions?

The answer to the second question is:

> Question 2. The power of disallowance by the governor general in council is subject to no limitation or restriction whatsoever, save that it has to be exercised within the period of one year after receipt of the Act by the governor general;

Question 3 is:

> Is the power of reservation for the signification of the pleasure of the governor general of bills passed by the legislative assembly or legislative authority of a province vested in the lieutenant governor by section 90 of the British North America Act, 1867, still a subsisting power?

Then the answer in the judgment is:

> Question 3. Yes. The power of reservation is and remains in full vigour.

Then question 4, which is on page 73, of the report, is:

> If the answer to question 3 be in the affirmative, is the exercise of the said power of reservation by the lieutenant governor subject to any limitations or restrictions, and if so, what are the nature and effect of such limitations or restrictions?

Then the answer is to be found on page 80:

> Question 4. The exercise of the power of reservation by the lieutenant governor is subject to no limitation or restriction whatsoever, save that the lieutenant governor is, under the terms of section 90 of the British North America Act, required to exercise the power "according to his discretion but subject to the provisions of the said act and to the governor general's instructions."

Mr. Chairman, that is placed on the record for the information of people who are very interested in this question.

Now I want to deal for a moment or two with the Prime Minister's attitude toward the question of the right of association. We have all heard the Prime Minister speak on that subject in the house over a period of years, either when he introduced his resolution urging the bill of rights and fundamental freedoms or when he was supporting a similar resolution introduced by the former member for Rosetown-Biggar. I find in that connection on page 2857 of Hansard for April 12, 1948 that the Prime Minister had this to say when he was then a member of the opposition. On this important question he said:

> If a municipal authority has the right by licensing, by imposing a licence fee, to deny the privilege of practising one's religion it then can do indirectly what it cannot do directly. I suggest to the Prime Minister as the culminating act of his career that he give to Canadians everywhere the assurance of full rights of equality in Canadian citizenship which was placed on the statute book by his government, by amending the Supreme Court Act to give the individual the right to the preservation and maintenance of his freedoms against provincial intrusion wherever it occurs.

Then again on page 3153 of Hansard for May 16, 1947, the Prime Minister had this to say in a similar debate:

> We have political rights; what about the individual rights? After all, denying the individual his rights denies freedom. Our British heritage gave us our national freedoms. Our individual freedoms are maintainable only at the caprice of the government of the day. If we acknowledge the right of a government to declare the non-existence of these freedoms, while at the same time the great charters proclaim their existence, we deny those freedoms unless we permit the aggrieved individual recourse to the courts.

Then again at page 3158 on May 16, 1947, in the same debate the Prime Minister had this to say:

A declaration of a Bill of Rights in this country would be a positive declaration on the part of men and women of all political faiths in their belief in civil liberties. Whether the federal authority has the power or not to pass legislation respecting civil liberties, its passage would strengthen the hand of the Minister of Justice in the matter of the disallowance of any statute which would deny freedom anywhere in our country.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we all know the very strong stand which the Prime Minister has taken throughout the years with respect to fundamental rights and human freedoms and the protection of the individual in this country. And we are all quite certain that that is his opinion today. That is why we are making this appeal to him with respect to this legislation recently passed by the legislative assembly of Newfoundland. As a result of the passage of this legislation the Canadian Labour Congress has made representations to the government of Canada, and on March 10, 1959 senior officials of the Canadian Labour Congress presented the petition of the congress to the governor general in council for disallowance of the Newfoundland trade union (emergency provisions) act, 1959. This petition mentions at great length—

The Chairman: Order. I must regret interrupting the hon. member again. I have listened to the text which he read from the law book he referred to; I have also listened to his comments on the Prime Minister's remarks on civil and human rights. In connection with the latter part I must inform the hon. member that there will be a debate on this bill of rights and I do not think that this is the proper time to discuss that particular item. Furthermore, in connection with the allowance or disallowance by this house of the measures taken by provincial legislatures, I must advise the house that the disallowance of provincial laws is not one of the functions of the dominion parliament. This is clearly expressed in Beauchesne, fourth edition, page 135, item 161, which reads as follows:

Disallowance of provincial laws is not one of the functions of the dominion parliament. The fact that this subject is dealt with in section 90 of the British North America Act and not in section 91 shows clearly that the legislator did not intend to include it with the residue of powers vested in the dominion parliament. The only authority that can disallow provincial laws is the governor in council. As the governor in council is responsible to parliament, the House of Commons may criticize the action taken by the cabinet in cases of proposed disallowances, but a member cannot raise a debate on a provincial act on the motion to go into supply.

Since the only power enjoyed by our House of Commons in matters of disallowance is to criticize the action of the dominion government after it has either disallowed or refused to disallow a provincial act, it follows that the house must await government action before taking the matter up. If the house considered the act before the expiration of the one-year period during which council must give its decision, it would exceed its own jurisdiction.

When the year within which disallowance may take place has expired, the government's action or inaction may be discussed in the House of Commons. The practice usually followed has been to wait until the question of disallowance has been decided upon by the government and then to move for the production of papers relating thereto.

The adoption of a resolution calling upon the government to disallow a provincial act would be an encroachment by the House of Commons on the powers of the Legislative Assemblies as set forth in section 92 of the British North America Act. Such a resolution was moved in the Canadian House of Commons on the 15th of May, 1873, but it was severely criticized and never accepted as a precedent.

Lefroy, "Canada's Federal System", says, page 32: "Moreover the Dominion House of Commons cannot constitutionally interfere with the operation of provincial acts by passing resolutions urging their disallowance by the Governor-General." And Lefroy quotes Lord Kimberley's dispatch of June 30, 1873, saying that: "If such a resolution were allowed to have effect, it would amount to a virtual repeal of the section of the British North America Act, 1867, which gives the exclusive right of legislating on these matters to the provincial legislatures."

Consequently, the Chair must rule that a debate on this question on disallowing actions taken by a provincial legislature is out of order and cannot be permitted.

Mr. Herridge: I accept your ruling, Mr. Chairman, and in conclusion I will simply say this: that had I been permitted, according to the rules, I would have asked the government on behalf of this group to disallow this most unfortunate legislation in order to protect the rights of the Canadian people.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, since you have permitted the hon. member for Kootenay West to put on record in Hansard certain statements concerning recent legislation in Newfoundland I hope you will accord me the same privilege so that I may correct the impressions he gave to this committee in the course of his argument that the legislation should be disallowed.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Order.

Mr. Carter: I am asking for the same privilege as was accorded to the hon. member for Kootenay West.

The Chairman: It has just been ruled that all debate on this particular matter of the allowance or disallowance of a decision taken by another legislative assembly is out of order. Consequently, I cannot permit the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo to continue his remarks on this subject.

Mr. Carter: On a point of order. I think Your Honour has misunderstood the position. I have no intention of debating the question of disallowance. I merely wanted to correct certain wrong impressions which you permitted the hon. member for Kootenay West to put on record in Hansard.

The Chairman: Provided the hon. member confines himself within the regulations governing our procedures and the ruling which has just been made, he may continue his remarks.

Mr. Carter: I realize that all this is out of order, but since the hon. member for Kootenay West has been out of order and placing statements on record in Hansard ever since I entered this chamber, I think I should be given the right to say one word.

The Chairman: It is quite impossible for the Chair to rule an hon. member out of order until he has made a statement which puts him out of order. It is quite true that the statements made by the hon. member for Kootenay West were reported in Hansard, but a ruling was made, and the fact that he was ruled out of order does not entitle any other hon. member of this house to make a statement which would be out of order, especially if he advises the committee in advance that his statement will be out of order. I regret that I cannot permit the hon. member to make such a statement.

Mr. Carter: I have not made any statement yet. I hope you will permit me to make one. What I was going to say was that the hon. member for Kootenay West placed on record certain statements which implied that the legislation to which he referred, and which has recently been passed in Newfoundland, took away certain rights from the citizens. I want to tell the committee that that is not the case. That legislation did not take away the rights of any citizen of Newfoundland or of Canada. It merely took away from a union the right to bargain and that, as was ably pointed out last night on television, was not a right but a monopoly.

The Chairman: I must tell the hon. member that he is at present referring to a matter which comes under the jurisdiction of another legislature and that it is not permissible for him to discuss matters which concern one of the provinces. With regret I must therefore tell him that he is out of order.

[Mr. Carter.]

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, I think you will be satisfied if I begin by saying that I do not intend to follow the pattern traced by the hon. member for Kootenay West. Neither do I wish to delay the committee for very long before accepting this motion for interim supply.

May I, however, express regret that members of the civil service and especially those in the lower income brackets have not been looked after better during the past year. Many demands have been made on their behalf for increases in salary. This matter has come before the cabinet for consideration month after month, but a decision has always been delayed and nothing has been done. Meanwhile, salaries all over the country have been increased because the cost of living has increased. Employees of the government are now placed in a worse position than that of any other Canadians working at the present time. We know that post office employees all over Canada have protested. They have protested in Montreal, in Toronto and in Winnipeg and they intend to protest in Ottawa next Sunday. They have a right to ask for higher pay. There are people working for the government of Canada who are earning as little as $2,300, $2,500 and $2,800 a year. There are many people earning that latter figure. This means a wage of $40 or $50 or $56 a week. When one deducts income tax and other charges, one finds that the take-home pay is, in certain cases, as little as $40 a week. For a man who is married and who has children, it is almost impossible to live on such a salary.

The recession we are encountering today cannot be compared with the recession of the thirties. When that recession was in progress, though it is true there was an increase in unemployment, there was a decrease in the cost of living. The civil servants at that time did not ask for an increase because the cost of living was so low that they were able to take advantage of the situation. But at the present time, even though there has been an increase in unemployment there has also been an increase in the cost of living, and a very marked increase, too. That is why we say that the employees in the civil service are today, because of this rise in prices, in a worse position than that of any other employees.

Today it has become almost impossible for a civil servant to live on the same level as the rest of the comparable working force in Canada. That is one of the reasons why the wives of civil servants have to leave their children in the care of others and take employment to fill the gap and supplement the low income received by their husbands. The only thing this body seeks at this time is to have the government take a responsible position toward the people who receive salaries as low as $2,500 or $3,500 a year. It is practically impossible to live on these wages. If you examine the records you will see that a great majority of civil servants receive less than $3,000 a year.

I feel the time has come for the government to take action in this regard. Our budgets are constantly increasing and are greater than ever before in our history but nothing is being done to help those who are most in need, the civil servants of Canada. I hope the government will stop spending in every direction without first taking care of greater and more immediate needs.

When the post of the chairman of the civil service commission was vacated another should have been appointed. I suspect the government did not take action in this regard because it did not want to revive the question of civil service salaries. If it were to meet the requests of the civil servants we would have an even larger deficit than we are expecting this year. Last year the minister said our deficit would not be more than $700 million. If the deficit does not increase it is because the government has failed to take care of those Canadians who are in need. I urge the government to curtail expending money in every field until it has done a little more for the Canadian civil servants.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words on the interim supply bill and refer particularly to the high price we must pay in this country for money that is borrowed and incidentally the high prices our municipalities and provinces must pay as a result of our federal high interest rates.

To give some background of the thinking of the Minister of Finance I should like to refer to some statements he has made since coming into office. With respect to dominion-provincial relations he indicated that there would be a meeting at which no doubt the question of interest rates would be discussed. When speaking on November 26, 1957 at a press conference he said there would be such a meeting next year and that they would deal with this and other problems. He also said that at that time interest rates were at a higher level than they had been for a generation.

At a Conservative nomination meeting held on February 23, 1958 the minister said the needs of the municipalities were ignored by the former government and with respect to the action taken by his government he said:

> We have eased the burdens of the municipal governments by bringing about easier credit and lower interest rates—

On February 28, 1958 on a broadcast over the trans-Canada network the minister said:

> What has been accomplished must be measured in the light of the doubtful legacy bequeathed to us by the former Liberal government when we took office on June 21. These are some of the things we inherited from the Liberals—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): What was that date?

Mr. McMillan: February 28, 1958. Listing the shortcomings of the previous administration the minister said:

> Interest rates are at the highest point in a generation.
> The needs of the municipalities were ignored by the federal government.

In a speech made by the minister in Quebec he said:

> Relations between the federal and provincial governments were marked by discord and irritation, with the federal government centralizing power and taxation at Ottawa.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That was under the former government, of course.

Mr. McMillan: On the basis of all this one might have inferred as almost everybody did that the provinces and municipalities of Canada would get cheaper money. If anyone thinks we have cheaper money I would invite him to look at the money market. Last September 4½ per cent long term bonds were sold at par in Toronto. If you look at the Toronto Globe and Mail of today's date you will see there is a $92.50 bid which represents a yield of practically 5 per cent on your money. With Canadian bonds returning 5 per cent or more the differential between federal and provincial bonds has narrowed. This suggests to me that people have more confidence in the financial affairs of our provinces than of the federal government and provincial bonds in many cases are selling better than Canadian bonds.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No.

Mr. McMillan: I have in my hand the report of the Royal Bank of Canada dated March 2, from which I shall read some quotations concerning provincial bonds. Alberta bonds maturing in 1963 carry a price of $93.50 and yield 4.43 per cent. New Brunswick bonds maturing in 1961 carry a price of $96.25 and yield 4.50 per cent. Ontario bonds maturing in 1965 carry a price of $90.50 and yield 4.65 per cent. Ontario bonds maturing in 1968 yield 4.73 per cent and those maturing in 1965 yield 4.54 per cent.

Even these figures do not tell the whole story. If you examine the bonds of hydro-electric power commission of Ontario you will observe that those maturing in 1967 yield 4.77 per cent and sell at $96.50. Certainly many of our dominion bonds must give a better yield than that.

Many of the municipalities cannot borrow money and those that can pay between 5½ and 6 per cent in interest. We are reaching the point where the Minister of Finance will have to pay nearly as much for his money as do some of our towns and villages.

The last federal bonds that were sold had attached income tax gimmicks to which reference was made by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River. He referred to the last issue of 2¾ per cent bonds selling at a discount of $97.90 and yielding 4.76 per cent. These bonds will go up roughly $21 per thousand and that amount will be tax free. Suppose the dominion government sold bonds at 97, a discount of $3, with interest at 3 per cent. On the appreciation amounting to $30 there would be no income tax while there would be income tax on the $30 representing interest. Therefore a big corporation paying a 50 per cent income tax rate would pay tax of $15 out of income amounting to $60 and have $45 left.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): May I ask my hon. friend a question? Does he suggest it is something new in the experience of federal government financing that bonds should be issued to sell at prices less than par? May I ask him if he is aware of these instances on the part of the previous government? Here are just a few I have picked out at random since the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River spoke this afternoon. I will give the date of issue now so that my hon. friend can identify them.

Mr. McMillan: Tell me the length of term.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Here are the examples: July 1, 1938, a 3¼ per cent bond put on the market by the former government at 98.5; June 15, 1950, a 2¾ per cent bond put on the market at 99.5.

Mr. Pearson: What term?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The term does not matter for this purpose.

Mr. McMillan: The term does matter.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I can give my friend that, if he needs the information, but I am now giving the date of issue and the fact of a discount on the price at the time of issue. The third instance was June 1, 1954, a 3¼ per cent bond put out at 99; January 15, 1953, a 3¾ per cent bond issued by the former government at a price of not less than 97 to the Bank of Canada; September 15, 1956, a 3¾ per cent bond issued at 97. May I also remind the hon. member that the former government put out an issue of perpetuals on September 15, 1936 at a price on the market of 96.5. I hope the hon. member does not pretend that it is anything new to put out bonds at a discount.

Mr. McMillan: I do not pretend that it is anything new but the bonds I am discussing only have a term of one year. Certainly I have never heard tell of dominion bonds being put out at a discount for just for one year.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You have something to learn.

Mr. McMillan: Certainly if a bond is put out at 97 to mature in one year the appreciation will be $30 per thousand over that one year but if it is put out at 97 to mature in 5 years the appreciation will only be one-fifth or $6 per year. I think the minister has missed that point. Certainly the particular bonds I was discussing mature in 13 months or a little over a year. I was giving an example. Suppose the government put out a bond at 97 to yield 3 per cent. As far as big corporations are concerned, that would be equivalent to being paid 9 per cent on a bond sold at par. But the government did not do that. They did however put out an issue at 97.90 to bear 2¾ per cent to come due in 13 months and, as the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River said, that comes out to 6.6 per cent from the point of view of the net result to the corporation and certainly the net result to the treasury of Canada.

I should like to ask the Minister of Finance how he can expect the ordinary people of Canada, the small people of Canada, to buy the bonds that he wants them to buy. They have more money in the bank now than they ever had but how can he expect them to buy bonds when he treats big corporations in this way? We do know that these bonds were issued in units as high as $1 million and certainly they were not readily available to the ordinary people of Canada.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): What bond is my hon. friend speaking of when he refers to $1 million?

Mr. McMillan: The last ones were advertised in units as high as $1 million.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): How ridiculous can you become?

Mr. McMillan: They were. I saw it myself. I have not got the information here but I can produce it for the minister.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Those bonds were open to anybody.

Mr. McMillan: It seems to me that when the bonds were sold within 15 minutes they were not readily available to the public. I know people who tried to get them through their banks because they saw it was a good thing and they could not do so.

I want to leave the bond issue for a minute and refer to the Bank of Canada. In my opinion there is one fundamental weakness in the Bank of Canada. Members of the judiciary are appointed by the different parties when in power and I think they can be said to be above reproach. However, the members of the board of directors of the Bank of Canada might not always be held to be as above reproach as they should be. Just the other day, for instance, we heard about one director contributing large sums of money toward the election of different members in Vancouver.

Mr. Fisher: Conservative members.

Mr. McMillan: That is right. I recall the public discussion a year or so ago between the Minister of Finance and the governor of the Bank of Canada concerning the tight money policy. In fact, it got in the press. I am not accusing any member of the board of directors of the Bank of Canada of not acting in the best interests of Canada but the implication is there that sometimes they may act in a certain way for political reasons. If a man is contributing $20,000 or $25,000 of his own money to a political party, what assurance do we have that the people of Canada will get the best action from him as a director of the Bank of Canada? Will he always have the good of Canada at heart?

If we look at the list of directors of the Bank of Canada we see that more than one is a recent political appointment. Our fiscal policy at the present time is not good. We have the highest bank deposits we have ever had in our history. Yet the Minister of Finance cannot get the people to buy his bonds.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is not true. The last issue was oversubscribed.

Mr. McMillan: He tells us that he requires money. If so, why are there so many bonds held by the banks? I call on the Minister of Finance and the government to have members on the board of directors of the Bank of Canada who have no political axe to grind and who will at all times give their best consideration to the people of Canada and not make decisions based on political reasons.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I was delighted to hear the remarks of the hon. member for Welland about political appointments and their possible relationship to and effect upon policy. I simply want to mention in passing that I was delighted to hear his remarks. It would seem that our lone stand with regard to this particular matter has found one convert at least in the party with respect to which I had the feeling up to this time that they did not agree with our point of view. I am sorry that I did not hear the remark of the hon. member for Halifax and I feel that perhaps he did not want it on the record.

Mr. McCleave: I said that the C.C.F. is sucking in more Liberals every day.

Mr. Fisher: The remarks I want to make have to do with the promise made last year by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources with regard to a review of the taxation policy of the government as it affects the forest industry and particularly the pulp and paper industry. We have already heard today something directly about the pulp and paper industry in so far as it affects Newfoundland. Of course, the Anglo-Newfoundland Development Company Limited has an interest up in northwestern Ontario, as the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River will know. This company happens to hold a concession, at least a lease for a period of time while it makes up its mind whether or not it will establish a pulp and paper mill at the town of Sioux Lookout.

I know the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate already has given wide publicity to the fact that another pulp and paper company, Crown Zellerbach, has decided not to go ahead with developments in Newfoundland. The general picture in the pulp and paper industry at the present time is that of a tendency to pull in horns in so far as further capital expansion is concerned. There is a general indication, if one reads the financial pages, that the market for newsprint especially but also other forms of paper products such as kraft, wrapping and fine papers, is at least saturated.

I just point out in passing that the difficulties of the pulp and paper industry have not been reflected so far in dividends or in profits to any marked degree. I see one hon. member on the other side look up with a quizzical expression, and I imagine he follows this particular industry pretty closely. I believe he will agree with my remarks here so far, that none of these pulp and paper companies seem to be going deeply in the hole. However, there is this factor, and this is from the point of view of silviculture and forest management, that whenever any suggestions are made that these companies should be held to the type of responsibilities related to forest management and silviculture they always say that the governments are taking such a bite from them they just cannot afford to accept these particular responsibilities.

One of the consequences of this is that a bill, rather famous in Ontario, known as Bill 89, has never been implemented to force these particular companies who hold timber limits to carry out regeneration policies. You are probably asking what this has to do with the federal government, and I want to come to that. Whenever pulp and paper companies make these representations they go to the premier of Ontario, and the premier nearly always says that, of course, the difficulty really does lay in Ottawa. He has said this often enough now for the pulp and paper companies to believe they are being overtaxed by Ottawa and, as a consequence, are not in a position to carry out responsibilities relating to forestry and silviculture. As a consequence of this position being reiterated at meetings of the pulp and paper research institute, the Canadian pulp and paper association and the Canadian institute of forestry, the appeal is made then to the federal government on this basis: You take the lion's share of taxation out of this industry; it is the most important industry in the country, and you bear a very large responsibility in so far as putting some of that money back into the forest regions is concerned in order to encourage regeneration and reproduction, natural or artificial, of the species.

The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources recognized at least the possibility that these arguments might contain some truth, and last year during a committee meeting he gave a promise that he would have a report prepared on this particular aspect. I understand he has indicated a report was prepared. He received a memorandum from his officials who went into the subject, and this memorandum was passed around amongst the ministers and officials of other departments, we presume the Minister of Finance and his deputy minister. It seemed odd to me at the time, and this is where I made a misinterpretation, that if the minister of northern affairs gave the assurance there was going to be a study by government officials on taxation as it affected the pulp and paper industry, then surely the department that would be most interested would be the minister who is with us today, the Minister of Finance.

However, it turns out his department may have given some continuing study to the subject, but the department played no fundamental part in the matter. This is, to me, a serious fault. I understand that the minister of northern affairs is not satisfied with the report he got. He has referred it back and is going to attempt to get another report. I should like to know what the Minister of Finance plans to do in this particular field. If the minister of northern affairs recognized the need for such a study, why does not the Minister of Finance? One of the difficulties that was discussed a short time ago with reference to the pulp and paper industry in Newfoundland is that the pulp and paper companies there play a very large part in the economy of that province, and that they are not doing too well because of high wood costs. We assume that one of the other large cost items would be high taxation costs.

Actually, the situation in Newfoundland, as compared with the situation in northwestern Ontario, is almost ridiculously different in terms of costs, wood costs and transportation costs. In our part of the country, where you have many more pulpmills than you have in Newfoundland, these costs are much higher than they are in Newfoundland, but our mills do not put on such a poor mouth as these particular mills in Newfoundland do. We have assumed that since all these industries and corporations are crying the same thing, that is the difficulty in competing in world markets for newsprint and paper, they have a point which should be considered by the government of Canada and especially by the Minister of Finance.

One of the things that has intrigued me about this is the unpopularity of the Minister of Finance in these particular circles. I have discovered he is certainly no great white hero to this particular industry. They feel that this particular government, judging by the comments they made in annual reports and as quoted in the newspapers, has taken a very short term view. You may take it, Mr. Chairman, that I am speaking in the interests of these pulp and paper companies. Heaven forbid that I should be identified completely with the Anglo-Newfoundland Development Company, the Bowater corporation or any of these other British colonial corporations. We do feel, however, that it is essential we have this kind of taxation study so that we will get a realistic idea of whether or not these corporations can afford to carry out proper forestry policies. This is coming at it from a different point of view completely. It is the point of view that we have renewable resources in our forests, the majority of them are crown lands, and that some of the revenue that comes from these crown lands must go back to see that they continue at a certain standard.

I feel the minister should give some serious undertaking that such a study will be commenced. The problem is definitely complicated by the fact that the provincial governments involved all seem to have the same view—this of course stems from something that has been repeated ad nauseam in connection with all types of provincial-federal relations—that the federal government takes an inordinate share of the taxation. If this is so, there is no other industry to which this will apply more than to the pulp and paper industry because it is the big money earner for the federal government in terms of tax revenue. For all these reasons, therefore, Mr. Chairman, I want to completely remove myself from any identification of interest with the Anglo-Newfoundland Development Company Limited or the Bowater corporation, but I think we should have this year a study by the officials, not of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources but of the ministry of finance, of this whole question of taxation of the pulp and paper industry, and whether it does indeed put a crushing burden upon these corporations to the extent that they cannot carry out responsibilities in the field of forest management and silvaculture which legislation in almost all the provinces imposes but which is not now really implemented.

WAYS AND MEANS

INTERIM SUPPLY

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved:

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to Her Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1960, the sum of $616,654,878.69 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada as set forth in the resolution concurred in this day in the committee of supply.

Motion agreed to, and the house went into committee, Mr. Rea in the chair.

Mr. Benidickson: With respect to the dozen items where more than one-sixth is being asked for, would the minister just indicate the reasons therefor?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the proper place to have asked that question, of course, was in the committee of supply rather than the committee of ways and means. The reasons, I think, are quite obvious if anyone will take the trouble to look at the items. The first is item 209 where an additional five-twelfths is being asked for in addition to the standard two-twelfths. This item is for purchases of air photography and the expenses of the interdepartmental committee on air surveys. There are contracts out for air photographs of the Arctic archipelago and these include provision for advance payments amounting to over one-half of this vote. I can enlarge on that if any hon. member is interested.

Then item 38 is an item of which we are asking for an additional one-third in addition to the one-sixth. This item is for grants for research and investigations with respect to atomic energy. One-half of the amount of this vote is required for the first two months of the fiscal year for research projects carried out at the universities.

The next three items, namely items 175, 182 and 183 pertain to legislation, votes for the Senate and the House of Commons. Of course the rate of expenditure is governed by the session rather than by a uniform basis from month to month.

The next item is No. 358, an item in the Department of Public Works. This is an item to provide balances required to complete any projects undertaken in previous fiscal years and for which no specific provision is made in the fiscal year 1959-60. By its nature this vote is subject to heavy expenditures in the early part of the fiscal year, as final payments are made on projects completed or nearly completed in the previous fiscal year. Expenditures to May 31 are expected to reach $250,000.

The next item is No. 64 in the Indian affairs branch of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. The additional one-twelfth, in addition to the one-sixth, is required to provide for teachers' salaries and tuition fees for Indian pupils because the schools are operated on a ten-month basis rather than a twelve-month basis and expenditures arise in that proportion rather than on a monthly basis.

The next item is No. 210, an item respecting the polar continental shelf project. This is a project which will end in June or July. Consequently there is a concentration of expenditures in the first part of the fiscal year.

As to items 259, 384 and 451, I think it is quite obvious what the reasons are. In the case of item No. 259, the additional one-twelfth is asked for because the bulk of this vote is for salaries. April and May are the peak work load months, during which seasonal help is required to process tax returns.

In the case of item No. 384, an item for the standards branch of the Department of Trade and Commerce, expenditures under this item are heavier in the spring and summer months because the inspectors cannot travel in the rural areas in the winter.

In the case of item 451 under the Department of Veterans Affairs treatment services, may I point out that this vote provides for net treatment expenditure after recoveries from outside sources. The introduction of provincial health insurance programs will increase substantially the proportion of gross expenditures which are met from recoveries. Since there is a lag between expenditures and recoveries, net expenditures in the early months of the year exceed one-twelfth of the net vote in each month.

In the case of item 454, the prosthetic services branch, here again, as with treatment services, there is a lag between expenditures and recoveries in this vote in the early months of the year.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, if the committee would permit me to do so, I should like to speak on a point of order. At the earlier stage a question was raised as to the right of members to discuss a matter such as that which was introduced by the hon. member for Kootenay West. In the interim I have had an opportunity of looking at the debate which took place at a similar place in the calendar during the session of 1957. I refer to March 29.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, surely we are in a different committee now. My hon. friend is not in order in raising this point in committee of ways and means on something which happened earlier in committee of supply, and which was settled by a ruling of the Chair.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member has raised a point of order. Until the Chair hears what the point of order is, I do not think the chair should rule on the matter.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I will endeavour to be brief. The minister endeavoured to pursuade the other committee that it was not traditional or was not proper at that stage to discuss such a matter as that which was raised by the hon. member for Kootenay West. I do not want to make prolonged remarks in connection with this item. However, I find that the Minister of Finance on March 29, of 1957, at the same stage of the session, on a matter of a request for one-twelfth of supply—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I now understand the hon. member's point of order. It refers to another committee. I think that the hon. member is out of order.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I would say that the same procedure would apply at this stage. That is why I was going to say that the Minister of Finance used 13 columns of Hansard in order to speak about the C.B.C. at that stage of the debate.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member must have known perfectly well that he was out of order before he ever raised that point. However, now that he has raised the matter may I be permitted to point out that the occasion to which he refers was not one in which the right of members to raise points later on the items in the estimates could be carried out because that was a situation where we were at the end of the session. The situation was entirely different. I think my hon. friend is well aware of that fact.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is fair just to let the argument rest there. May I say very briefly that we were not at the end of the session. As I said at the beginning of my remarks, we were in March, prior to the Easter recess, a situation exactly analogous to that in which we are today. On that occasion the minister used 13 columns of Hansard himself in order to speak about a particular item that he felt had to be brought forward at that time.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member knows that every word he has uttered is out of order.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill C-35, an act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the fiscal year ending March 31, 1960.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first and second times and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Rea in the chair.

Clauses 1 to 3 agreed to.

On clause 4.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, with regard to clause 4, I should know this but I do not. What is the section of the standard statutes that authorizes this? The hon. minister made reference to it. He said it was a standard practice.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I said the bill was in standard form. This bill simply follows the form that was passed on several occasions in the last session.

Bill reported.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved the third reading of the bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): When shall the bill be read a third time?

Mr. Benidickson: Next sitting of the house.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I do not recall any previous occasion on which unanimous consent was withheld on third reading of an interim supply bill. It has to go to the other house and the royal assent is required before the Easter recess.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): With unanimous consent.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Rea in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Special—

723. Estimated amount required to recoup the agricultural commodities stabilization account for the net operating loss of the agricultural stabilization board during the fiscal year 1958-59, $15,017,182.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, on item 723 I wonder if the Minister of Finance would indicate to the house why there seems to be quite a downward revision of this firm indication of requirement to the end of March in relation to the indication which was given not long ago by the Minister of Agriculture when he was speaking in the throne debate on, I think, January 23? He estimated at that time that the requirement would be somewhat larger than this. I think it was nearly $19 million. I wonder if the hon. minister would give us full details as to the distribution under the statute for the item required, and could he give any indication why within these recent weeks he has determined that this substantial amount less than indicated before is required?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the item 723 is the estimated amount required to recoup the agricultural commodities stabilization account to cover the net operating cost of the agricultural stabilization board during the fiscal year which will close on March 31. As to programs completed in 1958-59, the current fiscal year, the net cost has been calculated with respect to all commodities that have fallen within the scope of the activities of the agricultural stabilization board. These amounts have been worked out and it is possible at this stage of the fiscal year to be more precise than it was possible to be earlier.

Mr. Benidickson: Could the minister give the breakdown of the very precise—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): These figures have been precisely calculated now.

Mr. Benidickson: Would my hon. friend give the breakdown? The Minister of Agriculture was equally precise, because he did not give a round figure to the house at that time, he gave a very specific figure on January 23. He referred to the item of $18,741,000, and I wonder if the Minister of Finance would read out to the committee the details both of the estimate as at that time, according to the products which were involved, and the distribution, according to the product, of the $15,017,182 which is referred to now?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, I point out that this amount is provided for programs completed in 1958-59, the net cost of which has not already been included in previous recoupment amounts. These are the amounts in detail. In 1957, New Brunswick potatoes, $244,450.

Mr. Benidickson: Are we now on the $15 million item?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes.

Mr. Benidickson: Is my hon. friend prepared also to give the relationship to the $18 million item?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This is the precise figure which is being asked for at the end of the year when we are in a position to calculate the amount with much greater precision than possible at an earlier stage of the year. This now becomes a matter of recoupment of sums which have already been provided. I gave the first item, 1957 New Brunswick potatoes, $244,450; 1957, Prince Edward Island potatoes, $122,932; 1957 British Columbia apples, $768,415; 1958 asparagus, $105,999; 1956 butter, $30,806. The total of those five items is $1,272,602.

Next we have the estimates of other items of net cost for programs not completed but which will probably be completed by March 31 next, and they are as follows:

1958 wool	$1,500,000
1957 butter

Here we have a profit which will reduce the net amount required by $253,575.

1958 cheese	$ 828,860
1957 dry skimmed milk	3,909,493
1957 shell eggs	1,853,741
1958 shell eggs	462,113
1957-58 fowl	562,772
1958 lamb	280,252
Total	$9,143,656

The next group consists of items where programs will still be in progress on March 31, 1959. Net cost has been estimated to March 31 as follows:

1958 butter	$ 301,367
1958 dry skimmed milk	2,866,096
1959 shell eggs	750,000
1958-59 hogs	600,713
1958 B.C. tomatoes	77,671
1958 B.C. raspberries	5,077
Total	$4,600,924

Mr. Benidickson: Has the minister any figures with reference to the present stocks of commodities which are being supported?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Which particular ones does the hon. gentleman mean? Does he wish me to give the whole list?

Mr. Benidickson: No. I should be glad if the minister would table that statement. Has he got the comparative figures for an earlier date, perhaps a year ago?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): In the case of butter, the estimated amount on hand at March 31, 1959 was 25,184,071 pounds; cheese, nil; shell eggs, estimated at March 31, 1959, 3 million dozen; fowl, nil; dry skimmed milk, 65.4 million pounds; lamb, nil; hogs, 33 million pounds; B.C. tomatoes, 2.3 million pounds; B.C. raspberries, nil.

Mr. Benidickson: Can the minister relate that to the figures of a year ago? Are the comparative figures in that reference paper? I know he is not Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I can in some instances. I have not the figure for butter for March 31, 1958, but the figure for 1956-57 was nil. May I supplement that statement in part and correct it in part by giving to the house the information, Mr. Speaker, that at March 31, 1957, the inventory figure of butter was 29,638,010 pounds, and the inventory figure of March 31, 1958, was 25,184,071 pounds. In the case of dry skimmed milk, at March 31, 1958, the figure was 27,719,717 pounds. In the case of shell eggs, at March 31, 1958 the figure was 88,754 cases.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, the minister indicated that there was a profit of $253,000 with relation to this year's operations under the stabilization act, with respect to butter. Does that mean that the support or stabilization scheme with respect to butter during the current year's operations is not expected to bear any loss at all but that on the contrary it will provide a profit to reduce the cost of stabilization payments with respect to other items?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The profit was made as a result of sales of 1957 butter in 1958-59.

Mr. Benidickson: Is it a profit, or is it simply income during the year?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It was a profit.

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

Mr. Benidickson: A net profit on butter for the fiscal year resulting in a surplus of $253,000?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The price advanced from the time of purchase in 1957 to the time of sale in the fiscal year 1958-59.

Item agreed to.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

International Shortwave Broadcasting Service—

724. Maintenance and operation—further amount required, $84,000.

Mr. Fisher: Would the minister explain this item in some detail so that we may be able to understand why this expenditure is necessary. Does it reflect some expansion in the service or the provision, possibly, of new capital equipment?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No. This is an item with respect to the international shortwave broadcasting service. It is not for the general operation of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation at all. Nor does it reflect an increase in the scope of operation of the international shortwave broadcasting service. Actually it was a mistake on the part of the C.B.C. with respect to a billing in the previous year. This really dates back to the previous year; we are simply picking up a delayed billing in this item.

Mr. Fisher: What does the minister mean by "billing"?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): A billing for the service which was rendered. This is a service which the C.B.C. performs for the government; it is no part of their general broadcasting operations but an entirely separate matter. In this case instead of rendering a bill to the government for this service prior to the close of 1957-58 there was an oversight and the bill was rendered in the fiscal year 1958-59. No provision was made for its payment in the 1958-59 estimates.

Mr. Benidickson: I noticed that in the main estimates for 1958-59 it was expected that the cost of this operation would be reduced by $6,405. I think that during meetings of the external affairs committee a great deal of criticism was expressed in the past by members of the party which is now in power with respect to the expenditure under this particular item. I take it that the result of this supplementary estimate is that the overall cost, instead of being less than in the previous year, will be up to the extent of $78,000 or $79,000? Is that the result?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That would not be a true way of describing the operation. I have indicated that this item, or certainly the bulk of it—$72,285—is attributable to a payment which really should have been charged against 1957-58, instead of against 1958-59 and, of course, the appropriation for it lapsed at March 31, 1958. So really the comparison, if the hon. gentleman is looking for a reduction, is much more favourable to 1958-59 operations than the figures he has quoted would indicate.

Mr. Benidickson: Except that the hon. gentleman and his friends were in the administration during 1957-58 for, I think, three-quarters of that period and if they had not seen fit to make the expenditure provided for, admittedly by the previous government, they need not have done so.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

Education—

727. Administration, operation and maintenance—further amount required, $1,183,436.

Mr. Fisher: The minister explained why this substantial amount was required and I would just ask him if he has there the details that would enable one to ask him about specific schools?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This item No. 727 for a sum of $1,183,436 is principally in respect of salaries. There are three elements in the item. The first is salaries, an item of $862,800. As a result of improved recruitment allowances for staff turnover did not materialize and in addition a higher salary range for teachers was approved and came into effect on April 1, 1958.

The second element is the matter of allowances totalling $160,636. The isolated post regulations were changed and as of July 1, 1958 entitled more teachers to allowances and increased the rate of allowances.

The third element is one of $160,000 which represents the final settlement with religious denominations covering 1957 operating costs of government-owned residential schools as authorized by the treasury board.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

A—Department and missions abroad—

729. Canadian representation at international conferences—further amount required, $63,000.

Mr. Fisher: Has this item anything to do with such things as parliamentarians going to NATO conferences?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, Mr. Chairman. That is to be found further along in the estimates under the heading "Legislation", item No. 756.

Item agreed to.

Pensions and other benefits—

733. Pension to Miss Hilda L. Waddell, a former locally engaged employee, at an annual rate of 60,000 Brazilian cruzeiros, the equivalent in Canadian dollars for the balance of the present fiscal year being estimated at, $175.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to probe unduly because I see this item involves an individual. May we have the assurance of the minister that this is a normal and recurring type of obligation on the part of the government and it does not set a precedent of any kind?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, this item relates to a provision made for a locally engaged employee at the Canadian embassy at Rio de Janeiro commencing December 1, 1958. The lady in question was employed as a telephone-receptionist at the embassy at a salary which translated into Canadian dollars, amounted to $864. She was 65 years of age and had completed a little more than nine years of employment with both the Department of External Affairs and the trade commissioner service in Rio de Janeiro. Since there is no pension system for local staffs abroad except in the United States and the United Kingdom it has been the policy of the treasury board to grant pensions on an ad hoc basis to deserving local employees.

It was reported to the board that the lady in question would be entitled upon retirement to a separation gratuity of one month's salary for each completed year of service, or $653 in Canadian currency. Payment of this amount would be in accordance with Brazilian labour law. I can go into more detail but I think that is enough to indicate to my hon. friend the nature of the item.

Mr. Benidickson: I was just doing to indicate to the Minister of Finance that my curiosity arose from the fact that reference was made in the report of the Auditor General for the year ending March 31, 1958 to a practice which he said was contrary to the statutes with respect to paying pensions even, I think, in the United Kingdom and United States to employees of Canada engaged outside of Canada. Has the government some plan of regularizing that practice which was criticized in the report?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, our view is that this is a practice that is properly authorized by statute of this parliament.

Mr. Benidickson: I think there has been some practice which the Auditor General has pointed to but I believe he said it ran directly counter to a specific prohibition in our basic pension statute. I know that this is in effect legislating for a specific item. My question was whether or not the minister had been giving consideration to our practice as criticized by the Auditor General even in the United Kingdom and the United States and whether or not he proposes to bring in some legislation to regularize what was criticized.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Those papers are not here, Mr. Chairman. We can have a look at them another time.

Item agreed to.

Terminable Services—

734. Purchase of flour to be given to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East,—Further amount required and, notwithstanding section 35 of the Financial Administration Act, to authorize payments to be made pursuant to this vote up to the 1st day of April, 1960, $1,500,000.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Chairman, I have been wondering about this item and item No. 741 which is for the purchase of wheat and flour to be given to commonwealth countries in south and southeast Asia. The passing of this item will enable the government to give this assistance in the coming fiscal year which concludes on April 1, 1960. My question is this. Why should we not vote the money for the amounts of wheat delivered in the next fiscal year and only vote at this time what has been delivered in this fiscal year?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the purpose is to enable this flour to be moved as quickly as possible. Some of it is moving before March 31. It is moving as fast as the Minister of Trade and Commerce can arrange for its movement. This particular item of $1,500,000 under item No. 734 was announced in the house by the late secretary of state for external affairs within the last fortnight. The purpose of providing this item now on a non-lapsing basis as of March 31, 1959 is to enable the government to move this wheat as quickly as possible. You cannot just cut off a movement at March 31 midnight. This is the proper, and I think I may say the businesslike way, of making provision of this kind. It comes before parliament. Parliament has full view of the matter. This makes it possible to move this flour as quickly as opportunity is afforded.

Mr. McMillan: This is a large sum and while we do not want to hold up this amount it occurs to me we could between now and March 31 vote for that portion of the flour or wheat that has been sent up to that period. Why should not the major part of this be left over until next year?

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Speaker, would the leader of the house indicate what the program of the house is for tomorrow evening and, if possible, for Friday?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, we shall continue with the supplementary estimates and then take the estimates of the Department of Agriculture.

It being three minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

C.G.S. "STONETOWN"—MEDICAL ATTENTION FOR PERSONNEL

Question No. 165—Mr. Howard:

1. During December of 1957, was a request received from the C.G.S. Stonetown for permission to send any of the officers or crew home for medical attention?

2. If so, with respect to each person for whom such permission was requested: (a) What were the names and rank? (b) What was the nature of the illness? (c) Upon what date and at what time was each such request made? (d) What answer was given, upon what date, on what time and by whom?

3. Did any of the said persons die, and if so, when, where and from what causes?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

1. No.
2. Answered by 1.
3. Answered by 1.

INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT, HALIFAX—HEATING PLANT

Question No. 221—Mr. Morris:

1. Has the Department of Transport called tenders for the construction of a central heating plant at the International Airport, Halifax, Nova Scotia?

2. If so, by what fuel will this building be heated?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

1. Yes.

DOLLARD COUNTY, QUE.—LEVEL CROSSING PROTECTION

Question No. 232—Mr. Rouleau:

Since July 9, 1958, has the Minister of Transport or the board of transport commissioners received representations from Mr. Maurice Cousineau, mayor of St. Laurent, on the island of Montreal, requesting adequate protection at railway level crossings in the county of Dollard?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

No.

FRENCH T.V. STATION, MONCTON, N.B.

Question No. 253—Mr. Michaud:

1. Have plans been made for a french T.V. station at Moncton, New Brunswick?

2. If so, what are the boundaries of (1) zone or contour "A"; (2) zone or contour "B"; (3) zone or contour "C"; (4) what will be the power of this station?

Answer by: Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue):

1. Yes.

Questions

2. (1) (2) (3). The signal intensity pattern of the antenna is not circular and the boundaries of the "A" "B" "C" contours are located as shown in the following table:

Azimuth	Miles to "A"	Miles to "B"	Miles to "C"
0	8.5	21	46
23	8.7	22	47
48	9	22.3	47.3
76	10	25	50
135	11	27	52
180	10	25	50
219	5.1	13.6	37
270	5.6	14.1	38

These radii take into account not only the directional characteristics of the antenna but also the effect of the terrain in each direction.

(4) Video power 1090 watts ERP maximum, 600 watts ERP average. Audio power 588 watts ERP maximum, 324 watts ERP average.

C.B.C. GRANTS IN LIEU OF TAXATION, HALIFAX

Question No. 258—Mr. Morris:

1. Does the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation pay grants to the City of Halifax in lieu of taxation on Canadian Broadcasting Corporation properties?

2. If so, what is the formula used in the payment of such grants and is the formula related to the so-called business tax rate or residential tax rate applied by the city of Halifax to taxpayers?

3. What was the total grant paid by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to the city of Halifax in lieu of taxation on Canadian Broadcasting Corporation properties in (a) 1956; (b) 1957; (c) 1958?

4. What are the individual assessed valuations of Canadian Broadcasting Corporation properties in the city of Halifax?

Answer by: Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue):

1. Yes.

2. The rate of the real estate tax levied in the municipality, minus a deduction for any municipal services not actually provided, is applied to the accepted value of land and buildings owned by the corporation. The business tax rate was used in computing the 1958 grant.

3. (a) $4,696.35, (b) $8,243.60, (c) $21,612.60.

4. The corporation owns only one property in the city of Halifax situated at 70 Bell road. The accepted assessment on this property applicable to the grant for the calendar year 1958 was $445,600. The building was only partially completed when the first assessment was made on which the grant for 1956 was computed.

FEDERAL SUBSIDY, PICTOU-CHARLOTTETOWN-MAGDALEN ISLAND SERVICE

Question No. 263—Mr. Carter:

1. Is the government paying a subsidy in connection with a Pictou-Charlottetown-Magdalen island service?

Questions

2. If so, what is the name and address of the company receiving subsidy?

3. What was the amount of subsidy paid in connection with said services for years 1955-56, 1956-57, 1957-58?

4. Were tenders called, and if so, what are the names and addresses of those submitting tenders, and amounts tendered?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

1. Yes, for a passenger-cargo steamship service.

2. Magdalen Islands Transportation Company Limited, P.O. Box 730, Station 'B', Montreal, Que.

3. 1955-56, $120,000; 1956-57, $120,000; 1957-58, $174,000.

4. No.

POULTRY IMPORT LICENCES

Question No. 275—Mr. Boulanger:

How many poultry, broiler and turkey import licences have been issued since January 1, 1957, and to whom were such licences issued?

Answer by: Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce):

Turkey and fowl were placed under import control on July 17, 1957. Since that date 9 permits have been issued to import 308,249 pounds of turkey broilers, 11 permits to import 621,577 pounds of turkeys (heavier weights) and 61 permits to import 407,942 pounds of turkey parts. Fowl was removed from import control on May 30, 1958. Between July 17, 1957 and May 30, 1958 8 permits were issued to import 239,193 pounds of fowl (parts). Chicken broilers were not placed under import control.

It is contrary to government policy to reveal the names of those to whom import permits are issued.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, March 19, 1959

The house met at 8 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. PICKERSGILL—REFERENCE TO REMARKS IN DEBATE BY MEMBER FOR KOOTENAY WEST

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. When I was absent from the house yesterday the hon. member for Kootenay West, as found at page 2031 of Hansard, purported to quote something I had said outside the house. I am quite sure the hon. gentleman did not mean to reproduce it incorrectly; I am sure he did not have the full text. It seems to me, since he was permitted to put it on Hansard, that as a member of the house I am entitled to put on Hansard the correct version of what I actually did say. With your permission, sir, I should like to do that. I have here the transcript made from the actual broadcast, and this is what I actually said:

> In fact, Mr. Knowles and I had a conversation, which I don't think was private, about this very matter the night of the press gallery dinner. And I said to Mr. Knowles—I said—
> "Will you tell me why it was that the I.W.A. chose to go right from British Columbia to Newfoundland, which had the highest wages and which was completely unionized already. All the loggers belonged to unions which had the check-off. Why did they go there, instead of going to New Brunswick or Nova Scotia or Quebec, where there is much less unionization and the wages are lower, if they were considering the real interests of the workers?" And Mr. Knowles said—"That's a very hard question to answer", and he didn't try to answer it.

I have a second point of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The hon. gentleman suggested that my reference to this conversation was unethical. I am not asking him to withdraw that remark or anything of the sort; I am quite willing to have my ethics judged by the public and by this house without defending them in any way. But I believe, Mr. Speaker, that I did not express myself as well as I should have when I said it was a conversation which I did not think was private. The conversation, of course, was private in the sense that Mr. Knowles and I were not conducting a public debate. What I should have said and what I meant was that I did not think the conversation was confidential. I am quite sure that every hon. member who has appeared on one of these programs will appreciate the fact that one does not have a great deal of time for reflection before making these statements.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps because at one time I was secretary to the cabinet I might have become a little confused about the difference between "private" and "confidential". I did not think that particular exchange between Mr. Knowles and me was confidential or meant to be or intended to be such. If Mr. Knowles thinks I have done him any injury, I apologize. But I still would like to hear the answer Mr. Knowles has to give to my question.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege may I say that I apologize to the hon. member for certain inaccuracies in my statement, having missed out a few commas and conjunctions; but the substance, in view of what he read, was essentially correct.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman did not mention the substance at all, if I might raise another question. The substance related to the other three eastern provinces.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member has sufficiently explained his question of privilege or his point of view.

MR. MCPHILLIPS—REFERENCE TO PRESENCE OF PRIME MINISTER IN HOUSE

Mr. A. D. McPhillips (Victoria, B.C.): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege also. I think all hon. members of the house will agree with me when I say this. When we see the Prime Minister here this evening, notwithstanding the terrific stress and strain he has been under for so many days, I think it is a wonderful demonstration of devotion to democratic duty, and I suggest that the house show its appreciation in that regard.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

Fourth and fifth reports of standing committee on miscellaneous private bills—Mr. McCleave.

STANDING ORDERS—CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. J. W. Kucherepa (High Park) presented the third report of the standing committee on standing orders and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

TRADE

CANADA-AUSTRALIA—STATEMENT RESPECTING REVIEW OF AGREEMENT

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the house that a review of the Canada-Australia trade agreement is about to be initiated. The negotiations will take place in Canberra, Australia, and a delegation led by Mr. J. H. English, deputy minister of trade and commerce, will leave for Australia in the next few days.

The decision to review the Canada-Australia trade agreement was announced at the commonwealth trade and economic conference in Montreal. This trade agreement dates from 1931, and in essence provides for the exchange of preferential tariff treatment, which has proved of considerable value in our mutual trade. In view of the many changes that have taken place in the economies and trade relations of both Canada and Australia since that time, it is most desirable that a new trade agreement should be drawn up which will take account of these developments and will provide a basis for a further expansion of trade between the two countries.

Canada has close and important trade relations with Australia. Canadian exports to Australia last year amounted to $53 million, and included motor vehicles, wood pulp, newsprint, aluminum, tobacco, canned fish, lumber and chemicals. With the liberalization of import restrictions by Australia and the possibilities of further moves in this direction, new opportunities will be opened up for Canadian exporters. Similarly, the Canadian market is of great and growing importance to Australia. In 1958 Canada imported goods valued at $33 million from that country, the principal products being wool, sugar, meat, dried fruit and wine.

Canada and Australia share common objectives in the freeing and expansion of world trade, and the two countries co-operate closely in the development of constructive policies to resolve common trade and economic problems. I am confident that the review of the Canada-Australia trade agreement will further strengthen the relations between our two commonwealth countries.

[Mr. McPhillips.]

OIL—REPORTED CANADIAN EXEMPTION FROM U.S. IMPORT RESTRICTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. R. Smith (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in reply to a question as to whether the United States were revising their position on oil import quotas the Minister of Trade and Commerce stated that he was having his officials check into the authenticity of this report. I wonder if he would be kind enough at this time to advise the house whether he has been able to confirm whether or not the United States administration has taken a changed view with respect to the importation of Canadian oil on the basis of national security?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I regret that I have no further information and certainly no confirmation of the report that appeared in the press.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister say what steps he has taken to ascertain whether or not the report is correct, and whether Canada is making further representations on this important question?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, if the report is correct we will get information through the usual channels. We are closely in touch with the officials in Washington and with the state department. We will certainly hear if there is anything valid in the report that appeared in the papers.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, is this not a rather unusual delay with respect to such an important question? I should have thought the contact would have been almost simultaneous.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure we should follow up every report that appears in a newspaper. Perhaps my hon. friend has some suggestions with regard to that point.

Mr. Argue: On that point, is it not correct that the minister himself yesterday said that he would initiate an inquiry?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I said:

> We have been in communication with our officials in Washington, but have not had any confirmation of the report.

These words may be found at page 2020 of Hansard. What more rapid action does my hon. friend require?

Mr. Argue: A further question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister say what reply was given to him by his officials when he made this contact?

Mr. Churchill: The reply was that there was no confirmation of the report, Mr. Speaker.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON CONVERSATIONS WITH U.K. STATESMEN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister if there is anything he could usefully report to the house about the conversations he has just completed with the Prime Minister and the foreign secretary of the United Kingdom?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the Leader of the Opposition will realize, all I could possibly do is to deal in generalities and not with specific subjects. However, I think hon. members in general will join me in expressing satisfaction that the Prime Minister, Mr. Macmillan, and the foreign secretary, Mr. Lloyd, visited Ottawa before proceeding to Washington, thereby enabling these two statesmen to place before the Canadian government the views they intend to explore with the President of the United States.

The private talks which the Minister of Public Works and I had with them, and the discussions which took place at the meeting of the cabinet, re-emphasized the identity of the aims of the United Kingdom and Canada, and as well illustrated that intimacy and the value of the partnership which exists between the two governments.

In general the meetings were concerned with an examination of the questions of Germany, Berlin, and European security. They began with a comprehensive review of the 10-day visit they recently made to the Soviet union, and outlined the discussions which have taken place between them and Mr. Khrushchev; and I think just this general review indicated most clearly that those conversations and talks had been valuable. They gave an opportunity for a first hand impression of the Soviet position, and they enabled Mr. Macmillan to make clear beyond any doubt that there is unity among the western powers in their determination to safeguard their legitimate interests in Europe. The most important result of the visit was that the Russians appear to have accepted, for discussion at least, a settlement by negotiation and not the threatened settlement by force which theretofore had been feared as the epitome of their views.

Mr. Macmillan also outlined the course of his consultations last week with President de Gaulle and Prime Minister Debré in Paris, and with Chancellor Adenauer in Bonn. In the light of what he had learned in Moscow these discussions with the French and German leaders were most important, in that they led to a reaffirmation of western solidarity as well as advancing western preparations for the wider international negotiations which now seem likely to be held with the Soviet union in view of the statement made today by Mr. Khrushchev.

Our talks were largely in the nature of an exchange of information and a review of the German and Berlin problems and of the various proposals for a settlement of those problems now under study in western capitals and in NATO. I should emphasize that neither Mr. Macmillan nor I attempted to crystallize any British or Canadian position on specific questions under discussion. However, I might add that it is my belief that the United Nations might play some significant role in the solution of the Berlin problem, and that this phase deserves further and more careful study. I think it would be generally agreed that it was clear there was no essential difference in the British and Canadian assessments of the world situation or in the basic aims and policies of our two countries with regard to the complex questions of Germany, Berlin and European security.

I do not think I can add anything more to what I have said. I know the Leader of the Opposition, with his great experience in these matters, will realize that I can go no further than the outline I have just given the house.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I am not strictly in order, but in view of the importance of the subject and the length of the reply just given by the Prime Minister—and I am not complaining about that—I hope I may be permitted to say on behalf of the official opposition that we have listened with great satisfaction to a statement which indicates that the two governments are close together in what we on this side of the house think is a very sound approach to this important problem.

It is particularly gratifying to hear the Prime Minister say that there may be a way in which the United Nations can, in due course, play a part in this Berlin situation in a manner which would be helpful to peace and security.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): On behalf of this group, may I say that we are always pleased to know that governments are discussing, talking and negotiating. I support the remarks of the leader of the official opposition in respect to the United Nations.

Inquiries of the Ministry

AIR TRANSPORT

AUSTRALIA—INQUIRY AS TO RENEWAL OF AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. I should like to know if arrangements have been made or are being made to renew the commonwealth air agreement. The Prime Minister will probably remember that the late secretary of state for external affairs on two occasions said that the air agreement had been extended first to February 6 and later to March 11, so that I presume now the government has some answer to the question as to whether or not the air agreement has been renewed or where it stands at this time.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. gentleman will allow this to stand as notice. The information I have extends only up to the last few days. I shall endeavour to have an answer for him tomorrow.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

INQUIRY AS TO ACTION RESPECTING ALLEGED DEFAMATORY STATEMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. I should like to ask the minister whether in view of his professed concern for the integrity of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police it is his intention to take action against those persons who have made defamatory and libellous statements about the conduct of the police in Newfoundland?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I shall always of course be concerned about anyone who has made defamatory and libellous statements against the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, but the hon. gentleman has not identified the statements to which he refers, and I doubt if it would be proper for him to do so on the orders of the day.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should be pleased to furnish the hon. gentleman with the press reports, Mr. Speaker.

FINANCE

CANAL PROPERTIES—CONTINUANCE OF GRANTS IN LIEU OF TAXES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Laurier asked if the formula to be followed by the St. Lawrence seaway authority in connection with grants to municipalities in lieu of taxes will be the same as that followed by the Department of Transport. The answer is yes.

BANK OF CANADA—EFFECT OF LIQUIDATION OF GOVERNMENT BONDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. According to an article on the financial page of today's Toronto Globe and Mail, Canadian bonds have again declined sharply in the last two weeks, due in some small part to the liquidation of some of those bonds held by the Bank of Canada. My question is, does the government approve of this action on the part of the Bank of Canada?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that this is a highly improper question. The Bank of Canada carries on certain of its operations in the market without any instructions from the Minister of Finance, and it is not inhibited in any way in this regard. That is a matter for its own judgment. There are certain operations, of course, that the Bank of Canada carries out on behalf of the Minister of Finance. But, Mr. Speaker, I think on reflection my hon. friend will realize that the public interest would not be served by going into matters of that kind here.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I would draw Your Honour's attention to the fact that this is precisely the kind of question that, when he was on this side of the house, the Minister of Finance used to ask Mr. Harris.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, never did I ask for information of the kind just asked for by the hon. member for Welland; not that kind of information.

Mr. Pickersgill: More of the failing memory of the minister.

HOUSING

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING—INSURANCE OF MORTGAGES ON OLDER HOUSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Since we are rapidly approaching the building season, can the minister say whether government study of the subject has progressed to the point that it intends at this session to introduce amendments to the National Housing Act that would permit Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to insure mortgages on existing or used homes in the medium priced field?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, so far as I know there will be no further amendments to the National Housing Act at this session.

HARBOURS

LAKEHEAD—ANNOUNCEMENT OF NAMES OF COMMISSIONERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. It stems from the announcement this week of the names of the lakehead harbour commissioners. Especially in view of the fact that the onus for two of the appointments lies with the municipalities, would the minister explain why the complete slate was announced not by the minister but by the defeated Conservative candidate in Fort William?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I suppose it was because the defeated candidate in Fort William was more on his toes, perhaps, than the member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Fisher: I could make some observations there, Mr. Speaker, but I will just ask this supplementary question. Was the announcement forwarded to the defeated candidate from the minister's office or from that of Mr. Grosart?

Mr. Hees: I have no knowledge of it being forwarded from either office, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pickersgill: Just intuition.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Rea in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Terminable services—

734.—Purchase of flour to be given to the United Nations relief and works agency for Palestine refugees in the Near East—further amount required and, notwithstanding section 35 of the Financial Administration Act, to authorize payments to be made pursuant to this vote up to the 1st day of April, 1960, $1,500,000.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Chairman, with respect to item 734 and also item 741, which is very much akin, I think the minister should be able to tell us the amounts that will be spent up to and including March 31. We are not opposed to this vote, but we can vote this amount now and we can also vote one-sixth, one-quarter, one-third or whatever supply is necessary for the following months. Items 734 and 741 total $15 million, and that is a lot of money. I do not think we should have juggling around between two years in the accounts.

In support of what I say I would refer the minister to something he said when referring to the elimination of the NATO defence equipment account, as found on page 1240 of Hansard for June 17, 1958:

> We believe that in the interests of good accounting practice and the maintenance of proper parliamentary control of expenditures this account should be liquidated during the current year.

I think we should vote the amount of money that will be expended up to the end of March of this year. The minister should be able to give us that amount, and he should be able to tell us approximately what will be spent in the next two months.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Apparently the hon. member is unaware of the fact that the contributions that have been authorized by parliament by way of Colombo plan and similar aid have never precisely fitted the fiscal year, and in almost all cases it has been the practice of parliament to authorize these, so far as the fiscal year appropriation is concerned, on what is called an open end basis. In other words, the authority does not lapse on March 31 of the year in question. It is not possible to make these appropriations fit precisely the fiscal year, and the reason this particular appropriation is brought forward in the 1958-59 estimates is that we wish to move as much of the flour, just as quickly as we can, and as much of it will be moved before March 31 as can be arranged by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. No one can say at this moment precisely how much it will be, but as much will be moved as can be moved.

The same applies to the purchase of wheat and flour under item 741. The Minister of Trade and Commerce is taking up these purchases from the Canadian wheat board and is moving them as quickly as it is possible to arrange for them to be shipped. I think it would be the wish of the house to make this aid effective by speeding it.

Mr. McMillan: Can the minister tell us how much has been moved as of this date?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No.

Mr. Benidickson: I think this point is very well taken. Surely within two weeks of the end of the fiscal year we can get more precise information as to the probabilities of shipment of this grain and flour than the minister proposes to give at this stage. He has a second alternative. If he wanted to do so he could ask for more than one-sixth of the requirement he thinks will be needed for the first two months of the fiscal year starting on April 1; but to say that $15 million is required in the estimates for the year ending within two weeks and that he cannot give the house more precise information as to deliveries of flour and grain in the next two weeks is not taking the house into his confidence in the manner that the house deserves.

The Chairman: Shall item 734 carry?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Chairman. Can the minister not give us some information about this item? I am talking now of item 741, though I gather it is item 734 we are discussing, in conjunction with item 741. Can the minister also give us an assurance that, as this is an item which concerns an expenditure under the Colombo plan that deals with consumer goods, all these shipments will be made with the approval and indeed on the initiative of the receiving country?

As the minister knows as well as I do, the Colombo plan was not designed to provide this kind of assistance to receiving countries. It was a plan for capital and technical assistance. What I want reassurance on is that the increase in the shipment of consumer goods, namely wheat and flour—and I am not complaining about that procedure in itself—or the increased amount will not prejudice the capital and technical assistance which the countries are receiving.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This is not a Colombo plan item, Mr. Chairman. I point that fact out to the hon. gentleman. There is nothing here that is going to prejudice any country which is a party to the ordinary Colombo plan. This is a special item. Of course this assistance goes only to those countries with which arrangements have been made to receive it.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, I was talking about item 741 because my friend the hon. member for Welland mentioned it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This is not a Colombo plan item. It is a special item for special assistance in the form of wheat and flour.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Chairman, can the minister not tell us whether there has been one shipload, ten shiploads or what the number is?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): None has gone out of the country, but it is on the seaboard awaiting shipment. As I indicated earlier, I cannot say how much of it will move before March 31. I can say that as much will move as the Minister of Trade and Commerce can arrange to have moved before March 31.

Mr. McMillan: Has any moved from our ports as yet?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I just said that none had moved out of the country as yet.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Minister of Finance whether he is in a position to explain to the house what the policy of the government is with regard to this agency whose term under the United Nations resolution will end at the beginning of 1960? Can the minister say whether or not the government has yet formulated a policy as a member of the United Nations, as to whether or not it is prepared to continue the work of UNRWA?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I cannot give any indication of policy beyond the present time. This item is confined to the particular amount indicated, namely $1,500,000. The government desires—and I believe with the approval of the house—to furnish this assistance to this extent by way of this special flour contribution. The matter was outlined fully in the house some ten days ago by the late secretary of state for external affairs.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, this particular item 734 is specifically in contravention of section 35 of the Financial Administration Act. Has the minister in his notes the section which is referred to and which he might read to the house? I do not have it, I must confess.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Section 35 is the section dealing with the lapsing of votes at the end of a fiscal year. This is the type of vote that is frequently used, as I think my friend will recall, in connection with aid programs.

Item agreed to.

735. Canadian government's assessment toward financing the United Nations emergency force in respect of the calendar year 1959 in the amount of $472,287 U.S., notwithstanding that payment may exceed or fall short of the equivalent in Canadian dollars, estimated as of March, 1959, which is $458,118.

Mr. Pearson: This is an amount for payment of expenses, I take it, in connection with Canada's contribution to the United Nations emergency force. While I do not quarrel with the nature or the amount of that expenditure, nevertheless as my hon. friend knows this is a United Nations effort, and the expenditure of these amounts should be discharged by the United Nations; they were meant to be discharged by the United Nations, and I know efforts have been made to spread the cost among its members. I take it that, while making this expenditure, we hope to get reimbursement from the United Nations. Perhaps the minister could give some indication in that regard.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Steps have been taken to that end, Mr. Chairman. I am glad to say that the indebtedness of the United Nations to Canada in this respect has been substantially reduced. Actually it has been reduced by something like $1½ million in recent times, and it our expectation that this amount will be steadily further reduced.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Can the minister say what countries are still in default of their allocation under the United Nations?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Well, how does this amount compare with preceding years? Is it exactly this assessment?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I would be glad to furnish my hon. friend with this information.

The Chairman: Shall item 735 carry?

Item agreed to.

736. Canadian government's contribution towards the Far Eastern program of the intergovernmental committee on European migration, $60,000.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, item 736 deals with a contribution toward the Far Eastern program of the intergovernmental committee on European migration. It may be difficult for the minister to give this information and have all of these details available, but I have recently seen reports in the press to the effect that Canada has not been paying her fair share in the liquidation of the hard core of world war II refugees. Perhaps on this item the minister could give us some reassurance or otherwise on that score.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, this item does not relate to the movement of European refugees out of Europe. This contribution of $60,000 is to be used in moving European refugees out of China. I may say that since 1952 ICEM, as the intergovernmental committee on European migration is known, has moved to overseas destinations approximately 10,000 refugees, most of whom are white Russian refugees from the bolshevik revolution of 1917, and their children. Over $4 million has been spent already on this program, to which Canada contributed $100,000 during the period 1954-55. There are still an estimated 10,000 European refugees in China, but 6,000 odd already have visa assurance. In recent years this movement out of China, of course, has come almost to a standstill. Since 1957, although visas to leave China were again obtainable, the flow of refugees has been restricted by lack of funds. Urgent appeals for funds to move them began in August of 1957. Many countries, including Australia, Switzerland and the United Kingdom, have made extensive contributions since this appeal was made, even though some of these countries are contributing extensively to this problem by accepting refugees. This will be Canada's first contribution since 1955.

Mr. Pearson: I am quite in favour of this contribution. I think it is a worthy project, and it will help liquidate a situation which has existed there for a good many years. But what I have in mind is an assurance that the $60,000 which is being given under this item to the intergovernmental committee on European migration—which is a European committee, although this effort is in the Far East—will not prejudice the funds which we have been allocating to this agency for European migration.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It will not prejudice it. The two matters are looked upon really as independent of one another in this approach.

Item agreed to.

737. Gift of two clerks' tables to the parliament of the West Indies, $2,600.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, in relation to item 737, might I ask the minister how this is arrived at? Does it require an order in council, or what is the machinery for arranging for this type of thing?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This is, of course, a matter for intergovernmental consultation to enable the selection of some form of contribution to the new parliament of the Federation of the West Indies which would be suitable and which would take its part in relation to other gifts which other countries of the commonwealth may be making. As a result of such exchanges it was agreed that the provision of two clerks' tables would be a very suitable action for Canada to take in regard to the new parliament of the West Indies federation.

Mr. Peters: I have no objection to the gift. I was only inquiring how it was arranged. What is the machinery? Is there an order in council which authorizes the expenditure?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This present item, when voted, will constitute parliamentary authority for the expenditure of the $2,600 the two tables will cost.

Item agreed to.

740. To reimburse the agricultural commodities stabilization account for dry skimmed milk donated to international relief agencies and organizations, $951,634.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Can the minister tell us whether the government is in a position to make any announcement of its policy with regard to representations made by the federation of agriculture regarding a number of matters of concern to the milk producers? These concerns include this particular item. The milk producers, as the Minister of Agriculture knows, were in the city yesterday and I think the day before, urging various members of parliament of all groups to give consideration to a brief which had been presented on their behalf by the federation of agriculture some months ago. One of the arguments made by the milk producers was that an additional outlet for skimmed milk might be found in the assistance which we give to underdeveloped countries, particularly those countries covered by the Colombo plan. Is there any statement the minister could make on this item with regard to the representations made by the milk producers?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, this is not the proper item on which this matter should be raised. Here we are dealing simply with an item to reimburse the agricultural commodities stabilization account for dry skimmed milk donated to international relief agencies and organizations. The matter which the hon. member for Essex East proposes to raise is, of course, one which could properly be raised when the estimates of the Department of Agriculture for 1959-60 are before the committee of supply.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Surely the Minister of Finance is taking a very strict procedural position when he says that we have no right under this item to raise the question I have just put to him. The item reads:

To reimburse the agricultural commodities stabilization account for dry skimmed milk donated to international relief agencies and organizations.

That is the very point. The milk producers have suggested that one way to find additional outlets for their products would be by increasing our contributions to international relief agencies and organizations, such products being directed by the various agencies concerned to receiving countries which could profit by them. Surely the minister is not furthering the passage of this item by resorting to his present procedural attitude. When he was sitting on this side, he would have regarded such an attitude as a serious abridgment of his rights as a member of parliament.

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This is not a serious abridgment of parliamentary rights. The hon. gentleman is well aware of the nature of this item. His subject is something which is entirely different from the matter now before the committee. He will have his opportunity to raise this question, and I am sure it will be discussed to the hearts' content of the hon. gentleman and any other member who is interested. But it is not a matter which concerns this item at all. This is a different year altogether.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend takes that position, but I must say I disagree with him strongly. The brief which the producers presented yesterday to members of parliament of all political parties included among other representations—

Mr. Fisher: See page 2.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I thank my parliamentary assistant for that information. In the first paragraph on page 2 of the brief it states:

Statistics show that skim milk powder is the only dairy product which can be definitely classified as surplus.

When they referred to surpluses they were, of course, bearing in mind the observations made earlier by the Minister of Agriculture, who referred to the surplus situation of agricultural production generally, a situation which in his judgment may cause a lowering of floor prices or a reluctance not to provide any floor price for other commodities.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. My hon. friend is discussing something that does not arise on this item at all. This item has nothing to do with the subject the hon. gentleman is raising. He is talking about surpluses. This item seeks authority to reimburse the agricultural commodities stabilization account for dry skimmed milk that has been donated hitherto to international relief agencies and organizations. This is not an item that arises in the estimates of the Department of Agriculture. This is one that arises in the estimates of the Department of External Affairs. It does not relate to next year or future policy but to the present year, 1958-59. Further, it relates to something that has been done. These are provisions in favour of international agencies, and parliamentary authorization is simply asked for reimbursement of the cost of those provisions to the agricultural commodities stabilization account. My hon. friend is going on to talk about something entirely different.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I fail to understand how the Minister of Finance can take this position. We could take the position that until we get a statement of government policy the government ought not to be allowed to proceed as provided for in the item. The Minister should not argue now that we are not at liberty to call attention to what we believe to be inadequacies in government policy. That is surely an unwise course of action. We could suggest that there should be no reimbursement until the government declares its position.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Is that what you propose?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I simply say we could take that position. By referring to this possibility I reveal the weakness of my hon. friend's procedural argument. This is what the brief says in addition to what I have already quoted, and I invite hon. gentlemen to consider if it is not on all fours with the item now before the committee:

> Many milk producers are of the opinion that our surplus food should be used for economic aid to underdeveloped countries in the Far East. Large numbers of people in this world are starving in the midst of plenty.

The brief then refers us to an article from the Financial Post on this subject. We on this side point out that if this is the situation, as undoubtedly it is, the government under this item should give consideration to the announcement of a policy that would provide assistance to the milk producers.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Some hon. gentlemen shout "order".

Mr. Lennard: I did not say "order"; I said you were stupid.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What hon. gentlemen are now asserting is that we are precluded from urging the government to take a step that does involve reimbursement to international organizations so as to give relief to the milk producers of Canada, who during the past few days have made representations to the government.

Mr. Lennard: How stupid can you be?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, further to the point made by the hon. member for Essex East may I say I did not mind his reference to me being his parliamentary assistant, as long as I am not identified with the Martin bureau of statistics.

There is a question involved here which, it seems to me, needs to be seen in the light of the reputed statement, at least, of the Minister of Agriculture that you could not even give this skim milk away. I am not going to say that he said that as a matter of truth because I did not hear him say it and I have not been able to find it, but I have been told by some milk producers that he did make that statement. Obviously this item is evidence which indicates that it can be given away. As a consequence I would ask the Minister of Finance the names of those particular international relief agencies. What quantities did they receive, and to what countries in the world did they distribute this particular milk? If he has the information I should like to have it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, Mr. Chairman. The donations of dry skimmed milk already made or expected to be made by the 31st day of this month are as follows: UNICEF, 9,018,166 pounds; Canadian Lutheran world relief, 2,361,750 pounds; Unitarian service committee of Canada, 224,600 pounds; CARE, 1,512,650 pounds; the Canadian council of churches, 127,600 pounds. It is expected that a further requirement will be sought by UNICEF of 350,000 pounds. This makes a total of 13,594,766 pounds.

Mr. Benidickson: What is the practice of the agricultural stabilization board in the matter of delivery? For instance, what freight charges are accounted for in this vote? What is the practice in so far as shipping and delivery costs are concerned? Where are these things delivered?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The practice in Canada has been to deliver at seaboard; that is to say, the recipient takes delivery at seaboard. This is not a uniform international practice, but it is the practice which Canada has followed.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Minister of Agriculture is in the house tonight, and one would not expect the Minister of Finance, though his knowledge of these matters is obviously great, to be able to answer all questions dealing with agriculture. Having in mind the complaints which the minister used to make when he was on this side of the house about the minister of finance speaking on behalf of the whole government, would this not be a good opportunity for the Minister of Finance to give his colleagues, those ministers who are responsible for these particular matters, particularly when they are in the house, the opportunity to comment on matters of concern to them. The Minister of Agriculture attempted to rise a few moments ago—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, he did not.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —to answer the question I put to him and which the Minister of Finance wished to divert for some other occasion. He wanted to leave this matter for the estimates of the Department of Agriculture which may be up some weeks from now.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Maybe tomorrow.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): These representations were made during the past few days, and I think what the Minister of Finance ought to do is permit the Minister of Agriculture who, after all, is responsible for this heavy department, to tell the house and the country what is the policy of his department with regard to the use of skim milk, particularly in underdeveloped countries. I think the Minister of Agriculture is anxious to make a speech, and he should be allowed to do so. I would ask the Minister of Finance kindly to signify to the Minister of Agriculture that he gives him permission to answer our questions.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, there is no matter of permission from the Minister of Finance to myself or to any other minister in connection with answering these questions. I should like to make that absolutely clear. The hon. member for Essex East is deliberately trying to create a completely incorrect impression as far as the house and the country generally are concerned. He is attempting to give the impression that there is some matter or difference between the Minister of Finance and myself in this. This is completely incorrect.

As the Minister of Finance has indicated, this is not an agricultural item. This is an item under external affairs. This is not the proper place to go into the operations of the Agricultural Stabilization Act. As the hon. member for Essex East well knows, as soon as we are finished with these supplementary estimates we will be going on again with the estimates of the Department of Agriculture, when he will have full opportunity to get any explanations he wants with regard to any of these transactions.

Item agreed to.

741. Purchase of wheat and flour to be given to commonwealth countries in south and southeast Asia to relieve food shortages and, notwithstanding section 35 of the Financial Administration Act, to authorize payments to be made pursuant to this vote up to the 1st day of April, 1960, $13,500,000.

Mr. Pearson: Is this an item which concerns the Colombo plan appropriation?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, it is a special vote.

Mr. Benidickson: On this item I want to make the point again that was made on item 734. We have here a very substantial amount of money, $13,500,000, and the statement has been made that it has not been possible to make any deliveries. We know there are only two weeks to go to the end of the fiscal year for which we are normally asked to make appropriations at this stage of the session.

Members of the house will see the result. The result is a distortion of the over-all accounts for a fiscal year. No doubt other members of parliament will have read recently, as I did, that there was criticism in the United States of an apparent attempt to throw all conceivable and possible items of expenditure into the appropriations for the current fiscal year because of the ambition on the part of the administration there to have a balanced budget in the coming fiscal year. It was said that everybody was reconciled to a big deficit this year, and therefore everything would be thrown into the appropriations for this year in the hope of creating a good effect next year. I have the feeling that perhaps this is in the mind of the minister with respect to this very large item of $13,500,000.

We have had evidence that no deliveries have been possible yet, and I suggest that the minister should be able to estimate a little more carefully what is required up to March 31, the end of the current fiscal year. He could then ask for more than a two months' proportion for the coming fiscal year if he felt that deliveries would be impeded in any way by having less than one sixth of the appropriation.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE

Payments to municipalities—

742. Grants to municipalities—further amount required including authority for a grant in the amount of $44,382 to the municipality of Port Colborne, Ontario, in respect of the tax years of that municipality commencing on the 1st day of January, 1951, and ending on the 31st day of December, 1954, under section 5 of the Municipal Grants Act as in force on the 31st day of December, 1954, $1.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before item 742 carries I am going to ask the minister a question which I know in advance is out of order. I simply wish to ask him if he will be good enough to have his officials, not tonight but on some early occasion in the future, prepare a table showing the per capita amount of the municipal grants in each of the 10 provinces. In order to explain what I am driving at, what I mean is that I should like the minister to have someone add up all the grants in Ontario, divide that total amount by the population of Ontario, and do the same for each of the other provinces so we will see precisely what this means to one province as compared with another. I wonder whether the minister would be good enough to answer my question.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): My hon. friend indicated at the outset when he put his question that he realized it was out of order. There will be an opportunity for him to take up that subject. That information can be had. I would have expected that he would put his question on the order paper, but certainly we are glad to give information of that nature.

Mr. Pickersgill: I thank the minister for his courtesy.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

747. Departmental administration—further amount required including an amount of $3,000 to assist in defraying the costs of the congress of corrections to be held in Canada in 1959, $39,800.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, we appreciate your diligence in calling the items, but do not be too diligent, because it does not give us a chance to follow item by item. I want to ask the minister under this item if he can tell us whether or not it has been possible to obtain any information from the government of the province of Ontario that would facilitate the desire of the federal government to appoint an additional judge in the county of Essex.

My hon. friend will remember that the Minister of Justice was asked this question. He indicated that last year parliament had acquired the necessary legislative authority to appoint a judge in that county, but that there was some difficulty arising out of the procedural requirements in the province of Ontario. Can the Minister of Finance, who is serving tonight for all his colleagues, answer what may to him be an unimportant question but which to the people of Essex county is a very important one?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There is nothing in this item for judges' salaries.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, this item deals, of course, with the departmental administration of the Department of Justice. I should like to join with the hon. member for Essex East in asking the minister, who is speaking for all his colleagues tonight, if he will make representations both to the Minister of Justice and to the Prime Minister with a view to seeing, now that three months have passed, that a chief justice is appointed in the province of Newfoundland so the courts can function properly and appeals can be heard in the supreme court, where there are only three judges. The minister, being a lawyer, will appreciate quite well that any litigant taking an appeal from a trial judge and having only one other judge to go to is, because of the dilatory conduct of the present government, being denied justice in that province.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

Special services—

750. To provide for expenses of the special services branch including expenses for the promotion of a program for combating seasonal unemployment, the organization and use of workers for farming and related industries and assistance to the provinces under agreements entered into with the provinces by the Minister of Labour with the approval of the governor in council, and the movement, reception, supervision and welfare of workers from outside Canada to work on farms and other essential employment where Canadian labour is not available to meet the need—further amount required, $100,000.

Mr. Fisher: I am interested in what part of this item for the winter works project and the advertising campaign usually wrapped up in the phrase, "Do it now".

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is all in connection with the winter work publicity program.

Mr. Fisher: And it has nothing to do with the billboard signs or anything like that?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is part of the publicity campaign for combating seasonal unemployment in the winter. It is in addition to the item that was voted at the last session for that purpose.

Mr. Pickersgill: Can the minister bring the committee up to date as to the number of persons who are employed in the various winter work programs being carried on by the government?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The winter work programs, or expenditures on winter work programs as such, do not arise under this item at all. This is an item that is designed to provide for publicity to draw the attention of the public to the desirability of undertaking their own work programs during the winter and thus meeting the problem of seasonal unemployment.

Mr. Pickersgill: Do I correctly interpret the minister, then, that this item is for the purpose of providing employment for certain advertising agencies?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend would not be correct in drawing that conclusion.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I am sure the house would be very happy if the Minister of Labour were here tonight to give us some information in connection with this item. As the Minister of Finance has said, this item is not related to the winter work program which has been responsible for placing in employment only some 23,000 people out of almost half a million men and women out of work during the course of the present winter. But as this is a scheme which is intended, and quite properly so, to combat seasonal unemployment it would be very interesting and useful for the house to have some report from the Minister of Finance as to the results of this program.

The amount of this item is $100,000 and if the program were capable of producing employment for a lot of people during the autumn and winter then, of course, there would be the fullest support for it. But as a means of understanding its effectiveness, in view of the fact that unemployment is still a major problem in Canada surely we have the right and indeed the duty to ask the Minister of Finance, who is substituting tonight not only for the Minister of Agriculture but for the Minister of Labour and for the Minister of Justice, to tell us how many men have been put to work under this scheme.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I do not think any hon. member of this house is likely to be misled by the remarks that have just been made by the hon. member for Essex East. But for the record let it be stated that it is the time honoured and invariable practice of this house—and honoured at all times during the time he was a minister—that the supplementary estimates, especially the final supplementary estimates, are piloted through the house in their entirety by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Pearson: No, no.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes; that has been the invariable practice.

Mr. Chevrier: That is so far from the fact.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Therefore I am not substituting for other ministers. I am simply discharging the same function my predecessors have discharged with respect to supplementary estimates, particularly final supplementary estimates, for many a year.

As I pointed out, Mr. Chairman, this is not an item related to an expenditure by the federal government for providing government work. This is an item that relates to appeals that have been made to persons throughout the length and breadth of Canada to undertake their own work programs with a view to providing work during the winter time in order to meet seasonal unemployment. Last summer a national winter employment conference was held in Ottawa. Out of that conference certain recommendations arose.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

One of them was that the federal government should extend and intensify the advertising program which it had successfully conducted in the previous winter. This intensified advertising program has been carried on and, I am told, with gratifying results.

Mr. Pearson: I must refresh the minister's memory on one statement he made, namely that the invariable practice, when we were on that side of the house, was to let the minister of finance take care of all the supplementary estimates. He will recall that on many occasions he used to ask me questions on external affairs on the supplementary estimates.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No.

Mr. Pearson: If he will go back and read some of the old Hansards he will find that.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I invite my hon. friend to go back and read Hansard for the month of March year by year, and there he will find the correction of his own statement.

Mr. Pearson: I shall be glad to do that. But perhaps the minister will agree with me that I ought to be able to remember whether I was in the chamber on the supplementary estimates when external affairs estimates came up for consideration, whether or not he was. What I am asking is quite in order, I think, on this item. Can he give us a breakdown of this figure of $100,000?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Certainly. Of this total, $5,000 is for publication of informational material. It is to provide for the printing of additional bulletins and other information material arising out of the expansion of the winter employment publicity program. The other $95,000 is for newpaper, radio, film and other publicity.

Mr. Pickersgill: Will the minister say whether that is the total amount being spent on the program? Before he answers that question I should like to supplement what the Leader of the Opposition has said. If the minister would care to look up the discussion on the supplementary estimates on one occasion when I was minister of citizenship and immigration, he will find that during the course of a whole afternoon I was subjected to questions, almost all of which were irrelevant to the item, by his colleague the Minister of Justice, and that no exception was taken by the government of that day to that procedure because we believed in giving parliament the information to which it was entitled.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: It seems to me that if the minister is not himself capable of giving the information to which parliament is entitled, we are entitled to have here the minister who has that information. What I should like to know is whether this is the full amount required for this program. I should also like to know how much of this amount is to be paid to advertising agencies, and to what advertising agencies.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): On the side of publication of information material, the house provided in the main estimates $10,000. This is an additional $5,000 to make a total of $15,000 for that purpose. With respect to newspaper, radio, film and other publicity, parliament has already appropriated in the previous estimates $140,200. Parliament is now asked to provide a further $95,000 for this purpose, to make a total of $235,200.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister has not answered my question about how much is used for advertising agencies and to which agencies it is paid. My colleague the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River has just drawn my attention to the fact that $600,000 was already voted for this purpose in the main estimates. When another $100,000 is added to that amount it is a sizeable sum merely for promotional activities, particularly when being recommended by a Minister of Finance who, when he was on this side of the house, used to bore us hour after hour with speeches about the unnecessary waste of public funds on publications, information and advertising.

I do not want to distract the minister from getting the information I am asking for. I should like to know the names of the advertising agencies and how much is being paid not merely in connection with this additional amount but in connection with the main estimate as well.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That information could not be provided in full now, anyway, because we have not yet come to the end of the fiscal year; but that is information that is always given in full in the public accounts, and will be so given.

Mr. Pickersgill: Will the minister give us such information as is now available?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I shall be glad to furnish my hon. friend with such information. I am not in a position to do it at the moment.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the minister consent to allowing this item to stand and proceed with some of the others?

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Pickersgill: Unless he is able to provide us with the information to which the committee is entitled, I think he should accept my suggestion.

Mr. Pearson: If the Minister of Labour were in the chamber perhaps he would have that information available with respect to advertising agencies, and would be glad to give it to the committee.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The ministers should be in their places.

Mr. Caron: Can the minister tell us how much has been spent for newspaper advertising, how much for radio, how much for films, what is meant by "other publicity", and how much has been spent for television?

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. Before we proceed further it might be advisable to report to the Speaker that there is a desk out of order, in order that it may be repaired.

Mr. Caron: I want a breakdown of this item showing how much has been spent for newspaper advertising, how much for radio, how much for television, how much for films and how much for other publicity. I should also like the minister to tell us what he means by "other publicity".

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think my hon. friend is well aware of the fact that this is the form in which this item came before the house and was approved in principle. As to a detailed breakdown, my hon. friend in effect is asking the same question that was asked by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. The information will be given, as usual, in full in the public accounts. As to the breakdown, the whole thing will be given there in the proper way.

Mr. Caron: I do not admit or accept the suggestion that because an hon. member has asked a question which has not been answered, it cannot be asked by any other member. Because the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has asked a question similar to this one, which the minister has not answered, the minister seems to think I have no right to come back and ask that same question again. He tells me that this information will appear in the public accounts. But this is a new item.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No.

Mr. Caron: It is a new item. It is in addition to the item that was voted. It is a new amount of $100,000. According to standing order 59, subsection 2, we have the right to know the answer.

The hon. gentleman laughs. That shows his intelligence; he does not understand anything. It would be a lot better if the minister would stand up and answer. The minister cannot do that. He should not laugh that way, because we have the right to know, and as long as he does not answer we will keep asking. I will keep the house waiting so that the minister will give his reply. Since the beginning of the debate the minister has tried to stop the opposition from asking questions, and is refusing to give answers to questions we have a right to ask. He has not the right to stop parliament by refusing to answer questions.

The Chairman: May I remind the hon. members that the use they are making of their desks is not quite parliamentary. Therefore I must ask the hon. members of the house to please refrain from this rather childish display which has been going on for the last five minutes.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, I think it has been rather a childish display on the other side in the serious way in which they approach the expenditure of public funds. What we asked the minister was a perfectly proper question, namely for a breakdown of an expenditure of $100,000 which he is asking parliament to appropriate. In our request for that breakdown we asked him to give us information as to how this money is being spent, and through what private agencies it is being spent. But the minister said, "Wait for the public accounts a year from now". That is a strange constitutional position to be taken by the Minister of Finance, of all people.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I want to support the other speakers in this respect. As the leader of the official opposition has just said, the minister replied that we would get the details in the public accounts, which means a year after the money has been voted by this parliament. We in this group think that is an affront to parliament. We are entitled to know the details before we pass the item.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member is completely overlooking the fact that he is dealing with an appropriation. Parliament is being asked to provide this money. It is something new to have the government asked to give the details of expenditures when an amount is being appropriated for a purpose, only part of which amount has been spent. The proper and constitutional position, and the one which as far as I am aware has always been recognized, is that a breakdown of expenditure is given to the house in the public accounts after proper audit. What the house is now being asked to approve is the appropriation of a further sum for a purpose already approved by the house.

Mr. Chairman, the house had this matter before it at the last session, when it approved this type of expenditure in principle and approved the amounts that I referred to earlier. This is a request for sums in addition to those previous sums, and these will be fully accounted for to parliament. This is the first time that I recall a request being made for a breakdown of all expenditures made under the main item when a further amount has been asked for in the final supplementaries. I have already indicated to the house that this information of course will be given to the house, and if the house wishes this before this amount has been audited or gone through the Auditor General's hands or through the public accounts, this information can be given in the form in which it will be available to us when the money has been expended. But I hope I will not be asked to provide a breakdown of all expenditure when we are asking for an appropriation, part of which only has been expended.

Mr. Hardie: What do you base your appropriation on?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is based upon the expanded program which was asked for since parliament met last. Some of this expenditure has been made under appropriation, and we are now asking for this further sum to provide for the cost of the expansion of the program which has been undertaken through to March 31.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, the minister must know, as a student of parliamentary procedure, as well as a matter of constitutional propriety, that there is no difference whatever between a supplementary estimate and a main estimate in so far as procedure and constitutional practice are concerned. What we are being asked to do is to vote $100,000 for a stated purpose. That money has to be spent presumably between now and March 31. It has to be spent between the day it is voted and March 31, 10 or 11 days hence. We are asking the minister to tell us how this money will be spent during that short time, through what agencies, and the names of those agencies. The very fact that there is a short time between this date and the end of the financial year, for which $100,000 is being asked of parliament, surely justifies us in our curiosity as to how this money will be spent and in asking for the details.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman has misapprehended what I said. I did not say this was all going to be spent between now and the end of March. On the contrary—

Mr. Pickersgill: Has some of it been spent already?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before it has been voted?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No. This was appropriated in the proper manner. This was provided under miscellaneous minor and unforeseen expenses, according to the vote provided for that purpose by parliament. This is in part a recoupment and in part an estimate of the amount required to carry through the expanded publicity program to March 31.

Now, in dealing with the hon. gentleman's first point, we have had this matter up before. The point of difference between a main item and a supplementary item is that the question of principle is deemed to be decided when the main item is approved. We have had that up for discussion at the present session and it has been the subject of rulings. No one questions at all the right of full discussion of the amount. I was dealing with the difference in the matter of approval in principle of the purpose of an item.

Mr. Pearson: Am I to understand that a part at least of this money—and perhaps the minister may be able to tell us what part—has already been spent under another vote, and that we are now being asked for a new appropriation to cover money already spent under another vote? Is that the situation?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Oh, yes, that is the situation, and it is a situation which constantly arises, year after year, in the case of supplementary estimates; because parliament has for many years made provision in the vote to which I have referred—the vote for miscellaneous, minor and unforeseen expenditures—to deal with amounts, usually not major amounts, which are required during the year to meet unforeseen contingencies.

This is the way in which this item has arisen. The need for an expansion in the program was indicated; it was asked for by the conference which met here last summer, and having regard to the useful results achieved by this expenditure previously, it was deemed desirable that the expenditure be increased as recommended by that conference.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): These are important matters, and one regrets very much that the Minister of Finance should have taken the position he has in answering the comments made by the Leader of the Opposition and other hon. members. The situation is not at all altered because of the fact that this is a supplementary item involving a principle with which we have previously had an opportunity to deal. The fact before us now is that we are being asked to vote an additional sum of $100,000 to provide for the expenditures of the special services branch, and this special services branch item includes expenditure for the promotion of a program for combating seasonal unemployment, the organization and use of workers for farming and related industries. Personnel are being employed by this administration for these laudable purposes, yet the most we have been able to obtain from the Minister of Finance is a statement that the results have been gratifying.

That is not sufficient. We want to know what results justify this statement about gratification, because the unemployment statistics certainly do not support the statement made by the Minister of Finance. We are entitled under this vote to know who are the individuals whose expenses are being provided. We are entitled to know, as the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate asked, what advertising companies are being used for the purpose mentioned. We all remember that at the beginning of this session evidence was produced in this house showing that employment was being given in a particular section of Manitoba at the instance of the Conservative party organization, and great complaint was registered against that practice. No objection was taken by hon. members opposite with regard to the allegations made.

Are the moneys we are now being called upon to vote to be used in that manner? The Minister of Finance can satisfy our legitimate curiosity in this matter by giving us the information for which he was asked. If he does not possess that information why does he not call for his colleague the Minister of Labour, who undoubtedly has it at his finger tips? And if the Minister of Labour is not here, then surely, in view of the rights of an opposition and of all members of parliament to know why money is being voted, this item ought to stand.

I suggest to the Minister of Finance, in the friendly spirit I always adopt in any observations I have to make regarding him, that he should take this advice. Simply to expect us to pass a vote for $100,000 for the purpose contemplated in this item when we know there have been abuses in this field in the past—abuses which have been drawn to the attention of the house in respect to one of the constituencies in Manitoba—is asking the committee too much. One president of a Conservative association said he was the man who gave work in a particular constituency. I do not believe that a similar situation exists all over Canada, but we were told, according to the Winnipeg Free Press, and the story was not denied, that this was the practice in that constituency, at least.

Mr. Pallett: Is the hon. member opposed to the winter work program?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. member is among those who should be very concerned about providing work for the unemployed. He not only needs work for his constituents in the winter, but he had better see that this government takes steps to provide work in his constituency for a longer period than that.

It will not be sufficient for the Minister of Finance simply to say that he has not this information, or that it can be given in three or four months. We are being asked to vote moneys now, and we are entitled to have all the facts before us in order to enable us to determine whether or not this particular item should be voted as recommended by the government.

Mr. Fisher: Since the hon. member for Essex East has raised the Manitoba question, I might point out that we were given an undertaking some time ago by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources that when the hon. member for Brandon-Souris was back in the house he would explain this particular incident in connection with the work program in that area. I wonder whether the minister might take this opportunity of doing so, since the question has been raised?

The Deputy Chairman: Shall this item carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, no. I have two or three more questions I should like to ask the minister. Surely the minister knows how much has been taken from the unforeseen contingencies vote, and how much new money he is asking. I may say that the Minister of Finance is not the only person in this chamber who has presented supplementary estimates. There are some of us on this side of the chamber who have done so. Certainly anyone who has ever presented supplementary estimates knows that the first question a minister is supposed to be able to answer is why he needs the extra money; and before he can explain that he must, of course, know how much of the main vote has been spent. Perhaps I have put that in a fashion sufficiently elementary for even the Minister of Finance to apprehend.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think we are entitled to know how much of the original appropriation of $600,000 has been spent, how much has been added and spent out of the unforeseen contingencies account, and how much of this money it is intended to spend between March 19 and March 31. Surely these three figures can be given right away. If they cannot it means that someone has fallen down in preparing information for the minister to give to the house, because that is the first question any competent minister asks his staff before he brings estimates of this sort before the committee. He says, "How much is left in the main vote, and why do we need this extra money?" It is elementary. It is so obvious that I should have thought even the Minister of Finance, after his 20 months in office and 18 hours of work a day, would have found that out. Perhaps the minister would give us this information.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Perhaps the hon. gentleman would go on to indicate his further questions. I have sent a communication to the official concerned, but he is ill tonight and the information will not be available tonight for that reason. If the hon. gentleman will continue with his further questions and put them on record we will be glad to obtain the information.

Mr. Pickersgill: Since the minister cannot provide this information tonight I will indicate briefly the other questions I have in mind. They are largely a reiteration of those I have already asked, but I will ask them in a different form so the minister will have no trouble about providing the information.

I should like to ask the minister if he can tell us how much of this money has already been spent. I am not talking about what he proposes to spend, but for the amount spent up to the latest date at which the bills were paid, or any other convenient accounting date. I do not expect the minister to tell us the position as at March 19, but I should like him to say how much has been spent to the latest available date on newspaper advertising, radio advertising and film advertising, and what are the other categories of publicity. In particular I should like to know how much has been spent through advertising agencies, and what are the names of the advertising agencies.

This is the kind of information which hon. members opposite, when they were over here, were constantly seeking. It is something which parliament is perfectly entitled to know before it appropriates an additional amount for a vote of this sort, and it is the kind of information which I think should be provided.

To assist the minister to get on with some of the other items, I suggest he should let this item stand until tomorrow morning, when we can make an intelligent decision about it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That, in the circumstances, is a course which is agreeable to me. I point out again that the official with whom I have sought direct communication is ill this evening, and that is the situation we are facing.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is the minister willing to let the item stand?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the committee agree to let this item stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Item stands.

Vocational training co-ordination—

751. To provide for carrying out the purposes of the Vocational Training Co-ordination Act and agreements made thereunder; to authorize the Minister of Labour to enter into agreements with any province on terms approved by the governor in council to provide financial assistance to vocational schools, and training under youth training projects and to provide for the expenditures thereunder and under vocational training agreements entered into in previous years—payments to the provinces—further amount required, $854,856.

Mr. Fisher: I should like to know how much of this appropriation is going to the province of Quebec.

Mr. Herridge: While the minister is looking up that information, I should like to say that the members of the C.C.F. group support wholeheartedly the purpose of this item. This supplementary item is for a considerable sum, $854,856, and I should be glad if the minister could inform us whether this means that there has been an increase in the number of vocational training schools or a substantial increase in the number of pupils attending these schools in the various provinces. Can he gives us some idea why this extra money is required? Is it because the act referred to in the item is producing increasing results?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, I may say to my hon. friend that the enrolments in apprenticeship training schools during the current year have shown significant increases in the provinces of Nova Scotia, Ontario, Alberta and British Columbia that were not foreseen when the main estimates were approved by this house. I think the committee will be gratified to know that extended use of the facilities provided for apprenticeship training is being made.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Chairman, do I understand that there is nothing for the province of Quebec in this vote

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Part of the increase that is provided in item No. 751 arises by reason of an increase in the enrolment of those particular provinces. I may point out that all the provinces share on the same basis according to the terms of the scheme. The province of Quebec has made extensive use of the facilities of this vocational training plan. As I believe the hon. gentleman is aware, it has been a very successful example of federal-provincial co-operation right across Canada.

In reply to the question asked by the hon. member for Kootenay West, I mentioned the increase in apprenticeship training but there is also another matter I might mention. When the main estimates for 1958-59 were passed provision was made for an expenditure of $4,782,000 for vocational and technical schools assistance, including $3 million for capital assistance. Present indications are that payments to the provinces this year for annual and capital projects will total $5,148,484. Included in this forecast of expenditures is the sum of $547,000 relating to 1957-58 commitments which had not reached the point of being paid at March 31, 1958. In addition there is provision here to restore an amount deducted in the main estimates which represented the estimated amount by which the actual payments were expected to fall short of the maximum amount set out therein. That was a figure of $300,000.

As to the final distribution among the provinces for the fiscal year, it is not possible to give that yet. What we are dealing with here is an estimate of the sum required according to these expanded programs for the fiscal year. The actual breakdown as among the provinces will not be available until after March 31.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to delay the committee unduly, but if the minister has the total amounts surely he could tell us what part of this large sum has been spent in the province of Quebec by agreement of some kind. I am not against this vote, but I am interested in knowing what part of this total amount has been spent in the province of Quebec by agreement with that province.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the total amount required for the vocational training co-ordination payments to the provinces is estimated at $8,210,756 including this proposed supplementary appropriation of $854,856. I cannot give the hon. gentleman at this time the distribution to date. I can obtain the figures for payments made up to the last date of payment. We are dealing here with an estimate of the amount required to carry through the entire program to March 31.

Mr. Denis: Perhaps as a start the minister would be kind enough to give the figures he has, because we are interested in this vote and in getting our share. If it is to be shared by the provinces surely the province of Quebec should be entitled to at least a part of the $8 million being spent by the taxpayers of all Canada.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): All the provinces share in this appropriation in accordance with the use they make of it. If the hon. member wishes to know what amount has been actually spent and what the actual distribution is up to the last date of payment I shall be glad to secure that information and send it to him.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, may I ask this question of the minister, which perhaps follows upon what the hon. member for St. Denis has been saying. Following the answer that has been given, does this mean that Quebec is accepting aid for education?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This vocational training plan has been in effect, for some years, as my hon. friend is aware, and Quebec has always participated actively in the vocational training program.

Mr. Chevrier: The youth aspect of this item includes scholarships does it not?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, it is vocational training.

Mr. Chevrier: But the item refers to training under youth training projects and to providing for expenditures thereunder. Does that not include scholarships?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Chairman, as we cannot obtain the right figures perhaps it would be a good thing to let this vote stand until a later date in order to obtain details about it. If I am correct in my recollection I believe the province of Quebec has accepted part of this vote in some years and in some other years it has refused it, or has forgotten to renew agreements in some fiscal years.

As far as the fiscal year 1958-59 is concerned, I have a special reason for asking that this vote should stand until we get a precise answer to this question. I must assure the minister I am not against the vote. On the contrary I am in favour of this vote, so much in favour of it that I would like to see the province of Quebec share in this large amount.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the province of Quebec, as the hon. member knows, receives its full share according to the plan.

Mr. Denis: It receives its full share under the agreements it makes, but when there is no agreement it gets nothing at all. Is that what I heard from the Minister of Finance?

[Mr. Denis.]

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, that is not what you heard from the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Denis: What did the minister say? Suppose Quebec does not sign an agreement as far as this vote is concerned. Does that mean the province receives its share just the same?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Denis: I am waiting for the answer of the minister. I do not have the books with me.

Mr. Stinson: Get them, then.

Mr. Denis: I am sure the minister could easily obtain this information. It would only require a moment tomorrow for him to tell the committee what is the situation, if this vote were to stand until tomorrow or until the next sitting of the committee. I want the province of Quebec to get its share of a good vote such as this.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member keeps reiterating that he wants Quebec to have its full share. The fact is that Quebec does receive its full share. All the provinces share in this vocational training plan. This is not a new thing. This plan has been in operation for many years. As a matter of fact I think the plan has been in operation during nearly all the time the hon. member has been in this house, because this plan goes away back before the war.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was started by Norman Rogers.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, it goes back to the middle thirties, as I recall it. There is nothing new here, and Quebec has always participated in it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. member wants to know the amount.

Mr. Denis: That is all I ask. To what extent does Quebec benefit during this fiscal year?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Quebec has benefited to the same extent as every other province, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Denis: That is not an answer.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, did I understand the minister to say in reply to the question of the hon. member for Laurier that there were no scholarships under this scheme? Speaking from recollection my understanding is that a part of this scheme related to scholarships, particularly in the youth training field.

It may be that they have been dropped in recent years, but I wish the minister would clear up that point.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am told that there is a small scholarship fund provided within the ambit of this scheme.

Mr. Chevrier: It follows, then, that a portion of this is being paid toward education.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister whether these particular scholarships are what are known as dominion-provincial bursaries. I should also like to know whether any of this extended program, or extended expansion, is going on under what is called schedule "M"; that is, apprenticeship training, not so much for youth but for people who are in effect being retrained under the unemployment insurance commission.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The answer to my hon. friend's question is in the negative. He evidently refers to that type of training which is for rehabilitation purposes, and comes under schemes that are supervised by the Department of National Health and Welfare. The type of program that we are dealing with here is one providing for apprenticeship training and vocational and technical schools assistance.

Mr. Fisher: I understood that schedule "M" was administered by the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am sorry; part of the program does include unemployed workers. My hon. friend and I were at cross-purposes a moment ago and talking about two different things. Here are the items in the schedule which I think is the schedule to which my hon. friend refers. There is youth training; there is apprenticeship training; vocational and technical schools assistance, which is the big item; there is foremanship and supervisory training, which is a very small item; training of unemployed workers; training of disabled persons; training of persons to fit them for the armed forces; training of persons for other departments of the federal government; vocational correspondence courses. These latter branches of the program are quite small in comparison. The large items are vocational and technical schools assistance and the apprenticeship training.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, one of the points that interest me in this item and in the previous one that we allowed to stand is that in all our localities we have local committees, usually of interested citizens, to advise the employment officers on certain aspects, especially in initiating works under schedule "M". One of the things I am interested in is this. Are any funds given to those local committees? What budget do they operate under, or what are the facilities and services they use that are provided by the Department of Labour? I am especially interested in knowing whether more money is being given to those local groups to initiate more work under schedule "M"? This has been one of the strongest demands this winter, but it is too late. In my constituency over 30 per cent of the labour force is not working. There is strong pressure for this program of retraining and rehabilitation of the unemployed, but so far as I know this year no one has been able to get the wider program working.

The minister says more money is being spent. I would like to know a bit more about this. If this item is going to stand as the previous one did, I would appreciate it if, when the minister comes back to the house again he would give us more information on these particular points.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I trust there is no need to stand this item. I can give my hon. friend the breakdown of these different parts of the total. I indicated that the total amount, including the present proposed additional item, is $8,210,756. Now, here are the programs into which it is broken down: Youth training, $389,076; apprenticeship training, $1,792,113; vocational and technical schools assistance, $5,148,484; foremanship and supervisory training, $12,992; training of unemployed workers, $499,021; training of disabled persons, $296,-112; training of persons to fit them for the armed forces, $42,958; training of persons for other departments of the federal government, nil; vocational correspondence courses, nil. That is the breakdown of this proposed vote.

Mr. Chevrier: After the enumeration which the minister has given and the earlier one he gave in answer to an hon. member, it is not clear, and will the minister not say whether it is clear, that this is undoubtedly a contribution to education?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): These are payments to the provinces in pursuance of the Vocational Training Co-ordination Act. Now, I will have to leave my hon. friend to draw his own deductions in his own way and make his own interpretation. He will do it anyway.

Mr. Chevrier: It would be easier if the minister answered the question.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am not so sure that it would.

Mr. Caron: Can the minister tell we whether he has received any protest from the province of Quebec about federal assistance to technical schools and vocational training in the province of Quebec?

(Translation):

Mr. Johnson: Ask Mr. Lesage.

Mr. Caron: If I did, he would indeed be able to give me an answer.

(Text):

Was there any protest from the province of Quebec against the help given by the federal government for educational purposes, namely educational assistance for technical schools and vocational training?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): None that I am aware of, Mr. Chairman. As I have indicated, the province of Quebec has participated in this scheme now for many years.

Mr. Caron: Therefore when it comes to training of the labouring class there is no protest, but when it comes to higher education there is a protest. Is that what I am to understand from what the minister says?

Mr. Martel: There is a difference between technical schools and education.

Mr. Caron: Just as much as there is between an intelligent man and the hon. member.

Mr. Denis: Can the minister give any serious reason why he should not allow this item to stand and go on with some other item?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, I have a very good reason. It is ten o'clock.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the leader of the house what the business is for tomorrow, and perhaps we might get some indication of what it will be for the early part of next week?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we intend to move concurrence in the Senate amendments to Bill No. C-26, to amend the Northwest Territories Act, which appears as the first item on today's order paper. Then we shall continue with the supplementary estimates.

It is always somewhat of a problem to hold the members of the other place here beyond certain days. I think we shall have royal assent tomorrow at 5.45, and we would hope it will be possible to have these supplementary estimates through and the bill passed here and in the other place and assented to. Then we will take agricultural estimates.

Monday will be private members' day. On Tuesday we shall start with item No. 7, the resolution concerning parliamentary secretaries, and then take item No. 8, the resolution concerning freight rates. Incidentally, I think that bill will be sent to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. Then we will take item No. 3, the bill to amend the Canada Shipping Act, which will also go to the same standing committee, and then item No. 9, the resolution concerning the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act.

Mr. Denis: In order that the minister may be satisfied may I suggest that the Minister of Finance get the answers to the questions we asked just before 10 o'clock.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the minister if on Wednesday we will go on with any of the unfinished business announced for Tuesday?

Mr. Green: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

It being three minutes after 10 o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

PRINCIPAL OFFICERS, NATIONAL MUSEUM

POSTAL STATION "O", ST. LAURENT, QUE.

Question No. 276—Mr. Rouleau:

1. Did the postmaster general or other members of the cabinet receive written representations from the mayor of St. Laurent, his honour Maurice Cousineau, requesting that the postal station "O" located in St. Laurent, be named St. Laurent post office?
2. If so, on what date were such representations received?
